HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 18, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PRICE STABILITY, INCOMES AND EMPLOYMENT

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER REPORTS OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

On the order: Government notices of motion:

That a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, to be known as the Joint Parliamentary Committee on Price Stability, Incomes and Employment, be appointed to consider the reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission, with powers to report from time to time its observations and opinions thereon; to send for persons, papers and records; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the house; to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by the committee; and to delegate to sub-committees any of its powers except the power to report directly to the House of Commons.

That 12 members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, act on behalf of the house as members of the said committee, seven of whom shall be required for a quorum.

That when a quorum is not present, the chairmen of the said committee or of its sub-committees be authorized to proceed with meetings for the purpose of receiving and printing evidence; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed special joint committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

FEDERAL CIVIL SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,670—Mr. Yewchuk: (supplementary)

1. What was the ratio of federal Civil Service employees to the total population of Canada in 1950, 1955, 1960, 1965, 1968?

2. What were the total expenditures for Civil Service salaries during the above years?

3. What was the average income tax paid by Canadians during the same years?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1, 2 and 3.

Year	Ratio Federal Government Employees to Total Population	Total Expenditures for Civil Service Salaries ($ Thousand)	Average Income Tax per Canadian (Dollars)
1955	1 : 84	45,792	150
1960	1 : 88	62,895	167
1965	1 : 94	82,866	214
1968	1 : 87	116,031	264

Supplementary answer to the above Question which was tabled by the Hon. the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the House of Commons on April 2, 1969 (House of Commons Debates, pp. 7425-6) supplied by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is as follows:

(a) The amounts shown under the heading "Total Expenditures for Civil Service Salaries ($ Thousand)" should be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Year
1955	542,856
1960	760,929
1965	1,029,761
1968 (Jan-Sept only)	1,062,602

Questions

(b) The column setting out the employee-population ratios should be footnoted as follows:

"Based on estimates of population as at June 1 and on the number of employees as at June 30 in the year concerned."

LEGALITY OF HOUSING TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Question No. 2,139—Mr. McCleave:

1. Did the government or the Department of Transport or any agency of government commission a study as to the constitutional legality of the recommendations by the Task Force on Housing?

2. If so, who was so commissioned, and what were the results of such a study?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): 1 and 2. The Task Force on Housing and Urban Development requested F. R. Scott, Esq., formerly Dean of Law, McGill University, and W. R. Lederman, Esq., formerly Dean of Law, Queen's University, to make observations on the functional constitutional issues concerning housing and urban development in Canada. As a result a memorandum was prepared and submitted.

SASKATCHEWAN—RECEIPTS UNDER ROADS-TO-RESOURCES PROGRAM

Question No. 2,164—Mr. Skoberg:

1. Under the Roads-to-Resources Program, what amounts has Saskatchewan received from the federal government for each year from 1958 up to and including 1967?

2. Has the federal government any record of the amounts spent by companies in Saskatchewan as their one-third share of any approved access road and, if so, what is the amount for each year the program was in effect?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): 1. 1958-59, $750,000.00; 1959-60, $961,-224.08; 1960-61, $1,940,259.79; 1961-62, $806,-326.92; 1962-63, $581,565.81; 1963-64, $311,-863.04; 1964-65, $410,945.57; 1965-66, $718,-079.66; 1966-67, $563,622.16; 1967-68, $422,-535.47; 1968-69, $33,577.50; Total, $7,500,000.00.

2. There were no mine access roads constructed in Saskatchewan under the Road to Resources Program. However, under the Mine Access Roads Program which was in effect from 1946 to 1957, two mining roads were constructed in northern Saskatchewan. In each case the cost of construction was shared by the federal government, the provincial government and a mining company. The sum of the federal contributions was $75,583. The actual company expenditure is not on record in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources but is presumed to be $\frac{1}{3}$ of total cost.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Stony Rapids-Black Lake Road: A 14-mile gravel highway from Stony Rapids to Black Lake. The road was built in 1950 to serve the Black Lake property of Nistro Uranium Mines Limited and facilitated the installation of heavy equipment. The total cost of the road was $26,750, the contribution of the federal government was $8,917.

Ace Lake-Black Bay Road: Fourteen miles long, this road, built in 1950-51 connected the Beaverlodge mine of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited with the port facilities at Black Bay on the Athabasca water route. Eldorado paid part of the cost of its construction and the federal government contributed $66,666.

TRANSFER OF TAXES PAID BY TELEPHONE COMPANIES

Question No. 2,246—Mr. Fortin:

1. Has the government received from Quebec a request for the transfer to the provinces of the taxes paid by telephone companies?

2. What would be the value of such transfer?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Enquiries made at the Privy Council Office and the Department of National Revenue, and a search of Department of Finance files indicate that no formal request to this effect has been received from the Province of Quebec.

2. This information is not available.

REQUESTS FOR LETTER CARRIER SERVICE

Question No. 2,253—Mr. Latulippe:

Will the Minister of Communications give consideration to requests made by municipalities for letter carrier service and more particularly by such municipalities which have made expenditures in order to fulfil the requirements of the Department in this respect?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: Since March 1968, no new letter carrier delivery services have been established, because of the need to reduce governmental expenditures. Unfortunately, as long as the need to restrict new expenditures exists, provision of letter carrier delivery service in these communities will have to be deferred.

ADVERTISING FOR SUMMER STUDENT EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 2,262—Mr. Yewchuk:

How much money has the Department of Manpower and Immigration spent on advertising as part of the program to further summer student employment and what was the result of such advertising?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Summer 1968: Amount, $72,000. Results: Reports received by the Department indicate that the program was successful. Between July 25, 1968 and August 29, 1968, Canada Manpower Centres registered 11,652 students and made 12,231 placements. In addition there were many thousands of casual placements in day labour for farm work, berry picking, etc. There is no doubt that increased publicity lead to a greater number of jobs being obtained through CMCs than was normal for the time of the year. Summer 1969: Amount, $200,000. Results: It is much too early to be able to provide results of the 1969 Summer Employment for Students Campaign.

ATHABASCA—AREA DEVELOPMENT AID

Question No. 2,283—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. How many companies in the constituency of Athabasca have received aid under the Area Development Agency?

2. How many applications for aid have been received by the agency from this constituency to date?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. None.

2. Five. One was approved but not proceeded with by the applicant; two were withdrawn; two were rejected—one because it was located outside the designated area and the other because it did not involve manufacturing or processing.

APPLICATIONS FOR SECOND CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES

Question No. 2,287—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many applications for second class mailing privileges have been received by the Post Office Department since September 1, 1968 and how many of these were from non-profit organizations—religious, educational, welfare, trade union, co-operative, ethnic, etc.?

2. How many of the applications for second class mailing privileges received since September 1, 1968 have been approved and how many have been rejected by the Post Office Department?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned:

1. (a) 3779; (b) Information is not compiled in such a way as to indicate the number of applications received from specific types of organizations. To obtain the information requested would require the examination of individual files, would be time consuming and require undue labour and expense.

2. 2,476 applications have been accepted. 1,303 applications have been rejected.

SUBSIDIES TO INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS

Question No. 2,292—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. What was the total amount of credits made available to the Canadian Dairy Commission during the 1968-69 fiscal year for the payment of subsidies to industrial milk producers?

2. What was the total amount in subsidies paid to industrial milk producers in Canada by the Canadian Dairy Commission during the period from April 1, 1968 to March 31, 1969?

3. What was the amount per province?

4. What was the subsidy rate per one hundred pounds of milk with a fat content of 3.5 for (a) 1967-1968 (b) 1968-1969?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The amount made available from the Agricultural Stabilization Account to the Canadian Dairy Commission for all of its activities totalled $134,845,000. This included provision for producer subsidies, storage, interest charges, advertising and all other activities of the Commission for the dairy support program.

2. Direct subsidies to industrial milk producers, including export equalization holdbacks, totalled $117,662,580.17.

3. P.E.I., $1,870,976.26; Nova Scotia, $584,809.94; New Brunswick, $1,246,826.94; Quebec, $52,540,738.14; Ontario, $40,056,084.01; Manitoba, $5,203,951.55; Saskatchewan, $4,481,753.10; Alberta, $10,146,510.24; British Columbia, $1,530,929.99.

4. (a) $1.21; (b) $1.31.

NEIL STEVENS—RECOGNITION TO PRIVATE PILOT

Question No. 2,325—Mr. Yewchuk:

Has the government considered extending any measure of recognition to private pilot Neil Stevens who recently won a prize in the Great Transatlantic Air Race?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): No.

PRIVY COUNCIL INFORMATION SERVICE

Question No. 2,361—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does Privy Council Office provide an information service and, if so, what was the cost for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

2. How many publications and/or periodicals and/or information sheets and/or public releases were provided by that Office for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive, and what was the cost for each publication for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

3. How many copies of each publication are provided and to whom are they distributed and how is the distribution effected?

Questions

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1. No.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

BEAUCE—C.B.C. TRANSMISSION TOWER

Question No. 2,370—Mr. Rodrigue:

Does the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation own a television relay transmitting tower in the Constituency of Beauce and, if so (a) where is it situated (b) in what year was it erected (c) what was the cost of the project (d) who carried out the work (e) what contractors took part in the construction (f) what was the value of each of the contracts (g) what is the power of the transmitter (h) what is the radius covered by the transmitter (i) which engineering firm prepared the technical report (j) what is its annual maintenance cost (k) are new studies under way presently concerning the site?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: (a) The C.B.C. owns a television rebroadcasting transmitter, CBVT-1, located adjacent to Highway 24, 2½ miles northeast of St. George de Beauce; (b) 1967; (c) $56,227; (d) Work was carried out under supervision of C.B.C. engineers; (e) and (f) RCA Victor, transmission facilities: $44,580; G. Morissette, building: $3,400; improvements to property: $2,200; Land, legal fees, surveying: $4,144; Provincial sales tax: $1,903; (g) five watts; (h) Service is not omnidirectional hence there is no radius of service. St. George de Beauce is southwest of the transmitter and from south to northwest the estimated Grade A service is 3 miles; Grade B is eight miles; (i) C.B.C. engineering headquarters; (j) Approximately $2,000; (k) Further study by C.B.C. engineers shows that due to the terrain some areas receive an inadequate signal. An application has been submitted to the CRTC for the relocation of this station to overcome the problem while maintaining satisfactory service in those areas where the signal is now acceptable.

"DON MESSER JUBILEE"—CONTINUATION ON REGIONAL BASIS

Question No. 2,384—Mr. McCleave:

1. Would C.B.C. stations be free to negotiate for the use of a show produced by a Hamilton television station without network affiliation with either C.B.C. or C.T.V.?

2. If so, would any restrictions be placed by C.B.C. on its own stations as to the time such show could be telecast and, if so, what restrictions?

3. Did C.B.C. offer to the Don Messer Jubilee the opportunity to continue their show on a local or regional basis and, if so, on what suggested terms and to what point in negotiations?

4. Will any station or region of the C.B.C. be showing the Don Messer Jubilee in the Fall-Winter season of 1969-70 and, if so, which ones?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows:

1. Yes.

2. The only restrictions on C.B.C. stations would be that the program would have to be scheduled in a local time period to avoid conflict with network programming obligations.

3. No.

4. No arrangement has been made for C.B.C. local or regional scheduling.

NEWSTART PROGRAMS

Question No. 2,396—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Where are NEWSTART programmes presently in operation?

2. What was the date of their commencement?

3. What staff is involved in each NEWSTART and in what positions?

4. What monies have been expended in each NEWSTART Corporation?

5. What numbers of students have been involved in each NEWSTART?

6. What provincial monies have been expended?

7. What specific training projects are presently in operation and what is the research value?

8. Have any programmes or projects developed by NEWSTART Corporation been implemented in the educational system of any of the various provinces and, if so, which ones?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion):

1.	2.	4. (as of 1 June 1969 $)
Yarmouth County, Nova Scotia	29 June, 1967	1,438,100
Kings County, Prince Edward Island	28 August, 1967	942,065
Prince Albert, Saskatchewan	10 August, 1967	865,000
Lac la Biche, Alberta	9 August, 1967	1,994,822
Richibucto, New Brunswick	27 May, 1969	10,000

[Mr. Robinson.]

3. 5. 7. 8. NewStart Corporations are autonomous, non-profit comapnies set up under the provincial legislation of the provinces in which they operate and requests for information about their internal management and operations should therefore be made to the corporations.

6. None. Under the federal-provincial agreements by which NewStart Corporations are formed the Federal Government assumes responsibility for 100 per cent of the costs.

SEED POTATO MISSIONS TO CANADA

Question No. 2,405—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. What attempts have been made by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to increase the number of seed potato missions to Canada in 1968, 1969 and 1970?

2. What countries has the Department invited or encouraged to visit seed potato areas in Canada?

3. Has consideration been given to sending seed potato missions for exporting purposes to countries outside Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is sponsoring a Seed Potato Mission from Israel during the summer of 1969 and is considering the possibility of a mission to South America sometime during this fiscal year. In 1968 the Department sponsored a Seed Potato Mission from Romania. In 1968 the Department also arranged visits to Venezuela and Cuba by a Department of Agriculture expert to look into plant health problems in seed potato shipments. The Department's Trade Missions Programme for 1970 is presently under consideration.

2. The Department has invited a number of countries in which markets or potential markets for seed potatoes exist to send representatives to visit seed potato areas in Canada. The following have accepted: Greece, Argentina, Jamaica, Uruguay, Italy, Venezuela, Portugal, South Africa, Romania and Israel.

3. Yes.

CIVIL SERVICE REORGANIZATION

Question No. 2,429—Mr. Yewchuk:

Is the government considering reorganization of the Civil Service?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): No.

ALBERTA AREA DEVELOPMENT GRANTS

Question No. 2,437—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Did the following companies in Alberta qualify for grants under the Area Development Agency; Becker Manufacturing, Phillips Wire and Cable, Saratoga Gas and Oil and Imperial Oil Ltd.?

2. If so, what was the amount of grant in each case?

3. In what year were the grants paid?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. One company only; Imperial Oil Limited.

2. It is expected that two grants of 5 million dollars each will be paid in respect of two separate facilities.

3. Not applicable.

SUBSIDY TO "LES MINES MADELEINE LIMITÉE"

Question No. 2,443—Mr. Cyr:

1. Has the government paid, or promised to pay, a subsidy to "Les Mines Madeleine Limitée" of Ste-Anne-des-Monts, Quebec, through the Area Development Agency and, if so, what is the total amount of such subsidy or the sum paid?

2. Did the company ask for financial assistance in any form from government for the opening new mining industry in Gaspé and, if so, under what programme has this assistance been given?

3. On what date did any such subsidy begin and in what amount?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): 1. No.

2. No.

3. Not applicable.

TASKS ALLOTTED TO CANADIAN FORCES

Question No. 2,471—Mr. Robinson:

What are the specific tasks allotted to the Canadian Forces and what is the breakdown of forces for each task?

Mr. W. D. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): At the present time, the specific tasks allotted to the Canadian Forces are as outlined in the White Paper on Defence, tabled in the House of Commons, in March 1964. The forces allotted to these tasks are as shown at pages 839-851, Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 23, of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, dated February 4, 1969.

*KINGSTON, ONT.—WINDOW WASHING CONTRACT

Question No. 2,475—Mr. Hales:

1. Did the Department of Supply and Services pay under contract the Acme Window Cleaners, Kingston, Ontario the sum of $18,430 for the period May 12 to October 31, 1969 for window washing at the Canadian Forces Base, Kingston and, if so, for what reasons were Base personnel unable to perform such services?

2. How many buildings are involved?

3. On what basis did the Department estimate the value of work done?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is in three parts. 1. A contract was awarded to Acme Window Cleaners, Kingston, Ontario, for window cleaning at the Canadian Forces Base, Kingston, Ontario, in the amount of $18,430. Payment is based on spring cleaning at $9,065 for work to be completed by approximately June 27, 1969, and fall cleaning at $9,365 for work to be completed by October 31, 1969. The base establishment does not provide military or civilian staff to carry out services of this nature. In addition, it is considered more economical to carry out this type of work at urban locations by contract rather than by casual labour.

2. 128 buildings were involved.

3. The contract was placed on the basis of the lower competitive tender received for performance of the work. The estimated cost was based on size, height and number of windows.

QUEBEC—CANADIAN FORCES TRADE SCHOOL

Question No. 2,478—Mr. Robinson:

Is it the federal government's intention to establish a French-speaking trade school in Quebec for Canadian Forces and, if so, what is the cost, how many tradesmen will be trained per month and how will they be absorbed into the Canadian Forces?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): L'École Technique des Forces canadiennes was opened at Saint-Jean, Quebec, on April 15, 1969. In view of the fact that only one course has commenced, an estimate of the costs involved, and the number to be trained per month is not yet available. On completion of training, these tradesmen will be absorbed into French-speaking units of the Canadian Forces. This will not preclude them, however, from future employment with English-speaking units.

CABINET COMMITTEES ON POVERTY

Question No. 2,489—Mr. Broadbent:

What are the names of the two Cabinet committees co-ordinating the economic and regional aspects of poverty and what Ministers belong to each of the Cabinet committees as mentioned by the Prime Minister in Hansard of April 23, page 7857?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The arrangements made by the Cabinet for the discharge of the business for which it is collectively responsible are matters for the Cabinet itself and are not customarily disclosed.

[Mr. Hales.]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

LEASING OF BUILDINGS TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Question No. 1,456—Mr. Coates:

1. How many leases does the federal government have with firms or individuals that are for a period of one year or more where the rental in question is between $10,000 and $50,000 annually?

2. Is each instance, what is the name of the firm or individual, what is the term of the lease, where is the space located, what is the annual amount of the rental and on what date does the lease expire?

Return tabled.

CONSTRUCTION OF FEDERAL PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Question No. 1,859—Mr. Peddle:

1 How many post offices and/or federal public buildings were completed, commenced, constructed or enlarged in Canada since the beginning of 1965 in towns or villages of less than 8,000 population?

2 What are the locations, total or estimated costs and populations served in each case?

3 What is the total floor space area of each such building?

Return tabled.

PROMOTION OF WHEAT SALES TO JAPAN

Question No. 1,880—Mr. Mazankowski:

What, if any, promotional activities are being undertaken by Canada to convince the Japanese of the many uses of Canadian wheat (a) what agencies are involved in carrying out such promotion (b) is Canada successfully competing with other countries in relation to this matter?

Return tabled.

INQUIRY AS TO SECOND CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES

Question No. 2,141—Mr. McIntosh:

1. What periodicals and publications in Canada as at April 29 enjoyed second class mailing privileges?

2. What is the criteria applied in the granting of such privileges?

3. Was the criteria applied in the case of each publication listed, or were there any exceptions or special cases?

4. Where exceptional or special treatment was accorded, what are the names of the publications to benefit from such treatment and in each case what was the reason?

Return tabled.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether we could have the co-operation of the government in answering question No. 2,047 which has been on the order paper for almost two months? It is a very simple and straightforward question and I should like an answer before the conclusion of this session.

Mr. Forest: We will look into the matter.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions Nos. 120, 162, 169 and 199 are acceptable to the government.

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the representatives of any organizations, companies or provincial authorities regarding the export of logs to Japan.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING PHOSPHOROUS PLANT AT PLACENTIA BAY

Motion No. 199—Mr. Harding:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all arrangements, correspondence, etc., between the Government of Canada and the Electric Reduction Company regarding the establishment of a phosphorous plant at Long Harbour, Placentia Bay, Newfoundland.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 198 is acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning privileged papers and authorization of the government authorities concerned.

[English]

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING POLLUTION AT PLACENTIA BAY

Motion No. 198—Mr. Harding:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland regarding the pollution problem at Placentia Bay, Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house that Notice of Motion No. 198 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motion Nos. 142, 144, 154, 155, 156, 157, 171, 174, 182, 183, 201, 219 and 220?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motion be allowed to stand.

CANADIAN JAVELIN LINERBOARD MILL

Motion No. 142—Mr. Broadbent:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, memoranda, agreements or arrangements between the Government of Canada, the Government of Newfoundland and Canadian Javelin Limited, or its subsidiary, Melville Pulp and Paper Limited, regarding a new linerboard mill and wood products complex.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, no agreements or arrangements on this matter have been completed. While the production of papers will always be considered if and when an agreement or arrangement has been made with any company, it would be a breach of business confidentiality if information were made public before such a case is concluded. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Motions for Papers

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable to the government with the customary proviso that no confidential information relating to the competitive position of the company concerned which has been given to the government in connection with an application for grant should be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house that Notice of Motion No. 144 be deemed to have been adopted?

Motion agreed to.

GRANTS TO GOLDEN EAGLE AT QUEBEC

Motion No. 154—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, arrangements, etc., between the Government of Canada and Golden Eagle Corporation at Quebec City, Quebec, regarding financial grants or incentives under the Area Development Incentives Act.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable to the government with the customary proviso that no confidential information relating to the competitive position of the company concerned which has been given to the government in connection with an application for grant should be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house that Notice of Motion No. 154 be deemed to have been adopted?

Motion agreed to.

GRANTS TO IRVING OIL AT QUEBEC

Motion No. 155—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, arrangements, etc., between the Government of Canada and Irving Oil Corporation at Quebec City, Quebec, regarding financial grants or incentives under the Area Development Incentives Act.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable to the government with the customary proviso that no confidential information relating to the competitive position of the company concerned which has been given to the government in connection with an application for grant should be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house that Notice of Motion No. 155 be deemed to have been adopted?

Motion agreed to.

GRANTS TO IRVING OIL AT SAINT JOHN

Motion No. 156—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, arrangements, etc., between the Government of Canada and Irving Oil Corporation at Saint John, N.B., regarding financial grants or incentives under the Area Development Incentives Act.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable to the government with the customary proviso that no confidential information relating to the competitive position of the company concerned which has been given to the government in connection with an application for grant should be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house that Notice of Motion No. 156 be deemed to have been adopted?

Motion agreed to.

GRANTS TO GULF OIL AT POINT TUPPER

Motion No. 157—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, arrangements, etc., between the Government of Canada and Gulf Oil Corporation at Point Tupper, Nova Scotia, regarding financial grants or incentives under the Area Development Incentives Act.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable to the government with the customary proviso that no confidential information relating to the competitive position of the company concerned which has been given to the government in connection with an application for grant should be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house that Notice of Motion No. 157 be deemed to have been adopted?

Motion agreed to.

PLANNING PROGRAMMING BUDGETING GUIDE

Motion No. 171—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the cost-benefit study, as prescribed by Treasury Board Manual Planning Programming Budgeting Guide, on the Defence Development Sharing Program referred to by Mr. D. Mundy, Assistant Deputy Minister of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on April 1, 1969.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) that he cannot accept this motion for the following reasons:

1. At no time did the minister or officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce state that a cost-benefit study had been carried out on the defence development sharing program as prescribed by Treasury Board's planning programming budgeting guide.

2. In accepting the hon. member's previous motion in this house on April 23, 1969, which was No. 101, it was agreed to produce a copy of a cost-benefit analysis showing sales resulting from defence industry productivity program support to Canadian industry.

This analysis, which the member has already received, showed the ratio between sales achieved and projected and government funds expended on all completed projects up to the end of 1967 under the defence industry productivity program. Furthermore, this analysis is exactly that described by an official of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in his testimony before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on April 1, 1969.

In view of this,—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some reservations about the statement which the parliamentary secretary is making now. It seems to me he is debating the issue. He should indicate to the house whether or not it is his intention to accept the motion. I understand that he has indicated he is not prepared to accept the motion. It is up to the hon. member to indicate whether he wishes it transferred for debate.

Mr. Broadbent: I ask that it be transferred for debate, Mr. Speaker.

Transferred for debate under Standing Order 48.

GUIDELINES ON CAPITAL FLOW FROM U.S.

Motion No. 174—Mr. Broadbent:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, memoranda, agreements, etc., between the Government of the United States regarding guidelines on the flow of capital from the United States administered by the U.S. Department of Commerce and the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for Exernal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table exchanges of letters between the Minister of Finance and the United States Secretary of the Treasury dated March 7 and December 16, 1968 which contain all the essential elements of the arrangements between Canada and the United States with regard to guidelines on the flow of capital from the United States. These letters have already been made public but are being tabled again today for the convenience of the hon. member. All other correspondence with the United States on this matter has been by way of technical elaboration. Such correspondence represents confidential communications exchanged in the course of negotiations between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States. On this basis I ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Broadbent: I withdraw the motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

INFORMATION TASK FORCE INTERIM REPORT

Motion No. 182—Mr. Mather:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the interim report of the Government Task Force on Information.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 182 is for a copy of the interim report of the task force on government information. The report referred to was largely oral and not in a form suitable for tabling. However, the government will be receiving the final report over the next few weeks, and a decision will be made as to whether or not publication is in the public interest after there has been an opportunity to give the entire report careful study.

For these reasons I ask that the motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Mather: I withdraw the motion, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

INFORMATION TASK FORCE CONSULTANT STUDIES

Motion No. 183—Mr. Mather:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all consultant studies, questionnaire surveys and other background reports prepared for the Government Task Force on Information.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the reports and papers asked for in motion No. 182 were prepared on a confidential basis. Therefore I ask that this motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, if I am in order, may I ask that the matter be transferred for debate?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is in order and the item is transferred for debate pursuant to Standing Order 48.

Transferred for debate under Standing Order 48.

CONTRACTOR BIDS ON COMMUNICATION SATELLITE

Motion No. 219—Mr. Gilbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the contractor bids on the communication satellite by RCA Victor Limited and Northern Electric Co. Limited.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications and Postmaster General): The two companies referred to in this motion, R.C.A. Limited and Northern Electric Company Limited, have not been requested to submit contractor bids on the communication satellite as procurement contracts have not yet been awarded. I informed the House of Commons on June 13, 1969 that officials in the Department of Communications were on that date instructed to open negotiations with these two companies on the procurement contract for Canada's domestic communication satellite. Under the circumstances I ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

[Mr. Walker.]

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I ask that it be transferred for debate.

Transferred for debate under Standing Order 48.

LAUNCHING OF CANADIAN SATELLITE

Motion No. 220—Mr. Gilbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the principles agreed to by Canada and the United States regarding the launching of a Canadian satellite.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications and Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the text of the public statement agreed to by Canada and the United States which sets out the details of an agreement in principle regarding the launching of a Canadian satellite was quoted in the house on June 13, 1969 (page 10016 of Hansard of June 13, 1969). Under the circumstances I ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Gilbert: I withdraw the motion, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ESTABLISHING OF INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT CENTRE—PARTICIPATION BY OTHER COUNTRIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the proposed international development centre has been established by the government.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it expected that this centre will be established shortly? Has the Prime Minister any information he can give us with regard to progress in this direction?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I cannot give the house any date on which it may be. I can say what has been said earlier by the Secretary of State for External Affairs—that projects have been prepared and are now being examined by the government.

Mr. Stanfield: I would have asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs about this if I had any idea when he would return. Is it contemplated that other countries will participate in this international centre or will it be established and financed entirely by Canada itself?

Mr. Trudeau: The policy has not yet been determined in a final way by the government and therefore I should not like to announce it.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CANADAIR LIMITED, MONTREAL—LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Supply and Services regarding Canadair Limited in Montreal, which allegedly has laid off some 1,500 men since January 1 without any notice whatsoever. In view of the fact that this company is operating mainly on the basis of government contracts, may I ask whether there are any provisions in these contracts to safeguard the Canadian employees of this United States subsidiary and ensure that proper notice is given these employees who are being laid off?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker, because I do not know the details of the contracts as they may affect the security of employees.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that Orenda, the company at Malton which makes the engines for these planes, does give its employees notice and severance pay, will the minister make representations to Canadair to see that it gives the same treatment to its employees?

Mr. Richardson: I will look into that, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL HOLIDAYS

ST. JEAN BAPTISTE DAY—CELEBRATION OF ST. GEORGES DE BEAUCE—MONTREAL PARADE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Following the unfortunate events that took place in Sherbrooke recently the Prime Minister has been invited to Saint-Georges de Beauce to attend the celebration of St. Jean Baptiste Day—the feast of French Canadians—and I would like to ask him if he is seriously thinking of accepting that invitation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have not yet seen that invitation, but I was told before coming to the house that I had effectively received it, and I am most happy. Such an invitation is extremely welcome under the circumstances and certainly indicates that the population is standing firm. There are probably many Liberals and a few Créditistes there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: I will send my reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

As there are lots of Créditistes in Beauce, is he of the opinion and does he admit that those people are at least civilized?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Charlevoix.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

The president of the St. Jean Baptiste Day celebrations announced this morning in Montreal that 10 countries would be represented in the St. Jean Baptiste parade and that 25 ambassadors would attend. He also added that he had not considered inviting any representative of the federal government.

As I know that this is an insult to French Canadians who are members of this house, could the Prime Minister, on behalf of parliament, protest strongly and officially against the attitude of the leaders of the St. Jean Baptiste society of Montreal?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that it belongs to me to protest strongly. I understand that a private body is organizing those celebrations, but I quite agree with the hon. member and it seems to me that those who accept to participate in such a demonstration could well ask themselves how it is that they are invited if the federal government is not.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR WHITE PAPER ON NATIONAL SECURITIES COMMISSION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Could the minister advise the house what progress he has made with the provinces in arriving at an agreement in regard to a national securities commission, and when does the minister envisage that this house will be given either a white paper or an indication of the legislation to establish this commission?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are considering our position and having some discussions with the provinces. I hope to make some definitive statement after I have had some discussions with the government during the course of the summer.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—CONGRATULATIONS TO ONTARIO UPON ACCEPTING PLAN

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I wonder whether he could convey to the Premier of Ontario the congratulations of this house or of the government on his sudden and spectacular conversion to the federal medicare plan, especially in light of his recent description of it as the greatest Machiavellian fraud ever perpetrated on the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—REPORTED NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING CANADIAN DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Make sure you face the camera.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I always wait until the applause dies down. I have just given the cameraman a sign and I will now ask my question.

My question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made in Stockholm yesterday which was given wide publicity in the news this morning—I am sure that the Prime Minister is thoroughly familiar with it—that a good deal of hard bargaining is expected by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the negotiations between Canada—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member now put his question.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker, now the picture has been taken I can relax and ask my question. In view of this hard bargaining that the Secretary of State for External Affairs expects in these negotiations, does the government expect that Canada will have to pay a high price for the privilege of recognizing Communist China?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the question as asked by the hon. member does not have argumentative overtones?

Mr. Hees: Then I will ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which is not argumentative at all.

Mr. Bell: They might take another picture.

Mr. Hees: May I ask the Prime Minister by way of a supplementary question whether the government is examining the report which has been widely circulated today that Communist China is going to demand that Canada accept in the future a large quantity of textiles each year as the price for allowing China to be recognized by this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear. hear.

Mr. Hees: Turn the other way, Pierre.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Prime Minister should now address the Chair.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if I can remember the answer, let alone the question. I think perhaps there is a link between the question the hon. member asked and the question of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). If I were to congratulate all those who have been converted to the governments' point of view I should have little time for anything else.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: The Prime Minister should hire some new speech writers to write some new speeches.

BIOLOGICAL WARFARE—TRANSFER OF MATERIALS ACROSS CANADIAN TERRITORY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether anyone with his back to the camera can be made to be heard. May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the United States government sought and obtained the permission of the Canadian government to transport across our territory germs and other materials to be used at biological warfare test centres in Alaska and Greenland?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I think it ought to be asked of the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, no such request has been received.

Mr. Lewis: May I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Are such flights being made over Canadian territory and do these flights carry very dangerous germs and other materials? If that is so will the minister make inquiries about the matter?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, under our arrangement with the United States it is expected that before any such flights are made there will be consultation with Canada. I would therefore be rather surprised if the speculation advanced by the hon. member turns out to be warranted.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are we to gather from the minister's answer that the Canadian government until now has not been consulted on the matter at all?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, no permission for such flights has been sought.

Mr. Lewis: That is no answer, Mr. Speaker.

VISIT OF MINISTER TO SCANDINAVIA

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of reports that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is presently visiting Scandinavia to carry the gospel of Canada's continuing interest in NATO to Finland and Sweden, that minister having been reported to declare that he did not go to Stockholm to meet Chinese diplomats, will the Prime Minister tell us the reason for the visit to Scandinavia at this time, when the session has a few days only to run and when the minister's presence is needed here?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hillsborough.

AIRPORTS

CHARLOTTETOWN—INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF TERMINAL

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which is prompted by a reply given the other day to my question concerning the much needed extension of Charlottetown airport. Will the minister have another look at this very important and, indeed, urgent matter with a view to giving it a far higher priority than seemed to be indicated the other day?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I shall be glad to review the matter.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since we need adequate instrument landing facilities at Charlottetown or Summerside airports and since facilities at these airports are outdated and inadequate for the maintenance of proper jet service, will the minister reconsider his department's answer to the effect that the necessary new equipment will not be installed at the earliest until 1972 or 1973?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will be pleased to look into that.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO MEET LOWER PRAIRIE INCOME

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Now that the minister has had ample time to study the report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture on its western tour, what action is the government contemplating in solving the serious cash shortage of the western grain grower?

An hon. Member: The minister has no answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that there was debate on this very subject which lasted all day yesterday and all evening. If he is asking the minister to make a statement, I think that statement ought to be made on motions.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question not having been allowed, there cannot be a supplementary.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is asking his question because the minister gave us no answers yesterday.

Mr. Olson: I made adequate answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would be good enough to take your suggestion to heart and make a statement on motions about this matter?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will consult Hansard at pages 10262 and 10263 he will see there an indication of the government's position.

Mr. Baldwin: So far as an answer is concerned, those pages are a complete blank.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

SHORTAGE OF FUNDS FOR ADVERTISING AND PROTECTIVE STAFF

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Is the minister now in a position to answer the question that was addressed to him in his absence last Friday by my colleague for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding). It was about funds of the National Arts Centre. Is the centre short of funds for advertising, adequate protective staff and other purposes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have no immediate recollection of that question having been asked. It seems to me that type of question ought to be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour could check Hansard for last Friday and you will see that the question was asked. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mr. Stanbury) said that the minister would be in the house on Monday to answer it. In view of publicity that has been given to certain allegations I think there is urgency to the question.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the directors of the National Arts Centre that there is no financial problem at all. On the contrary, I was told this morning by the director about the unexpected success achieved at the box office. The fact is that where it was expected that 65 per cent of available tickets would be sold, 86.6 per cent were sold. Accordingly, the Centre had enough funds to finance its own advertizing for its opening festival. I was also told that security guards were available in sufficient numbers. Security problems arise rather from lack of experience, but the situation is being corrected and is improving every day.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister satisfied that there are sufficient funds for advertising and other purposes in the months that lie ahead?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Secretary of State who answers to this house for the C.B.C. maintains that there are no difficulties so far as the budget is concerned for the arts centre, will he make sure that the C.B.C. is accurate in its news reporting?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will there be sufficient advertising funds for programs to come two weeks from now, after the present showing at the National Arts Centre of "Anne of Green Gables" and "Johnny Belinda"? These shows do not require advertising, being of great excellence.

OIL

AGREEMENT ON EXPORTS OF CRUDE TO U.S.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. The question has to do with one department of government. Since the Canadian Petroleum Association indicated in evidence before the committee last evening that the 1967 agreement which gave the United States the right to cut back exports of Canadian crude petroleum was kept confidential, may I ask whether since that date any agreement of a confidential nature has been signed with the United States having to do with exports of crude petroleum from Canada to the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot cover from my personal knowledge all that period since 1967. I think the hon. member ought to direct his question to the appropriate minister.

Mr. Woolliams: I think the Prime Minister misunderstood the question. Has a new confidential agreement that has been kept from the oil industry been made with the government of the United States about exports of crude petroleum?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the Prime Minister replies I must remind the hon. member that questions ought to be directed to the Chair.

Mr. Woolliams: May I put the question to the Chair, sir?

Mr. Speaker: That is understood.

Mr. Woolliams: May I?

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did not hear my question. I should like to ask it of the Prime Minister. Since 1967 has any confidential agreement that has been kept from the oil industry been entered into with the United States, under which the United States is to cut back exports of crude petroleum from this country to the United States? Does the Prime Minister not want to reply?

Mr. Trudeau: The question was not directed to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

BELLEVILLE, ONT.—INVESTIGATION RESPECTING DEFECTIVE EQUIPMENT

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the increasing number of reportedly defective railway cars found at the Belleville C.N.R. terminal, including a lack of proper brake pipe testing, will the minister take immediate steps in the interests of safety to delay the removal of any carmen at the end of June until such time as an investigation is conducted by the Board of Transport Commissioners?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I suspect that is entirely outside my responsibility, in terms of the removal of employees, however I will be glad to look at the question and convey the hon. member's representations to the C.N.R.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JOSEPH DUFFOR—APPEARANCE BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Possibly the minister may wish to take it as notice and give me an answer tomorrow. Was Joseph Duffor hired by the Special Committee of Poverty in the other place? If so, on what basis was he selected for this position?

Mr. Speaker: I think this is a question which ought to be placed on the order paper, if it is in order at all.

COMMUNICATIONS

SUPPORT BY DR. O. M. SOLANDT OF BELL CANADA RATE INCREASE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Yesterday the hon. member for Wellington-Grey was ruled out of order when he attempted to ask the President of the Treasury Board a question concerning the appearance of Dr. Solandt, Chairman of the Science Council of Canada, before the Canadian Transport Commission in support of the application of the Bell Telephone Company for a rate increase.

In view of the fact that the public interest is involved to a considerable extent, and the importance of knowing on whose behalf and with what authority Dr. Solandt appeared, I ask the President of the Treasury Board if he will ascertain and let the house know as soon as convenient whether Dr. Solandt appeared on behalf of the Science Council of Canada, on his own personal initiative, or with the authorization of the government?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I will be glad to, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

D.D.T.—REASONS FOR BANNING OF USE IN SCANDINAVIA

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I am glad to see he is here in the house in spite of the roster for today. Now that Denmark has joined Sweden in banning the use of d.d.t. in agriculture, forestry and horticulture, can the minister advise whether his department is studying the reasons for such a ban in these Scandinavian countries?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have this under constant review. We are also very keenly aware of the great benefits in lowering the cost of production that d.d.t. has for our farmers in Canada. We must also take that into account.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Are discussions being held by the Department of Agriculture with other government departments which are interested in pollution control?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A supplementary to the Prime Minister. Since the matter of the roster has been mentioned, will the Prime Minister assure the house that he will not take disciplinary action against—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot rise on a supplementary at this point. Perhaps he may have a legitimate question in a moment. I draw to his attention that this is not a supplementary.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

AMENDMENTS TO MEASURE TO RESTORE DELETIONS MADE FOLLOWING MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the news reports of last Friday that the premier of one of the provinces may well contest the legality of the official languages bill in the courts, is it the intention of the minister to introduce amendments to the bill when it comes before this house to restore the provisions of the bill which were deleted or amended following his meeting with the Attorneys General of the provinces earlier this year?

Mr. Speaker: It seems the hon. member is asking a question about a matter which will be considered later today. I suggest the hon. member cannot in this way anticipate an order of the day.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTLEMENT OF IRON ORE STRIKE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him if representations have been made to him to have the federal Department of Labour join with the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland in an attempt to settle the iron ore strike in Quebec and Labrador? This affects not only workers coming under provincial jurisdictions, but also dock and railway workers. What action is the Prime Minister taking with regard to these representations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am informed I did receive a telegram to that effect this morning. I referred the matter to the Department of Labour.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary to the Prime Minister or the Acting Minister of Labour. Has an approach been made to the Premier of Quebec and to the Premier of Newfoundland indicating the willingness of the federal government to lend its good offices to settle this six week old strike? If so, what was the reply of the respective premiers?

Mr. Jim McNulty (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the minister on June 9 indicated the government's willingness to enter into this, and to mediate. The province of Quebec agreed with this, but not the province of Newfoundland.

COMBINES

BEEF—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE PROSECUTIONS UNDER ACT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the proper statement made by the Minister of Agriculture that receipts by farmers of present prices for beef are fair and reasonable, and the difference of opinion expressed by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, will the minister say now whether he is contemplating prosecuting under the Combines Investigation Act? The information available today is that while wholesale prices of beef have risen 13.6 cents a pound over a period of time, chain stores have raised their prices from 25 cents to 40 cents a pound. Is the minister going to take some action in this regard?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the members of the government will be delighted with the endorsement from the right hon. gentleman, and the acknowledgement that the Minister of Agriculture is a great fighter on behalf of the interests of the department; also the acknowledgement by the right hon. gentleman that the Minister of Agriculture has properly put the case before the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must bring to the attention of hon. members and the minister that we are running short of time. I see large numbers of members waiting for a chance to ask questions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That kind of answer—

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the right hon. gentleman in a moment. I remind hon. members we are running short of time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: After the prelude of nonsense, will the minister say whether for once he is going to be a responsible minister and protect the Canadian consumers by taking action?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DRUGS—PRICE FIXING BY B.C. PHARMACISTS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can the minister say when a report is expected from the combines investigation branch on a matter recently referred to that branch by the Minister of Welfare of the province of British Columbia, namely the legality of the $1 fee being charged welfare patients for their drug prescriptions by the British Columbia Professional Pharmacists Society?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made a representation to the minister. I think that question might be placed on the order paper and discussed at the time of adjournment.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister which I am sure he is expecting. Will the Prime Minister assure the house he will not take disciplinary action against the five cabinet ministers who defied his orders and came into the house today to carry out their duties, even though we know there are ulterior reasons for their doing so?

EDUCATION

EXTENSION OF YOUTH ALLOWANCE

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): My question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister received any correspondence from boards of education requesting that the youth allowance be extended until the completion of students' secondary school courses, regardless of age?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Not that I can recall, Mr. Speaker.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—DISCUSSION AS TO AGENCY TO CO-ORDINATE ACTION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Was there any discussion at the recent constitutional conference with respect to the establishment of a special federal agency to co-ordinate the many ways in which the federal government is involved in the field of human resources development, or education?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL HOLIDAYS

RECOGNITION OF ST-JEAN-BAPTISTE DAY

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is just a short one for the Prime Minister in order to clarify information for visiting school groups. Will next Tuesday, June 24, St-Jean-Baptiste day, one of the days on which this house normally does not sit, be recognized as a holiday by the house as usual?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR GRANT BY UNITED BLACK FRONT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister advise whether the grant in respect of the Black United Front in Nova Scotia will be paid directly to the front, or directly to the county of Halifax to supplement their own program?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the matter of a grant and the manner of payment is still under consideration by the government, the Secretary of State and so on.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the cause of the delay arises out of the fact that the government is now considering an interim grant as opposed to the full $100,000 at the outset?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there was ever any question of a full lump sum grant initially. It was always in terms of a phasing over a period of years.

Mr. Forrestall: Then, could the minister give some indication whether this matter will be resolved before the house recesses for the summer?

Mr. Munro: It is hopeful, Mr. Speaker.

PENITENTIARIES

FEDERAL PRISON AT MILLHAVEN—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Solicitor General. In view of the statement by Professor Stuart Ryan of Queen's University that the new federal prison at Millhaven which will be the replacement for the Kingston penitentiary is a glorified hole of bullet-proof glass and stainless steel which we should all be afraid of, will the minister make a statement on motions and refer this matter to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for study?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, I would not be disposed to dignify in that way the statement the hon. member has just made. But if there is any concern about the institution I would be very glad to answer any questions I can on that subject.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, would the minister make a statement on motions with regard to the serious matter the professor has pointed out to the Canadian public.

WATER RESOURCES

POLLUTION BY D.D.T. OF INLAND FISHERY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries which revolves around a question I asked him concerning the effect of d.d.t. on our freshwater fish. Because of the importance of this would the minister make a statement on motions with regard to his findings in this matter.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter. I do not want to create any unnecessary alarm about d.d.t. in Canadian lakes, because it is not a threat, but a factual answer is required and I will consider making a statement on this important subject.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister aware of the difficulties reportedly encountered by the Premier of Newfoundland in obtaining a visa to enter Red China? If so will this be the subject of negotiations at Stockholm and what steps will the government take—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even at this point I do not think the question is in order.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

CHANGE IN TIMING OF COURT SITTINGS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State whose department is responsible for the holding of citizenship courts. Could the minister explain to the house why the time of meeting of these courts has been changed from the evening to the day time, at considerable inconvenience and expense to new Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt very much if this question is in order. Again I must repeat what I said yesterday about its being a little difficult to indicate to hon. members that questions should be placed on the order paper. However, even realizing this I doubt whether all questions can be asked at this time. I think this is a question which could easily be placed on the order paper.

FISHERIES

DAMAGE TO EQUIPMENT CAUSED BY DRAGGERS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that there are further reports of outside dragging activities in northwestern Newfoundland which are causing damage to and interference with fishing operations, would the minister indicate whether it is his intention to increase patrol operations in that area to overcome this unhealthy situation?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the fisheries protection officers in the area have been alerted to this problem and I am awaiting a report.

AIR TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, although I was beginning to run out of steam I kept on rising. Last Tuesday the Minister of Transport told the house he hoped to make a statement on motions with regard to air traffic control within a day or two. Will the minister say when we may expect a statement on this subject which is so important to the safety of those who travel by air.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, hon. members have asked for a great many statements. I made one yesterday on the matter of auto safety. I would not like to hog the show, so I will put off this statement for a couple of days.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): When the minister makes this statement would he also table the second volume of the Robinson report?

AIRPORTS

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE—USE OF JUMBO JETS AT NEW INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Now that the economic use of jumbo jets is brought into question I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is considering delaying the opening of the jumbo jet airport in Quebec until a decision is made with regard to the airport itself?

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance which is supplemantary to the question left unanswered by the Prime Minister. Does the Minister of Finance endorse the idea of spending $500 million of the Canadian taxpayers' money on an airport to service aircraft which may not even go into service?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): If we do not have jumbo jets we will have supersonic jets.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REPORTED AGREEMENT AT DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE AS TO AMENDING FORMULA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister give us a little further information on the important matter which arises out of his answer yesterday that the federal government does not intend to discuss a constitutional amending formula until there has been agreement on a "certain number of questions of substance". Could the Prime Minister tell us what he had in mind when he mentioned a certain number of questions. Did he have in mind particular areas in respect of the constitution or is this a quantitative measure?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt whether this question is not a debate. However, we have a few minutes left before the end of the question period which might be used for the purpose of a reply from the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Go ahead and ask your jumbo question.

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps the Prime Minister would reply, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Trudeau: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that the amending formula has not come under consideration yet in the discussions between the federal and provincial governments. Government policy on this particular aspect will be formulated and announced in due course. We have not yet reached any conclusion on the kind of amending formula which could be used for either amending the total constitution or various parts of the constitution.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister give us any more indication in terms of time when the government of Canada might be making the proposal or inviting the provincial governments to discuss an amending formula.

Mr. Trudeau: We have always taken the position that the question of the mechanics of the amending formula itself would be at the end of the agenda, but of course if the provinces do not agree with this—and in certain cases they have asked that we study certain things other than those which we propose—we would be open to representation in this regard.

PRICE STABILITY, INCOMES AND EMPLOYMENT

POSSIBILITY OF SITTINGS OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE DURING SUMMER RECESS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, before Orders of the Day are called I wonder whether I could direct a question to the acting house leader.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member can only direct a question to the acting house leader with the unanimous consent of the house since the question period has expired.

Mr. McGrath: It concerns the business of the house. I assume I have consent to ask the acting house leader whether it is the intention of the government to bring forward a measure to set up a special committee of the Senate and the House of Commons dealing with the stability of prices and incomes, and is it the intention of the government to have this joint committee sit during the recess?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is a far more involved question than the order of business coming before this house.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISIONS RESPECTING STATUS AND USE— APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.— REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris) moved:

That Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be amended in Clause 12 to read as follows:

"12. In accordance with and subject to the provisions of this act and the terms of any agreement that may be entered into by the Governor in Council with the government of a province as described in Section 15, the Governor in Council and the Lieutenant Governor in Council may from time to time by proclamation establish one or more federal bilingual districts (hereinafter called 'bilingual districts') in a province, and alter the limits of any bilingual districts so established."

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member knows, there may be some difficulty in connection with the amendment he has moved, but at the same time it appears not to present any difficulties from a procedural standpoint. In view of all the circumstances, the hon. member may wish to proceed with the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I would like to point to the Chair and to the house that during the first meeting of the special committee on the official languages bill, it had been clearly understood and unanimously agreed that everything possible would be done to hasten the printing of the minutes of proceedings and evidence.

This had been agreed to and it had even been resolved, then, that special measures would be taken to give priority to the printing and distribution of the minutes of proceedings and evidence, since we are getting near the end of the session, and we must expedite the business of the house.

Well, not a single report of the proceedings of the special committee on the official languages bill has been printed and handed to members of parliament yet.

Therefore, I object strongly at the very beginning of this debate—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fortin: —if we do not have in our hands—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fortin: —the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the said committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member and tell him that I am assured that the said reports have been distributed to all hon. members. It may be the distribution system of the hon. member that is at fault.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, my colleague the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), who was a member of the special committee on the official languages bill at the same time as myself, at one time, has not received any copy of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of that committee.

For my part, I have not received any and I can assure you that my distribution system is operating smoothly.

Members of parliament have the right to receive reports and considering that we are now—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member and tell him that copies of the report are available. He has only to ask for one and he will get it.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Thus far this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, the proceedings have been marked by an air of cordiality, if not conviviality. Just before I get into the substance of the matter before the house perhaps I might suggest that it would be a good idea to have the television camera in parliament every day if we could create the atmosphere and the high level of attendance we experienced today. Certainly I do not want to detract from the prevailing spirit as we begin to discuss what is regarded by all members of the house as a basic and critical matter to the future development of Canadian nationhood.

Unfortunately, under the new rules one of the problems faced by members during the debate at the report stage is the necessity of submitting amendments well before the matter is discussed in the House of Commons. Those of us who have been around for some years know that under the old rules we became accustomed to the privilege of bringing forward amendments during the course of the actual debate in the house. For that reason I can appreciate the comment Your Honour made that the amendment I propose to clause 12 of Bill C-120 may trespass upon areas of responsibility which devolve almost exclusively upon the provincial governments in Canada.

I have been giving some thought to this matter and I am reminded that last week in Ottawa there began a series of important discussions on the relationship between the federal and provincial governments in areas of joint responsibility. As I understand from what news has become available about those discussions, up to the present moment there has been a considerable degree of progress in respect of the distribution of responsibility as between the federal and provincial governments, particularly in fiscal areas where the problem of joint responsibility overlaps on spending programs.

The point I am trying to emphasize in the amendment gives the provincial governments an important say in decisions regarding bilingual districts in Canada. I hope that it will also be a subject for discussion at the continuing conference between the provincial premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada. I understand there is to be a document produced by the Prime Minister in due course in respect of this matter which may clarify the issue, certainly so far as fiscal matters are concerned.

If we are to draw any conclusions at all from the statement of the Premier of Ontario about the agreement which has now been reached on the question of medicare, there is now a clearcut pattern established as to respective areas of responsibility in joint programs. The Premier of Ontario has summed up the situation in a significant phrase, that he anticipated that with the changing emphasis on federal-provincial responsibility there will be no more medicare fiascos of this kind. Unfortunately, the misunderstanding has unnecessarily delayed their implementation of this important program for people in certain provinces.

In respect of this amendment, what I had in mind was the spirit that operated to a magnificent degree last week when the Premier of Ontario and the Premier of Quebec were able to agree upon an entente cordiale which will go a long way toward solving the problems of bilingualism and biculturalism in their respective spheres of influence. This is the sort of spirit I would like to see prevail among all provincial governments because this entente cordiale, arrived at by mutual agreement of the provinces concerned, will, I believe, ultimately reduce the tensions which exist within the body politic of Canada. These tensions are always present because we are a geographically large and an ethnically, culturally and economically diverse nation.

I should like to point out in passing that this spirit also prevails in other provinces. In 1966 the province of Manitoba, of its own accord and without any legislative coercion from Ottawa, took the initiative of providing educational services in areas of substantial minority groupings. This does not only apply to French speaking areas; certain privileges have been accorded to areas of other cultural predominance because of the nature of the mosaic which exists in western Canada.

I am not a lawyer, and I was going to obtain a legal opinion from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) in this respect, but he can read Hansard and see what I have in mind in this regard. It would seem to me there is general agreement that l'esprit de la loi is much more important than the letter of the law with regard to linguistic and cultural rights. One of the reasons there has been so much controversy in certain areas of Canada is the overtones of compulsion which inevitably arise from Bill C-120. This is of special concern to western Canada and other provinces of similar cultural make-up wherein many minorities are involved.

I refer in passing—this strongly motivated the amendment I have put before the house this afternoon—to the fact that there is rapid progress toward transferring responsibility in respect of what might be recognized by all members of the house as the ethnic group which has been most seriously ignored and violated from the standpoint of its fundamental rights. I refer to our first Canadians, the Indians and Eskimos. We know there is a move under way that will gradually transfer to the provincial level the major responsibilities for ensuring first-class citizenship status to our native population. This policy has been agreed to on both sides of the house. In view of this transfer of responsibility to the provinces, I believe the provinces should have a special concern and voice in these matters. This, of course, applies also to other ethnic groups.

As I look at the other amendments on the order paper I am reassured to find that we will have an opportunity to debate this matter under another amendment which deals with the problems of multiculturalism and multilingualism in western Canada. As I indicated in my opening remarks in reply to your question, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to introduce a discordant note as we begin this important debate. Certainly I do not wish to trespass upon any area that would be regarded as a provincial matter. I do not wish to interfere with provincial affairs. I agree that this matter should be left to the continuing constitutional conference, which I hope will arrive at a formula that will make it easier for the people of every province of Canada to feel at home in all other parts of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dinsdale: The minister from Manitoba, the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Richardson), speaks in the same accents, because he said recently that he is more concerned with interpreting western Canada to Ottawa than he is Ottawa to western Canada. I agree heartily with that statement, because we sometimes feel there is difficulty in communicating a viewpoint which some of us who come from western Canada regard as being peculiar to the west. I do not mean that westerners are peculiar, but they do have a peculiar viewpoint in this respect.

During the course of the debate it has been suggested that westerners are bigots in matters pertaining to civil liberties, cultural and linguistic equality and all the other matters raised in the debate. I deny this most vehemently. Members from western Canada are, above all else, most tolerant. Because we were raised in a climate of minorities we have achieved an amazing degree of the spirit of Canadianism out of a diversity that appears on the surface almost insurmountable.

In bringing these remarks to a conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me, in the light of Your Honour's comment, in the light of what happened at the meetings last week in Ottawa and the entente cordiale achieved by the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, that the provinces are quite capable of looking after their own interests in this respect. I would therefore leave them to take whatever action they feel is necessary.

I think our chief concern at this time, as we face a fundamental issue of confederation, is to emphasize the necessity of national unity. National unity in Canada can be achieved only out of great diversity and by emphasizing those things which all Canadians have in common. I trust that each one of us will be aware of the situation. We are forced by government action into a debate on a matter that is very delicate. It involves a confrontation in extremely sensitive areas, and it is my hope that as the provinces and Ottawa continue to negotiate they will work out a satisfactory formula in the spirit of the law rather than from the standpoint of the letter of the law that will take into consideration the rights of all the minorities in this great country of ours.

With those remarks in mind and so as not to precipitate a confrontation at this moment, and certainly not to dilute the spirit of good will and amity that has been generated thus far this afternoon, I ask for the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Dinsdale) withdrawn.

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Before Your Honour puts the next amendment, may I put forward for your consideration the question of the exercise of discretion which Your Honour has under the appropriate Standing Order with regard to the calling of votes on amendments which may be considered by the house from time to time. In view of the date of adjournment, would Your Honour give some thought—and hopefully there will be some discussions on the matter among the house leaders—with regard to deferring the votes in one or two groups so that the house may know well in advance when the votes will take place. I ask Your Honour to consider this now before we come to the end of the first motion, and in the meantime I hope that the house leaders will be able to meet.

Mr. Speaker: I am in complete accord with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Peace River. It was my intention to suggest to hon. members that perhaps there should be an exercise of the Chair's discretion in this way and that the vote or votes be deferred until negotiations between the house leaders take place.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on another point of order, Mr. Speaker. I take it, because it was the procedure followed on the bill on the Criminal Code, that the amendments now on the order paper have been examined by you and are in order, so that we can prepare ourselves accordingly?

Mr. Speaker: I might say that if my recollection is correct in connection with the bill on the Criminal Code, rulings were made on amendments as they were reached, although we considered groups of amendments and rulings were made on those. But I might say, if it would be of assistance to hon. members, that these proposed amendments have been examined as closely as possible and in so far as the Chair can judge they appear to be in order. However, this should not be taken as a ruling because it may well be that hon. members on one side or the other may want to raise a point of order when these amendments are moved and, of course, arguments either for or against the procedural points would have to be considered by the Chair at that time. I might say that in a preliminary way it appears that the amendments are in order.

At present the Chair will put for the consideration of hon. members the motion proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid).

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan) moved:

That Bill C-120, an act respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be amended by deleting subclause (1) of clause 14 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(1) As soon as possible following the completion of each decennial census, or, in the case of the decennial census taken in the year 1961, forthwith after the coming into force of this Act, the Dominion Statistician shall prepare and send to the Clerk of the Privy Council a return certified by him showing the population of each of the provinces and census districts in Canada, categorized according to the official languages spoken as a mother tongue by persons resident therein as ascertained by that census, and as soon as possible thereafter the Governor in Council shall, pursuant to Part I of the Inquiries Act, appoint not less than twelve persons, being representative of residents of the several provinces, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, as commissioners to constitute a Bilingual Districts Advisory Board for the purpose of conducting an inquiry as described in section 15."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a comparatively simple but, in our opinion, very important amendment to the proposed bill. If hon. members examine clause 14 of the bill as it is now drafted, they will notice that the clause provides in subclause 1 that as soon as possible following the completion of each decennial census the Governor in Council shall, pursuant to Part I of the Inquiries Act, appoint—and these are the important words:

—not less than five and not more than ten persons, selected as nearly as may be as being representative of residents of the several provinces or principal regions of Canada—

It goes on to say that the Governor in Council shall appoint them:

—as commissioners to constitute a Bilingual Districts Advisory Board for the purpose of conducting an inquiry as described in section 15.

This board will be set up to conduct an inquiry into whether or not any particular area should be designated by the board as a bilingual district. The government, in its wisdom I suggest, during the committee stage of the debate on this bill accepted a proposal submitted by us that this inquiry should include at least one public hearing when the advisory board sits in the various areas to determine whether or not a particular area should be constituted as a bilingual district. Having conducted a public hearing, presumably it will decide whether or not a district should be established as a bilingual district. Our suggestion is that in carrying out a function as important as the actual determination of whether or not an area should be established as a bilingual district this advisory board should be composed of representatives from each of the provinces of Canada and from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

We hear a great deal from the government these days about participatory democracy. Surely this is a way in which the provinces will now be able to really participate in the determination of the question of whether or not bilingual districts should be set up in particular areas. I wish to remind the house at this stage that according to the report of the B and B commission eight of the provinces of Canada can have within them bilingual districts: parts of Ontario, parts of New Brunswick, parts of Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and possibly one district in Alberta. So that even today practically every province of Canada can be affected by the decision of the advisory board. This is why we say that in arriving at a decision as important as this one every province of Canada and the Yukon and the Northwest Territories should be represented on that board.

I agree that today there are two provinces—perhaps Newfoundland is a very good example—where there would not be a bilingual district, according to the provisions of this bill. But let us not forget that by reason of the mobility of the population we do not know whether in five or even less years' time Newfoundland may not also qualify as a province in which bilingual districts may be set up. Tremendous expansion is taking place nowadays in the Labrador area. It is possible that French speaking people from Quebec will see fit to move there. So Newfoundland may be affected by this bill at some time in the future even if it is not affected by it today.

We contend that in the interest of fairness every province should be represented on this board. I know it will be argued that it is sufficient to allow representation to regions of Canada. The bill now says the board shall consist of not fewer than five and not more than ten members. It does not even say that every region must be represented. I do not think this is satisfactory in the case of a board which will perform so important a function.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has stated that the proper functioning of this legislation will depend to a great extent upon the co-operation of the provinces. I agree. I hope this plan will function and I hope the provinces will co-operate. Indeed, I am confident we shall obtain co-operation from them. We seriously suggest that as a means of obtaining this co-operation every province should be represented on the advisory board.

It may be objected, as I mentioned earlier, that there are provinces which will have no bilingual districts, and that for this reason there is no need for them to be represented. It has even been suggested in committee that such provinces might attempt to boycott the idea of bilingual districts. I dismiss this suggestion as irresponsible. I am confident that the provinces are interested in the principle underlying this bill and that they will not attempt to boycott the setting up of a bilingual district if one were contemplated in accordance with requirements of the legislation.

We need the co-operation of all the provinces, and one of the best ways of obtaining it would be to make sure that every province is represented on the advisory board, the board which will decide whether or not a district shall be a bilingual district. The board will reach a decision of this kind presumably after it has conducted public hearings. What could possibly be wrong about requesting that every province should be represented on this board?

Acceptance of this proposition would not result in an unwieldy board. After all, a board with ten or 12 members is not an unwieldy body; much larger boards have been set up under parliamentary rules and are doing an effective job. Indeed, far from making the board unwieldy we would be making it participatory because every province would be represented, and this is as it should be.

I do not propose to speak at further length. I shall close simply by recommending the amendment we are proposing.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member put forward a similar amendment before the special committee which studied this bill. After a good deal of discussion, it was not adopted. The government feels there was a thorough examination—and a fair examination—of this bill by the special committee.

Twenty-nine amendments to my count were accepted by the committee. Admittedly some were introduced by myself. Between 10 and 15 were introduced from the government side, five or six at least were introduced on behalf of his party by the hon. member who has just spoken, and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) was responsible for the others.

We intend to take the position at this stage of backing the committee report. We feel that if the committee system is to expand and prosper, and if the effectiveness of the role of the individual Member of Parliament is to be increased, the government and, indeed, all parties should pay the proper attention to committee reports. Having regard to what I believe was the good will from all sides shown during the committee proceedings, we intend to support this report.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister permit a question before he continues? It concerns the introductory remarks he has just made. He talked about making the committee system work and told us that various amendments were considered in committee, some of which were allowed and some of which were voted down. Are you really saying that any amendments which have been placed on the order paper by members of the opposition will automatically be voted down at this stage because they were considered by the committee?

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to do this again, but perhaps the hon. member will keep in mind that he ought to address his remarks to the minister through the Chair.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I might say that where an amendment in the terms proposed here, on report stage, has been proposed in similar terms in the committee and has been given thorough scrutiny and discussion, the government takes the position in the main that we should accept the committee report in that respect. It may be that some of these amendments were not proposed in the committee in which case there will have to be a fresh discussion in this chamber.

The purpose of this amendment is to make of the advisory board a strictly representative institution, one upon which every province and territory would be represented. This is underlined by the speech the hon. member has just made, and his reasoning is set out more fully in the record of the committee at pages 220 to 228. The amendment sets a minimum figure of 12 members but no maximum figure, and we think this is objectionable in the sense that it might conceivably lead to a very unwieldy board.

As the hon. member admitted, it is not at all certain that every province will have a bilingual district. Newfoundland and British Columbia would not if the recommendations of the B and B Commission are followed. The bill now provides that members be selected as nearly as may be as being representative of the various principal regions and provinces of Canada. In the bill as it reads there is already ample flexibility and room for ensuring that the regions of Canada are adequately represented. We do not believe that the bill would be advanced and the law improved by adding the inflexibility of a provision that each province be represented on the board. Those, in the main, Mr. Speaker, would be the reasons for which we would recommend to the house that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. McKinley: Would the minister permit another question? I wonder whether the minister would try to persuade his colleagues in the cabinet to operate in the same manner when we reach the report of the committee on agriculture.

Mr. Horner: Transportation too.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I first say that I heartily disagree with the minister's statement that, because the house is faced with the report of a committee that has worked very hard on a bill, the house, the government or anybody else ought to accept the report—period. I think the minister cannot have thought about this matter very carefully because it seems to me to be a most illadvised remark.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: If the suggestion were followed it would totally destroy the value of this stage of a bill. Why have the report stage of a bill if the house has to accept automatically everything presented in the report of a committee? Obviously, in view of the new set-up of our committees the intention of the report stage is to give all members of the house an opportunity to deal with a bill and to move amendments. In this way the collective wisdom of all members of the house replaces the collective wisdom of a number of members of the house. This may not always be better wisdom but it does give wider representation. I hope that the minister did not mean what he said in this regard.

Second, I frankly tell the house that some of my colleagues in the New Democratic party caucus have a great deal of sympathy for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid), though I am not one of them. I fully appreciate the sincerity of the thought behind this motion, but I suggest to hon. members, to my own colleagues and to others that the motion is really not a good one, and for two main reasons.

Let me take the more important reason first. There are some provinces from which it might be considered wiser to have two representatives on the advisory board. If I may, I should like to name those provinces. I think it would be very advisable for the future of Canada and for the workings of this advisory board to have Quebec represented by an English speaking as well as a French speaking member, and to have Ontario represented by a French speaking as well as an English speaking member. If you had only the one member for each province then obviously you would limit Quebec to one French speaking member, because the majority of the people in that province are French speaking, and Ontario to one English speaking member for the same obvious reason. In the case of these two large central provinces, where in Quebec there is a large English speaking minority and in Ontario a large French speaking minority, I respectfully urge the government to consider it advisable to permit each province to be represented by more than one member.

I also suggest that it may well be an additional advantage in regard to the working of the bill and the welfare of Canadians that instead of having one member for each of the three prairie provinces, if I may use that area specifically—, there be representatives on the board of some of the minorities who live in the prairie provinces. It may well be much more important to the working of this bill and the purpose the bill is trying to serve to have a member of Ukrainian or German background on the board rather than a member for each of the three prairie provinces where the general situation and attitudes are very similar.

It seems to me that to provide rigidly that there be one member from each province and from each of the two territories is not a good idea in terms of what Canada really requires and what the function of the board will be. It is not a board that will carry on inquiries over a wide spectrum; it will be concerned merely with the consideration of the census and matters related to the establishment of a bilingual district.

I can see arguments on the other side, and I frankly admit that I am not without difficulty in opposing this motion. I can well see, as some of my colleagues have indicated to me with a great deal of validity, that there will be great value in bringing on to the board representatives of provinces that are not likely even to have federal bilingual districts—the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) for one pressed this point upon me—in order that those provinces are brought into the workings of the act in the way in which the hon. member for Cardigan intends. If one were to do that, the board would have a membership even greater than 12.

Personally—and here I come to my second reason for feeling unhappy about this motion—on principle I oppose the notion that every federal body and federal instrument has to be representative of each province and territory in Canada. I think it is about time that our federal institutions concern themselves with the quality of representation rather than with the geography of representation in every case. There are a great many institutions, including even cabinets, that could benefit from a little more quality and a little less geography. That is probably true of this cabinet, as it has been true of other cabinets.

Personally, I cannot support the amendment because of its rigidity and the requirement that there be one member for each province. If the government were to make allowance for the points I have made, which in my view are more important than representation from each of the provinces, then the government would have to add to the 12 members proposed by this motion. I think it is more important to have a representative on the board of the large minority group in Quebec as well as another representative of the large minority group in Ontario, along with people who can express the views and wishes of other minorities in western Canada that are larger than the minority that speaks one of the official languages.

With this kind of representation, which as I say is much more important to me than any sort of mechanical provincial representation, the board might consist of 15 or 18 members instead of 12. I am prepared to place the responsibility for these appointments where it belongs, on the government.

Perhaps this is another opportunity as we start our discussion of the report stage for me to repeat what I said in the first speech, I think, that I made on this bill and also two or three times in committee. This bill will be a blessing rather than a catastrophe only if the government acts in a way that is sensitive to the needs of Canada's future and the needs and wishes of Canada's people—all its people everywhere. This bill will be a blessing rather than a catastrophe only if the government is aware constantly of the fact that its implementation will require some years of education, with positive attention being paid to the removal of misunderstanding and prejudices across the country. This bill will be of value to Canada only if the government is sensitive to the need to remove the fears of employees of the government and of its corporations and agencies, as well as those who may want to become employees of the government and its crown corporations in the future, and applies this law with sensitivity to the factors I have outlined.

This bill will work only if the government has sense enough to appoint members to the Bilingual Districts Advisory Board who will in fact be representative of the various sections of this country as well as the various minorities to be found right across Canada. This bill will be of value only if this government will have the intelligence and sensitivity to appoint as commissioner a person who understands what makes Canada tick and what are the various streams and currents in our country's life, and if it will avoid, as I have said more than once, replacing one injustice which we are trying to remove with a new injustice which will merely serve to divide this country all over again. No words in the bill will accomplish this.

Mr. Dinsdale: We must be concerned about the spirit of the law.

Mr. Lewis: Yes. The spirit of the law will be important. You may have 12 members on the advisory board to represent every province and territory and they may be a bunch of copper-headed, obstinate, adamant, insensitive people who will ride roughshod over the situation. If that is the case the bill will have accomplished nothing. It will not have given us anything of value.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask the hon. member a question? How does he distinguish between the rule of law and the rule of a person who may be a dictator? As I understood him, he said that nothing has been written into the bill to protect any of us. Surely we prefer to be ruled by law and not to be ruled by people who may be dictators.

Mr. Lewis: It must be my fault that the hon. member for Calgary North did not hear me. Or perhaps he was listening to a more important conversation. I do not know. I did not say at all or suggest at all what he says I said or suggested. I said that the quality of the people who will serve on the board and act as commissioner is an important consideration.

Mr. Woolliams: I know.

Mr. Lewis: It is most important to see that the right kinds of people are appointed. It is the way in which the government will approach this matter and the way in which the minister responsible for implementing this law will approach it that is important. If the minister responsible for implementing the law, whoever he may be, is an obstinate, copper-headed bull in a china shop and appoints people who display a like attitude, then this law will be a disaster. But if the government and the minister and the people appointed all approach this law with the sensitivity it requires, then I believe we shall have taken a tremendous step in removing an important grievance from which some of our people have suffered for a century. That is why I support the principle of the bill.

To make further reply to the hon. member, I was trying to say that the quality of the people who take over the job of actually administering the law is not something you can write into the bill. Whether you have 10 members or 12 members on the board will not in the end make much difference if the kinds of people appointed are people who will implement the law in the wrong way.

I am prepared to place the responsibility where, in my view, it lies. Hon. members will be here as Members of Parliament and parliament will be here. If the government approaches this law in a way in which some hon. members fear it may—I have not seen enough evidence to warrant that fear but I am as watchful as any other hon. member—we shall take appropriate action. My colleagues and I will be as watchful as any members of the house to make sure that this law helps Canadian unity and does not hinder it, that it unites us and does not divide us, and that it does not place any Canadian at an unnecessary or unjust advantage vis-à-vis the government and vis-à-vis employment in the public sector, whether that employment is in the Public Service or in a Crown corporation. But the responsibility lies with the treasury benches. I am prepared to leave that responsibility where it lies and to speak to the people of Canada when the time comes if that responsibility is not carried out as it ought to be.

As I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, I cannot support the amendment.

Some of my colleagues who are sympathetic toward it may well support it. It is not the kind of amendment on which the principle of the bill rests. I cannot support it for the two reasons I have given. First, it is rigid. It is wrong for federal institutions to be rigidly representative of geographic areas when they ought to be flexibly representative of the quality of the people of the country, as that quality is related to the purposes of this act. Second, I believe there are areas which ought to be represented by more than one member so that minorities as well as majorities can be represented in the province in question. Also, there are minority groups in this country which need to be represented on this board much more urgently than every one of a group of provinces displaying similar histories and similar attitudes on the part of their peoples.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we are now considering an amendment put forward by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid), to amend clause 14 of the official languages bill, as reported to the house by the special committee on the official languages bill.

This amendment concerns membership on a certain Bilingual Districts Advisory Board. To place the discussion in its proper context, I will recall that clause 14 of the bill, as brought back before the house by the special committee on the official languages bill, a group which, incidentally, deserves to be congratulated on its efficient work, a good demonstration of the importance of national unity at this time provides for the appointment of five to six commissioners.

The number is not specified. The text reads, in part, as follows:

> —not less than five and not more than ten persons, selected as nearly as may be as being representative of residents of the several provinces or principal regions of Canada, as commissioners to constitute a Bilingual Districts Advisory Board—

Now the honourable member for Cardigan has probably noticed that Canada includes not a certain number, but a definite number of provinces. He also noted that the census in Canada does not cover merely a few, but all provinces.

He probably felt—I imagine these were his motives—that the question of establishing bilingual districts was of concern to the whole nation and should not merely arouse the interest, but also require the participation of every Canadian province in this great undertaking of bilingualism throughout Canada, under the official languages bill. Consequently, he proposes to make a slight change in clause 14, to make it a bit more specific, which reads as follows:

• (4:00 p.m.)

> —appoint not less than twelve persons, being representatives of residents of several provinces, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, . . . to constitute a Bilingual Districts Advisory Board—

I heard the remarks of the mover of this motion, as well as those of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and, to my mind, their arguments were very weak.

From the parliamentary point of view and in the spirit of the official languages bill, I feel that the reply of the Minister of Justice—even though he did excellent work as well as the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier)—was unsatisfactory and weak in the face of the argument set forth by the member for Cardigan.

Let us say that I was more in favour of the motion of the member. After having heard the member for York South (Mr. Lewis), I no longer have any doubts; I am completely in favour of the amendment and hope the majority of my colleagues are also. The argument of the member for York South—who is bent on opposing the amendment—is weaker than that of the minister. In addition, the reasoning of the member for York South is wily and does not follow either the spirit or the letter of the amendment of the member for Cardigan.

I want to restore the debate in its true context, briefly. We must not fall into sentimentality. There has been too much of it with regard to confederation, bilingualism and Canada. That is why we are so far behind in solving the problem of national unity. It is time to come back to earth in order to build a great Canada where everyone's interests will be respected.

It is precisely in this perspective of respect for individual interests that I speak in this manner because, in short, the confederation is composed of different provinces which are rather different one from another geographically, culturally, psychologically and traditionally.

Therefore, the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan is more in accordance with the image of Canada as it should be and as we all want it to be. Clause 14 of the bill seems to grant the governor in council a power which I would term discretionary in some fields.

I do not fear the governor in council—far from it—we trust him but since the making of national unity is a national endeavour as well as that of bilingualism, according to the wording of the languages bill, in which every province must co-operate closely, permanently, it goes without saying that each province and the Northwest Territories should have a representative on this Bilingual Districts Advisory Council in order to express the opinion of their citizens about the analysis of the results of the census which has just been taken, according to the preamble of clause 14.

Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of clause 14, one can read, and I quote:

As soon as possible following the completion of each decennial census, or, in the case of the decennial census taken in the year 1961, forthwith after the coming into force of this act,—

And here, Mr. Speaker, is what I would like to bring to the attention of this house:

—the coming into force of this act, the Dominion Statistician shall prepare and send to the clerk of the Privy Council a return certified by him showing the population of each of the provinces—

This is exactly how clause 14 begins—

—of each of the provinces and census districts in Canada, categorized according to the official languages spoken as a mother tongue by persons resident therein as ascertained by that census.

Following production of that return by the Dominion Statistician, it is proposed to entrust the Privy Council with the setting up of that Bilingual Districts Advisory Board which will conduct inquiries and gather statistical data in each province.

If we accept the introductory statement to clause 14, as the minister is urging us to do, the analysis of the statistics in each province would enable the government to follow population movements between censuses and to determine whether conditions have changed in bilingual districts and whether the creation of a new bilingual district has become necessary. It seems to me desirable for each province to be represented, but not, as the hon. member for York South suggested, by two citizens from Ontario because this is an English-speaking province, or by two persons from Quebec because this is a French-speaking province. It should rather be, as the hon. member for Cardigan pointed out, and rightly so, by one representative from each province, who could analyze the statistical data and determine to what extent that bill may apply.

Mr. Speaker, I should not like to delay the debate any further, but I wanted to make my views known with respect to clause 14. Even though we support that bill, in which we take pride, the fact remains that clause 14 leaves much to be desired. And I shall quote it in part:

—shall appoint not less than five and not more than ten persons, selected as nearly as may be as being representative of residents of the several provinces—

And I would like to conclude my remarks on this point.

Mr. Speaker, you will notice as I did the broadmindedness, the compliance of the government when it says:

—persons, selected as nearly as may be as being representative of residents of the several provinces or principal regions of Canada—

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is too vague. At times, five members will constitute the Board, at times six, seven or ten members. Who will decide? The Governor in Council. Who is interested in that question? All the residents of Canada, all the Canadian citizens, essentially, all the equal partners in confederation.

If the provinces are equal partners in confederation, Mr. Speaker, the number of members on the Advisory Board must not be determined, in the establishment of bilingual districts, simply upon the mood of the governor in council according to whether he will feel great one morning or will base his decision on the result of the census.

If the provinces are equal partners, if each of them has its say in connection with bilingualism, national unity, it seem obvious to me—and the government and its representatives should recognize it—that each province, in that capacity, should have its say, and not have the right to veto. It is not necessary to have, as the Secretary of State pointed out in the committee, another constitutional conference, a second parliament, or to duplicate the work of the committees, because this committee considers a very specific matter, that of the establishment of bilingual districts.

Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that the provinces must have their say, because it seems to me—and this is my last argument—that we are studying the Constitution at this time. Everybody hears of the famous constitutional conference. What outcry would be raised not only among opposition members but even among government members, if, upon creating such a constitutional conference, the government said: There will be between five and ten representatives of the various Canadian provinces at the constitutional conference.

Official Languages

• (4:10 p.m.)

In fact, the revision of our constitution must concern all the provinces which should be present as equal partners.

The establishment of a Bilingual Districts Advisory Board is, to my mind, a related question. There is no question of creating a second parliament or a second constitutional conference, but merely of recognizing bilingual districts.

Mr. Speaker, just as it would not be logical for a constitutional conference to invite only five to ten officials, at the discretion of the governor in council, neither would it be logical to ask only five to ten persons, at the discretion of the government, to sit on that Bilingual Districts Advisory Board.

In concluding, I would like the government to study the proposal of the hon. member for Cardigan. I want to congratulate him on his willingness to co-operate with the government, while attempting to improve the law which should serve the interests of all Canadians.

It is therefore quite logical and fair that each province be represented, as well as the Northwest Territories, on the Bilingual Districts Advisory Board.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the house very long. I simply wish to start by complimenting the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) who has shown glimpses of the wit and discernment which I am sure will some day make him a great parliamentarian, particularly when he supports amendments offered by this party. I think he has put forward very succinct and valid reasons for his and his party's support of the amendment offered by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid).

I should like first to deal with the merits of the substance which have been more than enumerated by the hon. member for Cardigan and the hon. member for Lotbinière and point out two or three areas of discussion which may not have been dealt with. I must also say I am very surprised that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) made such a weak defence. He did not direct his attention to the merits of the substance of the matter. His defence in effect was a procedural one which I propose to demolish to the extent it has not been demolished by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

The hon. member for York South, who is the only member so far to take up the cudgels for the government or attempt to rationalize the government's position, has made a very fine philosophical statement which is the sort of thing which might be offered during a lecture to justify under certain circumstances not having a detailed type of representation on certain federal boards. This might be delightful, but we must live with the situation as it exists today where secondary governments are now comprised of provincial governments to the extent that there are 10 of them in confederation. We can forget all about what the hon. member for York South said in that type of approach because we must get down to the realities of life in respect of this bill.

The government, for reasons which it must have considered adequate, has directed the attention of the advisory board by clause 14 and also clause 15, because we are referred to clause 15 by clause 14, to the need to negotiate with provincial governments. If the advisory board had been set up in terms of a direction to the Governor in Council to appoint an advisory board of not fewer than and not more than ten members and to refrain from in any way trying to identify the areas from which the personnel on the board should come, then the hon. member for York South in making his representation on behalf of the government would be making a fairly good case. But the government did not do that. The government did not stop there. A board is mentioned with representation from the several provinces or principal regions. There is an indication of a recognition of the fact that because of the peculiarities of this legislation and the way it is to be administered it is desirable to have this brought about.

The government recognizes the Canadian system half way. Clause 15 points out very plainly in respect of the advisory board:

> —and after holding such public hearings, if any, as it considers necessary and after consultation with the government of each of the provinces—

That is subclause 1. Subclause 2 in effect goes on to constitute the board as the agent for and on behalf of the government to negotiate draft agreements and to implement parts of the principles which are involved in this bill with the provincial governments. That being the case, the government itself in this bill has made the case for the proposal made by the hon. member for Cardigan; the government has justified it. I am not saying that each member from a province constitutes an ambassador or minister in negotiating separately and severally with the provinces, but there is a case made by the government legislation for there to be a type of at least provincial representation, and of course I add representation from the territories as well.

I think the government has made the case for us by pointing out that there will be these instructions to the advisory board to negotiate draft agreements. I believe it is a condition precedent to the effective functioning of such a board that there should be from each province and each territory a person well acquainted with the conditions which prevail in that particular area who is prepared to carry his views and representations to the advisory board as he sees them so that when the board then negotiates with the provinces under clauses 14 and 15 it will have a point of view. Certainly after the discussions have been completed there will be a consensus, but that consensus cannot be brought about unless it has been brought forward through the representatives. For this reason I must dismiss the argument advanced by the hon. member for York South on behalf of the government. I hate to insist on using that expression, but it has been so apparent I must insist on it. I urge that the amendment of the hon. member for Cardigan, supported by the hon. member for Lotbinière, should receive the sympathetic consideration of the house.

I am pleased to collaborate with the hon. member for York South in attacking the minister for what I consider to be his inadequate defence. Knowing his capacity for delivering ingenious arguments I can only concede that his failure to deal with this matter on its merits indicates he understands that there is no defence on the merits. I do not think there is any doubt about that. I am sorry for him for having to put forward the weak fabric of defence which he did. If we accept at face value what the Minister of Justice said—and I agree here wholeheartedly with the hon. member for York South—the whole purpose of the committee system and report structure vanishes; it goes down the drain.

In the committee on procedure and later in the house—I am driven to resort to this because the minister raised the issue—we looked at the question of whether or not the discussion and vote on an issue in a committee would prohibit the matter being raised again in the house. It was decided by those hon. members who reviewed the procedures of the house that we should not follow the practice in other jurisdictions such as the United Kingdom and that the disposition of an amendment before a standing committee would in no way prohibit an opportunity for that amendment to be brought back into the house at the report stage to be discussed, debated and the question put. I shall not go into the reasons for that because they are on the record. The reasons are adequate and should be final. If this is not accepted, then quite obviously the rather unique procedure which the house has devised for dealing with matters at the report stage will vanish; it will be of no use for any member of the house to put forward an amendment and bring it into the house for discussion at the report stage.

This will mean that the committees will be a battleground. That is what they should be in part—I do not deny that—but one of the most important purposes of the establishment of the committee system was to give an opportunity to the members to question, scrutinize, seek information and ferret out the facts and then come back into the house and put up the kind of argument in respect of important issues which should be put up, based on information they had been able to obtain at the committee meetings.

This has had an ancillary benefit which in my opinion is good. The proceedings of committees are not as partisan at all times as we find necessary in the house. I am not against partisanship. That is what we are here for in part, but the committees are not as partisan. I suggest to Your Honour and the members of this house that if what the Minister of Justice has suggested is accepted, and it will be accepted if it is voted upon and that is the only defence the government puts up, it will mean that the committees will become highly partisan. The issues directed to the committees will be issues dealt with by the government through constant and continuing consultation with its own members on the committee. The opportunity for a far more objective and reasonable examination will vanish, and great damage will have been done to what we are now groping in this house to achieve.

I hope the minister will reconsider. I think this amendment is a very reasonable one. I hope he will use the intelligence and wisdom I know he possesses and stand up and say that after reconsideration, having listened particularly to the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) and the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), he is withdrawing his objection and agrees that this amendment should carry.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid).

I was on the committee and I realize that this amendment similar to the one that was defeated there. I believe that there might be some advantage in again calling the attention of the government to the point stressed in that amendment. As far as I am concerned, and for the reasons I have already put forward in committee, I shall vote against the amendment.

A while ago, the hon. member for Cardigan, behind the scenes, so to say, referred to what he called an irresponsible statement. I see that he is smiling. Evidently, I felt that his remarks were directed against me, since I was really the person concerned, but he did not see fit to point to me as such.

Mr. Speaker, it is always dangerous to quote words out of context and, in a way, I rise on a question of privilege, because I would like to clear up this matter.

When I spoke on the amendment in committee, in an attempt, such as I am making today, to reconcile the views of the hon. member for Cardigan and those of the government, I said:

> It seems to me that we are determining that there shall be one representative of each province, as well as one representative for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. The following situation could well happen with regard to the committee. The representatives of the provinces that do not have any bilingual districts or have very few bilingual districts would overwhelm the representatives of the provinces with several or even many bilingual districts.
> In this way they could,—

That is the representatives of the provinces that do not have any or have very few bilingual districts.

> —in this way, they could, simply through their numerical strength, thwart the will of the minority to establish bilingual districts.

That is the statement the hon. member was referring to a moment ago and he qualified it as irresponsible.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose of committees is to consider, scrutinize in depth all the possible effects that any legislation or regulation will have, and it is in this spirit that I dealt with this subject. I did not say that could be done. I depend on the government's judgment to appoint committee members who will have an open mind and who will interpret the law not according to the letter but to its spirit. It is in this sense that I gave that example.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

I do not hold to it too strongly, but here is what I said:

> In my opinion, we should try above all to ensure a representation of districts in Canada rather than of the provinces as such.

You will agree with hon. members, Mr. Speaker, that we are now moving towards regional rather than provincial representation, in many fields. I know that there are now many federal committees and commissions on which all the provinces are not represented, but which are working out well all the same. Those committees represent regional or private interests, and they have to settle regional or private problems. For that reason, there is no need for a representative from every province.

Furthermore, I said to the committee:

> —this is the important point.

Regional, instead of provincial representation.

> —on the other hand—

—and that is in keeping with what the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said a moment ago.

> —I would fear this: if there were only 5 commissioners, for instance,—

As under the law the governor in council is authorized to appoint five to ten of them.

> —we could appoint two from Quebec, one English-speaking and one French-speaking, two from Ontario, again one French and one English, and one representative from the Atlantic provinces, which would make five.

A minimum of five on one committee.

> So, the West would not be represented—

There is in the West a significant French-speaking minority that would not be represented on that committee. And I just cannot see what there is to gain by appointing one representative for each province of Canada.

This is a struggle with numbers which would lead us nowhere. The hon. members of the opposition have all spoken—some with much eloquence—in favour of this legislation, and now they are all fighting over the matter of numerical representation.

It seems to me that it is wrong for them to insist on this, and I would urge them to vote for this legislation as reported on by the committee and to vote against the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Lotbinière want to ask a question?

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Will the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) permit a question?

Mr. Corbin: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fortin: In view of the fact that he recognizes that any member of a committee has the right and the privilege to look more closely into a subject, I would like to ask him if he does not recognize that hon. members should have the same right?

Mr. Corbin: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not quite catch the meaning of the question. Would the hon. member put his question again?

Mr. Fortin: With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

In his speech, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria pointed out that on a committee, a member may look more closely into a matter, but at the same time he said that it was a pity that hon. members should dwell on such petty details as the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cardigan.

So, I would like to ask him if he does not recognize that the house, too, has a right to study a matter thoroughly in the same way as he recognizes that the members on a committee have that right?

Mr. Corbin: I quite agree, Mr. Speaker, but so far, all the members who have taken part in the debate are those who took part in the study in committee, and they did not break any new ground. Thus, in my opinion, we are wasting our time.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I believe some aspects of this amendment have been overlooked in the debate so far and should be brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith). It was interesting to hear the speech of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I found it strange that a person with his background should rely so heavily upon the spirit and intent of the legislation rather than concerning himself with the law. Laws are made to safeguard justice, to ensure the fair treatment of all people. I ask the hon. member to think back several years to the time when the leader of a country did away with laws, forgot about the spirit and intent of the law and ruled severely against a minority group in that country.

I was surprised to hear the hon. member suggest that this amendment was really not necessary. He said the responsibility in this regard rested with the government and it did not really matter what safeguards were written into the bill because they would be no good if the spirit was not there. That was a rather interesting argument from one of his background. We have only to think of Hitler, who disregarded the laws of Germany and the safeguards written into them and ruled very severely against a minority group in that country.

It is my sincere belief that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) constitutes a definite improvement of the bill. As the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) suggested, clause 15 of the bill brings this question within the sphere of the provinces. Clause 15(3) provides quite clearly that the provinces shall be consulted in regard to this question. It may be necessary to draft an agreement with the provinces in order that the purpose of the bill is carried out. The hon. member for Peace River dealt capably and at length with this matter.

The bill sets out criteria which provide that the government shall to some extent listen to the views of the provinces on this question. The amendments sets out that there shall be at least 12 people appointed as commissioners of a Bilingual Districts Advisory Board. The amendment does not limit the number to 12. If the hon. member for York South believes that minority groups in the central provinces should have representation on the board, I interpret the amendment as allowing for more than 12 members to be appointed. If it is thought that a board of 12 would be unwieldy, I would remind the house that in connection with another bill we amalgamated three or four boards and created a board of 17 members. It was not thought that this was unwieldy. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member's argument is valid.

This bill was considered by a committee of the house. I should like to quote a statement made to the committee because I believe it is in error. I refer to Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 1 of the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill. At page 51 thereof we find the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) making the following statement:

> Mr. Chairman, I might take a remark that might be useful to Mr. McQuaid when he drafts his amendment. There are only eight provinces who have bilingual districts according to the recommendations of the Bilingual and Bicultural Commission, which means that ten was deemed to be a sufficient number to have all the interested provinces in the group. Now, I just say this for information.

If this is the foundation of clause 14 of the bill, it is very weak. It is a weak foundation because bilingual districts were set out by the B and B Commission on the basis of census districts within the provinces. This bill does not do that, because clause 13 quite clearly provides the following:

> A bilingual district established under this act shall be an area delineated by reference to the boundaries of any or all of the following, namely, a census district established pursuant to the Statistics Act, a local government or school district, or a federal or provincial electoral district or region.

A school district may be a very small area containing few people. One can easily see that under this bill there will be no province in Canada, including the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, that will not have a bilingual district if the letter of the law is carried out and the criterion of a school district is used. The B and B Commission specifically spelled out that a census district was to be the criterion, and as a rule a census district is a large area. If, as suggested in Committee Proceedings No. 1, the foundation for clause 14 is based on that premise, it is a false and poor premise because clause 13 destroys the premise.

The Minister of Justice said this matter was debated in committee and therefore the house should agree to the findings of the committee. This is a very weak defence. Committees are appointed to investigate questions and obtain information regarding the application of a piece of legislation, but the final and conclusive drafting of the legislation rests with the House of Commons. It must forever rest with the House of Commons because here all the people of Canada are represented. Committees sometimes exclude certain groups of people, areas of the country and those who represent huge areas and think in specific ways. Therefore the findings of a committee are not binding on the House of Commons and should not be accepted by the Minister of Justice. Committees do not always consider legislation in a fair and just way, and therefore legislation should not be based upon the findings of a committee.

The Minister of Justice, of all people, should not make the kind of statement he did. I know the minister attempts to be fair in most cases, and I am sure that on reflection he will regret having made that statement. Perhaps in the not too distant future he will tell the house that he has taken a different view of this question. It is my firm belief that the provinces have a direct concern in the legislation now before us.

• (4:40 p.m.)

It is all well and good for the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) to say that we are now getting around to the stage of dealing with Canada by regions. I noted the Prime Minister's remarks with regard to regions at the last federal-provincial conference. Dealing with Canada as a place divided into regions is, to me, in direct contravention of the B.N.A. Act. Certainly we have not yet reached that stage. We still have provincial boundaries, regardless of whether this is right or wrong. Perhaps the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria wants a union of the maritime provinces. I do not know his thinking in that regard.

An hon. Member: He does not want it.

Mr. Horner: If he does not, then why promote it? That is just what he was doing in his remarks this afternoon. It is my firm belief that each province wants a representative on the board who it feels will look after its interests. I also believe that each province should know who that representative is and whether or not he is protecting its interests. The decisions of the board will affect the province, will affect the provincial educational system and will affect the municipalities. Eventually, working agreements will have to be made with the provinces in the later stages of the application of this bill. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) knows that to be a fact.

It is my belief that a resident of the province can serve a useful purpose in participating in the discussions which the board will be having which will affect his province. Who knows a particular province better than a resident of it who is responsible to it? It is all well and good for me, a resident of Alberta, to be made responsible for the province of Ontario, of which, incidentally, I am very fond, but I do not think the people of Ontario would particularly like me to sit on this board on their behalf.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Horner: Because I am not likely to know the province as well as someone who resides in it, and I would not know the specific areas which will be affected by this legislation as well as one who resides in that province.

There is no reason whatever why the government cannot accept this amendment. If they believe in a participatory democracy, if they believe in subclauses 2 and 3 of clause 15, there is no reason why they should not accept the amendment. If clause 14 is drafted on a premise which, as the minister suggests at page 51 of the proceedings of the committee, is based on the recommendations of the B and B commission that only eight provinces will have bilingual districts, then I suggest that that premise is false because clause 13 contradicts it. I see an hon. member over there shaking his head. I would like to hear him explain why clause 13 does not contradict that premise.

I read the report of the B and B commission in that regard. The report says specifically that districts will be established on census divisions and not according to the size of school districts, municipal districts or provincial or federal ridings, and this is what this bill deals with. If the government wants to promote the idea that it is interested in bringing this legislation into being and fully recognizes the uncertain mood that exists in this country with regard to this legislation, then in all fairness to the house it has no alternative but to accept the amendment. If the government wishes to disregard the suspicions about this legislation in these areas, if it wants to ride roughshod over these feelings toward the bill, then it must bear the consequences. If the government wants to choose representatives from the five or six major provinces and one member from the maritimes and one member from western Canada to make up the proposed membership of five up to ten on the board, then I believe it will only add to the suspicions that are rampant across the country concerning this legislation.

The minister can sit there with a studied look on his face as if he did not care about what is being said in the house. This legislation is under his jurisdiction and it is his duty to pay attention to the mood of the public of Canada as a responsible official and an elected representative. If he wishes to sit in sullen silence and disregard this amendment, then I can only conclude that he does not care. He is like Pierre, he does not care. As I have already pointed out, clause 14 is based on a false premise. Clause 15 directly involves the provinces, and there is no one in the house who can honestly say that his province does not want its own representative to sit on the board. It seems to me that the issue we are debating this afternoon is a very important one because of the unrest and the suspicions which exist in the country today concerning this legislation. The government has an opportunity to set those fears and concerns at rest by accepting this amendment.

I am pleased to see the Minister of Justice come into the house; I am sorry that I have nearly concluded my remarks and I would hate to have to repeat them for his sake.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Pelletier: Dispense.

Mr. Horner: Finally we have a comment from the studious minister. As I was saying before the Minister of Justice came in, I was disappointed with his remarks.

An hon. Member: Oh, no, not again.

Mr. Horner: I will try to be brief.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will read the hon. member's remarks in Hansard.

Mr. Horner: Is this bill a laughing matter across Canada?

An hon. Member: You are.

Mr. Horner: That is an interesting remark by the hon. member.

An hon. Member: Don't provoke us.

Mr. Horner: I do not worry about provoking hon. members. What I worry about is the representation that my constituents will have on the board and about the way in which the application of this bill will affect my province. I certainly do not worry about whom I may provoke.

I suggest that this amendment should be accepted. It seeks to amend a clause which is based on a false premise. As found on page 51 of the committee's proceedings the Secretary of State made the following statement:

> Mr. Chairman, I might take a remark that might be useful to Mr. McQuaid when he drafts his amendment. There are only eight provinces who have bilingual districts according to the recommendations of the Bilingual and Bicultural Commission, which means that ten was deemed to be a sufficient number to have all the interested provinces in the group. Now, I just say this for information.

The Minister of Justice should know this because he was on the committee. He said that the committee's findings should be final in this regard. They are not final as is proven by the premise on which the clause is based. Clause 13 specifically spells out that a bilingual district can be as small as a school district and as large as a census division. The B and B Commission specifically suggested that census divisions are the only way in which it is possible to divide Canada into bilingual districts. To me this is the wrong premise. I believe that clause 15 involves the provinces, and the amendment to clause 14 vastly improves it. I urge the Secretary of State and the Minister of Justice to have a hurried caucus and to agree to support the amendment if they want at least to project the idea across Canada that they are concerned about the suspicions regarding the bill.

It was reported in the newspapers not long ago that the Prime Minister publicly condemned the press for not selling the idea of bilingualism to Canadians. I imagine he shrugged his shoulders and said that he did not do it as well as he could have but that the newspapers have vastly underplayed the issue and have not done a good job of selling bilingualism. In making that statement he admitted that there was a great deal of suspicion about the bill, but he felt it was a false suspicion. However, if he wishes to set that suspicion at rest, he can do so by accepting the amendment we propose as the first step toward alleviating that suspicion. Refusal to do so will only add to the suspicion in my mind and in the minds of thousands of people across Canada that the government wants to pull the wool over someone's eyes in connection with this legislation, that it does not want representatives from all the provinces sitting in on these meetings, that it wants to steer away from certain of the provinces, with the idea that only provinces agreeable to these proposals should be represented.

This is not the spirit about which the hon. member for York South spoke. It is not the spirit he suggested the government should show. Whether it likes it or not, the government is responsible to all the people in all the provinces of Canada, and unreadiness to accept this responsibility indicates that it is unwilling to pay any regard to the unrest and suspicion in the minds of many people across Canada today with regard to this legislation.

[Mr. Horner.]

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in the debate on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid), let me say first of all that I know full well that the words spoken by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) were spoken with sincerity. He expects the government to stand up and be counted, and to maintain the respect in which it was held when the last election was conducted. At that time the government was expected, when introducing this legislation, to be truthful to the rest of the nation. I can assure the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) that what the hon. member for York South said very plainly was that as members of this house we would ensure that the rights of every individual in this country are well looked after. I am sure every hon. member of the house, particularly every responsible member, realizes that the hon. member for York South is fully aware of the situation in this country and that he fully understands the general principles of this bill, recognizing that this measure is something the nation must have.

Having said this, let me add that there are members of our party who do not agree that this amendment is a bad one. I am one who believes that the amendment is entitled to support. If we are to be a true democracy, the people of the entire nation ought to be represented on any board which is set up. In this connection I should like to refer to an editorial which appeared in the Western Producer of June 12. It outlines clearly the position we are likely to come to unless we broaden the representation on this advisory board. The article states:

> The controversy over the official languages bill indicates that Canada is not yet a nation in spirit. It is still a collection of regions whose isolation from one another is both geographic and psychological.

The editorial continues:

> There is evidence that much of this regional opposition has been based on misunderstandings. Also, many Canadians are preoccupied with pressing "bread and butter" problems such as inflation, housing and sagging wheat sales. Naturally, they regard cultural legislation as a luxury at such a time.

The government should realize that if it sets up a board of the kind proposed without making provision for proper representation from the provinces across this nation there is bound to be misunderstanding. It is bound to result in a further lack of communication between the various parts of Canada, although the need for effective communication has never been greater. I am familiar with the situation in western Canada. Westerners believe the cabinet is responsible for a failure of communication in connection with the serious agricultural situation there. I do not propose to drag the subject of agriculture into this debate, but I think it can be used for the purpose of drawing an analogy. If the bill before us now is passed in its present form without provision being made for proper representation on the board we are asking for trouble over this issue just as we are asking for trouble, and do have trouble, with regard to agriculture.

I accept the principle of this bill in its entirety. Hon. members who are supporting the amendment are merely asking that there be true representation on the advisory board. I do not think this is asking too much. I was disappointed to hear the minister suggest that what was done in the committee would dictate the procedure at the report stage in the house. I may say I took exception to the small size of the special committee which studied this legislation. My personal view is that a committee as small in numbers as the one which studied this bill could not really be representative. I was also disappointed to find that the government had asked many younger Members of Parliament, people for whom I have the highest regard, to serve on this committee, because I realized that the dictation comes from the front bench. Those people should stand on their own feet.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite has just said, in substance, that we younger government members receive instructions and even orders from the government or from the minister.

I wish to go on record as disputing the validity of this statement and I will even say that I personally presented an amendment quite out of line with the views of my government, which proves my ability to do my own thinking and to stand on my own feet.

[English]

Mr. Skoberg: The hon. member is to be congratulated if he did propose such an amendment, but during the time I have been attending committee meetings I have seen too much evidence that members on the government side change their minds after decisions have been made. In this regard I need only refer to what happened in the committee on Transport and Communications. The evidence speaks for itself. I cast no reflection on individual members serving on committees but I believe that if this legislation is the most important which the government has to offer—and it seems that it is—hon. gentlemen opposite should have had their top cabinet men on that committee, giving direct expression to their views.

The west is vitally concerned, Mr. Speaker, about its representation both in Ottawa and elsewhere. The west is vitally concerned about the degree of recognition accorded it by eastern and central Canada in particular. Things are going on which make the west highly suspicious of anything the government does. I do not necessarily believe that any member of the cabinet would deliberately bypass issues affecting western Canada but in today's situation it is very important that every board, every committee and every advisory body set up by the government should be truly representative of the entire nation. If hon. members opposite are prepared to invite separatism they can certainly do it by refusing representation to the west on an advisory board such as the one the government is proposing to set up at the present time.

We recognize that the board will have considerable power. We recognize also that the commissioner to be appointed will have considerable power. The government has, I realize, written safeguards into the bill, but I think it is of great importance that the commissioner should be familiar with the situation in every province of this nation. Let us avoid a situation developing in which the west can say, once again: We told you so.

It is easy for me to address public meetings in my constituency and support the principle of the language bill, and this I do at every opportunity. But it is very difficult to convince the people in the west that their wishes are being taken into account. I urge the government to consider the points I have made and to ensure that the commissioner is fully familiar with the wishes of the entire nation, not just one particular segment of the country.

If we are to bridge the communication gap, I suggest, that the only way to do so is to adopt the amendment that is before the house at this time. I believe that the entire nation, but certainly the people in the west, are quite unfamiliar with the circumstances surrounding the languages bill. Again I should like to quote the editorial in the Western Producer:

> —public misunderstanding and economic worries —the federal government must accept much of the blame. For months, the government failed to explain the need for the language bill and its limited scope.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the ministers who will be responsible for the implementation of this bill and the regulations to be drawn up after its passage to realize there is still a selling job to be done in the west. I am sure there are circumstances in that area completely unknown to the ministers. A situation that is really not improving can still be remedied. The general consensus in the west is that there is an appreciation of the two languages concept. People in the west appreciate the British North America Act and agree there is no reason the young people should not learn two languages. I agree that it is the young people who should learn two languages rather than starting at the top and working downward. This is a point I have made before. If the government is prepared to make the effort there is still time to reach a complete understanding on the languages bill, but to date nothing has been done.

I suggest that if this motion is defeated by the government, we may see a move toward separatism that will be unparalleled. I am sure that no member of this house wants to see that happen. Certainly I would be the last to do anything to incur the disfavour of the people of this nation. We should make all citizens feel they are part of Canada instead of dividing them between east and west.

Personally, I do not think the motion before the house is asking too much. I believe it will give the provinces of British Columbia and Newfoundland representation on the advisory board. Then if a bilingual district is ever created in either province, the representative concerned would be entirely familiar with the circumstances. He would be in a position to know the ins and outs and would have the experience so necessary in establishing a bilingual district under this bill. I can see no reason for members opposing the motion, particularly if they bear in mind that at the moment those two provinces do not have the required percentage necessary to establish a bilingual district. However, in the event that a bilingual district were created in the future, the representatives of the two provinces will be able to do a much more effective job than someone unfamiliar with the circumstances.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

Surely the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) is not asking all that much that it cannot be approved by the government.

My final words are that if we do want to create a communication gap one way to do so is to leave out two provinces from the ambit of any legislation passed by this house. All legislation passed by the house concerns the people of this nation, and in return for their tax dollars they are entitled to have equal representation on any advisory board that is set up by the government.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, all hon. members know that during the last debate I was in favour of the principle of the bill before us.

But at that time, I had mentioned to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) that the public should be as much informed as possible on that bill.

When I said that the minister had to inform the public fully on all aspects of the bill before us, I was right, because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) complained recently that the implications of the official languages bill have not been understood all across Canada. In fact, the previous speaker has just stated that the message has not been construed in the same manner in western Canada.

I know that the members of my party have also made this exception during our discussions on this bill.

I was not very impressed this afternoon by the warnings of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) to the effect that the amendment moved by my colleague had to be defeated.

Indeed if the minister claims that committees are in a position to solve the whole problem, it means that the bill, at the report stage in the house, cannot be amended in any way. In my opinion, this principle expounded by the Minister of Justice is wrong.

True, the role of committees is to consider the legislation submitted to them, to do the research and to obtain the information. But hon. members also have the right, the duty and the responsibility, at the report stage to move amendments in order to improve the bill under consideration.

I wonder why the government rejects the amendment before us. It does not affect at all the principle of the bill, but simply purports to give the provinces responsible for setting up bilingual districts the right to appoint representatives on the Commission and on the Bilingual Districts Advisory Board.

As I said at the outset, the Prime Minister complained that the newspapers did not give adequate information to the people about the bill. At that time I had also told the Secretary of State that he should do all he could to inform the population about the consequences of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think the members of the Advisory Board living in the province involved will know best the problems of the bilingual districts. As I said earlier, I do not see what valid argument the government can put forward to reject the amendment we moved this afternoon.

Obviously, sections 14 and 15 must be seen in the same context, and if we want the population of the provinces which will have to take part in the establishment of bilingual districts to be well informed on the sitting up of those districts, the best procedure would be to appoint representatives of each province on the Advisory Board.

The hon. member for York South said this afternoon that for committees and commissions, we must stop seeking a geographical representation and we should particularly try to get men of ability. I told him that to take geographical boundaries into consideration does not exclude the possibility of making a good choice. To me, the argument of the hon. member for York-South is very weak.

Even if we ask for a geographical representation, so to speak, on this Advisory Board, nothing prevents us at the same time from appointing proficient people.

I would like to hear the Secretary of State put forward a more convincing argument than that of the Minister of Justice this afternoon to show us that our amendment is worthless.

The previous speaker of the New Democratic Party, as well as Créditiste members told us that our amendment was valid and should be incorporated in the legislation in order to ensure that the provinces will be adequately represented on the Bilingual Districts Advisory Board.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is a reasonable and logical request which would help the government to make the people better understand the substance of the bill now under consideration for the establishment of bilingual districts.

I therefore urge the Secretary of State to put forward more serious arguments indicating that our amendment is not worth anything, that it would not serve the interests of the provinces, that it would not facilitate understanding and the establishment of bilingual districts. I would ask all those who have heard the points made by members of this side of the house to consider them thoroughly before rejecting the amendment.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to sit on the committee which studied this legislation, and I approved a very similar amendment that was being discussed: I should therefore like to support also the amendment before us.

Furthermore, I should like to start by calling your attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) which, in my opinion, are shallow, not to say irresponsible. Therefore, as the question of my colleague, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) indicated, if we do not have in the house the same opportunities to look fully into a bill or some clauses of a bill, we might wonder what we are doing here.

Ten or fifteen members of a committee cannot have the infused knowledge required to make decisions on behalf of 264 members, all the more as a member of the committee might be absent when a clause is being considered. As the N.D.P. and the Ralliement créditiste have only one representative each, it might happen that the views of their electors are not expressed on account of their representative's absence. And that can happen. Therefore, it is extremely important that we make a thorough study here in the house of some disputable points, for instance the one before us.

I cannot understand the position taken by the government. The very existence of Canada seems to be denied. The true nature of Canada appears to be ignored. Indeed, is not Canada a confederation of the ten provinces and the Northwest Territories? Is that not Canada? If so, then, let us take that fact into account while considering a legislation as important as we are led to believe.

Mr. Speaker, my argument is based on the fact that we have to ask ourselves what Canada is. Then, if Canada, from a geographical point of view, is made up of ten provinces plus the Northwest Territories, it is only normal that the Advisory Board be made up of commissioners from each province and the Territories. That would be quite normal.

The objection raised is that the western provinces, which do not comprise enough French-Canadians, would be more or less interested in the project.

Mr. Speaker, as we do not know what the future holds in reserve for us, in what direction the population might move suddenly, it is always safer to provide for all contingencies.

I remember what happened in committee in that respect and I should like to give the same example I gave at the time.

In Newfoundland, at the present time, the French-Canadians represent 7/10 of 1 per cent of the population and, therefore, it is impossible to establish in the province a bilingual district. On the other hand, in Labrador—a territory which accounts for a large portion of the Newfoundland territory and where a tremendous development project is being carried out at Churchill Falls, the labour force comprises 60 or 70 per cent of French-speaking Canadians from Quebec.

So, if those people decide to remain there, they become Newfoundlanders until such time as the geographical error placing Labrador in Newfoundland is corrected. At any rate, we are faced, in the meantime, with that situation, and a bilingual district may well be created in Newfoundland, in the Labrador region. Then, it would be perfectly normal that the Advisory Council include a member from Newfoundland as from every other province.

That is, I think, a more constructive way of promoting better understanding and, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has often repeated, all the more so as this bill is only concerned with federal institutions.

But, where the establishment of bilingual districts is concerned, territorial limits are involved and that comes under provincial jurisdiction. And, as there have always been conflicts, which have often proved to be unproductive, between the provinces and the central government, it would not be advisable to leave the door open to more, when this can easily be avoided.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The government appears to fear the reaction in certain parts of the country. If such fear is being entertained with regard to a bill that is considered to have priority, the following conclusion is unavoidable: either the country is not ready to accept such legislation, or the government is not daring enough nor dynamic enough to obtain acceptance of the two official languages. Possible reactions should not be feared, and I think it would be the best way to reassure those who, are now having difficulty in recognizing certain things, and I understand them very well.

Obviously, where there are very few French-speaking people, where other ethnic groups are much more numerous than the French-speaking minority, it is very normal that there should be strong disagreement and that the majority should not understand why a French-speaking minority should be given special privileges or rights.

Of course, one could build an argument around this but it is not the purpose of my remarks. I just want to come back to the amendment to say that I feel the government should accept it. I cannot see what difference it would make if it were accepted.

It is already provided that there will be from five to ten representatives. If this amendment were adopted, the number would be set at 12. I fail to see anything very serious there. I do not agree with the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria who kept harping on the matter of number. Indeed, he seemed to want to minimize that matter by saying that it was wasting time, that it was useless to dwell on a matter of number. I suggest it is much more serious than all that. I agree it is a matter of number, but it is also important to know what the number represents. It is not the number as much that is important, because it is already provided there will be as many as 10 representatives. Then, by including the Territories, we would want by this amendment to increase this number to 12, in order to reflect Canada's true image. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, that is not dallying over numbers; it is an extremely important question. Representation on the advisory board must reflect the image of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising at the present time is simply to put on record certain references from Book I, The Official Languages, which is the first report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. I think there may have been some misunderstanding about whether the bilingual districts recommended by the commission would correspond in every case to a census division. Hon. members will find at page 107 of Book I a reference under the heading, "Determining Boundaries of Bilingual Districts":

To achieve this in a given area it is necessary to decide on rules for setting the boundaries of bilingual districts. We shall use the census division as the statistical base for discovering linguistic clusters, at least in an approximate sense. It is not technically an administrative division, since it is used only for the census—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I would like to point out he is not in his seat.

Mr. Stanbury: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I continue:

—but it is a more accurate and stable base than most administrative divisions. One of its purposes is to report upon Canada's linguistic make-up; using it, we can follow locally from census to census the development of each official language group.

I now quote from the bottom of page 108:

However, none of these census divisions will necessarily form a bilingual district. Although the census division indicates the presence of French and English speaking minorities within a given area, it does not show their distribution. For example, two neighbouring divisions, A and B, might have official language minorities forming 20 and 3 per cent of their populations respectively. On closer examination we may find that the minorities are not distributed at random; for example, most of them might be living in only one part of the area. We can express the situation graphically as follows:

Then is shown a graph and the report continues:

If we chose the census division as the basis for creating a bilingual district, all of division A would likely become bilingual, and all of division B would remain unilingual. Our diagram shows that most of the members of the minority live in one section of division A and in the adjacent part of division B. Should official bilingualism be imposed on the unilingual parts of the former, and the bilingual fraction of the latter be ignored? We do not think so. In such a case, all of the area marked in black, excluding the rest of the divisions A and B, should become one bilingual district. This theoretical example—simpler than the actual situation in most cases—shows how the census division will help determine the bilingual district, although in the end the boundaries of the two might be quite different.

That is the end of the quotation, Mr. Speaker. I put it on record simply to avoid any misunderstanding about the recommendations of the Royal Commission.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in this debate and support the amendment advanced by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) which has already received basic support from many members on this side of the house. Having delayed entry into the debate on the bill respecting the official languages of Canada, I now wish to take part at this point because I was one of those who had no hesitation on second reading in feeling that this bill was important enough to send it to committee for the committee to do constructive work and have it come back to the house with amendments to be dealt with here.

The committee has done constructive work. The bill is now back before the house with some amendments. As we begin studying these amendments it is, quite frankly, hard to comprehend the position of the government and, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), and the interjection of the parliamentary secretary, although undoubtedly meant to illuminate, really was not germane to what has been said in this debate about what this amendment does. It is difficult to comprehend the position of the government on this amendment. The government, for some reason or other, has dug in its heels and is suggesting that the present clause 14, appointing not less than five and not more than ten persons to a very important advisory board, reflects the true identity of Canada. The men who administer this act will really have to work.

As one catalyst taking part in this debate, I do so because of the suggestion of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) in the house this afternoon that because this amendment was dealt with in the committee the debate is res judicata. That argument is so weak and flimsy it amounts to straw and I will not waste any more of my breath on it. I hope when reading Hansard tomorrow I will be able to arrive at a different interpretation than I have placed on the minister's argument. However, that is not my main point.

I will refer later as to why we should be on guard about this type of loosely worded clause which affects Canada as a nation because this bill is called an act respecting the official languages of Canada.

I am glad to see the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) here. I was amazed to hear his reasoning. However, I will deal with that later.

Having dismissed the minister's argument as straw, I will now come to the whole purpose of this bill as it is being promulgated, proclaimed and debated in many areas of the country. The purpose of the bill is to unite the country from coast to coast. We all know, and would be naïve not to admit, that there are worries and concerns from coast to coast about the purpose and principle of the bill. My friends and colleagues from the west, including the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), as well as members from Quebec, I imagine, have no monopoly on the concern and worry in taking a good principle and implementing it into legislation. Sometimes the difference between principle and practice is really the difference between the pulpit and practice. It is sometimes hard to practice what some people preach.

This bill refers to the official languages of Canada. When I last looked at the map Canada stretched from coast to coast, from Newfoundland to British Columbia. It did not consist of the maritime region, the Quebec region and the Ontario region. And when you get to Ontario do you take northern Ontario, do you take Toronto, Ontario, and do you take southwestern Ontario? It did not consist of the breadbasket of this land, the three prairie provinces, and it certainly did not consist only of British Columbia. It consisted of the ten provinces.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw, the hon. member for Crowfoot, and other hon. members and I are talking about a communication that is supposed to help unite us. All of us in this chamber recognize and appreciate that there is sincere concern about implementing this principle. So it is difficult to understand why the government is suggesting that we can have a board of not less than five and not more than ten which supposedly reflects the national boundaries from coast to coast. All this amendment suggests is that there shall be a representative from each province, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. The Secretary of State might have some objection in regard to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. However, basically coast to coast each province should be represented. This is the basic reason we exist as a nation and is the very fact of the existence of this nation called Canada.

The minister interjected with his argument of straw by saying that the matter is res judicata because it has been considered by a committee and thus cannot be considered in this house. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said that if we accept that type of argument the whole committee system will grind to a halt. I suggest that the face of the bill itself, the very title of the bill, the reason the Secretary of State went to western Canada to preach about the bill and the reason the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has given for introducing the bill, indicate that the purpose of the bill is to help make Canada one country from coast to coast. When the government suggests such things as participatory involvement, the politics of involvement and the politics of participation, why then when we set up this advisory board should we eliminate parts of this country, provinces of this country. This is beyond all comprehension and understanding. The very name of the bill implies ten provinces. I must say that so far as I am concerned, having had no discussion with the hon. member for Cardigan, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory might be in a different position, but those areas are part of this country too.

In respect of the argument of the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) I should like to say I can remember a recent federal-provincial conference when headlines blazed out across the country saying that the Premier of Newfoundland, a province which evidently does not have a bilingual district, was in support of the principle of bilingualism. Abraham Lincoln said many years ago that it is easy to be tolerant and that the racial problem in the United States as he described it then was in direct ratio to the numbers in the country which had the problem. For Mr. Smallwood of Newfoundland, with no bilingual districts, it might be very easy for him to say, if you chose to believe him, that Newfoundland will now be bilingual.

Most of us saw Mr. Smallwood either in the conference or on the television screen. We were most impressed by his contribution to the earlier debates when without any hesitation at all he was one of the first premiers to endorse the principle set out in this bill. No one then suggested and no headline then suggested that we should discount Mr. Smallwood and his little province because that province is only one of ten and is situated on the east coast and does not even have a bilingual district. That in effect, with a little twisting but not much, is the argument of the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria. He comes from New Brunswick and I come from Nova Scotia. New Brunswick has a very strong, healthy and constructive Acadian group reflecting one of the majority languages. But Nova Scotia also has bilingual districts reflecting both the majority languages set out in this bill.

I must say, without any aspersion on anyone who might be appointed from New Brunswick, that I would feel much more happy and much more involved and Nova Scotia would feel much more involved if there were a representative from Nova Scotia on this board to look after the boundary lines and problems in respect of joining up bilingual districts in Nova Scotia rather than have that delegated to someone who, albeit well-intentioned, albeit objective, albeit a man of competence, reasoning and objectivity, would still be a New Brunswicker. Sometimes in Nova Scotia we do not accept holus-bolus what someone outside the boundaries of Nova Scotia proposes.

The bill is not based on regions. It is based on Canada. Canada consists of ten provinces, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory. To go back to the federal-provincial conference when, quite rightly, the papers made much of Mr. Smallwood's position, Mr. Smallwood as a Canadian came forward and stated his proposition long before some of the other premier's did. No one then said that his words were hollow because Newfoundland does not have a bilingual district. Why, then, should a member rise in this house to say that the inoffensive amendment of the hon. member for Cardigan, suggesting that each province be represented from coast to coast, should not be accepted because we are going to revert to regions? This bill is supposed to unite the country. Yet in respect of the first amendment put forward concerning the board that is supposed to implement the bill and supervise it we are dividing the country.

The very words spoken on this side of the house reflect some concern that, instead of pulling this thing together and getting on with the principle and away from some of the nitty-gritty and some of the detail, the Secretary of State and others, perhaps ideally in the classroom and academically, think it might be nice to have the phrase "not less than five and not more than ten" to reflect the regions. One result of this, Mr. Speaker, will probably be that some members on this side of the house from east and west, probably because of the size of the areas they represent, will be left out of this advisory board. We would like to contribute and participate.

One thing that has been paradoxical in respect of this parliament since the election a year ago is that the politics of participation have become the politics of non-participation in so many areas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: In the last election the Prime Minister did not promise much but I will give him credit that the one area in which he did promise something was that there would be an official languages bill. But he did not say there would be a board to which some provinces might contribute and to which other provinces might not contribute. He talked about participatory politics and said that this would help unite the country. I say that the very composition of this board cannot do anything but create division in the country.

If I had any doubt at all in my mind about this I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite to look at the make-up and composition of their own cabinet. I am only sorry there are not more members from Ontario in the cabinet today because if I need any support at all for any fears or apprehensions I have about the loose and vague wording of this clause it can be found in the cabinet in which there are five members from Montreal and two from the city of Toronto. From the reading I have done I suggest that the ministerial representation is more out of balance than it has been since confederation. I suggest that on a population basis metropolitan Toronto is the most under-represented area in our country. Yet we are supposed to take this on faith and good will and close our eyes to some of the practices of the federal government, close our eyes to the principle of the bill, close our eyes to the title of the bill which refers to Canada, and say, "O.K., not less than five, not more than ten". On an amendment which is so simple on the fact of it I cannot understand why there cannot be some tolerance and moderation because what we have been told, and it is so, is that the advisory board will be so important to the success of the bill.

I hope that the minister will reconsider and that the government will do the same. What is the fear? The government appoints officials to various boards and has been doing so for many years. I understand these commissioners will be appointed under the Inquiries Act at pleasure. Perhaps one might interpret this as meaning that they will be appointed after a decennial census, but as I read the Inquiries Act they will only be appointed at pleasure. If something goes wrong the Governor in Council can always replace them.

It seems to me that government appointed boards have been operating fairly effectively in the last two years. There do not seem to be too many problems in respect of division of opinion, certainly very few about which the public hears anything. The amendment is an attempt to extend the clause to include all provinces, but it seems to have run into a roadblock. I sincerely suggest that unless there is a moderation of the clause by the amendment, which I submit is sensible and relatively simple on its face, then the many fears that Canadians have in respect of the successful implementation of this bill will not be assuaged.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about this bill because I think it involves a matter which goes far beyond party lines. We are trying through this bill to make a series of judgments as to how best we can carry out the spirit of this legislation. As the last hon. member who spoke pointed out, this will add greatly to the unity of this country.

It is rather unfortunate that the committee had to be small and that we could not all be members. With a large number of us as members of the committee I think there might have been greater understanding, a greater exchange of opinion and views. However, that lack could not be helped. The committee had to be small for various reasons.

So far as the implementation of this measure is concerned, this is one of the most difficult, delicate and dangerous pieces of legislation we are likely to pass in this session. For this reason there are differences of opinion among the members of all parties. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) pointed out that among his colleagues there are those who do not see eye to eye with him in respect of this amendment. I am one of those members. I shall go into my reasons in just a moment. Surely even those on the government side must be prey to these anxieties and differences of opinion. The minister should not take pride in having assumed a stance and maintaining that this stance must be defended at all costs. I think it is up to us to pool our best thoughts and judgments as to the effect of this bill across the country.

Let me point out one of the dangers of the bill. We are inclined to believe that the big central provinces are the provinces mostly concerned and affected by this languages bill. Perhaps at this moment it is true that they are more directly affected. Consequently I go along with what the hon. member for York South said, that there should be provisions for two members, one English speaking and one French speaking, from each of the central provinces to make sure there is a complete representation of feelings on this board. It would be even better in my opinion if there could be members who spoke both English and French. In this way I think we would have good representation, and this should be our aim. There should be a complete understanding of the provinces on the part of those people who are chosen.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Let me turn now to my strongest objection. In our anxiety to make sure of complete representation for the central provinces which have these difficulties and have to work with this measure from the beginning, we should not be blind to the fact that it is equally important to make sure that the rest of Canada is represented on this board. This is not a matter which concerns only Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and parts of Manitoba. This question concerns all of Canada.

It is our hope that everyone in Canada will increasingly be able to feel chez soi, no matter what part of the country they may find themselves in. Mobility is increasing. It is our hope that the curtains, iron, bamboo and the rest, which have existed in various parts of Canada will be removed and that we shall become one people. I do not mean this in the melting-pot sense but in the sense that we shall be free to go back and forth across this country as our own.

I urge the minister to include a representative from British Columbia on this board. I come from a province which is as yet almost untouched by the necessity of dealing with this problem. That is precisely why I want British Columbia to be represented. As the years pass British Columbia is bound to be drawn closer and closer to the rest of the country. Some of us do not like to face the facts of our geography, but it is true that because of the geography of British Columbia we are already much too far away from Ottawa to obtain the best kind of unity. British Columbia is much too far away from the Atlantic regions to obtain the understanding we need. If there is more truth than poetry in some of the jibes that British Columbia is in danger of becoming a separatist province, the reason is in large part related to our geography. The Rocky Mountains are not only a geographical barrier, they are a psychological barrier. I want British Columbians to feel from the beginning of the implementation of this languages bill that they are in on the ground floor.

From the beginning the people of British Columbia should know what is going on and should feel that they are a part of this measure, even though this problem does not touch us at this time. If we are in on the ground floor the task of those of us who come from British Columbia will be much easier. It will be much easier to explain the languages bill to our constituents if we can go now and say that because of the composition of this board a representative from British Columbia will be included. The people will then have a stake in this effort to knit Canada together. If we leave them out and have three or four members each from Ontario, Manitoba and—

Mr. McQuaid: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mrs. MacInnis: Yes.

Mr. McQuaid: In respect of the argument the hon. member is now making, would she admit that this also applies to all the other provinces in Canada and not just to British Columbia.

Mrs. MacInnis: I agree absolutely, yes. I had thought that these arguments had been made so well on behalf of the Maritimes and other parts of Canada that I did not have to include them in my remarks. I do not want to get British Columbia in first. I want to be a Canadian first among fellow-Canadians from Victoria all the way to St. John's.

I think the danger lies in the fact that by leaving out parts of Canada these people will feel to some extent that the bill does not apply to them, and it will become increasingly more difficult for those of us from those areas to explain why they should be interested. We must remember that taxes from British Columbia will help to finance the implementation of this measure just as will the taxes from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and all across Canada. We will pay these taxes gladly if the people themselves understand this measure and believe in it. Let me urge the minister to let us all be a part of this from the beginning.

Some of us from British Columbia and from the Maritimes know that it is not easy to get the co-operation of a lot of people in our provinces because they live too far away from the great French culture in Canada to understand it. Some of us have had the good fortune to be able to get a little entrance into this culture. We have enjoyed it and want to make it ours. I want to make it British Columbia's culture together with our English speaking culture, but it will be very hard to do this if there is not a representative of our province on the board which will be responsible for administering the official languages bill.

May I say one further thing, Mr. Speaker. These remarks may not come within the ambit of the amendment under discussion, but if I make them now it may save my speaking again. I believe that a great deal will depend upon the commissioner. I make this plea to the minister. I suppose the commissioner will be French speaking and I hope he will be bilingual, but let him be somebody who has lived for a little while in western Canada. The commissioner should be a man familiar with many parts of this great country. It is not enough that he be an Ontarian or Quebecker; he should have lived in the west for a while.

An hon. Member: What about the maritimes?

Mrs. MacInnis: I do not mind if he has also lived in the maritimes; that would improve the picture.

[Translation]

Now I would like to conclude by quoting some remarks made by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) who said: Everyone must be led to accept both languages. It is not the number that counts: it is the certainty that everyone will be included, that every part of Canada will be represented.

[English]

The hon. member for York South has rightly said we deplore the fact that in order that the program be properly administered it must be chopped up into provincial compartments. However, at this stage I do not think there is any other way of making sure that the program is properly administered. We must depend upon provincial boundaries and seek representation from within those boundaries. Some day these boundaries may fade away and become regions; I hope they will if this proves to be a better way of achieving the purposes of the bill. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I again urge the minister to make sure that the province of British Columbia is represented on this board.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words to say on this amendment. I wonder why the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) does not simply say whether or not the amendment is acceptable to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Two of my colleagues have spoken this afternoon on this matter and I have listened closely to what was said by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), and some members from the Maritime Provinces.

The purpose of the amendment is to make the Board truly national so it will comprise members from across Canada. There should be at least twelve of them. If there are only five, some areas of Canada will not be represented on this Board.

The government, posing as the champion of national unity, from coast to coast, should accept that we stop discussing this question, and on behalf of national unity, that each province, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories be all represented on this Advisory Board. I do not quite understand the attitude of the Secretary of State. I am sure that he must want very much that this Board should reflect Canada faithfully.

So let us appoint no less than 12 commissioners. If we need 15, as suggested earlier by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, let us appoint 15. Two from Ontario, 2 for Quebec and so on for the other provinces.

According to some hon. members, the problem is related above all to our central provinces, but we say that it relates to all provinces. It was interesting to note this afternoon the interest hon. members were giving to this most important issue of passing the official languages bill.

When all the provinces feel at home, when they have their say in the matter, when a commissioner may express the opinion of the people of his province, I sincerely believe that national unity will be better understood, better implemented, better respected. Eventually, the unity must not be only that of Ontario or Quebec, but also that of British Columbia, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Quebec, Alberta, of all the provinces, of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

I endorse the opinions expressed by my colleagues, this afternoon, as well as those of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. She spoke as a staunch Canadian. Besides, she is proud to say a few words in good French, in the House of Commons, and I congratulate her. Moreover, she has national unity at heart, on behalf of her province, as we have it at heart, on behalf of our province.

[English]

Mr. Ritchie: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to special order made on Friday last, June 13, the sitting of this house stands suspended until seven o'clock.

[Mr. Caouette.]

SITTING SUSPENDED

At six o'clock the sitting of the house was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 7 p.m.

Mr. Gordon T. Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to say a few words in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid). I feel that the government should give serious consideration to accepting the amendment in order to allay the fears and suspicions that the legislation, which is of an administrative nature, might be wrongly administered. I think the matter of bilingual districts on which this board will rule will be one of the most contentious and difficult portions of the bill to administer. I do not believe that the members of the B. and B. Commission were aware of the problems that these bilingual districts will cause, nor do I think that the government has thought very much about this problem.

Bilingual districts must of necessity be mostly in rural areas. I will have a bilingual district in my riding, and having considered the matter I should like to recount some of the problems that will most certainly occur. I feel that if the representation on the board is changed, there might be a better understanding and a better meeting of minds among people in the bilingual districts. In my area there is a provincial riding in which, according to the last census, 28 per cent of the population is French speaking. However, this district could be expanded to include the whole of the federal riding, about three quarters of the population of which would still fall within the 11 per cent requirement for a bilingual district. This means that many residents living as far as 200 miles away, and many ethnic groups speaking other languages than the two main official languages, will fall within the bilingual district.

Many problems are likely to occur. First of all, there is no definition of bilingual districts and much will depend on the interpretation of members of the advisory board. Right within the small area in my riding which will constitute the bilingual district there are people who are neither French nor English but of Ukrainian origin who will be subject to the proposed regulations. These people are already becoming very concerned about who will man the post offices and various federal offices and about whether or not these positions will be occupied by bilingual people from outside their community.

I should like to say a word or two about the difficulties faced by the census takers in deciding what is the mother tongue of the various people in the area. I can think of one particular family in my riding in which the father is French speaking. He married an English girl and their children speak English, so that the whole family now speaks English except when the father visits his parents. What will the language of this family be considered to be under the census? It is quite obvious that there is no rule about it and much will depend on the opinion and interpretation of the census taker.

I envisage also great difficulties in drawing up these bilingual districts. I am sure that a person appointed from each province will help in doing this. There is also the matter of provincial rights and provincial acquiescence. After all, there is no point in drawing up a bilingual district unless the province is willing to back up the area with a massive program of education to help out the minority group in retaining its language. During the course of the last ten years it has been my pleasure to interview, every day in the course of my work, two or three familes among the French minority community in my riding. I have always been interested in the language problem so I asked them to tell me what their reaction is to living in a largely English environment. I heard many interesting comments. Some of them wish to retain their French culture, others feel it is not worth their effort. One very interesting person, a woman with six children, said that she felt only English should be spoken as a main language.

When I suggested to her that to be bilingual was valuable and that one should not give up the possibility of knowing two languages, her answer was: We must live in an English world and my children must learn English in order to get jobs. So unless the provinces are willing to back up bilingual districts by massive programs of education there is a risk of creating intellectual ghettos. It is often said that the problems faced by rural people arise largely because of the lack of education. We shall be faced in the rural areas with the task of upgrading the educational qualifications of minority groups so that they may be equal to the challenge of the practical world of economics and of technology outside. If this amendment were passed, considerably more co-operation would be likely on the part of the provinces concerned.

Clause 14 states that five or more persons will be appointed to the board representative of the several provinces or the principal regions of Canada. The definition of a region is so vague as scarcely to be worth considering. Five people could be appointed from somewhere north of the Arctic circle and still represent various regions of Canada. They could be appointed from five suburbs of Toronto or Montreal, or from Winnipeg or Newfoundland. The phrase is so vague as to be of little value; it means that almost anyone could be appointed. The government could appoint five people from one particular region, despite the fact that this would nullify the idea behind the clause which, I suppose, is to give representation to people familiar with the problems which the institution of bilingual districts is likely to raise. If we are to have a board, let us at least have one whose members are familiar with the difficulties likely to be encountered in each of our provinces; let us not have one on which members from eastern Canada are called upon to determine whether and in what circumstances bilingual districts should be set up in western Canada.

It has been said that the government will use its discretion well, and appoint a representative group. The minister may very well do this. The minister will not always be in his present position. Some other minister, some other government, will be in power, and they may think upon different lines. It seems to me, therefore, that the present muddy definition embodied in the words "principal regions of Canada" should be spelled out in much clearer terms.

In some ways, this is an interesting experiment, a most unusual case of a minority forcing its culture, to some extent, on the majority. This may be disputed. French Canadians may say it is time their culture was recognized, and that in the past severe discrimination has been shown against them. They may honestly feel this to be so. But regardless of whether they do or not, many people will not accept their contention. This attitude is creating the risk of division in our national life, and the situation is likely to become worse as time goes on. When families find that their sons and daughters are not able to enter the civil service or the armed forces as easily as once was the case, passion and unreason take over. Sometimes the antagonism is unreasonable, but it is genuinely felt.

The attempt to force a minority point of view on to the majority will be resisted strongly regardless of its legality or even of its righteousness in the opinion of the minority. For this reason, the manner in which the act is administered becomes all important. I strongly suggest the government could help toward the better administration of these provisions by appointing a member to the board from each province. The provincial members could act as watchdogs; they could help the board by setting guidelines. I do not know whether or not this experiment will succeed. This is an issue which will be with us for many years, indeed, for the lifetime of many of us in this chamber. I urge the government to consider seriously the amendment which the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) has put forward, believing that if adopted it would go some little way toward improving the bill and making it more acceptable to people in various parts of Canada.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I want you to fully understand that I support this amendment presented by my hon. friend from Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid). I was disappointed in the statement by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) this afternoon as to the degree of consideration he felt he could give to our amendments at this time in the light of the committee's recommendations. If this is the practice which is to be followed, if the government is unwilling to accept any amendments after a report has been made by a committee, then I suggest that debates here in this chamber are no more than an exercise in futility.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) told us that the outcome of this legislation would depend upon the goodwill and good sense of the governments who administer it. He referred particularly to the advisory board. He was treading on safe ground there. It was rather like coming out in favour of motherhood. After all, what government or business is not better served when intelligent people administer its affairs? But following his argument through, the implication is that we could do away with many of the safeguards we possess.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I realize that there would still be robberies and murders whether we had a police force or not, but most of us still believe we should have laws and means to enforce them in society as it is today. Representation of the provinces on this board is, or should be, one of the most important features in this bill. If we do not accept the amendment put forward by my hon. friend and fail to give each province and territory in Canada representation, we shall find ourselves contributing to regionalism and even to separatism.

In the past the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has come out in favour of the one nation concept. He has declared himself in favour of a just society. There has been some doubt as to the character of the one nation or of the just society, but it is difficult to imagine what benefit would result from lumping Canada together in regions, perhaps giving the prairie provinces one representative or giving other regions more than that. Certainly, the rejection of this amendment would only assist greatly in the cause of those who would divide the country. It would definitely bring on more regionalism than we have at present.

• (7:20 p.m.)

One of the members in the course of the debate quoted from Volume I of the B and B commission report. Let me quote from page 109 of Volume I of that same report as follows:

> If we chose the census division as the basis for creating a bilingual district, all of division A would likely become bilingual, and all of division B would remain unilingual.

There is a graph on this page to which the report refers. It continues:

> Our diagram shows that most of the members of the minority live in one section of division A and in the adjacent part of division B. Should official bilingualism be imposed on the unilingual parts of the former, and the bilingual fraction of the latter be ignored? We do not think so. In such a case, all of the area marked in black, excluding the rest of divisions A and B should become one bilingual district.

In effect, this shows it would not only be possible to set up bilingual districts with a 10 per cent minority but it would be possible to set up an adjacent bilingual district with a possible two or three per cent minority group. I think this is one weakness which certainly deserves consideration. Certainly, when we could have bilingual areas as small as school districts, being two or three per cent of the total area, it would be possible to have adjoining school district areas on a bilingual basis in other provinces. These would then become a provincial concern because education is within provincial jurisdictional. In light of this fact, it would seem almost impossible to even entertain the thought of not giving every province representation on this board.

Let us compare this situation with the regional concept as it relates to the agricultural industry. Some 90 per cent of the problems of that industry today stem from exactly the same concept proposed in this clause. We have in this house political representatives from agricultural communities. The number is certainly not numerically equal to the number of representatives from other segments of our society. As a result, the views and pleas of the representatives of agricultural areas are often virtually ignored. I should like to appeal to the minister to take these views into consideration.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to speak briefly in support of the view expressed by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) against the amendment. I find it difficult to do so after listening this afternoon to the eloquent speeches in favour of the amendment by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and others. I certainly would not want to widen the differences between my colleagues on this very sensitive subject.

I think it is possible to exaggerate the importance of this amendment. The bilingual districts advisory board I am sure will carry out its functions which, as I understand it, are to determine whether or not a district shall be bilingual. It does not matter much whether the board is set up under the formula in the bill or under the formula advanced by the amendment. After all, the bill does enjoin the Governor in Council, in setting up the committee, to take as a basis for selection a representation as equally proportionate as possible in relation to residence in a particular province.

Indeed, such an injunction is probably unnecessary because it would be a very unwise cabinet that did not advise the Governor-General to take account of the different regions in different provinces. This has been the traditional way of doing things throughout Canadian history, without tying anyone down to a rigid formula. Although I say it is possible to exaggerate the importance of the issue of the amendment to the original bill, it seems to me if there is a principle involved here it is the principle that we should, in setting up federal boards and federal organizations, have regard primarily to qualifications. We should have regard to the necessity of not setting up rigid provincial representation. We should not get into the habit of thinking that a board or tribunal set up by the Parliament of Canada is not truly representative of the interests of various provinces because it does not happen to have a representative of any one particular province.

It would be desirable, and I am sure the Governor in Council will bear this in mind, to see that a province like British Columbia—for which the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway made such an eloquent plea—was represented on this board. I am sure the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) will take her plea into account in recommending this to his colleagues. I agree thoroughly with what the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) and some others have said. Much will depend on the calibre of person who is appointed commissioner. I do not think too much will depend on how we select the members who are to sit on the bilingual districts advisory board. In setting up a board like this we should not even think along parochial lines. We should not be concerned primarily with whether so many of the board come from British Columbia or this province or that. After all, in this house there are many people who eloquently and admirably represent their own constituencies as well as their own provinces. In this house we think of ourselves first and foremost as Canadians. Our primary consideration is the welfare of all Canada. I, therefore, suggest that if we adopt the theory behind this amendment we shall not be adopting a truly federal approach to this question. Therefore, although I support the bill, I will vote against this amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on motion No. 2. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All those in favour of the motion will please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: As agreed earlier, this vote will be deferred.

Mr. Horner: Until when, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will look at the Standing Order, he will see that that is in the discretion of the Chair. The suggestion was made this afternoon that there will be consultations between hon. members. Possibly all the votes could be taken together after we have considered the different amendments. This would be done for the convenience of hon. members, of course.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill S-21, an act to amend the Criminal Code, to which the concurrence of this House is desired. I also wish to inform the House that there is a message informing this House that the Senate have agreed to the amendment made by the House of Commons to Bill S-26, an Act to prohibit the Advertising, Sale and Importation of Hazardous Products, without any amendment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISION RESPECTING STATUS AND USE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill.

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan) moved:

That Bill C-120, An Act respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be amended by deleting clauses 28, 29, and 30 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"28. (1) An investigation by the Commissioner under this Act shall be conducted in private except as otherwise provided for in subsection (3).

(2) It is not necessary for the Commissioner to hold any hearing but he may allow any person or any department or other institution concerned in an investigation, and shall allow any person or any department or other institution complained against in the course of such investigation, to be represented by counsel.

(3) The Commissioner shall not make a report or recommendation in respect of any person, department or other institution so complained against until that person, department or other institution, as the case may be, has been given reasonable notice of the complaint and has been allowed full opportunity to be heard in public or in private as that person, department or other institution may elect.

(4) Parliament may,

(a) of its own volition, or

(b) upon the recommendation of the Governor in Council, regulate the procedure to be followed by the Commissioner in the exercise of his powers and duties.

(5) The Commissioner may direct that information relating to any investigation under this Act be received or obtained, in whole or in part, by any officer of the Commissioner appointed as provided in section 21 and such officer shall, subject to such restrictions or limitations as the Commissioner may specify, have all the powers and duties of the Commissioner under this Act in relation to the receiving or obtaining of such information.

(6) The Commissioner shall require every person employed in his office who is directed by him to receive or obtain information relating to any investigation under this Act to comply with any security requirements applicable to, and to take any oath of secrecy required to be taken by, persons employed in any department or other institution concerned in the matter of the investigation.

(7) The Commissioner has, in relation to the carrying out of any investigation under this Act,

(a) the powers of a Commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries Act; and

(b) the power, subject to such limitations as the Governor in Council in the interests of defence or security may prescribe, to enter any premises occupied by any department or other institution of the Parliament or Government of Canada and carry out therein such inquiries within his authority under this Act as he sees fit."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this amendment I shall repeat what I said on second reading of this bill. The bill itself is a purely administrative one. If you study it from clause 1 to clause 41 you will not escape the conclusion that the bill is of a purely administrative nature and lacks what is commonly known as legislative intent.

For a moment, I should like to refer to some provisions of the bill. In doing so, may I point out that all the powers contained in the bill are already possessed by the executive. Consider, for example, the power to issue and promulgate official instruments and documents bilingually. The executive already has that power. We must also consider in this category the power to provide bilingual services to the public. Those services already are being provided. Consider also, Mr. Speaker, the power to make agreements with a government of a province to proclaim the establishment of a bilingual district; the power to constitute Bilingual Districts Advisory Boards under part 1 of the Inquiries Act and to authorize a board to draft agreements with the governments of provinces. Consider also the power to establish an official languages commissioner. A commissioner can now be appointed under the authority of the Inquiries Act. The Inquiries Act now gives the government authority to appoint a commissioner who is to investigate anything the government feels ought to be investigated.

There has been some minor and, I suggest, rather inconsequential effort on the part of the government to give the appearance that parliament as well as the executive is participating in this administrative policy. There is the provision, for example, that parliament shall hire and fire the languages commissioner through the Governor in Council. I think every hon. member of this house is well aware how empty any reference to parliamentary control is in this provision. If anyone were to study the bill in detail he would find that that is so. This is an administrative bill and it will, when passed, be administered entirely by this government. I am in favour of the provisions of this bill, mind you. All the same I suggest very seriously that unless this law is administered properly the government is going to be in very, very serious trouble. Except in very rare instances the manner and degree of governmental administration of this bill will not be reviewable in the courts. The government has attempted to meet this problem by creating an official languages commissioner who is to be the so-called languages ombudsman. He is to have some over-all say in the quality and effectiveness of the government's administration of this law.

It is not necessary, Mr. Speaker, for me to stress the importance of this official who is to be the commissioner of our official languages. What I think I should stress is the importance of our having some control over this man who is charged with such an important task. The way he performs that task will affect the destiny of Canada and touch the lives of a great many Canadians. It is in this area that I take exception to this bill. I take exception to the power that parliament has vested in this one man who is to be the commissioner of languages.

I want to deal for a few minutes with clauses 28, 29 and 30 of the bill, as they now appear. Clause 28(1) reads as follows:

> Every investigation by the Commissioner under this Act shall be conducted in private.

That is one provision I cannot swallow. For the life of me I cannot see why an investigation shall—not may—be conducted behind closed doors. This is a very, very serious matter. Our courts recognize today that this is a very serious matter. Even today, our courts hesitate before holding trials behind closed doors. The days of star chamber are over, Mr. Speaker. Unless there is some very good reason for not holding inquiries in public, they ought to be held in public. I agree that special circumstances may arise in which the commissioner, in his discretion, may decide that it is better to hold the inquiry in private. But for the government to enact a provision saying that the commissioner shall conduct investigations in private is tantamount to enacting a travesty of justice. I see no reason for this provision. Discretion should be left with the commissioner, of course. There may be cases where a person against whom a complaint has been made feels that in order to clear his name there should be a public hearing. He should have the right to ask the commissioner for a public hearing so that the public may learn perhaps that he has been unjustly accused of something.

I know that the government spokesman in the committee said that the commissioner is not conducting a court, and I agree it is not a court. But I do not agree that the powers of the commissioner are quite as frivolous or trivial as the minister would have us believe. I should like to put on the record a statement made by the Minister of Justice during the hearings on this bill in committee, as reported at page 367 of report No. 5. This is what the minister said the commissioner is empowered to do:

> The Commissioner is an investigator.

I think I will be able to show later on, Mr. Speaker, that he is very much more than an investigator. The minister continued:

> He proceeds in a purely administrative fashion; his object is not to prosecute or lay charges, or to assess blame or guilt. His job is simply to ensure that the departments of government, as institutions, are fulfilling the purposes and the spirit of this proposed act. It is not his function to decide or to adjudicate upon the rights or obligations of any individual. It is just not his duty and not in his power.

I should like to compare that with the statement made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) when he appeared before the same committee and spoke of the powers of the commissioner. This is what the Secretary of State had to say, as reported at page 35 of report No. 1:

> The specific task of the official languages Commission, as I see it, is to make sure that the provisions of the law are enforced, that nobody is lagging behind, that there is truly an effort to enforce this bill as efficiently as possible within the delay set by the bill for the government, in the last clause.

So, according to the Secretary of State, the commissioner is charged with the enforcement of the law.

> The advisory Committee on bilingual districts and the Governor in Council according to this clause have authority to determine the bilingual districts, while the Commissioner rather has the authority to make sure that this law is enforced.

I do not agree with the statements made by the ministers of the Crown. I venture to suggest there is not a man or woman in the public service of Canada today who is not going to be terribly afraid of the powers of this commissioner, and I think with some justification. This commissioner does not just conduct an investigation; he conducts an investigation with power to report and to make recommendations.

Suppose, Mr. Speaker, that a complaint is made to the commissioner that a civil servant employed in the Post Office Department in a certain area is not carrying out the provisions of the act. Do you mean to tell me that that man will not be called on the mat to give an account of why he is not carrying out the provisions of the act? Of course, he will be.

The commissioner is empowered to make a report and also to make a recommendation. This is why I contend that this employee of the Post Office Department has the right, the inherent right of everybody who is charged with a serious offence, to be heard in public. Why should the charge be heard behind closed doors? The charge should be heard in public and the public given the right to listen to the case. In such event the person accused—I use that word advisedly because the man may be accused of not carrying out the provisions of the act—will be satisfied that he is being given a fair hearing and can rest assured that those interested are able to hear his side of the case.

The government has seen fit to prescribe that the commissioner shall conduct his investigations in private. No discretion at all is left to him; he must conduct his investigations in private. The motion before the house, which I hope will meet with the approval of all members of the house, provides that if a man whose conduct is being investigated requests that the inquiry be conducted in public, there shall be a public hearing; that he shall have the opportunity to present his case not only to the commissioner and the chosen few who might be invited to hear it, but to everybody who may be interested. I think this is only fair and in accordance with just practice. I think hon. members will find that the courts are very reluctant to conduct hearings behind closed doors; a very strong case indeed has to be made before a judge will decide to exclude the public.

I draw the attention of the house to clause 28 (2):

> It is not necessary for the Commissioner to hold any hearing—

I ask the house to note those words.

> —and no person is entitled as of right to be heard by the Commissioner—

Did you ever hear, Mr. Speaker, anything so ridiculous? Surely, if a man is going to be charged—and I use that word advisedly—as a result of a complaint laid against him, then according to the principles of justice he should be entitled to the right to be heard. How can the government possibly take that right from him?

No doubt the minister will reply that the commissioner is not conducting a court or conducting legal proceedings. I agree. But again I remind the members of the house that this commissioner has the power to make recommendations and to report. I do not think anyone would seriously challenge that there is not a man or woman in the public service today who would not be terribly afraid of the tremendous powers of this commissioner.

The government then tries to correct the situation by making this provision in the clause:

> —but if at any time during the course of an investigation it appears to the Commissioner that there may be sufficient grounds for his making a report or recommendation that may adversely affect any individual or any department or other institution, he shall, before completing the investigation, take every reasonable measure to give to that individual—

—the chance to be heard. This provision does not help a person against whom a complaint has been made because it uses the words "if...it appears to the Commissioner" during the course of an investigation that there are sufficient grounds for making an adverse report. At that stage it would be too late, I suggest, for the man to be heard.

Why should he not be there from the very beginning? After all a complaint has been made against him. Surely, it is only fair and just that he should be entitled to sit in on the hearing from the very time the investigation begins. But, no; it is only if it appears to the commissioner—he is the man who will exercise the discretion and who will perhaps suddenly make the decision in the middle of the hearing—that he may have to make an adverse report against this individual that the individual would be called in three quarters of the way through the proceedings. Surely, that is not the time to call in a person against whom a complaint is lodged. Did you ever see a court of law conducted in this way where an accused is called in about three-quarters of the way through the trial? Surely not! There is absolutely no justification for a provision like this. The amendment which we are suggesting tonight tends to correct the injustice in so far as public hearings are concerned and in so far as the right of the person against whom the complaint is lodged to be there from the very beginning and be represented by counsel if he so wishes.

Surely, a person against whom a complaint is made has the right to be at the hearing from the very beginning so that he will be in a better position to prepare his defence. Is there anything unreasonable about a request like that? Is there any particular reason that the government cannot go along with a request like that? I suggest there is absolutely none. What are they trying to hide? Why do they not want this man to have the right to be there from the very beginning? These are the questions to which I would like to have answers.

We asked these questions in the committee, but the officials and the ministers who were present at the hearings were not able to give us adequate answers. All they would tell us was that these are not judicial inquiries; that they are courts of procedure. I agree, but without fear of successful contradiction I say that this may affect an individual's employment in the civil service. If a complaint is successfully raised against him it could mean his employment and his very livelihood. That is the reason we say he should have an opportunity to be heard and that is the reason we say he should be called in from the very beginning, not when the commissioner makes up his mind that perhaps he might have to make an adverse report against this man.

It cannot be done in that way. Our system of justice does not work in that way. I implore the members of the government to try to correct this obvious injustice. You have the power to do it. I believe this will be of great concern to the people of Canada if you deny these people the right to be heard, a right which is not denied even to the worst criminal brought before our courts. We are not asking anything unreasonable in this regard. We are asking only that a man be given the right to be heard, that he be given a fair trial and that justice be done.

Now, let me refer to clause 30 which reads as follows:

> The Commissioner has, in relation to the carrying out of any investigation under this Act, power
> (a) to summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses and compel them to give oral or written evidence on oath, and to produce such documents and things as the Commissioner deems requisite to the full investigation and consideration of any matter within his authority under this Act, in the same manner and to the same extent as a superior court of record;

This commissioner is given the same power to conduct an inquiry as is given to a judge of a superior court of record and yet a person who may be affected is not given the same right to be there and be heard. How can this procedure possibly be justified. Clause (d) gives the commissioner the power to administer oaths. Then, clause (c) reads:

> —to receive and accept such evidence and other information whether on oath or by affidavit or otherwise as in his discretion he sees fit, whether or not such evidence or information is or would be admissible in a court of law;

Mark these words, "whether or not such evidence or information is or would be admissible in a court of law".

Mr. Woolliams: Good gracious.

Mr. McQuaid: If there was ever a travesty of justice this is it. Why should this commissioner, in whose hands lies probably the livelihood of a public servant, not be bound by the regular rules of evidence. As I interpret this clause this man can be compelled to give evidence against himself. Did you ever hear anything like that in this day and age?

Mr. Horner: That is the just society.

Mr. Woolliams: The Pelletier society.

Mr. McQuaid: This will not go down well with the people of Canada. We implore the government to amend it. It will not destroy the principle of the bill. Personally, I am completely in favour of the principle of bilingualism—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McQuaid: —in so far as it affects the government service in bilingual districts. But I cannot for the life of me go along with this proposal, and I do not think any man who gives it any serious throught can go along with it. In our amendment, we are suggesting that this man should be given the power that is given to a commissioner under the Inquiries Act. Heaven knows, they are wide enough. But at least they have been in effect for some considerable number of years. I do not know when the Inquires Act was first passed, but we have been working under the Inquiries Act for some considerable number of years. Certain practices and precedents have grown up in respect of this act, as they have in respect of other acts in our courts. The commissioner appointed under the Inquiries Act may not be legally bound by, but feels he is required to follow, the practice or precedent which has been built up over the years. We suggest that if this language commissioner were given the same authority as a commissioner under the Inquiries Act this should be sufficient.

Why should this commissioner have more authority? Why are we asking that this man have more authority than someone who has been appointed under the Inquiries Act? I want an answer to that question and I think the people of this house and the people of Canada want an answer to this question. Why is this man to be given more authority and more power than a commissioner under the Inquiries Act? The Inquiries Act in part I, section 4 reads:

> The commissioners have the power of summoning before them any witnesses, and of requiring them to give evidence on oath, or on solemn affirmation if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters, and orally or in writing, and to produce such documents and things as the commissioners deem requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to examine.

What more power could a man possibly want unless he wants to be a dictator?

Mr. Woolliams: That was Pickersgill's ambition.

Mr. McQuaid: Surely this power is wide enough. Then section 5 in this same act, the Inquiries Act, reads:

> The commissioners have the same power to enforce the attendance of witnesses and to compel them to give evidence as is vested in any court of record in civil cases.

That is enough. Let this commissioner be bound by the rules of evidence, so that only proper evidence may be introduced against a person whose—and I want to stress this—very job may be endangered as a result of the inquiry. This is what I say is unfair. This is what I say constitutes an injustice. Let this man be given the same powers as are given to a commissioner under the Inquiries Act.

Again, under part III of this act, the commissioner may allow any person whose conduct is being investigated under this act, and shall allow any person against whom any charge is made in the course of such investigation, to be represented by counsel. However, I feel he should be represented right from the very beginning and not after half the proceedings have been held. The commissioner has been given a discretion. He may allow any person whose conduct is being investigated under this act—not shall allow—against whom any charge is made in the course of an investigation to be represented by counsel. That is fair and logical. Why is this government asking that the commissioner of official languages should be given any more power than that? It is unreasonable.

As I stated at the beginning, we do not want to get back to star chamber proceedings. We want things to be conducted in the open. We want people to feel that not only does justice appear to be done but justice is seen to be done. That is very important. As long as this provision is in the act, I earnestly suggest a person who is being investigated will not be convinced that justice is being done unless he is given the right from the very beginning to come in and state his case, if he has one to state.

These are the amendments that we are suggesting to this clause. These amendments will tend to strengthen this bill and convince people that something is really being done. I realize there are some serious exceptions being taken to the principle of this bill, but let us not pour salt on these wounds. Let us try to heal them. That is the reason we had a committee and are having discussions in this house. We are trying to correct, as best we can, some of the things that I personally see as gross injustices to which no civilized person living in Canada today should be subjected. I very earnestly suggest that the government and hon. members of this house should give very serious consideration to the recommendations we are making in this amendment.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In rising to support this amendment I wish to say that the speech to which we have just listened was probably the best speech that has been delivered in this House of Commons on civil rights for many years, perhaps since the time that great Liberal, Chubby Powers, delivered a great speech at the time the Civil Service was being investigated in reference to the security of the nation. When people were arrested on that occasion they were held in custody, without the right to counsel and were denied the rights that apply to the average Canadian in accordance with the traditions we inherited.

I must to come to grips immediately with two problems. I am sorry the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is not here at the moment because it shocked the sensibilities of every member of parliament on this, and I am sure the other side of the house, when he said today that because this bill had been examined by a standing committee of the House of Commons the amendments proposed by the government and certain other members were accepted. The bill, therefore, should be merely rubber stamped and nothing should be said from this side of the house.

I want to explode once again, as I will do every time I rise in my place in the years that may remain to me, because the committees set up under the new rules were given tremendous power. They were given the power of parliament. At one time in this house every clause of every bill was examined by the Committee of the Whole House. All members could examine each clause as the bill was piloted through. That power has now been handed to a standing committee of the House of Commons. What applies to other committees also applies to this committee, and that is why it is necessary to move these amendments at this time.

In standing committees, a government chairman governs the committee, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) controls the members of the committee. It is an instrument of the government; no more, no less and no better, as far as jurisdiction is concerned. The Minister of Justice said this afternoon that because this bill was examined carefully by a committee, there can be nothing wrong with it. What the minister meant to say was that the government was going to oppose forcibly these amendments, either by silence, because we appear to be on the side of right, or by voting as a block because their committee, controlled by the Prime Minister, said Canada is going to get this kind of bill. That was a shocking insult to parliament from one of the great lawyers and great brains of our country. It forces me to rise in my place and ask the Minister of Justice if that is really what he meant.

Whose job is more important than the job of hon. members in this house? Their job is to get across to this nation that the procedure in which we are now engaged in parliament is just a procedure to give the appearance that the right things are being done. The Minister of Justice said today that because this bill had been examined by a committee, a committee controlled by a government chairman who is controlled by the government, that amendments of any importance were moved by the government and government members. The minister said that was good enough and members really have no function here. That was his real message.

I was somewhat shocked to hear a member of the New Democratic Party, for whom I have a lot of respect, oppose the fundamental concern of these amendments. I agree with this statement that the administration of the law depends on the character of the person administering it and his ability to weigh justice in its highest sense. A Commissioner of this type will be necessary if this bill is to be implemented properly in the province of Quebec as well as in those provinces in which French Canadians live and where English speaking Canadians and those of other ethnic origins live. I agree with that, but I remind the hon. member of the N.D.P. that he need only look to Europe in our lifetime. When the rule of law fails to govern and when we rely on the rule of people, the niceties of character or personalities of human beings, what happens to civil rights? I was born in an atmosphere where the Magna Carta hung on the walls of the bedroom, living room, dining room and rumpus room. I cannot accept the hon. member's argument or philosophy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: As our party's leading speaker said earlier this evening, we already have a man who has been given complete power. Why has he been given this power? I say with all the sincerity I can muster, and with sadness in my heart, that I do not have confidence that this government, governing with this kind of excuse, will not do something I do not want to see happen. I sat with the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. We saw Mr. Pickersgill pilot a bill through this house. He rushed it, pushed it, and said that we did everything to block its passage. I never believed at that time that Mr. Pickersgill was negotiating with his government and parliament for a $50,000 a year job to set himself up as the Czar of transportation. I cannot believe that the Secretary of State, who has the kind of reputation and name—

Official Languages

• (8:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I rise on a question of privilege.

In spite of the great tediousness of the speech of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), I managed to keep awake. Even if we have to keep our ears open, I think we have a right to shut our eyes.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad I have flushed him out, Mr. Speaker. I cannot believe that the Secretary of State is setting himself up as the Czar of culture and language in this nation, because these things affect not only French speaking and English speaking Canadians but persons of every ethnic group. There will be no appeal from decisions of the board. Because of the power that will lie in the hands of the Secretary of State, I do not have confidence that the bill will be administered according to the civil rights to which Canadians have become accustomed.

I hope that the men appointed to the board will administer the law with equity. I hope they will interpret it with justice, because the bill deals with a matter of great sensitivity in this nation. It is all-important that the men appointed to the board be of this calibre. They will have control over not only human behaviour but the rule of law. I have always maintained, with regard to the appointment of judges, that the character and type of men we appoint to the bench is just as important as their knowledge of the law. The men appointed to this board should be fenced in and controlled by traditions that have been crystallized into the rule of law that protects the civil rights of the citizens of this nation.

The government says: Don't worry; we will put the right type of man in charge of this program. There will be nothing to worry about. I would be concerned about the board even if a benevolent dictator were appointed to it. What will be the situation in the future? I was raised in an area of Saskatchewan in which half the people were French Canadian and the other half came from countries throughout the world. If I were a spokesman for the province of Quebec I would say this is a most dangerous situation; one man should not be given the kind of power the bill proposes to give.

Since confederation we have had governments in which were members who have represented areas where French speaking Canadians have been in the majority. I ask, Mr. Speaker: What will happen if we have on this board people who do not weigh the niceties of equity and justice and do not understand the jurisprudence under which, we live? The majority of the population of part of Zealandia, Saskatchewan, is made up of French Canadians. Do we want on this board people who would do those things that would not be fair and just in respect of minority groups? If one man is given this kind of power it is neither fair to the majority or minority of an area, or even to the small ethnic groups which are to be found in some regions of the country.

I agree with the hon. member on this side of the house who said that a fundamental principle of natural justice is that a man be heard in his defence. This principle applies to our ordinary rule of law when a man is being investigated in connection with a suspected offence. I have always had great respect for the R.C.M.P. and our system of justice. A man is told that A plus B equals C, and this is the evidence against him. The person suspected of having committed an offence can then retain counsel to represent his interests. That principle of our law is not embodied in the provisions of this bill.

Under our system of jurisprudence every Canadian has the right to a fair hearing. It is the right of every individual to know the evidence against him, so he may answer it. There are in our public service and crown corporations men of honesty and integrity; the majority of our public servants have these attributes. No one elected as a member of parliament can tell me, however, that there is not across the nation anxiety on the part of some of our public servants. The fundamental principles of justice contained in the Inquiries Act should apply to this legislation. We will be setting up under this bill a commissioner who will be all-powerful; he will be able to use all the powers of a trial court, which are very great when the state moves to prosecute an individual.

The board appointed under this bill will have the power to act as a result of evidence presented to it. In addition to that, the board will be able to use hearsay evidence. It will be able to break every rule of evidence, although these rules are based upon fundamental principles of justice. Our laws were designed to provide justice to the individual and protect him. A person considered to be in violation of this federal statute, when passed, will not be permitted to be presented at the hearing of his case. He will not be permitted to know the evidence that has been gathered against him. In my opinion, this procedure offends the principles of natural justice which we have inherited. Our system of justice has made this a great nation; the system of justice in the United States has made it a great nation. Every commonwealth country has inherited the British tradition of justice and this has made them great nations.

I make this indictment, even though we have been told that the bill was examined at great length by a committee of the house. That committee had on it a majority of government members, and therefore it was prejudiced in favour of the opinion of the government. Let us lay it on the table; governments since confederation have taken advantage of their majorities. Government members are asked to support the government. If they fail to do so they defeat themselves, because they have to go back to their constituents in an election. Because of the great pressure upon them, government members stand together. This is why they vote in the same way. It is the reason government members are disciplined at the present time. It is true not only of the Liberals but of any government. They will stand together. When you have a minority government you have to indulge in hanky-panky in the backrooms. We saw this happen under a former Prime Minister when the government was forced to seek the support of splinter parties in order to stay in office. In that situation it is the tail that wags the dog, and not the dog that wags the tail.

A person should be informed immediately a complaint is made against him. If there is a hearing before a board, he is entitled to be present at the hearing and, if he wishes, to have counsel or a person trained in the law to defend him. The rules that govern an inquiry under the Inquiries Act should be invoked in respect of this legislation in order to protect Canadians. There should be the right of appeal from a decision of the board. In order that justice be done, a person should know what evidence there is against him and he should be represented at any hearing into the complaint made. If I may use the phrase of an hon. member who spoke earlier, this bill is a travesty of justice.

Why are there not more government members in the chamber? They were here today when their photographs were being taken. They are the executive of this nation. We are only the opposition. If we believed this was a good bill we would pass it and either be at home reading or dealing with matters in our offices. We are not the government. I say without any reservation or equivocation that it is a disgrace that so few ministers and members of the government party are in the chamber to listen to this argument.

Last Friday when I was in the House of Commons I was saddened to hear the bells ringing for some 40 minutes until enough government members arrived to support certain legislation which they were trying to implement. This was on a Friday afternoon, but nothing appeared in the press to tell the Canadian people how irresponsible this government was on that occasion.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: Why is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) not here when a matter of such importance is debated?

An hon. Member: He does not care.

Mr. Gray: Where is your leader?

Mr. Woolliams: He does not happen to be the Prime Minister at present.

Mr. Baldwin: He is on his way.

Mr. Woolliams: That is the only defence that the members on the government side have. I have told them that they are the executive and they are running the country. Our job on this side is to suggest amendments and to oppose measures when we think they are wrong. Our job here is to drive government members into positions into which we believe they should be driven when anything needs to be done.

An hon. Member: There will be a day of reckoning.

Mr. Paproski: And it won't be long.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we are still dealing with the amendment before us, to amend clauses 28, 29 and 30, or if we are getting into a general debate.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must say I had the same misgivings, but I realize this is a matter of great importance and the hon. member is speaking with great feeling. However, I invite the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), who is familiar with the rules, to restrict his remarks as much as possible to the amendment before us. That, of course, applies generally to all hon. members, and I think it is in the interest of our proceedings that we all observe this fundamental rule.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason I raised this question is that this amendment is so fundamental to the civil rights of Canadians. What is the use of me making a speech tonight when the government refuses to listen? They sit in their offices and they refuse to listen to the evidence we put forth on the dangers of this bill. I can put it very simply. When I was a young man I learned something very quickly. I learned that if you wink at a pretty girl and she does not look at you, you are wasting your time. We may be wasting our time talking to the empty benches of the Liberal party. Members of the government are irresponsible in their failure to be here tonight during the debate of such an important measure. May I bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that I am now well within the rules when I speak. It is hon. members opposite who are the executive, and this is their responsibility. Who brought in this language bill? It was not the Conservative party, nor was it the N.D.P. or the Créditistes. It was the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: And they should be here to listen to the arguments and suggestions for amendments which will protect the minorities, the majorities and the ethnic groups in Canada. In that way, they have failed in their responsibility. I think I have made my point on this amendment, and I need not say any more.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Paproski: Here comes another one who will follow suit.

Mr. Lewis: —I intend to deal with the amendment to the bill that is before us. I want to say that it is easy for members of this house to emphasize and to repeat that they are in favour of the principle of this bill, then speak of ways which will make this bill unworkable in the minds and hearts of the Canadian people.

Mr. Paproski: The great Saviour has spoken.

Mr. Lewis: Hon. members have been making all sorts of remarks.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Paproski: Why don't you move over?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must remind hon. members that when a member has the floor he should not be subjected to repeated interjections. I think it would be in the interest of all members if we tried to observe that rule.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I assure you that I do not mind the interjections if hon. members want to make them. I say that many barbs have been thrown in our direction because we insist, as I do, that we believe in the future of this country and in the need to remove a grievance which has haunted this nation for years. I intend to speak in favour of those things which will make this bill workable and desirable for the people of Canada, whether or not the government or the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) or anyone else happens to agree with them.

I heard a great deal about the rule of law in a lecture that was delivered, I presume, for me. Let me say that I am a lawyer of some years' standing, and although probably I am not the best lawyer, I have some knowledge of the law and I have some knowledge of legal philosophy and jurisprudence. I say, as a lawyer, that it is not only in the courts of a country that the rule of law can obtain and it is not only evidence which is taken according to certain rules that is admissible evidence before tribunals in democratic countries.

Members of the Conservative party look with horror at the part of clause 30 which says that the commissioner may take evidence, whether or not such evidence or information is or would be admissible in a court of law. Let me tell them that there are literally dozens of laws on the statute books of Canada, federal and provincial, which have precisely that provision. There are dozens of laws on the statute books of the mother of our democracy that contain this kind of provision, whether they are statutes pertaining to the labour relations board or any other board. The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) says that I am wrong. Let me tell him—

Mr. Rynard: I just said that two bad laws don't make a good one.

Mr. Lewis: Let me tell him that the statute in Ontario—and I am sure it is the same in every other province—which set up his particular professional organization—if I remember correctly and I do because I appeared before the council of the Medical Society of Ontario in defence of a doctor—also gives the disciplinary body of his professional organization the right to take evidence in ways other than a court takes it.

An hon. Member: Did you win the case?

Mr. Lewis: I happened to have won that case, but do not draw any conclusions from that. Winning a case before the medical council is not easy, as I know from experience. What I am suggesting is that it is easy to become eloquent about the rule of law and to make the assumption that the only way in which society can be governed by the rule of law is to make everything pass through the courts. I have great respect for the courts, as much as they deserve, but let me say that it is not in the courts alone that justice is done in a democratic society. Most citizens of the country do not reach the courts.

There are other agencies and other ways in which justice in a society can be obtained. It is not only through rules of evidence as they are applied in a court that you can obtain the truth. You can obtain the truth in some other ways as well. One of my major objections to this kind of approach on the part of some members—and I said this the other day in the special committee—is that if some of these amendments are accepted, only a lawyer or a judge would be qualified to become commissioner under this bill. Only a person trained in the law who knew the rules of evidence and who knew how to conduct that kind of inquiry would be able to be commissioner under this bill. I know a good many lawyers in this country and I know a few who might be qualified for this job. In my opinion most of us would not be qualified for this job. The narrow, legalistic training of a lawyer is not necessarily the best training for the job of a commissioner under this bill. This job should be open to any Canadian, whether or not he knows the rules of evidence. What he has to know are the rules of fairness. He has to know the rules of decency and the rules of honesty. He has to know the rules of objectivity. But he does not necessarily have to know the precise rules of evidence that govern a judge in a court in order to obtain the truth. Let me remind members of this house that there are many members among us who are not lawyers and there may be too many of us who are.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I have just received some support from members of the Conservative party. I presume they are not lawyers. But seriously, let me remind hon. members that all of us sit on committees of the house and all of us have occasion to question witnesses before these committees. It has been my experience that those members who may not be lawyers are just as capable of getting at the truth as are other members of the committee.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Paproski: Would the hon. member permit a question? What witnesses were there to question in connection with the languages bill?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: You voted against witnesses.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on, now. I do not know whether I should take the time in which to answer these assinine interjections. I voted against hearing witnesses on this bill before the special committee because I know of no subject in the history of Canada on which more months of evidence-taking have been spent—evidence taken by the commission from one end of the country to the other. I know of no subject which has been more thoroughly discussed in this house. I am thinking of the discussion which took place on second reading of this bill. Members of the Conservative party took a great deal of time on second reading; they had a right to do so; I do not deny it. In these circumstances I felt, and still feel, that it would have been a complete waste of time, that it would have served an evil purpose rather than a good purpose, to churn the same thing over once again before the committee charged with consideration of this bill.

I was saying seriously—if hon. members want to listen or not it is up to them—that in years of experience in committees of this house I, as a lawyer, in no way thought that my training enabled me to ask questions of witnesses more effectively than other members who were not lawyers. I felt they were just as able as I was, perhaps more able, to get at the truth of what was happening. This rule of law business is something you can agree or disagree about but I suggest it has no relevance whatsoever to this amendment or to this part of the bill.

There is one part of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) which I support. I attempted to find a way of supporting it in the special committee and with this in mind I intend to move an amendment in the next 10 or 12 minutes when I have finished my remarks. There is something about which I believe the hon. member is entirely right.

First of all, I should like to make some observations about the difference which exists between some of us as to the extent of the commissioner's powers. It has been said that tremendous powers are given to the commissioner. I am darned if I see what those tremendous powers are. He needs the power to inquire. Therefore, he must be given powers of inquiry. But the commissioner can only report and make recommendations. That is all he can do. The executive need not accept the report or implement the recommendations. Departments of government concerned need not accept the reports. He makes a report only in cases where some suggestion he has advanced is not carried out. He makes this report to the department or to the Crown corporation, and to the government and this parliament. It is laid on the table in this house and in the other place. What are his powers? We can easily mislead and frighten members of the public service by saying that this terrible man will have powers of life and death over their jobs. He will not. In my opinion it is a misrepresentation of this bill to suggest any such thing. The same people will continue to exercise authority as did so before, namely, the superiors in the department or in the Crown corporation.

It is they who will be responsible for implementing any suggestions made or for taking any disciplinary action they think necessary. It is not the commissioner. He has no power to implement any of his recommendations or to make decisions or to affect the position of any civil servant except by evidence of fact contained in his report. I plead with hon. members not to exaggerate the role of this commissioner. I visualize it as one of a conciliator. I visualize it as the role of a person—

An hon. Member: An ombudsman.

Mr. Lewis: Somebody said an ombudsman. I prefer to think of him as a conciliator—a person who, when he receives a complaint, inquires as to the nature of the complaint. It cannot be a complaint about a person at any time, as I see it; he can only look into complaints which say that the intent and spirit of this legislation are not being carried out in a department, a Crown corporation, an agency or other institution of parliament or government.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. McQuaid: Would the hon. member not agree that even if what he says is correct, civil servants would be, at least indirectly, drawn into an affair of this kind?

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: I agree entirely with the hon. member, and if he will be patient for three or four minutes he will see that I entirely agree with him on this point. I expressed my agreement with this point in the committee, but I will come to that in a moment.

In my view the commissioner does not have the power he is said to have, and it is because of this that my attitude toward him is not the same. As I have said, I conceive his job to be that of a conciliator. He receives a complaint that the intent and the spirit of the act is not being carried out in a certain sector of the public service, and it is his job to investigate the facts and to see to it that the matter is corrected. I think in 99 per cent of the cases he will not be required to make any report. He will be able to persuade the people in charge of the correctness of his findings of fact and discuss with them what can be done to remedy the situation; and, as a conciliator often does, he will find the best solution and no report or anything else will be required.

This is why I am in favour of holding private hearings in most cases. I hope that in 99 per cent of the cases complaints involving a department of government will not even become public. They will be investigated and then conciliated or adjusted in the way civilized people should be able to arrange. I hope that reports of the commissioner will be the exception rather than the rule. This is why I think he should be given more informal powers than those given by the Inquiries Act. This is why I think clause 30 of the bill should remain unchanged; that the powers given to the commissioner should be provided in the bill. His right to take information or evidence in a way that is not usually admissible in a court of law is what will make his inquiry less formal, more workable and conciliatory, shorn of the trappings of an official hearing with all the fear that this produces in the heart of an ordinary person.

As far as clause 29 is concerned, what my hon. friend's amendment does is to leave subclause (2) and subclause (3) as they are, but to change subclause (1) in a way I cannot accept. At the moment clause 29 (1) provides:

> Subject to this act, the Commissioner may regulate the procedure to be followed by him in carrying out any investigation under this act.

Again, the procedure is quite informal. According to my hon. friend's motion, he wants to provide that:

Parliament may—

My hon. friend says "may", but he would not have inserted that word unless he intended parliament to do so.

—(a) of its own volition, or

(b) upon the recommendation of the Governor in Council, regulate the procedure to be followed by the Commissioner in the exercise of his powers and duties.

This parliament, as a parliament, is going to lay down the procedures to be followed by the commissioner. I cannot accept that. It seems to me a heavy handed way of doing something that everybody desires to be thoroughly informal in most situations.

We agree with the hon. member for Cardigan that the only place where formality is required is where a person, department or institution is adversely affected by an inquiry into a complaint, and a report and recommendation is made as a result of that inquiry. The report would naturally contain a reference to an individual, or to an institution or department. I suppose it would state that that individual, institution or department was failing to abide by the law, and would make a recommendation that may adversely affect that individual, institution or department. As I agreed with the hon. member in the special committee, I agree with him now that in such a case there ought to be opportunity given for a full hearing, not merely at the discretion of the commissioner but at the election of the person or department concerned. That hearing ought to be held in public, again at the election of the person or department concerned.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), the following amendment, which although it sounds a little complicated will, I think, become clear if I have a minute or two to explain it:

That the motion be amended:

(1) by deleting the words "clauses 28, 29 and 30" in lines 2 and 3 and substituting therefor the words "clause 28";—

In other words, I am suggesting that clauses 29 and 30 be left as they are and that clause 28 be amended.

(2) by deleting the numeral "3" in the sixth line and substituting the numeral 2;—

In a further part of the amendment, I intend to combine the present subclause (2) and subclause (3).

(3) by deleting subclauses 2 and 3 and substituting therefor the following, as subclause 2:

"It is not necessary for the Commissioner to hold any hearing, but he shall not make a report or recommendation adversely affecting any individual, department or other institution until that individual, department or other institution, as the case may be, has been given reasonable notice of the complaint against him or it, and has been allowed full opportunity to be heard in public or in private and to be represented by counsel as that person, department or other institution may elect"; and

(4) by deleting subclauses 4, 5, 6 and 7.

Three things seem to me to be necessary. First of all, particularly an individual but also a department or other institution who may be adversely affected by a report or recommendation should, before such report or recommendation is made, be given the opportunity to be heard in public or in private, as the elect, and an opportunity to be represented by counsel if they wish.

Secondly, what I submit is needed is that this person, department or other institution should be liable to be subjected to a report or recommendation before all this is done. I submit that the words "any person or department so complained against" could open the door to every complaint leading to a public hearing, and this would be far too wide. What we want to do in this situation is to give the opportunity for a hearing, rather than adopt the wording my hon. friend proposes.

Thirdly, I am grateful to the hon. member for Cardigan for the language that he used in his proposed motion, because it gave me the opportunity to solve the verbal problem I had in the committee to find a way of tying the public hearing to the person, department or other institution adversely affected in a report or recommendation.

I do not think I should take any more time of the house, Mr. Speaker, and I move that amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Speaker: In spite of the hon. member's very clear explanation of his amendment, it is somewhat difficult for the chair to reconcile the amendment with the motion it seeks to amend. However, it appears to be in order in so far as I have been able to ascertain at the moment. Unless strong objection is raised at this time or later on, I think I have to put the amendment to the house and I will hear debate thereon.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I did second the motion and I should like to say a few words in support of it. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has very clearly and eloquently put forward the reasons for the amendment that we are proposing. I too have spent a good deal of my professional career in the defence of civil liberties. Indeed, I feel second to no one in this house in my devotion to fundamental rights and human freedoms. However, I have found that it is possible to employ a phony rhetoric about these issues. It is possible to fail to use a moderate and sensible judgment as to the balance between different and opposing principles.

The first principle—and this has been illustrated many hundreds, perhaps thousands of times in every civilized country of the world—is that there is a need for administrative tribunals, that these administrative tribunals must not be courts or similar to courts. They are needed because expertise in specialized subjects is required that the courts fail to have. There is a need to find the facts in a different way from that used by the courts. As I say, there are innumerable illustrations of where this is necessary. Such tribunals must have a concentration of function which is entirely different from that of the courts. There are innumerable illustrations of this. It would be folly to set up these tribunals, and then to cripple them by tying them down with legal procedures, appropriate indeed to courts but totally inappropriate to these tribunals which have a very different task from the task of the courts.

Yet on the other side there is another principle, or another series of principles. The principles I have enunciated might be called the principles of expediency and efficiency of tribunals. However, these must be balanced against certain fundamental rules. These include the preservation of the rights of the court to ensure that statutory tribunals do not exceed the functions conferred on them by the statutes of parliament. Another one is that no one should be condemned, punished or deprived of his rights or reputation by any such public or administrative tribunal without first being given a hearing and without first being given the right to counsel as well as the right to know clearly the nature of the case against him. The present legislation amply illustrates both these principles. The legislation clearly restricts the functions of the commissioner, important though they are. It restricts them within limits which a court can enforce. If the commissioner steps outside these functions or exceeds them, the courts can act quickly.

It will be necessary for the other side of these functions to be emphasized, Mr. Speaker. The amendment of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) emphasizes the other side of those functions, as did in a partial way the motion of the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid). As the hon. member for York South was careful to point out, in carrying out his many functions the commissioner will need to act with tact and to use persuasive instead of dictatorial powers. He will have to avoid exercising powers which will have an executive effect. In certain cases it will be a great mistake to hamper the commissioner by requiring him, when complaints come before him, to call in counsel and set up a public hearing. The amendment preserves the basic principle which was referred to by the hon. member for Cardigan, that principle being that, so far as is reasonable, the commissioner shall not take away any man's reputation or rights without giving that man full opportunity to be heard in public. That is an important principle and it is not contained in the bill as presently drafted.

I say to the minister that such omission is a serious defect in the bill as it present drafted. I hope the minister is paying attention to what I am saying.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He is not.

Mr. Brewin: I say there is a serious defect in the bill because the commissioner, as the bill now reads, may bring in a report affecting the reputation of an individual without there being any right to a public hearing.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Say it again; the minister is not listening.

Mr. Brewin: It may well be that in certain cases an individual may prefer a private hearing. On the other hand, if an individual feels that to vindicate his character it is necessary for him to be heard in public, there should be a right to a public hearing. I am afraid I am repeating myself but I do so in the vain hope that my words will penetrate to the minister. I repeat. The bill contains a great defect in that the commissioner may do something affecting a person's reputation without there being a right to a full hearing. For the government to say that hearings shall be conducted in private is inadequate in these circumstances. I appeal to the government to reconsider this provision. There is time for it to give consideration to the amendment this party has moved. If accepted, the amendment will bring about two results. It will preserve the rights of an individual who may possibly be affected by the report of the commissioner and, at the same time, preserve the efficiency of the commissioner himself. By accepting our amendment the government would go a long way towards removing the fears and suspicions which, as some eloquent speakers in this chamber have pointed out, this bill has created. Those fears and suspicions could be removed without in any way impairing the effectiveness of the commissioner who has important functions under this extremely important bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, at this point of the debate, I feel certain things must be said.

I do not wish to refer, to be sure, to the amendment just moved by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), since there is another amendment before us, and it is the one, of course, I wanted to deal with since the beginning of the evening.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) has led to two interventions which, in my opinion, are of inequal value.

I will first refer most briefly to the second, by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). All those who heard it will understand my lack of interest in the ideas it expressed, since precisely they were few.

Besides, the hon. member for Calgary North has a remarkable characteristic, and I have always found him interesting in that his voice becomes all the louder as his mind becomes weaker. Now since his resonant voice was heard tonight, there is no further need for me to say what I think of what he said.

I looked for a really strong argument in the contribution of the hon. member for Calgary North and found that I was totally wasting my time. He made a number of emotional appeals which have nothing to do with the realities of the bill, and when he suddenly attempted to present an argument, on one of the rare occasions during his speech when he tried to think things out, it was entirely besides the point. Indeed he then used the terminology of criminal courts and he dealt with the Commissioner of Languages as if he were an examining magistrate, a chief of police and a presiding judge all at once, three figures to whom the Commissioner bears no resemblance whatsoever.

That is why my remarks will rather deal with the speech of the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid). He also, quite to my surprise, spoke on a highly emotional tone. It is all the more amazing as it does not happen very often. I was under the impression that he managed to convince himself that we were studying a piece of legislation likely to encroach on, or lead to encroachment on all civic liberties, on all human freedoms, without any exception.

He first quoted, giving the impression that this was the most scandalous thing, that part in the act where it is said that any investigations the Commissioner of Official Languages has a right to conduct will be held behind closed doors.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, if the investigation had to do with a criminal case, perhaps—and not only perhaps, but certainly—all the words spoken by the hon. member for Cardigan would take their full meaning.

But since it is not the investigation of a criminal case, but strictly and only a matter for the Official Languages Commissioner to get information himself in order to report to parliament, the situation is entirely different. Therefore, it is perfectly normal that the legislator should be careful in making the procedure easier and in avoiding for the commissioner the procedures to which the regular courts are subjected to because the commissioner—I point it out once more, and not for the last time, is not asked to render justice. All he has to do is to find out facts and report to parliament.

In another argument, the hon. member for Cardigan said here again shouting scandal, that before the special committee which studied the bill, I myself had defined the function of the Commissioner and that in reply to a question, I had said that, in my opinion, his role was to make sure the law was enforced.

Armed with this quotation, which is accurate, the hon. member for Cardigan attempted to prove that the Commissioner was becoming a chief of police since he enforced the law. But as always, when a quotation is incomplete, there is the risk of misquoting, that is, of distorting the views of the person quoted.

Now this is exactly what happened. Because, I was explaining, of course to the special committee, after questions had been put to me, that the Commissioner of Official Languages should be aware of the situation, should make sure whether the legislation was enforced or not, but that the only means—and this is important—to which the Commissioner can resort to enforce the legislation is to report to the house.

Can we really compare a report to the house with a sentence passed by a judge on an accused appearing before him?

The hon. member for Cardigan went so far as to say several times "the accused" shall appear before the Commissioner. This proves how much he misunderstood, if he understood at all, the wording of that legislation, because there is actually no mention of any accused in this bill, and the Official Languages Commissioner is not a judge. If anyone were accused, and if the Commissioner were a judge, then the remarks of the hon. member for Cardigan and even a few of those of the hon. member for Calgary North would have some meaning. But nobody is accused. It happens that the Commissioner, in the role of an investigator, first of all examines the situation and then, as he sees fit, reports to the Parliament of Canada.

When the hon. member for Cardigan talks of the "accused", perhaps he refers to another legislation or interprets this legislation in his own way; however, he does not speak of the legislation under study and which he wishes to amend. Likewise, when he denounces the dreadful powers granted to the Commissioner of Official Languages for Canada, I must admit that I am at a loss to understand what he means; in the same vein, perhaps we should decide right now tonight that the Auditor General holds dreadful powers and is an intolerable inquisitor, and, instead of wasting our time amending that official languages bill, putting aside current business, abolish the post of Auditor General, for he holds precisely the same type of powers that are given to the Commissioner of Official Languages, that is, essentially, the power to investigate freely and to report to the house or to a committee of the house on his findings.

I therefore do not understand why the hon. members of the opposition, who tolerate, and have done so for a long time now, an institution called the Auditor General, should all of a sudden become so concerned and should shout about civil liberties being strangled, because a Commissioner of Official Languages will have similar powers in an area which is not any more contentious, which cannot lead to any more serious situations nor to any worse difficulties than in the administration of public funds in this country.

Besides, having spoken of this accused person, who does not exist and who will never exist, and having said that this accused had no rights, the hon. member for Cardigan forgot to mention clause 32 of the bill and the amendment adopted by the committee, to which I refer the hon. member in case he has forgotten about it. I also refer all other hon. members to it, without reading it, because I want to be brief, as I consider that the work already done in committee should not be completely useless.

Unfortunately, the work of this committee becomes partly useless, because it seems that between consideration in committee and the report stage in the house, some opposition members forget everything that happened. So, the hon. member for Cardigan states that on the procedure under which the Commissioner will operate, he put questions to the ministers who were unable, in committee, to tell him why the procedure had been so conceived.

Once more, it is not the time to run through everything that was said in committee—because it would be to no avail to work in committee—I refer the hon. member to page 367, No. 5, of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill. He will find two full pages where my colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) explained in detail to the hon. member for Cardigan, why the procedure is such as it is.

If the hon. member for Cardigan does not remember it, he could read the text over tonight before going to bed. I am sure that it will re-assure him and soothe his conscience since he told us earlier that it bothered him. He should then be able to sleep soundly. In fact, the answers given by my colleague the Minister of Justice are there, and I am surprised, once again, that the hon. member does not remember them. But I should not be surprised really since he does not seem to remember his own remarks to the committee.

Thus, carried away by indignation, he accused us, tonight of wanting to judge people behind closed doors. He made it an absolute crime. He allowed himself to be carried away to the point of telling us that everything should be carried out in public, whereas he said himself before the committee, and I refer to his remarks, on page 351, No. 4:

[English]

I realize that there are stages, of course. I mean there might never be a public hearing, there might never be a hearing. Perhaps the Commissioner after he makes a few preliminary investigations decides that there is just no substance to this complaint.

[Translation]

That means that in committee, the member himself visualized that the Commissioner could very well, in the interest of the persons affected—again, not the accused, seeing we are not dealing here with accused persons but people affected by the investigations conducted by the Commissioner—as I was saying that there could be cases where, in their own interest, the Commissioner should not make his findings public.

Mr. Speaker, finally, I should like to say that those powers which are described as terribly special or inquisitorial, dictatorial—I no longer know which adjectives to use, our friends opposite having exhausted all the adjectives of their vocabulary, with the verbal inflation which characterizes them—that those powers described almost as infernal and diabolical are exactly, according to the legal advisers of the department, essentially the same as those conferred by the inquiries act and the public service staff relations act.

We are therefore not dealing here with any new, special, dangerous, oppressive powers. They already exist in other fields of activity and, as the member for York South said, certain things lend themselves to scandal very easily, when we are dealing with the law on official languages, while the same provisions exist in many of our statutes to which the house raises absolutely no objection.

I should therefore like to say, Mr. Speaker, in closing, that the spirit of the law, the powers conferred upon the Commissioner of Official Languages, the procedure provided for, smack in no way of the extraordinary or the scandalous. If there is any scandal, it could be in the sudden and so ill-advised indignation we witnessed here tonight.

As for me, I believe the proposed amendment is in no way justified and that the house must, at the time of the vote, reject it and restore the text of the bill to its present form.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to direct a question to the minister.

He did not say anything about the amendment I moved. Did he—

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, on the contrary, I said at the outset that I would not speak to this amendment because I thought at that time that it would be against the rules. This amendment is not before the house at this stage, but when it will be submitted, I will speak to it.

Mr. Lewis: Was the minister here tonight, because it is my amendment that is under consideration now. The Chair said so.

Mr. Pelletier: Then, I made a mistake, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize.

• (9:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question. I have listened with a great deal of interest to his remarks, but could he tell the house why he has asked that the powers of this commissioner should exceed the powers ordinarily given to a commissioner under the Inquiries Act? Why is he asking that this man should have powers in excess of those powers?

Mr. Pelletier: The simple answer, Mr. Speaker, is that they are not. I take the advice of people more learned than myself, the law officers of the Crown, who say the powers are essentially the same.

Mr. MacEwan: The three wise men from Montreal.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the amendment under consideration which tends to amend the Conservative amendment reads as follows:

[English]

It is not necessary for the Commissioner to hold any hearing, but he shall not make a report or recommendation adversely affecting any individual, department or other institution until that individual, department or other institution, as the case may be, has been given reasonable notice of the complaint against him or it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this implies once again that we are face to face with accused, with people called before the Commissioner as if he were a judge on the bench or an examining magistrate.

According to the description given in the act and the explanation of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), the Commissioner is not precisely a chief of police or an examining magistrate nor a judge on the bench.

He will simply see to it that the legislation is enforced. If someone feels that his rights have been denied, he will be able to submit his case to the Commissioner who will then report to the government, to parliament.

In that respect, I think that the bill is clear enough and I wonder whether the Progressive Conservative members do not present amendments just to confuse people further.

Earlier, I heard the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), mixing up everything, the bill with the absence of the ministers, and the vote Friday last when the bell rang for 40 minutes. However, the same hon. member forgot to mention that when the vote was taken, about half of the Progressive Conservative members sneaked away so as not to vote. There is something inconsistent about that. They say that they are in favour of the bill but they introduce all kinds of amendments as if they really opposed it. All sorts of charges or innuendos are spread to the effect that the French-Canadians want to oblige all English-speaking people to speak French, which is not the case at all.

And I shall give an example. When the official languages bill is implemented, it will not mean that everybody will have to learn both languages. Shall I say to my father who is 81 years old: Tomorrow morning because the languages bill has been adopted, you will start learning English. Since he has never spoken a word of English in his life, I think it would be madness.

It is the same thing as far as the other language is concerned. The bill does not compel the people to learn the other official language and the amendment now under study is simple. The law says that if somebody feels he has been wronged, he will make a report to the Commissioner who does not judge the situation but makes a report to parliament. This is where the decisions are made to ensure that both languages shall be respected according to the spirit of the law. The matter seems simple to me.

In the house, some members say they are in favour of both languages, but they move amendments which spread confusion.

If the amendment improved the bill, all right, but it does not improve it. It even says that the accused will have to resort to the Commissioner who will decide, in private, or in public hearings, what should be done in the circumstances. Such is not the duty of the Commissioner.

We are asking for something else. The bill provides for hearings held in private. Indeed many people will refuse to air their grievances in public. Others, for political reasons perhaps, will want to bring up everything in the open, in order to cause even more confusion and division. But if everything is settled elsewhere and reported to parliament, the house could always discuss special cases or cases which cannot come before the Commissioner. The present government can take steps to that end. The next government will also be able to take action and assume its responsibilities in that field.

I sincerely believe, that as the Secretary of State just said, that the Commissioner will not act as a chief of police, as an examining magistrate, or as a judge on the bench, and that no accused will appear before him. It will actually be people who will want to state their case but they will not be accused, they will state their case, and the Commissioner will consider it. He will be absolutely free to gather information from other people and when he submits his report, we will know, at least, what steps he has taken, and whether there has been any injustice. It will always be possible then for us to take action.

I do not feel this bill is a strait jacket for anybody whatsoever. I therefore wonder why the Conservatives move such an amendment, which is only likely to create more confusion and make us wonder whether they are really in favour of the two official languages.

They say here in the house that they are in favour of it and then they criticize the bill and make every effort to prevent the recognition of the two official languages in Canada. There is no question of forcing people to learn both languages or either of them; everyone is free. Then, let the Commissioner act according to the spirit of the act.

It seems to me that we have nothing to say or to add about that. We are against that amendment to the official languages bill, in Canada.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, because of a previous engagement which I could not break I was unable to be here earlier this evening, but I have had reported to me the rather emotional speeches of certain hon. members, particularly the speech of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). I want to say again that this issue of the powers of the official languages commissioner was thoroughly examined before the special committee. I do not assert in any way whatsoever that this precludes a full debate here in the House of Commons.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) interpreted my words quite correctly. If full scope is to be given to the committee system, some credence must be given to the decisions of the committee. Where a full inquiry has been made by a special and standing committee of the House of Commons, I believe that the house itself ought to pay due regard to it.

I want to restate, if I may in this full house assembled—I am delighted that the hon. member for Calgary North has returned to the house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —from where he absented himself for a few minutes, as we all must from time to time because of other engagements. The hon. member will know exactly of what I speak. I think there is a misunderstanding, and I want to pay tribute to my colleague, the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) who set it forth.

An hon. Member: You missed his speech too.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, I was here for his speech. He set this misunderstanding forth in a clear fashion just a few minutes before the hon. member for Temiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) spoke. There is a misunderstanding about the powers and the purpose of the official languages commissioner.

Mr. Nesbitt: Some of us can still read.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Some of us can still read, but some of us can still perhaps not understand fully the words we are trying to digest, and I say that with the greatest respect to the hon. member.

Mr. Nesbitt: Thank you very kindly.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The official commissioner is not a court; he is not a party to a judicial inquiry; he is not a judicial tribunal; he is not a quasi-judicial tribunal; he is an investigator in purely an administrative fashion. He has not the power to assess rights; he has no power to assess obligations; he has no power to impose penalties; he has no power to assess guilt and he has no power to implement any of the sanctions of the Criminal law. He simply recommends. He reports only to parliament, and the only sanction in this bill is persuasion and public opinion.

There is no sanction against any individual whatsoever and no individual rights are assessed. This is the purpose of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Well, why not?

Mr. Brewin: It is perfectly true, as the minister has said, that this is not a court or a judicial tribunal, but I ask the minister whether he will agree that when there is power to make a report which might seriously affect the reputation of individuals dealt with in the report, should this not be a power in respect of which the individual has a right to ask only to be exercised after a public hearing?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will deal with that in a minute, but I will say it might be that reputations could be indirectly affected. This is why the government has opted for private hearings so that individual rights are assessed—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —so that the individual situation is assessed in order that reputations will not be affected, and I will get to that position in a moment.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The report is to be public.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We discussed this rather thoroughly at the committee stage, and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) knows of what I speak. I will deal with the point quite thoroughly before I take my seat.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister permit one question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: The minister has said, if I understood his remarks correctly, that the commissioner would not be a member of a court of law or have those powers. I would ask the minister why this commissioner has the right to summons and enforce the attendance of witnesses, which is true of any court; compel them to give oral or written evidence on oath, which is true of most courts; to produce documents, which is true of most courts, and to use the same kind of evidence that is used in court? The bill then goes on further to say that he can admit evidence that is not admissible in court. You have given him all the powers a court has yet you say he has not got the functions of a court.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He has no court functions whatsoever. He has the powers that are akin to the powers of an ombudsman. In fact, he is a linguistic ombudsman. He has no power to assess rights, or obligations, or duties on individuals. He will assess the status of access to the two official languages within the institutions of government. His power and his sanctions are persuasion and publicity; that is bringing facts to light to the minister of a department concerned, the head of a department and, more importantly, to parliament. He assesses no guilt and he attributes no blame. He makes an assessment as to what the situation may be and presents it to parliament. This language duplicates the statutary provisions, almost word for word, of the ombudsman legislation of New Brunswick, Quebec and Alberta. The power involved is the power to bring to light certain facts, not to decide civil rights or attribute blame or guilt.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister a question? Earlier this evening I tried to express my view of the commissioner's functions, and I put them very much along the lines the minister has suggested, but some of his statements worry me. In his bill in clause 28(2) there is provision for a report or recommendation which may adversely affect any individual, any department or any other institution. Should not the minister qualify his statement that this man cannot lay any blame? Obviously, the minister meant to say that somebody might be blamed in the report or recommendation of the commission?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In terms of reputation and in terms of blame the hon. member is quite right, but this situation is quite different from assessing or attributing guilt, inflicting penalty or deciding civil rights. In terms of reputation and blame, clause 28(2) now says that if any time during the course of an investigation it appears to the commissioner that there may be sufficient grounds for his reporting or making a recommendation that may adversely affect an individual, a department or other institution, he shall before completing the investigation take every reasonable measure to give that individual, department or institution a full and ample opportunity to answer any adverse allegation or criticism. This is exactly what it means and what I have suggested.

Mr. Lewis: Why not give him the opportunity to be heard in public?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think that in all fairness the hon. member should allow me to develop the argument I am attempting to develop. I will deal not only with the motion proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid), but also the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York South.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I think it is important when we analyse the powers and functions of the official languages commissioner to state quite clearly, as we attempted to do in committee and as I attempt to do now in this House of Commons, that he is not a judicial officer. He does not have the power of a court. He does not have the power to apply sanctions, to impose penalties. His only power is persuasion and to bring facts to light. His is an administrative, not a judicial, function. He does not decide rights. He does not assess guilt. He does not attach penalties.

Mr. Woolliams: What about an adverse ruling?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is not a ruling. He does not affect individual rights. His power is limited to assessing the equal status of two official languages as used by institutions, and through institutions by the people working in them. If there is blame, it is to be attached to the departmental head, the minister, but not to the individual. It is an institutional function, and not primarily an individual one. That being so, if the commissioner is effectively to perform his investigatory function, to ensure that the spirit and letter of this law is observed, he must have the power to summon witnesses and enforce their attandance.

Mr. Horner: And enforce.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): To enforce the attendance of witnesses; that is right. The commissioner must have the power to compel them to give evidence, because without this power he could not deal with the complexities of modern government. I believe those powers of forcing and compelling the testimony of witnesses are limited by the closing words of the clause which read "in the same manner and to the same extent as a superior court of record". This language imports all the privileges and protections that are available to witnesses who appear before superior courts.

Because the commissioner is merely an administrative officer, because he reports and recommends but does not decide rights or obligations, does not assess penalties or impose obligations upon individuals, he is really in the same position as any investigator and is not bound by the ordinary rules of evidence. Indeed, this has to be so because he must be free, as the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said so admirably in committee, to receive at times hearsay evidence and to receive and examine documents without having them proved as they would have to be proved in a court of law.

This is precisely why clause 30 authorizes the commissioner to accept and receive evidence and information that would not be admissible in a court of law. The same situation applies under the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The same situation applies under the acts establishing an ombudsman in Alberta, New Brunswick, Quebec and New Zealand. I say quite frankly that we have decided, as policy of the government, to set forth under clause 28 the power of summons, the power to administer an oath and to receive and accept evidence, so that those who have to administer the act, people involved in departmental responsibilities within the act, employees' associations and unions involved with responsibilities under this bill if it becomes law, will have a complete code in one statute outlining the power and authority of the commissioner. They will not have to refer to any other statute.

There is nothing in the Inquiries Act which goes beyond this bill. There is nothing of any substance in this bill that goes beyond the powers of the Inquiries Act. It is more convenient for the people who have to administer and fulfil the spirit and letter of this law to have the whole substance of the law contained in one document. This is because we will be dealing with people who will not be lawyers, who will not be sophisticated in legal interpretation—

Mr. Woolliams: They will not even know the law.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —and who will want to have the complete substance of the bill in one document and they have it here. I want to make it very clear that clause 30 does not involve any invasion of civil liberties. Every effort has been made to protect the individual. Clause 28 of the bill is completely specific. Its intent, first of all, is that with this type of informal investigation the spirit and letter of the law can be observed more effectively. We believe that when dealing with institutions an informal investigation is more effective than the formality of a court procedure, because we are trying to assess how institutions are complying with the spirit and letter of the act which is to equate the official status of two languages.

We have set forth in the bill that investigations are to be conducted in private. This is to prevent any individual suffering adverse publicity through innuendo, rumour or any sort of hearsay evidence. Clause 28 (2) specifies completely that if the commissioner feels there is any ground for his making a report that may adversely affect any individual or department, he has an obligation before completing his investigation to take every reasonable measure to give the individual full and ample opportunity to answer any adverse allegation or criticism.

I should now like to turn to the wording of the amendment of the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid). Let us go through his amendment clause by clause. The first subclause of the hon. member's amendment goes to the question of whether the commissioner should under any circumstances conduct hearings in public. The policy of the government, which we have adopted and which we attempted to define in committee and now in this house, is that this type of administrative investigation, not a judicial investigation that will attribute guilt, assess rights and impose obligations, should not be held in public because of the risk to the reputation of individuals and government institutions. For this reason the commissioner's powers are those of investigation only. They do not trespass beyond the simple power of investigation. He is not a court. The right to be heard, the right to be represented at a public hearing, is in our view not entirely appropriate to these proceedings.

The bill provides, as I have already said, in clause 28(2) that the commissioner shall hear persons of departments when their reputation is impugned or when his recommendations may adversely affect them.

Subclause 2 of the hon. member's amendment reads as follows:

> It is not necessary for the commissioner to hold any hearing but he may allow any person or any department or other institution concerned in an investigation, and shall allow any person or any department or other institution complained against in the course of such investigation, to be represented by counsel.

This amendment was considered in committee. It was not adopted in committee because we felt it would not give the commissioner sufficient flexibility to dispose of frivolous, vexatious and unfounded claims without hearing those complained against. In other words, if in the commissioner's opinion those who presented the claim were doing so in a frivolous, vexatious or unfounded manner the commissioner should not, if in his judgment the claim fell into one or other of those categories, be bound to a hearing. We feel this is a useful proceding because a person in respect of whom a complaint is made in this type of frivolous proceedings, should not be involved in a hearing. We believe that this is a useful provision.

Clause 3 again deals with a public hearing, but I have dealt with that matter already.

Part (4) of the amendment of the hon. member reads:

Parliament may,

(a) of its own volition, or

(b) upon the recommendation of the Governor in Council, regulate the procedure to be followed by the commissioner in the exercise of his powers and duties.

Surely, the commissioner, and indeed all those who have the powers of a royal commission should have the power to make their own rules and to regulate their own procedure. We believe that it would be absolutely impracticable for parliament, for the Governor in Council or for some other body, to regulate the procedure under which the commissioner should operate.

Part (5) of the hon. member's amendment is already found in clause 29 (2) of the bill.

Part (6) of the hon. member's amendment is found in clause 29 (3) of the bill.

Part (7) reads:

The commissioner has, in relation to the carrying out of any investigation under this act, (a) the powers of a commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries Act;

And then it spells out the limitations in the interests of defence for security. This amendment also was considered by the special committee but was not adopted.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The Minister of Justice.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: We want to hear you.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I thank hon. members for their courtesy in allowing me, through you, Mr. Speaker, to continue.

That amendment was considered in committee and not adopted because we believe that the powers set forth in clause 30 of the bill amply cover all the powers set forth for a commissioner under the Inquiries Act. Because of the fact that this bill will have to be administered by laymen and by departments of government and will have to be reviewed by employees and unions which deal with the government, in fact by the people of Canada, we felt it more useful to specify and set out the powers of the commissioner rather than refer them primarily to the Inquiries Act.

Part (7) (b) of the hon. member's amendment makes no change to what is now clause 30 (b) of the bill.

Now, I should like to deal with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). As we see it, what this amendment attempts to do is to strike out the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) and to provide a substitute for clause 28 (2) of the bill. In our view that is the effect of this amendment. I wish to say to the hon. member that we do not believe his drafting to be as good as ours. Perhaps he took the advice of other counsel in his party. Nevertheless, I want to say to him that he does not achieve what he seeks to achieve in this amendment as well as we do in the bill.

Mr. Lewis: I will be glad to accept any improvement so long as the minister accepts the principle of my amendment.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The substance of the hon. member's subamendment, which is a substitute for clause 28 (2) reads:

It is not necessary for the commissioner to hold any hearing,—

The hon. member agrees with us there.

—but he shall not make a report or recommendation adversely affecting any individual, department or other institution until that individual, department or other institution, as the case may be, has been given reasonable notice of the complaint against him or it, and has been allowed full opportunity to be heard in public or in private and to be represented by counsel as that person, department or other institution may elect;

We feel that his proposed wording "given reasonable notice of the complaint" and "full opportunity to be heard in public" is not an improvement on the words that are already found in clause 28 (2) which read:

—to give to that individual, department or institution a full and ample opportunity to answer any adverse allegation or criticism,

The only change that the hon. member is attempting to make is in bringing in the concept of a public hearing.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): At the election of the person affected.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the hon. member may perhaps agree that, apart from that concept, the existing wording of clause 28 (2) provides, in terms of a potential adverse ruling, as much protection as his amendment. So, we are left with his feeling that there should be a public hearing at the election of the person adversely affected.

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I wonder if the hon. member would allow me to continue with this argument, after which I will be glad to entertain his question.

I believe that the election for a public hearing was involved in a discussion in the committee. We are of the view that in the purely administrative process, which is not a judicial process, which does not decide rights or impose obligations, which is an informal process to attempt to assess whether the spirit of this act is being applied by institutions and government departments, it is only fair to have these informal inquiries performed in private because of a risk to a reputation, particularly in the event that the complaint may prove to be without foundation. When we were in committee I put to the hon. member the following proposition: Supposing a member of a department elected to have the inquiry made public and the whole chain of command and other individuals were involved. Would he not, by exercising that election, involve others in publicity which they could not later control in an administrative fashion? I am not going to resurrect that debate, but suffice it to say that we made that policy decision feeling that in these administrative spheres, since we were not involved whatsoever in a judicial concept, it was probably fairer to the individuals involved to have the administrative function performed in private. For that reason we rejected the suggestion and, since the hon. member did not pursue it in the committee, I feel we should reject it now. I know that the hon. member agrees with us that the essence of this bill cannot be enforced by court proceeding and by judicial inquiry, but can only be assessed by informal administrative proceedings affecting departments and not individuals. We want to ensure that in these investigations the individuals who work within these departments do not have their reputations blackened before the facts are completely assessed.

Obviously the results become public when the commissioner finds a transgression of this act. He then reports to the minister and to his department and ultimately to parliament. Before he can do that, any individual who is adversely affected has the right to a hearing before the commissioner. That is the reason for which we rejected the amendment in the committee. I can only repeat what I said during the informal discussion we had before the special committee. I believe the hon. member knows exactly the spirit of this bill. I have not finished yet, but I would be glad to entertain the question of the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid).

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Speaker, the minister allowed us to believe that clause 28(2) gives a person against whom a complaint has been lodged the right to be heard. This is at the discretion of the commissioner. But it may not be exercised until half the hearing has been completed. Does the minister really think it is fair that a person should be called in midway during the proceedings? What possible objection could he have to his presence from the very beginning, so that he could sit in on the whole of the proceedings? I am sure—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Since the hon. member does not have the floor he cannot make another speech. I believe he was given an opportunity to ask a question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In answer to the hon. member, all I can say is that the proceedings are not intended to try any individual. His rights, his obligations, any penalties under the law which may attach to him personally, are not in play in these proceedings. This is an administrative procedure affecting institutions only, and the individual is only indirectly affected. To answer the first part of the question, may I say it is mandatory upon the commissioner if it appears to him that there are sufficient grounds for making a report or recommendation which may adversely affect an individual, to take every reasonable means to give that individual full and ample opportunity to answer any allegations. The words used in this connection are: "The Commissioner shall—" and so on. So my answer is that it is mandatory upon the commissioner if there is any evidence which may adversely affect anybody in his administrative inquiry, to allow that man to appear.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister a question? I want to ask him this—if Mr. Speaker will permit me, I have to explain it, first.

I agree it is mandatory upon the commissioner to give a hearing to a person who may be adversely affected. But I ask the minister, what is wrong about permitting a person who may be adversely affected by a report or a recommendation an opportunity to be heard in public if he so requests? In what way could this interfere with the informal workings of this bill? I personally agree with the minister that they ought to remain informal in all other respects.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Let me put it this way. If the performance of anyone is to be assessed under this bill it is institutional performance, and that performance can only be fulfilled by a heirarchy of individuals. Nowhere in this bill is there a penalty or judgment to be levied against an individual; if there is any judgment or assessment it is levied against an institution. Because we are dealing with institutions we have felt that until the commissioner has had an opportunity to assess the situation the people involved should be given the protection of privacy.

When somebody is affected he has a right to appear before the commission. If he were to have the right to elect an inquiry in public to put forward his defence—I use that word inadvisedly as he does not have to defend himself since he is fulfilling departmental policy —then he is likely to involve other people in the hierarchy of the department.

Mr. Lewis: As always happens when you are trying to protect your reputation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Thus, by trying to protect his reputation—not his rights, because it is an institution which is subject to inquiry—he is likely to involve a chain of other people in the department, that is, involve them publicly. This is the rationale behind the government's approach and this is what led us to the judgment we have made.

Mr. Douglas: I think it is a dangerous one.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): To summarize—I realize I am imposing upon the courtesy of the house—

Mr. Horner: It is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) will appreciate, even with his near-sightedness, that I have one more minute and that is all I am going to need.

I repeat. The powers of this commissioner are not judicial. As the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) said, he is not a policeman. He is a linguistic ombudsman. His powers are administrative only. They are limited to reviewing under the statute the performance of institutions. They have nothing to do with the performance, or civil rights or obligations of individuals, nor do they involve penalties.

Mr. Horner: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): For these reasons, we reject the amendment.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 19, 1969

The house met at 10 a.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions through the usual channels and I think there may be a general disposition in the house this morning to deal with the report stage and third reading of Bill C-197, item 79 on the order paper, before calling item No. 90, Bill C-207.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I think the simultaneous translation system is not working.

[English]

Mr. Olson: If there is general disposition to deal with those two stages of Bill C-197 without debate I would appreciate Your Honour's calling them first.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, there is general disposition. I understand that the bill in question involves a further amendment to the Criminal Code in respect of off-track betting. When the matter is brought forward the representative from this party, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), will simply indicate the reason we are agreeing to this rather unusual procedure at this time. Apart from that, we have no objection to what is being proposed by the minister.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That will be satisfactory to us, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) was our representative on the committee and, as everyone knows, he voted for the bill. If he had not done so, the bill would not be back here.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, we can hardly comment on the minister's statement, since we did not hear a word of it. The simultaneous translation system must be in working order if we are to take part in the debate.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I can repeat the whole thing in French. The purpose of the bill before us is to amend the provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with off-track betting.

I consulted this morning the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) and he agreed on behalf of the Ralliement Créditiste to such procedure.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PLACING OF BETS BY ONE PERSON FOR ANOTHER—REPORT STAGE

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved:

That Bill C-197, to amend the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on Monday, June 16, 1969 be concurred in.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I be permitted to ask for the unanimous consent of the house to allow the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) to now explain why—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It can be done on third reading.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, it can be done on third reading.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, we will wait until third reading.

Mr. Speaker: This is a little early to start our proceedings.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved that Bill C-197, to amend the Criminal Code, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a little early, especially when you consider we are sitting late—ten hours a day.

The committee which studied this bill was composed of members from all parties. The bill was thoroughly examined. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, there was a vote on the bill. Without going into great detail I should like to point out why we agree with the bill. In respect of this matter some background was created by a decision of the Supreme Court of Ontario and other courts regarding off-track betting, which has caused what might be called a vacuum in the Criminal Code.

In fairness to the minister and the officials of his department, I would point out that the Attorneys General of the ten provinces asked that parliament approve an amendment which would plug this hole in the Criminal Code. There was in committee discussion as to whether the provinces should not be left in the position where they could draft rules and regulations controlling off-track betting, because on-track betting is allowed. The argument against this suggestion derived from letters many of the Attorneys General had received, some of which were read into the record of the committee proceedings. It was argued that if we adopted the suggestion we would make it easier for syndicated crime to move into Canada. There is some question whether that is correct and whether just as much crime moves into Canada because we drive bookmakers underground. We were told in committee that something like $2 billion is spent illegally in Ontario on horse race betting. We were also told that probably just as much syndicated crime will move into Canada if this hole is plugged.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) took his responsibility in this matter very seriously. He undertook to study the matter further and review and discuss it with the Attorneys General of the provinces with the idea of reaching agreement on the question. If agreement is reached, the law may again be changed and off-track and other kinds of betting legalized; but it would be legalized with the proper rules and regulations drafted in order to control the movement of criminals into this field.

I have personal experience in this matter, gained through my legal practice. I have dealt with cases concerning bookmaking. Off-track betting is carried out in every part of Canada. We are like ostriches, sticking our heads in the sand, because even if we plug this hole in the Criminal Code I do not think it will reduce by one dollar the amount of money spent on off-track betting. This has been my personal experience. The Canadian people are divided into three sections in this respect; there are those who are against off-track betting and live up to their principles in this regard, there are those who are against it but still bet off-track, and there are those who believe we should have lotteries and horse race betting on and off track. I say with tongue in cheek that we are a little hypocritical when referring to our standards in this regard.

I conclude on this note, Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Justice has on behalf of the government undertaken to review the situation and discuss it further with the provinces with a view to coming forward with practical, realistic legislation. Because of this we agree that the bill should receive third reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: That is the best speech you have ever made.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ATLANTIC REGIONAL FREIGHT ASSISTANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMPLIFY RATES LEGISLATION, TO REMOVE CERTAIN STATUTORY REDUCTIONS, AND OTHER MATTERS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-207, to authorize assistance to transportation in the Atlantic region—Mr. Jamieson—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: When the house rose on Tuesday, June 17, clause 2 was under consideration. Clause 1 was allowed to stand. Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I was unfortunately attending a committee—it may even have been the transport committee finalizing the report on this bill—and did not participate in the discussion under clause 1. As I understand it, we stood clause 1. I ask whether I have an opportunity to speak in a general way on clause 1 without getting into the specifics of clause 2. I ask the question because, as I say, I was not in the house when this matter was last discussed and should like to deal with a few matters concerning clause 1 in a general way before we get down to specifics.

The Chairman: The theory is that the discussion should be restricted to clause 2 and the general discussion would be at the end, on clause 1. If the committee would like to reverse that procedure, I am in its hands; but that is the way I propose to approach the matter.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, in view of the hon. member's very real interest in this matter, I would welcome an opportunity to hear his general views, if the committee were so disposed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Then we will have a general discussion on clause 2.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister and the committee for their indulgence. I would like to compliment the minister upon his initiative in bringing forward Bill C-207. He has noted that the bill has special reference to the constituency I represent and to the larger constituency of the Atlantic area. As the minister and people in the Atlantic area know, matters have been sort of left in the air as far as special assistance and/or a freeze on freight rates are concerned. The late lamented Bill C-182 introduced earlier this session provoked more by way of adverse reaction than it did by way of the resolving of problems.

With regard to the general principle of Bill C-207, I am in favour of extending assistance to the truckers. Assistance provided under the Maritime Freight Rates Act applies only to the railways. This bill at least recognizes that other modes of transportation, and trucking in particular, should also receive assistance. This principle conforms with the reports of commissions which have studied the problem. I refer to the study of transportation problems in the Atlantic region, the economic units study and the Atlantic premiers task force. These bodies submitted their views on the question of Atlantic transportation to the then minister of transport, the hon. member for Trinity.

I do not want there to be any misunderstanding in this regard. We on this side of the house are not against assistance being given to the trucking industry. The railways have in effect been favoured, and the truckers discriminated against, with subsidies from the federal government. I am disappointed however that Bill C-207 does not go far enough. I have read the minister's remarks of last Tuesday morning. That was another morning sitting. He said this is an interim measure and a more comprehensive plan would be developed and laid before parliament at a later date. On that understanding some of my disappointment is abated and diluted.

• (10:20 a.m.)

Hon. members who are not from the Atlantic area perhaps do not understand the particular problems there or the implications of the Maritime Freight Rates Act as it affects movement of freight both in and outside the Atlantic area. Quite frankly, there are many people in the Atlantic area involved in transportation who sometimes have difficulty, as do members of parliament, in understanding the full implications of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, which was enacted by parliament in 1927 and which, to the people in the east, is a confirmation of the undertakings that were given to the Atlantic area before they joined Confederation. We do not all have whiskers in the Atlantic area and we do not always talk about history, although we have many historic sites. I did not mention this historical fact for the purpose of simply narrating it but because, as the minister and as members from the Atlantic area are well aware, some members of this house have the mistaken impression that this is just another protest by the Atlantic area.

Although I admit that the federal government has not helped the Atlantic area with one or another handout, I wish to state categorically, in speaking about the general principle of the bill, that it does not follow the trend which was started by the Duncan commission away back in the 1920's and which is evident in the preamble of the Maritime Freight Rates Act of 1927, enacted some 60 years after Confederation. The Maritime Freight Rates Act was the real confirmation of the undertakings which induced the original four provinces to form this nation which now stretches from coast to coast.

It is in that context that we are speaking about Bill C-207. The Maritime Freight Rates Act gave assistance to the movement of rail traffic in what is known as the select territory. Generally speaking, the select territory is in the Atlantic area, but in effect it is territory south of the St. Lawrence and east of Levis. Within that select territory rail traffic now receives a subsidy of what is in effect 20 per cent, and rail traffic that is westbound out of the select territory receives financial assistance from the federal government amounting to 30 per cent. The assistance is given on the premise and according to the principle that in a nation which stretches from coast to coast and which covers such vast and wide distances financial help must be given to carry goods from the Atlantic area into the marketplaces not only in central Canada but into the marketplaces of all of Canada.

It was on that basis that it was recognized in 1927 that something must be done. Confederation never would have come about the way it did had some undertakings not been given to the Atlantic area, which at that time had a profitable trade north and south to the New England states, partly because of sailing ships, which were the dominant mode of traffic at that time, but also because of a geographical position which lends itself to transportation north and south. Perhaps the same might be said about British Columbia where the freight traffic and business interests are more naturally directed north and south than east and west.

It was on this basis that the Maritime Freight Rates Act came about. We in the east feel that it is just as much our charter of human rights as those in the west feel about the Crowsnest Pass. The same would apply to the minister's own province where term 31 or 32 of the Act of Union brought Newfoundland into confederation in 1949. I know that at the time the minister was not swayed by the interests of Canada and by term 31 or 32 because he had some other views about Canada, views which were shared by a multitude of good people in Newfoundland. The fact is that two terms were written into the Act of Union—which unfortunately did not apply as firmly in the case of Nova Scotia in 1867—which guarantee transportation assistance to Newfoundland, because of the problems faced by that province being an island out in the Atlantic and even farther away than Nova Scotia from the markets in Canada.

So in the east we have the term 31 or 32 of the Act of Union, in the west we have the Crowsnest Pass, and in the Atlantic area, or the select territory, we have the Maritime Freight Rates Act. To me these are fundamental documents in any discussion of transportation problems in Canada.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Following that brief preliminary historical perspective, I want to get down to the specifics of Bill C-207 which in my view does not go far enough and at the same time opens up a door the result of which would be to nullify the principle of the charter of transportation in Atlantic Canada. This bill does not go far enough in doing no more than recognizing the National Transportation Act which, as the minister well knows, was passed by parliament in the last session under the then minister of transport who is now chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, another able man and an adopted Newfoundlander, namely Mr. Pickersgill.

I was a member of the house and a member of the Transport Committee when the transport bill was debated. One of the fundamental principles of the bill, which is now an act, was that no mode of transport, be it rail or trucks, was to be subsidized by the federal government at the expense of another mode or, to put it another way, that transportation was going to have to pay its own way. I have described it in a very general way.

What happened then? Some changes in freight traffic took place in the Atlantic area. It was not too clear whether the Maritime Freight Rates Act covered some of the changes made in the rail traffic. The truckers quite rightly asked: Since it was specified in the National Transportation Act that no subsidy would be given to any mode of transport at the expense of another, why does parliament continue to recognize the Maritime Freight Rates Act which still gives a direct subsidy to rail traffic? This question was eventually considered by the government and the minister of transport of that day, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) gave some thought to the implications. Eventually Bill C-82 was brought in to give temporary assistance in the east, but the truckers continued to be left out of the picture.

Under Bill C-207, as I read it, assistance will continue to be given to rail traffic, but the only assistance that will be given to the truckers is for movement by trucks out of the select territory. In other words, initially under this act truckers will not receive any help in their operations within the Atlantic area, as will rail traffic, but only for traffic movements that are westbound, in effect beyond and west of Levis. It is only in this way that the trucking industry will be able to pick up the benefit of the 30 per cent subsidy from the federal treasury.

I do not want to belabour the point, Mr. Chairman, because I was assured that this was an interim measure. Many truckers today feel that the measure has not gone far enough but that at least it recognizes the principle that trucking should receive financial assistance if rail traffic receives it.

• (10:30 a.m.)

Under the Maritime Freight Rates Act assistance was provided to the railways. This was one of the conditions of Confederation. The truckers naturally say the bill has not gone far enough. They have not been given the measure of assistance which the railways have received in respect of movement in the Atlantic area, but their hope is that once the principle is recognized in respect of westbound traffic the government may remove the discrimination which now exists. Traffic within the region is called intra-movement.

I do not think the bill goes far enough, because we all hope to develop a thriving trucking industry in the Atlantic area, and, frankly, on the basis of legislation of this type I cannot see any marked development as being likely. We do not have a large market in the region and our principal population centres are relatively small in size. Of necessity we use broken lots when freight is moved. The truckers can obviously carry a good deal in their new truck and trailer transports. I suggest that a system whereby full cars are sent by rail from Montreal, Toronto and other places to a central distribution point, from which they could be delivered by truck to individual consignees, would do a great deal to develop a better transportation system in the area. Yet movement of this type receives no benefit under the bill.

If it had been made clear, preferably somewhere in this legislation, that this was only an interim measure and that a comprehensive measure would be introduced in the fall I might not have said nine-tenths of the things I have said today. There is another aspect which causes me concern; one might regard it as the other side of the coin. The bill does not recognize the position of the truckers vis-à-vis the railway. There is still discrimination in favour of the railroad; there is not much doubt about that. The minister's answer will be, of course, that we are dealing now with an interim measure. When I look through the bill I see that clause five, when read in connection with clause six, will hopefully provide some assistance to the truckers. It seems to me that clause five deals with the power which becomes necessary if this is to be an interim measure. Clause 5(1) says that regardless of what is contained in the Maritime Freight Rates Act the Governor in Council may vary or remove the reduction in tariffs for the preferred movements of traffic prescribed; and so on. Reading clause five and six together I conclude that any savings would be used to provide supplemental assistance to the trucking industry.

The minister made a good speech, but I have difficulty in understanding why, if this is an interim measure, the minister needs this power given him in clause 5(1), because reading clauses 5 and 6 together, as I understand the legislation, the rate freeze is to be extended to March 23, 1970, which is nine months from now. Clauses 5 and 6 as I understand them do not come into effect until the expiry of the rate freeze on March 23, 1970 or earlier if the freeze is ended by proclamation. If there is no proclamation, then clause 5 does not even come into effect. Is that not correct?

Mr. Jamieson: No.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister suggests no. In that case I would be interested to hear his further explanation of clauses 5 and 6, because as I read them they do not come into effect until the rate freeze has expired, something which will occur, if this bill is passed, in nine months time unless the minister takes some other action by way of proclamation. I believe the purpose of clauses 5 and 6 is to make some reduction in tariffs and, out of this reduction, to give more assistance to the truckers.

Bearing in mind the amount of discrimination which still exists I suppose the trucking industry would like to see clauses 5 and 6 used to wipe out the interim subsidies to the railroads which this bill provides. What puzzles me, as the representative of a maritime riding and one who has taken an interest in the Crowsnest Pass situation—I was out there for seven years—is that there is no restriction whatsoever under 5(1) on the power of the cabinet to vary or reduce the tariffs on this preferred movement. As I read the bill it is not outside the realm of possibility that the cabinet could castrate the very core of the Maritime Freight Rates Act by eliminating tariffs altogether on this traffic movement, using as justification the argument that it was paying supplemental assistance to the truckers on a selective basis.

As hon. members are aware, the present Maritime Freight Rates Act can be changed only by legislation. I put it to the minister that taking action on the lines I have indicated under clause 5 would be analogous to amending the Crowsnest Pass agreement; it would be like using the power given by order in council to vary or remove those rates which are of such importance to the west. It would be like giving the cabinet power to vary by order in council term 31 or term 32, if it wished to do so.

Frankly, I cannot agree to such wide power being given to a cabinet, no matter how laudable the purpose, without restriction or some time limitation. I find it even more difficult to accept the necessity for this power, in view of the statement of the minister himself who said that this bill is an interim measure.

I suggest, reading clauses 5 and 6 together, that unless there is proclamation beforehand, these provisions cannot effect the purpose outlined by the minister the other day, namely to grant selective assistance to a certain amount during the next nine months. Surely the government will have a comprehensive Atlantic transportation policy by the fall, and this is certainly within nine months.

The minister is aware of the ironic situation that the Transportation Committee faced. I am a member of that committee and the report on the trip to the Atlantic region which took place last February was given the finishing touches on the Friday that the bill was given first reading in the house. Although the bill and the committee report dealt, in part, with the same subject matter, there was not of necessity any relationship between the two. In fact, the bill was given first reading, second reading and then sent to committee of the whole before the report of the transportation committee was tabled the following Tuesday.

I do not want to become partisan or to digress at this point. We are debating a bill dealing with Atlantic transportation that is supposedly an interim measure, and as I say the bill was introduced before the committee report really came before the house. I appreciate the minister says that this interim measure had to be brought forward, and we ourselves wanted some action taken. But let me return to clause 5. I really cannot understand why the minister or his cabinet needs to strike, in effect, at the very core of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and vary or remove tariffs for preferred movements of traffic as mentioned in the bill. As I said earlier, this provision regarding rates was one of the conditions on which Newfoundland entered confederation, and any such variation would be analogous, in my view, to giving the government power to vary, for example, freight rates through the Crowsnest Pass or to varying term 31 or 32 by order in council. It really strikes at or castrates the very principle of the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, reading these two clauses together, that they will not meet the purpose for which they are designed, because unless there is proclamation of the lifting of the freeze on rates they will not be able to take effect. If proclamation is given and the rates freeze is removed, then why does the government need the power to vary or remove the tariffs? Let the government bring in its new comprehensive Atlantic transportation bill. This is the major feature of this bill that I find difficult to accept.

Firstly, I say the bill does not go far enough in regard to the removal of discrimination between the railways and truckers. However it does recognize the principle of assistance to truckers, and I hope that this principle will be extended in the comprehensive policy of the government so that discrimination will no longer exist. I will not belabour that point.

My second point is that the bill may not have the result that is desired by the minister. I think the effect of clauses 5 and 6 taken together, and especially clause 5 (1), is to bring about a complete change in the principle of the Maritime Freight Rates Act by making arbitrary changes by order in council without recourse to parliament, as is presently the case.

I also appreciate that in their task force report the Atlantic premiers suggested that there be selective help. I think they went a long way to get rid of this blanket subsidy of 20 per cent for movement within the selected territory and 30 per cent for movement without the selected territory. I think many commissions have always found this to be effective as a result of across-the-board increases and such matters.

I am in favour of selective assistance, but the four Atlantic premiers were very firm about this in the brief that was requested by the hon. member for Trinity. The political affiliations of the four Atlantic premiers are well known; three support the government and one does not. But they did reach unanimous agreement, and the summary of their brief is to the effect that nothing be done in regard to the tariffs for preferred movements until some federal-provincial agency is set up to assess the implications of any changes in such movements in and out of selected territories. Following that assessment the agency could then determine on a selective basis what to take from here and give there.

I think this is a real step forward and meets any objection that might be taken by those in the east because it removes the blanket subsidy principle and substitutes assistance that is granted on a selective basis.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Badanai): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, unless he has the unanimous consent of the committee to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to make one additional point in conclusion before I move on to deal with some of the other clauses about which I should like more details. I thank the members of the committee for granting me their indulgence in order that I may continue.

Even those who come from the east find that this is a pretty complicated and involved subject. For example, reference must be had to three or four different acts in order to get the full impact of the provisions contained in clauses 5 and 6. The leaders of the four provinces directly affected by the provisions of the bill have stated they are in favour of drastic change. They want the blanket subsidy principle rescinded because it has been found wanting in certain areas. They now want selective assistance given to the truckers and the railways, with no discrimination.

I should like to see us carry out the principle enshrined within the National Transportation Act that we passed in the last parliament. The Atlantic premiers start in, as it were, not backside to, but I think frontside front, by saying that the government should set up an agency, certainly something far more substantial than the committee referred to by the minister in his remarks on Tuesday, which to me could be a most flexible arrangement, a body not cemented in any legislation, and certainly not in this legislation.

The Atlantic premiers asked for a comprehensive transportation policy. They want a federal government agency to look after the peculiar problems of transportation in the Atlantic region and to co-ordinate its activities with representatives of the provinces. Change is required. The blanket subsidy principle has created problems. However, before any change is made, let us assess the effect of such change on the business communities in the area, and, if beneficial, then grant selective assistance.

The minister says that he will not move in certain areas until the committee makes certain recommendations. I point out that the committee has nothing concrete before it. There is nothing firm about this bill; it does not lay any foundations. Since clause 5(1) is an interim measure which may not come into effect unless certain other regulations are proclaimed after a period of nine months, I question the wisdom of including it in the bill.

Surely the minister is now in a position to act on the useful and constructive committee report that was agreed to unanimously by all committee members and tabled in the house on Tuesday. That report contains the basis for transportation policy, I submit. A similar report has been in the hands of the minister or of departmental officials for many months. I say that you do not need clause 5. The government's attempt to change articles 31 and 32 of the contract, as a result of which the maritime provinces entered into union with the rest of Canada, is analogous to the former attempt it made to change the Crowsnest Pass agreement by order in council.

Surely no one can argue that articles 31 and 32 can be varied, affected or altered by order in council. That being so I do not understand the necessity for this interim measure. If the minister wants the wide powers ostensibly contained in clause 5(1), why does he not take the burr off his backside and bring in a comprehensive transportation bill in the fall. This bill will be sent to committee and, frankly, I am worried in case we shall have committeed this concept to death. The minister has the committee's recommendations; they are comprehensive. I should like to see some guarantee that we shall see a comprehensive bill covering this question in the fall.

I will not take up any more of the time of the house, except to say that I do not think the bill goes far enough in removing the existing discrimination between rail and truck forms of transportation. I agree that some assistance will be given to truckers. My real objection to the bill is that it completely undermines the transportation charter we were given under the Maritime Freight Rates

Act. That transportation guarantee or undertaking is one of the primary reasons underlying the fact that eastern Canada joined the rest of the country. It is a pretty good country but it will not get much better if the rights eastern Canada has enjoyed since Confederation are to be potentially chipped away by order in council.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I know that on Tuesday when we adjourned debate it had been agreed to stand clause 1 on the understanding that we would discuss the bill clause by clause. What stage have our discussions reached, now? Are we to have a general discussion, or are we to consider clause 1 and then continue with consideration of other clauses. I wish to know where we stand and where we may move amendments.

The Chairman: The understanding was, I think, that the general discussion would take place on clause 2. We are on clause 2 now.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few brief comments on this piece of interim legislation. They will be of a fairly general nature. I think it is necessary for parliament to introduce this legislation at this time but I share the reservations about it which have been expressed. It empowers the Governor in Council to curtail some of the benefits which have been enshrined in the Maritime Freight Rates Act and to vary the provisions of pieces of legislation which could only have been varied in the past by parliament itself. No doubt later in this discussion the minister will explain why he thought it necessary to do this.

I now wish to make a few general remarks about the problems of the Atlantic regions, about their economic positions generally and about the relationship existing between these problems and transportation costs. Basically it seems to me that the problem facing the Atlantic provinces is this: Ever since Confederation, because of our tariff system—and I am talking about custom tariffs and not about rail or transport tariffs—there has been a tendency to concentrate our secondary industries in central Canada. As a result we, in the Atlantic provinces, have suffered over the years from this trend towards centralization. The maritime region, including Newfoundland, now finds that almost everything it has to sell has to be exported to world markets. I am speaking about our pulp, paper, minerals, fish and so on. On the other hand we have, in effect, become a captive market for the centralized industries of central Canada.

If this bill were to provide the assistance that would make it possible for secondary industries having markets in all Canada to be developed in the maritimes, I would support it 100 per cent. No doubt the idea behind this legislation is to put secondary industries in the maritimes on an equal footing with those of central Canada and to give them equal opportunities in reaching Canadian markets. I am afraid I must say, and experience bears me out, that this assistance will not be enough to accomplish that purpose. This bill will not put the maritime producer or manufacturer on an equal footing with the producer or manufacturer of central Canada so far as major markets are concerned. We cannot bring this about by simply reducing freight costs by 20 per cent or 30 per cent, or whatever the figure may be. The bill will be of assistance in those cases, confined to a limited segment of the whole spectrum of production and manufacturing, where industries in the Atlantic provinces can compete with those in central Canada. Therefore, any help that does not get us over the threshold, as it were, of making our industry truly competitive in the Canadian market generally is no help at all. Of course it will have a beneficial effect on our existing industries which are in a good competitive position vis-à-vis our competitors in the rest of Canada.

The fact remains that, despite this assistance, and for reasons having nothing to do with such assistance, industries in the maritime provinces have been limited to those industries capable of maintaining a good competitive position vis-à-vis the rest of Canada. When a more comprehensive program of permanent assistance to transportation in the maritimes generally is proceeded with, I should like to see the minister giving consideration to the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications which deals with road construction, the prospective construction of the Prince Edward Island causeway and so on. I hope he reviews matters of this sort from time to time and studies at least the problem of the maritimes in the field of transportation. In spite of the artificialities in this country from an economic point of view so far as customs tariffs are concerned, we ought to realize that the natural markets of the Atlantic provinces are to a great extent overseas markets such as the West Indies.

My contention is that a given amount of assistance in freight rates or assistance to the transportation of maritime products to natural markets such as the West Indies would do more and be of greater assistance to the industries in the maritime provinces than merely freight assistance from the Atlantic region to other parts of Canada as provided for in this legislation.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I support the concern echoed by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley. In my opinion it is a very shoddy way of handling house business to have this bill before the house at this time when the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications is meeting at eleven o'clock. The other day the standing committee was meeting at the same time this bill was introduced. I believe all members of the standing committee are most concerned about hearing the debate on this bill. It is rather difficult to have a continuing effort on the part of all hon. members if this method of handling house business is to continue. I ask the minister through you, Mr. Chairman, to do something to provide other means of handling legislation that he will be bringing before the house because I am sure this also puts him in an embarrassing position.

My colleagues in my party stated our position the other day and I will not repeat it. The main concern of many people today is whether the benefits of any assistance given to any form of transportation will go directly to the users. Another concern has been expressed which I wish to repeat. In the event assistance is granted to the trucking industry, where trucking companies are owned by the railways there must be controls and safeguards in the legislation and regulations to ensure there will not be a monopoly in the setting of rates. I believe this matter has been fully gone into. It is a concern of many people in this country. If there is a monopoly and these concessions are made throughout the industry, they may overstep their rights in this regard. The minister in particular should watch this very closely.

I support the concern expressed by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley with regard to section 5(1) as outlined in the news release of the Minister of Transport. I shall pose two questions for the minister's consideration. I will have to read Hansard to find out his answers. In the third paragraph of the minister's news release he states:

> —it had been decided instead to ask Parliament to give the Governor in Council authority to remove this assistance on various commodities or classes of traffic as recommended by a new joint federal-provincial committee which will be set up for this purpose.

On the last page of the news release it is indicated:

> The new bill incorporates the substances of Bill C-182 introduced on March 19, 1969, under which it was proposed to extend for one year the existing freeze on non-competitive carload rail freight rates on Atlantic region shipments, but it provides that the freeze can be terminated before the end of the year by the Governor in Council.

I may be unjustly concerned about power being given to the Governor in Council, but I have always been of the opinion that those people most directly concerned with any legislation should have a say in any changes that may be made in that legislation. I am pleased to see there has been a recommendation to establish an Atlantic Region Transportation Board. I ask the minister to clarify why some other avenue of authority could not be utilized to determine the freight rates the minister referred to in his news release. I am sure he can make that point much clearer.

It appears that clauses 5(1) and 5(2) require to be looked at closely. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley has already referred to the portion which states that the Governor in Council may vary or remove. This merits some consideration and possibly revision. Possibly the minister will be prepared to accept amendments which may be forthcoming to clarify this picture. It poses some questions in the minds of some members of our party. The fear in this regard was quite ably expressed by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley. I mentioned previously that the Governor in Council has been given considerable power in these provisions. I ask the minister to clarify the concerns I have expressed when he replies.

It seems strange indeed that when the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications was in the east examining the over-all problem, an announcement was made in the house that the Prince Edward Island causeway would not be proceeded with. Maritime freight rates were considered by the cabinet and the minister without being considered by the committee. There is not much use in a committee of this house travelling throughout the country unless some consideration is given to its recommendations. I say in all sincerity there is no purpose in having committees of this house if legislation is going to be introduced before the recommendations of the committee, whatever committee it may be, are brought in and hon. members are given an opportunity to discuss them in the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Chairman, in the few brief explanations I would like to give and the questions I would like to ask the minister regarding this legislation on assistance to transportation in the Atlantic Region and concerning also the designated area of Lévis, I will say to the minister that there will be the utmost confusion if my proposals are not accepted.

In fact, the bill stipulates that the road connecting Lévis, in Quebec, with U.S. Route 201 in the State of Maine, is the border line, while the whole country of Lévis is a designated area. I know a Lévis manufacturer whose plant lies 200 feet from the traffic circle of Lévis, and any carrier who would pick up goods at a distance of 200 feet on the western side of the traffic circle, even if it is in a designated area will not be entitled, according to the definition in the legislation, to a subsidy.

Consequently, I would point out to the minister, that in my opinion, the entire county of Lévis, which is a designated area, should be included in the Atlantic area. I think that this step would prevent confusion, because as I said a while ago, there are some manufacturers on both sides of the Kennedy road and we would have a manufacturer on the western side who would not obtain a subsidy, while the one who is on the eastern side would get a subsidy for goods shipped by a trucking company.

We from the Ralliement créditiste are in favour of that bill and hope that it will soon be passed.

I got in touch earlier with representatives of trucking companies who sincerely regret, that submission, could not be filed in order to state the fair claims and the needs of the trucking industry—particularly in the designated area of Lévis, in direction of the Gaspé peninsula and the Maritimes—which is in a state of stagnation at the present time.

I do hope we shall be able to bring in amendments which will help the truckers whose business in Eastern Canada is now losing ground on account of unfair competition.

Those are about the comments I wanted to make, Mr. Chairman, and I do hope, especially in the case of the Kennedy road, that the minister will agree to include the whole county of Lévis.

[English]

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, first I want to place on the record my very serious personal objections to the fact that the Transport Committee is sitting in Room 307 in the West Block while the house is discussing important legislation affecting transport in the Atlantic provinces. This is outrageous. It is a situation that has not occurred in parliament for some time. To the new Minister of Transport may I say that one of his predecessors in office, Mr. Pickersgill, with all his faults would never have allowed this to happen. I do not know whether the minister himself is to blame—

Mr. Jamieson: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, and with the greatest respect I want to assure hon. members that I was completely unaware of this situation. So far as I knew this was a sort of extraordinary session of the house. I was not aware the Transport Committee was meeting at the same time. I am sure the hon. member did not mean to imply that I was.

Mr. Bell: Then I apologize to the minister, Mr. Chairman. It could be that as a new junior minister he has not been able to make his influence felt in cabinet circles. I know that the house leader has responsibility in connection with committee meetings, but I hope the minister will take a strong stand with his cabinet colleagues who may wish to shove him around. I hope he does not forget to take a tough line with some of these Upper Canadians when legislation is introduced respecting the Atlantic provinces.

I do not know whether it is an advantage to be from the Atlantic provinces and hold the transport portfolio, but for better or worse the minister now has that responsibility and it is a grave one. This is the first time I have had a chance to speak on the subject of transportation in the house since the new minister took office, and of course I wish him well. It seems that everybody does. To him I hold up the example of Mr. Pickersgill, and I say this in a serious manner. He was a good parliamentarian. He has the courage to take the bull by the horns and introduce the new National Transportation Act. That act was not what we in the Atlantic provinces wanted. For a number of reasons it did not deal with our problem. The minister has outlined those reasons. But Mr. Pickersgill did have the courage to face up to the national problem, to work on it, and to bring about some action. This is what has to be done.

I see in this bill another avenue for the government to delay implementing those measures in the transportation field that have been promised for so long to the Atlantic provinces. In his speech the minister reviewed the history that is necessary to explain this legislation. His was a straightforward review.

I want to refer to one matter the minister did not go into which I think is pertinent. He did not mention the reason that we got into the problem respecting the freeze on freight rates. When the National Transportation Act was being considered many of us thought that was the proper time to provide for the extension of the freeze on maritime freight rates. This whole subject is a complicated matter. It includes the old roll-back, something I shall not even try to explain, and I hasten to add that I doubt that I could. But in any event a permanent extension was not included in that act.

At that time members of the Transport Committee were faced with the choice of writing the freight rate freeze into permanent form or covering it with a clause extending it for two years. The committee was divided. Some of us felt we should include it permanently so that it never could be taken away from us no matter what happened. Others felt that the freeze should be extended for two years, and that when the two year period had expired the pressure would be so great on the government it would have to bring in long-term legislation covering transport in the Atlantic provinces.

The two years were up in March. Nothing was done. I know it is not easy to come forward with comprehensive legislation of this nature on which there is very little agreement, even in the Atlantic provinces. But I repeat that nothing was done. We were stalled. Then Bill C-182 was introduced. I am not criticizing the new minister in this regard. I am just making the case that this is the old stalling technique in the form of temporary legislation.

From a quick glance at the bill I detect that the freeze on the rates will expire within a year from last March. We do not know whether the freeze will then be necessary as a result of this legislation and changing circumstances. But I know that the pressure we put on the government of the day to act on a comprehensive review of the situation will have been lost, and it could be that the stalling and the failure to act will go on for many more years.

This concerns me greatly, and I hope the minister will explain the situation. I hope he will even tell me I am wrong. I have objections to other provisions in the bill, and here I refer to the argument about the power given to the Governor in Council. But my main objection is that once the freeze expires we will have lost the pressure that we had on the government. It was an insurmountable pressure. The government discovered it to be so in March and realized it had to take temporary action. But it could be that we will all have long grey beards before we get the permanent legislation that will mean so much to the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I would like to express my reservations about the procedure that has been followed during the course of this debate. When this bill was first introduced a few days ago its introduction was coincidental with a meeting of the Transport Committee. Granted the house was on early sitting hours, but the fact remains that somebody must be at fault. If it is not the Minister of Transport then it is the government house leader or the government whip. Someone should have taken precautions to see that this legislation did not come before the house when the Transport Committee was meeting or the meeting of the committee should have been rescheduled, because we find ourselves in the ridiculous position of discussing this important bill at the same time that the Transport Committee is meeting in the West Block.

Since this is the first transport bill that the new minister is piloting through the house, perhaps he will heed the comments that were made by my hon. friend from Saint John-Lancaster and by the hon. member for Moose Jaw. The minister knows that veteran members of the Transport Committee travelled through the Atlantic provinces to study the problem of transportation in that region and spent many hours attending numerous meetings of the committee. Out of respect to their work he should see to it that whenever he has a bill concerning transport before the house he takes the precautionary step of ensuring that the Transport Committee is not sitting that day.

It is interesting, and I think the record should show, that the house has before it at the present time in the form of government order No. 68 the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. We spent a day debating that report and it is really very straightforward and simple. It is a unanimous report, and although I do not have it before me and cannot quote precisely it did recommend that the freeze be extended for another year. That recommendation was made to meet the deadline in March when the freeze was supposed to come off. It also recommended that the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission allowing the C.N.R. to abandon passenger service in Newfoundland be left in abeyance until the committee had a chance to make its final recommendations. The final recommendations concerning our Atlantic provinces transportation study are now before the house in the form of the twelfth report.

It should be noted here that a motion has yet to be moved for concurrence in the twelfth report. The motion for concurrence in the fifth report is now before the house in the form of government order No. 68. The point has been well made that this legislation should have at least been held until the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and the recommendations of the committee concerning its reference from parliament to study the transport problems of the Atlantic provinces had been made. This is what this bill deals with in part.

Having said that I should now like to refer to the minister's remarks. He has assured the house that this is an interim measure. I am very sceptical about interim measures, as I thought the minister was, because we have heard him both inside and outside the house criticize interim measures. He has applied to them the term "band-aid legislation". Here we have another example of band-aid legislation, but this is bad band-aid legislation because this measure, even if it is an interim one, is not good legislation. It does not do what either the Transport Committee or the government wanted to do, and it does not do what the truckers and the various people who presented briefs to the committee wanted the government to do.

It seems that for some reason the government and the new minister who must take responsibility for this legislation recently decided to bring in this measure in its present form. All the government had to do, which is really quite simple, was to extend the benefits of the Maritime Freight Rates Act to the trucking industry. That is very simple and straightforward, and that is all the truckers wanted. Perhaps the minister would be interested in what one member of the Maritime Motor Transport Association had to say in connection with this bill. He said that this legislation is not what the truckers wanted at all. He took the minister to task and said that if Transport Minister Don Jamieson brings in this legislation he will "have a battle on his hands". I should like to hear what the minister has to say about that.

Mr. Jamieson: I know the hon. member would not want to continue on a line that is inappropriate at the moment. I should like to read into the record a telegram I received. It states:

Maritime truckers support Bill C-207 in resolution passed last night.

Mr. Nowlan: That is not the whole telegram.

Mr. Jamieson: That is the whole telegram I have.

Mr. Nowlan: I will read you another one.

Mr. McGrath: I accept that, Mr. Chairman, but I was quoting from the Saint John Evening Times-Globe of Saturday, June 14. It carries a story about this legislation under the headline "Mixed Reaction Greets Freight Subsidy Announcement". I presume the Maritime Motor Transport Association has reversed the stand it initially took in respect of this legislation. However, that still does not satisfy me and I am sure it does not satisfy many hon. members because of the basic weakness of this legislation as a result of the limiting and conditional way in which it applies the benefits of the Maritime Freight Rates Act to the trucking industry. Perhaps we may have more to say about this when we proceed with the clause by clause study of the bill.

I do not like the way clause 3 is worded; I do not like the discretionary powers it gives the Governor in Council. When you are talking about the Governor in Council you are talking about the minister, and I do not think he should have the discretionary power to decide which truckers will get the subsidy and under what conditions the subsidy will be paid. I also have very strong misgivings and very serious reservations about clause 5. This brings a whole new principle into the application of maritime freight rates. They were ours by statutory right under the old Maritime Freight Rates Act. They will now be ours by right but at the pleasure of the government. At least that is the way I read clause 5 which says:

—the Governor in Council may vary or remove the reduction in tariffs for the preferred movements of traffic—

He can do this at any time. These clauses of the bill, certainly clause 3 and the limited application of the subsidy to the trucking industry, do not represent in my view what the truckers wanted at all notwithstanding the telegram the minister has read into the record. Certainly it is not what the truckers wanted when they appeared before the Transport Committee, and that is indicated in their brief.

I can understand the minister laughing when he hears references to the Transport Committee because it has become a bit of a standing joke with the government. I can understand the humour with which he treats any reference to that committee, because this government treats all the committees of this house with complete disdain. They look on them as a complete joke. They look on committees of the house as merely the handmaidens of the government set up to carry out the will of the government. That is not what the committees were set up for in the first instance.

The fifth report of the Transport Committee is a very historic one because in my submission this will be the last time a committee of this house will ever bring in a report or a recommendation with which the government takes issue. From now on we can only expect committees to make reports to the house that the government agrees with and has had a hand in drafting. I understand that was said last night by the Minister of Justice.

The hon. member for York South said in a letter to his constituents that from now on no amendments would be accepted by a committee save those that the government had agreed to in the first instance. In other words, the committees of the house are just a joke, and unfortunately the laugh is on the opposition. We have given up our right in respect of supply. We have allowed the estimates to be removed from the house and they are now in the hands of committees with, in most cases, partisan chairmen who are there to carry out the wishes of the government.

Having made those few remarks about the now infamous fifth report of the Transport Committee, which is still on the Order Paper, and the twelfth report of the transport committee which contains a recommendation concerning the committee study of transport problems in the Atlantic provinces, concurrence in which has yet to be moved. I want to go on to another subject. I would like to make a few remarks which are of particular interest to the province that both the minister and I have the responsibility to represent in this house. When the truckers appeared before the Transport Committee in St. John's, and in Moncton, if my memory serves me correctly, in making a plea to have the benefits of the Maritime Freight Rates Act extended to the trucking industry they pointed out a number of very interesting things. For example, there was evidence to suggest that the railways were using the M.F.R.A. to subsidize their trucking fleets in the Atlantic provinces, thus constituting grossly unfair competition for the private enterprise truckers.

There was also a very strong recommendation concerning the passage of truck traffic across Cabot Strait on the Newfoundland ferry system. By virtue of the terms of union, rail freight moving across is treated the same as if the railway extended right across the gulf. But this privilege does not apply to the truckers. This places the truckers in a grossly unfair position and at an extreme disadvantage vis-à-vis the railways, because when going across the gulf they have to pay the regular commercial vehicle freight rate. As I say, the trucking industry is put at a tremendous disadvantage in terms of competing with the railways.

I would have liked these matters to be dealt with in the legislation. I hope the minister will refer to them when he replies to the questions we have asked. I will have more to say on the other clauses of the bill, Mr. Chairman, but before resuming my seat I wish to register my protest at the way the legislation has been drafted and the principle contained therein that the subsidy may be removed at any time at the discretion of the government. I also protest the discretionary powers the government, and the minister in particular, will have with respect to the application of the subsidy to the truckers.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few brief remarks in connection with the bill. I thought it passing strange that the government should arrange to introduce the bill when the Transport Committee was sitting. This may be a mark of political finesse on the part of the new Minister of Transport. If the Minister of Agriculture had done this to members of the agriculture committee we would have raised Cain with him. I think it was rather offensive to the Transport Committee to do this.

I was a member of the agriculture committee which recently toured eastern Canada, including the maritimes. On that tour we heard from individual farmers and farmers' groups complaints about the high freight rates in the maritimes. We were told of areas in which there is no competition in transportation and where the railway charges as much as the traffic will bear. Where there is competition, freight rates are quite a bit lower than they are in areas with no competition.

I wonder how this subsidy program will apply to the poor chap who lives in the country or in a small town and has to pay a higher freight rate than to the person who lives on a main, commercial route. The minister should look into the application of the subsidy in such cases. I do not think it is fair that just because one lives off a main route we should pay one and a half times what others pay for the same service.

I agree that the transportation situation in the maritimes is difficult because freight is sometimes moved by boat, sometimes is transshipped, etc. It is extremely difficult for a farmer to import fertilizer or sell his produce on the competitive market when he is faced with this type of situation. Having made that tour of the maritimes I understand why the people of the area will be unhappy if any of the guarantees they now have are taken away from them. Their experience since confederation has not always been the best. They are a captive market in respect of some commodities and receive no privileges to compensate for this.

I hope the minister intends to remove some of the existing inequities. I know the people of the region would be unhappy if any of the guarantees they now have were removed. They will be unhappy if any of the subsidies they now received are removed in the future. I believe that freight assistance and an adequate freight rates policy are the basis for good economic growth and development in the maritimes. If such a policy is evolved and consistently applied, I am sure the maritimes will benefit. I can understand the position of these people because of their past experience. I, too, Mr. Chairman, will be making a few comments when we deal with the other clauses of the bill.

[Mr. Thomson.]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I am at the disposal of the committee in this regard, but since the general discussion was on clause 2 I wonder whether at this point hon. members would like me to reply to some of the matters they have raised. It is entirely up to the committee.

Mr. McGrath: That would be very useful, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Jamieson: I have listened with a good deal of interest and understanding—

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to interrupt the minister but I should like to ask a question. If the minister replies to questions now, will it prevent his replying to questions asked as we deal with other clauses? I hope that is not the case.

Mr. Jamieson: I would assume not, Mr. Chairman, in view of our earlier decision that the general discussion would be on clause 2 rather than clause 1. But perhaps the Chair would be willing to rule on that matter. I think this is agreeable. I have no wish to cut members off from further discussion.

Mr. Nowlan: We do not want the minister to exercise the right of reply on clause 2 only, because we shall be asking specific questions when dealing with other clauses. I hope he gets the exercise of standing and replying to those questions.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair can rule in advance that the discussion will have to be relevant to each clause.

Mr. Jamieson: I have listened with a good deal of interest and, I think hon. members would be willing to concede, understanding to the matters raised by hon. members. I say at the outset that I agree completely with the concept outlined by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley that aid to transportation and a rational transportation program are vital to the further development of the Atlantic provinces. It seems to me it is as important that we have this particular aspect of regional development involved in our thinking as it is that we deal with other matters which are important to national unity, such as the official languages bill which we will be dealing with later today. This measure has the same kind of significance to national unity and national development as other measures which are more in the cultural field and in the general areas outlined in the official languages bill. Therefore I assure the committee that it is my intention to do everything possible to bring about an effective transportation policy for the Atlantic area, not merely because I happen to be a resident of that region and a representative of one of the four provinces in the region but because as a Canadian I recognize, as do hon. members opposite, the importance of this kind of legislation.

I think it is important, too, that we trace a little of the history of the bill before us this morning. It would have been far simpler in many respects for the government to do what hon. members in all parts of the house originally suggested, that is, merely maintain the freeze on freight rates for an additional 12 months. That was the position when I assumed the portfolio I now hold, and it was as a result of representations from members opposite and from others that it was decided—and I made the decision—that rather than take that simple course, which would have maintained and quite literally frozen the status quo for another 12 months, we would attempt, within the time frame that we had, to introduce some of the improvements which members of the Transport Committee and others had indicated at the hearings were advisable.

On the point about this legislation preceding the presentation of the 12th report of the Transport Committee, let me say that there was nothing occult in my powers to determine what the committee was going to produce. It was simply a matter of knowledge obtained from various members of the committee and indications from various people that these were the lines along which the committee was thinking, and rather than delay and perhaps face the prospect of not getting this legislation through at the present session I proceeded in the manner that I have.

When I decided some time ago that it was necessary to change the original bill and to proceed somewhat beyond the original proposal merely to freeze the rates for a further period of 12 months, one of the first things I did was to undertake discussions with the representatives of the four Atlantic provinces. I spoke with Premier Smith in Nova Scotia, with Premier Campbell in Prince Edward Island, with the hon. Mr. Higgins, the Minister of Economic Development in New Brunswick, and with Premier Smallwood in Newfoundland. I undertook to do this because of a commitment I had made at the outset that we would consult with them, and I did not want to go to them with a proposal which was cut and dried so that the whole consultative process would be merely a meaningless gesture.

As a result of the discussions that I had with the gentlemen to whom I referred I came back and made significant changes in what I had originally thought might have been an acceptable proposal. I want to say today—and I believe that all of the gentlemen concerned and their advisers will be prepared to confirm this—that this bill represents in very significant measure the result of the consultations which I had with the representatives of the four Atlantic provinces and, incidentally, to a lesser degree with spokesmen for the trucking industry.

The hon. member for St. John's East said, in that manner of his which seems to indicate so far that solutions are simple and can be drawn like rabbits out of a hat, that all we had to do—and this was the reason for the humour in my response rather than any lack of concern or interest at this moment in the work of the Transport Committee—was to extend the benefits of M.F.R.A. to the trucking industry. I suggest to the hon. member, and indeed I am sure he knows, that that simple solution is precisely the kind of answer that the Atlantic provinces spokesmen themselves do not want and, indeed, it is also to some extent at least a solution that the truckers do not want. Simply to extend the Maritime Freight Rates Act benefits to the trucking industry would not provide a viable and meaningful alternative to the arrangement that we have at the present time. The premiers of the four Atlantic provinces made a number of recommendations, all of which are being considered and will be considered at the same time as we consider the further recommendations which are contained in my own statement of a few days ago and those that were made by the Transport Committee.

When I made reference to this bill as being an interim measure, I want to assure the house that I meant that it is only interim in the sense that it represents a portion of a much broader concept that we hope to develop with the help of the very excellent report of the Transport Committee in the coming months and on which I will be working during the summer recess. There is no suggestion, and I want to make this perfectly clear to the house, that there will be any significant change in any of the measures which either now prevail or which, I hope, will prevail following the passage of this legislation until and unless this more comprehensive program is brought forward and until there has been full-scale consultation with the premiers and the representatives of the Atlantic provinces.

I have made fairly general references throughout to the Atlantic provinces, but may I say to hon. members who represent constituencies in the province of Quebec, particularly that portion of the province of Quebec which comes within the select territory, that it is our intention as well—and we have already held preliminary discussions with the government of the province of Quebec on this matter—to invite the province to participate in this federal-provincial committee. It may be that they will wish to have a member on the committee, to which of course we will be more than pleased to agree. On the other hand, because their circumstances are somewhat different they may wish to have a different kind of representation. But in any event I believe that this measure will also be of significance to that portion of the province of Quebec which comes within the select territory because truckers within that region shipping outbound to other parts of Canada will now have benefits which of course they did not enjoy before.

In any event, let me reiterate the point that it is my intention and the intention of the government to ensure the maintenance of all of the significant portions of the Maritime Freight Rates Act not affected by this legislation until such time as this more comprehensive program comes forward. Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, perhaps the minister's explanation might help in the later stages of the debate. My question has direct reference to the minister's explanation of the interim aspect of the measure and the fact that no other fundamental changes will be made, as I understood him, until the whole comprehensive program is laid before the house. I appreciate the difficulties of preparing the plan and I also appreciate the fact that there have been consultations with the premiers. When we come to clause 3 I will want to read the telegram I received from the truckers which is an extension of the telegram the minister read. The purpose of my question to the minister is to clarify a point in my mind. In view of the fact that clause 10 specifies when clauses 5 and 6 will come into force, is my understanding not correct that clause 5 will have in effect no application for nine months?

Mr. Jamieson: Perhaps I might deal with the whole general area since there have been a number of comments regarding it. I refer to clause 5 and to the related question of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley. If hon. members will read the statement I made in the house last Tuesday, there are two references in it which are particularly pertinent to what I want to say. On page 10227 of Hansard, about the middle of the column, I made the following comment:

> In order to provide the necessary funds for those subsidies which will place truckers on a basis of equality with railways on outbound traffic, it is proposed to authorize the Governor in Council to terminate the so-called freeze at an earlier date than originally contemplated in Bill C-182, thereby removing another discrimination between railways and truckers.

In other words, what I said was that we will not maintain the freeze for the full 12 months. The reason I am reluctant at this point to state a specific date upon which the freeze may be removed is that it is my intention and the intention of the government to extend the subsidy to outbound trucking in advance of the lifting of the freeze, and it seems to me that there is a very good rationale for doing this. If, for example, we can arrange to get the necessary registration of truckers and common carriers by that date, I hope that we can provide the subsidy arrangement for outbound truck freight by July 15. If that is done, we will then see how long it takes for truck tariffs to be established before we move to take off the freeze on rail lines, and we believe that this process will have a salutary effect in terms of what the railway rates are likely to be. I hope this is a satisfactory explanation to the hon. member of why there is no specific date for the lifting of the freeze.

On the question of clause 5 and the powers granted to the Governor in Council may I say that, in my own view, this would not be perhaps the best way in which to approach this problem if we were dealing with the matter on the comprehensive basis to which we have all referred earlier. But if we were to say that it had to come into effect on a fixed date, that is, that any proposals with regard to the changing of the intra-traffic were to come into force on a fixed date, this would mean that we could take no action until the federal-provincial committee had completed a very comprehensive study, and this would mean in turn that the truckers involved in intra-shipments, for example, would not be able to benefit from this arrangement for a considerable length of time.

• (11:50 a.m.)

Let me explain the rationale behind this suggestion. It is that the federal-provincial committee would be set up immediately. It would have the capacity to make recommendations on an ongoing basis. It might be that within two weeks of its first meeting it would make a recommendation that the intra-subsidy be changed or applied on some classification of goods. Then we could proceed under clause 5 to make good that recommendation immediately. What I visualize is that this committee will not be one of a type about which hon. members have had good reason to complain in the past—one which meets and continues to meet for a year or a year and a half with the result that in the intervening period nothing can be done. This committee will be able to make individual recommendations and these would be dealt with rapidly on an ad hoc basis. To make sure we can do this it is necessary to include clause 5 in the legislation.

I should like to refer hon. members to page 10228 of Hansard of Tuesday in which I said—and this is a key point; I hope hon. members will accept my solemn declaration on it:

> The government intends to set up such a joint committee without delay and undertakes not to exercise the power to be given to the Governor in Council to remove or reduce M.F.R.A. subsidies except to the extent that financially equivalent assistance is proposed by the joint committee and accepted by the government. This would be the first task of the joint committee.

Implicit in that statement is our undertaking that the amount of the present over-all subsidy will not be reduced. What we are saying here—and this is the reason for clause 6—is that the committee will meet and make recommendations to us periodically along the lines that the subsidy on X route, for example, which costs a certain number of dollars, might be used more effectively in another way.

The undertaking I give to the house now, as I did on Tuesday, is that there will be no implementation of this power without a recommendation having been made by the committee, and that any such changes will not result in a lowering of the totality of the amount paid by way of interim subsidy. This course is being followed at the suggestion of and, I believe, with the support of the four Atlantic premiers.

Many hon. members have discovered that the interim subsidy administered on a blanket basis is not the most effective means of providing assistance to transport in the maritimes. It is obvious there is greater need for some commodities than for others. It is conceivable that the amounts now being spent on this blanket subsidy might well be applied in ways other than the direct subsidization of transportation. It might be spent on assistance to shippers, for example. This is something we should bear in mind. Eventually, and ideally, we should bear in mind that the subsidy should go to the shipper rather than to the transportation technique or mode, but this is a complicated matter to deal with; it is not something we can deal with at this moment.

I hope we have put into this legislation adequate safeguards to deal with the fears which hon. members have properly expressed. I shall be particularly concerned to see there is no diminution in the total intra-subsidy. I thought the hon. member for St. John's East might have given me credit for the portion of my speech wherein I stated arrangements would be made for a comparable water carrier subsidy on goods moved by boat to St. John's and Cornerbrook. This is an important element within the whole package. I regard it as a vital one. Though we talk about this as an interim measure there is a good deal included which is of a permanent and highly significant nature in connection with Atlantic transportation.

On the matter of the outbound or westbound subsidy, provision is made for the committee to examine whether or not there ought to be a measure of selectivity attached to that subsidy of 30 per cent. The idea was expressed to me in the Atlantic provinces to the effect that here again there might be a significant waste factor. By saying simply that anything that goes out of Atlantic Canada to the west should get this subsidy we may be losing opportunities for improvement.

We have no intention at this moment of altering this basis of universality but I emphasize that the committee has the right to make recommendations on the matter of whether or not there should be more selectivity or whether the rates should be changed with regard to certain commodities.

An interesting point having to do with the constructive comments of the hon. member for Malpeque is the fact that I heard a great deal in the Atlantic provinces, including his own province, about the possibility of providing assistance in connection with the transportation to the Atlantic provinces of various raw materials which might be the elements necessary to some kind of economic project. At present there is no such help given. If an industry requires to bring in raw materials it must do so on the same basis as does any other shipper. This is something I hope the committee will look at.

I should also like to say a few words having to do, again, with the 12th report of the standing committee. The joint federal-provincial committee is also being asked to look at the position of all modes of transportation. It seems to me there are legitimate complaints with regard to the treatment of certain kinds of shipments carried by what is called "the balloon trade". This covers commodities which have a good deal of bulk but little weight; at present they are being carried by air and by sea. There is authorization for this committee to consider all modes and determine what recommendations should be made with regard to assistance to air freight, sea freight or any other mode which might develop.

I believe I have answered in a general way the representations which have been made to me. The bill is designed to meet an immediate and urgent problem. I recognize that at the moment the truckers are under two impediments. They are under the impediment of the rates on incoming traffic and under the impediment of having to fight the railways on the M.F.R.A. basis. So the rationale of the whole program is to give the Atlantic trucking industry at least a reasonable break in terms of getting its products to market. We want to improve that situation. We have said to the Atlantic provinces: We accept your proposal that you should have a say in the question of other subsidies to be provided. I am giving the house a commitment that there will be no change in the rates under the M.F.R.A. unless the committee so recommends and unless the amount to be spent in some other manner is at least the same as the amount originally provided.

I should add that it is not enough to provide even a measure of equality for all modes of transport unless there is a good roads network. This is fundamental to the government's concept of regional development and expansion and we intend to continue to provide assistance in road building. This is not a matter which comes directly within my responsibility but I am in constant consultation with my colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Some work is being done this year. A very remarkable amount of work, when one totals it up, has been done over the last six, seven or eight years, including completion of the trans-Canada highway. We have spent many hundreds of millions of dollars on roads in the Atlantic area. No one knows better than I that this is still far from enough, and part of this total transportation package will have to be continued encouragement by the federal government of road construction in the Atlantic region.

• (12 noon)

I would be the first to admit that this measure is by no means the law of the Medes and the Persians, that it is not a perfect piece of legislation. But I do say to hon. members that I have at least sought in prior discussions to take into account the representations that have been made to me by hon. members opposite, by the premiers of the provinces and by the industries concerned. In order to get this measure through and to show at least some progress in this vital field we have moved in the direction we have and brought forward this legislation today. I hope the measure commends itself to the committee, because I am sure that within the next three or four months we will come to see in a very real way the benefits of it.

Mr. Nowlan: Would the minister permit a question? I thank him for his explanation and answers to some of the queries raised on this side of the house. Frankly, if the bill were as plausible as the minister's explanation there would be no doubt in my mind about the intent and/or objective of the legislation.

Just for clarification I should like to pose a question that is in three parts. First of all, we are talking here only of interim subsidy payments and the shifting of those payments from the railways to the truckers on a selective basis. We are not talking about more money being paid under the Maritime Freight Rates Act, if my understanding is correct.

What I cannot understand at the moment, despite the minister's most plausible and constructive explanation, is the suggestion that the saving under the interim payment will be transferred in the form of a financially equivalent payment to an operator of some other mode of transportation or shipper or, to use the words in the bill, to a carrier, shipper or consignee. The difficulty I have with the minister's explanation, though this may be a drafting problem, is that there are two undertakings. First of all, he hopes that by proclamation before July 15 the rate freeze will be cancelled, which in effect—

Mr. Jamieson: No, that is not right. However, I should let the hon. member finish his question.

Mr. Nowlan: In effect, the minister is going to end the rate freeze by July 15. As I understand it, this would bring to life the provisions in clauses 5 and 6. Is that correct?

Mr. Jamieson: That is partially correct, but the freeze will not end on July 15. I said that the date for ending the freeze will depend upon the time at which we can put the subsidy program for the truckers into effect. There is no direct relationship between the two. In other words, we can maintain the freeze for a period beyond the starting date at which the truckers are paid for westbound shipments.

Mr. Nowlan: Then I still have difficulty reconciling those clauses with clause 10, which provides that clauses 5 and 6 will not come into effect until, in effect, the freeze expires. What is the purpose of that provision?

Mr. Jamieson: I am not a legal mind in this matter but I think it is a question of the proclamation. We can announce the proclamation of the date on which the freeze is going to end, but we can advance it considerably beyond that point. In other words, the two will come into effect at the same time. Having come into effect in terms of the announcement of the total program, we can say that the freeze will end on date x but that the subsidies will start on date y.

Mr. Nowlan: That is the difficulty. I do not see how that can be done under this bill, no matter when the announcement. Naturally I accept the undertakings given by the minister, but there has already been one ministerial change in the short life of the present régime. There are also certain activities in Newfoundland that might attract the minister to return to the province and his undertakings, though given sincerely, are not cemented in legislation.

I still have difficulty reconciling the point I raised in connection with the operation of clauses 5 and 6 in view of the provisions of clause 10. However, I will leave this point for the moment because the minister may be able further to amplify the matter when he consults his officials.

The other point bothering me is that the minister has given this undertaking in connection with a financially equivalent transfer of the saving made under the interim payment. However, as I read this bill nowhere do I find,—though I presume if it is to be found it will be found in clause 6, wording quite as unequivocal as that used by the minister a few minutes ago. The clause says that under the regulations prescribed by the Governor in Council, the Governor in Council may authorize payment of assistance out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Mr. Jamieson: Which clause is this?

Mr. Nowlan: Clause 6(1). I presume that this is the clause that would deal with the transfer of the financially equivalent payment. The clause does not provide that there "shall" be such payment. Nowhere in the bill is it provided that the payment made to the shippers or carriers "shall" be equal to the amount saved. In effect, what we are doing is taking from Peter to give to Paul. However, nowhere in the bill is it provided that you give to Paul the exact amount that you took from Peter. The bill does not provide that the financially equivalent payment shall be made.

In addition, nowhere in the bill is there any mention of the federal-provincial committee; again in this regard we have the undertaking of the minister. If he is still with us working hard in the fall, perhaps this committee will come to fruition. However, if there is another portfolio change it may be delayed.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, may I try to deal with the second point first. A federal-provincial committee is being established in this matter because eventually it may well be that we wish to change the make-up and content of the committee once we discover how effectively it works on the basis of its present assignment. Therefore it was felt that rather than establish it in a statutory way it would be best to proceed as we have at the moment.

With regard to the hon. member's first question about the amount of the payment, may I refer him to clause 5(2) where he will note that there is a requirement on the transport commission. The clause provides:

> Where a reduced tariff has been varied or removed pursuant to subsection (1), the Commission shall for each calendar year or portion of a calendar year thereafter estimate the amount of compensation that would have been paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to railway companies in respect of the preferred movements of traffic . . . and the commission shall certify to the minister the estimated saving to the Consolidated Revenue Fund—

In other words, under this provision we will know what the saving is going to be. Since the hon. member is a lawyer I am sure he will agree that we could not write into legislation that every single dollar will be applied in that precise sense. All I can say is that I think the clauses, when read in sequence, indicate the intent of the bill, and I have tried to reinforce that with my commitment today.

Mr. Nowlan: We are having a general discussion of the bill, though these are matters that I was going to raise when we reach clause 5. The difficulty about this formula is twofold. First of all, there is still no direction. The minister has said it is difficult to do this legislatively, but bills are either mandatory or permissive. They can provide either that things "may" be done or that they "shall" be done.

More important than that is the question of how you are to bring about savings under clause 5(2). How are we going to meet the situation? It is fair to ask this about an interim measure. The minister must know that ever since 1927, or ever since the end of the war, the Maritime Freight Rates Act has not met the problems of the Atlantic area. Surely after all the commissions, studies and premiers' task forces we could have come up with something better than this bill. It seems to me that here you have legislation saying that what you take from Peter you will pay to Paul. It is not good enough for the government to say that by shifting these interim subsidies around it will help the shipper, consignee or carrier. Under this bill we can see a situation in which subsidies are reduced.

Let us consider the provision saying that the commission shall certify to the minister the estimated saving to the fund. That is to be found in clause 5(2). Last year maritime freight rates subsidies amounted to $14 million. Let us say that this year, by shifting the payments around and by juggling a bit, the minister can bring about a saving of $4 million. Therefore we reduce the total amount paid by $4 million and pay out altogether $10 million. Let us say that something happens next year. The minister may go back to Newfoundland or be transferred to another, more challenging portfolio or, better still, the government may be defeated.

Mr. Jamieson: Then the hon. member will not have to worry.

Mr. Nowlan: But the people of the Atlantic region will still be worried. For any number of reasons we may get into a situation in which there cannot be implemented any comprehensive transportation policy for the maritimes. At any rate, let us say that in the second year of the shift, and remember we are dealing now with a base figure of $10 million and not $14 million, there is another saving or another shifting of $2 million. That will reduce the payment in the second year to $8 million, the $2 million involved here being paid to shippers, carriers or consignees in accordance with the select territory principle. In the third year the minister might very well say, "Let's cut everything down." We could very well face a situation in which payments are reduced not to $8 million or $10 million, but to $2 million. This bill has implicit in it that danger.

I say that if we are to improve on the Maritime Freight Rates Act let us bring in some real improvements. We have had the Maritime Freight Rates Act for 60 years and, as legislators, I do not think we should agree to any open-ended type of arrangement under which the amount of assistance could be reduced, say, to $2 million. I do not say the minister would do this intentionally, but that could be the result of a juggling of the administration.

Mr. Jamieson: With respect, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend is making a good argument but in my opinion it does not have any substance. In the first instance, the outbound or westbound rate is still rigidly and emphatically included in the bill.

Mr. Nowlan: That is right.

Mr. Jamieson: On top of that we are going to provide 30 per cent for truckers going out. So there is no likelihood that the sum paid out will go down. That sum has to go up.

What I said so far as the interim subsidy is concerned—and I explained why we cannot spell this out in legislation; it must be self-evident—was that the step we are taking here represents to me one in a logical sequence. We say the amount must be determined and specified. Where there is any change in the interim, it must be determined and specified and it becomes a matter of public record that that amount has been specified. Then, too, we have a committee and we shall say to that committee, "You can take these moneys and move them from project A to project B". Therefore the committee is the second safeguard. On it will be representatives of at least the four Atlantic provinces and, possibly, from the province of Quebec.

When my hon. friend says that we might be devious and try to get away with reducing the amount to $2 million, he is not making a realistic representation. Furthermore, we have provided in clauses 5 and 6 for the balancing of those elements which are necessary for these changes. We have also made sure that they can be applied to other modes, or in other ways. So I suggest with great respect that I cannot see any substance to the purely theoretical argument that my hon. friend is advancing. I am not going to say, and this bill does not say, that the same amount may be included each year. In other words, it is quite conceivable that the committee may recommend a shift in this system. I think it is useful to have that kind of flexibility. If an additional amount is required in the first year in order to achieve a permanent gain, there might be less money a year or two after that. But that is for the committee to decide.

I say that this is the best effort we have been able to come up with to meet the request of the provinces. All parties in this house have been accused of being arbitrary and of saying to the Atlantic provinces, "Take it or leave it." We are trying this means. Because we are breaking new ground, there are no precedents to follow. I am simply saying that this is our best effort and we will try to make it work. If it does not work I am certain I shall be hearing again from my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I have no difficulty in understanding and accepting the minister's constructive answers. Unfortunately there is a gap between his statements and the provisions of the bill. He said that the committee is to have certain powers and that it will initiate certain recommendations to the transport commission. The committee will say where the shift ought to be. I say to the minister that the provisions of the bill do not spell that out, and that is part of our dilemma.

May I revert to my theoretical discussion. I think the amounts paid are $8 million for outbound—

Mr. Jamieson: It is $8 million for inbound and $6 million for outbound.

Mr. Nowlan: It does not take too much imagination, Mr. Chairman, to dream up a situation in which the $8 million could be reduced to $4 million or even $2 million. Were the premiers involved in agreement with the principle that we begin with the figure of $14 million? I think the minister mentioned a 30 per cent subsidy for the outbound trucker who until now has not been covered. As I read the bill, it says nothing about shifting part of the $8 million—

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, this of necessity must be an open-ended arrangement. My hon. friend wants it to be open-ended on the one side and closed on the other. You cannot have it both ways. This is the option I present to him. If we are going to say that there has to be a fixed determination of the $8 million and that it cannot be altered or changed in any way, in other words, that that figure is sacrosanct, then we must say that the amount of outbound must have a ceiling on it as well. I do not think that would be in the best interest of the Atlantic provinces. We surely have to say that whatever amount of business goes out of eastern Canada by rail or truck, that business is to have a subsidy. The amount could be $14 million. Theoretically, I suppose it could be, and I hope it does get up to, $20 million. It would mean there would be more manufacturing and industry in the Atlantic provinces and the people there would be doing better. If we really want to circumscribe this, it is possible to do so. It is possible to say the amount shall be $8 million and that it will not be changed or varied one bit. That is not the practical way of going about it.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Mr. Nowlan: I ask the minister to look at clause 6(2) which is germane to this discussion. It states:

The total amount of assistance—

That is the assistance on outbound traffic.

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Chairman. Where does the hon. member see outbound in clause 6(2)? Clause 2 has to do with reductions in tariffs. That is where we have taken it off of rail on the intra. It has to be applied in the same amount. It cannot exceed it.

Mr. Nowlan: I was going to say that the saving under clause 5(2), the payments that you are playing with, cannot exceed what the minister says. When the minister talks about $20 million, I want to know where he gets the open end.

Mr. Jamieson: When the hon. member began his speech he said there was a great deal of confusion in the Atlantic provinces regarding the outbound and intra. These are the semantics we are trapped in at the moment. All I can say to the hon. member is that I was in on the drafting of this bill. While I am not a legal person, I do understand its implications. I am now putting on the record what I understand it to mean.

As far as the outbound is concerned, there is no limitation on the amount that will be paid either to truckers or the railways. This 30 per cent is designated the same as for shipments out of the Atlantic provinces under the Maritime Freight Rates Act. There is no limit as far as that is concerned.

Insofar as the hon. member's question is concerned, a fixed amount is paid in any one year on intra. I am sure my hon. friend understands that. What I am saying is that the amount to be used for purposes other than an intra subsidy would not be less than the amount, insofar as the railways are concerned, if it applied only to the railways. It is the same sum of dollars, merely moving them from one to another. This does not apply insofar as the westbound 30 per cent subsidy is concerned. I hope that makes it reasonably clear.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Clause 5(1) seems to be causing all the trouble. This refers to what the minister is calling intra-traffic, traffic within the select territory. Intra-traffic refers to traffic such as that between Fredericton and Halifax. That is what I call intra-traffic within the territory. Outbound shipments would be from the select territory west.

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member is quite right, Mr. Chairman. Traffic moving between points within the select territory is intra-traffic. Perhaps it might be more effective if we used the term westbound for any other kind of traffic, that is, traffic flowing out of the select territory.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Clause 5(1) states:

—the Governor in Council may vary or remove the reduction in tariffs for the preferred movements of traffic described in paragraph (a) or (c) of sub-section (1) of section 4 of that act—

That refers to intra only.

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): It does not refer to shipments from the select territory west.

Mr. Jamieson: That is right.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I apologize for not hearing the minister's earlier statement and the other statements. Consequently my questions may have already been answered. If that is the case, the minister can remind me. I wish to ask four questions.

First, I gather from one of the remarks of the minister that he hopes the provinces will agree to Bill C-207 which we are now discussing. I am aware of the fact the principle recommended by the premiers in their recent recommendations regarding transportation may be embodied in the bill. My question is whether the minister has given the premiers an opportunity to react to this legislation.

Second, the committee seems to be something like the premiers had in mind but it is not mentioned specifically in the legislation. How does the minister plan to set up this committee? Possibly the minister has already answered this question. Will the committee members be paid? What kind of representation does the minister hope the various provinces will have? Will the committee members be civil servants or other people who are already receiving pay? I feel these questions should be answered for the purpose of clarification.

My other two questions are very simple. I will not get involved in academic, theoretical situations and dialectics as some hon. members did. My question refers to trucking firms that are already doing business in the Atlantic provinces. An example would be freight being moved from Truro to another part of Nova Scotia or from Port aux Basques to St. John's. I previously wrote to the minister with a similar query. Will these firms be entitled to some assistance under the act as it is slated to come into existence, or through some future legislation the minister hopes to introduce?

My third question is with regard to the present subsidies being paid on eastbound freight. An example would be freight originating in Montreal and being shipped to Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland. Will there be a continuation of these subsidies? I do not know on what basis the subsidy used to be paid to Clarke Steamships. A specific example is that last year this company received a subsidy of $75,000 for moving freight from Montreal to Botwood. The reason I ask this question is that approximately two years ago the Department of Public Works built a beautiful structure, which was stated to have cost $2 million. The $75,000 subsidy was removed. It meant that approximately 100 people were affected directly by pay reductions in the area. It affected people right on the waterfront. All of this trade as well as the trucking operations in a large area slowed down immensely. The $2 million structure no longer is of any value. It has become a white elephant. Was this subsidy removed in order to be included in this kind of legislation? It does not seem to make sense. A facility costing $2 million was provided and then the subsidy of $75,000 to a shipping firm was eliminated. This caused a tremendous impact on the economy and the cost of living in that area. Why was this subsidy removed? Will it in fact be replaced under this legislation or is there any provision for replacing it?

Mr. Jamieson: I will try to deal with the hon. member's questions one at a time. I have already covered the matter of consultation with the premiers and representatives of the four Atlantic provinces. To the best of my knowledge, the reaction has been favourable to this proposal. It has been a matter of record for several days and I have not heard anything adverse with regard to it. In any event, it was the subject of earlier discussions with them so that they were reasonably well aware of what we were proposing.

I envisage that the committee will have representatives from at least the four Atlantic provinces. I mentioned earlier to Quebec members that we will make proposals to that province with regard to whether or not they wish to have a member on the committee or to make representations in some other way. But in any event it will be the provinces that will name their representatives to the committee. It will be chaired either by someone from the Department of Transport or perhaps even from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. In any event there will be federal representation on it to the extent that this appears to be required.

I gather that the hon. member was talking about trucking firms operating within a single province or the select territory. At present they, of course, are not receiving a subsidy. What will happen is that this committee will be empowered and is being asked to study what trucking agencies, what modes of transport, and what kinds of commodities ought to be considered for subsidy.

The hon. member, being from my own province, will know that a very significant amount of pulpwood and the like is today carried by truck. Is it a practical thing for the large paper companies to receive a subsidy? Many of us are inclined to think that perhaps it is not. This is the kind of thing that the committee will consider. This is why we are providing this rather than a blanket subsidy which would simply become a cream-skimming operation for certain operators. This will be on a selective basis, and I am sure the committee will hear representations from truckers on whether they should be included.

I am aware of the hon. member's problem and deep concern with regard to the port of Botwood and the matter of subsidizing freight into the province of Newfoundland. In the statement I made on Tuesday I indicated that we were in fact arranging for subsidies of very considerable magnitude for shipments from Montreal to Corner Brook and St. John's, and that these are two ports to which a very considerable amount of support is being provided.

This whole issue would take considerably more time than I have at my disposal today to go into in detail. The whole issue of whether or not we maintain individual ports because of the employment problems that exist there, or whether the rationalization of a freight and transportation policy requires that we do the logical thing, is one about which I suspect there will continue to be a great deal of argument. In the case of Botwood I am told, and I have every reason to believe this, that the shipper was not particularly interested in continuing into Botwood whether there was a subsidy or not. In other words, there was no considerable enthusiasm on his part. He was losing money on the operation and the subsidy per ton was very high.

In any event, it is our judgment that with the provision of very significant improvements in docking facilities at Corner Brook, and with very large harbour development at St. John's, which the hon. member for St. John's East had a considerable amount to do with, these two ports still appear to be the most logical points through which to funnel this kind of ocean freight into Newfoundland, particularly if one is concerned primarily about the cost of living. There is a dichotomy here, and I appreciate that this is a very difficult problem to resolve, because whenever something is moved from one port to another there is a vacuum at the first port, which in the first place may have had a smaller volume of traffic.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, these water subsidies have been considerably increased this year. But it is unfortunate that this combination of the disposition of the carrier, who had very little interest in continuing the operation into Botwood, and the general centralization of distribution centres in Corner Brook and St. John's, means that the Botwood operation could not be sustained. I hope the hon. member will believe I am sincere when I say this. I take it that this would have been the case even if we had agreed to pay a subsidy comparable with that paid last year.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, the minister seems to be telling me that this is a dead case, that all is over and done with in the Botwood situation. I could debate this for quite some time and also deal with the attitude of the company, but would the minister give an undertaking at least to review the circumstances surrounding the case? We are talking about the whole of central eastern Newfoundland. We are not talking about one small port, or an area served by an adjacent port. This is the port of central eastern Newfoundland, and if the operation is closed down it will have an adverse affect upon the cost of living in the area. Will the minister give that undertaking?

Mr. Jamieson: I will be very glad to do that. I want to emphasize again that this policy is to be subject to review. I did not say the case was dead, although that is a reasonable interpretation. I question very much if a shipping company would be interested on a continuing basis in that kind of service particularly when I suspect that the amount of freight offering for that region is probably going to be reduced, and the present subsidy would have to be increased to a very much higher level. I doubt that the hon. member, as effective as he is representing his constituents, could then justify the cost of that subsidy.

I also have to point out, and I do not make this as a debating point, that what you lose on the roundabouts you make up on the swings. Freight that does not go into one port must go into another port. However, I will be glad to review the matter and go to Botwood with the hon. member and talk to the people there if he so desires.

Mr. Lundrigan: I thank the minister for undertaking to review or reconsider the situation. If he were in that area during the off-season I could show him some things which he does not know.

Much of the legislation passed by this house never seems to affect the people of Canada for whom it was designed, at least not as much as it should, simply because they are not aware of it. This is a communications problem. Some weeks ago we passed legislation amending the Fisheries Act. Since then I have received 15 or 20 letters raising queries about the provisions of the legislation. The people did not know what was in the legislation. We will have precisely the same problem with this legislation. Does the minister have plans to provide circulars, pamphlets or other material to indicate to the people who will be affected by this legislation, the truckers, the people within the region and so on, the benefits they will receive under the legislation?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we have to worry about the truckers not being aware of it. I think they are well advised about it. But at the same time I will be glad to consider what ways we can use to make sure there is a more general awareness of what we are trying to do.

Mr. Peddle: Mr. Chairman, I notice that the title of this bill is, "An act to authorize assistance to transportation in the Atlantic Region," and that clause 2 carefully states that select territory means the province of Nova Scotia, the province of Prince Edward Island, the province of New Brunswick, and then very carefully excludes the Labrador part of the province of Newfoundland. I am sure the minister has no doubt in his mind that Labrador does in fact belong to Newfoundland, and of course most definitely belongs to the Atlantic provinces.

Having just come back from spending the best part of a week in Labrador I realize the extent of the feeling of neglect which the people there have. Whether it is justified or not I cannot say at this time, but when I see a piece of legislation which is designed to help transportation in the Atlantic provinces and note that Labrador is excluded from it, I must make the strongest objection to this omission.

I know this bill is mainly for the benefit of outgoing freight, and there is not very much that goes out from Goose Bay, Labrador. I point to the minister that a pound of carrots costs 18 cents to bring into Goose Bay by Air Canada. I had hoped there might be something in the bill to recognize the problem of Labrador not only being cut off completely but having to suffer very seriously in respect of the cost of bringing goods in. My question to the minister is, did he overlook this and would he be receptive to an amendment? If he indicates he might accept an amendment I would ask that this clause be held over until such time as I have prepared one.

Mr. Jamieson: This was not an oversight. The hon. member quite properly said the emphasis in this bill is on westbound traffic and on trucking, so it would not be of any great significance. I noted the omission immediately and discovered that this was done at the time of the terms of the union. There were reasons for it at that time which may not necessarily apply today. I do not believe anything very significant would result in terms of this legislation by including Labrador. I do not believe we could accomplish this by including it in the bill.

This problem would have to be directly related to the M.F.R.A., and we may run into questions as to whether it in fact constitutes part of the union. What I want to say to my friend is that I will direct that the federal-provincial committee which deals with the intra-matters—subsidies and the like within the region—give some consideration to this matter and extend some other form of aid, if not this form, to Labrador.

I may say there is a measure of that kind now through which considerable subsidies are paid on coastal boat shipments and that kind of thing which is outside the M.F.R.A. altogether. The best way to approach this, and I am in full accord with the intent of my hon. friend's statement, is to have the committee consider the matter to see which method would be the best. In other words, I think it might be a bit of a hollow victory to include Labrador now and discover there is nothing in the bill of any consequence in so far as benefits to the Labrador people are concerned. I will make that one of the terms of reference to the committee if the hon. member so desires.

Mr. Peddle: Would the minister compromise by saying "the province of Newfoundland" instead of "the island of Newfoundland"?

Mr. Jamieson: Such a compromise would, of course, do precisely what my hon. friend desires but which I have said is not a very useful gesture at the present time because this is expressly confined to the island of Newfoundland which is so designated in the terms of union. It does not appear to me that he would be able, and I would have to get a legal opinion on this, to alter it in that way in view of the fact it is constitutionally embodied, if you like, in the terms of union. I do suggest to my hon. friend that the method I have advanced would be the more beneficial one for the people concerned, that is, we should get the committee to take a look at what can be done in respect of assistance in terms of freight, etc. for Labrador.

Mr. Peddle: Could I ask then that clause 2 stand temporarily while I give the matter further thought?

The Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 2 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

On clause 3—Assistance authorized.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out to the minister that the purpose of clause 3 is to provide temporary assistance to certain truckers, but we on this side are disturbed about this clause and the bill because so many things are temporary and will have very little effect. I suppose the purpose is to increase competition between various carriers in the hope that with competition the rates will be brought down. I suggest that this is why the truckers association's initial reaction to this measure was disapproval. This will bring very limited relief to truckers in this area, and it will only apply to those truckers hauling from east to west. It will involve only two carriers in the maritimes.

Mr. Jamieson: No, 16.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Are there 16 carriers hauling from east to west?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, at least 16.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): I will accept the minister's figure, but the reaction of the truckers was that this would give only very limited relief to the industry.

Mr. Jamieson: I can only say as I have said before that this has been thoroughly considered and will presumably help the truck carriers in the region.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Chairman, is the minister aware that if he gives more assistance in respect of vegetables coming from the maritimes the growers in Quebec and Ontario will be unhappy?

Mr. Jamieson: I am not sure of the gist of my hon. friend's question. There is no assistance whatsoever in respect of goods moving from western Canada into the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Thomson: My question referred to the reverse situation. Is the minister aware that if freight assistance is given in respect of products moving westward into Quebec and Ontario there will be opposition from the Ontario and Quebec vegetable growers and pressure to keep these freight subsidies from going into effect for that reason?

Mr. Jamieson: I suppose that is so, Mr. Chairman, but there has been a 100-year effort the other way around. There has been all manner of assistance provided in central Canada in respect of goods moving into the Atlantic provinces. Furthermore, there is really no significant difference here other than we are providing the same kind of assistance that has prevailed. We are simply making it available to trucking as well as to rail transportation. I do not think it will be significant in that way.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 4—Reduced rate for compensation.

Mr. Nowlan: My question is related to clause 4(2) which is intended to give some assistance in respect of express traffic westbound out of the select territory. I am looking for what is perhaps only clarification of this clause. Was this measure requested by the premiers in their brief or during discussions with the minister and will this benefit the railways or will it be passed on to the shippers?

I am informed that the railway people feel at the present time that although they do not get the subsidy, the E.T.A. 100 rate schedule reflects the M.F.R.A. outbound rate. In view of this I am wondering whether this assistance will be of any benefit to the shippers. If my information is correct that the outbound express traffic under the E.T.A. 100 rate schedule reflects in fact the potential effect the M.F.R.A. is going to have in reducing the rates charged by the rail company to the shipper, will this benefit in fact be passed on to the shipper? Has there been any discussion with the minister and the rail people about whether this actually going to result in a reduction in outbound rates to the shipper?

Since this is going to help the outward passage of express traffic, what is going to be the position of the railways in regard to the intra-movement of express traffic? If we do find that there is a reduction in the cost of westbound express traffic in view of the relationship between the E.T.A. 100 rate schedule and the M.F.R.A., will the railways then turn around and increase the express rate for intra-movement? How is that situation going to be covered?

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I am sure my hon. friend knows that you cannot take care of a thing like that in legislation. You have to take the whole freight tariff, the truck tariff, all the shipping and everything else and incorporate it in the act. I suggest the only thing we can do is make as much provision in general terms as we can and then hope, as my hon. friend said in his opening comments, that we wind up with a competitive system which will be the most meaningful way of correcting the anomalies to which the hon. member referred. I do not think I can answer him any more specifically. If he wants to spend a few hours or even days with the authorities on the question of broad tariffs—I am sure he knows how complicated they are—I could arrange it for him.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Power to vary or remove rates.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Chairman, when I spoke on this bill last Tuesday I said that I welcomed the introduction of the legislation because it was at least an attempt to correct some of the problems with which we in the Atlantic region have been plagued for the last 100 years. I also pointed out that I would accept the bill in principle strictly on the basis that it was an interim measure. I re-emphasize that today. This bill will give slight relief to certain shippers in the area, but it will do very little to correct or eliminate some of the transportation problems that have been with us for so long.

The reason we on this side of the house are suspicious of the so-called interim nature of the bill is found in the clause we are now considering. Many speakers have expressed the view that clause 5 is a bad one, that it sets a dangerous precedent. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants on Tuesday expressed it very well when he said he objected very strongly to the inclusion of clause 5 in a bill of this type because we are in effect eliminating a statutory right and substituting therefor an administrative decision.

For 60 years, from the time of confederation to 1927, we in the Atlantic provinces fought to have our right to Canadian markets recognized. This right was recognized in 1927 under the Maritime Freight Rates Act. There is now not only a constitutional obligation in this respect, but commitments made over 100 years have resulted in statutory guarantees being provided. Now, with one fell swoop there is included in the bill a clause which will wipe out all those rights we fought so long to acquire.

In his statement earlier today the minister admitted this was not the best way to handle the problem. That was the understatement of the afternoon. It certainly is not the best way to handle it; in fact, I think it is one of the worst ways it could possibly be handled. The minister has the report of the four Atlantic premiers. He told us today he had listened to the premiers and this bill is basically what they want. I point out to him that the four Atlantic premiers specified a different method of handling subsidies from that outlined in the bill. I am told this is one of the reasons for the long delay in preparing the report; the premiers would not agree to the report unless this specification were included. On page 14 of their report the premiers state specifically:

> To permit this transition without creating undue disruption of business or unnecessary hardship, the implementation of the revised act should be done gradually.

I think this is the crux of the whole thing:

> The selection of shippers qualifying for intra-regional subsidy—

They use the word "intraregional"; this is why I wanted to get these terms straight with the minister.

> —under the new policy must be completed by the agency before modifications in the Maritime Freight Rates Act on intraregional traffic are implemented.

In other words, as I read it and understand from having talked to people in the maritimes, their position all along was that the first step was to set up a board, to give the board authority to consider the whole matter of reduction of tariffs, to access where these subsidies could best be used to encourage industry, and when that had been done they would make recommendations as to how the subsidy system could be operated. I suggest to the minister that this bill is putting the cart before the horse. Under the provisions of clause 5 the government is given the right to eliminate or alter subsidies at will; they can eliminate the whole structure of subsidies which has been built up since the Maritime Freight Rates Act was passed.

As far as I can see, there is no provision in the bill as to how the board shall be set up, what its composition and powers will be. There should be provision in the bill to cover these matters. Clause 5 provides that the subsidies may be removed. The minister has assured us that they will not be removed. He has assured us that a federal-provincial board will be set up, and only on their recommendation will the subsidies be altered. But as the hon. member for Annapolis Valley pointed out, the life of a Minister of Transport in this government is not very long. All we have are the minister's assurances. A succeeding Minister of Transport may say: I am sorry, but he has gone; he is no longer with us.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, what guarantee do we have that the subsidies will not be altered or removed? All we have is a statutory instrument which provides that the subsidies may be taken away from us. In my opinion clause 5 is the bad clause in this legislation and should not be there. May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer in very few words. My hon. friend cannot have it both ways. We could maintain the freeze for the rest of this year, and the truckers would get nothing. One part of the argument is that we are not going far enough or acting quickly enough to get the truckers under the scheme. We could apply the freeze immediately, and nothing would be done for the remainder of the year because we had moved in that direction. On the other hand, my hon. friend could see the wisdom of what we are trying to do and accept my undertaking of Tuesday, which I repeat, that there will be no attempt to remove or reduce M.F.R.A. subsidies except to the extent that financially equivalent assistance is proposed by the joint committee and accepted by the government. That is the alternative we have taken in view of representations made by hon. members, who now do not like this particular arrangement. I simply leave it at that, in calling it one o'clock, and say that you pays your money and you takes your choice.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order, please. It is one o'clock. Is it the wish of the committee that we continue for a few minutes?

Question of Privilege

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Chairman, you allowed the minister to make a statement after I had called it one o'clock.

An hon. Member: He was answering your question.

The Chairman: Order, please. If it is the wish of the committee I will call it one o'clock.

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock the business now before the house stands adjourned pursuant to special order made Friday, June 13, 1969. I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—COMPLAINT RESPECTING STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE IN PRESS ARTICLE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time on a question of privilege in respect of which I have given appropriate notice. In view of the fact that it concerns the Minister of Agriculture, and since he is not in the house and I am not certain of the extent to which notice was given to him, might I simply bring the matter before the house at this time, indicating that as soon as the minister enters the chamber I will bring the matter before hon. members as I properly should.

An hon. Member: He is here, now.

Mr. Baldwin: As I indicated before the minister arrived in the chamber, Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege in respect of which I have sent the usual notice to Your Honour. It is a matter which affects the Minister of Agriculture. In particular, it deals with a news report which appeared under date of June 21 in the Financial Post under the headline: "Will Ottawa aid grain growers?"

[The Chairman.]

Underneath is a further headline: "Government certainly will—if Bud Olson has his way." Above another portion of the article is a separate headline: "Here is how Olson proposal for aid would be operated." Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go into the contents of this lengthy article. I will only say it contains reference to a number of specific proposals for dealing with the cash position and problem of western farmers.

Your Honour may tend to dismiss this question of privilege as a mere grievance because the minister saw fit to go outside the house and make a statement. While we do not condone this, I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that on Tuesday last a debate was launched in this house on a motion brought down by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands dealing with this very subject. The minister participated in that debate. I am not permitted to go into details, but in the course of his statement he gave no particulars, no information to this house which could be regarded in any way as resembling the type of proposal he made known to this newspaper.

Either the minister, when he entered into the debate on Tuesday, knew that this article was to appear and was aware of the information he had given, or else he gave this information to a newspaper after the debate had concluded. In either case I submit it constitutes an abuse of the privileges of this house. This question touches the practice of the present government ever since the session started. We were told last year during our debates on procedure that there would be so many days set apart for the opposition—a lesser number than were previously available—but that these would afford the opposition opportunity to set down motions and bring forward questions for discussion in this house. The practice about which I am now complaining has gone on continuously since the session started. It is part of what I suggest is a calculated effort to downgrade the functions and the role of the House of Commons and of parliament.

The practice of making statements outside the house instead of in this chamber shows a calculated contempt for the functions which parliament should fulfil. It is a practice which is constantly growing and I suggest that within a limited time this house will not be performing its functions in the way in which the people of this country expect them to be performed.

We shall shortly be met with a request from the government to agree to changes in our rules. Let me say to the Prime Minister and to the cabinet that the conduct of which the Minister of Agriculture, the Prime Minister and other ministers have been guilty during the course of this session makes a mockery of their expressed desire to reform parliament; it is sanctimonious hypocrisy.

Let them not talk about reforming parliament in the light of conduct of this sort. Instead of being prepared to face charges properly made by an hon. member, the minister preferred to go outside the house and put on record specific answers to those charges, something which should have been done here in this house, and in this house only. That is why I raise a question of privilege at this time.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I heard the date given by the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: June 21.

Mr. Olson: Well, according to my calendar it is two days from now that this newspaper will be published.

Seriously, I have not read this article. I certainly did not write the article. Whether it contains a lot of speculation or not is a matter about which I cannot give an opinion at this point. I suspect that it does contain a lot of speculation, perhaps a repetition of suggestions which have been made to the government from time to time by many farm organizations in connection with the subject matter.

I did not say anything more to the press, to the reporter from the Financial Post, or indeed to any other member of the press than I have said in this house.

I want to close by reminding the hon. member for Peace River that there is no one in this house who has more respect for this institution than I have.

Mr. Speaker: I rise to suggest to hon. members that it is perhaps procedurally incorrect to continue with a debate when there is no motion before the house. The hon. member for Edmonton West seeks the floor, but I wonder whether in the circumstances it might not be better to go on with the business of parliament.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As a point of information, the minister is referred to in the article in question in these words: "Olson told Financial Post", and then the article follows along.

Government Policy on Uranium Sales

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, it would not be the first time that this minister and other ministers have been misquoted.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF AUSTRALIAN PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Speaker: Before we proceed with the business of the house today I wonder whether hon. members would allow me to bring to their attention the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a delegation of Australian parliamentarians. These distinguished colleagues are visiting Ottawa as part of a journey arranged through the auspices of the Speaker of the Canadian section of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. On behalf of my colleagues in the house I extend to them a most hearty welcome, and express the hope that their visit with us in this parliament in Ottawa will be interesting, pleasant and fruitful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate has passed Bill S-39, an act respecting Boy Scouts of Canada and to incorporate L'Association des Scouts du Canada, to which the concurrence of this house is required.

ATOMIC ENERGY

URANIUM—STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POLICY ON SALES

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house of the government's policy with respect to future sales of uranium to other countries.

On June 3, 1965, Prime Minister Pearson outlined to this house a policy regarding uranium exports which provided for such exports under safeguards to ensure that the uranium was used only for peaceful purposes, and which also provided for the stockpiling of uranium to enable operation of Canadian uranium mines to be continued while markets developed for this material.

Many significant changes have taken place since 1965 in the world uranium market. There is a growing world requirement in relation to available supply and a demand for long term contracts. The increasing dependence on uranium fuel for future electrical power generation is providing an incentive for many countries to become concerned with uranium activities in other countries. At the same time the recent signing by many countries of the non-proliferation treaty will, we hope and believe, curtail the spread of nuclear armaments.

These developments will have an impact on the Canadian uranium industry. Accordingly the government is now setting out its uranium policy in greater detail to ensure that full account is taken of the Canadian public interest in these new circumstances.

The basis of Canada's uranium policy is stated in the preamble to the Atomic Energy Control Act, namely that—> —it is essential in the national interest to make provision for the control and supervision of the development, application, and use of atomic energy, and to enable Canada to participate effectively in measures of international control of atomic energy which may hereafter be agreed upon.

To protect the national interest in the different circumstances which now face us we will henceforth require that all contracts covering the export of uranium or thorium be examined and approved by the appropriate federal agency before any application for an export permit is considered. The examination will cover all aspects and implications of the contract such as nuclear safeguards, the relationship between contracting parties, reserves, rate of exploitation, domestic requirements, domestic processing facilities, and selling and pricing policy. Approval will not normally be given to contracts of more than ten years duration unless provision is made for renegotiation of price.

Once an export contract is approved, export permits covering the actual shipment of uranium or thorium may be issued annually, provided the conditions of the contract have been maintained. Approval will be granted only for the supply of uranium and thorium for peaceful purposes to customers in countries with which Canada has completed a safeguards agreement or following the coming into effect of the non-proliferation treaty with customers in countries which have concluded the necessary safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Canada will permit stockpiling of Canadian uranium in foreign countries to meet the succeeding five-year requirements of each country to fuel existing or committed nuclear reactors. Additional stockpiling in Canada will not be precluded but actual export shipment will be limited to a moving five-year requirement of the foreign country. The shipment of small quantities of materials for atomic energy research projects will continue to be permitted without safeguards arrangements.

We will continue to require that all persons engaged in uranium or thorium mining in Canada be incorporated under federal or provincial legislation, that they operate under licence from the Atomic Energy Control Board and that they provide information as required under the regulations of the board.

The government believes that the administration of Canada's uranium policy in this manner, with regulations such as the foregoing, will enable the Canadian primary and secondary uranium industry to grow and take advantage of its opportunities in the world uranium market.

In the implementation and administration of these national policies, the federal government will maintain close contact with provincial governments on matters of common concern with respect to the uranium industry.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, we are grateful for the advance copy of the statement the minister gave us, in order that we could make a considered reply. Unfortunately the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), who would normally speak on behalf of the official opposition party, is not here to reply to the minister.

Arrangements to control the spread of nuclear weapons have been strengthened since many countries have signed the non-proliferation treaty, France and the People's Republic of China being notable exceptions. Perhaps one benefit to flow from bringing continental China into the community of nations—that could be done through means of diplomatic recognition or by bringing that country into the United Nations—would be the acceptance by that country of the implications of the non-proliferation treaty which would lead to a more effective control of nuclear power in the world.

It is noteworthy that since former Prime Minister Pearson made the announcement in the house on June 5, 1965, about the sale of uranium and thorium the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna under the aegis of the United Nations has grown in importance and usefulness. The key policy considerations are "control" and "peaceful purposes". The spread of dangerous, toxic substances is a matter of international concern. Recently the United States army tried to dump poisonous substances into the sea. Fortunately for the world the outcry from the people of the United States forced a change in policy of that country. It is all too obvious that we must continue our vigilance. Canada has made no effort to sell uranium that would not be used for peaceful purposes. There is far more involved here than money, and the government recognizes that.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is encouraging to find that world demand for uranium is increasing. When there was a surplus of uranium in this country and when uranium mines were closing many of us were optimistic enough to think that because nuclear energy could be used in producing power, the demand for uranium undoubtedly would increase in the years ahead. That optimism has been fully justified. Many of us urged the government at that time to embark on a policy of stockpiling uranium. I am very glad to say that the government's decision today has been fully justified by the events.

The increasing demand for uranium, particularly for the generating of power, is creating a demand of which Canada can avail itself. We are one of the fortunate countries in the world which has large supplies of uranium. This will enable Canada to earn a good deal of overseas trade credits by virtue of the export of uranium. However, Mr. Speaker, I am certain the people of this country do not want to earn dollars at the expense of creating a nuclear monster.

The government has been very zealous over the years in making sure that no uranium was sold on the export market except for peaceful purposes. I am glad to see from the minister's statement that the government intends to continue that policy. I take it that no uranium will be sold to any country which is not a signatory of the non-proliferation treaty. The People's Republic of China and the Republic of France are not yet signatories. I know there was a good deal of pressure on the government to sell uranium to France. Fortunately that pressure was resisted. I hope it will continue to be resisted not only to those two countries, but to any other countries which refuse to sign the non-proliferation treaty.

There is one danger of which I hope the government will be fully aware, that is the danger of the trans-shipment of uranium. If uranium is sold to a country which is a signatory to the non-proliferation treaty, it should not be trans-shipped to some other country which is not going to use it for peaceful purposes. I hope the Atomic Energy Control Commission will set up the necessary machinery so that they can be fully aware at all times that the uranium which is sold to any nation is used in that nation, and is not exported to some other nation for the purpose of manufacturing nuclear weapons.

I hope as a result of the minister's policy that we will see a continued expansion of our uranium exports. I hope at the same time the policy of safeguarding the use of Canadian uranium against warlike purposes is carefully and zealously continued.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, we are very happy to be made aware of the agreements the government has reached in connection with the export of uranium, but we have certain reservations to make as far as ten-year contracts are concerned.

We hope the sales will be made only to countries who will use uranium for peaceful purposes. We also hope that the government made sure that uranium will not be transferred to third parties which might use it for purposes other than peaceful ones.

We believe this statement will be welcome by the Canadian mining companies and by the workers who make their living from uranium mining in this country.

Again, I say we are very happy about this statement and we approve of it.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SELECTION OF EXAMINERS

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-208, to amend the National Transportation Act (Selection of examiners).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the National Transportation Act appoints as examiners people responsible for investigating on behalf of the Commission matters concerning the operations of extra-provincial public carriers by motor vehicle.

This bill is designed to amend the act so that the Commission will give preference, in the selection of examiners, to the qualified personnel already available to provincial commissions, to avoid duplication of examiners and to take advantage of the experience already acquired at the provincial level. All members of a provincial commission could be designated for this purpose.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESTRICTING APPLICATION OF LAW

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-209, to amend the National Transportation Act (Restricted Application).

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL HOLIDAYS

MONTREAL—ST. JEAN BAPTISTE DAY PARADE —REPRESENTATION FROM FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Since, at the very last minute, the authorities of the St. Jean Baptiste Society in Montreal have, by special delivery, sent to twelve members of parliament representing constituencies on the Island of Montreal, an invitation to attend the celebrations that will mark St. Jean Baptiste Day on June 24 next, and since care was taken not to invite the Prime Minister because, according to the experts of the St. Jean Baptiste Society, he does not even reside in the Montreal area, does the Prime Minister intend to send as delegate to such celebrations a minister from the Montreal area, for instance, the Secretary of State, to represent the federal government?

I am informed that in the Montreal area—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked his question.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister concerned has just advised me that he has not yet received that invitation, but even on the assumption that it is about to reach him I understand that other hon. members who have duly received it have turned it down, for they thought it came rather late.

Even if I wanted to send somebody to represent me, provided I am invited to do so, I do not think I would find any volunteer.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Has the Prime Minister inquired from the Department of External Affairs how many foreign countries will be represented at the celebrations organized by the St. Jean Baptiste Society of Montreal? Have those ambassadors received, according to custom and practice, the approval of the Department of External Affairs of Canada to attend them?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I must say in this connection that I have not asked the department to inquire, and I do not think that it should.

Yesterday, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Charlevoix, which I must admit took me by surprise, I said that I did not know that the ambassadors had been invited. I have learned since that the invitation had reached them before it became actually known that the organizers of those celebrations intended to exclude the federal government and the Prime Minister of the country.

Therefore, I think that in most cases—probably in every case—their good faith was abused.

I want to say publicly that I did not intend to blame them if they had accepted in good faith the invitation extended to them by the mayor of Montreal and the Society. But now that the facts are known and that it was obviously intended to systematically exclude the federal government and the Prime Minister of this country, they will have no doubt to make their own decision. Once more, I would like to explain to the house that in the event the good faith of those people was abused, I had no intention whatsoever of blaming them.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Has the Prime Minister received this morning the visit of Mr. Marc Carrière, chairman of French Canada celebrations committee? If so, is he in a position to disclose the nature of their meeting?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Carrière is in Ottawa for purposes that he knows better than I do. It is true that I saw him, but only for a few minutes this morning and he took this opportunity to explain why he had not invited me. This is all that happened between us.

PRIME MINISTER UNABLE TO ATTEND CELEBRATIONS AT ST. GEORGES DE BEAUCE

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Has the Prime Minister made a decision regarding the invitation extended by the town of St. Georges de Beauce to attend the St. Jean Baptiste day celebrations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is much concern about me these days. I must say that before coming here I asked that the authorities of St. Georges de Beauce be officially informed that I regretted being unable to attend their festivities, that I sincerely thanked the people and the organizers of the celebration for their invitation, and that I hoped other more favourable occasions would allow me to visit the people of that region, for whom I feel an ever-growing admiration.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the federal government seems to be kept out of the various celebrations scheduled by the St. Jean Baptiste Society, does the Prime Minister feel it might be proper for the federal government to organize its own celebrations on St. Jean Baptiste Day?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we might consider the idea; all parties work at it together, and I think we would have many spectators and participants for our celebrations.

STUDENT AID

INCREASED FEDERAL GRANTS FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that the University of Toronto and York University have been compelled to reject the applications of more than 18,000 students who applied to enter those universities this fall? In view of the fact that the report of the university presidents indicates that many thousands of high school graduates will not be able to gain admission to university this fall, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is giving any consideration as to how to deal with this problem, and particularly whether the government intends to increase federal grants for post-secondary education in order to provide accommodation for university students?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the leader of the N.D.P. knows, education is a matter of provincial jurisdiction and one in which the federal government has no constitutional competence. On the matter of shared grants with the provinces, the hon. member knows that we are now in the process of achieving ways under the constitution whereby the federal government with the consent of the provinces can participate in the type of shared grants to which he refers. Let me just remind the house that since the new arrangement made by the then minister of finance in 1966, the federal government has transferred several hundreds of millions of dollars to the provinces in the account of education.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR STUDENTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact the Ontario provincial Minister of Education has advised these young people who cannot get into university to work for a year, and in view of the fact that the unemployment figure at the end of May reached nearly 5 per cent of the labour force, and the anticipated 250,000 students will be unable to get work this summer, has the minister any plans he intends to divulge to the house, either now or on motions, to provide employment for these young people, who will not be able to get into university this fall and who will be looking for work this summer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In view of the hon. member's question to the alternative minister, I would suggest to the minister that if he is going to make a statement of this nature it should be made on motions.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I then ask the minister whether he will make a statement on motions tomorrow, or certainly before the house recesses, in respect of this important matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter. My hon. friend will have noticed that the month to month increase in the labour force was considerable and that a very high proportion of that increase—about 81 per cent—consisted of persons under the age of 25 years. These number some 152,000. In the same period the employment growth month to month was 150,000. So in the past month there has been a very distinct—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can see why the chair is always reluctant to allow replies to this type of question, which only lead to debate. We have heard a lengthy question and a lengthy statement. My suggestion is that this kind of statement ought to be made on motions rather than by way of an answer to a question.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Perhaps I may ask the minister this question: In view of the fact that the unemployment figure has risen by another 20,000 in the last month, does the minister intend to make a statement to the house before we recess as to what plans he has to provide employment for these students during the coming summer?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend had listened to my answer he would have noticed that in the past month the Canadian economy has shown remarkable strength in absorbing a very large number of young people coming into the labour market. If that trend continues for the next few months, and there is no certainty that it will, then—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has repeated the question, the minister has repeated the answer, and I now repeat the ruling.

SHIPBUILDING

CANADIAN VICKERS—OFFER TO PURCHASE BY QUEBEC INVESTMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Can he tell us whether he has received from the Quebec Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce an official request for co-operation with regard to the sale of the Canadian Vickers of Montreal to the Quebec Société générale de financement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Last Saturday in Montreal, when I met the Quebec Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, he mentioned his intention to get in touch with me shortly regarding this matter.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Has the minister wished for the closing down of the Canadian Vickers at the earliest possible date, in order to get rid of that cancer?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot inquire about the wishes of the minister.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he saw a delegation of the C.S.N., the union at Canadian Vickers, today and whether he was able to assure them that the federal government would assist in obtaining or giving contracts to Canadian Vickers pending the completion of the study in respect of a maritime fleet in which the government is now engaged?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I saw such a delegation. I had previously obtained information with respect to the number of ships the Canadian government was going to have built in the coming months. There was no indication that ship construction would be available in the short term ahead of us. The government also has a policy, dating back to 1965, on the necessity of bidding on such occasions.

Mr. Bell: Like the Bonaventure.

Mr. Pepin: I indicated to the group that I was not in a position to commit the government to any arrangement at the present time to keep Vickers open for ship construction.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister whether his attention was drawn by the delegation to the matter of the reconversion of some ships, and whether Canadian Vickers would not be a proper place to have that work done. It would keep the people employed for at least a year or so until the study is finished.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since the minister met the representatives of the C.N.T.U. and that a task force will probably be set up to conduct a study, is he in a position to guarantee some work to the Canadian Vickers, at least until the report of the task force is received?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, during the discussions with the labour organization in question, there were quite a number of "ifs". If the federal government has ships to be built, if the federal government is ready to award contracts without tender, if the Canadian Vickers is ready to build those ships, if another group is ready to replace the Canadian Vickers, if... There were about seven or eight, Mr. Speaker, and things remained at that.

[English]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Will he make available to the shipbuilding industry a grant similar to that which he has made available to the automobile industry?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

KENNEDY ROUND—PASSING ON OF LOWER PRICES TO CONSUMERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Immediately following the presentation of the budget I asked the minister whether his department intended to introduce machinery which would require importers to pass on to consumers, in their entirety, the tariff reductions announced in the budget. He answered that he expected to make a statement shortly. Several weeks have passed, and I wonder whether he is now in a position to say if such machinery will be introduced in the very near future.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would have hoped the hon. member would have read the speech I made in this house on Monday.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did read every word of the minister's speech and there was not in it one word dealing with the matter I have asked about this afternoon. I again ask if he will indicate whether the studies in connection with this matter indicate that this can be done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have asked the minister a question and he has given me the smart alecky answer that if I had read his speech I would have got the answer to my question. I have read every word of his speech and there is not in it one word about the matter I asked about this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for—

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: We will wait for a little order, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: I have lots of time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order. The hon. member would like to put his question of privilege.

Mr. Hees: I will, Mr. Speaker, as soon as I have a chance to do so. My question of privilege is that this minister is deliberately misleading the house. In his speech he did not say one word that has anything to do with the question I asked him this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have two rulings to make. The first is that this is not a question of privilege. The second is that the hon. member cannot tell another member that he is deliberately misleading the house. I am sure the hon. member did not intend to use those words and would like to give an explanation which would be satisfactory to the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Hees: I will be very glad to comply with your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and withdraw the word "deliberately". I simply say the minister is misleading the house. I ask him when he will take his job seriously, instead of sneering at the problems he was appointed to deal with, like the bumptious smart aleck that he shows himself to be every time he rises to speak in this house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we could return to the question period. We have only 40 minutes, as hon. members know, and if we spend half this time on points of order or questions of privilege it is somewhat unfair to other hon. members. I hope the minister is not rising on a question of privilege also.

Mr. Basford: I was, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member was. I hope he is not now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

GRAIN

PRESS REPORT INDICATING ATTEMPT TO EQUALIZE CASH FLOW—REQUEST FOR QUOTA STATEMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he gave an interview to Mr. Hyman Solomon a while ago. Such an interview is reported as having taken place. Apparently this is a case of another Solomon come to judgment. Did the minister advise Mr. Solomon that there would be a fall-away this year in total farm cash income for all sales of wheat, oats and barley of $450 million. Also, did he use these words which appear in quotation marks in the newspaper article:

> What we will be trying to do is equalize as far as is possible the cash flow of farmers who are stuck with the kind of grain the market simply doesn't want at the moment with those who are lucky enough to have what the market wants.

Is this the plan of the government, or was it a midsummer night's dream on the part of the minister when he told Mr. Solomon this?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the question is in proper form; in fact, I have serious doubt about it. However, in view of the fact that the matter has already been raised by way of a question of privilege, the minister might be allowed to reply to the question.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes, and to the second part the answer is also yes. But I would like to add that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has announced a number of times in this house in response to questions, as well as the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board, that they were going to equalize the quota.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister has been frank in that answer. I ask him, is the government going to bring in a measure before we adjourn, in order to equalize the situation in which farmers on the prairies find themselves because they have not the wheat that is required for export? Can they get relief now, or must they wait until fall?

Mr. Olson: The action of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Canadian Wheat Board with respect to cash advances and other things has already gone a long way toward achieving that objective.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did not the minister know when he made the statement to Mr. Solomon that further action was going to be taken, or was it a midsummer night's dream?

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that by very rough division approximately one-third of the delivery points are on a quota of three bushels to the acre, one-third are on four bushels to the acre and one-third on five bushels, will the minister make a statement to the house prior to our adjourning for the summer recess setting out how the five-bushel quota objective of the Canadian Wheat Board is to be achieved? We would like to know what the plans and programs of the government are.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the only answer I can give is, by the best use of transportation facilities. I have said on a number of occasions that I have been told by the chief commissioner of the Wheat Board that he would do his very best in this regard, and hopefully it could be done. He said that quota equalization would be at the five-bushel level. This is the best information I have.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the statement he made to the Financial Post and the earlier statements he made this afternoon in the house. Would he indicate to what number of bushels per acre the cash program which he will initiate will relate?

Mr. Olson: That has already been answered by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that no answer at all has been given by the Minister of Agriculture, may I direct a supplementary question to him and ask him how the farmers will repay this cash flow, and will they be required to repay it at all?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is as well acquainted as I am, and that is fairly well, with how the cash advances are recovered.

Mr. Horner: I have a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There have been a number of supplementary questions. I suggest to hon. members that we might return to this important matter in a few minutes.

Mr. Horner: It is an important matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I realize how important it is, but perhaps hon. members might go on to another subject. Since the hon. member indicates that he has a very short supplementary question, he may put it.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is just a quick, short supplementary question arising out of the reply given by the Minister of Agriculture. May I take it, then, that this cash flow program which he is about to initiate is nothing more than a cash advance to the farmers which will have to be repaid by them?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that this is a short question. It is certainly a short statement.

Mr. Horner: It is a question, Mr. Speaker. This is really what it is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—RED CROSS ROLE IN PROVIDING RELIEF

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Prime Minister a question on the war in Nigeria.

As the International Red Cross has put into service a maritime route to Nigeria's capital, is it the intention of the Canadian government to ask the Nigerian government to extend such a route so as to assist Biafrans, through the Red Cross?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to rely upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs to answer that question, which I will pass on to him.

Mr. Dumont: It is merely a question of geography, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

PILOT FATIGUE CONSEQUENT UPON AIR CANADA STRIKE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the second Acting Minister of Transport, which I hope he will take as notice so that the Minister of Transport may make a reply tomorrow. The question is: During April and May did the Department of Transport or the Canadian Transport Commission permit extensions in the number of hours flown by pilots in Canada, and specifically, did any pilot obtain permission to fly up to 150 hours per month in order to enable air lines to put on extra flights to compensate for the Air Canada strike?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In my view the hon. member's question is of the type which normally should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Nesbitt: I rise on the point of order that Your Honour has raised. Ordinarily this matter would be placed on the order paper or brought up in committee when the estimates are being discussed, but may I point out to Your Honour that in view of the alleged termination of the present session of the house there is no opportunity to bring this matter up, since next Tuesday is a day for the Prime Minister's celebration about which he was talking. I have been informed that the extension of the number of hours flown is a great hazard to people flying in aircraft.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: If I were to accept the hon. member's point of order I would have to conclude that all questions can be asked. There must still be some rule applicable to questions asked at this time. I suggest to the hon. member that surely there is a possibility of obtaining the information which he seeks in other ways than by asking a question at this time.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am sorry to belabour the point, Your Honour, but in this case the lives and safety of passengers on Canadian commercial air lines are in jeopardy, and I feel this is a proper question to be raised at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL PARKS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—AGREEMENT RESPECTING FIRST PARK ON PACIFIC COAST

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I should like to ask him whether he has signed yet an agreement with the government of British Columbia for the establishment of the first national park on the western coast of Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet signed this agreement but I think we will be able to sign it in a few weeks.

THE LATE EARL ALEXANDER OF TUNIS

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT FUNERAL OF FORMER GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister and ask him what arrangements have been made for Canada to be officially represented at the funeral of the former Governor General, Lord Alexander.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, final arrangements have not yet been made. We are not yet quite certain of the date of the funeral and of the arrangements which are being made in the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacLean: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to be represented at the funeral by one of its ministers.

Mr. Trudeau: Of course the government will be represented, but by whom is a matter which has not yet been decided.

AGRICULTURE

LABOUR FORCE FROM WEST INDIES TO ASSIST IN HARVESTING

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. During the harvesting of the vegetable, fruit and tobacco crops in 1968 our labour force was supplemented by people from the West Indies, and this proved to be a very satisfactory arrangement for our producers. In view of this does the government intend to follow the same procedure for the 1969 season?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, the same arrangements are in effect.

COMBINES

LUMBER—ALLEGED CURTAILMENT OF PRODUCTION TO ENHANCE PRICES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and ask him whether he has received a wire from the president of the regional council in Vancouver of the International Woodworkers of America complaining about the fact that the major lumber companies are deliberately curtailing production in an effort to put up prices. May I ask the minister whether he is initiating any investigation into these allegations?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I have received such a wire. Quite frankly, I find it a little difficult to believe that when the British Columbia lumber production comprises a very small part of the international lumber production, and there has been a quite unexpected decrease in home construction in the United States, any curtailment would in fact affect the price level.

However, in view of the wire that I have received, the officials of the combines branch will look into the matter and, of course, if Mr. Moore has any evidence of conspiracy or collusion that would be helpful to my officials I would appreciate it if he would send it to us. I am sure that we all hope that in view of the programs of the minister responsible for housing we will have a steady supply of lumber and building materials in Canada. I know also that there have been a number of wildcat strikes in British Columbia, and it seems to me that it would be helpful if we had fewer of those.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRADE

LOGS—MAINTENANCE OF BAN ON EXPORTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether he will look into the claim by the lumber companies that there is a shortage of logs, and would he undertake to see that the ban on the export of logs is being fully maintained in so far as British Columbia is concerned?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I think that is properly a question within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and of my colleague from British Columbia, the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. I will refer the question to them.

[Translation]

HOUSING

POSSIBLE RE-APPOINTMENT OF FORMER OFFICIALS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Since the former Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) has stated that the recommendations of the Hellyer task force on housing concerning officials of his department were not accepted and that he recommended that the latter be reinstated or transferred following the appointment of the new minister, does the Prime Minister intend to study the possibility of finding new jobs for these senior civil servants when he appoints a minister?

[English]

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN MEETING OPERATING COSTS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Owing to the financial difficulties of the National Arts Centre, would the Prime Minister be prepared to make a statement in respect of the government's intentions regarding the subsidization of the operating costs of what the Secretary of State, the minister of culture, refers to as "that thing"?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

IMPROVED FACILITIES AT MONTREAL AND TORONTO

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. It is based on the welcome report that work is finally under way to improve the facilities of the main post office in Montreal. Can he advise when action will be taken to renovate another major confluence of the nation's mail, the main post office of Toronto, which has been neglected for the past six years?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications and Postmaster General): This work is already in progress, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—PAYMENT OF DRUG COSTS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. With the majority of the people of Canada now being covered by medicare, what steps is the government taking to ensure drug costs for those on incomes at the subsistence level and those who are sick and chronically ill?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked a question very wide in scope and one the answer to which I suggest would require the type of statement normally made on motions.

Mr. Rynard: Might I ask through you, Mr. Speaker, whether the minister will make such a statement tomorrow?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I do not believe I shall make a statement tomorrow. As far as drug costs are concerned, I would indicate to the hon. member that this matter is properly the responsibility of my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As for those on low income—

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question. Is this not analogous to giving a farmer a bright new gun to go out and shoot predators, but no bullets to go with it?

Inquiries of the Ministry

MEDICARE—APPLICABILITY OF PLAN TO NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the light of the complaint made by spokesmen for the Alberta native people, is it the intention of the government to honour the so-called Medical Chest Treaty which guarantees that the medical treatment of some Alberta Indians will be paid for by the federal government, and will such an arrangement be brought into effect in connection with the medicare plan as it relates to native people in Alberta?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I shall be visiting tomorrow the Indian community to which the hon. member refers and I shall be encouraging these people to participate in the Alberta medicare scheme.

Mr. Mazankowski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received representations from the native people in Alberta and, if he has replied, will he tell the house the nature of his reply?

Mr. Munro: I have not to my knowledge received any official communication from them, though I am aware, from the news media, of the position they have taken.

CIGARETTES—NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fine example the minister has set in discontinuing smoking himself, and the fight-back spirit he has shown toward the cigarette companies, and in view of the fine example of C.T.V. and the C.B.C. in refusing to accept cigarette advertising, would the minister use his good offices to persuade the newspapers across Canada not to accept cigarette advertising?

EFFECTS OF CONSUMPTION BY HUMANS OF CAT AND DOG FOODS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that some of our old age pensioners are now reported to be eating canned cat and dog food to avoid starvation, will the minister tell us whether his department is conducting any tests or experiments to ascertain whether this practice is detrimental to health? I ask this question because it appears to me that if the government continues to tackle the problem of inflation as it has been doing up to now, many of us will be forced into trying the same thing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BAIL—REQUEST FOR REFORM LEGISLATION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): I have a question for the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker, of which I have given him notice. Bearing in mind the interest generated in our bail system arising out of the Montreal case, can the hon. gentleman report when bail reform legislation will be presented to this house?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): The Department of Justice is actively reviewing the whole question of bail and detention before trial, and is awaiting with great interest a report on this subject.

GRAIN

WHEAT—CONTROLLER TO ENSURE PROPER BOX CAR DISTRIBUTION

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is any consideration being given to the appointment of a transport controller to ensure there will be an adequate and equitable distribution of box cars in western Canada for the balance of this crop year, which ends on July 31 next?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Not by me, Mr. Speaker; but maybe other people in my department, or other departments interested, are doing so, and I shall inquire.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): A supplementary question directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware that that cash loan was only a small creek and that it has now dried up?

[Translation]

THE MINISTRY

OFFER OF POST TO MR. PAUL GÉRIN-LAJOIE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the meeting that took place yesterday between the Prime Minister and the former Quebec Minister of Education, Mr. Paul-Gérin Lajoie,—I am sure you will excuse my curiosity—I should like to ask whether it is true that Mr. Gérin-Lajoie has been offered an administrative position in the federal government?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that the hon. member's curiosity can be satisfied this way.

NATIONAL PARKS

QUEBEC—ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL PARKS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Can he tell the house whether the federal government plans to set up other national parks, especially in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest this question is very general in nature; it should be put on the order paper.

[English]

FORESTRY

YUKON—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO CONTROL FIRES

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): A question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Mr. Speaker. What action is the minister contemplating, in view of the serious forest fire situation in the Yukon?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the situation prevailing in the Yukon is very serious indeed and that there are now 500 employees fighting the 60 forest fires raging there. Fortunately, there is no loss of life to deplore and the seats of the fires are now under control, which will prevent the destruction of other villages and next, protect the best forests we have in the Yukon.

[English]

BRITISH COLUMBIA—WATER BOMBING AIRCRAFT FOR FIRE CONTROL

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, or to his parliamentary assistant. In view of the fact that we are facing the most critical forest fire situation in British Columbia in years, and in view of the report yesterday that all fire districts are critically short of aircraft, though a number of fires are burning out of control, I would ask the minister whether his department has been approached by the British Columbia government or its forest service department with a request for assistance in providing urgently needed water bombing aircraft. If so, how many aircraft have been sent to British Columbia, and are there any additional aircraft available for service in that province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The department will be answerable for questions tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO RETURN OF MINISTER FROM SCANDINAVIA

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, and ask him this: When will the Secretary of State for External Affairs stop hanging around Scandinavia, hoping that some Chinese communist will kindly notice that he is there and speak to him, so that he may get back to Canada to do the job he was elected to do?

PRICE STABILITY, INCOMES AND EMPLOYMENT

PROCEDURE ON MOTION TO SET UP SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs when it will be the intention of the government to proceed with what is now government order 91, the motion to set up a special joint committee on consumer affairs, price stability and incomes?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): That is a matter for the house leader, and for discussion through the usual channels.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): May I be permitted to ask the Minister of Agriculture, as the acting government house leader, if he can tell us the business for the rest of this week and next week, and from then on?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I do not believe there have been any changes in the program which the leader of the house, the President of the Privy Council, announced.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

That consideration be given to the third report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development relating to the consideration of estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, which was presented to the house on Friday, May 30, 1969.

• (3:10 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion this house has had under the new rules to launch an inquiry into a report of a committee that has dealt with the estimates of one of the departments of government. I intend to direct my remarks primarily and almost exclusively to the problems of our native peoples in Canada, the Indians and Eskimos, people who have so many problems of which this house must be seized and with which it must deal.

As a foundation for my remarks may I refer the house to a very excellent work entitled "A Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada, Part I", which is under the editorship of Mr. H. B. Hawthorn, a very knowledgeable person in this matter. On page 400 appear three paragraphs that I should like to place on Hansard. They are very short and I put them on the record because I think that the people of Canada, the members of this house and the government must base their approach to this subject on these paragraphs.

The first paragraph reads as follows:

In 1847—

I repeat that, Mr. Speaker—in 1847.

—Commissioners Rawson, Davidson and Hepburn, in a report on the affairs of the Indians in Canada, submitted to the Legislative Assembly, came to the conclusion—

Then the author quotes from the report.

—"that the true and only practicable policy of the government, with reference to their interests, both of the Indians and the community at large, is to endeavour, gradually to raise the tribes within the British Territory to the level of their white neighbours; to prepare them to undertake the offices and duties of citizens; and, by degrees, to abolish the necessity for its farther interference in their affairs."

And the next paragraph:

More than a century later, in July, 1964, the Indian Affairs Branch declared that—

Again follows a quotation from the report of the Indian Affairs branch dated 1964.

—"the basic objective of the federal government in Indian administration is to assist the Indians to participate fully in the social and economic life of Canada."

That is almost a direct repetition of what was said more than 100 years earlier. The author ends with this very simple paragraph:

Something has gone wrong.

It is very difficult for us to chronicle and to set out in considerable detail all the wrongs which have been done. I hope to limit myself to one in particular and I hope that the minister, who I am glad to see in the chamber, will pay some attention at this time to my remarks.

I think we should bear in mind that in their approach to this problem the original government, the British authorities, made the same approach in Canada that was made in their other territories. I state this fact in view of some to the difficulties we are experiencing today. An attempt was made in documentary form to give some recognition to the aboriginal rights of the first people of Canada to their property holdings and to their customs and traditions.

For the information of those who are interested in this matter, not only from the historical viewpoint but from the viewpoint of people who know that a great wrong has been done and that it is the duty of the people of this country to attempt to right that wrong, I should like to draw attention to a judgment of Mr. Justice Sissons, who was for many years not only a member of this house but a territorial judge in the Northwest Territories and whose known concern for the Indians and Eskimos of the territory led him in the course of his judicial functions to lay down a number of principles of which I think the people of this country should take note. In one case involving two Eskimos in the Northwest Territories Mr. Justice Sissons declared that the native habits, customs and traditions of the people would prevail in regard to recognizing the legality, first, of a marriage and, in a subsequent case, of an adoption. In the course of his judgment, Mr. Justice Sissons traced step by step and century by century the reasons for his judgment. He referred to the fact that Charles II introduced an edict instructing his people in Canada, including the Hudson's Bay Company, that due recognition must be paid to the rights of the native people of Canada. In 1763, following the war which concluded at that time, a Royal Proclamation reinforced this by saying precisely the same thing.

In the event—and I am now dealing with the Indian people I know in western Canada—toward the end of the last century instructions were given by the then government to a number of commissioners to travel from the Lakehead west and into the north in an attempt to settle and quiet the claims the Indian people might have to their lands, the lands that they occupied, the lands that had been theirs till the white man came. As a result 14 treaties were executed by these commissioners. I ask hon. members, who should have and must have a vested interest in seeing that wrongs which have been done are righted, to examine not only those treaties but also the reports of the commissioners which accompanied them.

I am going to deal very briefly with treaty No. 8 and its adhesions, which cover the country I come from, almost 100,000 square miles stretching from the north to Great Slave lake, down to a latitude equal to that of Edmonton, and covering much of the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories.

The commissioner wrote a letter dated September 22, 1899, which accompanied this treaty, and he referred to the problems that he and the other commissioners had in securing the consent to the treaty of the Indian people. He intimated that it was essential not only to set out in writing the agreements that constituted the treaty but that certain other concessions had to be made. He indicated that oral statements were made accompanying the treaty which must be taken into account. Included in his report was the statement that the Indian people were greatly concerned about the provision of what they knew as a medicine chest and the services of a medical man. The commissioner indicated that, in order to persuade the Indian chiefs and those who executed the treaty to sign the treaty, he had to give a verbal statement indicating that provision of this kind would be made. He went on to deal in the same way with matters of education, with traditional hunting, trapping and fishing rights, with provision in regard to agriculture. These, I think, were the major factors that were in the minds of the Indian people at that time.

It may be of interest to hon. members to know that the Indian people do not have the same concept of land ownership as do white people. In Indian customs and traditions there was a communal ownership of land. The land was held for all the tribe to hunt, fish and trap on. When agreements were executed, treaties signed and concessions made with the government it is well known, and this is corroborated by people who have knowledge of these things, that the Indians did not consider they were divesting themselves of all rights they had to the land. Instead they thought they were giving to the white man rights similar to those Indians had exercised in the past. Of course the white man has the idea that one owns land and by so doing excludes all others from owning it, and when any conflict arose between Indians and white men there was no question as to whose views would prevail. Even when treaties were entered into under which the government of Canada acquired title to all that vast empire lying between the Great Lakes and the Rocky Mountains and stretching up into the southern part of the Northwest Territories, the Indian people did not believe they were divesting themselves of this land. They said to the white man, "Come in, enjoy it and share the land with us."

What has been the result of these treaties? As a result of decisions of the highest courts of this land and of the Privy Council, practically every concession the Indians thought they had wrung from the commissioners under these treaties has been nullified. The treaties are broken. I see the parliamentary secretary is here. I expect he recalls the Sikyea case. As a result of the decision in that case traditional rights to hunt which an Indian in the Northwest Territories thought he had were invalidated and nullified. The Supreme Court of Canada decided that the Migratory Birds Convention Act completely swept aside the full effect of the treaties. At the present time litigation is pending in Saskatchewan—it may have been completed but I do not think so—in which the native people of the province are attempting to secure a declaratory judgment to the effect that they are entitled to certain help with regard to medicines and hospitalization as a result of the undertaking, given when the treaty was signed, that a medicine chest would be provided to them. So it goes. The courts of this country have held in case after case, year after year, that the treaties which were signed are nothing but scraps of paper. No wonder that today throughout Canada there is unrest, anxiety, hostility, enmity, and a growing trend toward activism. Our native peoples are on the march. Time is of the essence and it is not on our side in this issue.

I regret that during the six years the party opposite has formed the government of Canada nothing has been done. I am confident that if appropriate steps had been taken five or six years ago much of the unrest and hostility being generated today would not be with us. I know the minister will say that a number of discussions and conferences have been held. I suggest that the minister and those of his colleagues who were present at these conferences could not help noticing the feelings of hostility and animosity which our native peoples are displaying at this time. This ball game is different from the one of 10 or 20 years ago. Today there are in this country young Indian people who are intelligent, eloquent and armed with facts that cannot be denied. They know they have a just case and they cannot be fobbed off with the kinds of promises that were made in the past. I fear that we are in for a very serious and difficult time, especially if one bears in mind that the rate of increase of Indian and other native peoples of this country is double that of any other group in Canada. What was a small cloud in the sky 20 years ago may shortly become a black storm which is liable to overwhelm us and do great damage to race relations in Canada.

Speaking as a lawyer and as one who has been in public life and a member of this house for over 11 years, I say there is no doubt that if this entire matter were to be considered on a contractual basis the Indian and Eskimo peoples could beyond any shadow of doubt allege and prove breach of contract. Any reasonable jury seized of the facts could come to no other conclusion. When you bring action for breach of contract and win, there are several remedies. The distinguished lawyers in this house know that one remedy is specific performance. In these circumstances that is out of the question. Conditions have changed and will continue to change. That remedy is not open to these people. Another remedy is to restore to our native peoples the property which was originally taken from them. I do not think that is a reasonable proposition either and I am sure the Indians would not take the country back with the financial mess the present government has introduced.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: The third alternative is reasonable damages for the losses which have been sustained. That is the stage we have reached today. There have been a series of conferences. The minister, his colleagues and a number of my colleagues have met with the Indian people in various places across Canada. I regret that I could not attend the Indian Act consultation meeting held at Edmonton on December 12 and 13, 1968. The Minister without Portfolio from Port Arthur (Mr. Andras) attended. At that meeting, at the initiative of one of our most intelligent and active young Indian leaders, Harold Cardinal of Sucker Creek, Alberta, a resolution was proposed and passed dealing with the whole aspect of treaties, the rights of Indian people under those treaties and the wrongs that have been done to them. There, in unmistakable language which I am sure the minister noted, the Indian people of Canada made known that they object strenuously to any effort on the part of the government to bring forward a new Indian Act until such time as the breach of treaties and the rights of Indian people over many generations has been adequately dealt with and considered. The consideration of those matters they say ought to take place before there is any amendment to the Indian Act. Otherwise the Indian people will not be prepared to go along with any revision of the act.

Hopes had been high for a genuine attack on the prejudices and inequalities that have plagued Indians for a century. This seemed one thing the Prime Minister was committed to. That has now been revealed to be an illusion. He got rid of one minister who was respected by the Indian people and allowed the present minister to become, in effect, the captive of his department. The difference in the regard in which the Indians held the two ministers was based on the differences the ministers displayed in their approaches to this problem. The Minister without Portfolio from Port Arthur was prepared to make some basic changes. As a result, he was changed. He was accepted by the native people simply because he regarded their advice as being at least as good and probably better than the advice of government officials.

I have great admiration for the minister but I must be frank and do my duty as I see it. I can do nothing less. The present minister has lost the respect of the Indian people because they suspect he listens much more to his officials than he does to the people he is supposed to serve.

The government made a great show of consultation and held meetings across the country. From the beginning there was the disquieting suggestion that some of the Indian people called upon to testify were too heavily influenced by the closeness of their relation with the department. They were people who, for one reason or another, had to come to terms with the department and were thus less objective and less critical than other spokesmen might have been. There was the lingering suspicion in any event that the minister and his officials were listening to what they wanted to hear and were disregarding the rest. Over the years I have found that is a fault most ministers seem to acquire very easily. That was proven by the final consultation meeting held here this spring. That meeting gathered together some of the most able and articulate people in the country, representatives of the native people drawn from the ranks of the native people. This group was as talented and as effective as any group which has ever appeared in Ottawa to argue their case, and I have sat on a number of Indian Affairs Committees both of this house and in conjunction with the other place.

It was clear that this group of representatives of the native people considered the consultations so far to be inadequate. They considered the consultations were a show and were avoiding many of the real problems. They wanted treaty and aboriginal rights considered before the Indian Act itself was considered. This group asked the right to conduct their own consultations, free of the influence of the department and free of the implications of colonial status which are bound to exist when the department clearly does not trust the Indians' capacity to examine their own problems and recommend their own solutions.

This all comes down to a question of trust in the Indian people. Will they be allowed to make their own analysis and their own decisions, or will they continue to be subject to the prejudice and the vested interests of the department? That was the issue which faced the minister when he met the last consultative conference here in Ottawa. He evaded the issue then, as he has consistently evaded questions in the house. I qualify that by saying the minister did make a statement in the house not too long ago that he would be making a definitive statement before the summer recess. I rely upon that undertaking and we will examine that statement with interest. I hope it will go at least part of the distance the Indian people wish the government to go.

The minister's remarks at that conference left the Indians to understand that he would seriously consider their request for the financial assistance required to let the Indian people conduct their own inquiry into their condition and make their own recommendations about the priorities and the solutions required. That meeting established a national committee on Indian Rights with representatives from British Columbia, the prairie region, Ontario, Quebec, the maritime region and the Territories. It was the function of that committee to lay the groundwork for a large-scale inquiry by Indians into Indian conditions. Delegates to the last consultative conference left the meeting believing the government was prepared to support this inquiry.

Members of the National Indian Committee met in Ottawa on June 3 and 4. The minister's office knew they were coming but the minister was not available to meet with them on either of the two days they were here. It may well be the minister will reply to that statement. If he is in a position to establish that I am wrong, I will be prepared to accept it. I must rely on the information I have received.

Mr. Chrétien: I must reply to that remark, Mr. Speaker. The delegation did not ask to see me until the second day. However, I was out of the city on that day. When they were asked if they wanted to see me they said it would not be necessary to meet me at their first meeting, but they changed their minds after they met.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister will admit that this is not a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: I accept the minister's statement. However, I do not think it destroys what I have said. The minister's office knew that the members of the committee were coming to Ottawa, but the minister was not there to meet them on either of the two days they were here. The minister has given what he considers to be an adequate reply to my statement. It is a matter of the extent to which it is accepted. I am not denying the accuracy of the minister's statement. It is a question of the weight to be given to it.

Questioned by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in the house, the minister offered all kinds of excuses. He said that the committee had met at length with officials of his department. The point is that the Indian representatives did not want to meet officials. The Indian people, with some justification, feel they have met enough officials. They wanted to meet the minister. They were elected representatives, a highly responsible and competent group. The minister owed them the courtesy of doing everything in his power to be able to meet with them.

Let us be frank about it. There is the suspicion the minister intends to introduce his white paper or statement about the Indian Act without consulting with this group or other recognized spokesmen of the Indian people. If I am wrong in that, I will be delighted to hear the minister say so when he rises to participate in this debate. If the minister is allowed to get away with that, he will then be able to argue that his hands are tied, his priorities are set by his statement in the house, and he will then be unable to deal with the real problems as the Indian people see them. If he does that it will be a tragic betrayal of the confidence the Indian people had begun to develop and had been encouraged to develop in the motives of this government. It will indicate that the government continues to distrust the Indian people. It will be exactly the same kind of runaround the native people of Canada have been receiving for years from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

There is no reason for the minister to take this course. There is every reason for him not to take it. If he makes his statement without consulting fully with this committee and other representatives, he cannot claim to have a consensus among the Indian people. He cannot expect the Indian people to co-operate with him. He cannot shed or defeat the resentment of the Indian people against the department and the reputation of the department for continued colonial behaviour.

This government generally has a habit and a reputation of secrecy and silence. In no department is silence more serious nor frankness more required than in the Department of Indian Affairs. Yet this minister has been more guilty than most of evading direct questions in the house and of avoiding meaningful meetings and discussions with representatives of the people he is supposed to serve.

I would like nothing better, Mr. Speaker, than to be proved wrong in the statements I have made.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, one thing about which there can be no debate is that the Indians of Canada very deeply distrust all governments of Canada. In the last couple of weeks the Indians of Ontario have been demonstrating, protesting and demanding the resignation of the minister responsible for Indian affairs for the province of Ontario. The Indians of Manitoba recently picketed the health services centre provided for them at The Pas. The Indians have been vigorously protesting the plan of the provincial government, financed jointly by the province of Manitoba and the federal government, for the development of power resources on the Nelson River. This will mean the forced movement of some 600 or more Indian people from South Indian Lake who have demonstrated they have no confidence in the provincial government of Manitoba.

The Indians of Canada have demonstrated they have no confidence in the federal government. They have no confidence in the Department of Indian Affairs that supposedly looks after their interests. They have made repeated demands for an adequate opportunity to express their points of view with regard to the Indian Act and everything else which affects them.

Despite repeated statements by the minister that he would be making a definitive statement this session on the governments' position it now seems that he will be making that statement so late in the session that members of parliament and representatives of the Indian people will not have an opportunity to discuss adequately before parliament adjourns the white paper that he will present. The other day I was told that the minister will be making his main statement on June 24. If the session finished next week there will be no time to discuss it. He has repeatedly intimated that the white paper will deal essentially with the government's views in regard to revision of the Indian Act. He shakes his head. We could demonstrate this quite easily by what he has said, and much more easily by what he has not said.

For I do not know how many years, but certainly long before the minister was appointed, the government has been promising to introduce legislation setting up an Indian Claims Commission. Where is that commission? Where is that legislation? Maybe we will hear something about that in the white paper, but certainly there will be no such legislation this year.

As I understand the Indians' position they really do not want to discuss the Indian Act or the provisions of an amending bill until the government deals with more fundamental issues which they think are important, namely, the systematic ignoring, the systematic flouting and the systematic and unilateral revision of the treaties made with them by former governments, by the British government before Canada became a self-governing country, treaties which the Indians feel were binding not only upon themselves but on the government of Canada, whether the British government, the provincial legislatures before Confederation, or the federal government since Confederation.

As early as the royal proclamation of 1763 the basic right of Indians to hunt and fish was recognized by the government responsible for the administration of this country. In the Jay Treaty the right of Indians to cross the border from the United States into Canada and from Canada into the United States, and to bring with them their household effects without being obligated to pay customs duties on them, was recognized.

But what has happened? Through a series of court decisions made by white men's courts, where Indians were not represented by counsel who understood the law, their traditional rights guaranteed under treaty have been constantly whittled away. Under the Migratory Birds Convention Act, agreed to by Canada and the United States, the right of Indians to hunt out of season has been restricted. I suggest this is completely wrong. It is immoral that the rights of a group of people, guaranteed by treaties, should be reduced by the unilateral action of a government which supposedly represents those people.

I am not an expert in this field but I have heard conservationists argue that it is necessary to control hunting by all people, including Indians. Indians have told me that they do not kill anything close to the number of animals shot by white hunters for sport and recreation. If it was necessary to restrict the rights of Indians in this field it ought to have been discussed with them, and compensation should have been provided for them. We have nothing like that.

Now we have the recent actions of the Department of National Revenue. In recent years Indians crossing the border at Cornwall have been required to pay customs duties on household furnishings brought with them, a practice that was not followed for virtually all of the first 100 years of Canada's existence. Again that was done without consultation with the Indians of Canada. It is no wonder they are unhappy. It is no wonder they do not trust Canadian governments any more.

A recent British Columbia Supreme Court decision holds that the Fisheries Act has restricted the right of Indians to fish. This is a right they have always had. It is not difficult to argue that Indians no longer depend primarily on hunting and fishing to earn a living. But there is an important principle involved. It is that rights given to the Indian people of this country in treaties negotiated by the government of Canada, or by the government of Great Britain before we became an independent country, should not be abrogated, restricted or reduced without consultation with and agreement of the Indians involved.

It is not my duty today, nor do I have the time, to record the systematic way in which the Indians of Canada, the original inhabitants, were pushed from pillar to post until eventually they were pushed on to reservations in the least productive and useful areas of the country, to which they have been restricted ever since.

In view of what has been done to them, in view of the conditions which have developed, the shabby way in which they have been treated and are being treated, in view of the fact that the earning power of Indians is probably not more than a quarter of the national average, in view of the abysmal health standards of Indians, in view of the fact that less than 100 Indians in 1969 have had enough education that they may attend Canadian universities, the Indian people are saying that what they want is for the federal government to set up an Indian Claims Commission which will look at what has happened to them, assess what we have done to the Indians, and assess the damages which Indians have had to bear as a result of the treatment they have received from the white people of Canada.

Governments have been promising the Indians for years that an Indian Claims Commission would be established. Where is that commission? When have we heard even a formal or official statement on the part of the minister that such a claims commission, on which I would hope there would be a majority of Indian members or at least a substantial percentage, would be established? Indian representatives on such a commission would understand the problems of the Indians and could articulate the desires of these people so that we could begin for the first time to compensate the Indians for the tremendous injustices which have been inflicted upon them in this country by past Canadian governments and the people of Canada for more than 100 years.

The Indians of Canada feel very strongly about what they consider to be the complete ignoring of the rights they were guaranteed through treaties negotiated freely on the part of the white people but not so freely or knowledgeably on the part of the Indians. Because of this feeling they believe they must have a claims commission which will consider the problems of the Indians and assess the kind of compensation to which they are entitled. In this way these native Canadians could begin to function as first-class citizens.

In spite of the claims of the minister and the Department of Indian Affairs that these Indian people have never before been so widely and thoroughly consulted, the leaders and representatives of the Indians have made it clear that they are completely dissatisfied with the consultations and the steps that have been taken. Let me put on record a resolution which was passed at the national conference of the Indian Act held in Ottawa in the last few days of April, 1969. That national conference brought together about 100 of the top leaders of Indian communities from British Columbia to the east coast. This is what this resolution says:

> The new Indian Act will be our magna carta.

This appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail of April 30, 1969. The article went on to state:

> Its impact will be more closely felt by Indians than by government. It can be our passport to equality and opportunity. Or, it could be just another compromise solution to a long-term problem.

Later the article refers to the resolution and states:

> The new Indian Act must reflect the real interest of the treaties. It must stipulate the government's commitment to its obligations. The Indian people, through their legitimate organizations, should be given the opportunity to consult meaningfully with Indians across Canada, to develop their own Indian Act for (the government's) consideration and not vice versa.

That resolution is very clear. It is written in the kind of language which even this minister ought to understand. The representatives of the Indian people who met at that national conference are not satisfied with the consultations which have been held. I do not want to be unfair, and I do not think the representatives of the Indian people are hostile to the minister personally, but they certainly are not satisfied to leave the drafting of the new Indian Act to the top officials of the Indian Affairs Department. In their opinion, and I agree, they have consistently betrayed and ignored the interests of the Indian people.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

These people believe it is the view of the top bureaucracy of the Department of Indian Affairs that the Indian people are not now ready to participate in the real decisions which have to be made if their conditions are to be improved. These people believe that the top bureaucrats of the department feel that the Indians are not ready today and will never be ready to participate in these decisions. Certainly they do not believe they will be ready in my time or in the time of the present minister who is a few years younger than I.

These native Canadians are completely and unanimously resolved that they will no longer leave their fate and welfare to this bureaucracy which has so consistently and so often betrayed their interests and their desires. They are calling on the government to change its whole approach to the problems of the Indian. To spell out this change they have asked first of all for a reassessment of consultation with the Indian people and what the rights given to the Indians under the treaties really mean in the 1970's rather than what they meant in the 1600's when the treaties were signed.

They insist that the government bring in legislation to establish an Indian Claims Commission with Indian representation and give the Indians an opportunity to appear before it with adequately trained technical staff including lawyers, sociologists, anthropologists and historians. They could then present to this commission the rightful claims of the Indians in respect of which they demand compensation for more than 100 years of wrongs. They feel these claims result from mistreatment by the white people of Canada.

Lastly, the Indians of Canada insist that the minister, not on his own or with the department, rewrite the Indian Act in a way which will not suit the Department of Indian Affairs only but, more importantly, the Indians themselves. They insist that the Indian Act be revised not simply through consultation, which simply means the officials will listen to the Indians and then go back to their offices and draft the legislation. They want to be given the opportunity to rewrite the act themselves with staff capable of doing the job they require. They know what their problems are and they know better than white people what must be done if their condition is to be improved.

The Indians would agree that they do not have all the answers, and I am sure they would be the first to admit they will probably make mistakes. The minister surely must agree that they could not possibly do worse on their own than we white people have done for them for the last 100 years. Let me urge the minister and the government to make an effort to meet the demands and reasonable requests of the Indian people of Canada.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the subject now under discussion is very important as we are dealing with the largest area of the Canadian territory, even though it is sparsely populated.

However, this part of the country is inhabited by people who were the first Canadians and who are perhaps increasing the most rapidly in number in spite of a relatively high mortality rate and a much lower rate of longevity than that of other Canadians as a whole.

I would like to quote a few statistics on this subject.

Thus, in 1965, for Canadians as a whole, the average age at death was 62, while it was about 20 for Eskimos and about 36 for Indians. Furthermore, infantile mortality in 1966, for Indians and Eskimos in the Northwest Territories, was 108.8 deaths per 1,000 living births for the Eskimos and 46.2 for the Indians, as compared with 23.1 per 1000 for the whole of Canada.

This means, Mr. Speaker, that in spite of a rather limited development, from both health and sanitation standpoints, in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and in Northern Quebec and considering also the rather high mortality rate of these people, who had sharply declined in number at the beginning of the colony, their condition has greatly improved since the first half of this century and it is now developing at a very rapid pace.

Therefore, we must pay a great deal of attention to these territories and to the people who are widely scattered in this part of the country which is not easily accessible to the officials responsible for education, health, housing, employment and so on.

The Progressive Conservative party is asking today, in the course of this debate on supply, to consider especially the third report of the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This report deals with matters relating to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Employment, education, housing, sovereignty in the Arctic, community centres, crafts, hydro-electric power in the North, in Dawson City—which may be considered as a tourist spot—those are so many matters dealt with by the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development during the present session.

I am a member of that committee, and on two occasions I had the opportunity to visit several centres in the Northwest and the Yukon Territories and my attention was drawn to certain points specifically referred to in the report.

For instance, in the field of employment, I was particularly struck by the lack of interest shown by employers, who take part in the development of the natural resources in those territories, towards Indians and Eskimos, in order to arouse their interest, to hire them, to promote their self-fulfilment and give them jobs in mining exploration work, for instance, or even in strip mining operations.

There is also in the Northern Territories some logging operations in which Indian and Eskimo manpower could be interested. I think the government should take some specific steps to have those corporations hire as many people living in that area as possible. Even if they have to be displaced at times to be closer to their jobs, I think this would be worthwhile. In respect of welfare assistance to Indians, a report recently published by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development shows that 39.1 per cent of treaty Indians are living on welfare assistance. In other words, 9,883 employable heads of families need help.

I therefore feel, Mr. Speaker, that this is an important matter, which requires consideration and the seeking out of solutions. To my way of thinking, the solution lies in inciting companies to hire Indians and Eskimos.

As for education, to which our committee has also given consideration, we have been told that educational methods are constantly improving, more specifically in the field of basic education, but that there is also a growing tendency to provide these people with vocational training.

The government seems to show more willingness to supply such vocational training, which can best benefit Indians and Eskimos who will end up in the employment of industries operating in those regions.

• (4:10 p.m.)

As for employment, pressures should be brought to bear in order to urge mining and other companies to hire local manpower as much as possible so as to improve their standard of living.

We must also concern ourselves with the housing problem in those areas. I think that the government had made substantial progress in that respect. Homes have been and are being built for Indian and Esquimo families, in order to provide them with more comfort in those cold lands. But I wonder if we have adequately taught the Indians to maintain their homes. I believe that we have failed to show them how to maintain their houses. I have noticed over there that houses which are as strongly built as our own houses in the South were considerably worn out within a few years' time, to the extent that they practically became unfit for living. If Indians were shown how to take care of their houses, we would not have to rebuild those units every five or eight years.

During those trips and studies in committee, we have also looked into the problem of sovereignty in the Arctic. In the last few weeks, we were able to realize the importance of Canada's sovereignty in those regions. It has already been questioned to a certain extent regarding some parts of the Arctic which, in my view, belong to Canada.

In the past, we have shown too great a lack of interest in those territories to claim everything that is there, not only on the islands, but also in the surrounding waters. We will have much to do in the next few months and years, in order to take hold of those territories and to develop them as much as possible to become their true owners. In so doing, the Canadian people would only fare better, since a country, perhaps friendly, has shown some interest in owning in those territories.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is what I wanted to say this afternoon in connection with the problems facing the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

As a member from Quebec, I represent a constituency which covers quite a large area of the province and is inhabited by an important number of Indians and Eskimos. Indeed, according to the figures provided to me in December 1968, the Abitibi constituency comprises 2,363 Eskimos and 4,919 Indians.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Mr. Speaker, needless to say I am much interested in the welfare of those Indians and Eskimos not only in my constituency but also in the province of Quebec and in Canada.

The problem in the province of Quebec is a little different from that in the Northwest Territories, in the Yukon or in any other province where there are Indians. In Quebec, in most communities where Indians are living, they do not own the land. So it becomes difficult for the federal government to apply the same policy as everywhere else in Canada.

I should like to invite the minister to bring pressure to bear, if necessary, and to take all possible measures that could lead to an understanding with the Quebec government, so that the Indians living in our regions might know exactly what to expect as concerns the policy of both governments. More and more people seem concerned and dissatisfied with the existing procedure.

I could see with my own eys, on the occasion of the meeting held in early October 1968, at which a great number of Indians were represented mostly, by their band chiefs, with what anxiety they face the future. In several fields, they do not know whether they must depend on the federal government or the provincial government.

That was an opportunity for me to find out how ridiculous we can be when it comes to applying legislation. For instance, at Rupert House, on the east coast of James Bay, there is a federal school system, there is also a provincial school system and there are mission schools. That complicates matters to a very high degree, but it is also very expensive and yet the results are not very good. Matters should, I believe, be straightened out and it should be determined who has jurisdiction in this or that area, in order to improve living conditions in those regions.

I would like to speak in particular about the areas in my riding where there are large numbers of Indians.

At Rupert House, for instance—the figures I have on hand are for last year—almost all the residents of the village were unemployed. One can easily understand that for those people life is terribly hard. They must rely entirely, in summer especially, on welfare benefits, and that is no solution for them nor for the white people who live in the southern portion of the region.

The fact they continuously depend on the government weakens the will power of these people, it hampers their initiative when it does not destroy it completely, condemning them to living sparely in undeserved poverty.

I think there would be much to do in those villages. I am told that at Rupert House, there are only half a dozen decent dwellings. There are 35 huts with families of 8 or 12 crammed inside. In the field of housing there is certainly much to do.

As suggested by some of the people living there, we could, for example, develop the forest for building material. There is even a sawmill that could be used to cut and saw and process wood for building purposes. That mill is idle. Local wood could be used to build houses; this in turn would provide employment for the local population.

A lot of other things could be developed. In the field of electricity, for instance. Rupert House has no electric power, no running water and, indeed, hardly any health facilities. I am speaking of Rupert House but the same conditions prevail more or less in every village along the coast of James Bay or of Hudson Bay. There, again, we could promote public health and develop public services, and train the local manpower in order to ensure the operation and maintenance of those services.

There is also another subject which, like the minister, I consider quite important, that is the municipal administration. I understand that soon the minister will make a statement which we have been expecting for a long time—with regard to the new government policy on the administration of Indian affairs. As far as the municipal administration is concerned, I think that we should grant the Indians a good deal more leeway to deal with the affairs of their own community.

For example, in almost every settlement—

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Bell: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the unanimous wish of the house that the hon. member should be allowed to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

I shall try to be as brief as possible.

As I was saying, as far as those Indian villages are concerned, almost everyone of them has a Council chief. However, the chief and members of the council have practically no authority. They have no budget or almost none to administer so that the social problems which exist in those villages and communities, such as alcoholism or violence which as a rule is the result of the latter, are quite serious. The Indian chief and his council have practically no authority, no influence on their people, to fight that evil which prevails in every Indian or Esquimo group.

Therefore, if the government finally decides to grant the Indians increased authority similar to that which is found in our areas, so that they could administer their own affairs—they would certainly be in a position to improve their social conditions.

Therefore, this is a point to which I draw the minister's attention and for which I care very much because I think that if this could come about as soon as possible, there would be sensible improvements in those areas. There is no doubt that many things can be done to improve those areas.

Canada is particularly generous as far as helping underdeveloped countries is concerned. In our country, huge areas are underdeveloped and are only waiting for the funds needed to ensure their development.

Mr. Speaker, we could first encourage mining exploration since in the distant northern areas there are not many farming or lumbering possibilities. The subsoil of these northern regions is extremely rich in all kinds of minerals. We should encourage mining exploration and developments there, in order to bring in more people first, and to give employment to the Indians and the Eskimos.

Mr. Speaker, there is a lot to do in that field and we should do it as soon as possible.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Scarborough East): As I listened to the debate opened by hon. members opposite, Mr. Speaker, I frequently thought I could hear myself speaking. I thought this particularly when emphasis was laid so clearly on attacking the past performances of all governments during the past several decades. I recognized the attack on the developing bureaucracy. I recognized the emphasis on a past which is indeed infested with grievances, as well as the emphasis placed by many speakers on the crucial importance of Indian affairs.

In this respect I was reminded of the private member's bill I introduced into this house proposing amendments to the Migratory Birds Convention Act in the interest of restoring treaty provisions which have been breached unilaterally by an act of this parliament. However, I find myself in disagreement with many of the things said by spokesmen on the other side. In particular, I think there has been a failure to recognize the needs of the future as well as the need to clear up the problems of the past.

The basic need for the future is a massive social and economic development program, one which we have not yet mounted. I think there has been a failure to recognize—and this is a sensitive point among the Indian people—that substantial progress has been made in the past few years, by and large on the basis of Indian initiative. Enormous progress has been made in some provinces. I am thinking of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba where the Indian organizations have brought about a new kind of relationship between themselves and the provinces, and between the provinces and Ottawa. We have to recognize, therefore, that a good deal of this progress has been achieved largely as a result of Indian initiative. We should recognize that the capacity for change which is now developing in the Indian communities makes it all the more necessary for us to respond in an intelligent way.

We who sit on the government side of the house welcome this debate, the second which has taken place in the house on this general subject. Not only does it show the high importance attached by parliament to Indian policy but also, because the government, after conducting an intensive nine months review of established policy, is on the threshold of a comprehensive new approach, it takes place at a particularly opportune time. This review, in which two ministers were involved and which proceeded through 17 consultations with regional Indian groups across Canada, inadequate as those consultations were, ranks in the minds of many of us as the most significant of the many major policy reviews which have been launched since the beginning of this session. This work reflects the commitment of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to a new and higher order of justice for Indian and Eskimo citizens. It will affect directly nearly half a million Canadians of Indian origin who are expecting a new deal and who want a future of full and equal citizenship.

This review must involve much more than the consideration of the Indian Act. I am pleased that speakers on the other side have recognized this point. The Indian Act is only one element. A challenging, comprehensive and far-ranging approach to the future is needed. We welcome this debate, not knowing the contents of the new policy which is to be announced within the next few days, I hope, but assured that at least a meaningful dialogue with our Indian citizens has now begun, involving the whole government, not just the Department of Indian Affairs. This policy statement can only be another stage or phase. It is subject to development which will come from inputs by the Indian people. It cannot be seen as a conclusive answer to the many problems facing Canadians of Indian origin; it can be seen only as another step which is subject to the continuing and extensive consultation process, so that its implementation will be assisted by the people themselves.

I do not want to speak at any length today on what I hope will be a major policy statement to be made by the minister in the near future. My own views on Indian policy have been twice recorded this session in the house. I should like to take a few minutes simply to emphasize what I think should be some of the considerations surrounding the new policy and which will make for its success. I particularly want to emphasize the central need for flexibility in the new policy, and also the need for meaningful consultation with the Indian people.

This policy cannot be delivered, as it were, as another product of the government for a special group of clients. It has to come from the people themselves. This means that the broad outlines of any policy must be followed by consultation. Is there any doubt that in the past the low achievement of programs and policies and lack of momentum in this field can be attributed to the lack of clear objectives? Therefore clear goals must be recognized in this new policy, and all of us, Indians and non-Indians alike, will then have to confront the dilemma of implementing those new objectives.

From where must these goals and objectives come? I think the answer has already been given by the Indian people themselves—full and equal citizenship in the mainstream of Canadian life. Full and equal citizenship means more than simply equal opportunity; it means the substance of equality. It is this equality, without loss of identity as Canadians, in which people of Indian origin are interested. The Indian choice is to be a contemporary person in Canada today while remaining an Indian. Indeed, it can be said of Indians today, I think, that they recognize that continuity as Indians and the preservation of an identity can be achieved only by entering into the mainstream of life as a contemporary person.

This, as I have said before, is a momentous turn in the lives of all of us in Canada. It is a significant and historic decision that is being made in Indian communities and means that they themselves must be centrally engaged in all of the decisions that implement that particular goal.

One product of consultation will, I believe, be that full and equal citizenship implies a planned and phased reduction, if I may use that term, of the special legal and administrative arrangements that today perpetuate separateness and which in themselves become discriminatory. It means consulting Indians on every phase of the process of eliminating over a time the Indian Act and the special department whose functions, I believe, can better be performed by other federal government departments. It also means consulting Indians and the provinces to ensure that the Indians become citizens of the provinces and receive a full range of services as well as accept the obligations of other provincial residents. It means a general decentralization of administration so that Indian communities will control, for example, as much of their own lands, economic development, education and other functions as do other Canadians through their own local government and the agencies of the provinces.

Self-determination brings with it new obligations as well as the benefits of freedom. Only through consultation and understanding will the Indian people be able to share in decisions as to the extent and pace of change that they wish to bring about. Full and equal citizenship means that Indian associations must also be brought into the discussions, because they can perform an essential role in terms of projecting the consensus of Indian communities. As I have mentioned before, hon. members will note the great progress the Indians have made in consultations with the provinces, particularly in the west, and how the issue has now been joined in the province of Ontario.

This will mean that the government will have to supply funds to the Indian organizations to enable them to do their job. They will need the assistance of expert personnel and resource trained people so they can study and fully understand the implications of going down one path or another to meet their goal of full and equal citizenship. It will not be an easy path to follow, and all of us will be confronted with many dilemmas.

Success will depend not on our enunciating a new policy but on the people themselves adopting such policy as their own. They cannot do this unless their own organizations are in the position of fully discussing with their own communities the meaning of change. We cannot hope to get a full response to new policy orientations unless we cope successfully with the complex issues and attitudes surrounding the question of treaties, claims and grievances.

The Indian treaties, apart from engaging the honour of the country, have for the Indians an enormous symbolic value, even though today the mainstream of federal policy and programs flows not from the requirements of the treaties but from the Indian Act and other sources. The deep importance that the Indians attach to the treaties naturally leads to a suspicion that major policy or program changes or shifts in the federal government mix of services may threaten the position of the treaties. Therefore it is essential that the new policy announcements and changes, which we now await, provide in themselves for intensive and close study by Indian communities and organizations of the treaty provisions and past grievances, and also of their relevance to the needs of the future. This has not been done hitherto. Both the past and the future should be viewed in a single context or as a single package. Settlement of past grievances, which is absolutely necessary to progress, should be part of the plans and programs of the future.

I believe, as a result of attending consultation meetings across Canada, that the Indians are ready to re-examine the past, not as a barren exercise but in order to balance the experiences and grievances of the past with the needs and possibilities of a fulfilled future. Continuing consultation is the only way in which the views and objectives of the Indian peoples as a whole can be made known and it is the only way in which the government can bring about a realignment of objectives. If we are to give our native peoples full equality as citizens and if special status and discriminatory aspects with regard to Indians are to be phased out, these people must be assured that they are embarked on a course which will bring success. They can only have that assurance if they themselves are involved in every phase and stage of that process as it develops.

I have tried to emphasize the need for consultation and flexibility, as have all hon. members, in dealing with this question. Without going into details may I again stress that there is an absolute necessity for us to introduce social and economic programs of major magnitude to underwrite new government policies. It is not enough for us to remove from our law discriminatory provisions, to unwind, so to speak, the Indian Act, and to transfer certain functions from federal to provincial power. Even if all this is done after there has been consultation it will not be enough to remove the legal and administrative restraints blocking the way to equality. Equality in this area will not emerge if we do not recognize that some people are starting from farther back than others in their march toward equality.

We shall have to develop special programs of an economic and social nature and those programs will have to have for our Indians a substantive meaning. Our actions must proclaim, too, that we mean what we say about the continuation of the Indian identity. We will have to orient some of our programs of assistance to make sure that what is valuable in Indian culture and in contemporary forms of Indian expression survives. We have not done this in the past. Indians will need assistance to keep alive their contemporary spirit and the contemporary form of their traditions. They want to keep alive their expressive and performing arts. I place that very high on the order of priorities. Only if we give our Indians that assurance and only if we assure them that the course we are embarked on will meet with success in the social and economic sphere will equality emerge. Only in that way can the Indian identity continue to exist.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this afternoon to speak for a few minutes about the welfare of the Indian people of Canada. This year, 1969, when Canadians have often heard the phrases, "the just society" and "the age of participatory democracy", our country has been facing a problem that requires immediate attention, namely, the problem of the emergent Indian and Eskimo. The non-Indian world must be alerted to what it has not done in the past and to what must be done in future.

[Mr. O'Connell.]

As a member of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development it has been my privilege to travel from place to place in our great country and become better acquainted with the problems of our native peoples. Many meetings have been held during the past few months at the standing committee level. Also there have been many meetings in which the minister, his officials and representatives of Indian groups participated. What have been the results, Mr. Speaker?

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) spoke this afternoon and expressed grave concern about the government's tardiness. They complained that no positive conclusions have been arrived at with respect to proposed government policy on amendments to the Indian Act and with respect to the Indian Claims Commission which our first Canadians have long been waiting for. I must emphasize it is high time that the government moved more quickly and brought about action that will place our Indian and Eskimo peoples—my remarks, have mainly to do with our Indians although I am also concerned about Eskimos—on an equal footing with the white people. Personally, I am pleased to see that the Indians are taking initiatives to help their cause. They have organized the National Indian Brotherhood and the Indians recently held a conference in Ottawa in April which some 100 Indian leaders attended. In other words, the voice of the Indian wilderness has begun to ring from coast to coast. The Indians are beginning to give notice to Canadian society as a whole that they are emerging at last as a significant political force.

In my hand I have a pamphlet written by Mr. Boyce Richardson, a writer for the Montreal Star, who has put in phraseology more skilful than that at my command certain aspects of the Indian problem. I wish to read part of page 7 of the pamphlet. The heading at the top of the page is, "Race Has Shown Marked Success In Surviving Incredible Battering". The article following says in part:

> The Indians of Canada, like those of the Americas, have made a remarkably tenacious effort of survival. They survived, first of all, a systematic effort by the white man to destroy them, an effort which culminated in the series of treaties under which the Indians ceded almost the whole of Canada in return for a promise to set aside certain Crown lands "for the use and benefit of Indians."
> Since then, for 100 years, the Indians have survived the white man's assumption that they were a vanishing race who would disappear in the fullness of time.

They are not a vanishing race, but a rapidly multiplying one. The present population of 250,000 is increasing at 5 per cent a year, a rate that would double the population in 14 years. This rate of increase is likely to become even faster, for today 60 per cent of the Indian population is under 21, and already considerable pressure of population is developing on the 6 million acres of Indian reserve lands.

I visited a number of reservations in my constituency and saw that the Indians who have accepted the white man's medicine—family allowances and social welfare benefits—are multiplying at such a rate that soon there will be no room on the reservations for all the Indians who wish to live there. I presume the same can be said for many other areas of this country. Indian leaders themselves say that we should absorb at an accelerating rate our native Indians into the mainstream of Canadian society and make sure they have the same status as the white man. In the long run that is the only way out of our difficulties.

It is true that many Indians are suspicious of the white man because of the many promises the white man has broken. All the same our leading Indians realize that there are great advantages in allowing their children to be educated. In some academic fields our Indians could take the lead. Other Indians hope to take advantage of our vocational training facilities and learn trades which will help them to find jobs in society. Once they have jobs they will soon have sufficient status.

In future I hope it will not be necessary for us to have an Indian Act. Several Indian leaders have said to me, "You know, you discriminate against us by having an Indian Act. Why do you not have a French act or a Ukrainian act, or other acts covering other ethnic groups in the country?" I can understand the logic behind such remarks. We are segregating the Indians by having an Indian Act. They do not wish to be segregated from the rest of society. They do not want a special status. The Indian is a proud man, Mr. Speaker. He merely wants a chance. Let us see that he gets it. In the meantime the government is responsible for rectifying some of the ills our Indian people are suffering from.

I now wish to quote from the article by Mr. Richardson which is headed, "Finds treaties, act provide no guarantee as expected".

Indians in small communities around Lake Nipigon, north of Lake Superior, have begun to discover by painful experience that the treaties and the Indian Act do not provide them with the guarantees that they thought they did—the same conclusion that Manitoba Indians have reached through legal study.

Most of the Indians in this area have moved off the reserves to new land, but they still regard their original reserves as "theirs"—a very doubtful conclusion.

I now quote from the paragraph under the heading, "Community problem":

He is, however, a man of immense experience in life who has worked at everything from bell boy to tugboat captain in the little towns and around the lakes of this extraordinary north country, and in his role as a community worker (though not from inside the official establishment) he has already won himself a remarkable position among these people.

Perhaps I can best illustrate the problems faced by Indians today, and the ambiguities produced by history and by official policy by describing some of these communities:

This writer goes on in his article to illustrate how the Indians are making a valiant effort to adapt in every way possible to the ways of the white man. I could go on at great length referring to this article because it is very knowledgeable. It explains the cultural life of the Indian as being full of drama and character.

The previous speaker referred to the possibility of providing Indians with better facilities to develop their artifacts, and place them at the disposal of other members of our society to enhance their economy.

I wish to refer to a situation in my own constituency of which I am sure the minister is aware. However, I feel it is an instance where the Indians themselves in that particular part of Canada would like to see some action. It would encourage them and also be an example to other Indians that our governments are moving to help to put them in a better economic position. I refer to the project known as Lost Hope Park. This has been developed through the co-operation of ARDA and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) under whose supervision ARDA now is.

This proposal has been studied and has now actually been approved. There was an agreement with the government of Saskatchewan, but it is now being held up at the Treasury Board level. I have received several inquiries lately regarding this project. In fact, I have placed questions on the order paper in this regard. I hope the minister will look into this particular proposal because it has the full agreement of both provincial and federal authorities and is now only a matter of economics. The Indians in the Broadview area of Saskatchewan have developed a lot of initiative through this project which will enhance their own economic welfare. I am sure it would be of great encouragement to every Indian if the government could move in at the earliest possible date to see that this project reaches its culmination.

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, in this debate, as in the previous day's debate, there have been some thoughtful and constructive things said from all sides of this house in relation to our Indian people. Pee okoke sun nika mamook wawa kope huloima iktus, nika mamook wawa kope hiyu siaaah kah cole chahko illahee.

In connection with the north, I will deal specifically with one section of the committee's report, namely that dealing with Arctic sovereignty. The committee heard evidence indicating that Canadian sovereignty over the islands of the Arctic archipelago to the continental shelf in the Canadian Arctic is well established. However, the extent of sovereignty over waters within the archipelago is less certainly defined. The committee's recommendation is that prompt and positive action by the government is required to define the extent of Canadian sovereignty.

In these few minutes that I have I wish to suggest what that prompt and positive action should be. Essentially, we should primarily draw base lines headland to headland to include the entire archipelago and declare all the waters within those base lines to be Canadian waters. We cannot stop at this point because it would not be common sense to exclude the shipping of the world from passing between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans if this proves feasible. There should be an accompanying statement to our issuance of the maps showing the base line co-ordinates. In this statement Canada should proclaim that she recognizes the rights of ships of all nations to safe and innocent passage, not innocent passage alone, but safe and innocent passage for reasons I hope to make clear later in my remarks.

In my opinion, Canadians and Canadian governments have never had enough interest in their northern territories. They never had enough appreciation of them. For most of the years that the Territories have been part of this nation we have just occasionally reminded ourselves that there is something up there in the attic that is nice to have but we know very little about it. As Vilhjalmur Stefansson once said, if you can find any Canadian university graduate to offer you ten ideas on the north, at least nine of them would be wrong.

To be fair, there has been an immense improvement in the attitude of Canadian governments in the past 15 years. There was some awakening of interest during the years of the St. Laurent government, a considerable increase during the years of the Diefenbaker government and an interest through increased participation continued during the Pearson government. It is continuing to accelerate with this government. This is revealed in the annual budget figures in many ways. I will not deal with it, but I think it is felt here and it is also felt when you go into the north. We are taking more interest.

In some matters we are simply not taking enough interest. That is my feeling in the matter of our claim to the waters of the Arctic archipelago. We are not moving sufficiently fast or in a sufficiently positive way.

I would like to take a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, to deal with the history of territorial claims, but not with the history of our land claims because they are not in dispute. Canada essentially followed the system adopted originally by the Czarist government of Russia and since followed by some other nations, the sector theory. We took the limits of the nation's borders east and west and we extended lines in a more or less pie-shaped form up to the North Pole. The Russians took the view and still take it—they are an extraordinarily zenophobic nation, and I am not suggesting we should follow them in this—that everything within the sector lines is Russian territory. I, myself think, and from my reading believe, that most experts in international law find it difficult to conceive of a nation claiming ownership of packs of ice and even open water hundreds of miles from the nearest land.

The Canadian view was slightly different. The architect of it was Senator Poirier, and he pressed for it about the turn of the century. The Senate eventually caused the government of Canada to make a declaration. The Canadian position was that we laid claim to all the lands which might be discovered within the sector enclosed by the lines. At that time we did not think very much of territorial waters. It was not an issue, but it is becoming an important one.

Although we have belatedly taken action, and after five years of delay the government is at least moving to draw the baselines and enclose the inland waters of the Pacific and Atlantic coasts, we are still neglecting the Arctic—yet we do consider them our waters. I quote here from a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the house on May 15, found at page 8720 of Hansard, where he was quoting with approval the statement of a former Canadian minister of northern affairs:

> The area to the north of Canada, including the islands and the waters between the islands and areas beyond, are looked upon as our own, and there is no doubt in the minds of this government, nor do I think was there in the minds of former governments of Canada, that this is national terrain.

If it is national terrain, and I am speaking now of the inland waters, how precisely are we going to define it, unless we draw baselines and issue maps to the other nations which say clearly, "These are the limits of Canada's inland waters, and outward from these limits we claim three miles as territorial waters plus an additional nine as an exclusive fishing zone?" Of course this may be disputed, but Canada's claim to the archipelago and its waters does not rest upon one point alone. It does not rest merely upon effective occupation, although we have had that and it is undisputed.

There is also ground for the Canadian claim in that the islands are a natural geographical extension of the continental land mass which is Canda's. Without going into the detail of the theory there are precedents for waters within archipelagos to be claimed as a nation's internal waters. There is now a precedent for drawing baselines headland to headland, from island to island, and even from rock to rock, as has been done in Norway. Norway has established beyond dispute baselines of 40 miles. Well, if 40 why not a base line of 80 miles, or 120, or 150 or more? In the Arctic there are one or two places in which the baseline might have to reach an extent of 100 miles to pass from point to point, but we do have considerable legal support for drawing such extended baselines.

I have mentioned before that we have more of a claim than mere effective occupation of the Arctic. There are other claims which strengthen us, and there is one I have not yet mentioned. We have a specific historic claim to those waters because in 1906, when Canada was having one of its rare spasms of interest in the north, we sent the Canadian ship Arctic under Captain Bernier into those waters specifically to establish our claim to them. He came upon a foreign whaling fleet in there—Norwegian and American. He obliged them in those waters to observe Canadian regulations as to the taking of whales, and to pay licence fees. Further, he collected customs duties from those whalers on what was at that time probably considered open seas by the nations of most of the earth. Nothing could have been done more clearly and effectively to establish Canada's claim to those waters.

The equivocation came about in 1969, and not in 1903, because until we draw those baselines and display them, what does our claim to these waters really mean? This summer the American ship Manhattan is going to attempt to force her way through the Northwest Passage from east to west. When she enters Lancaster Sound at what point will her captain say, "I am in Canadian waters"? Will he say it at all? Will it be three miles seaward from a baseline drawn between Cape Liverpool on Bylot Island and Cape Cockburn on Philpots Island? It won't be if we don't say so. And if not there, where then? At what point in the passage of Lancaster Sound will the Manhattan be in Canadian waters, or at what point in Viscount Melville Sound or McClure Strait if she gets through to McClure? I say this because the pack ice from the Beaufort Sea will probably block that way, in which case the Manhattan will likely go down the Prince of Wales Strait. There will be no dispute at that point because at its narrowest it is only six miles across and we can claim three miles from each side.

But without baselines around the outer perimeter of the archipelago our claim to these waters is formless, and other nations can legitimately ask us, "where exactly do you make your claim?" Probably some nations might even undertake to tell us where they think our claim should be, and I do not think they will be generous if they make the choice. All this concern about the waters of the north and our sovereignty there has been sharpened because Prudhoe Bay, the great oil discovery, is transforming much of Alaska. With good fortune we are going to make a similar discovery in the Panarctic operation.

The Manhattan project finally has focussed our attention clearly and precisely on this question which we must answer. I would like to review that project briefly, although most hon. members by this time have probably read of it. The Manhattan is a supertanker of 115 thousand tons. She is being reinforced and fitted with a modified form of the Canadian Alex Bow ice-breaker plough. She is owned by Humble Oil Company. The intention is to see if she can move through the Northwest Passage to Prudhoe Bay. If she can then it is expected that Prudhoe Bay oil can take the short way into the eastern United States or into Europe, because the shape of our planet is such that the Arctic actually is quite close to Europe. It surprises some people to learn, for instance, that when leaving Vancouver and driving as close as you can drive to Coppermine you go 1,000 miles inland and about 2,000 miles north, yet Coppermine is as close to Yokohama as is the city of Vancouver.

Perhaps there is no point in speculating on the chances of the Manhattan making this passage, but I have heard them estimated at about 50-50. She has a tremendous forward thrust, about 45,000 horsepower. Her reverse power is considerably less, something below 10,000 horsepower. If she does become wedged in the ice it will be necessary for the John A. Macdonald and the United States icebreaker West Wind to break her free. The experiment would then probably be a failure. Let us hope it is not, because if regular shipping could move through the northern ice this would be a great thing for all of us; not just the United States but Canada as well.

There is one interesting point in this regard, and that is whether the United States government asked our permission to put this paramilitary vessel, the coast guard cutter, through the Northwest Passage. When the minister appeared before the northern development committee some time ago he was asked this question, and he said: Yes, in effect they had. Under the Canadian-United States defence agreement it is common practice, or acceptable practice, for the United States government to inform us in the event of planes or ships entering Canadian air space or waters, and that this in effect constitutes permission. I hope the minister is correct and that the United States has adopted that interpretation, but I am by no means convinced that it has adopted that interpretation.

Those who saw a recent story in the New York Times in which the president of Humble Oil was discussing this great project—it was lengthy and interesting—would not have found anything to indicate that Canada was involved in any way. It is hard to believe that Canada is even aware these ships are passing alongside Canadian islands. His statement as to these waters is that there is an opportunity for a great international waterway to be opened up by his ship. Personally, I feel it is a great pity that Canada is not putting the Manhattan through instead of the United States. Of course, it would be expensive, but so is our experiment with Panarctic. We have to risk some money to make money up there. I think it would have been worth it.

In 1913 when Steffanson was fully financed by the United States geographic society to explore the Canadian arctic and Sir Robert Borden was informed, he would not tolerate it. He put Canadian money into the expedition and it became a Canadian expedition with United States participation. In any event, the Steffanson explorations were Canadian.

I think Canadians are hoping that this crossing of the Northwest Passage will be successful. We should hope that a great waterway does open up there so that our ships and the ships of other nations can use it. You may ask why, then, should I be concerned as to sovereignty over these waters if we are to welcome the ships of other nations and offer innocent passage. There are no great fish resources there. There are some but they do not appear to be extensive in the Arctic. Why should we concern ourselves? Let's just draw the three mile plus the twelve mile straight lines along the shores of individual islands, and if the lines do not meet leave them as international waters. One might ask that, but there is more than one reason we should be concerned. I am going to outline one or two.

If we establish sovereignty, it will increase our responsibilities in the Arctic. If regular traffic develops through the Northwest Passage this country would be responsible for installing navigational aids and these, like everything else done in the Arctic, could be very expensive. I am pleased to learn that our Department of Transport is making a study of the cost of installing a Decca system in the Northwest Passage. Again, I feel the government is moving a little more slowly than it might. Our position would be better if that Decca system were put in on those islands by ourselves. We could put up a semi-permanent system along the side of the passage. We could then have charged the Manhattan a nominal fee for moving through on our Decca system. This country will be responsible for installing such a navigational system.

This is the more dangerous aspect of the situation. We may find ourselves tempted to say to the United States: These are your ships and this is your oil you are moving out. You put the system in, you make the expenditure and then this will be your system. Now, we come into the dangerous part which involves territorial rights to the land. Let me quote briefly from two authorities who appeared before the northern development committee, one Dr. Carr and Dean Maxwell Cohen. Am I running short of time, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. St. Pierre: I will be very brief, Mr. Chairman. I should like to quote what Dr. Carr said on this point. He recently wrote an article on the economic aspects of the Yukon. When I asked him what future threat to our sovereignty might exist, he said he saw no threat to sovereignty over the land mass of Canada for the moment. He then said:

> I think we just simply have to keep moving in the direction of insuring our sovereignty. I did not mention that the factors that tend to assist the encroachment on our sovereignty are improvements in transportation, air transport, under sea transport and various new developments in technology.

He went on to say:

> In those vast spaces, it would not be difficult for other countries to set up studies or research units here and there and eventually obtain squatter's rights and move on. The point I do make is that we must be more energetic and do more in terms of services for the north now than we used to when it was so difficult to reach the north.

Dean Cohen of McGill University said very much the same thing to the committee. He put it in these words:

> It is possible to argue that as technology improves exploitation must equally improve on the part of Canada to reinforce the idea that we effectively occupy the area and if we did nothing in the Arctic except visit when in fact technology provides now for real chances for exploitation, we might be weakening title if the sector and other theories did not support us.

We must consider the possibility that the United States might wish to put a navigational aid system in the Northwest Passage and that we might be sorely tempted to let them do that, to our own detriment.

In closing I wish to refer to another point. The Manhattan is comparatively small as a supertanker. She carries 112,000 tons. The latest ship to be built for Gulf Oil by the Japanese has a 300,000 ton capacity. The Manhattan is larger than the Queen Mary and if stood on end would be taller than the Empire State building. The latest ship built for Gulf is far larger than that again. I would ask hon. members to think of the Torrey Cannon disaster in the English Channel when this small tanker spewed out her oil and poisoned the beaches in England and France. She was a small tanker.

I would ask hon. members also to consider that the chief danger in a passage through the north is being trapped in the ice and crushed. What would happen if a supertanker the size of the one recently built for Gulf Oil were caught in the Arctic ice, crushed, and lost 300,000 tons of oil? It would mean that 75 million gallons of crude oil would be spilled out in the waters with temperatures from 33 degrees, to 34 degrees. I ask you to consider the size of the problem that would face us, the terrible expense and the almost incredible damage that would be done to the ecology of the Arctic. This is the reason we should have control of these waters and the power to determine what ships come into them. We should be able to determine that these ships are safely built and that disasters of this sort do not happen. We cannot have control unless we have sovereignty.

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—CONSIDERATION OF THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Baldwin.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate. I shall be rather brief. I should like to begin my remarks by dealing briefly with the department of Indian affairs. I think it can be generally concluded that there exists today a great deal of mistrust between officials of the department of Indian affairs and the Indian people. The Indian people have witnessed a huge bureaucracy build-up within the department. As I pointed out a few days ago in my speech on the budget, in personnel alone an increase in excess of 50 per cent has taken place in the department in the last three years.

Much of the dissension which exists today between the Indian people, the government and those concerned with the administration of Indian affairs is due to poor liaison, lack of understanding and lack of a true, sincere and sympathetic approach in earnestly working, through co-operation, to overcome the numerous difficulties which exist among our Indian people. The concept of paternalism which has been the philosophy of the department of Indian affairs has to be scrapped. In its place I believe we must adopt a philosophy of sincerity and sound national conscience in order to overcome the social and economic inequalities which exists between the Indian and the white communities. The situation that exists today can only be termed as harmful in many ways when one looks at the complete picture of our Canadian society.

I believe the role of the department of Indian affairs must include the reparation of some of the government's shortcomings in the treatment of Indians. It must also include the neutralization of the ethnic tension which exists between the white and the Indian peoples. In addition to the normal rights and privileges of Canadian citizenship, I believe it is reasonable to assume that the Indian community possesses certain additional rights because they are, after all, charter members of the Canadian community. I believe the Indian affairs branch has a special responsibility to see that these additional rights in so far as citizenship is concerned are respected, and that the government and the Canadian people are educated to accept these standards. Rather than dictating to the Indian people what the department of Indian affairs thinks is right or wrong, the officials of the department should be concentrating upon the development of education, upgrading living standards and providing employment opportunities. This would demonstrate a true feeling of trust and understanding. At the present time the Indian affairs branch is a massive stumbling block which prevents the Indian people from achieving their hopes and aspirations. The Indian community is discriminated against through a rigid interpretation of policy. We should be placing the emphasis on development through a humanistic approach.

We cannot legislate rigorously. There are no cut-and-dried policies created through legislation which can provide a humanistic approach to achieving the aspirations and ideals of our Indian peoples. I submit—I am glad the minister is in the house this afternoon—that one step which would improve the relationship and understanding which exists between our Indians and the Indian affairs branch would be to immediately commence the recruitment of Indian personnel to man many of the offices in the department. As far as I am concerned, no one has a better understanding of the problems of Indians on or off the reserve than the Indian himself. I believe that no one in our society is more aware of the poverty, social injustice and economic degradation of our Indian people than the Indian himself. Therefore, I urge the minister to consider this matter in order that Indians may have better opportunities, greater responsibility and a more realistic stake in their destiny.

I should like to deal briefly with treaties and their interpretation, particularly in so far as they concern health and welfare services. Although the treaties between Her Majesty Queen Victoria and the Indians of British North America were instituted and negotiated by men of good will in what they collectively considered to be the best interests of the Indian people, there is no doubt in my mind that the treaties are now woefully outdated, impractical and in many cases meaningless. For example, many sections of these treaties are obsolete, such as one plow for every ten families; a yoke of oxen for every band, and a suit of clothes for the chief every third year. Clauses respecting hunting and fishing rights, health and welfare services and education are grossly outdated and have lagged far behind the national progress of this country.

It is generally concluded, through the interpretation of these treaties, that health services were to be provided by the federal government as long as the sun shines and the rivers flow. But what have we today? With the advent of medicare we have much confusion, apprehension and dissension. We have an atmosphere of mistrust and an environment in which the Indian Association has urged all treaty Indians to boycott enrolment in the Alberta medicare program. I should like, Mr. Speaker, to quote from the Edmonton Journal of January 13 in order that the evidence in this regard may be on the record. The article is entitled "Indians urged to boycott medicare in premiums row" and reads in part as follows:

The Indian association of Alberta is urging treaty Indians to boycott Albert's medicare plan until the question of premium payments is resolved.

The association maintains that medicare premiums must be paid by the federal government as part of their treaty rights respecting guarantees of health care.

Harold Cardinal, spokesman for the association, said the federal health and welfare department has indicated it will pay premiums for treaty Indians only on the basis of need.

The Indians Affairs Department, meanwhile, claims national health and welfare must pay any premiums necessary to ensure coverage on Indian reserves.

"It's not an issue with us," Mr. Cardinal said. Indians feel the federal government must pay the premiums for them, and they don't care which department does it, he added.

• (5:30 p.m.)

He said, however, Indians wish to ensure that their treaty rights will be protected. They also want assurance that their medicare premiums are not turned over to the provincial government, if the federal government carries out its policy of turning medicare back to the provinces after five years.

"We want assurance that the federal government will pay all our health costs in future, as they have in the past," Mr. Cardinal said. This is part of the historic treaty rights, he added.

Farther on, the article reads:

There has been "confusion" at the regional level between the two departments, over the question of premiums, Mr. Cardinal said. He said he hopes the two ministers will clarify the matter.

In the meantime, treaty Indians are being advised to refuse to register for medicare, he added.

Today I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) a question regarding this specific subject and he advised me that he will be attending the Indian Association conference in northern Alberta tomorrow or on the weekend. I presume that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) will attend also. The Minister of National Health and Welfare suggested that he will urge the Indians to enroll. I should like to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Indian people in my province want some clarification of this matter, and rightly so. Certainly, they want some assurance from the federal government and some guarantee that payment will be made for the health services as prescribed under the respective treaties. After all, health is of prime concern to the Indian people. They were assured that their health services would never be curtailed. Now, they are being asked to produce an indigent or hospitalization card. I think that some clarification is due to them to indicate how we are going to classify those who are indigent and those who are not.

My contention is that those who are living on the reserve are entitled to be granted health services under the terms of the treaty. In my own province of Alberta the government has built a so-called medicine chest. However, on many occasions it has been reported to me that many of these people are denied these services and facilities. One individual from the Saddle Lake reserve suggested that they are asked to be sick on certain days. "If I am sick on the reserve on Thursday, I may have to wait until next Wednesday to get into the hospital", he said. I believe that this is a breach of promise and I hope that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of National Health and Welfare will clarify this matter. I hope that it will be clarified well before the end of June because, as hon. members may or may not be aware, the medicare program is due to go into effect in Alberta on July 1. The deadline for enrollment is the end of June.

I should now like to touch briefly on some aspects of the economic development and of the conditions on reserves as well as the plans and programs the government intends to implement to overcome the deplorable conditions which exist there. I think that the Indians, and the public in general, cannot understand why the government has continued to disburse funds on welfare and mere subsistence allowances. I believe this money would be much better spent on developing work projects and developing industry on or near the reserves which would make possible the employment of Indians and thus make them self-sustaining. This is certainly one of the areas in which I believe the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion could play a very useful role. I think that officials of the department should take a long hard look at the possibility of encouraging and promoting industry on or near the reserves. After all, this is one of the major problems with respect to the employment of Indians on reserves. Indians, just like any other human beings, want to spend their evenings and weekends with their families on the reserve. Therefore, I believe there is a great deal of merit in developing industry in or near the reserves.

The housing, the sanitation and the water supply in the majority of reserves is deplorable. There is great poverty. For example, in my own riding of Vegreville, in which the Saddle Lake reserve is to be found, the same conditions exist. I have had much correspondence with the minister with regard to housing. He was good enough to despatch two of his officials to the reserve and we made a survey. Our survey revealed the fact that we need 100 houses on the reserve to meet the demand in the next five years. That comes to an average of 20 homes a year. The average number of homes that have been built in the last five years has been seven or eight per year. We are certainly never going to catch up unless we upgrade our program. When we look at the deplorable situation, the low standard of living and the poor housing on the reserves I believe we are fair in saying that the government and the Indian affairs branch have failed. Why have they failed? Because they have not given the Indians the opportunity to achieve their own destiny through active involvement, through participation, and through the acceptance of responsibility in discharging many of the numerous administrative, social and economic activities which exist on the reserve.

We hear it said in some quarters that the Indians have no pride. Well, they do not have too much to be proud of, particularly in view of the paternalistic approach of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I say we should give them opportunities and responsibilities and they will soon experience a deep sense of pride.

I should like to refer again to my own constituency of Vegreville and the Saddle Lake reserve. Recently, the band council embarked on a very ambitious project of clearing something in the order of 15,000 acres of prime arable land. This project has provided employment, administrative experience and responsibility and has instilled a sense of pride in the Indians. It has had a terrific impact on Indians as is shown by the decrease in welfare. In addition, a prefab housing plant was established and is continuing to operate. It constructs homes for use on the reserve, and it also has had very good effects. It has developed an incentive in Indians to increase their skills, to take post secondary courses and, for example, to attend the school of agriculture in the neighbouring town of Vermilion. Some have also taken up carpentry. All this has instilled a sense of pride and responsibility.

These programs have been administered through the local band council and they have instilled a sense of responsibility. People are proud to have a say in their future and in their destiny. I hope that the minister will continue to encourage these types of programs because they will bring nothing but good to the Indian people and to Canadians in general.

I should like to conclude my remarks by reminding the minister that since he is in the process of writing a policy or a position paper on the new Indian Act, I hope he recognizes that Indians also are a changing people and that future policies must be flexible and adaptable to change. I urge that he incorporate and utilize the talents of our Indians to solve the numerous problems which we have created together and which have accumulated over the years. The Indians of this country are not interested in hearing any more words or seeing more complicated legislation and red tape. They want a reaffirmation of their rights and some positive action to overcome the complexities of their disparities so that they too may have the opportunity to participate in the benefits which other Canadians have had.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that in suggesting that one of the days be used to examine the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development the opposition has shown, I suppose I might say for once, a great deal of good judgment. I am happy, as I know every member of the house is, that the opposition should have chosen this subject for discussion today. I think the spirit which has been shown by all members indicates the concern and the honest confusion which exists in the minds of so many of us in this house, and of so many Canadians, with regard to the future of the Indian people.

We hear constant references to the Indian and Eskimo people and the circumstances which have existed in the past. We continually hear advice as to what should be done in the future. As a Canadian who is not of Indian background I feel somewhat reluctant to become involved in this debate. I believe the Indian people of Canada are beginning to show that they, too, have ideas about what their destiny should be.

What has been happening in the past two years or so, community development programs, education programs, housing programs, schemes for economic development and, what is more, the consultation which is going on between the government and the Indian people, are an indication that the Indian people are ready to take upon themselves much of the responsibility which in the past was exercised by government. The minister has promised that shortly there will be a statement on the government's position with respect to questions affecting the Indian people. I do not wish to get involved in giving advice to the minister. I will merely say that I trust the statement to be made will not become a political football. I hope it will be left to the Indian people to determine whether or not it is satisfactory. I hope it will be left to the Indian people to produce alternatives if what the government has said is not what they want. I, for one, believe the role of parliament should be limited to satisfying ourselves that whatever the Indian people want is carried out.

In the Northwest Territories, as in other parts of Canada, we have seen significant changes in the Indian way of life, in Indian attitudes, and in the attitudes of the Eskimo people. I should like to tell members of this house about a society which was formed by the Indian people in the community of Fort Smith. Historically, the Indian and Métis people of Fort Smith had a difficult time breaking into the government establishment. There was a problem of communication, a problem of economics and education. About three years ago a group of local people decided that they would form an organization to help themselves. This group, known as the Thebache society, assumed, in effect, responsibility for the economic development of their own community. The manager of the society was a former heavy equipment operator for the Department of Northern Affairs. His work force consisted of people from all parts of the community. Race really did not make much difference. The group was able to fulfil contracts offered by the municipal government, the territorial government and the federal government. In the first three years hundreds of thousands of dollars of income were made available to residents of Fort Smith as a result of the initiative and action taken by the Thebache society.

Groups such as this could become cornerstones for the kind of creative activity, the kind of leadership which we hope will come from within a community, and I hope the government will take cognizance of this situation. I am sure any hon. member who has had experience of work of this sort can report the same kind of achievements. Earlier this afternoon the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) referred to me as parliamentary secretary—I think he was intimating I was parliamentary secretary to the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development. However, Mr. Speaker, as you intimated when you recognized me, I am the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I want to make this clear in anticipation of what I shall have to say in the next seven or eight minutes. On two occasions in the last few years, the committee has visited the north, once in the summer and once in the winter. I think this has been a good learning experience for members from the south who would not normally have an opportunity to see this wonderful part of Canada.

I know that in the last parliament some of the strongest supporters of the idea of northern development were members of the committee from all parts of the house. Members had an opportunity of meeting the commissioners of the Northwest Territories and of the Yukon Territory. They had meetings with members of both councils, including the appointed members of the Northwest Territories council. They became familiar, as far as the Northwest Territories were concerned, with the Carrothers report.

By way of background, in 1965 the then minister of northern affairs, recognizing the restlessness of the people in the Northwest Territories in regard to the administration of their own affairs, appointed as Commissioner,

Dean Carrothers, to examine the future of the political, social and economic development of the north. This commission reported to the minister in October 1966.

Basically, the recommendations of the Carrothers commission were that the then administration, which was centrally located in Ottawa under federal auspices, be transferred to the territorial government and moved to the north; that the powers of the council be expanded; that the terms of reference of the elected members of the council be widened; and that government be brought close to the people. Much has happened since that period. The capital, Yellowknife, has been developed. The territorial government, the newest government in Canada, is on the ground and has taken over much responsibility of a provincial nature. But that is where it ends.

When the announcement was made of the location of the capital in February 1967, the indication was that the Federal government's position on further political development would be made known shortly. Two and a half years later we are still waiting for an announcement. The Northwest Territories council is in session in Yellowknife, and the members of that council are critical of the lack of a statement. They have said to the minister that they must hear from him; that the minister must come to the north and tell them what their political future is to be.

I believe the minister would like to be in the position to do this. He may have decided what should take place in the north; whether or not we should be divided; whether or not the size of the council should be increased; whether or not we should continue to have appointed members; whether or not the councillors should have the right to set their own indemnities. But I am more than a little concerned that up to this time we have heard nothing.

I tell the minister in all sincerity that this statement must come and has to come before the conclusion of the present council session. I say that to the minister because I believe that his relationship with the elected members of the Northwest Territories council, the appointed members and the average citizen in the north, depends on whether or not this statement is forthcoming.

I regret that I have to say this to the minister in this manner, but I believe the role of the federal government in the north during the next number of years is greatly dependent on the kind of mutual trust and understanding that is developed between the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, his commissioner in the Northwest Territories, the Northwest Territories council and the people. In my travels in the last three or four months I have become aware that the people of the north are restless. They are looking to the minister for a statement, a statement that will show the kind of leadership that can be given in the transfer of responsibility.

I have said on more than one occasion that at this stage of our development in the north we are not talking of provincial status or quasi-provincial status. We are saying that we want the right to run our own affairs and to make the kind of decisions that affect a person's everyday life. I hope the minister is able to convince his colleagues in the cabinet that he is under severe pressure, or, if I may use the expression, that he is under the gun to produce. And produce he must. He must produce by Friday of next week.

Mr. Barnett: Or else.

Mr. Orange: It all helps, yes. This may sound like an ultimatum but it is not.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why not?

Mr. Orange: What I want to impress on the minister and on some of his colleagues in the cabinet is that we have waited long enough, that his relationship with the people in the north is dependent upon when he can come through with this most important document.

Before I conclude there is one other matter I should raise in relation to the sort of thing this particular minister has done, though those who preceded him took the first steps. I refer to consultation with the people affected, not only the Indian people but all people in the north. I hope this is the sort of relationship that will develop with regard to our national parks. In calling it six o'clock may I say that in this day and age I think consultation is so important that we must have it in all phases of our activity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I heard many comments worth listening to on this subject affecting Indians and northern affairs. I found especially interesting the speech of the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) who touched on a subject matter somewhat different from that dealt with by other hon. members. In one sense he was promoting new ideas and I hope the minister paid close attention to him. We can do something worth while in the area to which the hon. member referred.

I wish to deal with a theme with which most hon. members dealt with this afternoon, the theme of the native peoples of Canada. I am concerned about the future of these people. I wish I had had the chance of hearing the minister's speech before making my own comments since what he has to say could easily alter what I have to say. The other day I asked him what the government's policy is in this area. I understand he will give us his answer before the end of next week. I want to make some remarks in order to make sure he does not forget that we expect him to make a statement.

A short time ago when consultation meetings were going on in Ottawa I had the good fortune to treat one Peter Dubois to lunch. He is an Indian from my province of Saskatchewan. He told me that when the Indians controlled North America they had a good educational system which was flexible and served their needs. They also had a code of morals and ethics, and an economic system. The only area in which they failed was immigration policy. He said they had a poor immigration policy. It was second class. Indians can at least joke about themselves when they look back on their history, their problems, and the mistakes they made. But they are concerned about the future.

We took their land and left them to live on reservations. We left them the poorest of poor land which they could not make a living on even if they were exceptionally able farmers. In exchange we offered them our way of life, our habits, our language, our sense of justice, etc., whether they wanted to accept these things or not. We pay civil servants high salaries to administer Indian affairs. We give aid to Indians. We call it social aid but it is charity and handouts, call it what you will. You know, some Indians look on the department of Indian affairs as a make work project for white men. White men are making work for high priced civil servants who are not too happy sometimes about the names Indians call them.

There are five Indian reservations in my constituency. Having visited them I have become acquainted with many people. I have hired some Indians to work on my farm and discovered that Indians, too, are people. I want to discuss some of the complaints and observations the Indians have made as individuals. I would also like to deal with how the department of Indian affairs affects them by what they do or do not do. An Indian on a reserve who is idle receives a form of social aid which will help him to survive. If he tries to get ahead by farming or owning a small business, it is like pulling hen's teeth to get assistance from the department. Have any hon. members ever applied for social aid through the department of Indian affairs? It is a very awkward and slow procedure. If you want assistance in order to farm or have your own business, you might receive it this time next year, if you are lucky. Some feel it is so awkward they do not even bother applying for it.

Another complaint Indians have made to me is that Indian agents who understand them are quickly moved from the post they hold. I think this is a valid complaint they are making. These people who understand the problems of the Indians are asked to move by the department of Indian affairs. I received a complaint from a magistrate. He said the Indian cannot get drunk on the reserve and cannot afford to hire a hotel room, so where is he to get drunk but on the street. When this happens the reaction is: there's a drunken Indian; get a policeman and throw him in jail. What is the magistrate to fine this man if conditions for him are not the same as they are for the white man? If we are going to give the Indian justice, he should be treated as an equal of the white man.

The leader of the Creditiste Party has suggested a French speaking person in Quebec or Ottawa should be entitled to have his trial conducted in French. I ask the members of the Creditiste Party, if an Indian gets drunk or commits a misdemeanor in Quebec in what language is his trial conducted? It is conducted in French. In my part of the country his trial is conducted in English, not in Cree, Huron or Montengnais. These were the original people on our continent.

I think the minister of Indian Affairs should have a heart to heart talk with his colleagues the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) as some of the work of the Department of Justice in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon is still being farmed out. There is no Crown prosecutor in that area and that is the reason the work is being farmed out. One is never sure who the Crown prosecutor will be. It reminds me of something said by the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather) who earned his living as a humorist writing a column for a Vancouver newspaper. He discontinued writing the column because he found it very awkward to be in this house and still write a humorous column for a Vancouver newspaper. I am a farmer from Saskatchewan and I find it awkward to run my farm from Ottawa. I believe it is equally difficult to administer justice in the Yukon Territory from Ottawa.

I wonder if the eloquent, patrician, well paid, well educated civil servants in Ottawa really understand what the problems are out there? They should go and live with the people to understand the background of these people and the conditions they have to tolerate? In that way they may have a better idea of what justice is all about. I strongly urge the minister to look into this matter.

There is one other area which is quite disturbing to me, that is the problem of unemployment in the north. This was mentioned by some hon. members this afternoon. Although it is a problem all over Canada, it is the responsibility of the federal government to a larger degree in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. I suggest the Indians affairs branch should have personnel officers to help Indians or Eskimos when they move to a new job and change their way of living. We frequently hear of Indians or Eskimos who get a job, stay for a short time and then leave because of emotional problems or some other factor. I suggest these personnel officers could counsel these people, as it is very awkward when they cut themselves off from one way of life and then find they are unable to do well in another.

Another matter I would like to mention is something I have been told by young people. These are people who are attending university or are graduates. They are clever people and they have done well. However, I am surprised at the bitterness among them and their lack of trust in not only the Indian affairs branch but of all white people. As a member of parliament, I was also included in that sense of distrust as they really do not trust anyone. They feel that many years of promises have not brought them what they wish. It may be that the general public have not accepted or recognized these young people. Possibly they still treat them as second class citizens; I don't know. This is an area in which we should improve our relations with these young people.

I would now like to deal for a moment with the matter of Arctic sovereignty. One of the reasons Arctic sovereignty has come to the fore lately relates to the possibility of oil in that area, both on the land and under the sea, and the value of that oil. I am hopeful oil will be found in that area, as there is sediment there of the type found in Alberta and Saskatchewan. In all likelihood there will be more oil found in that area than in these two provinces combined. What concerns me in this respect is the problem of future markets.

As a wheat farmer, I have encountered a great deal of disturbance in our area because of the lack of markets. At the present time in Alberta oil is being produced at only 45 per cent of capacity. We are now developing more oil wells in the Yukon, Northwest Territories and in the high Arctic. I am quite disturbed about our national oil policy. I strongly urge the minister to announce a policy which will give some direction to our oil people because they are very concerned about this matter. The name of the game in oil is markets. If you cannot sell oil, which is expensive to produce, what good is it? We should look at it as a national resource and see that the market is developed in an orderly fashion.

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): It is a pleasure for me to voice my personal opinion in this very interesting debate on policies governing the Indian affairs of Canada.

While listening to some of the speeches made by our friends in the opposition, I have heard some very interesting statements and I have tried to listen to them with as much attention as possible.

Among other things, it has been said that the Indians should be treated the same as the white population, that their rights should be recognized and especially that ancient treaties should be honoured.

Some hon. members of the opposition have attributed to the minister some hostility towards the Indians. It was even said that the Indians would be opposed to any legislation that would be enacted by the government until they are assured that those ancient treaties would be honoured as they should.

The minister has also been accused of not doing his duty. It has even been said that the Indians in Canada no longer have any confidence not only in the government of Canada but also in the provincial governments, and that they were deliberately being relegated to the most isolated, barren areas in Canada.

The last speaker, who is a good friend of mine, the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley, (Mr. Thomson) quoted a phrase, with which I understood he agreed, saying that the Indians had a good education system and highly advanced ethics when, centuries ago, they were masters in this land.

I have great respect for the Indians. I have known several of them for whom I had much esteem, having worked with them, made trips in the North with them when I was practising my profession.

But, although I respect them highly, I also respect the ancestors of the white people. And, when I heard the remarks of the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley, it struck me as very similar to saying that when our paleolithic ancestors were hunting, gathering food to survive, they had an education system superior to ours and that we should, we, Europeans and North-Americans, go back to the paleolithic education system.

I think that in Canada, our respect and our love for the Indians are increasing. Is there an employment problem among the Indians? Of course, but this problem is becoming more and more world wide because of the development of our society, because of automation and of technological progress.

As for Canadian sovereignty over the Arctic regions, it is a very important aspect of Canadian politics which should not be forgotten. Therefore, it is good for hon. members to remind occasionally, as often as possible, the minister and the government that it is more and more necessary, at least to claim possession periodically of these far northern areas which certainly belong to us and which will later yield resources that will help our economic development.

This third report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development is indeed most interesting and I think that every hon. member, regardless of his political party, should first congratulate the members of this committee for the remarkable study and observation work they did during their last trip in northern Canada. It is indeed a good thing to see that, at the beginning of their report, the members of the committee mention that in the course of their northern trip they noticed a vigorous and healthy economic growth in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon.

We stress the problem of employment, as I said a while ago, because it is always an urgent problem.

There are many problems to solve, not only in the employment field but in all other fields dealt with in this report. Are we going to say that this government has not taken these last years very positive action, apart from helping the native people of Canada to solve their employment problems? The same could be said of education, housing, arctic sovereignty, friendship centers for the Indians who come to live in our cities, handicraft problems among the Indians, electric power in the north, which is in my opinion a pretty difficult problem to solve, on account of the enormous distances and sparse population in those vast territories.

There remains the tourist aspect of certain areas to be dealt with. As concerns Dawson City, when I was a member of the committee on northern affairs a few years ago, I saw that the area of Dawson City—that already old city that was so active at the time of the gold rush—is one of the most interesting as far as the tourist industry is concerned and there is still much to do there.

But having looked into the present government program and the estimates for the current fiscal year, can we say that the government and the minister do not want to do anything for the Indians? On the contrary, I think that in that field, the government is striving harder than ever.

• (8:30 p.m.)

If we consider, for example, item L-40 in the estimates for this fiscal year, it is aimed at increasing to $4,300,000 the amount authorized for loans to Indians and Eskimos for the construction and the purchase of houses, up from $2,300,000, while in 1967-68, it was only $1 million.

For the entire program to which are allocated items 1 and 5, the estimates for this year amount to $175,159,000, while last year they totalled $135,446,000, an increase of $20,574,000. And if we examine that program and those estimates, we will see that it is the same for all the other items.

Allow me to refer to a publication of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which gives facts and figures about Indian affairs, and which was published a few years ago. It is obvious the figures are not recent, but we can see that already, at that time, the policy of the present government in the field of Indian affairs was constantly improving, as was the situation of the Indians and the economic organization of the territories where they live.

Whether the figures relate to Indian handicraft, education, housing (construction and repairs), we always note the same progress.

When comparing the general expenditures for 1965 and 1966, in the fields of education, welfare, economic development and administration, including the special fund of British Columbia, they amounted to about $81 million for the fiscal year 1965-66 and $104 million for the following year, an increase of over $24 million.

With regard to engineering and to capital expenditures, including the construction of roads and bridges as well as other works relating to water distribution systems in 1961-62, for instance, the total votes allotted in this connection amounted to $1,420,000. In 1966-67 they were $3,845,000, nearly four times more.

Regarding education, the total expenditures in 1961-62 were $6,944,000, and in 1966-67, $11,418,000, that is nearly twice as much.

As for economic development, the amount spent in 1961-62 was $446,000 and in 1966-67, $2,085,000.

As far as the housing program is concerned, government expenditures for 1961-62 amounted to $2,254,000, and for 1966-67 to $8,226,000.

I think we might say, in the light of those figures, that things could be better for the Indians and their economic development, but we are doing a great deal at the present time as we did in the past. And now the Canadian government is doing its utmost to increase even more the well-being not only of the Indian people, but of every Canadian citizen.

May I be permitted, before concluding my remarks, to inform the house of some needs that are felt by a few Indian bands in my own region, along the Lower St. Lawrence river and in Gaspé.

In Gaspé, there still exist two reserves of Micmac Indians who lived in the area already under the French régime and account for approximately 15 per cent of the population.

In passing, I wish to say that on the Maria reserve, for instance, a new school for the neighbouring Indians has just been built and that 80 per cent of the costs, if not the full costs, have been paid by the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to remind the minister that in Gaspé, on those two reserves, many houses are in poor shape. In fact, many houses have neither running water nor bathrooms or, as we say, no sanitation nor water supply.

One important question is the order of the day of the Micmac reserve of Saint-Louis-de-France, at Maria, in Gaspé. There now exists a trading problem with regard to handicraft. For a long time, if not for always, the Indians on that reserve have specialized in the weaving of baskets. Occasionally, as is the custom, they trade those for mocassins, slippers and other handicraft products with the Indians of the Lorette reserve. As far as the reserve in Maria is concerned, it could have quite an interesting market with the United States, New York particularly, at the present time. Because they have to pay high customs duties, the Indians are loath to develop such a business which would be very profitable to them. On the other hand, the chief of the reserve, Mr. Léonard Jérôme, came to Ottawa recently to meet with officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He pointed out that matter to his member of parliament, the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard). He also mentioned that products imported from Japan were advertised as being made by Indians of his reserve and that it was quite detrimental to their business.

On the other hand, Indians of both reserves and citizens as well who visit those reserves complain about the sorry condition of the highways. They would be most interested in seeing the government give special attention to their repairs and improvement.

For many reasons, I think, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development might be interested in establishing on the reserve at Restigouche a museum which would have the advantage not only of stirring up the interest of Indians and visitors, but also of developing the economy of that area.

A few years ago, the Capuchin Fathers of the parish of Restigouche, who minister to the Indians of the area, discovered the ship of the Marquis de Malause, a French naval officer, whose ship is reported to have sunk in the Restigouche river, in the vicinity of the reserve, during the last wars between the French and the British.

They located the wrecked ship, and they are now proceeding with further excavations.

Mr. Speaker, we feel that if the department could take some interest in this particular warship and other details related to its foundering, it might improve the status of the Restigouche Indian band, boost their economy, attract tourists and have other advantages, not only for the reserve, but for all the people of the area.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my appreciation of the minister's drive, and congratulate him on the initiative and decision he has shown whenever problems, greater or lesser, occur in the field within his responsibility. To illustrate this, I would like to recall briefly one field where he recently put up a brave and successful fight.

His efforts, among other things, without mentioning the touristic and, in particular, the economic angles, will have the effect of providing employment for some people in the Gaspé Peninsula, not only to the Indians to which I referred a moment ago, but also to the white people, to other citizens of the area. I want to point out the positive and spirited manner the minister has displayed during the debate on the setting up of the Forillon Park.

• (8:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I did not anticipate having the opportunity of saying a few words on this subject quite so soon, but I welcome the time now that I have it. We have under discussion a motion concerning the third report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Like other hon. members, I was interested in the speech made this afternoon by the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre), who dealt with one specific item of the report in which the committee recommended that prompt and positive action by the government is required to define Canadian sovereignty.

I think it can be fairly said that the hon. member's speech dealt with that recommendation of the committee in rather concrete terms which I found very interesting. Generally speaking, I felt his proposal was one that I would be able to support. For the most part, however, the discussion this afternoon tended to centre more on matters which are not referred to in the report of the committee. The committee report pays particular attention to the situation of the native peoples of Canada. Its report contains headings which deal with jobs, education, housing, friendship centres and handicrafts.

No one in this house would deny that these matters are important and are very real questions with which the committee should properly wrestle. However, Mr. Speaker, I feel I should enter this discussion at the point at which it was introduced this afternoon by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). That hon. member introduced into our discussion an area that is not touched upon at all by the report of the committee. In my judgment this represents a serious omission on the part of the committee, which otherwise presented a well-rounded report for a committee of this kind. I am not saying this by way of criticism of the committee, because I realize there are limitations upon the matters a committee may include in its report. I mention this matter because, despite the importance of parliament being concerned with such matters as jobs, education and housing for the Indian and Eskimo peoples, the more fundamental question of the relationship of the rest of us to these people is at the core of what we should be discussing today.

All the well-meaning efforts that may have been made in the fields of housing, employment opportunities, retraining, and so on, will have missed the point unless we in this parliament are prepared to come to grips with what in my opinion is the fundamental and basic manner in which we should deal with this group in the Canadian society. Reference has been made to the fact that a statement of new policy is shortly to be forthcoming from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). The hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) touched upon this subject in a speech which I thought was able and constructive. He referred to the fact that this comprehensive statement of new policy will shortly be made after an intensive, nine months review.

I confess that I do not await the statement with quite the same degree of optimism as that displayed by the hon. member for York-Scarborough, because on a number of occasions when it has been said we were on the verge of a comprehensive statement of new policy we have heard from various ministers, statements which have not lived up to expectations. The minister who now occupies this rather important and arduous post will, I hope, succeed in his portfolio and have time to get his teeth into the questions that need to be dealt with. It is unfortunate, whatever may be the reasons behind it, that for quite a long time we have not had a minister in this portfolio who remained long enough to come to grips with the problems that must be solved.

I remind the minister that since the Liberal government assumed office we have had in this portfolio, if my list is complete, Mr. Favreau, Mr. Tremblay, Mr. Nicholson and Mr. Laing in rather quick succession. In the period before that we had Mr. Fulton, Mrs. Fairclough, and for a brief period Mr. Bell. I mention this as one of the reasons for the long procrastination in really coming to grips with the essential problem of the recognition of the rights of these people, as referred to by my colleague the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson).

The hon. member for York-Scarborough referred to these people having full and equal citizenship in the mainstream of Canadian life without loss of their identity. If I heard him correctly, he referred to the fact that it was not enough simply to unwind the department of Indian affairs or the Indian Act. I agree with that sentiment. I have said before in this house that in my opinion the core of this problem lies in unwinding the effects of colonialism, which covers a much broader area than that covered by the Indian Act or the department of Indian affairs.

I was intrigued by the remarks of the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley to the effect that Indians had a good economic and educational system but a very poor immigration policy. He said this with that quiet sort of humour that the Indian people display with regard to their position and relationship with the rest of us. The hon. member's remarks reminded me of a discussion I had with the people of an Indian community in my constituency. We got into a rather similar area of discussion which came to the point of my suggesting that because we call these people Indians we tend to lump them all together as it were, whereas at the time Europeans began to arrive on this continent there was no more relationship or kinship between people from the St. Lawrence Valley and those from British Columbia, than there is today between the people of Finland, for example, and Malaysia.

I suggested to the people with whom I was talking that if Columbus had thought he had discovered China instead of India, they would all be Chinese. This remark seemed to catch their fancy and we had one of those beautiful, quiet sessions of laughing about it. I suggest to the minister that if this had happened he would now be the minister of Chinese affairs, even though this would not involve him in some of the matters in which we understand his colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is involved.

One of the aspects of this whole situation with which the house has been called upon to deal from time to time centres on the reference to the idea of an Indian claims act. The whole question is in many respects one which should take precedence over any revision of the Indian Act or decision to abolish the Indian Act. My own experience after hearing various ministers introduce bills throughout the years on the subject of Indian claims makes me more sceptical than the hon. member for York-Scarborough as to the nature of the shining light of policy which may be expected to come from the present minister. I recall a bill being introduced with considerable fanfare on this subject in 1963. First reading was given on December 14. In due course the bill reached a stage where consideration was to be given to its terms in consultation with the Indian people. Well, Mr. Speaker, a bill supposedly based upon the results of this consultation was introduced on June 21, 1965—and it was identical in all important respects with the one which had been introduced in 1963. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) refers to the need to deal with Indian claims, but I suggest that if we are going to seek once again to deal with these claims in terms of either of the bills introduced in 1963 or 1965 we might as well forget about the whole idea.

Something much more fundamental is needed. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said we were dealing, now with a different ball game, and this is the thought which has been going through my mind. The sweep of events in the last few years has so outdated any action contemplated so far by this parliament that we really need to begin all over again, though I realize this is scarcely possible. I should like to remind hon. members of a plan for dealing with Indian claims which was put forward by my hon. friend from Skeena (Mr. Howard) and myself at the time the bills to which I have referred were under consideration. We advanced the idea that the claims commission should, as it were, belong to the Indians—that it should work for the Indians by presenting their claims; that it should not leave in Indian hands the work of marshalling the necessary evidence, and so on. Such a commission would constitute a real step forward in the context of the realities of the situation today.

Some hon. members may recall that when dealing with the two former bills my hon. friend for Skeena and I attempted to present a substantive amendment on second reading, one which reversed the concept of the commission set out in the bill. Instead of the commission being an agent of the Crown it would be a court of Indian claims, one which would, as far as possible, lie beyond the control of the Canadian state; one which would as far as possible be an international tribunal. I remember arguing that such a court should be headed by someone other than a Canadian, by some judge with an international reputation, in order that the commission might operate in the spirit of the United Nations charter and might constitute a recognition that our encroachment upon the land and sovereignty of the Indian people is something for which we were prepared to compensate. It was my contention then that the flow of events was passing parliament by. Since then, the things that many of the Indians have been doing tend to make courses we have advocated in the past less relevant to the situation.

I am prepared to say now that the concept of the commission for which the hon. member for Skeena and I argued in 1963 and 1965 is less relevant today than it was then. If we could get away from a judicial atmosphere altogether it would be more in keeping with the spirit which the Indians themselves are showing today. If the minister were prepared to come forward with a policy statement making it clear that the government intended to establish a commission which would represent the Indians as their agent when dealing with the government and with the Parliament of Canada, then I would hope that in a spirit of mutual goodwill the concept of an international court of claims might become superfluous, and that we could reach, as it were, a man to man settlement with the Indian people which would settle this issue once and for all.

I am glad that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), in opening the discussion today, took an approach which I feel is essentially in agreement with the one that I am advancing. I also felt that there was the same basic attitude and approach to this question in the speech made by the hon. member for York-Scarborough, and I am glad of it because I think that there is a genuine desire on the part of members in all parts of this house, in the words of one of the speakers this afternoon, not to allow this issue to become a political football. I think that there are many members in the house who sense that we are dealing with something that is at the very core of our future self-respect as a nation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Barnett: I was about to conclude, Mr. Speaker. I was going to say that I think the last time there was any real sort of breakthrough in dealing with the whole matter of our relationship in this parliament and our relationship as a Canadian people to the Indian question was in the work that was done by the parliamentary committee in 1960-61. Some of the more practical aspects of the recommendations of that committee have been dealt with, at least in part, and some of the transformation that has taken place since that time stems from the work that was done by that committee. I really feel that since then, apart from some more or less satisfactory programs in such fields as education and housing, there has not been any breakthrough in the thinking or attitudes as reflected in the policy statements of the government or in the decisions of this parliament.

I hope that we are on the verge of a breakthrough in this area at this time. As I told the minister frankly, although I am a bit sceptical I am also genuinely hopeful that as and when he makes his statement, to which various people have referred, it will be the kind of statement that can be applauded by members in all parts of this chamber.

Mr. Robert Borrie (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I thank you and I also thank my colleagues for their moral support. I rather wished that my maiden speech had allowed me the opportunity to extol the many attributes of the constituency I represent, Prince George-Peace River, but because of the importance of this debate I am sure my constituents will support my contention that an issue concerning people deserves priority, a view which many hon. members share.

Problems and the direction of their resolve by official and unofficial bodies is so complex and divergent that there is a danger of Indians, Eskimos and whites alike losing sight of the over-all objective. Constructive dissent is necessary and desirable, otherwise consultation meetings would not have been initiated by the government. We have listened on two occasions in this house to criticism that consultations were a farce, were engineered, were controlled and were expensive exercises in futility. I consider such comments as destructive and political.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Borrie: Consultation meetings have allowed members of this house, indeed all Canadians, to hear the grievances of those persons most concerned with the administration of the Indian Act, that is the Indians themselves.

It is not possible for all meetings to be successful in the eyes of all participants or observers. We have all attended conferences or meetings of one kind or another when we felt elated that much had been accomplished. We have also experienced that let down feeling when we wondered what prompted our attendance. To expect elation from each consultation gathering would be naïve of both the participant and the observer.

The meetings were not controlled. It has been suggested that the discussion booklet "Choosing a Path" prepared by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development directed the dialogue to a predestined goal. The brochure was prepared as a guide and a tentative agenda. Surely, it is common sense to pattern a procedure.

At the Prince George meeting it is recorded that Mr. H. Pierre of the Stuart-Trembleur band asked whether the meeting must follow the booklet or whether reference could be made to anything in the act. Mr. Boys, regional director of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, said that the delegates were free to refer to the act or the booklet or to present their own ideas. Unfortunately I was unable to attend the five days of discussion, but again going by the record and from my personal observation I know that the subjects discussed strayed considerably from the prepared guide.

Non-Indian concern for the rights of Indians has been a long time in the making. Our society's inherent virtuous manner will not allow us to accept our responsibility without looking for an excuse or for someone to shoulder our guilt.

Criticism is levelled at the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Accusations could be tolerated if we were not required to examine the record too closely. Certainly, some errors are evident, but in dealing with the subject objectively, compassion and common sense is frequently exercised in tempering the stringent regulations of the Indian Act. Considering some of the human resources, both white and Indian, with which the department has had to work, it is surprising that there are any signs of progress at all.

White society established an act that was originally designed to protect Indians. Some bands required and desired protection, but others did not. Unfortunately, all were treated alike. The same situation appears to be the case today. In presentations at consultation meetings some bands indicated that they want to go the entire way to autonomy, while others suggested partial authority and the balance did not want change.

In consideration of the desires of Indians, I suggest that the act should be flexible so as to accommodate specific regional administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Borrie: The act must be amended to provide for the natural right of self-government to return to Indian communities their pride in self-reliance.

Many Indians and whites in coming up against the legislative regulations of the act have been badly bruised by their own people and by the rules. They have contributed toward awakening our conscience and should be remembered for their individual stand. However, the courage of those who remain within the ambit of the act to work for the change and development of their people is much to be admired. Laws cannot be changed by immovable confrontation. Conflict of ideas, tenacity of conviction and proof make for reasoned revision. It may take longer to proceed in an orderly fashion, but in the end the results are more firmly entrenched.

I have some problem in approaching the matter of education properly because I am unfamiliar with the content of the proposed white paper. I feel, however, that hon. members should be made aware of the concern of Indian parents and students. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is in the process of phasing out residential schools and entering into educational agreements with provincial governments. Concern is quite high for the type of facilities to be made available in the province of British Columbia. As you may be aware, Mr. Speaker, integrated independent schools in British Columbia receive no financial assistance from the provincial government; they are self-supporting. Indian parents are of the opinion that the basic policy of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, which is, and I quote, "to purchase the services of provincial and territorial school systems for all elementary and secondary school Indian and Eskimo students as soon as possible", means that their children must attend the public school system, or if they attend an independent school that they will be required to pay all fees themselves.

During the hearings of the committee, we received assurance from the deputy minister that Indians would continue to receive financial support for children attending independent schools. I suggest that the question of Indian education be examined closely. I would not like to see a basic policy or an act of this house be misinterpreted by administrators.

As the house will note from the report of the Indian affairs committee, members of the committee are cognizant of the role education will play in bringing about more equitable treatment for Indians. To assist all members in their assessment of present and future policies, I would like to draw their attention to the testimony of Mr. Walter Currie, president of the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada and assistant superintendent of supervision, department of education, Toronto. His testimony appears in the minutes of proceedings No. 28 on pages 963 to 1001. I suggest all members read it carefully.

During the last debate on Indian affairs, the minister stated that provincial governments must accept responsibility for Indians as they do for non-Indians. I adhere to that principle also. Acceptance should not mean that they move from one special status to another special confining status. There must be complete equality. Non-Indian communities have a responsibility to share in the loosening of restrictions on Indians. We cannot place the entire problem at the feet of Indian agencies. Legislation may provide equality, but people must make that legislation live.

Legislation should be the tool for directing the many programs to aid Indian-Eskimo development. It should not be a crutch for the native or non-native communities. The Indian Act does not prevent the employment of natives at current wage or salary rates; they are locked out by prejudice and by lack of understanding. Businessmen may employ Indians and Eskimos without the approval of the minister or regulations under an act.

Will an amended act provide jobs? I doubt it, Mr. Speaker. Is it also easier for charitable persons to devote a few years of their lives to bringing medical care, education, employment opportunities and to the general raising of living standards in far off countries than it is for them to direct their energies to helping our own native peoples? I am aware of the motivation and I do not wish to detract from it, but when we evaluate the shortcomings of the Indian Act we must not let it cloud the evaluation of our own social and business conscience.

In considering the third report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, we may justly assume that members of the committee have had their work cut out from the very beginning. I am sure we anticipate a large volume of work to arise from the forthcoming white paper, but the greatest task all hon. members have before them is to advise the non-Indian community that an amended act is not a crutch. We must all strive to ensure that Indians and Eskimos gain and maintain their rights to full citizenship as citizens, not as instruments of regulation.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of discussion this afternoon about the Indians and their problems. Nothing was said against them. I have indeed nothing against their problems and I sympathize with them. There is an Indian reserve in my constituency. I would add that, while travelling across Canada, I did notice that those people are experiencing problems. Many things have been said on this subject and I do not want to go over them.

I will deal with a new problem now under review which concerns the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, namely national parks.

I will deal with this new problem because my Conservative colleagues and myself frankly do not understand exactly the government policy on this subject.

[English]

The former Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development spoke optimistically of a program to establish 40 to 50 new national parks by 1985. The new minister, in a burst of enthusiasm, has expanded this figure to 60 by 1985. In this we wish him well. But we must also add a—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I am sorry I must interrupt the hon. member. However, with the consent of the house, the hon. member might be allowed to speak on national parks. After careful consideration of the motion introduced by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), I do not think national parks are referred to, and unless the hon. member is granted unanimous consent by the house to speak on this subject, he will not be authorized to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Comeau: With respect, Mr. Speaker, as I read the motion it says "relating to the consideration of estimates of the department". It is for that reason I want to talk about parks, because the report includes all the votes of this department.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on the same point of order? In doing so, I should like to support the position taken by the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau). Although we have been discussing Indian affairs all day, the motion relates to the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Therefore, anything covered in the estimates of that department is surely germane to the discussion of the motion that is now before the house.

Mr. Chrétien: Go ahead. There is unanimous consent anyway.

Mr. Comeau: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, in his proposal to establish 60 new parks by 1985, we wish him well. But we must also add a realistic footnote to this problem and remind the minister that since 1885 only 20 national parks have been established, of which only two have been added in the past five years. Furthermore, the present park system creates the anomalous situation whereby 94 per cent of the national parks' area is in western Canada, where only 26 per cent of Canada's population lives. I am not saying this critically; rather I wish to point out the necessity for parks.

As we all know, an agreement was reached a few weeks ago giving Quebec its first national park. Ontario's six million people are served by only three small national parks. All of this indicates that we are desperately short of national parks. Couple with this shortage our tremendous rate of urbanization and increased leisure time, and the whole situation takes on almost crisis proportions.

• (9:20 p.m.)

There is no doubt that national parks are necessary and I need not overemphasize the point. The people need them more and more.

Working hours are being increasingly reduced. In brief, people want to enjoy themselves. They want to observe nature, they want to relax a bit. Bar-B-Q is now a household word.

One only needs look around in the stores to realize that picnic equipment is in great demand.

[English]

We realize that the creation of a new park is a cumbersome and difficult economic and constitutional process. Negotiations between the federal and provincial governments are difficult because usually the province must first acquire the land that is to be dedicated and then turn it over to the federal government without encumberance in perpetuity. The provincial government then obviously relinquishes all claims to the property, including any claims to mineral rights. That is the present position as we understand it unless, of course, there have been proceedings that this house has not been told about or that the minister has kept secret.

Provincial governments in the past have been very jealous of their rights and hesitant about surrendering land under these absolute conditions, their reluctance stemming from the fact that they may one day decide that the development of mineral finds with timber stands is more lucrative than any esoteric benefit to be derived from an outdoor recreational facility and the concomitant revenue generated by increased tourist traffic. The demand for compensation on the part of provinces for their lands is often an insurmountable problem. There is here, of course, an important question of jurisdiction. Canadians who frequently take advantage of the existing parks are beginning to see the results of these federal-provincial stalemates as overcrowding begins to spoil the beauty of these areas. Lack of facilities makes the park areas unattractive.

By 1985 five times as many people as today will be trying to use these existing facilities. Will the facilities be sufficient to accommodate them? We sincerely hope that the government will not continue in its present delaying fashion to wait for an overwhelming outcry of public opinion before being spurred into action because by that time it may be too late.

I have alluded to the urgency of this problem. There is one further aspect to which I wish to direct my attention and the attention of the minister. That is the question of the over-all policy considerations with which the minister guides his negotiations. These considerations are relevant to our discussion this evening because of the recent agreement that was concluded with the government of Quebc.

[Translation]

I want to say, in all sincerity, that we are proud of the announcement concerning the establishment of a national park in Gaspé but we are concerned about the policy of the department or the government with regard to this new project.

[English]

We welcome the announcement of the creation of the first national park in Quebec. Nevertheless, because of the manner in which the park was established we must raise certain questions. We do so in the spirit of ensuring that our system of national parks will not be weakened by a too flexible approach to the negotiations. Canadians must be sure they know what is happening. We must ask, then, what the present policy of the government is with respect to national parks. Has the Quebec agreement signalled a change in policy? If it has, what is this new policy? If it has not, what is the government proposing to do about other provinces which are not willing to turn over the necessary land without encumbrance in perpetuity?

Mr. Gibson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon member is now launched on an interesting but irrelevant discussion about our parks. I submit he has completely forgotten Indians and is therefore clearly out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. Just a while ago there was unanimous agreement which gave the hon. member the right to talk about national parks. The hon. member is reviewing a report, and that is in order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Go home. Go to bed.

Mr. Comeau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am about to conclude my remarks. At this time I should like to reiterate our great concern about the government's sluggish reaction to this critical problem. The difficulties in creating a national park anywhere in Canada today will be increased many times over if the current inaction continues. The future preservation and development program of our wilderness areas is simply too vital for the future of Canada for it to be subjected to a vacillating and leisurely policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the minister will be able to tell us, once and for all, whether the most recent decision represents a change in policy. I know that the minister wants to say a few words tonight. It is now 9:30 and in closing I would just say that when making decisions we should not irritate the other provinces.

[English]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take a few moments of the time of the house in order to take part in this debate which has been, generally speaking, very enlightening. It has touched on Indian affairs and northern development. Most hon. members who spoke made a worth-while contribution. Only a few adopted a partisan attitude. After the first speaker in the debate, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), had completed his remarks the house settled down to an orderly discussion of Indian affairs and did not attempt to play political football with the Indian people. Generally speaking, if one ignores the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River, this has been a sound debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chrétien: The problems of the Indian people in Canada are most serious. Immediately after being appointed Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development one year ago I tried to find solutions to these problems. I looked at the problems and got in touch with the Indian people of Canada. Last July we launched a series of consultations and for the first time in Canada's history Indian people in Canada were able to really participate in the elaboration of a new Indian policy. The results of the consultations were by no means perfect. The format of the meetings has not been perfect. At any rate, the meetings gave the Indians a chance to express their views. We discussed all aspects of the Indian situation in Canada and, after 17 meetings across the country, we had the last meeting in Ottawa about a month ago. There the representatives of all Indians of Canada put forward their views to the public and to the government of Canada.

The time has not come, Mr. Speaker, for the government to respond. As I said in the house not long ago, that response will be ready soon. We shall have a new policy on Indian affairs and I will announce it in the house before the end of this session.

Mr. McGrath: When?

Mr. Chrétien: I think that next week I will be in a position to make that statement.

Mr. McGrath: Why not make it tonight?

Mr. Chrétien: Because we must be courteous to our Indian people and because, being more courteous probably than the hon. member would be if he were in government, I wish to distribute the relevant documents to the leaders of the Indian communities so that they have them in their hands at about the same time as hon. members here have the contents of the documents. Also there must be an opportunity to have the text of the document printed, and it will take a few days before it is ready. We decided after a year of consultation that it is time to offer to the people of Canada, including the Indians, a new policy. We have heard from the Indian people that they are proud and are willing to take their future into their own hands. They want to make more decisions.

• (9:30 p.m.)

There has been a certain pattern existing in Canada for over 100 years. We feel we have to make many changes. Personally, I feel quite frustrated most of the time because of certain situations. For example, when Indians wish to borrow a few thousand dollars from C.M.H.C. they are obliged to get the signature of the Superintendent of Indians of Canada, who happens to be myself, before they are able to get the money they need. This is the sort of thing that requires change. We have to permit the Indians of Canada to make more decisions at the local level. The policy of Indian affairs to be tabled next week will reflect this attitude of the government.

Today, we heard about the problem of Indian treaties. I have said many times that we intend to respect all aspects of these treaties. However, there are some problems. We must find the mechanism to permit the Indians to know what their rights are. A significant aspect of our last consultation was the establishment by the Indians of Canada of their own committee to study their treaty rights. I think this step will have a great influence on the new policy that has been established and will be made known next week.

I do not wish to take too much time of hon. members by commenting on the Indian policy because this will be made known next week. We think this policy is the best approach to permit the Indians of Canada to be economically and socially equal to all citizens of Canada and at the same time be in a position to keep their own traditions of culture which they have had in Canada since before the white people came to this country.

I will not refer to all the points raised by hon. members in the house today because many of these have already been dealt with in committee. Hon. members asked questions regarding education, housing and other matters. Most of these questions were answered by my officials or by myself when we appeared before the committee.

I want to thank all hon. members who have participated in this debate. I wish to assure them we will not overlook any of the proposals they have put forward today. We intend to make a complete and objective review of the Indian policy. This is one of the most difficult social problems that we have in Canada. These problems should not be approached on too much of a political basis, but in the spirit of proving to the first citizens of our country that we are willing to offer them a new deal in a Canadian society.

I would now like to deal with a point raised by an hon. member regarding employment. I wish to inform the house that we have offered summer employment in my department to all university students of Indian origin. The department has hired 87 of these students. We made certain we had a position to offer to every student of Indian origin who cared to apply. I feel this is a very good response from the Indian population.

Many other matters were discussed by members of the committee. I wish to refer to the speech of my good friend, the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) regarding the territorial waters of Canada.

[Translation]

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin has explained the situation very well.

Of course, the problem is quite serious, but I want to reassert here that there is no question at this time about the sovereignty of the government, of the people of Canada over the North, the Arctic Islands and the northern continental shelf.

The only unsolved problem is the territorial waters problem, which is most complex and cannot be solved easily and unilaterally. There are territorial waters problem in all parts of the world today, and as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has pointed out so ably in his statement of May 15, 1969, we must be careful and act in such a way as to ensure the maximum protection to Canadians, without for all that infringing upon international jurisdictions.

I wish however to thank the hon. member for his very positive contribution which will certainly help the government assess the situation. He showed that he has thoroughly looked into the subject and that he was very concerned with the problem. I must assure him that the government too is very concerned with the matter, all the more as now, because of the fantastic development in the North in the past few years, in connection with the potential development of oil and mining resources, it is extremely important that Canada resort to every available means to retain for itself and its citizens control over resources and the access to resources.

• (9:40 p.m.)

[English]

With your approval, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) touched on the problem of national parks. The government has committed itself to an effort to establish more national parks in this country. The hon. member said that in the last five years we had established only two national parks. If I may be permitted I wish to point out to him that in the period from 1957 to 1962 when his party formed the government not a single new national park was set aside for the benefit of all Canadians.

Personally, I am happy to see that the people of Canada are beginning to realize it is important to set aside land for national parks for use by future generations. I accepted the hon. member's contribution to the debate and the spirit of conservation in which he made it. I point out we must be conscious of the fact that in 15, 20 or 25 years from now there will be a great lack of land available in North America for recreational purposes.

As I say, the government is willing to establish more national parks but we need the collaboration of the provincial governments to do so. We have established two national parks since the government took office, and I am glad to mention that in a few weeks from now we will have a new national park on the west coast of Vancouver Island. I would publicly like to thank the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) who, as the former Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, was the main initiator of the movement that will bring to Canada probably what will be the best coastal park in North America.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: Would the minister permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes.

Mr. McGrath: In keeping with the mood of the house and the minister's own very generous mood, could he tell us what is the position at the moment with regard to the second national park on the west coast of Newfoundland, a project that has run into some difficulty with the government of Newfoundland?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I was coming to that point because I want to show the hon. member that we are concerned and that we are proposing to have more national parks in the future. One of them will be the second national park in the Bonne Bay area of Newfoundland. I have spoken about the new national park on the west coast. We are negotiating with other provinces about more national parks.

I was happy with the talk I had the other day with the Premier of Saskatchewan, who is now ready to permit the government to go ahead with the establishment of another national park in that province. I hope that in the weeks and months ahead we will find agreement on other national parks in Saskatchewan. We are working to establish another national park in Manitoba, and lately we took steps to establish the first national park in Quebec. May I say I am very surprised that the opposition questioned that move. Through ARDA we have achieved a plan to have Quebec's first national park established. We were flexible in our approach. We were not too flexible. In the past we made special arrangements with other provinces. We were obliged to make a special arrangement in B.C. because of a particular problem. I do not think the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) would disagree with what I am saying.

We had a special problem in Quebec but through the ARDA agreement we have succeeded in establishing a national park there. We have stated in this house that this was a particular case and that we do not intend to proceed in the same manner in the future. I think the people of Canada are happy that for the first time we will have a national park in Quebec. You know, Mr. Speaker, it will be a great contribution to the development of the tourist industry in that part of the country. It will be one of the most fantastic parks in Canada, and will be very good for the province of Quebec.

At present we are having some discussions with the government of New Brunswick to establish another national park in that province. We are proceeding quite rapidly, but I do not know when I will be in a position to make a definite announcement. However, I found the government of New Brunswick very easy to deal with.

Mr. Gilbert: What about Ontario?

Mr. Chrétien: We have three small national parks in Ontario and we are having some discussions with the province right now. We are not progressing as fast as I would like in Ontario, and I think the members from Ontario should raise hell if they want more national parks in that province. I need some backing in order to achieve that. I hope the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) will help me achieve that goal.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should simply like hon. members to realize that, at the present time, visotors to national parks are increasing at the rate of 15 per cent every year. In the United States, where there are 250 million inhabitants with more and more leisure time, they just cannot handle all those who wish to visit the national parks. As a matter of fact, there is such a big demand that people have to wait for hours and days to visit the parks.

In view of the fact that it is still possible for us to put aside those big green spaces for future generations, it is my opinion that we should act now, for, in 25 or 50 years from now, it will be too late.

[English]

I forgot to mention that we are negotiating to establish three more national parks, two in the Northwest Territories and one in the Yukon. The people in those areas are generally receptive to the idea, and in the gallery tonight there is the mayor of Fort Smith, who is a great advocate for national parks in the Northwest Territories.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. minister in his trip to the national parks but his time has expired.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will not take up too much of the time of the house. I have explained the situation about national parks. I touched on the situation in the north, but I forgot to refer to the problem raised by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) about the statement on development in the Northwest Territories. It is not yet ready, but I hope it will soon be ready. I will not tie my hands by trying to specify any date, but lately we have made great progress in cabinet on it and I hope soon to be in a position to make a statement. However, it may take a few more days. I can assure members of the house that we will have a new policy that will permit the people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon to participate more in the administration of their own affairs to determine the quality of their own lives. I hope to make that statement after tabling the white paper on Indian Affairs.

In conclusion, I wish to thank hon. members for their contributions to this debate. It was a very worthwhile one and we received good advice. The spirit of the debate was not partisan. I hope members of the house will retain that mood in the future.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, in the brief minute left at my disposal I would like to say that we are all looking forward with great anticipation to next week when the minister is going to be forthcoming on matters about which he has been asked for many months. I would say to him that despite how hard he has tried and how much he has listened, it will take a great deal of effort on his part and a great deal of compassion to compensate even in part for the grievous, egregious errors made for many years in the administration of the affairs of our Indian and Eskimo people.

I speak as one who has no Eskimo constituents and whose Indian constituents in terms of quantity are negligible. But I was impressed by many things in the report. I thought the reference to Arctic sovereignty was one of the most pusillanimous statements I ever cast my eye upon. I noticed also the reference to unemployment among Indian and Eskimo people. I say to them, and about them, they are suffering from a malaise that is affecting the whole of Canada today, especially the young students.

In particular I accept the minister's invitation to raise hell about national parks. He talked about Ontario, Saskatchewan and New Brunswick. I would like to remind him that for many years discussions were undertaken by his predecessor with the government of the province of Prince Edward Island in reference to a national park there. I am sure that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), a man of excellent judgment, splendid taste and a real feeling for this country, will understand that there is land available in Prince Edward Island, that gem of tourist attractions; that area par excellence for tourists. I may say, with a burst of utmost unselfishness, that this is so because it is not even in my constituency. I say to the minister that it would be a fine thing if he and his department would move more rapidly in their discussions with the province of Prince Edward Island to establish a park in the eastern part of the province. I see the minister nodding in agreement.

Our province, with its somewhat restricted tax base and its narrow range of industrial capacity, has as its most expansive and most expandable industry, the tourist industry. The Dominion Government could do a great deal by developing a second national park there to provide facilities comparable to those now provided for nearly a million visitors who come to the national park which is located partly in my constituency and partly in the constituency of my friend the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean). This is why I am so unselfish. Here we could do something that would enable the people of Canada to see the beauties of this garden province.

In my gentle way I do raise a little hell with the minister, to use his rather off-expression which no Prince Edward Islander would use. I urge him to exercise a little alacrity in discussions with the province of Prince Edward Island in respect of one of the few areas in which we can expand our economic base, namely tourism. This will offer an injection of substance, support and encouragement, and I urge this upon him with all the sincerity at my command.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some amazement tonight to the attack by the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) on the parks policy of this government. The hon. member must be living in a never, never land because here is the record. Members know of the proposed parks in western Canada, in British Columbia, the west coast of Vancouver Island and the Long Beach area—one of the scenic highlights of the whole nation. In Saskatchewan we have proposed parks in the vicinity of Val Marie and on the South Saskatchewan. In Manitoba there are parks in Flin Flon and the Bloodvein River area. There is going to be a park in northern Canada, and that project is now under discussion. There is a park proposed for the Newfoundland Bonne Bay area. I could go on and on to give proof positive. We could go into the Gaspé and New Brunswick and consider the Kouchibouguac area, and I hope I am pronouncing that correctly. In Nova Scotia and a park in the East Point area.

This all is proof that the minister has demonstrated a keen appreciation of the need for a comprehensive and diversified parks system in Canada. His predecessor also made a distinguished contribution to the parks policy of this country. Some people nurture the mistaken notion that there are millions of acres of undeveloped land in Canada, and they dismiss the need to set aside on a systematic basis additional park reserves at the national level. This theory is nonsensical. I am glad to acknowledge in the house that the minister appreciates this fact. In no sense does Canada possess unlimited recreational resources. The total area per capita in Canada appears large but over 80 per cent of the land is poorly accessible northern tundra and non-productive forest.

It is encouraging to note that the minister does not aspire to being a defender of the status quo in respect of park policy. Regardless of the criticism which has been directed at him—perhaps indirectly by the opposition—he is perhaps better aware than any of us that a recreation explosion lies ahead, far beyond the numerous demands for recreational facilities we have seen in recent years. The population growth, the rise in individual and social mobility, the increase in urbanization, the increase in personal income and the increase in leisure time available are going to bring increasing pressure on our resources of recreation.

For every person using Canada's recreation land in 1960, there will be four people using the same land in the year 2,000 A.D. This is not a doubling, this is a double doubling. Some 10 million people are going to visit our national parks each year, and some 50 million people will visit these parks each year by the year 2,000. This will mean a five-fold increase from now until the year 2,000.

The argument is advanced that in economic terms the value of our parks is open to question. More than ever we are going to witness a struggle between those who see in all lands, wherever they may be located, an economic resource measured purely in terms of extractive riches, and those who see in our national parks a heritage of immeasurable value which must be preserved for all generations. I find myself in agreement with the latter philosophy, and I know that the minister is in agreement as well. This encourages us.

Even in economic terms, the year 2,000 may see Canada's parks and our wilderness area as being the most valuable resource in this nation.

Some hon. Members: Faster, faster!

Mr. Perrault: I support, as I hope members in the opposition will support, the acquisition of two or maybe three national parks per year to complete Canada's basic parks system by 1985. We have to get busy to reach that goal. I am encouraged by the fact that the federal government is showing strong leadership in this field. Too often local and provincial governments are under high-handed pressure to commercialize provincial and local parks. If the federal government fails to provide leadership and to make sure the wilderness areas of our parks are kept free from commercial development, then no one is going to protect this heritage.

I congratulate the minister for the dynamic leadership he has given in this field and I know he enjoys the support of all members in this house, regardless of party.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the house that pursuant to Standing Order 58 (11), the proceedings on the motion are considered to have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—QUEBEC—ASSISTANCE TO PREVENT BANKRUPTCY OF FARMERS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, on April 29, 1969, I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) a question in which I requested assistance to prevent bankruptcy among some Quebec farmers.

Mr. Speaker, at no time in its history has the province of Quebec experienced the application of such a weak and unsteady agricultural policy as the one it is subjected to at the present time.

In that region where I live, the Eastern Townships, farmers are leaving the land at an alarming rate. In nearly all the parishes around Lake Megantic and in parts of the Compton constituency, there are parishes where at least six farmers, on a weekly average, abandon their farms. This is a disaster unheard of before. This is certainly attributable to the agricultural policy even though much was expected from this policy which did not materialize.

The government's dairy policy is resulting in disastrous consequences for the farmers. This policy is forcing a great number of producers to abandon their farms.

The minister did not tell the farmers the whole truth when subsidies were granted and his policy is now producing terrible and irreparable damages.

For instance, subsidies for a 100,000-lb. quota of milk would be worth $990, or 99 cents per cwt. The penalty for shipping an additional 50,000 pounds would be $260, that is 52 cents per cwt. This penalty of $260 should be deducted from the net subsidy granted for a 100,000 lb. quota, which would reduce the subsidy to $730. Therefore, it is really a penalty, because it contributes directly to reducing the net subsidy.

All this is frustrating, especially the policy, on account of its great rigidity toward progressive producers. In other words, it strikes more directly the farmer who wants to increase his production and to improve the use of his resources.

This is detrimental to efficiency in the dairy industry.

The situation is disastrous in the province of Quebec and I believe in the whole of Canada as well, because a policy of punishment cannot succeed. In a way, punishment is meted out to the farmers who wish to increase their production. At one time, the government was asking the farmers to extend their holdings in order to make their operations more economic, today they are punished for having done this.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Not only the small farmers who produce less than 50,000 pounds of milk leave the land but also those who produce 150,000 and 200,000, although for many reasons, they would be in a better position to survive from an economic point of view.

First of all, the cost of machinery is too high. Secondly, too many taxes plague the farmers. They have to pay too many taxes and they pay too much for their machinery. In such circumstances, they cannot do well.

Whatever things the Minister of Agriculture may do or whatever plans he may devise, they prove useless and are no solution to the problems of the farming industry.

We all know that when farmers are well off, the country is prosperous because the farm people are the greatest consumers.

Farmers are the greatest consumers in the world. They have all kinds of needs in various fields and they are responsible for keeping Candian industry going. They ensure the prosperity of the cities and give work to many people in Canada.

So, if we do not encourage agriculture, if we allow it to go slowly to the devil, the rest of the people will also go there.

Never in our history have we experienced such an indifferent, such an unwholesome policy as this one. The minister will say that the government is spending millions for this and that, but most of them are spent on administration. Not much goes to agriculture—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased to answer the question put to the Minister of Agriculture.

I would have thought that the hon. member who asked it had some idea of the conditions of agriculture in the province of Quebec. But, in his seven-minute speech, he convinced me that he has no solution to the agricultural problem, and what he said is not true to the facts, or the figures we have.

Now, through the policy of the Department of Agriculture, all farmers are going to hell. I feel that if they were administered by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe), they would not be going to hell, they would already be there.

To prove how wrong he was in his arguments, here are some figures.

The gross revenue of the province of Quebec amounted to $621 million in 1967 and rose to $635 million in 1968. Considering the net revenue of farmers in 1967—and those are figures that the hon. member for Compton can easily get—I see that $93 million have actually been taken from the net income of Quebec farmers, and that amount went up in 1968 to $209 million, for an increase of $16 million.

If the hon. member had had to deliver his speech on milk production without his notes, I do not think he would have been able to quote any figures, since he did not seem to understand at all the quota situation.

The government has perhaps been criticized by some provinces for having granted too much assistance to the Quebec dairy industry. Some of his colleagues who made the trip with the agriculture committee, heard similar comments in almost every Canadian province, but he himself says that the assistance given is not sufficient.

I do not know whether he has consulted with his colleagues, or at least the one who knows agriculture for having himself been a farmer.

Insofar as milk is concerned, production is on the increase—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING PENSIONS OF RETIRED EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on page 8901 of Hansard of May 21, the record reads as follows:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Now that the minister is obviously well established in his new department—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —is he in a position to report on a matter about which I questioned him the first day he took office? What progress is he making in his consultations with Canadian National Railways about increasing the pensions of its retired employees?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that I am not that well entrenched in my department yet, but I am working on it.

For my money, that was a pretty good beginning for the minister. On Friday, June 13, I questioned the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) again as to what progress he was making, and he admitted that there had been some brief consultations and he hoped to have something to report in a matter of days. Whereupon I suggested this might be a good subject for him and me to discuss some night on the late show. So, here we are.

I am sure the minister will not mind if I say in public that we had one of those conversations in the hall a day or so ago in which he asked me whether I had any idea how many times I had asked questions about pension matters, whether about old age pensions, or veterans pensions, or pensions of retired civil servants, and I admitted to him that it could be hundreds, or perhaps even thousands of times; I had no such record. But I want to say to him tonight this is not what matters. What matters now is finding a man of action to get started on this issue.

I do not need to make the case again. The case has been made so often for the right of retired people to keep up with the cost of living and their right to share in increased productivity. The needs of these people are admitted by all. The problem is becoming more acute as time goes on, as people live longer, as inflation gallops a bit faster, and recognition of the fact that something must be done to increase the pensions of those who are already retired is now widespread. It applies, as I have tried to make clear, to pensions of all kinds. It certainly applies to old age pensions in general. It applies to people on private pensions and it applies to people who have retired on federal pensions—to retired civil servants, retired members of the Armed Forces, retired members of the R.C.M.P. and so on to the group we are talking about tonight, retired employees of Crown corporations and of the C.N.R. in particular. I say a case has been made. The need is there. What is required now, is action. The need is to get started.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

I like the appearance, the image the minister has created. Since coming to the Department of Transport he has given the impression of a man who wants to do things, who wants to solve some of the problems, to get moving.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Some day, soon, somebody will have to start the ball rolling in this matter of getting pension increases. Some institutions have done so recently—private corporations and others. I do not know which department will start first in the government—whether it will be to the benefit of the retired civil servants, the C.N.R. pensioners or others. But to show the minister I like him I am giving him the chance to make the start with the C.N.R. retired employees. Yes, the others will have to follow soon—the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), the Solicitor-General (Mr. McIlraith), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux), the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). But I say to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson): you have the chance to start this, and make a name among retired employees of the C.N.R. and retired people generally. I hope tonight you will accept the challenge.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I feel reasonably certain that the hon. member who has just spoken will not be one of those who will have to worry about a retirement pension because I suspect he will be around and active for much longer than those for whom he is showing such concern. However, if it should happen that he does formally retire, and the most impressive record of his work in this house is made public, he will be known indeed as a champion of the elderly and of those who find themselves in a difficult position today.

I only wish it were possible for me to do as he suggests and declare flatly that something will be done about this particular group but, as I am sure the hon. gentleman knows, having raised this matter on so many previous occasions, the complex nature of this question is such that it is exceedingly difficult to solve by taking care of one segment at a time. Let me say most emphatically—and I hope he will accept this in the sincere manner in which it is said—that I share his concern for these people.

I feel this concern particularly when I think of the many fishermen in my own constituency who do not even have the kind of pensions which many of those about whom he is concerned are able to draw on as a basis on which to build other income. So I say to the hon. gentleman, as I suppose he would expect me to say, that it is the responsibilty and the duty of government to look after all elderly and retired people. While we have not perhaps done as much as my hon. friend would like—indeed, we have not done as much as I would like—I think the record over the past few years has been a reasonably impressive one. The position today is a far cry from even a few years ago when the total was $25 or $30 a month. Even the pensioners about whom the hon. member speaks are, for the most part, I expect, in receipt of the general old age pension, and some at least have the benefit of a portion, if not all, of the supplementary pension. So their lot is, in some respects, better than that of some of the citizens to whom I refer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is still poverty.

Mr. Jamieson: I cannot agree more with the hon. member that is far from adequate. But I am sure he also realizes that while this group has had a good deal of attention in terms of increases in the old age pension, we do wish to do more; and I believe that we will do more. However, as stated in the house very recently—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—LENNOX COUNTY, ONT.—PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF FARMERS IN EXPROPRIATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I bring a matter before the house tonight as a result of a question which I asked last week of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) pertaining to the expropriation of certain lands in the second concession of Richmond township in the county of Lennox and Addington, on both sides of the C.N.R. railway main line, consisting of pieces of contiguous farms owned by six resident owners along a length of track of more than a mile. Here, the C.N.R. is expropriating enough land on either side of their present double track right of way to construct a passing siding on their side, the one on the south side to serve the eastbound services and the one on the north side to serve the westbound services of the new proposed automatic central traffic control system which will go into effect in the near future on this important and busy railway.

The first and main point that I wish to make this evening is that the railway, with its lopsided privileges of expropriation, is not being fair to these farmers. First of all, they are offering agricultural prices for the land they require—that is, only $500 an acre—but at the same time they are using the land for industrial purposes, and industrial purposes of national importance as well. Industrial land in and around Napanee, which is in my county, is selling for as high as $1,500 to $2,000 an acre.

At first this railway was a single track line. Then, in the early 1900's it was a double track. Now, in the area where these six farms are located there will be four tracks. Up until now the former 19th century conditions have been tolerated. With the advent of this new system, with its high speed trains, unless proper facilities are provided by the railway these farms, as paying propositions and economic units, are doomed. At the present time there are 16 passenger trains per day operating on this line, plus the four new turbo trains which will soon go into service, together with freight trains both day and night. The railway has not acceded to any request of the farmers for cattle and produce passes underneath the tracks for the safe handling of dairy herds, other livestock pasturing on the opposite side of the railway, and for the safe handling of crops of grain and hay.

Not only is the railroad reducing the value of these farms but it is seriously inconveniencing their future operations. In refusing to construct underpasses for cattle and transportation of agricultural products the railway will endanger the lives of the operators and their livestock and threaten the safety of their equipment. Surface use of this right of way under the proposed conditions will be a very hazardous proposition. Only two weeks ago a farmer whose farm lies along the same railway line 35 miles east in the Joyceville-Gananoque area lost 13 head of very valuable dairy cattle when they were killed by a train as he was frantically trying to drive them across the right of way over two tracks; and here in Richmond township I am referring to four tracks.

This is now one of the busiest railways on the North American continent. It is reported to me by more than one of the land owners that often less than a minute elapses between the first sight of a train and its passing at the point of observation. This is particularly true when referring to eastbound trains. Although the right of way is fairly straight it has a grade with a horizon that limits westerly visibility in direct proportion to gradient and horizontal distance.

There are several other grievances in connection with this case that I can only briefly list and to which the farmers must have an answer. They include: (1) loss of two good wells for watering livestock; (2) the diverting of a natural water course by the C.N.R., namely, Brandon's creek where it crosses the property of Mr. Lipsey, which will be to his disadvantage and will reduce his remaining arable land; (3) the obstruction of crossings by trains in the sidings for extended periods each day.

• (10:20 p.m.)

As the minister knows I have been in touch with him by letter. Also, I have communicated by telephone with the manager of real estate for the C.N.R. in Montreal. Representations have also been made on behalf of the farmers by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. I ask the minister, as I did in my question of June 11, will he see to it that the economic and human rights of these farmers in Lennox country, whose land is about to be expropriated for railway industrial purposes, are protected and defended.

This matter of expropriation with no assurances or commitments on the part of the railway is most vexing, exasperating and discouraging for these farmers. I recall that many years ago it was trouble between a railway and the farmers of the state of Kansas—the railway disregarded the rights of the ordinary man—that caused Jesse James to turn to a life of revenge and crime that sent him to his doom as an outlaw.

Although the farmers of Richmond township whom I represent are vexed and frustrated, they are not going to pursue the course which Jesse James chose. The farmers of Richmond township are good Canadian citizens interested in the progress of all Canada, just as much as they are interested in their own progress. All they want in this instance is a fair deal. I appeal to the minister, to the Department of Transport and to the real estate department of the C.N.R. to reopen this case, to give consideration to these land owners and to reassess values pertaining to the land itself as well as drainage problems; the safety problem; the question of cattle and produce passes; the loss of water supply and the diminished value of farms resulting from the widening of the railway. I respectfully request that, for this to be accomplished, an experienced and qualified agronomist who is acceptable to the farmers and the railway be appointed to mediate and adjudicate this case in a manner that will be fair to all parties concerned. The decision of this arbitrator, of course, will be final. I communicated with the real estate department of the C.N.R. in Montreal by telephone this afternoon and I believe they are agreeable to having this problem mediated. Mr. Speaker, in the interests of the just society, here, hopefully, I rest the case with you.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in view of the hon. member's most eloquent representations, not only on this occasion but on previous occasions when he has drawn this matter to my attention, representations on his behalf and on behalf of all these farmers have been made to the C.N.R. It is, of course, a decision for the C.N.R. to make but I have been very happy to urge them to follow the course which the hon. member has suggested. As he was advised this afternoon, I believe, the C.N.R. has now agreed to the appointment of an independent agronomist who will examine the whole picture. His services will be engaged to carry out an in depth study of the entire farm operations of the farmers affected and the total amount of damages which farmers have suffered due to their having to cross the wider railway right of way. He will also express his opinion as to the sum of money required to be paid to each farmer. I hope as a result of this action the matter can be resolved in the interests of the farmers who, I quite agree, have a genuine problem.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 20, 1969

The house met at 11 a.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate has passed the following bills without any amendment: Bill C-183, an act to establish the Export Development Corporation and to facilitate and develop export trade by the provision of insurance, guarantees, loans and other financial facilities, and Bill C-195, an act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton) presented the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I point out that this is a report of the Liberal members of the committee only. It does not have the support of any members of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Order.

TARIFF BOARD—TABLING OF REPORT ON BINDER AND BALER TWINE

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies in English and in French of the report of the Tariff Board respecting binder twine and twine for baling farm produce, reference No. 142, together with a transcript of the proceedings at the public hearings held by the board.

This report contains the results of a study of the economics of the binder and baler twine industry in Canada, both from the production and consumption points of view. I assure hon. members that the report will be carefully and urgently considered by the government. In this connection I trust that any interested parties who wish to comment on this report will let me have their views promptly.

REVISED MAIN ESTIMATES 1969-70

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting revised estimates of sums required for the service of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1970, was presented by Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the house.

STATEMENT BY MINISTER FOLLOWING TABLING OF REVISED ESTIMATES

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the estimates for 1969-70 include a loan to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited of $10 million under Vote L20 for the financing of the purchase of Canadian-produced heavy water. Following the tabling of these estimates, it became evident that there would be no heavy water produced in Canada this year. It was therefore necessary for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to make commitments in the United States for the purchase of the heavy water it required.

In order that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited may use for the purpose contemplated the funds requested in Vote L20, it is necessary to revise the wording of the vote by removing from it the limitation contained in the words "Canadian-produced". This course, it should be noted, was recommended by the Standing Committee on Natural Resources and Public Works in their report tabled on May 30, 1969.

Under these circumstances, I have assumed that the house would not wish this revised estimate to be referred to the standing committee. The revised estimates as tabled today make this revision to the wording of Vote L20.

Cash Advances to Western Farmers

• (11:10 a.m.)

GRAIN

ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING ELIGIBILITY OF FARMERS FOR FULL INTEREST FREE CASH ADVANCES

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In view of questions which have been asked, particularly yesterday, I wish to inform the house that under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, farmers will be eligible for full interest free cash advances in the new crop year, even though outstanding advances may not have been fully repaid.

It is estimated that $65 million will still be outstanding on July 31 and as deliveries will not be sufficient to enable many grain farmers to retire these advances, the government has decided they will be eligible for the full advance when the new crop year opens August 1.

Mr. Speaker, this decision means that producers will be entitled to advances of approximately $65 million more than would have been the case if advances in the 1969-70 crop year were reduced by the amount outstanding from the current crop year.

This will have the effect of providing western grain producers with advance payments in respect of both their 1968 and 1969 crops based on a six bushel quota. Thus, those farmers whose delivery opportunities have been limited this year will be able to obtain an interest free advance which will provide them with operating funds, and their entitlement in the new crop year will not be impaired.

As hon. members will recall, last November parliament doubled the maximum advance available under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act from $3,000 to $6,000.

During the current crop year some 92,000 producers have received advances totalling approximately $153 million. Advances are repaid as producers deliver grain to country elevators, and at present outstanding advances amount to about $90 million. Under the old legislation the previous highest amount advanced was in the 1960-61 crop year when some 76,000 producers obtained advances totalling $64 million.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): In commenting on the minister's statement and in particular on the decision to allow additional interest free cash advances to prairie grain farmers, I think it is only fair to say that this represents merely an advance on payments which would be forthcoming to farmers had they sold their crop. In taking the action now contemplated, the government is admitting that it has failed to sell the farmers' crop.

There is something else I should point out. This cash advance arrangement applies only to wheat, oats and barley. We are trying to encourage farmers to diversify their production. These interest free cash advances will be of benefit to farmers on a short term basis only, and only to farmers with a large acreage. It will not help the specialized farmers, particularly in the irrigation areas, because of the limited acreage farmed. They will not help those farmers who are trying to help themselves by diversifying production. At best they amount only to short term assistance, since, as I say, they represent advances on grain which will have to be sold to the Wheat Board, and when it is sold the cheques paid to farmers will be docked by the amount of the advance.

So this does not really help; it will not bring about any relief of the desperate position in which farmers find themselves; it will not encourage farmers to diversify, and it will not help farmers who are using their knowledge and the technological advances available to them to make better use of fertilizers and irrigation.

At best this is a short range policy that is really not much help at all. If this is the final and only help that the farmers can expect from the government this year, then I am certain they will be discouraged. But I should like to think that it is not. I should like to think that the government has more than this in its barrel of tricks to bail the farmers out of the desperate situation in which they find themselves.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the minister for sending us in advance copies of the proposals that he has put before the house. I note he mentioned that they were, in part, answers to questions that have been posed, among which was the question whether we were or were not going to achieve a five bushel quota at all points. I sincerely hope that the statement of the minister does not indicate that he and the government have been forced to recognize that it is possible that this objective will not be reached. I hope that is not the situation; but if it is, then we are in desperate straits indeed.

In addition we are awaiting an announcement of government policy. These proposals are, at best, a stop gap, and not a very good stop at that. Some questions are left unanswered. For example, when may the farmers expect to be paid the remainder of the advances for this year? How long are they going to wait? Also lacking is an indication of a real, forward looking policy for our grain farmers which will let the farmers know what they may expect in the future.

We have already been waiting for one year for this kind of statement. The farming organizations, the federation and the unions, have given the government some possible approaches. I hope the government will consider them soon, because the farmers of western Canada are waiting to know what lies ahead for a reasonable assessment of what might be expected. They cannot live in limbo forever, borrowing money that will eventually have to be repaid.

These are the sort of questions which must be answered, but no answer is yet forthcoming from the government. The farmers are heading into more debt and uncertainty. The worst feature of all is that there does not yet appear to be a recognition by this government that the grain farms of western Canada just cannot operate with a five bushel quota, or even a six bushel quota. The government must recognize this, and work out and develop alternative courses of action, as well as devise a sales program to meet the problem.

• (11:20 a.m.)

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, once again, I wish to congratulate the western farmers. With regard to wheat, it seems that it is always the same thing. I welcome the statement, even if I heard the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) say that it was not enough and that more should be done.

If the hon. member were in Quebec, he would see that there is nothing at all there. In my opinion, it is better to have a little than nothing at all—I speak of these interest free loans—because I can see that western farmers will benefit again this year from interest free loans, up to $65 million. I think—

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Pepin: I believe it is necessary to correct this statement immediately. They are not interest free loans but loans on which the government is paying the interest. There is a difference.

Mr. Gauthier: I am most happy, Mr. Speaker, about the minister's remarks, for I was just going to say that it was without interest to the farmers or to the consumers and that the government, in order to protect financiers, was going to pay them interest, because it does not dare face them.

Mr. Speaker, I say that the farmers welcome those interest free loans.

The government is making itself the financiers' servant, and, therefore, must protect them; but I say that it must continue to grant interest free loans and apply this policy to every province, not only to the Prairie provinces, because Quebec farmers also need interest free loans for their main product which is milk.

We sincerely approve the government for applying some Social Credit principles which allow for interest free loans. We would like it to abandon its devious ways and go directly to the Bank of Canada to make interest free loans, as it has done for other countries.

I congratulate the minister on his statement with regard to western farmers and I am anxious for the day when similar assistance will be granted to Quebec as this would be of great help in promoting unity in Canada and doing away with discontent in Quebec.

Some assistance was granted the other day to the Maritime provinces. The government is becoming aware of the need to solve some problems on the regional level rather than on the national one.

When they want to help Quebec, they pass legislation for the whole of Canada. It is said that regional legislation is necessary, as the one that applies to the Prairie provinces, and we heartily wish, for the sake of Canada, that the interest free loans policy will also apply to Quebec.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GRAIN

INQUIRIES RESPECTING ANNOUNCED INTEREST FREE CASH ADVANCE PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister or the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—to whichever minister it is appropriate to address my question. Does the proposal announced a few minutes ago by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce constitute the carrying out of the program announced by the Minister of Agriculture in the Financial Post or has the government any other measures in mind which it will announce shortly?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture did not make any announcement in the Financial Post.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Olson: I had discussed in this house everything contained in that article before it was printed. The announcement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce does not claim to be a complete solution to the problem but is, nevertheless, another and additional measure which this government has introduced in order to be helpful in the situation.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister were to answer our questions directly he could save a good deal of the time of the house. Does the minister or the government propose in the near future to announce additional measures along the lines of the announcement or, as a result of the minister's Financial Post interview, is this the extent of the program the government is to introduce?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, when I spoke in the house two or three days ago I outlined 12 measures, not all of which had been introduced during the present session, that the government has brought in to be helpful in this situation. The announcement by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce today perhaps constitutes the thirteenth measure that we have introduced to be helpful. It would not be wise to announce now what additional measures will be taken because we have to watch the situation to see what is appropriate, depending on the conditions.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I assume from that long answer that this is always in mind, at least at the present time. Can the minister who made the announcement in connection with the repayment of cash advances made in the current year, that is to say, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, tell the house when these will be repaid? The minister has announced that any plans will not restrict cash advances in the ensuing year; can he tell the house when the cash advances made with respect to the current grain year will be repaid?

Hon. Jean Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, they are being repaid now. I said that $90 million is still due at this time. The amount left at the end of the year will be $65 million. The new cash advance payment will simply add to what will still be owned by farmers who are not in default at that time. It is a question of adding new loans on top of those which will still be owed at the end of the year.

Mr. Stanfield: Would it be correct to assume that any cash advances made this year, but not repaid at the end of the crop year, will have to be repaid over the quota next year in addition to the repayment of any cash advances made next year with regard to the quota?

Mr. Pepin: That is right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): In view of the fact the legislation specifies that anyone who has not repaid his cash advance by December 31 will be considered to be in default, can the minister advise this house if this provision will be overlooked at the end of December this year, in the event of any number of farmers not having repaid the cash advance obtained in the previous crop year?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, there is a difference between being in default and not having been able to discharge one's obligations to deliver the grain when called to do so.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The regulations now state that on delivery 50 per cent of the cash advance will be returned to the government. What suggestion has the minister got in this regard, for the repayment? Would it be over the 50 per cent? The minister stated that the cash advances carried over from this year and added on to next year will have to be repaid in the next crop year. Is that correct? How is the minister going to get that repayment if he still takes only 50 per cent of the amount delivered?

Mr. Pepin: There is no change from the way their payments are being made at the present time. The same situation exists under the present system.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to explain the differentiation between being in default and actually owing part of the advance. If a farmer, because the government has not been able to secure markets for wheat, is unable to sell his wheat by December 31 of this year, will he not then be in default and be denied any advance such as was outlined here today? I wish the minister would go into detail because the difference between owing and being in default is difficult to understand.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, all the experts here understood what I meant. I presumed the right hon. gentleman was a wheat expert. I am surprised he does not know the difference between a farmer being in default and a farmer not being asked to deliver his grain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Any time the minister can teach anyone in this house about wheat, it will be a new day, because he does not know anything about it himself.

Mr. McIlraith: He just did.

FINANCE

UNDERTAKING BY MINISTER TO MAKE POLICY STATEMENT ON U.S. TAKEOVERS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Canadian Investment Dealers Association and the Toronto Stock Exchange have initiated a study into the effects of the foreign takeover of Canadian financial institutions, may I ask the minister how soon he will be able to make his promised statement as to the action the government contemplates with regard to this matter, and will he be making that statement prior to the house adjournment next week?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very encouraged by the steps taken by the stock exchanges and the Investment Dealers Association, after consultation with my officials. With respect to my statement, I will be making it next week before the house rises. I am prepared to make it now but the Governor of the Bank of Canada is out of the country and I want to consult with him before I deliver the statement.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As a supplementary question may I ask the minister if he has any indication that there are further takeovers of Canadian financial institutions in prospect, and does he intend to take legislative action, if necessary, to prevent such takeovers?

Mr. Benson: I have no personal knowledge of any such prospective takeover.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Broadview has a supplementary question.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that Laura Secord has regained her Canadian citizenship, would the minister protect other Canadian corporate citizens from losing their citizenship by imposing a 30 per cent takeover tax as proposed by Mr. Gordon?

Mr. Benson: All I can say is, good for Laura, and I have no intention of imposing such a tax.

INDICATION OF INTENTION TO REFER STUDY OF INTEREST RATES TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I think it was last Friday I asked him if he would consider referring to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs the question of constantly rising interest rates, despite immense profits being made by the financial institutions in Canada, and he said he would give this serious consideration. In view of the fact that the Banking Committee of the House of Representatives in Washington has already begun investigating this question, and since interest rates in the two countries are closely tied may I ask the minister if he is in a position now to tell the house whether he has reached a decision on the question of referring this matter to the standing committee?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I intend to do it.

Mr. Lewis: As a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether he can possibly do it before the house rises for the summer recess, and will he also provide that this committee may meet during the summer, in view of the fact that a delayed investigation would not be very helpful?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would intend to make the reference before the house rises. As to when the committee meets—that of course is not up to me: It is up to the committee.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPBUILDING

CANADIAN VICKERS—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

As the minister stated yesterday that the federal government could do absolutely nothing to prevent Canadian Vickers from closing down, and as 40 per cent of the nation's unemployed are to be found in Quebec whose economy is seriously affected by the lack of specialized industries, would the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce be willing to co-operate with that company so as to put its production on a competitive basis?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have already done so. We have helped Canadian Vickers to rationalize its operations. We have, if I remember well, given a little over $1 million to Canadian Vickers to develop the industrial sector of its operations so as to transfer some workers in shipbuilding to another type of activity and, in fact, quite a number of them have been transferred.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask another supplementary question to the minister.

Since the measure he has just mentioned is proving ineffective because the threatened closing of Canadian Vickers still hangs over us, can the minister tell the house whether he intends to request the government to nationalize the company?

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to point out that there are 1,000 workers in industrial production at Canadian Vickers and that this sector which offers new opportunities did not exist a few years ago.

WATER RESOURCES

INSPECTION BY U.S. GROUP OF CANADIAN FRESH WATER POTENTIAL

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) who answers in this house on water resources. In view of the fact that an official of the Department of Mines, Energy and Resources is accompanying the group who are presently touring Canada inspecting potential sources of fresh water which could be tapped to supplement inadequate sources of fresh water in the United States, is it the intention of the government, by giving official recognition and aid to this mission, to help the United States to achieve its objective of tapping Canadian fresh water sources?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as is so often the case with the hon. member I think I have to say again that I do not accept the bulk of the statement he has made in asking his question, but I would like to assure him that in any look at Canadian water resources Canadian interests in that water will be completely safeguarded by this government.

Mr. Hees: Then, as a supplementary question, what is the purpose of giving encouragement to this group, who are looking over potential sources of fresh water, by sending an official of the government with them on their trip?

Mr. Drury: Have you ever heard of hospitality, George?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I don't put that interpretation on any such travels.

AIR TRANSPORT

SERVICE OF AIR LINE PILOTS UNDER CONDITIONS OF FATIGUE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Are officials of the Department of Transport still giving permission to air line pilots to fly passenger aircraft up to as much as 150 hours a month?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take that question as notice. I do not know the particular circumstances to which the hon. member is referring. So far as I am aware the circumstances are as I outlined them to him previously, and I would doubt very much if any such permission is being given. However, if he would give me the details I will be glad to look into the matter.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does he regard as significant the apparent result of recent collective bargaining in Toronto whereby plumbers, working a 37½ hour week, will evidently be paid some $136.62 more per month than members of parliament?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

LEGISLATION INCORPORATING U.S. AND CANADIAN AUTOMOTIVE AND TIRE FEATURES

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport arising out of his comprehensive statement a few days ago on automobile safety. In light of the fact that his department is paying great attention to safety tests being made on tires in the United States, can he assure the house that Canadian programs will be undertaken as well, due to the very different tire needs here in Canada, especially for wintertime conditions?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peddle: As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that jurisdictions between the federal and provincial governments have finally been clarified can the minister assure the house that the long needed legislation regarding auto safety will be introduced in parliament this fall?

Mr. Jamieson: I cannot give that specific undertaking. However, it will be done as quickly as possible.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a further supplementary to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister guarantee to the house that the safety devices used on Canadian cars will be co-ordinated with those used in the United States, so that cars manufactured on either side of the border will have the same safety regulations?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a necessity in such a program.

FORESTRY

RELAXATION OF REGULATIONS COVERING IMPORT OF FIRE FIGHTING AIRCRAFT

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Have the regulations regarding importation of aircraft into Canada been amended or relaxed in such a way as to enable the forest fire fighting authorities of British Columbia to bring in all the water bombing planes they require or can procure from the United States to meet an emergency situation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I am not sure whether any such request has come to us, but if it does I can assure my hon. friend we will expedite as fast as we can any needed amendments so that the planes can be obtained.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—NEGOTIATIONS WITH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT RESPECTING CREDIT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

During the stay of the committee on agriculture in Quebec City a meeting was held at the Château Frontenac during which no Molotov cocktail exploded, but where the provincial Minister of Agriculture advised us about the possibility of a federal-provincial agreement on farm loans under which important changes would be made.

Could the minister tell us whether negotiations are under way and if so on what?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the representatives of the government of the province of Quebec, as well as others, have made representation to the federal government to amalgamate, if that is the right word, the operations of the farm credit agency in the province with the federal government. We take the position that the F.C.C. has been a very useful organization for the farmers and should be uniformly applied across the country.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of his statement that representations, as well as some studies are being made, could he tell the house whether or not a report dealing with the findings of those studies will be tabled in the house for the information of hon. members?

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not want the hon. member to have a misunderstanding of what I said. I said we had received representations. I did not wish to imply that studies were under way.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TESTING OF PESTICIDES IN SUBSTITUTION FOR D.D.T.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like if I may to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. It arises out of the fact that he indicated the matter was under active consideration. In order that agriculture will not be deprived of very necessary pesticide controls, can the minister state whether alternative chemicals are on test which might replace d.d.t., should this chemical of necessity be withdrawn from legal application?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the specifics or indicate the chemicals concerned, but if the hon. gentleman would like to send me the specific names of them I would be willing to make a check to find out what the department is doing and what conclusions they have reached to date. Certainly I think the hon. member can take it for granted our department does in fact test both in so far as the health hazard is concerned and, in so far as is possible, the efficacy of these chemicals.

WATER RESOURCES

POSSIBLE DIVERSION OF CANADIAN WATER TO U.S.

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the minister acting for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the statement Thursday, June 19 emanating from the planning branch of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources will the minister take the house into his confidence and tell us the nature of the study of the water resources which his department is either undertaking or has commissioned.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I know the specific statement that is being referred to but I will look into the matter.

Mr. Noble: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the so-called thirsty American states want our water only because they have so badly polluted their own plentiful supplies, will the minister assure us categorically that his department is not making studies and plans for the diversion of Canadian water supplies to the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question in its present form is not acceptable.

[Mr. Olson.]

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—CHURCHAID AND CANAIRELIEF DAYLIGHT FLIGHTS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that Biafra has accepted the Prime Minister's suggestion and has agreed to permit daylight relief flights, will the government consider offering assistance to both Churchaid and Canairelief?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasure Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the fact of prospective daylight flights alters the situation under which we prefer to channel our aid through one agency. I think this probably makes it more effective.

Mr. Fairweather: In view of the fact that the agency through which the government channels our aid is no longer carrying out this function, does this not place a responsibility on the government to look for an alternative source?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is argumentative.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

APPEAL FROM MANITOBA BROTHERHOOD SEEKING DECENTRALIZATION OF DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I am aware of the reason for his absence today, but I believe an acting minister is present. In view of the urgent appeal that has been received by the minister from the President of the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood urging that the department decentralize its economic development programs, may I ask whether the minister will take this appeal into consideration when he makes his statement of policy next week.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I know the minister has this matter very much in mind and I will bring the submission to his attention, so that he can make the statement next week.

TRANSPORT

"S.S. PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND"—WITHDRAWAL FROM FERRY SERVICE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the able and articulate Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jamieson: He wants a new ferry service.

Mr. Macquarrie: May I ask the minister whether he has received a request from the government of Prince Edward Island for assistance in providing for a gracious and useful retirement for the dowager queen of all Canadian rail and car ferries, the S.S. Prince Edward Island, and if so has he found a way to give tangible evidence of appreciation of this fine ship's half century of service?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker; I have had some submissions. We are now studying ways to assure that the dowager's bottom is kept completely in order.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ATTEMPTS TO SOLVE INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT PROBLEMS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce relative to his statement earlier this day with regard to proposals to alleviate the short cash supply of western farmers. My question evolves from the answers he gave the hon. member for Crowfoot and myself several weeks ago, before the Standing Committee on its tour across Canada, with regard to the international world wheat agreement. At that time he stated that some of his officials were working with their counterparts in the United States in an effort to try to iron out some of the difficulties. Can the minister indicate whether there has been any success along these lines?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. There is to be a meeting of the wheat council next week in London. The prices review committee is to meet too, but I cannot give any assurance with regard to the difficulties to which reference has been made; they are still continuing.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, is the minister prepared to consider the invitation I extended to him and the Minister of Agriculture to attend the meeting of farmers of the Peace River country? I assure him I will be there for their assistance.

Mr. Pepin: I would like to know the answer of the Minister of Agriculture first.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—LAY-OFFS AT DOCKYARD

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister say whether he has taken any action regarding the serious lay-offs at the Canadian National dockyard at St. John's?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I have brought this to the attention of the C.N.R. and I am seeking leave to put further ships in there. I have nothing further to report.

Mr. Carter: Would the minister consider diverting some of the bottoms from his department to the dockyard at St. John's, to keep it busy during the summer?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO RETURN OF MINISTER FROM SCANDINAVIA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can we anticipate the presence in the house on Monday of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and can we expect to hear from him a statement concerning the purpose of his recent visit abroad, and what was accomplished by that visit.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be in the house on Monday and expects to make a statement about any relevant aspects of his travel to the Scandinavian countries.

THE LATE EARL ALEXANDER OF TUNIS

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT FUNERAL OF FORMER GOVERNOR GENERAL

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Malpeque concerning arrangements for the funeral of Lord Alexander. It appears that the funeral will be held on Tuesday, June 24, St. Jean Baptiste day, at St. George's Chapel in Windsor. The Canadian government will be represented by our High Commissioner and the Chief of the Defence Staff, General Allard. I have also asked Mr. Lester Pearson if it is possible for him to act as my personal representative at the funeral.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

EXTENSION OF ZONES TO CONTINENTAL SHELF—STOCKHOLM DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the desirability of convening another United Nations law of the sea conference to win international approval for the extension of exclusive fishing zones to the edge of the continental shelf, is this one of the matters under discussion with other countries by our roving Secretary of State for External Affairs?

TRADE

LOGS—MAINTENANCE OF BAN ON EXPORTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry? Since some of the large lumber companies in British Columbia are alleging that the curtailment of production is due to a shortage of logs, can the minister assure the house that the ban on the export of logs from British Columbia is being maintained and will continue to be maintained, according to the minister's earlier statement, until September 1, when it will be reviewed?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I can give the hon. member that assurance, Mr. Speaker. This ban, which is in the nature of a voluntary ban, has been effective to the point that there are now no requests outstanding from the companies for logs to be exported.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister inquire and ascertain whether the ban is being fully complied with? If not, I ask whether the government is prepared to exercise the authority it has to refuse export permits for logs until such time as domestic requirements are fully met.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the export of logs has dropped sharply. It was 29 million board feet in March, 5 million board feet in April, and my information is that it was negligible in May.

WHEAT—POSSIBILITY OF GREATER SALES AND INCREASED QUOTA

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In answering a question I asked him a few minutes ago with regard to the repayment of cash advances, the minister indicated that these advances would be repaid in the next crop year. Since this suggests we will need a seven or eight bushel quota at least in the next crop year, was the minister's statement based on the possibility of the government's selling more grain?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will have to say, Mr. Speaker, that we will cross our years one by one.

[Translation]

VIOLENT DISTURBANCES

QUEBEC—POSSIBLE INTERVENTION OF R.C.M.P.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Has the Quebec government requested the assistance of the R.C.M.P. in order to control the disturbances now taking place in Quebec City?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Solicitor General that he has no definite information in this regard. However, if the hon. member so wishes, inquiries can be made.

[English]

AIRPORTS

TAXI SERVICE

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the serious concern and financial difficulties being experienced by taxi owners, other than those associated with Murray Hill, in that they have to return empty after delivering passengers to Montreal and some other international airports, would the minister say whether he is taking action, or has done so, to alter this policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think this is a matter that might be considered at the time of adjournment.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DIRECTOR GENERAL OF GATT

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): May I call your attention to the presence in the gallery of Mr. Long, Director general of GATT, accompanied by two of his top officials, Mr. Lewis and

Mr. Lucq. I am sure the house will appreciate their visit to Canada.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

TRANSPORT

YARMOUTH, N.S.—DOCKING FACILITIES FOR FERRY SERVICE

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Did the minister meet yesterday with the Minister of Trade and Industry of Nova Scotia, and can he assure the house that the docking facilities at Yarmouth will be ready for the proposed new ferry?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did meet with the gentleman in question, not yesterday but the day before. The discussions were fruitful, but we have not reached the point where I can say specifically that the requirement the hon. member has mentioned can be met.

POLLUTION

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING COUNCIL TO PARALLEL THAT IN U.S.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. A few weeks ago I asked whether he would consider following the practice that is going to be carried on by the President of the United States in personally heading the environmental quality council aimed at eliminating pollution in the United States. The Prime Minister was kind enough to say he thought it was a good suggestion and would give it consideration. I wonder whether as a result of that consideration he has decided to head such an anti-pollution council in Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our cabinet system is a bit different from that of the United States. We have cabinet committees looking into this matter, and they report to cabinet. At this stage I feel this kind of co-operation between departments is sufficient. If at a later stage we find we should have a wider council, perhaps involving the public, this of course will have to be done in consultation with the provinces. We will consider that if it becomes necessary.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Prime Minister not noticed that in addition to the President heading this council, the Vice-President and all the senior members of his administration are to sit on the council? Does the government not think that pollution is sufficiently important to warrant its being tackled in this way?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The supplementary question appears to be argumentative.

Mr. Hees: I think the Prime Minister would like to answer, Mr. Speaker. Will he have a go at it and see what he can do?

Mr. Speaker: The answer may also be argumentative.

POSSIBLE BAN ON USE OF NON-RETURNABLE BOTTLES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mention has been made of the problem of pollution. I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether representations have been made to him by the Federation of Mayors to ban the pestilence of non-returnable bottles, which number over a million per day and cost the Canadian people a great deal of money for disposal thereof. Is consideration being given to the banning of this type of bottle and will such consideration require co-operation on the part of the provinces, or can it be done directly by the federal authority, as the Association of Mayors indicates?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may say in answer to the first part of the question that I have no knowledge of such representations having been made to me or to my office, but I can inquire about it.

My reply to the second part of the question is that I suppose the hon. gentleman knows the answer as well as I do. It is possible that the federal government, through resorting to the Criminal Code, could ban the bottles, but it is not very likely that it would resort to the use of this power.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the Prime Minister in a position to say whether a study is being made of the alternatives to placing a ban under the provisions of the criminal law, because the disposal of these bottles constitutes a serious menace and costs this country a great deal of money?

Mr. Trudeau: It seems to me that pollution, in this instance land pollution, would come under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments. The federal government, except through recourse to the Criminal Code, cannot act on its own, and I do not suggest that any consideration is being given to finding ways in which we could act. However, when we come to discuss the water act the opposition will realize that there will be indications that in some instances we plan to resort to the provisions of the Criminal Code. We hope however that, in the initial stages at least, we will always act in consultation with the provinces. If this system works, we might extend our regulations from water pollution to land pollution, as has been suggested.

AIRPORTS

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE—USE OF JUMBO JETS AT NEW INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In reply to a question asked on June 18 concerning the spending of $500 million on an airport to service aircraft which may not even go into service the Minister of Finance said:

If we do not have jumbo jets we will have supersonic jets.

In view of the fact that neither the Department of Transport nor the C.T.C. have approved of supersonic planes flying over Canada and landing here, would the Minister of Transport say why Air Canada has placed an order for supersonic planes at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Skoberg: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I placed this question on the order paper and received an answer, but I would like the situation clarified. How can Air Canada place an order for these planes if permission has not been given to their operating in Canada?

TORONTO—LOCATION OF INTERCITY JET FACILITY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Transport whether he has had an opportunity to consider my request that he make a statement to the house with regard to his position on the proposed intercity airport in Toronto. Has he had an opportunity to consider the matter, and will he make a statement in the next few days?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I have considered this question, Mr. Speaker, and am pleased to tell the Leader of the Opposition that I will be very happy to make a statement in the house if time permits, or to arrange a briefing for anybody who wishes to know the full story behind our whole rationalization plan for southern Ontario in this regard.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since the house is sitting overtime in an effort to clear up government business prior to the proposed recess, would the Prime Minister consider having it sit next Tuesday? I ask this question because apparently the Prime Minister is not going anywhere and we will be stuck with him here.

PENITENTIARIES

FEDERAL PRISON AT MILLHAVEN—ACTION TAKEN TO MEET CRITICISM

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the genial and gracious Solicitor General. Is he concerned about the constructive criticism that has been made concerning the new penitentiary at Millhaven, which will replace Kingston penitentiary? If so, what does he intend to do about it?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General is concerned about all criticism of new institutions being built for the penitentiary service. He studies all such criticism and takes the appropriate action indicated by each piece of criticism and his evaluation of it.

Mr. Gilbert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Just what action does the minister intend taking with regard to Millhaven?

Mr. McIlraith: Just which criticism is the hon. member referring to, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gilbert: There have been so many criticisms that probably the minister has difficulty in differentiating among them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRIVILEGE—MR. NESBITT—OMISSION OF NAME FROM DIVISION LIST

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to refer to an apparent omission in Hansard of June 5 last, and I draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that this was drawn to my attention for the first time only this morning, and that so far I was unaware of it. I refer Your Honour to page 9764 of Hansard of June 5 last to point out to Your Honour that on that day a question was asked by myself of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). Shortly after orders of the day a vote was taken on the Income Tax Act, and at page 9779 of Hansard of that day there was a record of those who were present in the house, and how they voted. My name is omitted from that list, but I assure Your Honour that I was present in the house when the vote was taken and I voted against the government's proposal for the 2 per cent surtax.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member was kind enough to give me notice of his question of privilege, according to the rules. I assure him that the matter will be looked into and the necessary correction made in the official records of the house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to the day's business I wonder if, on a point of order, I could draw Your Honour's attention to the special order which specified that proceedings today should not continue beyond 6 p.m. There may be some doubt about the interpretation of the order passed a week ago today, but I believe I express the general consent of the representatives of the parties that it is understood that at 4 p.m. today the allotted day would be terminated and we would then return to government orders, for the remaining two hours today. Perhaps, if there is any doubt in that regard, an order could be made to that effect.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). Is there agreement to it?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I should just like to assure the house that the subject matter to be debated from 4 p.m. onwards will be the official languages bill.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe) moved:

That consideration be given to the third report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs relating to the consideration of estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs which was presented to the house on Tuesday, April 29, 1969.

He said: Mr. Speaker, since the opportunity has never been afforded to me before, I feel it appropriate that, first, I should take the time of the house to mention the Canadian participation in the 25th anniversary of D Day in Normandy, France, earlier this month. To those of us who returned to the beaches of Normandy after 25 years it was an experience that I wish we could have shared with all those veterans who were not afforded the opportunity.

Certainly—and I am sure I am speaking for my colleague on the trip, the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Smith) and the other members of the delegation—the experience was one we will never forget and one which filled us with pride. I feel very sincerely that we learned a valuable lesson in our association with the citizens of Normandy when renewing memories. That lesson is that the path to a strong international relationship and peace is to be found in the relationship with people, the ordinary citizens who suffered through wars and saw death and destruction for the cause of peace.

Those of you who were not with us will not be moved by our experiences when, for a few hours, we were infused with an emotional camaraderie which became so real again, even after 25 years. But it was real and our visit with the citizens of France, along with hundreds of veterans from across the length and breadth of Canada, recreated the feeling of sorrow at war and death, and the joy and laughter of reunion. For a few days in France, Canadians, whether veterans approaching the twilight of their careers or the youngest member of our Canadian forces who participated in the guard of honour to pay our respects to those who remain in the Canadian cemeteries, were welcomed with open arms as relatives who had returned to participate with citizens of France in the celebration of this occasion.

The lesson I learned is that international relations do not come about from talks around a conference table among members of governments. They happen and are created in the hearts and minds of people, people who know what suffering is and elect us to office to preserve peace. They do not happen by the threat of the pressing of a nuclear button by powerful presidents or prime ministers.

I should like to express my opinion of what I thought was a serious error in the planning of the trip. I refer to the failure to communicate the "tongue" of all Canada to those of all origins who participated in the many ceremonies to dedicate memorials and in the laying of wreaths to those who fell on D Day. Those responsible for delivering our message failed to deliver the message of a really full Canadian participation. This might be only my opinion but I wanted the young 18 year old soldier who took part to understand from his ambassador why his Canadian comrades of the same age died and lay in the cemetery instead of having been able to take part in the free Canada in which we are now living. I say this not to criticize but only because I know that those of French origin with whom I fought side by side 25 years ago and with whom I renewed valued friendships would want me to do so.

I therefore express the appreciation of all who participated in the Canadian delegation to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) and his staff and our thanks for giving us the opportunity to take part in an exercise which, outside the realm of politics, brought together in a sense of international participation a spirit of loyalty, patriotism and good will. Even though it came about because of war, I hope it will strengthen our will for and devotion to peace in the world.

In participating in today's debate I am fully cognizant of my responsibility as a member of this house to the most important segment of our population, the war veterans of Canada. In speaking on behalf of my party it is my duty to try to impress on the government of Canada their responsibility to our veterans in their consideration of the priorities with regard to the needs of this country, and to try to find the reasons why the needs of war veterans, especially those who are disabled or incapacitated, seem to hold a bottom spot on the list.

For the past four years, and especially in the last 12 months, this party has shared the concern felt by many thousands of veterans and their dependants throughout the land over the creeping paralysis of indifference which has been and is becoming more prevalent as to concern for those people of whom the late Sir Winston Churchill spoke in the early 1940's when he said, "Never was so much owed by so many to so few." It is easy to forget just what those words mean and to whom they referred, and to become involved instead in superficial issues which only cause controversy and discontent.

It is obvious where the fault lies, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it lies with the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Nor can I conceive that it lies with the hon. members opposite who sit with us as members of the Veterans Affairs Committee, especially those who are veterans themselves. Even if they wanted to do something about the problems I have in mind, their efforts would be stultified by the dictatorial attitude of the cabinet, an attitude which becomes more evident every day. The fault lies with the inner circle of this government, that group of a few toy soldiers who seem determined to destroy the stability of this country while in their dreams of grandeur they think they are improving conditions and bettering our relationships with other countries of the world. A good example of the position taken by the government is its attitude in ignoring the continuous pleas of both opposition members and their own members for consideration to be given to increasing veterans allowances and pensions in line with the increasing cost of living.

What do we get as an answer, Mr. Speaker? We get a shrug of the shoulders and the response that we cannot afford it, or an implication of that kind. We are told that if we increase pensions we shall have to increase taxes. We are supposed to believe this tale of woe by the leader of this country—the lame-brained excuse that in order to raise pensions for war veterans it is necessary to raise taxes. We do not have to raise taxes in order to increase the salaries of the Prime Minister's staff. Pretty soon there will not be enough room in the galleries for them, there will be so many.

We do not have to raise taxes to write off $125 million on the Expo debt with a shrug. We do not have to raise taxes to find millions of dollars for foreign aid. We can squander millions of dollars through lack of control in spending on the Bonaventure. We can ease tariffs to the extent of $80 million for the big motor giants without raising taxes. But when it comes to increasing modest benefits to the very people who are responsible for our being able to sit in this house and govern, who are responsible for the fact that 20 million Canadians are able to live in peace and comparative prosperity, the government has the unadulterated gall to tell the opposition and the nation that we cannot afford it.

I do not know what the 20 million people of this country believe, Mr. Speaker, but I do know there are 961,000 veterans who do not believe it. I know that the Royal Canadian Legion does not believe it, and I know that the war pensioners of Canada do not believe it. Neither do the Hong Kong veterans, the Army, Navy and Air Force veterans, the War Amputees of Canada, or the many other organizations which have submitted briefs to all Members of Parliament as well as to the Minister of Veterans Affairs pleading that the Woods committee report be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and wondering what happened to the white paper which was to have been produced.

The Woods committee report has been completed since March of 1968, well over a year ago, in both official languages; yet we continue to receive evasive answers to our questions about it and to experience procrastination covered by the excuse that it is being studied with care so that excellent results may be achieved. What kind of camouflage is this, Mr. Speaker? What is the government trying to hide behind? It is hiding behind priorities, its own narrow version of priorities.

The veterans of this nation do not want any handouts. They had the guts to fight and they have the guts to play their part in providing for themselves after years of sacrifice. They do not want to depend on anyone for a living, least of all upon the government. But there are many thousands of veterans who must look to us for help, even though they do not want to, because they had the misfortune to be disabled or incapacitated and cannot provide for themselves through no fault of their own. There are many thousands of veterans who have returned from wars, re-entered our society with a determination to catch up, and have become successful and prosperous. There are also many thousands of war veterans who, in addition to making their way in our society, have taken time to care for those who need support and guidance, realizing that they themselves might have been disabled. There are even veterans who, having taken their place in our society, have become Members of Parliament and sit on both sides of this house charged with the responsibility of governing for the betterment of all Canadians. Some of these good Canadians sit opposite, and I can understand their dismay and disillusionment at the attitude of the establishment in dealing with the needs of veterans.

The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs is one of the many committees that perform their duties without publicity and in an absence of controversy. It carries out its duties without fanfare because regardless of partisan politics its members are veterans in the main and have one purpose or objective in mind—to help their comrades who need help. They are willing to forgo attention because whether they are Liberal, Conservative, N.D.P. or Créditiste they have one thing in mind, the welfare of their comrades who defended this country of ours.

I feel it is appropriate at this time, when I am speaking about the contribution made by the veterans of Canada, to say something on the subject of national unity, because it is obvious that we in Canada tend to forget just what a solid base we have built in the word "Canadian". Here we are, with almost a year completed in the present session of parliament, and it is important that we look back to see what has been accomplished by the government in this area.

First of all, some of the inner circle went junketing to Latin America on a mission to improve trade and create good international relations. And after spending hundreds of millions of dollars, where do we stand? Why don't we ask the United States where they stand in Latin America after spending vast sums there? They cannot even send Governor Rockefeller there on a good will tour without fear for his life. I notice there are not too many members present on the benches opposite during our discussion of this important question of veterans affairs.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Marshall: We have lots of money for foreign aid, but we have no money for war veterans. They are laughing at us in foreign countries for our determination to help while five million of our own poverty-stricken citizens go without. I am reminded of the story told by a comedian on the Ed Sullivan show who said that the best business in the world today is the foreign aid business. "Just find an island", he said, "give it a name and then go to the United States or Canada and ask for foreign aid and you will get millions without any question whatsoever."

At this very moment we have Colonel Blimp away on a mission playing hide and seek with the communists in an attempt to enter into diplomatic relations with communist China, a country whose leaders continue to blaspheme the closest ally we have—I hope—the United States of America. This government of ours wants to extend diplomatic relations to a gang of warmongers who gave military aid to North Korea in a war in which thousands of Canadian soldiers lost their lives. Before the government becomes pals with Mao Tse-tung and his pirates I suggest that it consider the friendship of war veterans of this country who through their patriotism in the three wars of this century assured the peace which allows them to sit in glory and arrogance determining the fate of our nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Marshall: What did we accomplish for national unity with all the millions spent on centennial year, that year of celebration during a period when we find ourselves, owing to the actions of this government, faced by a split in dominion-provincial relations which threatens our future? Would it not have been better to celebrate our 100th year of confederation by providing centennial housing for veterans and centennial pensions for those who made it possible for this country to mark 100 years of national life? This would have been something we could always remember, something with a mark of everlasting remembrance.

I repeat that national unity does not come from secret meetings with premiers. It does not come from prodding and teasing through the press or by antagonizing and giving false promises. National unity is created by people, the citizens of this country. It does not come out of the throat; it comes from within the body. It lies in the hearts of every human being who wants to live at peace with his neighbours regardless of race, creed or colour. And it has developed through the loyalty and patriotism of all Canadians whether English, French or of any other national origin. It comes from the sacrifice of the war veterans who offered their lives to make it possible for us to make the mistakes we are making today in repayment of that sacrifice.

How do we make this inner circle realize the needs of this country? How do we make this group of conscientious objectors realize their duty to society? Certainly not by common sense or human reasoning. We must try to impress on them that they are availed of the opportunity to govern this country because of the sacrifice of those of our citizens who fought with distinction during times when the peace of our nation was threatened by Naziism and Communism. Yet we are flirting with exchanging ambassadors with this type of country.

There is not much to be gained by reviewing the specific issues at stake with regard to veterans problems. The minister is well aware of the excellent presentations forwarded by the various veterans organizations outlining in complete detail their observations on the burning issue of the moment—the 147 recommendations in the Woods report. For heaven's sake let us do something about the report so that we can increase the paltry pensions, as is recommended.

The cost of living is increasing, a fact recognized by everyone. Wages are being increased proportionately. I am sure not one member of this house can say, however, that a realistic appraisal has been made of the plight of the veteran and his dependants with a view to paying him a remuneration sufficient for him to live on. This, in effect, is the main basis of the veterans complaints.

I respectfully request the minister to try to impress upon the inner circle the real standard of priority that the Woods report should be given in the interests of hundreds of thousands of veterans. If the government is having trouble, then the standing committee members are there to help it. This is why they are on that committee. The heads of the veterans organizations are also begging to help. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) keeps preaching involvement, participation and dialogue. These groups want to dialogue, they want to participate and they want to become involved. So why the hell does the Prime Minister not practise what he preaches?

The veterans of this country do not want anything that is beyond reason. However, as a group they represent a good portion of those citizens of this country who gave this government a clear mandate. They also gave this government their confidence. It is the duty and responsibility of the government—indeed, it should be their privilege—to live up to their promises of equality for all Canadians.

To give the house an example of what I mean, one member of the inner circle, the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans), stood in this place and told me a couple of weeks ago that an additional 27 cents a year charged to each subscriber would recover all of the increased postal charges on the Legionary. I am told by the Legion that the mailing bill for this publication, one which is so important to all veterans, will cost in 1970 $228,000 compared with $18,000 for 1968, and this because the Legion has been refused reclassification. The result of this will be that those same veterans who need help will be charged this increased cost. This is the sort of answer we used to expect from another minister during the war, the minister of propaganda in another country.

There are many recommendations in the Woods committee report which require immediate implementation. I refer in particular to those directed toward the incapacitated and those veterans whose life span has been restricted as a result of serious injury. These recommendations are sincere and comprehensive and have been assessed with careful scrutiny by experts in various veterans organizations across the country. These experts have already pointed out in their comments weaknesses in some 22 recommendations that have already been implemented by the Canadian Pension Commission or are in the process of being implemented. Other weaknesses exist in several other areas. These weaknesses could be resolved by allowing veterans groups to appear before the committee to give evidence and advice.

There is a special section of the report that deals with Newfoundland, whose veterans are of special concern to me. There are many weaknesses in the test of eligibility for pension of Newfoundland war veterans who served in the United Kingdom in world wars I and II. Under the terms of union it is incumbent upon the government to clarify these ambiguities to avoid administrative delays. This must be done soon because time is of the essence.

Steps must also be taken to deal with the weaknesses in legislation relating to our merchant seamen. The War Veterans Allowance Board has been doing a tremendous job in trying to meet the needs of these servicemen. However, there is a serious need to look at the time limit for applying for pensions. These important citizens have no right to a pension unless their disabilities resulted from enemy action. Consideration should be given to giving our merchant seamen an opportunity to receive a pension in cases where they have suffered indirectly from enemy action. Consideration must also be given to strengthening benefits for those who served with the Newfoundland forestry units. In this regard it is time we started to take action instead of procrastinating.

The need for action is Canada-wide. The staff of the Department of Veterans Affairs is a very devoted group of experts who continue to dedicate themselves to the support of the war veteran. They are most anxious to carry out the directions of the government through the Minister of Veterans Affairs so as to upgrade those benefits that are so deserved by veterans in need of assistance.

I hope I have made some slight impression on the minds of those responsible for giving direction and for decision-making. I ask them to do the honourable thing in regard to our veterans. Perhaps the government realize their mistake and are a little ashamed to come forward. In this regard may I remind them that we veterans are a forgiving group of people and will accept their apologies with grace and understanding.

Therefore I ask the government to institute the necessary action to implement the principle outlined in legislation that pensions, let us not forget, are paid to our veterans to provide them with subsistence. They are in payment of a debt and, indeed, are a mark of gratitude that we truly owe the veterans of Canada.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a very worth-while motion that is before the house today, particularly in view of the fact that over the last three or four years the veterans of Canada have been awaiting with expectation the changes that the government has consistently indicated will be brought forward. We have eagerly been awaiting some decision in regard to the Woods report. I believe this report was just a stalling device on the part of the government; otherwise something would have been done about it.

When the Woods committee was appointed it was given a very short period in which to review the terms of our veterans legislation, and the committee is to be congratulated on the thorough job its members did during the limited time available. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) has since had considerable time to decide whether to implement the recommendations of the Woods report. I am sure the minister will agree that some of the mistakes made by a previous Minister of Veterans Affairs should be corrected tout de suite, and I understand this is his intention. I refer to the fact that Canadian veterans who are receiving the veterans allowance are being penalized in regard to other legislation. They find themselves in no better position than other people who receive supplementary benefits under the Old Age Security Act. I do not think this was the intention of our veterans legislation.

The number of veterans diminishes each year. This is inevitable as we move farther and farther away from the period of active warfare. Eventually we hope the need for veterans legislation will cease. However, the younger members of the house and those who did not participate in either of the two world wars should be made aware of one very simple fact, that veterans legislation should not be considered in the same light as other social legislation.

For example, some of my colleagues have asked how we can justify giving the veterans special preferance in terms of providing money to build houses, or in terms of medical treatment and the financing of their medical care. They forget that our veterans sacrificed their health, happiness, home life, education and the chance to be with their families when their families most needed them. They did this not for their own sake but for the sake of the people of Canada and the debt we owe them cannot be measured in dollars and cents. It is an obligation that each and every one of us must accept. It is a moral, spiritual and financial obligation, and we have fallen down in the last five or ten years in the way we have discharged our obligation.

Do hon. members realize that when supplementary benefits under the old age security program are paid to veterans who have passed a needs test, the amount of veterans allowance those veterans receive is reduced by the amount of the supplementary benefit? That is a disgrace. The extra $30 a month the veteran receives in supplementary benefits is taken off his veterans allowance. The veteran is no better off under these circumstances. It was wrong to lump veterans allowances with other payments made under our social benefit programs. There ought to be no direct relationship between the amount a veteran receives in veterans allowances and any amount he receives under the old age security program. It is wrong of us to subject to a needs test a man who was willing to serve Canada in her hour of need.

I now wish to deal with a number of other matters to which the speaker preceding me alluded. The way we treat our Hong Kong veterans is a disgrace to this country and to any minister prepared to go along with such treatment. Sections 92 and 93 of the Woods report indicate that as of September 1, 1968, 395 Hong Kong veterans were receiving disability pensions of 48 per cent or less. The members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs for as long as I have been on it have been recommending that, considering the privation these men underwent, considering the inhuman way they were treated while prisoners of war and the diseases they suffered from as a result of that treatment, diseases like beriberi, malaria, typhoid, as well as other ills arising from malnutrition brought on by the diet of rice and fish which many of them were not accustomed to, they should receive disability pensions of not less than 50 per cent. They are entitled to that. That is the opinion of the members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. It is also the opinion of those who compiled the Woods report. They all think that the pensions of these veterans should be set at 50 per cent or more of disability because these men underwent torture and privation in prison camps unlike such camps anywhere else in the civilized world.

I can remember seeing some women who belonged to an organization known, I believe, as the first world war widows of Canada, or something like that. There were two or three of them who were over 80 years old and when they came before the committee we congratulated them warmly for having lived so long. Unfortunately they were not given the pension the committee recommended they should be given. I am saying this because the minister is in a unique position in the government. He can recommend to the government that payments falling outside the scope of existing social legislation be made to veterans. He can recommend that these payments be based on the needs of our veterans who served our country so well, and their dependants. His recommendation could cover those men who participated in the war but who are not, strictly speaking, veterans.

For instance, why have our firefighters not been paid the pension they were promised? They ought to be classed as veterans and be entitled to veterans allowances. What about the miners who went to Gibraltar and the merchant seamen who served in our merchant marine during the war? Strictly speaking they were not in the armed forces, yet many of them were killed in the war. They were wearing their own uniforms, although they were not in the armed forces. They filled a need as important as the one filled by our soldiers, sailors and airmen. We have an obligation to these people and we should discharge it.

The minister does not have to say, "Let us wait for the Woods report." We do not need to wait for anyone or for any report. The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs has made it abundantly clear that all these people should be looked after. Certainly it may mean giving these men money that the general public is not entitled to. But the veterans of Canada ought to be set apart from the general public. The minister has a moral and economic responsibility toward the veterans and he ought to go before cabinet and say, "I know this assistance does not come under our social security structure; I know it does not come under the pension legislation or under any retirement program or under the Canada Pension Plan. Nevertheless, considering the superhuman sacrifices these men made for Canada we have an obligation to look after them to the best of our ability."

I hope no one will say that the war ended 25 years ago and that we will not have another one. That sort of thing was said after the first world war. Our men who joined the forces at the beginning of hostilities in the second world war did not say, "Just one moment now; what's in this for us? What sort of veterans pensions will there be or how big will disability allowances be?" They did not say that. They volunteered to join the forces and went overseas hoping we would give them a fair shake if they came back. There is no connection between a pension paid to a veteran and a family allowance payment or any other social benefit payment that is made in Canada, just as there is no connection, or very little connection, between merchant seamen who operated ack-ack guns on ships during the war and the people who stayed behind.

Benefits paid to our veterans are not in the same category as other social benefits paid to the rest of our people. For the government to say that both classes of benefits are the same is wrong. If we do not discharge our obligations to our veterans we are not keeping faith with those men who served Canada so well. Many friends I went to school with do not ask for veterans allowances. They do not have to. They are lying beneath the soil of other countries. Those who came back had the right to expect that Canadians would recognize their obligation to them. This obligation is being neglected year after year.

It has been 25 years since the end of the last war, yet we have not solved the problems of the Hong Kong veterans. Is it because certain people in high places in the Department of Veterans Affairs collaborated with the Japanese even though the Japanese were not in nearly as bad shape at the end of the war as others? This charge has been made. I am not mentioning names. If hon. members want the names, I will give them. The members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs are well aware of this charge.

Why are these veterans not being properly paid? They have appeared before the committee and informed its members of the diseases from which they suffer. Because medical treatment is not available in Canada to control these diseases, they have to look for treatment elsewhere. Nothing special is being done for them. The Woods report recommended an automatic 50 per cent disability pension so that these veterans and their dependants can have full benefits.

I agree with the previous speaker that something should be done for the merchant seamen. Representations have been made on many occasions in this regard. There have also been many representations with regard to firefighters recruited during the last war. These people talk about the promises made by the minister of full benefits for them when they returned to Canada. What has been the result? Twenty-five years of delay!

I am very concerned that the government will not implement the recommendations of the Woods report. Why did the government appoint this commission if they did not intend to accept the recommendations in the report? The government should have said they were no longer going to honour their commitment to the veterans.

I was shocked when the veterans land legislation was put into the same category as general legislation. Parliament said that money would be lent to veterans at one per cent over the prime borrowing rate, but this is being done under almost every piece of legislation in the lending field. Why could the veterans not have been given another 10 years' extension at the 5 per cent rate?

I know of many veterans who have not been able to raise the money to take advantage of the Veterans Land Act. Why could there not have been an extension? Why was there a cut-off? Are we to assume that a person 50 years of age is too old to build a house? There should be special legislation for veterans as well as maintaining the present legislation. Why did the government say after 25 years, that is enough of that foolishness, we will cut it off?

I am shocked at the way the government is dealing with the veterans charter. When the veterans charter was designed and developed after the war, it was one of the best pieces of veterans legislation in the world. I am surprised that only 25 years later the government is trying to destroy and distort that charter at every opportunity. Changes made to the Veterans Land Act may only be the beginning. The minister should state that he will not agree to any curtailment of veterans rights.

I do not know what is going to happen to the Woods report. I do not know to what extent the government will accept or reject the report. I do know that there is not a veteran in this country who is not disappointed and disgusted with the government for commissioning a report on abuses in veterans legislation and then not being prepared to introduce legislation immediately to correct those abuses. I have attended a number of meetings of the Legion and other veterans organizations. In every case these veterans are unhappy with the government and disgusted with the minister for not pressing the implementation of many of the recommendations in the Woods report to provide them with immediate benefits.

We are all aware that the government is carrying out an austerity program. However, this program should not be applied to legislation respecting veterans. What happened to the former Minister of Veterans Affairs may also happen to this minister. The former minister was unable to get the nomination again in his own constituency. The present minister is not doing much better than the former minister. The minister should seriously consider this matter in order to avoid becoming very unpopular with the thousands of veterans in this country.

The veterans are depending on the minister to implement the recommendations of the Woods report in order that they may receive these benefits. I strongly urge the minister to consider this matter for his own peace of mind. He has a responsibility to all the veterans of Canada who have been waiting a long time for final justice in their relationship with their country through the Department of Veterans Affairs.

[Mr. Peters.]

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): In my remarks on the comments made by the previous speakers, I for one would like to support unreservedly those words which conjure up the time when I myself was a bit young. I was not old enough to go to war, but I followed very closely the unfolding of that conflict which allowed us to preserve the freedom to speak in this house.

I agree with all that has been said, because I often receive complaints from veterans in my constituency who feel that they are not treated adequately. Too often, owing to a mere technical mistake, they are not eligible to the pension to which they are entitled.

I know that there should exist regulations, that the generosity of the government is not boundless. It has but limited resources yet it belongs to the department to take a more human approach toward the requests it receives.

• (12:50 p.m.)

I recall a fact which took place a month ago. A veteran who, at the end of the war, had been a few months only in England, came back to Canada where he had served for four years. Because he was short of a few days of service to qualify for service overseas, he could not qualify for a pension that would have enabled him to live decently.

Veterans, as all Canadians, are affected by the increase in the cost of living, and because their pension is not big enough to enable them to live decently, they are treated as people on welfare.

I will not repeat what the previous speakers said, but I will deal with a problem that is for French Canadians, and especially Quebecers, simply shocking.

That happened recently—several hon. members have talked about it earlier—during the commemoration of the battle of Normandy, in France. First of all, I shall read—for the understanding of the context,—a report from the Montreal-Matin of June 12, and I quote:

—during a trip, all too short, to the Normandy beaches. The commemoration of the 25th anniversary of the allied landing in 1944 was taking place. Thousands of American, English and Canadian veterans were coming back for the first time to the scene of the battle, when French veterans welcomed them with open arms. Not to mention the people themselves who wanted to show their gratitude in a hundred ways.

From Carentan, a chain of torches were lighted along the coast. Remembrance torches, freedom torches. And in the evening, at Sainte-Mère-Église, took place a re-enactment, according to the sound and light technique, of the landing of 1944, with the sound of bombers, Nazi boots, machine-guns and church-bells ringing in token of rejoicing. Even dummy paratroopers were dropped from the sky. And the loud-speakers installed in the public squares repeated the old coded messages from the B.B.C. in London announcing the invasion.

On the same day, that is Friday, June 6, a ceremony was held at the Beny-sur-Mer military cemetery under the auspices of our own Department of Veterans Affairs. This cemetery could be mistaken for a British one because most inscriptions, if not all, are in English only. All commands to the troops were given in English during the ceremony: guard of honour, salute, last post, reveille, prayers, flower-offering, Scottish lament, benediction. The Canadian ambassador in Paris, His Excellency Paul Beaulieu, saved our honour by reciting a few verses from Charles Péguy.

There are problems. And do not tell me that the department does not have enough money to pay tribute to our veterans. Some of them had a French name, and if it was "Lambert", you can see it on their tombstone spelled "Lambpert". Even in death they have to put up with this lack of respect. I wonder what is the place given to Quebecers. I am not surprised at all the troubles facing Canada today, for justice is not done to our people.

I shall go on with the quotation:

Veteran soldiers of the Régiment de la Chaudière asked that one of their own be allowed during the ceremony to lay a wreath on behalf of Quebec. That would have been a veteran who took part in the landing in June, 1944. The suggestion was met with a flat refusal by the delegates of the federal Department of Canadian Veterans Affairs.

He was finally allowed to lay the wreath once the ceremonies had ended; such arrogance was even more disgusting in view of the fact that that Quebec veteran was Mr. Hugues Lapointe and that in Quebec he represents the Queen as Lieutenant Governor.

When in order to pay tribute to our veterans, we are forced to put up with such humiliations, as a representative of the province of Quebec I do not have the right to accept a re-occurrence of such a situation. It will have to be corrected so that in the future on the Normandie beaches the tribute be paid in our language, with our prayers in the way we intend to live.

I continue with the question:

The delegates from the Régiment de la Chaudière, shocked by such a public blunder, organized for the next day a ceremony at the very site of the landing, on the shore. It was a small and intimate ceremony, without protocol display, in the presence of the villagers.

Our Canadians who have fought so hard, who have helped preserve our freedom, are driven to organize a small gathering in a small village in order to pay such a high tribute. Our brave soldiers did deserve, I think, a much greater tribute.

And I will close by mentioning another rather unfortunate incident. The federal Department of Veterans Affairs had organized a press conference on the evening of June 5, at the City Hall in Caen. Here are the facts as related:

The whole thing took place in English only. A briefing about the ceremony which was to take place the next day at the military cemetery of Beny-sur-Mer was held. A public relations official went as far as to suggest that the Canadian veterans should not be allowed to take pictures during the ceremony, for proprieties sake, he claimed.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to drag this on interminably, but I believe that by quoting this newspaper article, you will understand, as I do, that such glaring injustices certainly generate disunity in Canada, and I would not like to be always compelled to remind people that justice must prevail. I hope that the department will take the necessary steps to insure that this kind of situation does not happen again elsewhere.

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I intend, in the few minutes that are left to me, to try and answer all the arguments that have been presented at this stage of the debate. I first want to answer the arguments of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont).

He told us that he fully endorsed all that had been said by the two members who spoke before him.

But the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) who spoke first was himself at Beny-sur-Mer. He complained that the English language was neglected during the ceremony, while the hon. member for Frontenac complains that everything was in English.

Mr. Dumont: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I clearly said that I agreed as to all the economic problems, but I pointed out other problems.

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, the first hon. member who spoke congratulated us, and with due reason, as to the reconstitution of the landing in Normandy towards the end of the last world war. That celebration, commemorating the 25th anniversary of that landing, was organized by the Department of Veterans Affairs in co-operation with the Department of External Affairs.

The reports submitted so far by all those who were present were most laudatory. They congratulated us, even saying that the Canadian ceremonies were, by far, more significant and impressive than those of our allies.

The hon. member who first took the floor complained that there were not enough ceremonies in English whereas the hon. member who has just resumed his seat complains that there were not enough in French.

I therefore believe we have struck the right balance. This is a striking example of the difficulty of achieving true national unity in Canada.

That is understandable, because people, instead of using their heads, their common sense, often give way to their passions.

When people complain, on the one side that there was not enough English, and on the other not enough French, there is every reason to believe that the Department of Veterans Affairs struck, as I said, a happy medium and respected quite well the ethnic composition of the country.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), after discussing the Bény-sur-Mer ceremonies, discussed the needs of our war veterans. In his opinion, if I recall correctly, he claimed there was a creeping paralysis and a total indifference on the part of our government. He also stated that the attitude of the government was to ignore the requests of the veterans and of members of the house. Then he dealt more particularly with the need for pension increases, implying that very little had been done in the field of pensions on this side of the house.

[Mr. Dubé.]

Perhaps in a very friendly way I should refresh the memory of the hon. member. Of course we all know or should know that pensions were first implemented after the first war in 1919. At the time the basis of the payment was the assessment of disability based on the requirement for enlistment, that is, that a person had a healthy mind and a healthy body. The pension rates established in 1919 were composed of a basic rate and a bonus because of the abnormal economic situation. The bonus was increased in 1920 and in 1925 was absorbed into the basic pension. Throughout the dark years, the 1930's—and they were not exactly known as Liberal years—no increases were made in the basic rates. Of course none were made during the war years.

In 1948, however, pension rates were increased from $900 a year for a single pensioner to $1,128 a year. In 1952 they were increased to $1,500 a year. In 1957 they were increased to $1,800 a year. In 1961—and I salute my hon. friend—they were increased from $1,800 a year to $2,160 a year. In 1964 they were increased to $2,500 a year. Two years later in 1966 they were increased again to $2,760 a year and finally last year, 1968, there was another healthy increase of 15 per cent to $3,180 a year for a single veteran and more of course for a married veteran. In other words, between 1960 and 1968 disability pensions increased from $1,800 to $3,180 for single veterans. This takes in three rapid increases in the years 1964, 1966 and 1968. I for one would not call this creeping paralysis or total indifference.

Of course the cost of living is going up and these rates are always under review. At the present time they are under review in conjunction with a number of other types of payments made to Canadians by the federal government, as indicated by the Prime Minister on June 17. At that time he stated:

> We have to review all aspects of social legislation. We are doing this; we do not want to settle special cases. A special plea can be made not only for the veterans but for old people, for retired civil servants and for all sections of people in society.

Although we are always looking forward to improving the lot of our war pensioners, this is no reason for us to belittle our present record. As a matter of fact veterans in Canada and all of us agree that Canada stands second to none in her treatment of war veterans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dubé: The hon. member also expressed his anxiety, and rightly so, about the Woods Committee report and the white paper. He felt that perhaps there might be some kind of camouflage to prevent the Woods Committee report from reaching the Veterans Affairs Committee or some sort of camouflage to prevent these recommendations being acted upon. Perhaps at this time it would be appropriate for me to give him and other hon. members some of the background material in this connection.

First of all I should state that on only three occasions since the origin of disability pensions have persons outside of parliament been called upon and authorized to inquire into the operation of the Canadian Pension Commission or the operations of the predecessor of the Canadian Pension Commission, the Board of Pension Commissioners. There was a review in 1922 by a royal commission which is now referred to as the Ralston Commission. Ten years later, in 1932, a committee chaired by the Hon. Mr. Justice Rinfret and later by the Hon. Louis Arthur Audette was appointed to inquire into the administration of the Pension Act. The third occasion was September, 1965 when my predecessor, the Hon. Roger Teillet, appointed a committee to survey the work and organization of the Canadian Pension Commission. This committee was under the chairmanship of the hon. Mr. Justice Mervyn J. Woods.

The terms of reference of the Woods Committee were broad in scope. The committee was expected to bring in a report in 90 days. The members of the committee, however, discovered that the matter was so complex and the roots of the ramifications so deep that it took them two and a half years to bring down a report. I should point out that these three commissioners were highly experienced veterans, including among the three two very able justices one of whom was a past president of the Royal Canadian Legion. Yet those three people took two and a half years to prepare their report. It is understandable that we should be given at least half that time to bring this report into fruition.

The three commissioners conducted a very extensive investigation into the organization, methods, procedures and interpretations used in the adjudication of disability pensions. The response to the appointment of the Woods Committee exceeded all expectations. As a result, the committee conducted 41 hearings in Toronto, Quebec City and here in Ottawa. Those appearing before the committee included representatives of 14 veterans organizations, 13 members of parliament, the Canadian Pension Commission, the Veterans Bureau and representatives of the Canadian Armed Forces. The Woods Committee recorded many hundreds of pages of testimony; it carried out research, and finally, after the time-consuming task of evaluating the mass of material gathered, submitted a report of three volumes totalling 1,319 pages. If I recall correctly, the report contained 148 recommendations.

As soon as the report was handed to my predecessor he tabled it and an interdepartmental committee was appointed to study in depth the 148 recommendations contained in the report. The committee of officials completed its exhaustive review. I, of course, had to digest these studies in order to make my own recommendations, which are now under intensive study by the government of Canada. Hon. members will appreciate that any such study, if it is to have any value at all, requires searching analysis; we have to determine the social, legislative and financial implications involved in the recommendations. As I said before, many of the recommendations are complex in nature. Furthermore, it is necessary to consider whether in some cases more appropriate solutions can be found than those proposed by the Woods Committee.

As I have mentioned in the house on several occasions, a white paper outlining the views of the government will be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs for study in conjunction with the Woods Committee report.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Dubé: During the session, as I have said all along. The white paper will encompass all the recommendations of the Woods Committee and indicate the government's position on how the Pension Act should be improved to enable it to meet present-day needs. The hon. member asked, "When?" He should look at Votes and Proceedings and he will see a notice of motion referring the report of the Woods Committee to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. If hon. members are so anxious to have the Woods Committee report and the white paper referred to the committee, I would expect them to give swift and unanimous approval to that reference when we move the motion. As a matter of fact, if there is unanimous consent I would move the motion right now.

Mr. Peters: Doesn't the minister know there will be no time for the committee to meet?

Mr. Dubé: When hon. members return in September it is my understanding that before the house meets the committee will sit. I presume this will be one of the committee's tasks. It will be given every opportunity in the world to study the Woods Committee report. When the members of the committee have read the report they will understand exactly what I mean when I say it is very complex and comprehensive. Of course, when the committee has studied the report and the while paper it will be up to the government to enact legislation based upon decisions reached by the committee.

The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe was anxious to tell the house that in his opinion the government of Canada was doing very little for our veterans. He went on, if I understood him correctly, to imply that the government should not be dealing with Latin America. If that is the case, I would like to know the policy of his leader and his party in this matter. The hon. member also complained that the government was spending too much money on foreign aid. Again, I would like to obtain the opinion of his leader and party in this regard. I would also be interested in knowing whether he was speaking on behalf of his party when he complained about our proposed recognition of China. He did not appear to be very happy about the sums of money spent during centennial year; yet the National Centennial Act which established the basis for those celebrations was enacted in 1961 by his party. Is it the position of his party and his leader that the money spent in 1967 for celebrating the 100th anniversary of Canada was not well spent? We would like to hear about that.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) covered very much the same points. He dealt at random with several points without really making one. The only one I can remember dealt with the Hong Kong prisoners. I am very familiar with the plight of the Hong Kong prisoners; several of them come from my native village. This recommendation, like the 147 other recommendations, is part and parcel of the Woods Committee report. I cannot discuss that report at the moment without first knowing the policy of my government in the matter.

I do not wish to take up more of the time of the house. I think I should conclude by saying that the government of Canada is not neglecting our veterans; in fact, in the past fiscal year we spent over $400 million in assisting them. The budget of the Department of Veterans Affairs has been increasing every year. We have in the department very able personnel. I believe most veterans across the country would agree with that. It was said by one hon. member that the government of Canada does not recognize the special debt owed by Canadians to our veterans. This is not true; we treat our veterans in a very special way. We do recognize that the citizens of this country owe them a great debt. We are providing our veterans with more advanced veterans legislation than can be found anywhere in the world. Canada is one of the few countries that still has a department of veterans affairs. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that it is an excellent department, doing an excellent job.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—HOLDING OF PRESS CONFERENCE BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS BEFORE MAKING STATEMENT TO HOUSE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I learned of the matter I wish to raise only at lunch time, so this is the first opportunity I have had to raise it. I might have done it at two o'clock but I did not want to interrupt the remarks of the Minister of Veterans' Affairs (Mr. Dubé). I am sorry that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not here and that no minister other than the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) is present, but I hope that the minister will convey to the government my strong protest, and I am sure the protest of every hon. member who thinks about the matter.

• (2:20 p.m.)

I learned at noon hour today that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has arranged to hold a press conference at four o'clock this afternoon to make a statement and to answer questions regarding his recent trip abroad. Hon. members will recall that this morning the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) asked the Prime Minister whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be here on Monday and whether he would make a statement on his trip. If my memory serves me right, the Prime Minister said that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be here on Monday and would make a statement on those aspects of his trip upon which he considered it necessary to report. I am not suggesting that the Prime Minister knew at the time that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had arranged for a press conference this afternoon.

Together with all other hon. members, particularly those sitting on the opposition benches, I am becoming more and more enraged by the attitude of the members of this government toward parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: It is not unreasonable to expect that when a minister of the Crown makes a special trip abroad to meet the governments and authorities of other countries on matters about which we do not know he ought to report to the House of Commons before he reports to the press, and that the members of this house have a right to hear him before the press does.

I made some inquiries about the time of the minister's arrival in Ottawa. I cannot be sure about the details, but I am told that he arrived in Ottawa before the house started its sitting this morning at eleven o'clock. But whether or not he did—and I think my information was pretty reliable—the Prime Minister knew perfectly well that the house would agree to revert to motions at any time during the day, even during an allotted day, for the opposition to hear a report from the Minister. The minister could have come here at two o'clock and given us his report, after which he could have gone to the press conference at four o'clock.

I want to know what it is that is making the government act this way. I said in an interview which was published in an Ottawa paper some time ago that I had the impression that the present Prime Minister really had no use for parliament, that it was a kind of necessary unavoidable evil for him to have to appear in the House of Commons and to allow the other ministers to waste their time here. This is the way it seems to me that he looks at the situation. Every time there is an important matter about which parliament should hear, we read about it in the press before the minister involved appears in the house to tell us what he is doing. Why are the ministers of the Crown so insistent on downgrading the purpose and usefulness of parliament, particularly of the poor hon. members who sit behind the treasury benches, who I understand are going to meet to see whether they cannot persuade the government to assign some role to them in parliament which will lessen their frustration?

Mr. Cullen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am on a question of privilege.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member is berating the backbenchers, but I think he has already put his question of privilege and now we are hearing a harangue about his feelings. I think he should confine himself to his question of privilege.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member is taking a little too much upon himself in telling other hon. members how to put their questions of privilege. I have not been here many years longer than he has but perhaps he should wait a little before giving that kind of presumptuous advice.

My question of privilege concerns every member of this house, including the hon. member who just rose so plaintively to make a point that had no point to it. I do not understand why the government should treat parliament in this cavalier fashion. I cannot understand why the government chooses to downgrade the value of the house and to prevent the possibility of comment on what they do. The only conclusion I can come to is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would much rather speak to the press than face the Leader of the Official Opposition and the spokesmen for the other parties.

There must be an end to this practice. On occasion ministers make announcements outside the house when they cannot avoid it. I am the last person in the world to berate them for that, but when this house is in session on the day on which the minister comes back from a trip, then it is to this house that he ought to make his report and not outside it.

I protest in the strongest possible terms against what is happening. I say that the thing to do is for the house to declare its readiness to revert to motions at four o'clock and invite the Secretary of State for External Affairs to come here at that time to make his statement and delay his press conference for half an hour.

I should like to move therefore—and I do not have my motion in written form:

That the house agree to revert to motions at four o'clock and invite the Secretary of State for External Affairs to appear before it to make a report on his overseas trip.

Question of Privilege

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to second this motion and support the position taken by the members of the New Democratic party in this respect. I must say that I find it impossible to understand why the Secretary of State for External Affairs should have a press conference rather than come to the house and make a statement on a matter that is evidently of great interest to members of the house. I also find the attitude of the government toward the house impossible to understand. I have always taken it for granted that when a minister has an important statement to make and the house is in session he makes it to the house.

I cannot understand the attitude of the present government. Is the government taking this attitude because the opposition parties have been co-operative and have agreed to abandon some of their ancient rights with regard to holding up supply? Is it for this reason that we are not getting straightforward answers and have to put up with statements such as the one made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) upon his return from the NATO meetings?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, if the two hon. members who spoke before me took the trouble to read the regulations again, they would see—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. There is already a question of privilege before the house, and the Chair can consider but one at a time.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I will not be long because it will not take me long to make my point. My point is that the fact that members of the opposition parties have been co-operative in expediting the business of the house does not mean that we will lie down and tolerate this sort of thing, nor would the people of this country expect us to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: Therefore the point must be very obvious to all of us, and I have great pleasure, although I find it regrettable that I have to do this, in supporting the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I am sure every member on this side of the house at least will support him. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs has a statement to make, let him make it in the house. The house will afford him every accommodation for doing so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take just a few moments of the time of the house to say that I support the question of privilege of the hon. member of the New Democratic party, asking for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to come and make his statement before the house, to which he is responsible, around four o'clock, before imparting it to newspapermen, as it happens most of the time.

I also want to support firmly the two members who spoke before me and tried to bring the government back to democratic reason. As for us, we have honestly and sincerely been asking ourselves since the election of this government if, in reality, we are faced with a dictatorship or a democracy.

If there is friction throughout the country, that is due to the dictatorial attitude of the members of the cabinet of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). If the Prime Minister encounters closed doors in various places, he can beat his own breast, since we are supposed to live under a democratic regime and we strongly believe that the democratic principles should prevail. Therefore, I urge the ministers and particularly the Prime Minister to act accordingly. The Prime Minister's ideas should be in accordance with the democratic principles and not his socialist leanings.

I wish to make it clear here that we labour under the socialist rule, and that we must absolutely escape it and revert to true democracy. That is why I gladly support the motion brought in by a Socialist who is for democracy. That is why I am most pleased to support this motion as a Democrat, and I want to call the people's attention on such infringements to democracy. We must absolutely put a stop as soon as possible to such doings if we do not want to be ruled within a year by the worst dictatorship of all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The Chair believes that the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for York

South (Mr. Lewis) is not justified. The hon. member may have a grievance against the government but I find this is a bad moment to raise the matter because he will have the opportunity to do so in due time.

Now, I would like to quote citation 88 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms:

(2) All motions referring to the business of the house should be introduced by the Leader of the house.

Consequently, I do not think it proper to deal with the question now.

Mr. Lewis: What paragraph did you quote, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Citation 88, paragraph 4, Beauchesne's fourth edition. We are dealing with the business of the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to point out that no question of privilege was involved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON VETERANS AFFAIRS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marshall.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks in this debate may I say I am pleased to see the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) in his place to hear the observations of members of the opposition and all those who are interested in the welfare of war veterans. I was also pleased to hear him refer to the Woods report which is much in the minds of members of the opposition parties, as it is in the minds of veterans across the country. As the minister reminded us, this committee was established on September 8, 1965, under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Mervyn Woods. It produced a most voluminous and comprehensive study. The veterans magazine has this to say about it:

Months in preparation, meticulous in detail and bristling with 149 recommendations the Woods report is hailed as a momentous production.

Mr. Ron MacBeath, past president of the Legion, had this to say:

Every aspect of war disability pensions has been gone into thoroughly. There are 149 specific recommendations for improvements and beneficial changes—

All veterans organizations hailed this report as marking a turning point in government treatment of veterans and their problems. What is bothering everyone is the undue delay in the implementation of the recommendations of the committee. The house has not even been given an opportunity to debate most of these recommendations.

On February 3 the Minister of Veterans Affairs announced that the government was preparing a white paper and would not send the Woods report to the standing committee until the white paper had been published. Well, we are still waiting and we are doubtful now that any action will be taken before the summer recess. The minister has endeavoured to justify the delay that has taken place but we have certain suspicions about what has really been happening. I will come to this later.

While the government has been declining to take action, the cost of living has continued to rise. The cost of the groceries which war pensioners buy for their tables, the rent for the homes in which they live, their bills for heating, lighting and taxation, if they own their own homes, are rising steadily. For others in our society incomes are rising. But the veterans can do nothing about their situation. They are trapped in the stagnation of fixed pension incomes. The income of veterans ranks lower and lower on the totem pole of our society, in a society which seems to determine its classifications in accordance with financial position. The Legion's national magazine looks at the situation this way from the point of view of the war pensioner, especially in relation to housing:

Housing for our senior citizens has depreciated to the point at which the situation can be considered a crisis. This is especially so for those in a fixed income bracket. Having no means of supplementation they find their standards of living rapidly deteriorating by reason of the present economic situation.

Surely the minister can muster compelling arguments before his cabinet colleagues that an interim supplementary pension is in order until the course of action recommended in the Woods report can be implemented. We have gone almost a full year without anything being done, and still there is no glimpse of light. The subject must go before the committee for discussion. Legislation must be drafted and brought forward. It may well be another year before anything can be done on behalf of our veterans. Surely it is reasonable to suggest that an interim supplementary allowance be made to these people who are experiencing such hardship in the present circumstances.

The suspicion arises that the government is not only producing a white paper but is drafting legislation in advance of hearings. We are suspicious because of the treatment that has been given the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. We remember that the transportation legislation had already been drafted by the government even before the report was presented. We are also witnessing the sad spectacle presented by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) who has told the house that his department has already made up its mind in regard to legislation on smoking and health. In light of this, our veterans organizations that wish to present their views on the Woods committee recommendations to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs have good reason to fear that they will be unable to do so or that their recommendations will not be embodied in the legislation which is to come about.

Ten of our national veterans organizations have joined in preparing a united brief which they hope to present to the Veterans Affairs Committee. However, since this opportunity has been denied them for some time now their recommendations have been mailed to each member of the house. They put forward four major considerations that should be uppermost in the mind of the government. The minister knows what they are and does not need to be reminded of them, but I should like to place them on Hansard.

First of all, they recommend that there should be an independent pension appeal board and, second, that more adequate compensation should be paid to our Hong Kong veterans. I was glad to hear the minister say that he was sympathetically disposed toward these veterans, even though he had not had first-hand experience of their plight, as I have. Third, they recommend that there be more adequate compensation for pensioners who are suffering from multiple disabilities. I believe the veterans organizations are asking for a 300 per cent increase in this compensation, perhaps a little steep but nevertheless a matter we should concern ourselves about. The fourth area concerning veterans groups all across the country is the need to establish a basic rate of pension related to the income of the unskilled labourer in government service. If that were done our pensioners would not find themselves in the economic trap they are in today.

In order that I do not talk only theory and complain of what the government is doing or failing to do, I should like to speak about conditions as they are at the grass roots of the problem. I refer to those men and women veterans, particularly the men, for whom the whole program was designed and whom it serves. I have been in touch with some of the welfare offices in the seven Legion branches in my riding and ascertained some of the matters that are of immediate concern to them. I trust that the minister is aware of them. First of all, the burnt-out pension should be increased. That view was expressed to me by the service officer in the Delhi area.

In the Hagersville area the matter bothering them the most was one we have already discussed, namely, the implementation of the Woods report. Another matter that welfare officers are constantly running into in trying to solve the problems of our veterans is that the wife of a veteran who is on pension can earn only $1,250 without her husband's pension suffering as a result. In view of the rising cost of living, the increased cost of practically everything required to maintain a household, surely this figure is totally unrealistic. Even an adjustment of this sort would give some help to the people now suffering and awaiting the implementation of the Woods report.

Welfare officers of the Legion branches are also concerned about another matter. They feel that the reference to overseas service should be deleted from the conditions under which veterans may obtain relief. After all, it is not always the fault of the veteran that he was not sent overseas. He was under the command of the Department of National Defence or the Canadian forces and went where he was sent. He had no control over this. Surely this condition should be deleted from any consideration relating to assistance.

In the Waterford area the Legion officer underlined a point I have already made. He mentioned that a veteran who is partially disabled can earn only $900 without reduction of his pension taking place. In light of the present-day increase in the cost of living this amount too is totally inadequate. These are all matters that I ask the minister to look into before the Woods report is implemented, which I understand may be a year away.

In the Simcoe area the service officer of the Legion expressed concern at the phasing-out of Sunnybrook Hospital in Toronto where many veterans in this area had been sent. He is concerned lest the load now placed on Westminster Hospital in the London area will overtax the facilities at that hospital and our veterans will find themselves without hospital services. I trust that the department is keeping abreast of the problem and is estimating the admissions that will be required during the next few years, so that Sunnybrook hospital is not phased out too early. These are some of the matters of vital concern which go to the grass roots of the problems of our veterans.

Before I conclude I would ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs to use his good offices to speak to the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans), a tough man to deal with as we all know, about the new postal rates, the effect of which is placing an undue burden upon the Legion, formerly called the Legionary, the magazine of the Royal Canadian Legion. Not only have the postal rates been increased but the magazine has been excluded from the preferred rate given to newspapers and magazines. As a result the cost of mailing this national magazine to our veterans has increased by 1,400 per cent. Surely the Minister of Veterans Affairs can do something to see that the magazine is at least placed on the preferred list.

Having made these comments, I urge the Minister of Veterans Affairs to take into consideration some immediate plan of action to help our veterans until the recommendations of the Woods report are implemented.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to preface my remarks in this debate with a brief account of my participation in the celebrations in France and Belgium marking the 50th anniversary of the 1918 armistice. The government of Canada provided 100 first world war veterans with transportation and all the facilities for what proved in reality to be a great pilgrimage superbly organized by the minister and officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs. The pilgrimage was to pay our tribute to the comrades left behind forever on foreign soil.

Canada has in France and Belgium 13 battlefield memorials commemorating the exploits of Canadian and Newfoundland troops. We visited every one of them, and at each one a memorial service was held and wreaths laid by representatives of each unit that made up the Canadian expeditionary force; and on each occasion a wreath presented on behalf of the government of Canada preceded the wreath-laying ceremony.

During almost two weeks of ceremonies and receptions I was astonished at the military precision of event following event, a prodigious triumph of organization on the part of the Department of Veterans Affairs, led by the then deputy minister of veterans affairs Ernest Coté, himself a veteran of the second world war. His organizing ability, ably assisted by other officials of the department, made the entire trip a pleasure for everyone participating in one of the most colourful, brilliant conceptions of commemorative ceremonies that I have ever seen. It was one of the greatest patriotic demonstrations Canada ever staged on foreign soil, most of the credit for which should properly go to the untiring efforts and hard work of the officials of the department.

I think I am expressing the views of my colleagues on this side of the house when I say that this debate is worth while and welcome because it reflects the interest of members of all parties in the human side of the subject. In all the years I have been a member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs I have never encountered partisanship when the needs and aspirations of our war veterans have been dealt with. The mover of the motion under consideration is to be congratulated for his report on the 25th anniversary of the cessation of hostilities in the European theatre of war. All the same I disagree most emphatically with his suggestion that the government is dictatorial and not doing its utmost on behalf of veterans. I regret the irresponsible statements the hon. member made. They were adequately and effectively answered by the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I congratulate the minister on his very fine presentation.

The minister has pointed out on several occasions that it is the government's duty to consider the problems affecting the one million veterans of Canada. Happily, not all of them require assistance, nor do all especially need to appeal to the government. However, of the one million veterans, 14 per cent are pensioned, about 8 per cent are in need of veterans allowances and about 1 per cent are continuously in need of hospital care. For those in need, and an appreciable number of our veterans are in need, provision was made and included in the 1968-69 estimates to the extent of about $426 million. This is an increase of $19.1 million over the 1967-68 estimates and reflects the concern of the government about the welfare of veterans and their dependants who need help.

There have been three revisions in the pension rates since 1964. The first one was effective from September 1, 1964, and represented a 10 per cent increase across the board. The second increase became effective on September 1, 1966. It represented a 15 per cent increase in the basic rates in the pensions for veterans and widows. The third revision, which went into effect on January 1, 1968, brought in a 15 per cent increase for all veterans in all cases. No Canadian war veteran needs to apply for charity for himself or his family. I am confident that the government will enact legislation which will make unnecessary the humiliating recourse to public welfare.

The recommendations placed before the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs by several veterans organizations have been most helpful to members of that committee on which I have been most happy to serve. I can say that submissions were made with dignity and restraint. I am sure the government has taken note of them. The minister pointed out to the committee on April 17, 1969, certain matters of importance to veterans. I quote what he is reported to have said:

> First, the program of welfare services, allowances and other benefits is one that seeks to ensure that all persons eligible for war veterans allowance, civilian war allowance and other veterans benefits are assisted to the full extent of the provisions of the various statutes affected.
> The second is the pension program administered by the Canadian Pension Commission, which is a quasi-judicial body reporting to Parliament through the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Under this program, pensions for disability and death are provided as set forth in the Pension Act. The program also includes the adjudication of claims for pensions under several other statutes including The Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the R.C.M.P. Superannuation Act and the R.C.M.P. Pension Continuation Act.
> A third program is concerned with the provision of treatment services to veterans and to other designated classes of patients as authorized by the veterans treatment regulations.
> Fourth, the Soldier Settlement and Veterans Land Act program seeks to effect the successful settlement of qualified veterans as farmers, small holders, commercial fishermen and homesteaders, including Indian veterans on reserves.
> [Mr. Badanai.]
> The fifth of the programs, departmental administration, is concerned with the effective and efficient provision of a number of common professional and administrative services.

The opposition has been rather harsh in criticising the unavoidable delay in referring the Woods committee report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs for study and recommendation. This report is merely a survey of the work and organization of the Canadian Pension Commission and was presented to the former Minister of Veterans Affairs in March, 1968, shortly before the dissolution of the last parliament. I assume that hon. members have read this very thorough study of the organization and operation of the Canadian Pension Commission. The study contains some far-reaching recommendations, many of which will undoubtedly result in major amendments to the Pension Act. Hence we have had the unavoidable delay in dealing with this legislation.

One recommendation of the study is the establishment of an appeal board which will have jurisdiction over the Pension Commission. Under the present system appeals may be heard by commissioners. An applicant must present his case to commissioners working with colleagues who may already have ruled against the applicant. There is no appeal to an independent body. The Woods Committee report states that when an applicant's claim has been denied there is no agency or court to which he may take his case. It is therefore perfectly clear that the system is inadequate in ensuring justice. The objection to what is recommended may stem from the assumption that the appointment of a pension appeal board would result in superimposing upon the commission a superior authority. I agree with the report where it says that, in essence, the commission should be an administrative body which can operate satisfactorily only if the responsibility for final decision is transferred to a senior body such as a pension appeal board.

Cases involving claimants in my constituency have been brought to my attention. After having been rejected by the commissioners these claimants have gone to their own doctors and the medical reports of those doctors were turned down by the pension commissioners. This leads one to believe that there is a form of discrimination in the handling of independent reports. When I made representations on behalf of some of these unfortunate claimants I was told politely that the private doctor's report had been considered by the commissioners but that the orginal diagnosis would still stand. All this is an additional reason for my wholehearted support of the Woods Committee recommendation that a pension appeal board be appointed.

The government has given a great deal of consideration to increases in federal pensions, old age pensions, retired civil servants pensions, and veterans pensions. I am confident that when the whole social security review has been completed a policy will be established in keeping with our well-rounded national social welfare program.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé), who is following this debate with the interest I would expect him to show, feels that because he could say that last night he introduced a motion to refer the Woods report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs he has scored a debating point. I am afraid I must say to him that that is all it amounts to—a debating point. The basic unfairness in the way in which the government has handled the Woods report still stands so far as veterans and veterans organizations are concerned.

Let us take a moment to look at the record with respect to the handling of this very important study of the administration of the Pension Act. As the minister pointed out, the Woods Committee was set up in September, 1965. It soon found that it had more to do than could be done in a few months. Indeed, it was March 22, 1968, before its report was presented to the government. I should also mention another date, namely, March 26, 1968; that was the date on which the report was tabled in the house.

The next important date in connection with the Woods report is September 13, 1968, when the minister was asked in the House of Commons about the reference of the Woods report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. These are the words he used in reply to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and I quote from page 24 of Hansard for Friday, September 13, 1968:

> In reply to his question may I say it is our intention to have the Woods Committee report referred to the House of Commons Committee on Veterans Affairs as quickly as possible, and to act on the recommendations of that committee as soon as we received them.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that statement was very clear and the commitment involved in that statement was clear and solemn.

Veterans Affairs Committee Report

Later in that same month, on Monday, September 30, the minister was again questioned about the Woods report. As recorded at page 564 of Hansard the minister stated:

> First of all the Woods report will be referred to the Veterans Affairs Committee. We will have to ascertain what decisions the members of that committee will take before the minister can decide what legislation will be enacted.

I submit that the position of the government in September of last year was very clear. The government promised that the Woods report would be referred by itself to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and the members of that committee would be given an opportunity to study it and make their recommendations to the minister and the government before the government had decided what was to be done concerning the recommendations of the Woods report. That has all been changed, Mr. Speaker. That commitment has not been kept.

On February 3 of this year the minister was asked by the chairman of the standing committee, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), when he intended to refer the Woods report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. At page 5045 of Hansard the minister said:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to advise the hon. member and the house that at the present time we are preparing a white paper respecting veterans pensions and the Woods committee recommendations. This white paper is being given high priority and we expect later on this session to be able to refer both the white paper and the Woods committee report to the House of Commons committee.

When that reply was given, it seemed harmless enough. However, during the weeks and months that have gone by since then we have realized what a change of position has taken place. Originally the committee was to get the Woods report and advise the government as to what it felt should be done with regard to the recommendations in that report. The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs will not now receive the Woods report by itself, but the Woods report plus a departmental white paper which sets out, before the members have any chance to express their views on the Woods report, what the government is going to do about it.

I have not seen the white paper. I do not know what is in it. I have a pretty good idea it will be a document which will declare that many of the things in the Woods report have already been put into effect in one way or another. It will be a document which will indicate the difficulties and financial problems associated with some of the recommendations in the Woods report. Then it will probably list those recommendations in the Woods report which the government is prepared to accept.

This is not being fair to the committee system of the House of Commons. The whole idea of the beefed-up or rejuvenated program of activity for our committees is that private members of parliament shall have more say about what is going to be done. Are the committee members going to have an opportunity to deal with the recommendations of the Woods report directly, or are they simply going to be told the decisions the government has already made and only be given an opportunity to concur in those decisions?

The minister expressed the hope there will be ready consent to the passing of his motion to refer the Woods report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I have no objection to this. The motion will be on the order paper on Monday and it can pass without debate at that point so far as I am concerned. I suggest, nevertheless, that it is a case of breaking faith with veterans and veterans organizations to do it this way as opposed to the way it was promised to be done in September of last year.

As has already been pointed out, any item that is referred to committee next week can hardly be dealt with by the committee next week. Maybe we will be here longer than we anticipate. We may be here for the month of July, taking into consideration what has happened here today. I would love to stay on.

An hon. Member: We know that!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If some of the hon. members in the back row on the other side of the house do not want to stay, they can persuade the government to drop the proposed Standing Order 75C.

As the minister stated in his remarks earlier today, the best that can happen is for the report to be in the hands of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs in September, 1969. The promise was clear in September, 1968, that the report would be referred to the committee as quickly as possible. When the committee gets the report in September, 1969, instead of getting it with a free hand to listen to the veterans organizations and make the recommendations that the members of their own free will might have made, they will get it with a government document telling the government members on that committee, at any rate, how far the government will go. The chance of anything coming out of the committee beyond what is in the white paper is very slim. In fact, it is just about nil. That is not playing fair with the veterans of this country.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai), the minister and the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), if he gets into the debate before it is over, can tell us all the wonderful things that have been done and how good the programs are. What counts is what is being done now for the veterans, and we think this treatment is unfair to them.

Despite the fact that other members have referred to them I think I should say a word about the many things in the Woods report that need to be acted upon. My namesake, the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), pointed out that there are four things that have been singled out for top priority so far as veterans organizations are concerned. They are the question of an appeal board, dealing with cases of multiple disabilities, special treatment for the Hong Kong veterans, and the whole question of establishing a proper arrangement for a basic rate of pension.

But when one looks over the Woods report, its three volumes and its many pages, he finds it deals with a great many questions, many of them the concern of veterans across the years, such as the matter of pre-enlistment conditions, questions about blindness, the re-opening of claims, the benefit of the doubt clause, attendance allowances and so on. There are questions relating to widows, and many others of that sort.

Then on the fringe of all this there are questions relating to the War Veterans Allowance Act, to the situation faced by the Dieppe prisoners of war, merchant seamen, firefighters, and so on. There is a great host of problems of this kind, many of them dealt with in the Woods report, others not dealt with but related thereto, all of which make this a terribly important document, and we think it is most unfortunate that a whole year will have been lost because the government failed to keep its commitment made on Friday, September 13, 1968.

The minister says that the standing committee can meet in September after this motion is passed early next week. Well, if we are going to be here next week, and maybe the week after, and the week after that again, the committee does not need to put off its work until September. It might as well sit while we are debating matters of procedure here in the House of Commons unless, of course, the government comes to its senses.

Some of us regret that with all the attention we have been forced to put on the Woods report the whole question of the War Veterans Allowance Act seems to have been lost in our concern about the Woods report. After all, the Woods report deals only with that section of veterans legislation that relates to disabilities, and pensions paid under the Pension Act and some other acts related thereto. But a great many of the veterans of this country get some financial recognition for their condition and suffering, because they served their country in war, only under the War Veterans Allowance Act, and we feel there are improvements that need to be made in that legislation that are just as important as the improvements called for in the Pension Act and other veterans legislation.

Ever since this parliament began I have been pleading with the new minister that the War Veterans Allowance Act be referred to the standing committee along with the Woods report. His answer has been that that is up to the committee. That is one way to answer such a question, but of course it is up to the government to make the kind of motion that will produce an actual reference. I still feel that if the position of veterans generally is going to be considered by the committee it should have before it not only the Woods report and all those matters that relate to disability pensions, but also the War Veterans Allowance Act, an act in which real improvements are needed.

I know we can be told by the minister that changes have been made in recent years. In fact he went back to tell us what veterans were getting in 1919 and 1920. Well, Mr. Speaker, in 1920 I got summer work at 25 cents an hour and thought I was getting pretty good pay. Possibly some people may think that is all I should be getting today. It is no good talking about rates of veterans pensions in those years, or the rates five or ten years ago. The fact is that we are living under a new set of conditions, and if any group of people in our society deserves the attention of government and parliament it is the veterans, their families, their widows and others that they have left behind.

I have made one or two specific references to the War Veterans Allowance Act. There is one item in particular that I admit I have spoken of a good many times and which I think is a piece of hypocrisy to which our veterans should not be subjected. I refer to the situation that obtains as between the guaranteed income supplement and the war veterans allowance.

When the guaranteed income supplement legislation was put through the House of Commons much was made by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen), then the Minister of National Health and Welfare, about the fact that the income test in the guaranteed income supplement would not take into account any pension received by veterans, whether a disability pension or a benefit under the War Veterans Allowance Act. And that is true. When a person applies for the guaranteed income supplement any money he is receiving under the War Veterans Allowance Act is not counted as income.

Big deal, Mr. Speaker! The same veteran who gets the guaranteed income supplement, despite the fact that he is getting money under the War Veterans Allowance Act, then finds that because of the means test in the War Veterans Allowance Act the money he is receiving as a guaranteed income supplement counts as income for the purposes of the War Veterans Allowance Act, and what he receives under the act is cut back.

We think it is bad enough that there is no improvement for veterans because of this new legislation—at least it was new then—but to maintain that piece of hypocrisy, telling the country and the veterans that war veterans allowance income does not count against their guaranteed income supplement, when the reverse is the case, is no way to treat the veterans of this country. That is an anomaly which I think should be straightened out. It is not something which happened by accident. We debated it at length when we were discussing the guaranteed income supplement, but we could not seem to involve the Minister of Veterans Affairs of that day in any campaign to get the situation changed. But we think it should be changed now.

This is one of the reasons I feel that when the Woods report is referred to the standing committee, and for my part that can be done on Monday, there should also be referred the War Veterans Allowance Act so that the whole position of our veterans can be gone into by that committee. As I have already said, at the risk of seeming to be a killjoy and wanting to spoil some of our members' summer plans I would like to see that committee meet soon rather than in September, a full year from the time when the promise was first made to refer this matter to the standing committee.

In his eloquent remarks the hon. member for Fort William expressed complete confidence that when the government finishes all its reviews of old age pension matters, blind pensions, the Canada Assistance Plan, retired civil servants, veterans and all the rest, it will come up with a plan that will improve things for everybody. I am afraid I do not have that kind of confidence in the government. Having raised pension matters time and again since we first met here last September, I am afraid my feeling is that the government just does not care about our older and retired people, just does not care about the people who have to rely on these kinds of pensions for a decent standard of living.

What bothers me, and I think in his heart of hearts the Minister of Veterans Affairs shares this concern, is the lack of concern on the part of the Prime Minister and the present government for people in these categories, retired civil servants, old age pensioners, retired employees of the C.N.R. and veterans. These people cannot live on reviews, they cannot live on studies being made of all these various programs, they cannot live on fine statements about these things being involved in the problems of inflation, taxation and all the rest of it. If these retired people, these older people, these veterans, deserve our attention let us give it to them with good grace. Let us give it to them in a generous way. Let us not mistreat them. Let us not treat them with bad faith as, in my view, has been the case with veterans since this government came into power.

I regret very much the long delay in dealing with the Woods report and all these other matters, but now that a motion is on the Order Paper let us have the matter referred. Even yet I wish the minister would hold back his white paper and allow members of the standing committee, on the basis of the representations that the various veterans organizations will make to it, to make their own recommendations to the government in line with the clean and solemn commitment he gave on September 13, 1968.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I know there is by agreement a cut-off on this debate at four o'clock and I am also aware that other hon. members wish to speak. Therefore I shall be very brief. I wish to put on the record the facts concerning the standing committee which dealt with the estimates in the hope that I will be able to correct a misunderstanding which apparently has arisen in some quarters. The estimates of the department were referred by order of the house of February 20 to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs of which I have the honour to be chairman. Under the rules of the house there is no doubt that the committee could deal only with the estimates which were referred to it. I shall cite citation 304, sections 1 and 2 in Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 244:

1. A committee can only consider those matters which have been committed to it by the house.
2. A committee is bound by, and is not at liberty to depart from, the order of reference.

In considering these estimates the committee met on April 17 at which time it heard from the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé). It met again on April 23 and again on April 25. On April 17, as the result of a question specifically asked by one of the members of the committee, the chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission placed on record a series of statements relating to those aspects of the Woods committee recommendations which had been implemented by the department. He placed on the record of the committee a series of detailed comments. That was on April 17. The committee was adjourned at that time. As chairman I pointed out to hon. members that it might be their pleasure to await the transcript which would provide an opportunity for detailed cross-examination of the witness. On April 23 when the committee met again the transcript was not available. The committee proceeded to hear other witnesses and to ask questions of the chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission.

On April 23 a letter was prepared and delivered the next morning to members of the committee. It was signed by the Dominion Secretary of the Royal Canadian Legion. With the permission of hon. members I should like to insert this letter in Hansard or place it on the record. I hope I have permission to insert this letter of April 23 signed by D. M. Thompson and addressed to the chairman and members of the Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am not quite sure whether the hon. member would like to have the letter appear as an appendix to Hansard or whether he would like to read it into the record. I might caution him as I have other members, that it is an irregular practice to do this. The hon. member has the option to read the letter into the record, although we try to discourage this. Of course the letter could, with unanimous consent, be placed on the record.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I would normally read it but in the interest of saving time I am trying to adopt an expeditious procedure because I know other hon. members are anxious to speak. I shall cite one paragraph:

> In the event that further information on this matter is desired we would be pleased to make ourselves available to appear before your committee.

On April 25 the committee again met. I presume individual members of the committee had received this communication from the Royal Canadian Legion. There was an opportunity to cross-examine any of the witnesses. They were all available before the committee at that time. On April 25 the committee terminated its hearings and reported back to the house the estimates of the department in accordance with its terms of reference.

I think there has been some misunderstanding here because some members seem to think the committee was then at liberty to call the Legion personnel to give testimony before the committee because they were most anxious to make comment in respect of the testimony of Mr. Anderson. The fact is that the committee had very specific terms of reference, the estimates of the department, before it. According to the citation I have read there is no question that the committee did not have the discretion to depart from those terms of reference at that time.

There is now before this house a notice of motion which will come up on Monday next to refer the report of the Woods committee to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. It has been indicated by the spokesman for the New Democratic party that the members of that party are prepared to give unanimous consent to this motion. I hope at that point there will not be prolonged debate because it is obviously in the interest of the veterans of Canada that the committee should meet to set up an orderly procedure for dealing with this report at the earliest possible time. Upon the adoption of this motion, which I hope will be dealt with in the same non-partisan way in which other similar matters are dealt with by the house, I intend to call a meeting of the steering committee to discuss the most appropriate time for the committee to meet to deal with the recommendations of the Woods committee. There have been suggestions that the committee should meet in September. There are other matters which will have to be taken care of before the committee can make this decision but I hope that this suggestion which has been made from more than one quarter of the house will be given earnest consideration by the committee.

I hope this will clarify a misunderstanding which apparently has arisen in some quarters of the house concerning the work of the committee and the opportunity of a group such as representatives of the Royal Canadian Legion to take part in the committee's hearings at a time when there was a specific reference before the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, while listening to my colleague from Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), I noticed that he asked permission to have a letter inserted in Hansard and that you were about to ask unanimous consent of the house, but this did not materialize. I want to know if my hon. friend is insisting to obtain unanimous consent of the house in order to place this letter on the record.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the point of order may I say that it is entirely up to the hon. member for Ottawa West if he wants to insist that the letter be tabled, but I should point out that it is an irregular practice to table letters, speeches or charts. However, perhaps there is consent by the house that the hon. member for Ottawa West may include this in his remarks. This is a matter which is entirely up to the house.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not wish to be difficult, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think there is any point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There might not be a point of order but I am trying to clear up what appears to be a misunderstanding. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Veterans Affairs Committee Report

Mr. Francis: The letter from the Royal Canadian Legion to the chairman and members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, dated April 23, 1969, reads as follows:

Gentlemen: We were very interested in the statement made to your committee by the chairman of the Pension Commission on 17 April 1969. In his statement Mr. Anderson dealt with a number of the recommendations of the Woods Committee which according to him have been implemented or are in the process of implementation.

In accordance with our usual practice we analysed the information given by Mr. Anderson in the light of our experience in the field of pension work and the knowledge gained as a result of our intense study of the entire Woods Report.

Knowing the deep interest of your committee members in the Woods Report, we felt that you and your colleagues might find a copy of our analysis of Mr. Anderson's statement helpful in your deliberations. We are therefore providing sufficient copies for each member of your committee.

In the event that further information on this matter is desired we would be pleased to make ourselves available to appear before your Committee.

We are sending copies of this letter with our observations to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission.

Yours very truly

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend my colleagues, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) for introducing in the house a motion which gives members the opportunity to discuss some of the problems of Canadian veterans. I also wish to congratulate him on the effectiveness of his action. He has finally smoked out the minister from behind his cloud of secrecy.

Mr. Stanfield: Do not be too optimistic.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): I will try not to be. It seems to me to be more than a coincidence that this notice should appear on the order paper on the eve of a motion to refer the recommendations of the Woods Committee to the standing committee. So I want to congratulate my hon. friend for his counter-attack in trying to get some action from the minister.

This motion gives me and other members an opportunity to add our protests to the protests of every veterans organization and all the veterans throughout the country who cannot understand why the government has been dragging its feet in respect of such important legislation. I have heard one or two government apologists make the statement that all is rosy and that the department has done wonders for the veterans. If this is the case, why then has every veterans organization throughout the country sent letters and telegrams protesting the manner in which the minister has been conducting the affairs of his department? This does not add up. I think it is rather tragic that we have not had more action by this new minister who was appointed to his portfolio with a great fanfare of trumpets. The veterans and veterans' organizations of this country had high hopes that action would be taken because new blood was coming into the department. They believed he would finally get something going in the department, and expected great things to be done for them.

What has happened since the minister's appointment? The great things that were expected have fizzled out miserably. The Woods Committee report was presented to the then minister of veterans affairs in March, 1968. It is now June, 1969, and the minister has taken his first action in connection with a study of that report.

I emphasize what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said a few minutes ago. I, too, deplore the methods the minister has used and the action he has taken in this regard. He has not played fair with the committee. He has told the house repeatedly that the study of the report had been delayed in order that a white paper could be prepared and presented to the standing committee at the same time as the report. I refer to the minister's words as reported in Hansard. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre dealt briefly with this matter. On September 13 last year the Minister of Veterans Affairs promised that the report of the Woods Committee would be referred to the appropriate committee of this house as soon as possible. He confirmed this on September 30. On February 3, in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), the minister replied, as reported at page 5045 of Hansard:

Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to advise the hon. member and the house that at the present time we are preparing a white paper respecting veterans pensions and the Woods Committee recommendations. This white paper is being given high priority and we expect later on this session to be able to refer both the white paper and the Woods Committee report to the House of Commons committee.

What has happened in the meantime? It could be that some members of the government did not agree with the minister's avowed intention to have the committee study the Woods Committee report. The minister then started to hedge on this question. On February 27, as reported in Hansard at page 6007, the minister gave the following reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall).

> Mr. Speaker, as I answered before, the government is now preparing a white paper and both the white paper and the Woods Committee report will be referred to the committee later this session.

That reply would certainly indicate that the white paper and the Woods Committee report would be presented together to the committee. Then, on March 17, as reported at page 6726 of Hansard, in reply to a question asking what was happening with regard to the report of the Woods Committee, the minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, as I already said, the Woods report has certainly not fallen into oblivion. The government is preparing a white paper to be submitted to the Committee on Veterans Affairs simultaneously with the report—

That is clear enough. On March 24, as reported at page 7007 of Hansard, the Minister of Veterans Affairs in reply to a question used the following words:

> As I said before, Mr. Speaker, the government at the present time is preparing a white paper on this matter. Both the white paper and the Woods Committee report will be referred to the proper house committee later in this session.

He confirmed that on April 14. Then on April 28, as reported at page 8048 of Hansard, the minister in reply to a question about the Woods report said:

> As soon as the white paper is ready we shall refer it to the appropriate committee.

The minister's statements are self-explanatory. All through the session we on this side of the house have pressed him to take action on the Woods Committee report. He first said it would be presented to the committee right away. This is standard phraseology on the part of the government; it always says that action will be taken soon or in a few days. The minister told us repeatedly the report would be sent to the Veterans Affairs Committee for study. Suddenly, there was a change in emphasis and he said the report could not be presented to the committee because the government had decided it was not thorough enough and was preparing a white paper on the subject. For this reason, said the minister, the report of the Woods Committee could not be presented to the committee of the house until the white paper had been prepared. He told us this as late as April 29. Suddenly, we find that all the assertions of the minister that the Woods Committee report had to be supplemented by a white paper are out the window and the report will be referred to the committee. Why?

Mr. Stanfield: Because the policy has again been reviewed.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): As my leader says, the policy has again been reviewed. I asked the minister a question today and he said the policy would be introduced in this session. We do not know how much longer the session will last, but I do not think he has very much time in which to present the government's policy in this regard.

Mr. Dube: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I never said I would bring in legislation. I said the report would be presented to the committee.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): I apologize to the minister, Mr. Speaker. At least the report is being presented to the committee; we have that much action from the minister. I vigorously protest the action taken by the minister in this respect. I ask how he can expect the thousands of veterans throughout this country to place any reliance upon his statements. He has been telling us all along that the presentation of the report was delayed because he was waiting for a white paper to be prepared, and the committee could not act on the report until the white paper was presented to it. How can he expect the thousands of veterans in this country to place any reliance on the statement that the legislation will soon be forthcoming? The minister is no longer credible.

Before resuming my seat, I want to make it quite clear that any criticism I have made is directed mainly toward the inaction of the minister. We on this side of the house are perfectly satisfied with the conduct of the officials in the department; they are honest, hardworking, dedicated civil servants and we have no quarrel with them. All we ask is that the minister give them the tools with which to work so they can go ahead and do that which should be done for our veterans. I therefore say to the minister in all sincerity that he should prevail upon those in the cabinet who have apparently been bucking his attempts to introduce legislation which is necessary to improve the situation in which our veterans find themselves. If he does this he will restore some of the shining image he had when appointed to this portfolio.

Veterans Affairs Committee Report

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I say at the outset that I am not a veteran. I mention this simply to indicate that I have no personal axe to grind. Those who did not serve in the armed forces have a tendency to be impatient with those who did, because we cannot share their comradeship born out of wartime service, sacrifice and association. I share no such impatience. A veteran can bend my ear at any time, on any subject, at any place, and I am flattered to say that some veterans do. I think this arises in part out of my maiden speech, which was given some publicity in so far as veterans associations are concerned, and also the articles I have from time to time written in veterans publications.

• (3:40 p.m.)

When the Dieppe Prisoner of War Association recently met with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé), I made a point of being present to hear and support the brief they presented. All too often we feel, when dealing with this great juggernaut called government, that there is little purpose in preparing briefs or attending meetings with ministers. Fortunately, the Dieppe P.O.W. Association received a splendid hearing, and the minister undertook to examine a representative number of files to determine if there is a disability common to the Dieppe ex-prisoners of war. The men presenting the brief undertook to provide the minister with a list of the men on their roster. It was gratifying to me personally to find that the list sent by the Dieppe P.O.W.'s was sent to my office for presentation to the minister. Arising directly out of that particular meeting, more than 800 files of Dieppe ex-prisoners of war have been examined and a catalogue of complaints and ailments has been made. I do not know the results of the report but it is gratifying to know that there is a minister who will listen to the veterans of this country.

This interest that I have in veterans affairs is born, I suppose, out of a lifetime of brainwashing because my father saw service in both world wars; in the first one in the Royal Naval Air Service and in the second war in the Royal Canadian Air Force as a squadron leader. One would have thought that this would have been enough, yet he saw fit to join the Department of Veterans Affairs and to give 20 years of service to it. Just before his retirement, he worked as a district administrator for D.V.A. I know the house will pardon this personal reference, but, I hope the house can appreciate it is as a result of this background that my concern for the rights of veterans arises. Party loyalty will not divert me from this concern.

High on my list of sources of information dealing with veterans is the magazine Legion. I commend to the attention of all hon. members the February 1969 issue. Pages 13 to 22 of that issue contain an excellent treatise or summary or, as the magazine puts it, "a simplified outline of the facts supporting the recommendations made by Mr. Justice Woods and his committee". This should be required reading for all members of the Veterans Affairs Committee and, most assuredly, required reading for all officials in the Department of Veterans Affairs as well as for the minister himself.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We could put it in Hansard.

Mr. Cullen: I have a copy here also. In my considered opinion, no veteran of any war has received more attention, more consideration, better hospital care or more assistance in training for work and in seeking employment, or more financial help toward an education or toward building a home, than has the Canadian veteran. I do not say this to provoke an argument. I say it primarily because I think it is true, but also because I want to add that we can and always should be looking for ways to do more for the Canadian veteran.

The Legion magazine states in part as follows:

> Months in preparation, meticulous in detail, bristling with 148 recommendations, the Woods report was hailed as a momentous production when it appeared last March.

This report is contained in three volumes in excess of 1,300 pages. The pages overflow with wisdom, and there is little doubt that the survey of the organization and the work of the pension commission results in many outstanding recommendations which, if implemented, would be of considerable long term value to veterans and their dependants.

The Legion and 10 other national veterans' associations met at least three times to discuss this report. While some groups are more concerned than others with the specific aspects of the report, there is unanimity in that they all support the report and urge its implementation. I say, "Amen", to that, but I have a lawyer's qualification. I think early implementation is great, but I do not want to see hasty implementation. I am unalterably opposed to it, whether it be for political advantage or whether it be to remove the pressure. There are 148 recommendations, as I said before, and 10 veterans' groups and the Legion itself cannot agree even among themselves on all the recommendations which should receive top priority.

To be fair to these organizations, I think there is general agreement in four areas: the pension appeal board, multiple disabilities, the basic rate, and Hong Kong veterans. In my address I have not catalogued the 148 recommendations, but can the country, and hopefully the opposition and the veterans, see the magnitude of the task facing the government? I urge the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) to play it cool. I ask him not to seek political advantage. I ask him not to give in to the pressures which are being brought to bear upon him. I ask him not to be rushed into hasty action.

Mr. Nesbitt: Such as in four years.

Mr. Cullen: My friend will have an opportunity to speak later. I did not know he would want to butt in at this time. I am trying to speak on behalf of the veterans of this country. A report that the Legion calls "meticulous in detail" has earned the right to careful appraisal.

I salute the veterans groups, and I salute some members of the opposition as well as some members of my own party who keep the pressure on because it must be done. The Woods report cannot be permitted to gather dust. I venture to say that there is not one copy of this splendid report in the hands of the Department of Veterans Affairs that is gathering dust. I will bet that they are dogeared, read and re-read, considered and re-considered.

I do not have the foggiest notion right now what recommendations will be accepted. I do not intend either to speak on all of them, but I do feel that many recommendations should be automatic, and I cite the following examples. First of all I wish to mention routine decisions. Why should hearings and a mountain of paper work be required to decide that a pension should continue to be paid while a child of a pensioner continues to attend school?

The second point concerns hearings. If a veteran is to receive a hearing, then let us not make it a hearing in name only. It is ludicrous and unfair to place a pension claim before a tribunal without the veteran or his representative being present, and to call that a hearing.

I should also like to say a word on multiple disabilities. Very early in the fall, as an extremely green backbencher—having tangled for a few minutes with the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) this afternoon I realize that perhaps I am greener than I thought—and without knowing all of the recommendations of the Woods committee report, I asked the following question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. While awaiting the completion of the Woods committee report, would the hon. gentleman consider allowing an interim increase, possibly beyond 100 per cent, to triple and quadruple amputees?

I can appreciate the fact that the minister may not wish to deal in a piecemeal way with the recommendations of the Woods Committee report and that he will probably bring in his report in the form of a white paper. However, of all the recommendations, this is surely one in connection with which the minister might wish to give serious consideration to amending the legislation straight away. When one considers the situation of a man who has lost one leg and receives a 70 per cent disability pension and of another man who has lost two legs who receives a 100 per cent pension, one realizes that the loss of one leg is considered to be a 70 per cent disability but the loss of a second leg is only an additional 30 per cent disability. I think this is ridiculous and very unfair to the triple and quadruple amputees.

The fourth point concerns representation. One point to which I should probably have referred earlier in the course of my remarks, and to which I meant to refer earlier, is the question of representation and hearings before the pension commission. At the present time there is an agency charged with the responsibility of defending a veterans case for a pension. This is very commendable, the right kind of thinking and a great approach. The Legion itself calls it a "lofty ideal". But it is a role which has been restricted by the legislation which requires this agency to present both sides of the argument when submitting a case to the pension commission. The Woods committee suggested, and I concur, that a strong lawyer client relationship should exist between the veterans' bureau and the applicant. The committee recommends that the bureau operate as a separate and independent agency charged only with the task of representing the applicant. Who can disagree with that logic?

Veterans Affairs Committee Report

Another matter with which I should like to deal concerns pensioners involved in damage claims. The Legion magazine says it more colloquially but quite succinctly with the following phrase "sorry, ma'am, you can't have both the pension and the insurance payment". The widow who has lost a pensioned husband in an automobile accident would be shocked, says the Legion. I hope this widow would have the presence of mind to blurt out "why not?". Surely, a pension is a matter of right. The Woods committee agrees and says, further, that the pension should be paid regardless of any other payments which may be made to the pensioner or his widow from other sources.

The next point on which I should like to speak is the stabilization of pensions. This is an area where I have some first hand knowledge. The reduction of the percentage of pensionable disability has often had the effect of cutting out a pension which would be paid to a veterans' widow. This must happen in many cases. The sad truth is that a veteran has had little enough opportunity to build up an estate and when he has reached a certain degree of pensionable disability, then on his death his wife receives a pension whether or not his death is attributable to wartime disability. Consider the case of a veteran who has received a percentage of disability allowance necessary for his widow to receive a pension. Suppose he has been receiving this disability pension for a period in excess of five years. Surely, after this length of time he would come to rely upon the supposition that his widow would continue to receive her income, and take this into account when planning his estate. Can hon. members imagine his disgust, and the concern he feels for his wife's position, when, after this long period of time his case is reviewed and he is told he is no longer in the same high category and that the amount of his pension is to be reduced, with the result that his wife will not receive a pension?

I agree that veterans receiving disability pensions should be subject to a series of medical examinations to determine whether or not the percentage of pensionable disability should be reassessed, but surely after a period of three, four or five years—whatever the minister and his colleagues in their wisdom may decide—the percentage of pensionable disability should not be subject to reduction. In effect I am agreeing with the Woods Committee recommendation that a stabilization policy should be established for the guidance of the veteran.

Unfortunately, time does not permit me to put all my views on the Woods Committee report before the house. I have tried in the short period to highlight some of the areas which I feel need attention. We on the government side do not have the leeway available to the opposition because we have the obligation to govern, with all the responsibility which this entails. In this case it means we are responsible for finding taxpayers' dollars with which to meet the recommendations. If an hon. member on the government side suggests that maybe, just maybe, we cannot afford it—that is to say, the taxpayers cannot afford it—

Mr. Nesbitt: Every year, $155 million for the C.B.C.

An hon. Member: Quiet.

Mr. Nesbitt: I will not be quiet. He is using up the time so that I shall not get a chance to speak.

Mr. Cullen: It is gratifying that the hon. member is listening to my address.

Mr. Nesbitt: Seventy-five million dollars to Ford.

Mr. Cullen: To suggest that perhaps the taxpayers cannot afford it is almost heresy in the eyes of the opposition. The veteran has been prepared to give his life. How can we talk about not being able to afford it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cullen: Maybe if the hon. member listens he will learn something.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have active knowledge of what the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Can we have order in the house?

Mr. Cullen: We have an obligation to the taxpayer, certainly, but I say we have a still greater responsibility to the veteran not to hold out false hopes, not to have him believe that every one of these recommendations will be accepted, not to have him feel that every request made by the Legion or by other veteran's associations is going to be met. I believe it is incumbent upon the government to do all it can to assist veterans and their dependants within reason, and, where possible, I believe the government has an obligation to extend its facilities or to increase the amount it is prepared to pay if the request is reasonable.

If we can afford more by way of pensions, medical attention, V.L.A. loans and so on, who would vote against those increases? We are less callous in telling the veterans we cannot afford it than is any member of the opposition parties who would hold out false hopes to them. I am thankful for the opportunity to express in the few minutes allotted to me my views on the Woods Committee report and some of its recommendations and, once again, to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) not to be rushed into a hasty implementation of some of these recommendations.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I realize that time is limited; I shall be as rapid as possible. I rise to take part in this debate in gratitude and with profound respect for the gallant men and women who have served as members of the Canadian Armed Forces in fields of conflict around the world. These are men and women who gave their all to bring freedom to an oppressed world and to protect and preserve a heritage they held dear—and one which at one time all Canadians held dear. After listening to some of the remarks made today in the house I wonder whether some of us still do.

It is a heritage which the present generation and this government are allowing to erode. These men and women fought for us all—for those of us who were unable or unwilling to do our own fighting. What have we done for them in return? Very little, I submit.

Fifty-one years ago they were told they had won a war to end all wars. Twenty-four years ago their sons and daughters were told the same thing. These were the promises made by the statesmen of the day: these valiant warriors were to return home to a brighter future and a better life provided by a grateful nation. But it seems the grateful nation suffers either from a defective memory or from a conveniently short one. We are more interested in improving the lot of the hardened criminal, the homosexual and the marxist agitator—and let us not forget the deprived high income earner who, in the Finance Minister's own words, is carrying too heavy a tax load. Millions of dollars are being poured into bilingualism. The government somehow managed to find an amount in excess of $46 million to finance that cultural centre down the street. It is easy to see there is federal money for projects dear to the heart of the present government.

We have to economize somewhere though, and that somewhere is in an area not so dear to the government's heart. Veterans pensions, along with old age pensions, civil servants pensions and public housing, apparently fall into this category. There is money available to provide departmental heads with salaries of $40,000. There appears to be an unlimited source of money to meet the requirements of the Prime Minister's bloated personal staff. Money is available to provide a court jester for the City of Vancouver and to assist in the education of a self-confessed anarchist in Montreal. Money was even made available, as I recall, for a young Canadian to travel to New York City to demonstrate his remarkable talent for smashing pianos. Is the government trying to tell us that the contribution to Canada's wellbeing made by these people is greater than the contribution made by our veterans?

How many times were our servicemen sent into battle ill-equipped by shortcomings in training and experience to endure the hardships of mud and vermin, the horror of seeing one's friends being slaughtered? How many times were they sent into battle with insufficient equipment, insufficient rations and insufficient sleep? They faced these adversities and they faced death or dismemberment without complaint. For those who survived the bombs, the bullets and the bayonets, there remained the uncertainty of a life marred by the effects of tuberculosis, malaria and countless other physical maladies, of broken bodies and broken spirits. They earned a reputation for Canada that people throughout the world still look up to. But that reputation was earned at a heavy price. Thousands of white crosses in far distant lands are testimony to the price which was paid. To the men who lie at rest under those crosses, we can only say thanks for a job well done. But, to those who survived, we can surely offer more tangible proof of our gratitude. These men assured our very presence here today as Members of Parliament. Without their willingness to risk life and limb in the cause of freedom, we would not be here at all, spending the taxpayers' money, disputing the virtues of bilingualism. If we had lost the war the men who might have occupied these seats would have imposed their own language, and French and English would have been rendered as useless as the language of ancient Rome. We sit here in this chamber through the efforts of the men who, in two world wars and in the regional conflicts of recent years, thought freedom was worth fighting for. Yet we hesitate to pass legislation which would make life a little less burdensome for these men. They are not asking for very much, just enough to permit them to live their lives in dignity. Why do we hesitate in this regard, Mr. Speaker?

• (4:00 p.m.)

I should like to read into the record an excerpt from a letter that I received from one of my constituents.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Unless the house directs otherwise, I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that, pursuant to the order made earlier today, the item under consideration is now deemed to have concluded and we must move on to government orders.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISIONS RESPECTING STATUS AND USE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, June 18, consideration of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill, and motion No. 3 (Mr. McQuaid), and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lewis.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this amendment, may I say it goes a long way towards setting at rest the fears of those who are suspicious of this bill. Someone once said that it is not enough for justice to be done, but that it must appear to be done. That is at the back of the minds of many people when they think of this legislation. They are suspicious of it. They are suspicious of its administration and of its application.

In an earlier amendment to the bill, we attempted to bring about a position where all provinces in Canada would be assured of at least one representative on the advisory council. This amendment did not find general approval, though I still hope government members will reconsider their position with regard to it and that when a vote is taken on the first amendment will see their way clear to voting for it. I also hope they will find their way clear to vote for this amendment, because if all seven of the amendments were adopted the fears of many people about this legislation would be set aside.

The other evening the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) said that this piece of legislation concerns only the linguistic ombudsman;—I paraphrase his remarks reported at page 10368—that this ombudsman has no powers; that there are no penalties involved, and so on. I suggest the commissioner does have powers, and these are clearly set out in clause 28, with which the amendment would seek to do away. He has great powers. He can make recommendations. In recommending that certain action be taken by the government he expects that recommendation to be followed. He is appointed by the government and for the government. He can be removed at very short notice by the government. Therefore, he carries out the wishes of the government in recommending that action be taken by the government. They both work in harmony.

Clause 28 specifically provides that no person is entitled as of right to be heard by the commissioner. It also provides that hearings shall be held in private. However, if in the middle of a hearing the commissioner feels that some evidence or his recommendation will be detrimental to any person or department, he can summon them before him.

The Minister of Justice spoke at length on this subject on the last occasion we debated the bill, which was two days ago on June 18. The minister implied that on every occasion that somebody is adversely affected by the legislation he shall be heard. Clause 28 makes no reference to the word "shall". It does refer to "may" and "if". At line 31 the clause provides:

> —if at any time during the course of an investigation it appears to the Commissioner that there may be sufficient grounds for his making a report or recommendation that may adversely affect any individual or any department or other institution, he shall, before completing the investigation, take every reasonable measure to give to that individual, department or institution a full and ample opportunity to answer any adverse allegation or criticism—

I ask the house to take particular note of the words "if" and "may". The whole case rests on the commissioner. If he is sensitive to the feelings of somebody he is investigating, then he may give him a hearing. The point I want to make, and which I do not think has been brought out forcefully enough, is that in the middle of a hearing, after he has made up his mind that he is going to bring in some recommendation that is going to adversely affect somebody ,he may give that person a hearing.

I suggest what would happen would be this. A commissioner makes an investigation. He makes up his mind to bring in a recommendation. He then stops and says to himself: "If I bring in this recommendation, an individual or a department may be adversely affected, so I had better hear from them". This person or department would then be heard, but after the commissioner had up his mind. I ask the house whether this is the kind of treatment we are to expect today in this just society. I say this is wrong. I say that if the commissioner is going to investigate a department, or one area of activity of a department someone is responsible for administering, he should notify that person and allow him to attend the private hearing. I know the public is not allowed to attend, but at least the person concerned should be allowed to appear and prepare a defence, if that is necessary. He should be allowed to do so before any recommendation is drafted, and certainly before the commissioner reaches the conclusion that he is going to make an adverse recommendation. This, to me, is part and parcel of our system of justice in Canada.

I have always found that if I wanted to convince somebody to take a certain stand it was best to do so before he had had the opportunity of making up his mind. At this time he will listen much more attentively and concern himself with both sides of the question. No such problem arises under clause 28, because the mind of the commissioner is already made up. It is only for the purpose of giving the person concerned what appears to be fair and equal treatment that the commissioner calls him in and gives him a brief hearing. I think it is safe to say that he will not be listened to very attentively or with any interest. This is making a mockery of the system of justice with which we have lived for years.

Perhaps the Minister of Justice will tell us that the commissioner will not do anything. Perhaps he ought to read clause 28 again. It reads in part:

> —to answer any adverse allegation or criticism, and to be assisted or represented by counsel for that purpose.

It is obvious that any recommendations the commissioner may make will be recommendations affecting adversely some person. The Minister of Justice cannot say that the commissioner does not occupy the position of a judicial body in this country. Any person who hears evidence and makes recommendations on that evidence occupies the position of a judicial body. It is true that the commissioner cannot impose fines or penalties; but he has the power to report, to recommend and, above all, to condemn. Clause 28 specifies those powers. From my reading of the clause, it is clear that once the commissioner has made up his mind to condemn someone he may call that person before him before all the evidence on which the condemnation is to be based has been gathered. I hope the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) understands me. To judge from his frown, he appears to misunderstand me. It is because clause 28 is included in the bill that many in this country are suspicious of this entire legislation.

The N.D.P. member for York-Scarborough spoke at length about how necessary it is for the government to display the right spirit in implementing and enforcing this legislation. That is not good enough for me. The N.D.P. may be content with this legislation, but I am not. The N.D.P. has always been a party that believes in authority. They have always believed that the authority of the government should be supreme in all phases of a country's life. That is why they buy this bill 100 per cent.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member wishes to insult me, at least he could have the courtesy of referring to my constituency in a proper way. I represent the constituency of York South.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanbury: I was flattered to be singled out.

Mr. Horner: Never mind, Mr. Speaker. I may not have named the correct constituency but I put my finger accurately on the philosophy motivating the N.D.P. From time immemorial they have believed that the authority of the government should be supreme in all phases of life. They want the government to manipulate and control people. That is why they want this legislation. And look what happens to people when the government is all powerful and all supreme. Look what has happened in Soviet Russia and in Communist China. The governments of those countries are authoritarian and socialist. I well remember what happened in Saskatchewan, where I was born and bred, in the early 1940's when the leader of the present New Democratic Party went tramping across the country preaching to the people that governments should be all powerful and control everybody in the country. The experience of 20 years has mellowed the hon. member. The N.D.P. no longer supports the Regina Manifesto. Now, they have the Winnipeg report, a watered down version of their original ideas. But they still believe the government should exert supreme authority in the country. They still believe it should be all powerful and that it should control everybody and everything. That is why they support this legislation.

Although the hon. member for York South is a lawyer of fair renoun, he supports the present legislation which is a travesty of justice and which ignores all the safeguards built into our legal system. He accepts his party's position that the authority of the government must be supreme everywhere and that the government must control everything in a country. I do not support that concept. I believe individuals should live in freedom and be free to express themselves as they wish. They should not be subjected to socialist authoritarianism. I say this knowing full well that not all socialists in this house are in the N.D.P. The three wise men, as they were called, are still socialists.

I am surprised at the Minister of Justice. Why is he tarnishing a good reputation by supporting this authoritative piece of legislation. Why did he, with his learning and love of justice, talk at great length on June 18 in defence of clause 28. His remarks cover pages and pages of Hansard. At one time the minister was concerned about individuals. That is no longer true. Today he supports this legislation which will give the commissioner the power to peer into every nook and cranny of Canada and to snoop into all our lives. This all powerful Czar will not be able to snoop into the offices of Members of Parliament. But that is the only limitation to his power.

In my opinion the key words in clause 28 are "if" on line 31 of page 16 of the bill and "may" on line 35. The clause does not say "shall adversely affect" or "will adversely affect". It merely uses the word "may".

Clause 28(2) reads in part:

> —if at any time during the course of an investigation it appears to the Commissioner that there may be sufficient grounds for his making a report or recommendation that may adversely affect any individual or any department or other institution, he shall, before completing the investigation, take every reasonable measure to give to that individual, department or institution a full and ample opportunity to answer any adverse allegation—

It is clear that those supporting the legislation also support a philosophy which says that the government must be all powerful in all areas of a country's life.

I now wish to deal with clause 30 which is every interesting and which reads in part:

> (a) to summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses and compel them to give oral or written evidence on oath, and to produce such documents and things as the Commissioner deems requisite to the full investigation and consideration—

• (4:20 p.m.)

This clause gives the commissioner quite a lot of power. Clause 28 of the bill relates to some person or department about whom the commissioner is concerned. That party can be called before him and made to produce documents and evidence which will, in a sense, condemn him. Fortunately, the last line of clause 28 states that the person or department is allowed to have counsel. That was a generous stroke of the pen. They are giving a condemned person a right to counsel.

Mr. McQuaid: Far too late.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) says, "Far too late".

Clause 30 reads in part:

> —under this act, in the same manner and to the same extent as a superior court of record;

Subclause (c) of clause 30 reads:

> —whether or not such evidence or information is or would be admissible in a court of law;

This power is far beyond that given to a court. The government is not worried about how it gathers evidence. There has been a great deal of discussion in the last two or three weeks regarding wire tapping, which is not really admissible in a court of law. That would not bother this group. They would use any evidence, no matter how it was obtained or how fair or just it was. They would use it whether or not it would be admissible in a court of law.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret I have to inform the hon. member his time has expired. Unless there is agreement on the part of the house—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous agreement. I regret to advise the hon. member there is at least one "no."

Mr. Horner: They must not like what I am saying.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Speaker: I again ask if there is unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Horner: It does not really matter. They do not listen anyway. Once before the hon. member tried to give me additional time but his group would not listen.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Is the house ready for the question on the amendment of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis)?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment will please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it, and the amendment is lost on division.

Amendment (Mr. Lewis) negatived, on division.

Mr. Speaker: The question is now on the main motion. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Orders and the advice I gave to the house earlier this week, this vote will be deferred.

Perhaps I should be allowed to express an afterthought in connection with the motion proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid). As hon. members will note from a reading of pages 4 and 5 of today's order paper, that motion proposes to amend clauses 28, 29 and 30 of Bill C-120. It appears each motion at the report stage should actually be directed to a specified clause of a bill rather than a number of clauses. Such motions, I submit, should not relate to two or more clauses, as in the case of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan. It is my submission that at the report stage of a bill it is intended that every provision of a bill may be isolated and dealt with directly.

The motion proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan, which will be voted upon later, tends to thwart the operation of that principle. A complex motion dealing with several clauses of a bill inevitably leads to complicated amendments which further confuse and becloud the question being considered. I think my point will be apparent to those hon. members who studied the amendment to the motion which was advanced by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I might say it was actually the amendment moved by the hon. member for York South which made the Chair realize that perhaps the motion, as it had been proposed, should have been split in three. I should say that the motion of the hon. member for Cardigan should have been split into three motions rather than a single motion, but this perhaps may be a bit too technical.

I say this to protect the position of the Chair if on other occasions motions of this nature are proposed at the report stage. All this having been said, it is in the nature of an afterthought because a motion had been accepted, put to the house and will be voted on in due course.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I be permitted to add a postcript to Your Honour's afterthought? This problem concerned the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) and others in this party. Possibly what I have to say should be directed not only to Your Honour but also to members of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization when they deal in the future with matters more important and more consequential than the report which was filed today. As Your Honour realizes, we are groping around trying to find our way through the new rules.

Frequently an amendment involves a certain number of clauses. In order to secure an appropriate consequential amendment, it may be desirable to try and include in one motion the various clauses of the original bill which have to be modified to bring about the principle which the mover of the amendment has in mind. I just mention this, your Honour, so that when in their infinite wisdom the members of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization come to review this part of our procedure they might keep in mind Your Honour's words, as well as the problem that is created when a bill contains in several clauses a principle that the mover of an amendment is trying to change.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan) moved:

That Bill C-120, an act respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be amended by adding to clause 34 thereof the following subclauses:

"(4) Where a member of the House of Commons, on or before the third sitting day next following the day the Speaker of that House tables any report made by the Commissioner under section 33, asks leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing the report as a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, the matter shall be deemed proper to be discussed and shall thereafter be proceeded with in accordance with the provisions of the standing order of the House applicable to the subsequent stages of the proceeding.

(5) The annual statement to Parliament made by the Commissioner under this section, when tabled respectively in the Senate and House of Commons, shall thereupon be referred in each House to a committee designated by the Speaker."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is intended simply to act as a very necessary check on the manner in which and the degree to which this bill, if it is enacted as law, will be administered. I have previously mentioned, and I submit again today that it is purely an administrative bill.

So far as the apparent principle of the bill is concerned, that is the provision of bilingual services in those areas where a sufficiently large number of people require them, and so far as the idea is concerned of trying to make everybody feel at home no matter where they are in Canada, I entirely agree. But I still maintain that the bill, from clause 1 to clause 41, is a purely administrative one, and the purpose of this amendment is to try and place some safeguards around the proper administration of it.

I wish to sound a very sincere warning. If this bill, when it is enacted as law, is not properly administered then the government is in very serious trouble. The whole success of the bill is going to depend on its proper administration. A great deal of the success of the bill is going to depend on the man who will be designated as commissioner. That is one of the reasons why, a few moments ago, we called for a vote on an amendment with respect to the powers of the commissioner.

I am afraid that the commissioner is not going to be the little, innocuous, harmless individual that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) tries to paint him. Certainly, the powers to be given to him under this legislation would not lead one to believe he will be an innocuous individual. Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, and the people of Canada are making no mistake about it, this man will be a very powerful individual unless some of the safeguards suggested in our previous amendment and in this one are written into the bill.

I do not know whether it was done deliberately or otherwise, but the fact is that the bill provides no effective method for reviewing the operations of the language commissioner. I have studied it carefully and I can find nothing in it that gives anybody any power to review the operations and functioning of the language commissioner. Therefore, this amendment is intended to check to some degree the manner in which the bill will be administered.

I suggest that centuries of experience have taught all people who favour a democratic form of government that the powers that are given to the executive, the powers that are given to parliament, and the powers that are given to the courts must be checked by counter balancing powers given some other authorities. Take the example of our courts. We start with the lowest court in the land, the Magistrates court. If I am not satisfied with the decision handed down in the Magistrates Court, I have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the province. Under certain circumstances if I am not satisfied with the decision of the Supreme Court of the province, I can appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. There must be counter balancing powers, but in this bill unfortunately there is no right of appeal. This is something which we will raise later on by way of another amendment. There is no appeal against the decision that the commissioner will have the power to make.

The administrative powers given to the executive are subject to known check, either by the judiciary, or in many cases by parliament itself. But there is no power of review or appeal in this legislation. There is no appeal to the courts or to anybody else. Since there is no power of appeal, then we say that the controlling power should be right here in parliament. This is why we are trying to insist that the report of the commissioner should be subject to scrutiny by parliament.

Let us examine the bill. Clause 19 reads:

(1) There shall be a Commissioner of Official Languages for Canada, hereinafter in this Act called the Commissioner.

(2) The Commissioner shall be appointed by Commission under the Great Seal after approval of the appointment by resolution of the Senate and House of Commons.

I think at this point it is worthy of note that except for the concession which is apparently given to parliament of hiring and firing this very powerful man, parliament is to have no further knowledge of him. In other words, we are given the power to take him on in the first place. We are given the power to fire him if he does something wrong while the house is in session. We see him coming and we see him going, but apparently that is all we are going to have to say about him.

• (4:40 p.m.)

This bill fails to designate a minister to answer for the commissioner. This is very strange in respect of a bill of this nature. Who is the minister to be who presumably will try to exercise some power at least over this very, very powerful commissioner? Why did the government not have the courage to name in this bill the member of the executive council under whose jurisdiction this man will work? Why did they not have the courage to tell us under which department this person will work? Perhaps he will be the Secretary of State. We do not know. Stranger things have happened. I remember not too long ago in this house we debated for many days the organization of the Canadian Transport Commission. Not long after the debate was concluded the minister who piloted the bill through the house saw fit to resign his seat. Then, not many weeks after this he was appointed to head the commission. Is the same thing to happen in respect of the Secretary of State? He is helping to pilot the bill through the house. Will he be the commissioner? I think members of this house would like to know under whose jurisdiction this person will operate.

We are not told who will exercise this very valuable check on the administration of the act. We suggest this information is unjustly refused. Those who are promoting the bill tell us there are other checks. Let us examine again clause 33 subclause (1) of the bill. It reads:

If within a reasonable time after the making of a report containing any recommendations under section 31, no action is taken thereon that seems to the Commissioner to be adequate and appropriate, the Commissioner, in his discretion—

Mind you, this is only in his discretion.

—and after considering any reply made by or on behalf of any department or other institution concerned, may—

Not "shall" but "may".

—transmit a copy of the report and recommendations to the Governor in Council and may—

Again, it is permissive.

—thereafter make such report thereon to Parliament as he deems appropriate.

According to that clause, it is entirely permissive for the commissioner to make a report to parliament. It says he may in his own discretion. If he is unhappy because a department or institution ignores one of his reports, he may complain to parliament if in his opinion the nature of the report is such that it should be brought to the attention of parliament without delay. Then, clause 34 (1) reads:

In addition to any report that may be made by him under section 33, the Commissioner shall—

This is obligatory.

—each year prepare and submit to Parliament a statement relating to the conduct of his office and the discharge of his duties under this Act during the preceding year including his recommendations, if any, for any proposed changes in this Act that he deems necessary or desirable in order that effect may be given to this Act according to its spirit and intent.

This clause requires the Commissioner to make an annual report to parliament. The net result is that the only certain control parliament has over the languages commissioner is, first, to participate, for what this is worth, in hiring and firing and, secondly, the privilege of reading the annual report of the commissioner. Parliament may, on occasion when the commissioner considers he has a case so flagrant that he believes he should report it to parliament without delay, read such a report. That is the only concession extended to us. We are given the right to read the report. The important thing is that as the bill stands today there is not one provision in it which requires this report to be taken off the table and debated in this house. That is the weakness of this bill. That is the reason we are asking that this bill be amended, so that the report of this very powerful and influential man to parliament can be taken from the table and discussed in this house where it should be discussed. I do not think that is an unreasonable request.

Government members may say there are various ways to get the report off the table. No doubt they will point out that we now have opposition days and that this matter could be taken up on opposition days. I say there are enough things going on over there to occupy all the opposition days the government has seen fit to give us without discussing the report of the languages commissioner. We should not be required to use an opposition day to discuss such a report. Surely, the representatives of the people of Canada should be given something more than an opportunity to read the report of the languages commissioner. Surely, they should be given the opportunity to discuss that report in parliament. In essence that is all the amendment we are introducing now asks. We raised this matter before the committee. The government members saw fit to argue that if we extended this privilege to parliament we would be taking away some of the powers of Mr. Speaker; that we would be interfering with the procedures of the house, that the house is master of its own rules and that no statute of parliament should regulate the procedure of this house.

I suggest, with all respect, that there are today laws of this country which do regulate the procedure of parliament, and no serious exception has been taken to them over the years. If we examine the British North America Act we will find that sections 44, 45, 46 and 47 deal specifically with the Speaker of this house. Section 48 of the British North America Act deals with a matter so important as our quorum. Section 49 deals with a matter so important as our voting. Sections 53 and 54 deal with the procedure in respect of our appropriations, and tax bills as well as money bills. Section 91 of the British North America Act has a provision which requires a two-thirds vote on a particular question. These are examples of the procedure of this house being regulated by statute and incidentally by a statute which actually is not a Canadian statute. The British North America Act is a statute passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom.

Since the 1949 amendment we have been able to amend certain of our rules of procedure, but we have to do so, by an act of parliament and not by a standing order of the house. So we say in all seriousness that it is not valid to object to the amendment on the ground that we are trying to control the actions of the house by a statute, and this was never done before. It has been done before. We suggest that this safeguard should be written into the act. Subclause 4 of our amendment reads as follows:

> Where a member of the House of Commons, on or before the third sitting day next following the day the Speaker of that house tables any report made by the commissioner under section 33, asks leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing the report as a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, the matter shall be deemed proper to be discussed and shall thereafter be proceeded with in accordance with the provisions of the standing order of the house applicable to the subsequent stages of the proceeding.

I realize that the amendment does in a sense take away from the Speaker some of the powers he ordinarily exercises under our standing orders. When we introduced the amendment we had in mind the intent of the bill itself, namely, that if the commissioner considered a matter to be so urgent that it required immediate attention, he would not have to wait until he submitted his annual report but could make a special report to parliament. We thought that if the matter was so urgent that it required a special report to parliament, nothing would be wrong with requiring that the report be debated immediately.

We do not want to do anything that would lessen the power and discretion exercised by the Speaker and, I must say, exercised very wisely in most cases. In the light of that, and upon reflection, we decided that it would perhaps be more acceptable if subclause 4 were struck from our amendment and it were confined to subclause 5, which reads:

> The annual statement to parliament made by the commissioner under this section, when tabled respectively in the Senate and House of Commons, shall thereupon be referred in each house to a committee designated by the Speaker.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) will introduce an amendment which will have the effect of striking out subclause 4 of our amendment, but providing that the annual statement of the commissioner, and any other report the commissioner sees fit to make to parliament, shall be referred to a committee designated by the Speaker. What can possibly be wrong with an amendment of that kind? All we ask is that the report of the commissioner, rather than lying on the table where it will probably die, be referred to a committee of this house.

Many reports are referred to committees of the house. It is absolutely useless to ask the commissioner to make a report to parliament if parliament is not given an opportunity to discuss and examine it. Where could this better be done than before a committee of the house? I appeal through you, Mr. Speaker, to hon. members on the other side of the house to accept my amendment. What can possibly be wrong with a request of that kind? What possible objection can the government have to it? Is there anything wrong in asking that a committee of the house consider the report of the commissioner? Why would the government be afraid of that? Why should they say this is not a reasonable request?

As I have already said, practically all reports are referred to committees which examine them and report back to parliament. All we ask is that the annual report of the commissioner, as well as any special report he may see fit to make under the powers which will be given to him by the act, be referred to a committee of the house designated by the Speaker. We are not asking anything more than that. We are not asking that the house adjourn to debate the question as a matter of public importance. All we are asking is that we be given the right to examine the report in committee. We suggest there is nothing wrong with that. It is a safeguard. Just as sure as we are sitting in the house today, some people in Canada will feel that if there is no provision for the report to be referred to a committee, if there is no provision in the bill for taking the report off the table, there is something wrong; people will be suspicious about the procedure we are adopting, and they will have every reason to be suspicious.

This is not an unreasonable request, and we therefore very seriously recommend it to the government. The government will not be backing down at all if it accepts the amendment. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has indicated that he does not see why the house should change any decision arrived at in the special committee set up to study the bill. Let us not forget that the special committee comprised only 12 members of the house, and there are in the house 264 members. Therefore, 252 members did not have a chance to consider this matter in committee.

Surely, the minister was not serious when he suggested the rest of the membership of the house should be denied the privilege of discussing and perhaps adopting some of the things the committee in its wisdom saw fit not to adopt. We recommend to the government, and all members of the house, the amendment as it will be amended by the hon. member for Peace River. I can assure the house that if the amendment is passed there will be throughout Canada a much better feeling so far as the official languages bill is concerned.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I would point out that at this stage the hon. member will require the unanimous consent of the house to move that a portion of the amendment be withdrawn.

Mr. Baldwin: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, we are following the practice that was followed on two previous occasions, the last time by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). Rather than the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) asking that the amendment he has moved be withdrawn—he would need unanimous consent to substitute another amendment—I am going to move, seconded by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth), an amendment to the motion of the hon. member for Cardigan. I submit this procedure will be within the four corners of the previous decision of Mr. Speaker.

• (5:00 p.m.)

May I be permitted to read my amendment, following which Your Honour can consider it? I move:

That the motion be amended by:

(1) deleting the proposed subclause (4); and

(2) inserting in the proposed subclause (5), next after the word "section", the words "and any report that may be made by him under section 33"; and by renumbering the subclause as subclause (4).

I have a number of quite unofficial copies in English and in French for hon. members who, I know, will be clamouring for them.

May I say before I sit down that the effect of the amendment will be precisely as set out by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid), to nullify the effect of the proposed subclause (4) which permits a member of the house, under certain conditions set out more particularly in subclause (4), to let a report be brought before the house. My amendment would leave the remedy exclusively in subclause (5), namely an automatic direction to the commissioner that the report be referred to parliament and dealt with there. That is the effect of the amendment which I moved.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) was kind enough to inform me earlier of his intention, and the intention of his colleague to move an amendment to the motion which is now on the order paper. I informed him that so far as I was concerned, and I am sure that my colleagues take the same position, I would support the motion as now amended, subject to a small subamendment which I shall move in a moment and which I hope will be acceptable to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and his associates.

Let me say that toward the conclusion of the sittings of the special committee on this bill I moved a motion that the special committee recommend that all reports tabled before parliament be referred to an appropriate committee. That motion, which is on record in the committee's proceedings, was ruled out of order by the chairman of the special committee. I think, if I may say so, that this was done quite properly because of the very specific terms of reference of the committee. I refer to it merely to say that from the time when this idea was brought to the committee, I personally took the position that I could not accept the proposal that there be a provision in this bill that any motion moved under Standing Order 26 must be accepted by the Speaker. The reason for this is, first, the reason which the member himself gave, that we should not reduce the Speaker's powers in these matters and, second, that in most instances I cannot see the value of a debate on the floor of the house where the commissioner is not present. I said at the special committee that it is much more sensible to refer the commission's report to a committee of parliament where we can call the commissioner before us, interrogate him on his report and find out from him what criteria and principles he applied in carrying out his duties. It seems to me that that is much more desirable than a general debate on the floor of the house before that kind of scrutiny has taken place.

Therefore, I am totally in harmony with the hon. member for Cardigan and the hon. member for Peace River with regard to the principle of their amendments. It seemed to me, in the special committee, and it still seems to me, a little strange to embody that kind of proposal in the act instead of making it a rule of the house that the matter be referred to committee. But I am persuaded—and I do not mind saying it—by the hon. member for Cardigan that ther there may be value in having this in the bill. Therefore, I will move a subamendment, explain it and add my appeal to the hon. member for Cardigan that the two ministers responsible for piloting this bill, and who are now in the house, accept his amendment and my subamendment.

I will move in a moment that the words "to a committee designated by the Speaker" be replaced by the words "to an appropriate committee". My reasons are very simple. First, I do not think it is fair to the Speaker to place on him the burden of having to decide to which committee the report is to go at that stage. It seems to me that it is the job of parliament to decide which committee will deal with a particular function under an act of parliament. It is unfair, and, if I may say so without offence, it is not very sensible to lay on the Speaker the duty of deciding to which committee the matter should go. I think that it should be a committee of parliament. Second, I think that the way it is worded "a committee designated by the Speaker", conveys the possibility that there may be a different committee for each report. I hope that there will be either a standing committee or a special committee dealing with this matter only, that is with the reports of the commissioner, or, alternatively, one of the present standing committees, such as, for example, the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, to which these reports would be sent.

I therefore hope that my very simple subamendment is acceptable to the hon. member for Peace River. It seems to me to improve the amendment which he moved. I should like to add my words to those of the hon. member for Cardigan in making a plea to the ministers who are here to accept the amendment and subamendment.

I see a case for saying that a bill should not normally contain such an instruction, but I think the ministers will agree that this is not an ordinary bill and that it is a bill dealing with a very delicate matter. It is a bill which has aroused certain fears, although I have said many times that I am confident that these fears are not justified. It is a bill which requires as careful a scrutiny by parliament as the situation makes necessary. The amendment and the subamendment do not in any way affect the principle of the bill. They do not affect in any way the powers of the commissioner. They do not in any way affect the operation of the bill. They do give a guarantee that the reports of the commissioner will not merely lie on the table of parliament but will be scrutinized by a committee of parliament and, more than that, that the work of the commissioner will be scrutinized through questioning by an appropriate committee of parliament.

I agree entirely with the hon. member for Cardigan that the acceptance of these amendments does no violence to the principle of the bill. I join him in making a plea to the ministers concerned to accept the amendment and the subamendment so that there may be one occasion on which this house is unanimous with respect to an improvement which is suggested by members of the opposition.

Therefore, I move:

That the motion be further amended by deleting the words "to a committee designated by the Speaker" at the end of subclause (5) and that the following words be substituted therefor: "to an appropriate committee".

• (5:10 p.m.)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Before getting down to the new situation created by the subamendment, I wish to address myself to the argument, again introduced by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid), that the commissioner is a powerful individual. I have expressed myself already on the subject of his powers, and what I believe to be his limitations and I do not intend to repeat what I said in this regard on Wednesday evening.

As to there being no appeal, in the sense of a judicial appeal, from the commissioner's recommendations, let me repeat that the commissioner is not a judicial officer; he is not conducting judicial proceedings; he is not deciding questions involving personal rights; nothing he does attaches obligations or penalties. He will be a creature of parliament, responsible to parliament, and he will report to parliament.

Mr. Horner: To which minister?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member has, as usual, with his sense of intuition anticipated just what I was about to say. The reason no minister has been delegated as being responsible is that the commissioner, having the duty to review the performance of the spirit and letter of this bill as it affects every department, should be impartial with respect to every department. In other words, it would not be appropriate that he should be responsible to a particular minister, a position which might give rise to a conflict of interest in relation to the performance of that particular department. Consequently, the commissioner will report to parliament through the Clerk of the Privy Council. The appeal, in terms of the report, is, of course, to parliament.

The purpose of the amendment by the hon. member for Cardigan, as I understand it, is to ensure that the reports of the commissioner are considered by the house or by one of its committees, whether they arise from special investigations under clause 31, or whether they be the annual reports under clause 34.

The hon. member will recognize that this matter did receive consideration in the special committee and that it was decided by the members of the committee not to attempt to tie down the House of Commons in advance to any procedure for the consideration of these reports. Members of the committee felt it was not advisable to attempt by statute to prescribe parliamentary procedure and to intervene in the internal proceedings of the house. Therefore, when we deal with the new subclause four suggested by the hon. member under which leave could be asked to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing the report as a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, we feel that the special order No. 26 now in the standing orders is sufficient. Upon the tabling of a report, this latter procedure could be brought into play as a parliamentary procedure, not as one provided by statute. This part of the amendment was rejected by the committee for the reason that it is open to the house already under standing Order 26 to discuss a matter of urgent public importance at any time depending on the circumstances.

In view of the new subamendment and the subsubamendment—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The motion, the amendment and the subamendment.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton):—the motion, the amendment and the subamendment, and the striking of the addition of subclause four, presumably, by the hon. member for Cardigan, which would impose on parliament in a statutory way the necessity for debate, and in view of the fact that there is now a simple procedure, if one reads both amendments together, for referring the report to an appropriate committee within the discretion of the house, not imposing any obligation in advance, I should like to suggest that we stand this particular clause so that I can reflect on it over the weekend and discuss its effect with the leader of the house.

Mr. Lewis: We should like you to reflect favourably.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Certainly, the elimination of proposed subclause four puts a different complexion on the matter. We would like to let this stand and have the house proceed to something else.

Mr. Lewis: Could the hon. member for Cardigan not buy the Minister of Justice a meal over the weekend and persuade him before he sees the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald)?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He was not in a very good mood today.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We would like to look at this from the point of view of the house rules.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister accept a question? Supposing an hon. member of the opposition wished to direct a question in the house with regard to the activities of the commissioner. To whom would this question be directed if the commissioner does not report to any particular minister?

Mr. Baldwin: That is academic. We do not get any answers, anyway.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Presumably the proper time for a question to be asked with respect to the conduct of the commissioner would be when the report was tabled in the house. Then, the house would be left to its own procedure.

Mr. Horner: Oh, come on. You can answer better than that.

Mr. Hales: Perhaps the minister did not follow my question. It may be hypothetical but this situation could arise. Suppose I or anyone else, as a Member of Parliament, wished to direct a question in the house during the question period in connection with what was being done under the official languages legislation, to which minister would that question be directed?

An hon. Member: The Prime Minister.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would think so, yes. The Prime Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it agreed that this clause stand as suggested by the minister?

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the next amendment stands in the name of my hon. friend from Calgary North. Unfortunately, he is not here at this particular time. He is away on a very important mission. I ask that the same courtesy be extended to us as we extended to the Minister of Justice, that we stand the next one, No. 5, and proceed with motion No. 6.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

That Bill C-120, an act respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be amended by deleting clause 38 thereof and substituting the following:

"38. (1) The right to speak a language other than either of the two official languages shall not be restrained or restricted in its natural development in any way.

(2) The Governor in Council may by order in council enter into an agreement with the government of any province which has been authorized by legislation so to do, for the purpose of encouraging natural development of any such minority language especially as regards the use of such language in matters of education."

He said: Mr. Speaker, let me briefly recapitulate the circumstances leading up to the motion that is now before this house. When the B and B commission made its report one of the commissioners, Professor Rudnicki, made what might be called a dissenting report which is attached to the main B and B commission report. In it Professor Rudnicki made certain claims and suggestions with regard to the languages of other minority groups. He went a very great distance beyond what was expressed in the B and B report.

When the bill was drafted and brought down, the government saw fit to introduce clause 38, which deals with this particular issue. So that this clause might appear for the benefit of those who might read these remarks, clause 38 provides:

Nothing in this act shall be construed as derogating from or diminishing in any way any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this act with respect to any language that is not an official language.

Despite opinions that may have been expressed to the contrary, this is simply a question of saying that anybody who wants to speak another language may do so without penalty. No less is contained in the principle implied and expressly indicated in clause 38.

Quite frankly, there are a number of us who think that this clause does not go far enough. Without taking the position that Professor Rudnicki took in his dissenting report, some of us feel there is room for an intermediate position, and this is expressed in the amendment that I have proposed and placed before the house.

Let me deal with the reasons for moving this particular amendment. First of all, while we are all Canadians, and Canadians first and always, there are different problems in different regions. As a matter of fact, there is no question that the reason for this legislation is precisely because of that fact. Western Canada does have a somewhat different history with regard to its exploration, development and economic progress. All throughout the latter part of the last century and into this century, immigrant boats from Europe came to this country and discharged their passengers in eastern Canada. These people travelled across northern Ontario and into the prairies. The people of the Ukraine, Poland and other parts of central Europe settled on the raw lands of the prairies, following a particular pattern from Manitoba into northern and some parts of central Saskatchewan, and northern and some parts of central Alberta. Thus a perceptible pattern of settlement and colonization was established. These people, settling on this raw land without the benefit of civilization, literally created by their bare hands a fine and viable community in parts of western Canada.

In saying that, I am in no sense diminishing the great contribution made by other people as well, but this is a situation that has developed and which appears obvious in western Canada. It is a fact of life which cannot be ignored in our contemplation of this question of language, racial groups and minority rights.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wonder who has the floor?

Mr. Baldwin: Thank you, sir. I await the response that I am sure will be generated by those who are waiting to hear the rest of my remarks.

Today those people have woven a pattern in the economic, social and agricultural life of western Canada. In saying that, I am by no means derogating from what has happened, particularly since the second world war, in the great cities of Montreal and Toronto and other metropolitan areas in eastern Canada. Nevertheless, this particular situation to which I have referred in western Canada has developed, and we cannot, indeed we must not be allowed, to ignore it.

Let me direct my attention for a moment to one of the linguistic groups, the people from the Ukraine. I have lived amongst these people. I was brought up, went to school and first practiced law in such a community. These people are a fiercely proud and independent people who have managed for a thousand years or more to maintain a viable identity, language and culture. Surely, anyone who saw the representatives of this particular ethnic group perform on Parliament Hill during the course of centennial celebrations will agree with me.

Scattered throughout western Canada are hundreds of halls dedicated to the preservation of the Ukrainian language, though not as an official language or to any extent suggesting that this language should be the language of commerce. These people have accepted English in western Canada as their working language. However, through struggle and perseverance, with this fierce national pride that they have, as I say, they have been able to maintain in a viable way their language, their art and their culture.

It has often been said—and this is something that is said every time representatives from the United States and Canada get together—that while people from the same nations in Europe have poured into Canada and the United States, we are unique, we are different. We, in Canada, have been determined to maintain our certain distinctive and diversified ethnic and cultural rights. This privilege was granted us under the British North America Act in a way known to all members of the house. Each time people from Canada and the United States meet we say: "We are the same as you in many respects, but we are different; we are unique. We think we have something to offer because we have the two great language groups in our country". We have a contribution to make in that regard. If that is the case then, surely, would our contribution not be enhanced if we were able to say to the world, "We have other minority groups in our country. Although they do not seek for their languages the status of official languages, nevertheless these groups have been able to maintain their languages and in that way make a constructive contribution to our society."

Official Languages

I was delighted to learn when I was in Europe that the 18 nations making up the council of Europe had specified that English and French were to be the official languages of the council. As a result, our delegation was able to make a very great contribution on their first appearance. If those in our country of Slavic origin who speak the Slavic languages are able to maintain a viable Slavic identity, could not Canada, considering that there are in the world millions of people who speak the Slavic languages, make an even greater contribution internationally? With those considerations in mind I have proposed the amendment. It does not intend to suggest that languages other than the two mentioned in this bill shall be considered official languages. We feel that if the amendment is accepted it will make the bill more readily acceptable to people belonging to the many different groups we have in our society.

May I now permitted to read some remarks that were made on a previous occasion. I am couching my remarks this way in an attempt to get around the rule which prevents the reading of certain speeches. I hope I will not be ruled out of order. Actually, I am reading from a speech I made myself. I quote:

> All over the world we see the lights of freedom and liberty flickering fitfully against the hot winds generated by those who would take away the rights of the people. In many cases, alas, and in many countries, the light has been snuffed out. We read our papers, we listen to the radio, we watch television, we see these things happening, but we say this will never happen to us.
> Hopefully not, and yet, the saddest stories of history find form in the sorrow of peoples who, having experienced freedom, having come to take it for granted, have failed to exert that constant vigilance so essential for its preservation and have looked the other way or been indifferent while it was being filched away from them.

That will be the position this party will take, Mr. Speaker, when we look at the iniquitous rules contained in the proposal of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. I continue:

> The history of the Ukrainian people, the exploits of Khmelnitsky, the greatest of the Hetmans, and the words of Shevchenko make it plain that the Ukrainian spirit has proved itself imperishable in the past and I am convinced it will continue to remain so in the future. It has been well put by the author, C. A. Manning, who says, 'This has made Ukraine through the ages a land of wealth and of sadness, a land thirsty for liberty but again and again debarred from obtaining it.'
> But in Canada these characteristics of individual initiative and the love of political liberty have found a climate favourable to the preservation of the national spirit which did not die.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

> As I am a Canadian, so are you all Canadians, so are the people in the province of Quebec, and the people of the province of Newfoundland, and the people of all the other provinces.

In the same way, all hon. members here are Canadians. I continue:

> We are Canadians for many reasons. Surely, one of them must be the desire to carry through to completion the most unique experiment in human society—to bring together and welcome within the boundaries of this country people from all parts of the world who accept the common characteristics of Canadian nationality, are proud of it, fiercely proud of it, and yet provide for those who so wish to do the opportunity not only to preserve but to advance different cultures.
> What else but good can come out of such an arrangement which permits this to be done? What great blessing must flow from an association on a free and tolerant basis of peoples who establish a national spirit and then inject into that spirit the best characteristics of the respective groups who have made up the nation.
> When, if ever, this experiment will end I cannot say. How it will end I do not know, but I do know that I find it exciting to be a part of it. I rest content that my children after me and their children after them will continue to be involved in it and I pay the most unequivocal tribute to those who, like the people of Ukrainian descent in this country, are convinced of the values and virtues of Canadianism but are equally satisfied that they have something in particular to offer, their history and their literature,—

It is in that sense, Mr. Speaker, that I offer the amendment to this house.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of rising today to speak on this matter but after hearing the previous speaker relate the background of the ethnic groups which have settled the west, I feel that it is my duty to add a few words because I realize that the hon. member spoke of all the ethnic groups from Europe, China and Japan, but that he did not say a word about the ethnic group from Quebec, namely the French Canadians.

On three occasions I visited the western provinces. I poked around almost everywhere in Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Manitoba and Alberta and I realized—and I feel sorry for the minister—that it will be very difficult to explain the official languages bill to westerners.

I heard the previous speaker talk of "Canadian languages" but I was often told in western Canada that English was the Canadian language.

English-speaking people in western Canada should get it into their head, like us in Quebec, that when we speak of Canadians, we always think of the citizens of both languages. I hoped in vain that the hon. member would speak about the French group, at least the one in his constituency, for there are French Canadians there, but if there are so many French groups nowadays in the western provinces, it could be, if one studies Canadian history, on account of the federal government, of the English-speaking people who thwarted them. I was told so by the French Canadians who live at present in the west. I spent evenings with them, I talked with them.

At that time, subsidies were granted to all ethnic groups from the Ukraine, Hungary, Russia, China, so that they could take over pieces of land in the west, while the French Canadians represented more than 30 or 32 per cent of the population. A certain group of English-speaking people probably got scared and that is why all assistance was refused to people from Quebec who wanted to settle in the West. Those who went there, I am not afraid to say it, paid their own way. The French Canadians who were helped, whom I have met and who come from the United States, received help precisely because they came from the United States. I met three French Canadian families who went to the United States before they came to settle in the West in order to get help.

Facts must be acknowledged, Mr. Speaker. I think that it will help the young English-speaking Canadians to understand the situation in the West. Why have approximately three million French Canadians settled in the United States? Because obstacles were put in their way and they were prevented from going out west to clear the land. These three million French Canadians should be living in the West. They are not because, I repeat, of the federal government, because of an English-speaking majority that did not want French to be spoken too much in the West. And they got their way most of the time.

I assure you that when you get the reception I got in French-speaking localities out west and when those people have an opportunity to meet sincere French Canadian members of parliament, then they open their heart. I heard old people tell old stories with tears in their eyes because that land belonged to us as much as to others and French Canadians would have been the first to clear it. If opposition had not been raised at one time efforts would certainly not be made today to have Ukrainian, Russian or some other language recognized in the same capacity as French, in the West. That bothers me. When I hear an hon. member—who does not admit it so in public—say that he would like to see French treated the same way as Russian, Ukrainian, Chinese and Japanese in British Columbia, Saskatchewan or Alberta, I cannot agree.

In speaking in this debate I want to awaken the young English-speaking Canadians who are willing to discuss the matter. I have met young English-speaking Canadians who are open for discussion, who want to learn history. They are wondering why so many Canadians—because young people consider French Canadians as fellow Canadians—have gone across the border to settle in the United States when the farms are so beautiful out west?

They gave me the answer. The oldtimers told me what had happened, how the French Canadian groups in the Peace River district had begged for their transportation costs in our Canadian parishes. They went there at their own expense, helped by the parishioners, to take over their share of an area which was being given to Rusians or to Ukrainians whose transportation and settling costs were being paid.

One has to know those historical facts to understand the bill under study, and to resolve to correct any injustice inflicted at that time. Many English-speaking people—and I congratulate them for it—through this bill, want to do justice to those who are still clamoring for their rights and begging their provincial governments, most of whom turn a deaf ear, to grant them those rights.

In fact, we consider ourselves to be every bit as Canadian as the English-speaking people in Canada. We consider our linguistic rights as important as theirs, and that is why this bill on the official languages is before us today, for which I congratulate the government.

Finally, if a government at one time denied our French-Canadians out west the right to speak French, this government is allowing them to speak French once again, to enjoy their linguistic rights, to use French at work, in court and in the federal administration offices.

Mr. Speaker, I merely want, through my intervention, to make a few things clear, because I believe that all hon. members will be interested in this question.

I had the opportunity—for which I thank parliament—of gathering information on the spot. In fact, I hate talking through my hat. I went without sleep nights to meet English and French-speaking groups in order to get an understanding of the situation and to make allowance for it. I am sure the struggle goes back to the earlier days of colonization. Those who have read the history of Canada are aware of the hypocritical injustice done the settlers.

That is why many people, including our own children, wonder why there are still so many French Canadians in Maine and in the rest of the United States. It is because it was feared that the west might become as bilingual as Ontario, Quebec or New Brunswick. That is why almost 3 millions French-Canadian workers were prevented from owning land and that preference was given to Russians, to Poles and to Ukrainians. Not that I dislike them, of course, but in all fairness, our people should have been given at least equal advantages at the time.

Today, when we are asked to give almost the same linguistic rights to the Ukrainians and other ethnic groups, it is generally overlooked that when they came to Canada, they were requested to make the solemn promise they would speak the language of the country. And so, on arriving in Canada, they abandoned their own language, because those are the conditions imposed upon immigrants.

Today, they are happy. They all adopted the English language. We must bear the blow, but let no one tell me that the Ukrainian or the Russian will be treated in the same way as the French Canadians because an ethnic group has committed an injustice in western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this intervention without malice summarizes certain remarks I heard and which surprised me, because they were made even by English-speaking people who do not admit this situation exists. If we want a united Canada, a strong Canada, let us start by working together, within the ethnic groups who settled Canada.

As for those who came to join us, they agreed to speak either English or French. They were entirely free. For heaven's sake, we do not want to be told today that Russian comes before French, for example, or that Polish comes before French, because we are in the West. I heard the same thing with regard to Chinese.

If we were to continue the discussion frankly, we would hear something else. Those who speak in that manner do not dare to speak too clearly. They speak about the rights of certain people, certain ethnic groups that are more numerous than others. I recognize that culturally they are right, but linguistically, let them admit that they are in Canada and that they must accept the decisions of the Canadian government.

Today, if parliament tries to ensure more justice, to pour balm upon the discrimination that prevailed forty years ago, it will have done something, and it can be assured that it will have my support as long as it applies that policy.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a question of order, I rise to correct a statement made by the hon. member, I hope quite unconsciously. He indicated that I had or had not said certain things, or made certain representations. On the two previous occasions when I spoke on this bill in the house I made it quite plain that I supported the bill, and I dealt with the problems faced by the French speaking people in northern Alberta. I indicated that while I supported the bill generally as a Canadian, I had a particular reason to support it because of the difficulties of these people, many of them friends I have known for 40 years. When the hon. member indicates that I failed to make any reference to the people of French speaking ancestry in my country he is ignoring the facts, probably quite unconsciously.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: I would like to answer the hon. member, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

[English]

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I rise to speak for the first time in this debate, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to thank the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for a preamble to my speech. It is not my purpose at this moment to embark on a detailed dissertation or dissection of the constitutional question. I leave that to others. Besides, I feel that the constitutional issues have been underscored over and over again and are fairly well understood by Canadians from coast to coast.

I would emphasize that there is more to the question than simply the historical, traditional or constitutional aspects. It is basically and above all a question of people, a question of Canadians. It is a question of the kind of Canada we want to have, a Canada for Canadians, regardless of colour, race, origin, religion or social position.

[Editor's note: And Mr. Paproski having spoken in Ukrainian and Polish:]

I have enjoyed using these few expressions in Ukrainian and Polish, Mr. Speaker, but realize I must abide by the rules of this house.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to say a few words, in the house, about the Canadian identity.

The Canadian problem is not restricted to the constitution or to the history of our country.

There is also the problem of Canadians, that of the people itself, of all those who live across the country. First of all, the first inhabitants, the Indians and the Eskimos, and then, those who came to our beautiful country, the French, the English, the Ukrainians, the Poles, the Germans, the Italians, the Scotch, the Chinese and all the representatives of the various races who live in this country.

However, by creating a free society, a multiracial and a multicultural society, officially bilingual, will we be able to build a prosperous, peaceful, harmonious, mature Canada we all want to be heirs to?

[English]

I think we must adopt the principle that every Canadian and every group has the same rights under the law as every other. There were certain specific guarantees set out in the constitution of 1867. If the Fathers of Confederation in 1867 granted to the French and English certain rights, we are not at this stage going to attempt to rewrite history. But it would be fatal to accept as a principle that there is some kind of chronological priority of rights which applies to those who came earlier. If this were the case then the Indians and the Eskimos would have more rights than anyone, but as a matter of fact they have fewer.

No one should have any special rights in this or any country except those set out in the constitution, and constitutions can be rewritten. Every person in this country today, whether newly arrived or in the second, third, or fourth generation is an immigrant or descendant of immigrants. This applies to native Canadians who migrated in successive waves across the Bering Strait. There should not, therefore, be any recognition of rights based on earlier arrival. Every Canadian, whether he arrived in 1600 or in 1969, should have the same status, with the possible exception as I have said of the guarantees laid down in the constitution. They are there not as divine rights but as matters of national convenience.

If we are talking about chronological priority, the first arrivals were the Indians and Eskimos. The Scandinavians have a claim. They arrived soon after—"Sail now and pay later." Then came Christopher Columbus. He was an Italian. That gives the Italians a claim. John Cabot showed up in 1497. Jacques Cartier appeared in 1534. There was Carte-Real in 1501. He was Portuguese. In 1524 Verrazano came along. Henry Hudson came along in 1607. We must not forget that Cortez got to Mexico in 1519, too early for the Winter Games. Then, of course General de Gaulle did not make his discovery until 1967.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It being six o'clock p.m. this house stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock p.m.

At 6 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRIVILEGE

MR. MAHONEY—COMPLAINT RESPECTING PRESS REPORT ON INDEMNITY TO MEMBERS

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of newspaper reports on a question I directed to the Prime Minister during oral question period last Friday. In my question I indicated that Metropolitan Toronto plumbers working a 37½ hour week would, as a result of recently concluded collective bargaining, be paid more than Members of Parliament. A number of newspaper reports—and the particular one I shall quote is the Canadian Press report contained in Saturday's Ottawa Journal—stated:

> Members of parliament are paid $18,000. Of this amount, $6,000 is tax free."

Little wonder that the headline "Plumber's Pay to Top M.Ps?" ended with a question mark.

The newspaper report would indicate, since $260 times 52 does not exceed $18,000, that the factual foundation of my question was not valid. This is an implication which I emphatically deny. I have no information on how plumbers are reimbursed the expenses they incur in the exercise of their trade. I was not comparing the expense allowances of M.Ps and plumbers. I was comparing salaries or wages, and the plumbers' 52 times $260, or $13,520, certainly exceeds the M.Ps' $12,000 annual indemnity.

Mr. Speaker: In spite of the obvious support received by the hon. member for his alleged question of privilege I suggest that the matter should not be pursued further. It is not, actually, a question of privilege, and we ought now to go on to another matter.

I might inform hon. members that this seems to be an allotted day for questions of privilege, having in mind that the Chair has been formally advised of three such questions, the second of which is in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West. Shortly thereafter, notice of a question of privilege was sent to me by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in connection with approximately the same subject as the one raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I do not think it will be necessary for each question to be presented to the house separately; for the time being I will invite the hon. member for Edmonton West to indicate what his question involves.

MR. LAMBERT (EDMONTON WEST); MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—IMPARTIALITY OF CHAIRMEN—PRESS RELEASE BY CHAIRMAN OF PROCEDURE COMMITTEE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege is briefly as follows: One of the matters to be considered by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization was the degree of impartiality and conduct of the chairmen of the house standing and special committees and whether they should assume a position comparable to that of the chairman and deputy chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Notwithstanding this referral, which has not been adjudicated upon by the standing committee, the chairman, without authorization of the committee, or even discussion at the last meeting, has seen fit to issue a press release, in his own name, on Friday, June 20, —I have attached a copy to my notice to Your Honour—wherein he pleads the case for the adoption of the proposed rule 75C as referred to in the standing committee's third report. This report was adopted by the government majority on the committee, with all opposition members present at the meeting voting against it.

It is contrary to all the principles of our committee system and the role of committee chairmen to so act unilaterally and in a partisan manner. As such, this action by the chairman constitutes a breach of the privileges of the members of the house and of the committee.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Your Honour is correct, Mr. Speaker, in saying that my question of privilege is the same as that which has just been raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. Since he has stated it clearly, there is little I should add. I might just say, however, in support of my contention that the chairman of our committee—who has otherwise been an excellent chairman—exceeded his authority, that he issued his release on a letterhead which has the following printed at the top: "Chairman of the Standing Committee, Procedure and Organization." In other words, the release appeared to have been given in the name of the committee, whereas the committee itself gave the chairman no such authorization.

I protest this action because it seems to me it is not in line with the tradition of impartiality which chairmen should follow and which our committee, in particular, has been enjoining on the chairmen of all the standing committees.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank both hon. members who have spoken for having given me notice of their intention to raise this question of privilege. I think everyone in the house will appreciate that they, like myself, are concerned about the proper operation of the committee system, and certainly that there should be no partisan abuse of the position of chairman.

I have had a certain amount of experience with this complicated question of presenting rule changes, not only to hon. members but to the public and to the press. I think hon. members will be aware that the proposal contained in the committee's formal report consisted of three proposed orders of the house, and without reflecting upon the excellent draftsmen responsible for such orders, I think it is clear that the wording of the orders is in technical language not readily understandable to either the public or to the gentlemen of the press, who have to meet a deadline of some kind when announcements of this sort are made. Therefore, I undertook on my own initiative to prepare what I thought was a fair and proper summary of the three standing orders which were recommended by the committee, and I stand by that summary. I think that anybody who reads it would in general agree that it is not a partisan statement but an attempt to explain the text of the standing orders.

The position of a committee that sits in camera is rather difficult. I must say that in the interest only of avoiding undue discussion I refrained on Friday from raising a question of privilege of my own. As recorded at page 10453 of Hansard, after my report had been tabled the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rose in his place and stated:

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I point out that this is a report of the Liberal members of the committee only. It does not have the support of any members of the opposition.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is true.

Mr. Blair: I suggest there is some infringement on the privileges of those hon. members who are members of my committee in that this statement is not accurate. As everybody knows, this report carried with it in its majority recommendations the substantial concurrence of all members of the committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is not true.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear.

Mr. Blair: In connection with this question of press releases I should also like to point out that before the house opened on Friday morning the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre distributed a long, three page press release—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Blair: —setting forth his opinions and views on the recommendations of the committee. I am not suggesting for a moment that he is not entitled to express his opinion, but what I do say is that perhaps this might indicate that there is a reason why the chairman should have undertaken to prepare an explanatory press release.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. According to the standing orders the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) gave the Chair some hours ago notice of their intention to raise this matter. Anticipating that there might be a motion and lengthy debate, the Chair spent most of the luncheon hour considering the alternatives open to the Chair, to hon. members and to the committee. I am sorry that I cannot use all of the knowledge that I gained during these two hours of study; perhaps I will have an opportunity to do so on another occasion.

For the time being, in view of the fact that there is no motion presented to the house by either the hon. member for Edmonton West or the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and also in view of the fact that, if I may say so, the very question raised by the hon. members is now before the Committee on Procedure and Organization, I suggest that it is not for the Chair to decide in what way the responsibility of the chairman of the committee should be considered, but rather for the committee itself to make a recommendation to the house.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT WORKING PAPERS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table copies in both languages of the two reports submitted by the government of Canada at the last meeting of the constitutional conference, held on June 11 and 12 last.

I promised to the house, on the morrow of this conference, to table those reports in the house. They are entitled: "The Taxing Powers and the Constitution of Canada", and "Federal-Provincial Grants and the Spending Powers of Parliament".

[English]

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that we also presented to the conference a third paper which dealt with certain constitutional aspects of regional disparity. This paper is not being tabled now as it was principally a review of the positions that we had stated before in publications of the federal government such as "Federalism for the Future" and "The Constitution and the People of Canada" and in the papers that were tabled today. Whether any further paper on the subject of regional disparities will be published subsequently will depend on the future. It will depend on the nature of our future discussions on this subject.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORT OF MINISTER UPON RETURNING FROM SCANDINAVIA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to give hon. members a brief account of my recent tour of Scandinavia. This is the first statement I have given and I think it appropriate that it should be made here in parliament and not in the press.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: My tour began on June 8 in Oslo and ended on June 19 in Reykjavik, after visiting Helsinki, Copenhagen and Stockholm. This was the first time a Canadian foreign minister had made a tour of all five Nordic countries. It was the first time that a Canadian foreign minister had visited some of these countries.

Report of Minister on Scandinavia

My purpose in undertaking this tour was to reaffirm on a personal basis the long standing good relations between the Canadian and Nordic governments, to provide a new impetus for increased co-operation between Canadians and the Nordic peoples, and to make Canada better known in those countries.

In all the capitals visited, I emphasized that the enlargement of Canada's international horizons taking place as a result of our foreign policy review does not imply any lessening of Canada's interest in Europe and that we recognize the importance of Europe not only for our security but also for many other dimensions of our national life. It is from Europe that most of our population, our culture and our tradition comes. The bulk of our immigration and a significant proportion of our exchanges of persons, ideas and goods are still with Europe. These relations are of great importance not only in themselves but also as a means of diversifying our external relations and developing an identifiably Canadian way of life in North America. For all these reasons we wish to seek new forms of co-operation with the Europeans, including the Scandinavians.

Everywhere we went our reception was friendly and generous, and I wish to say here, as I said there, how much we appreciated the care with which our programs were prepared and the many kindnesses we were shown. It was evidence, I think, of the high regard in which Canada is held in those countries and of their desire to get to know us better.

Great interest was shown in our review of foreign and defence policies. In outlining its nature and the results so far, I stressed the great changes that have taken place both in Canada and the world in the last few years. I pointed out that Canada is now aware, as it has never been before, that it is not only an Atlantic nation but also an American nation with growing interests in Latin America, a Pacific nation with growing ties with Japan and other Asian countries, and an Arctic nation with increasing responsibilities for the development, surveillance and defence of our vast northern territories. Above all, I emphasized that in deciding to stay in NATO and to stay in Europe, we have rejected a non-aligned or inward-looking orientation.

This explanation received a sympathetic reception everywhere. Those Nordic countries that are partners of ours in NATO pointed out that our action would necessitate readjustments within NATO and they stressed the importance of both the timing and the possible psychological repercussions as factors to be carefully weighed. However, I am confident that they have a better understanding now of our objectives and that they are reassured of our intention to maintain an effective Canadian military presence in Europe.

Another aspect of our foreign policy review which attracted considerable interest was our decision to open negotiations on diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China. All the Nordic countries except Iceland have embassies in Peking and I formed the impression that they welcomed the Canadian initiative. I also took advantage of my presence in Stockholm to get a personal report on this subject from our Ambassador there.

We had some very useful exchanges of views in the Nordic capitals about the general question of east-west relations and European security. I explained Canada's vital interest in the search for détente between east and west and for a lasting solution to Europe's security problems. This was why we had welcomed the various initiatives, including the Budapest Declaration, that had been taken concerning the possibility of holding a conference on European security.

I expressed support in particular for the positive but realistic approach of the Finnish government and for their view that any conference that might eventually meet should be without pre-conditions, should be fully prepared, should involve all countries concerned and, above all, should be assured of reasonable prospects for success.

The west at least had no interest in a conference that failed and it would therefore be wise to proceed step by step, sounding out the possibilities of agreement beginning with the easier problems and moving on gradually to the more difficult ones. I explained that we envisaged this in terms of a steady on-going process, in which NATO consultations had an important role to play, rather than in terms of some great occasion on which there was likely to be an abrupt clash of views on stubborn points of contention. I also made it clear that Canada intended to be involved in this process from the beginning and throughout. I found that there was a near identity of view on these points between all the Nordic governments and ourselves, and it was agreed that we should keep in close touch as bilateral consultations proceeded.

[Mr. Sharp.]

We also had an opportunity to discuss developments in western Europe, including future prospects for the European Common Market and its relationship to proposals for a Nordic economic union. We found it useful to compare notes on the situation in the Middle East, in Nigeria and in Viet Nam. We exchanged views on the disarmament negotiations and on United Nations matters, including peace keeping operations and the provision of aid in disaster situations. On all these questions we found that more often than not our appreciation and approach were very close to those of the various Nordic governments.

In each capital we discussed a number of bilateral questions concerned with trade and other forms of exchange. It should be borne in mind that Canada is the second best customer for Denmark and Sweden. We found everywhere a desire to increase co-operation on a functional basis and some specific suggestions were discussed, particularly in the economic, scientific and technological fields. Interest was expressed in reciprocal visits by parliamentarians and I hope, Mr. Speaker, to have a chance to discuss this with you at an early date.

In meetings with the public media as well as with governmental authorities, I made a special point of explaining Canadian policies and objectives in terms designed to make clear that we had our own view of the world, our own aspirations and our own way of doing things that were not quite like anybody else's. As a result I think there is a better knowledge of Canada in the Nordic countries and a better appreciation of the possibilities for our working together. I, in turn, have a much clearer picture of these countries and their peoples and of the prospects for joint action.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, ordinarily it might be difficult to know whether I should commence my remarks with a quotation from Confucius or from Hans Christian Andersen, but in the circumstances I must begin by protesting the failure of the minister to make this statement in the house on Friday.

Mr. Sharp: It wasn't ready then.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, it must have taken a long time to prepare this statement—

Mr. Harkness: It always takes a long time to try to make something out of nothing.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister had plenty of time to prepare to meet the press, but not time enough to perform his first obligation upon his return, namely to meet the House of Commons. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I am bound to admit that the statement he made today lost nothing by being delayed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: I think it would be safe to say that no Canadian minister has been the object of such derision internationally since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came back from London.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not know whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is more to be pitied than laughed at or more to be laughed at than pitied. But still the comment made by Winston Churchill comes to mind, made after Wendell Wilkie returned from a world tour. Wilkie said, "Mr. Churchill'—as he then was—"I could write a book," and Churchill replied, "And the title could be Gullible's Travels."

• (2:30 p.m.)

The purpose of the minister's trip is incomprehensible. He gave no explanation before he left Canada concerning why he was going. Now that he has returned he has given a rather convoluted explanation to the house and the country. I must say I congratulate him on being able to keep a straight face during his presentation, while all those about him were having great difficulty doing so. According to the minister's statement and the news reports, the minister made a number of speeches in Copenhagen, Helsinki, Oslo, Stockholm and the Lord knows where else, on the genesis of the Prime Minister's NATO policy. It was much the same sort of doubletalk we have been hearing for several months, of keeping one foot in Europe and maintaining an effective military presence. This kind of talk has been a farce here. It is bad enough that this should take place before a Canadian audience but it is worse that the minister should make a road show of it.

Already it seems clear that the real reason the minister went to Scandinavia was to get in on what he thought was the successful conclusion of the talks between Canadian diplomats and representatives of the Peking government. The minister was going to jump on the bandwagon just as it came into public view. Before he left Canada, when he landed in Europe, and on every occasion that presented itself he dropped hints that he would be glad to see the representative of the People's Republic of China. The minister's eagerness was equalled only by the Ambassador's indifference. If the minister met anyone at all, it was strictly Occidental.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I apologize to the house for using that play on words; but his apparent pursuit of the Chinese Ambassador has made this country look foolish. What it has done to the minister's reputation I am too charitable to say. He described this as the first official visit of a Canadian foreign minister to the countries of Scandinavia, yet his main reason for going seemed to concern not only different countries but a different continent.

The minister claims to have encouraged—and by one reading he claims to have conceived—a meeting between the NATO and Warsaw Pact countries, and yet he urged them to discuss only the matters on which they can agree. I presume he would not want there to appear to be a difference of opinion. Despite the best efforts of the government to make Canada seem like a country of fools, we are not; we cannot accept fairy tales as an excuse for policy. The most revealing statement on the minister's visit slipped from his own tongue in an interview with Mr. Arthur Blakely, contained in Friday's Montreal Gazette. I quote Mr. Blakely's story:

> Even so, Mr. Sharp felt that the exercise had been worth while. He had had some interesting chats with the Canadian Ambassador to Sweden, Arthur Andrew in which the latter had been in a position "to tell me face to face things he would not dare put in a cable".

If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, I trust the Ambassador spoke for all of us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Poor Sharp, poor Sharp!

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we in this party share the view expressed with such wit by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), that it would have been much more courteous and proper for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to have first made this statement in the house, before he made it in a press interview last Friday. We sympathize with the minister's difficulty in presenting Canada's NATO policy to our Scandinavian allies and friends, because he has never practised telling this house what Canada's phase by phase foreign and defence policy is. Certainly if he told the Scandinavian ministers something in this regard, he said something that has never been said in this house.

We in this party are glad that the minister has visited the Scandinavian countries. In our view the smaller countries of Europe represent an enlightened and constructive outlook on world affairs based largely on support of the United Nations. We think Canada should co-operate as closely as possible with them in strengthening international organizations.

We would have liked to hear something more definite in the minister's statement on the progress of the negotiations in respect of the diplomatic recognition of the People's Republic of China. We know there are differences of opinion in this house, but as far as this party is concerned we welcome vigorous action on the part of the government to assist in bringing nearly a quarter of the human race within the community of nations.

On the question of east-west relations and European security, we in this party strongly support the proposed conference and urge upon the minister that some risk must be taken. What he has said about success being assured before a conference is held seems to be carrying this rather far. We think that even at the risk of having an unsuccessful conference, without an immediate and positive result, a conference should be held as a means to ending the massive military confrontation in Europe which is costing so much money and which is a risk in that vital part of the world.

In his statement the Secretary of State for External Affairs has told us he compared notes with his Nordic colleagues on the situation in the Middle East, Nigeria and Viet Nam. We would very much have liked to hear what the basis for this exchange of notes was. We believe that both Canada and the Scandinavian countries have an important role to play in providing the peace keeping forces that may well be needed to bring about a lasting peace in the war torn areas. We would have liked to hear what Canada's policy is, because in each one of these areas it becomes apparent there is a need for the contribution of Canada and the Scandinavian countries to the international forces.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to express our thanks to the minister for his note informing us that he had not had time to get the text of his statement translated in time for today's sitting.

Mr. Speaker, on the eve of the national day of French Canadians, it is most significant to note that when some statement is to be made it does not seem so important to wait until the French text is ready.

At any rate, we support the statements made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the spokesman for the New Democratic party. We feel that these meetings the minister attended have merely served the cause of understanding between good neighbours, but do not seem to have led to anything very concrete. In fact, we must admit that the results are rather vague and have little new to offer.

If we must take such a roundabout way simply to arrive at the recognition of Communist China, I think that is taking too many precautions to establish clearly Canada's policy.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTER RESPECTING MATERIAL AND HUMAN REQUIREMENTS TO FILL DEFENCE NEEDS

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that when I reported on June 2 regarding the NATO ministerial meeting, I undertook to report progress as decisions are reached on changes necessary to give substance to the government policy on defence as announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on April 3.

This report I make today will not be a lengthy one, Mr. Speaker, for a number of reasons. There are many variables which must be taken into account before final decisions can be made. For example, our role and force structure in NATO are still being discussed with our allies. We will honour our obligation to be governed by the established NATO consultative procedures, and hence our plans must remain tentative for the time being. For similar reasons we do not wish to anticipate changes which might be made in air defence roles and organization. In this regard, we are looking forward to receiving and studying the report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. These are but two examples, Mr. Speaker, and when account is taken of all the factors that must be studied before firm decisions are made, hon. members can understand the difficulty I have in making this first report as full and specific as I would have wished. There are, of course, some broad aspects which I can announce at this time and as I have stated earlier, I will continue to make public, from time to time, further details as they become firm.

[English]

During the whole course of the defence review, and particularly following the government's decision to base defence forces on the four point program in the April 3 statement, we have conducted a careful analysis to determine the resources required, both material and human, to fill our defence needs and at the same time be consistent with national priorities and capabilities.

Although there are some detailed alternatives still to be decided, we have concluded that a regular force of 80,000 to 85,000 will be needed to meet Canada's defence requirements.

We propose to make the transition over a period of three years, and to reach the new manpower levels without instituting a plan of forced attrition for this purpose. We fully recognize that this will result in some temporary personnel imbalances within certain trades and specialties, but we are confident these can be overcome by making available opportunities for retraining.

Basic to our planning was a firm decision to concentrate, wherever possible, on reducing administrative and support activities, to provide us with a higher ratio of operational to non-operational forces than in the past. This includes a re-examination of our command and control activities with a view to reducing headquarters staff, including those here in Ottawa.

I would now like to describe in general terms the force structure we plan to establish by early 1973. Maritime Command will continue in the anti-submarine role, using most of the existing equipment. However, we are continuing plans for employing the new ships under construction and are considering a replacement aircraft for the Argus. At the same time, we are exploring the possibility of widening the roles open to maritime forces in response to the government's broad policy directive. In particular, we expect more emphasis will be placed on activities relating to Canadian sovereign interests in our adjacent waters, and the seabed. In this context our Arctic territories take on particular significance.

Mobile Command will undergo some changes but will continue to maintain in Canada forces for a variety of roles related to the defence of Canada, aid to the civil power, co-operation with United States forces for the defence of North America, and collective security and peacekeeping abroad. This will mean more emphasis on light, quick-reaction, airportable land force units designed to meet these roles. Mobile Command will continue to be organized in combat groups and the Canadian Airborne Regiment is being retained.

Air Defence Command will remain very much as it is for the immediate future. However, we are engaged in intensive study of Canada's roles in continental air defence, and related discussions are proceeding between Canadian and United States military and civilian officials. As for the longer term, it will be some time before decisions can be made on the post 1975 bomber defence system, including AWACS, over-the-horizon radars and new interceptors.

Air Transport Command's strategic airlift capability will depend primarily on our present fleet of Hercules transports. They will be augmented for shorter hauls by Buffalo aircraft, now in the inventory. Although our detailed analysis of strategic deployment requirements is not yet complete, we expect that some contraction in the size of our air transport force will be made through retirement of part of the Yukon fleet and of other older aircraft. On the other hand, we are continuing with our studies of the requirements for a long range pure-jet military transport aircraft.

Along with the reductions in the regular force, we are planning to reduce the reserve force. In this regard, Mr. Speaker, we will be consulting next month with the Conference of Defence Associations and will be exchanging with them ideas on how we might make the most effective use of our reserve force, as a back-up to the regular force in their new roles and missions.

Our cadet program has been most successful. Its benefits in character building and the promotion of good citizenship will, in the future, as in the past, make an important contribution to national development. We intend to continue to support a program involving about 100,000 cadets.

It will be obvious, Mr. Speaker, that reductions in over-all strength of the forces, and particularly reductions in administrative overhead, will result in the closure of certain bases. Decisions have not yet been made on this complicated matter and I believe it will be another month or two before our studies will be completed. We will give ample advance notice before closing any base. In each case a comprehensive plan will be developed, in consultation with all the interested parties, with a view to minimizing the disruptive effects on the communities, on the personnel directly involved, and on their families.

There will be a reduction in the number of civilians employed in the department. This reduction, for the most part, will be achieved by normal turnover and by transfers to suitable vacancies elsewhere in the government service. The facilities of the Department of National Defence, the Union of National Defence Employees, the Public Service Commission, the Department of Manpower and Immigration, and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will be used to the utmost in these endeavours.

Mr. Speaker, in my statement on June 2, I said that we believed we can achieve the transition to the new defence posture, barring unexpected international developments, within a defence budget which will be maintained for the next three years at its current dollar level. Our studies since then have served to substantiate this estimate. I am confident that these resources will be sufficient to equip and maintain the force organization I have just outlined.

Mr. Speaker, before I close, I should like to mention a fact that may be overlooked. Although we will be reducing our over-all regular force strength, we will continue to recruit qualified young Canadians for whom we can promise an attractive and challenging career.

For the reasons I mentioned earlier, that is all the information I can give at this time. I appreciate hon. members' desire to receive more complete details and I regret that these are not yet available. You will recall that when I spoke on this subject on June 2, I pointed out that this concern was shared by members of the forces, and I will have to ask them too to be patient a little longer. I am personally confident that both during and after the period of change we are about to embark upon, the Canadian Armed Forces will continue to exhibit the same high standards of professionalism they have displayed in the past, and will continue to be a source of pride to all Canadians.

[Mr. Cadieux (Labelle).]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I should like to thank the minister for giving us an advance copy of the statement he has just read. However, I regret that the notice of it was so short that there was no time for a considered analysis of its full implications. Therefore, the remarks that I will make at this time will be of a preliminary nature.

• (2:50 p.m.)

It is obvious that the problem of most Canadians as well as of the minister in the matter of defence policy is that Canadians are ruled, and presumably the minister is overruled, by a government dominated by men whose understanding of their heavy responsibility in this matter is as shallow as the cliché "make love, not war".

The lesson of history is that every leader who has taken the course of least resistance, of which Ethelred the Unready and Neville Chamberlain are examples, and in whose hands the fate of the nation was unhappily placed has sooner or later dragged his people into disaster and war. I deplore the actual and concrete reduction in our armed forces because I believe that although our forces may seem costly, the resulting saving is minimal. I think that their reduction is not only unfortunate in itself, but also because of the impression it may create, not only among our friends and allies but also among our enemies. I deplore whatever aid and comfort our present defence policy may give to those who would destroy our way of life. We have to remember that the world has become a global village and that we can no longer retreat into national isolationism and expect that course to succeed.

The minister's statement—and I appreciate the difficult position in which he finds himself—perhaps raises as many questions as it answers. It is difficult for me to understand how, with a reduced and limited capacity, for example, we can hope to expand our commitments with regard either to continental defence or the very valid and necessary activities of our maritime command to establish our sovereignty over our coastal waters.

I think the fact that the minister was able to announce in fairly definite terms that the ceiling of manpower in the forces would be between 80,000 and 85,000 men indicates a tendency of the government to put the cart before the horse in this business, and it looks as if the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) has been given an ultimatum to operate within a certain ceiling in dollar value, regardless of the outcome of any studies which may be undertaken in the fields of external affairs and defence. I should like to point out that this ceiling will lower as long as the value of the purchasing power of our dollar continues to decline.

With regard to some specific statements which the minister made, I am pleased that he has established that it is his intention to honour our obligation to be governed by the established NATO consultative procedures. I was also pleased to hear him indicate that the government will give some attention to the reports of the Committee on National Defence and External Affairs. I hope that it will give more attention to future reports of that committee than it did to its report on NATO.

I wish to congratulate the minister on his intention to try to reduce further the administrative costs of the armed forces and to increase the ratio of the combat units to total personnel and total costs, but I am afraid that he will meet with disappointment unless he has more success in grappling with Parkinson's law than did most of his colleagues up to now.

With regard to the minister's remarks concerning the maritime command, I am pleased that the government recognizes the vital importance of the role which that command carries out. If I may digress for a moment, may I say that I know the personnel stationed in my constituency will be pleased to know that the government is contemplating a study of a replacement aircraft for the Argus.

I think it is very unwise to reduce the strength of the reserve forces. Our professionals say that at the time when our permanent force is to be reduced, our reserve strength should be increased so that we might have something to fall back on in certain situations.

I hope that the minister will take into very careful consideration, as he promised, the economic side effects of the closing of bases, especially those located in more or less isolated areas the economy of which is dependent on the bases. I also hope that the government, in concert with other levels of government, will find some compensating stimulation for the economy in any area where a base must be closed before that action is taken.

The minister has deplored the apparent necessity for keeping the forces in a state of some uncertainty for some time longer. I hope that he can correct the situation at the earliest time, but I agree with him that our armed forces are made up of professionals and they will carry out whatever duty is allotted to them in a fashion of which all Canadians can be proud; because I believe that the Canadians who represent us in the armed forces, especially those who are stationed in Europe, are of the very highest professional quality and are a credit to all Canadians.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the remarks which I have to make will not take too long because I, like others, find myself in a difficult position as a member of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on External Affairs and National Defence. The committee spent all of last week drafting a report. I know what is in it but, because of the time it takes to translate it into French, it cannot be tabled until Wednesday or Thursday.

However, may I say that speaking individually I have a great fondness for the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Lewis: Watch out.

Mr. Winch: But when he speaks, as he did today, on the so-called government policy on national defence, I am not only amazed but I think that the minister has increased the confusion in the defence policy and, worst of all, has demonstrated that so far as the government is concerned our defence policy is a fait accompli and the opinions expressed in the committee or in the House of Commons mean nothing at all.

I do not know why we have spent so many months in the committee, studying defence matters, when all we can do now is to come here to listen to an announcement of a fait accompli by the government.

Mr. McGrath: The house leader is not even listening. Shame on him.

Mr. Winch: The minister said a few minutes ago: "We will honour our obligation to be governed by the established NATO consultative procedures, and hence our plans must remain tentative for the time being... In this regard we are looking forward to receiving and studying the report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence."

• (3:00 p.m.)

As to NATO, I thought we made an arduous trip and worked our heads off to file a report on this subject prior to the negotiations in Washington and Brussels. The government had the report for weeks, both the majority report and a minority report signed by three representatives of this party. So that first statement about waiting for a report on NATO is sheer, unmitigated nonsense.

An hon. Member: He did not say that.

Mr. Winch: He did not say it? "In this regard we are looking forward to receiving and studying the report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence." This is the same paragraph on NATO—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: Perhaps the secretary sent me the wrong copy. I completely agree with the minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: —when he talks about a reduction in the number of Armed Forces personnel. I had the privilege of attending the Mobile Command exercises at Camp Petawawa last Saturday and the success of the demonstration there, showing what can be done through co-ordination and co-operation, indicates to me that we can vastly reduce our force under NATO in Europe with the efficient integration of army and air force units. And, as the previous speaker suggested, if we did a job at N.D.H.Q. to ensure there were more Indians and less chiefs it would undoubtedly be possible to achieve the objective of 85,000.

However, there is one thing which really bothers us, especially in the Defence Committee, and that is the practice of the government in presenting defence policy as a fait accompli. Under its terms of reference the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence was asked to go into all aspects of defence policy, including the subject of Maritime Command. Only last week a subcommittee of nine was established to consider policy governing Maritime Command. It held its organization meeting on Thursday intending to get its work under way, yet today the minister tells us that Maritime Command will continue its anti-submarine role. This is another example of a fait accompli.

We are told that consideration is being given to replacing the Argus. What about the Tracker which is to be phased out in 1972 or 1973? The statement talks about Canada's sovereign interest in the Arctic. It is really not fair to give us these generalities. The information we have is that our entire navy, including our new ships, has not been constructed with prows suitable for sailing in Arctic waters, and that we do not possess planes capable of operating in that region either. We are entitled to more than generalities of this sort, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to comment on the important aspect of policy which involves A.B.M.s and AWACS. I hope Canada will not enter into any negotiations leading to the establishment here of either the A.B.M. or AWAC systems, but I shall refrain from further comment bearing in mind that there is considerable comment on this matter in the report which is coming from the defence committee.

Nevertheless, I should like to add a further word about the aspect which really stumps members of the House of Commons and its committees. I refer to the government's propensity for the fait accompli. Why does the government not take its own committees into consideration before these decisions are made? Why does it not take into consideration the recommendations of other organizations before announcements are made? I have referred particularly to Maritime Command. Now there is the question of a reserve force. I am glad we were given a copy of the minister's statement. Let us see what it says on this aspect: "Along with reductions in the regular force, we are planning to reduce the reserve force. In this regard we will be consulting next month with the Conference of Defence Associations."

One month after we have been told by the minister that it has been decided to reduce the reserve force, consultations are to take place with the organizations which are interested. Mr. Speaker, representatives of these associations appeared before the defence committee last week and urged that there should be an increase in the reserve force.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are getting restless. I have only a few words to say to end what could have been a lengthy speech—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: We do most heartfeltly wish that there were more facts presented, less wishful thinking, more consultation and more co-operation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, as I have congratulations for the most part to offer the minister, you will believe me if I say that I will be brief, because it is much more difficult to congratulate than to criticize.

For several years, Canada was considered by many countries as a small country covering a few acres of snow. It needed the last wars and the good services of our armed forces for them to have some idea of what Canada really was. Today, anyone of us, anyone of our friends who goes to Europe realizes that our soldiers have been our best ambassadors, even if many of them are buried there. At all events, even if we must now reduce our forces, I think that is perfectly normal, since Canadians have played their role wonderfully well. Considering the length of our coast-line, I am happy that the Maritime command will continue in its anti-submarine role. We all know that Canada has the longest coast-line in the world.

On sea, in the air and on the ground, the department is considering modernizing sensibly everything that is mechanized, and it is quite normal if we want to maintain an adequate defence.

Modernizing the equipment will mean reducing the strength of our forces. We will then know the same effects that were felt in industry and in other fields.

For a long time, the army could afford to keep idle people. But today, in his statement, the minister is advising us that from now on, his role as father of a family is ended and that he intends to administer the department as a business. Therefore, I wish to congratulate him on behalf of our party and assure him of our support.

Mr. Speaker, my only criticism concerns the question of elections. The armed forces being the only group that does not publish electoral lists, it was fraudulently that I, as a candidate, obtained one at the last election. I discovered there the names of two families that left the Portneuf riding twenty-five years ago and are now living in Montreal. Two members of those families who were in the armed forces were approached in Ontario at the camp where they were stationed, and they still had the right to vote in the Portneuf riding. That is my only criticism, and should the minister reduce the strength of our forces, I trust he will make the necessary recommendations so that the names of military personnel no longer living in their home riding will also be deleted from the electoral lists.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the moment is not opportune for the Chair to remind hon. members of the terms of Standing Order 15(3) which reads:

> On motions . . . a minister of the Crown may make an announcement or statement of government policy. Any such announcement or statement should be limited to facts which it is deemed necessary to make known to the house and should not be designed to provoke debate at this stage. A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly, subject to the name limitation.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I suggest to hon. members that when we have spent nearly one hour on two statements we have perhaps not observed either the spirit or the letter of this Standing Order. I appreciate that we are dealing with very important matters, but at the same time I have the impression that over the weeks there has been a tendency for ministerial statements to become longer and for the comments thereon by opposition members to become proportionately longer as well. Perhaps this might be borne in mind by members of the government and by representatives of the opposition when we reach this item of business from day to day.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement to make which meets the spirit and the letter of your remarks. I should like to inform the house of the names of the remaining appointees to the Prices and Incomes Commission.

Hon. members will recall that I recently announced the appointment of Dr. John H. Young who had agreed to serve as chairman of the commission. I am now pleased to announce that Mr. Paul Gérin-Lajoie, a cabinet minister in a former Quebec government, has been named vice-chairman of the commission. Dr. George V. Haythorne, former deputy minister of labour of the government of Canada, and Mr. George E. Freeman, director of research for the Bank of Canada, have been appointed commissioners.

I should like to ask leave of the house to table their biographies covering the training and experience of these four members, all of which makes them, I think, eminently qualified to begin this new and important assignment. On behalf of myself and also on behalf of the Canadian government I should like to say how pleased and grateful I am to them for accepting these appointments and for choosing this way to serve their country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Basford: Recruiting of the counsel and staff, the clerks and technical advisers of the commission, is now under way, and the chairman has informed me that the commission will be able to begin its work on July 2.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the same spirit I will try to be circumscribed by the comments of Your Honour. I noted that the minister said that his statement would be short. It may have been short, but it took a long time for us to reach this point in time. It is almost six months now since the white paper on price stability was presented and the announcement of this commission was made in this house; it is only now that the personnel of this very important commission have been appointed.

Mr. Basford: We wanted to get the right people.

Mr. McGrath: It took the minister almost five months to appoint the chairman of the commission, and it is incredible that he had to look no further than his own backyard to find a suitable person. It also seems to me incredible that it took another month for the minister to bring the house up to date on the other appointments to the commission. It would not be difficult to anticipate that the government would look for a banker, and where else to look than the Bank of Canada? It would not be difficult to anticipate that the government would appoint somebody who was familiar with the labour laws and labour scene in this country, and where else to look than the Department of Labour? Any Liberal in the province of Quebec would anticipate the appointment of Paul Gérin-Lajoie.

Why did it take six months to fill these appointments, Mr. Speaker? During all that time inflation was taking its toll in this country. Prices were going up—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: We can only conclude that the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must seek the hon. member's co-operation. I would not think that he was now abiding by either the spirit or the letter of the law. I take the liberty of reminding the hon. member of the terms of the Standing Order, which requires ministers to make statements that ought not to provoke debate. In speaking on behalf of his party the hon. member is under the same limitation. It would seem to me that if he is to go on and debate the question of inflation and other very general problems he is definitely going beyond the terms of the statement made by the minister. I seek his co-operation so that we may go on with the business of the house.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, would you allow me to conclude by saying that the government has its priorities all mixed up. The government has failed to recognize the urgency of the most serious problem facing the country today, namely, rising prices, the continuous rise in the cost of living index and the effect that this has on the average man and woman in this country. I suggest to the minister and the government that, if they want to know what is the most urgent problem facing the country, all they have to do is to talk to the man on the street. He will readily tell them that the most serious problem facing this country today is rising prices, the increase in the cost of living index, and poverty. It is about time that this government got the message.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the statement of the minister let me say first of all that no one questions the training and experience of the people appointed by the minister. What is being questioned is the intention and the credibility of the minister and the government. This is what is at issue.

There is no question in my mind that the government has had the power to do something about prices for a long time now but has failed to take any action in this area. Many of us have reason to suspect that with this commission the government is simply throwing another camouflage over its failure to act. The government's delay in appointing the commission represents its unwillingness to come to grips with the serious problem of inflation and rising prices in this country, and has very little to do with the quality and calibre of the men being appointed to the commission itself.

A number of years ago the Macquarrie commission reported to the government on combines legislation. That commission pointed out ways which were open to the government to take effective action against rising prices. From that time the government has done very little to accept any of the recommendations of the Macquarrie commission. It has failed to use the powers it already possesses to investigate rising prices.

The disturbing feature about this commission is that it will be completely isolated from the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons that the minister has talked about appointing. Since the committee cannot make recommendations to the commission, the members of this house will not have the opportunity to express their concerns in any effective way. The commission will operate in its own way, and if its work is not successful there is very little that the House of Commons can do about it. It seems to me that this is an important failing and one that should be corrected immediately. As co-chairman of the previous committee the minister knows that a committee of the House of Commons can do an effective job in holding down prices and focusing attention on those sectors of the economy that are being abused.

In closing I merely say, therefore, that the best men in the world will not do the job for us if the intentions of the minister and the government are other than the taking of urgent action to counter rising prices.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STUDY BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF WORK OF CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION

On the order: Government notices of motions:

That the report of the committee appointed September 8, 1965, to survey the organization and work of the Canadian Pension Commission, tabled on March 26, 1968, be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

REVISION OF ORDERS, REGULATIONS AND STATUTORY RULES

Question No. 1,666—Mr. Fortin:

1. When will the government undertake a revision of the orders, regulations and statutory rules?

2. What is the staff of the O.R.S.R. division?

3. Is it the government's intention to amend the Regulations Act (R.S.C. 1952 c. 235) principally with respect to the legal status of the regulations and to possible discrepancies with the Canada Evidence Act?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1. It is anticipated that a consolidation and revision of subsidiary legislation (regulations, etc., of a legislative nature) will be undertaken after the revision of the Statutes of Canada is completed.

2. There is no such division as the O.R.S.R. division; however, the duties in relation to orders, regulations and statutory rules are performed by the Orders in Council section of the Privy Council office together with the legal adviser to the Privy Council office. The Orders in Council section is composed of three officers and five clerical staff. The legal adviser has one secretary.

3. The government intends to examine the Regulations Act after the Special House Committee on Statutory Instruments submits its report.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS COMMUNICATIONS SERVICE

Question No. 1,848—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Does the CNR operate an exclusive communication service and, if not, under what arrangement is this service offered the public in the name of the CNR?

2. Did the CNR's telegraph service operate at a profit in 1968 and, if so, what was the amount of profit to the company?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Pursuant to Section 26 of the Canadian National Railways Act being Chapter 29 of the Statutes of Canada 1955, the C.N.R. is empowered to establish, construct or acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise and to maintain and operate telecommunication facilities systems and services in Canada and elsewhere. In addition, it may carry on a public telecommunications business and may enter into arrangements with other telecommunication companies or Her Majesty for the exchange and transmission of messages or for the maintenance or working, in whole or in part, of the telecommunication systems of the respective companies or Her Majesty. However, it does not possess an exclusive franchise anywhere in Canada for the provision or operation of such services.

Certain telecommunications properties or works in the Yukon Territory, in parts of Northern British Columbia and in Newfoundland which are vested in or owned, controlled or occupied by Her Majesty, pursuant to various Orders in Council have been entrusted to the Railway for management and operation. In addition, Canadian National provides the only public telecommunication services in the Northwest Territories.

2. In addition to a telegraph message service provided to the public the Company engages in a diversity of telecommunications activities including the operation of local and long distance commercial telephone services, the provision of private wire circuits, a Telex Network, and facilities for radio and TV network transmissions. The telegram constitutes less than $\frac{1}{4}$ of the commercial communications business handled by the Company and is not compensatory. However, as shown on Page 37 of the Company's Annual Report for the year 1968 which was tabled in the House of Commons on April 24th, 1969, the net income realized from the overall operations of the Telecommunications Department during the year 1968 was $8,654,140.

CABINET MINISTERS ON SOUTH AMERICAN TRIP

Question No. 1,938—Mr. Gauthier:

1. Were any provincial Cabinet Ministers or senior provincial officials invited to accompany the federal Cabinet Ministers and senior officials of their department on the mission to South America in October and November last (a) if provincial Ministers and officials were invited, who were they and in what capacity were they invited to attend (b) if not, for what reason were provincial Ministers and officials not invited?

2. Were the provincial Ministers and officials made aware of the mission by federal Ministers and officials prior to its departure and were they informed of the results of the mission on their return and, if so, will the government table this correspondence?

3. Were representatives of the news media invited to accompany the mission and, if so, which representatives of the (a) English language media, and (b) French language media, were invited, and (c) who accepted and attended?

[Mr. Jamieson.]

[Translation]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No provincial ministers or officials were invited to participate in the ministerial mission which visited nine Latin American countries in October and November of 1968.

Except for the renewal of a trade agreement and the signature of a minor agreement in another field wholly within federal jurisdiction the objective of the mission was to explore the possibilities of developing closer relations between Canada and Latin America in all important fields.

2. The government's decision to send the mission was announced several months in advance, and a few days before its departure the Prime Minister made a full statement in the house regarding its composition, itinerary and objectives. Following its return the Secretary of State for External Affairs made a brief statement in the House of Commons and subsequently tabled the preliminary report of the mission, copies of which have been sent to the provinces.

3. All media represented in the Parliamentary Press Gallery were given an opportunity to participate in the ministerial mission. In addition, special steps were taken to inform the Canadian Press and certain weekly publications issued in the English and French languages.

The mission was accompanied for all or part of its duration by the following representatives of the press: Mr. Paul Kidd, Washington Correspondent, Southam News Service; Mr. Guy Anger, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, French Radio News; Mr. Louis Rollet, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, French Radio News; Mr. Pedro Marcos Bilbao, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, International Service; Mr. William Dampier, Toronto Telegram; Mr. Don Newlands, Mrs. Newlands and Mr. David Lee, freelance, for Canadian Broadcasting Corporation Television Network, programme "The Way It Is".

POST OFFICE CLOSURES

Question No. 2,024—Mr. Laprise:

1. How many post offices have been closed in each province in Canada since June 25, 1968 and how many post offices is it proposed to close during the year 1969?

2. How many families are affected by the changes in their addresses?

3. How much does the government expect to save in each province by the closing of these post offices?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned:
1. (a) British Columbia, 13; Alberta, 42; Saskatchewan, 40; Manitoba, 37; Ontario, 92; Quebec, 51; New Brunswick, 32; Nova Scotia, 45; Prince Edward Island, 16; Newfoundland, 11; Northwest Territories, 1; Yukon, 0. (b) 235 for the period of June 1969 to December 1969 inclusive.

2. Departmental records are not maintained in such a way that would make it possible to compile these statistics.

3. Departmental records are not maintained in such a way as to permit compilation of savings broken down by provinces. However, since the inception of the Department's program in February 1967, to close small unproductive Post Offices, an approximate saving of $513,865 has been realized throughout the country.

THE FLORENCE AGREEMENT

Question No. 2,047—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Is there an international agreement entitled "The Florence Agreement" which the Government of Canada has not yet signed and, if so, for what reason?

2. How many countries have signed this agreement?

3. Did Canada participate in the drafting of this agreement?

4. What countries have not yet signed this agreement?

5. When is it expected that Canada may sign this agreement?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes, there is an international agreement called the Agreement on the Importation of Educational, Scientific and Cultural Materials, which was adopted in Florence in July 1950 and opened for signature at Lake Success, New York on November 22, 1950. Canada has not signed the agreement because it has not been considered to be in Canada's interest to abandon the limited protection afforded domestic producers against imports of certain educational, scientific and cultural materials as long as important trading partners maintained barriers against Canadian exports of these materials. Canada does impose a small duty on such imports but other countries, even where no tariffs are maintained, continue to limit imports from Canada of these materials by the use of stringent non-tariff barriers. In any event the question of Canada's accession is under continuous review in the light of changing conditions in trade and the intensive study into aspects of intellectual property currently being prepared by the Economic Council.

2. As of May 22, 1969, the agreement had entered into force for 62 countries. A further eight countries had signed but not ratified the agreement and the agreement is not in force for these countries.

3. No.

4. Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian S. S. R., Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Dahomey, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Guinea, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Japan, Korea (Republic of), Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Maldive Islands, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Nepal, Panama, Paraguay, Poland, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Syria, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R., Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen and Zambia (63).

USE OF CHEMICAL "MACE"

Question No. 2,101—Mr. Saltsman:

1. Has a decision been made by the RCMP on the use of the chemical "mace"?

2. Is there a Department of National Health and Welfare report on this chemical?

3. Is there a report in the Solicitor General's Department on the use of this chemical?

4. Is there a report by the RCMP on the use of this chemical?

Questions

5. Is it the intention of the government to have one or all of these reports tabled?

6. Have there been any requests from police jurisdictions in Canada outside the federal government for information on this chemical?

7. If so, what has been the nature of the government's replies to these requests?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of the Solicitor General and the Department of National Health and Welfare as follows: 1. Yes; a decision has been made by the R.C.M. Police that chemical "Mace" will not be used.

2. No.

3. No; however, the Department of National Health and Welfare replied to specific questions by the R.C.M. Police in respect to the chemical "Mace".

4. No.

5. Not applicable.

6. Yes.

7. The R.C.M. Police have supplied copies of the material they obtained from the Department of National Health and Welfare, on the chemical "Mace", to those police departments requesting them and to other major police departments.

GRAIN SHIPMENT COSTS TO CHURCHILL AND MONTREAL

Question No. 2,142—Mr. Noble:

What is the difference in cost to the Canadian Wheat Board of shipping a bushel of grain from the Prairies into the elevator at the Port of Churchill, Manitoba, compared to shipping a bushel of grain from the Prairies into a grain elevator at the Port of Montreal, Quebec?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Average cost of moving wheat from country points to Churchill, 10.71 cents. Average cost of moving wheat from country points to Lakehead, 12.00 cents. Average cost of moving wheat from Lakehead to Montreal, 13.50 cents. It should be noted that the differential between the Lakehead and Montreal is recovered in the Canadian Wheat Board sales prices and is therefore not a cost to the Board.

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY SUPPORT PROGRAMS

Question No. 2,174—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of Fisheries and Forestry provide subsidies and/or support programs for any segment of the economy, groups or individuals inside Canada and, if so, to what extent, in what amounts, and to whom are the amounts paid?

2. What amounts have been paid for subsidies and/or support programs during each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): 1. (a) Subsidies are provided by the Department of Fisheries and Forestry in the fishing industry for fishermen and fishing firms towards the construction of wooden fishing vessels to the extent of either 30 per cent, 40 per cent, or 50 per cent of the cost of construction. Payments to the fishermen and firms in this respect for 1969-70 are estimated at $565,000; (b) In the fishing segment support is given to fishermen and fish processors, (i) through purchase and disposal of groundfish products, canned mackerel, salt cod, and Lake Erie yellow perch; (ii) through the provision of loans to companies engaged in processing groundfish products. Probable loans in 1969-70 are estimated at $4,200,000; (iii) through re-settlement of families in Newfoundland. Payments in this respect are estimated at $1,400,000 for 1969-70; (c) In the forestry segment, support of research in universities and other forestry activities is provided through a number of grants to forestry schools and to forestry organizations. Support is also given to the Province of Newfoundland under a 1965 agreement to assist with an inventory and land capability study. For 1969-70 the grants to Universities will amount to $283,000, and assistance to the Province of Newfoundland is estimated at $800,000. Grants to forestry organizations will be as follows: Canadian Forestry Association, $50,000; Commonwealth Forestry Institute (3,000 pounds Sterling), $8,000; British Columbia, Festival of Forestry Organization, $10,000.

2. The following amounts were paid for subsidies and support programs during the years 1960-68: 1960-61, $4,605,511; 1961-62, $7,699,-537; 1962-63, $9,043,003; 1963-64, $9,326,596; 1964-65, $10,034,543; 1965-66, $12,193,065; 1966-67, $11,731,104; 1967-68, $8,817,611; 1968-69, $9,429,551.

INDIANS ON DEPARTMENTAL STAFF

Question No. 2,226—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. What is the total staff of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and how many of these are Indian?

2. What percentage of the total staff are "decision making" Indian employees?

3. Do there exist any programs specifically training Indians to qualify for "decision making" positions within the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

4. What percentage of the total salaries paid by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is paid to Indian employees?

5. How many agents on Indian reserves are Indians, how many non-Indians and does the government or Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have any explicit policy regarding the ratio?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. For the year 1969-70 the total authorized strength of the Department is 9,121 of which 692 of these are Indians.

2. .7 per cent of the staff are "decision making" Indian employees.

3. In November of 1968 there was introduced in the department an Indian and Eskimo Recruitment and Development Program. The specific objective of this program was to increase the number of Indian people in the Department who occupy "decision making" positions. This objective was to be achieved in three ways: 1. By launching a summer recruitment program among university students of recognized Indian ancestry with a view to encouraging them to join the department upon completion of their education. 2. Through a recruiting program on Indian reserves, high schools and in all areas where Indians live to encourage qualified Indian people to seek employment with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. 3. To develop an in-service training program which will train Indian people who are now employed in the department to assume more responsible roles. For the first phase of the program, namely the university student summer program, 60 Indian and Eskimo university students have been placed in all areas of the Department including social programs, the economic development program and the conservation program and the administrative program. The development part of the program is in the planning stage and the Department is being assisted by a Consultative Committee composed of Indians. Further recruitment will take place in the fall.

4. 9.1 per cent of the departmental budget for payroll costs is paid to Indian employees.

5. There are five superintendents (formerly known as Indian Agents) who have Indian status; there are 60 superintendents of non-Indian status.

There is no statutory preference for Indian people. Position of superintendent is subject to the Public Service Employment Act, and appointments are made in order of merit from eligibility lists established as the result of competitions. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is promoting a recruitment program designed to increase the number of Indian employees both in this Department and in the Public Service of Canada.

PAN ARCTIC OIL LTD.

Question No. 2,243—Mr. Fortin:

1. Has Pan Arctic Oil Ltd. submitted to the government its Annual Report and, if not, when will that report be filed?

2. If such report has been received by the government, will it be tabled in Parliament?

3. What amount was invested in that company by the government, under (a) shares (b) bonds and loans (c) grants?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No. An Annual Report is being prepared and will be filed shortly.

2. Yes.

3. For a grant of nine million dollars made by the Government to Panarctic Oils Ltd., the Government has received 900,000 preferred shares with a par value of 10 dollars. On the basis of one common share for each four preferred shares, the Government has received 225,000 common shares, of no par value, but a cost of 10 cents per share or a total of 22,500 dollars. The number of shares issued to the Government in each class represents 45 per cent of the total shares issued being in the proportion which the amount of the Government grant bears to the total funding of 20 million dollars in Panartic Oils Ltd.

VETERANS AFFAIRS SUPPORT PROGRAMS

Question No. 2,279—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of Veterans Affairs provide subsidies and/or support programs for any segment of the economy, groups or individuals inside Canada and, if so, to what extent, in what amounts, and to whom are the amounts paid?

Questions

2. What amounts have been paid for subsidies and/or support programs during each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. The Department of Veterans Affairs provides subsidies and/or support programs for veterans who reside in Canada.

2. The amounts paid for such programs during each of the years 1960-68 were as follows:

Fiscal year	Disability pensions	War veterans allowances, civilian war allowances and assistance fund	Other benefits and allowances	Treatment services	Veterans' Land Act loans	Total
	$000	$000	$000	$000	$000	$000

INDIAN REPRESENTATION ON SCHOOL BOARDS

Question No. 2,284—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. What is the policy of the federal government respecting Indian representation on local school boards in districts where Indian children are educated?

2. To what extent is this being enforced?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The policy of the federal government is to encourage provincial governments to enact legislation which will permit Indian representation on local school boards. This has been done over the past few years through an exchange of letters between the Minister of this Department and the ministers of education in the provinces, and through discussions between officials of this Department and those of the departments of education. In pursuing this policy, the Department was acting on behalf of, and in the interest of, the Indian people. Today the Indian people are able to exert political pressure through their representatives in the provincial governments. The results of this intergovernment activity are: 1. In Ontario, new legislation permits the minister of education to appoint Indian representatives to school boards. 2. In New Brunswick, new legislation permits the minister of education to appoint Indian representatives to school boards. 3. In Saskatchewan, new legislation gives the Indian people the status of electors who may stand for election as school trustees or who may vote for a representative on the school board. 4. In British Columbia, new legislation gives the Indian people the status of ratepayers who may now apply to have their names placed on the voter's list.

A bill is now before the Legislature in Manitoba which, when passed, will give the Indian people the status of electors.

The Alberta Legislature was prepared to present a bill to provide Indian representation on school boards at the current session but the Indian Association in Alberta asked the Alberta Government to postpone the bill until they had had more time to examine it.

2. The role of the federal government has been strictly advisory since education is the exclusive responsibility of the provinces who enact their own school legislation and enforce it. This Department will continue to encourage provincial governments to enact the legislation necessary to provide Indians with the opportunity of being elected to school boards. There has been a very active interest on the part of the Indian people in this matter and, in all provinces where legislation permits, there are Indian representatives on various school boards.

ACQUISITION OF MOBILE HOMES

Question No. 2,306—Mr. Robinson:

1. Will the federal government consider the application of N.H.A. funds to acquire mobile homes and, if so, when, and if, not, for what reason?

2. Does the federal government have statistics on the number of mobile homes utilized in Canada and the number of people accommodated by them and, if so, what are the numbers?

3. Will the federal government recommend that other levels of government provide mobile home park facilities to accommodate mobile homes and will the federal government provide funds to assist in this regard?

4. Will the federal government consider providing facilities for mobile homes in National Parks?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows: 1. Under the National Housing Act home ownership loans must be secured by a first mortgage on real estate and the housing to be financed must meet certain minimum standards as to size, safety and so forth. If such security can be provided and such requirements can be met mobile homes will be eligible for financing under the N.H.A.

2. According to the 1966 Census of Canada, there were 28,177 mobile homes in Canada occupied by persons who had no other permanent home. The number of persons accommodated therein is not available. DBS does not compile statistics on the number of mobile homes used for vacation purposes.

3. When further amendments to the National Housing Act are under review consideration will be given to provisions relating to the financing of mobile homes and the sites on which they may be placed. At that time, provinces and municipalities will have to be consulted regarding provincial laws and municipal codes.

4. No consideration is being given to providing facilities for mobile homes in National Parks. Facilities are provided in public campgrounds for vacation-type trailers. In this case, the duration of stay in any one location is normally restricted to two weeks.

LONG HARBOUR, NFLD.—ELECTRIC REDUCTION COMPANY GRANT

Question No. 2,319—Mr. Moores:

1. Did ERCO receive any grant through ADA during the construction of the facilities at Long Harbour, Newfoundland?

2. With whom were negotiations carried out?

3. How much money was made available and on what terms?

4. Were federal government experts consulted regarding possible pollution during the construction period?

5. Was effective pollution control a condition of the ADA grant?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Fisheries and Forestry as follows: 1. Yes.

2. A group of company officials including the President, Vice-President and Secretary.

3. A payment of $3 million under the Area Development Incentives Act was made after the facility reached commercial production in December 1968. Payments of $1 million each would be made in December 1969 and December 1970 provided the conditions of the Act and Regulations continue to be met.

4. The Department of Fisheries and Forestry experts were consulted in association with an oceanographer from the Bedford Institute.

5. No.

COLOURED SPREAD SALES

Question No. 2,326—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Does the government know how many pounds of "coloured spread" were sold in Canada from April 1, 1967 to March 31, 1968 and from April 1, 1968 to March 31, 1969?

2. Of that amount, what proportion was sold illegally?

3. What were for the same periods the amounts of other imitation milk product sold in Canada?

4. What were the amounts of milk products of all kinds which were imported from other countries during the above-mentioned years?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. If by "coloured spread" is meant margarine, the Manufacturers Sales of Margarine for periods specified were: April 1, 1967 to March 31, 1968, 188,-151,000 lbs; April 1, 1968 to March 31, 1969, 195,142,000 lbs.

2. No information available.

3. There are no statistics available on imitation fluid milk sales in Canada.

4. The amounts of milk products of all kinds imported from other countries were as follows: April 1, 1967 to March 31, 1968, 488,189 cwt.; April 1, 1968 to March 31, 1969, 478,504 cwt.

Questions

*HOMES BUILT UNDER VETERANS LAND ACT

Question No. 2,357—Mr. Rynard:

1. How many homes were built in Ontario under the Veterans' Land Act during the past five years?

2. How many loans under the Veterans' Land Act were granted where both the husband and the wife qualified?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part is, 2,002. The answer to the second part is as follows: The Veterans' Land Act regulations provide that where a man and wife are both veterans only one of them may receive the benefits of Part I of the act. Information is not readily available from VLA records as to whether established veterans' wives are also veterans.

VETERANS AFFAIRS PUBLIC RELATIONS

Question No. 2,358—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

Is there a branch or division within the Department of Veterans Affairs dealing with Public Relations matters and, if so, how many people are so employed there, what is the official name of the branch or division, what amount of money was expended during the fiscal year 1968-69, what positions are held by each person working therein and what is the salary paid to each and their qualifications?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): There is a division in the Department of Veterans Affairs dealing with public relations matters. There are 11 employees and the official name is the Public Relations Division. The total amount expended by the Division during the fiscal year 1968-69 was $117,427. The positions, salaries and qualifications of the staff of the Division are set out hereunder: Chief, Public Relations Division, Information Officer 4, salary $14,490 per annum. [Mr. Pepin.]

PUBLIC WORKS—PUBLIC RELATIONS PERSONNEL

Question No. 2,401—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of Public Works have a relations staff and, if so, how many?

2. What was the total cost of public relations for the Department for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

FARM MACHINERY PRICES

Question No. 2,402—Mr. Beaudoin:

Has it been determined by the Royal Commission on Farm Machinery that prices for various types of tractors are much lower in England than in Canada and, if so, what steps will the government take to reduce prices in Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The Royal Commission on Farm Machinery prepared a paper for the Canadian Agriculture Congress in March, 1969, entitled "Farm Tractor Prices in Canada Compared with Those in England and Other Countries". This paper shows that prices in the 1967 selling season were significantly higher in Canada than in the United Kingdom for tractors up to 55 to 60 hp. but somewhat lower for tractors with greater horsepower.

Announcement of any policy which may be established in this regard will be made to the House in the usual manner.

INCORPORATION OF UNIONS

Question No. 2,420—Mr. Robinson:

Is it the government's intention to require the Canadian incorporation of all unions operating in Canada and, if so, will they be subject to the same rules and regulations as laid down in the Canada Companies Act?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Matters related to this question are involved in the report of the Task Force on Labour Relations and are being studied in the course of considering amendments to the IRDI Act. Until this study is completed, it is not possible to predict government action.

VETERAN DISABILITY PENSIONS

Question No. 2,433—Mr. Robinson:

1 How many veterans receive a disability pension of (a) 100% (b) 90-99% (c) 80-89% (d) 70-79% (e) 60-69% (f) 50-59% (g) 40-49% (h) 30-39% (i) 20-29% (j) 10-19% (k) less than 10%, in each of the years 1960-69 respectively?

2. How many veterans are there of (a) the Boer War (b) the First World War (c) the Second World War (d) the Korean war?

3. How many veterans served in more than one war?

4. How many veterans are entitled to and/or are receiving more than one veteran's pension?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. The required information is contained in the following table.

2. Estimated number of living veterans at June 1969: (a) statistics for this group are not available; (b) 113,000; (c) and (d) 833,000. (Korean group cannot be isolated).

3. Statistics relative to veterans who served in more than one war are not available.

4. This information is not readily available.

QUOTAS TO CREAM PRODUCERS

Question No. 2,459—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. How many cream producers were awarded quotas for the 1969-70 dairy year, which entitles them to the dairy subsidy in the Provinces of (a) Alberta (b) Saskatchewan (c) Manitoba (d) Ontario and (e) Quebec?

2. How many producers received a phasing-out payment this year in (a) Alberta (b) Saskatchewan (c) Manitoba (d) Ontario and (e) Quebec?

3. Were any additional quotas allotted to producers in any of these provinces and, if so, what provinces were involved and what was the allotment to each province?

4. How much subsidy was paid in the Provinces of (a) Quebec (b) Ontario (c) Manitoba (d) Saskatchewan and (e) Alberta in the dairy year 1967-68 and 1968-69?

5. What is the Dairy Commission's philosophy behind disallowing transfer of quotas to producers purchasing herds from registered quota holders with quotas under 3,500 pounds?

6. Were any adjustments made to increase quotas to any producers for the current dairy year 1969-70?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The quotas for 1969-70 will not be completed until the end of June.

2. None.

3. No additional quotas will be allotted to producers in any province.

4.

Province	1967-68	1968-69
Alberta	$ 9,623,852.68	$10,146,510.24
Saskatchewan	4,407,285.16	4,481,753.10
Manitoba	4,820,335.29	5,203,951.55
Ontario	37,440,587.78	40,056,084.01
Quebec	45,725,390.28	52,540,738.14

5. There is no such disallowance when the producer purchasing the herd already has a quota. In the case of producers who do not already have a quota and who intend to ship cream the minimum quota which will be reallocated is now 1,750 pounds.

6. No adjustments will be made to increase quotas to any producers for 1969-70 other than through reallocation on the purchase of the herd of another person holding a quota.

Questions

RESEARCH GRANT TO MR. CHANDLER DAVIES

Question No. 2,481—Mr. Caouette:

1. For the past two years, what was the amount of the research grant which the Canadian Government paid to Mr. Chandler Davies?

2. What was the subject of the research?

3. What was its purpose?

4. Where was it carried out?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. 1968-69, $6,350, Senior Research Fellowship; 1969-70, $15,130, Operating Grant.

2. Mathematics in both cases.

3. The purpose of a Senior Research Fellowship is to give an experienced research investigator who has been granted sabbatical leave by his university an opportunity to pursue his research interests and increase his knowledge and awareness of new advances in his special field. The purpose of an Operating Grant is to provide support for scientific research conceived and carried out by competent investigators and is judged primarily on the basis of an assessment of the scientific competence of the applicant and the quality of his work. Dr. Davis' request was for support of research in "Inequalities for Matrices".

4. Senior Research Fellowship: Canada, United States, Hungary, Rumania, Russia and France. Operating Grant: University of Toronto.

PAYMENTS UNDER GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

Question No. 2,486—Mr. Robinson:

1. How much money has been paid under the Guaranteed Income Supplement in each year since its inception?

Questions

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY PUBLIC RELATIONS

Question No. 2,502—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of Fisheries and Forestry have a public relations staff and, if so, how many?

2. What was the total cost of public relations for the Department for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

WORLD BANK LOANS

Question No. 2,516—Mr. Dumont:

To the knowledge of the government, has the World Bank recently made loans totalling $78,000,000 to (a) The Republic of China (b) The Republic of Korea (c) Trinidad and Tobago (d) Yugoslavia and, if so, in what amounts, at what interest rates and for what period for each country?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The World Bank has recently* made loans totalling U.S. $108.2 million to:

	Amount $	Term	Interest
a) Republic of China	31.2 Million	15½ years (3½ years grace)	6½ per cent
b) Republic of Korea	45 Million	30 years (7 years grace)	6½ per cent
c) Trinidad and Tobago	2 Million	15 years (2 years grace)	6½ per cent
d) Yugoslavia	30 Million	25 years (5 years grace)	6½ per cent

*The loan to the Republic of Korea was announced on May 16, 1969; the loans to the Republic of China, Trinidad and Tobago, and Yugoslavia were announced on May 28, 1969.

MUNICIPAL REPRESENTATION AT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Question No. 2,520—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. Is it the intention of the government to invite representatives of any municipal governments to the next Federal-Provincial conference?

2 If so, does this indicate a new policy of the federal government?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1. No. It would be for provincial governments to decide whether to include such representatives in their delegations.

2. Not applicable.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

BILINGUALISM ADVISERS

Question No. 1,712—Mr. Fortin:

1. Which of the following have advisers on bilingualism on their staffs: the Bank of Canada, the Industrial Development Bank, the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition, the National Arts Centre Corporation and the Northern Ontario Pipeline Crown Corporation?

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

2. Which of the above have advisers on bilingualism who (a) have French as their mother tongue (b) have English as their mother tongue (c) have another language as their mother tongue (d) are bilingual?

3. What are the ages and educational levels of the advisers on bilingualism of each of these?

4. What is the administrative level of the position of adviser on bilingualism in each of these bodies, and in each case, at what level have such appointments been made?

Return tabled.

EXPROPRIATIONS BY NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

Question No. 1,945—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. Of the expropriations by the NCC settled in the year 1968, what were (a) the dates of these expropriations (b) the amount of compensation in each case (c) the amount of interest paid because the Commission delayed settlement (d) the number and cost of real estate appraisals (e) the values estimated by each appraiser, including alternative estimates based on different approaches to value?

2. Were any of the former owners represented by a member of the National Capital Commission or any of its advisory bodies?

3. Were any of the properties purchased or expropriated in 1968 owned or partly owned by any members of the National Capital Commission or any of its advisory boards?

Return tabled.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSION BETWEEN NATO AND WARSAW PACT COUNTRIES—MEETING WITH MAINLAND CHINA REPRESENTATIVE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs back in the House of Commons. May I ask him whether Canada as a member of NATO is pressing NATO countries to enter into discussions with the Warsaw pact countries in an attempt to bring about meetings which will be fruitful and result possibly in a détente?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said in my report on my Scandinavian tour, we have been supporting in particular the Finnish initiative which embodies the conditions and qualifications we think necessary for a successful conference. We believe that the Budapest Declaration, or the language of that declaration, is not of a nature best calculated to make friends and influence people. The Finnish initiative seems to have that character and has, therefore, more hope of success.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked, Mr. Speaker, whether Canada is pressing her NATO allies or associates to proceed along those lines?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is our policy. It is the position we are pursuing within NATO.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has Canada actually made representations to this effect to the NATO council or to any appropriate NATO organization? Has it done so beyond speaking to individual Scandinavian countries, for example? Has Canada made specific recommendations to the appropriate NATO organization which would take the step that has been alluded to? Also, what does the minister consider is the appropriate first step for anyone to take having regard to his indication that we ought to proceed step by step?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, Canada has been foremost among NATO countries over a long period of months in advocating a détente between east and west. This has perhaps been our most important contribution to the NATO discussions in recent months. Our view about the course of the discussions, as I indicated, is that we should proceed to discuss those questions upon which greatest progress is likely to be made immediately. We should begin with disarmament.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, whether in his discussions with the Finnish government he indicated that Canada would be prepared to attend such a conference? Also, did he find that other countries had indicated to the Finnish government that they would be willing to attend such a conference?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we not only indicated our willingness to attend but also our wish to be invited. This is the first hurdle in these discussions which must be surmounted. The plans which have been put forward do not indicate with sufficient certainty as yet that Canada and the United States will be invited. But it is our wish to be invited and we are certainly willing to go if we are invited.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister speaks of certain steps which ought to be taken preliminary to such a conference. Has the minister outlined these proposed steps in any document and has this document been circulated among our NATO allies? If so, what has been the response?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for us in the NATO council to distribute documents of this kind. We have been discussing in the NATO council for some months the prospects for détente. Indeed, this discussion, as the hon. gentlemen will recall, was quite well advanced before the Czechoslovakian invasion. We now hope to get the discussions under way again, and that is why we have been giving such strong support to the initiative of the Finnish government which is an entirely neutral government. That initiative seems to offer the best hope. It would enable the two sides to come together and discuss the issues upon which Europe is divided. As I understand it, the discussions that are going on are very informal because in many cases certain countries have not replied yet to the proposals put forward by the Finnish government. Perhaps the conference might consider a series of questions, beginning with those upon which greatest progress is likely to be made and ending with those that are most difficult.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, arising out of the statement the minister made earlier today. Since it is highly unlikely that the minister visited the Scandinavian countries purely on a good will mission while the house was in session, may I ask whether he knew, prior to leaving Ottawa, that a high ranking diplomatic official of the People's Republic of China was to be in Stockholm in the latter part of June? Was it the minister's intention to meet that diplomatic representative? If it was, may I ask what caused the mix-up?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have had the greatest difficulty in persuading the press that I did not go to Scandinavia in order to meet the Chinese in Stockholm. I have made these denials time after time and always they have been received with apparent disbelief. In fact, I did not go for the purpose the hon. gentleman alluded to. I did not know when the Chinese ambassador was to arrive in Stockholm.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is our cable code communication from Stockholm so insecure that our Canadian ambassador is afraid to send vital messages to the minister in Ottawa, thus making it necessary for the minister to go to Stockholm and talk face to face with the ambassador?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the question as asked is in order.

RECOGNITION OF MAINLAND CHINA IN ONE-CHINA POLICY

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the government either made an offer or agreed to the withdrawal of diplomatic recognition of the Chinese government located in Taipei in exchange for diplomatic exchanges with Peking? Perhaps I could rephrase the question. I was trying to be very precise. In short terms, has the government agreed or offered to withdraw recognition of the People's Republic of China located in Taipei in exchange for diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China located in Peking?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As I have stated on a number of occasions, Mr. Speaker, we have had a one-China policy, intend to have a one-China policy and we will recognize only one government. If we can reach agreement with Peking, it will be the People's Republic of China government.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. So there is no misunderstanding, if agreement is reached to have diplomatic recognition with Peking, I take it we will then be withdrawing our present recognition of Taipei?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BIOLOGICAL WARFARE—TRANSFER OF MATERIALS ACROSS CANADIAN TERRITORY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Canada is a signatory to the Geneva protocol of 1925 against the use of chemical and biological warfare, will the Prime Minister inform the house whether Canada's part in the diabolical research and development of chemical and biological weaponry is being reviewed in the present review of our defence policy with, I hope, a view to terminating it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already asked that this type of question be made part of our review: the degree to which we are bound by the Geneva protocols and the arrangements thereunder. I have no report as yet to enable me to answer that question.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Prime Minister whether there is any possibility of the house being informed of the results of that review within a reasonable time, either before we rise or very shortly after we come back in the fall?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this, of course, is linked to the over-all review of policy which will be presented to the House of Commons. I have no timetable to propose to the house at this point on that question.

Mr. Lewis: I wish to direct a further supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Wednesday last I asked the then acting minister some questions about the possibility of the transportation of germs and other elements of chemical and biological warfare over Canadian air space. May I ask the minister to inform the house whether any shipments of such materials take place from the United States into or over Canada by planes, trucks or trains?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I took the opportunity of asking my officials to confirm the accuracy of the report that was made by the acting minister to see whether there were any aspects of it which required further elucidation. I am informed there is no record of any transport of any of these kinds of materials to Greenland or Alaska. Permission would be required whether they were transported across Canada in military or civilian vehicles.

INTIMIDATION OF MEMBERS OF GREEK COMMUNITY OPPOSING MILITARY GOVERNMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last Tuesday the acting minister was asked whether he would investigate the reports of alleged harassment of members of the Greek community by supporters of the military régime in Greece. Is the minister able to report to the house now with respect to that inquiry?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, just before I came into the house I inquired whether the investigation was complete. I was informed it is not yet complete.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—NET INCOME OF INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Last Thursday, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Côté) quoted some figures according to which the income of Quebec farmers had increased by $16 million in 1968, compared with 1967. I would like to ask the minister whether he feels that the lower price obtained by the farmer for his manufactured milk and the export tax, will contribute to increase the income in 1969, compared with 1968?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member's question is argumentative and I think it could easily be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

ALLEGED INEQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF BOX CARS—EXTENSION OF DELIVERY TIME

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, possibly I could direct this question to the Minister of Agriculture. In my mail today I received four or five letters from various parts of Saskatchewan in which farmers complain of injustice or inequity in connection with the distribution of box cars. This condition has become worse and more intensified in the last couple of weeks. Will the minister look into this matter and possibly on Wednesday make a statement to the house because this problem is causing serious difficulty, particularly in those areas where there are minimum quotas and cars are not available for the purpose of transportation?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman would send us the particulars so that we may know which shipping points he is referring to, we could get a report through the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce from the Wheat Board respecting the situation. If there is a disparity or a disproportionate number of cars being allocated to those points, we could try to persuade the railways to correct the situation. I caution the right hon. member that it is not wise to load more cars than can be unloaded.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I need no caution in that direction, Mr. Speaker. When there are no cars, the caution is worthless. Two areas come to mind at once, namely, Kinistino and Glenavon, on which the minister can start.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact the last statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicated that there were still some delivery points on a unit basis and about 38 per cent still on three bushels or less, may I ask the minister if the government is considering the possibility of easing the concern on the part of the farmers by assuring them that the delivery season will be kept open until at least a five bushel delivery has been made effective at every delivery point on the prairies?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce commented on this the other day. It has to be borne in mind, however, that keeping the delivery points open on the past crop year does not add greatly to the marketing prospects for the ensuing year. This has to be taken into account, the amount of space available and the kind of grain our customers wish us to have in export position.

NATIONAL REVENUE

PORT DOVER, ONT.—FAILURE OF U.S. PLEASURE CRAFT TO REPORT TO CUSTOMS OFFICER

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. I apologize that time did not give me the opportunity of giving the minister notice beforehand. In view of the fact that on Saturday last at Port Dover, Ontario, out of seven United States pleasure boats from Erie, Pennsylvania, bringing United States dollars and good will to Canada two were fined $10 and all were ordered to get out of Canada because they had not reported to the customs officer who was not available, will the minister devise some means of clearing our United States visitors through customs on weekends through the three summer months, which is the only time that most of the United States boats can visit Canada?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made a representation which he has to assume will be noted by the minister. If the hon. member wants to pursue the matter further this will be a question that will have to be set down at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Time of adjournment, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXTENSION OF TRADE THROUGH MAINLAND CHINA RECOGNITION

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs supplementary to questions directed to him a few minutes ago with regard to recognition of the People's Republic of China. Aside from the world peace issue involved, having in mind the importance to the prairie provinces of our grain trade with the Orient and also the importance of that trade to the ports of British Columbia, would the minister undertake to press on with his efforts to reach an acceptable basis for recognition of the People's Republic of China?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has taken the initiative and I hope both sides will reach an amicable agreement.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the government be taking advantage of the presence in Peking of Premier Smallwood to facilitate the negotiations?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

OCCASION OF LAST MEETING BETWEEN MAINLAND CHINESE AND CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in view of his apparent chasing of a will-o'-the-wisp while he was on his trip to the Scandinavian countries, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the house when was the last occasion that there was a meeting between the elusive Chinese communists and representatives of the government of Canada in regard to the solicitation of the part of the government of Canada, on bended knee, for recognition?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some serious doubt as to the terminology of the question asked by the right hon. member. I doubt that the question can be asked in those terms.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thought I would help the minister. I now ask him, when was the last occasion that this convivial group got together, the communist Chinese and the Canadians?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very puzzled by the attitude of the right hon. gentleman. The only elusive will-o'-the-wisp has been these reports that I was going to Stockholm to meet the Chinese, which I tried to deny from the beginning. But in reply to the right hon. gentleman, whose motivations I do not quite understand, whether he wants to interrupt these discussions—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I just want to get an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We cannot debate the question at the moment.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DEVCO—USE OF FUND IN RETIREMENT PLAN

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Will he tell the house under what arrangements Devco is using the Unemployment Insurance Commission fund in its early retirement plan?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): As has been mentioned in the house before, Mr. Speaker, the assistance to people retired at age 60 is a two-stage step. The first step is supplementary unemployment benefits administered by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The second step is direct assistance or pensions paid for by Devco when unemployment insurance benefits run out.

Mr. MacInnis: It is apparent the minister completely misunderstands the representations I am making. Under what special arrangements has Devco brought about the use of the U.I.C. fund in its early retirement plan?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps of historical interest to the hon. member to know that this arrangement was made some time ago, as the former minister of manpower has pointed out on several occasions in the house. It is not the first time such arrangements have been made, and it probably will not be the last. The important thing is that it is of great benefit to the men concerned.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would very much like to ask the minister to take into account that this is the first time that any such plan has been in operation. It has nothing to do with former arrangements. I ask the minister once more: Under what special arrangements can Devco use the U.I.C. fund, a fund which has been denied to individual Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked the question three times. He may not be satisfied with the reply given to him by the minister, but I suggest to him that the rules allow him to ask the question just once. He asked it the third time as a point of order, and I suggest it was not a legitimate point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: As a supplementary question I would ask the minister why individual Canadians are being denied that right that is being used by Devco, a Crown company?

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary question is argumentative.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—RED CROSS ROLE IN PROVIDING RELIEF

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question that was directed to the acting minister a few days ago and which he was unable to answer. Now that the Biafran authorities are indicating that they are prepared to allow daylight flights, what representations has the government of Canada made to encourage Nigeria to extend safe passage for daylight flights by the Red Cross?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Recently on a number of occasions we have had discussions with the Nigerian authorities urging them to agree to continue their offer for daylight flights. I am very happy that there seems to be some progress and I hope the Leader of the Opposition is correct in saying agreement has been reached on these matters. We have also been discussing with the Nigerian government the safety of flyers who may be involved. We share with the Leader of the Opposition the desire to make our aid available on the most effective basis.

Mr. Stanfield: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the report that the Red Cross has withdrawn from operations in Nigeria because of planes being shot down, is the government of Canada prepared to make arrangements to bring assistance to the starving people in Nigeria through any other agencies? Is this matter being given active consideration?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Leader of the Opposition's statement is not correct. The International Red Cross, I understand, will be continuing to operate in both Biafra and other parts of Nigeria. Discussions are now going on with respect to daylight flights and other methods of delivery over land and over water. We are doing everything possible to assist with these discussions.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether in his discussions with the federal government of Nigeria he made any protest about the shooting down of a clearly marked Red Cross relief plane on June 11, I believe, with consequent loss of life of the crew, in complete disregard of international conventions?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, the Nigerian government had given notice quite a long time ago that night flights were contrary to the wishes of the Nigerian authorities and that anyone who flew contrary to the wishes of the Nigerian government would do so at his own peril. The Nigerian authorities suggested at that time, and reiterated it on a number of occasions, that flights should be made in daylight.

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE TO ONTARIO AND QUEBEC FARMERS IN REPAYMENT OF LOANS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Since it now appears certain that the long season of excessive rainfall in Ontario will result in very serious crop losses, will the minister say whether farmers in Ontario will be accorded the same sympathetic consideration regarding repayment of government loans, both principal and interest, as has been indicated for western farmers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has pointed out, the lack of income or lack of cash flow will not be apparent until later this season when the harvest is in and is being marketed. Certainly if there is a problem with respect to this matter at that time it can be considered.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

If the same cause exists in Quebec, will the farmers of that province get the same treatment as those in the West and in Ontario?

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this has been applied universally across the country so far as the Farm Credit Corporation is concerned.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the policies the minister has brought into being apparently are not working in western Canada, could he come up with some new ones?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—CONTINUATION OF MARITIME COMMAND IN ANTI-SUBMARINE ROLE—CLOSING OF BASES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Does the sentence in the statement he made on motions today to the effect that Maritime Command will continue in an anti-submarine warfare role mean that it will continue in that role in the full sense in which it is now engaged in this operation?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think I qualified that statement by saying that so far we are negotiating with SACLANT as well as with SACEUR the question of our NATO participation and the A.S.W. role which, as my hon. friend knows, is within the purview of that particular responsibility within NATO.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether part of these discussions with SACLANT and SACEUR includes a possible specialized role or specialized activities within the broader A.S.W. role in NATO itself.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Yes, they do, as a possibility. They, of course, study options and maybe we can come out of these discussions with practically the same kind of operation we are doing now. This I cannot prejudge until we have terminated the discussions.

[Later:]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to the questions already asked of the Minister of National Defence. Although the minister stated that decisions with regard to closure of bases generally had not been taken, does it flow from the statement he made with regard to Maritime Command that it is unlikely that Maritime Command bases will be closed?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I think I would have to ask the hon. member for his definition of bases within Maritime Command. I do not think any maritime bases are being considered for closing at least for the time being, but I cannot be that sure.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the discussion between the minister and the hon. member could be continued outside the house.

Mr. Forrestall: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It pertains to Shearwater.

[Later:]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that the people have been waiting several years for information, can the minister relieve their anxiety and quell some of the rumours by giving the house a date, before the house recesses in July or August or before we come back in October, when there will be a definitive statement on base closure?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I believe I am right in saying that probably before August 1 we will be in a position to announce what bases are to be closed.

Mr. Barney Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of National Defence. I wonder whether he could possibly explain a little more clearly to the opposition our phased policy as opposed to their "two-phased" policy?

An hon. Member: Funny guy over there.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

CONSIDERATION OF INTEREST RATES BY COMMITTEE DURING SUMMER RECESS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the hon. member for Gatineau in his capacity as chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Since we have indicated to him our willingness to sit through the summer to hold hearings in respect of the outrageous rise in interest rates, can he indicate whether he has received information from the other parties as to their willingness to do the same?

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, my thanks to the hon. member for Waterloo for giving me notice of his question. The hon. member wants to know if the members of other parties have told me that they would be prepared to sit this summer.

I think this is a hypothetical question since the matter has not yet been referred to the committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and I am planning this week, namely on Wednesday, to convene the members of the sub-committee on Program and Procedure in order to discuss the general policy of that committee.

[English]

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member whether I heard him correctly when he said next Wednesday rather than this Wednesday and whether it is his intention to have the committee meet while parliament is still in session to consider this matter?

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, if I gave the impession that it was next Wednesday, I want to say that it is this Wednesday. Like all hon. members, I hope that on the 27—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE IN QUEBEC-LABRADOR IRON ORE INDUSTRY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour regarding the six-weeks old strike in the iron ore industry in Quebec and Labrador. I know the minister has endeavoured to get some co-operation from the governments of Newfoundland and Quebec and I believe he has received the cold shoulder from the latter province. In view of the fact that dock and railway workers are involved who come under federal jurisdiction, is the minister doing anything at all to try to effect a settlement?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member so properly pointed out, the lengthy strike in the northern part of Quebec, Labrador and Newfoundland is very complicated because of the fact that there are 16 unions involved which come under federal jurisdiction and provincial jurisdiction. We did endeavour to approach the matter on a joint basis but the province of Newfoundland has expressed a desire that its conciliation board receive a little more time in an effort to bring their particular problems to a successful end.

In so far as federal jurisdiction is concerned, I would remind the house that two conciliation boards are still meeting and that employees under federal jurisdiction are not on strike.

AGRICULTURE

MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can now acquaint the house with the approximate time and location of his intended tour of the prairie provinces this summer and also whether or not he will be meeting with individual farmers and farm organizations at that time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course I will be meeting with individual farmers. I understand there are quite a few western farmers who would like to talk with me. I am not in a position yet to give the exact itinerary, however.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister has not accepted any invitations to go east tomorrow and in view of the fact that the people of the west are almost frantic to have him come, may I ask whether he could make a trip west tomorrow?

IMMIGRATION

AMENDMENT PERMITTING HEARING IN TORONTO OF DEPORTATION APPEALS

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration when he will introduce amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act with a view to making provision for appeals from deportation to be heard in Toronto, where most requests originate?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give my hon. friend a definite date, but this matter is under consideration at the present time in the hope that the board will be able in the future to operate a panel in that area.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CHANGE IN REGULATIONS—RECEIPT OF BENEFITS UPON ADMISSION OF VOLUNTARY SEVERANCE

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. I should like to know whether there has been a recent change in the regulations controlling the Unemployment Insurance Commission fund, and also whether it is not a contravention of those regulations to receive benefits when voluntary severance is admitted by applicants?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the second question he asked is clearly argumentative.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. McIntosh: Then, Mr. Speaker, would the minister answer the first question?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I am afraid I have lost track of what the original question was.

[Later:]

Mr. McIntosh: The minister has apparently forgotten the first part of my question. Perhaps I could repeat it or rephrase it. Will he advise the house whether there have been recent changes in the regulations controlling the Unemployment Insurance Commission fund which would allow a person who has apparently severed himself from his position to make an application and receive benefits under the act?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): That is not the situation under normal circumstances. If the hon. member has a more specific incident in mind, perhaps I will be able to deal with it tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CLEMENCY PLEA FOR POLITICAL PRISONER ALEXANDOROS PANAGOULIS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On June 12 I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs relating to one Alexandoros Panagoulis who was sentenced to death for political activities in Greece. The acting minister said he would have the matter looked into. Will the minister, now that he is back, look into the matter himself and perhaps give me an answer some time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would be happy to do so, Mr. Speaker.

BIOLOGICAL WARFARE—TRANSFER OF MATERIALS ACROSS CANADIAN TERRITORY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I intended earlier to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he could inform the house how the materials used at Shirley's Bay, and particularly the material used at Suffield, Alberta, in connection with chemical and biological warfare research gets to either or both of these laboratory grounds?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice. As I said in reply to the earlier question, the inquiries we made indicate there has been no request to transport any materials to Alaska and Greenland. Before making a further inquiry I would want to know if in fact U.S. materials are used in Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER OF PRECEDENCE OF GOVERNMENT ORDERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, before Orders of the Day are called perhaps I might ask the President of the Privy Council when it is intended to proceed with government order 91 in respect of the setting up of a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Price Stability, Incomes and Employment, especially in view of the limited timetable of the House, and whether it is the intention that this committee will sit during the recess?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we would hope to deal with government order No. 4 in respect of the official languages bill, the government order dealing with the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Assistance bill and then the completion of order No. 84 with regard to Bill C-202, to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities. We would also expect to deal before rising with the motion in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. On that basis and subject to consultation, I am not certain we will be able to get to the order in question before the house recesses.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED LACK OF ACTION TO COMBAT POLLUTION

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka) moved:

That in order particularly to discuss the department's neglect to assert federal leadership and take effective action to attack the worsening contamination of the Canadian environment by pollution, consideration be given to Vote 1 of the 1969-70 estimates of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources contained in the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Natural Resources and Public Works presented to the house on May 30th, 1969 and to other estimates relating to this department.

Alleged Lack of Action to Combat Pollution

He said: Mr. Speaker, I take the opportunity afforded by the rules to bring before the house the estimates of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the report of the standing committee in order to underline the urgency of federal government action to control pollution in our Canadian environment and to deplore in the strongest terms the basic failure of the government to take leadership or any effective action. It should not be necessary to remind ourselves and the government of the priority this problem should demand. Obviously the government has overlooked it and has not given priority to this very important, very serious and most urgent matter.

We are trying to make Canada a better place, where we can feel at home anywhere. This is the intent of the the official languages bill which we have been considering. What kind of a home will it be if our water, soil and air are polluted, and of what use will it be to make a home which is unsatisfactory to all our citizens? We are trying to make working conditions better so that our people will have more time for leisure activities. But where will they go for holidays in a polluted country, and what tourists will come here if we allow this to happen?

We are trying to legislate regional equality of opportunity. This should not mean equal opportunity to suffer from pollution, but that is what the result will be if pollution control does not accompany regional development. In other words, we must move hand in hand in our efforts to improve the economy and the country from a pollution standpoint. Surely we can say very clearly that pollution in relation to our environment is the greatest threat, except for war, to our continued existence.

The population explosion, urbanization, the increased use of technology to create new products and the great variety of new wastes being released from industrial plants make it increasingly difficult to keep pollution under control. Pollution comes from such diverse sources as household detergents, human wastes, industrial by-products, which cannot be otherwise used or consumed, from mines, pulp mills and food processing plants, from agricultural wastes and automobile exhausts, as well as from many other sources.

We cannot just run from one emergency to another dealing with the pollution of our environment. There has to be some management on a national basis of our environment and resources, and this has to be done on a planned and co-ordinated basis across the whole country. If one province has tight pollution control methods, if it has good legislation and enforces it, it should not be penalized by the movement of industry to another province or area where the regulations are not so stringent. This is one of the basic reasons national controls and national minimum standards ought to be enforced.

For a moment I should like to mention some of our urgent problems today and give some examples of what we see in the newspapers that causes the people concern. I have quite a number of examples but I shall mention only a few in passing. On April 24 the Globe and Mail carried an article entitled "Oil And Chemical Slick Threatens West Lake Erie Ducks, Beaches." This is an additional source of pollution to the already existing threat from the serious dumping from industrial plants.

On May 28 an article appeared in the Globe and Mail entitled "May Charge Inco For Spill Of Acid." This took place in the Sudbury area and created a great deal of concern to the people there. The matter is being investigated by the Ontario Water Resources Commission.

This month another article appeared in the Globe and Mail under the heading "Lake Pollution To Be Probed At Kingston". It had to do with the problem of oil pollution from ships in eastern Ontario and the St. Lawrence River and suggested that the problem would be tackled by a conservation group.

Let me refer to another field of pollution, namely, air pollution by jets. It appears quite clear that jet aircraft are now beginning to loom large as a potential contributor to the air pollution of our big cities. These huge jet engines are major contributors to the tremendous build-up of poisonous hydrocarbons in the atmosphere over the Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver airports in particular. Jet take-offs and landings at these airports are increasing very rapidly. Last year they totalled more than 65,000 at Toronto, 58,000 at Montreal and 23,500 at Vancouver.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Coming a little closer to where we are, the Rideau River beaches are threatened by pollution again this year. Last year sewage backed up in the Nepean system and overflowed into the Rideau, sending up the bacteria count high enough to force the closing of the beaches. Temporary emergency pumping helped ease the situation. More pumps were supposed to come from the Ontario Water Resources Commission but they have not arrived yet. Now sewage is again starting to spill into the river, and tests conducted early this year indicated that effluent is getting into the river from Nepean Creek.

[Mr. Aiken.]

Another dangerous situation exists at Lake Memphremagog. Pollution of that lake in the eastern townships of Quebec is far more serious than it was first thought to be. New reports of pollution measurements indicate that the infection level of the lake is growing more rapidly than was feared. Bacterial contamination at the end of last summer was found to be 58 times higher than when first measured in the spring. In two bays near Georgeville 46 per cent of the samples were in the poorest category, over 1,000 bacteria per 100 millilitres of water; yet Georgeville is not the worst area of Lake Memphremagog.

Coming right down to today, there is a report of a mysterious fish kill in British Columbia. One of the most important sports in British Columbia is fishing in rivers, and this sport is threatened. The Nicomekl River in the lower mainland, greater Vancouver area is a favourite river for thousands of British Columbians. Today we learn that hundreds of trout, chub and cohoe salmon fry are being killed by some pollution agent that has found its way into this river. What is the government doing about this situation? Are they waiting for the situation to go away? Are they waiting for the provincial authorities to do something, or are they going to take some action on a joint basis?

These are just a few of the problems of the pollution of our environment which have not been dealt with. The government is dragging its feet with the apparent excuse of a division of jurisdiction with the provinces, but that excuse is wearing very thin because the way has been shown for a joint federal-provincial effort and for sole federal action many times. In 1966 the resource ministers conference on pollution in Montreal gave a very clear direction. This was a federal-provincial effort which should have been followed up, but in fact that very excellent pollution conference has not been followed by action from the federal government.

Second, dozens of publications and articles have been written by knowledgeable writers. The most recent that I have seen is an excellent series in the May/June issue of the A.I.C. Review published by the Agricultural Institute of Canada. This was a comprehensive look at the problems of pollution and some of the solutions.

Third, solutions have been reached in the United States and are contained in the clean water act, and in Germany some solutions have been found by associations for waste water purification. These are countries with divided jurisdiction; yet they have managed to meet the problem.

Fourth, a complete policy paper by the Progressive Conservative party of Canada was issued last year. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) acknowledged the study and commented on it, just in case you may think it went unnoticed.

Finally, the standing committee of this house issued its report on May 30, 1969, which stated fairly clearly what had to be done.

The federal role is not really in any doubt. The most essential need is for the federal government to demonstrate that it will take the lead in an all-out fight against pollution right across the country. This it has not done. Other areas have been spelled out so often that I will not enlarge upon them now. They are not just areas of opportunity; they are areas that no other level of government can undertake.

We must have a national pollution abatement policy with related federal, provincial and municipal legislation. We must have provision of research facilities, collection of water, air and soil data, establishment of national minimum standards and design facilities for the removal of pollutants. We need a co-ordination of effort among the many federal departments, and I will deal with that in just a moment. We need the establishment of a national pollution abatement commission. We need the provision of financial incentives to assist in areas where ordinary commercial effort would not be sufficient, particularly in assisting provincial efforts and efforts by such bodies as water control commissions and water basin conservation areas. The groundwork has all been done many times. It has been spelled out over and over again.

Where is the concentrated, vigorous attack we need? I think it has all gone down the drain with the rest of the Canadian dream of federal leadership which was so hopefully looked for a year ago. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who sold himself to Canadians a year ago as a centralist, as a person who would take vigorous action in fields of joint federal-provincial jurisdiction, has proved, in this particular field and in many others, to be exactly the opposite of what the people believed. He has walked away from co-operative programs such as this one, especially when money is involved. In his approach to this problem he has been very casual.

Question after question has been asked in the house by members of all opposition parties, but there have been no answers. We have heard only one thing, that a water act will be introduced later this year. This water act has been under consideration for four or five years now. It was promised by the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) when he was minister of resources. It was promised by two previous ministers of energy, mines and resources. The water act is coming, everything will be settled, we hear over and over again. In the first place, we have not seen it so we have no idea what will be contained in it. It still has not come, and if the plans for adjournment materialize there are only a few days left. I wonder whether the minister is going to tell us today that the water act will be introduced this week. After I had put my motion on the order paper I really expected that he would bring it in this morning to beat me to the gun, but not even that did any good. Therefore we have to assume that it just is not ready or that the government is not ready to proceed with it.

Mr. Baldwin: If the minister resigns tomorrow we will have it a day later.

Mr. Aiken: We have not seen the water act, but it will not provide a solution unless it is in much broader terms than its title indicates. We cannot meet the problem by just dealing with water resources. There are many other aspects of pollution which must be dealt with in some co-ordinated way. I do not know how it is going to be done. We made a suggestion as a party that there should be a pollution abatement commission. I think that was a good idea. But if the government finds something better we will go along with it. However, let us have something, and let us get away from all this division.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Aiken: It has been very common knowledge that the main problem with pollution in the federal area is the division of jurisdictions, the divisions between the federal and provincial governments and between numerous agencies, including the International Joint Commission which involves another country. So we have been hoping to see some concentration of effort.

Alleged Lack of Action to Combat Pollution

• (4:20 p.m.)

When the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources was set up I thought: this is the department which will deal with it; this is the department which will co-ordinate the whole effort. But instead of concentrating these powers the Prime Minister has allowed them to become further fragmented. Responsibility for resources has been given to a Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang). Without reflecting in any way on the abilities of the minister concerned, I must say this does not indicate that a high priority has been given to the control of pollution, especially as it affects our water resources. If this were the only responsibility assigned to the Minister without Portfolio the conclusion reached might be different. But it is not.

Then there is the menace of air pollution, to be dealt with by the Department of National Health and Welfare. The minister in this case seems to be interested in internal smoke rather than external smoke. We have not seen much evidence of an attack on air pollution through the Department of National Health and Welfare.

The Department of Agriculture has come to the fore recently in connection with soil pollution and particularly in connection with pesticides, which are presently a serious hazard. Its efforts have been receiving a good deal of publicity across the country. Who is next? The Department of External Affairs is responsible for taking measures against pollution when it occurs in international waters. This responsibility is by no means regarded as having first priority. In fact, as has been pointed out in the discussion already today, the minister has been away engaged in other tasks.

The Department of Fisheries is also concerned with the matter. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has suddenly taken a leading role in this area. In the last few weeks he has been making speech after speech on this subject and is apparently seeking to fill the void in which none of the other departments has been active. Only today he made an announcement concerning the establishment of a fresh water agency in Manitoba, part of whose duties will be to inquire into pollution and deal with it in waters all across Canada. To me, this move looks like a power play. I do not believe that the job of pollution control is one that any minister really wants. I do not think it would be a happy job for any minister to undertake. I get the feeling that the Minister of Fisheries is trying to take control of the efforts against water pollution. If he is, and if he intends to go ahead vigorously, good luck to him. I hope somebody does.

The situation has been further fragmented within the last few weeks by the active entry of the Departments of Fisheries and Agriculture into this arena. The result is that we do not know where to turn. We do not know to whom to direct questions on this subject. One can direct them to half a dozen different ministers and they are all ready to answer, or at least to stand up and try to give an answer, but we do not get very much by way of solid information.

Pollution affects the interests of many departments; it is rarely the concern of one department alone. Take the simple case of a farmer using d.d.t. under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture which has the duty of licensing pesticides. He may seriously pollute waters under the control of the resources department, creating a hazard which the Department of National Health and Welfare is called on to deal with, killing fish in which the Department of Fisheries is interested and, finally, affecting boundary waters under the control of the Department of External Affairs.

It is no use saying we must allow each department to operate on its own. In any case, they are not doing so. We do not know who is in charge. If the Prime Minister were more honest he might say: Well, I am leaving it to the provinces. I hope he does not take that course, because there is a definite, serious and urgent federal responsibility involved. The Prime Minister's approach has been extremely casual and he has allowed jurisdiction to become fragmented. The progress made during the last year has been nil. There has been no follow-up to the promising start made by the resource ministers' convention. It is true the inland water centre at Burlington is getting under way, and for this we are thankful, but I would remind hon. members that this project was instituted by a former prime minister. The reports of the International Joint Commission received concerned acknowledgement from the government, but no action was taken. The much heralded water legislation has not yet appeared, though a year has now gone by and three previous ministers have trumpeted its arrival.

The report of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources has been received and filed—and I mean "filed"; I have seen no evidence of action. It was a good report, particularly with regard to the desirability of setting up centres such as that in Burlington in other places across Canada. But nothing additional has been promised or promoted. We wait for a glimmer of hope for better surroundings while the gloom deepens across the country.

I conclude by pointing out that pollution is a national danger, a current one and an urgent one. Right now in the coastal waters of the Pacific Ocean near Vancouver, as well as in Placentia Bay in the Atlantic, pollution is actually occurring. Pollution of areas of the Great Lakes is already a fact. The situation could be contained if action were taken promptly. Provincial governments are acting individually here and there to meet the challenge. In some provinces pollution control commissions of one sort or another have been established.

I intend to leave it to others in this debate to draw attention to some of the specific and detailed areas to which immediate attention should be given. I know there are many. I hope the debate today may lead to concentrated and concerned action to deal with water, soil and air pollution. I hope, too, it will help the government to realize this is essentially a single problem, one to which a response must be developed on a national scale.

There is one way in which man may perhaps escape from the consequences of his polluting habits. In this morning's Globe and Mail there is an article about a marine scientist who is developing an underwater habitat in which people can live for extended periods. It is being tried out in Georgian Bay in the neighbourhood of Bruce Peninsula. Man who came from the sea, can, it seems, now return to the sea, provided, of course, that he can find a clean place in the ocean.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) in relation to the pollution problem facing the Canadian nation. I must say I endorse practically all of the comments he made in regard to the need for taking immediate action.

Frankly, I must admit that I too am rather confused by the lack of apparent interest on the part of the various federal departments in solving the pollution problem in Canada today. Along with other members of the house I had hoped that we would see the Canada water act come down at a very early date; in fact, it was promised for the beginning of the year. Then we hoped to see it on the Order Paper before the end of this session. However, we are still waiting and hoping that it will give us a lead as to what the government is going to do in this regard.

I should like to make some rather general comments first of all and deal very briefly, if I may, with the committee's report which was presented to the house at the end of May. I think the committee's recommendations are good. They are very general and certainly do not cover the entire problem, but I feel that the members of the committee are to be congratulated on putting into print and laying before the government the report that they presented. I certainly endorse it.

The committee pointed out—I might say that the report was unanimous—that everyone is concerned about the increasing magnitude of air, water and soil pollution and the jurisdictional conflict which hampers the finding and implementing of proper solutions. I do not think any member of this house with any knowledge of the pollution problem would fail to admit readily that the greatest drawback to finding a solution to pollution is that we are in a jurisdictional muddle in regard to what the provinces, the municipalities and the federal government each can or cannot do.

In 1969, a time when perhaps the very existence of mankind depends upon finding solutions to pollution, the problem would be funny were it not so serious. It is tragic that federal and provincial politicians have not the desire—and I think part of the trouble stems from their lack of desire—to sit down and lay out some program that could and should solve many of the major pollution problems facing Canada today.

In this regard the committee recommended:

> —that the government draft a code of standards for the cleaning up of and the future protection of all Canadian waters; that provincial approval of such a code be sought; and that the federal government provide an enforcement procedure—if necessary by means of an amendment to the Criminal Code.

This is something that we should have had years and years ago. Instead we find that in 1969 major pollution problems are confronting us everywhere we turn. We should not have had to wait till now for a committee to suggest to the government the procedures that should be taken.

The committee further recommended:

—that a centre or centres similar to the Canada Centre for Inland Waters be set up to centralize all existing and future federal research in air and soil pollution and to extend and speed up such research so that codes of standards may be drafted to protect the air and soil from pollution.

Again I have no hesitation in saying that I endorse the general objectives of the committee. Having made this report the committee and its members are going to go on—at least I hope we are—and see that some legislative action is taken. I commend to the minister that he take this report seriously and that legislation be brought in to implement the ideas the committee has placed before the government. I have no hesitation in stating that time is short, that we must move and move quickly if we are to prevent some of the major disasters that are now becoming apparent in the field of pollution control.

I should like to point out too that pollution has become international in scope. It is not merely a provincial problem or a municipal problem or a federal problem; it has become an international problem. Our scientists have warned all the nations of the world that we are swiftly and completely damaging our environment to the extent that we are threatening man's existence on earth. It is as simple as that. We may try to laugh this off because we think that since we are living in a country that is sparsely populated this problem might not affect us too much. Nevertheless, the problem is there and the nations of the world have been given this warning.

Despite the mounting pollution problem we find governments and politicians are reluctant to make those moves that are required to put our house in order as far as pollution control is concerned. Why, Mr. Speaker, are we reluctant to move? This is not a civil service problem; it is a problem for governments and for politicians.

The reason for the reluctance is the enormous cost of pollution control and the many strict and possibly unpopular moves that will have to be made. Everybody knows that governments and politicians do not like making unpopular moves, and basically this is the problem that is facing us in the field of pollution control. All sectors of our economy, be they private or public, will have to make major and costly adjustments if any plan is to succeed. Again I point out that one of the drawbacks has been that we have been afraid to go to industry and to the private sector and to tell companies causing pollution that they have to eliminate pollution that is affecting our rivers, streams, air, soil and everything else. I think we must be in a position to demand that controls be implemented.

Since this is going to cost money, we may ask who is going to provide it? The average citizen, of course. He has to pay for everything anyway. Whether through increased prices or taxation, eventually the cost will be met by the wage earners of this nation.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I should like to outline this afternoon a few general problems. There is a host of material available, in fact so much that it would be difficult to condense to the point where it could be put before the house in a short 20-minute speech. However, one of the major weaknesses as far as the federal government is concerned in its approach to pollution is that there is absolutely no co-ordination on the subject between the various departments. This is supposed to come within the Canada water act. At the moment one arm does not know what the other is doing. There are about 14 independent departments of government that somewhere along the line are involved with the pollution problem. Some departments have standards to enforce; others have none. In this day and age that is a ridiculous state of affairs. The legislation on the statute books is inadequate and we cannot control pollution by using existing legislation. In fact, no single department of government has sufficient authority to deal adequately with pollution problems. It is time the people of Canada were made aware of the facts.

Departments have inadequate facilities to enforce existing laws. They are loath to use existing powers to enforce existing laws for fear of upsetting those in the private sector of our economy. That attitude is all wrong. It is sheer nonsense. The various departments of government find it convenient to ignore many of the major causes of pollution. They get around the problem by saying, "We can do nothing, because if we act we shall upset the provincial governments". Their attitude is that many pollution problems fall under provincial jurisdiction and have nothing to do with the federal government. I say that it is the duty of this government, which has hidden behind the gimmick of constitutional issues in order not to accept responsibility for pollution control, to iron out constitutional problems in this field. The government ought to be meeting with representatives of the provinces and municipalities and trying to iron out these so-called constitutional problems. This government has been in power since 1963. Except for the odd new face, it is the same old gang that has been in power all along. The pollution problems of 1963 are still with us today in 1969.

An hon. Member: The same old gang sits in the opposition.

Mr. Harding: Yes, that may be so. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has the responsibility for dealing with pollution of rivers and lakes. How is it, then, that this department has no pollution standards? I asked for a return to be tabled in the house indicating the standards the department has adopted in order to fight pollution, and I have learned that the department has no standards at all. Here is one government department that has the responsibility of dealing with water resources; yet it has no standards to enforce in the fight against pollution. That state of affairs must be remedied.

Recently amendments to the Navigable Waters Protection Act were introduced into the house and, lo and behold, on examining them, I found that federal and provincial Crown corporations did not come under the act. It does not apply to them. We tried to introduce an amendment to bring the Navigable Waters Protection Act up to date but that amendment was defeated. One could ask, "What has the Navigable Waters Protection Act to do with pollution?" It has plenty to do with it, I say. If a dam is to be built or a reservoir constructed—the reservoir might be 100 miles long—and the government does not insist that the reservoir basin shall be cleared of standing timber before construction begins, the water of the reservoir could remain polluted for as long as any of us in this house stay alive. The government is aware of weaknesses in the act; yet it always tells us, "We must have constitutional discussions before we dare to move in this area."

I have raised these points because one of our provincial governments ignored the damage that could be done when it failed to insist that timber in reservoir basins be cleared. We need only look at the example in British Columbia of Duncan Lake to see what a mess can be created. Another disgrace is shaping up in the reservoir behind Mica Dam which, when completed, will form a lake 125 miles long. The timber has not been properly cleared. This is a national scandal. It is true that the two projects I have mentioned are under the control of the provincial government, but I submit that the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act could be brought to bear. The federal government must put teeth into its laws if it is to control pollution. If necessary amendments to the Criminal Code should be brought in, there should be appropriate fines and penalties for individuals, companies or Crown corporations that contravene the provisions of laws affecting pollution control.

In legislating we are not keeping our eyes fixed on today or tomorrow only; we are legislating for the benefit of our coming generations. We want our youngsters to enjoy recreational areas which we have been wise enough to create during our stay here.

I now wish to speak about the Fisheries Act in relation to pollution. Hon. members have spoked about that act this afternoon. It requires major amendments. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry has made good speeches, the spirit of which I endorse. In his attempts to have regulations under the Fisheries Act enforced he will have my backing and the backing of many others in the house.

Let us examine some of the effects of our fisheries legislation. First of all, there must be a large fish kill before we prosecute anybody. That is not good enough. It is too late to prosecute after all the fish have been killed. That is like locking the stable door after the horse has been stolen. I say the act should be amended and we should tighten regulations governing pollution. We must put teeth into the Fisheries Act if it is to do any good in this area.

For instance, in Placentia Bay, Newfoundland, there has been large-scale pollution of which the department was warned by its own research station in Nova Scotia. The department's experts said that there might be possible trouble from the phosphorus plant. The federal government gave a $5 million grant to the company under the area incentives plan and the company built the plant. The government did not insist that the company behave as a good industrial citizen. Later there was a tremendous fish kill in the area which affected many fishermen. A tremendous amount of damage was done and only after that did the federal government offer to pay the fishermen compensation.

The government hopes the fishermen will prosecute the company and get back some of the money which was paid out in compensation. I say that the fishermen should not be prosecuting the company. That is the job of the Department of Fisheries. It should collect every penny owing from the company. The taxpayers of Canada should not be out of pocket on account of the phosphorus spill from this industrial plant. I say to the government that it is setting a precedent in this area that can be followed in other parts of Canada. It is reasonably certain now that the spill from the plant killed the fish. Therefore the plant ought to be liable for the compensation that was paid to fishermen.

While I am on the subject of fisheries regulations may I mention the Fraser River. The lower reaches of the Fraser River are a running sewer. That is all they are. That stretch of water is one of the filthiest waterways in this nation. The Department of Fisheries is unable to force municipalities and others up the river to clean up raw sewage being dumped into the water. Great damage is being done; there is no doubt about that. Great harm is being done to the fish in that part of the river. Do we need to have vast numbers of fish killed before the government acts? I could cite many other examples. Pulp mills in the area have broken pollution control regulations time and again. They are breaking them today. Action is not being taken against them. Many threats are being made and letters are being written. Then the government gets real tough and sends them a registered letter to really scare them.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Saltsman: It doesn't get there. The Post Office is not working.

Mr. Harding: These problems worry us. Pollution control is a matter of establishing on a co-operation basis a working agreement between the federal and provincial governments and the municipalities. I agree with the hon. member who spoke earlier that a national abatement pollution policy should be established to set national goals as to the standards for a national policy. We have to do this. Industries must be told that they cannot move out of Kootenay West to Alberta or Saskatchewan because if they do they will be up against the same national standards.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Harding.]

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not abuse the time because I know quite a few members wish to speak. I will clear up two or three points and then take my seat.

My second point is that we must have complete understanding of jurisdiction. This can be ironed out through frequent meetings of the federal-provincial ministers' group which has already been set up. Once the jurisdictional problem is ironed out, if governments are not afraid to move we will be well on the way to solving many of our major pollution problems.

In the field of enforcement, amendments must be made to the Criminal Code, including adequate penalties. We need priorities in attacking the major problems facing us. These cannot all be tackled at once. Priorities must be set up and we must move very quickly and adequately on them.

There must be one department and one minister responsible for pollution. This minister must have the power to co-ordinate the activities of all other departments. He must be in charge of pollution problems for the whole nation. In addition there must be a vast research program for water, air and soil pollution. Federal, provincial and municipal legislation must be passed to cover every aspect of the pollution problems facing us today. There must be co-ordination of the legislation passed by the various provinces. There should be some type of loan system set up for municipalities and, in some cases, industry to obtain loans to carry out the improvements needed to prevent pollution.

While I have dealt mainly with water pollution, air and soil pollution are equally serious. I wish to make one comment regarding the pollution of soil. It concerns the use of d.d.t. which is very widespread. Not much research is being carried out in Canada with regard to the effects of d.d.t. on fish and game, human beings, cattle, grain, and so on.

Recently a survey was conducted in the United States which covered the whole of the river basins and lakes in that country. Although it did not touch every lake, it was a very broad survey. Out of 590 samples of fish taken from 45 rivers and lakes throughout the nation, 584 had d.d.t. in their tissues. In some cases it was exceptionally high. Some concentrations were as high as nine times the food and drug administration's tolerance level. This is very serious. This report confirms that there is an accelerating pollution of the environment by hard pesticides. It confirms the findings of some experts that there should be thorough research into d.d.t. by the government and its various departments. It is not the most toxic pesticide; there are others that are much worse.

We must face this problem now. It is not only a problem in Canada and the United States. Every nation is faced with the problem of finding the residues of these pesticides in fish and game and foods which are grown. We are not carrying out the research in Canada that is necessary. I hope other hon. members will also deal with this later this afternoon. I thank Your Honour and hon. members for the few extra minutes given to me this afternoon.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, today we have before us a non-confidence motion introduced by the Progressive Conservative party which reads as follows:

That in order particularly to discuss the department's neglect to assert federal leadership and take effective action to attack the worsening contamination of the Canadian environment by pollution, consideration be given to—

I inform at once the Conservatives that we will support this motion because we are also of the opinion that the government is too slow in meeting the problems of pollution which at this time seriously endanger human life.

However, instead of criticizing the vote I would have liked the motion to read as follows: "That the Bank of Canada will grant free interest loans to municipalities, to provinces, so that all the bills to be studied and put forward in the future are passed as soon as possible."

When dealing with the water pollution problem, and in order to enlighten the house and the committee that will study the problem, I should like to confine my remarks mainly to suggestions because it is a serious problem and we seem to forget that actions is urgently needed, since the survival of the human race twenty years from now is at stake.

The cost of air pollution varies in Canada, according to estimates, from $20 to $65 per capita, depending on the areas. These figures include the washing, painting, cleaning of buildings, air filtration and the cost of medical care. But there is more to it than expenditures and losses. Air pollution is a serious threat to health. It has been established that it weakens the resistance of the body, decreases vitality, and increases the incidence of illness.

In addition, it is possible that air pollution, even relatively low, contributes to the increase of degenerative illnesses including cancer of the skin and the lungs, heart and vascular diseases, and chronic bronchitis. Fortunately, scientific progress in other fields allows us to hope that air pollution also can be checked. Here again, above all, new plants should be required not to pollute the air.

Would it not be advisable to grant loans, without interest, to our municipalities that they might solve once and for all those air pollution problems? But no! Collective suicide is being witnessed complacently, and we are told there is no money. What must we do?

Personal conscience is the prerequisite for any effort towards efficient conservation. A ruling of the Supreme Court of the State of Washington reads as follows:

A non-written pact between the dead, the living and future generations prescribes that we should leave to those who will succeed us something more than debts and exhausted natural resources.

Nature kept its balance for millions of years, but it has now run into a new obstacle. All other creatures follow habits and instincts, while man seeks to dominate things and give them new orientations.

The undiscerning killing of noxious plants and insects by means of chemicals is not only a serious menace to the preservation of wild life but also the source of potential contamination for human beings. In Mexico, 17 children actually died, apparently because of a pesticide that had been used to kill rats in a corn field.

Sewage pollutes the water of our lakes and rivers, thus infiltrating our bodies. Water, which is the most important of our natural resources, can carry germs and toxic elements. According to the World Health Organization, about five million children die every year because of intestinal diseases carried by water.

At a certain point, rivers themselves rebel against the saturation of various poisons from urban sewage, factories, slaughter-houses, or tilled soil. These toxic matters kill the plants, exhaust the oxygen supply in the water and impair the filtering action of the gravel. Once a certain level of pollution is attained, animal and plant life disappears and the river ultimately dies.

In order to clear up our lakes and our rivers, we have to fight different sorts of man-made pollutants: detergents, fertilizers, insecticides, weed-killers, sewage, industrial waste. It is more a matter of prevention than of treatment and it seems that municipalities and industries are now moving in this direction at the moment, however, the rates of interest are a burden far too heavy for them to bear.

Today, Mr. Speaker, air pollution and fog are just mere incidents of our everyday urban life, or so it seems, until a catastrophe in the field of public health occurs, such as the death of 4,000 people in London, in 1952, as a result of the smog, makes us realize that our carelessness can be lethal. About a hundred air pollutants have been so far identified plus those resulting from their integration.

We need people endowed with sufficient sense, imagination, firmness and boldness to demand that sufficient wooded and open areas be reserved for recreational instead of practical purposes. If wilderness disappears, young people will be deprived from satisfying their instinctive taste for dreams and outings. Confined in the canyons of the cities, imprisoned in octopus-like suburbs, their hearts, minds and hands empty, debarred from experiences that their nature requires, they will devote their energies to protest and wrong-doing.

Man has spread pesticides all over without wondering whether they would not be fatal to birds and useful insects, and even to human beings. Man had poured millions of pounds of detergents in the rivers before he found out that he was polluting the water. He let the lakes die through lack of oxygen. He helped increase the fatal effects of smog in allowing harmful substances in the atmosphere.

It is now essential to evaluate the comparative importance of know risks and possible advantages. That is where conscience and intelligence have a role to play. As Harry Commoner said in a striking article on pollution, and I quote:

> No scientific procedure can tell us how many abnormal births caused by radioactive fallout we must tolerate before having a new nuclear weapon . . . No scientific principle can indicate how to make a choice, which the problem of insecticides could force us to make, between the shadow of the elm and the song of the robin . . . the duty of making the necessary judgments does not lie exclusively with scientists and technicians but also with all citizens.

However, the pressure of public opinion remains an essential factor for the success of these efforts. The cahllenge can be met if we muster every skill, every economic force and every human resource in order that what can be achieved physically in this field may become financially feasible. I mentioned before that the Bank of Canada could supply municipalities or provinces, as the case may be, with the funds required for an effective anti-pollution campaign. Man's presumptuous, arrogant meddling has now brought about the deterioration of living conditions we are now concerned with, the extinction of many animal and plant species and the pollution of air and water.

Now that his very survival appears to be at stake, man must revise his thinking, relearn long-forgotten lore and continue his advance along the appropriate ways.

Our research and the conclusions and lessons resulting from it offer hope to a world which ignores largely how serious the situation is. Scholars and researchers do not make the laws, they discover them. Nature's laws exist, and scientists formulate them so that we can observe them.

Mr. Speaker, a duty awaits us. Our governments have this possibility of helping fight pollution. The realities of nature's balance and man's role in this respect have to be presented to the populations of all countries in a way they can understand. Only in this way can scientists give to these responsible the opportunity of taking the necessary decisions on those serious questions.

No municipal, provincial or national effort to maintain nature's balance can be efficient if it is not earnestly demanded and supported by a well informed public opinion. There is no need for people to be specialists in some branch of learning, but everyone should be able to understand what scientists are saying, what technicians are doing and what elected governments who are now increasing debts instead of taking the necessary measures I suggested at the beginning should do, namely that the Bank of Canada should grant interest free loans to our municipalities, as was done recently for western farmers, as was done for Expo, in Montreal, to enable that municipality to develop instead of going bankrupt.

If such loans can help our municipalities and our provinces to fight, with every possible means, pollution which leads to our suicide, we will have really played our role as legislators.

• (5:10 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that this afternoon hon. members opposite have indicated their appreciation of the serious nature of the pollution problem which faces civilized man in his many activities. In that they have joined the members of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works who showed that they had an understanding of the important nature of this problem and the challenge it presents to governments in Canada today.

There is no doubt about the serious nature of the problem with the increased amount of waste which is being produced by man in his industrial and domestic activities. The disposition of these wastes is a serious matter and a challenge in respect of having available for other use by man our natural and renewable resources. It is, of course, a key to intelligent management of water resources to develop first an understanding of their availability in terms of quantity, quality and location. It is this, of course, which has preoccupied the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in recent years in coming to grips with the problem.

I was interested to note that while indicating some understanding of the problem hon. members opposite said very little which really supported the motion that is before us today. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is in fact doing many things in many ways to examine the question of quantity, quality and location of these water resources. Under the Canada water survey there has been established a network of monitoring stations. There are 2,300 of them across the country. There are some 2,000 under the direct responsibility of this department and 300 which are operated by the mines and resources branch of the province of Quebec.

In addition to these monitoring stations which check stream flow and therefore quantities and locations of water, there is being established in co-operation with the provinces a network of stations to assess the chemical qualities of our water resources including such things as hardness, physical characteristics, colour, potability and methods of water treatment for domestic and industrial uses. At the same time we are expanding the network to determine the nature and extent of pollution in major Canadian surface waters and to determine seasonal variations in water quality. Specific attention is being paid to the total nitrogen and phosphorus content of Canadian waters. Special monitoring is being established to detect pesticides, herbicides and algicides that many be present in trace quantities. More intensive research is being carried out to determine water quality problems on the lower Fraser River, the northern Ontario rivers and the Exploits River system of Newfoundland. These studies have been initiated at the request of other agencies as part of over-all water development programs. Intensive water quality studies are being undertaken on ten small watersheds as part of the International Hydrologic Decade. Special studies are in hand on waste disposal problems of specific industries. For example, the effects in local ground water regimes of brine disposal ponds near potash mines is under intensive study.

Studies of groundwater resources are being expanded through establishing a national observation well network in co-operation with the provinces. Assessment of the reserve in aquifers, the replenishment of groundwater, the quality of groundwater, and the potential yield rates are all included in this program.

The department has also undertaken studies of the glacialogical area to examine the relationship between climatic variations and increases and decreases in these important sources of western water.

In addition to these more general programs the department has undertaken specific and intensive programs in co-operation with the provinces on particular river basins. For example, we are working with the province of Ontario in examining the quantity and quality of water in the Hudson Bay drainage of Ontario. The program also includes estimation of the anticipated water needs of the region.

Similarly, a $5 million water resources study of the Saskatchewan-Nelson system is under way in co-operation with the three prairie provinces. The federal government will pay half the total cost of this program. About two-thirds of the cost will go toward water storage studies while the remainder will be spent on examination of water diversion potentials within this huge drainage basin of some 350,000 square miles. These studies are essential before forecasts of water quality levels can be made. I may say that this also demonstrates the effective manner in which federal-provincial co-operation can produce the necessary knowledge about our water resources and how they may be made more useful to the people of this country.

Perhaps the most critical water quality issues facing Canada today concern the Great Lakes. Pollution abatement programs in the Great Lakes basin, on both sides of the international boundary, present a special problem unique in the world and of vital concern to present and future generations. Technically we are faced with the cumulative effects on lake waters of waste products that escape, even with the best of abatement procedures, and cause progressive deterioration of the Great Lakes. Massive studies of the physical, chemical and geological characteristics of the lakes are essential to understand their capabilities of assimilating and disposing of wastes on the one hand or of concentrating and accumulating them to their detriment on the other. From these studies, together with engineering, economic, social and legal studies, intelligent programs will emerge to improve and maintain the quality of the lakes.

Economically, socially and aesthetically no other water pollution problem in the industrial heartland of North America can compare in magnitude and importance with the critical situation developing in the Great Lakes. In recognition of this problem we have undertaken major positive steps in the Great Lakes area. In 1967, recognizing the need for this knowledge, the government decided to build a major interdisciplinary research establishment. A site at Burlington, Ontario was selected and then without waiting the two years which might have been required for site preparation a laboratory complex was immediately housed in trailers. The laboratories were in operation before the end of 1967 and are now operating with a staff of more than 150 scientists, technicians and administrative personnel. Within 10 years it is anticipated that a staff of 1,000 will be undertaking integrated interdisciplinary research and planning related to the physical, biological and chemical nature of the lakes, pollution, water levels, shore erosion and sedimentation.

The Canada Centre for Inland Waters is expected to cost a total of $23.5 million. In addition, a major research vessel, the Limnos, has been commissioned. This is a floating $2 million laboratory containing the most sophisticated scientific equipment available. A second ship is under lease to allow a full scale offshore research program.

As members of this house will realize, water is perhaps the most versatile of all resources in its uses and as a result a number of federal departments and agencies are involved in various aspects of the government's over-all program. A fine example of co-ordinated programs is taking shape at the Canada Centre for Inland Waters. Not only is this department employing a team of scientists of different disciplines but it is also making facilities available to the Department of National Health and Welfare as well as the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. University scientists will also use our laboratories. No effort will be spared to bring the best minds to bear in an efficient, effective, co-ordinated search for knowledge.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Within the government there has been established an interdepartmental committee on water programs to review and recommend on all water resource programs of government agencies. This interdepartmental committee has been established to assure that public programs will be co-ordinated and developed in a sensible and consistent manner. It is expected that under the Canada water act this committee will be given some permanent status in respect of the fight against water pollution.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he is able today to indicate when the water act will be introduced.

Mr. Lang: I expect to comment on that a little later, Mr. Speaker.

In addition to the question of co-operation between government departments there is the extremely important question of co-ordination and co-operation between federal and provincial governments. I am not going to go into the problems of federal and provincial jurisdiction at this time. It may suffice for me to say that the question of jurisdiction is complex and involves both levels of government. Therefore it requires the best kind of co-operation in the true spirit of federalism for us to make the best and most successful use of our water and provide the best kind of water management.

I should like to mention a couple of initiatives in the area of federal-provincial co-operation. Two years ago the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, now Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), proposed to the provinces that the senior governments endorse the establishment of a national advisory committee on water pollution, with representation from the federal government, the provinces and the universities. This committee would have included in its functions studies on various aspects of water pollution, such as regional and national water quality objectives, the costs of pollution, and the benefits to be reaped through pollution control. The terms of reference of this committee have recently been expanded to include air and soil pollution as well as water.

Our proposal included an offer to finance the committee and provide it with a secretariat. Although most provinces seemed to favour the proposal, others did not. This stalemate is much regretted by us since it has blocked one avenue of joint action.

We have been successful in developing a broad program of research outside of government. In 1967 the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources launched a grants-in-aid program to support water resources research at Canadian universities. The objectives of the program included provision of funds for a required expansion of water research, development of knowledge and expertise on water problems on the part of university staff and faculties, and the provision of greater opportunities for graduate students to undertake work in this field as a stimulus for increasing the pool of trained personnel available for employment.

To assist in the administration of this program, we established a national advisory committee on water resources research by Order in Council in the fall of 1967. This committee is charged with three important functions: provision of continuing advice to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the needs and priorities for water resources research; assistance in the co-ordination of water resources research, and review and recommendations on applications for grants in aid of research from the department.

In the research grant program a total of $800,000 has been awarded to individuals at 23 universities since March, 1968. Of this amount, $600,000 was awarded in the natural sciences while $200,000 was for support of social science research. An estimated 60 per cent to 70 per cent of the funds awarded to date bear directly or indirectly on pollution problems.

The greatest challenge to federal-provincial co-operation comes in the doing—the actual planning and implementation of water resource management schemes. I feel quite sure the general public will not excuse inaction because of difficulties over federal or provincial jurisdiction. They want the job done. Recognizing the need for comprehensive planning and action, and in anticipation of the proposed Canada water act, we have offered a special co-operative program to the provinces. Two years ago, in May, 1967 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources advised the provinces that the federal government was prepared to join with one or more provinces in each region of the country to undertake pilot studies in comprehensive river basin planning. I must confess that we have been unable to encourage either the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario to discuss joint planning on the Ottawa River. I am encouraged, however, by recent reports in the press on the statements of the new Minister of Energy and Resources Management for Ontario. I am hopeful that discussions with Ontario and Quebec may soon begin.

More progress has been made elsewhere and we are actively negotiating agreements with British Columbia, Saskatchewan and New Brunswick. I expect that these agreements may be concluded soon, all within the next few months. The fundamental problem in each of these river basins is one of water quality. We are eager to get on with the job and look forward to working in close co-operation with the provinces to improve the water quality as well as carrying out over-all comprehensive framework plans for the long-range development of their water resources.

Even before we begin these co-operative studies with the provinces, this department is moving ahead with a group of fundamental studies to gain a better understanding of the social and economic impact of water pollution, to develop proposals for determining priorities for federal action, and to recommend a sophisticated instutional and economic means of achieving pollution abatement.

Contrary to the motion, therefore, Mr. Speaker, a very useful program progresses on all fronts. We have not, however, engaged in a reckless spending spree on ad hoc programs. We are working toward a co-ordinated and co-operative federal-provincial plan.

Water quality programs permeate the entire process of water resource research, planning, development and management. It is difficult to isolate exactly the items which should be related to water pollution abatement in the 1969-70 estimates. At least $11 million or over 20 per cent of the total estimates for water and renewable resources activities is earmarked for water quality programs. I expect that more than this amount will be required in future years.

As I said before, the disposal of wastes created directly or indirectly by man and all his activities is a basic element of the social and economic system of all societies, primitive and modern. In all industrial societies a constantly increasing tonnage of solid, liquid, and gaseous material must be burned, buried or washed away daily. No nation has yet succeeded in disposing of such enormous quantities of waste without fouling the air, soil or water, sometimes on a global basis. Despite the vastness of our land, Canada has not escaped this critical environmental problem and we find ourselves today facing an urgent problem of national dimensions.

The total costs of waste disposal are too large and the disbenefits to those who use our air or water downwind or downstream of the pollution sources are too great to permit us to accept solutions to the problem that are not at once efficient and effective. The simple solutions proposed in the past are demonstrably inadequate as the world-wide pollution problem itself clearly proves. We must seek modern management methods with mechanisms that restore, maintain and improve the quality of our environment on a continuing, perpetual basis as an integral function of our socio-economic-legal system. The suggestion is frequently made that massive inputs of funds from the public treasury are needed and justified, primarily to subsidize waste treatment in the private sector. It is also argued that a series of punitive measures adapted to specific uses would suffice. We reject these notions on the grounds that they are inefficient and ineffective and that they would place an unnecessary financial burden on our economy.

What is required is an approach which deals with water problems basin by basin. There must be sufficient flexibility to meet the special needs of each basin. There must be a balance between the interests of all those who may wish to use the water, water which belongs to the public generally rather than to infividuals. Those who use or pollute our water must bear the proper cost of their activity. The goods produced must bear a proper portion of this cost. Such proposals require a federal involvement to ensure that regions of the country do not compete with one another in permitting pollution as an incentive to industry but at the cost of others outside the region who have the pollution imposed upon them.

In the past three years this department has done much to unravel the fundamental nature of the pollution problem in Canada through research within the government, by government supported studies in the private sector and through research in universities. We have also acquired a considerable amount of data and information on water quality. We have established major research facilities, and we have provided the machinery for co-ordinating the entire federal effort in this field. We have also, as I have said, begun to see the fruits of our continuing efforts to achieve a joint federal-provincial approach as witnessed by current negotiations with British Columbia, Saskatchewan and the Atlantic provinces as well as the recent favourable public statements from Ontario. We now believe that the base has been laid for a major federal-provincial anti-pollution campaign.

It was with this in mind that I announced earlier my intention to introduce the Canada water bill this session. My plan was to have first reading in this session, to hold the essential federal-provincial discussions this summer during the recess, and to re-introduce the bill early in the fall. In this bill the federal government will propose to exercise to the full its undoubted responsibility for water resource management. In particular, it will provide the institutional structure to establish an anti-pollution program in concert with the provinces and incorporating the concepts and mechanisms which I have described.

The approach to be articulated in this bill is based on federal-provincial co-operation and upon respect for all provincial responsibilities. It is a realistic, pragmatic approach to the thorny constitutional problems which arise when several governments are involved. At the same time the bill will recognize the urgency of water quality and water management problems and provide for strong federal initiative whenever and wherever the circumstances demand. The officials in this and other departments have spent the past several months preparing this bill for introduction. The preparation has taken longer than anticipated. Everyone will surely agree, however, that a major bill on such a complex issue of great and lasting national significance deserves the best possible preparation. It is apparent now that these preparations will take several more weeks. It is now my plan, therefore, to issue a policy statement in July together with a draft of the bill itself as a basis for federal-provincial consultations and to allow hon. members and the public an opportunity to study the important implications of our proposal.

Finally, I put it to the house that the motion to condemn this department for failure to act on water pollution is clearly without merit. We have a broad, carefully developed anti-pollution program tailored to the complexities of the problem and the realities of federal-provincial relations. It would have been easy to make a great show of activity by opening the public treasury, but we are not seeking short run answers nor will we mislead the public with ill founded proposals. We have been searching for permanent, effective and efficient solutions to the problems of waste disposal and environmental quality—problems that have existed as long as society itself, problems that industrial man has yet to resolve. We intend to continue our program not only with a sense of urgency but also with full appreciation for the careful deliberation that this important issue demands.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—old age security—reduction of guaranteed income supplement upon receipt of pension by spouses; the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett)—treasury board—Courtenay, B.C., letter carrier service; the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles)—failure of U.S. pleasure craft to report to customs officer, Port Dover, Ontario.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—SUGGESTED LACK OF ACTION TO COMBAT POLLUTION

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Aiken.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, needless to say, in common with all other members of the house we were delighted to hear the minister refer to some of the rather minor activities in which the department and the government are engaged; to hear that they are examining here, looking there, and making some studies elsewhere. I do not say that these are not essential. They are, and they have to be done to provide a basis of some action in the future. But after listening to the minister I must say that his speech was another example of the ability of this government to twist and evade, to contort the facts and to play with realism in an effort to cover over their inadequacy to deal with this one of the many major problems which confront us. What has happened, of course, has been that the government in its traditional way, has flung itself into a position of masterly inaction which it is presenting to the public.

I am anxious to take part in the debate concerning this motion moved by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) for several reasons. I do recognize the tremendous problems of the pollution of our environment, although I shall confine my remarks to the problems of water pollution. Second, I am most disturbed at the indecision, the confusion and the contradiction that is presently evident within the government, and I use these words because parliamentary rules forbid me to use stronger ones. I am disturbed at the government's preoccupation with the economic development of our water resources without regard for the other aspects of this resource. It is disturbing when one reads statements such as:

> Clearly there is no need to push the panic button. Problems like the cleaning up of Lake Erie can gradually be solved using existing techniques.

Those were the words of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis). I am disturbed when I hear the former minister of energy, mines and resources, the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), say:

> Constitutionalists recognize that pollution is essentially a provincial jurisdiction. If "resources" are provincial, the misuse of same is also provincial.

I think that this statement has to be challenged. The legislature records of the federal government are studded with illustrations of instances where the federal government, using its powers under the constitution, has seen fit to legislate in matters which lie within provincial jurisdiction.

I think that the statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce simply cannot be accepted in so far as it deals with this very serious problem. I am also disturbed to hear the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, who obviously did not hear the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, say:

> —we have a national fisheries act. We have a one hundred year old piece of federal legislation which, with a few simple improvements, can be used to reduce pollution in all the waters of Canada.

Today the minister referred to the water act. He indicated that for various reasons the act had not been produced, despite the very specific undertaking which was given to that effect. It is my suspicion that the act has been lost somewhere in the labyrinth of the new government committee structure in the cabinet, which has been created by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and which not only serves to confuse the people of Canada but has so thoroughly confused the cabinet that a great deal of the delay has been caused with regard to a great many government measures.

• (5:40 p.m.)

We have introduced a resolution condemning the government but we do not intend to confine ourselves to condemnation. We intend to make useful proposals. I believe a study of the list of amendments put forward by representatives of this party would indicate that contrary to what has been said elsewhere there is a total record of proposals in connection with most of the problems which affect us. An examination of the speeches and resolutions which have been placed before this house would indicate beyond doubt that there is not a single problem of major importance which this party has not brought forward during the course of this parliament and upon which it did not have some proposals of its own to make. To say otherwise is to be completely inaccurate. The government says it intends to introduce a water act. We would be glad to see it, if we could do so now, before the session ends—and this is not impossible; we may yet see it before the session ends.

Mr. Stanfield: If they get it before fall.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, and I am not sure which fall. We are told this bill would allow Ottawa to co-ordinate the activities of federal and provincial government agencies wherever and whenever the development of Canada's major river systems is concerned.

If the minister does introduce such a measure, and if it has the capacity to do what he says it does, I shall be the first to stand up and approve. But hon. gentlemen opposite cannot blame us for having doubts. For example, I can recall, with regard to the Peace River, that under a Liberal government the then secretary of state for external affairs, now a shining ornament in the other place, was instrumental for purposes of his own, in collaboration with the premier of British Columbia, in permitting the federal government to disregard its rights under the Navigable Waters Protection Act and allow the desecration of the Peace River. I was up in that area the other day. I was glad that the difficulties in connection with navigation have been partly cleared up. But the level of the Peace River as it flows past the settlements in Alberta and British Columbia is extremely low for this time of year and I prophesy that before a year has passed the situation will be even worse. I lay the blame for this directly at the door of the Liberal party.

Mr. Orange: You formed the government at that time. Why didn't you stop it?

Mr. Baldwin: In view of the confusion which has arisen, I should like to take a few minutes in which to investigate the constitutional aspects of water pollution control. The need for my doing so is reinforced by the somewhat naïve conclusions which hon. gentlemen opposite have reached in this complex area. A good example is the statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), when he was minister of energy, mines and resources, that pollution is essentially within provincial jurisdiction because, if resources as such are provincial then their misuse is also a provincial matter. What surprises me is that the minister should have chastised members of the opposition for proposing simplistic solutions to what he described as complex issues. Yet what could be more simplistic than the theory advanced by the minister? For years we have asked that the government set up a parliamentary committee to study this question. I am not asserting that a parliamentary committee could solve it any earlier, but it would have the effect of reducing to simple terms the tasks with which this government has failed to deal.

I sometimes think that 100 years from now, when this building is torn down, they will find in a secret cell in the depth of the basement four or five skeletons near a sign saying: "Experts Studying Federal-Provincial Issues. Do Not Disturb." These issues can only be dealt with when the people of Canada are aware of them; when they have been reduced to terms understandable by the ordinary man and woman. This is the purpose of committee hearings, and because of the government's failure to send this whole question to a committee it is necessary for the opposition to take the initiative today and give the government the benefit of advice on the constitutional problem to which the minister referred in his speech today when he said: "This is a complex issue and we do not intend to touch it."

What is the basis for saying that pollution control is a provincial matter? It is an extended argument beginning with section 109 of the British North America Act which says, among other things, that all lands, mines, minerals and royalties shall belong to the several provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Although there is a different means, the result is the same for the four western provinces. The argument, then, is that having accepted ownership the provinces have also acquired the water rights incidental to those lands. There is a Privy Council decision relevant to this point in the case of Burrard Power Company v. Regina, 1911. While this much is conceded, it must be borne in mind that ownership does not automatically grant immunity from legislation. In other words, the relevant consideration is not so much who owns the water as who has the legislative competence. The Criminal Code is full of examples of instances where the federal government has legislated, intervening in matters which are provincial, because it has been obliged to do so in order to fulfil its responsibility of legislating in cases where great problems have arisen, and where matters which normally would fall under provincial jurisdiction have become of such moment that the federal government felt called upon to intervene by way of legislation under the Criminal Code.

The argument for provincial legislative competence relies primarily upon section 92(5) of the B.N.A. Act which gives the provinces exclusive jurisdiction with respect to the management and sale of the public lands belonging to them. In diminishing degrees of importance the provinces may also argue on the basis of section 92(13) affecting property and civil rights, section 92(16) referring generally to all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province, and section 92(10) covering local works and undertakings.

The argument for federal competence has an electric nature similar to the provincial argument. The section primarily relied upon is 91(10) which gives the federal government legislative authority with regard to navigation and shipping, with supplementary authority from 91(9). In other words, every body of water which can be navigated in Canada is subject to the exclusive control of the federal government with regard to all matters concerning navigation. Section 91(12) which deals with sea coast and inland fisheries is equally important. It provides the federal government with the legislative competence for the Fisheries Act, which, as I indicated earlier, is regarded as the panacea in this area of pollution control by the Minister of Fisheries. Furthermore, since the federal government alone is competent with regard to the criminal law, it could investigate pollution control through prohibitory measures. Finally, although the provinces have been given the authority to deal with local works and undertakings there is a specific exception attached to works which are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

These are a number of the points to which I might have referred. What concerns me is that this problem may develop and expand until it hangs like a black cloud over the people of this country. While federal and provincial governments may still be arguing over questions of jurisdiction, and the federal government may still be engaged upon minor excursions into examinations, tests and studies of the subject, it may well be too late for the people of this country, through federal jurisdiction, to exercise the competence they have if they so see fit.

In the matter of restrictive trade practices, the federal government has used the criminal law as a means of regulating certain issues. On the question of the food and drug administration, the federal government has also relied on the criminal law as a means of dealing with such problems. I am not suggesting that this is the proper way to proceed, but I am suggesting—and here I agree with the minister—that there should be an opportunity for the federal government and the provincial governments together to work out a process of co-operative action.

For example, authority can be delegated. As of today it would be possible, without any changes to the constitution of this country, for both the federal and provincial governments to delegate to crown agencies that jurisdiction which is required, each within its own area of legislative competence, to deal with this problem. It is not enough not to talk about the problem or simply to make examinations or conduct studies. Before the problem is finally solved it will be essential to pass regulations and to apply sanctions, if necessary. Industry and those concerned must be told in no uncertain terms that they cannot go on indefinitely polluting the air and water that is so essential for our preservation as a society.

Alleged Lack of Action to Combat Pollution

I suggest to the minister and the government that it simply is not good enough to tell the house they are planning this long range group of studies and examinations and that they will look into the matter. It is essential, not later but now, for the federal government to secure the necessary authority to take action. If the government cannot secure this authority from the provincial governments as a group, then certainly under a series of bilateral agreements it would be competent for the federal governments so to act.

No good reason has yet been advanced by the minister, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or by any other member of the treasury benches for not taking this action. This problem did not just arise today or yesterday; it has been with us for a great many years and has been the subject of a great deal of literature as well as speeches both in this house and in the provincial legislatures.

I am not by any means downgrading the importance of many of the federal-provincial conferences that have taken place on other matters, but this much is of the essence: unless an approach is taken that will produce solutions to the problems facing us, with regulations laid down and sanctions applied against those who are concerned, then we are in for a very serious time on this continent.

To bring in the water act is fine. To engage in all these studies the minister has told us about is fine. But I think we have to go a step further. Before this session is over, or certainly during the time when the minister has indicated he intends to issue a white paper with a draft copy of the bill attached, I should like the minister to indicate what is going to be the government's view, and what the government is going to do if it cannot secure from any of the provinces the consent that is required. This is not to suggest by any means that the federal government would have to transgress the constitution; I have indicated that there are ways and means by which a government that has determination and the power to do so can take action.

Use can be made, for example, as the minister is aware, of the peace, order and good government clause. Let us assume that we reach a moment in our social history when the pollution of the St. Lawrence system and the Great Lakes suddenly passes the stage of safety. Surely then, under the peace, order and good government clause the federal government would have every right to intervene. I am not suggesting that that time has come, but with that knowledge, and having in mind the confederation debates that have shown beyond doubt what the powers of the federal government are to be, I suggest there is the power to delegate authority. As the minister knows, as a result of the Prince Edward Island case it is now competent for the federal and provincial governments, not to delegate authority to each other, but to delegate authority to an agency which can then take action.

Under those circumstances I urge the government not to wait but to take action. I urge the government to take the steps that can be taken, and which I indicated are available, so that before this problem overwhelms us the government will outline a clear and precise method of dealing with it, as well as the powers the government can exercise if it has the ingenuity and determination to do so.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED LACK OF ACTION TO COMBAT POLLUTION

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Aiken.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, may I begin my remarks by referring to what the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) said. Among other things he said, I believe, that in the field of pollution the government has displayed absolute neglect. I was therefore pleased to hear the minister, after some opposition speakers had spoken, point out clearly that this government has not been absolutely neglectful. In fact, the minister's statement proved that charge to be wrong. He outlined many programs the department has undertaken. Many constructive programs have been undertaken that many know nothing about. I am, therefore, sure that the minister welcomed the opportunity of putting on record those programs that are being undertaken so that hon. members of this house and the people across Canada may know what is happening. He referred to the trailer complex with respect to the Inland Water Centre at Burlington, Ontario, which the committee visited. The trailer complex consists of 55 units. As research develops and continues at this centre, some of these trailers will be transferred to locations in other areas of Canada in order to carry on research there. This complex can be subdivided into many units. That project, which the committee had a chance to visit, is an extremely constructive one.

One cannot talk about pollution without recognizing, as is spelled out in the fourth report of the standing committee, that there is a jurisdictional conflict in this area. We are concerned about the conflict and those who participated in the drafting of the report know how concerned we were and are about it. Unfortunately the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka was not present at our deliberations when this report was first drafted.

The provinces of Canada, Mr. Speaker, guard their jurisdictions with great jealousy. The province of Ontario has made pollution control the responsibility of one particular minister. Is this action not an admission that the provinces indeed have a great responsibility in the area of pollution? I do not think, therefore, that the federal government can bulldoze ahead as some have suggested it should in an attempt to do what we all desire with regard to pollution. As I say, this jurisdictional conflict was of great concern to the members of the committee. The committee recognized and regretted the great division of authority in this area and the resulting jurisdictional conflict.

• (8:10 p.m.)

I wish to put on the record an excerpt from the committee's report. I quote:

> Your committee is concerned by increasing magnitude of air, water and soil pollution and the jurisdictional conflict which hampers the finding and implementing of proper solutions.

I commend the members who participated in writing this report. In our committee we had a very frank discussion. We are trying to recognize problems and give direction to them. In the drafting of that report there was no real evidence of partisanship or bias from members of various parties on the committee.

The federal government's responsibility lays in research. It lays in joint jurisdiction on interprovincial and international waters. Problems in the Great Lakes must be solved by representatives of eight states of the United States, the International Joint Commission, Washington, Ottawa, Ontario and so on. This is no small problem to overcome. This fact has been mentioned many times in this house. It is a problem of great interest to me because my constituency borders on the Ottawa River. The pollution of the Ottawa River is more severe in the Ottawa area.

I think the emphasis which has been given to this problem in this house has made it appear as though the federal government has total responsibility, when indeed the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and Ottawa share that responsibility. Let there be no question about this.

Mr. Winch: It still stinks, no matter who is responsible!

Mr. Hopkins: If anything constructive results from this debate, it should be that of protraying to the Canadian people the great need for a higher degree of transfer of powers to the federal government. Pollution does not stop at provincial boundaries, nor does it stop at international boundaries. If the opposition is really serious about tackling this problem, they must agree with this. They are telling us that it has taken a long time to bring in the water bill. This bill is the result of co-operation and co-ordination among many governmental bodies. Anyone who has dealt with many agencies at one time is fully aware that it takes much longer to get business done in such a situation.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), and I pay him a compliment by referring to so many of the items he mentioned, talked about what the United States had done and the strong measures the United States government had taken. Surely the hon. member is not trying to confuse the issue. The United States federal government has been granted substantial powers to deal with these situations. Constitutionally speaking, the state governments of the United States are much weaker than the provincial governments in Canada. There is really no great comparison between the powers of the federal government in Washington and the federal government in Ottawa. I wish our constitution gave the federal government of Canada the strength and powers the government of the United States has today.

Matters of this type emphasize my concern over the jurisdictional conflict. We cannot fight modern problems with constitutional powers, some of which would be applicable to the days of the horse and buggy. I stand firmly in favour of constitutionally strengthening the federal government in Canada. Meanwhile, it is irresponsible to ignore the constitution and barge ahead holus-bolus. Such a procedure cannot help but create internal problems, and we have enough of those already.

Reference was made today in this debate to the peace, order and good government clause of the B.N.A. Act or the Canadian constitution. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) stated this provision was not workable. We realize this has been used in wartime and periods of crises, but if we are going to wait until there is a crisis to amend the Canadian Constitution, a crisis great enough to use the peace, order and good government clause, then it is a mistake and it is wrong for the future of Canada. If we are not going to strengthen the powers of the federal government, and if we are not going to use the elastic clause to a certain extent, then we have no other choice but to deal with many bodies. If this happens, it will take a lengthy time to pass legislation in this house respecting interprovincial-federal bills.

I wish to read again from the report of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works:

> Your committee also recommends that a centre or centres similar to the Canada Centre for Inland Waters be set up to centralize all existing and future federal research in air and soil pollution and to extend and speed up such research so that codes of standards may be drafted to protect the air and soil from pollution.

There is a lot of work involved in setting up these centres. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, who started off this debate today, said that nothing had been done about these recommendations to date. Our report has been in this house for three weeks, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member is complaining because no research centres have been set up. This government is swift in action, but projects of this magnitude cannot be brought in overnight. However, I gratefully acknowledge the indirect compliment to this government by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka in thinking we are so speedy in action.

Mr. Aiken: That was so indirect I did not understand it.

Mr. Barnett: Is the hon. member not aware recommendations along those lines were put before the government at least three years ago?

Mr. Hopkins: This is a good report, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Barnett: Yes, it is a good report.

Mr. Hopkins: This is a good report and we commend it to all hon. members of this house. As I stated previously, it was compiled without bias. All that glitters in this report is not gold. There is one thing that concerns me and that is that part of the motion which refers to "other estimates relating to this department". Since Atomic Energy of Canada reports to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, it is related in that way to that department. I wish to again quote from the report of the committee:

> During its study of the estimates of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, your committee was informed that there would not be any "Canadian Produced" heavy water available in Canada this year. Your committee recommends therefore that the words "Canadian Produced" be deleted from vote L20 thus enabling the company to purchase heavy water from non-Canadian sources.

Why is there no Canadian heavy water being produced or available in Canada this year? I wish to explain this fact, Mr. Speaker. I wish to quote from an article written by Robert Stall of the Montreal Star dated May 24, 1969. Before quoting I wish to say that we could have produced Canadian heavy water this year at $20.50 per pound. We require one million pounds. We will be paying $26.50 per pound to purchase this abroad. This water was not available by July 1, 1966, as it was supposed to be. The Canadian owned plant at Glace Bay, which was the great dream of the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) when he was premier of Nova Scotia, has not to date produced one pound of heavy water. Yet it was to be ready on July 1, 1966.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The article which I mentioned reads in part:

In 1963 the Premier of Nova Scotia, Robert Lorne Stanfield, made a decision which was not one of his best—

Mr. Stanfield's idea in 1963 was to boost his humble province into the nuclear age. Nova Scotia would finance the construction and operation of a prestigious new plant that would produce the vital "heavy water" that must be used in various types of atomic reactors—

The whole thing started in 1963 in Ottawa when the Federal Atomic Energy Commission was shopping around for heavy water to use in its nuclear reactors. The commission sought tenders for a long-term contract to supply the product—and the Stanfield administration in Nova Scotia decided to submit a bid—

The details and extent of the loss are only now becoming apparent. Mr. Stanfield is now Leader of the Opposition in Ottawa and his expensive decision of six years ago is just that much heavy water under the bridge. Although chief interrogator of the government on all million-dollar issues, he has never asked a question about the Nova Scotia plant—

By October of 1963, Nova Scotia owned the majority of shares in Deuterium of Canada and, because of its new position, had incurred the $30,000,000 debt that construction of the plant required at that time.

Mr. Spevack says today that the 1963 take-over was in the form of an ultimatum by the Nova Scotia government. "It had to be done or there would be no project... Well, we agreed. We were assured that this would in no way alter our relationship with the company. It was merely a formality and we accepted it on that basis.

In the spring of 1964, Deuterium of Canada was awarded the federal contract. The plant was to be opened by July of 1966 and a price schedule was concurred in from then to 1982. Things looked very good for Deuterium and for Nova Scotia, the controlling stockholder.

Today, three years after the scheduled opening date, the plant is still not open.

Jerome Spevack has been fired as President of Deuterium.

The original $30,000,000 investment has risen to $110,000,000 and will go much higher.

And Nova Scotia today owns 100 per cent of the whole mess including, of course, all of the debt—

In addition, the technical problems make it virtually certain that Nova Scotia will have to invest another $20,000,000 into the plant before it can open. And, even then, it will be capable of producing only a raw form of heavy water that will have to be subcontracted out for refining elsewhere.

This is the reason we do not have Canadian produced heavy water in Canada. I make this clear because Atomic Energy of Canada is a federal agency and I do not want to see that Crown corporation charged with any fault in this situation. That Crown corporation was not involved in it directly.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, it is a great temptation to go rabbit hunting but I will not do that tonight. I simply say to the previous speaker that the events of this summer and fall will prove the point. I know the hon. member is a sensitive individual, and I know he will be quite embarrassed when the announcements are made that will indicate to the people of Canada, and in particular of Nova Scotia, the wisdom of the then premier of that province moving into this field.

Previous speakers in this debate have indicated the dangers of continued uncontrolled pollution of our rivers, lakes and strams caused by the inability of governments to come together and create a structure of rules and regulations establishing standards to regulate pollution. This governmental inability is one of the greatest pollution problems we have.

For a few short moments I want to turn hon. members' attention to the warnings we are presently receiving about the pollution of the oceans that surround us, and particularly of our coastal and territorial waters. In particular I wish to question the government's role in the development of international standards with respect to the deposit of industrial and municipal waste in coastal waters and oceans, and respecting the use of the oceans by governments as disposal places for critically dangerous forms of waste. In recent years the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations has warned that continuous dumping of this type of waste is having undesirable effects upon fish and other marine life. In very clear terms it has cautioned the entire world about the lack of international controls.

But before moving to establish international controls our government must do something to clean up our own legislative pollution. In recent weeks we have seen a startling example of what can happen when harmful industrial waste is emptied into bays and harbours. We can now be reasonably certain that the red herring plague in Placentia Bay was the direct result of the dumping of waste and by-product material from an electrical reduction plant. I understand that only swift action in closing the plant has saved the local fishermen from a worse disaster than the inconvenience of losing part of one year's earnings.

But how many other plants use the oceans and take advantage of the absence of clear and meaningful regulations to dump untreated or improperly treated waste? We do not know, for example, what type of waste is being dumped by other plants. We do not know in what quantities it is being dumped and we do not know how lethal this is to the inshore river and marine life. With the enforceable laws, regulations and statutes I suggest there is very little incentive to investigate these questions as they relate to the international situation. I suggest that unless investigative work is started now in concert with parallel effective remedial action—and I do not fear to make this statement because it is becoming increasingly obvious to those people who are expert and knowledgeable in this field—we will soon face a type of problem in respect of our coastal waters similar to that which we now face in respect of our inland streams and rivers.

A further indicator of our lack of concern about what we are doing to the oceans surrounding us comes from a report that the United States government or the United States army, whichever it is, is giving consideration to the dumping of world war II poisonous gas in the depths of the Atlantic ocean as a primary means of disposal of this now obsolete instrument of war. As I understand it, their present plan is to move the gas from its location in the heartland of the United States out to the Atlantic coast where it will be loaded on old ships and transported to the deep trench in the mid-Atlantic where the ships will be scuttled. Presumably the United States government authorities or the army people believe they will protect forever and a day the gases that are included in these disposal units. I wonder, however, whether or not even the depths of the Atlantic ocean will be sufficient to contain this poisonous gas. I think any of us who live on the Atlantic coast are well aware of the effect of corrosion, particularly in salt water. Any motion caused by the water, current or tide creates a very rapid deteriorating situation in the form of oxidation of the containers.

Surely if we are to protect the waters that surround us, and the fish that are in these waters, we have no moral right to take a calculated risk of this type. I think we owe a greater debt to the generations that will follow us and to the millions of people who are starving or undernourished because of a lack of a sufficient amount of protein than to even consider endangering the protein that is available in the sea. Just in the last few days we had a report from Halifax which came over the national broadcasting system concerning man's ability to convert the protein in fish into very tasty and edible cookies. We also know that some of the finest butter in the world can be made from the protein in fish. A complete meal can be made from the protein that is derived from the waste products of fish. It is not necessary to use the whole fish.

When we know that we have the technical capability to do this with the products from the sea it is inconceivable that we would even remotely consider using the sea as a dumping ground for lethal poisonous gas. I am afraid as time goes on consideration might well be given by the United States and other countries to even using the ocean as a disposal bed for the waste from fissionable material. If this is even being considered, then I must react with almost horror. It is regrettable if accidentally we create a situation where we pollute something to the point where it is no longer usable in its fullest sense or to a point where society can no longer take full advantage of the resource. But if it is accidental and from the accident we learn something, then it is understandable. But it is totally beyond my understanding that we would even consider using the Atlantic, the Pacific, The arctic, the Antarctic, the Indian or any of the oceans of the world as a dumping ground for potentially lethal waste products.

It is not our place to be critical of the United States. I believe, however, as a nation with a tremendous coast line we have a responsibility in this regard and that the government should speak out loudly and clearly. I think we have a responsibility ourselves to stop using the ocean as a dumping ground for any waste products. We could set an example in this regard which hopefully the rest of the world might follow. The responsibility I believe can best be expressed by the government taking an effective lead now in this year 1969 in the establishment of a dialogue concerning international standards. Next year there is to be an international conference on this matter. But why should we wait until that conference? I direct my remarks to the minister's parliamentary secretary. Why should we wait until next year before establishing at least our own dialogue and our own standards concerning what we as a nation will do with regard to the waters surrounding our coast?

We are doing tremendous work in identifying the causes of and remedies for pollution in our fresh waters. We are doing this at centres such as Burlington, Ontario. Just this morning the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) announced the establishment of a $7.5 million institute on the University of Manitoba campus to deal, among other things, with our fresh water lakes and the fish that are in them as well as the marine life on which these fish depend. We have gone far; indeed we have gone to the point where two or three weeks ago we were told that at the Inland Centre for fresh water studies at Burlington they have advanced to the point where we can save Lake Erie and Lake Ontario from a fate I guess worse than death; that is, our tremendous bodies of water can be saved from becoming almost totally unusable by the people who live adjacent to them. If we are able to do this—and we are making tremendous strides—I ask why the government cannot move in this direction so far as our Atlantic and Pacific waters are concerned. We have at Bedford or at Burnside in the city of Dartmouth, one of the world's renowned centres for oceanographic studies, a centre for which the government had tremendous plans when it was initially established.

Somehow these plans have been badly sidetracked. There is a basic, trained school of individuals supported by the academic institutions at Dalhousie. They, in turn, are supported by a very viable fleet of scientifically equipped ships with laboratories and technicians. In short, we have all the ingredients to launch into an investigative program in respect of our salt water. So far we have not done so, and this is regrettable. The problem is worldwide and is international in scope. Again, I leave with the minister the thought that while there is an international meeting called for 1970, and out of this probably will come at least a first step in the establishment of international standards regarding the use and abuses of oceans and surrounding air, it is time the government pursued this matter. We must establish a dialogue in this country in respect of our own standards in relation to international standards.

I should like to ask the minister why there has been a delay and why there has been nothing done in this field? Why is it that it is always weeks after a problem develops in our inland bays and waterways that we try to settle down and do something about it? Why have we not established a dialogue in respect of doing something about pollution of our Oceans?

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): I am happy today to act on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), in joining with his colleague from Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) in asserting that our government has been far from asleep in the control of the quality of the Canadian environment. I do not seek to deny that there is a problem. That would be like some hon. gentlemen from a former administration who used to seem to think that there was no such thing as galloping unemployment in Canada—that was just a nasty rumour started by a lot of people out of work.

We admit there is a problem. Mankind has been taking the marvellous technical advances of this century and using them indiscriminately to foul, to both greater and lesser extents, the air he breathes, the water he utilizes for drinking, bathing and processing, and the soil from which his very food supply must come. We know that action is needed, and needed to an ever increasing degree, if man is to avoid transforming his own planet into an unlivable wasteland.

But we have been moving. The minister has explained what his department has been doing to ensure that our waters remain a usable resource for Canadians. Towards this objective, I know that the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has been exerting his best efforts as well, and I am pleased to say that the Department of National Health and Welfare has been able to assist in the battle. Because of its effect on health and on the use of recreational facilities, water pollution has long been a matter of concern to the Department of National Health and Welfare. The water pollution activities of the department are carried out by the public health engineering and radiation protection divisions of the health services branch and by the medical services branch. The department works closely with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in these activities. They include advisory responsibilities, surveillance, special studies and research. The department also supports outside water pollution activities through its national health grants program. Close collaboration with the provinces is maintained in the conduct of all these activities.

The advisory services provided keep these people indeed busy. Departmental staff serve on a number of advisory committees and boards such as the International Development Commission technical advisory boards, the Atlantic Development Board's supervisory committee on resource study of the Atlantic provinces, the interdepartmental committee on water programs, Central Mortgage and Housing advisory committee on household sewage treatment units, the reactor safety advisory committee of the atomic energy control board and various provincial pollution committees. But the department's activities go beyond just advising a host of committees. There is an important surveillance function fulfilled. Allow me to cite some examples.

International Joint Commission studies currently involve the St. Croix river, New Brunswick, and the Lake Erie, Lake Ontario and international section of the St. Lawrence river. Measurements are made of physical, chemical and bacteriological parameters including turbidity, suspended solids, biochemical oxygen demand, dissolved oxygen, phosphorus, nirtogen, phenols, toxic constituents, coliform and fecal organisms.

Another project follows from completion of a comprehensive inventory of federal facilities, where assessment studies of waste water treatment plants are being undertaken at five regional centres across Canada.

In a more specialized field, the department determines radioactive effluent discharged into the environs of nuclear reactor sites, through a systematic reactor environment monitoring project, including water samples taken near Chalk River reactors, the nuclear power demonstration reactor, the Douglas Point nuclear power station and the Whiteshell nuclear research establishment. Another task is keeping a regular check on potable water supplies aboard common carriers.

[Mr. Isabelle.]

There are also special investigations done towards specific goals, over a short period of time. I would point out that this often leads into a continuing surveillance study. Two examples of this are: a pilot plant project at the request of Prince Edward Island in Charlottetown, to develop an effective method of treating food processing wastes having high bio-chemical oxygen demand and suspended solids characteristics, and, at the request of New Brunswick, pollution assessment studies on international rivers emptying into the Saint John river—including the Meduxnekeag, Presquile and the Aroostock rivers.

This may not sound exciting, but I can assure you that they are vital to maintaining a proper audit of the health effects of water pollution, both immediately, and more importantly, potentially. Similarly unglamourous, but immensely valuable to the protection of Canadian health, is the department's research program. Current projects give an idea of the long range importance of these studies. To cite some, I would name the development of effective methods for the removal of phenols from industrial wastes; the development of effective methods for the disposal of digested sludge; the development of effective methods for the enumeration of bacterial pollution indices; the development of effective methods for the microbiological oxidation of specific organic matter; the development of effective methods for the isolation of salmonellae from water and waste water, and the development of Canadian drinking water standards.

But above the water, there is the sky, and the sky today in many places is not the pristine fresh blue of our grandfather's era. Each and every day in our metropolitan areas, the exhausts of tens of thousands of automobiles, the stacks of scores of industries, and the fumes of countless heating plants and units belch forth their smoke and gas into the atmosphere. Even the rural areas are not immune; pesticides used in crop control are not just harmless mists. The current debate on d.d.t. points up the potential hazards of even long used materials, let alone the numerous new products being introduced on the market annually.

We talk of the "big sky" but we must realize that there are definite limits to the amount of cubic feet of air that can safely absorb the junk, if I might use that term, that our affluent western industrial society expels upward. In the past, in many large cities intensive weather conditions of a special nature have combined with air pollution to cause the death of literally thousands of people in a short period of time. Take carbon monoxide as a case in point. This is an extremely deadly gas, yet it is the major component of pollution from motor vehicles. The continuing growth of the automobile population means that we may be approaching a saturation point.

There are other groups of elements to cause worry too. Nitrous oxides are one; hydrocarbons are another. In all, there are certainly enough of these types of substances to impel the Minister of National Health and Welfare to seek new and positive action. This concern is not new to the department. As a matter of fact, it has been in the field for about 15 years. For instance, the department has for a long time provided consultative and technical services in the solution of in-plant air pollution problems as a part of its broad industrial hygiene activities. With increasing attention being given to the broader question of urban air pollution generally and its effect on health and on the economy, the department has been expanding its activities. The air pollution activities of the department are now carried out by the occupational health and radiation protection divisions of the health services branch. These activities include advisory responsibilities, surveillance, special studies and research. The department also supports outside air pollution control activities through its national health grants program. Close collaboration with the provinces is maintained in the conduct of all these activities, including in-service training for some provincial staff. In connection with I.J.C. studies, the department also maintains close relationships with United States federal and state departments of health.

Some concrete examples of our activity can be mentioned, such as the I.J.C. survey in the Detroit-Windsor and Port Huron areas on the subject of trans-boundary pollution. This work is carried out in co-operation with the province of Ontario. Measurements include dust-fall, smoke density, suspended particulates, sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, oxidants and hydrocarbons. Related meteorological data are provided by the Department of Transport. We also make radio-active fallout measurements on daily filter samples collected by a 24 station sampling network across Canada.

In addition, special studies are undertaken on the same basis as they are in the water pollution field. Right now, a general study is being made in the national capital region, and a specific inquiry in the same location is going on with respect to automobile emissions. On a larger scale, as part of the department's broader industrial hygiene activities, studies have recently been completed including load surveys in a smelting plant and in mines in New Brunswick; tests for toxic gases and solvents in the Ottawa area; dust conditions in working areas in Windsor; dust conditions in grain terminals; chlorine measurements in Vancouver and an insecticide study in New Brunswick.

Thus, over a year ago, the Dominion Council of Health, including all deputy ministers of health in Canada, passed a resolution in co-operation with the provinces, concerning the role of the federal government, in air pollution control. Among other things the council called for an effective Canadian network of air pollution sampling stations; uniform air quality criteria applicable to Canadian conditions; emission standards for industries and motor vehicles; research on the behaviour and control of air pollution in special geographic areas; as well as a model control unit to assist the provinces, on request, in handling specific problems which would serve as a means of training provincial air pollution personnel.

The federal government intends to respond to this appeal. Already a partial sampling network is in place. Data on smoke density in sulphur dioxide is being collected and published frequently from nine cities across Canada. This program also enjoys a cross-feed from the Ontario sampling network. Moreover, in the realm of training facilities we have established a special air sampling tower at the Central Experimental Farm in Ottawa. This tower is equippped with associated meteorological instrumentation in order to provide a testing and training facility as well as a surveillance facility.

The coming year will see a new offensive working toward a national standard of clean air, for the Minister of National Health and Welfare takes very seriously, not only his responsibility to preserve and protect the present health standards of Canadians, but his responsibility to insure that we are able to leave behind us for future generations the heritage of a better atmosphere than the one in which we live now. It is a fundamental part of our program to build a better quality of life for all our citizens. Thus, he will be working very hard toward this end in close collaboration with his colleagues in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Transport, the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, as well as his provincial counterparts.

That, in essence, is the message. Action is under way; more action is forthcoming. The health of our nation demands control of air pollution. Therefore the federal government, along with the provinces, fully intends to meet that demand.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, we in this party welcome at least part of the motion of the official opposition, as far as the word "pollution". The wording of the motion could have stopped there and we would have had more than sufficient subject matter to keep us all busy for the entire day. However, the additional wording in the motion concerning Vote 1 of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources allowed the minister, quite rightly, to deal at length with the activities of his department at present. It seems strange to many Canadians that we can spend so much time, attention and money on so many mundane things and yet through our governments, our organizations and our industries are unable to effectively deal with the problem that has to do with the survival of our own people as well as the survival of mankind as a whole. We worry even about deodorants. We worry about our armpits. We could well be running around with nice smelling bodies while we breathe in dirty, smelly air and bathe in dirty, polluted water.

It seems to us that our society has ground to a halt or a painfully slow crawl in taking effective action to reduce present pollution and head off future pollution. We are in a morass of conflicting jurisdictions, a multiplicity of departments, boards and commissions between and in the three levels of government. Departments and boards are all too often unaware of what each is doing and their responsibilities overlap.

I was quite interested to hear the elucidation of the minister on the activities of his department. We consider many of them great. We agree perfectly with and approve of the efforts being made in research into water pollution carried out by his department as well as by other departments. There is little or no argument from any corner of the house on the kinds of programs which he mentioned earlier. But he still evaded presenting the kind of effective action which the government must take to deal with pollution. One could even point out a few minor specific examples of instances with which the federal government could deal immediately.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), and perhaps even the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis), might ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) to consider the sewage disposal units of Canadian forces bases. To be more specific I should mention the one at Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan which, believe it or not, still has a separate sewage disposal plant that only gives primary, not secondary treatment to sewage, and dumps it into Moose Jaw creek after which it flows downstream to the city. Surely, it would make sense in this case for the Canadian forces base to integrate the sewage disposal system with that of the city near which it is located to provide a better treatment of sewage disposal. I suggest to the ministers whom I have just mentioned that they draw the attention of the Minister of National Defence to the situation at all the Canadian forces bases and at other federal government establishments throughout Canada.

The Minister of Regional and Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) made a statement in the House of Commons on May 29 as reported on page 9203 of Hansard concerning the National Capital Commission and the development of the national capital in which he mentioned that federal assistance was part of a wider development program under which action would be taken to eliminate air and water pollution throughout the whole capital region. May I mention an additional example of a case in which action is required? The minister did not mention this in his statement and I have seen no mention of it before or since. I refer to the operation which goes on in the middle of the national capital. I have heard of no plans of a reasonably long range nature, ten or 15 years, or a shorter period if possible, to do away with the assault on our eyesight and the insult to our noses in the middle of our national capital. I speak of the E. B. Eddy Company. Surely plans are being made for the gradual removal of that plant and the re-establishment of a new modern one somewhere else in this area.

There are other aspects of pollution which I should like to discuss. The first concerns the heat pollution caused by large electric generating plants using lake or river water for cooling purposes and then returning it to its source. This was mentioned by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) in the course of his remarks. The heat picked up will cause temperatures in the lake or river to rise, upsetting the balance of aquatic life.

There is an article in the Globe and Mail of March 7 from which I should like to quote briefly.

> Waste heat from electrical generating plants, says Dr. John Cairns, Jr., professor of biology at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, writing in Scientist and Citizen, is capable of polluting our environment just as surely as do sewage, industrial waste and agricultural waste... The main offenders are plants which burn coal, oil or gas to produce electrical energy.

What has aroused the interest of ecologists recently is the ninefold increase foreseen in the production of electric energy from nuclear plants which waste 60 per cent more energy than those using coal or gas, and since this country is moving toward production from nuclear power plants on a large scale, they are asking what is being done now in the research field to guard against this kind of pollution.

Reference has been made to herbicides and pesticides. What is the immediate intention of the Canadian government with regard to d.d.t. and the whole group of pesticides known as chlorinated hydrocarbons, the group called the dirty seven, including not only d.d.t. but its chemical cousins aldrin, dieldrin and lindane? A few days ago an article appeared in the Regina Leader Post. The New York Times news service reported:

> A few weeks ago Sweden became the first nation to declare a moratorium on the use of D.D.T. and its chemical cousins, aldrin, dieldrin and lindane.
> In the United States, the Michigan Agricultural Commission, following a government seizure of 34,000 pounds of Michigan cohoe salmon contaminated with excessive amounts of this pesticide, banned indefinitely the sale of D.D.T. in a desperate effort to save its fishing industry.

What action is Canada taking?

The two major kinds of pollution of water are those caused by municipalities and by industry. Many statements have been made about industrial pollution. While I have no desire to pick on any particular company I will mention one to illustrate that even those with the best intentions in industry end up by being incapable of dealing with the pollution of water and air to which their activities give rise.

In November, 1967, as reported in the magazine "Civic Administration", the vice-president of the Steel Company of Canada Mr. A. D. Fisher stated that industry had a responsibility to provide substantial capital outlay to effect its contribution to overall environmental control. He made this statement to a meeting of delegates to the Ontario industrial waste conference in Niagara Falls. The report continues:

> The Steel Company of Canada vice-president said pollution problems can only be solved through a directed and co-operative effort between industry, community and government.

He told the delegates industry should implement a six point program as its contribution to pollution control. The fifth point in his program was:

> Support with technical competence and financial resources corrective programs necessary for control of waste emissions and conservation of water sources.

What actually happened, Mr. Speaker? A year and a half prior to Mr. Fisher's statement, the Steel Company of Canada sought and obtained from the Hamilton City Council authority to pipe additional water into their plant, up to 45 million gallons a day. According to Canadian Labour of June, 1967, and no provision whatsoever was made by Stelco for the repurification of the water after use; it would be pumped back directly into Hamilton Bay, increasing the danger to the domestic water supply of that city and other municipalities.

• (9:10 p.m.)

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, the same company carried out what it admitted to be intentional spillage. A short time ago the company whose spokesman, Mr. Fisher, laid down this six point program for industry, discovered that hydrochloric acid was eating away its boilers and pipes in part of the plant. They did not know what to do with it so they dumped it into their lagoon system and from there it entered Hamilton Bay. And the company is continuing to do this on a daily and weekly basis in spite of the assertion of its vice-president that industry should adopt this six point program to play a proper role in the control of pollution.

I am dealing mainly with the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence River and the Niagara and Detroit Rivers in the course of my remarks because, surely, these constitute an area which no minister can claim to be within provincial jurisdictions. Surely, these are international waters—unless the federal government plans to build partitions to board off the water in the middle of each of these lakes and rivers.

The International Joint Commission began its research into the pollution of Lakes Erie, and Ontario, and the international section of the St. Lawrence River in 1964. It brought out an interim report in December, 1965 dealing with municipal pollution on the United States side of Lake Erie. It noted that 53 per cent of municipal waste from a population of 10 million people was receiving secondary sewage treatment, which was not too bad. Some 47 per cent of the sewage from that population of 10 million enters Lake Erie with either only primary or no sewage treatment. On the Canadian side the situation is somewhat better. From one and a half million people 79 per cent of the sewage receives secondary treatment, the remainder receiving only primary or no treatment whatever.

On the U.S. side of Lake Ontario only 25 per cent of the sewage from a population of almost two million receives secondary treatment whereas 75 per cent receives only primary treatment. From what little I have been able to find out in the last few days concerning the difference between primary and secondary treatment, I suspect that secondary treatment means they have taken out the smaller lumps. On the Canadian side of Lake Ontario the picture was again somewhat better; 82 per cent of the sewage from two and a half million population received secondary treatment, 17 per cent received primary treatment and only one per cent no treatment whatever.

In light of this, the International Joint Commission recommended to both the Canadian and the United States governments that appropriate action be taken by these two governments, in association with state and provincial governments, to ensure (a) sufficient purification of all municipal and industrial waste before discharge to achieve maximum possible removal of phosphates; (b) prohibition of the construction of combined sanitary and storm sewers and the initiation of programs of separating existing combined sewers and (c) an effective system of regular sampling of effluents discharged into these waters and their tributaries.

What has been the result, Mr. Speaker? Three and a half years later, namely last September, the International Joint Commission made another interim report, and sad to say the volume of sewage disposal has increased during this four year period. This means that the same percentage of untreated or undertreated sewage is still entering those two Great Lakes and three rivers, and this after four years of reporting to governments, federal, provincial and state.

Into the Detroit River the city of Windsor is still pumping raw sewage, although the city corporation has announced that a new and improved sewage system will be opened within the next month or two. The position at Windsor is bad enough, even though the population is but 300,000 people, but in the Detroit area there are over three million people. Detroit is still operating a totally inadequate sewage treatment system, possessing an antiquated plant built in the early twenties. Their sewage barely receives primary treatment, yet it is still pumped into the Detroit River.

As far as the Niagara River is concerned, believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, but Niagara Falls, New York, is still pumping sewage that has only had preliminary treatment, which is just screening and which I gather means taking out the large lumps, into the Niagara River right across from the Brock Hotel. Only 8 to 10 per cent of the pollution of the Niagara River is from the Canadian side, 90 per cent is from the United States side. The boundary waters treaty between Canada and the United States specifies that one country shall not pollute the waters of the other. Both countries are continuing to violate that treaty. Hamilton city sewage system is providing primary treatment only, with no secondary treatment. The supervision of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, I am reliably informed, of Hamilton and other areas around Lake Ontario is inadequate. This is mainly due to the shortage of bodies and investigatory staff.

Pollution by municipalities is a social crime, a crime not only against nature but against future generations of Canadians. The cost of this kind of municipal pollution will have to be carried by the taxpayers in one way or another, since we taxpayers have been accessaries in our communities to the perpetrating of that social crime. The cost of preventing and overcoming this pollution cannot be borne totally by the municipalities unless we are prepared to allow them 25 to 50 years to cope with it. However, we just have not got that much time. For it to be dealt with immediately requires massive provincial and federal funds and other kinds of assistance. All Canada will have to pitch in to help solve, and pay for the reduction and prevention of, municipal pollution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, may I have another two or three minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there is unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I became so interested in what I was saying that I forgot the time.

May I conclude by mentioning a matter that has been raised so many times, namely the constitutional and jurisdictional question. I should like to ask the minister to read a magazine called Civic Administration for November 1967 which carried an interview with the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The headline reads: "I've said it before—it's not our baby". The article deals with water and air pollution, and so far I cannot believe that the present minister has that attitude. This question can no longer be a legalistic fantasy for governments of all levels to hide behind. It is strange how in some matters the federal government can act without worrying about provincial jurisdiction. The federal government has previously inserted itself into provincial jurisdiction, and I mentioned the Combines Investigation Act as one example. One can also mention housing standards under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as well as in the matter of fisheries. In this connection I ask hon. members to read the speech made by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) last May 22. So there are lots of past experiences and present examples, and there is nothing to prevent future action. There can be federal intervention without hiding behind what I call this legalistic fantasy of federal, provincial or municipal jurisdiction. There is no reason why the same kind of federal intervention cannot be made in regard to pollution, whether committed by individuals, municipalities or industry.

I am not one of those who believe that air and water fall under provincial jurisdiction. Nor do I believe that they should. Our water, whether it be in Saskatchewan, Ontario, Quebec or British Columbia, belongs to all Canadians. As a visitor to Niagara Falls from Saskatchewan I am as likely to get sick drinking or bathing in the water there as any other Canadian, but it is still Canadian water. Water is no respecter of boundaries.

As a layman may I suggest that there are two facets of pollution that should surely come under federal jurisdiction completely and solely. I refer to air and water pollution. I submit that if this government were to ask the provinces for jurisdiction over this area of pollution now, they would get it. If they did not get it, I am confident there is enough awareness of this problem and concern about it in the minds of Canadians in every province that they would raise cain with any province that refused to relinquish its jurisdiction in this regard to the federal government. So here is another and final area into which the minister and the government should move. They need no longer use the British North America Act as one way of avoiding the exercise of their responsibilities and the taking of effective measures to control and prevent pollution.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, the motion under debate alleges neglect in asserting federal leadership in respect of pollution and criticizes the approval of the estimates of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources by the standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. Those departmental estimates were referred to the committee on February 20, and the fourth report of the committee was presented on May 30. The committee was, of course, composed of members of all parties. The mover of the motion, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), is one of the Progressive Conservative members, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) who was the second speaker in this debate is an N.D.P. representative on that committee and I happen to be one of the Liberal party representatives. It is truly amazing how that report, which seems to be in such clear English, can be so misunderstood or misconstrued. One therefore questions the responsible attitude of its critics. The committee heard many witnesses. We took trips and examined many facilities and projects.

Alleged Lack of Action to Combat Pollution

We made detailed and exhaustive studies of the subject matter under debate, pollution, and we came up with a unanimous report. It was not a majority report, Mr. Speaker; it was one that was agreed to by all members of all parties. That took place only three weeks ago. May I now refer to some of the highlights of the report. I quote from the committee report:

> Your Committee recommends that as soon as possible—

That means as soon as financially possible.

> —the government allocate more money for scientific research projects that are now under way, as well as to continue new programs for the future.

That paragraph obviously refers to scientific projects launched by the federal government. I continue quoting:

> The Committee wishes to state that it has been greatly impressed by the contributions from the Canadian science community and commends all personnel involved in scientific progress in Canada on their achievements.

That paragraph obviously refers to leadership in the water pollution study. Another paragraph of the report read:

> The Committee commends the government on the establishment of the Inland Waters Centre at Burlington and the work being carried out there on water pollution research. We recommend that this be given full and increased assistance and that other complementary centres be set up where needed.

The hon. member for Kootenay West said that the recommendations of the report were good and he is still of that opinion. He went on to complain about lack of action and gave some examples of pollution. I do not quarrel with the stand he took on the deplorable situations he described, but each and every one was clearly of provincial concern. I suggest he would have been better to have written to his premier or he could send him a copy of his speech.

An. hon. Member: Here we go again.

Mr. Chappell: He also said that since the provinces had been in default in not acting, we, the federal government, should act. I point out to the hon. member for Kootenay West, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka and the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) that three weeks ago when we sat together drafting this report we said:

> Your Committee is concerned by increasing magnitude of air, water and soil pollution and the jurisdictional conflict which hampers the finding and the implementing of proper solutions.

[Mr. Chappell.]

> Your Committee recommends that the government draft a code of standards for the cleaning up of and the future protection of all Canadian waters; that provincial approval of such a code be sought; and that the federal government provide an enforcement procedure—if necessary by means of an amendment to the criminal code.
> Your Committe also recommends that a centre or centres similar to the Canada Centre for Inland Waters be set up to centralize all existing and future federal research in air and soil pollution and to extend and speed up such research so that codes of standards may be drafted to protect the air and soil from pollution.

The committee recognized that we had no right to invade provincial boundaries and close factories that are polluting streams or the air and this force people out of work. We all know that provinces have laws and that municipalities have by-laws. Four years ago we saw an example where a factory was polluting animals and milk at Thorold, Ontario. In that case the province found authority to act. In each of the cases cited in this house, in each example given, it was the responsibility of the provincial governments to act.

What is to be done, Mr. Speaker? We recommended that the federal government provide research. That research is now well under way at Burlington. As I understand it, this is one of the most advanced projects of its kind in North America. Already it is yielding valuable results to the provincial government and to United States authorities.

We went further than that and recommended that the government, through that organization, prepare a code of standards which the provinces might be induced to adopt in order to bring uniformity in this field across Canada. If the mover of the motion and critics of the government who spoke subsequent to him had been serious in their criticisms they could have made sure that the suggestions they have been making today were included in the report of the committee. They could have made those suggestions at the time the committee members were sitting together drafting the report. Or they could have introduced a motion, which would have been on record, to show that they did not agree with the report of the committee.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka asked today, "Are we going to wait for provincial governments to take joint action with us?". I say again that if the hon. member had wished us to rely on joint action that point of view could have been brought out in committee and suggested in the report. The report indicates no such thing. Moreover, I submit the report indicates that that concept was rejected unanimously. Instead, the committee favoured research and persuading the provinces.

The hon. member also said that we must collect air, water and soil sample data in order to assist in the solution of this problem. If my hon. friend for Parry Sound-Muskoka had gone with us on the trip to Burlington he would have seen that that is exactly what has been going on for some months. There, they are carrying out the very research which he says ought to be carried on.

In conclusion I say, Mr. Speaker, that no single person and no single country has all the answers. If someone had all the answers I am sure all the rest of the world would quickly seek advice to solve this naughty problem. Frankly, every example of pollution mentioned in this house today has been of provincial concern. All have been provincial matters, the only exception being the Niagara River, which is an international matter.

Mr. Peters: That's right. Blame it on the provincial governments.

Mr. Chappell: I submit that the federal government has given strong leadership. We are well advanced through our research facilities in setting standards which we hope the provinces will adopt.

Mr. Speaker, because this matter is of national importance, because many hon. members from all parts of Canada wish to speak on it and because three times today hon. members of the opposition have gone beyond their allotted speaking time by obtaining unanimous consent to extend their remarks, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand):

That pursuant to standing order 6(5)(a) this sitting do continue until 11 p.m. for the purpose of considering the business presently under consideration.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those who object to this motion will please rise.

And more than ten members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, like the previous speaker, I come from the southwestern part of Ontario. This is probably the most affected part of Canada from the point of view of pollution, chiefly because there is the greatest concentration of the population of Canada, in the area from Oshawa to Windsor. There is the greatest number of industries in that area and, oddly enough, probably the greatest amount of water considering the area is surrounded by the Great Lakes. Since there has been great public alarm, with justification, regarding the pollution of the waters in this area, and even the soil, this whole question of pollution is of the greatest importance and interest to the people in southwestern Ontario.

It has often been stated that perhaps the greatest problem we have in Canada is our outmoded constitution. That probably is quite true. This outmoded constitution has been used by this and other governments as a means of endless procrastination, for doing nothing and buck-passing. The federal government says, "we will have to talk to the provinces; we have to discuss it". This has gone on almost indefinitely.

Mr. Perrault: It started when your government was in power.

Mr. Nesbitt: There is that loquacious member from British Columbia! I hope he rises in his place instead of always shouting from his seat.

Mr. Perrault: Tell us about when your party was in power.

Mr. Nesbitt: Regardless of excuses by various levels of government, particularly this one, something must be done and done now. All the reliable authorities on the subject of pollution, water, air or the soil from which we obtain our basic foods, tell us that something must be done soon. Other speakers have dealt with other points. There are a great many matters one could deal with on the subject of pollution. I will limit my remarks to one or two particular aspects.

A few years ago in the city of St. Catharines there was a man who had a small business raising orchids. McKinnon Industries, a wholly owned subsidiary of General Motors Corporation set up a plant there. Fumes from that plant destroyed the orchids. The florist instituted an action against McKinnon Industries which has the full power of the General Motors Corporation behind it. He conducted his case himself and was successful. It is a pretty formidable obstacle, to be faced with all the legal talent of the General Motors Corporation.

When this case went to the Appeal Court of Ontario, the florist won it again. He asked not only for damages, but a permanent injunction. This case eventually went to the Supreme Court of Canada. The defence of McKinnon Industries was that they could not remove the offensive matters from their plant and that it would not be in the public interest to close the plant because the city of St. Catharines depended largely on the payroll from McKinnon Industries. The Supreme Court of Canada did not accept that argument and issued a permanent injunction. Within a very few days the noxious fumes, which the company stated they could not remove, were suddenly removed very quickly.

This is the type of activity that is going on in southwestern Ontario, and I am sure in many other parts of Canada as well. In my own area there are very large deposits of limestone. The Canada Cement Company has a huge plant there, a $50 million or $60 million plant. There are plants of the North American Cyanamid Company, Domtar and others. As a result of their processes, these plants emit quantities of fine dust. Houses all over the area in the path of the prevailing wind are covered with a fine, gray dust.

The people in the area have been complaining for years. The Ontario government has taken some steps in this regard, but perhaps not enough. The result is that the people in that area are suffering great inconvenience, hardship and even damage to their health. The trees are not green in that area, they are gray. They are covered with dust.

It may be said that the average citizen has a remedy in civil law. He can sue the company, as the man in St. Catharines did, but most people are not familiar with the courts and lawyers are expensive when they have to deal with companies such as Domtar or Canada Cement. The public should not have to do this. The state should protect people from this kind of activity. There is no point in the federal government procrastinating and stating they will have another conference. These conferences go on endlessly, but never seem to get anywhere. Something must be done immediately because many people are being adversely affected. My area is only one small area. This situation is probably multiplied 50 or 100 times all through southwestern Ontario. Some steps must be taken now. Certainly, the federal government has the power to take the necessary steps. This can be done by means of the Criminal Code. This type of activity can be stopped if it is made an offence. If no agreement can be reached with the provinces on what measures should be taken, the federal government, as the senior government of this country, should take the lead.

If the federal government does not want to use its powers under the Criminal Code, it can give very substantial tax reductions to processing firms so that this money can be invested to remove pollution that, as a result of their industrial processes, is going out of their chimneys. I am told by engineers that although expensive, this can be done. If the federal government does not wish to adopt the punitive approach, it can do something by means of a tax incentive. Most companies would not pay attention to any minor tax incentives. However, a substantial tax incentive would accomplish the required result. If that did not work, the government could then revert to using the Criminal Code. These are two suggestions.

There is no one in this house or in the city of Ottawa who is not familiar with the air pollution caused by that big company across the river, The E. B. Eddy Company. When walking to the parliament buildings in the morning, one gets the taste of sulphur dioxide coming from that plant. It is a great shame that our capital city should have probably the most offensive smells, if I can put it that way, of any city in the entire country.

I have talked to many tourists and visitors to this city. I have been told by them that Ottawa is a lovely place, but it is a great pity they can hardly breathe in the morning because of the terrible odours coming from across the river. This is largely sulphur dioxide which, as most people know, has a number of adverse effects on health. These are suggestions as to what could be done. The government must do something about them now. If the government wants to use the soft approach it can use the tax incentive method. If that does not work it can use the Criminal Code. Tens of thousands of people in southern Ontario are adversely affected by air pollution.

• (9:40 p.m.)

I next want to deal with the subject of noxious substances that are scattered at random around the country, of which d.d.t. is one. A pamphlet put out in the spring of 1969 by the Canadian Wildlife Federation, a very reputable organization, points out the possible dangers resulting from the use of d.d.t. I am not a research chemist and so cannot say, but all this may well be true. If what the pamphlet says is true, then certainly something should be done about the matter quickly. The government should immediately institute research to find out the extent of the danger, if any, resulting from many substances that are suspected of causing permanent damage to the soil and water, substances such as detergents, pesticides and the like. The National Research Council is already doing some of this work and should be commissioned to do a great deal more.

As I recall it, a few years ago at the United Nations, Canada led a project to collect samples of radioactive fallout, to analyse samples of air, soil, water and basic foods. We even offered to do this for any other country that wanted us to do it. The necessary facilities were ready. I am sure that these facilities could be revived to test samples of soil, water and basic foods to determine what damage, if any, is being done by chemical wastes and detergents. I suggest that a program be got under way immediately.

The same thing is necessary with respect to the Great Lakes. The pollution of Lake Erie has been the subject of much comment. Some of the stories one hears have been slightly exaggerated, but only a few days ago I and my colleague from Halifax-Dartmouth were checking on a research station on Lake Erie. We were told that on one side of Long Point Island the water is quite drinkable, but on the bay side it does not test very well.

According to information supplied by the research station at Burlington, scientists have concluded that both Lake Erie and Lake Ontario can be saved if action is taken at once. The estimated cost of arresting pollution and giving the lakes a new lease of life is something in the order of $2 billion. This result can be achieved at that cost if work is started now, and within five years Lake Erie could be saved. Fortunately, Lake Ontario is not in quite as bad a shape as Lake Erie, but if there is much delay it may be impossible to save both lakes. These were the points that I wanted to make this evening, and as I know other hon. members wish to take part in the debate I shall sit down now.

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity of participating in this debate which is mainly on pollution. This is a very timely topic all over Canada, and it is one that is very important in my riding. Pollution is a perplexing problem and one that in many ways is also very frustrating. It is frustrating in the jurisdictional sense in that the provinces have some powers and the federal government has some powers, but there is a great lack of co-ordination in attacking the problem. I hope that we will see a new major direction provided for the good of all Canadians as a result of the introduction of the Canada water act. The people in my riding will be watching this legislation with a great deal of interest. I am not going to speak tonight on the topic in the broad sense as I wish to deal mainly with a particular problem in my own riding. This is the proposed diversion of water from the Shuswap-Thompson River system into the Okanagan system, with all its implications for water pollution.

This is a very great issue in the Shuswap-Thompson areas. Never before have I seen the people in those areas get so worked up about a matter as they have about this one. And I say this is great because too often the silent majority will sit back and watch while an important issue is dealt with by the vociferous minority. This is public concern has been largely led by a group called the Shuswap-Thompson River Research and Development Association. I would like to compliment this group for the very fine work they have done and the very positive and objective stand that they have taken on this diversion issue.

As an example of the interest that the people have in this matter, no less than 15 groups made presentations on the subject when the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestries visited Salmon Arm and Kamloops on its recent swing out west. Some of the committee members said that never before had they seen such public concern about water pollution. Our main concern is not that our area is badly polluted and that we want to control pollution; it is more that the area is not polluted and that we want to keep it that way. The issue of the diversion started a few years ago when many of the people in the Okanagan became most concerned about their need for a greater future supply of water. Later, as a result of action in that area, an ARDA report was instigated and prepared by the provincial government of British Columbia. In essence, that report stated that it was physically possible to divert water from the Shuswap system into the Okanagan. This proposed plan would supposedly alleviate the water needs of the people of the Okanagan and ensure them of a supply for the future. Further, because of pollution problems in the Okanagan, it was also hoped that the increased water supply would flush out some of the pollution.

Alleged Lack of Action to Combat Pollution

The people in the Shuswap-Thompson area are not looking at the matter from an isolationist point of view. They are not isolationists. They believe in the development of resources to the fullest, and that there should be sharing of resources for the benefit of all our people. But a resource should not be tampered with in a way to benefit one group of people and take benefits away from another.

Some of the objections to the proposed diversion from many of the groups are:

(1) Concern that diverting Shuswap water to the Okanagan and thus into the Columbia system could in some respects lead to international control of the Shuswap, Thompson and Fraser rivers. Many feel that the international ramifications of such a project should be fully studied.

(2) Many people have pointed out that the study done by ARDA is too narrow because it deals only in a physical sense with the diversion of water from one area to another without assessing all of the implications in all of the areas concerned. Another important point is that once water has been diverted and committed to the well-being of thousands of people it is very difficult to uncommit it.

For a few moments I would like to deal with the importance of the water resource in the Shuswap-Thompson area. It has been said many times, and I think hon. members who have seen the area will agree, that it is one of the most beautiful vacation spots in the country. It has many lakes that are beautiful and important, but one of the most important in the whole system is Shuswap Lake itself.

Thousands of tourists visit the area each summer. We will have even more tourists this year as a result of the opening of the new Yellowhead highway. There are some 700 to 1,000 miles of good beaches along the Shuswap lakes, much of them taken up by cottage owners, and with some allocated for public use. Any appreciable change in the water levels of these lakes could greatly damage this most important industry and start a pollution problem, that is now non-existent, through increased silt deposit and lack of flushing action which is presently afforded every year by an abundant passage of fresh water through the system.

Another important resource is fisheries. The Shuswap river and its tributaries annually support 2,000 to 5,000 Chinook, 1,000 to 3,000 Cohoe, and 20,000 to 30,000 Sockeye salmon. Approximately 80 per cent of the Chinook, 30 per cent of the Cohoe and virtually the entire Sockeye population utilize the section of the Shuswap between Mabel Lake and the mouth of Fortune Creek. Adult migration commences in July and continues until November. Spawning is confined primarily to September and October. Following incubation, the young fish emerge from the spawning gravel in April and May.

[Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo).]

• (9:50 p.m.)

Chinook and Cohoe fry remain in the river throughout the year and or migrate downstream soon after emergence from the spawning gravel to take up residence in the lower river and lakes. Sockeye fry migrate to lake rearing areas immediately upon emergence from the spawning gravel. Sockeye, Cohoe and an undetermined portion of the Chinook salmon juveniles maintain fresh water residence until the following spring whereupon they migrate seaward coincident with the annual fry migration.

The observed distribution of spawning salmon in the Shuswap River reveals that the entire spawning population must traverse the section of river occupied by either of the proposed diversion dams, and those fish destined for spawning areas tributary to Mabel Lake must pass the Mabel Lake storage dam site. Conversely, the entire downstream migrant population must pass through the diversion dam area. Thus there is the problem of adult fish passage over the dams as well as the more complex problem of preventing downstream migrants from entering the gravity canal or pumphouses. It is also apparent from the outset that the low velocity impoundments resulting from dam construction will effectively eliminate spawning areas currently utilized by a small percentage of the Chinook and Sockeye salmon populations.

Agriculture is the third resource in my riding that could be detrimentally affected by the diversion. The cattle population of British Columbia is up to some 400,000 during peak times of the year and Kamloops is the centre of the ranching industry in the province. In our type of climate one of the most important limiting factors in the ranching industry is the provision of adequate winter feed. I do not think I need tell you how important water is in an area that has a total annual precipitation of about 9.5 inches. Alfalfa hay is the most important cattle feed grown in the area. Under irrigation, which most of the ranchers are now using, we can usually cut three crops and obtain up to six tons per acre of hay on a dry matter basis. On dry land we can generally take off one good crop and if we are lucky get up to two tons of hay per acre.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have been rambling a little bit and I hope that I have not abused your goodwill in taking too much latitude in my remarks. But I thought it was most important that I set the stage as to how this diversion ties in with pollution and how, in turn, it is related to many of the important resources in the Shuswap-Thompson area of my riding.

What are we to do at this point? I am convinced, as I know many of my constituents are, that nothing should be done to fulfil the water needs of the Okanagan until a comprehensive study is made of their needs. In this connection, I should like to endorse the first recommendation that was made by the Shuswap-Thompson River Research and Development Association in their brief to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. It reads:

> That no major projects such as the proposed Shuswap-Okanagan Diversion shall be carried out before complete comprehensive river basin studies have been carried out over the affected regions—including ecological studies of recognized scope and depth and widely ranging cost-benefits analysis covering all available alternatives and that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry for Canada shall take immediate, strong action to make this mandatory in all salmon spawning waters to stop the piecemeal destruction of salmon spawning and rearing habitat.

I understand that discussions are now going on between the water resources people in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the water resources branch of the provincial government in British Columbia on the terms of reference and conditions for such a study. I hope that the minister will soon announce that the agreement has been consummated with the province of British Columbia. I hope, too, that some of the things the comprehensive study would determine or estimate are: First, the short and long term agricultural requirements for water in the Shuswap, Thompson and Okanagan areas. Second, the short and long term industrial water requirements of these areas. Third, a definition of the parameters of any water pollution problem in the area with suggestions for its control.

I know time is limited and that other members would like to make some remarks. I am glad to have had the opportunity to make these few remarks.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): There are only five minutes left, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: You could have had longer.

Another hon. Member: We will sit all day tomorrow if you like.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could we have order, please.

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to have dealt with the environmental crisis facing man, but perhaps I can summarize it by saying that man is living through an environmental crisis of his own making. My interest in pollution stems from the fact that I am a member of the Fisheries Committee, and certainly, like all members, am concerned about the problem. Sources of pollution of our waters, both above and below ground are wide and varied. Increasing population and industrial production lead to ever increasing pollution dangers in the face of a more or less fixed distribution of fresh water supplies.

Pollution has been around for a long time. The Romans were worried about it and made attempts at controlling it. We have a big country with a lot of water and a lot of air. But anyone who has smelled the river outside this building or has travelled down the Gardiner expressway on a still morning or who makes his living providing the country with herring from Placentia Bay knows what pollution is about. We cannot afford to sit back in confidence. We should count ourselves lucky that we have no Los Angeles where carbon dioxide levels are 10 per cent higher than normal. We cannot afford to be complacent. There are many areas I could mention. Many have already been discussed.

Let us, however, take a brief look at fishing. Forest spraying in New Brunswick has led to observations of fish mortality from 50 per cent to 98 per cent. Pollution has seriously affected shellfish beds. It is estimated that 25 per cent of clam and oyster beds have been closed as a result of pollution which has made them unfit for consumption. It becomes a vicious circle. Pollution leads to higher costs for everyone. Fish processing plants have been forced to bring in water from far out to sea because of local pollution. The Atlantic Development Board has subsidized operations such as this.

Let us look at a related problem, that of the fresh water fisheries. There are many lines we can follow here. The problem of pollution for the commercial fishermen of our big lakes needs no elaboration. We cherish our heritage of outdoor life and recreation. But who enjoys fishing in water he cannot bear to smell? These are the hidden costs which government must weigh and act upon. I could speak of agriulture. Since agriculture by its very nature uses more ground water than other sectors, ground water pollution is our biggest concern here. What does it cost in terms of lost production? I do not know, but I know there are costs involved. I could elaborate. I am going through my pages rapidly.

Mr. Perrault: Just ask for extra time. Your boys will support you here.

Mr. Comeau: Who is that hon. member, Mr. Speaker, I won't mention him.

Mr. Perrault: Don't be muzzled by your leader.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty pursuant to Section 11 of Standing order 58 to advise the house that the consideration of the motion is deemed to have expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether anyone on the government side of the house could give the order of business, so that we might terminate the week in an orderly and sensible manner.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, whether or not the week will be terminated in an orderly and sensible way will depend on whether or not the opposition acts in a responsible way. Very reasonable suggestions have been made to the opposition members.

In case hon. members are interested, on Thursday we will call item 84, Bill C-202 in respect of incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities. This will be followed by item No. 90, Bill C-207 in respect of the Atlantic Transportation Assistance Act.

• (10:00 p.m.)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[Mr. Comeau.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—COURTENAY, B.C. LETTER CARRIER SERVICE

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not see the President of the Treasury Board here. I should like to know whether there is anybody authorized to speak on his behalf before I continue.

Mr. Forest: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I asked the President of The Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) when the government intends to lift the freeze so the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) can get on with the business of establishing a letter carrier service in the city of Courtenay. This question to the President of the Treasury Board arose from an earlier question I had addressed to the Postmaster General and which became the subject matter of one of these late evening discussions between the Minister of Communications and myself. On May 16 I was informed by the minister in his reply that on March 1, 1968, a well known economy drive was launched by the government of the day and a freeze was instituted in virtually all of the departments in an attempt to limit spending and reduce the burden of the taxpayers who, incidentally, are the electors of hon. members opposite as well as of members on this side of the house.

The minister went on to say that as a result, Courtenay is one of 24 communities where letter carrier service is justified under our criteria, but where for lack of funds the government could not introduce it until such time as the freeze was lifted.

I submitted my question to the President of the Treasury Board and claimed that it clearly arose from the answer given me by the Minister of Communications. Incidentally, the reply he gave indicated that this question goes far beyond the question of letter carrier service in the one community of Courtenay, which is in my own constituency. In my submission, there is clear evidence of discrimination against the citizens of Courtenay as well as the citizens of the other 23 communities which the Minister of Communications indicated are involved. The answer given to me by the minister revealed that the solution of the problem lies outside the jurisdiction of his department.

This so called freeze is on all fours with something that was known under the regime of a previous government as an austerity program. I refer, of course, to a government headed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he was in office. I recall at that time how Liberal spokesmen in this chamber labelled the Conservative austerity program as an example of government bungling and mismanagement. I agreed with the Liberal spokesmen at that time with respect of what was done under the Conservative regime. At this time, I must say that these remarks apply equally to the administration which is presently in office.

About a year or so ago when we were discussing the estimates of various departments in committees the suggestion was frankly put forward that the hopes and aspirations of the department involved the development of a program on the basis of a five year period. I thought this was a sound attitude which the government ought to take toward planning and spending programs.

This question I have raised goes far beyond the question of discrimination against the citizens of this community of Courtenay in connection with letter carrier service. It goes to the very heart of rational planning and management on the part of the government. For this reason, I felt I should raise the question with the President of the Treasury Board. It is not good enough for the President of the Treasury Board to tell me that a treasury board ruling merely put a general ceiling on government departmental spending and that it is up to the department itself how it is going to stay within that freeze. I suggest that if we are going to have proper management and proper spending of public funds, it should be done without infringing upon the right of all Canadian citizens to the normal services of the government.

The Minister of Communications pointed out to me that this freeze would reduce the burden on the taxpayers and, incidentally, on the electors who are in my constituency. I submit that whatever the level of government spending, those electors are paying the same kind of taxes as other electors in the country, and therefore they are entitled to equal services under comparable conditions to those obtained by other citizens of the country.

I hope that the spokesman for the President of the Treasury Board can give me some indication as to when the government intends to lift this stupid freeze because I can think of no more irrational way of running the public affairs of the country than to indulge in this kind of unplanned chopping and changing so far as the spending programs of the government are concerned. The Liberal administrations have often tried to give the people of Canada the impression that somehow or other they are businesslike people who know how to manage the affairs of the country. I submit that if this government approaches the planning of the spending programs of this country in the manner that is indicated in this example, the people of Canada should no longer labour under any such illusions. I hope that the spokesman for the President of the Treasury Board can give me some indication that the government is coming to its senses in this respect.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by the Minister of Communications and Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) to answer the hon. member's question. It is seldom that the Postmaster General is not here himself to answer such questions.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood that the parliamentary secretary was speaking for the President of the Treasury Board and not the Minister of Communications.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is no point of order at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. Forest: It is the Minister of Communications and Postmaster General who asked me to answer the hon. member's question. I was pointing out that usually the Postmaster General is here, but he could not make it tonight.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege. I addressed a question to the President of the Treasury Board and I do not want to be answered once again by the Minister of Communications on this subject.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I might point out to the hon. member that the practice at the hour of adjournment is not to accept points of order or questions of privilege.

Mr. Forest: I suppose that the question concerning mail delivery at Courtenay or communities in which the hon. member is interested is answerable by the Post Office Department. I wish to point out that the minister has already answered a similar question earlier and said that the Post Office Department is unable at this time to consider extending letter carrier service to Courtenay or other communities as a result of the freeze on the hiring of new personnel. However, consideration is being given to providing some type of interim service from a number of central locations in such communities. A decision will be made as soon as a study of these possibilities is completed. I regret that I cannot advise the hon. member when the freeze will be lifted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the house is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this house stands adjourned until 2 p.m. on Wednesday, pursuant to Standing Order 2 (3).

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.10 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BARNETT—COMPLAINT RESPECTING REPLY GIVEN IN ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege arises from the proceedings on the adjournment motion on Monday last. My name was listed for debate under the heading, "Post Office Department—Courtenay, B.C., letter carrier service".

Before debate commenced I drew attention to the fact the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) was not in the house, and asked if someone present was authorized to answer me on his behalf. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Forest) said that he was.

On June 10, I asked the President of the Treasury Board "When the government intends to lift the freeze". My question arose from a reply given me by the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) during the adjournment debate, in which he told me, as reported at page 8815 of Hansard:

> Courtenay is one of 24 communities where a letter carrier service is justified under our criteria, but where for lack of funds we cannot introduce it until such time as this freeze is lifted.

When the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council rose to reply to my statement on Monday night he stated he was answering on behalf of the Postmaster General, and as reported at page 10579 of Hansard said:

> I wish to point out that the minister has already answered a similar question earlier—

This was a contradiction of the assurance he had given earlier that he was authorized to answer for the President of the Treasury Board.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that while under the provisions of Standing Order 40 no minister is required to answer either on his own behalf or through a parliamentary secretary, if an answer is given it should be an answer to the question raised, and should be made by or on behalf of the minister under whose jurisdiction the subject matter of the question lies.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that he may have a grievance or perhaps a point of order, but I doubt very much that the point he is now making can be accepted as a question of privilege. In any event, since there is no motion before the house we will now proceed with the ordinary business of the house.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN THE SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF INDIAN LEADERS

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, before reading my statement, I should like to bring to the attention of the house the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a group of Indian leaders representing all provinces. May I welcome those citizens on the occasion of their visit.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to place the government's statement on Indian policy before the house. The statement outlines the views the government brings to the consultations which must now be carried on with the Indian people and the provincial governments.

Throughout a year's consultation with Indian leaders, the government has reviewed its programs for Indians and their effects on the present situation of the Indian people. The review has shown that this is the right time to change long standing policies. The Indian people have shown their determination that present conditions shall not persist.

From the early days of this country, a trustee relationship of a highly paternalistic nature developed between the central government and Indian people. The Indian people should have the right to manage their own affairs to the same extent that their fellow Canadians manage theirs. Under present conditions they do not have anything like this degree of control over their land, their funds, or in fact any of their responsibilities. This is the central fact about conditions today, and it must change.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Opportunities are present today in Canadian society and new directions are open. The government believes that Indian people must not be shut out of Canadian life and must share in these opportunities. The policy is founded on the belief that Canada should be free of discrimination. People must not be kept apart from one another by artificial barriers. The goal of a non-discriminatory society can only be achieved if many ideas change. Change must not be confined to the Indian people; other Canadians must change their attitudes, too. True equality presupposes that the Indian people have the right to full and equal participation in the cultural, social, economic and political life of Canada.

The government believes that the framework within which individual Indians and bands could achieve full participation requires the following:

First, the legislative and constitutional basis of discrimination must be removed.

Second, there must be a positive recognition by everyone of the unique contribution of Indian culture to Canadian life.

Third, services must come through the same channels and from the same government agencies for all Canadians.

Fourth, those who are furthest behind must be helped to catch up.

Fifth, lawful obligations must be recognized.

Sixth, control of Indian lands must be transferred to the Indian people.

The government is prepared to take the following steps to create this framework:

First, to propose to parliament that the Indian Act be repealed and take such legislative steps as may be necessary to enable Indian people to control Indian lands and acquire title to them.

Second, to propose to the governments of the provinces that they take over the same responsibilities for Indians that they have for other citizens in their provinces. The takeover would be accompanied by the transfer to the provinces of federal funds normally provided for Indian programs, augmented as may be necessary.

Third, to make $50 million available over the next five years for economic development in Indian communities and for Indian people.

Fourth, to wind up that part of my department which deals with Indian affairs; the residual responsibilities for the federal government to be transferred to other appropriate federal departments.

The government will appoint a commission to consult with the Indians and to study and recommend acceptable procedures for the adjudication of claims. The commissioner will be appointed soon.

I intend to meet with the executive committees of the Indian associations as soon as possible. I shall seek meetings with the provincial premiers or their representatives in early July. The department will immediately establish a unit of senior personnel who will have no duties other than to consult with Indian people, consult with provinces, consult with other federal departments about the means of implementation and the pace of it. This unit will also consult Indian bands to determine their views on control of their own land—complex questions which offer many alternatives. I hope that we can end the single, separate service agency within five years. I hope the Indian people will agree that this system which sets them apart is no longer useful. This will be the first goal of the implementation group.

The policy proposal will be referred to the Standing Committee of the house where it can be fully discussed. I seek the support of the house for the aims of the policy. I seek the good will, the support and the energy of the Indian people. I seek the support of all Canadians. I seek the co-operation of the provincial governments.

Finally, I want to thank my department, which has supported me in this policy completely and enthusiastically since its inception.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his courtesy in sending me within reasonable time notice that he would be making a statement, and the copy of the statement which accompanied that notice. I hope this permits me to make a reply, keeping well within the framework of the injunction Your Honour laid down the other day.

I thank the minister for the statement he has made. There was a reminiscent tone to it. I recall during the last years of administration under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) that a joint committee studied this issue. The wording of the report of that committee dealt with the winds of change which were blowing through the ranks of the Indian people of Canada. Many of the thoughts which the minister expressed in his statement were good thoughts, repeating the thoughts in the report of the committee.

We welcome the statement by the minister. It amounts to an acceptance of many proposals made by the Indian people through the years, and made by those who have worked on their behalf, in this party and elsewhere. As the minister made clear, it is only a statement of position and to a degree a statement of a bargaining position. There are a lot of "ifs" and a lot of implications. I am not offering carping criticism about this, Mr. Speaker, because the extent to which this will be successful will depend on the full understanding and knowledge of the problems which lie ahead that must be overcome.

There are at least two major constitutional questions. First, there is the question concerning an agreement of the provinces to assume the responsibility referred to. Clearly the provinces will not agree unless they also receive resources adequate to their responsibility. Clearly the provinces have not agreed and apparently have not been asked to agree. We must express the hope that the minister, by making his statement now, has not introduced an aspect of ultimatum and inflexibility which would complicate the transfer.

The second constitutional question concerns giving effect to any changes. An amendment would be required in due course to the British North America Act and we can only assume that the minister has some reason to believe that agreement could be reached on such an amendment. We hope this will be the case.

There is also bound to be apprehension among some of the Indian people. While the Indian Act and the federal authority have been unpopular, they have also been familiar. Their proposed removal will raise questions and concern about Indian lands and other rights. In some cases the Indian people may not welcome the prospect of having to rely upon provincial authorities. I note that the minister intends to establish what he calls a "unit of senior personnel", to deal with the Indian people and others on the problems of implementation. It is essential that those members of this unit which deal with the Indian people comprise persons whom the Indian people feel they can trust. It would be foolish and harmful to overlook the very real suspicions with which many Indian people now regard officials of the department.

I note also that the minister now intends further consultations with the Indian people. I was sorry that he did not refer to the representative committee established by the last Indian consultative meeting here in Ottawa, which sought federal financial assistance in order to carry out consultations of their own. I hope this omission does not mean that the minister intends to bypass this group, which was specifically chosen by an able and representative meeting of the Indian people.

There is bound to be some contention about aspects of the statement. For instance, many provinces might be reluctant to accept the proposal if the federal government would in time withdraw financial contribution to the provinces. That proposal amounts to simply transferring responsibilities without revenues.

The statement involves what would seem to be a limited interpretation of existing treaty rights, and a reluctance to deal with specific claims of aboriginal rights. There are bound to be some very serious problems about who has the right to be consulted and the fulness of the consultation. By and large this must be regarded as a welcome statement and a step forward toward equality for the Indian people of Canada. We assume it is proposed in good faith and not merely as a bargaining instrument.

• (2:20 p.m.)

It would be callous gamesmanship and a very real tragedy if this statement had any other inspiration than a genuine attempt to help the Indian people of Canada. We in this party assume that that is its intention, and we are prepared to help the government achieve the general goals which are outlined. I would hope that the matter would be referred at an early date to a standing committee of the House of Commons in order that the response of the provinces and of the Indian people involved can be known by the whole of parliament and taken as a guide to our action in the future.

Statement by Minister on Indian Policy

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we listened with a great deal of interest to the minister's statement. Like the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) I would like to express my appreciation for his courtesy in ending a copy of it along to me about an hour or so before the house met, thus affording members an opportunity to study it in a bit more detail than is possible when hearing it straight out of the blue.

As I say, we listened with interest to what the minister said, because in a sense what he was saying was exactly the same thing as many Indian leaders and people have been saying for quite a number of years, and in a sense what he said was a reiteration of what many of us in this house have been saying for the last five or ten years.

The hon. member for Peace River and I had the opportunity in 1959, 1960 and 1961 of participating in the Joint Senate and House of Commons Committee on Indian Affairs, to which the hon. member for Peace River alluded, and the report of which committee contained the same ideas and concepts that the minister has now outlined. Even though it has taken some period of time to get a cabinet minister to agree with those concepts, it is still welcomed.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that on March 6 we took one of the opposition party opportunities to institute a debate about Indian Affairs, partly to give parliament an opportunity to express its views to the minister, and partly also with the hope that any attendant publicity would give people throughout the country an opportunity to react to the debate and make some comments of their own.

Some of the ideas contained in the minister's statement are good. Some of them are not so good. A great many of them are rather vague. I do not say this in an unkind way, and I am sure the minister does not take it in an unkind way. Many of his comments must necessarily be vague, as he is not dealing with this matter in a unilateral sense but in an area of conversation and discussions with the native Indian people and with the provinces. Naturally he cannot have any predetermined position to outline to them.

For years we have advocated the necessity of discussion, conversation and consultation with the Indian people. We hope this will now be acted upon. The minister talked about transferring certain of the activities of his department to the provinces so that services provided by provincial governments will be available to Indian people on the same basis as they are available to other people in Canada. This follows the concept of equality of treatment within the law which we have been advocating for a long period of time. We assume this will include educational matters, health matters, social welfare matters and similar types of services.

I submit it is extremely important that in the negotiations, discussions, or whatever they may be that the minister will have with the provincial governments, the negotiations or discussions proceed only at a speed commensurate with the desires of the Indian people in the provinces concerned. I hope they will not be conducted in such a manner as to provide straight bilateral agreement at the governmental level without regard for the feelings of the native Indian people. This is something which has gone on previously, and if I am not mistaken the minister himself participated in such conversations with the provinces without regard to the feelings of Indian people, and without consulting them.

According to the statement, the minister will seek to appoint a commissioner to work with the Indian people on matters with respect to treaties. I maintain it is extremely important that this commissioner, if it is to be one person—and I take it from the minister's statement that it is—or if it is to be more than one person, have an orientation towards international law, and not the domestic law that exists within Canada. I hope that these people or this commissioner will be people who have an understanding of the relationships between nations of people, because after all this is what existed at the time the treaties were signed. The native Indian people were grouped into nations. With regard to treaties I think the minister should resist any proposal to take those treaties to our internal domestic courts, because he would be bound to receive decisions that would not be based on a full concept of equity in international law.

The government makes passing reference to the very fundamental question of land in British Columbia, in respect of which only a few treaties and land conveyances are involved. Passing reference is also made to land as it relates to the great bulk of the native people in the province of Quebec, and the Indian and Eskimo people in the Territories. I think it is fundamental that some solution should be provided in this regard before many of the other programs which are dealt with can be settled satisfactorily Unless this is mutually agreeable, the perpetuation of the difficulties will go on.

An amount of $50 million has been announced as being available for the development of the Indian people. I would caution anyone about accepting this at its face value because, as the minister knows, $50 million over a five year period is not a very large amount of money in any event. His predecessor in office a few years ago announced a $112 million five year housing program. This was fine on paper, but the previous minister of finance got hold of that $112 million program and, because of subsequent budgetary matters, sliced it until the $112 million program did not exist. Unless the minister can guarantee absolutely that he has this money to be used for this purpose over the next five years it is a meaningless declaration, because any minister of finance in any subsequent budgetary year can stretch it, reduce it or cut back on it.

The policy statement is a step in the right direction, but the old adage of the proof of the pudding being in the eating is applicable here. I think the success of this program depends upon two factors: It depends upon the continued acceptance by the government of the views of the native Indian people themselves because they are of primary importance; it also depends upon the speed with which the government puts into effect those accepted views.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like also to thank most sincerely the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for sending us, a little beforehand, a copy of the statement we have just heard with pleasure, so that we could study it briefly.

We are glad that the federal government is willing to transfer its administrative powers to the provinces since we have been requesting for a long time that the Indians be recognized as true Canadians and I feel that the federal government is now taking an important step in that direction.

After having for a long time attempted to administer Indian affairs, the federal government now realizes its helplessness, its incompetence and it is now asking the provinces to see to the administration of the affairs of Canada's first inhabitants.

I do not know how far those negotiations between the provincial and federal governments concerning the transfer of powers have progressed, but I would ask the minister and the government to be quite firm during the negotiations, in order that the Indians may obtain all the rights to which they are entitled.

I have reason to believe that some Indian bands are not too satisfied with the administration of a certain province, and we should be assured that the transfer of funds proposed by the minister would really be used for the administration of Indian affairs and not to fill gaps in provincial budgets. Therefore, I ask the minister to see to it that the funds transferred to the provinces will be used for the administration of Indian affairs.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the decision of liquidating Indian affairs at the federal level will benefit the Indians, so that they may become real Canadians, acquire the same rights and privileges as other Canadians, and have the opportunity to improve themselves, to get an education and to own something, according to their initiative, competence and wishes.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

AGREEMENT THAT INTEREST RATES BE CONSIDERED BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions about the suggestion of my colleague, the Minister of Finance, to refer the question of interest rates to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. If the house would give its consent I wonder whether the following could be made an order of the house:

> That the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs be empowered to consider the present level of interest rates in Canada and their relation both to rates in other countries and to economic conditions in Canada and elsewhere.

If there is unanimous agreement perhaps that could be made an order of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion proposed by the hon. President of the Privy Council. Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Privileges and Elections

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

AGREEMENT TO REFER TO STANDING COMMITTEE PRIVATE MEMBERS BILLS DEALING WITH ELECTION MATTERS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that earlier in the session certain private members bills which referred to the general subject matter of elections were not proceeded with, but that the subject matter thereof was referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. It seems equitable that other private members' public bills in the names of hon. members that did not have the opportunity of such reference should also be referred to the committee. If the house is generally agreeable perhaps an order could be made in the following terms:

That, the order for second reading of Bills C-33, C-52, C-77, C-80, C-90, C-92, C-107, C-117, C-127, C-133, C-145 and C-181 be discharged and that the subject matter of the said bills be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: Is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION TO REFER TO STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT ON WORK OF CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have the general consent of the house to revert to motions in order to make another consent order? I believe that subject to the approbation of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe there would be general agreement to make government order No. 93 a consent order of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker I welcome the government motion that the report of the committee to survey the organization and work of the Canadian Pension Commission be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. It is our intention to dispense with debate. It is unfortunate that this was not done before, because a great deal of progress could have been made. We regret that the white paper is not ready. This is one of the reasons for the delay. However, it is likely that the white paper will be available by the time the committee is ready to deal with the report in September. I wish to assure the minister that the members of the committee from my party—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering under what standing order the hon. member is now addressing the house. There was no statement made by the minister. The hon. member cannot have the floor at this time unless he has the consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has the consent of the house, I understand that other hon. members may want to take part in the debate which would be initiated by the hon. member's statement. I suggest to hon. members that perhaps we should go on with the business of the house.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order Your Honour has raised, I understand that the President of the Privy Council used the word approbation and approbation has this type of wide interpretation.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There are negative responses; therefore, the proposal of the President of the Privy Council is not acceptable.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PARLIAMENT HILL PARKING LOT

Question No. 1,651—Mr. Caouette:

1. At what stage are the plans for building a parking lot on or beside Parliament Hill, construction of which was scheduled for the winter of 1967-68?

2. Has there been any delay in this project and, if so, for what reasons?

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. A study for estimating purposes has been made for a parking garage located on the slope west of the Centre Block. Feasibility studies are being conducted on two other sites, one immediately west of the West Block and the other at the end of Bank Street where a parking lot is now located.

Construction is not planned for 1969-70.

2. Yes. It was deferred from 1967-68 Estimates in relation to priorities for other projects in order to curtail capital expenditures.

RIVERS, MAN.—C.N.R. MISHAP INVESTIGATION

Question No. 1,882—Mr. Skoberg:

Has the Canadian Transport Commission completed their investigation into the mishap on the C.N.R. Rivers subdivision on April 28, 1968, where three employees were killed when the engine went through the bridge and, if so, what were the findings of the investigation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: The Canadian Transport Commission has not yet completed its investigation into the accident.

NUCLEAR POWER PLANTS

Question No. 1,962—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many nuclear power plants are there in Canada (a) where is each located (b) what is the present power output of each, and (c) what is the power potential of each?

2. How many additional nuclear power plants are proposed during the next five, ten and fifteen years, where will they be located and what power potential is anticipated from each?

3. Is it the intention of the federal government to provide nuclear power for export purposes?

4. Is it the intention of the federal government to provide nuclear power to take the place of coal?

5. What is Canada's capacity, at the present time, to provide heavy water?

6. What is the government's program to increase the production of heavy water?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited advises as follows: 1. (a) (b) (c): The following nuclear power plants are in operation with the power output and power potential indicated: (i) Nuclear Power Demonstration Station; Rolphton, Ontario, 25 megawatts, 25 megawatts; (ii) Douglas Point Generating Station, Douglas Point, Ontario, 210 megawatts, 210 megawatts (This Station is shut down at the present time for annual maintenance.)

2. The following nuclear power plants are committed: (i) AECL's 250 megawatt nuclear generating station being constructed in co-operation with Hydro-Quebec at Gentilly, Quebec; (ii) Ontario Hydro's 2,000 megawatt station being constructed at Pickering, Ontario; (iii) Ontario Hydro's 3,000 megawatt generating station being constructed at Douglas Point, Ontario.

3. No. (If by this question is meant the export of power plants, AECL is engaged in an export marketing program.)

4. No.

5. Nil.

6. (i) The government, through AECL, has contractually undertaken to underwrite the sale of all heavy water produced; (a) by the Deuterium of Canada Limited 400-ton per annum plant under construction at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia; and (b) by the Canadian General Electric Company Limited 400-ton per annum plant under construction at Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia; (ii) The government, through AECL, is constructing an 800-ton per annum heavy water production plant at Douglas Point, Ontario.

LOCATIONS OF HEAD OFFICES OF GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Question No. 1,963—Mr. Robinson:

How many government agencies and/or corporations have their head offices in (a) Montreal (b) Toronto (c) Vancouver (d) Winnipeg and, what are their names and where are they located?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): (a) Air Canada, Place Ville Marie, Montreal 113, Que.; Canadian Film Development Corporation, 800 Place Victoria, Suite 910, Montreal, Que.; Canadian Livestock Feed Board, Place Decaire Building, 5250 Ferrier Street, Montreal, Que.; Canadian National Railways, P.O. Box 8100, Montreal 101, Que.; Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation, 625 Belmont Street, Montreal 101, Que.; Industrial Development Bank, 901 Victoria Square, Montreal, Que.; National Film Board, 3155 Côte de Liesse, St. Laurent 379, Que.; (b) Nil; (c) Nil; (d) Board of Grain Commissioners, Grain Exchange Building, Winnipeg, Man.; The Canadian Wheat Board, 423 Main Street, Winnipeg 2, Man.

NICKEL BELT, ONT., POST OFFICES

Question No. 2,002—Mr. Serré:

1. How many post offices have been built in the constituency of Nickel Belt since 1960, and (a) where was each located (b) what was the cost of each?

Questions

2. How many post offices in that constituency have been closed since 1960?

3. Which post offices in the constituency of Nickel Belt does the department intend to close in the next two years?

4. Where in the constituency of Nickel Belt does the department intend to build post offices between 1969 and 1972?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and Post Office as follows: 1. Five post offices and one addition

(a) Location	(b) Cost
Azilda	$21,651 including land
Chelmsford	84,985 including land
Noelville	22,026 including land
St. Charles	26,498 including land
Val Caron	33,562 including land
Hanmer (1964) addition	16,350 including land

2. Four.

3. At this time the Department does not intend to close any post offices in the Nickel Belt constituency.

4. The Department of Public Works intends to construct post offices during 1969-70 at Rutter and Wanapitei, subject to funds being available. From now until 1972 the Department's preliminary planning includes the provision of accommodation at Capreol, Dowling, Garson and Onaping, subject to confirmation of requirements by the Post Office Department at the time of construction and to approval of funds by Parliament.

*SELLING PRICE, FORD "MAVERICK"

Question No. 2,060—Mr. Saltsman:

1. What were the results of the meeting between the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and representatives of Ford of Canada regarding the selling price of the new "Maverick" car in Canada?

2. After making allowances for exchange rates and sales tax, will this new car be made available at the same price in Canada and the United States and, if not, for what reason?

3. If the price of the "Maverick" will be higher in Canada than in the United States, will Canadian manufactured "Maverick" cars exporting to the United States at lower prices be violating GATT anti-dumping regulations?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the answer to this question is quite long would the house agree that it be printed and the answer considered as read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Serré.]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Scott, president of the Ford Motor Company of Canada noted that the price differential between Canadian and United States produced cars had steadily diminished since the inception of the auto agreement. He expressed confidence that despite certain higher business costs experienced in Canada, the price gap would continue to narrow as the economics of industry rationalization were more fully realized.

The suggested retail prices for the "Maverick" are United States $1,995 for sales in the United States and Canada $2,375 for sales in Canada. After making allowances for exchange and the higher federal sales tax in Canada, and allowing for the effect of dealer mark-up, a difference of about Canadian $100 or 5 per cent still remains.

For Maverick sales to be made in volume in the U.S. market the car must be priced competitively with other cars in the Ford range and competitive cars of other makers. Since the general level of prices is still lower in the U.S. than in Canada this results in a differential pricing situation between the two countries.

If the selling price of the "Maverick" in Canada were higher than in the United States, this would not in itself be dumping. Under the GATT code to which both Canada and the United States subscribed, dumping would only occur if the export price of the Canadian car, following adjustments for exchange and differences in quantities and other circumstances of sale, were found to be lower and, furthermore, if material injury to the United States industry resulted. Both the elements of lower adjusted price and injury must be present to constitute dumping.

PUBLIC SERVICE REHABILITATION TRAINING

Question No. 2,107—Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands):

1. With reference to certain "lay-off" procedures designated in the Canada Gazette, Part 2, Volume 10 Extra, pertaining to the Public Service Employment Act, is it the intention of the government to provide members of the Public Service declared "surplus to staff" with (a) rehabilitation training (b) rehabilitation grants?

2. If the answer to any part of paragraph 1 is no, what are the reasons for not doing so?

3. Is the government considering the advisability of revising the legislation governing the payment of Unemployment Insurance so as to permit voluntary participation by Public Servants?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Treasury Board Secretariat and the Unemployment Insurance Commission as follows: 1. With reference to "lay-off" procedures pertaining to the Public Service Employment Act: (a) An employee laid off from the Public Service is entitled to all the benefits of the Adult Occupational Training that apply to any unemployed person. These include occupational training; (b) The Adult Occupational Training Act provides for training allowances. Furthermore, Public Service employees when laid off, depending upon their status under collective bargaining, are entitled to either severance pay or retiring leave. Most collective agreements signed to date provide for severance pay equivalent to up to 28 weeks' pay, depending on length of service. For other employees, there is provision for up to 26 weeks' retiring leave on full pay under the Public Service Terms and Conditions of Employment Regulations.

2. Not applicable.

3. The coverage of employment in the federal public service is now permitted, under Unemployment Insurance Regulation No. 70, for employees who have not been declared permanent. The advisability of revising the unemployment insurance program is being studied, and the status of employments now excluded from the Act will be reviewed as part of this study.

*CLOSING OF ONTARIO POST OFFICES

Question No. 2,288—Mr. Rynard:

1. How many post offices were closed in Ontario?

2. What number had rural routes emanating from each post office?

3. What was the average cost per patron?

4. What is the average cost for city delivery per patron?

5. What was the cost per patron when added to other rural mail routes?

6. How many postmasters were not notified of the closing of the post office and how much severance pay was required?

7. How many rural mail carriers received severance pay and what was the amount?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this question is also quite long and I wonder whether the house would agree that it be printed and the answer considered as read.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Forest: In so far as the post office department is concerned—

1. 144 since 1 April, 1967.

2. There were 32 routes emanating from the following 31 post offices: Clontarf, Corkery, Dorland, Fairfield East, Fallbrook, Halloway (R.R.1 & R.R. 2), Lonsdale, Rankin, South Monaghan, Wemyss, Anten Mills, Cresswell, Duncan, Dunedin, Rathburn, Riverview, Aberfeldy, Belton, Crinan, Eden Grove, Greenock, North Bruce, Ostrander, Pinkerton, Science Hill, Walkers, Alderdale, Eau Claire, Ice Lake, Ophir, Rydal Bank.

$28.03 per annum was the average cost per rural route patron for the 31 offices concerned.

$24.27 per annum is the national average cost for offices where letter carrier delivery service is provided.

$26.18 per annum was the average cost per rural route patron for the offices concerned.

All postmasters were notified of the closing of their offices and no severance pay was required.

Nine contractors received severance pay totalling $1,028.03.

CHILCOTIN, B.C., FORESTRY STATION

Question No. 2,338—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1 Has any department or agency of government built or otherwise acquired a forestry station or similar structure in the Chilcotin area of British Columbia?

2. If so, when was this built or acquired, what is its location, what costs were incurred, and what is its purpose?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR PUBLIC RELATIONS PERSONNEL

Question No. 2,350—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of Labour have a public relations staff and, if so, how many?

2. What was the total cost of public relations for the Department for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

Mr. Jim McNulty (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): 1. No, Department of Labour staff are designated specifically for public relations responsibilities which activities are carried out within the general program of the Public Relations and Information Services Branch made up of 22 officers and 34 support staff.

2. It is not possible to specifically identify public relations expenditures.

Questions

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION PUBLIC RELATIONS PERSONNEL

Question No. 2,360—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of Manpower and Immigration have a public relations staff and, if so, how many?

2. What was the total cost of the public relations for the Department for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The Department of Manpower and Immigration does not employ public relations officers as such. It employs Information Service Officers some of whom perform public relations activities as part of their duties.

2. 1966-67, $100,496; 1967-68, $149,156; 1968-69, $142,912.

COST OF NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT CROSSING

Question No. 2,362—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Is it considered the construction of the Northumberland Strait Crossing would be more expensive than the continuation of the present ferry system and the maintenance or improvement of present levels of service?

2. Was this view held by the government in 1965?

3. If not, what factors have changed the opinion of the government in this regard?

4. What plans are there for the future use of the Causeway approaches already constructed, how much did they cost, have they been completed and, if not, when is it expected they will be completed?

5. Will technical information, engineering studies, models, etc., be made available to the Government of Prince Edward Island with respect to the Northumberland Strait Crossing?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes, on the basis of discounted cash flows to 1968 for a 30-year period.

2. No, in 1965 the estimated cost of the crossing for rail and highway traffic was substantially less than present estimates.

3. Answered in 2.

4. The crossing approaches have cost $5.5 million. The construction on the Prince Edward Island side will be used to carry traffic to the ferry and will be completed in 1969. The construction in New Brunswick will not be used.

5. Technical information will be made available if requested by the government of Prince Edward Island.

[Mr. McNulty.]

USE OF UNEMPLOYED IN AREA DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 2,368—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Is it the governments intention to initiate a policy of using the unemployed for the development of certain areas of Canada?

2. If so, what is such policy?

3. How many unemployed people would the government expect to employ?

4 If this policy is already being carried out, what regions have received benefits from such policy and how many unemployed people have benefitted from such policy?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. and 2. No. However, the Government maintains Canada Manpower Centres throughout Canada which provide general counselling, placement, training, mobility and other employment related services to employed and unemployed workers.

3. and 4. Not applicable.

GRANTS TO CANADIAN VICKERS

Question No. 2,371—Mr. Skoberg:

For each of the fiscal years 1955-56, 1958-59, 1961-62, 1962-63, 1963-64, 1964-65, 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, 1968-69 and 1969-70, what have been the federal government's financial grants, subsidies or incentives to Canadian Vickers Limited of Montreal regarding the construction of marine vessels?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The following subsidies were paid to Canadian Vickers Limited under the Ship Construction Assistance Regulations and the Ship Construction Subsidy Regulations: 1955-56, Nil; 1958-59, Nil; 1961-62, Nil; 1962-63, $253,361.71; 1963-64, $1,099,100.00; 1964-65, $1,125,467.99; 1965-66, $2,303,671.96; 1966-67, $5,258,327.20; 1967-68, $2,850,537.80; 1968-69, $532,739.00; 1969-70, Nil; Total, $13,423,205.66.

TRADE WITH MAINLAND CHINA

Question No. 2,373—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. What amount of import and export trade did Canada have with the Peoples' Republic of China in each of the years from 1958 to 1968?

2. What amount of cultural contact or exchange has Canada had with the Peoples' Republic of China in each of the years from 1958 to 1968?

3. What immediate programmes are presently being planned or implemented with regard to cultural exchange and contact with the Peoples' Republic of China?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and the Department of the Secretary of State for External Affairs as follows: 1. Canada's import and export trade with the Peoples' Republic of China in each of the years from 1958 to 1968 is shown in the following statement:

Year	Domestic Exports $'000	Re-exports $'000	Total Exports $'000	Imports $'000
1958	7,809	1	7,810	5,370
1959	1,720	–	1,720	4,840
1960	8,737	173	8,910	5,638
1961	125,448	–	125,448	3,233
1962	147,438	1	147,439	4,521
1963	104,738	–	104,738	5,147
1964	136,263	2	136,265	9,420
1965	105,131	16	105,147	14,445
1966	184,879	1	184,880	20,594
1967	91,306	1	91,307	25,074
1968	163,243	6	163,249	23,439

2. Since all contacts and exchanges in the fields of culture and education have been organized under non-governmental auspices, complete records on a year-by-year basis are not available. Contacts of this kind have, however, included a tour of Canada by the Peking Opera in 1964, an exchange program between the Faculty of Medicine at McGill University and the Chinese Medical Association, and numerous visits to China by Canadian individuals and groups.

3. In discussions with Chinese representatives on the subject of mutual recognition and diplomatic relations, the Canadian side has formally proposed that the further development of cultural exchanges on a basis of reciprocity should be one of the subjects for discussion. So far as the Canadian Government is concerned, no specific programs are yet being planned, although the Government is aware of some plans by groups and individuals in Canada for further activity in cultural relations with China, and is prepared to give any appropriate co-operation to such projects. Should diplomatic relations be established with the Peoples' Republic of China, the Government would hope that there might be opportunities for the further expansion and development of cultural and educational exchanges between Canada and China.

LANDING RIGHTS FOR U.S. MILITARY AIRCRAFT

Question No. 2,377—Mr. Nystrom:

1. Where in Canada do United States military aircraft have landing rights?

2. How many U.S. military personnel are stationed at these locations?

3. What is the total number of U.S. military personnel in Canada?

4. Are any members of the U.S. Armed Forces being trained in any way in Canada and, if so, what is the nature of the training?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Under the the authority of P.C. 2307 dated April 17, 1952, United States military aircraft may land in and take off from Canada and its territorial waters by making prior arrangements with the Department of National Defence.

2. With the exception of Goose Bay and Argentia, which are used by United States forces under other agreements, no United States military personnel are stationed in Canada to accommodate visiting United States military aircraft. However, such aircraft may land where some United States military personnel are located.

3. Approximately 3,800.

4. Yes, vacancies on Canadian Forces courses are offered to U.S. Armed Forces personnel as follows: National Defence College,

Questions

Canadian Forces Staff College, Canadian Land Forces Command and Staff College, Basic Survival Course, Midshipman Exchange Program, Maritime Warfare School (Standard and Advanced Courses), Aerospace Systems Course and an Instrument Check Pilot Course.

WHEAT STORAGE EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,379—Mr. Diefenbaker:

How much has been expended for storage of wheat in all the facilities for storage, month by month, since the first day of January 1967?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Storage payments by the Canadian Wheat Board are not paid on a regular monthly basis and therefore it is not possible to answer the question in exactly the way it is asked. Total storage costs incurred on wheat by the Canadian Wheat Board in the 1966/67 and 1967/68 crop years were $29,583,697 and $44,389,454. Of these amounts the government paid $24,294,357 in 1966/67 and $34,979,633 in 1967/68 under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. The amount of storage costs incurred by the Board on wheat in the 1968/69 crop year is not yet available.

PUBLIC WORKS INFORMATION SERVICE

Question No. 2,423—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of Public Works provide an information service and, if so, what was the cost for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

2. How many publications and/or periodicals and/or information sheets and/or public releases were provided by the Department for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive, and what was the cost for each publication for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

3. How many copies of each publication are provided and to whom are they distributed and how is the distribution effected?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes, expenditures detailed below:

Year	Cost
1959-60	$ 50,520
1960-61	52,306
1961-62	61,209
1962-63	78,239
1963-64	78,961
1964-65	73,943
1965-66	94,318
1966-67	126,512
1967-68	133,661
1968-69	111,813

2.

Year	Number of information sheets and press releases	Number of publications	Annual cost of publications
1959-60	543	5	$6,803
1960-61	477	7	4,494
1961-62	371	7	5,727
1962-63	308	5	5,757
1963-64	249	8	5,231
1964-65	285	4	5,243
1965-66	372	4	4,146
1966-67	424	4	5,171
1967-68	400	5	7,070
1968-69	442	4	5,738

Cost of individual publications is not available.

3. The staff magazine, "Dispatch": a copy is provided to each employee, with additional copies for libraries, students, etc. mailed on request—total press run each issue, 10,000.

The Department of Public Works Annual Report and the Trans-Canada Highway Annual Report: 450 copies for tabling in Parliament; additional copies to interested organizations, students and libraries on request—total press run of each 1,000 copies.

A booklet "Seven Rideau Gate" was produced in 1967 for visiting guests—press run 1,500 copies. This and a number of other booklets, produced several years ago, are distributed on request, chiefly to students.

YUKON TERRITORY—RAILWAY TO WATSON LAKE

Question No. 2,425—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Does the government intend to build a railway to Watson Lake, Yukon Territory, in the near future?

2. If so (a) when will the work begin (b) when will it be completed?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): 1. No plans exist to build a railway to Watson Lake at this time.

2. An economic feasibility study and technical feasibility studies are currently being undertaken which will indicate when or if the railroad should be built to the Yukon.

FLYING PAY TO PILOTS

Question No. 2,464—Mr. Robinson:

1. Is it the federal government's intention to continue to pay pilots "flying pay" when they perform administrative duties primarily?

2. Is it the federal government's intention that those in the Canadian Forces performing the same function with the same rank receive the same pay regardless of qualifications?

3. How many officers formerly RCAF aircrew, without university degrees, are there in the Canadian Forces and how many are there in each Officer rank and how many of them are not on flying duty per se?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. See reply to your question number 1554, Hansard dated 10 March, 1969, page 6388.

2. It is difficult to determine what is meant by qualification and its relation to entitlement to a specific rate of pay and the function being performed. Circumstances of employment must also be considered. Where the employment is to gain further experience and a wider knowledge of administration and organization, then it is possible that although of the same rank and performing the same function, the rate of pay may not be the same because of qualification. However, where qualification is not a determining factor for entitlement to a specific rate of pay, the pay is the same for the same rank performing the same function.

3. 3114 as follows: LGEN, 1; MGEN, 5; BGEN, 16; COL, 67; LCOL, 182; MAJ, 479; CAPT, 2168; LT, 196.

Of this number, 689 are not on flying duties per se.

SURVEY RESPECTING DEMAND FOR UNIVERSITY TEACHERS

Question No. 2,469—Mr. Rose:

1. With reference to the statement of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration recorded at page 8783 of Hansard that "We do not believe that Canada itself will be able until 1972 to supply the demand for university teachers in this country", what surveys or projections led to such a conclusion?

2. If copies of any such surveys, statistics or projections are in the possession of the government, will they be Tabled in the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. My statement of May 16 regarding the ability of Canada itself to fill the demand for university teachers was based on an initial evaluation made by officers of my Department of data produced by the National Research Council. This material originally appeared some time ago, but recently was reproduced in the Macdonald Report to the Science Council, Graduate Students and Faculty Resources of Canadian Universities and Colleges.

The data to which I refer appears in Tables 4 and 5 of the report. These Tables projected the demand for, and supply of, new university teachers in Canada and show us as meeting the demand from our own resources by 1970-71 on the basis of an assumed 4 per cent turnover of academic staff.

The initial view of my officers, to which they still hold, was that the estimated supply was somewhat overstated because it included a large number of doctoral candidates who are neither Canadians nor landed immigrants and who would not normally obtain academic posts in Canada.

At the same time, it was felt that the projected size of the Ph. D. graduating class was somewhat high; this too would affect the predicted number of new doctorates available to enter university teaching. It has turned out, for example, that whereas the report estimated the 1967-68 Ph.D. graduating class at 1,245, the actual figure as subsequently reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics was 1,006.

2. See first paragraph of "1" above.

VETERANS AFFAIRS PUBLIC RELATIONS PERSONNEL

Question No. 2,487—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of Veterans Affairs have a public relations staff and, if so, how many?

Questions

2. What was the total cost of public relations for the Department for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Yes; twelve.

2. 1960-61, $29,571; 1961-62, $34,435; 1962-63, $65,848; 1963-64, $95,329; 1964-65, $69,567; 1965-66, $69,419; 1966-67, $103,947; 1967-68, $327,798; 1968-69, $117,427.

PARTICIPANTS IN BUDGET PREPARATION

Question No. 2,495—Mr. Saltsman:

1. Were there any individuals not in the Public Service of Canada who participated in the preparation of the June Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance?

2. If so, who are these individuals and what was their remuneration?

3. When did these individuals participate in the preparation for the Budget?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. No.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

LIVE TURKEY IMPORTS

Question No. 2,496—Mr. McKinley:

1. What is the total, in pounds, of live poultry, including turkey imported into Canada in the period from January 1, 1968 until May 31, 1969 inclusive?

2. (a) What was the total, in pounds, of broilers imported in this period (b) what was the total, in pounds, of fowl imported in this period (c) what was the total, in pounds, of turkeys imported in this period (d) what was the total, in pounds, of dressed or eviscerated poultry, including turkey imported into Canada, in the period from January 1, 1968 until May 31, 1969 inclusive?

3. What was the total pounds imported by months?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that: 1. The number of live poultry, including turkey, imported into Canada, January 1, 1968 to April 30, 1969 inclusive was 2,701,307. Statistics on number of pounds of live poultry imported are not available.

2. Import statistics, January 1, 1968 to May 31, 1969 inclusive are as follows: Poultry, fresh or frozen N.E.S., 1,399,700 lbs.; Turkeys, fresh or frozen, 896,100 lbs.; Chicken, cut-up, fresh or frozen, 2,066,200 lbs.; Chickens eviscerated fresh or frozen N.E.S., 3,868,500 lbs.

Note: No breakdown for broilers. N.E.S.—not elsewhere specified.

3. Import statistics, by months (see attached table).

CAPACITY PLATE ON POWER BOATS

Question No. 2,501—Mr. Robinson:

Is it the intention of the federal government to require power boats and power pleasure craft to carry an official capacity plate indicating horsepower and load capacity?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): The Small Vessel Regulations, P.C. 1969-436, administered by the Department of Transport, now require that small pleasure craft, powered by an outboard motor or motors of 10 H.P. or more, carry official plates showing recommended maximum horsepower and load capacity.

CANADIAN FORCES ORDER RESPECTING PHARMACISTS

Question No. 2,511—Mr. Marshall:

Does Canadian Forces Administrative Order (CFA06-1) and specifically Serial 4 of Appendix 1 for pharmacists apply equally for all provinces of Canada for direct entry as officers in the Canadian Forces?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): The academic/professional qualifications for pharmacists outlined in Annex A, Appendix 1, Serial 4 of CFAO6-1, apply equally for all provinces of Canada. It was the intent of this order that all direct entry pharmacists must hold a degree in pharmacy granted by a university or recognized school of pharmacy. To clarify this intent, an amendment to this order has been prepared to specify the requirement for a degree. Applicants who do not hold a degree, but are eligible to join the ROTP, are encouraged to consider this plan for university training in pharmacy.

TAX RECEIPTS FROM QUEBEC

Question No. 2,519—Mr. Laniel:

1. What amounts has the federal government collected through all forms of direct and indirect taxation from residents of the Province of Quebec during the last five years?

2. What has been the overall total of federal government expenditures in the Province of Quebec over the same period?

3. How is that total distributed by categories; equalization payments, direct social security expenditures, etc.?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. This information cannot be provided owing to the fact that there is no acceptable statistical data or technique for reporting the amount of indirect taxation paid by residents of a province.

2 and 3. Information is not now available to provide an accurate answer to this question and the necessary expert staff is not available to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to gather the necessary information.

INSURANCE FEES ON APPROVED LOANS

Question No. 2,523—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the total amount received on account of insurance fee on approved loans made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in each year since its inception?

2. What amount, if any, has been paid out of this fund in each year since the fee has been collected?

3. What is the aggregate amount of all N.H.A. loans covered by the insurance fee?

TREATMENT AT NATIONAL DEFENCE MEDICAL CENTRE

Question No. 2,540—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What categories of persons are eligible for medical treatment at the National Defence Medical Centre?

2. What is the capacity of the hospital, and how close to capacity does it operate?

Questions

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Members of the Canadian Armed Forces, individuals with Department of Veterans' Affairs entitlement, and others who may be authorized by the Minister of National Defence. The latter are responsible for making payment for services rendered in accordance with Ontario Hospital Commission rates.

2. 326 beds. The hospital operates at 80-90 per cent of this capacity (85 per cent is considered full capacity).

LENGTH AND COST OF TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Question No. 2,543—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the total length of the Trans-Canada Highway in each of the provinces?

2. What is the total cost of construction of the Trans-Canada Highway to date?

3. What is the proposed expenditure to complete the highway to required width, with asphalt and/or hard surface topping?

4 Does the federal government intend to construct any additional links to the Trans-Canada Highway and, if so, where will each be constructed and what is the estimated cost of each link?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1.

Province	Mileage
Newfoundland	565[1]
Prince Edward Island	71
Nova Scotia	278
New Brunswick	376
Quebec	388
Ontario	1,453
Manitoba	310
Saskatchewan	406
Alberta	333[2]
British Columbia	616[3]
Total	4,796

Notes: [1] includes 25 miles through Terra Nova National Park. [2] includes 51 miles through Banff National Park. [3] includes 64 miles through Yoho, Glacier, and Revelstoke National Parks.

2. As of March 31, 1969, the total value of work approved is $1,192 million of which Canada's share is estimated at $802.9 million. Canada's contributions to the provinces at this date were $756.3 million.

3. The Trans-Canada Highway legislation sets a ceiling of $825 million as Canada's contribution to the provinces. It is estimated this amount will be contributed to the provinces for work to December 31, 1970, the construction termination date under the legislation.

4. No.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

CANSO, N.S., POST OFFICE

Question No. 2,545—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Is it the intention of the government to construct a post office at Canso, Nova Scotia during the present fiscal year?

2. If not, for what reason?

3. If so, when will tenders be called?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. The Post Office will be accommodated in the federal building to be constructed at Canso this fiscal year.

2. Not applicable.

3. It is anticipated tenders will be called this fall.

CHATEAU LAURIER-CENTENNIAL CENTRE TUNNEL

*COST OF LIVING INDEX

Question No. 2,558—Mr. Diefenbaker:

On the basis of a cost-of-living Index of 100 in May 1949, what would the index number be in the same month in each of the years 1962, 1967, 1968 and 1969?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that:

The movement of the Consumer Price Index since May 1949, with the indexes on a base of May 1949 = 100, would be as follows:

Month	Index (May 1949=100)	Percentage change since May 1949
May 1962	131.1	31.1
May 1967	149.2	49.2
May 1968	155.3	55.3
May 1969	162.6	62.6

*ILLNESS—ANIMAL RESEARCH DIVISION

Question No. 2,564—Mr. Rynard:

1. How many people working in the Animal Research Division of the Department of Agriculture were ill during the years 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1969 and what was the total number of days taken off work to date?

2. Were any of the diseases related to the employee's work with the animals?

3. How many animals were involved in research and how many animals died in the years 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1969 to date?

[Translation]

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): 1. Related to Animal Diseases Research Institute:

Fiscal Year	People Ill	Days taken off

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH GULF OIL RESPECTING DEVELOPMENT

Motion No. 215—Mr. Thomson:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and Gulf Oil Canada Limited regarding offshore oil development near St. Pierre-Miquelon Islands.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MOBIL OIL RESPECTING DEVELOPMENT

Motion No. 216—Mr. Thomson:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and Mobil Oil Canada Limited regarding offshore oil development near St. Pierre-Miquelon Islands.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, notices of motions Nos. 190, 191 and 212 are acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning privileged papers and authorization of the government authorities concerned.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house that notices of motions numbered 190, 191 and 212 be deemed to have been adopted.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN VICKERS LIMITED CORRESPONDENCE

Motion No. 190—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and Canadian Vickers Limited regarding the closing of its shipbuilding division in Montreal.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH P.E.I. ON HOUSING

Motion No. 191—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

That an Humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Government of Prince Edward Island with respect to amendments to the National Housing Act since July 1, 1968.

Motion agreed to.

HIGHWAY FROM NANAIMO TO PORT HARDY

Motion No. 212—Mr. Barnett:

That an Humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence between the federal government and the Government of British Columbia subsequent to June 3, 1964 on the subject-matter of "a Trans-Canada Highway connection from Nanaimo to Port Hardy" referred to in the letter dated May 26, 1964, from the Premier of British Columbia to the Prime Minister, tabled in the House July 29, 1964.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 119, 138, 177, 180, 181, 185, 186, 202, 205 and 208?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

Motions for Papers

CONSULTANT STUDIES ON SCIENCE POLICY

Motion No. 119—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the five consultant studies referred to by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in their submission to the Senate Special Committee on Science Policy, April 30, 1969, Appendix "K", Page 50, of that Department's submission.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this notice of motion could stand. I believe the document is not quite complete.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

CANADA-U.S. CORRESPONDENCE ON SHUSWAP DIVERSION

Motion No. 138—Mr. Rose:

That an Humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all information, studies, correspondence and other documents exchanged between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America, related to the proposed Shuswap River diversion project, dated since January 1, 1969.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with reference to motion No. 138 for the production of papers dated since January 1, 1969, exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of the United States in relation to a study of the possibilities of diversion of water from the Shuswap River, I wish to advise that there has been no exchange of papers of the nature referred to by the hon. member, either through the Department of External Affairs or through the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Under the circumstances I would ask that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT REPORTS

Motion No. 177—Mr. Burton:

That an Order of the House do issue for a list of all existing companies that were, on April 18, 1969, in default of filing their annual report under the provisions of the Canada Corporation Act, due on June 1, 1968, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,918, reported in Hansard of April 28, 1969, page 8039.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member is agreeable that the list to be produced under this motion be a list of companies which were one year in default and did not file a report by May 31, 1969, rather than April 18, 1969. If this amendment to the motion is acceptable to the hon. member, I am prepared to have the list produced forthwith.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the Minister, is it the pleasure of the house that notice of motion numbered 177 be deemed to have been adopted?

Motion agreed to.

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT AMENDMENTS

Motion No. 180—Mr. Benjamin:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report on amendments to the Canada Corporations Act by a Task Force under the direction of Professor Robert Dickerson of the University of British Columbia.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the material called for by this motion is of a confidential nature, never intended for other than internal use by my department in the preparation of amendments to the Canada Corporations Act. In view of this I would ask the hon. member to agree to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

MERGER REGISTER

Motion No. 181—Mr. Benjamin:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the merger register of all corporate mergers in Canadian industry that have been undertaken by the Combines Investigation Branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the material asked for in this motion consists of a very large number of documents which fill an entire filing cabinet. The cost of reproducing these documents would be very substantial. I believe the hon. member has been informed that he is free to examine at his leisure the documents in my department. On that condition I would ask him to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): The hon. member could spend his summer holidays over there.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CHEMICAL INDUSTRY STUDIES

Motion No. 185—Mr. Gilbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all reports and studies related to the chemical industry as reported in the Annual Report of the Department of Industry, April 1, 1967-March 31, 1968, on page 51.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is not able to accept this motion as the work referred to by the hon. member for Broadview is:

(a) based largely on confidential information supplied by industrial chemical firms, and

(b) is now only partially complete.

There is an agreement by the department and the Canadian Chemical Producers' Association not to release this comprehensive study. The minister hopes the hon. member will withdraw his motion.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Transferred for debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate under Standing Order 48.

CANADIAN APPLIANCE INDUSTRY STUDY

Motin No. 186—Mr. Gilbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by the University of Toronto School of Business Studies on the Canadian appliance industry as reported in the Annual Report of the Department of Industry, April 1, 1967-March 31, 1968, on page 51.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce wishes to inform the hon. member for Broadview that the study referred to in this motion has not been completed as yet. There is an agreement between the University of Toronto and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that a report, not including commercial confidential material, will be published within one year of the completion of data collection and analysis. It is expected that data collection and analysis will be concluded some time in 1970. In view of this, the minister hopes the hon. member will withdraw his motion.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

TRADE PROMOTION STUDY BY MR. P. SCHUTTE

Motion No. 202—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study on the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce trade promotion policies showing a 12:1 cost-sales ratio as stated by Mr. P. Schutte, Chief of the Trade Fairs Abroad Division of the Department.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that this study contains confidential information provided to the department by Canadian firms on the understanding that such information was not to be released. In view of this, the minister hopes the hon. member will withdraw his motion.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Transferred for debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 48.

ENERGY BOARD STUDY OF REFINERY CAPACITY

Motion No. 205—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the National Energy Board studies assessing refinery capacity and market demand for refined petroleum products in Regions I, II and III, referred to by the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources before the Standing Committee on Natural Resources and Public Works on May 8, 1969, page 361 of the Proceedings.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the National Energy Board that the Studies regarding regions I and II have not yet been completed. The study concerning region III is a classified document since it contains confidential information supplied to the board by individual refineries. However, the board has prepared "A Summary of National Energy Board Survey of Ontario Refinery Capacity" which is unclassified. If the hon. member would consent to withdraw his motion, I would be prepared to table this document now.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the request that I withdraw I and II because those studies have not yet been completed. But I ask that III be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 48.

STUDIES ON PROGRAM TO ENHANCE PRODUCTIVITY

Motion No. 208—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the preliminary cost-benefit study on the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce's new program to enhance productivity (PEP) as stated in reply to Question No. 1,955 as reported in Hansard of June 4, 1969.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce wishes to inform the hon. member that this study will not be tabled. This was also stated in written question No. 1,955, tabled on June 4. The reason is that it would not be in the public interest to table an analysis of a program still under development. The minister hopes the member will withdraw his motion.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the reason is not acceptable. I ask that the motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 48.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, since it has not been possible for almost two months to deal with my notice of motion for the production of papers No. 140, is the government prepared to take action on it next Wednesday?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I would hope so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The remaining notices of motion shall stand.

[Mr. Orange.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

OIL

REPRESENTATIONS BY CANADIAN MINISTERS AT WASHINGTON MEETING TO INCREASE CRUDE SHIPMENTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made this week by the United States Secretary of the Interior to the effect that the United States can absorb 500,000 barrels a day more crude oil than is at present permitted to be shipped from Canada to that country, has the delegation of ministers who are at present conferring with their counterparts in Washington been urged to strongly press that case for very substantial and immediate increases in shipments of Canadian crude oil to the United States until the level of 800,000 barrels a day has been reached?

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sure the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings never had so much applause for a question.

I will merely say that the ministers who are in Washington are very much aware of the situation and that they are discussing with their United States counterparts the best possible oil policy for Canadians.

Mr. Hees: I sincerely hope they do better than those who negotiated the somewhat disastrous secret treaty in 1967.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: My supplementary question is as follows, Mr. Speaker. Has the delegation of Canadian ministers been instructed to advise the United States representatives at these meetings of the Canadian position with regard to Canadian troop withdrawals from NATO?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member for Calgary North has a supplementary question. Perhaps we ought to stay with the same subject for the time being. This is why the Chair is now recognizing the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question. I know the hon. member for Calgary North has an excellent supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

INQUIRY AS TO CANADA-U.S. SECRET AGREEMENT ON EXPORTS OF CRUDE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week I asked whether there was a secret agreement in existence between the United States and Canada with reference to the export of crude petroleum. Is there such a secret agreement in existence at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As the hon. member has told us, he asked this question previously. There has been no development since he did so.

Mr. Woolliams: May I put the question in a different way? With the greatest respect to the Prime Minister, the only answer I got last week from the right hon. gentleman was silence. I am putting it to him again: Is there in fact a secret agreement in existence like the one signed in 1967 between Canada and the United States?

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is typical of the attitude the Prime Minister adopts in the house toward the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: His arrogance today is showing right through into the industry.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Hees: May I ask my supplementary now, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The question the hon. member indicated he wished to ask a few moments ago was not a supplementary. I recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. I will return shortly to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: A question supplementary to the one posed by the hon. member for Calgary North. Did the Prime Minister refuse to answer that question because he is sulking, or because he is ashamed of the answer, which is that there is another secret agreement in existence, and he knows it?

An hon. Member: Foolish.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNITED NATIONS

RHODESIA—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGES IN DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS—ECONOMIC AND MILITARY SANCTIONS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Namaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister? In view of the fact that Rhodesia has now severed its final connection with the United Kingdom, what changes does the Canadian government intend to make with regard to both its diplomatic and trading relations with that country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We shall continue the policy we have followed in the past, that of supporting the Security Council and its boycott of Rhodesia.

Mr. Hees: Now, Mr. Speaker, may I—

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask whether economic sanctions are still being applied, and whether the Canadian government intends to step up economic sanctions by including a restriction of telegraphic and postal communications, or any other intensification of economic pressure against Rhodesia?

Mr. Trudeau: We shall comply with the sanctions which are decided upon by the Security Council.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Would the government be prepared to participate in military sanctions against Rhodesia?

Mr. Trudeau: I know of no such proposition having been made by the United Nations and it would not be our intention to act unilaterally in this regard.

AIR CANADA

MONTREAL—ABSENCE OF BILINGUAL SERVICE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Is the minister aware of the fact that Air Canada is at the present time supplying at the Montreal International airport an almost exclusively unilingual English service, to passengers or would-be passengers, and does he intend to have the matter looked into?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I will be glad to look into the matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF PLEBISCITE TO DECIDE WISHES OF INDIANS RESPECTING JURISDICTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question arises out of a statement made by the Minister of Indian Affairs. It was complete and comprehensive and I am sure it will be appreciated by members of the house and by the country as well. However, there is one matter I should like to draw to his attention, namely, the extremely strong opposition which many Indians have to the idea that jurisdiction over them, or the responsibility for providing services to them, be turned over to the provinces. This feeling seems widespread.

In view of their strong disapproval to being subject to nine different concepts across Canada, in addition to the federal authority, would the minister consider making available to each of the Indian tribes across Canada a plebiscite on whether or not they desire to be under provincial jurisdiction in their particular provinces?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I said today that I intended to consult the Indians and the provinces with regard to this policy, and I shall do so. When I said that the provinces would extend their services to Indians, I did so because the Indians are citizens of a province, in the same way as they are citizens of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am asking whether or not the objection of Indians to being under provincial jurisdiction in any way will be respected? I think that by and large what he has produced will bring about a distinct improvement in Indian affairs, and I pass on the suggestion I have just made by way of a question in order to be helpful.

Since he has opened up this subject, I ask him now whether or not the government has decided to place before parliament any amendments to the law, any changes in the legislation so that Indian treaties which were made prior to 1867 will become part of the law of the land, rather than unrespected arrangements sacredly entered into between the Crown and the Indian tribes?

Mr. Chrétien: I said in the statement I made earlier that the government intends to respect the treaties which the Crown has signed with the Indians in the past.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE IN QUEBEC—LABRADOR IRON ORE INDUSTRY

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

The employees of the Iron Ore Company on the north shore and in the province of Newfoundland have been on strike for a long time and they have asked the federal Minister of Labour to act as mediator, subject to the agreement of the governments of Quebec and Newfoundland. We were informed last week that the government of Quebec was agreeable to an intervention by the federal Minister of Labour. Could the minister tell us whether he has approached the government of Newfoundland in order to obtain authorization to intervene in the dispute?

[English]

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): As I mentioned Monday, Mr. Speaker, the suggestion was made that the federal government and the provinces of Newfoundland and Quebec try to solve on a joint basis the problem the Iron Ore Company is having with its employees in northern Quebec. The province of Quebec has expressed willingness; the province of Newfoundland has asked for a little more time to go into the arrangements. But progress has been made. Yesterday I received the first conciliation board report from the board set up to deal with the maintenance of way employees in federal jurisdiction, which I promptly sent back because I thought the report was not as complete as it should be.

WATER RESOURCES

POLLUTION OF CANADA-U.S. BOUNDARY WATERS

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and arises from the reports of serious pollution of the Rhine River and the implications this has for Canada in relation to international and interprovincial waters. Is the government taking any special action to prevent a similar accident occurring in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as this matter could concern Canada, the action that we propose to take will be demonstrated in the Canada water act.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question which arises from the Prime Minister's appearance on television last night. Can we assume from his comments on television that in relation to pollution we are starting to get through to him on the need for pollution control?

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but since I do not see him in the house perhaps the Prime Minister would look into the matter. May I ask the Prime Minister to find out, when he is looking into the other matter, whether the Department of Health and Welfare is in touch with health departments in Europe regarding studies on the insecticide endosulvan, to see whether it is being used in Canada and what its effects might be on our waterways?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING PENSIONS OF RETIRED EMPLOYEES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport.

Would he advise the house whether he intends to take steps in the near future in order to improve the retirement plan of the C.N.R.'s non-operating employees?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter for the Canadian National Railways in negotiation with its employees. I do not see that there is a role for me in this particular matter.

[Later:]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. What action is being taken with regard to retired employees of the national railways which were incorporated into the C.N.R.? I think the government has a subsidiary responsibility here.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will refer to the late show of about four nights ago, he will see that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I had quite an exchange on the matter. I will spare the house the prospect of my reading it all over again.

UNITED NATIONS

DISCUSSION OF HUMAN RIGHTS FOLLOWING PERSECUTIONS BY U.S.S.R.

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the new wave of persecutions perpetrated by the government of the U.S.S.R. against Ukrainians, Czechoslovakians and other minority groups behind the iron curtain, and because the Soviet Union is one of the signatories to the United Nations declaration of human rights, would the government consider requesting that this subject matter be placed in the agenda of the United Nations?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is a long-standing and difficult problem to which continuous attention has been given, but in the light of the representations made by the hon. member we will look into it again.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

POSSIBILITY OF FREEZE ON EXPENDITURES

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether it is government policy to put a freeze on the budget of the C.B.C. for the next five years?

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In the temporary absence of the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, would the minister use his good offices to make arrangements to have the committee meet as soon as possible, since a number of undertakings were made with which the committee should deal, as well as a number of reports, and we may be getting close to the end of the session?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I assume that committee decisions as to meeting times are pretty much a matter for the committee itself, but any help that I can give I shall be more than pleased to give.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question. Perhaps the minister misunderstood the first part of my question. In the unfortunate temporary absence of the chairman of the committee, who is the only one who can call the committee, would the minister make appropriate arrangements?

AIR TRANSPORT

SERVICE OF AIR LINE PILOTS UNDER CONDITIONS OF FATIGUE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport whether he now has an answer ready to the question I asked him last Friday, dealing with the hours that airline pilots are permitted to travel per month?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no; but I hope to have the answer for the hon. member in a day or so. We are making a complete investigation.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the national assembly of Quebec has passed through all stages its bill 45, which increases the pensions of all retired civil servants of Quebec who retired up to the beginning of this year and provides for the automatic escalation of pensions of retired civil servants from now on, will the government of Canada study this bill in the hope that Canada may at least do as well for its retired civil servants?

Mr. Speaker: L'honorable député de Lafontaine.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Prime Minister did not get to his feet to answer my question, I wonder whether the Prime Minister and the President of the Treasury Board will accept with my compliments copies of Quebec's bill 45 so they may study it? I shall send copies over to them.

Mr. Georges-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Does he intend to inquire into or to refer to the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts the matter of the responsibility given to Messrs. Pierre Perreault and Bernard Gosselin, with regard to the St. Jean Baptiste Day celebrations in Montreal? I suggest their comments made on the public network were a proof of incompetence and impudence, besides being foolish and insignificant.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO ACCEPTANCE BY CANADA OF LOWER INTERNATIONAL PRICE—GUARANTEED FLOOR

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In light of the discussions now being carried on with other wheat producing countries of the world in regard to the international price of wheat is the report that Canada's representatives have been authorized to accept a lowering of the current agreed price correct?

Mr. Speaker: Order. According to the rules the hon. member cannot ask a minister to confirm or deny a report.

Mr. Thompson: May I reword my question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might ask a related question or another question.

Mr. Thompson: Is Canada prepared to accept a lowering of the international price of wheat at the conference now being held?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, both these departments are answering questions in the house on a day other than today.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister related to the question asked by the hon. member for Red Deer. In view of reports that a cut in world wheat prices is being considered by the International Wheat Council, can the Prime Minister inform the house if the cabinet is giving or will give serious consideration to establishing a guaranteed floor price to the farmer of $1.95½ cents a bushel, the present minimum under the International Grains Arrangement?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MAINTENANCE OF PASSENGER SERVICE STANDARD

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the serious effect that lack of transportation facilities has on those who use our tourist facilities and on Canadians as a whole, will he communicate with Canadian National Railways to ascertain whether it is now its policy to keep at minimum levels available transportation facilities? Do they intend to reduce the necessity of passenger service across Canada? At the same time, when asking that question will he use his influence to ensure that extra trains and railway cars are provided during the summer on transcontinental routes?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss the first part of the right hon. gentleman's question with the railway. As for the provision of additional facilities for those who may wish to go west, we will be glad to do that as rapidly as possible, particularly for members of the opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was talking about transcontinental trains that go all the way across Canada. Although I was not thinking about the members of the opposition and thinking only of visitors who come to Canada, needless to say I appreciate the minister's solicitude for the opposition.

HARBOURS

TORONTO—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN CONSTRUCTION OF PORT

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the urgency of this matter to the port authority of the city of Toronto and in view of its key importance to the plan for development of the whole Toronto waterfront, will the minister now agree to co-operate and participate in the construction of the port, in conjunction with the development of the new harbour there?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member's question is of very wide import. If there is special urgency about the details of the question the matter might be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Chappell: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC WORKS

OTTAWA, ONT.—PARTICIPATION IN DOWNTOWN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Will the government participate in the multi million dollar development scheduled for downtown Ottawa despite so-called cut-backs and attempts to freeze private construction in other cities?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is of a similar nature to that asked by the hon. member for Peel South. It is a matter of very wide import and that type of question ought to be placed on the order paper or discussed at the time of adjournment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DELAY IN CLOSING OF BASES PENDING DISCUSSION WITH REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence arising from his statement on Monday that a number of bases may be closed in Canada. In view of the implications the minister's statement raised for areas suffering from economic difficulties, will he refrain from taking action on such possible closures until there has been full and sufficient consultation with the Standing Committee on Regional Development?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in my statement I think I made the commitment that no such decision will be taken until we have consulted the appropriate departments of government primarily concerned with regional development and manpower. We will do that.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I direct the minister's attention to that part of my original question having to do with the Standing Committee on Regional Development? Will he study the effect such closures might have on economically depressed areas of the country?

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of National Defence assure the house, in view of his recent statement respecting the closing of certain military bases, that the government's consideration of the brief from the Newfoundland Canadian Legion supporting the establishment of a Canadian Forces base in Newfoundland will not be affected?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—CHANGE IN POLICY RESPECTING INSURANCE COMPANIES PARTICIPATION

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and his parliamentary secretary, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the importance of the decision of the government of Ontario to enter the national medicare plan, can the Prime Minister indicate to the house whether there was a change in government policy regarding the participation of insurance companies as carriers in the medicare plan in Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question ought to be placed on the order paper.

[Mr. Speaker.]

HOUSING

EXTENSION TO OTHER PROVINCES OF ONTARIO MORTGAGE PROGRAM

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of housing and arises from the action taken by Ontario with relation to second mortgages. Will the minister examine this program to see whether such a combined mortgage program can be extended to other provinces which have fewer resources than Ontario?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the announcement made yesterday by the minister of the Ontario government. I understand it was made after a considerable degree of recommendation by the Leader of the Opposition in that province. However, we will be glad to take a look at the implications of the announcement and see what can be done by other provinces. That will depend on the degree to which we are involved.

PUBLIC WORKS

RESULT OF PROGRAMS AND EXPENDITURES REVIEW

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the minister's statement that his department is reviewing its programs and projects for the current fiscal year, will he inform the house whether this review is now completed? If not, when will it be completed? If it has been completed, can he indicate in general terms the results of the review in regard to the programs and expenditures of his department?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have a pretty good idea what we are going to spend this coming year and in the two or three following years.

A question has already been asked in the house about the propriety of government spending at this time, when we are asking other people to hold back on their expenditures. My reply is that we are undertaking expenditures only in those areas where we think it is good business to do so. Instead of paying out in the city of Ottawa, as we are doing at the present time, $18 million a year in rent we would much rather provide our own accommodation.

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member for Edmonton Centre might be allowed to ask a supplementary question. I had the impression that in his reply the minister to some extent was replying to an earlier question asked by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre. Perhaps he might be allowed to ask a supplementary, even though I said that his question ought to be placed on the order paper or asked at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, if the minister has any more chewing gum, will he please pass it up this way?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind hon. members that we are running out of time. Many hon. members are still anxious to ask questions. Perhaps we should not have too many supplementaries.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

DISCUSSIONS TO CHANGE CAPITAL'S IMAGE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Following publication of a document requested by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, pointing out that the Ottawa municipal administration has considered language and culture issues from an essentially provincial standpoint, would the Prime Minister tell the house whether or not he intends to have talks with municipal officers in order to change the federal capital's tarnished image?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have already entered into discussions with Quebec and Ontario provincial authorities and we reached an agreement to the effect that the whole capital area should truly mirror Canada's distinctive features, but needless to say we must proceed through provincial governments since municipalities come essentially under their jurisdiction.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Will he at last agree that a clean-up is required at all levels of the C.B.C., and tell us that he is prepared to do his utmost so that the C.B.C. will no longer be used as a medium for separatist propaganda?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I stated a moment ago, in answer to another question, that the policy concerning the C.B.C. and its budget for the next five years is not yet drawn up, in spite of rumours which may have appeared in the press in that connection.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CANADAIR LIMITED, MONTREAL—LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands asked me about notice given to employees being laid off by Canadair Limited, particularly because some of this company's work is under contract with the government.

The government is, of course, concerned about the fair treatment of all employees who work in plants with which the government has contracts. Our contract with Canadair requires that the company "shall comply with all labour conditions and with all health conditions and requirements applicable to the work". However, specific and detailed matters such as length of notice, or pay in lieu of notice, are matters of negotiation and agreement between the company and the local unit of the union and do not form part of the government's contract with the company.

I have been advised by Canadair Limited that all employees who were laid off received notice, or pay in lieu of notice, as provided in the agreement between the company and the local unit of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister, first, how much notice they received and, second, if he will discuss with his colleague the Minister of Labour whether it would be advisable to have inserted in all government contracts a provision that in any government contract the employer must at least comply with the minimum standards set out in the Canada Labour Code?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the minimum notice was three days. Notice was longer than that for salaried employees who had longer service. The length of notice varied with the length of service. I have already discussed this matter with my colleague the Minister of Labour.

TRANSPORT

AVAILABILITY OF RAILWAY COSTING FORMULA REPORT

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister say whether the new railway costing formula report will be ready for distribution before the recess?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, I cannot say, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

DAMAGE TO EQUIPMENT CAUSED BY DRAGGERS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the Minister of Fisheries is not here I will direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. On June 18 I asked the Minister of Fisheries a question relating to the dragger operation in northwestern Newfoundland which is interfering with the operations of the Newfoundland fishermen. The minister stated he had asked for a report. Has the parliamentary secretary a report to disclose to the house?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): I do not have the report, Mr. Speaker. I know there is to be one, but I do not have it here today.

[Mr. Richardson.]

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN RELIEF EFFORT—DAYLIGHT FLIGHTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I would normally direct this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but as he is not available and because of the importance of the question I will direct it to the Prime Minister. Earlier this year the government indicated that if Biafra were prepared to accept daylight flights this would substantially alter the government's position with regard to its willingness to participate in an air relief effort. Now that the authorities have indicated they are prepared to use the Uli airstrip for daylight purposes, will the Prime Minister advise what action the government is prepared to take? Has the Prime Minister or the government been in contact with the Nigerian authorities to see whether they will give clearance to the operation of a daylight relief effort?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I obtained a copy of the statement of the Biafran leader, Colonel Ojukwu. It is not very clear that the rebels are prepared to have daylight flights. As I read this statement, there are five conditions attached to it. I may remind the house that General Gowon offered to allow daylight flights on the sole condition that they not be used to bring in arms. This offer was made eight or nine months ago following negotiations by the Canadian government with General Gowon.

The statement made eight months later by Colonel Ojukwu contains the following conditions: (1) Should it become absolutely necessary; (2) while work on the exclusively relief airport is in progress; (3) the government is willing to consider the use of the Uli airport for combined day and night relief operations; (4) for a limited period; (5) subject to effective international or other third party guarantees.

This, Mr. Speaker, is in response to the Nigerian offer which has been outstanding for eight months and which is subject to only a single condition. It is not very encouraging. Our Canadian representatives in Lagos have repeatedly stated we want this daylight flight arrangement to be made. We still hope there will be a clear arrangement between the two governments that will permit it.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the uncertainty that even the Prime Minister has expressed with regard to the conditions to be imposed both by Biafra and Nigeria and the importance of a neutral third party to supervise such distribution, is the government taking steps now, perhaps in concert with the United Nations relief effort, to see whether third party mediation and assistance might be provided?

Mr. Trudeau: As the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, there have been several volunteer offers from third parties—African states and United States officials—to arrange for relief operations to that part of Nigeria called Biafra. There is nothing the Canadian government can announce to the house at this time regarding its further actions.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

INTEREST RATES—APPEARANCE OF MINISTER BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Now that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is going to study high interest rates in Canada, will the minister appear before the committee and give his views with regard to high interest rates charged by banks, the impropriety of their advertising techniques and also—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is referring to the course of proceedings in a committee. To that extent the question is not in order.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

VISIT TO LABRADOR OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. On what day this week will the standing committee visit Labrador in line with the committee's commitment of many months standing to do so?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member he is also dealing with internal matters of a committee. I doubt very much whether that question can be asked of the minister at this time.

Mr. Peddle: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, a point of order or a point of something: This is a very serious matter. In the absence of the chairman of the committee I ask that the minister answer, if possible.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that so far as I am concerned, and the extent of my responsibility in the matter, the committee can go to—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jamieson: —Labrador any time they wish. If it is appropriate at this time—I do not know at just what point in the proceedings it would be or if agreement of the house is required—I certainly have no objection.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—CHANGE IN POLICY RESPECTING INSURANCE COMPANIES PARTICIPATION

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Presuming on your tolerance, Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Ontario government's decision, the importance of medicare and the fact that the Prime Minister was looking for an answer in his files, would he care to answer my question on medicare?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was not actually looking for an answer in my files. I was looking to see which day a representative of the department answers in the house, and I find that today is one such day.

I am afraid I do not have the answer to the question, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—URBAN GROWTH—SUGGESTED FAILURE TO MEET CHALLENGE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West) moved:

That for the purpose of dealing particularly with the failure of the Prime Minister and the government to provide leadership in relation to the challenge of rapid urban growth as dealt with in the reports of the Economic Council of Canada and generally with the Privy Council estimates, consideration be given to the 1969-70 Privy Council estimates contained in the ninth report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates presented to the house on May 29, 1969.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to present my party's submissions regarding this motion. It is extremely unfortunate that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has seen fit to leave the chamber because I was going to wish him a happy birthday in terms of his first year in office, but as he is not here I will not do so. However, I think it is in order that we in the opposition congratulate hon. members on the other side, particularly new members who have completed their first year in parliament. As a new member myself I cannot say I am too happy with the progress that has been made. In any event, in my own charitable way I would like to wish this house a happy birthday.

In thinking of the date June 25 I recall that I was sent here as a representative of a portion of the great city of Hamilton, and I know that city sent me here to project the urban image, to be concerned about the need for leadership in regard to housing, pollution, the plight of old age pensioners and the problems of transportation. I must be concerned about the poor, and about how inflation and the high cost of living have drastically affected those on fixed incomes.

This past year has been very enlightening to me as a new member. I am very proud to have the opportunity to stand in this hallowed chamber in order to give some encouragement to the government and, as a matter of fact, some leadership. The government has failed to give leadership in the whole sphere of urban problems. In fact I suggest that during the past year the government became concerned about matters about which the Canadian people could not care less.

An hon. Member: Damp wheat?

Mr. Alexander: An hon. member mentions damp wheat. It has been of some concern, but I am vexed that as a result of the government giving first priority to the omnibus bill amending the Criminal Code we spent so much time debating homosexuality and abortion. I am also concerned about the fact that the government believes the official languages bill is a must for the betterment of all Canadians. Perhaps it is, but at a time when urban problems are of such vital importance I believe the government should have given priority to bringing forth ideas, leadership and enthusiasm to tackle the problems of urbanites.

The government stands condemned for its callous disregard, indecision and inaction in the face of one of the greatest challenges that modern Canada must meet. It has failed to provide the vigorous leadership required to meet the challenge of rapid urban growth.

Let me put it this way, Mr. Speaker: There is no greater area of concern to Canadians because we are increasingly becoming an urban people. The real problems which the great majority of our people face are problems related to urban life and the quality of that life. We seem to have forgotten the men, women and children who live in the cities. They have problems that, as I say, can only be resolved by farsighted government leadership, leadership which the present administration seems unable and unwilling to produce.

The facts of Canada's urban nature are well documented, and I do not have to go into them at any great length. The fourth report of the Economic Council of Canada has pointed out that Canada has the fastest rate of urban growth of all industrially advanced countries. By 1980 we will live in a society that will be 80 per cent urban. By that year 60 per cent of all Canadians will live and work in a total of 20 Canadian cities, of which Hamilton will be one.

When I think of how the government is trying to emasculate the role of the individual Member of Parliament, first with its proposed infamous rule 16A and now with its proposed rule 75C, I am concerned, and I believe it is necessary that I rise to plead the problems of the urban dweller with the government. There is no way that we on this side of the house can continue to stand by and allow the government to erode the function of a Member of Parliament who represents some 89,000 people.

The people of Canada are demanding action from the government. They want a government which is aware of the pressing needs of urbanites, which has enough compassion to care about their problems, and which is willing to exert vigorous leadership in the fight to enhance the quality of urban life. Does the present government meet any of these specific requirements? I submit that it does not have compassion. I submit that it does not have the leadership qualifications. I submit it has neither the will nor the interest.

Let no one deny the dimensions of the problems of our urban centres. Their dimensions have been clearly outlined by the government's own advisory body, the Economic Council of Canada. In its fourth report the Economic Council of Canada painted a dark picture of the environment in which most Canadians are forced to live. It states:

• (3:40 p.m.)

Shortage and inadequacy of urban housing, traffic and transportation problems, air and water pollution, the confused jumble of conflicting land uses, decaying neighbourhoods and monotonous suburbs, urban poverty and social disgrace . . . these are the familiar problems to the average Canadian city dweller today.

My goodness, how can this government sit so complacently and so smugly when this picture sits smack on all fours on its doorstep? With problems like this how does the government expect the cities to cope with the continuous pressures of the next period of rapid expansion expected during the 1970's? Without concerted and co-ordinated action by the government now, the bulk of the Canadian people can only expect further deterioration in their surroundings. Concern and vision for the quality of urban life are fundamental requirements of good government. In this government we find that concern and vision seem to have been eroded by the philosophies of political theory. What does this government really do? It simply conjures up a constitutional smokescreen designed to conceal its refusal to exercise real leadership in meeting the problems generated by the Canadian urban explosion. In short, what they say is that the vast majority of the problems belong within provincial jurisdiction.

In Canada we have a federal system and each level of government must act within its legislative competence. But the constitution is no obstacle to federal initiative in these matters. The important words are initiative and leadership. The federal government is very much involved in the life of our cities right now. Through the normal exercise of its legitimate responsibilities the federal government has a very great impact on the direction of growth and change in our urban centres. Indeed, many of the crucial components of real urban planning fall within the responsibilities of the ministers opposite.

This afternoon I wish to mention a few areas of urban concern in which the federal government can, should and must be more effective. Even a brief examination of the record shows that the present government has failed to develop the areas in which it does have jurisdiction. Given this attitude of indifference, our cities may in fact be fortunate the federal government is not totally responsible for their well-being.

An announcement was made by the province of Ontario and in this regard a question was asked by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). He asked whether the Prime Minister or the minister of housing, since the province of Ontario has given this government leadership, would look into the possibility of such a program being initiated across the country.

The largest over-all physical impact on the growth of our urban centres will be felt in the field of housing. The failure of this government to come to grips with the real issues involved in the housing crisis has been fully documented in the house by myself and other members of our party. It is obvious that a truly concerned federal government could exercise a profound influence on the growth of our cities in this field. A few comments about the possibilities for urban renewal and rehabilitation should suffice to illustrate the general unwillingness of the government to be of help to our cities. The poor of the slums and the cores of Canadian cities are still waiting for the thaw in the general freeze on public housing projects, particularly urban renewal projects. Since the political demise of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) the present minister has been kind enough to accede to some immediate requirements. But the general freeze is still on.

As I read the papers daily I am confused concerning what the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing has on his mind. I was under the impression at one time he had indicated to me that a decision would be made prior to the time the house recessed for the summer holidays. Now it appears that the minister wants to travel about the country in order to re-examine and reassess the same 12 cities that have been reexamined and reassessed for the past eight months. How much more can we stand of this type of thing? The city of Hamilton, which has a commitment of some $4 million to $5 million with regard to its urban renewal program, and many other cities are waiting for the government to make up its mind concerning what it intends to do. The minister has said that he is thinking about the matter. At least that is a positive statement. I understand that he intends to make a statement soon. I tell the minister that the poor cannot wait much longer and that the commercial aspect is secondary.

I warn the minister that he must not succumb to pressures from any of his more complacent colleagues in this regard. He must not provide merely for the regionally selective approval of such projects. The poor of Toronto, Vancouver, Calgary and Hamilton—you name them—are among the real victims and are not the causes of inflation. Decent human housing for these people in the richer provinces cannot be postponed even in the cause of the anti-inflationary fight. The minister must clear up immediately the uncertainty surrounding the whole question of urban renewal, with which I have concerned myself since I was elected to parliament and had the nerve to stand up and say something. I have pursued it with vigour and I hope with responsibility. I hope the minister will clear up the uncertainty surrounding urban renewal because if he does not the effect could be disastrous. The minister was begged to do so by the Canadian Association of Mayors and Municipalities in their brief of April 21, 1969. This association, whose members have to face the problems of deterioration of the older sections of our cities, stated that the real problem was "the absence of any clear directives regarding urban renewal schemes". The breif continued:

> It is essential that the new urban renewal policy be defined and announced without further delay so as to enable the many concerned municipalities to amend schemes where possible and to proceed with implementation.

Action is being called for, but where is the action? When it comes to action, for the life of me I cannot understand why the government is hesitant to proclaim, institute, initiate and bring forth a separate ministry of housing and urban development. When we think of what I originally stated, that in another 20 years some 80 per cent or 90 per cent of our people will live in urban centres, surely we must wonder how anyone can state in 1969 that such a ministry is not required at this time. Such a ministry would set priorities, would determine involvement, would agree to guidelines and would separate jurisdictional functions, at the same time working together with the several provinces and the municipalities in order to come up with concrete answers to the very complex problems which are the result of urban expansion.

• (3:50 p.m.)

All I hope is that when the minister makes up his mind about urban renewal he will not forget the poor or exclude them. Regardless of the fact that Ontario may be one of the rich provinces, there are many poor people in Ontario and in all the large cities who demand and need attention. These people belong to the new era, the era of concern and social awareness. In their awareness they are also concerned about transportation.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Transportation is another area in which the federal government could take a leading role, just as I have said that the government must give leadership in meeting the challenge of urban growth. Our cities are truly communities in motion. The federal government could exercise a strong influence on the pattern of growth of our urban centres through its transportation policy and through the exercise of its regulatory powers in the development of waterways, ports, airports, pipelines, etc.

The activities of such Crown corporations as Air Canada and Canadian National Railways are also crucial. I was glad to hear the former Prime Minister direct a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) about the inconvenience and frustration resulting from inadequate service on the part of Canadian National Railways. Many people are desirous of taking holidays in our beautiful western provinces. They are told that they must make their reservations a year in advance, which seems ridiculous, or that there is not enough service to accommodate the people who want to go.

A transportation policy could be a potent tool in the guiding and planning of urban growth. With all due respect to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing, I think he had better start talking about transportation with his colleagues in terms of giving it priority because the need will develop as urban growth develops. As I said earlier, too often the government has simply adopted a policy to fit the uncontrolled and unplanned urban sprawl. I want to give the government a little hint. We had the good fortune to be involved a while ago with men from the United States. They were talking about their great megalopolises and what transportation problems mean to these great cities of the future. It is their humble opinion that transportation should be of prime concern to government.

At one point it appeared as though there might be some hope in respect of the transportation problems of our cities. They are important, and I cannot understand why the government always says that transportation is a provincial matter. The Task Force on Housing and Urban Development, composed of individuals with competence and intelligence, travelled throughout the country and after much deliberation came up with certain conclusions. One of them was:

> The federal government should encourage and co-ordinate a broad program of practical research into urban transportation problems and consider, as other spending priorities permit, establishing a program of loans to municipalities for the development of effective urban transit systems.

It appears that the hon. member for Trinity discovered what all Canadians are slowly discovering, that this administration is not concerned and is insensitive to the problems of our urban population.

Mr. Baldwin: They have no compassion.

Mr. Alexander: Did I hear someone use the word "compassion"? This government has no compassion; it is complacent and indifferent. Yet it is in the great cities that its members got their votes. They have talked about Trudeaumania but let me tell them that even if they have 151 seats we have three and a half more years to go and things are starting to look tough over there already.

An hon. Member: Come on over, Linc.

Mr. Alexander: Don't worry, I will never go over there because the price is not right, nor do I need the formal friendship. On an informal basis we can always get together.

Where will Canada get the direction it needs? The answer to that question is that it will have to come from this side under the leadership of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), who has continually requested the government to accept responsibility regarding the priorities required by the people of Canada.

I was not here when the motion concerning air and water pollution was debated. The fact is that the government has also failed in this field. Since the house has received a full account of the policy sins of the government in that regard as recently as Monday last I will not go into that sorry tale in any depth today.

What I have been trying to do is to outline some areas of federal responsibility which have a real impact on the quality of urban living and in respect of which the federal government has blatantly refused to exercise its responsibility. This list could be extended, but of course other hon. members want to take part in this debate and may mention more.

The federal government has become more involved in programs related to human resources. Manpower retraining, unemployment insurance and assistance to the needy are programs which are basically urban oriented. They are attempts to help people cope with and adapt to the real and crippling problems which face the disadvantaged in our cities.

My main point, and I want to re-emphasize this, is that the federal government is very deeply involved in the cities. The fate of millions of Canadians is in its hands. The government cannot refer its problems to the constitutional limbo, the constitutional straitjacket, the constitutional smokescreen. It cannot cover up its failure to meet its responsibilities to provide effective leadership.

The chorus of demands is rising and becoming more blatant. In case the Prime Minister and his accomplices have just not got around to reading the report of the Task Force on Housing and Urban Development, perhaps I should read a few examples of the type of action requested by the little people of this country. For instance:

The federal government, in co-operation with a provincial government, should seriously consider the construction of a "new city" as a pilot project where proposed urban solutions should be tested in an actual environment.

I hope the minister heard that and is considering the construction of a new city as a pilot project where these proposed urban solutions could be tested in an actual environment.

The task force also recommended that the federal government "should give early priority to the creation of a central information bank to collect, organize and disseminate available data on the subject to other governments, agencies and Canadians generally."

This report has been gathering dust while Canadians suffer. Somehow we must prick the conscience of the ministers of the government and of the Prime Minister especially. It is so easy to miss and not to see the problems and the deterioration of our cities. We could learn from the experience of the United States. I just want to touch on two points.

As a result of neglect and unconcern, as a result of the attitude that things will get better on the part of governments to the south, we have witnessed an eruption in that country the like of which we have never seen before. This is because some people there did not learn a lesson. We have to be concerned and we have to learn from experiences that are continually brought to our eyes and ears as a result of the United States social revolution. Surely we cannot be this close and not learn the lesson. Surely we cannot be this close and not realize that somebody over there is trying to tell us something. Why will the Prime Minister not take real action to prevent the erosion of our cities, to prevent the type of development we are witnessing at the present time in the United States of America? What a confrontation that is. It is not only black versus white; the whole society is in an uproar.

• (4:00 p.m.)

What is needed is a federal model of the ideal city. What is needed is a well thought-out conception of what Canadian urban life should be like during the 1970's and 1980's. Only when the federal government has developed a carefully articulated model of city life, of what the total environment of the majority of citizens might be, can the present contradictory and self-defeating bumblings of the various departments be replaced by a co-ordinated, planned federal effort in Canadian cities.

Only if such a conception is developed will the other levels of government know what the federal government is likely to do that affects them. Only then will they be able to develop over-all plans tied directly to federal transportation plans, for example. Only then will they be able to plan total city development without the constant fear that now exists of the whole applecart being upset by sudden and sporadic federal intervention. Only in this way will we be able to eliminate squabbles and hassles such as those surrounding the selection of the site for the new Montreal airport. Only in this way will residents of the golden horseshoe of Oshawa, Toronto, Burlington and Hamilton be able to obtain an effective, co-ordinated transportation system involving rapid surface transit, regional jetports, local urban city airports, and so on.

Let me emphasize once again, Mr. Speaker, that the people of our provinces and cities have a right to know—indeed they have an absolute need to know—exactly what the federal government has in mind for our cities of the future and what the quality of life is expected to be, if we are to have effective government and political participation at local and provincial levels. We still have a chance in Canada. I am not pessimistic in this regard; in fact, I am optimistic because we have a very potent opposition. That is the only reason I am optimistic. We have a chance which is denied to many unfortunate souls locked into many American cities. We have a chance to save our cities. We are in a battle against time. But most of all, we in this house are in a battle against massive federal indifference to the fate of our cities.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Here I am making a major speech on the problems of urban expansion and I am speaking to only four members on the government side of the house. Can you beat that, Mr. Speaker? This is the type of participatory democracy we are going to have.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Alexander: I shall be only about 30 seconds more, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alexander: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that the price of failure in these battles is disaster. I refer to the battles we face in connection with the problems that exist in our urban centres. If the federal government refuses to take up the challenge of the cities, it and millions of us along with it will suffer the fate of all those who remain in clouds of smoke, whether they be constitutional or otherwise. All will suffer a fatal cancer, in this instance a terminal case of cancer of the cities.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the federal government has a significant and pervasive stake in the future of the urban environment of Canada. There is no doubt about that. Its decisions and activities touch communities all across this country. Its record shows it is aware of the responsibilities inherent in that fact. The role of the government has been an effective one, one that has been largely accepted by provincial, and municipal governments and authorities throughout Canada. This effectiveness and acceptability arise in large part out of the influence of the National Housing Act.

The National Housing Act has financed or guaranteed the financing of a substantial portion of new residential construction. The size of this contribution, to get the facts on the record, can be seen in the fact that half of Canada's existing stock of 5.4 million dwellings has been built since world war II. Forty per cent of these, many of them in urban centres, were aided under one or another of the provisions of the National Housing Act. That act has influenced not only the number of new dwellings, their manner of financing, their architectural design and community planning; it has also encouraged anti-pollution measures, urban renewal and slum clearance. It has assisted particularly in meeting the special needs of students, low income families, the aged, the handicapped and the disadvantaged.

Increasingly over the past few years direct federal financial aid has been allocated to the area of social housing. More than $300 million has been invested in the production of limited dividend housing for low income families, some $125 million in loans to non-profit corporations, mainly for housing for the elderly.

Mr. Lewis: Over what period?

Mr. Andras: I will give the hon. member the comparison in a minute. Three hundred million dollars has been lent for public housing, and $160 million has been invested in federal-provincial public housing. In excess of $300 million has been made available in the way of loans to student housing projects. Virtually every Canadian city of major size has turned to the federal government for assistance in planning and implementing urban renewal programs. At the same time, more than 1,000 municipalities in this country have received loans totalling more than $300 million to assist in the construction or expansion of sewage treatment facilities. Under the terms of the National Housing Act one-quarter of this amount has been written off by the federal government.

Over the years federal legislation has kept abreast of changing municipal requirements by constantly updating the National Housing Act. Just the other day the house dealt with several important measures which are addressed squarely to meeting some of the more pressing needs of municipalities. Indeed, I can assure hon. members that since that time all the provinces and many municipalities which have recorded their feelings in this regard have indicated that they welcome the latest changes, particularly the broader assistance to assemble raw land for all housing purposes. We know from our discussions with them that they look to this measure not only as a means of reducing the high cost of serviced land but as a real incentive, facility and instrument for planning. Also welcomed universally across Canada was the proposal to extend the forgiveness period on loans for sewage treatment projects.

Although the federal government has contributed substantially to these areas of civic improvement, it has no prerogative in the actual physical planning of our municipalities. There have developed in many large urban communities complex, complicated, overlapping networks of municipalities in a single urban area, each responsible, autonomously almost, for its own planning, its own struggle for a balanced assessment between industrial and residential use, and all without regard to the larger urban area of which it forms a part. There is in most urban places the lack of an over-all plan of urban development for the whole area in which future growth is to take place. Consequently, instead of urban regional plans for the development of industry, housing, education, transportation, open spaces, recreation, pollution control and urban renewal on a regional basis there exist in many cases municipal restrictions to exclude those activities which do not produce sufficient municipal taxes to carry them.

The co-ordination of urban regional planning in Canada is the responsibility of the provinces, and only the provinces can take the direct action which is required to provide the necessary solutions. There is, of course, an inclination to think the federal role in contributing to the urban fabric has been confined to housing. In reality, many federal departments and programs have contributed to the urban development process. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been invested in the construction of modern airport facilities, railway and terminal facilities and harbour facilities, all of which are essential for healthy urban growth.

Federal contributions to universities in 1968 and 1969 total about half a billion dollars, and to assist the provinces in the provision of adequate hospital care in our urban centres more than three-quarters of a billion dollars was spent in 1968 and 1969. Universities and hospitals must be considered as two essential and significant modern community enterprises.

The federal government has sponsored and supported information, educational and research activities directed toward the improvement of housing conditions and community development. Individuals, educational institutions and such well known organizations as the Canadian Housing Design Council, the Community Planning Association of Canada and the Canadian Council on Urban and Regional Research, continue to receive federal financial assistance. Virtually every major Canadian city has turned to the federal government for assistance in planning and implementing urban renewal programs. More than 200 towns and cities have undertaken urban renewal studies aimed at improving the local environment.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion is preparing to assist provinces financially to provide the necessary social infrastructure in a number of urban centres where it is clear that industry is going to settle due to the government's industry incentive program.

In his remarks opening the debate the hon. member referred to the subject of urban transportation. It is felt by many that there is an urban transportation crisis in Canada. This is purported to be a compound of congestion caused by an increase in automobiles, which is in part an effect of urban development, and the needs of public transit systems which cannot be financed from fares and which therefore require municipal subsidy. The argument has been put forward—and I detected overtones of this in the hon. member's observations—that the federal government, through initiatives under the National Housing Act, has caused suburban subdivisions to develop rapidly while failing to contribute to the solution of the concomitant problem of increased vehicular traffic and the difficulty of providing increased public transport to serve those areas. Further, it is argued that the high cost of scarce urban land has driven developers farther and farther from the centre of the city. The public transportation system set up to serve these commuters is often inadequate. Indeed, sometimes no such system exists.

In earlier days of national development, transcontinental transportation was accepted as a federal responsibility. The argument is now advanced that the concentration of Canada's population and wealth in approximately 29 urban areas makes the transportation of persons and goods a national economic and social problem, albeit with an urban focus. Yet the central government remains uninvolved.

In the first place, it is not the federal government but the provincial and local governments which determine the pattern of urban settlement, whether low density or high density, suburban or downtown. It is simply a myth that the pattern of suburban growth in this country has been determined by the kind of mortgage insurance aid offered under the National Housing Act. These lending aids are equally available whether a building is suburban or downtown, high rise or low rise, compact or dispersed. The premise of this argument, then, is nonsense. As to its substance, it is true that urban roads and public transportation systems are enormously expensive and that they constitute one of the main burdens which local governments bear. For the most part, however, they serve the residents of the area in which they are located and it is difficult to accept the view that responsibility for meeting these costs should be borne by the federal level of government. If local governments lack funds with which to meet the costs of the transportation services they should provide, they must also lack funds with which to pay for all the other things they need to provide. And they do, in many cases. This situation, however, reflects the acknowledged general financial difficulties facing local government and does not represent a transportation problem as such.

Contrary to the assumptions of the hon. member, the federal government will be playing an increasingly important part in transportation research. Recently the government contributed $75,000 toward the expenses of the first Canadian urban transportation conference and provision has been made in both the Transport Act and the Canadian Transport Commission Act for research studies to be carried out in this field, the results of which, it is hoped, will produce long-term benefits for all cities. But this is something quite different from taking a direct position, city by city, or province by province, in actual urban transportation activities.

Reference has been made to pollution, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) stated in the house a few days ago on June 24, the government intends to make a policy statement in the house concerning the proposed Canada water act and to engage in discussions with the provinces during the summer in preparation for introduction of legislation at the next session. Hon. members, I know, are awaiting this legislation to learn what measures of pollution control it will involve.

If one looks at the urban community, the results of the federal government's involvement can be seen in the homes, in the central city and in the suburbs. It can be seen in airport and railway facilities and in major urban utilities. The integrated plans of major urban centres are influenced by or depend upon the exercise of federal legislative powers in many areas including research, building standards, building methods, urban transportation, the gathering, interpretation and publication of statistics, transport, railways, pipelines, telephone lines, canals, navigable waterways, aerial navigation, radio, television, interprovincial and international trucks and buses, health and welfare, income maintenance programs, health grants and physical fitness grants.

Indeed, one could say that since 80 per cent of the population will be living in major urban centres by 1980, to quote the hon. member opposite when he reminded us of an often-used Economic Council forecast, it can be argued that the whole of government will be largely devoted to the urban environment. Indeed, one might say that since 70 per cent of the population is already living in urban centres the government is even now devoting most of its activities to urban affairs. Certainly, virtually every government program has direct implications for the urban environment, and many international programs carry indirect implications.

• (4:20 p.m.)

It is not very long since I spoke in the house on the amendments recently made to the National Housing Act. I have no intention of repeating what I said in detail at that time but most of it is strictly relevant to the present debate. Because of all the urban problems that beset us today, none is more important than the shortage of housing. We cannot have good cities without adequate housing. I grant you, Mr. Speaker, housing is not the only important urban problem, but it is a vital one, the correction of which has been enormously aided by the federal government over the years.

To come back to the hon. member's point about time frames during the 1960's to date about 1.1 million new dwellings have been started in Canadian cities that have a population of over 5,000 people. I think this is significant because it represents over 20 per cent of the entire occupied stock of dwellings in Canada today. During the same period over half a million new dwellings, the great bulk of them in the same urban areas, were aided in one way or another under the terms of the National Housing Act.

This represents a major indicator of the scale of the federal presence in the growth and development of urban Canada. It is in no small part due to the role of federal housing legislation that Canada has been able to sustain rates of house building over the post-war period that were well in excess of the demands created by population growth. As a result there has been continued progress in the reduction of housing shortages, and nowhere have these improvements been more dramatic than in our cities.

Despite the rapid growth of urban population the number of doubled-up families in Canada has declined from about 450,000 in 1961 to under 300,000 today. And the number of substandard dwellings in occupation has declined even more rapidly.

Mr. Gilbert: Give us the figures.

Mr. Andras: Nevertheless, while there is some satisfaction in the consideration that things are better than they were, I will be the first to agree that we need still more houses in our cities and elsewhere. We need to replace the obsolete ones and to rehabilitate the substandard ones that are salvageable. As I said in the house during the debate on the housing act amendments, the remaining shortage is still too large. The government is particularly concerned about the special plight of the poor, the old and the dependent who endure the main brunt of the suffering that this kind of burden entails.

On the subject of housing for low income people in this country, it is fair to say that the federal government has represented the principal source of funds for virtually all such housing. While we do not deny to the provinces their prerogative of initiating many of these projects, and while they do not deny to themselves a large share of the kudos for this kind of activity, I would remind hon. members that the lion's share of capital costs and operating subsidies is borne by the federal government.

We hope this year in the field of housing for low income people to undertake a program larger than ever before. The scale of this acceleration will be appreciated better if it is put in an historical perspective. To the end of 1968, under the housing act funds had been committed for the provision of 82,000 housing units specifically intended for low income and elderly people. Of these, 34,000 have been sponsored by limited dividend companies and 6,000 by non-profit companies. Federal-provincial partnerships have been responsible for the initiation of 17,000 units. Federal loans to provincial and local housing authorities account for 25,000 units. It has taken 20 years to achieve this total of 82,000 units in the field of low income housing. This year alone we hope to make commitments for over 20,000 units under these programs, which I am sure you will agree is a serious indication of our purpose in this area.

Closely related to the issue of housing for low income people is the problem of blight that characterizes the areas where many of them live in our cities—the problem of urban renewal. Successive amendments to the National Housing Act have made available generous grants and loans to provinces and municipalities to enable them to tackle the problems of urban blight and functional obsolescence. The availability of federal funds has generated a great deal of interest across Canada in these important questions.

The federal government has made available grants to municipalities for city-wide urban renewal studies. One hundred and eighty municipalities have taken advantage of the 75 per cent federal grants for this purpose and have completed or are in the process of completing such studies. Those municipalities will have available to them information on the social, economic and physical problems related to old neighbourhoods and to those areas of the city where the urban pattern is no longer functional. This program of urban renewal studies has served as more than an instrument of renewal. It has also triggered and been useful in one of the most important, broad urban planning ventures ever undertaken on a national scale.

In addition, the federal government has assisted 132 municipalities to prepare schemes for areas determined and identified as in need of renewal by these city-wide studies. Grants totalling $3.5 million have been committed for this purpose.

Finally, the federal government has committed $168 million to assist municipalities to implement urban renewal schemes.

This program has grown quite rapidly, from relatively insignificant proportions to one of the most important areas of concern, in the short span of the last half a dozen years. Perhaps because of its very rapid growth we find today serious questions being asked from many directions about urban renewal, such as questions about citizen participation. During the last two or three weeks some very interesting delegations have come to see me about this matter. For example, a delegation from Chinese communities across Canada came to see me to express their concern. Here is a kinship group, an ethnic group that looks after its own and stands together. It has cohesive unity and is to be respected. In North America, in the name of urban renewal policies and under other policies, hundreds of so-called Chinatowns have been eliminated to the extent that today there are 16 or less.

In addition, the Kensington market people came to see me four or five weeks ago at a time when I was immersing myself in the jargon of housing, and I was able to recognize the alienation of this group. Nobody has talked to this group or consulted them about bulldozing their home and demolishing this area, the very place where they have felt safe and secure. Surely this sort of feeling among people must be recognized, and certainly it has been put before me. This is one of the dilemmas that is facing me in so many of the urban renewal projects that are put before me for final approval. I want to consult such groups before we move blithely ahead in the name of progress.

Mr. Alexander: Would the minister permit one question in this regard?

Mr. Andras: Yes.

Mr. Alexander: Will the minister advise us whether he is going to make a tour of the 12 cities that happen to be involved in urban renewal before he comes to a decision? Many of us would like to know whether this is the case and it is a suggestion the minister might pursue. Certainly I should like to know whether the minister intends to visit these cities, including Hamilton, before he comes to a decision on federal government involvement.

Mr. Andras: I assure the hon. member I have no program that would deliberately delay action in this respect. I do not think the hon. member would want me to be a rubberstamp.

Mr. Alexander: Oh no.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Andras: I think the hon. member would want me conscientiously to examine the problems and to find out whether I have the whole story from those who are affected. But I assure the hon. member I have no intention of making marks on a map or headlines in a paper. I do not have all the answers today but I think that a systematic tour may perhaps be helpful. I think some of these problems I have alluded to can be resolved fairly quickly. Although the hon. member who proposed this motion labours under pressures, I hope he will support me. I wish to do a rational job in this field because the implications of first decisions are apt to be far-reaching.

In that context, Mr. Speaker, may I say that when I assumed responsibility for housing at the federal level I felt it was important that we should examine carefully priorities and objectives in the field of urban renewal. We learned much. I learned a great deal from those people I talked to. Nevertheless, we have a lot more to learn about urban renewal. We do not wish to rush ahead with any programs without giving full consideration to those kinds of representations. Some things have already become clear.

As I said a short time ago, the participation of citizens who are affected by urban renewal is essential to the success of that operation. In my opinion that participation must cut in at a very much lower level than it has in many of the urban renewal projects of the past. Careful consideration must be given to the rehabilitation of structures which must be saved. Municipalities should be prepared, surely, to adopt and enforce bylaws of maintenance and occupancy standards. Those bylaws are necessary if we are to get on with the job; otherwise renewed areas may deteriorate and fall back into the condition they were in originally. We will need to introduce new urban renewal programs all over again in that case. May I say that the cities of Toronto and Ottawa have made considerable strides in this field, as have many other centres in Canada.

In recent weeks I have talked to a number of mayors and their officials about their programs. I had the honour to address the mayors of Canada when they were gathered here in conference a few weeks ago and to explain to them the process of the study we have undertaken. All I can say in the face of all questions that have been asked is that I fully recognize the urgent necessity for decisions to be made on urban renewal projects. There have been long periods of planning, and we must act on commitments that have been made over the last few years. We have behind us about 148 plans that have to be acted on pretty quickly. We must bring in decisions on those as quickly as possible. I hope to proceed as quickly as possible to visit actual sites which are slated for renewal. I am sure that hon. members feel that the wisest course for me to follow is for me to visit these sites as quickly as possible. I may undertake another tour and do some on the spot examination of conditions.

There is much more that I could say on the subject but I will limit my remarks since I am sure other hon. members wish to take part in this debate. Much that I have to say would be a repetition of what I said on second reading of Bill C-192. As hon. members know, something has been done about land costs. We have widened the provisions with respect to land assembly to make land available for all housing purposes, and this program is being supported by other and further means of financing. I confess that I know of no simple solution to the complex problem of land costs; neither does anyone else with whom I have discussed this subject so far. It seems to me, however, that some headway can be made if the provinces and municipalities will themselves assume responsibility to a much greater extent than heretofore for the acquisition, planning, subdividing and servicing of residential land. Considerable progress could be made if that responsibility were assumed. After all, the next decade or two will be the decisive period in the planning of Canadian cities and, indeed, of our great urban regions. It has been said before, and I repeat it again, that the building of great cities cannot be measured simply in terms of size or efficiency. There is also the quality of the environment they provide for a healthy and satisfying life for the people.

The challenge of the city will call for the highest degree of co-operation between departments within government, between different levels of government and between all these and the building industry—the lenders, planners, architects, social scientists, as well as between all those and all other interested groups and professions. And more crucial than all this is the participation of the people directly affected. This participation I think will take diverse forms—forms which range from obstruction to zealous support, from special pleading to genuine community involvement and from widespread concurrence to, I suppose, painful conflicts of interest. It is only through the expression—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I shall be finished in a couple of minutes.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the minister unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Alleged Failure to Cope With Urban Growth

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I emphasize that it is only through the expression and resolution of these creative tensions that the urban artifacts we create will be given authentic vitality. As I have said in the house previously, it is my intention to do all I can to foster this spirit of co-operation which will be so vitally required.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, will the minister permit a question before he sits down? Officials in Vancouver and various groups have expressed the urgent hope that the minister will visit urban renewal projects in that area. Has he decided to go to Vancouver?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I am very keen to do this because of representations made directly by the Chinese. There are other considerations prompting me to do this having to do with the Strathcona project and the A-1 project. I must consult my time schedule because I do not wish to delay too long. The hon. member's area is one of the areas I should prefer to see before any final decision is made.

Mr. Gilbert: Will the minister permit another question, Mr. Speaker? Can he tell us how many public housing units are to be built in Canada this year and what moneys the government has allocated for this purpose?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have not at my fingertips a breakdown of the C.M.H.C. capital budget. I am looking at the combination of that program which we know as "16". There is limited dividend housing under what we know as "16A". There are also non-profit programs and the two direct assistance projects which involve 75 per cent federal and 25 per cent provincial participation. There is also our 35D program with respect to federal loans to provincial housing authorities. Altogether, and I hope the hon. member will bear with me as I look at the figures, current programs for low income housing needs are set at $395 million this year. I shall have to do some addition in order to arrive at more accurate figures. Last year we put into public housing the sum of $149 million. This year I have allocated for that purpose directly the sum of $180 million. It should be remembered in that context that the limited dividend figure for last year was $27 million; for this year it is to be $80 million. For non-profit, 16A housing, the figure in this area last year was $59 million. This year it is to be $80 million. I will obtain a breakdown later on, but these figures indicate that we shall be building 20,000 units.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) for placing the motion we are now discussing on the order paper and for his very excellent introduction of the motion.

I suggest the speech to which we have just listened by the amiable Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) in charge of housing was the very best illustration possible of the fact that he and his colleagues in the government do not even understand the language of the motion and the problems about which most of us are concerned. I was rather surprised to hear him indulge in a kind of sophistry that really was depressing to me, a sophistry that says everything we do has to do with urban people; our manpower programs, hospital commitments, contributions to universities and all these things are helping the urban problem. I was surprised the minister did not mention the fact that our expenditures in the realm of national defence are also for the defence of our cities as well as our countryside. I say to the minister this is not the problem at all.

The minister should not indulge in the kind of sophistry which says the federal government spends money that is of benefit to the Canadian people and since 70 per cent of the Canadian people live in cities, obviously they are beneficiaries of the policies of the federal government. This is not the issue. It is not the problem put before the minister. He has not dealt with the problem at all. He has not even shown that he understands what the problem is about.

The problem in my opinion is as stated by the hon. member for Hamilton West and the Economic Council of Canada. It is precisely because of our constitutional division of power, because the municipalities are the creatures of the provincial legislatures under our constitution, because the authority is divided, and because the municipalities do not have the funds to deal with the problem, that it is essential in all areas of urban concern for the federal government, speaking for all the people of Canada, to take the initiative and leadership in getting the provinces and municipalities to discuss and, if possible, to solve the municipal problems.

No one is arguing with the minister or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about the constitution. Every hon. member in this house, lawyer, non-lawyer, whether he has been here one year or ten years, knows what is obvious. The minister does not have to spend time underlining the fact that this is the prerogative of the provinces and municipalities and that he does not have the authority to plan municipal growth. We know that.

What the people of Canada, 70 per cent of them living in the urban regions of Canada, are saying to this government is that decades of neglect have resulted in intractable problems in our cities. They say the federal government has a duty to take the initiative in leadership to seek a solution to these problems because if this is not done in time we will have the same kind of violent reaction on the streets of our cities as the United States has had on the streets of its cities. This is the issue to which we want the government to address itself.

The minister does not have to spend time persuading hon. members that no matter what authority they belong to, these problems are difficult and cannot be solved overnight, that there are many differences of opinion as to what should be done about public housing, urban renewal, the size of cities and that many countries of the world have found these problems very difficult and heavy. The minister does not have to waste his time telling us that. Everyone in this house knows this problem will not be solved overnight, but they and all Canadians know the problem will never be solved unless a start is made in organizing the agencies for its solution. This is where the failure of the government comes in.

If one analyses the election of the Prime Minister and this government exactly a year ago, one sees that in no area has the Prime Minister and his government so blatantly betrayed the expectations they raised in the minds of the Canadian people than in their failure to provide leadership toward a solution of the urban problems in Canada today. I watched the election which ended exactly a year ago today. I visited constituents in my riding. I also visited other ridings and spoke in a good many other places. The one thing that struck me about the reaction of the people who said they would support Mr. Trudeau and his colleagues at that time—permit me to use the name of the Prime Minister in this context—was that he gave the impression he had some kind of feel for the fact the urban people were being oppressed by a lack of transportation, crowded streets, lack of recreational facilities for the children, lack of day-care nurseries for the children of working mothers and the alienation of people in apartment houses. They believed this man who led the Liberal party had some sense in dealing with all these problems. They thought he had a feeling for the fact there was change in the community and for the realization that the centre of that change in a modern industrial society was the metropolitan area, necessarily and inevitably. These people voted for this man and his party a year ago today because of the expectation they had that the Prime Minister had some kind of sensitivity about the problems of people living in the large metropolitan areas of Canada as well as the smaller urban communities. How wrong they were!

I say not only as a member of an opposition party but as a Canadian that the Prime Minister, the minister in charge of housing and all the other members of this government ought to look at themselves in the mirror, if they can stand it, to see what they have done to betray the expectations they raised exactly a year ago. There is still time for them to correct the situation.

The issue, as stated by the hon. member for Hamilton West, is where the government should direct its attention and its initiative. I cannot suggest a blueprint in the 20 minutes I am allowed; however, I will make two concrete suggestions in a moment. The Economic Council of Canada in its fourth annual review stated the problem as follows:

> —there has long been widespread concern about the mounting deficiencies of our cities and the heavy backlogs of essential improvements. Shortages and inadequacy of urban housing, traffic and transport problems, air and water pollution, the confused jumble of conflicting land uses, decaying neighbourhoods and monotonous suburbs, urban poverty and social disturbance, steadily rising property tax burdens and the frustrations of municipal administration—these are familiar problems to the average Canadian city dweller today.

We ask the government to direct its attention to these issues outlined by the Economic Council of Canada. In their report they also state these issues have become so important for all the people of Canada that they are national problems requiring national attention and solution.

• (4:50 p.m.)

What the minister has to face is not the fact that he is at last doing a little bit more for public housing, but the criminality of having stopped public housing for most of the past winter. This is what he has to face. He has to face not the excuse that he is at last doing something about urban redevelopment but the criminality of having frozen those programs, and having raised the freeze on only 12, leaving 148 requests—I think that was the number he gave—waiting for his attention, let alone his action. It is not sufficient for him to boast that he is putting extra money into housing programs. There is the fact that over the years we have dealt so inadequately with housing problems altogether.

Above all, the minister has to explain to the people of Canada what kind of arid, legalistic mind could have thought up the idea that we cannot have a minister of housing and urban affairs but we can have a Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. What kind of arid, legalistic mind could satisfy itself with that kind of interpretation of the constitution, with the result that instead of leaving a department of housing and urban affairs, instead of having adequate staff to deal with the things that I am sure the minister is anxious to deal with, he is hemmed in through lack of adequate staff, not to mention the fact that he takes a cut in his salary, undeservedly, Mr. Speaker? However, I am not offering to negotiate that for him. He ought to do that himself. He ought to refuse to be treated this way. That is his business, not mine. He does not have the department he requires in order to deal with the problems with which I am sure he would like to deal.

The minister has to explain what kind of arid, legalistic mind can refuse to set up a national council for urban affairs, as requested by the Economic Council of Canada, to deal precisely with the kind of problems that the minister has outlined.

The minister quite rightly said, "We in the federal government cannot deal with the size of the cities, the bylaws regarding land use, the problems of where to go, in what direction, and so on. These are provincial-municipal matters that the federal government cannot do anything about by itself." But what the Economic Council indicated, what we suggested a year ago, and what has been suggested many times from this side of the house is that the federal government take the initiative to call the provinces together, and the major municipal regions of Canada, to discuss some of these problems, and not merely to discuss them but to make some kind of plan. But for that is necessary a ministry or department of housing and urban affairs.

They should also discuss the establishment of a national council of urban affairs, on which would be represented not only the federal and provincial governments but also the major municipal regions of Canada, as well as organizations such as the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. It is for the absence of any of these agencies, and it is for its refusal to accept any responsibility for leadership in all of these areas that we condemn the government.

We do not condemn the government for not performing miracles or solving the problems overnight. We know the problems are difficult and will take time to solve. We do not condemn it for not passing municipal bylaws; we know it has no authority to do so. But we do condemn it for its refusal to recognize that its role is not and must not be merely the role of the largest treasury in Canada, making money available for housing or urban renewal, for its refusal to recognize that the role of the central government of Canada must be a deliberate, determined and conscious attempt to find solutions for the urban problems facing Canadians from coast to coast. I say it is a good thing that the federal government—

Mr. Andras: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lewis: Sure.

Mr. Andras: This is purely for contribution to the debate and for clarification. Is the hon. member aware that in December, 1967, and I think subsequently in the spring of 1968 at the federal-provincial housing conference the government did in fact suggest the establishment of a national council almost identical to that referred to by the hon. member, and found a less than enthusiastic response from the provincial governments? Further, I would like the advice of the hon. member as to what action he would take in such a case. Would he ignore the stated objections of the provincial ministers who attended that conference?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am not questioning the minister's veracity but all I can say in answer to him is that my memory, from watching the conference and reading about it, does not gibe with what he has said. It is my impression that the proposal for a national urban council was not made with very much heat or enthusiasm, that it received some pro forma brief discussion and then the matter was let go. I think my memory is right, and if that is what happened then I am not the least bit surprised that the provincial governments threw out the proposal. This is not the way to give leadership.

The minister's reference to the housing conference reminds me to remind him that all the studies we have indulged in on these problems of housing and urban affairs should have given someone some knowledge about them. In addition to numerous books and articles, there were the Nicholson symposia held right across the country in 1966, and then there was the federal-provincial conference on housing to which the minister has referred. There were the studies by the Economic Council, and then a task force report. Yet despite all these studies the minister stands up and says, "I don't know what to do about urban renewal; I have to study this some more. I don't know what to do about public housing; I have to go back and study it more. I don't know what my policies ought to be in various directions; I still need some more study." This is a farcical excuse.

Since my time is about up, Mr. Speaker, let me add that I am convinced that all this is also the result of the attitude which the Prime Minister takes toward the constitution. I am convinced there are many members on the Liberal side of the house who, even though their language of criticism of the government would necessarily be a great deal more temperate than mine, are just as concerned about the problems to which the hon. member for Hamilton West and I have referred as we are, and are as dissatisfied with the performance of their government as we are.

To them I say, as I say to this house and to the people of Canada, if lack of leadership is still to be seen, in my opinion it is in large measure due to the legalistic, strait-jacketey approach which the Prime Minister takes to the Canadian constitution. It is the concept which he indicated in the working papers which he tabled the other day, and which I have only had a chance to glance through, a concept of an attempt to compartmentalize certain of the powers and of an attempt to make the provinces all-powerful in the exercise of certain other powers. It is this attitude which has resulted in the arid and legalistic nonsense of our not having a minister of housing and urban affairs.

There is nothing in modern society that is as important as the problem of urban living. All the speeches made a year ago by the Prime Minister, by the leaders of other parties, and by members of all parties in this house about the quality of life and improving the quality of life—all that stuff that was talked about during the election campaign a year ago has no meaning and is utterly dishonest unless related to the life of the city dweller in a modern industrial society.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I think I see you, Mr. Speaker, edging to the edge of your seat. I am completing my remarks. It is because of the importance of this problem that I welcome the motion of the hon. member for Hamilton West and say to the minister, with much more sorrow than pleasure, that his defensive mincing kind of excuse was a revelation of his inability and the inability of the government even to appreciate the nature of the problem which faces 70 per cent of the Canadian people today and which will face 80 per cent of the Canadian people in a few years' time.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). I must also concur in some of the remarks made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I do so as a member representing an urban area. While I fully appreciate the problems faced by my colleagues from the rural constituencies of Canada, it is my convinction that the greatest and most urgent problems facing the nation today arise out of the general problem of urban development. I am equally convinced that in no other area has this government so obviously shirked its responsibility or failed so dismally by avoiding meaningful action.

Since taking office a year ago the government has done nothing but talk about the need to do something. We have had promises from ministers and pleas for action from backbenchers on the government side. But the real issue has been obscured in a screen of words. I am sure that a scholarly man such as the Prime Minister is reputed to be will appreciate my borrowing Macbeth's well known words to describe this verbal camouflage: "It is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." And "nothing" is the only word to describe what this government has accomplished in finding a solution to Canada's No. 1 continuing crisis.

When we consider that close to three-quarters of our people already live jammed into cites and towns occupying less than one one-hundredth of our total area, we can see something of the size of the problem. In spite of the minister's remarks, the cities of this country have problems, lots of them. And they will get much worse in the near future unless the federal government stops its constitutional shilly-shallying. The government's hiding behind the British North America Act can have only one result. It means that the people of this country's urban areas will suffer. They will enjoy a much poorer kind of life as a direct result of the government's lack of leadership, its lack of action, its lack of foresight and in fact its absolute lack of almost any kind of common horse sense when it comes to doing something about the problems faced by our cities and their people. It is time the government stopped horsing around with this constitutional bit so far as our cities are concerned. That is all they are doing—horsing around trying to hitch up 19th century horse and buggy ideas to get our jet age cities ready for the 21st century.

Constitutionally the government is involved in the problems of the cities up to its neck. It just will not recognize it. It pays no attention to the good advice and all the startling facts that were laid before it by the Economic Council of Canada in its fourth report. What do we have to do to wake them up? The time of the walled city is gone, Mr. Speaker. There was only one real walled city in Canada—Quebec—and it has long since burst those bonds to expand far beyond its original boundaries, as has virtually every city in my part of Canada. The only walled city left in this country is the walled city of the government's closed mind, the walled city of the limited concepts of the night watchman state which this government uses to try to deal with what is essentially and primarily an urban and urbanizing culture.

We of the big cities need, indeed demand, a constitutional breakthrough. We demand that the government recognize the close connections between all of its policies and the way our cities develop. We insist that it see, that it realize, and that it act on the intimate relationships which bind our cities to our rural areas. Everything the government does for the farmer, everything it does against the farmer too—and here I am speaking as much or more about the modern agricultural industrialist as I am about the family farm—all federal policies relating to wheat surpluses, to the oil and gas industry, to the potash business, all their policies relating to construction, mining exploration, and so on, have very direct and immediate effects on our cities and their people.

[Mr. Paproski.]

The federal government's failure to sell Canadian wheat has meant commercial depression in some of our prairie cities and trading centres. The government's feeble-hearted attempts to persuade inflation to go away are felt with agonizing effects in our cities. Consumers in Edmonton, Calgary, Toronto, Montreal, in fact in all our cities, are completely at the mercy of the booming rise in food prices which the government permits by its inaction. No longer can the government deny its responsibility for our cities and their problems. They like passing the buck to the provinces on this question, but no longer. It is time they stopped trying to pass on these inflated Benson bucks to somebody else and tackled the problems themselves.

It hardly seems necessary to emphasize the rapid growth in our urban areas and the undesirable developments that accompany such unco-ordinated growth. In only five years, from 1961 to 1966, the populations of our large urban centres increased by almost 20 per cent. The smaller towns, with populations between 2,500 and 100,000, increased only 11.4 per cent, and the rural population actually went down. My own province of Alberta, as most of you know, is one of the most rapidly growing. Our capital city, part of which I have the honour to represent, increased in population from 337,500 in 1961 to 400,000 plus in 1966 and is now well over that. Calgary's population is booming as well and the favourite eastern image of our province as a land of farmers must disappear at once if the west and its problems are to be properly understood here. I must confess, however, there seems little hope that the inward-looking, walled city mentality of the present administration will ever make an honest effort to look west to understand us.

If our major cities were already working models of efficiency and high quality living, urban growth of the proportions I have indicated would not tax their existing facilities very much. But our metropolitan areas are conglomerations of mounting deficiencies and heavy backlogs of essential works still to be done. The government has been warned about the problems often enough. The Economic Council of Canada, which it appointed, outlined the situation with great clarity in its fourth report. But let me give a quotation from another government document:

> As each year thousands more Canadians seek city space and service to work and live and play and drive, one must wonder whether the existing metropolitan structure in some areas at least can even meet the existing pressure, let alone make any noticeable inroads in the backlog of problems confronting it.

This report goes on to state that even in cities where the powers and problems of urbanization are less there is an urgent need for quick, decisive and imaginative action. These quotations, Mr. Speaker, are from the report of the Task Force on Housing and Urban Development, led by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). In light of this government's indifference to the cities, it is no wonder he felt impelled to resign.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The paradox of modern living in our cities is that while the consumer's money income seems to go up, and sometimes even his standard of living, although that is difficult these days with the inflation the government encourages, the opportunities to enjoy many important features of the good life which we associate with the cities are rapidly disappearing. We know that this government is obsessed with abstract constitutional theorizing, that it cares more about what it can write into dusty legal documents than about the kind of lives real people live. But is it totally unconcerned about the quality of life our people are able to enjoy? It would seem so.

The quality of life in our urban centres depends on many things, but not least on the following in addition to matters economic: housing and slum clearance, safety of the individual in his person and property, attractiveness of the city environment, and the basic hospitality of the neighbourhood. The government can and should be doing something about all of these matters. Let me say something briefly about each.

Let us first take housing and construction. Some time soon the minister responsible may be thawing out the slum deep freeze the government has imposed. But when he does eventually announce approval of urban renewal projects he had better make good and sure he does not discriminate against this country's growth centres again. The blows which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) aimed at the urban centres of my own province and those of British Columbia and Ontario are splendid examples of the government's completely negative approach toward the west and toward the problems of the cities. Urban unconcern of this order is a hallmark of the present administration, and it is time it stopped.

In respect of safety of the individual, we are lucky in this country that organized crime has not really developed very much yet. That only means the government has an opportunity, not a guarantee. Strong and imaginative action by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) could do much to inspire the forces of law and order in this country to save our expanding, crowded urban centres from the metropolitan criminal horrors endured by our friends to the south. Will there be leadership and imaginative help by the R.C.M.P? Will the police forces get the assistance they need from the federal government?

Let me refer to a clean environment. We have already belaboured the house with our serious concern about the cleanliness and attractiveness of the environment. I can only repeat my colleagues' remarks of a previous day to emphasize the necessity of the government taking very firm steps and of exerting significant leadership to end the growing pollution of our cities and countryside.

The next subject is hospitality. I prefer the word hospitality but its opposite, the one this government prefers, is alienation. As our urban areas continue to grow, so too does the problem of alienation. Purely and simply this means that too many of our people are becoming detached and uncaring about one another. The problem is a very serious social phenomenon about which action is required.

What can the federal government do? It can help our people take pride in their communities and particularly in their country. This is especially the case with regard to new immigrants to our country, and even with some established members of the non-British and non-French groups. The problem of alienation confronts these people far more than any other. Many immigrants speak neither English nor French. Unable to communicate with others they feel lonely and afraid.

The number of immigrants has increased by nearly 40 per cent since 1961, some 184,000 people last year alone. These people are flooding into our cities and the federal government must go all out to welcome them, to help them identify, to encourage them to take out citizenship with meaningful, heart-stretching steps—in short, to make them feel like real Canadians. The so-called citizenship part of our immigration program is woefully lagging in imagination, in national pride and in human concern.

I have taken enough time. I have not dealt with the necessity of federal development of a new model for Canadian cities of the 1970's, but this is urgently needed. Many things are urgently needed for the future. There are many problems. Will this government do its share? I doubt it.

I want to refer to one of the special features of life in Canada, the invisible city. You can touch it, walk around it, breathe its polluted air, get caught in its traffic jams, and once upon a time you could even buy a house in it. But so far as this government is concerned, the city does not exist. Most of the people of Canada live in cities but the municipal officials they elect cannot sit in on discussions about the future of the country, and too often cannot get the information they need about programs which directly affect their own development. Most of the problems of Canada are in the cities, but the government refuses to contemplate direct programs.

My colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton West, has referred to the constitution as a smokescreen. It is that. No one denies the difficulties which the constitution creates, but they can be overcome. The real problem is that the Prime Minister is not inclined to overcome them. That was the message of the resignation of the hon. member for Trinity. The Liberal government apologists can try to disguise it in any way they want, but the fact stands out that he wanted to act. He wanted to make the cities and their problems visible and the Prime Minister preferred to hide behind the constitution.

This government is committing many crimes against the people who live in the cities. Its basic crime is that it pretends the cities do not exist. That is bad enough in that it provides the government with an excuse for failure to act on distinctive urban problems, but it has another important effect. It hides several major problems which the country cannot continue to hide. One of them is poverty. The fifth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada emphasized the proportions of poverty in Canada and the degree to which it is an urban problem. It pointed out that serious poverty is only "a subway ride away" for residents of our major metropolitan areas.

The problem of the Indian people, of which the minister should be well aware and which was discussed earlier today, has become an urban problem as more and more people from reserves, or with official status under the Indian Act, are moving into the cities, particularly on the prairies. The mayor of Winnipeg, for instance, has said he is the mayor of "The largest Indian reserve in Canada". To a smaller degree a similar kind of thing is happening in Edmonton. The problem is that many native people, out of work, are attracted to the city where they constitute a major expense and problem and there is, as usual, confusion about which level of government is to help them.

The problem of immigration is such that if the government had a policy that policy could not overlook the problem of integration of new Canadians into their communities which in most cases are urban communities. These are serious Canadian problems which we cannot afford to ignore. Yet we are ignoring them now because the federal government continues to treat the cities as though they were invisible. The Prime Minister came to office promising change.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Badanai): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

An hon. Member: All he needs is another minute.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Paproski: There has been a great deal of talk about participatory democracy. But look at the record. Time after time federal and provincial governments discuss major matters which are vital to the plans and expansion of various cities. City officials are not apprised; they are kept in the dark and the progress and plans for their cities are held up. A constitutional conference is held, and municipal officials request the right to attend. The Prime Minister claims that he cleared the way for them to attend. He cleared the way as he usually does, by passing the buck to the provinces. Certainly he did not encourage the attendance or participation of municipal officials.

So far as the cities are concerned, participatory democracy seems to mean the right to protest after something harmful has been done. Any positive steps in terms of solving urban problems in the last year in Canada have been taken by the cities themselves. The Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities in particular has shown outstanding initiative and deserves to be recognized. Several of the provinces have also been active. But it is a fact that the contribution of the Trudeau government to urban development in Canada has been entirely negative. They cut back the winter works program; they imposed, through the recent budget, a freeze on development in major cities; they put forward the pretence that there is no housing crisis in Canada; they have played around with urban renewal so much that nobody, not even the minister, knows what the policy of the government is.

This government, which sits in office because it was able to win seats in the cities, has virtually ignored urban problems in the year it has been in office. There is no indication that they intend to change their practice. We have a right to ask questions and demand answers. What steps is the government taking to follow the lead of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities on the question of urban transport? What studies is the government conducting on urban development projects and related projects in United States' cities and those of other countries? What attention is it giving to the particular urban aspect of problems like poverty, immigration and Indian Affairs? What understanding is the government prepared to give now regarding the involvement of municipal officials, and people informed about the cities, in constitutional and other relevant discussions?

The election was a year ago. The Prime Minister spent a great deal of his time in the cities. Apparently he has had enough of them. If he continues to treat the cities of Canada as invisible, they will soon have had enough of him.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, we have heard this afternoon many spokesmen for the urban areas of Canada. The arguments we heard could be used perfectly well against the further rapid growth of particular areas in Canada which prejudice rural areas and small communities across Canada.

Mr. McCleave: Stamp out Toronto!

Mr. Hopkins: We have heard in the house many arguments advanced about the constitutional conflict. We had a debate all day last Monday in connection with a motion on pollution when we were considering vote No. 1 of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The committee report was an excellent one. I see that the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) is smiling. I am sure he agrees with me on that point.

We cannot overlook the constitutional conflict. The tack taken in many parts of the house is to the effect that we should just bulldoze through in respect of our national programs and forget about the provinces and those people who are supporters of provincial autonomy. Hon. members have been telling the government to go ahead and bulldoze over the top of the provinces.

Mr. Woolliams: What about medicare?

Mr. Hopkins: The other day the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) said that the Ottawa River stinks. That was when I was mentioning the constitutional conflict that exists in connection with that river. I agree with the hon. member but I say to him through you, Mr. Speaker, that it does not stink any more than do the motions placed before the house on Monday and today which try to lay the full blame on the federal government for the pollution which exists.

There is an obvious purpose in trying to lay total responsibility on the federal government at a time when the government does not by any means have total constitutional responsibility in this field. Comments were made to the effect that great legislation to combat pollution had been brought forward in the United States. Anyone in the house who makes that kind of comment should visit the United States and look into the problem of pollution they have there. If they did, I do not think they would praise to the extent they have the work that has been done in that country.

I reiterate what I said the other day. If the federal government had exclusive powers in this field, such as the United States government has, it would be giving more direction. I say to members of the opposition that when they make these statements they are in effect demanding more constitutional power for the federal government. I wholeheartedly agree—perhaps I should not go quite that far.

Mr. Woolliams: Oh, go ahead.

Mr. Hopkins: I am very much in agreement with the first prime minister of this country, Sir John A. Macdonald, who wanted the federal government to be strong. We would be in a better position today if we had a strong federal government constitutionally. Then we could go ahead and solve some of the problems facing us. If the federal government defaulted in respect of the work that needed to be done in this area, and had the constitutional power to do it, the government could be blamed. But I ask members of the opposition not to drag in this red herring of bestowing on the federal government all the powers that are jealously guarded by provincial administrations.

If the provincial governments do not want this responsibility, I suggest we should hold one of those very congenial federal-provincial conferences and the provinces should hand over the powers they have in respect of pollution control and economic development. We cannot talk about controlling pollution here, there and everywhere else without realizing that it must go hand in hand with the economic development of this nation.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) introduced a bill which would have the effect of spreading out the economic development of Canada. What must the minister do to see that the program is effectively carried out? He must obtain agreement from the provinces because the hands of the federal government are tied.

I hope many hon. members believe as I do that the day the federal government is given extensive powers in the field of economic development and pollution control we will be able to improve the economic development of this country and create a nation which does not have large areas of poverty and areas of great wealth. When the federal government is given these powers the nation will be pollution free wherever industry is to be found. These things must go hand in hand.

I mentioned the legislation regarding regional development. We are talking today about areas in which there is great industrial development. It is in these areas that we have pollution. If we do not spread out our industries across Canada into the smaller communities—I am not for a moment forgetting the Ottawa Valley, because we have not had enough industry in the Upper Ottawa Valley in the last few years to drive out the mosquitoes that we have in the springtime—

Mr. Gilbert: We have had a Liberal government.

Mr. Hopkins: The hon. member for Broadview says we have had a Liberal government. If the federal government has sole responsibility for the state of our economy, why did the government of Ontario introduce its Ontario Development Corporation to promote industry in other areas? Surely this is an admission that economic development is the responsibility of the provinces. I tell the hon. member for Broadview that so much money has been put into the large, growing industrial complexes in certain areas of the country that rural development has suffered. This is why I want to see greater control exercised at the federal level.

Multilane highways have been built in Toronto. Hon. members have been demanding, and rightly so, urban renewal in certain areas. That this need exists cannot be denied. The problem is there and it has to be solved. But if we continue to let the large urban areas grow we will create more pollution problems for the future. A rural area such as mine does not have good roads into the large urban centres. We do not have enough money for agricultural development in eastern Canada. We hear a great deal about the western farmer. Far too much emphasis has been placed upon the urban areas of Canada. It is time we from the rural areas spoke up at the provincial and federal levels and asked for a square deal for all of Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: What about Toronto and those who come from that city?

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Hopkins: I am not saying anything about voters in Toronto. I heard a comment from the hon. member for—I hope I name him correctly—Calgary East—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Hopkins: Calgary North. I am sure the voters in Toronto want to see a cure for this problem. I do not think they are so greedy that they will demand everything in Canada. I know them better than that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hopkins: I am glad the minister in charge of housing is here. I appreciate the effort and the time he is spending on the development of housing in rural areas. I think it is a great injustice that an area such as mine in Renfrew County or the district of Nipissing must abide by what are in effect urban rules if it is to get housing at all. Towns like Petawawa and Pembroke which are largely dormitory towns. There is little industrial base there by comparison with wealthier cities in this country. The cost of all the services needed for the development of housing in a town like Pembroke rests largely on the shoulders of the residential community, imposing a heavy burden. This again is a matter for the provincial administration, because that is where control of municipal taxation lies.

I hope the minister responsible for housing comes up with a constructive program to include housing in areas which do not have sewer and water lines combined. Laws which are basically laid down for urban communities are a deterrent to the development of communities in rural areas. For my part, I have faith in the ability of the minister to come up with constructive suggestions in this regard. One suggestion I might make to him is that in areas such as I have mentioned, where services must be supplied and where no industrial base exists to support the necessary taxation, larger grants, additional grants, should be made so as to assist these communities in their development. It would be a good idea to give authority in the bill itself for the minister to consider the situation of these communities and areas on an individual basis, using his own good judgment, rather than letting the legislation become a straitjacket of rules.

A word about the regional development legislation. I hope it will succeed in bringing industry into many areas of slow economic growth, including my own. When a community ceases to grow a certain amount of depression is created and many of the people who live in the area feel discouraged. It is, basically, of great importance that from this day onward we should try to get more and more industry out of the large complexes which already exist and begin to develop smaller regions in an effort to give this country greater depth beyond the borderline between Canada and the United States, as well as to provide employment for people who prefer to live in rural areas.

Many of those living in our cities today face a housing crisis. They would not do so if the federal government had the right to develop this country on an economic basis from coast to coast instead of the responsibility being divided among ten provinces. We cannot afford to continue as we are doing. If we build a New York city around the urban complex in Ontario we shall run into the same problems as New York which is already approaching bankruptcy through its efforts to fight pollution.

It would be far cheaper in the long run to spread industry across this country even if this entailed making amendments to the constitution to give the federal government authority to do so, as well as authority to combat pollution. These debates on pollution, these endeavours to pass the buck, are useless.

Mr. Woolliams: Then why are you talking about it?

Mr. Hopkins: Why was it brought up?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hopkins: We have spent Monday and today debating problems of pollution for which responsibility is divided between the provincial and federal authorities. The field of the federal authority is that of research. What does this amount to, if it is not trying to pass the buck to Ottawa instead of laying it squarely on the shoulders where it belongs? Those provinces which are really concerned with this matter should adopt an aggressive policy toward pollution in Canada or place the responsibility right here where it should be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hopkins: I would prefer that the hon. member wait until the end.

It would be much cheaper for taxpayers who live in the years to come were we to hold a constitutional conference today, one which faced up to the realization that economic development should be the responsibility of one authority in Canada, namely, the federal government, which would have power to spread this development in order that we might not be called upon to combat pollution in one particular area or in a few areas of this country. Along with that should go extensive measures to control the pollution that is caused by industry wherever industry is sited, in order to see to it that industry toes the line from the beginning. This would mean that we would not all of a sudden be called upon to spend large amounts of the taxpayers' money to combat a problem that would already be well on its way to solution.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I commend these measures to the house and I hope that the legislation being brought in by the Minister of Regional Economic Development will be successful. I also trust that the minister in charge of housing will note my remarks concerning housing in rural areas, small communities or towns that do not have a wealthy industrial base. I trust he will take those remarks into consideration and reimburse those communities for needed services and update those they already have.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I now ask the hon. member for Renfrew North my question? In view of the strong stand he has taken, with which I agree, for greater economic powers for the federal government, may I ask him whether he has pressed this point upon his Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and called upon the federal government to seek these broader powers?

Mr. Hopkins: He is not just my Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker; he is the Prime Minister of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gilbert: Don't brag about it.

Mr. Hopkins: Envy will get you nowhere. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has asked a very pertinent question. May I assure him that we in the Liberal party are liberal thinkers. We have the opportunity of expressing our views to our leader because he is a reasonable man.

May I conclude by saying that if my recommendations are not accepted, then I am not going to go away angry. I am going to come back and fight another day. That is the way democracy should work, and it is the way in which our democratic Prime Minister works.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Broadview has 30 seconds.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speakern it would take me 30 minutes to reply not only to the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hopkins) but also to the speech made by the minister in charge of housing. I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) for the very fine speech he made which underlined the lack of leadership to deal with the problem of urban growth in Canada. I should also like to condemn the weak-kneed speech by the minister in charge of housing on this very important problem.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to section 10 of Standing Order 58, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings on the motion now before the house and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the two motions to concur in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1970, and the supply bill based thereon.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE L20 (REVISED), 1969-70

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That vote L20 (revised), Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1970, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN MAIN ESTIMATES, 1969-70

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1970, except vote L10, Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation, and vote L20, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and less the amounts voted in interim supply, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the said estimates be concurred in?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald Rosedale (for Mr. Drury) moved that Bill C-210, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1970, be now read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Speaker: Now, agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may we have copies of the bill?

Mr. Speaker: I understand that copies are being distributed for the enlightenment of hon. members.

Mr. Macdonald Rosedale (for Mr. Drury) moved that Bill C-210, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1970, be now read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on Bill C-210.

Clauses 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Macdonald Rosedale (for Mr. Drury) moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed the following bills, without any amendment: Bill C-192, an act to amend the National Housing Act, 1954; Bill C-201, an act to amend the National Housing Act, 1954; Bill C-191, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, and Bill C-197, an act to amend the Criminal Code.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that the joint committee on the Library of Parliament has tabled a report on the regulations of the library.

[Editor's Note: The aforementioned committee report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

Is it the wish of the house that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 26, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS

ACKNOWLEDGMENT BY HON. MEMBERS OF VOTING RESULT IN MANITOBA

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before we proceed further I call on hon. members to have in mind what I said to the house a while ago about the type of demonstration which we have just experienced. I suggest that hon. members should co-operate with the Chair and with the house generally in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I notice, as you have also noted, that the members of the New Democratic party have put flowers on a desk because they won the election in Manitoba.

I should like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that we hold the balance of power in Manitoba.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the flowers ought to be kept on the hon. member's desk. I suggest that they should be removed from the house.

NATIONAL SECURITY

TABLING OF REVISED REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION—STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on November 1, 1968, I indicated to the house that the government hoped it would be possible to make public an expurgated version of the report of the Royal Commission on Security. I also expressed the hope that whatever expurgated version was published would have the certification of the commissioners themselves that any deletions from the original report made by the government had been made in the interest of national security only, and for no other reason.

Despite the length of time which has been taken for the detailed study required to prepare such an abridged version, I am very pleased indeed to table copies of the revised report, in both official languages, bearing the certification of the commissioners as follows:

> "The report of the Royal Commission on Security as originally submitted to the Governor in Council in October, 1968, included some material which in this published version has been omitted or amended in the interest of national security. These changes are of small significance in the context of the report as a whole, and the royal commissioners agree that they do not affect the substance of the report or its recommendations."

I might add that copies of the revised report were sent yesterday to the leaders of the opposition parties, to the Right Honourable member for Prince Albert, as a Privy Councillor and a former prime minister, and as well to former prime ministers Pearson and St. Laurent.

Statement by Prime Minister on Security

The government of Canada is grateful to the members of the royal commission, Mr. M. W. Mackenzie, M. Yves Pratte and the Honourable M. J. Coldwell, P.C., for having undertaken the heavy burden of making a full and confidential inquiry into the operation of Canadian security methods and procedures, and for having reported thereon within two years. The views expressed in the report are, of course, those of the commissioners themselves. Their recommendations and the arguments underlying them are under serious study by the government and indeed some of them have already been put into effect in some degree. While it is reasonably clear from study thus far that not all of their recommendations will be accepted, and that not all of those accepted will be implemented immediately in whole or in part, a substantial number will be both accepted and implemented. Apart altogether from such specific action, however, it is our conviction that the report as a whole will serve as a most useful and stimulating basis for public discussion and for a better understanding of the problems of security.

It seems to us particularly important that Canadians at this time in their history be enabled to participate in full and informed discussion of security matters, an area of public administration which all too often in the past has been the subject of misunderstanding and misconception, and has thus come to be regarded, both in this house and among the media and the public at large, with excessive and unwarranted drama and mystery.

There will of course always be matters which governments must keep privy to themselves in order that the public interest may be best served, even in the freest and most open of societies. As the commissioners have stated, and I quote:

> Canada remains the target of subversive or potentially subversive activities, attempts at infiltration and penetration, and espionage operations—and they emphasize that:

> —the duty of the state to protect its secrets from espionage, its information from unauthorized disclosure, its institutions from subversion and its policies from clandestine influence is indisputable; what are matters for dispute are the organizations and procedures established by the State to meet this responsibility in an area which can touch closely upon the fundamental freedoms of the individual.

The government fully agrees with this view, and also agrees that "effective security arrangements must have a firm basis in public awareness and understanding". We are also grateful to the commissioners for having prepared their report in such a manner that the bulk of it can be made available for thoughtful consideration by Canadians generally.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, as you and hon. members will note, the royal commissioners have expressed dissatisfaction with several security methods and procedures, and have recommended certain organizational changes and improvements. The most significant of these is for the establishment of a new civilian non-police agency to perform the functions of a security service in Canada. The commissioners suggest that this agency would eventually be quite separate from the R.C.M.P., and would not have law enforcement powers, although it would operate in close liaison with the R.C.M.P. and other police forces.

They base their proposal in large part on their conclusion that there are wide differences between police and security duties, and that these differences "should be reflected in recruiting methods, in training and career patterns, and in organizational structures." They also concluded that, although it was almost impossible to measure the effectiveness of a security service, particularly in the important fields of counter-espionage and counter-subversion, the effectiveness of procedures for the security investigation of persons appeared to be capable of improvement.

Further, the commissioners considered that the association of the security function with the police role tended to make the work of the security authorities more difficult, and that "inquiries by civilians in connection with the security clearance of personnel would be regarded with more understanding than are inquiries by policemen."

After careful study of the considerations put forward by the commissioners in support of their recommendation, we have come to the conclusion that current and foreseeable security problems in Canada can be better dealt with within the R.C.M.P. through appropriate modifications in their existing structure than by attempting to create a wholly new and separate service.

We are keenly aware that the R.C.M.P. are one of the most honoured and respected of Canadian institutions. The force has come to be recognized as one of the finest national police forces in the world, whose members, as the commissioners rightly state, are "carefully selected, highly motivated, and of great integrity." The government also recognizes that no organization is perfect, and that there is some validity in the view of the royal commissioners that some basic differences do exist between police and security duties, by their very nature.

It is therefore the government's intention, with the full understanding of the R.C.M.P., to ensure that the Directorate of Security and Intelligence will grow and develop as a distinct and identifiable element within the basic structure of the force, and will be more responsive, in its composition and character, to the national security requirements described by the commissioners. The basic aim will be to develop the security service so as to draw on the police services for personnel of suitable qualifications and character, and to retain administrative, research, documentation and other services in common with them. The security service, under the Commissioner of the R.C.M.P., will be increasingly separate in structure and civilian in nature.

• (2:20 p.m.)

New and more flexible policies in relation to recruiting, training, career planning and operations will be calculated to ensure that Canada's security service will be capable of dealing fairly and effectively with the new and complex security problems which we will undoubtedly face in the future, and also to ensure that it clearly reflects the nature of our cultural heritage. Under the new arrangements it will be possible, for example, for an increasing number of university graduates from all parts of Canada to join the Directorate in a civilian capacity and to aspire to positions at the top of that organization, thereby making the kind of contribution referred to by the commissioners. Nothing in the proposed changes will unfairly prejudice the career expectations of people already in the service.

Some of the comments in the report which refer to the R.C.M.P. are more properly directed at aspects of government policy. We intend to keep under review our basic policies and procedures in relation to security, as the commissioners have recommended. The establishment of the Department of the Solicitor General in 1966 was a major step in this direction. Further advances have been made since that time in improving the efficiency of the R.C.M.P., even though they have not been overly publicized. I do not propose to describe these advances in detail, except to say that they represent a careful and methodical build-up of modern technical facilities directed toward the detection and prevention of large scale organized crime, as well as the provision of information which the government requires in order to ensure the security and integrity of the state. This latter is one of the major and most difficult duties of any democratic government. It is one which, perhaps more than any other, requires public reassurance that the measures taken in its discharge are not of a character which could infringe the basic rights of individuals or be damaging to their careers and reputations.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, the government, after careful consideration, has decided to accept the commissioners' recommendation for the establishment of a Security Review Board. Full details of the scope, character and operation of the board are still under consideration and these may differ in some respects from the commission's recommendations. Hon. members will recall that in 1967 provision was made, by amendments to the Financial Administration Act, for public employees subject to dismissal on security grounds to be given an opportunity to be heard by an independent person at a formal inquiry. The commissioners suggest a broader system of review of the decisions of departments, which would—> —preserve the requirement for governmental responsibility and decision, give adequate protection to sensitive information and sources, yet provide a reasonably effective safeguard against arbitrary, hasty or ill-considered judgments, and perhaps also avoid the necessity of ad hoc inquiries into individual cases.

It is their opinion that such a system of review might be required in the three areas of employment, immigration and citizenship. The three basic principles which they would apply are: first, that the individuals concerned be given as many details as possible of the factors which have entered into the decisions; second, that the decisions of the Review Board could only be advisory; and third, that the importance of expertise and understanding in security matters is such that the same board should review contentious decisions in all of the three areas.

With these basic principles the government agrees. They were, in fact, the guiding principles in the establishment of review procedures for dismissals on security grounds devised by the government under Prime Minister Pearson, and announced in this house on October 25, 1963. I must say that those procedures appear to have worked well in the intervening years, not because they have been often called upon, but because their very existence has caused departments and agencies of government to examine with much greater care those cases in which dismissal on security grounds might have seemed desirable, to have taken the subject into their confidence to a much greater degree than in the past, and on the whole to have been able to resolve such cases to the satisfaction of both employer and employee.

Nevertheless, the members of the Royal Commission on Security have recommended a broader, and somewhat more formal, system of review of cases involving not only possible dismissal on security grounds, but also transfers, denial of promotion, apparent inhibition of career prospects, refusal to admit sponsored or nominated immigrants to Canada, or the refusal of applicants for Canadian citizenship, all on security grounds. The advice of the board in any given case together with its recommendations or comments, would be given to the Governor in Council and the minister concerned. By implication, the final decision would remain with the Governor in Council or the minister concerned. A brief record of the board's "decision" would also be communicated to the individual concerned.

As I have said, the government is carefully considering the details of this proposal, not only in relation to the further safeguarding of the rights of individual Canadians, but also in the context of existing legislation which was intended to provide similar safeguards. It is also being considered in relation to one of the concepts most basic to our form of government, that of ministerial responsibility. When these studies have been completed, it is my intention to make quite clear to parliament and to the public the form of review procedures which will be adopted in line with the three principles set out by the commissioners, and taking into account the legislation which has been passed by this parliament to provide assurances of fair treatment for the individual members of our society.

The commissioners also proposed that the Security Review Board receive and consider annual or semi-annual reports from the head of the security service, and have authority to draw to the direct attention of the Prime Minister any matters it considers appropriate. The government does not find itself in agreement with this proposal.

On the subject of industrial security, the government has noted the suggestion of the commissioners that the function might be allocated to the Department of National Defence or, if that were considered impracticable, the Department of Defence Production—now the Department of Supply and Services—should continue to take steps to improve the performance of this important function. Many such steps have been taken in recent months, and it is the considered view of both departments concerned, and that of the government generally, that this task should continue to be the responsibility of the organization most directly affected, the Department of Supply and Services.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to indicate at this time what the government's response to the many other recommendations of the royal commission will be, except to say that they will all be closely and positively studied with a view to continuous improvement of our security methods and procedures. The views of hon. members and of the public generally on the report of the royal commission will be of great interest and assistance to us in arriving at sound and acceptable decisions in this difficult field. It is our intention to consult with the leaders of the opposition parties to determine how the report might best be made the subject of parliamentary debate during the next session.

In conclusion I should like to say that the royal commissioners have pointed up, and have helpfully recommended upon, a number of apparent inadequacies in our past and present security methods and procedures. I am reassured, as I am sure most Canadians will be, that they have not found any evidence that, since the revelations of 1945, Canada has been responsible for any serious loss of her own or allied security information. I trust that this report, and the fact of its publication in such detail, will be regarded as an earnest of our continued determination to grow as a strong and free country committed to democratic principles.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in case you are nervous, I assure you I will not be as long as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) but I do want to thank him for a very full statement in connection with this report, for which we have all waited quite a long time. I want to thank him also for his courtesy in letting me have a copy of his statement and an abridged report in advance.

I look forward with the Prime Minister to an opportunity at the next session for a more full discussion of the recommendations of the royal commission. I join him in expressing our appreciation to the commissioners for working so conscientiously and so well in such a difficult area as this area of security.

The Prime Minister has not indicated what the attitude of the government will be towards all the recommendations of the royal commission, and on several important recommendations he has indicated the government has substantial reservations. For example, it is clear that the government does not accept the proposal that there is to be established a new non-police agency to perform the functions of a security service in Canada. The Prime Minister hopes to realize the advantages the royal commission sees in this proposal by making appropriate modifications to the structure of the R.C.M.P. I might have some doubts as to whether the mounted police, as it is presently constituted and organized, lends itself very readily to the sort of modifications to which the Prime Minister refers.

My initial reaction might be that we are more interested in considering the proposal for a special agency, though I can see certain difficulties in this regard. But I look forward to hearing a further explanation in the house by the government when we have our discussion, presumably in the fall. In the meantime, there will be an opportunity for further consideration and discussion throughout the country.

Another recommendation is that the Security Review Board receive and consider periodic reports from the head of the security service and have authority to draw to the direct attention of the Prime Minister any matters it considers appropriate. The government in effect seems to reject this proposal. Personally, I would be inclined to favour the recommendation that would require the head of the security service to report periodically to the review board. However, this is also something that can be discussed further.

I gather that the government has also withheld judgment on the proposal that a quite wide variety of decisions, including transfers, denial of promotion, and citizenship and immigration decisions made for security reasons, be made subject to review by the proposed review board. I think this is a quite important recommendation. I can appreciate that it requires extensive study to work out a practical method to give effect to it. I should have liked to hear the Prime Minister endorse it, at least in principle, today. I hope he will deal with it more fully when we next have an opportunity to discuss it.

It is interesting to recall that what gave rise to the appointment of the Royal Commission several years ago was not any evidence that our security apparatus as such was inadequate or ineffective, but it was an incident which raised questions as to how surely the rights of Canadians are safeguarded in the process. At one point in his statement the Prime Minister mentioned "one of the concepts most basic to our form of government, that of ministerial responsibility". The fact is that on matters relating to our national security, parliament has always accepted some considerable limit on its right to demand information and full disclosure by the government. So far as any of us know, the security apparatus and procedures of our country over the years—at least since 1945—have been effective. The Prime Minister referred to this today. The Royal Commission has not found any evidence to the contrary.

We all have an interest in maintaining the effectiveness of the security operation at a high level. At the same time, parliament will want to insist on assurances that the security operation, much of which must be carried on outside the purview of parliament, is conducted with extreme care for fairness and common sense. We would therefore, at this stage at least, welcome the Security Review Board, the clarification of security regulations and other initiatives that would strengthen the security of the state and reinforce the protection of the individual.

I am sure that members of parliament accept the necessity that much of the security operation is conducted outside our purview. What would be cause for grave concern would be any thought that much of the operation is beyond the ken of the ministry or the Prime Minister; that there are not ministers, elective and responsible members of government, to whom the entire security operation is an open book, who have continuing access to everything that is going on in that area, and who give proper, responsible, political, civilian direction to the operation on a continuing basis. None of us would want to see a security operation in this country running under its own steam and answerable only to itself—a government, so to speak, within the government. The very decision as to what affects security and what does not, what must be secret and what public, is finally a matter of political decision and judgment. The effective supremacy of the civilian authority must never be compromised in this matter.

I welcome the spirit as expressed in the statement of the Prime Minister. I assure him and the house that we share the sense of importance that he attaches to all questions of national security and individual rights raised by the presentation of this report. I look forward to giving fuller and further consideration to the report, and to a more detailed consideration of it when we next have an opportunity to do so, presumably in the fall.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to express my thanks to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for his courtesy in making a copy of his statement and a copy of the abridged report of the Royal Commission on Security available to me. I have not had a chance to study it in great detail, because some interesting events have intervened which have taken my mind off the report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): But I have had an opportunity to examine the recommendations contained in the report. I commend the government for deciding to make the report public, even in its abridged form. I think there would have been a good deal of misunderstanding and even some suspicion had the government not made the report public. I believe they made a wise decision in the action they have taken.

We all recognize that dealing with the matter of security is a very difficult one indeed because there are two basic principles which must be reconciled. The task of parliament, and certainly the task of the government, is to find a balance between these two principles. The first principle, of course, is that the government is charged with the responsibility of maintaining the security and integrity of the state against subversion, and any efforts on the part of those who seek to change our society by resorting to force. We all recognize that if the democratic process is to survive we must take steps to prevent any person or group of persons in our country, or any who are sent from outside the country, trying to bring about changes in our society by resorting to violence. But against that lies another fundamental principle, that we must guarantee the rights of the individual so that under the guise of security no person can receive unfair treatment, can be tried by Star Chamber methods or be labelled as a security risk without an adequate opportunity to defend himself or herself. They must know the charges against them and have the due process of law applied to their particular case.

Certainly no one in this parliament wants to see any individual adversely affected on the basis of idle gossip or malicious reports that are completely unfounded, and have all of this done under the mask of national security. Of course, it was because instances like this did arise that the government agreed to set up the commission. I think the report has dealt very adequately with the situation.

There are a number of recommendations in the report. I am certainly not going to deal with them all and shall mention only two of them. First of all I refer to the recommendation of the royal commission that there be a civilian, non-police agency because, as they point out, there is a wide difference between police and security duties. Without any reflection whatsoever on the very excellent service the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have performed, there is a great difference between law enforcement and the carrying out of the duties of a security service. There is a difference in the type of training required, the form of recruitment and the structure of a police force, on the one hand, and a security agency on the other.

I submit that it takes a certain degree of training and sophistication to recognize the difference between honest dissent and a desire to subvert our democratic form of society. Therefore, I think that the recommendation of the royal commission for the setting up of a civilian non-police agency has a great deal of merit, and I am extremely disappointed that the government has rejected this proposal out of hand. I hope that when discussions take place later the Prime Minister will give the reasons why this recommendation has been rejected. I would even venture to hope that the government might reconsider this decision because I think there is much to be said for having the kind of non-police agency which was recommended by the commission.

The second major recommendation is the setting up of a Security Review Board, and I cannot agree with the Prime Minister when he says that the present procedure has worked satisfactorily. I do not think it has worked satisfactorily, because we know nothing about it. Persons who have appealed to it have not been able to have any access, other than to a committee of civil servants who are dealing with problems that have to do with other civil servants. Certainly the idea of having a Security Review Board outside the civil service and completely unbiased is, in my opinion, almost the only way that we can guarantee that those who are affected by these security measures will have adequate protection. Much will depend upon the personnel appointed, and much will depend upon the procedures which are set up by the government. It seems to me that those procedures have to include the right to counsel, and the right to know all the facts that have been gathered in condemnation of the person affected. They have the right to face their accusers and hear the accusations against them, and I submit that such a board of review should have what the commission recommended, namely the right to receive the annual reports of the intelligence and security branch of the R.C.M.P. and, above all, the right to draw any matter which disturbs them to the attention of the Prime Minister.

I am totally at a loss to understand why the Prime Minister rejected this proposal. It seems to me that if a Security Review Board is to have any value at all, it must have the right, when it comes across a circumstance which in the opinion of its members contravenes the right of an individual, to take that matter directly to the highest officer, the first minister of the Crown. I hope that the government will reconsider this matter.

In conclusion I should like to say that I hope the government will give particular consideration to the recommendations that are made with respect to immigration. There has been too much of an aura of secrecy cast around the whole question of immigration, and the reasons why some applicants have been rejected. The only reasons we have been given were that they are refused admission to Canada on security grounds. In many cases this has not been substantiated, and in some cases the grounds advanced seemed to be very weak indeed. I think that the recommendations of the royal commission in this regard are worthy of implementation, and I hope the government will see fit to do so.

We have looked forward to the discussion on this whole question which will take place in the next session, and we hope that as a result of the report of the royal commission we shall be able to establish in Canada procedures whereby, while retaining the security and integrity of the state, we fully safeguard the rights of every Canadian citizen.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for his courtesy in letting us have a copy of the report of the Royal Commission on Security, so that we could look into it. We have not had a chance to study this abridged version thoroughly, but it is fitting, I think, to congratulate the commissioners, Messrs. Mackenzie, Pratte and Coldwell, for the magnificent job they did in inquiring into the security of the state.

The Prime Minister indicated that "not all of the recommendations will be accepted, and that not all of these accepted will be implemented immediately, in whole or in part." That means that even if we discussed the Prime Minister's statement all afternoon, that would change nothing to the present situation. However, I deem it advisable to recall these remarks of the commissioners quoted by the Prime Minister:

> "Canada remains the target of subversive or potentially subversive activities, attempts at infiltration and penetration, and espionage operations", and they emphasize that
> "the duty of the state to protect its secrets from espionage, its information from unauthorized disclosure, its institutions from subversion and its policies from clandestine influence is indisputable; what are matters for dispute are the organizations and procedures established by the state to meet this responsibility in an area which can touch closely upon the fundamental freedoms of the individual."

Mr. Speaker, this report is quite useful to the people in general and to parliament in particular, since it leads to a better understanding of the security problems which come up both in the public service and in Canadian industry which have classified information. However, I was particularly struck by the lines I have just quoted:

> —from clandestine influence . . .; what are matters for dispute are the organizations and procedures established—

Mr. Speaker, we must look at the situation as it is today. Having seen on TV what happened in the province of Quebec on St. Jean Baptiste Day, we wonder whether or not these people who more or less caused the St. Jean Baptiste Day celebrations to be a complete failure—and St. Jean Baptiste is the patron saint of all the French-Canadians—and those who were responsible for the cancellation of the invitations and for the unfortunate incidents, respect the right of others. I wonder whether or not these people have been fair to those who were entitled to celebrate St. Jean Baptiste Day, in the province of Quebec in particular. Why is there such a climate in the Province of Quebec? It is because neither the federal nor the provincial government has taken any steps to prevent this situation.

When, supposedly to protect freedom of expression, everybody must listen to everybody else, when we open our doors to guys like Carmichael who came from the United States to foster revolution, or others from Europe with the same things in mind, we should not be surprised to see events take such a turn.

I believe it is time the government realized how important it is to stop those trouble makers and those who go to Cuba to get trained as revolutionaries, for instance Michel Chartrand, of Montreal, from entering Canada.

Mr. Speaker, according to the report, it is the duty of the government to ensure law and order. There is law, yes, but there is also order. The government must take its responsibilities so that order will prevail. We do not know what amendments to the report the government will make. We must wait. As soon as they are proposed, or a part of the report is submitted, we will examine them, not from a partisan point of view or for only a part of Canada, but keeping in mind the welfare of the entire Canadian population.

Mr. Speaker, order and security are threatened, as stated in the report, by a system which perhaps denies freedom and security to the citizens. We are living in a certain context where this year only 10 per cent of our young students will get a job, while 90 per cent will have no security of employment. Young people of 22 will have to ask their father, who is not too well off already, for 50 cents to buy cigarettes or tobacco.

In my opinion, those economic conditions must be improved if we want to improve the economic climate and the security of the Canadian people throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by saying to the Prime Minister and to the government that reforms must be made to protect Canada against the intrusion of subersive ideologies. There is a way to fight efficiently against the partisans of such ideologies. Even if we were to use every police force in Canada—the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or the Quebec Provincial Police—if we have an economic climate in which people are uneasy or cannot survive, that will not change anything.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Speaker, we are convinced that we have to bring forward basic economic reforms if we sincerely wish to establish in this country a climate of mutual confidence, in which young and old will be able to trust each other and to prevent subversion as we know it today in Canada.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we as parliamentarians will have saved the unity of Canada, and we will have given the world the example of a country which stands up and can generate understanding and agreement.

WAYS AND MEANS

DESIGNATION OF OPPORTUNITY TO DEBATE, PURSUANT TO S.O. 60 (2)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 60, subsection (2), I should like to ask that an order of the day be designated for the consideration tomorrow of the ways and means motions tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on June 3, 1969.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

AGREEMENT ON EASTERN TRIP BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, further to the discussions which have taken place between the activists on the transport committee, and following yesterday's inquiries, I wonder whether the following might be made an order of the house:

That for the purpose of completing its inquiries into the problems of transportation in the Atlantic provinces, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be empowered to adjourn from place to place within eastern Canada, and the clerks and the necessary supporting staff be authorized to accompany the standing committee.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). Is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

AGREEMENT TO REFER TO STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT ON WORK OF CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether we could again have to try at No. 93 under government orders, which is the resolution that the report of the committee appointed September 8, 1965, to survey the organization and work of the Canadian Pension Commission, tabled on March 26, 1968, be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. If there is unanimous agreement in the house I wonder if this could be made an order of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

COMMUNICATIONS

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT OF CANADIAN OVERSEAS TELECOMMUNICATION CORPORATION

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41, section (2), I wish to table the nineteenth annual report of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended March 31, 1969, pursuant to sections 22 and 23 (1) of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Act, chapter 42, and sections 85 (3) and 87 (3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McCLEAVE—ALLEGED IRREGULARITY IN INDICATING DISSENT FROM HOUSE DECISIONS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I make a correction in Hansard. It concerns the motion for concurrence in the main estimates for 1969-70. Throughout the brief report of the proceedings one member is reported as saying "On division", and that member is named. I think the house and the country should know that there were a great number of us who said "on division", at all stages of that proceeding.

MR. DIEFENBAKER—ALLEGED FAILURE TO SUPPLY COMPLETE INFORMATION IN ANSWER TO WRITTEN QUESTION

Mr. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of an answer given yesterday, as reported at page 10592, to question 2,379. The question asked for information on the expenditures that were made for storage of wheat in all the facilities for storage, month by month, since January 1, 1967. The answer given was that in the year 1966-67 the total amount was $29,583,000; the storage in 1967-68 cost $44,389,000. No answers was supplied in regard to the year 1968-69, although ten months of the year had passed.

I suggest that this question should be put back on the order paper, for the answer given by the Wheat Board is most evasive, to say the least. Indeed, one wonders whether the answer was given in that way in order to conceal the fabulous increase in storage during the last year owing to the loss of markets and other reasons.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege, could I draw attention to the final sentence of the answer, which reads:

> The amount of storage costs incurred by the board on wheat in the 1968/69 crop year is not yet available.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I answer that immediately. The question was asked on May 27. I did not ask about the entire crop; I asked for the amount for this year, as of that date. The hon. gentleman's attempt to cover up the answer which was given does not help us to arrive at accurate figures.

• (3:00 p.m.)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONSULTATIONS ON TRANSFER TO PROVINCES OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESPONSIBILITIES—TIME TABLE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER—VIEWS OF BROTHERHOOD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development concerning the statement issued yesterday. Were the provinces or the Indian people asked in advance for their views on the specific proposal to transfer constitutional responsibility for Indian programs and services to the provinces? I am asking the minister about that specific proposal and about the degree to which agreement was sought before the proposal was made.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, our consultations with the Indian people lasted for a whole year. We presented these proposals as part of a framework within which we believe that in the future the Indian people will be able to solve their problems with the assistance of the whole Canadian people.

This is a working document which was tabled so that it may be considered by the Indians and the federal as well as provincial governments.

We intend to undertake long discussions with the people concerned so as to find the procedure most appropriate under the circumstances.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it then that this is just a working proposal made for the purpose of discussion?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this is the direction the government wants to give the new policy concerning our first citizens.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government a deadline with regard to the proposal to move out of the field of the provision of services to the Indian people? Has the minister been in official communication with the provincial governments about the proposed transfer, or has a date been set for a conference at which it might be possible to discuss the proposed transfer? Also, can the minister advise the house as to the date of such conference and whether representatives of the Indian people will be invited to attend?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday it was our intention to discuss those proposals with the Indian people and with the provinces.

We intend, during the coming weeks, to meet with the provincial governments' representatives and with the Indian organizations' leaders in every province. I have already met some Indian people here and I will meet some others this afternoon.

[English]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since great concern has been expressed by the National Indian Brotherhood and since members of the brotherhood may wish to have their minds put at ease on the question, may I ask the minister what his intended timetable is? Is it the intention of the government to settle, first, treaty rights and land claims before abrogating its responsibility for Indians and turning those matters over to the provincial governments? It seems to me that this matter has been of concern to the Indian people. If the minister could give some assurance that the entire question of land claims and treaty rights will be dealt with first, and settled, I think the minds of the Indian people would be greatly set at ease.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we intend to appoint at an early date, a commissioner who will work in co-operation with the Indians in order to analyze the various claims, classify them and recommend to the government appropriate means of solving them. At the same time, we shall continue our consultations with the Indian people as well as with the provincial governments' representatives, so as to find an appropriate formula to extend provincial services to the Indians as well as to the other citizens.

[English]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the government intend to consult the Indians about the appointment of this commissioner and commission, so that they may have a commission which is working for their interests and not merely seeking their approval? May I also ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The first part of the hon. member's question was in order and I think the hon. member should not be allowed to launch into a consecutive question until the minister has had a chance to reply to the first question.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, of course it is obvious that I shall broach the subject with the leaders of the Indian associations of Canada, but the appointment of a commissioner rests solely with the government which alone is authorized to appoint one.

[English]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the leaders of the National Indian Brotherhood have expressed the fear that this legislation, if implemented, will lead to Indian cultural genocide, is the minister prepared to adopt a flexible approach to treaty rights and other controversial aspects of this matter?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in the document we tabled yesterday in the house, it is clearly established that we want to allow the Indians to integrate socially and economically in our society, that we want to help them preserve their cultural heritage, which is part of the Canadian heritage.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister undertake to meet immediately the executive of the Indian Association of Alberta which claims that this proposal was written in isolation from the Indian people?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said that I intended to meet in coming weeks the various provincial authorities to discuss those proposals, and the province of Alberta is included in my itinerary.

[English]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In those cases where Indian people prefer not to change the present system, will they be allowed to continue living under present conditions, pending further consultation?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think there is no doubt that the Indians want to be first class citizens in our society, and we are going to discuss the most appropriate means to make that possible.

[English]

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary or related question to direct to the minister. Does the statement which terms aboriginal claims to land as being unrealistic and not capable of being dealt with specifically represent a fixed government policy, or is this merely an idea which has been put forward for discussion and negotiation with the Indian people?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this proposal has become part of the government's policy. The government acknowledges the legal rights of the Indians and the rights derived from legal documents. As for the other rights, they are the same as those of the Canadian citizens.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WASHINGTON—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN AND U.S. MINISTERS ON SUBJECTS OF MUTUAL INTEREST

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister.

Would he tell the house why or for what purpose the government decided to send such important Canadian officials and members of the government, to the twelfth Canada-U.S. meeting? What is the purpose of that numerous delegation?

The Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I met President Nixon, a few months ago, we agreed to hold these meetings where several matters under the jurisdiction of several ministers and departments would be discussed. This is why there are, I understand, three ministers as well as the officials who assist them.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister assure the house that either the minister leading the delegation in Washington or one of the ministers with him will report to the house on the conversations now taking place when they return tomorrow?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is leading the delegation. I will consult him to see whether he has anything to report which will have the approval of the opposition.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister inform the house now about the agenda of items being discussed? What subjects are our Canadian ministers talking about with members of the United States cabinet?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the general subjects were indicated by me to the house at the time I saw President Nixon a few months ago. They cover such general areas as trade, economic relations, certain specific commodities and so on. It will be up to the minister to decide how much of the discussions it is in the interests of the house to hear in his report. It will be up to the opposition to indicate once again if the trip was worth while.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has indicated he will ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to consider whether he has anything to report which will meet with the approval of the opposition. Will the Prime Minister also ask the minister to consider whether he has anything to report which will not meet with the approval of the opposition, which is more important?

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Were the following subjects on the agenda: the withdrawal of our forces from NATO, acceptance of deserters by Canada and the recognition of communist China?

Mr. Trudeau: We did not propose any of those subjects, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member's friends in the United States demand that they be put on the agenda, of course we will be willing to discuss them.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. As these meetings have always been held to smooth out possible rough spots between the two countries, would it not have been an excellent opportunity to explain our rather weak position on these matters to our confreres in the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

POLLUTION OF AREA WATERWAYS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion as the minister responsible for affairs in the national capital area. Having in mind the reported closure of certain waterways in the national capital area as the result of water pollution, will the minister try to expedite the correction of this condition as he outlined in his plans for the national capital area a week or two ago?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): This is something we are looking into, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO ACCEPTANCE BY CANADA OF LOWER INTERNATIONAL PRICE

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in view of the continuing absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture, is it convenient for the Prime Minister to inform the house whether Canada is considering agreeing to lower the international price of wheat?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Responding for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker, let me say that today is not a convenient day. However, I shall take note of this question, which will be answered at the earliest possible opportunity.

NATIONAL HOLIDAYS

DOMINION DAY—ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING HOUSE OBSERVANCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, following the enunciation of the program for the house for today and tomorrow, which would indicate we are going into next week, what is the government's attitude on whether the house will sit on Dominion Day?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Dominion Day is not only a holiday for all Canadians but a holiday under the rules of the house. We intend to abide by the rules of the house.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BEEF—PASSING ON OF LOWER PRICE RECEIVED BY PRODUCER

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that prices for finished steers have dropped 5 cents a pound or $5 a hundredweight on the live cattle market in western Canada, can the minister tell the house whether this reduction in price to the farmer has been reflected in prices to the consumer?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member the question as asked is argumentative.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

CURTAILMENT OF SATURDAY WICKET SERVICE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Postmaster General. Has he had time to study the very much criticized curtailment of Saturday wicket service in post offices across Canada? Is the minister now in a position to inform the house whether complete service will be restored?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): No, Mr.

Speaker. As soon as a decision is made, I will be glad to inform the house.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CALL FOR SERVICES OF MEDICAL DOCTORS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the alarming statement by the minister that 72 per cent of the people of Canada needing medical care do not see a doctor, what provisions has he in mind to deal with this situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question is too wide in scope to be asked in this way during the question period. It might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Rynard: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

MEDICARE—CHANGE IN POLICY RESPECTING INSURANCE COMPANIES PARTICIPATION

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the importance of the recent decision of the government of Ontario to enter the national medicare plan, can the minister indicate whether there has been a change in federal government policy regarding the participation of insurance companies as carriers in the medicare plan?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for a statement of policy which in my view is normally made on motions.

OLD AGE SECURITY

DRUGS—FREE DISTRIBUTION TO RECIPIENTS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister planning to introduce a supplementary estimate or whatever procedure is necessary to provide free drugs to those receiving the old age security supplement?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker. There is provision under the Canada Assistance Plan for such assistance to those who need it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How many provinces have come under the Canada Assistance Plan?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TRANSFER TO COMMISSION OF MATTERS UNDER JURISDICTION OF EXCHEQUER COURT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Certain cases are now being started in the Exchequer Court which have been pending for years because the Indians had neither the money nor counsel to prove their claims in relation to treaties and other land rights. Will those cases now be transferred to the commission which the minister is setting up and will the Indians have counsel to enable them to set out their rights properly?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can do about the Indians' own decisions. We will set up a commission to which they can, if they so desire, submit their representations. There will also be the sub-committee the Indians established in April which we trust will assist them in preparing the essential document to be presented on behalf of the Indians of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will there be provision giving Indians the right to transfer those cases from the Exchequer Court, where they cannot afford to litigate, so that their rights will be protected?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the commission will not be a court. It will be an investigating body, working jointly with the Indian National Committee on the rights and treaties of the Indians.

[English]

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Can the minister assure the house that a check will be made on the amount of fees charged when the government is paying them on behalf of the Indians?

PENSIONS

ACTION TO ASSURE ADEQUATE BENEFITS FOR ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs or the acting minister. In view of the appeal received from the Naval Officers Association of Canada, what immediate steps can the government take to update to an adequate level the pension benefits of long service pensioners in Canada's fighting forces, and their wives and children?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As acting minister, I will take note of the question and have an answer at the earliest possible opportunity.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING MODIFICATION OF OPERATION

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has the minister under formulation a statement of government policy or intention with respect to modification of the operation of unemployment insurance, which he might be able to give to the house prior to the recess? Also, would it assist the minister in such formulation if I were to send him two documents with 40 pages of signatures from the people of Campbell River expressing their dissatisfaction?

HOUSING

APPROVAL OF URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. It arises from his statement to a committee of the other place that he will announce by mid-July whether certain urban renewal projects are to be approved. Does the minister intend to follow the selective anti-inflationary policy of the budget involving 22 cities in British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario in making his decisions?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is argumentative. If he is seeking information, the question might be asked in other terms.

[Later:]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question to the minister in charge of housing. Will the urban renewal programs now being examined by him be affected by the recent budget proposals?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will not specifically exclude or include them, but I will want to look at all relevant factors in making my decision.

[Mrs. MacInnis.]

FISHERIES

LOWER PRICES ON FRESHWATER CATCH

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) from Saskatoon I direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries. What action is the government considering, in view of the lower prices being paid for fish in Alberta under the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, my information is that the prices are higher this year, rather than lower.

TRADE

WHEAT—EFFORTS TO SELL TO ARGENTINA

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I direct this question to the Prime Minister. Is he aware that Argentina has oversold its available wheat and is now in the market to purchase over seven million bushels? Further, is Canada making an effort to sell this amount of wheat to Argentina?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to take notice of this question on behalf of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR GRANT BY BLACK UNITED FRONT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I direct this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Secretary of State. Is either gentleman in a position to advise the house what decision the government has arrived at respecting a grant to the Black United Front in Nova Scotia?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that the matter is under consideration by the government at the present time.

Mr. Forrestall: Can the minister say whether a decision will be reached before the summer is over?

Mr. Munro: Hopefully before the summer is over, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL HOLIDAYS

CHANGE IN DESIGNATION AND TIMING OF DOMINION DAY

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will he give serious consideration to bringing in legislation changing Dominion Day to Canada Day and celebrating that day on the first Monday prior to July 1?

Some hon. Members: Never.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION OF THE VATICAN

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister.

From now until the end of the session can we hope that the Prime Minister will make a statement showing the progress made by the government in establishing diplomatic relations with the Vatican?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BEEF—PASSING ON OF LOWER PRICE RECEIVED BY PRODUCER

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the question asked earlier by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar I wish to direct this question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will his department investigate the drop in the price being paid for feeder cattle and determine why this reduction has not been passed on to the consumers?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I made clear to the house previously, the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act watches all significant price movements, and naturally he will take note of this question.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct another question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the drop that has taken place in beef prices will the minister withdraw his support for a boycott on the purchasing of beef?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is to try to have aware and alert consumers through the provision of information and educational programs. I have urged consumers to exercise care in their purchases. If there are any items they think are too expensive, such as expensive cuts of steak, automobiles, clothing or furniture, my advice is that they should desist from buying them.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—CHANGE IN POLICY RESPECTING INSURANCE COMPANIES PARTICIPATION

[Later:]

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): With respect, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you misheard my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I was not asking for a statement of policy. I was asking the minister whether there has been a change in policy.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in policy. I believe that the carriers to whom the hon. member is referring have to report directly to and are under the supervision of the public authority in the province.

Mr. Broadbent: As a supplementary question, would the minister consider tabling all the correspondence that took place between the government of Canada and the government of Ontario on the introduction of the Ontario medicare scheme?

Mr. Munro: I will be glad to look into the matter but so far as I am aware there has been no correspondence. The Ontario government is well aware of the terms of the federal medicare legislation, and through discussions that our officials have had with Ontario officials we are fully satisfied that the Ontario act comes within the terms of the federal legislation.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether any different interpretation of the section of the act regarding carriers from that accorded to Alberta and the other provinces has been accorded to Ontario?

Mr. Munro: No, Mr. Speaker, no different interpretation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POWER

MINAS BASIN—DISPOSITION OF FEASIBILITY STUDY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Will the house be advised before the summer recess on the feasibility study of Minas Basin tidal power, or will this not be done until the fall?

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice and bring it to the attention of the minister on his return.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

USE OF FUND IN RETIREMENT PLAN

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is he aware of the illegal use to which Devco is putting the U.I.C. fund?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any illegality.

Mr. MacInnis: As a supplementary question, would the minister take a good close look at what is being done by Devco so he may realize that what Devco is doing is denied the individual, and therefore it is illegal for them to use the fund in this way?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a representation to the minister—

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I had not quite finished my sentence. Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to add—which the hon. member must assume has been noted by the Minister.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am trying to obtain information in this house in some way, shape or form in order that the miners in Cape Breton who have been forcibly retired by a Crown company will get justice from a fund into which they have been paying, some of them for as many as 29 years. That Crown company is illegally using the fund. If the fund is not being illegally used, why is it that individuals are being denied the same use of the fund?

[Mr. Munro.]

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, if the miners are of such an opinion and if what is being done is illegal, they certainly have a right of appeal before the courts.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, does the minister consider it part of the just society that a miner who is forced out of work cannot afford to go to the courts, especially with the way things are under the government? Big deal—go to the courts!

HOUSING

STEPS TO ASSURE STEADY FLOW OF MORTGAGE MONEY

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of housing. In view of housing statistics indicating a drop of 31.7 per cent in housing investment by non-banking lenders, what steps does the minister intend to take to ensure a steady flow of mortgage moneys?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, we are encouraged by the reaction of the lenders in putting more money into residential mortgages. In the same light I am glad to direct the attention of the house to the fact that housing starts are very much up over the same period last year.

DRUGS

PROFESSIONAL PERSONNEL ON COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY INTO NON-MEDICAL USE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is based on the type of distinguished men who will make up the committee which is to be established to obtain accurate information on the drug problem. Only one of these gentlemen is an experienced specialist in drug addiction. Has the minister given any consideration to adding specialists in drug addiction to this committee?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had been listening when the announcement was made he would have realized it was made quite clear that the people on this committee would represent the various disciplines such as psychiatry, sociology, psychology, the legal profession and so on. This is not only a medical problem. It was with that in mind that the committee was set up to obtain ideas in respect of the whole problem. Also, if the hon. member had looked at the terms of reference he would know that the inquiry has been empowered to go outside in order to obtain special research in all these areas.

Mr. Rynard: I am glad they have this power because certainly one member of the committee which has been set up by the minister is a specialist in drug addiction.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the President of the Privy Council, who seems all prepared to answer, what he is going to do tomorrow and, in view of the solicitations of his friends on the government back benches, what are his plans for next week?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As hon. members know, today we will be starting with Bill C-202, the area development incentives bill. If we complete the report stage of that bill we will continue with Bill C-207 which deals with Atlantic transportation assistance. Tomorrow, as was indicated by my request for a designation on the Order Paper, it would be our proposal to call first the two ways and means motions. As hon. members know, they are not subject to debate at that time. This will be for the purpose of giving first reading to the two bills to follow those motions.

We will then call as the next item of business Bill C-202, in respect of area development incentives. This will be followed by Bill C-120 respecting the official languages. As I indicated to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), Tuesday of next week will be a holiday. The house will sit on Monday and Wednesday and the remaining days for the purpose of finishing those legislative items and then for giving attention to a motion to deal with the question of time allocation.

I might indicate that I plan to give notice later today of a motion dealing with the question of time allocation in conformity with the decision of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. I should like to be able to explain the purpose of the proposed motion in more detail, but it will be out of order for me to do so at this time. I mention this notice of motion at this time because the present plan is that this motion will be the item of business to be called as soon as the several legislative items I already have mentioned have been dealt with by the house.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask why we went on staggered hours when the house leader knew all the time he was going to bring in this last minute business about the rules?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member seems to be suffering from a staggered memory because I made it clear at all times that these four items had to be dealt with before the summer adjournment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF PRODUCTIVE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES—REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-202, to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members will have noted, there are a number of motions relating to Bill C-202 which is now before us. As has been done on similar occasions in the past the Chair, with the assistance of its learned advisers, has looked at these amendments. Before they are put to the house I should like to suggest to hon. members it might be convenient, when we open discussion on the first motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, to debate and consider at the same time the proposed motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Egmont.

The motion proposed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is perhaps more general than the motion proposed by the hon. member for Egmont. It would be extremely difficult to limit the discussion to the motion proposed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby without allowing hon. members to discuss the motion which stands as No. 2 on the list of motions before us. Therefore I would suggest that both motions be discussed at the same time. My suggestion would be that all motions be withheld until the last and if we are to have votes on them that all the votes be taken together on all the motions.

I might add that I have serious reservations about the last motion, No. 8. If hon. members are prepared at this time to indicate to the Chair their views about this proposed motion I would be pleased to hear from them in this regard. My view is that perhaps this proposed motion introduces a financial provision into the bill which is not covered by the recommendation of the Crown. I would have a tendency not to put that motion to the house after we have concluded debate on the first seven motions.

Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rising to speak to the point of order in respect of motion No. 8?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was hesitating for a moment to see whether the hon. member for Regina East might return to his place. Speaking for those of us in this party who have looked at these motions, I think I can say that our general view is that your approach to these eight motions is a very proper one. If it is the judgment of the Chair that motion No. 1 and motion No. 2 should be combined for debate and that No. 8 should not be considered because of the expenditure question we would be inclined to agree with that ruling. Rather than take the time of the house to argue the matter we would accept the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the hon. member's comments we will proceed to the consideration of the first motion, it being understood that motions Nos. 1 and 2 will be considered at the same time for purposes of debate.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, may I ask for clarification? When it comes to putting the motions in respect of these amendments will it be the plan to take the motion on amendment No. 1 first and then, depending on what happens to the first motion, the motion in respect of the second amendment would be put?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. We would put the motions consecutively before the house starting with the one standing in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved:

That Bill C-202, An Act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions in Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be amended, by deleting in clause 2, section (f), all the words after the word "of" in line 13 of page 2, and by substituting therefor the words: "all forms of industrial activity."

He said: In speaking on this motion, Mr. Speaker, I should first of all point out that if one reads at the outset the purpose of this bill he will see that it is described as an act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment. This is a very broad conceptual description of the purpose of this bill. Members of this party are in full agreement with this broad description.

If one turns to clause 2(f), however, which I shall not read at this point, it will be found that what the government has in mind in effect is not really to provide funds for industrial expansion in the sense that term is now used by most modern economists and most people concerned with regional development, but in fact is concerned with manufacturing centres. So the central concept of the government in designating a certain area as being a growth centre, for example, really means a manufacturing centre. Therefore we in this party think there is a very important restriction right at the outset in this bill. We believe it is the kind of restriction which should be removed because, as I pointed out, we are in sympathy with the broader purpose of the bill as stated in its title.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Therefore my amendment to the bill restores what has already been stated to be its purpose at the outset, namely, to deal with regional economic disparity by providing incentives for industrial expansion, not just manufacturing expansion. That kind of thinking, as I tried to point out when the bill was at the committee stage, is really outmoded in my judgment and certainly in the judgment of many professional people concerned with the question of regional development.

Let me quote one source in this regard. In an article written recently by two economists on the subject of regional development they referred to a number of misconceptions on this question and said:

—many misconceptions are still very popular. The propensity to search for a development base only in secondary manufacturing is maybe the most popular and the most pernicious of these misconceptions.

The very point I make, and the point made by authorities in North America and Europe, is that industrial activity should not be seen to be simply manufacturing activity. This concept should also include the tourist industry, for example, and the service industry. These are two very important sectors of a modern economy. My amendment would remove the restriction and provide the legal possibility of making funds available to many sections of this large and expanding economic base through the development of either tourist or service industries.

The minister indicated very clearly at the committee stage of the bill that it would relate entirely to the manufacturing industry in a given area. But it could be made to help expand the tourist potential in Prince Edward Island, certain parts of Quebec and Ontario, or in fact in certain parts of any province in this country. We have a tourist potential. In certain areas we have a capacity for serious academic research centres to be developed if we want to provide the funds. I refer to such centres as revealed in the recent history of the eastern part of the United States. If money is poured in at the outset and the intellectual and technical capacity of a region is developed, secondary industry in fact can grow out of that potential rather than the other way round.

One further bit of professional feeling about the notion of expanding the concept of industrial development to include other industries than manufacturing comes from the report of the economic development committee, which was released recently. I should like to read from that report to show once again that professional opinion is by no means in accord with the minister's view on this subject. Let me read from pages 78 and 79 of that report:

The availability of services locally is very important for industry. Not only are services increasingly forming a larger share of industry outputs but it is probably more important for industry to have services on the spot than other inputs like material and semi-finished products, in as far as many service inputs cannot be stored and have a high frequency of purchase.

I could read a number of paragraphs from this report, but the point made there is that even if you are concerned with the development of secondary industry in a particular part of the country, it is very important to provide funds for the development of related service industries in the same area.

In short, this bill, especially the clause I wish to amend, is unnecessarily restrictive. We have an excellent opportunity through this bill, which is otherwise very good, to provide for meaningful growth in many parts of Canada which badly need that growth. There is no point in the late 1960's in going back to the essentially primitive economic notion of relying exclusively on the development of the manufacturing sector of the economy.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved:

That Bill C-202, An Act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be amended, by deleting paragraph (f) of clause 2 and substituting therefor:

(f) "facility" means the structures, machinery and equipment that constitute the necessary components of

(i) a manufacturing operation;

(ii) a tourist operation;

(iii) a service operation;

(iv) a processing operation other than an initial processing operation in a resource-based industry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, after your ruling perhaps it would be appropriate at this point to deal not only with my own amendment but the amendment of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). As you correctly advised the house, these amendments are similar in many ways. The reason both amendments are here, as I am sure the minister is well aware, is that there could be a real distinction drawn in the implementation of this legislation in that if either of these measures were to carry there might be a different effect in that implementation.

Let me say first of all that this bill is an important piece of legislation. I believe the minister feels it is important inasmuch as it outlines certain steps to be taken to improve and alter substantially in some places the previous industrial incentives legislation. It attempts in the same way to attract new industry to areas of unemployment or underutilization and, hopefully, to create in those areas greater employment opportunities.

When we discussed this bill in the committee we discovered that the former provisions have been expanded in almost every part.

The amount of money available has been doubled. It is clearly spelled out that the regions are to be greatly expanded, and even the minimums are not what we would think of as normal minimums, whether we think of the 10,000 square miles first advanced by the department or the amended version, 5,000 square miles. In various ways this legislation has been extended to cover a great deal more by way of implementation and by way of dealing with realistic opportunities that will arise. Therefore it is most surprising that we should find that the minister and his officials took a very restrictive attitude in respect of the heart of the bill.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has already referred to the fact that the preamble to the legislation spells out very clearly that social as well as economic aspects are to be taken into account in an attempt to really get at unemployment problems. This measure is not just some kind of gratuity available to industry, or something to make it attractive for industry to move into somewhat unattractive areas and thus benefit the more or less marginal areas of economic disparity without really dealing with the areas of greatest economic disparity. I refer particularly to those areas in the eastern part of this country, in the west and in the northern region. Therefore I have the feeling that those of us who have moved these amendments and will support them have very strong grounds for arguing that the very narrow interpretation of industry by the minister is not easily acceptable to hon. members.

It was not entirely clear in the minister's speech on second reading when he introduced the legislation whether or not he was in fact taking a very restricted view of industry. When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) spoke on second reading he spoke hopefully about the inclusion under this legislation of service and tourist industries, because these obviously are very much a part of our concern when we think of areas of economic disparity. It was only during the hearings of the standing committee that it became very clear—it seemed to me that the minister's position hardened as we dealt with these two amendments—that there was to be no inclusion for the purposes of this bill of either the tourist or service industries.

The important question to be raised at this point is, what are the regions and what are the regions like which are going to be basically in need of the kind of assistance the minister is proposing under this legislation? I think they would be the areas about which the minister himself has spoken. Perhaps I may mention, as an example the one I know best, eastern Canada or Atlantic Canada. This is an area with regard to which the minister presumably has some priorities. It is the area in which he is hopeful that much of the money allocated under the legislation will be spent in the development of new industries, thus providing new employment opportunities.

In regard to this area what are the industries that have the greatest potential, to put it another way, in spite of the difficulties these provinces have had economically, what are the areas of the economy that have grown most quickly? I answer: the tourist industry, particularly in my own province. It has one of the most exciting potentials for the people of Prince Edward Island. I am sure the minister would agree with me because he has visited the province and knows its potential for the tourist industry. I suppose that in rebuttal the minister would say: This is what we have taken into account in introducing our comprehensive development plan. The minister may not have used those words, but I have used them for him.

Whatever arguments he uses in relation to Prince Edward Island or any other part of the Atlantic region, he cannot escape the fact that the provincial premiers of the five eastern provinces will be thinking very seriously of what they can do to increase the tourist potential in order to increase employment opportunities in their provinces. The fact that industry has been willingly ignored in the legislation now before us will not go down very well with the provincial administrations in that region.

It seems to me—in fact, this became increasingly clear in the committee hearings—that the interpretation of "industry" in this bill is very narrow. I was going to say that it is an economist's view of the situation, but I shall not say that because if you have 12 economists together in a room you will obtain at least 12 different points of view. I think we have in the bill one economist's view of what constitutes an industrial base for a community or area. If this is the attitude that has been adopted, we are putting ourselves very much behind the 8-ball in hoping to develop a successful program for regions of potential development. This approach says something, too, for the rigid adherence that the minister, up to now at least, has adopted in this regard. We are getting an unhealthy dose of the old medicine, "Ottawa knows best". I do not believe this has worked in the past. I do not believe it is possible for the minister or his officials, no matter how competent they may be as individuals, to sit down and on each and every occasion say: We know that industrial development programs, whether they be for eastern Canada, northern Ontario or the northern part of the prairie provinces, must automatically exclude tourism and service industries. Up to this point I have not dealt with service industries, but it seems to me this is an almost theoretical approach to the question of industrial development.

I am neither an industrialist nor an economist, but I have enough practical experience in regard to the attraction of new industry to difficult or underdeveloped regions to know that you cannot talk about one segment of the economy in isolation from every other. It seems to me that the minister is attempting to talk specifically about a manufacturing base, resource or industry, and is automatically ignoring what must, in my opinion, go hand in glove with it—the service industries.

You can argue what must come first, whether you must have primary or secondary industry, or whether without sufficient services in existence it will not be attractive for new industry to be set up in an area. I think this is a philosopher's argument that has nothing to do with the facts. We are faced with a real situation which says to me, and obviously to other parties in the house, that when you are seeking to attract industry to an area you must consider the question from the broadest possible viewpoint which takes into account manufacturing, tourism and service industries. You should not attempt to exclude in any way the possibilities that may be resident in an area.

I shall now comment specifically on the amendment advanced by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I do not wish to appear contentious in this regard, but there are two problems which I believe place my amendment above that of the hon. member. He knows one of them because I mentioned it in committee. I believe that all forms of industrial activity could, without too much difficulty, encompass tourism. There may be considerable problems in this regard, and I have spoken to lawyers who agree with me. When you talk about service industries it is not entirely clear what is meant, and we might become involved in all kinds of legal actions that could arise in this respect. I refer to whether or not service industries could be included under the term "all forms of industrial activity". This fear would haunt me if we were to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, but it could be easily dispelled if the amendment we have advanced were adopted.

The second problem in connection with the hon. member's amendment I was advised of at a later date. It concerns the implementation of the amendment. The amendment of the hon. member does not include any provision for clause 4 of the bill covering the authorization of incentives which would make the program more workable. There is no provision, particularly in respect of subclause (b), which would in fact make service industries eligible for special grants. In view of the fact that this is a very important part of the new program, I think we would be going only half way in our efforts in this regard. If subclause (b) were adopted without the addition of the words I have proposed in the consequent amendment, we would greatly weaken the important and useful attempts being made by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby with regard to the bill.

I therefore suggest that in these aspects the amendment does not fully satisfy the concerns we have about two of the basic industrial activities that we feel very strongly should be encompassed in the scope and command of the legislation.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) is to be commended for moving this amendment because it provides a very important approach to the legislation and brings to the attention of the house a point with regard to which a decision should be rendered by the house. It seems to me that when considering the motion moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby we should keep in mind the basic purpose of the bill. I believe I can set out the basic purpose of the bill, as it is understood by those in this part of the house, no better than by reciting its full title, which is:

> An act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment.

There was in committee a good deal of discussion on this matter. I must say I was not fully satisfied with the answers provided by the minister at that time. The minister came forward with the concept that manufacturing activity within designated regions should be of the type that could be promoted, encouraged and assisted by the government. I have no objection to the principle involved in assisting manufacturing activity and the development of manufacturing activity in these regions. However, it seems to me that if the bill is to accomplish the purposes set out for it, it will be necessary to give it somewhat broader scope than that provided at the present time.

I believe that when dealing with the development of a region we must consider not only secondary manufacturing activity but all forms of economic and industrial activity. The fact is that prior to secondary manufacturing processes and activity it is necessary to have primary economic production. This, of course, can take many forms—agriculture, fishing, mining, and so on. During the committee stage the minister made a valid point, namely, that some forms of primary economic and industrial activity would not qualify for a grant under this legislation because they would not be established unless they were already capable of standing completely on their own feet in economic terms.

It seems to me that it is possible to visualize a number of areas of primary economic activity for which it would be very desirable and necessary to provide financial assistance under the terms of this bill. For instance, I can think of some aspects of the forestry industry that might not be developed if they are left solely to the type of rationale that might be brought to them by a commercial firm. However, with some financial assistance which may be made possible under this bill I think we could find regions in this country where it would and could be determined that it would be a worth-while expenditure of public money to encourage this type of activity.

I believe it is important that assistance rendered in connection with the development of the designated regions specified in the bill should be brought within the scope of the bill. It is fine for the minister to say that other assistance could be given through the establishment of the department itself. However, it seems to me it would be a much more rational, logical and desirable form of organization to provide for this financial assistance under the terms of the bill.

The same comments may be applied to service industries which I think are essential in terms of the over-all economic development of a region. There have been many sad examples where either primary or secondary industrial activities have been developed in a particular region of the country, following which it has been found that the service industries associated with the development of a community and with its economic life are very much lacking. I can give some examples which have taken place in recent years in my own province where a number of communities have had mushroom growth as a result of the development of the potash industry. In some cases the potash mines were located near relatively small centres in the province and the only form of development that made sense in terms of the community was for people to live relatively near to the mine.

There are a number of such examples in Saskatchewan where service facilities and community development have not taken place on a scale adequate for the needs of the people who have moved into the area and who have found a new form of making a living as a result of the development of the potash industry, which is basically a primary form of economic activity. Thus it seems to me that if we are going to obtain balanced economic development which will serve the full needs of communities in designated regions within this country it would be desirable to adopt the motion proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), which provides that financial assistance be made available for all forms of industrial activity.

Mention has also been made of the tourist industry. I believe it would be very useful and important to provide assistance to the tourist industry under this bill. It has been noted by some people, of course, that the tourist industry is seasonal for the most part, that it is not a year-round economic activity. However, the very fact that it is seasonal in nature in most parts of the country makes it that much more important that assistance be provided to the industry within the framework of the economic plan developed for the entire region under the bill before us.

I hope that the government will give serious consideration to the proposal that has been placed before the house. I hope we will find some responsiveness on the part of the government, and that the bill as it is finally passed by the house will be fully comprehensive in nature and capable of carrying out what in fact are very laudable objectives and purposes as set out in the title and as described by the minister and the government on a number of occasions. Therefore, I commend this motion to the house and I hope it receive support from all parties.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, first I want to express my gratitude to the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) for moving an amendment on behalf of the Progressive Conservative party to include tourist and service operations under the Regional Development Incentives Act. No matter how hard we try, we cannot seem to get the government to recognize the importance of the tourist and service industries to the Canadian economy. The Small Businesses Loans Act has been allowed to wither away, partly, I believe, because it was Progressive Conservative legislation, partly because of the rapid increase in interest rates which makes the banks unwilling to lend under that act, and partly as a result of apparent indifference. The effort of a few years ago to give assistance to the tourist industry has not been continued.

The other source of assistance to which the tourist and service industries were looking was from the Industrial Development Bank. Here again the former Progressive Conservative government extended loans under the Industrial Development Bank to the tourist and service industries. The I.D.B. is still giving loans to tourist operators under this act, for which I am sure we are all grateful.

May I point out to the Minister that under the Industrial Development Bank Act the tourist industry is recognized as an industry, as are service industries, and it is very difficult to understand why, when it is recognized under that act, a different interpretation is put on the word "industry" in the present bill, in which the minister is ostensibly trying to increase the economic viability of different parts of the country. Many of the regions that particularly need help are best suited to the tourist and service industries. Many of them are in more remote areas where in some cases industry hesitates to go because of the distances for transportation, a shortage of trained manpower, and so forth. But in these areas the tourist industry could very well act as a real boon to the local economy. It seems that the tourist and service industries would carry out the real intent of the act if they were included. However, although the Industrial Development Bank makes loans it does not give any grants to those people who are involved in the service industry. Also, we find that the I.D.B. is so concerned about getting its money back and about making money that it even demands a prepayment premium on funds which are repaid earlier than the mortgage calls for. I think this is a terrible travesty on the intent of government assistance.

I have recently had to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to a case where the I.D.B. forced a company to sell a major part of its capital assets in order to make a payment on its loan, and after the capital assets had been sold, the I.D.B. required a payment of over $1,000 as a penalty. This again seems to be a terrible travesty on any government intention to assist an industry. They are certainly not assisting when they are demanding a premium on repayment of their money.

I have wandered a little far afield simply to point out to the minister that the tourist industry has not had sufficient government assistance over the years despite it being an essential part of the Canadian economy. I am not going to repeat today the many speeches I have made on the importance of the tourist industry and allied service industries to the Canadian economy. In the first place, the tourist industry is a major producer of foreign funds: it brings money into Canada and that money stays. The tourist industry provides a vast source of employment for Canadians and has a major economic influence on any community where two or three major tourist establishments are located. It is as much of a boon to the area as would be the establishment of another kind of industry.

So far as employment is concerned, I should like to point out to the minister that with advancing technology and automation manpower requirements for the operation of large industrial plants are diminishing. I was present when an announcement was made not long ago of a large industrial plant which was to be constructed at a cost of $23 million to specifications that met the latest technological advances. Yet the plant was going to employ only 90 people. This number might well be employed by tourist operators in a community on a financial base of half a million dollars. Such an operation has not only direct payroll benefits but also indirectly benefits the local community by increasing economic activity in the area and requiring the support of many local services. The tourist industry is also largely Canadian owned and operated, in contrast to many industrial enterprises.

I could go on and on on this subject but I will not do so. I do not want in any way to suggest that we should not promote industrial expansion and build new factories in this country. I am merely pointing out that these are but one part of the economic picture. If the minister really wants to broaden this bill and benefit a lot of industries that really require assistance by expanding and providing employment opportunities, and consequently improving living conditions, then the tourist industry would be the best example of need that I can think of.

I do not want to speak at any length. Suffice it to say that the bill as introduced appears to provide for the type of business to which I have referred. The title has already been referred to in full. I shall not refer to it again, except to say that its intent is to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures. This objective does not exclude the tourist and service industries; in fact, they appear to be included. I would say the bill describes perfectly the impact that improved and expanded tourist facilities would make in any part of Canada. I hope the government sees fit to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), and recognizes the problems of the tourist and service industries as well as the importance of these industries to the Canadian economy.

I have often stood in this house and made speeches in this vein and wondered whether I was wasting my time. Today I wonder who is listening and what the government is going to do. I have the feeling that the government is going to do nothing, that the decision has already been made. I wonder what purpose is served by my standing up in the house and making a speech. All I can hope for is that if the minister has already hardened his heart against the tourist and service industries and is going to reject this amendment, he will urge his colleagues to do something else for those industries because they badly need help.

If the minister is going to reject this amendment, then I hope he will speak to his colleague the Minister of Finance about trying to get the Industrial Development Bank to loosen up a little and assist the tourist and service industries in times of difficulty instead of merely making loans to them, the first priority of which is to get their money back with interest. This is not the type of benefit that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) is trying to bestow on other industries under the terms of this bill.

Therefore I plead with the minister to keep in mind that this type of industry can certainly be of benefit to many regions. It may be that, having considered this amendment, the minister will accept it. I certainly hope this is the case. However, if this is not the case we can only hope that without delay he will consult his colleagues to see whether something else can be done for the tourist and service industries to enable them to compete with the new and enlarged facilities that are being established on the other side of the border in an effort to keep United States tourists at home. The tourist and service industries need this assistance, and they need it now.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate the minister for introducing this legislation which, in my view, will bring about some improvements specially in areas such as the one I am representing here in the house.

The people of Bellechasse and I welcome this opportunity to benefit finally from legislation designed to bring about industrial development in our area.

The prime purpose of this measure is to establish industries in order to provide productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures.

In my area, special measures are necessary. Many of the workers now unemployed are on welfare; that does not contribute much to the development of the country. I do not blame those people because special circumstances prevent them from bringing their contribution.

Now legislation will promote the development of an existing industry and the establishment of new ones which will enable these healthy people to contribute by their work to the development which is necessary.

Through that legislation, some solution could be applied to another exceedingly serious problem. In fact, many farmers and small contractors have to reduce or give up their operations on account of difficult economic conditions and the government policy.

In that case, as the government decides whether the operations are profitable or not, it happens that a large number of farmers and small contractors become unemployed and I feel that the government, in co-operation with the Department of Agriculture, should act as quickly as possible in that respect.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Each week one sees farmers quitting the farming industry. It would be imperative to proceed as quickly as possible with industrial development, in order that those farmers be diverted to other industries.

Bill C-202 will indeed be of interest to a good many contractors who were wishing to expand their industry in order to solve at least in part the unemployment problem, and make possible that change which relates to both the farming and the manufacturing industries.

An amendment has been moved to this bill so that it would apply to all kinds of industrial activity.

The previous speaker dwelt at lenght on the tourist industry. The minister will probably tell us whether the bill in its original form contains provisions designed to stimulate the development of tourism, which would make the amendment useless. But at any rate, if this is not provided for, it would be desirable, and even necessary to pass the amendment, in order to allow this development in the areas where it is possible.

I was thinking in particular of the area of Île-aux-Grues, where tourist resources are many, but their normal development is seriously hindered. I have already called the minister's attention to the problem of the ferry service which links Île-aux-Grues to the mainland, and which delays the agricultural and tourist development of that area.

I thank the minister for having given serious consideration to the request I made on behalf of my constituents. I am confident that such a study will go on and that this bill will permit practical and concrete realizations in this field so that the tourist industry may improve in that area.

Numerous requests are regularly made to us. Intermediate organization are interested and, as I have already said in the house, it is impossible for the federal government to do everything, unless the provincial and municipal authorities as well as the public become interested in a serious and positive way in the matter.

The people are sufficiently aware of the problem and have considered the matter thoroughly enough to be in a position to assure their co-operation to the government, in order to attain the objective sought by all hon. members, that is the possibility of finding adequate solutions, because the Canadian workers are dissatisfied since they are unable to work to the full extent of their powers.

I can assure the government I will fully co-operate to help the officials of the department in their work to promote industry and tourism, so that Bill C-202 may be really effective, provided however—and there is always the same problem—the minister can get the necessary credits. I would not like if, at some point, the minister were obliged to answer too often: The program is good, the project satisfactory, but we lack the necessary funds, we have no money.

Considering the nature and the importance of this department and of the projects of the minister, I hope the cabinet members will make funds available to achieve this goal but also to bring about the solution we have been awaiting so long.

[English]

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the motion moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). I feel that the bill should include in its coverage several key industries which are now omitted. I do not see why the minister and the government cannot accept this very modest amendment. The direction of the department in question is in the minister's hands and exclusions can be made later when the area incentives program comes before the department to be scrutinized.

The consequences of accepting the amendment before the house could be vital not only to my riding of Kootenay West but to many other proposed incentive areas of Canada. For all these areas the amendment has important implications. For instance, the amendment, if accepted, will make certain that the service industries, the tourist industry and certain research projects come under the legislation. They will therefore be eligible for grants.

I point out to hon. members that the title of Bill C-202 is, "An Act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment." That is the full title of the bill we are now debating. I submit that anyone looking at the title would come to the conclusion that assistance in the incentive areas to be set up will be rather broadly based. But when we look at clause 2 and at subclause (f) in particular we find that the definitions in the bill are far more restrictive than one would imagine them to be from reading the title. Clause 2(f) defines the facilities for which grants may be made:

"facility" means the structures, machinery and equipment that constitute the necessary components of a manufacturing or processing operation, other than an initial processing operation in a resource-based industry;

The amendment offered by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby would amend the clause so that it would read:

"facility" means the structures, machinery and equipment that constitute the necessary components of all forms of industrial activity.

The words of the amendment are, "all forms of industrial activity". Such activity would include the service, tourist and research industries, which in my opinion are vital to the success of this program in many incentive areas. I feel that the term "growth potential" should be used in a much broader sense than that outlined in the definition. The bill now before us would restrict the areas that could benefit those with a potential manufacturing growth and would exclude other very important potential growth factors to be found in the service, tourist and research industries.

I note in the minutes of the committee that the minister indicated that under the act establishing his department assistance could be granted to the tourist industry, provided that industry was the sole activity that could be developed in the region being considered. He also indicated that at certain times and in certain areas it might be a sensible economic move to develop the service industry. In view of the minister's statements before the committee, I see no reason why they should not be included in the bill. It will still be up to the department to decide whether grants will be made available to the various facilities wishing to establish in the incentive areas set up. For this reason I see no logical explanation why this all-inclusive amendment should not be accepted by the government.

This legislation sets out the guidelines for development in the incentive areas. The various committees working in these areas to bring in secondary industry and other facilities to build up their growth potential must be given clear-cut directives as to who will be eligible for grants in their areas. This is necessary if proper planning is to be done. It is not good enough to let a committee know that tourism may come under the department but is not included in the act. I see no reason why this important amendment should not be written into the statute.

I certainly agree that secondary manufacturing or processing industries are vital to the regional development envisioned by the bill. This type of industry, however, tends to concentrate in the more industrial parts of these regions for obvious reasons. I feel it is desirable that every section of these incentive areas should be entitled to the economic stimulant which we hope will come from this bill, and in many sections of these areas the best possible incentive would be assistance to the tourist and service industries.

There is one point that must be crystal clear to everyone. In the tourist industry we are not providing facilities which will be based on an expendable resource. We can sell scenery and other tourist attractions ten thousand times without depleting their potential, and this is something we certainly should not forget when dealing with this problem. I feel that the government is restricting itself much too narrowly in a modern economy by merely accepting the concept of manufacturing growth. There could well be other types of industrial activity much more suitable to an area than manufacturing. I hope the minister will see the matter in this light and accept the amendment now before the house.

The whole of the Kootenay West region could be classed as a slow growth area. It has tremendous potential. Some of it is in the manufacturing field, but certainly one of the greatest undeveloped potentials where assistance is needed is in the field of tourism and in the service industries. I trust that this great potential, which is to be found in many other areas of Canada where natural resources are not too abundant, will not be ignored by the minister and the department through failure to include it in this legislation. The minister, after all, is the servant of the house, and those interested in regional development should press for this important economic aspect to be included in the present legislation.

I urge the minister to take a second look at the legislation. I read the committee reports. I have gone over the arguments very carefully which the minister raised against the inclusion of such amendments. The minister should not be alarmed at something like this being included in the legislation because it is his department which will make the final decision in allocating funds for projects in incentive areas all over Canada. I urge the minister, the government and all hon. members to make certain that we do not exclude one of the most vital industries in Canada, one that is prevalent in many of the underdeveloped areas, and we will be excluding it if we do not include it in the legislation. This bill is an attempt to do away with regional disparity; yet one of the major industries, tourism, is ostensibly being excluded. I urge the minister to include it and make certain that people all over Canada can plan on it as one of the industries that can be developed within the incentive areas.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I will spend only a couple of moments on this amendment. In supporting it I wish to mention one example where the tourist industry would be very beneficial.

The minister admits there are vital problems in Newfoundland with regard to regional development. I feel it would be helpful, in an area recognized by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), to create a second national park. This would be very beneficial to Newfoundland and would have far-reaching effects. Development of a national park would create ancillary employment which is so vital in an area which has the highest unemployment rate in Canada. The ancillary tourist industry of a national park would be very beneficial. The secondary industry and commercial enterprises that would flow from a national park would do much to uplift the economy by the creation of additional employment. I ask the minister to take this into consideration when considering the particular problems in the province of Newfoundland to which he himself has referred.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity to discuss several times the amendment proposed to the house. I do not think the government is showing bad faith by not satisfying that request.

We should not consider this industrial incentives act as a wholesale development legislation, since it does not include every instrument the government intends to use to insure economic and even regional development.

As had been mentioned, the general legislation establishing the department contains the necessary provisions to assist provinces and municipalities to develop the internal structures required for industrial development.

Under the act establishing the department, we can grant subsidies, lend money and guarantee loans, and do practically everything that can be done for industrial development after consultation with the provinces as to the needs to be met.

The bill now before us is only a part of a whole. Mr. Speaker, it certainly does not replace the Industrial Development Bank, nor the Department of Agriculture, nor the Department of Fisheries and Forestry but it has very specific objectives: an attempt to foster industrial development in slow-growth areas.

• (4:40 p.m.)

If we succeed in this field—which is rather limited, I admit—if we manage to induce industries to settle in the above-mentioned areas, it will mean that other activities will move in on their own.

For instance, in the field of service industries, one can be sure that where there is industrial development, service industries will develop naturally because there will be a local market. When people have work, and money, they want services; that means that service industries will develop as subsidiaries of secondary industry; service industries do not develop on their own they always result from another economic activity.

We feel that primary industry does not settle in a given area because of the extent of its economic activity. A primary industry is developed in a given area because of its natural resources. The idea of providing incentives to primary industry may prove successful in some particular cases, but it is not a determining factor in the location of an industry.

It may be suggested that this legislation probably has certain limitations but this has to be, in order to prevent any misuse of public funds or the provision of incentives to an industry which would settle in those areas just the same. The only justification for providing incentives to private undertaking is that without such incentives, they would not go and settle where we think they should for the common good.

We have no moral authority to give millions of dollars to a business which in any case would settle in a given area. By what right do we do so? Our only moral justification for spending public funds is to tell businessmen who can choose to settle in Montreal, Quebec, Gaspé or elsewhere: If we give you a certain amount of money, are you ready to move into a region which is not developing and needs to be developed?

As for the service industry, it does not need, in general, to stimulate primary industry since, as I mentioned earlier, if there is a mine somewhere, it is not the provision of an incentive that will induce this business to settle there, but the mere fact that the mine is located at that place.

Forestry resources are also to be found in very definite places, as well as water resources. So there is no need to provide incentives in order to induce those businessmen to settle in a particular area, because other factors prompt them to do so.

But the secondary industries themselves—

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Would the minister permit a question?

[Translation]

Pardon me. Do you allow me a question?

[English]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): O.K. I will try to answer.

Mr. Broadbent: I did not get the latter part of the minister's remarks because I was trying to get his attention, but he has just claimed that primary industry would normally need subsidization in order to be attracted into an area, and with this I am in complete agreement. But as the bill now stands the minister has broad discretionary powers in any case, and so it is not a matter of granting money to all mining firms that come to him wanting money. He has the discretionary power to decide whether or not in a given situation a grant should be provided. Would he not be agreeable to broadening the terms of the bill to provide for such grants in isolated cases?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I mentioned before the standing committee that it is possible to do that under the law establishing the department. On an ad hoc basis we can do so if in one particular region this is the only activity that can be developed, but the purpose of this particular piece of legislation is to encourage secondary industry to move into slow growth regions in order to create employment, and if that is done service industries will develop anyway. Service industry does not need our help if there is economic activity in secondary industry.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think that we can do all the things which have been suggested by the hon. members who spoke before me. We can do it, not necessarily under this legislation but under the bill establishing the department. There is no reason why this legislation, whose main purpose is to create employment through development of the manufacturing industries, should deal with other activities.

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a few questions from the minister, mainly with regard to the previous legislation.

Will the new legislation supersede the previous one? For instance, under the old legislation, the Canadian government paid a third of the cost of industrial development, a third of the cost of the construction of buildings and machinery. Will this new legislation take away these advantages provided under the former legislation?

Furthermore, I should like to get some explanation concerning the security for the loans. Will the new legislation back up the loans in the case of a non exporting industry? If a Canadian industry disposes of its products only on the Canadian market, will it be entitled to the same benefits or will they be only the privilege of an exporting industry?

I put those two questions to the minister because they are related to something that does not seem too clear to me. I should like the minister to throw light on the matter.

With regard to the amendment and the development of tourism, I think it would be a good thing if it were possible to include this amendment in the act. It strikes me as fairly logical. It, seems to me the minister could incorporate it in the bill. If the bill says otherwise that the tourist industry is entitled to certain advantages, I fail to see why this could not be spelled out very clearly, so as to specify what benefits the industry could derive from the new act.

I am quite pleased with the bill and all the happier because the minister is introducing a new incentive for industry. The industry is in dire need of it because we are now in an industrialized country which must be developed from that point of view. We therefore need every possible government assistance, not merely to create new industries but also to sell what industry produces.

The main problem in industry today is that of marketing products. Several industries have a high rate of production and have accumulated their products; they are now finding it difficult to sell them. Industry operates, progresses and forges ahead economically provided it sells its goods.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The department will have to intervene, if possible, to oil in some way the industrial mechanism for the disposal of the production. It should be rather easy to dispose in this country of every thing possible if purchasing power were available. After that, we can start thinking about exports.

There are many products we could export. I am sure the government has already taken the necessary steps in that direction and that all will work well.

If we create industries without finding ways and means of disposing of the products, dreadful problems would ensue, causing serious problems that will become so complicated that it will be necessary to close several of those new industries which will have been created in our country.

Therefore, I ask the minister to clarify that. Would he be kind enough to explain the difference between the old legislation and the new one in connection with the grants made by the government, when it was paying one third of the cost for machinery and buildings.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the minister wishes to speak again he can do so only with unanimous consent. If there is to be questioning of the minister after his remarks, it should be brief and to the point. I think the hon. member for Compton made a contribution to the debate. If the minister is to answer the questions posed by the hon. member for Compton, I suggest there should be unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief.

As for the destination of the products manufactured by plants or industries which will receive government grants, there is no set limitation. Whether they be export industries or industries serving a local market, it does not matter.

As for explaining to the house, Mr. Speaker, all the differences between the present legislation and the measure before the house, I think this would take some time. There are indications in the bill about the amounts of money to be granted.

Regulations for the distribution of industrial incentives will be approved only after the legislation itself has been passed, and at that time I might be able to give the hon. member all the explanations he may require.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the minister's remarks concerning the proposed amendment in relation to the development of natural resources and the effect this legislation will have on these areas by dealing with one area in one manner and another area in another manner, taking into consideration the different conditions which exist. I suggest, however, that there is need for some concern about the natural resources in that large band of Canada stretching from Labrador to northern British Columbia situated 200 miles north of Toronto and Montreal. This is an area where all successful resource development must be based on the natural resources.

My area was designated for some time under the previous incentive legislation. The development which took place in that area was in the lumbering industry. It is a basic resource area but it is interesting to note that the money put into the industry under the previous incentive program was used not only in respect of the basic products of lumber but also in the new system of forest harvesting by which much better utilization is made of the product. So in my opinion the incentive, taking into consideration the availability of the resource, made that resource much more valuable in terms of production in the area, and all the region benefited from the technical advantage that this type of development provided.

In the area of Timmins where the incentive program provided a very large United States corporation with smelter facilities, again in this case it was being operated on the basis of a natural resource. I believe that when dealing with growth areas it will be necessary to take into consideration the natural resources. While I am in total agreement that this company ought not to have been given any assistance under the previous program, this is the only kind of carrot that could have been held out to them. It is obvious that other legislation should have been brought into play. We might use the example of a very large nickel deposit in that northern area of Ontario, which probably will not be developed for a great number of years. It is likely that any resource development will take into consideration the needs of International Nickel and the nickel cartel in respect of producing more nickel, and whatever else is most useful in their eyes rather than the needs of the community.

I suggest that the minister should accept the first amendment which includes the words "all forms of industrial activity" in place of the restriction against an initial processing operation in a resource-based industry because in most cases with which I have had any connection the development has hinged on the natural resource-based industry. It is really an adjunct which flows out of it.

I suggest that all industry in that band across Canada which is a resource area now eventually will have an industrial potential. If we are to pick centres there for growth, that growth must naturally be based on the natural resources. This is how the towns became established in the first place. The towns will be the primary consideration, but if we are to accomplish anything it will have to be done on the industrial base.

I suggest that if we had effective direction and incentives we would be processing the material being produced in the Gulf Sulphur area of Timmins. This is a much greater area than was contemplated under the assistance provided under the previous legislation. This is the type of material which can produce a large diversity of industries because of the by-products of the natural resource. If we did this there would be immense development in that area. We have never really imposed any restriction against the exportation of the industrial potential but have on occasion, as in the case of the previous legislation, provided an incentive that was large enough to make the company take advantage of our proposal rather than one they might have had as an alternative.

When we speak of industrial activity in some of the natural resource areas we speak of a very large complex. Even in the forest-based industry this is true. In my area, as a by-product chips are being produced to the extent of half the production of that pulp and paper mill. So the accompanying benefits which can flow are on the industrial side.

In relation to Timmins there was a grant of $5 million and then another $1½ million, and it is interesting to note it is expected that the Ontario government will be providing an incentive to the tune of $80 million a year over a ten-year period, or $800 million. So our figure of $6½ million, even if that figure is half correct, will be rather insignificant in the development of that area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills, public bills.

MESSAGES FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Prior to proceeding with private members' business I might be allowed to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill C-184, to establish a Canadian corporation for telecommunication by satellite, without amendment.

A message has also been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill S-17, respecting investment companies, to which the concurrence of this house is desired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before proceeding with private members' business, perhaps I might also inform the house that the questions to be raised at the hour of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Old Age Security—reduction of guaranteed income supplement upon receipt of pension by spouse; the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles)—National Revenue—Port Dover, Ontario—failure of U.S. pleasure craft to report to customs officer; the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell)—Harbours—Toronto—federal participation in construction of port.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

INDIAN AFFAIRS

"LOCAL GOVERNMENT ON INDIAN RESERVES"

The house resumed, from Thursday, January 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of a document entitled "Local Government on Indian Reserves" prepared by the policy and planning directorate of the Indian Affairs Branch, dated August 4, 1967.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howard) which was negatived on the following division:

LEASE BETWEEN MOUNTAINEER MOTEL COMPANY LIMITED AND DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

On the order:

Notices of motions (papers).

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the agreement (lease agreement) between the Mountaineer Motel Company Limited and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which said agreement was disclosed in and referred to in answer to question No. 1,271.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of hon. members may I withdraw this motion because I am sure the government wants to keep its word that we will adjourn on June 27 or 30. I do not want to take the time of the house, so I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

JUDGMENTS OF THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

The house resumed, from Thursday, April 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fortin:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a return showing, since the Supreme Court of Canada was instituted (a) the number of judgments rendered by judges whose mother tongue was French and, of those, the number of judgments rendered (i) in French (ii) in English; (b) of the judgments rendered in English by judges whose mother tongue is French, the number of judgments respecting Quebec; (c) the number of judgments rendered in French by judges whose mother tongue is English.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we have 50 minutes left for debate and I should like to follow the example of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). But the matter has such importance at a time when we are discussing national unity and the languages bill that I think it is my duty to pursue the debate on this notice of motion for production of papers.

Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court question, as we said then, was an Anglo-Saxon ivory tower on which—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must draw the attention of the hon. member for Lotbinière as well as of the others on the fact that the member has already participated to this debate and that if he talks now he will close it.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I was then saying that the Supreme Court, since its establishment, was an Anglo-Saxon ivory tower discriminating against French-speaking people. Then, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) had risen and replied that the publication of a certain document on the national capital and its institutions would provide the explanations asked in my motion for papers and consequently that the motion was useless, since the information would appear in that document.

I am pleased to see that the document is published and that the discussion follows its publication. When one reads that document published and ordered by the Royal Commission of Inquiry on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, one is aware that the Supreme Court has been forgotten and that the information requested is not included. This is a very good report, but it does not tell us how to make of the Supreme Court an agency in the real image of Canada, nor to what extent it is guilty of injustice and discrimination.

I used to believe the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but not anymore, because I have read this report.

Thus, we are right back where we were at the beginning of the discussion, that is to say we have never determined with certainty whether the Supreme Court which is a fundamental institution and in a way the cornerstone of the present Canadian Confederation, from the constitutional viewpoint, was a body that discriminates against French Canadians.

The speech I made at that time contained several references to substantiate that claim. In view of those references, the government was unable to give any proof to the contrary and the minister could only beat around the bush as he does more often than not.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take uselessly the time of the house, but I should like to remind hon. members that if we truly want a bilingual Canada, if we truly want the official languages bill to become law, if we truly want to give French-Canadians their own place in Canada, and not somebody else's, if we want them to be an integral part of the Canadian Confederation, the Supreme Court, one of the most important bodies, must be an image of Canada. Only then would we be able to hold on to national unity.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, I want to call upon the hon. members and solicit their support. The government must approve the motion I have humbly submitted, in order to throw some light on an obscure matter which has always not only been left aside but seems to be taboo with hon. members. It seems essential to me that every one of us should take an interest in this matter of administrative tribunals and the Supreme Court to make them worthy of the Canada we dream of bringing about.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we wish to repeat again, because I really believe some of our ministers still do not understand it, that we are asking for a vote.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I must interrupt the hon. member as his allotted time has expired.

Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might rise on a point of order. Under notices of motions for papers there are still on the order paper three notices of motion in the name of Mr. Schreyer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Who's he?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does someone ask, who is he? He is the premier designate of Manitoba; that's who.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I ask leave of the house to have transferred to my name motions Nos. 121, 122 and 123 that appear on the order paper under his name.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN TERRITORIAL AND INLAND WATERS

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF MAP

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West) moved:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of a map of Canada showing both territorial waters and inland waters claimed by Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on April 30 when this motion was first before the house, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) indicated that a map showing the territorial waters of Canada would not be issued by the government. I wish to read the minister's reply to the house and speak very briefly on the motion. I quote from page 8164 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, the government intends in the near future to issue maps illustrating additional straight base lines which will be drawn along Canada's coasts. It is also intended to amend the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act to permit the establishment of fisheries lines in certain areas without affecting the limits of Canada's internal waters and territorial sea. It would not be in the Canadian interest for the government to issue further maps of Canada's possible maritime claims at this time. On this basis I ask the hon. member if he will agree to withdrawing his motion.

I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, why it is not in Canada's interest to show the territorial waters we feel should be under Canada's jurisdiction. This was not explained by the minister in his reply. Frankly, in 1969 we should be in a position to indicate very clearly what claims Canada makes on the east, west and north as far as territorial waters are concerned.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I feel the motion is extremely important in this sense, that I am referring to all the territorial waters and more specifically to the Arctic. We have had some extremely interesting developments within the Arctic-area within the past few years. There is no doubt about it, we have here potential oil reserves of immense wealth. I, personally, feel it would be in the interests of Canada and Canadians to set out what we consider to be the jurisdictional area so far as our nation is concerned. I was rather interested in the remarks that it would not be in Canada's interests. Surely, some minister of the government should be able to give us clearcut, definite reasons for not wanting to put Canada's claims on a map.

I wish to make one or two references to other nations. Last fall I had an opportunity to go to the United Nations for a couple of weeks where they were discussing the seabed. There were discussions respecting territorial claims of various nations. I understand the little nation of Chile on the southern tip of South America has staked a claim 200 miles out from the shore. I do not think there is too much conflict with other nations in this regard. I do not know whether a claim of this nature could be upheld under international jurisprudence, but Chile has staked it out.

Other nations are in the same category. I am not going to enumerate them. I wish to point out very clearly that recently there was a huge oil find in the Arctic in the Prudhoe Bay area. An estimate from one of the government's departments is that the area likely contains somewhere between 5 billion and 10 billion barrels of oil. Another estimate, given by representatives of oil companies who appeared before the Standing Committee on National Resources, indicated that the reserve was somewhere between 10 billion and 50 billion barrels of oil. Our position is that Canada should have her claims staked out. We should know if we will be in a position to move in and develop any oil resources there may be in this area. Personally, I feel it is of vital interest to all Canadians to make certain that claims are made. There might be a dispute as to the drawing of lines, but our department should have these claims staked out in a manner which will enable all Canadians to know exactly what we claim as Canada's inland waters and territorial waters. Our claim could be of vital concern, even in terms of the oil find which I have just mentioned, because it could affect, billions of dollars in revenue.

This is no time for the Secretary of State for External Affair to tell us it is not in the interests of Canada to stake out these claims. I am not suggesting for one second that we should get something which could not rightfully be classed as Canadian territory. There is no doubt that explorations are going on in the east, west and north, and it is time a map was issued to show the area in which we consider Canadians have the right to carry out explorations, fishing and so on.

It is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF PRODUCTIVE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-202, to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development, and motion no. 1, Mr. Broadbent.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, before we adjourned at five o'clock to consider other business I was suggesting to the minister that there are really two kinds of areas to which the bill is directed. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), in my view, seems to apply to a large segment of the area that will be industrially oriented, based on resources. The assistance here will be considerably different from that provided to the Maritimes and areas near Montreal, Quebec City, Toronto, Hamilton and Windsor where local industry fits into a different category.

I believe the minister is correct in saying that we should not put money directly into the development of the basic resource but rather into the industrial complex that can and should be built around it. We have had little success in providing employment through most resource based industries. I give the example of one iron ore mine in my own area that years ago would have employed several thousand people but now, because of modern technology, employs only about 400 workers. The same is true with respect to sawmills. A sawmill that used to employ 200 people now employs only 20 or 30 when it is highly automated.

However, this employment ratio does not apply to ancillary industry. The flake board industry, based on a by-product of sawmills, provides a large amount of employment. Mining and lumbering are the two basic resources upon which most industrial development will be built, and as the years go by industrial complexes built on these resources will move further north from present industrialized areas. I suggest that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby could lead to the provision of the greatest amount of employment.

In a 200 mile wide stretch, reaching from coast to coast, we are training industrial personnel capable of handling the normal industrial growth that will take place. We are also, however, exporting highly trained and skilled people from this area because the better trained and more highly skilled they are the less job opportunities they have. No growth centre concept will work unless we are able to provide jobs for the skilled people we are training.

In Canada we also have a problem with foreign owned industries. In many cases they enjoy major advantages when operating in this country. Our laws which apply to domestic companies do not necessarily apply to American owned industries. Again, I cite the example of a mine in my area. The price for the ore pellets which it produces is established by the parent company in the United States and does not necessarily bear a close relationship to the cost of production or to the normal selling price of the product. We, ourselves, do not have the ability to make a proper assessment of what the end product should cost, yet we assist this company through provincial transportation grants and other incentives. The type of production that must be encouraged by the federal government is that which has the largest employment factor.

• (8:10 p.m.)

I suggest that the things which have been said concerning the second motion in respect of the tourist and service operations will flow from the establishment of a viable growth centre, if it is based on a viable economy in that area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): In accordance with the procedure established earlier today, Mr. MacDonald (Egmont) seconded by Mr. Hales moves that Bill C-202, an act to provide incentives—

Mr. Peters: That is the wrong amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): The two amendments are to be combined and voted on at a later date.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, did the Chair not advise that the two amendments would be discussed collectively, but would be voted on separately? This was my understanding.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It was the understanding of the Chair they would be voted on together, but since hon. members have a different understanding the Chair will put each amendment in order that a separate vote may be taken.

The question is on motion No. (1) (Mr. Broadbent). Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 75 this vote will be deferred.

[Mr. Peters.]

The question now is on motion No. (2) (Mr. MacDonald, Egmont). Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): All those in favour of the proposed motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): According to the Standing Order, this vote is deferred.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved:

That Bill C-202, An Act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be amended, by deleting paragraph (b) of clause 4 and substituting therefor:

(b) In the case of a proposal to establish a new facility or to expand an existing facility to enable the manufacturing or processing of a product not previously manufactured or processed in the operation or to expand an existing tourist or service operation, a secondary development incentive by way of additional financial assistance to the applicant for the establishment of the new facility or the expansion of the existing facility for that purpose.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to speak only briefly on this motion because it is a consequential amendment having to do with the other amendment which we have not yet determined. I would certainly be within my rights, if for no other reason, in speaking briefly on this amendment. As I remarked in dealing with the second motion on the order paper today, if we are to give full weight to the important matter of including under the scope of this legislation the tourist and service industries it seems to me we must take into account how we deal with clause 4, the authorization of incentives. We should pay particular attention to the subclause which defines the availability of assistance to industries that are applying for the secondary grant for the enlargement into a new operation of an existing industry or the establishment of a brand new industry. These grants are related to the number of people to be employed in the industry.

Here again, if only to emphasize the fact, I wish to say it is important to realize that in the areas into which we will be injecting a good deal of this fresh capital to assist new industry, we will have the option, depending on the attitude of the government, of assisting the various service and tourist industries. I recall that the argument was advanced by the minister, in considering the advisability of making this kind of assistance available to the tourist industry, that in many cases this industry offers only part time employment. I would reply simply that part time employment is certainly better than no employment at all. This summer we are faced with the problem of many thousands of university students and others who cannot find employment. They would certainly be most anxious to obtain the kind of employment that would be provided through any enlargement of tourist facilities that might exist in any of the underdeveloped parts of the country. Employment obtained in this area would greatly aid the economy and, ease the burden of the government in respect of its manpower department which, unfortunately I think, has not had any great success.

It seems to me it is important if we are to give full weight to this legislation—and it is certainly my intent and that of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) to give such weight to it in respect of the tourist and service industries—that there must be not only available the primary grant but also secondary grants as set out under this bill. The amendment provides for assistance to existing tourist or service operations or the establishment of new such centres where the opportunity exists. This is really a consequent amendment following upon the earlier one in respect of the redefinition of "facility".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Pursuant to section 1 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East) moved:

That Bill C-202, An Act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be amended, by including in clause 7, subclause 1, the following new paragraph:

(c) the establishment of a Crown corporation in consultation with provincial authorities would make a more significant contribution to economic expansion and social adjustment within the designated region.

He said: Mr. Speaker, clause 7 of the bill as it reads now imposes certain limitations on the powers granted to the minister. This clause reads:

No development incentive may be authorized under this act for the establishment, expansion or modernization of any facility if, in the opinion of the minister,

(a) it is probable that the facility would be established, expanded or modernized without the provision of such an incentive; or

(b) the establishment, expansion or modernization of the facility would not make a significant contribution to economic expansion and social adjustment within the designated region.

• (8:20 p.m.)

It is desirable that some limitations be placed on the powers of the minister granted under this act. He has admitted himself that he has been granted some rather far reaching powers, and he seems to be quite willing to accept the responsibilities and the problems that go with the powers being granted to him. Nevertheless, I think this clause, as it is worded now, does impose two limitations on the powers of the minister which apparently meet with the approval of the government.

The amendment I have proposed on behalf of the New Democratic Party would provide a new subclause (c). Subclause (c), read in conjunction with the preamble, would then read as follows:

No development incentive may be authorized under this act for the establishment, expansion or modernization of any facility if, in the opinion of the minister,

(c) the establishment of a Crown corporation in consultation with provincial authorities would make a more significant contribution to economic expansion and social adjustment within the designated region.

I think this would be a very desirable and useful addition to the bill. It should be noted that most of the assistance which will be provided by the government under this act will be given to private industry. The minister has noted in the committee during discussion on this bill that it will be possible to provide assistance to Crown corporations. In other words, they would qualify for a grant just the same as a private industry.

I can see that this may be a very useful device if it were decided that such assistance should be provided to a totally provincial Crown corporation. However, it seems to me that this clause works against Crown corporations in terms of possible federal involvement in action dealing with some of our economic problems which we face in the areas of the country to which this measure shall apply. It seems to me that the concept and role of a Crown corporation really does not get a fair shake. It seems to me there are political and structural factors that work against a Crown corporation, and this amendment would give a federal or joint federal-provincial Crown corporation a fair opportunity to show what it might be able to do in dealing with some of the problems that will arise.

It is recognized that public investment is required in dealing with some of our regional economic problems and for providing for regional economic development. The chief means by which the government proposes to make this public investment under the terms of this bill is through financial assistance, and most of this financial assistance will, of course, go to private industry.

It seems to me this, then, leaves the question of what happens to Crown corporations, or what proposals a Crown corporation might make of a particular type at a particular time. As I suggested, it seems to me that Crown corporations are really placed at a disadvantage under the terms of the bill, and that we do need to give a full opportunity for a rational decision on the point of whether or not a particular development or a particular project should be a public project in the form of a Crown corporation, or a private project.

[Mr. Burton.]

When I make these statements I am not taking a dogmatic stand in respect of public versus private ownership. I am simply suggesting that what we do require is an objective assessment of the relative merits of public versus private ownership and operation in a given situation. It seems to me if it is decided that a Crown corporations involving the federal government either as the sole owner, or as a joint owner with a provincial government is the best possible and most efficient means of carrying out a particular development, then there are other means of financing open to the government. These means would not involve the use of the grant structure provided in this measure because the corporation would not need a grant in that sense.

What happens then, is that this amendment forces the minister to make a judgment and an assessment prior to making a decision as to the relative merits of public versus private operation. The fact is that the minister could not make a grant for a particular purpose if he had an assessment before him stating that a publicly owned project or development would be preferable and would serve the public interest better than a private operation. Of course, the government has various tools of analysis available to it. According to some of the discussions that took place before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, some departments do not seem to be too familiar with such techniques as cost benefit analysis and other more refined techniques, but it seems to me these are available and an objective assessment could be made to determine whether in fact a project should be carried out as a public or privately owned operation.

Making use of cost benefit analysis really enables the government to take into account all the factors affecting the public interest rather than using just a profit and loss basis for judging an operation. It seems to me what is required in dealing with this situation is that the minister be given powers to make such a decision. He, in fact, would be forced into the position of making a meaningful decision on this particular point. I give the minister credit for his ability, his intelligence and his motivation, and it seems to me he certainly would not make a judgment unless he had adequate information before him. What we do want to see is decisions taken that are purposeful and meaningful and that are not accidental or circumstantial. Thus, I commend this motion to the house and suggest that in effect a fair shake be given for once to the possibilities that do exist for Crown corporations, to carry out particular aspects of our economic development.

As I stated before, this in no way prejudges the relative merits of one or more types of operation in any given situation. It really leaves the situation open so that an objective assessment can be made and the government might be enabled to take a decision in the best interests of the Canadian nation and the Canadian people. Thus, I hope the government and all members of this house will support this motion in order that we can better enable the government to carry out the purpose and intent of this legislation.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support this proposal very strongly. We are all aware of the few times the move toward Crown Corporations has been successful in the past. Some on the other side might want to point out that such Crown corporations have been unsuccessful in the past on a number of occasions. Anyone who has any knowledge of the Polymer corporation, which was established in an area where industry would not normally be interested, will realize that it has become a very large employer and a very valuable tool in the substitute rubber industry. We must realize that the amount of money the federal government spent on this particular Crown corporation has been well repaid and that the rewards which have been reaped have been tremendous.

I am sure the minister is aware that a great deal of assistance will have to be provided in the far north in relation to the oil development program in that area. It seems to me that a crown corporation owning and operating a pipe line might be the most effective way of using money and directing the economic development of the whole Mackenzie River delta, considering the number of oil outlets that are likely to be available in the near future. I believe this developement would be along the lines of the government's thinking. The money spent in this manner would eventually be available for further redistribution, whereas if it were given to industry it would not be as readily available or identifiable at a later time.

I am thinking of a project that for many years has been considered in my area of northern Ontario, namely, the development of a lignite industry. This would involve considerable expenditure and private industry has not been particularly interested in it. For this reason, efforts to develop the industry have not been very successful. If the government established a crown corporation to develop the lignite, it is likely that the industries surrounding such a development would be almost certain of success. The difference would be that the industry would be developed when the government saw fit to establish a crown corporation for that purpose. If the development is left to private industry, it may not take place for many years and may be spasmodic and limited, as it has been for the past 20 or 30 years.

I am sure there are many areas in which a crown corporation would be advantageous. I can mention one that has been referred to over the last few years by many members of the house. I refer to our transportation problem. Because Canada is serviced mainly by air lines which fly from east to west rather than from north to south, there is an inability on the part of air lines to provide the type of service that is necessary. If money were available for amalgamating existing feeder lines through a crown corporation, using the facilities of the crown corporation of Air Canada—without necessarily amalgamating these lines into strictly one unit—there could be a reduction in cost and a betterment of the service. It seems to me that the benefits which would accrue to the general public through the establishment of a crown corporation which would bring together the hundreds of existing feeder lines would be well worth investigation by the Minister. In this way the feeder lines would be able to operate closely with our major east-west carriers and could provide an adequate service.

I hope the minister will consider this suggestion. I know that over the years many people in the house have been opposed to Crown corporations on the basis that some other body could better handle these matters. There has been the suggestion that some of our Crown corporations will be sold to private enterprise. Even if this proves to be so and it is advantageous, I am sure few people would say that most of the Crown corporations established by the federal government have not served a useful purpose or, that the reasons for which they were established would, not be applicable in a number of other fields with some anticipation of success.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief in speaking to this amendment. I rise at this point because I think the minister might come around somewhat to our way of thinking. As he knows, we considered these arguments at some length in committee. In connection with the discussion of another amendment which we shall reach shortly, the minister and I exchanged comments in the committee on the question of public ownership. At one point I expressed the view that I thought it was a very fine thing. The minister replied in these words, and I quote from the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Regional Development, Volume No. 16, page 389:

Yes, I would agree with you if we were discussing general legislation applying to the whole Canadian economy.

There was a discussion of the principle of foreign ownership, the problems connected with it, and more particularly the means of dealing with it, and the establishment of crown corporations. I was very pleased that the minister lent his support to the principle of public ownership. I wonder if between the time of that committee meeting and today's sitting he has come around to our view. I look forward to the minister's comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved:

That Bill C-202, An Act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be amended, in clause 7 by including therein the following new subclause:

"(3) No development incentive may be authorized under this act for the establishment, expansion, or modernization of any facility if the applicant firm or company is non-resident owned or controlled."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think the principle of this amendment should be obvious to all members of the house; indeed, it was obvious to all government members on the committee when we discussed it a few weeks ago. My main objection to the bill as it now stands, and as I argued in committee, is that if it is passed we will be using public funds to subsidize the further takeover by foreigners of the Canadian economy. This seems to me to be the paramount issue in Canadian society at the present time. This issue has been raised many times in the house. It has been raised even by the odd member of the Liberal party—odd in two senses of that word. It was raised by the Hon. Walter Gordon and subsequently in the report of the Watkins Committee, which body was established by the Liberal government. It was raised and discussed at length in a debate in the house on May 29, and it seemed to be very important to the minister.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Again, I should like to quote the minister who had some very favourable things to say about the importance of restricting foreign ownership of the Canadian economy. I will quote from the proceedings of the meeting on June 16 of this year of the Standing Committee on Regional Development. In discussing the amendment that we now have before us the minister said:

Mr. Chairman, if we were discussing a piece of legislation applying to the whole Canadian economy, I would be in agreement with most of what you are saying.

The point is that the minister does seem to realize the very serious political consequences for Canadians of the very extensive ownership of our economy by foreigners, and this means in particular by Americans. He has supported the notion that some meaningful restrictions should be established in our country, particularly with regard to the ownership of equity in our Canadian economy. However, he refused to support the amendment in the committee on rather serious grounds. The argument put forward by the minister was that he would be in favour of setting up meaningful controls of foreign ownership—I certainly wish he went across the country talking about this general situation since there are not many people in the cabinet willing to say this—and that he was personally committed to some kind of action which would regain Canadian control of our economy. However, he pointed out that if we applied such action through this piece of legislation only, the effects would be discriminatory. It would mean, in effect, that a foreign owned company would be encouraged to invest in those parts of Canada which are already prosperous and the very areas that need the least help would be aided greatly. If we prohibited the kind of subsidization that this bill provides from applying to foreign owned corporations, instead of locating in certain parts of the maritime provinces, certain parts of Quebec or indeed in certain parts of Ontario, these firms would locate in the Toronto-Hamilton area, for example, or some analogous parts of Canada that need no assistance.

This argument is a serious one, and I do not deny it at all. But if we, as Canadians, are seriously concerned about dealing with foreign ownership and the resulting political and social consequences—and I have no intention of boring the house with repeated arguments that have been made many times before in the house and elsewhere on that question—this would have been a good starting place to establish the principle that we will not use public funds to subsidize a foreign take-over of the Canadian economy. The implicit assumption made by the minister is that the major part of the industry which we will encourage to locate in those areas of Canada where we think it should be located will be foreign owned. This may or may not be the case; it seems to me to be an open question. It might turn out to be the case, especially if meaningful and persuasive political action dealing with Canadian owned companies were taken and some appeal to Canadian capitalists were explicitly made, along with financial incentives provided in this bill, to locate industry in Canadian areas which need development.

We might not have to rely on foreign ownership if leadership were given by this government to the business investing community. It might well turn out that we could entice a sufficient amount of capital generated in Canada to locate in the areas that need it and therefore not have to rely on foreign capital for this growth. It seems to me to be a remarkable failure of leadership in advance for the minister to suggest, as he does in effect in this bill and as he did in the committee, that there would be no hope for the meaningful implementation of this bill if we did not rely on the clause as it exists which maintains the principle of foreign ownership in this country. If this is the case, it is an extremely serious situation and it recalls to my mind the statement made in the Watkins report that we have only 10 or 15 years left in which to save Canada. If we do not do something soon, it will be too late. This may be the case. I suggest that it will not hurt the government one bit to try for a few years to develop this country on classical capitalist principles using Canadian capital, providing financial incentives for that capital but restricting anything over 51 per cent of foreign control. This is what we should do, instead of providing public funds to further subsidize the acquisition of very important economic resources in Canada. If it turned out after a few years that this amendment, if adopted, led to a substantial failure of the program, then perhaps it would have to be reassessed. I am suggesting that the minister's acknowledged failure in advance seems to reflect, not a deliberate indifference to Canadian needs, but an unconscious thinking that has prevailed in Liberal governments in this country for many years that somehow we just cannot get by without allowing capital to enter in the form of ownership. I am not arguing against any form of foreign investment—that would be ludicrous—but, as the minister knows, many countries including so-called socialist countries, Yugoslavia being an example, have allowed foreign capital up to the 49 per cent level and yet retained control of their own countries.

What I am urging the government to do by this amendment is to show a little leadership to the Canadian people and to try, at least in this small way in this bill, to preserve Canada for Canadians.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would just like to say a few words in support of what is described as being the position of the minister with regard to this matter. I do not wish to use language that is too strong, but I do not see how anybody can possibly put forward an amendment of this sort if he has any interest in doing something to develop the under-developed regions of Canada. I say this sincerely and without in any way trying to be offensive. Anybody with any experience at all in connection with the task that the minister has would not try to tie at least one hand behind his back before starting. If someone wants to advocate a measure in the house with regard to the control of Canadian industry by Canadians, this is the last place to start. If someone wants to start in Oshawa, that is all right, but he should not start in northern Ontario or in some other section of the country such as the Atlantic provinces where it has been proven that Canadian industry is not particularly interested in trying out something new and where, in fact, much of the development that has taken place has been as a result of foreign enterprise.

Secondly, I think this amendment is misconceived. I assume that the approach of the minister will be not to assist industry as such by providing a hand-out that will benefit the owners but to provide assistance to equalize the advantage of industry locating in one region as compared with another region that is more highly developed. The purpose of the minister's program is not to give a benefit to the owners of a particular industry but rather to make it sufficiently worth while, and no more than sufficiently worth while, for industry to go into an underdeveloped area. The minister also has to satisfy himself that the benefit derived from taking such a step is in some way commensurate with the assistance offered.

I hope there is no misunderstanding that the assistance granted by the minister is designed to fatten the profits of foreign or Canadian capitalists. I hope the program will be administered in such a way as to assist development of certain areas and help equalize to some extent the attractiveness of underdeveloped areas with other regions.

I would oppose, and I hope that every member in the house would oppose, any attempt to restrict this program or—and here I agree with the minister—effectively to kill the program by tying into it some concept of countering foreign ownership. Surely, the minister can administer the program in such a way that it does not assist takeovers or provide unnecessary windfalls to industry.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you sure of that?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield: No, I am not sure. I assume that is the purpose of the program of the minister. Sometimes the minister may mistakenly be a little more generous, in which case his colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) will get a good deal of the money back before long in any event.

I want to make two points. Firstly, that in my view this amendment is based on a misconception, namely that the act will provide assistance to the owners of industry, whereas in fact it is designed to provide assistance to industry to locate in underdeveloped areas of Canada. Secondly, regardless of what one may think about foreign ownership and so on, I think this amendment would very seriously handicap the minister's efforts to assist the establishment of industry in underdeveloped areas. If the government wants to initiate a program to bring Canadian industry home or to ensure that new industry is controlled by Canadians, then the last place to try to achieve this would be in underdeveloped areas of Canada. If the minister started in Oshawa or some place, it might be more appropriate. Without particularizing in this regard, suffice it to say I could not oppose too vigorously this amendment, which I think would really frustrate to a very significant extent the whole purpose of this legislation.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this amendment. I completely disagree with the last speaker's interpretation of the use to which the funds should be put, and I endorse the amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). It seems to me that we have to start somewhere in Canada to control foreign ownership.

I have gone through the minutes of the committee proceedings, and on June 16, as reported at page 393, I noticed that the minister indicated to the committee he was very much in favour of our doing something to aid the development of Canada by Canadians. I should just like to place his remarks on Hansard. Incidentally, may I say I completely agree with what the minister said. However, he did qualify his statement and said, as did the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), that he felt we should not make a start in this connection under this particular program. The minister said:

> I believe that we should promote industrial development by Canadian capital in Canada. I am not ready to support the thesis which wants us to buy Canada back overnight or in five or ten years, but I think that we should. The only way to become more independent economically is to develop Canadian industry owned and controlled by Canadians. There is no doubt.

However, there will be no discrimination in the implementation of this law. This is a matter of general policy and this we are ready to follow.

The minister is indicating there would be no discrimination under this act.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; I have no objection to having my remarks read, but the hon. member has read only part of what I said. I said that this amendment would involve the worst kind of discrimination against slow growth regions in Canada.

Mr. Harding: I do not mind the minister adding that. I indicated that the minister had said he did not wish to include this amendment in the act, and I will frankly admit that was his statement.

This is the position which we are in today. We had the Watkins report presented some time ago. This report informed the government and all Canadians what was happening to Canadian industry and urged that some steps be taken to correct the situation. What I should like to know is when this government is going to start to take action to solve the problem of controlling Canadian ownership of industry, and where the government is going to make this move. Let no one in this house kid himself. Once we lose control of our economy, then along with it also goes political control. This we are seeing today in Canada. We have asked the government, as well as the other parties in this house, to give a great deal of thought as to what has been happening in this country in so far as control and ownership of Canadian industries and companies is concerned.

We would be very unwise to use the Canadian taxpayers' money to further such control. I am suggesting, as my hon. friend has suggested, that there are other types of control that can be built into legislation of this type. The government may not have to accept this particular amendment now before the house, but surely top priority should be given to assisting Canadian companies to establish industry in these so-called designated areas. I should like to point out that foreign capital in Canada is usually invested in areas where there is a real chance it will yield a profit. Many of the areas that we are talking about at the moment are marginal areas, which is one of the reasons they have not been developed to date.

I do not want to spend too long discussing this amendment but I should just like to say something else about foreign ownership in Canada. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) has very clearly pointed out that other countries in the world have taken measures to ensure that control of industry has not passed from their hands into others. We could establish controls of that nature relating to moneys which would be used for the establishment of industries in those areas. Should outside interests decide to move in, they would also be affected. This is what we are asking the minister to do. We want him to look at legislation of this type and we hope he will give some thought to it. Even though the minister may be unhappy with our proposal and unwilling to implement it, I hope he will give us the assurance that top priority will be given to any Canadian company or group of companies that may wish to enter these areas and establish industries as a result of the subsidies which are to be paid with respect to these incentive areas. I do not think that is asking too much.

• (9:00 p.m.)

You know, Mr. Speaker, we have talked for years about a Canada development corporation. We should be setting up such a corporation. We have plenty of money in this nation for that purpose and we should have set up a Canada development corporation years ago. It could have been at work in the incentive areas mentioned in this bill. The various regions suffering from disparities could have been built up. Industry could have been built in those areas and the standard of living of all Canadians could have been raised.

I hope the minister will take my brief remarks into consideration. At some appropriate time I hope he brings in the necessary amendments to this legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? The hon. member for Regina East.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to hon. members. I was about to recognize the Minister of Transport, but since he seemed uncertain and did not give the appearance of wanting to speak I recognized the hon. member for Regina East. I recognize the Minister of Transport.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe there was unanimous agreement that at this point the house would suspend what was before it and deal with Bill No. C-207 for the remaining time today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the proper procedure is for the Minister of Transport to move a motion to adjourn debate. If that is agreeable to the house we could, after the motion has been agreed to, proceed to the next item of business. Do hon. members agree that we proceed in that manner?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jamieson: I so move.

On motion of Mr. Jamieson the debate was adjourned.

ATLANTIC REGIONAL FREIGHT ASSISTANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMPLIFY RATES LEGISLATION, TO REMOVE CERTAIN STATUTORY REDUCTIONS, AND OTHER MATTERS

The house resumed from Thursday, June 19, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-207, to authorize assistance to transportation in the Atlantic region—Mr. Jamieson—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose on Thursday, June 19, clause 5 was under consideration.

On clause 5—Power to vary or remove rates.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Chairman, when debate on this bill was suspended on Thursday I indicated that we, on this side of the house, were prepared to accept this legislation on the strict understanding that it is an interim measure and on the firm guarantee given to us by the minister that he would be introducing much more comprehensive legislation in the coming session. I also said that although we agreed with most provisions of the bill, we were unhappy about clause 5(1), the clause we were discussing when debate on the bill was adjourned. We feel that this is an undesirable provision to include in the bill. I think the minister more or less agreed that this was not the most desirable way to handle what is intended, and I had the impression after listening to him that he might bring in some changes in this area. I will, therefore, ask the minister if he has anything to announce in this regard which may allay the fears and suspicions some of us harbour with respect to this piece of legislation.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, in reply to my hon. friend, may I say that I have read with a good deal of care the transcript of the proceedings that took place in the house on the occasion when this bill was discussed initially. I have tried to take into account the representations of hon. members opposite and to bear in mind what I think was their general theme. They intimated that they wanted this bill to be passed and to be passed quickly, so that its benefits could be extended to the Atlantic region. At the same time, they expressed reservations about certain of its clauses.

I said when introducing the bill that it was not a complete measure and that I would be quite prepared to see how it might be amended in some way in order to accommodate the views of representatives of the parties opposite. It seemed to me, on re-reading the proceedings, that the key point of hon. members' remarks revolved around clause 5 which has to do with the power of the governor in council relating to intra subsidies. That is the subsidy which is recommended now at the rate of 20 per cent within the specified region and which it is proposed will be subject to a review by a federal-provincial committee. It is hoped that the committee will apply this subsidy in a more beneficial way to the transport problems of the Atlantic region.

I am sure that hon. members understand that clause 5 was included in this bill because it was necessary for us to move on a progressive basis in order to implement this change. I think hon. members were unanimous in agreeing that they did not want to await the completion of the report. The completion of the report of the committee might take some considerable time and they did not want to wait for that before some of the provisions of the bill could be introduced. What I suggested at that time was that we wanted to be in a position from which, if the committee made a specific recommendation having to do with a particular commodity or group of commodities, we could move in order to implement that committee recommendation. Hence, we included clause 5 in the bill.

I understand the concern of hon. members opposite about clause 5 and about the fact that it gives authority to the governor in council to make certain changes. While I assured the house then, and I assure the house again now, that it was not our intention nor is it our intention to emasculate the Maritime Freight Rates Act, yet there is good reason, and as a representative of an Atlantic province I understand this reason, for protecting the general charter of transportation of that region. May I therefore say to hon. members that I would be prepared to move an amendment which would eliminate what I believe is the legitimate concern of hon. members opposite.

The basis of this amendment is that when a recommendation is made by the federal-provincial committee to which I have referred, and when that recommendation is accepted and acted upon, it will become a matter of public record. If this hon. house happens to be sitting at that time or will sit within 15 days of the day of the order, any ten hon. members of this house or of the other place may require that the subject matter of the order be debated within this chamber. If, as a result of that debate, the order in question is annulled, the order shall stand annulled and have no effect. The effect of this amendment will be to return to parliament the right to pass judgment on any change in the intra subsidy under the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I hope hon. members will agree that this amendment meets the objections they have raised during the previous discussions on this matter. I may say that we have considered the proposal to simply introduce clause 5 on a one year, limited basis. While this proposal had a good deal to recommend it and could have solved the problem in the interim, it is conceivable the work of this committee may well extend beyond the 12-month period in which case it would be necessary for us to extend its activities at an important point and reintroduce legislation. I hope through this amendment, copies of which I believe have now been circulated to all hon. members, we have met the objections raised with regard to clause 5.

• (9:10 p.m.)

There were two other matters raised by hon. members opposite to which I gave attention. One had to do with the wish for an assurance that the current level of subsidies paid on an intra basis, that is the total sum of money now applied to maritime freight rate subsidies in the Atlantic provinces, would not be lessened in any way by the decisions of the federal-provincial committee. In other words, we would be obliged and obligated to ensure that the moneys transferred to other purposes on the recommendation of the committee would equal the sum that was being paid under the 20 per cent subsidy arrangement.

I told hon. members that was our intention, but to ensure that this met with their approval, I had the draftsmen prepare an amendment which is also in the hands of hon. members opposite. It reads.

That Bill C-207 be amended by striking out clause 6(2) at page 4 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(2) The total amount of assistance paid under this section shall at no time exceed the total of the amounts certified to the minister under subsection (2) of section 5 as the estimated savings to the Consolidated Revenue Fund in respect of those calendar years, including any part of such a year, for which amounts have been so certified to the minister."

The intent of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to ensure, in an orderly fashion, that the exact sum of dollars will be in the aggregate transfer to programs. I am sure hon. members will agree it is not practical to transfer the precise sum of dollars removed from any one portion of the program to some alternative program. Through this amendment we will see that the total sum is provided so that it can be moved, not necessarily program for program, but over the whole spectrum of projects as the federal-provincial committee may suggest.

The third and final point with regard to amendments was that there was nothing in the bill of a definitive nature to indicate the precise time at which we would introduce the subsidy for truckers. I have now proposed an amendment at page 6, line 66 of the bill indicating that it will come into force on the 15th day of July, 1969. That is in the current year.

Mr. Lewis: That 1st day of July.

Mr. Jamieson: I am sorry, that is a typographical error. If hon. members will be good enough to change it, it ought to be the 15th and I will move at the appropriate moment that it be the 15th. I thank the hon. member for calling it to my attention.

The fourth objection raised to this measure with which I would like to deal briefly has to do with the possible inclusion of Labrador in the benefits or application of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I have given a good deal of study to this since the previous day of the debate. Of course, the reasons Labrador was not included in the first instance are fairly obvious. In 1949 they were negotiating the terms of the union and the application of the Maritime Freight Rates Act to Newfoundland. It was considered at that time more appropriate to confine it to the Island of Newfoundland. Conditions in Labrador have changed very dramatically since that time. There is no question in my mind, nor is there the slightest reservation, that we should move in this direction. Labrador must be the beneficiary of some form of transportation assistance. I feel that the form of transportation assistance to be provided to Labrador deserves study and consideration by the federal-provincial committee.

One hon. member suggested it would be appropriate to simply substitute the word "Labrador" or the words "the province of Newfoundland" for the words "the island of Newfoundland". I suggest that under this piece of legislation no real benefit would accrue under that particular arrangement. Indeed, the problem would be that the Maritime Freight Rates Act would then of necessity have to apply to a very large amount of iron ore being moved by the companies from Labrador out of the select region.

I suggest that is not the intent of this legislation, nor do I believe the hon. member is in the least interested in providing some sort of gratuitous benefit of this kind to the iron ore companies of Labrador which would do nothing for the people of Labrador and which would in many respects be an unreasonable burden on the Maritime Freight Rates Act which was not intended and, I emphasize, which we do not intend in this legislation. Therefore, to accept a proposal that would include Labrador within this particular bill would, I suggest, do nothing for the Labrador region or for the people of Labrador. It would impose an unreasonable burden on the Maritime Freight Rates Act which it was not and is not now intended it should bear.

As an alternative I suggest to the hon. members that the wisest course is to give as a priority recommendation to this federal-provincial committee, on which the province of Newfoundland will be represented, that they examine practical means whereby operation of the so-called intra subsidy can be applied to Labrador. It seems, Mr. Chairman, that is the appropriate way in which to proceed. In other words, the committee can examine whether a portion of the intra subsidy should be assigned to rail routes into Labrador or within Labrador. It can examine, and this I suggest is a key point with regard to Labrador, whether the subsidy ought to be applied. I believe it should be applied in some form or assistance ought to be given with regard to air shipments and also in some respects to shipments by sea.

I am prepared to defend the proposition that the mere inclusion of Labrador in this bill would have no significant benefits to the people of the Labrador region but would require us, unless the entire Maritime Freight Rates Act structure was changed, to apply a 30 per cent subsidy on the entire outgoing shipments of iron ore from Labrador, and particularly and most assuredly, on those destined for use in other parts of Canada.

In the days which have intervened since the first discussion of this bill, I believe I have made sincere efforts to accommodate the representations of members opposite. I believe their representations have been reasonable and fair, and I have answered them in the amendments which I am proposing to make at the appropriate time tonight. I simply say the result of any delay in this measure is going to be that the trucking industry in the Atlantic provinces, which has been operating under a most severe and unreasonable penalty for a very long time, will have to continue to do so. I say it will have a double penalty because we will of necessity have to maintain the so-called freeze which results in the trucking industry being inhibited on two different counts.

Hon. members have stated emphatically throughout this debate that they are most anxious to see this legislation passed. I am prepared to concede this is only part of the package. It does not do the whole job. I say we can move in this direction now. We can, in fact, help significantly through this measure to improve the transportation problems of the Atlantic provinces and I commend the measure to hon. members.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the minister for his remarks which go part way to answering some of the questions debated when this matter was last before the house. We are anxious to expedite the passage of this bill. We thank the minister not only for listening to the previous debate but also for paying attention to consultation we have had outside the house on the possibility of putting some curb on the wide discretionary power outlined in clause 5 which gives the cabinet virtual authority to emasculate the Maritime Freight Rates Act so far as intra-traffic is concerned.

The minister's proposal, whereby ten members can provoke a debate on an order made under clause 5, will give the house an opportunity to debate any reduction of rates under the Maritime Freight Rates Act, although I would point out that this provision already exists in the law. Now, we will maintain some type of control, and will have a forum in which to discuss this type of change.

• (9:20 p.m.)

So far as the other two amendments are concerned, with respect to the amount of assistance I still hope that we do not get into a situation where the amount saved is a decreasing amount, so that three or four years from now there may not be any savings made on one section to be used in a supplemental way as suggested by the minister. We suggested a one year time limit, and in fact I submitted a draft to this effect to the minister. It is essential that the minister continue to show the initiative in bringing this matter up to date and preparing comprehensive plans for legislation on Atlantic transportation.

On the basis that this bill must be passed to eliminate the discrimination that now exists against truckers, we on this side are prepared to agree to these amendments. I believe the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador wishes to make some further comment on the question of the island of Newfoundland versus the province of Newfoundland, but so far as this party is concerned we hope that this legislation will be passed tonight.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, we in this party are now much more ready to accept this particular amendment. It will mean that we in parliament will still have some control. So far as the situation in Labrador is concerned, our position has always been that any assistance given under the Maritime Freight Rates Act should directly assist the user of a facility.

Mr. Peddle: Mr. Chairman, on the previous occasion that this bill was before committee of the whole I expressed my concern that, while it is entitled an act to authorize assistance to transportation in the Atlantic region, it specifically excludes the Labrador part of the province of Newfoundland. Clause 2(c) provides that any consideration under the act so far as Newfoundland is concerned applies only to the island of Newfoundland. The other three Atlantic provinces, Nova Scotia, P.E.I. and New Brunswick are included in their entirety, and the portion of Quebec which I suppose can be considered as an Atlantic region is also included. I might say I have been given to understand that in the new bill the portion of Quebec stipulated is considerably larger than that taken into consideration in the Maritime Freight Rates Act, as printed in the revised statutes of Canada, 1952.

Approximately 110,000 square miles of my province, incidentally all in my riding, are deliberately excluded from the provisions of this legislation. The minister answered my objection by making reference to the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada. I cannot see the relevancy of that argument. The terms of union state:

> For the purpose of railway rate regulation the Island of Newfoundland will be included in the Maritime region of Canada—
> All legislation of the Parliament of Canada providing for special rates on traffic moving within, into, or out of, the Maritime region will, as far as appropriate, be made applicable to the Island of Newfoundland.

But, Mr. Chairman, the terms of union also clearly define the province of Newfoundland, as follows:

> The Province of Newfoundland shall comprise the same territory as at the date of Union, that is to say, the Island of Newfoundland and the Islands adjacent thereto, the coast of Labrador as delimited in the report delivered by the Judicial Committee ... on the first day of March, 1927—

I do not really want to delay the minister's legislation but as the elected representative of the riding of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador I cannot come into this chamber and see legislation, purporting to assist transportation in the Atlantic region, go through when the area of Labrador I represent is specifically excluded from the terms of that legislation.

The biggest problems in Labrador are transportation and communications. Transportation is the only real problem in the industrialized areas of Labrador. Therefore, I cannot buy a bill such as this which excludes Labrador. Mr. Chairman, I know there are no roads in Labrador right now, but in one of my first speeches in this chamber I supported the idea of the provision of a road system in Labrador. When roads are provided, the subsidy available through this bill could be an incentive to develop Labrador.

I know the minister is trying to be co-operative but I still cannot help but feel that Labrador is being treated as an orphan, to which a few crumbs may be thrown. I cannot accept that. The minister says he feels Labrador must be the beneficiary of some form of assistance. If this bill is for the assistance of transportation in the Atlantic region, let it cover the entire Atlantic region. If trucking facilities are not presently available in Labrador no harm will be done, but the provisions of this bill could be used as an incentive to the introduction of such facilities.

• (9:30 p.m.)

As I said I do not wish to delay this legislation. I heard the remarks of the minister concerning the subsidies that would have to be paid in respect of iron ore shipments, and that seems to be a rather strange reason for keeping assistance out of an area. That does not ring right to my ear. As a representative of the area, and despite the minister's remarks, I must propose the following amendment to Bill C-207. I move:

That clause 2(c) be amended by deleting the words "Island of Newfoundland" and substituting therefor the words "the Province of Newfoundland".

The Chairman: Clause 2 has been stood. Therefore, we will proceed through the bill and then return to clause 2, at which time the hon. member's amendment may be put.

Mr. Lang: I move:

That Bill C-207 be amended by adding thereto, immediately after line 17 on page 4 thereof, the following subsections:

Tabling — (3) An order of the Governor in Council made under subsection (1) to vary or remove any reduction in tariffs shall be laid before Parliament not later that fifteen days after its issue, or, if Parliament is not then sitting, within the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting and, subject to subsection (5), the order shall come into force thirty sitting days after it is so tabled.

Opportunity for debate — (4) Where an order has been laid before Parliament pursuant to subsection (3), a notice of Motion in either House signed by ten members thereof and made in accordance with the rules of that House within fifteen days of the day the order was laid before Parliament, praying that the order be annulled, shall be debated in that House at the first convenient opportunity within the ten sitting days next after the day the motion in that House was made.

Annulling order — (5) If either House of Parliament resolves that the order be annulled, the order shall stand annulled and have no effect.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Peddle.]

Amendment (Mr. Lang) agreed to.

Clause 5 as amended agreed to.

On clause 6—Assistance authorized

Mr. Lang: I move:

That Bill C-207 be amended by striking out clause 6(2) at page 4 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

Limit on assistance — (2) The total amount of assistance paid under this section shall at no time exceed the total of the amounts certified to the Minister under subsection (2) of section 5 as the estimated savings to the Consolidated Revenue Fund in respect of those calendar years, including any part of such a year, for which amounts have been so certified to the Minister.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Lang) agreed to.

Clause 6 as amended agreed to.

Clauses 7 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 10—Coming into force

Mr. Lang: I move:

That Bill C-207 be amended by striking out line 33 on page 6 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

10. Section 3 shall come into force on the 1st day of July, 1969, sections 5 and 6 shall come into

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Lang) agreed to.

Clause 10 as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will revert to clause 2 and the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador that clause 2(c) be amended by deleting the words "Island of Newfoundland" and substituting therefor the words "the Province of Newfoundland".

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, on this amendment may I say I am in complete sympathy with the intention of the hon. member. There is no argument about the propriety of his plan and we wish to ensure that Labrador is taken care of. I simply say to him and hon. members, through you Mr. Chairman, that the effect of this amendment is to give the large iron mining companies operating in Labrador a very, very significant and unnecessary subsidy which they do not need and which they have not sought. This is the only possible result of this amendment. The solution I have undertaken to bring about, and which I now say we will do, is to have the committee find an effective means of assisting transportation in the Labrador area of the province of Newfoundland and within the Atlantic provinces. For these reasons I cannot accept this amendment.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I believe I put forward our position a short while ago. I believe we find ourselves supporting the minister's position on this proposed amendment. Today in the house it was agreed that the Standing Committee on Transportation would continue its tour, which no doubt will include Labrador. At the same time, the minister has suggested Labrador should receive consideration for assistance and that the federal-provincial committee no doubt will be looking into this. What bothers me is that the committee may go on a junket to Labrador, come back and then make a recommendation for assistance which would be of little value. I am sure all members of my party would like to support this amendment, but unfortunately the large iron ore companies would be the only real beneficiaries. I am very sincere when I say there must be some assistance given to the people of Labrador in respect of transportation in this area, but I do not think this amendment will accomplish that objective.

I suggest we must look for other means. I hope the minister is sincere when he states he will see that action is taken in respect of Labrador as soon as possible, and that some legislation will be brought forward to benefit the people of that area. I do not think the way to do it, however, is by helping the great iron ore works to the detriment of the people who should benefit.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the minister concerning grants.

This amendment would provide for a grant to be paid to Labrador which would help in the first place the company that serves Schefferville, which is owned by American interests. But the greatest danger involved in passing this amendment is that the province of Quebec has never recognized that Labrador belongs to Newfoundland. That is why we object to this amendment, because we are convinced that even if Mr. Smallwood has decided to take up arms to stop the people of Quebec from going to Labrador, we must keep this bill as it is. There is enough disagreement in the house without confusing the issues even more.

[English]

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, if the amendment proposed by my colleague the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador were accepted, would it be possible for the minister by regulation to exclude the companies which produce iron ore from any subsidy? Could it be done in that way?

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Chairman; it is the precise opposite. If the bill goes through and the federal-provincial committee is empowered to make recommendations, we can look at those industries which do not need this kind of support with a view to the provincial representatives saying we should exclude a particular industry. At this time, the intention is to benefit those people who need the benefit most, and the reverse would be the case if this amendment were to carry now.

• (9:40 p.m.)

It would simply mean that we would have to apply the Maritime Freight Rates Act, and the 30 per cent westbound subsidy would have to apply to the very heavy and enormously costly shipments of iron ore out of Labrador. This is why I said the appropriate means of dealing with this is to have the committee look into it. We could exclude this group by designation, and we could do that under the legislation we are being asked to pass tonight. Without this legislation we cannot do it, and we particularly cannot do it if this amendment were to carry in the way my hon. friend has proposed it.

The Chairman: The committee has heard the amendment. Shall the amendment to clause 2 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment to clause—

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment will please rise.

An hon. Member: There was no opposition to the amendment; it was passed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order, please. All those in favour of the amendment will please rise. All those opposed will please rise.

An hon. Member: That's twice you voted on the one issue.

The Chairman: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Why don't you wake up?

The Chairman: Order, please.

An hon. Member: How often are you allowed to vote?

The Chairman: Could we have order in the committee, please.

An hon. Member: Just like Pearson; you lost one vote so you try again.

The Chairman: Order, please. I declare the amendment negatived.

Amendment (Mr. Peddle) negatived: Yeas, 24; Nays, 75.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Leave is not required, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Aiken: Certainly it is, there have been amendments.

Mr. Jamieson moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF PRODUCTIVE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-202, to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development, and motion No. 5 Mr. Broadbent.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 5; Mr. Broadbent, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it, and I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 5, Mr. Broadbent, negatived on division.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East) moved:

That Bill C-202, to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be amended in clause 13, section 2, by adding after the word "made" in line 23 on page 10, the words:

"or the 31st day of December, 1976, whichever is earlier.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Chairman, in dealing with the amendment which has been proposed to this clause of the bill, I believe there has been a slight error in the drafting of it. I should like at this time to read the amendment that we wish to put. It is as follows:

That the motion be amended by deleting therefrom the word "earlier" and substituting therefor the word "later".

I am sure the minister realizes there was some discussion in the Committee as to the application of the amount of loans that industry would be allowed. It was thought that the reason for providing incentives for industries to move into an area was related to a benefit to the people who were unemployed. Good corporate citizenship is expected of any industry that moves into an area to take advantage of incentives. In looking at this particular clause with this in mind, our idea was to have a very close relationshhip between this department and the Department of Manpower and Immigration. We are of the opinion that this particular clause of the bill should indicate that those industries taking advantage of the incentives provisions should keep in contact with the department throughout the entire time this act is in force.

As was pointed out by the minister at the committee hearings, all of the incentive provisions of the act should not have been applied by 1976. We suggest that changing the word "earlier" to "later" would mean that all the provisions of the act not satisfied at that time would be satisfactorily covered.

It is our position that there must be very close working relationship among departments to ensure that the purpose of the bill is fulfilled to the greatest extent possible. We have experienced too many situations wherein industries have come into an area, taken advantage of concessions granted to them and have then moved out without regard to the unemployment situation created by the removal of their facilities. We hope that under the provisions of the bill, and because of the remarks of the minister, industry will cooperate to the greatest extent and keep itself advised with regard to employment opportunities. As the bill suggests, industry should "discuss with the department the long term plans of the applicant for the recruitment and training of employees in the designated region".

We believe that the amendment we have proposed is in order and should be acceptable to the minister. I see no reason why he should suggest that the amendment would really make two classes of citizens as far as corporations are concerned. I appreciate that this provision concerning employment opportunities should apply to all industry in a growth centre. Industry says it is doing the area a service; at the same time, it is moving in for a specific purpose under the bill and should provide the necessary data to the Department of Manpower and Immigration to ensure that there is available a complete, up-to-date analysis of the employment picture in the area.

I hope the minister will accept the amendment. I do not think it detracts from the bill in any way. It will provide for a much closer working relationship between departments, and the figures made available would enable one to see whether the purpose of the bill is being carried out to the greatest extent possible. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister to accept the amendment.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for only a minute or two on the amendment and to add my voice to that of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) in asking the minister to give the suggestion very careful consideration. As I read the clause with which we are dealing, it provides that as a condition of the incentives to be paid the firm receiving them, the firm has a duty to keep in touch with the department with regard to its labour force, manpower vacancies and requirements. The firm will also have a duty to discuss with the department the long term plans of the applicants for the recruitment and training of employees in the designate region, and to participate in and co-operate with the department in respect of any programs of the department related to employment counselling, placement and manpower adjustment, mobility and training.

All the requirements laid down are to end, according to subclause 2 of clause 13, when the final payment is made in connection with the development incentives. I have studied this clause with my colleagues and do not see why the minister should consider that it would be a discrimination for the law to say that any firm which benefits from the program and obtains the payments provided under the bill has a duty to inform the department and keep in touch with it with respect to the firm's manpower requirements and training, so long as the law is in force.

This law is to remain in force until December 31, 1967. All we are saying to the minister is that the payment of large amounts of money from the public treasury to private firms and investors should require their co-operation in terms of personnel requirements and training. We say that this requirement should continue beyond the time the last payment is made, if that payment occurs before the end of the period during which the law is to remain in force. This seems to me not only a reasonable but a most desirable situation.

One thinks of Canadian Vickers, for example. True enough, Canadian Vickers was not assisted under a scheme such as the one contained in this bill. But that firm was the recipient of a great deal of federal funds because of the work it performed. Then, it had an agreement with the government—I am speaking from memory, but I think I am right—that for five years certain things were to obtain. On the very day the five-year period elapsed, boom, Canadian Vickers said: No more; we are closing our doors. This happens frequently with private corporations which are functioning for the purpose for which they are in existence, that is, meeting the demands of their shareholders and the profit demands of those participating in them. As sure as we are in this chamber, when the final payment under this incentive program is made to any corporation in that situation, it will say: We will have no more contact with the department.

If the situation warrants it from the point of view of the profitability of the corporation, all the co-operation will end at that point. I do not see why the minister should feel at all hesitant about this amendment. I appeal to him, not in any partisan way but appreciating the genuine concern he has that this measure is to work for the benefit of people in the disadvantaged areas who need help, to accept the amendment. I really do not see why he should hesitate to do so. The suggestion is that the obligation of the corporation under clause 13 shall continue for the life of this law, not merely for the life of the payment of the incentives to the corporation. There is a minute left before ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I invite the minister to rise and say he accepts the amendment. I would very much like to hear him use the remaining minute to say this, rather than speak myself until ten o'clock.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the second amendment, but I have some reservation with regard to the amendment proposed by the committee. This amendment, in French, reads:

[Translation]

That the motion be amended by deleting therefrom the word "earlier" and substituting therefor the word "later".

[English]

I have no objection to that; it was only a mistake. I regret that I do not have time to deal with the other amendment, because there are only 30 seconds left. It is ten o'clock.

[Mr. Lewis.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

OLD AGE SECURITY—REDUCTION OF GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT UPON RECEIPT OF PENSION BY SPOUSE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) for asking me to postpone from Monday until this evening my remarks in this regard. The minister is not in the house, but his parliamentary secretary is. I hope he can give what his office described as "a good reply" to my question. I am certain that we are looking forward to this. I apologize if any inconvenience has been caused to the Speaker's office or hon. members because of this postponement. My question of June 4, which I repeat now, was as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the government considering amending the old age security legislation to overcome the injustice whereby the old age security supplement is reduced for a complete year if the spouse of the recipient receives the old age pension for even a single month in that calendar year?

• (10:00 p.m.)

The question was prompted by a letter which I received from a constitutent of mine who was docked some $14 from his pension cheque last February because his wife was slated to receive the basic old age security pension this September. It might be well for us to examine the annual income of this family of two elderly citizens from whom $14 was "recovered" last February according to our Canadian laws. Hon. members will suspect that their income was very low or else they would not have been receiving the supplement in the first place. For the benefit of the house and the country I would like to add up the income that this family can expect in 1969. Let us see how very little it really is. Because the basic pension is only $936, the supplement for the 12 months is $17.20 per month, which amounts to $206.40. The basic pension for the wife plus her supplement for four months from September to December amounts to $380.80. The total amounts to $1,523.20. This man is fortunate; he has a small pension which brings him another $694. But the grand total amounts to $2,217.20 on which this family is required to live for one year.

Members of the house will agree with me that this is hardly a princely sum. The fifth report of the Economic Council of Canada described the poverty in our country as appalling and involving millions of people. At page 105 the council, in discussing the inability of statistics to adequately describe the destruction of spirit that accompanies poverty, reported as follows:

> Much more serious and more widespread is the kind of low-income situation that carries with it a sense of entrapment and hopelessness. Even the best statistics can only hint at this. They cannot capture the sour atmosphere of poor health and bad housing—the accumulated defeat, alienation and despair which often so tragically are inherited by the next and succeeding generations.

Here is an example of real poverty right in my own riding, and there are hundreds of others. The Economic Council of Canada report states that any couple receiving less than $2,500 a year is "existing below the poverty line", not living. I submit that even if our current legislation had not docked my constituent $14 per month for 18 months, this couple would still have an annual income of only $2,329.20. This is hardly a magnificent sum on which to live for a year, and I certainly hope that this kind of stingy treatment that we are according to our senior citizens does not stifle their initiative. They are still well below the poverty line of $2,500 per year. If it were not for the meagre pension which this particular man has, I am sure he would be a good deal worse off.

In reply to my question the minister stated that the issue I raise relates to one of a number of "anomalies" in the pension legislation. I say it is not just an anomaly, it is a tragedy which allows citizens of a country as rich as Canada to exist on this kind of income and to take no part in the increased standard of living that is available to other Canadians who are organized and articulate. People like veterans and pensioners are unorganized; there is no one to speak for them; they are mute and inarticulate, and therefore they get the rough end of the stick. As the minister said in reply to me on June 14, the government is looking into a number of anomalies in the legislation. I hope this is so because I have much faith in the minister, and I hope he can convince his leader and his cabinet colleagues that this is an important issue with which they should deal immediately.

While we are speaking of anomalies, let me say that there are a number of others, and in the time remaining I would like to outline at least two of them. Some of these anomalies solve themselves. These old pensioners die. They cannot wait, and this is why the problem needs urgent consideration. The 2 per cent maximum cost of living adjustment on the pension during a period of inflation is a crime. These people are getting behind about 2 per cent per year. They are losing in terms of real income. The situation in which a pensioner's income ceases part way through the year is another anomaly. There is no adjustment possible unless he remarries, which is unlikely, or perhaps retires during that period.

There are a number of things that need to be corrected and I am certain the minister is working on them. I am sure that all members of the house are aware of many anomalies that require urgent attention. The members of this party, and I am sure the members of other parties, are looking forward with great hope to some words from the minister that indicate the government is really serious about solving this completely unnecessary but tragic problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) says, the minister is fully aware of the problems he raises, and he has already stated that there are certain anomalies which have become apparent in the guaranteed income supplement legislation.

One of the areas which the government has under consideration is the situation where the spouse of a recipient receives the old age security pension for only part of a particular year, perhaps for only one month.

A further word of explanation might be in order. If a recipient or his spouse, maybe both of them, has income from other sources, it is correct that he would receive a different rate of supplement in a year in which his spouse was a pensioner from that he received in the previous year when his spouse was not a pensioner at any time.

However, if neither has any income, the rate would not change, since the maximum supplement would be payable in both years. Even where there is outside income, in which case the supplement of a recipient might be lower than in the earlier year, the receipt by the spouse of pension and supplement might mean that their overall income for the year is greater than in the year before. This is not always the case, however, depending on individual circumstances, and it is here that we have recognized a problem and are attempting to find a satisfactory solution.

[English]

NATIONAL REVENUE—PORT DOVER, ONT.—FAILURE OF U.S. PLEASURE CRAFT TO REPORT TO CUSTOMS OFFICER

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I am rather disappointed to find that the Minister of National Revenue is not in his seat tonight. We had made a mutual arrangement whereby he would be here to listen to my explanation of this problem and would give me an answer. I trust he will still do so having read my representations as recorded in Hansard.

In order to set this problem properly before you, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read the question that I presented to the house on Monday last, as reported at page 10538:

> In view of the fact that on Saturday last at Port Dover, Ontario, out of seven United States pleasure boats from Erie, Pennsylvania, bringing United States dollars and good will to Canada two were fined $10 and all were ordered to get out of Canada because they had not reported to the customs officer who was not available, will the minister devise some means of clearing our United States visitors through customs on weekends through the three summer months, which is the only time that most of the United States boats can visit Canada?

To give some indication of the importance of this issue, Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell you that the port of Port Dover is located on the north shore of Lake Erie midway along the shoreline and in the shelter of Long Point Bay. It is directly across Lake Erie from Erie, Pennsylvania, a distance of approximately 45 miles. The town of Port Dover, approximately 3,000 in population, relies for its summer revenue mainly on the tourist industry.

A rapidly expanding hobby which promotes and supplements the tourist industry is that of pleasure boating. The number of pleasure boats that cruise the shores of Lake Erie and cross the lake is increasing annually. Port Dover has a yacht club boasting a registration of about 250 boats, all capable of crossing the lake so their owners can visit their United States brothers across the way. In the past few years the federal government has spent over $750,000 in providing harbour facilities for commercial and pleasure craft. There are two marinas in the town which are capable of servicing any pleasure craft likely to call in. They are capable of giving it a complete overhaul.

I wish to draw the minister's attention to the brief presented by the town of Port Dover. Time will not permit me to go into very great detail. In order to inform hon. members what was behind all the hubbub and furore among the residents of Port Dover, it might be well if I referred to a letter sent out from the customs office in Hamilton to the Port Dover Yacht Club. The letter first of all sets out the hours during which the customs office will be open, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. from Monday through Friday and from 9 a.m. to 12 noon on Saturday. The letter ends with this sentence: "There will be no service available to small boat operators at Port Dover beyond the hours indicated above."

One cannot blame customs officials too much for this directive. Surely, Mr. Speaker, we need to give local customs officials new directives and instructions. Our local officer ought to be given sufficient discretion to permit him to carry out his duties at the office wisely. Press reports of this unfortunate mishap at Port Dover indicate that the district customs officer said that visitors made no attempt to register when they came to Port Dover. I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that this report is entirely at variance with the facts because United States boats endeavoured to clear customs with the assistance of some local yacht owners. Telephone calls were made to the office, but it was closed. Attempts were made to call the official's residence, but I understand that his telephone number is unlisted at the present time. One United States boat owner hired a taxi and was driven to the home of the customs officer, but was given no satisfaction and obtained no clearance. Many reliable witnesses will attest to the accuracy of these facts. If the minister entertains any shadow of doubt about the accuracy of what I have said I invite him to set up an independent inquiry to examine the charges made and ascertain facts. The minister should not rely entirely on the word of supervisors in the immediate area.

The United States boat owners, having failed to obtain clearance, were met at the scene by the R.C.M.P. patrol boat which arrived there a few hours later, as it was its duty to do. Two seizures were made; and not until fines of $10 had been paid were the two boats in question released. One of these boats was, "The Jed," owned by Mr. John Ashby of Erie, Pennsylvania, the other being "Cloud Nine II", owned by Mr. E. H. Sturdevant of Canfield, Ohio. Five other United States boat in the port at that time were ordered to leave. The owner of one was a United States visitor who had this to say. "I have been coming to Port Dover for 40 years. I was born in Canada and this is the first time I have been asked to leave the country." The incident to which I have referred has damaged good will between our countries and brought disrepute to our tourist industry. Our tourist industry is most important, and if this sort of thing is tolerated efforts at tourist promotion become a mockery.

I do not wish to be entirely critical, Mr. Speaker. I wish to suggest some solutions. As has been suggested in other contexts, the customs officials at Port Dover should be paid sufficient overtime to induce them to work at peak periods during the week end, when the majority of people call in at Port Dover. Let it be worth the while of the customs official to work overtime. Also, give him some leeway and discretion. Perhaps customs clearance might be effected by telephone. Another possible solution would be for an extra man to be taken on for the peak period of three months. Still another solution might be to permit marina operators in the town of Port Dover, willing to undertake those duties, to take necessary information from the visitors and turn it over to the customs officer when he opens his office the next day.

Perhaps the R.C.M.P., who are already on patrol there, might be given the authority to clear these boats. Above all, Mr. Speaker, a directive for the guidance of the officer must be forthcoming from the department. Action must be swift. Phone calls are now being received at Port Dover from United States tourists who are planning to visit there from July 1 to July 4. Phone calls are being received from Erie, Ashtabula, Cleveland and Buffalo, inquiring whether clearance will be given to them at the port of Port Dover. This is an urgent problem and demands urgent action.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to reply to this question by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Coté). The minister's reply is as follows.

In reply to the question raised on June 23 by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), two pleasure craft owned by residents of Pennsylvania were penalized $10 each on Saturday, June 21, by the R.C.M.P. for failure to report at customs although one had been in Port Dover for approximately 22 hours and the second for a period in excess of four hours. The customs officer in charge at Port Dover was available at his residence to accept such reports, if and when requested, a fact which would have been known to the marina operator at which the boats were docked. The owners of the other five pleasure craft referred to left Port Dover without contacting either the R.C.M.P., or the customs officer in charge at Port Dover, so there was no question of their being ordered out of the country.

In so far as the procedure for clearing United States visitors through customs on week ends is concerned, notification was given, under cover of letter dated June 4, 1969, to all boat clubs and marina operators in the area, as well as to other interested organizations at Port Dover and Simcoe, informing all concerned that as of Saturday, June 28, 1969, the Port Dover marina would be serviced by a customs officer from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 9 a.m. to 12 noon on Saturday, until September 6, 1969. At other times, visitors may report to customs by telephoning the customs officer in charge at Port Dover at his residence, or customs officers at Simcoe, details of which, including telephone numbers, are to be posted on the customs office door and at the Port Dover marina.

HARBOURS—TORONTO—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN CONSTRUCTION OF PORT

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on behalf of the city of Toronto. I thank the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) for being here this evening.

The port authority of the city of Toronto has come up with a most imaginative and realistic plan for the development of the whole waterfront. By an inexpensive method they propose to improve the harbour service by sucking sand from the shallow waters of the old inner-harbour and a new outer-harbour and by combining this dredged material with fill from construction sites to add over 1,000 acres to the waterfront. This new land would: add to the Canadian National Exhibition Grounds; greatly increase the recreation area of the islands; provide a site for a harbour city to house about 75,000 people; make possible the modernization of the inner-harbour; create a new outer-harbour which would provide about 400 acres of dockage and give Toronto a new airport to replace the now obsolete island airport.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

• (10:20 p.m.)

The plans as worked out between the port authority, the planning departments of the city and the province have won the acceptance and praise of all who have seen them. Because of the excellence of the engineering, the acre cost is low and the whole scheme is economically sound. At present ships cannot use the shallow eastern gap but must detour to the western entrance. The harbour and docking services are inadequate for the immediate future. The sand to be dredged from the west end of the harbour would help create land for the new city and fill the western entrance, thus providing land access to the new city and the recreation islands. The sand dredged from the east end of the inner-harbour, the new eastern ship entrance and the outer-harbour would be used to create the airport.

The eastern headland for the outer-harbour—now almost three miles in length—is being built at a fraction of the cost of standard construction through the utilization of fill and new design. But the Authority has now reached the point where it cannot move ahead efficiently, or much longer at all, until the Department of Transport makes a decision in respect of the dredging for the new harbour entrances, and approves the airport. I ask that the decision be made now so that all of this imaginative and energetic planning is not lost.

On December 19 I spoke opposing the proposed enlargement of the Malton airport on the grounds that it would seriously affect housing and was too expensive, and I suggested that it should be located further away from Toronto or in Lake Ontario which would be convenient, would not require extra highway construction and would not add noise pollution over residential areas. The then minister of transport abandoned the plan for the major enlargement, at great savings to the department and with little loss in total potential.

The need to construct a second major airport was recognized. Since then studies have been going on as to the best location, but the approval of the Toronto harbour airport need not wait until that decision is made. The cost is low and it has sufficient merit to warrant immediate approval.

Originally the Toronto Port Authority proposed an airport on the southwest side of Toronto Island at Gibraltar Point. Understandably there were objections that the flight pattern was too close to the city and to the air approaches to Malton. Since then the authority has changed its plans and it now proposes that the airport be located on the east side of the new outer-harbour, at the east end of Toronto.

They suggest a runway of 7,500 feet with an approach parallel to the shoreline but over the water so as not to interfere with housing, and a second runway of 2,500 feet for STOL aircraft. From my investigation, this site is far enough away to avoid any interference with air space for Malton.

Toronto, or more properly Ontario, does require a second major airport but if the lake port is developed now the second major port could be delayed a little, perhaps until the development of a rapid transit system would make it feasible to locate it further out as part of an over-all complex and on land not required for urbanization. I suggest it is wrong to delay this project for years of research and study, negotiations with provincial and planning authorities, and hearings under the new Expropriation Act. There are compelling reasons for proceeding with this project now. They are:

(1) It is relatively inexpensive. Four hundred and fifty acres could be assembled from reclaiming sand and the utilization of fill at an estimated cost of $10 million, but in any event for less than $25 million. A regular land based airport would cost many times as much.

(2) It would service the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal passengers who make up about 40 per cent of the Malton traffic. It would be a rapid transit by air pending the development of land transit.

(3) It would relieve the traffic at Malton and thus allow that airport to become a trans-continental and inter-continental airport.

(4) It would relieve severe intensification of flights at Malton which would be as undesirable from a standpoint of living conditions as the original proposed addition of runways.

(5) If we count the economy of time for the public and the efficiency of those travelling the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal triangle, it would save millions. The travelling time from downtown hotels would be about seven minutes.

(6) By using computers at various locations in the city, all tied in with a master computer, and the existing rapid transit system or airport buses, people could leave their cars at home and check in at various city locations and step from the bus with their baggage directly to the plane. It is too late to introduce this concept at Malton but there is no reason why it could not work at Toronto.

(7) By checking in at city locations and taking a bus or a rapid transit we would utilize existing facilities in the city and avoid the cost of substantial airport buildings.

(8) But most important, if the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration, which is now carrying out an intensive study, comes up with a new and relatively inexpensive material for floating airports, another runway could be tied to the existing airport and thus provide substantial enlargement at reasonable cost. Time could demonstrate that it should become the major airport.

(9) Should we decide to proceed with a second major airport at some other site the Toronto airport would still be required for the new STOL planes.

(10) The proposed development would provide Toronto with new assessment in excess of $2 billion.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that seldom has it been possible for so much to be done for a city at so little cost and with so little risk.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has advanced ten most interesting and imaginative ideas with regard to the so-called sandspit airport at Toronto. Each one of them would require far more time than I have on this occasion to deal with all of them, and what I would simply like to say is that the sequence of events over the past few months has been that we originally announced, as a government, plans for the substantial improvement and expansion of Malton.

As a result of representations, some of them I may say most effectively from the hon. member who has just spoken, it was decided to change that decision and proceed with the provision of an alternative site in the Toronto or southern Ontario region. Within this framework we must also consider the matter of a downtown airport for the city of Toronto. It is exceedingly difficult to try to measure the comparative benefits or effects of proceeding now with a most limited kind of airport facility for Toronto. There is no doubt many of the advantages the hon. member has outlined are true. I would have some reservations about the total impact being as great, and would have to say there are difficulties in respect of this project which he has somewhat underestimated.

The fact of the matter is that the area to which the hon. member referred has potential. It will be considered and considered quickly, not over a period of many years, as indeed a possible alternative site for the so-called second airport. It may be that the possible development will take place at that location. But even if that is not to be the case, and there is a second development elsewhere I can assure the hon. member and members of the house that I am quite confident some form of downtown development or an intercity airport will be part of the over-all air policy for southern Ontario. I am delighted the hon. member brought this to my attention and I am most sympathetic to his proposals. I shall be pleased to discuss them with him and with any other member in detail.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 27, 1969

The house met at 11 a.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, June 27, 1969

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Gérald Fauteux, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 27th day of June at 12.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant
Louis-Frémont Trudeau
Brigadier General
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

PROCEDURE

NOTICE OF OBJECTION TO MOTION IN NAME OF MINISTER

Mr. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order at this time because this is the proper time to take at least a preliminary objection. It deals with a notice of motion appearing in yesterday's Votes and Proceedings standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) for Monday next.

My objection is such that we will be arguing at the appropriate time that this motion should not be put. I must raise the point in a very limited way without in any sense arguing about the merits.

The motion of the President of the Privy Council involves a duplication of the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, for the adoption of a report of the committee. The minister's motion involves two changes, but apart from these changes it is identical to the motion of the hon. member. I wish to mention only one change.

Under the proposed Standing Order 75(b) the majority of the parties may work out the agreement as to the allocation of time. The order proposed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) provides, "a majority including the government". In other words, there cannot be a majority unless the government is part of that majority.

My objection, Mr. Speaker, is based on the fact that this constitutes anticipation of a motion with which this house is at least partially seized. The report of the committee has been tabled. The motion for concurrence has not been put, but it has been stood on several occasions by the hon. member who is the chairman of the committee.

• (11:10 a.m.)

The motion standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) will in effect block the hearing of the motion which a committee of this house, through its chairman, has brought before the house, and I submit there are ample precedents to warrant Your Honour's holding that this is improper and should not be done. I will renew my argument before the motion is actually put.

I only add this, Mr. Speaker, that if the government can at any time through a variation of a committee report, by a motion like that of the President of the Privy Council, prevent the discussion of that report, then our so-called committee system will be in a much sorrier state even than it appears to be at present.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) I rise merely for the purpose of entering a caveat with respect to this matter. I agree with my colleague that the time to argue it is perhaps on Monday or Wednesday, or whenever the matter comes before the house; but since we are aware of the government notice of motion that is on the order paper I believe we should draw Your Honour's attention to any objections we have at this time.

The hon. member for Peace River has referred to the rule of anticipation. May I just read one paragraph from citation 131 in Beauchesne's fourth edition, which is as follows:

> In determining whether a discussion is out of order on the ground of anticipation, regard shall be had by Mr. Speaker to the probability of the matter anticipated being brought before the house within a reasonable time.

There is another paragraph of some length which I need not read at this time. However, I would point out that the motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) is on the order paper in a place where it can be called literally any day. So there is no question as to the probability of this matter being brought before the house in that way, if the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization wishes to exercise his right under that motion. Therefore it does seem to me that Your Honour should consider whether the motion proposed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) does in fact anticipate, or in other words block something that is already on the order paper.

I realize, and I suspect the President of the Privy Council may draw attention to this fact because I notice he was trying to get to his feet, that some of us were not party to the report of the standing committee. We have even had some argument on the floor of the house as to whether it was a report of the majority or a report of the committee. I recognize the rule in this matter, but the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton went to pains yesterday to emphasize that what he had presented was the report of the committee.

Surely at some point a decision has to be made. Are these rule changes that are proposed changes that are in the name of a committee, whether in its totality or majority, or are the changes being made in the name of the government? Later on we will have time to argue as to whether it is proper to change the rules of the house on the initiative of the government, but I think the point has to be made at this moment.

I also draw attention to the same point made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), that if it is the desire of the government to make some amendments or some changes in the rules brought forward by the committee, the government should be required to follow the rules that face all the rest of us, instead of being able to act under some special provision.

All told, Mr. Speaker, we think this is not the manner in which the rules of the house should be dealt with, and while we do not seek a ruling at this point my colleague and I both felt that since the item has just appeared on the order paper we should indicate our objection to the way this matter is being handled.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be rather brief, because the two previous speakers have already expressed the opinions that we of the Ralliement créditiste wanted to make known.

The committee report, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, does not constitute an exact report of the proceedings. Standing Order 75c which has been presented at the very last minute by the government does not represent the committee's views. We deplore that this report was included in the Votes and Proceedings No. 175 of last Friday and that we might have to discuss it in a few days if not today.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that your ruling was that what we will discuss does not represent the committee's report, especially as far as Standing Order 75c is concerned, but only the government's views.

[English]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I shall not go into any detail on the arguments raised, because it was only an instant before the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) rose that he mentioned to me he would be taking this position. If I could, I should like to refer the Chair to the fact that the rule with regard to anticipation refers to actual discussion as opposed to putting the motion. The motion in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) has not been put and therefore the precedents referred to by the hon. gentleman do not apply. I think we are entitled to be a little amused at the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who earlier this week disavowed the report of the Committee on Procedure, and has now adopted it as being something good.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) knows better than to try to put words into my mouth by suggesting I am adopting the committee's report. He knows very well I am against the motion to adopt it hook, line and sinker, but I insist that the government must make clear whether it is trying to give this to us as a committee report or as a government motion, with all that goes with that situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we are not debating the matter at the present time. I understand that hon. members are just entering a caveat that they propose to raise this matter next week or the following week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The caveat has been entered and noted.

TRADE

REPORT BY MINISTER ON JOINT CANADA-U.S. MEETING IN WASHINGTON—TABLING OF COMMUNIQUÉ

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to report briefly on the twelfth meeting of the Canada-United States Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs which was held in Washington on June 25 and 26. This was the first meeting of the committee since the assumption of office by the present Canadian ministry and the administration of President Nixon. My colleagues and I welcome this first opportunity to discuss with our United States counterparts a wide range of problems, both bilateral and multilateral, of great importance to our two countries. As is customary on these occasions, the committee reviewed the international political and economic situation and addressed itself to a number of specific issues of current concern.

I should like to table the communiqué issued by the committee at the end of the meeting yesterday. This communiqué gives a fairly full account of the discussions and I should like at this time merely to draw the attention of house members to certain highlights of the meeting. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the discussions were wide ranging and, in my view, both constructive and businesslike, exemplifying the community of interest and the friendliness which characterize our relations with the United States. These discussions should be regarded as part of a continuous process of consultation through which our two governments inform each other of their views and interests, and make appropriate adjustments in their policies. The communiqué refers specifically to a number of issues on which understandings were reached and arrangements for follow-up action was taken.

• (11:20 a.m.)

I will, for the moment, restrict myself to the discussions on international wheat marketing, during which the two delegations expressed their concern at developments which are placing serious pressure on the price provisions of the International Grains Arrangement, and expressed their readiness to consult with other governments on measures to restore stability in the world grains market. I would hope that it will be possible for the wheat exporting countries to meet very soon to discuss these important issues.

There was also a good discussion on energy relations between Canada and the United States, and it was agreed that current difficulties with respect to the level of our oil exports to the United States should be the subject of further consultation which I expect to start in Washington on Monday.

Attention was also directed to the problems of inflation in Canada and the United States, and to the appropriate policies to be pursued in this situation, and to a variety of individual trade and economic problems. It is worth mentioning, in particular, the agreement that was reached to achieve an early understanding on methods for dealing with problems which may arise in cross-border trade in certain agricultural products; the agreement to negotiate on the delineation of United States-Canadian continental shelf boundaries and the agreement to explore the resolution of problems which have arisen from the imposition in 1968 of a numerical limitation on western hemisphere immigration into the United States.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, this was one of the most substantial and productive meetings of the joint committee which it has been my privilege to attend, and I think it augurs well for our future relations with our great neighbour to the south.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments about the minister's statement and I will try to be brief.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Go easy on him. He is more to be pitied.

Mr. Stanfield: I think we must, of course, all approve of these meetings as institutions, and certainly they ought to be useful because they do provide an opportunity for Canadian ministers and their counterparts in the United States to discuss problems of mutual concern. That is the kind of discussion that in itself certainly ought to be useful.

It is really quite difficult to tell from the communiqué or from what the minister has said what real progress had been made toward the solution of the matters that were discussed. For example, the annex refers to the position of the United States, that the world payments equilibrium would require the United States to rebuild a substantial surplus concurrent account, and that this would entail adjustments in the pattern of world payments.

This is a very obscure statement that might very well give some cause for alarm, if anybody could figure out exactly what it means; but clearly all the annex does is indicate substantial conflict of position as between the United States and the world at large, including Canada, in this regard.

Canada's statement of its position as to its long term objective of greater balance in its over-all current account, which would reduce Canada's dependance on net inflows of capital, indicates nothing at all as to what progress if any was made to reconcile these apparently very conflicting positions.

They apparently talked about the operation of the international monetary system and the annex is very obscure with regard to this. It is not clear, for example, whether the ministers representing the two countries are happy with the arrangements that have been made to provide for stability, such as special drawing rights, or whether in fact there is concern as to what is likely to develop, and whether the ministers from the two countries formulated any approach to these problems.

The United States members apparently noted with satisfaction the fact that Canada has accelerated its Kennedy Round tariff reductions by putting them into effect immediately, and that Canada is liberalizing its tourist allowances. The United States should note that with satisfaction.

With regard to some matters of very intense concern to Canadians at the present time, there is very little that is of a concrete nature. The ministerial committee apparently reviewed the grain situation and "the two governments agreed to co-ordinate their efforts to reduce distortions and impediments to agricultural trade." But not the slightest indication is given as to the mechanics of this co-ordination or what specific measures the two countries propose to take in concert to achieve this end. For example, what is the attitude of the two countries with regard to the suggestion made that the governing body of the world wheat agreement may propose a reduction in grain prices? In other words, judging from the communiqué and the annex, the ministers may have made some progress or they may have made very little. I believe the people of this country are entitled to know precisely what mechanics will be employed to follow up this general statement which may be no more than a pious hope of the efforts of the two countries to reduce distortions and impediments in this area.

There are references to underdeveloped countries; there is reference to cross-border trade in respect of certain agricultural commodities; there is talk about early consultations. But again, these mean nothing unless, in fact, arrangements have been made for the establishment of machinery to deal with the problems. There is nothing in the communiqué or the minister's statement which gives the people of this country any means of judging whether they are simply pious statements or whether, in fact, a foundation has been reached for some action.

With regard to the comment on energy resources, oil and other things, as far as the communiqué is concerned it adds nothing to the information we already have. However, I understood the minister to say that he proposes to take some initiative himself in this regard, commencing on Monday. As I understood him this morning, he said he would open discussions on Monday next with authorities of the United States regarding oil arrangement. I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong. This provides one concrete bit of information that is not contained in the communiqué.

There is reference to the law of the sea having been discussed, but there is no indication whether any of the conflicting opinions between the two countries have been resolved in any way. Again, there is pious statement about seeking solutions to water and air pollution problems along our common frontier. However, there is no indication at all whether this is simply a pious statement or, in fact, concrete measures were discussed with a view to solving the problems.

This kind of meeting is useful; but surely, if we are to have effective participatory democracy we must have more solid information than the minister has given us. Surely parliament and the country are entitled to some frankness as to what differences of opinion there were and what real progress was made with regard to reaching solutions. We are entitled to statements going beyond pious or general declarations of intention. I admit that the minister was restrained in his report; he did not tell us what the weather was like down there. But a good deal of the report he made is about as interesting and illuminating as the discussions that take place in connection with slides that acquaintances sometimes invite us to watch in their basements, after their return from a trip abroad.

• (11:30 a.m.)

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that the communiqué he has just tabled—I thank him for sending us a copy of it—gives a full account of the discussions which took place at Canada-United States ministerial meeting in Washington this week. This seems to me a very generous interpretation of the term "full account". As a matter of fact, there is a report from Washington in this morning's Globe and Mail under the by-line of David Crane which contains a great deal more information than the communiqué the Minister has tabled. It seems to me passing strange that parliament is always the last to know what is going on and that the press seem to be able to get a great deal more information about these conferences than the members of parliament are able to secure from ministers of the Crown. We do not expect the minister to tell the house what position the United States representatives took at these discussions—that, of course, is confidential—but certainly the house is entitled to know the position which the Canadian representatives took at this meeting, and there is no indication in this communiqué or in the statement made by the minister of the position which the Canadian government took with respect to any of the matters outlined in this communiqué.

The minister says, for instance, that discussions were held regarding the International Grains Arrangement. The minister says that it is hoped there will be a meeting of the countries involved. But there has been a meeting this week in London of the exporting nations to discuss the matter of prices. What position did the Canadian representatives take at the Washington meeting this week? Did they secure any assurance from the United States government that the United States would not continue to sell below the floor price of the I.G.A.? Was any such assurance asked for and was any given? The minister surely is obliged to tell the house whether or not Canada has agreed sub rosa to some reduction in the floor price under the I.G.A.

The communiqué says that the Canadian representatives were concerned that we should reduce Canada's dependence on the net inflows of capital, but we are not told whether the Canadian government proposes to take any steps or proposed any steps at this conference for the reduction of the net capital inflow, and we are still waiting for a statement from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) as to what steps the government proposes to take about the takeover of Canadian financial institutions, which would be one way of dealing with this problem of the net inflow of capital.

There is no statement in the communiqué as to what the government's proposals were at this conference with respect to the oil policy. Is the objective of the Canadian government to reduce the deficit which we have in our oil dealings with the United States? Is the position of the Canadian government that we should endeavour to make greater use of our own oil resources and supply our own market for oil to a greater extent than we are now doing, and were discussions held with the United States representatives to this effect?

We have no information in this communiqué as to what the discussions were about the Canada-United States auto pact. The report from Washington to which I referred earlier says that the Canadian government wants to include the parts industry. Surely if that can be told to a press man in Washington it could at least have been conveyed to the House of Commons. Is that the government's position? Did the government make any representations regarding the very wide disparity in the price of cars sold in Canada and the price of cars sold in the United States, a disparity which the auto pact was designed to remove? What progress was made in this regard?

Mention has been made of the fact that the government discussed the possible reduction in the distortions and impediments to agricultural trade. What particular agricultural commodity does the government have in mind? What was the nature of these discussions. Surely ministers who have gone to attend a very important conference owe this House of Commons much more explicit information and a clear statement as to what the government policies are and what proposals the Canadian representatives put forth at that conference.

We are told, for instance, that the United States representatives were pleased that Canada has reduced its tariffs under the Kennedy round. Did the Canadian government representatives ask for any quid pro quo? Is the United States prepared to make commensurate reductions in their tariffs to meet the reductions which the Canadians made? On the contrary, this communiqué points out that the Americans now are hinting to the Canadian government that they propose to take some action to stop the volume of textiles which are entering the United States market. About this the communiqué says absolutely nothing.

I hope that when we get statements from the government in the future they will give us some information, rather than reading like a telephone directory that has been sent over from Washington.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) who had the text of the communiqué delivered to us in good time and in good French, although there are some sentences that we cannot easily understand since the communiqué itself is very short and—

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is the same in English.

Mr. Rondeau: Yes, it is the same in English, and we are not told much.

The purpose of that meeting was mainly to find new trade opportunities between the countries concerned and to develop world trade. We trust that the ministers have made arrangements that will be profitable to Canada, although this morning's communiqué does not provide us with clear and precise information as to the future of our international trade.

We are rather inclined to believe that the meetings held recently, mention of which is made in the press release, were mainly attempting to adjust the Canadian economy according to the wishes of the United States. In my opinion, this communiqué outlines the problems of Canada-United States trade as well as world trade but suggests no solution.

On page 2 of the release, paragraph 5 deals among other matters with a question not pertaining to international trade but which was studied by this committee, namely inflation. It concerns everybody, I agree, but it is a Canadian problem which we could solve without taking into consideration what the other countries we are dealing with do or think. Here is what is said:

> The Committee agreed that inflation and the need to cool their overheated economies were serious problems facing both countries.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a hope is expressed. No reference is made to a solution to the problem of inflation, but the fact is deplored that Canada and other countries are experiencing inflation and that they must act so as to cool their overheated economies.

Mr. Speaker, over heated economies are like an overheated soup which sticks to the pan and has a burnt smell. The communiqué did not offer any unusual solution to the problem of trade with other countries.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada, who has just authorized the Bank of Canada to increase interest rates in the country,—one of the main causes of inflation—was one of those who believed that Canada was faced with inflation. On the other hand, he did not say to the trade committee which met in Washington to study our inflationary problems, that he would take measures to lower our interest rate.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that we must look into our world trade problems, and from inside the country first. If we are unable to cope with our economic and commercial problems, how can we send a Canadian delegation to Washington or elsewhere with proposals and suggestions to solve trade problems throughout the world?

I am all for giving suggestions to other countries, but the best thing for Canada to do would be to show them the way by a fine management of her own trade affairs. Then, we could say: This is what we have done at home. Here are the solutions we have decided upon, and followed, and here are the results.

Mr. Speaker, we have considered those problems, and now this morning, a statement is made which offers no solution insofar as the future of our trade is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before we resume the business of the house I feel it is my duty to remind hon. members once again of Standing Order 15(3) which specifies that—> —a Minister of the Crown may make an announcement or statement of government policy. Any such announcement or statement should be limited to facts which it is deemed necessary to make known to the house and should not be designed to provoke debate at this stage. A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly, subject to the same limitation.

I have said before that brevity is a relative term but if I am to judge by the length of the statements made in recent days and weeks by spokesmen on behalf of the opposition, their standards are rather different from mine. I would remind hon. members that these statements should be limited, and ask them to accept the spirit of this standing order. When, as happened today, a statement lasting three minutes is followed by more than 20 minutes of comments on behalf of the opposition—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: —I suggest there is perhaps a situation which we might look into and try to correct. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Center points to the fact that the ministerial statement was long, and I appreciate this; I felt as unhappy yesterday as I do today. The rule is applicable to both sides of the house and hon. members will recognize it is my duty from time to time to bring it to the attention of the house. Perhaps we might all give it some thought during the summer months.

Mr. Stanfield: I wish to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition will meet with your wishes in accordance with your interpretation of the rules of the house. I will simply say that it will assist us quite a bit if the minister's statement did contain facts.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I can assure Your Honour that we shall endeavour at all times to comply with your wishes. May I take the liberty of pointing out that while the statement itself took only three minutes to make, the minister was referring to a communiqué which is three pages in length and which contains in addition an annex in which are included some 13 items? When a communiqué of that length is tabled it is very difficult to make a comment about it in two or three minutes. Though the statement itself was brief, the communiqué was an extended document.

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

COMMENT ON MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order:

June 20, 1969—Mr. Blair (Chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization):

That the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, presented to the house on Friday, June 20, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Dropped.

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Speaker: The item stands.

INVESTMENT COMPANIES ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING SUPERVISION, CERTIFICATES OF REGISTRY, AND OTHER MATTERS

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved the first reading of Bill S-17 (from the Senate) respecting investment companies.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

WHEAT—CANADIAN-U.S. PRICING POSITIONS AT WASHINGTON MEETING—RENEGOTIATION OF DIFFERENTIALS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he will disclose the position the Government of Canada has taken with regard to suggestions being considered by the International Wheat Council in London to fix a new and lower minimum price for wheat on the ground that a world surplus exists.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Did I hear well? I am very surprised that the Wheat Council suggests this should be done. That is not the information I have.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister say whether the ministers in Washington took a definite position with regard to this matter? Will he tell us whether the government is insisting on the maintenance of the present position, and whether Canadian ministers solicited and obtained the support of United States ministers with regard to this?

Mr. Pepin: Reference was made this morning to the communiqué. I might say there is a fine art of reading a communiqué, also. Everything is quite clear. "The committee expressed concern about current developments"—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member for Crowfoot may want to send me back to the university to teach. Maybe he should go, too. The communiqué refers to "serious pressure" it refers to "the need to consult bilaterally with governments of other countries", "in order to bring about stability in world markets". This morning the Secretary of State for External Affairs expressed the hope that a meeting of exporters at ministerial level would be held very soon—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister is now making a speech.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not think I need any lectures from the minister, although I appreciate—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I will just ask him a direct question, one which, having spent many years in a university, I am sure he is fully qualified to understand, if he brings his mind to bear on it. Will he answer the question I asked and tell me whether Canada took the position at Washington that the present prices should be maintained? Will he tell us whether Canada solicited and received agreement of the ministers at Washington that this would be their position? If the minister is not prepared to answer this question I can only assume he wishes to evade it.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pepin: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman gave us a lecture lasting 15 minutes this morning on communiqué drafting; I am giving him one now on communiqué reading.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We do not appear to be making much progress.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I wonder whether the minister will get down from his throne, cease this studied insolence to parliament, and answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest the right hon. gentleman is not helping the situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am asking the minister to straighten up the record and make a statement of fact. Did the Canadian government make strong representations to the United States ministers against the United States policy of underselling wheat below the price set by the international agreement? What was said by the Canadian representatives in this connection? What undertaking did the United States give that the course of action it is following which is detrimental to Canadian wheat producers is going to be stopped?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, many exporters are selling below the set price at this time.

Some hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Pepin: That is done by all exporters.

Some hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply to the question.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, hon. members no doubt are aware that on March 14 I said in this house that we would be becoming fully competitive.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But the government has done nothing since that time.

Mr. Pepin: We have become competitive at the highest possible level. We have become competitive with some exporting countries, although France undersells everybody. Ours is a responsible attitude to take and at Washington we were strong advocates of price stability and pointed out that the downward movement of grain at this time is not in Canada's best interest, and is not in the interest of the world. We strongly supported the idea that there should be more co-ordination and co-operation between exporters if we are to prevent a disastrous downward price movement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have finally smoked out an answer, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister now say what attitude the United States representatives took, or was their attitude such that the minister prefers to keep it confidential?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be kept confidential. The people down there are very intelligent, they speak well and are quite capable of speaking for themselves. The right hon. gentleman asked me what the position of the Canadian government was in these matters. Our position was that everything should be done to prevent prices from going down. We are trying to build co-operation between exporters. Some of them have not been as co-operative as others in recent weeks and we are trying hard now to rally the troops.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Did Canada during the discussions bring in proposals with regard to renegotiating price differentials as they presently exist between the different qualities of wheat in the different countries?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, we did not discuss this in detail because we had more urgent matters to discuss.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister had more urgent matters to discuss, and so many bushels of Canadian wheat lie piled up on the prairies.

Mr. Pepin: I am afraid the understanding of the hon. member for Prince Albert is incorrect. We had more urgent matters to discuss in the sense that we wanted to bring about, first of all, co-operation. What needs to be done later will be done later.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: That is a very nice statement. Brilliant.

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With respect to obtaining co-operation, did the Canadian delegation succeed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite hon. members to allow the Chair and other hon. members to hear the question the hon. member is trying to put.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, did the Canadian delegation succeed in obtaining the co-operation of the United States authorities to the extent that a useful approach will be made toward negotiations going on in London under the auspices of the International Wheat Council? Are those negotiations being conducted with a view to stabilizing prices under the International Grains Arrangement?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs expressed the hope that such a development would take place. Knowing how well informed he is, I have every reason to believe that his hopes will be met.

Mr. Baldwin: That is not what happened in Stockholm.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. So that there is no misunderstanding, are we correct in assuming that although the ministers of the two governments agreed to continue discussions, there was in fact no agreement as to the prices at which these grains would be maintained?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the agreement was that they would be maintained at the highest possible price.

GRAIN

WHEAT—BOX CAR SHORTAGE—REQUEST FOR EXTENDED GRAIN YEAR

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is more or less a related question and arises from the statement made by the minister about the position of present producers. Because of the present box car shortage and in view of climatic and other circumstances which prevented grain deliveries this spring, will the minister authorize an extension of the current grain year until such time as all delivery points are at least on a five bushel quota. This matter has been raised in this house time and time again, Mr. Speaker. I therefore ask whether the minister will assure grain producers that time for the five bushel delivery will be allowed before the cut off date is enforced by the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have recently consulted the Wheat Board on that situation. The quota situation has been improving steadily in recent days and I think the latest figures will indicate to my hon. friend how close we are getting in most instances to the five bushel quota level.

Mr. McIntosh: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister to disregard the figures he has alluded to and obtain information from members representing grain growing constituencies. He can learn accurate figures that way. He will also learn that it is almost impossible at present for Canadian Pacific and Canadian National to bring box cars into certain areas in order to take out the wheat the minister has promised will be taken out. Some areas have delivered one bushel less than their quota, in fact. If the goals that have been set are to be realized something must be done right away. Will the minister look into the situation and see what can be done.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

WASHINGTON MINISTERIAL MEETING—REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON OUTFLOW OF CANADIAN CAPITAL—TAKEOVERS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement that Canadian representatives at the ministrial conference were concerned about reducing Canada's dependence on net inflows of capital, may I ask whether the minister has any proposals to make or any statement to give to the Parliament of Canada about the outflow of Canadian capital? I ask this question because hundreds of millions of dollars of Canadian capital is flowing to the United States for purchase of equities. Did the minister make any proposals at the conference about reducing the net inflow of capital? Were any proposals made with regard to restrictions in outflows of Canadian capital? If so, what were the proposals?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the outflow of Canadian capital for the purchase of United States equities is, of course, a matter that has to be decided by individual Canadian investors. This matter is not under the control of the Canadian government or the United States government. On the matter of capital inflow, I indicated that it was our intention to balance our current account, or do better than that in the long run, in order that we might depend less on foreign capital.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since takeovers of Canadian financial institutions result in increased outflows of Canadian capital, particularly from pension funds and insurance funds, will the minister be ready in a day or two to make his long promised statement on the action the government of Canada proposed to take with respect to the takeover of Canadian financial institutions and investment houses?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think the assumption my hon. friend made at the beginning of his question is wrong. As to the second part of his question, I hope to be making my statement on Monday.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance.

We have been informed that the Placements collectifs du Québec would be sold in the near future. Can the minister assure the house that this important financial institution will not be sold to American interests?

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of such proposals.

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

APPLICATION OF POLICY TO WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

As several newspapers have announced that the government was seriously considering granting an acreage subsidy to western farmers, could the minister tell us whether this is a new policy or whether the government is seriously thinking of confirming the statement to the effect that subsidies would be granted to western farmers so that they refrain from sowing in order to avoid producing a surplus of grain?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): That question is really too complex, Mr. Speaker, for a brief reply, but the Minister of Agriculture has repeatedly stated that the income situation of western farmers is now being reviewed by the government.

OIL

WASHINGTON MINISTERIAL MEETING—U.S. INTAKE FROM CANADA—SECRET AGREEMENT—ALTERNATIVE SUPPLIES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his capacity as head of the Canadian delegation that has been conferring in Washington. In view of the statement of the Secretary of the Interior of the United States that that country could absorb 500,000 more barrels a day of Canadian oil in addition to the 300,000 barrels which the secret agreement of 1967 permits Canada to export to the United States, did the United States ministers indicate a willingness to increase steadily the intake of Canadian oil so that the upper limit of 800,000 barrels a day can be achieved in the foreseeable future?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what the members of the United States administration indicated to us is what the hon. gentleman already knows, that the whole subject of oil import policy and oil policy in the United States is under study by a task force appointed by the President of the United States. Until that task force reports, the United States government does not have a view.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did they indicate when this task force is liable to report so that we can get on with the job?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. They expect it will be in the reasonably near future. They have welcomed any contribution we can make to the study.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Did the Canadian ministers express a Canadian oil policy? Did the Canadian ministers put forward to the ministers in Washington Canadian objectives with regard to the export of oil and gas?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We supported the general policies that the deskmate of the present Leader of the Opposition espoused. We continue to follow a national oil policy designed to maximize the output of oil and to maximize our exports to the United States.

Mr. Stanfield: Did the Canadian ministers put forward a specific policy or did they simply talk in terms of maximizing exports and the sort of general objective the minister is talking about?

Mr. Sharp: I do not know anything more important than to maximize the exports of Canadian oil. I hope my hon. friend will agree with this. It is a desirable objective.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In view of the answers of the minister to the Leader of the Opposition, I wonder whether I may put a question? I refer to paragraph 10 of the communiqué which was filed this morning. The last sentence of the paragraph reads as follows:

> In this connection, the United States members described the intensive review being undertaken of United States oil import policies.

It does not refer to any intensive research or study of Canada. I think it is time we had an answer to this question. Will the minister now confirm or deny whether there is a secret agreement between the United States and Canada which has been made by the government since the secret agreement of 1967?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have arrangements with the United States which are designed to result in the largest flow of oil across the Canada-United States border that is possible. The hon. member is perfectly aware of this. It is desirable to promote this objective with the maximum agreement from the United States. That is what we are doing.

Mr. Woolliams: May I put one supplementary question? Will the minister answer the question whether there is now a secret agreement between Canada and the United States which was completed since 1967? If the minister fails to answer, the answer must be in the affirmative.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, there is an open border between Canada and the United States with respect to oil. That is the objective of the Canadian government, to maintain an open border. If the hon. member wants to have that border closed, he can go on talking as he is talking now.

Mr. Woolliams: On a question of privilege, the minister knows I have never suggested that the border be closed when speaking for that industry in western Canada or any other industry. If the minister was not guilty of so much verbicide and always being so decisive in everything he says, he would be able to give me some of this information.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): A supplementary question with regard to the discussions on oil policy. When these discussions took place, did the minister clearly indicate that Canada had other alternatives failing the admission of additional oil to the United States, such as a pipeline to Montreal?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the United States government knows and we have discussed with them on many occasions that there are alternatives available. It is our view, however, and I hope the hon. gentleman agrees, that the alternative we should choose is the one that results in the maximum output of oil from western Canada.

Mr. Saltsman: Did the minister make very clear during these discussions that the Canadian government was prepared to go to these alternatives failing access to the United States market?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if by chance, and I hope this will not happen as a result of some of the irresponsible statements being made here today, that happens with the United States market, then we will have no alternative. I hope these alternatives can be discussed in an open and responsible way, and that is what I urge upon the house.

Mr. Stanfield: I hope the type of answers given by the two ministers who reported this morning does not reflect that the ministers had a very bad time.

Mr. Sharp: I hope the Leader of the Opposition, when he makes comments upon these discussions, will realize that if we are going to make progress with our friends we do not reveal in an open session matters which they discussed with us confidentially.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—PERMISSION FOR DAYLIGHT FLIGHTS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of the renewed threat of mass starvation in Biafra, will the government accept the proposal made by Canairelief and use its good offices with the federal government of Nigeria to get it to accept or permit daylight flights into Uli airport?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have had representations from this organization which I intend to reply to shortly. I just received a telegram. I can assure the hon. member that we have been trying for months to get daylight flights accepted. The preliminary response from Colonel Ojukwu indicates that daylight flights are available with certain conditions. Whether these conditions are acceptable to the Nigerian authorities, we are not sure.

BIAFRA—CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING —TRANSPORT BY SURFACE CORRIDOR

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): During the minister's discussions in Washington, did he discuss with the Secretary of State of the United States what action Canada can take to assist in the United States plan for transporting relief by surface corridor as agreed to by Biafra and as suggested by the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this was not a specific subject of discussion at our meetings. I did have an opportunity of talking to the United States Secretary of State on this subject. Moreover, we have been in constant touch through diplomatic means in support of this initiative of the United States.

FINANCE

KENNEDY ROUND—AGREEMENT BY U.S. TO TARIFF REDUCTIONS—BENEFIT TO CONSUMERS

Mr. J. G. Lind (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of Finance. Is the United States government agreeable to reducing its tariffs on our products in the same proportion as we have done in the Kennedy round of tariff reductions, as announced in the recent budget?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the matter of a reduction of our tariffs by an average of three percentage points on some $2 billion worth of exports was designed for purely Canadian purposes and we sought no quid pro quo. It was designed to help in the fight against inflation in this country. However, I did stress in Washington that we in the Canadian government looked forward to further major negotiations with regard to reduction of non-tariff barriers as well as tariffs in the future.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has made it very clear that machinery cannot be introduced to require importers to pass on these tariff reductions to consumers, would the minister not agree that his move has been a complete failure?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's statement that the 3 per cent reduction in Canadian tariffs was to fight inflation, and in view of the fact that the Americans are also concerned about that problem, did the Canadian government seek any quid pro quo from the United States government prior to the minister making the announcement in his budget speech that Canada would reduce tariffs by 3 per cent?

Mr. Benson: No, I did not discuss with the American authorities or with anyone else the decision of the Canadian government to take action to fight inflation in this way.

CANADA-V.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING—DISCUSSION OF INTEREST RATES AND INFLATION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Finance. Following the meeting with the United States authorities, does he maintain that it would be possible to find some solutions to the problems of interest rates and inflation, in a tangible way, in the near future?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at the meeting I was very impressed with the determination of the secretaries present representing the United States government to tackle this problem with all the effort they could put forth, and they in turn congratulated the Canadian government for the work we had already done in this direction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

CASHING OF OUT-OF-TOWN CHEQUES WITHOUT BANK EXCHANGE CHARGE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the great profits that Canadian banks are making and in view of the fact that about 95 per cent of United States banks cash all out-of-town cheques at par, would the minister appeal and recommend to the Canadian Bankers Association that all out-of-town cheques be cashed by Canadian banks without bank exchange being charged?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring the hon. member's representation to the attention of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. I think that the benefit of cashing all out-of-town cheques in the United States in the way he has described is offset at least to some degree by the requirement of maintaining balances.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR CONSENSUS BEFORE ACTION ON POLICY STATEMENT—FUNDS FOR NATIONAL COUNCIL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In the light of the very grave concern expressed by a number of representatives of the Indian people with regard to the policy announcement he made in the house the other day will he give a firm assurance to the house and to the country that no steps will be taken until there has been the fullest consultation with the authorized and responsible representatives of the Indian people and, hopefully, a consensus reached?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to give that assurance to the hon. member.

Yesterday afternoon, I spent two hours with some of the leaders of the Canadian Indian Fraternity and we reached an agreement. It is obvious that we will have consultations at the national and regional level in the future, and I am convinced that the Indians will understand that this policy is meant to offer them greater participation in Canadian society.

[English]

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In light of the clear request by the Indian people for the right to conduct their own consultations, will the minister say whether he intends to have money made available to the National Indian Council on Indian Rights and Treaties in order that they may carry out their own responsibilities in a way that will ensure the Indian people a greater sense of participation?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have been having consultations for a year now and we intend to continue having them in the future.

As for the committee mentioned by the hon. member, I can say it will work in cooperation with the new claims commissioner who should soon be appointed. He will be authorized to provide the committee with funds to pursue its work.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—DISCUSSION WITH TRADE UNIONS ON PACT EXTENSION—DISPARITY IN PRICES

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

The communiqué tabled today made reference to the efforts that are being made to extend the automotive pact to related industry which would include special replacement parts, special vehicles, tires and tubes. Have the Canadian unions which would be directly affected by such an extension been consulted on it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my department has conducted a series of consultations on these matters with both sides of industry. My officials have accumulated knowledge on this subject which will be taken into consideration in assessing the kind of broadening of the agreement we will be seeking.

Mr. Broadbent: In order that I may be clear on this, Mr. Speaker, did I understand the minister to say that the specific proposals which the Canadian government is making were discussed with the Canadian trade unions affected?

Mr. Pepin: I will check to see if this has been done as formally as the hon. member is indicating, but I know there was consultation with the labour as well as the employer side of industry. I have taken part in such consultations myself on some occasions.

Mr. Broadbent: As a further supplementary question, if the minister should discover that these specific proposals have not been discussed with the trade unions will he assure the house that they will be?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think the question is hypothetical.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether there were any discussions regarding the disparity between Canada and the United States in consumer prices for cars, and did the Canadian government make any proposals on how to bring about greater uniformity in prices on both sides of the border, in view of the fact that the auto companies may now move goods across the border without paying any duty?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that the idea of reducing that disparity is one of the objectives of the Canadian government, but in answer to written and oral questions I have also indicated that this is only one of many factors that have to be borne in mind in making discussions on these matters.

Mr. Speaker, just to come back to the previous question asked by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, consultation on these matters cannot come to a conclusion with everybody in total agreement. I recall that some people who were opposed to the automobile agreement in the first place are now exporting 60 per cent to 65 per cent of their production to the United States.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the minister says that uniformity of consumer prices of cars was one of the objectives of the agreement? Since this objective has certainly not been reached, has the minister set any tentative date when he hopes to reach this objective?

Mr. Pepin: It has not been reached but the disparity has been regularly reduced.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FREEZE IN TRACKER AIRCRAFT OVERHAUL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for whichever minister is in the house today answering on behalf of the Minister of National Defence, who was slated to be here, or in his absence whichever minister is supposed to answer for the Minister of Supply and Services, who was also slated to be here today, and is not. In light of the assurances given to the house less than a week ago by the Minister of National Defence that there would be no significant cut-backs in spending within maritime command without prior notice and consultation with the communities involved, can the minister answering today explain to the house and to the people of Dartmouth why there has been a freeze imposed on the Tracker aircraft overhaul and repair program?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring the hon. member's question to the attention of the Minister of Supply and Services.

Mr. Forrestall: When the minister is doing that will he bring to the attention of his other colleagues in the cabinet the fact that a very grave disservice was done to the house, in the light of the minister's assurance that there would be no cut-backs and the fact that cut-backs of a significant nature have followed within three or four days of the minister's announcement?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the ministers will read the hon. member's comment with interest.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM VENEZUELA

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members the presence in the gallery of a distinguished delegation from Venezuela led by the Minister of Mines, His Excellency Mr. Perez La Salvia. I should like to welcome these gentlemen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

TRANSPORT

BORDEN-TORMENTINE FERRY—SERVICE BELOW CAPACITY

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I know he has had to leave the house to meet a commitment elsewhere, so I shall direct the question to the Minister of Agriculture in his capacity as acting Minister of Transport in the hope that he will be kind enough to take it as notice so that an answer may be given on Monday. Is Canadian National Railways at the present time operating the ships on the Borden-Tormentine service at less than capacity as a result of crew reductions that make it impossible for them to comply with steamship inspection regulations, especially with regard to the manning of lifeboats? If this situation exists, can the minister say when it will be rectified?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Bell: You are not even supposed to be here.

WATER RESOURCES

PLACENTIA BAY, NFLD.—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ACTION TO PREVENT POLLUTION

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the fact that weeks ago the minister promised a statement to the house on the pollution problem in Placentia Bay, Newfoundland, and in view of the fact that in today's Globe and Mail there is a report that the Erco plant is expected to announce today the date of re-opening of the plant, when may the house expect a statement on the serious problem of pollution and whether steps will be taken to ensure that adequate protection is afforded to the fishing industry in that area?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the fishermen are catching more top quality fish in Placentia Bay than ever before. The plant will only open on a schedule which is satisfactory to the government.

COWICHAN BAY, B.C.—PROTECTION FROM INDUSTRIAL POLLUTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry whether his department has any information that large-scale industrial activity is expected in Cowichan Bay near the mouth of the Cowichan River which as the minister knows, is one of the largest salmon spawning grounds in British Columbia? Are these reports correct and, if so, is the department taking protective measures against the possible dangers to the fishing industry in that area?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we are looking carefully into the matter, but I would be surprised if the reports are correct.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of what has happened at Placentia Bay, would the minister assure the house that steps will be taken to ensure that the toxic material is taken out of the effluent so that the fish will not be killed?

AGRICULTURE

ACTION TO CURB LOW PRICED U.S. IMPORTS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Finance. It deals with his statement concerning the 3 per cent general tariff reduction which was discussed with the United States representatives. Would the minister state whether any agreement was reached in respect of the establishment of a practical method of quickly curbing imports from that country if they are found to be creating a great hardship on any segment of Canadian industry or are having an effect on the cost of living and are encouraging inflation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the matter of disruption of certain Canadian producers applies particularly to agriculture. In our discussions with the United States authorities we considered specific actions which might be taken at particular times if our agricultural production would be drastically upset as a result of large imports. We have taken action in this regard from time to time, although it is not the type of action one likes to take, by establishing values for duty, as we did in respect of potatoes some time ago.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

POLLUTION OF AREA WATERWAYS

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of resources. It relates to a situation I mentioned on Monday concerning pollution in the Rideau River and Nepean Creek and arises from a statement attributed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has the government undertaken to give federal assistance to clear up this situation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I have not seen the statement of my colleague to which he referred. The general approach of the government to problems of pollution will be made known at the time of the appearance of the draft of the Canada water act. It is not our intention to give any general undertakings in connection with these matters until that time.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I had a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion with regard to what he had said but since he is not here I shall abandon it.

FISHERIES

RECONVENING OF LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—DISCUSSIONS ON STRAIGHT BASE LINES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. During the minister's recent visit to other countries did he discuss the necessity of reconvening another United Nations law of the sea conference to win international approval for the extension of exclusive fishing zones to the edge of the continental shelf? If so, when may we expect a report indicating that another conference will be called or may be held?

[Mr. Benson.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, plans are now being discussed for the calling of another law of the sea conference at which time, of course, we will be pressing our particular points of view. The Soviet Union and the United States, the two principal powers, are prepared for this conference and have certain ideas to put forward, some of which we agree with and others with which we do not agree.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question relating to the discussions which took place during the recent visit to Washington about the law of the sea. Is the minister prepared to say whether or not Canada and the United States are now in agreement with regard to the lines that Canada is drawing with relation to territorial waters?

Mr. Sharp: The United States has expressed some reservations about the lines we have drawn. They have made this quite clear. I do not think that as yet we see eye to eye concerning the law of the sea, but that is not surprising. I do not think there are any two countries in the world which see eye to eye on these questions. We hope we will be able to influence the United States in our direction.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I might indicate that we have gone beyond the time allotted for questions. I note that many members this morning have not had an opportunity to ask questions. This is perhaps due to the special circumstances. I would think, unless there is unanimous agreement of the house that we continue, the question period at this time cannot proceed further. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: No, no.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTION TO SUSPEND SITTING ON MONDAY PRECEDING DOMINION DAY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that Tuesday is a holiday, I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council, through the usual channels, would ascertain whether it might meet with general approval if we were to suspend the sitting on Monday so that we might approach our work in a better mood on Wednesday?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a point of order. I had a question for the Minister of Transport which I consider to be of an urgent nature. I was hoping that the minister's absence from the house on this his allotted day would be only of a temporary nature. My question is urgent in that it affects—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot seek privileges which other hon. members are not seeking.

Some hon Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: He is not the only one. The hon. member must realize there are at least ten other hon. members who did not have an opportunity to ask questions. I would think that all the questions asked during the question period were urgent, as well as the other questions which could not be asked. I suggest the question will have to be asked on Monday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Or Wednesday.

Mr. Speaker: It might be in order on Monday for the Chair to look at the back benches before looking at the front benches in order to give an opportunity to hon. members—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: —who do not have the opportunity to which they are entitled under the rules of the house. Unfortunately I do not think it would be in order to allow the hon. member to ask a question at this time in preference to others when the question period is over.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, may I say that if the government intends to require us to sit next week it should at least see that the ministers are in their places and ready to answer questions. For the record I want to say that my spot check shows that on 148 occasions ministers have not been in their places.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WAYS AND MEANS

The house proceeded to the consideration of a ways and means motion to amend an act to amend the Income Tax Act:

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide that the surtax on individuals and corporations by Part 1A of the Income Tax Act be applicable in the case of individuals to the 1970 taxation year and in the case of corporations to taxable income earned in 1970.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-211, to amend an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF, EXCISE TAX ACT

The house proceeded to the consideration of a ways and means motion to amend the Customs Tariff and to make a consequential amendment to the Excise Tax Act.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved:

[Editor's Note: See Votes and Proceedings of June 3, 1969 for text of motion.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

CUSTOMS TARIFF, EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-212, to amend the Customs Tariff and to make a consequential amendment to the Excise Tax Act, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF PRODUCTIVE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 26, consideration of Bill C-202, to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development, and motion No. 6, Mr. Burton, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Skoberg.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the minister had just commenced his remarks before the adjournment at ten o'clock. I should like to say a few things concerning this bill but I certainly am prepared to hear the minister first.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in principle I do not object to the proposed amendment on the order paper, concerning the obligations imposed to the companies. I do not have the same objections which I had, for instance, to the insertion, in the bill, of a provision which would restrict capital investment to underdeveloped areas exclusively, because there would have been some discrimination against underdeveloped areas.

In this case, it cannot be said that there would be any discrimination against underdeveloped areas. If I hesitate so much, Mr. Speaker, it is only because in fact there should be a provision, a general legislation obliging all employers not only to refer to Manpower centres but also to provide a reasonable notice in case of lay-offs.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to accept the proposed amendment, but it may be somewhat difficult to enforce because when the last amounts have been paid, how shall we manage to compel the employers to respect this provision?

There is something hazy about this amendment but anyhow, I cannot oppose the principle. I would simply have preferred that the matter be dealt with through legislation of a general nature. One may well object: "Very well, pass such legislation and we shall withdraw the amendment." Then, I daresay such a remark would make sense.

[Mr. Benson.]

So, since there is no basic objection and since it may be our fault somehow if the general legislation is not yet before the house, I am not willing in the circumstances to start a debate against that amendment and I shall accept it.

[English]

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I am happy that the minister has decided to accept the motion proposed by myself together with the amendment moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), which corrected an error in my motion as first submitted.

I recognize the point made by the minister that in fact there may be problems of enforcement after the total sum of money has been paid out, or after the day of expiration of the legislation, for that matter, on December 31, 1976. I should think, however, that the minister with his ingenuity, imagination and capable staff will be able to give this matter consideration and come up with proposals to be placed before the house providing for efficient guarantees of enforcement of the provisions of this clause together with the amendment.

In my opinion the principle is very sound of requiring companies to adhere to the provisions of this clause which provides that an exchange of information and consultation must take place between companies and the Department of Manpower and Immigration. The fact that consultation is required underlines the point that industry and the economy generally are involved, and that no group of individuals or companies in today's economy can consider their welfare solely but that the welfare of society as a whole must be considered. I believe that the amendment proposed by myself, together with the alteration by my colleague, will assist in assuring a more equitable implementation of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Skoberg) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the motion as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Burton) as amended agreed to.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (for Mr. Macdonald, Egmont) moved:

That Bill C-202, an act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be amended by inserting in clause 13 thereof, next following subclause (1), the following subclause:

"(2) in keeping with the spirit and intent of this act, the minister shall have regard to increasing productive employment opportunities for persons local to the designated region and, to this end, shall whenever possible encourage and promote the recruitment, training and employment of such persons by the applicant."

He said: Mr. Speaker, it may be that the minister is prepared to accept this amendment because it is very much in keeping with the spirit of the bill and in my opinion is an excellent amendment.

The purpose of the bill is to provide a stimulus to the economy of certain areas where it is needed. The purpose of the amendment is to encourage the employment of local labour by new industry which comes into an area and to express a legislative intention to that effect. As was said by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) last night, we in this party are more concerned about the effects of a new industry upon an area and its people rather than about the industry itself. In that light we approve of the principle of the bill.

The amendment does not lay down specific requirements as to how many people should be employed or what the percentage should be, but it does give direction to the minister, his officials and industries as to the concern of parliament that the areas involved actually receive the benefits. Until now most new industries established in designated areas have been quite reasonable in connection with the employment of local labour. We realize that a new industry must bring key people with it in order to operate a special factory or process because they have knowledge that local people do not, but we believe it would be very helpful if there were an express statement by parliament that local labour should be used to the fullest extent possible. I therefore hope the minister will see fit to accept the amendment.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, if this bill is to fulfil its purpose of providing employment opportunities in designated areas, the minister should be able to accept the amendment without much difficulty. We recently had in my area the experience of $40 million worth of work being carried out by Ontario Hydro, yet the employment situation in the area was not much improved. There are a number of reasons for this. One is the competitive factor which affects contractors who employ certain classes of workers. Ontario Hydro has in its master contract a clause which provides that wherever possible people will be employed from the local unemployment insurance area. This provision has been of great advantage in giving the people the opportunity to apply for jobs in the normal manner with some hope of success.

Difficulty often arises because several unions are involved in projects. I believe the minister should find a solution to the problem of employing local people when unions are involved and the area concerned is far removed from urban areas. It is often almost impossible for local people to get a job because outsiders are brought in to do the work. I believe this is a very important clause. We have been very interested in federal employment practices. Projects have been started in areas which have large native populations. I refer to the Northwest Territories, where little consideration has been given to employing local Indians and Eskimos. If an employer wishes to establish a business in such an area, he should be obliged to employ local people even if it is necessary to train them.

Many industrial complexes which may be established as a result of this bill will, of course, find it necessary to import skilled personnel. I think everyone will agree that in some cases this is a necessity. But I believe the degree to which this is done can be limited and controlled so that there are job opportunities for the greatest number of local people.

This has been a very complex problem when dealing with people who must be trained. I should like to give an example. The contractor on the Ontario Hydro project may need truck drivers. The truck drivers in the local area may have been used to driving trucks with a capacity of up to ten tons, and the trucks used on the project may be very much bigger. Unless local people are trained to carry out these jobs they may not have the opportunity to work. Restrictions may be applied by the employer which make it very difficult for local people to be employed.

The former minister of northern affairs was well aware of this problem. He did not go so far as to have a provision written into master contracts covering all government projects in the Northwest Territories, but on specific occasions he made it a condition of the contract that 10 per cent, 15 per cent or 20 per cent of the employees had to be residents of the areas in which the project was being undertaken.

Members of Parliament should seriously consider this matter. If we are to try to help a given area to expand and achieve a high degree of economic growth, we must consider the employment picture that will be created. If employees are imported into such areas the purpose of the bill will not be fulfilled; auxiliary services and industry that would be created by the establishment of the main project will not come to fruition.

I hope the minister will seriously consider this exceedingly difficult problem. He has a great deal of knowledge of the problem caused by the complications of union jurisdiction in connection with this type of project. People employed in skilled trades in northern Quebec and northern Ontario have not had the opportunity to join unions, particularly craft unions, and in many instances when a contract is signed in the initial stages of development it prohibits local people being employed and workers are brought in from other areas. I have found that when the unemployment insurance offices and manpower centres have co-operated they have been able to exercise influence on contractors, subcontractors and many of the craft unions to eliminate what would otherwise become an exceedingly difficult political problem and often a difficult and insoluble community problem.

Because of the minister's experience, he should be aware of the problem and willing to accept this type of amendment. It may be that he can suggest an amendment which would have the same effect as this one. He should be willing to accept this kind of proposition, whether it is put in this form or some other. I strongly urge the minister to accept the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to record my support of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald). It is a very important amendment if we are to fulfil the purposes of the bill. Once again I should like to refer to the basic intent and purpose of the bill as set out in its title, which is as follows:

An act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment.

If this purpose and intent are to be achieved, I believe it is very necessary to make a special effort to ensure that people living in a region which is in need of special assistance are able to obtain employment in any industry established in the region. The bill should be designed in a way that will assure this opportunity to local people.

• (12:50 p.m.)

I believe that for this reason the amendment is very useful and would be a good safeguard to put into the bill. The minister is given very wide powers in the bill but, as has been noted, certain limitations, conditions and requirements have also been placed in the legislation. Consequently I think that this requirement would be a useful addition in fulfilling the intent and purpose of the bill.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I am most surprised that the minister did not rise to reply and to state his views on the amendment. He is a man who has had wide experience in union and labour work, a man who has compassion for his fellow men, and here we have an amendment put forward by a sincere and dedicated member of the house which indicates his concern with regard to the implementation of the bill. I ask the minister to rise in his place and give his views on this important matter.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, what this amendment does is to ask that I do my job as minister in charge of regional development. The whole purpose of this law is to do exactly what the hon. member is asking—to create more employment and greater local opportunities. Therefore, all the amendment of the hon. member does is to ensure that I do my job. But this is the purpose of the proposed law. My objection to the amendment is that at best it is redundant and, indeed, by confusing the issue it could make the legislation less effective in fulfilling the purpose toward which the hon. member is aiming.

I think we both agree on the principle and objective of the bill. What will we do if, when the bill is passed by the house, we find that before we can give any incentives to employers the law imposes a condition on them? That is the purpose of the amendment. If this is stated in general terms in the bill, does this give, say, a labourer without any skill the right to say to his employer, "you are not going to hire a skilled man from outside even if it is absolutely necessary for the operation of the plant because it is stipulated in the law that you cannot do it"? The hon. member has to take into account that in certain circumstances it would not be wise for the local workers to do that. So I believe we are in perfect agreement on the objective we wish to achieve. This is the very purpose of the law, the purpose of the manpower centres, and this is why they are there. The amendment puts an obligation on the employer to do exactly what is the purpose of the law, but in that case he will have no incentive.

In principle I cannot object to the amendment because it tries to achieve the very purpose of the legislation, which is to create local employment. Therefore I cannot tell the hon. member that his suggestion is contrary to the bill. All I can tell him is that it is redundant. We are trying to achieve this purpose and we will put such an obligation on the employer. However, to place such an obligation in the bill would be tantamount to giving such a right to any local employee, which I think is wrong, and I believe that in certain circumstances even the hon. member would not be in agreement if such a request were made by an employee. We must have flexibility.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the minister at the very moment he was about to reach his conclusions. Is it the wish of the house that the question be put?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to hon. members that this vote be deferred, along with other votes, until two o'clock. If such is the wish of the house, all questions which have been deferred will be put after the house has been called back at two o'clock.

The Royal Assent

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-210, an act granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1970.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable House attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1:10 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act respecting The Canada Trust Company.

An act respecting The Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation.

An act to amend the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act and to make a consequential amendment to the Criminal Code.

An act to amend the Criminal Code.

An act to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

An act to establish a Canadian corporation for telecommunications by satellite.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1970.

Mr. Speaker: It being after one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF PRODUCTIVE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-202, to provide incentives for the development of productive employment in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The house will now proceed to the taking of deferred divisions on motions nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 7 in respect of Bill C-202, to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

The question is on motion No. 1, Mr. Broadbent:

That Bill C-202, an act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions in Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be amended, by deleting in clause 2, section (f), all the words after the word "of" in line 13 of page 2, and by substituting therefor the words:

"all forms of industrial activity."

[Mr. Speaker.]

The house divided on motion No. 1 (Mr. Broadbent) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: Since there has been a negative recorded vote on motion No. 1, I am advised that there may be a disposition to decide motion No. 2 on a voice vote. I wonder whether this is the disposition of the house.

Mr. Aiken: No, Mr. Speaker, that was not the agreement. After motion No. 2 is disposed of I may have a suggestion to make in connection with motion No. 3.

Mr. Speaker: The question then is on motion No. 2, Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

That Bill C-202, an act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be amended, by deleting paragraph (f) of clause 2 and substituting therefor:

(f) "facility" means the structures, machinery and equipment that constitute the necessary components of

(i) a manufacturing operation;

(ii) a tourist operation;

(iii) a service operation;

(iv) a processing operation other than an initial processing operation in a resource-based industry.

The house divided on motion No. 2 (Mr. MacDonald, Egmont) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: The question is now on motion No. 3, Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

That Bill C-202, an act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be amended, by deleting paragraph (b) of clause 4 and substituting therefor:

(b) In the case of a proposal to establish a new facility or to expand an existing facility to enable the manufacturing or processing of a product not previously manufactured or processed in the operation or to expand an existing tourist or service operation, a secondary development incentive by way of additional financial assistance to the applicant for the establishment of the new facility or the expansion of the existing facility for that purpose.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, as this amendment is consequent upon the amendment which has just been defeated on a recorded vote, we would request that a standing vote not be taken.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion. All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. The motion is defeated on division.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. MacDonald, Egmont) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is now on motion No. 4, Mr. Burton:

That Bill C-202, an act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be amended, by including in clause 7, subclause 1, the following new paragraph:

"(c) the establishment of a Crown corporation in consultation with provincial authorities would make a more significant contribution to economic expansion and social adjustment within the designated region."

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion) moved:

That Bill C-202, an act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development on Tuesday, June 17, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time, by leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier) moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY, JULY 2

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed with the debate on third reading of Bill C-202 I wish to ask for the unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of considering Monday's sitting.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There have been some discussions following the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that we dispense with the sitting next Monday, and there appears to be a degree of support for that proposal in all corners of the house. Therefore, if there is unanimous consent I wonder whether the following could be made an order of the house:

That when the house rises this day, it shall stand adjourned until Wednesday next, July 2, 1969, at 2 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion put by the President of the Privy Council. Is there agreement to it?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF PRODUCTIVE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchand (Langelier) that Bill C-202, to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, speaking on third reading of the bill I want to be brief.

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Broadbent: I want to be brief because a number of points have already been made, but certainly the members of our party believe that the bill, which we supported in a very fulsome way at the outset, has taken on a somewhat different tone, particularly as evidenced by the emphasis in the supporting speeches of the minister. We supported this bill at the outset, Mr. Speaker, because in our view there are now two major problems in Canada and both are concerned with poverty; one is regional poverty and the other is poverty within the regions of Canada associated with class or occupational groupings. We are pleased that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should have made this one of the important issues he decided to stress in his election campaign. I refer to the overcoming of regional economic disparities. We supported the government in the establishment of the new department and from the outset we have supported the bill before the house.

The legislation has two important features which constitute improvements on existing statutes intended to deal with regional poverty. First, broad discretionary power is given to the minister. We think this is excellent; it is something which should have been done in earlier measures. It will enable the minister to see to it that firms which do not need special economic benefits do not get them. Second, there is the emphasis placed on the concept of growth centres as the criteria to be used when providing economic assistance. This is something for which the N.D.P. has been arguing for years and we welcome the improvement of this principle as part of the bill.

There is one thing which has been said in the house by the spokesmen for our party and for the Conservative party as well. It is that no significant amount of money has been allocated by the government in its budget to deal with regional poverty. This is a crucial aspect of any meaningful action in this direction. No matter how good the bill is, or how sound it is in general principle, if we do not allocate important amounts of money to be spent on this program there is no real chance of a meaningful start being made next year. I shall not dwell on this argument because it has been made already, as I mentioned.

In addition, we have attempted to do three things by way of amendment at the various stages of the bill. First, we have argued that the notion of a growth centre being restricted to a manufacturing centre is really outdated. We, and members of the Conservative party, have voted on an amendment which would have extended the concepts to include, for example, the service industry and the tourist industry. In our view it is not at all sensible to exclude from the provisions of a bill which is intended to provide a framework for a comprehensive plan for a variety of regions, provision for the financing of the service industry and the tourist industry. Both are important aspects of a modern economy especially as they affect certain regions of Canada.

Second, our party entered an amendment which would have prevented funds going to firms owned or controlled outside this country. We argued that foreign ownership has already gone as far as it should go in this country—to understate the case by about 100 per cent—and that we should not provide public funds to subsidize further takeovers of our economy. I shall not repeat the arguments which I, the leader of my party and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) have made on this point. I refer members of the government to their own Watkins report and to the speeches made by former cabinet ministers in their own administration. This question is one which is of basic significance to Canada and it is a shame that a bill which has a noble intent, that of reducing poverty in certain areas of Canada, should contain a built-in provision whose effect would be to encourage the further ownership of our economy by those living outside our nation.

The third amendment put forward by this party and voted down by the house would have made specific the importance of Crown corporations in the government's efforts to deal with regional poverty. This is a deliberate and serious part of the approach of the New Democratic party both to the question of regional poverty and to that of foreign ownership. It seems to us there are all kinds of examples in Canadian history and in the history of western European nations, as well as of developing nations, of public corporations being used to stimulate growth and economic expansion. The argument put forward by the leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and by the minister stressed that to exclude foreign owned or controlled firms from the benefit of the legislation would, in effect, be to say that such firms should locate in the already industrially prosperous parts of this country.

Our response to that argument is: yes, it is a probability, but we should provide national leadership on this question by setting up Crown corporations to fill the necessary role when we cannot get enough Canadian capital to move into parts of the country where it is needed. To me, it seems incredible that at a time when other countries of the world, most of them much poorer than Canada, are exercising strict safeguards against the foreign ownership of their economy, we in Canada should go merrily on our way quite unconcerned about this threat. This is not just a negative argument calling for the exclusion of foreign capital. We should certainly encourage foreign investments but this investment should be in the form of arrangements whereby Canadian private or public capital would exert the controlling interest. Minority shareholding would certainly be welcome, and it is needed in this country.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Although some of my arguments have been repeated elsewhere, the one I am about to raise has not been. I refer to the very important constitutional question. If this bill is to have the effect that the minister and members of the government wish it to have in removing poverty, it is important for us to avoid a narrow-minded, legalistic and rigid approach to the constitution. The Prime Minister's thinking on the subject has characterized that approach. Anyone examining the Prime Minister's writings on this subject will see that he has adopted the classical eighteenth century view of federalism which is permeated with the idea that there must be rules and regulations governing the strict division of powers. That view ignores the fact that constitutions must reflect social and economic realities. Any constitution with any meaning changes; it changes so that the people living under it may come to grips with their social and economic problems. The minister must persuade other members of the cabinet who may be wedded to the Prime Minister's view to adopt a less rigid approach to the constitution. There must be less rigidly defined lines of responsibility between federal and provincial governments.

The minister must persuade the Prime Minister to yield to his arguments. He must argue for the adoption of a form of co-operative federalism under which the federal government can take initiatives in areas which, strictly speaking, lie within the provincial domain. I do not say we should ignore the constitution. In certain areas, such as those involving schools, roads or hospitals which lie within the provincial domain, the federal government must consult the provinces. I am not advocating arbitrary action; I merely advocate federal leadership. The minister must exercise that leadership throughout the country. The minister touched on the importance of there being federal participation in areas which, strictly speaking, come within provincial jurisdiction.

In this connection may I read from Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 14 of the Standing Committee on Regional Development. At page 286 the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) is reported to have said:

> Mr. Saltsman: What strikes me as rather significant and important in the program you are bringing forth is that it clearly indicates that the federal government can take the initiative in co-operation with the provinces in any area at all virtually, provided the provinces are willing to have them go along and that the excuse for non-federal intervention or the federal government not seeking the role in some areas is no longer as valid as it might have been before.

The minister's reply was, "Yes". That was a decisive reply because the minister acknowledged that if his department's plans to help the depressed areas of Canada are to have any real meaning, they must cut across constitutional lines. The minister's department will therefore require the co-operation of provincial governments. I see the minister is shaking his head. Does he disagree? I beg your pardon. The minister is not shaking his head. He agrees. I am pleased to see that. It seems to me that the Prime Minister will have to modify the stand he has taken in this house and outside. In any event, I hope the minister wins this argument and that the Prime Minister loses. I say that for this reason: if the minister does not win the argument the poor of this country will be the losers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Broadbent: That is all I wish to say at this time, Mr. Speaker. My party wishes the minister well and his department well. We consider this bill, by and large, to be good and important. We have made certain suggestions which, if implemented, we think will bring about substantial improvements in this legislation. We shall watch with great care what the minister does and we hope, for the sake of the poor of this country, that he is successful in his endeavours.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate sincerely the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) for his outstanding contribution in committee and for the sincerity with which he has approached the whole problem of poverty in Canada. Hon. members no doubt will have noticed that the hon. member and I are not in complete agreement on all aspects of this matter.

I have been considering this problem for almost five years. One of the first matters I had to consider on coming to the House of Commons was the question of designated areas. The government of that day introduced this stupid program under which they robbed

Peter to pay Paul. I have spoken on the subject many times. Many times I and others in my party have told the government it was introducing inadequate legislation; that it constituted a cruel hoax and would not help the people of the depressed areas of Canada. We have gone full circle. Having brought in inadequacy after inadequacy, the government for the first time has recognized that rigid sets of rules will not really solve the problem. We do not need legislation to solve the problem of poverty in this country. All we need is a willingness on the part of the government to allocate resources and funds in a proper way so that the problem of poverty can be wiped out in this country.

I am speaking in this manner because I do not wish to see the minister's power limited more than it has been. When I first spoke on this bill, I said that the minister was being given the powers of an economic czar. Perhaps he needs those powers and, in any event, my remarks were not intended to be derogatory. I said he has virtually unlimited power in this field and complete flexibility. He may now be able to reach his objectives. I point out that from now on we shall not be looking so much at the legislation and saying that one clause needs to be altered here or a few words added there, but we shall be looking at what is done. We shall be looking at the results of the minister's actions and at the willingness of the government to give him backing.

We have finally escaped from the concept of ordinary criteria. When the government adopted so called criteria based on unemployment or growth standards with respect to designated areas, it looked to some of us very much as if the government was trying to avoid decisions. For instance, the government could always say to an applicant, "But your area does not fit into the pattern; it does not exhibit this characteristic or that characteristic and therefore we cannot help you." That was one way of passing the buck. I have seen this sort of thing happening for five years during which the people of this country have suffered because the government did not take a firm stand and solve the problem of poverty. I may be excused for wishing the minister and his program well because at the moment his intentions are not obvious. Everything is so flexible that we feel he needs all the goodwill in the world, not only from the opposition, but from members of his own party in order to achieve some success in this direction.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I am pleased to see in this legislation the emphasis on the development of secondary industry. Too many of the disasters of this country can be traced to primary resource development. We have seen industries engaged in primary resource development after a few years leave nothing but a wake of human disaster in their trail. The way this bill is written seeks to recognize that Canada is becoming a secondary manufacturing nation. Primary resource development should not be encouraged; it has to be there anyway and if the inducement to go there is not enough, that is as much as we should do.

While the minister has somewhat neutralized his position regarding primary resource development, if he really recognizes the importance of secondary industry he should have some very detailed discussions with his colleagues about the kind of incentives we are now providing to the mining industry in this country. This industry does not need these incentives, with the result that much capital is being misallocated. If the principle of this bill is to be carried through, the minister should recommend to his colleagues the implementation of the proposals of the Carter Commission on the tax changes and capital depletion allowance.

I agree with the provisions of this bill regarding service industries. In my experience, service industries will go where there is an industrial base. If there is no industrial base, no inducement in the world will bring a service industry into that area. On the other hand, if there is a prosperous industrial base everything else is parasitic, everyone lives from the employment provided by that industry base. A concentration of basic development is needed in this country, not any kind of industrial development, but largely manufacturing development. This is necessary for every part of this country.

It is possible for every part of this country to have secondary manufacturing. I really believe this. I do not think it is necessary to live with the idea that some parts of Canada are good only for mining and tourism. Under a properly organized and planned program, we can all benefit from secondary manufacturing. This should be our purpose. Manufacturing provides the flexibility that is needed in a changing society. It enables people to adapt. It means the capital resources which go into a townsite or community will not be lost because a mine happens to close down or one industry decides to move to another location. The idea of growth centres, moving the development closer to the people so that they do not have to migrate from the area where they were born or live in order to find employment, is a good concept and one I would encourage.

Having pointed out the great opportunities that exist within the framework of this legislation, let me also say that I intend to be extremely critical if the minister or the government does not live up to the promises before us. It is not enough to have legislation and to have the power. Probably no one recognizes this more than the minister.

If this government is not prepared to allocate a fair share of the resources of this country to this development, this or any other program will fail. How the government demonstrates its goodwill and intentions is by its willingness to spend money on these ideas. To the present time, and certainly not during the committee evidence, there has been no indication that the government is allocating greater resources than before to the problem of depressed areas in Canada.

The second area the minister must deal with, and he must deal with it in cabinet, is the problem of unemployment. If he does not solve the problem of unemployment, the whole development program will amount to nothing. The minister must realize the facts of life in Canada. It is all right to say we are going to bring in industry that does not exist elsewhere, new industry, but that would unnecessarily limit the minister. In any event, he has no way of controlling this. This means industry from the heartland of Canada will have to be transferred to the depressed areas of this country if we are really sincere about helping them. I speak as a member who comes from a highly industrialized area. I think the people in my constituency understand the needs of the people in the Maritimes, Manitoba and other parts of Canada which require assistance and industry.

They will understand this on one condition, if full employment is maintained in this country. There is a grave responsibility on the minister and his government to see that full employment policies are maintained in this country. It is within the power of the minister and the power of the government to see this happens. There can be no excuse for unemployment in a modern world. There is no need for unemployment. If unemployment exists, it is because governments want it to exist.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

For this program to be successful and to achieve its objectives, we cannot tolerate 4 per cent or 5 per cent unemployment. We cannot even tolerate 3 per cent unemployment in Canada. When you cut unemployment, the whole business of the willingness of industries to move and contemplate new locations will become easier. It is a prior condition to the success of this program.

My colleagues are very concerned about the fact that much of the industry that may receive bonuses in these areas will be foreign. I agree with my colleagues that this is very sad. This again represents a failure on the part of the government to create an instrument of public control for the development of this country. I say in sadness at this moment that we have no choice because of this government's past record but to let some foreign companies come in and develop the underdeveloped areas of Canada. As has been pointed out in this chamber many times, it is very hard to say to the poor and unemployed of this country, this is a pad foreign industry; we do not want it. This is pretty hard to sell to a man who needs a job and has a family to look after. We have to accept this situation because we recognize the box into which many of our people have peen put.

But this does not mean we have to go on living with this kind of situation. In this country we must create a Canadian entrepreneur corporation for the development of our resources. When asked a question by a member of his own party about upping the percentage of grant higher than indicated in the legislation, the minister said, "If we have to give more money than that we might as well vote it." I suggest there are very good ways in which Crown corporations could be effectively used to develop Canada, and specifically certain parts of Canada. Many of the vast inducements envisaged by this legislation will go to private industry, and in particular foreign owned private industry. At the moment we do not have any choice because there is no instrument ready to take advantage of this legislation under government sponsorship.

The other failure is a failure in imagination. This failure goes back to the question of crown corporations. It goes back to the question of designated areas all over Canada. It goes back to the government's unwillingness to accept responsibility for establishing crown corporations whereby, for the first time, Canadians would have a basis upon which to judge the success of their government. By turning all this over to private industry, how does one judge the effectiveness of it? When some private industries do not perform well we have to bail them out, yet very little is said about that.

I now wish to make another proposal which to me seems a necessary condition for the success of a development program. It is a proposal to implement a guaranteed annual income. This may seem a rather odd place to introduce this concept but I am convinced it must be done. Only if you provide a guaranteed annual income to take care of the people who must inevitably be displaced under a development program can the program itself be justified in any kind of humane terms. At the moment many industries in Canada survive because of only one thing, and it is called the Unemployment Insurance Act. Let us not make any mistake about whom that act benefits. It is often said that it is the seasonal worker who benefits. People can see the payments going directly to him, but I would suggest he does not get that much from the unemployment insurance fund. It is inefficient industries that benefit, and the act is merely a prop to maintain industries that should not be in existence. The only way these industries exist is through releasing their workers so they become a public cost. If these workers had to be retained, retrained and paid all year, those industries would have to change their ways and become efficient or else go out of business.

In our humane attempt to help people engaged in seasonal employment, we have indirectly created some serious industrial problems. Therefore, it is far better to make direct payments to people so that we can make an analysis of our society and take a good look at these industries that are being shored up by the Unemployment Insurance Act. The truth of the matter is that the largest recipients of charity in this country are some of our industries, not some of our people.

If the minister carries out these suggestions that I have made this legislation can do a very great job. In closing, Mr. Speaker, I recall some words that I spoke when I participated in the debate on this legislation three weeks ago. At that time I called the minister one of the bravest men in Canada. I wished him well because this legislation really puts his neck on the block. He must prove himself. He has power to act. He must prove himself not only in this house but, more importantly, he will have to use his power in the cabinet. He will have to demand those concurrent conditions that are necessary to the success of this legislation.

With the greatest sincerity at my command, I wish the minister well. He is being asked to do a job in which everyone else has failed. For that reason, all of us most sincerely wish that he will be the exception. I can assure him that we in this party will help him if we possibly can. We want this program to work. We feel deeply about the poverty of people in Canada. The juxtaposition of the rich and the poor is a disgrace to our eyes and an affront to our sensibilities. As I say, we will do everything we can to assist the minister, to provide encouragement, and on occasion stimulation to ensure the success of the program.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I believe short speeches are the order of the day, but after we have all had a chance to get our second wind over the long holiday it may be a somewhat different story next week. I simply wish to make one point to the minister. It arises from questions asked earlier today by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), relating to problems incurred by a defence plant in his constituency. The point I wish to make is that the minister should have the closest liaison possible with other departments of government that have a direct effect upon employment in Canada, particularly in areas that need assistance.

The minister has said that a capital investment of $25,000 per job is a likely rule of thumb with respect to the type of problem he is facing. Using the minister's own yardstick, the lay-off of 40 men can immediately run into a figure of $1 million. I hope that in charting the broad course for helping the poorer areas of Canada the minister will bear in mind that there are other government ministers who can be jogged, who can be asked what their particular departments can do. Since the Fairey Aviation matter is a mixed problem of defence and economics, I do not want to argue the defence aspect of it because I would be immediately ruled out of order. However, I do wish to say we all know that these situations should be given consideration when we are dealing with the spending of taxpayers' dollars.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I should like to dwell on the economic side of this question for a moment and suggest seriously and earnestly to the minister that every day his department operates he not only ask himself what he can do to better the lot of the people in the poorer areas of Canada but that he not let any other department or any other minister off that same hook.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion agreed, bill read the third time and passed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might again have permission to revert to motions to deal with a matter having to do with the Library of Parliament and the report of the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It has been brought to my attention that if it were possible to adopt the report of the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament this afternoon, the parliamentary librarian would then be in a position to give a holiday to his staff on Monday and Tuesday next week. Could there be agreement to the following order:

That the Report of the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament laid upon the Table of the House by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday June 25, 1969 be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there has been some discussion with regard to the order of business. I think it might be found there would be some agreement to calling order No. 77 in respect of Bill C-194, to amend the Patent Act.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, if we could complete consideration of that bill in short order, then we might ease the mind of the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), who has partly delivered his speech, by dealing with the official languages bill if there is time before four o'clock.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I welcome that suggestion.

[Mr. McCleave.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE PATENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE AUTHORITY TO MAKE RULES RESPECTING FEES— REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-194, to amend the Patent Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

That Bill C-194, to amend the Patent Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on Monday, June 16, 1969 be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time? By leave now?

Some hon. Members: By leave now.

Mr. Basford moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government house leader, while the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) is in his seat, whether the government intends at the next sitting of the house to give consideration to the area covered by consumer and corporate affairs? In respect of this department, we find ourselves having to deal with a number of standing committees of the house and I believe this to be an unsatisfactory arrangement.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): This might be an appropriate subject for discussion when we consider reconstructing Standing Order 65 with regard to committees. I would be prepared to take up this matter with my colleagues on all sides of the house.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISION RESPECTING STATUS AND USE— APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.

The house resumed from Friday, June 20, consideration of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill, and motion No. 6 (Mr. Baldwin).

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to page 10509 of Hansard for June 20, 1969 at which time I mentioned that General de Gaulle did not make his discovery of Canada until 1967. I regret I cannot find any evidence of any Ukrainian of Polish explorers in Canadian history books. But when I see Chirikov listed as the discoverer of Alaska in 1741 that has a familiar ring. In any case, we are all here now and we must make the best of it. We must make this the best country we possibly can.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Paproski: I say, therefore, that the Canadian people of all races and cultures have a right to have their wishes respected. The constitution that we are dealing with is the constitution of Canada, a federally chartered nation. The constitution is the charter of that nation. It is not, and must not, be a charter for one group or one segment to the exclusion of others. We cannot have a constitution embodying in its structure a principle of discrimination. We cannot have a constitution favouring some to the disadvantage of others. In a free, democratic nation there must be respect for the rights of all and that respect must be embodied in that nation's charter, the constitution.

I think it is a well known principle that Canada is, in effect, a nation with a written constitution, like that of the United States. There is, in fact, no one, all inclusive document. We do have the British North America Act of 1867. But we have a number of other acts, such as the Act of Union of 1841; the Statute of Westminster, the Bill of Rights of 1961 and other similar statutes which can be regarded properly as forming part of Canada's constitutional law. And this bill calling for official language rights will, if passed, become part of the body of constitutional law.

I am rising today in order to put before this house a view of the problem that I feel has been rather neglected. Coming, as I do from a group of Canadians numbering close to one-third of the population—the third force—those neither of English nor French descent, I feel that their views are worthy of consideration for a good many reasons. I feel an obligation as a member of this house to speak on behalf of a very large group among our fellow citizens who, while looking with tolerance and good-will upon the English and French cultures, are not bound to them by ties of blood or history. I think it is a point of view which needs to be put forward and one which is worth listening to, not because it is my own, but because it is the view of a very large proportion of the people of this country.

We hear a great deal about the English fact and the French fact in this country, but there is another fact, a third fact, which we do not hear so much about; yet it is a very important fact and should not be neglected. It is that there are in this nation nearly 7 million people, or one-third, who are neither English nor French by descent. The figure given by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism is 26 per cent. I feel that is restricted and comes from a narrow interpretation. When you consider, for example, that the Scots and the Irish are not really English but that they were among the first to be culturally absorbed by Britain as it were, or at least up to a point, you find an interesting picture. Even in this august chamber, it is no problem to find 25 or 30 members who are of neither English nor French descent.

It is not my intention to review at length the statement in the B and B report by Dr. Rudnyckyj on the question of subsidiary or supplementary languages. But I would refer to one or two of his conclusions:

> The above considerations led me to the conclusion that there is an objective need to recognize some extra privileges for the languages of ethnic groups in regions where there is a concentration of speakers of a particular mother tongue. I believe that the following languages are spoken by enough people to be considered: Eskimo and Indian in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon; German and Ukrainian in the prairie provinces; Italian in the metropolitan areas of Toronto and Montreal.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Alexander: And in Hamilton.

Mr. Paproski: And in Hamilton, the hon. member for Hamilton West said.

This statement by Dr. Rudnyckyj is deserving of careful consideration by this chamber. In another place, he makes a statement which I consider extremely significant and deserving of support by the majority of Canadians.

> The category of moderately minded Canadians of non-British and non-French origins, however, shows a remarkable degree of agreement and positive support for constitutional recognition, use, and teaching of the two official languages of Canada from coast to coast, and for a greater degree of official bilingualism in the federal and provincial governments as well as in the public services. These people are firmly convinced of the utility and future survival of the French language in this country. There is no objection on their side to the role of French as the language of instruction in public schools where it is warranted by general demand.

While recognizing and supporting the idea of a broad application of official bilingualism in Canada, the adherents of this attitude foresee the preservation of other ethnic languages in addition to the two official languages in bilingual provinces and districts, and in the context of regional bilingualism (English or French, plus another language) in provinces and districts where unilingualism (French or English) now prevails. However, in either case, the adoption of other ethnic languages as subjects of instruction is strongly emphasized.

There is a case, and a strong one, for official recognition by this country of languages and cultures other than English or French, providing they are of interest to a sufficient number of Canadians. I, therefore, feel that in dealing with this matter it is important to establish the basic principles on which we intend to operate.

I would say first, that in Canada the principle must be positive. We should put to one side national or racial prejudice. We should start on the assumption that in this nation, from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast, individuals have a right to the language and culture of their choice. We should also establish that it is the function and duty of the federal government to be the watchdog of minority cultural and linguistic rights in this nation, because there is no one in Canada who is not, in some way and under some circumstances, a member of a minority group. Some are in a majority in some areas, but in a minority in others; some control the situation in one region or even a province, but in another province find themselves in a minority. Therefore, no group is in a position to force or impose its will, and the only proper, reasonable and decent method in which to operate is by co-operation, not compulsion.

We in Canada have, as a nation, put to one side the theory of the melting pot, and if we do not want a melting pot nationally it becomes contradictory for certain groups in certain areas to be deemed a melting pot provincially. I may say that no group and no area is free of this kind of an approach, which in my estimation stultifies and destroys everything for which Canada stands. I want to make it clear that in political life there are no instant solutions. We must proceed on a step by step basis. We can only go as fast as the people will let us; but not to go as far as the people will let you is, in my mind, unjustifiable in this country at this time.

[Mr. Paproski.]

Therefore, I would assume we recognize in Canada the existence of the constitutional guarantees accorded in 1867 to English language and culture and French language and culture. These are the two languages of the 1867 constitution and I propose to refer to them as the constitutional languages. No one wants to change that. I would point out that those guarantees, will last as long as the constitution lasts and as long as the nation lasts. When the constitution is changed or if the nation founders, then a different picture will emerge.

I will not go into the history of the guarantees except to say that English Canada has safeguarded and protected a way of life just as French Canada has. As a result of the constitutional guarantees accorded in 1867, Canada has seen the emergence on the North America continent of the only bastion of French language and culture in America. I attribute this to Confederation, because in the melting pot society, where there were no such guarantees, there was no such emergence.

The question arises today whether these guarantees shall be extended. I think it is quite clear that French Canada entered Confederation on the understanding there would be protection for its language, culture and property laws. That protection was accorded in so far as French Canada existed in any substantial way at that time—the province of Quebec. We are now being told that unless those rights and guarantees extended to French Canada in 1867, in so far as Quebec was concerned—because the two terms at that time were practically identical—French Canadians will no longer be at home in Canada. French Canada now extends outside the bounds of the province of Quebec and this fact should be recognize in an extension of the cultural and linguistic guarantees of the 1867 constitution.

This argument establishes a distinction between French Canada—a linguistic, ethnic and cultural group enjoying certain traditional and constitutional rights in Canada—and the province of Quebec, one of the ten provinces. Without going into the argument whether Quebec is in fact the national, cultural and ethnical homeland of French Canada—because that argument must be settled within French Canada—or whether people in one section can be represented in cultural matters by a government for whom they cannot vote, I feel at the moment that the distinction between French Canada and Quebec is a valid one.

Constitutional prerogatives accorded in 1867 to a people at that time domiciled in Quebec, if they are to be extended across Canada, can be accorded to the same people. I fail to see how extra-territorial privileges can be accorded to a province involving cultural matters in any other province. This would make of Canada a babble of confusion. It would result in a cultural balkanization which would destroy national unity.

As Professor Rudnyckyj has pointed out, there is agreement or at least no opposition among ethnic groups to according recognition to French language and culture from coast to coast; not as any special recognition to a province, but as simple justice to 6 million Canadians who in 1867 were given certain guarantees applying to the situation as it then existed. These were guarantees extended to French Canada. The right to the French language in parliament, for example, was not restricted to French speaking members from Quebec but applied to French speaking members anywhere in Canada. Today, there are a number of French speaking members of parliament from various parts of Canada. The partner races of Confederation were English and French, and English is recognized from coast to coast. There is no ethnic objection to the same recognition being accorded to the French language.

Now, what of the ethnic cultures? Can we have in this nation a multi-racial, multi-cultural society with a bi-cultural constitution? I think we can. I think it is a noble experiment worth trying, and one that may lead to success at a time when to all intents the American society is foundering on the rock of racial prejudice. We must at all costs in Canada avoid the destructive, disastrous land mine of racial prejudice. Let us not in our deliberations embrace a narrow, restrictive, biased, partisan and personal approach. Let not our approach be one of shutting out others, but of opening a door to all those who wish to contribute.

I maintain our country is enriched by the beautiful and noble culture of the first Canadians: by the gaiety and passion of French Canada; by the measured dignity of the Anglo-Saxon; by the stern efficiency of the Tutonic races with their poetic imaginations; by the vivid tones of the Celts and the moving processional of 1,000 years of the Slavic people, along with the brilliant, colourful zest of the Italian community; the grandeur and pathos of the Jewish pilgrimage and the beauty and age old mystery of Asia. Are we to shut out of our calculations any of these world-wide and age old races, cultures, peoples and civilizations? Where shall we start? Where shall we stop?

While recognizing the constitutional undertaking of 1867 and the necessity of extending it to cover the present, is it not more reasonable, more positive and more beneficial as far as all Canadians are concerned to extend the umbrella of recognition to cover our other cultures? I am not, of course, suggesting the constitutional underlining or emphasis of cultures other than English or French. Certainly, the first step in ensuring the progress of this nation is to resolve the question of English and French relationships, but no one should feel this will be the end of all the problems.

Is there any reason why there should not be at the federal level recognition of the validity of our native Indian and Eskimo cultures? Such recognition already exists in a limited way through Indian schools and support of Eskimo art. This is not enough. Those cultures which embrace a sizeable proportion of our population should achieve special federal recognition through a department of Canadian culture having as its function and prerogative the recognition, extension and support of the various cultures which make up the charm, colour and vitality of this nation. This would not require particular constitutional changes at the moment. It could be achieved in a tangible way through an extension of the citizenship activities of the Department of the Secretary of State, which would preserve for Canada the enriching and ennobling aspects of the many forms and varieties of Canadian life and make this country unique among the nations of the world.

I am not suggesting the preservation and support of a particular culture for any reason other than that it is Canadian. When you have half a million or a million or more Canadians caught up in a particular cultural stream, it is a fact worth recognizing. This would apply to the culture of native Canada, French Canada and the many cultures that have been brought to this country and have since made their contribution here. I include the Germanic, Slavic and Italian cultures because their representatives are numerous.

I do not think Canada can in any way suffer by a sympathetic recognition of and creative approach to the many cultures which good fortune has brought to our shores. This is the expansionist, positive, productive approach which makes nations great. We shall not become a great nation by a process of exclusion—by shutting out colour, race, religion or national characteristics. Let us embrace them all. Let us take them to our collective national bosoms, extracting from each the great good their contribution can convey to this fabulous and favoured land.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I earnestly hope the government will consider the amendment which would delete clause 38 of the bill and substitute therefor:

38 (1) The right to speak a language other than either of the two official languages shall not be restrained or restricted in its natural development in any way.

(2) The Governor in Council may by Order in Council enter into an agreement with the government of any province which has been authorized by legislation so to do, for the purpose of encouraging natural development of any such minority language especially as regards the use of such language in matters of education.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. It being four o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe it would be the general disposition of the house that we proceed this afternoon with items Nos. 6 and 7, that is Bill S-32 and Bill S-39, and after those two bills have been given second reading and referred to committee, adjourn the house.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the parliamentary secretary is a correct reflection of what has been agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE CANADA NORTH-WEST LAND COMPANY (LIMITED)

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's) moved that Bill S-32, respecting the Canada North-west Land Company (Limited) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

BOY SCOUTS OF CANADA AND TO INCORPORATE L'ASSOCIATION DES SCOUTS DU CANADA

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface) moved that Bill S-39, respecting Boy Scouts of Canada and to incorporate L'Association des Scouts du Canada be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the house do now adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Pursuant to special order made this day, this house stands adjourned until Wednesday next at two o'clock p.m. May the Chair wish you and yours an enjoyable and happy holiday and hope that on Tuesday hon. members will celebrate with pride our national holiday.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 4.09 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, July 2, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE

TAKEOVER OF ROYAL SECURITIES CORPORATION—STUDY BY INVESTMENT DEALERS OF FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, recently I undertook to make a statement on the takeover of Royal Securities Corporation by Merrill, Lynch and Associates, and on the implications of this action. Since then my officials have been in touch with representatives of the Investment Dealers' Association and of certain stock exchanges.

The I.D.A. and two of the main stock exchanges have announced that they are going to study together the whole subject of foreign ownership and control of member firms and to decide what policies and courses of action they themselves should follow within their institutional jurisdictions. They have also made it clear that pending this study they will defer consideration of new applications for membership from foreign-based brokers and investment bankers as well as any new applications for approval of purchases by foreign interests of Canadian investment firms now holding membership in any of these industry organizations.

I welcome this initiative. I believe that the subject merits such a study. The government will follow with great interest its course and outcome. We will, of course, actively pursue our own review of the situation as it affects the national interest. This review will include a study of limitations which might be placed on the access of foreign-owned firms to the credit facilities available to money market dealers.

I do not believe it would be appropriate nor have we presently the power to stop the sale of Royal Securities Corporation to Merrill, Lynch; nor do I believe it would be appropriate to request the Bank of Canada to amend at this time their credit arrangement with Royal Securities as a money market dealer. However I feel we should be free to bring them and any other firms in a similar position within the ambit of any general limitations which may result from our review.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the minister he is not taking any action but is reserving the position that whatever will be done can be applied to the firms in question. I am not going to quarrel with that position but I do believe that the kind of inquiry the minister has in mind should go much further than he has indicated.

In an earlier debate we on this side of the house made a number of concrete proposals with regard to this kind of question. There is of course the matter of positive encouragement to Canadians to control their own corporations, and I would hope something would be forthcoming in this regard in the minister's white paper. The suggestion has also been made that we might give some leadership in encouraging international study of international aspects of international corporations. Such an inquiry might serve a useful purpose in providing us with a good deal of information as well as reducing some of the jingoism and nationalistic emotion that have sometimes been introduced into some of our inquiries and discussions. But, Mr. Speaker, I think it most necessary to emphasize that it is time to stop these hesitant, rather fumbling steps in the dark, staggering from instance to instance of this kind of difficulty. It is time we took a much more co-ordinated over-all approach.

I certainly do not want to see anything done to discourage foreign enterprise in this country because I recognize its value here, but on the other hand there are certain key sectors over which we ought to maintain control, and it is important that we outline an integrated and comprehensive approach to this problem.

• (2:10 p.m.)

There is at present a patchwork of measures in various sectors of the economy to prevent or discourage foreign takeovers or encourage Canadian ownership and control. But we must have a more coherent approach in contrast to the sort of ad hoc approach we have adopted. I am sure the first step is to decide what are the key sectors of our economic and social structures, the ownership and control of which are of critical significance to our national development.

I suggest there should be an inquiry in respect of the industries affected. I believe they ought to have an opportunity to be heard. Perhaps a committee of this house should hear representations and examine the effectiveness of the present legislation, regulations, guidelines or policy as applied in the various sectors. Then hopefully the government could announce a rational policy relating to ownership and control in the country generally. After examination and public discussion of some document presented by the government the house might consider any necessary legislation.

I believe it is only in this way that we are likely to develop a sensible approach and a sensible set of policies relating to economic and cultural sovereignty, if we are to think in these terms. This is the kind of action which would produce policies that would carry general support in the country, and the kind of action which would be meaningful if one really wants public participation in our political system.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it would be an understatement for me to say that this announcement by the minister is extremely disappointing. Many members and many other people in Canada have been disturbed by the revelations of the Watkins report which show the increasing takeover of the Canadian economy, but at least those financial institutions have not been interfered with adversely by reason of the steps taken by the previous minister of finance to stop the takeover of the Mercantile Bank by Citibank of New York. We at least thought that the financial institutions were free from foreign interference.

When the Royal Securities Corporation was taken over by Merrill, Lynch and Associates the minister expressed some concern, as did the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Ever since that time the minister has been promising to make a statement. I understand a statement was sent to the offices of the leaders of the various parties on Friday but was recalled. I do not know whether the minister intended to make a more forthright statement and got cold feet, but what we have now is a non-statement. It states first that the government is going to do nothing at all about the takeover of the Royal Securities Corporation and, secondly, that it is not even going to discontinue allowing them access to the credit arrangements of the Bank of Canada. They enjoyed this privilege along with 14 other investment houses, and now are to have this access to the facilities of the Bank of Canada.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

It seems to me appalling that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) intends to take no action at all. The second and more serious statement in this matter is that the minister at the present time does not propose to take any action to prevent further takeovers, other than to watch with interest the investigation being conducted by the Investment Dealers Association. He says of course that his department will pursue actively their own review of the situation as it affects the national interest.

Surely at some point these studies should result in some action by the government. We had a long investigation by the Watkins Commission. We have had the report of the Watkins Commission, but no action has been forthcoming. Now we have the beginning of a takeover of the Canadian financial institutions, and the best the Minister of Finance can offer us is that the investment dealers, who have an axe to grind that is distinctly different from the national interest of this country, are to make an investigation. Meantime we are to wait until we hear the result of their investigation, before we will know what the minister intends to do. The Canadian parliament must recognize how important this matter is. First of all foreign control of our financial institutions will hinder our capacity to promote economic growth.

We speak a great deal about lacking funds in Canada, but the fact is that in mutual funds alone, from December 31, 1962 to December 31, 1967 United States and foreign assets increased from $144.1 million to $1,008,-200,000 an increase of 600 per cent in their holdings of foreign assets, mostly United States. In the same period of time their domestic assets increased by only 83 per cent.

It is increasingly apparent that there are investment houses in Canada which would like to get access to the United States market but find it difficult to do so, and are now prepared either to sell out or merge with United Stated financial houses in order to get access to that market and to funnel Canadian savings into that market to purchase United States equities. How can we talk about the need for economic growth when we are allowing Canadian funds to pour out of this country?

The second thing is that unless the Canadian government is prepared to take a firm hold of the financial institutions in this country they are lessening their ability to cope with the problems of inflation. We are ceasing increasingly to be masters in our own house.

I want to say to the minister that the statement he has made today will disappoint a great many people. Only yesterday was the 102nd anniversary of Confederation and all over this country people were standing up to sing "O Canada, we stand on guard for thee". The best the minister can tell us about the takeover of financial institutions is that all the government intends to do is wait until the Investment Dealers Association has made a survey. I say to the minister this is a shameful betrayal of his responsibility as the Minister of Finance of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I also agree with the hon. members of the opposition that it is time to assume our responsibilities in order to settle our problems once for all.

I think that it is completely abnormal that a country like Canada should continue to lend abroad while borrowing in Germany and in the United States at 7 per cent, thus bleeding the Canadian economy.

As for brokers who are selling our country piecemeal abroad, more stringent legislation is needed to control that practice. I have always wondered why this house does not pass legislation enabling Canadians to continue to hold 51 per cent of the shares of Canadian companies and to restrict the percentage of other countries to a maximum of 49 per cent. Thus, Canadians could have real control over their economy.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is time to influence investment dealers to make them embrace a nationalism which will make it possible to commemorate other anniversaries of the Confederation as we did yesterday, so that Canada will become a great country from an economic point of view.

PROCEDURE

NEW PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEBATING TIME ALLOTMENT

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

June 26, 1969—The President of the Privy Council: That the Standing Orders of the House be amended by adding the following new Standing Orders immediately after Standing Order 75:

Debating Time Allotment

75A. When a Minister of the Crown, from his place in the House, states that there is agreement among the representatives of all parties to allot a specified number of days or hours to the proceedings at one or more stages of any public bill, he may propose a motion, without notice, setting forth the terms of such agreed allocation; and every such motion shall be decided forthwith, without debate or amendment.

75B. When a Minister of the Crown, from his place in the House, states that a majority of the representatives of the several parties, including that of the Government, have come to an agreement in respect of a proposed allotment of days or hours for the proceedings at any stage of the passing of a public bill, he may propose a motion, without notice, setting forth the terms of the said proposed allocation; provided that for the purposes of this standing order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages of a bill if that motion is consistent with the provisions of Standing Order 75(13). During the consideration of any such motion no member may speak more than once or longer than ten minutes. Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, Mr. Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

75C. A Minister of the Crown who from his place in the House at a previous sitting has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration either in the House or in any committee and has given notice at that sitting of his intention so to do may propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage; provided that the time allotted for any stage is not to be less than one sitting day and provided that for the purposes of this standing order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages on a bill if that motion is consistent with the provisions of Standing Order 75(13). During the consideration of any such motion no member may speak more than once or longer than ten minutes. Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, Mr. Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to put to Your Honour as briefly as I can the substance of the complaints I have which were mentioned by myself and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) last week when we indicated we had objections we hoped Your Honour would sustain in respect of this particular motion. I find it is essential to argue the point at this time before the house becomes seized of the motion under Standing Order 21, under which it becomes a government order. Might I just briefly retrace the steps which have led up to this point of order now being raised by myself.

Debating Time Allotment

• (2:20 p.m.)

On June 20 the chairman of the procedure committee introduced the report of that committee dealing with proposed Standing Order 75A, 75B, and 75C. On June 26 the President of the Privy Council made a statement in the house in which he said in part:

> I might indicate that I plan to give notice later today of a motion dealing with the question of time allocation in conformity with the decision of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

That statement referred to a decision which had been tabled by the filing of the committee's report and which was then the subject of a notice by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) that he proposed to move concurrence in the report. I call to Your Honour's attention the words used by the President of the Privy Council:

> —in conformity with the decision of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

This indicates that the minister intended to move a motion which would be virtually the same as that which was the subject of the report of the committee dealing with proposed Standing Order 75A, 75B and 75C. Proposed Standing Order 75A deals with the unanimous approval of all parties before proceeding with a time allocation order; 75B deals with a provision that a majority of the parties might make a decision which could then be made the subject of an order of the house; 75C, which is the ill-starred and illegitimate by-product of the mating of proposed Standing Order 16A and closure, was introduced by the committee in almost precisely the same terms as the motion of the President of the Privy Council, with two exceptions.

I think I am entitled to call to the attention of Your Honour and the house that the committee report, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), was the report of the government members on that committee and was subject to their approval. The President of the Privy Council, as a member of that committee, provided for these things; but the report did not provide precisely for the type of majority the government wanted. The government wanted only a majority of which it is a part. Therefore the proposed change of the President of the Privy Council makes this alteration, that in making a decision which can later become the subject of an order of the house, a majority of the parties of the house must include the government.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

I think I am entitled to call attention to the fact that because of this omission or default on the part of the committee's report, which is in fact the report of the government, the President of the Privy Council introduced his motion. If he had not, the government would have been in the unfortunate position, if it desired to amend the committee's report, of asking that the report be sent back to the committee. This would be a very serious state of affairs for the government.

I can recall a most distinguished member of this house saying last fall that the opposition had become caught in a trap in connection with procedure matters. I would point out that as I watch the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the President of the Privy Council floundering around in this net today I am reminded of these words of Sir Walter Scott:

> Oh, what a tangled web we weave,
> When first we practise to deceive!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: If Your Honour accepted the motion of the President of the Privy Council, which would then become a government order, we would have the extraordinary situation of there being on the order paper two motions which are the same but for the exceptions I have mentioned. Which one do we debate? Which one does Your Honour accept? What is the position to be?

On that basis I refer Your Honour to the practice in the United Kingdom which has been imported into this house by our Standing Order 1. Many years ago it was held in the United Kingdom that a private member's placing of a simple motion on the order paper would have the effect of forestalling a motion of a similar kind, even though it were introduced by the government.

I think the classic example was where a private member placed a motion on the order paper dealing with the conduct of the government in the Boer war in the 1900's. He then sailed away to the war in Africa, and while he was absent it was impossible for the government to introduce a measure along the same lines. This is the kind of situation with which we may have to deal here.

There are precedents which I wish to cite to Your Honour briefly, because I am sure Your Honour will want to give some consideration to this issue. Redlich, 3rd edition, deals with this particular matter, and at pages 222 and 223 lays it out very specifically with regard to the whole conduct of the house and of the Speaker in a matter of this kind.

He relates there to the fact that the Speaker is given discretion to make a choice. If the motion which is first on the order paper is one which is likely to be debated under the rules of the house, Your Honour should give effect to that fact, allow that motion to be debated, and not let it be blocked by the government introducing another motion.

That is carried forward in the 17th edition of May at page 399 where it is said that a matter already appointed for consideration by the house cannot be anticipated by a motion, an amendment or a notice of motion as long as it remains upon the order paper, whether for a specified day or not. This is precisely the situation which prevails in this house at the present time.

This has been followed in our house. Citation No. 131 in Beauchesne's 4th edition provides:

> In determining whether a discussion is out of order on the ground of anticipation, regard shall be had by Mr. Speaker to the probability of the matter anticipated being brought before the house within a reasonable time.

Certainly the notice of motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) is before the house and can be debated at any time. Until June 26 there was every belief that this was a motion which the house was going to debate.

Finally, I wish to refer Your Honour to the most succinct and clear statement on this issue, contained in "The House of Commons at Work" by Eric Taylor which, I suggest is pertinent and right on the nose. The statement appears at page 99 and reads as follows:

> There is, finally, the rule against anticipation. Debate must not cover the ground of a motion which is on the order paper, and likely to be discussed. Formerly, even the fact that a motion stood on the order paper was enough to prevent debate on the subject it dealt with, and until recently private members who wished to prevent the discussion of a particular topic made a practice of putting down motions which they never brought up for debate. Nowadays, however, unless there is a reasonable chance of a motion coming up for debate, it cannot prevent members raising the same subject on another motion.

That is what I would ask Your Honour to hold before you when you come to make a ruling.

So much for the precedents. Let me point out that, rather like the pilots in the early days in my country, the house and Your Honour, with these new rules, are flying collectively by the seat of their pants in the matter of making decisions and rulings on the new practices upon which we have embarked. This is not the first instance with regard to a committee report. I need only to go back to the report of the Transport Committee and to other reports which, properly considered and discussed in the committee and later brought into the house, have been ignored.

The government is divided. On June 18 last the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), dealing with amendments to the official languages bill, took the position that he could not support an amendment proposed by this side of the house because it had already been dealt with by a committee and the committee had come to a decision. Under those conditions the government was so struck with the importance of the committee report that they had decided to follow the views of the committee.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I just want to suggest to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that in trying to oversimplify my remarks he is distorting them.

Mr. Baldwin: Usually I find it difficult to oversimplify the remarks of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Benson: But you find it easy to distort them.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: What is your position to be, Mr. Speaker? The committee structure was to have been the foundation of the new order through which the just society would be ushered into this country. Here we find an important committee report being ignored. Logic, reason, persuasion, have gone out of the window because the Prime Minister, the President of the Privy Council and their colleagues have accepted the rule of the bulldozer. From now on, apparently, the rules belong to the government, and the house has no interest in them. I sometimes wonder what will be the value of the Committee on Procedure and Organization if this is the way in which recommendations are to be considered.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): It is a refreshing change that for once the hon. member has been citing some parliamentary authorities. One recalls that his previous guide in connection with these matters was the Canada Year Book. Not only can he cite that publication but he can cite Sir Walter Scott. I am glad he has learned a little bit about the rules. Perhaps I, too, could make a quotation, this one from Pope: A little learning is a dangerous thing.

An hon. Member: You have a hell of a lot.

Mr. Hees: Now you have exhausted your capacity for humour, let us get on with it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): While I may have exhausted my capacity for humour—

Mr. Hees: This is going to be terrific, Donald. I hope your wife is here today to hear that. She would be proud of you. What a meatball!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It has been argued that if I move my motion today I will be anticipating the motion of which the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has given notice, and that consequently my motion cannot be admitted.

This argument is based on the assumption that whenever a motion would bring on a debate and a decision by the house which might be brought on by another motion of which notice had been given, the former motion cannot be moved. But in the case under consideration, I would point out first of all that there is no question of supplanting a proceeding which has already begun. May states that a motion must not anticipate a matter already appointed for consideration by the house, whether it be a bill or an adjourned debate upon a motion. This citation appears on the same page as that to which the hon. member referred, though he did not quote it. In this case the motion has not even been moved. If the hon. member had moved his motion, and if a time had been appointed for the resumption of an adjourned debate upon that motion, the situation would obviously be different.

All that the house now has before it from the hon. member is a notice of motion. I raise this question: How can either Your Honour or the house know whether it is still the hon. member's intention to move that motion?

Mr. Aiken: I gather that it is not.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member strengthens my point by raising a doubt as to whether it will ever be moved. I cannot guarantee that it will, nor can you, Mr. Speaker. Nor can one predict when that motion would be called. Indeed, there seems to be a certain disposition in the house—and I refer to the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in this regard as reported at page 10699 of Hansard—that the motion by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton should not only not be moved but that it should be dropped.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): See! I think it is clear from what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said and from what the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka has said that there is reason to doubt that the motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton will go forward.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Of course not; he has been bulldozed by the government to drop it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): To ask that my motion, which I am quite prepared to move today provided the house disposes of the official languages bill, be prohibited because at some future time the hon. member may decide to move his motion, is to engage in dilatory speculation. Neither you, Mr. Speaker, nor the house should be asked to make decisions on such a basis.

Referring to the authorities, both Beauchesne, at the place indicated by the hon. member, and May make it clear that the decisive consideration involved here in deciding whether or not a proceeding already begun by a motion in the house can be supplanted by proceedings on another motion is whether or not the supplanting provisions, that is to say, the subsequent proceedings, will be at least as efficient as those supplanted. Here May says at page 399:

> The rule against anticipation, which applies to other proceedings as well as motions, is that a matter must not be anticipated if it is contained in a more effective form of proceeding than the proceeding by which it is sought to be anticipated, but it may be anticipated if it is contained in an equally or less effective form.

In other words, when there is a conflict between the proceedings already begun and supplanting proceedings the test is the comparative efficiency of the proceedings. The question is: Will the new proceedings be at least as satisfactory for the house as those they will supplant? In the present instance, if the hon. member had moved his motion the question would be whether my proposed motion would enable the house to debate the subject of time allocation as effectively as his motion. The proceedings on my motion would not need to be better. All that would be necessary would be that my motion should bring on proceedings at least as effective as those already in progress on his motion.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that my motion would bring the house into direct contact with the subject of time allocation. It would permit the house itself to amend the proposed new standing orders. In the case of the motion of which the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has given notice, the subject of time allocation would be approached by the house only indirectly, as the hon. member for Peace River has pointed out, that is, by considering whether or not to concur in the report of a committee. In a proceeding of that kind the house itself would not be able to amend the proposed new standing orders. It would be able only to send the report back to the committee for amendment.

We now find ourselves in a situation the reverse of that in which we were placed last December. At that time, and for good reasons, I submit, when involved changes in standing orders were being considered, particularly with regard to supply, it was decided that the house should consider those changes by way of a report and discuss the recommendations in a general way before making a further reference to the committee with regard to a complex picture. But here we have a simple question—whether these recommendations should be adopted, or whether the terms of the standing order should be amended by the house itself in the course of debate. This subject is not one so complex that an approach by way of returning a report is desirable. I mention this, not to claim that the proceedings on my motion would necessarily be more efficient. Rather, I am only claiming that the proceedings on my motion would permit a debate at least equal in efficiency to the proceedings on a motion to concur. If this is a valid claim, then I submit that both May and Beauchesne show I have a right to make my motion.

Hon. members will readily understand what the consequences of any interpretation of the rule against unwarranted anticipation other than the one given by Beauchesne and May must be. If merely by introducing a public bill, or by inscribing a notice of motion under that heading in Votes and Proceedings and then relying on speculation that the bill or motion would be proceeded with inside a reasonable time, a member could block government bills or motions dealing with the same subject, it could be made impossible for parliamentary government to continue. On every issue in every session a government could be rendered impotent by the exaggerated interpretation of the rule against anticipation now favoured by the hon. member for Peace River.

Perhaps I might deal with one of the arguments raised by the hon. member last week, namely that by proceeding on my motion the opportunity to discuss the report would be lost. I should like to bring to the attention of the house the decision of Mr. Speaker on February 24, 1936 to be found in volume 74 of Canadian Commons Journals at page 68 wherein the Speaker of the day, ruling in favour of a motion put forward by the government, made it perfectly clear that the motion which was being supplanted could be discussed when the matter in question was under consideration.

Therefore, if I have taken some time to present what I believe is the rule on anticipation, it is because a decision in this instance favourable to the views put forward by the hon. member could not help but be damaging to parliamentary government, and I think would push us toward a congressional system.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) seems to get some satisfaction out of the fact that I would like to see the motion in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) dropped. May I say that that is a correct statement, and that I should like to see the motion of the President of the Privy Council dropped as well.

Lest there be any doubt about this, let me make it perfectly clear that we on this side of the house are completely opposed to the provisions of rule 75c. We are opposed to it in substance, and we are opposed to any moves that might facilitate getting that rule through the house.

The President of the Privy Council has sought to argue that the rule on anticipation can be brought into play against a second motion only when debate on one motion has actually been commenced. I submit that the authorities are not as clear on that point as the President of the Privy Council would have us believe. For example, if one looks at the wording of citation 131 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, he finds these words:

> In determining whether a discussion is out of order on the ground of anticipation, regard shall be had by Mr. Speaker to the probability of the matter anticipated being brought before the House within a reasonable time.

There is nothing in that sentence which says that the matter being anticipated has to be one already under discussion. In fact, the next sentence reads:

> The anticipation rule, which forbids discussion of a matter standing on the Paper being forestalled, is dependent on the same principle as that which forbids the same question being twice raised in the same session.

The words in that sentence that I would underline are "a matter standing on the order paper". There is no question but that the motion in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, which he placed there in his capacity as chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, is standing on the order paper. Therefore, in our view the motion now proposed by the President of the Privy Council is one that would anticipate a matter that is standing on the order paper, and I suggest this is a case in which the rule on anticipation should be applied.

However, Mr. Speaker, in case the arguments of the President of the Privy Council on this point carry more weight than I think they should, may I go a step further and deal with the situation that could develop in a day or so, whenever we get to this matter. Is it not a fact, even if the arguments of the President of the Privy Council are correct, that once one of these debates is started, then the other cannot be commenced? Therefore, the decision that will be made by Your Honour, or by whoever does make it, as to which of these debates is first called will be a decision in favour of the rules of the house being amended, on the one hand by debating the report of the committee, or on the other hand by means of a motion blatantly brought in by the government itself.

If this situation seems to put Your Honour in a difficult spot, then I recognize that. But it seems to me that the President of the Privy Council has, in effect, already put you in that spot in quite an unfair way. He has argued that what Your Honour has to look at is the efficiency or effectiveness of the operation of either motion. He has quoted those words from various authorities and has argued that his motion is at least as effective as the motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton in bringing this matter to a head. Therefore, in effect he is asking you to decide on the merits of these two motions, on which is the more effective and better motion.

I submit that Your Honour should not be put in this position. Your Honour is not concerned with substance and should not have to decide which is the better of two motions. But I do argue that Your Honour does have the right and responsibility to protect the rights of the house, and in particular to protect the rights of the private members of this house.

What is involved in this issue is a very simple question: Are we going to approach the amending of the rules of parliament on the basis of a report brought in by a committee of all parties, even though that report is of the kind that we have already described, or are the rules of parliament going to be amended on the basis of a government notice of motion brought in by the government house leader on behalf of the Prime Minister and the cabinet? In that situation, if the issue is as simple as I have tried to state it, if it is between parliament and the government on the matter of the rules of parliament, I submit Your Honour should rule in favour of parliament, not in favour of the government.

Another argument that was advanced by the President of the Privy Council was what I noted as his impotence argument. He suggested that, if the ruling for which we are asking were made, the result would be to hamstring parliament from here on and turn it into a congressional system or something or other. I am not going to deal at length with that argument, but I would point out both to Your Honour and to the President of the Privy Council that the rules are quite clear: A private member's public bill, under the rule on anticipation, cannot anticipate or block a government measure.

As a matter of fact, there is a pretty good precedent on this score. A few years ago I had a private member's public bill before the house having to do with an aspect of the labour code. The Conservative government of that day brought in a bill touching on the same matter, and as soon as this proposal was brought in the debate on my private member's public bill had to stop. So there is no basis at all for the argument that a ruling such as we are calling for would make parliament impotent in the future and would create a situation in which private members could block the operation of parliament as the government wants it operated. I submit that this was a case of much ado about nothing, if I may indulge slightly in the kind of references which have been made up to this point.

Let me move on the another point. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has already indicated that the motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council calls for the adoption of rules 75A, 75B and 75C in almost exactly the same form as the rules spelled out in the committee's report but for the two minor changes that have already been noted. In other words, it is quite clear that what the government has sought to do is to amend the committee's report without going through the process of having that report referred back to the standing committee.

I submit that that is clearly a case of the government's seeking to do indirectly what it is not permitted to do directly. Such a devious course is not open to the ordinary members of this house and I do not think it should be open to the government. As I said a moment ago, when Your Honour is called upon to decide, on matters of procedure and rules, between the government and parliament, there is no question which side you should come down on: You should come down on the side of parliament.

Another point I want to make, which you might say is more a matter of privilege than a matter of order but which I think comes into the picture, is this: What is happening here is that the government is upstaging the committee. The President of the Privy Council seems to get a certain amount of satisfaction out of the fact that I take no responsibility for the report of the committee because I voted against it, as did all the members of the opposition, and then I come along and want the debate in the house to take place on the committee's report rather than on a motion made by the President of the Privy Council.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that even though I may attempt to defeat the motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), I have a right, in a parliament which is putting all the emphasis that this parliament is on the work of the committees, to insist that a committee should not be upstaged by a government that wants to take things in its own hands and run parliament the way it wants to without regard for the wishes of parliament as a whole. Even though I may be opposed to the motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton and even though I may do everything I can to try to have it defeated, I still think I have the right as a member of parliament and as a member of that committee to ask that that be the vehicle by which this matter is brought before this House of Commons.

May I say if Your Honour finds this an extremely difficult decision to make and, as the President of the Privy Council suggested, if Your Honour feels that you are getting into an area of substance rather than into the area of rules, I hope Your Honour will be very clear on the point that this matter cannot be debated under both motions. If Your Honour allows one, Your Honour certainly will not be able to allow the other. Therefore the issue becomes a very simple one, and Your Honour's ruling is crucial to this problem. Are we going to debate the changing of the rules of parliament on the basis of a study by an all-party committee, or are we going to debate the changing of the rules of parliament on the basis of a blatant government motion that has no regard for the tradition that the rules of this House of Commons belong not to the government, but to parliament as a whole? That is the issue, clear and simple.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to get into an argument of anticipation or to review the arguments advanced by my colleagues on this side of the house. I simply want to draw to Your Honour's attention that the essence of the difficulty today in the government's position is that it is confusing the nature of the motion put on the order paper by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair).

That motion was to adopt a report by a committee of the house which was directed by the house to sit and to consider the matter referred to it. It is not merely a motion standing in the name of the hon. member in his own capacity: It is a direction from this house. I will reiterate the argument put forward by hon. members on this side, that the rules belong to this house. Frankly, I can only say that the government's motion as it now stands is in contempt of the house. The direction was by this house to bring in a report regarding the rules. This is what the committee did. I will not go into the specifics of that, nor the question that it was adopted on a majority view, or anything of that nature.

The committee reported back to the house as it was obligated to do. The government says: We will set that aside; we couldn't care less what the house is directing; the house is going to do what we say. Therefore in line with that kind of reasoning it is open to the government to take any committee report and, because it does not like it, introduce a motion so that such committee report shall stand bypassed, and then decide in what way it should be handled. Under the rules, Mr. Speaker, that is not the way to proceed.

This house directed the committee to bring in a report. The house must consider the committee report and not the government motion. I say further, with all due respect, that the Chair was elected to protect the rights of the house, and not just by fiat of the government to accommodate its desires. Under those circumstances I say to Your Honour with the greatest respect that the privileges and rights of this house must be protected. This includes all hon. members of the house and not merely the government which seeks either to direct the debate in the house or to act in a particular way.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in considering this point of order, I ask Your Honour to consider that you are being asked to consider a very fundamental question, not just a procedural one. The reason it is fundamental is the fact the government has come in right over top of the committee which the house appointed, that committee which the house requested to report, which did report and is now being overruled by action of the government. Therefore it is a fundamental question on procedure whether the house is seized of its own business or whether the government has superiority or priority over the house itself. It is a very serious fundamental question that must be determined at this point.

The remarks of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), as I heard them, added up to this: Why proceed on the basis of a committee report when the government is so much more effective? What the minister is saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the government with its majority can crush the opposition faster in the house than it can in the committee, so why go through this long roundabout way of crushing the opposition through committee reports? Why not bring it into the house where the government has a majority, and where they can crush the resistance effectively once and for all? Those are the questions being raised.

This is one of the most serious constitutional and parliamentary questions that has ever been raised. I think the government has engaged in an outrageous abuse of the powers which by custom and tradition have been given to government to direct the business of the house. These powers are not being used in a proper manner, but in an improper, immoral and illegal manner to thwart the ordinary business of the house. This is an inadequate way to consider a committee report. I was also opposed to the committee report and I would be very strongly voting against it. Nevertheless it is a priority item, ahead of the one the government has brought forward. It must be considered in that manner.

One final point, Mr. Speaker. This is not the case of the government's overruling a committee report it did not like. That would be bad enough. This is even more outrageous, in that the government is trying to overrule a committee report which only their own members supported, and which came in as a majority report. In other words, not only are they reversing the whole membership of the house represented on that committee, but they are reversing their own members on the committee by suggesting in this manner that the committee did not make a proper report. They are reversing their own decision in the committee.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: During the last 45 minutes or so hon. members on both sides of the house have cited numerous rules, authors and precedents which would have to be considered very seriously by the Chair. If hon. members will allow me to do so, within the next few hours I will have an opportunity to study the presentations made in the chamber by hon. members who have taken part in this procedural debate, and without delay give a decision, which I am sure will not please everyone. The motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council will stand for the time being.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CERTIFICATES OF IDENTIFICATION TO U.S. CITIZENS

Question No. 1,228—Mr. Lewis:

1. Is it the policy of the Department of Manpower and Immigration to refuse Certificates of Identification to Americans who come to Canada and voluntarily give up their United States citizenship?

2. Is it possible for such individuals to travel outside of Canada without a Certificate of Identification?

3. What is the basis for this treatment of such American immigrants?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. In the absence of special compassionate reasons, it is not the policy of the government to issue certificates of identity to former citizens of a friendly country, such as the United States, who have voluntarily become stateless by renouncing their citizenship after arrival in Canada, unless they have done so with the intention of becoming Canadian citizens, or because they are conscientious objectors.

2. Whether the individual is able to travel outside Canada without a certificate of identity depends on the entry requirements of the country he intends to visit.

3. With the two exceptions stated above, Canadian certificates of identity are normally only issued to persons who have entered Canada as refugees or stateless persons and have not been in Canada long enough to acquire Canadian citizenship.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SOCIAL SCIENCE POLICY COUNCIL

Question No. 1,928—Mr. Saltsman:

Does the government have any plans to implement the proposal made by Dr. Solandt that a Social Science Policy Council be established to parallel the Science Council of Canada?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): No. The government does not have any plans to establish a Social Science Policy Council.

PLANS FOR STORED WHEAT SALES

Question No. 2,282—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. Has the government any announcement to make regarding how it plans to market the 800,000,000 bushels of wheat which it is estimated will be lying unsold in the granary across the country by July 31, the end of the present crop year?

2. Has the government considered any form of aid to these farmers, many of whom are finding it difficult to finance this year's crop?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Agriculture as follows: 1. There are very large stocks of wheat in the world and trade has declined. Many countries are experiencing difficulties in exporting wheat and there can be no definitive announcement at this time concerning the marketing of the existing stocks of Canadian wheat. The government, the Canadian Wheat Board and the private grain trade continue to make every effort to market Canadian wheat.

2. The government has introduced a number of measures to assist western farmers and is giving consideration to longer term solutions to these problems.

INVESTMENT OF INDIAN BAND FUNDS

Question No. 2,340—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. In what manner are Indian Band Funds invested or otherwise dealt with?

2. What interest rate is paid on such funds?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Indian Band Funds are not invested but are held in Consolidated Revenue. These funds may be used for the benefit of the band in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Act and with the consent of the Band Council concerned.

2. The rate of interest paid on approximately $31 million is 5 per cent. The rate of interest on the balance, about $1 million, is 6 per cent.

COST SHARING PROJECTS FOR INDIANS

Question No. 2,367—Mr. Brewin:

1. Has the federal government refused to proceed with several cost-sharing projects for the benefit of Indians in Ontario despite an agreement to do so in 1966 and, if not, has the attention of the government been drawn to the statement to that effect made by the Prime Minister of Ontario in the Legislature?

2. When did the Federal-Provincial Committee on Indian Affairs last meet (a) who is responsible for calling such meetings (b) if the meetings have not been called for a year, what is the reason?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Under the terms of the Community Development Agreement, signed in 1966, Canada agreed to share in the cost of projects for Indians approved by the Federal-Provincial Coordinating Committee composed of officials of both the Ontario and federal governments. The federal government has not refused to proceed with any projects approved by this committee. Yes, the statement has been drawn to the attention of the government.

2. The Federal-Provincial Committee on Indian Affairs last met on September 4, 1968. (a) Chairman of the Committee, a nominee of the province; (b) Not applicable.

RELEASE OF INFORMATION ON COMBINES INVESTIGATIONS

Question No. 2,380—Mrs. MacInnis:

1. What is the reason that no information is released about investigations being undertaken by the Director of Combines Investigation?

2. What is the amount spent on investigation in each of the last ten cases referred to the Director?

3. How many witnesses other than employees or officers of the company under investigation were called or interviewed in each case?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. The reasons, as explained in detail by the then Minister of Justice, will be found in Unrevised Hansard for November 23, 1964, at pages 10377-78.

2 and 3. Investigations are instituted by the Director of Investigation and Research whenever he has reason to believe there has been a violation of the Combines Investigation Act. The Director's reason to believe may result from information or complaints brought to his attention in a variety of ways. Statistics are not kept in a manner which permits a clear identification of "the last ten cases referred to the Director". Assuming this to mean the last ten instances in which formal inquiries have been instituted, the information is as follows:

Case No.	Amount Spent to May 27, 1969	No. of Witnesses
1	Not yet available	1
2	$376.04	3
3	293.31	19
4	Not yet available	20
5	161.85	–
6	531.47	3
7	526.99	26
8	219.86	4
9	2.50	2
10	151.65	8

The foregoing inquiries have not been completed. Records are not kept of the time spent by the staff of the Director of Investigation and Research in formal inquiries, so that amounts set out above are exclusive of salaries.

7. The work of the planning group was completed when zoning was inaugurated on May 1, 1969.

8. $130,681 comprised of: Salary of one Project Officer for approximately 4 months, $3,996.00; Travel Expenses, $300.00; Salary of 11 Public Relations Officers for varying periods, $3,600.00; Artwork printing and production costs, $12,000.00; Advertising, $60,-785.09; Printing of Zone Books, $50,000.00; Total, $130,681.09.

9. Yes, for Metropolitan Toronto.

10. Yes.

Note: It is expected that, if a postal code is introduced in Canada, the new zone designation will be integrated with it.

11. No, however a task force to study the use of a postal code in Canada has been appointed.

12. Messrs. J. W. Moody, S. H. Bacon, F. Gagnon, with the assistance of a firm of management consultants to be selected shortly.

13. Toward the latter part of 1969.

VANCOUVER POSTAL ZONE SYSTEM

Question No. 2,409—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Is the postal zone system which was in force in Vancouver on January 1, 1969 now in force?

2. Is the 3 digit postal zone system which was to go into use in Vancouver on June 15 now also in effect?

3. How many postal zone books outlining the new 3 digit postal zone numbers for Vancouver were distributed?

4. When were these books first given out and when did the Post Office Department stop distributing them?

5. How much did these books cost the Post Office Department?

6. Did the Post Office Department renumber the postal zones of addresses on mailing lists for Vancouver destinations and at what cost to the Post Office Department?

7. When was the campaign advertizing the new 3 digit postal zones in Vancouver first put into effect and when was this advertizing discontinued?

8. How much did this advertizing campaign cost?

9. For how long is it estimated that Vancouver will continue to have two overlapping postal zone systems?

10. Is the Post Office Department suggesting that clients now using the 3 digit postal zone system might revert to the system formerly in use?

[Mr. Kierans.]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned:
1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. 900 advance copies in the form of printed sheets.

4. Begun 26 February 1969, ended 23 May 1969.

5. $250.

6. Yes; $644.

7. No direct advertising campaign was conducted. The Vancouver Post Office requested local mailers to have their mailing lists rezoned.

8. No direct cost.

9. Until the study of the possible use of a postal code in Canada, now being organized, is completed and its results and recommendations are evaluated.

10. No. Customers are told they may use either zoning system.

THREE DIGIT ZONING

Question No. 2,412—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Which cities are zoned by a 3 digit zone system?

2. Is it possible that the 3 digit zone system now in force in these cities will be dropped as a result of the review of zoning systems suggested by the Minister of Communications on May 29?

3. For which 3 cities were changes in postal zones planned at the time of the Minister's suggestion of May 29 and what was the planned date of implementation in each case?

4. In which cities have advertising campaigns been undertaken to advise users of postal services of impending changes to a different postal zone system and at what cost in each city?

5. In which of these cities were clients of the Post Office advised to change letterheads and stationery to comply with the projected zones?

6. What was the response to these Post Office Department suggestions?

7. Is it the intention of the Post Office Department to determine which clients of the Post Office paid to have stationery printed to include changed postal zone numbers only to find that plans for implementation of the changed postal zone programmes cancelled or postponed?

8. Is it the intention of the Post Office Department to reimburse these clients of the Post Office for these expenditures?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned:
1. Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver.

2. Yes, but not probable. It is expected that, if a national postal code is adopted in Canada, existing 3 digit zone designations will be integrated into it.

3. Quebec, October 1, 1969; Vancouver, June 1, 1969; Ottawa, August 1, 1969.

4. Toronto, $72,785; London, $8,402.

5. Toronto, Vancouver and London.

6. The response was generally favourable.

7. No.

8. No. Use of either old or new zone numbers will be quite compatible with the Post Office mail processing procedures. There is no need for anyone to change a zone address designation on his stationery at this time.

TORONTO—CONTRACTS PRECEDING THREE DIGIT ZONING

Question No. 2,413—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Which companies were awarded contracts for advertizing campaigns preceding the scheduled introduction of the 3 digit zone programme for Metropolitan Toronto?

2. According to the contracts, how much was to be paid to the companies which were awarded contracts?

3. What were the terms of the contracts?

4. When was each of these contracts signed?

5. How much was actually paid to the companies awarded these contracts?

6 Who was responsible for the publication of the Toronto Zone Book and for the Toronto Metropolitan Zone Book?

7. Did any companies prematurely terminate advertizing the introduction of the 3 digit zone system on the grounds that a sufficient number of zone books were not available to the public in Metro Toronto?

8. Has the Post Office Department suspended or cancelled implementation of the rezoning programme and, if so, for how long?

9. What was the cost to the Post Office Department of planning the proposed 3 digit zone system for Toronto and (a) what was the cost of advertizing this proposed system (b) what was the cost of publishing the Toronto and Metropolitan Toronto zone books (c) what was the total cost to the Post Office of the proposed 3 digit zone programme for Toronto?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1. Foster Advertising Agency of Montreal which conducts the complete Post Office advertising program.

2. See answer to Item 5.

3. See answer to Item 5.

4. Not applicable.

5. No separate contract was entered into for zoning advertising which was included in the general advertising program. Payments were: Advertising, $60,785 (including 15 per cent commission to the agency); Production, approximately $12,000.

6. The Director of Information and Public Relations of the Post Office Department.

7. No.

8. Implementation of the zoning system has been temporarily suspended pending the completion of a study of the possible use of a national postal code in Canada.

9. Planning, $7,896; Advertising, $72,785; Publishing, $50,000; Total $130,681.

MOOSONEE EDUCATION CENTRE

Question No. 2,414—Mr. Roy (Timmins):

1. What were the last actual costs paid to the Province of Ontario on the basis of expenditures incurred for the following courses given at the Moosonee Education Centre: construction labourer, heavy equipment operator, hotel and hospital services?

2. Were the initial invoices submitted by the Province for these courses, identical to the actual costs paid or were they adjusted before payment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Payments:

	Interim	Settlement	Total
Fiscal Year 1967/68
Basic Training for Skill Development
Heavy Equipment Operator	6,480	5,395	11,874.77
	18,560	76,260	94,820.29
	25,040	81,655	106,695
	$
Fiscal Year 1968/69
Construction Labourer	15,360
Heavy Equipment Operator	28,800
Hotel and Hospital Services	11,520
	55,680

Questions

Contracts for the payment to a province of costs incurred for supplying courses under the Adult Occupational Training Act provide for: (a) interim payments each month based on the number of training places occupied in the previous month, and a per-student cost specified in a schedule to the contract, and (b) a final settlement which is determined by subtracting interim payments from total costs.

The province is required, within one year following the close of the fiscal year in which the costs were incurred, to submit a claim for the total costs of providing training. Provinces customarily submit such claims late in the ensuing fiscal year, covering all training supplied during the previous fiscal year. Because of this arrangement, total cost data are currently available only in respect of training conducted in the fiscal year 1967/68. In that year only two courses, Basic Training for Skill Development (16 students) and Heavy Equipment Operator (15 students) were provided at Moosonee.

2. For the fiscal year 1967/68 the province submitted its total cost claim, dated April 9, 1969, amounting to $106,695, and indicating a balance due from the federal government of $81,655. This amount was paid on 14 May, 1969. As previously agreed between the federal and provincial governments, payments are in all cases subject to any adjustment which may be required by subsequent federal audit.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT
PUBLIC RELATIONS

Question No. 2,422—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Post Office Department have a public relations staff and, if so, how many?
