ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—RED CROSS RELIEF—INTERGOVERNMENTAL DISCUSSIONS ON ACTION—ARMS SHIPMENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, now that mass starvation seems to be imminent in Nigeria as well as Biafra as a result of the forced withdrawal of the Red Cross, whether he can say if it is still the position of the Canadian government that all Canadian relief aid should be channelled through the Red Cross.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I am sure, like the Leader of the Opposition, other members of the house and all Canadians, we are deeply distressed by these recent events. From the news available to us, it appears that on both sides political and military considerations are taking precedence over the lives of innocent people. On Friday the Prime Minister sent a message to General Gowon of the F.M.G. in which he reminded the Nigerian head of state of the deep and continuing concern of the Canadian people for the innocent suffering as a result of the conflict.

We are consulting with other interested governments concerning what should be done under these circumstances. We have been in touch already with the Canadian Red Cross and this afternoon I shall be seeing a representative of Canairelief to discuss his views. We are, of course, not yet in a position to formulate our policy for the future because there are some elements of uncertainty which we would like to clarify first.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his general statement of position. I should like to ask him what action, if any, the government of Canada proposes to take in addition to these conversations with other countries, which should have been held a long time ago. What proposals is the government of Canada making to other countries with regard to this very depressing situation?

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the conversations that have been going on between the Canadian and Nigerian governments, we have been pressing upon the Nigerian government the importance of doing everything possible to facilitate relief. The house may recall that General Gowon had assured the Prime Minister's representative, who called on him some months ago, that he would authorize daylight flights. No response was received, from Biafra and it now appears that there are objections by both sides to daylight flights, except under very qualified conditions. In respect of what we can and would like to do in the future, the government again is looking at its policy.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer my question. I asked the minister whether the government of Canada is making any proposals in the course of its conversations with other countries to meet the very depressing situation. Is the government of Canada making any proposals and what are those proposals?

Mr. Sharp: What we would like, and what I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would like, is to have relief shipments resumed. This is the purpose of all our representations to the Nigerian authorities, to the Red Cross and to the other agencies concerned as well as other governments who share with us the burden of providing relief.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether, in the course of his consultations with other governments, he has discussed action through the United Nations on a humanitarian basis to relieve this horrendous situation or whether he has discussed with the governments of the United States and the United Kingdom as well as other interested governments a united front to protest against the affront to humanity involved in the kicking out of the Red Cross from Nigeria.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government has not as yet settled upon a course of action because, as I said earlier, there are some uncertainties still to be cleared up. It is not clear yet whether the Red Cross will be able to operate.

Until these are cleared up I do not think we can decide exactly what we should do. But so far as the Canadian government is concerned we want to do what the hon. gentleman suggested and what all members of this house and all the people in this country would like to do. We would like to do everything possible to see that innocent lives are not sacrificed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that many Canadians, as the minister says, are terribly interested in this vitally important matter, can he advise what if any channels are now available for aid from Canadians to this strife torn area.

Mr. Sharp: As I now understand the situation, at the present time neither the Biafrans nor the Nigerian authorities have been able to agree upon a procedure for sending relief by air. Discussions are still going on with regard to delivery by land and by sea but none of these has as yet resulted in an agreement between the two parties. So at the present time I cannot say whether or not the charity of the Canadian people can be made available to the people, of Biafra. There are facilities available to Nigeria.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether the Canadian government has as yet protested to the Nigerian government about the fact that the Red Cross has been expelled by the Nigerians from relief activities in the area.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I said on Friday the Prime Minister sent a very special message to General Gowon following up previous contacts with that government.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, in the meantime are the bold and brave countries of the world still supplying arms to Nigeria and Biafra while this inhumane tragedy unfolds?

Mr. Sharp: As the hon. gentleman knows, Canada is not supplying any arms, has protested publicly against this practice and has urged everyone to stop the supply of arms.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

STUDY BY INVESTMENT DEALERS OF TAKE-OVERS—REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT AND HOUSE COMMITTEE INQUIRY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It arises out of the statement he made earlier today in which he said his officials have been in touch with the Investment Dealers Association regarding the studies which that association is initiating. Can the minister give the house any idea how long this study is likely to take and whether or not any action by the government is contingent upon the receipt of the report arising out of this study?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The answer to the second part of the question is, not necessarily. The answer to the first part of the question is that I will consult with the Investment Dealers Association. At the moment, I do not have at my fingertips the length of time they expect to take. I should point out, as I did in my report, that they have indicated they will not, while their study is going on, agree to transactions which would involve further takeovers.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that any subsequent action taken by the government would have to be retroactive, to apply to Merrill, Lynch and Associates, and in view of the fact that some decision would have to be made fairly soon, has the minister set in his own mind some date at which a decision will be reached concerning government policy in respect of the takeover of Canadian financial institutions, and when he will be making that policy known to the house.

Mr. Benson: I should point out that the constitutional position of the government is that we cannot prevent companies incorporated in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and so on from being taken over by other companies except by some over-all legislation which is not in the process of being prepared at the present time. The action the government could take would be along the line of limiting access to the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister when he expects to reach a decision on this matter and whether he will be announcing it to the house.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Benson: As soon as possible and yes.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the widespread interest in this question and its importance, would the minister facilitate the establishment of a committee of the house to make a systematic inquiry in the key sectors of the economy which seem to be of vital importance in connection with Canadian control?

Mr. Benson: There is a committee of the house which I think would be appropriate for this purpose. The workload that committee has ahead of it in the immediate future is I think heavy, but I will certainly give attention to the suggestion.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): What attention will you give to its report?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—POSSIBILITY OF RENEWING EXTRADITION PROCEEDINGS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has been conferring for the past two months with the Secretary of State for the United States regarding the extradition of Hal Banks. Can he bring the house up to date as to the results achieved by those conversations, up to and including his talk with the secretary of state in Washington last week?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in the situation.

Mr. Hees: How long does the Secretary of State believe this delaying action will protect Mr. Banks from the law and the government from the embarrassment of revelations about contributions to the Liberal party, which he will undoutedly make when he comes back to Canada? Is there no answer?

An hon. Member: There was no question.

Mr. Hees: Perhaps I should direct that supplementary question to the Minister of Justice who has a vital interest, Mr. Speaker.

LAYING OF CHARGES IN OFFENCES INVOLVING USE OF L.S.D.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question of national importance which affects the youth of our nation, particularly those who have been visiting national parks in Canada. There has been a considerable amount of trafficking in a new chemical which contains l.s.d. and dozens of young people over the holiday were on various "trips", involving lawlessness in Banff and other places in Canada. Can the minister now assure us that the new act is in force, so that this chemical will be covered, enabling the police to lay charges against those traffickers and thereby protect the youth of our nation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are provisions in the amendments to the Narcotics Control Act and the Food and Drugs Act to which royal assent was given last Friday which will provide law enforcement authorities with some effective control over the distribution and use of l.s.d.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to ask a supplementary question because the information I have is that more than 100 youths were affected in Banff. Will the minister take it upon himself, through his department, to carry out an investigation in Banff to make certain that this new chemical which contains large amounts of l.s.d. is covered by the new law in order that the youth will be protected?

Mr. Turner: I am looking to my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare for confirmation of what I have said. The new substance which has been drawn to the attention of the hon. member for Calgary North containing l.s.d. was the cause of some concern both to the Department of National Health and Welfare and to the Department of Justice for some time. It is covered. I would imagine that the administration of justice on a daily basis in these two national parks would now best be left to the Attorney General of Alberta.

[Later:]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When I was replying to the hon. member for Calgary North I may have misled him in my final reference to the provincial attorney-general. The hon. member knows that prosecutions under the Narcotic Control Act and the Food and Drugs Act are undertaken by the federal Attorney-General.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

MEDICARE—DISCONTINUANCE OF EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTION IN PROVINCES IMPLEMENTING PLAN

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether he can advise the house that a decision was taken and has been implemented by the government to discontinue its employer's contribution to the cost of basic health programs under G.S.M.I.P. in the case of members of the public service of Canada residing in any province which is implementing the federal medicare plan on a compulsory annual fee basis, such as in Alberta?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is a quite complicated question and I will take it as notice.

RESEARCH

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF SCIENCE POLICY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in view of the discussions the President of the Treasury Board has had recently with the examiners from O.E.C.D. who pointed out the lack of research and development in Canada and indicated that multi-national control of much of Canadian industry is responsible for it, and in view of the statement made by the Science Council regarding its dissatisfaction with our science and research development program, will the minister make a statement to the house about government policy in the field of science before the house rises for summer recess?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure there will be an occasion within the time limit to do this. I will point out that three of the assumptions made by the hon. gentleman appear to be wrong. In the first place, the Science Council of Canada is not dissatisfied with the quality but rather the quantity or quantum of research and development in this country. The O.E.C.D. examiners likewise were not dissatisfied with the quality or, even to some degree, the quantity. In their view we were doing a satisfactory job on a relative basis in relation to other countries at which they looked. I repeat, I do not know that there will be an occasion to make such a statement, but if there is I will be glad to do so because I think this is a very important topic, indeed.

Mr. Lewis: I was not suggesting anything about the quality in respect of dissatisfaction. We are all talking about the amount which is being spent and the amount of research and development being done in Canada. May I ask the President of the Treasury Board whether the government is reducing or refusing to increase, which ever may be the case, its appropriations for research and development, and whether as a result of that there is a likelihood of loss of scientific personnel to Canada in this area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the hon. member is of very wide scope. I allowed the first question because the hon. member was asking whether a statement would be made on motions. I suggest the matter should not be pursued from there.

AIRPORTS

OTTAWA—LANDING FEES CHARGED AT UPLANDS

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is of an urgent nature. Is the Minister of Transport aware that as a result of non-competitive landing fees charged by his department and assessed against international flights, air carriers have cancelled their intention to use Uplands airport as a refuelling stop, resulting in extensive loss of revenue to the local economy?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the allegations. I am not at all sure they are correct, but I will be glad to look into them and make a detailed report to the hon. member.

GRAIN

BOX CARS REQUIRED FOR DELIVERY OF MINIMUM QUOTA

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister of Transport had any assurance from the railway companies that they will be able to provide the necessary box cars to enable all grain producers in western Canada to deliver a minimum five bushel quota before the end of the crop year which ends the 31st of this month?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I do not know that I can answer the question categorically, Mr. Speaker. I can say that this is a matter which involves both my department and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. We are having conversations daily with the railway companies with a view to bringing about the result to which the hon. member has referred.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister will discuss this matter with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and report to the house before the end of the week?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TORTURING OF GREEK POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the Canadian government will look into the detailed report smuggled out of Greece, and presented to the Commission on Human Rights in Strasbourg, which indicates that 15 women political prisoners in that country were tortured by Greek officials? If it is discovered that the report is authentic, will the government take the appropriate action to denounce this inhumanity which is quite inconsistent with the principles of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the United Nations, to which both Canada and Greece belong?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I can answer the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, but the second part is hypothetical. I will certainly investigate the charges that have been made.

AGRICULTURE

DAMAGE TO FARM ECONOMY THROUGH ESCALATION OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he received a telegram from the 80,000 member Saskatchewan Wheat Pool in the last few days to the effect that escalating interest rates are seriously damaging the farm economy and that money required for agricultural productive purposes should be made available at lower cost? If he did, what was the minister's reply to this important representation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I have not received the telegram, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

DOGFISH—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN AND JAPANESE OFFICIALS

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, can the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry tell the house whether the subject of dogfish and their disposition, is on the agenda of current meetings in British Columbia between the Minister of Fisheries and Japanese officials?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure this is a matter of urgency. If it is, perhaps the hon. member would like to return at ten o'clock this evening.

Mr. Perrault: Ten o'clock.

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—LICENSING OF FOREIGN VESSELS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries, notice of which has been given. It concerns the position taken by the Department of Fisheries, which is having a very detrimental effect on revenues in the port of St. John's, and arises out of licences which the department has authority to issue to foreign vessels to use Canadian ports.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would like to join the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour and return, not tonight but tomorrow night.

PRICE STABILITY, INCOMES AND EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—SITTINGS DURING RECESS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and concerns government order No. 91 standing in his name. Does the government intend to proceed with the establishment of the Parliamentary Committee on Price Stability, Incomes and Employment before the adjournment of the session, so that this committee can sit during the recess?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council answered this question some days ago.

Mrs. MacInnis: I wonder whether the minister would repeat his answer, Mr. Speaker, because we missed it over here.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MAINTENANCE OF PASSENGER SERVICE STANDARD

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport with respect to the question asked last week by the right hon. member for Prince Albert regarding the lack of facilities and services on Canadian National Railways. I received representations over the weekend with regard to this matter. Is the minister now in a position to give the house a statement as to what Canadian National Railways intend to do about this deplorable situation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have initiated inquiries with the railways. They are both preparing answers, and I hope to have them to pass on to the house later this week.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

NATURAL GAS—ANNOUNCED PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has his attention been drawn to the announced increase of about 20 per cent in the price of natural gas as a result of increased shipments to the United States? If the minister's attention has been drawn to this matter, does he intend to refer it to the prices and incomes commission?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I have not noticed the reports, Mr. Speaker. I will be happy to look into them. I think this is a matter which properly falls within the purview of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I will bring it to his attention.

Mr. Saltsman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's responsibility for consumer prices in Canada and the serious effect that such an increase would have on consumer prices generally, is it the minister's intention to make representations before the National Energy Board?

Mr. Basford: I would like to look at the reports first, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

ADEQUACY OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FERRY SERVICE

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the serious tie-up in ferry traffic over the holiday weekend between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, is the department now prepared to put on sufficient crews to properly man the boats which should be operating, instead of their being tied up at the docks?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at the time the arrangements were made in this respect I gave an assurance that if it should develop that changes were necessary, we would be very pleased to look into them. If there be need to implement them, I undertake again to do that.

HARBOURS

CHURCHILL, MAN.—TOUR OF PORT FACILITIES BY RUSSIAN DELEGATION

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Hudson Bay Route Association has requested that a Russian delegation, including senior officials of the Russian ministry of marine presently touring ports in the St. Lawrence area, also be shown the port facilities at Churchill, is the minister prepared to arrange for such a tour?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubts whether the question can be asked at this time.

FISHERIES

DAMAGE TO EQUIPMENT CAUSED BY DRAGGERS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries. Would he advise whether the minister has received a report from his officials regarding draggers interfering with the operations of fishermen in northwestern Newfoundland, and if so, could he advise what action the minister is undertaking?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer this question now, so that I do not have to answer it at ten o'clock. We have received a report from the Department of Fisheries vessel m.v. Garria Bay which is on duty in the area. The captain has reported to our district director in the area that they have been patrolling at night when the draggers have been endangering the nets of fishermen. There has been very little interference, if any. Our district director is going up there this weekend to make personal contact with the people who have made the complaints. We should have a further report at that time.

FINANCE

DISCUSSION OF INTEREST RATES WITH CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Can the minister report to the house the results of the meetings he was to hold with the chartered banks near the end of June concerning interest rate levels and monetary matters?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the meeting was a private one. The matter of interest rates has been referred to a parliamentary committee. I trust that representatives of the banks will be appearing before that committee, as well as the governor of the Bank of Canada and other witnesses.

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was the prime loan rate of 8½ per cent announced last Friday, one of the results of that meeting?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—MANAGEMENT AT MAPLE LEAF GARDENS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister completed the investigation of Harold Ballard and Stafford Smythe and their relationship to Maple Leaf Gardens? If so, what charges, if any, will be laid?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This also is a question which might very well be considered and debated at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Gilbert: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ESTABLISHMENT OF INFORMATION AGENCIES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board concerning one of his investigative stepchildren, the task force on information. Can he advise whether this task force recommended the establishment of a network of local information agencies across the country, and has the government come to any conclusion on this important matter?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the report of the task force is not, of course, made to me. However, I have read the same newspaper article as the hon. member and I think it appears from that article that the task force has not yet completed its report.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will it be the intention of the government to make the report public when it is presented?

Mr. Drury: As I mentioned the other day, Mr. Speaker, it would not necessarily be my decision whether or not it should be made public. Until such time as the report is received, it will be difficult to decide whether it should be made public.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ENSURE SAFETY MEASURES

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the coroner's jury recommendation concerning the C.N.R. derailment near Toronto that there be a replacement of locking devices on railways switches because of the inadequacy of present devices, and their recommendation for an increase in inspections of the track in the New Woodbine area, has the minister initiated any action to ensure that positive steps are taken to implement these recommendations?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated in the house on a number of occasions the actions that have been taken with regard to the whole question of rail line safety. These are being pursued in the manner I outlined.

Mr. Skoberg: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the recommendations of the coroner's jury in this regard, has the minister taken positive action in this direction?

[Later:]

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Privy Council. Could he indicate to the house whether or not he intends to call for discussion item No. 68 on the order paper regarding the cancellation of the Newfoundland passenger rail service and the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): We have announced the two remaining items to be dealt with in the balance of the session before the summer adjournment and we will stick by that announcement.

TERMINATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND SERVICE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. As this is the last day of rail passenger service in the province of Newfoundland,—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McGrath: —and as the government has decided to go against the unanimous wish of the people of Newfoundland by disallowing a number of appeals against this decision—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot make a speech; he can only ask a question.

Mr. McGrath: I was merely trying to preface my question, Mr. Speaker. My question to the Minister of Transport, who delivered the coup de grâce yesterday on behalf of the government, is this: Is it now government policy to abandon all rail passenger services in Canada that are not a paying proposition?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Of course the hon. member is asking the minister to make a general statement on policy. The question as asked is not in order.

INCOME TAX

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF REFUNDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the very widespread impression that tax refunds are much slower than usual this year, I ask whether it is the policy of the department to slow up the payment of these refunds or withhold them in order to preserve the cash position of the government?

Official Languages

CONSUMER CREDIT

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF TRUTH-IN-LENDING LEGISLATION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and I think that this one is really for him. Now that the truth-in-lending bill has become law in the United States, enabling consumers to know at the outset exactly what their credit purchase will cost, and in view of the fact that a Senate-House of Commons committee recommended such legislation for Canada in February, 1967, does the government plan to introduce such legislation to protect consumers and if so, when?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, most provinces have already enacted truth-in-lending legislation. Some two years ago the regulations under the Bank Act were amended to provide truth-in-lending under the act. There were further discussions on this subject at the last federal-provincial conference on consumer affairs two months ago, and there seemed to be very little suggestion at that time that there needed to be amendments in the existing structure of the truth-in-lending legislation.

Mrs. MacInnis: I have a supplementary question. I think the minister missed my second "in view of", that is in view of the fact that the Senate-House of Commons committee recommended such legislation for Canada in February of 1967, does the government plan to introduce such legislation to protect consumers, and if so, when?

Mr. Basford: It seems, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the supplementary question is argumentative.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISION RESPECTING STATUS AND USE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.

The house resumed from Friday, June 27, consideration of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported, (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill and motion No. 6 (Mr. Baldwin).

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, when this matter was last debated we were discussing the amendment to clause 38 in the name of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). We are in favour of the principle of clause 38 which safeguards the effects which the act might have on the rights and privileges of all languages other than the two official languages. But on examining carefully the original clause 38 and the amendment, we came to the conclusion that the original clause was broader in scope and more satisfactory than the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River.

I find myself somewhat embarrassed at entering into a legal discussion with the hon. member for Peace River, and I can assure the house that I will not prolong the legal aspect of the discussion. I would like to point out that clause 38, as presented by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and approved by the special committee, provides that nothing in the act shall be construed as derogating from or diminishing in any way any legal or customary right or privilege with respect to any language that is not an official language. The house will note the words "legal or customary right" and the addition of the words "or privilege". The amendment of the hon. member for Peace River, however, refers to the right to speak a language other than either of the two official languages and says that right shall not be restricted in its natural development in any way.

It will be observed that the words "legal and customary" are not included in the amendment, nor is any reference to the privileges that may have developed in relation to languages other than the two official languages. Lawyers and legal experts have been discussing for many centuries and in many volumes the precise meaning of the word "right" as against "privilege", and the refinements of what constitutes rights and what constitutes privileges. However that may be, it appears fairly obvious to us that the addition of the word "privilege" may widen the scope, and the omission of this word may narrow the scope of this very healthy and worthwhile clause. I think all members of the house unanimously agree that the clause seeks to protect the rights of those who speak a third language. It is also to be noted that the amendment refers to the right to speak one language only. There may well be, and probably are, broader rights with regard to language than merely the right to speak a language. Once again, it seems to us that the amendment, or the interpretation we put on it at any rate, is a restriction rather than an expansion of the original section. For that reason, we reject it.

In our view there is another difficulty with the proposed amendment to clause 38 which refers to the right to speak a language other than either of the two official languages, which shall not be restrained or restricted in its natural development in any way. I do not know whether the hon. member for Peace River explained this when I was not present in the house, although I do not think so, but we are puzzled by what is meant by the development of a language in a natural way. I hear a voice from the back giving me some advice, but I could not understand it. In any event, it is our view—much as we agree with the general sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Peace River and our colleagues over here—that clause 38 as originally drafted is preferable in form, broader and less restrictive than the amendment. For that reason we cannot support the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity given me during the debate on this very important legislation—on the official languages, Bill C-120—to make a few remarks on amendment to clause 38.

Clause 38 is designed to guarantee the rights and privileges of languages spoken by Canadians who are neither of English nor of French origin.

I think I understand very well the feelings of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I also received from several Canadians letters expressing their doubts and their fears in that respect.

Mr. Speaker, clause 38 drafted and introduced in this house by the government says:

> Nothing in this Act shall be construed as derogating from or diminishing in any way any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Act with respect to any language that is not an official language.

[English]

There were celebrations commemorating Canadian confederation yesterday and during the weekend preceding July 1, and I am sure many members have taken part in many interesting, exciting and stimulating events. I have come to this chamber fresh from Toronto where yesterday, and the whole of the last weekend, we have had a very stimulating and exciting time. During that time, thousands of Canadians viewed the exhibits in metropolitan Toronto's international caravan. This caravan displayed the arts and crafts of Canadians of various ethnic origins. More than 33 so-called "world cities" showed us the richness of the Canadian mosaic. I have had the privilege of speaking to many of the participants and organizers of this caravan, and I should like publicly to express words of commendation to the people of the Community Folk Arts Council who organized this event. In particular, I should like to mention Mr. John Fisher, Mr. Leon Kossar and Stephen Vojtech who were among the animators of this exciting event, which showed to all of Canada the rich cultures which this country possesses. It was very different from the dull celebrations which took place in Ottawa yesterday as reported by the Canadian Press in one of the Toronto daily newspapers. I think, for example, that the program which took place in the National Arts Centre did not reflect the multicultural, pluralistic Canada which exists. I think too the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) would do well to find out all the circumstances under which this program was organized.

Let me state that I support the principle of Bill C-120 which will make English and French the official languages in matters having to do with the parliament of Canada, the courts and the public service, as well as federal agencies serving the Canadian people. I think this bill is long overdue and that Canadians of English and French origins might have expected such a measure a long time ago. However, many doubts and fears about this bill have been expressed by Canadians of other than English and French origins. They would like more assurances from the government as far as the future of their languages and cultures are concerned. There is a danger that while avoiding the United States melting-pot we might fall into another disaster, that of two melting-pots. I think it is the duty of the Secretary of State to enunciate what is really the policy of the Canadian government as far as the development of Canadian culture is concerned.

Today, 30 per cent of Canadians are neither of French nor English origin. They have contributed tremendously to the development of the nation. Their children and their grandchildren of tomorrow will be citizens of this country, and they have the right to expect a statement of policy as far as their mother languages and cultures are concerned. In my view, more attention should be paid to the development and preservation of the languages and cultures of Canadians who are not of English or French origin. All too often the assistance which comes from the Department of the Secretary of State amounts to a pittance in terms of the promotion of ethnic cultures. I should like to appeal at this stage of the debate to the Secretary of State to reassure all Canadians as to the development of a cultural policy.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the hon. member a question? I take it from his remarks that he is in sympathy with the amendment we are discussing. I should like to ask him whether he intends to support it.

Mr. Haidasz: I am awaiting further assurance from the Secretary of State with regard to the development, preservation and promotion of the other cultures and languages. I realize that the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism has not made its report on the other languages and cultures in this country. However, in order to dispel the fears and doubts expressed by some Canadians, I hope it will be possible for us in this chamber to hear from the Secretary of State once again the assurance he has given in other places.

Mr. Aiken: I appreciate the hon. member's forthright answer.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I can be very brief in my remarks this afternoon. May I indicate at the outset that I am heartily in favour of the amendment to clause 38 which has been advanced by my hon. friend from Peace River. It is one with which I am sure every member who understand the mosaic aspect of Canadian cultural and linguistic development will sympathize. Indeed, I would like to have put forward the amendment myself.

Listening to the hon. member who has just spoken, I thought his remarks could fairly be interpreted as an endorsation of the amendment. One of the unhappy aspects of the debate so far has been the government's reluctance to accept any amendments either from its own supporters or from members of the opposition dealing with the more discriminatory features of the bill. These shortcomings have been brought out in earlier contributions which I have made to the discussion. However, from the point of view of the new Canadianism which operates with particular force in the western provinces, and in some of the larger metropolitan communities, little has been done by legislative action to remove those discriminatory features from the legislation.

I feel that the amendment proposed by my hon. friend would have this effect. Clause 38, in its original form, says that nothing shall be done to derogate from or diminish in any way any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this act with respect to any language which is not an official language. At the same time, the clause does nothing in a positive sense to recognize what has become a major fact of life in our Canadian mosaic. I refer to the enrichment that has come from the recognition of the contribution of new Canadians from many countries of Europe, indeed from many parts of the world, and also of the creative force that they have contributed in making Canada a nation which over the years has been the cynosure of hope from the standpoint of goodwill and tolerance.

The amendment proposed accentuates the positive and not the negative. Perhaps I can indicate how this is so and how the original clause 38 is improved immensely. Clause 38(2) as proposed in amended form reads:

> The Governor in Council may by order in council enter into an agreement with the government of any province which has been authorized by legislation so to do, for the purpose of encouraging natural development of any such minority language especially as regards the use of such language in matters of education.

In other words, the amendment is suggesting not only that there be the negative stance of doing nothing to remove what has been achieved thus far; it also includes the positive approach, namely that there be official encouragement in the bill of the further development of the cultural and linguistic mosaic that has become a distinctive part of many sections of Canada, particularly, as I have already indicated, western Canada and the large metropolitan, urban communities.

Perhaps one of the most dynamic communities in this regard is the city of Toronto, which since the end of world war II has become one of the great centres of cultural diversity in this nation. The hon. member who has just spoken referred to the dynamism of this new spirit of Canadianism that marked the celebrations in that city as recently as yesterday.

I am afraid that the government of Canada, as it exists at the present time, is not at all cognizant of this important fact in Canadian cultural development. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), in speeches that he has made on these matters over the past few months, has referred to cultural deserts that exist in various parts of Canada. That is a phrase that is very heavily laden, of course, with value judgment. There has never been any indication of what parts of Canada are included in the minister's designation as cultural deserts. There is a strong feeling in western Canada that theirs is the area that has been described in such discriminatory terms by the Secretary of State. I think I can say that with some justification, following the events that took place just a week ago in the province of Manitoba. It was quite obvious that the good citizens of Manitoba, a province that enjoys a cultural diversity that is second to none in Canada, was not in agreement with the stance, the posture and the program of the government of Canada with respect to the recognition of the cultural rights of that part of this country, or for that matter in agreement with the more basic issue, of course, that of the economic rights of the province of Manitoba.

The city of Winnipeg is one of the larger urban centres of Canada. There, we have a bicultural and bilingual community that has existed on the banks of the Red River almost since the beginning of confederation. But in the midst of this bilingual and bicultural community we also have this new fact of Canadian confederation, the Canadian mosaic that is now recognized by almost everybody, except this government, as one of the most progressive and hopeful aspects of our continuing progress toward national unity. In the city of Winnipeg as well as in rural parts of Manitoba there are radio stations broadcasting in other languages, such as German and Ukrainian. This is in response to the demand of a large segment of the population of Manitoba for the preservation of their rights in this respect. The ethnic communities concerned have voluntarily paid the expenses incurred in preserving their cultural identity.

In Manitoba there is also a strong ethnic press that has been thriving to a growing extent as a result of the onward march of this mosaic concept. This ethnic press recently suffered a severe economic setback, one which extends across the board to weekly newspapers and other publications of this kind, inasmuch as the new postal rates for small publications of this sort were set so high that it will be difficult for the ethnic press to survive.

This is where the discrimination, of which the government does not even seem to be aware, arises. On the one hand, the government provides cultural assistance to English and French-speaking minority groups wherever they exist in Canada; on the other hand, the government completely ignores, and in fact discriminates against, the efforts of the other ethnic groups to preserve their own identity as a creative force in the great Canadian cultural and linguistic mosaic.

As I have already indicated, subsection (2) of clause 38 as proposed in this amendment accentuates the positive. It makes legislative provision for encouraging this development, rather than merely taking a status quo approach to the question. Not being a lawyer, I am not too sure of the meaning of the term "status quo" but I once heard a definition to the effect that status quo was Latin for the mess we are in. I am not sure whether that is the correct definition. Be that as it may this proposed subsection does not take a static approach but rather a dynamic approach. As I have said, if the government has been unaware of the cultural dynamism that exists in Manitoba and the other western provinces, I am sure that the message has come through loud and clear as a result of the events of last Wednesday. The Liberal Party in the province of Manitoba has been sunk almost without trace, as it deserved to be under the circumstances.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What about the other parties?

Mr. Dinsdale: I hear a comment from across the way, what about the other parties? I presume the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is referring to the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am just suggesting that the undertaker also got buried.

Mr. Dinsdale: I thought they did quite well under the circumstances. As a matter of fact, the New Democratic Party is doing exceedingly well these days. There have been further defections from the Liberal to the New Democratic Party of which the hon. minister might not be aware. One of the leading Liberals in that province—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I think he is far from the subject of the amendment before the house.

Mr. Lewis: He is more interesting though, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I was merely trying to clarify the interjection by the Minister of Justice in relation to a very important event that took place in Manitoba last week.

There is a very fundamental point I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members of this house with respect to the cultural rights of Canadians across the country. I refer, of course, to the basic rights of our first Canadians, the Indians and Eskimos. I refer to them at this time, Mr. Speaker, because a statement was made in the house within recent days to the effect that the Liberal Government in Ottawa intends to completely ignore their responsibilities in this respect. Over the relatively short period of five years, they are going to hand over to the provinces the responsibility for looking after the long neglected rights of the Indians. Bearing this in mind, I think the amendment before the house becomes all the more important. It provides the legislative authority for the government in Ottawa to encourage the natural development of any minority language, especially in so far as the use of such language relates to education at the provincial level. I believe this is perhaps the most telling argument I can use in urging the hon. members who support the government to vote for the amendment which would remove some of the more discriminatory aspects of the clause as it applies to other minorities in this country.

This is my final word on the matter at this stage. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been criticizing the press for failing to get the message through to the people of Canada. I suppose this would be his explanation of what happened in Manitoba last week. Someone has said, I think with a good deal of wisdom, that it is not the medium that is at fault so far as government action is concerned, it is the message. I trust the message has been received loud and clear and that we will have the support of the Minister of Justice, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) and all of their colleagues in removing this element of discrimination which is causing a growing feeling of alienation in western Canada and is leading to a protest that can only be compared to that which existed in the 1920's and 1930's.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with the amendment posed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). As I read his amendment, it has two objects. The first is to provide a written guarantee in the statute that the natural development of any language other than an official language shall not be restrained or restricted. The hon. member uses the words "restrained" and "restricted". The second object of the amendment as I read it is to assist the provinces in encouraging natural development of any such minority language, that is to say any language other than English or French especially with regard to the use of such language in the matter of education.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

From the tenure of the speeches of the hon. members for Peace River, Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) and now the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), the amendment is put forth in the belief, and this is the allegation of the hon. members who spoke, that minority groups in this country which are not of British or French origin feel that somehow they are being discriminated against by the provisions of the official languages bill.

This amendment is very similar in form and content to the one proposed before the special committee by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk). As hon. members know, at that time we dealt with it very thoroughly and the arguments relevant and pertaining to the amendment were discussed. In order to deal with it on the floor of the house, I have to repeat some of the words I addressed to the special committee.

When I was in western Canada negotiating with the western Attorneys-General, and on other occasions, I found great concern. I believe this concern is largely as a result of misunderstanding of what this bill is really about. There is great concern that the bill discriminates against those seven million or eight million people who are of neither English or French stock, and that this in effect sets up a type of second class citizenship. I said in committee, and it was expressed in far more eloquent terms before the special committee by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), that this bill in no way alters the relationship of citizenship in this country. As far as this government is concerned there is and always will be, and certainly this is not being altered by the bill itself, only one class of citizen in this country.

Those who have come to this country from other nations as immigrants have found themselves in a position where they have had to accept the facts as they exist. Those who have come from Europe, Asia and other continents find that there are two languages in general circulation and having general recognition in official and governmental circles. Depending on the part of the country into which they immigrate, they choose either English or French. The riding that I held before it was redistributed out of existence by the commissioners prior to the last election, Montreal-St. Lawrence-St. George, in which the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) grew up when he first came to this country, had at least 45 different language groups. Depending on the language, depending on the associations of the parents and the traditions of a group within the Canadian context, immigrants and their children opted for either English or French.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Most of the Italian community in Montreal opted for French. Practically all of the Greek community opted for English. Of those Canadians of Polish origin, some opted for English and some for French. The same applied to those Canadians of Hungarian origin. In other parts of Canada, and particularly western Canada, the great wave of immigration that populated the west and contributed to making Canada a great country, opted for the English language. The problem is that this is the way the immigrants found the country. This is the way the country is, and there is nothing in the bill or in institutional bilingualism which in any way deprives any of these groups of their own language, or their cultural and community traditions. As a matter of fact, in order to make that perfectly clear clause 38 of the bill is quite categoric:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed as derogating from or diminishing in any way any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this act with respect to any language that is not an official language.

The wording in this clause is deliberate. I want to say, in the strongest terms to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), that we accept the fact that his amendment is a sincere attempt to meet the problem that its sponsor sees of reassuring those groups in Canada that are neither of French nor British origin, but through you, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to him that the wording he submits does not achieve any improvement upon clause 38. On the contrary, we have the feeling that the wording proposed by the hon. member for Peace River would inhibit, restrict and curtail rather than enhance the provisions of clause 38.

The problem is that in an attempt to reassure the groups which the sponsors say feel are discriminated against, the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River may raise the very questions that it attempts to resolve. The first paragraph of the amendment reads:

> The right to speak a language other than either of the two official languages shall not be restrained or restricted—

This implies that there is something restricted at the moment, that there are present restrictions in being, and the inference in the amendment is that there may be some restrictions that do not exist at the moment. On the other hand, clause 38 as it now stands is quite categoric and positive in saying that no right, no custom, no privilege, whether enshrined in the law or not, shall in any way be diminished or derogated from by the coming into force of this bill.

I pose this question to the house: Would the amendment proposed cover the present recognition of the right of a person to the assistance of an interpreter if he does not understand or speak the language of a court before which he appears? Certainly, it is more doubtful under the wording of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River than it is under clause 38.

As the hon. member for York South said of this aspect of the amendment in the special committee, and I hope he will pardon me if I quote him:

> I suggest to him—

That is to the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk).

> —that the language of the present clause 38 is much wider and it provides much better protection than his subclause (1) for precisely the kind of thing he has in mind. I am confident that the present clause 38 gives much more protection because it is not limited in any way.

Clause 38 is a blanket provision because it does not imply, as the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River does, that there may be present restrictions, and we believe that the purposes sought by the hon. member for Peace River and the other sponsors of the amendment would be better obtained under the categorical provisions of clause 38.

Let us look at the second object of the amendment which is to authorize the Governor in Council, by order in council, to enter into an agreement with the government of any province for the purpose of encouraging the natural development of what is called a minority language which, within the definition of the amendment, is a language other than French or English.

Mr. Lewis: After the province has passed legislation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): After the province has passed legislation. First of all, we believe this paragraph of the amendment is out of context in that the bill deals with official languages and this amendment deals with those languages that are not official. Further, it contemplates federal legislation in a matter dealing with education which might well, if spelled out within the context of this bill, involve us in a constitutional problem.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is always open to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), in the course of the administration of his department, to enter into an agreement to enhance the natural development of any cultural or minority group in this country. We believe that imposing this type of structure goes beyond the scope of the bill and would trespass in rather specific terms on educational matters.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will be finished in about 30 seconds. If this legislation receives the approval of the house, we count on the co-operation of hon. members to dispel any misunderstanding, particularly in western Canada, that there is anything discriminatory in its provisions relating to any cultural or language group in this country. We believe that clause 38 grants a blanket, over-all, complete protection to any Canadian in this country whose mother tongue is neither English nor French, and does it in a positive, categorical way, whereas the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River is more restrictive, is narrower, might well trespass on difficult constitutional ground and would not achieve the results he hopes to achieve but rather would provoke more questions than answers.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): I would like to ask a question relating to the second part of the amendment.

Does the minister want to suggest that the federal government would interfere in an area of provincial jurisdiction, namely education, were a province to decide the adoption of legislation relating to education, and more precisely to languages other than French and English? Would the federal government interfere directly in the field of education if, after such legislation is passed, it were to conclude agreements in order to help that province offer to other minorities a better education in a language which is neither English nor French? Is the minister of the opinion that such action on the part of the federal government would amount to interference in a provincial jurisdiction, since the provincial legislation would already have been passed?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): That depends again on the terms of the agreement between the province and the federal government. I cannot anticipate all the circumstances, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a question because many members of parliament have received letters from Canadian Indians whose native tongue is not one of the official languages. Some of these people, particularly in the province of Quebec, are concerned because rightly or wrongly the missionary penetration in these areas has been by English speaking people, so they speak their native tongue and the English language but do not speak French. They are a little worried about this. In view of the terms of this bill and the fact that the affairs of the Indians are being turned over holus-bolus, to the provinces, they are concerned that perhaps there is to be a different kind of penetration in this area.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is a good question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The question is so hypothetical I have difficulty answering it.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is not hypothetical to the Indians.

Mr. Woolliams: The minister says it is hypothetical, but with the greatest respect I say the Indians do not think that. Does the minister expect that an Indian who speaks a native tongue would have to change to English or French, particularly the senior Indians? Is there any thought that they will have to switch languages?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If I remember and understand the declaration of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), I believe he suggested a good deal of consultation between the federal government and the provinces and between the federal government and the Indian bands will be required. But so far as I know, that consideration did not enter into the government's deliberations.

Mr. Dinsdale: Obviously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is the house ready for the question? Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those in favour of the said motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75 the recorded vote on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house would consider reverting to the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), which was deferred because it was thought advisable to proceed with the other motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North) moved:

That Bill C-120, An Act respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be amended by inserting therein, next following clause 34 thereof, the following new clause:

34A. Where an individual, department or institution is aggrieved by a report or recommendation of the Commissioner, or by a decision made by him or other person or authority acting upon his report or recommendation, the individual, department or institution may appeal in respect of such report or recommendation on a finding of fact, a question of law or a matter of the merits to a superior court of record within thirty days after the individual, department or institution is first informed of the report or recommendation; the court may proceed by way of hearing or review and shall make such order therein as the court deems just and such order shall be final.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before commencing the main argument in respect of my motion I should like to request two small changes in the drafting of the amendment. In the fifth line where it reads "in respect of such report or recommendation" I should like to add the words "and decision". Also, in the eighth line where it reads "informed of the report or recommendation" I should like to add the words "and decision". This would mean that there would be an appeal in respect of the report, recommendation and decision. I wonder whether the house would allow this change.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I shall come immediately to grips with my amendment. It adds a new subclause to clause 34 to cover the following points. Where a Canadian citizen, a department of the federal government, an agency of the government or an institution, which means a Crown corporation or ordinary corporation—private enterprise—feel themselves aggrieved, I believe there should be an appeal when the commissioner makes a report in a particular area and makes a decision as a result of the report. In other words, I feel that where an individual or executive of a department or any agency of the government or any Crown corporation feel themselves aggrieved by a decision made by the all-powerful commissioner, they should have the right of appeal. I think this would affect the rights of Canadian minorities, even the French Canadians, more than English Canadians. I should like particularly to come to grips with what the minister said in his argument.

• (4:40 p.m.)

When he was dealing with the powers of this almighty commissioner, the minister said, as recorded at page 367 of the committee report:

The commissioner is merely an investigator and therefore there would be no reason for an appeal.

All during the minister's speech today he was flattering another member of parliament, and he got some support from the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) in that regard. I should like to read two quotations from the very able speech delivered by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid), which appear at page 10347 of Hansard of June 17.

He was dealing with this subject of appeal and he said:

It is not necessary, Mr. Speaker, for me to stress the importance of this official who is to be the commissioner of our official languages. What I think I should stress is the importance of our having some control over this man who is charged with such an important task. The way he performs that task will affect the destiny of Canada and touch the lives of a great many Canadians. It is in this area that I take exception to this bill. I take exception to the power that parliament has vested in this one man who is to be the commissioner of languages.

Later, on the same page we find this:

I know that the government spokesman in the committee said that the commissioner is not conducting a court, and I agree it is not a court.

I am going to show that I agree it is not a court, but I also intend to show that his powers are as great as, if not greater than, any court in the land. In fact, they are certainly greater than those of the Chief Justice of Canada. The hon. member for Cardigan then said:

But I do not agree that the powers of the commissioner are quite as frivolous or trivial as the minister would have us believe. I should like to put on the record a statement made by the Minister of Justice during the hearings on this bill in committee, as reported at page 367 of report No. 5. This is what the minister said the commissioner is empowered to do:

"The commissioner is an investigator."

The hon. member then made a comment and went on to quote the minister as follows:

"He proceeds in a purely administrative fashion; his object is not to prosecute or lay charges, or to assess blame or guilt. His job is simply to ensure that the departments of governments, as institutions, are fulfilling the purposes and the spirit of this proposed act. It is not his function to decide or to adjudicate upon the rights or obligations of any individual. It is just not his duty and not in his power."

I was not a member of that committee, although I did appear on several occasions. The hon. member for Cardigan then continued as follows:

I should like to compare that with the statement made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) when he appeared before the same committee and spoke of the powers of the commissioner. This is what the Secretary of State had to say as reported at page 35 of report No. 1:

"The specific task of the official languages commissioner, as I see it, is to make sure that the provisions of the law are enforced, that nobody is lagging behind, that there is truly an effort to enforce this bill as efficiently as possible within the delay set by the bill for the government, in the last clause."

[Mr. Woolliams.]

So I say at the outset that we have two different positions taken. The first was taken by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) on the one hand, who has graciously piloted the bill through for the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), and the other—

Mr. Pelletier: Would the hon. member accept a question? Will he read the sentence following the quotation he has read from what I said before the committee?

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to be able to read it but I have my speech prepared and typed. If the minister said anything different, I am quite prepared to let him read it because I would not want to put anything on the record which might mislead in respect of anything he did say, or misrepresent his ambition in respect of the implementation of this act.

Mr. Pelletier: The first reference is—

Mr. Woolliams: The minister will have an opportunity to make a speech. All we have heard from him so far has been one or two comments. Let me continue with the quotation I was referring to before I flushed out the minister.

If the minister believes the commissioner is merely an investigator, then his function I suggest is similar to that of a police officer or any other person acting in the capacity of a detective—we know what a detective does, he investigates—who investigates some complaint when someone reasonably believes there has been a violation of some law. The police go out and investigate when they reasonably believe there has been a violation of the Criminal Code. When you hired a private detective to find out what was going on in the bedrooms when adultery was the only grounds under the old law of divorce, he investigated. That is what an investigator does.

Let us see what kind of function this little old investigator has. Let me ask these simple questions. Can an investigator, a police officer or a detective under the law of Canada summon witnesses? Can the R.C.M.P. summon witnesses? Can these investigators compel witnesses to come in and give oral and written evidence under oath? The answer is no. If they did, any statement taken in that way would be declared inadmissible by any court of competent jurisdiction.

Can an investigator force a person to produce documents against his will without a search warrant? Remember, this is just a little old ordinary investigator! Can an investigator administer oaths to witnesses, like a court, while in the process of investigating? What a hue and cry would have gone up in Canada if the R.C.M.P. when investigating in respect of narcotics in Banff, last week end, had called all these youths together and said: on the bible, you are going to swear what you have been doing; what you have been sniffing and what trips you have taken. People would have said that was the greatest invasion of civil rights ever seen in Canada.

Could an investigator hold hearings? Did you ever hear of an investigator holding a hearing in camera locking the doors and pulling down the blinds? Could he then admit evidence under oath and by affidavit in accordance with the rules governing a court of record? That is what this investigator can do. He can use all the powers of any court in the land. This Commissioner has even greater powers than that. He can hear evidence that is not admissible in any court in the land. According to this Minister of Justice, in his suave manner and able argument, this is just merely a little old investigator.

Could an investigator demand that a person complained about confess by affidavit, indicating at least some culpability? If the R.C.M.P. or the city police did that, the statement or affidavit, as the able lawyer knows, would be inadmissible because there would immediately be a voir dire. He knows what would happen. Could an investigator hold a hearing in his private office, in camera without the person who is complained about—sort of a star chamber attack on an accused person—being present or even notified? The hon. member for York South goes along with this. He says the Commissioner is merely an investigator.

This is the kind of power this man has. He can summon witnesses; he can call evidence; he can hold hearings in camera; he can admit affidavits; he can seize documents without a search warrant, yet he is merely like the R.C.M.P., just a casual little old investigator. There is no appeal from that kind of power. We have heard niceties and arguments from the minister in respect of all these acts which are basically judicial procedures. I have sat here for days listening to him talk about the difference between judicial or ministerial acts and judicial procedures. That is straight hogwash, and I am going to quote from the Supreme Court of Canada to show that where a power, whether or not it is administrative, is identical to the powers of a court and where human rights and civil rights are affected there should be some form of appeal.

I wish there were more French Canadians in the chamber listening to me. They are a minority in Canada. What would happen to this nation if—and I hope it does not happen—one government elected with a majority of 150 seats appointed one of these investigators, who then started to run slipshod over the minority of French Canadians in this country? As a trial lawyer, and as a man who believes in civil rights in this nation, I would be the first to raise my voice. I cannot believe the argument the minister has brought in as a red herring, that there is nothing wrong. He suggests that we put this bill through and appoint this almighty and powerful investigator, with all the powers of the courts and the right to go to work on this nation.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: Could a policeman search a place of business without a search warrant? Could he search a government office, a Crown corporation or a government agency without a warrant and without notification, like the S.S. storm troopers used to do all over Germany and all over Europe? In this case, all the investigator will lack is a bicycle. The storm troopers always travelled around on bicycles.

The minister has referred to him as a straight investigator.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: How straight?

Mr. Woolliams: After all these procedures, this all powerful and bilingual God makes recommendations and reports and follows through like the Secretary of State—who is not here now—to see whether someone is acting on the report. He then makes a decision, yet the minister says there should be no appeal from that decision. The minister suggests there is no need for the right of appeal, even though the investigator has that much power. As a matter of fact, it will likely be the same minister or the same head of a department who will make the decision. The commissioner will be entitled to use all the force at his command to find out why his recommendations have not been followed; yet the government says this man is merely an investigator and does not make any decisions. He comes to a decision when he investigates a matter and makes a recommendation in his report. His recommendations will affect individuals in this country. The decision is made by a department of government. What will the C.B.C., which is a grandiose agency of the government, say if the investigator is allowed to go through all their documents, hear witnesses, take affidavits, hold hearings in camera and change those things which the C.B.C. feels should not be changed? How will the C.B.C. react in this situation? Does the C.B.C. know this bill gives that kind of power to this little, old investigator? Let us consider clause 31 (2) of the bill, which is to be found at page 18 and 19. It provides as follows:

> Where the commissioner is of opinion
> (a) that the act or omission that was the subject of the investigation should be referred to any department or other institution concerned for consideration and action if necessary—

This clause refers to an act or omission. That is all the judgment of a court is; it is all the order of an administrative board is. The clause continues:

> (b) that any act or regulations thereunder described in paragraph (b) of subsection (1) should be reconsidered or any practice described in that paragraph should be altered or discontinued, or
> (c) that any other action should be taken—

The commissioner will be given the power to act as a result of recommendations he makes in his report. Action spells decision; decision means judgment, or in the case of a board, an order. I emphasize the danger to any minority group in this nation when power is handed to a man who is called an investigator. The commissioner will be all-powerful, chosen by an all-powerful cabinet with an all-powerful majority. Citizens of Canada will be subject to decisions of the commissioner without the right of a hearing. Clause 31 (2) (c) continues:

> —the commissioner shall report his opinion—

I point out that this is what he shall do.

> —and his reasons therefor to the Clerk of the Privy Council and the deputy head or other administrative head of any department or other institution concerned and may in his report make such recommendations with respect thereto as he thinks fit, and, in any such case, may request the department or other institution concerned to notify him within a specified time of the action, if any, that it proposes to take to give effect to his recommendations.

What will happen if a deputy minister refuses to do what the commissioner tells him to do in his recommendation? I am concerned about how these decisions will affect the citizens of my nation. Under the provisions of the bill the livelihood of a Canadian can be taken away by the judgment or decision of one man. In my opinion, this principle is much more dangerous than any we can think about. Surely, the right to hold one's job, to work, to obtain promotion, is the human and civil right of every Canadian. I have some knowledge of jurisprudence, and in my reading of this bill I cannot see that safeguards are written into it for Canadians.

Parliament has been described in glowing terms by the Minister of Justice as the highest court in the land. No one denies this. But this is not a court in which justice is handled expeditiously. If an individual or the head of a department is aggrieved and has to come to this wise institution for a decision, what will happen to his family and his livelihood while parliament moves, since it moves so slowly? How long will it take an individual, a department head, a C.B.C. employee or an employee of Canadian National Railways to obtain justice from this court? God help Canadians! Parliament is a place in which many political influences are exercised. I ask hon. members to just think of the hanky-panky that goes on in committees. Members of the house do things for political reasons.

Mr. Baldwin: Especially the Liberals.

Mr. Woolliams: This is the reason we have an independent judiciary in this country; we need a court to act above politics, a body to do a job without the prejudice which results from political reasoning. I should like to quote from the Ottawa Law Review, Volume 12, page 72, of the fall of 1967 as follows:

> Thus, the real argument is not whether the executive, for example, is exercising legislative or judicial powers which properly belong to parliament or the courts (for no kind of power belongs to any particular authority) but whether the power is being exercised by the authority best suited to exercise it and whether the exercise is sufficiently controlled by political and legal action.

In other words, what is the best body in this democracy of ours to exercise a judicial decision, undertake a review or hear an appeal—parliament, or the courts? The late President Roosevelt wanted a bill passed to increase the number of judges of the Supreme Court of the United States so that the law would be interpreted as he saw fit. That may be right or wrong, but the fact is that the courts are independent of political influence. This institution may be a court, but it is involved with politics. The minister is a political beast; I am a political beast; everyone in this institution is, if he is honest with himself.

Mr. Pelletier: I am not.

Mr. Woolliams: With the exception of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), who says he is not political.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): And I am not a beast.

Mr. Woolliams: As Griffith and Street state, Parliament is not suited for the job of looking after justice, because it lacks independence. By the time a decision has been made some deserving Canadian's job has been on the line, his career is at an end, his university training, his skill, experience, etc., have been thrown in the wastepaper basket.

What will this do to scientific research in this nation? If a French-Canadian scientist is removed from his job because he refuses to speak English, we are denied the talents of this great man. He has no appeal; he is in the hands of this simple, little, old investigator appointed by a very powerful cabinet.

An hon. Member: Time!

Mr. Woolliams: Somebody says "Time". I can understand that my hon. friends on the government back benches are not interested in civil rights. They have been told by their party to rush this bill through and it does not matter what happens to Canadians.

What will this policy do to the economic decisions of the nation which must be made by dedicated public servants? I do not take this situation as lightly as hon. members opposite. How would the press like this kind of treatment? How would C.B.C. employees like it? How would C.T.V. employees like it? I ask again: Will the employees of the C.B.C. like it? We shall wait and see. May these people have some protection? There should be an appeal to a superior court so that justice not only will be done but will appear to be done. The powers and decisions which will emanate from this commissioner will create real fear in the hearts and minds of all men and women dedicated to the public service. There are approximately 70 federal seats west of the Great Lakes. There are 74 federal seats in the province of Quebec. We talk of national unity; that is the great candy that is always held in front of the Canadian people. There cannot be national unity for one side of the country and not for the other.

I speak for western Canada. People in that part of the country demand justice. Westerners should have an equal opportunity in the Public Service of Canada. They demand justice for the dedicated citizens of Canada in the public service of our country because our universities in western Canada have produced some of the great scientists, lawyers and politicians of our nation just like any other parts of Canada. If they fail to receive this kind of justice, the movements toward separation will grow stronger. I am certain that western Canada, with its some 70 constituencies would ask for the right to appeal. Without it, masses of people of all races and cultures will be discriminated against and science, economy and politics will suffer. This nation will never be able to remove the pockets of poverty in its great urban centres if we cannot compete economically with the rest of the world.

At the flick of an eye in the United States the Canadian stock market descends into the basement and our interest rates ascend into the attic. To remain independent, a nation must receive the best advice in all fields from dedicated men and women in the public service, who must not be discriminated against. Why should a hearing be held in camera? Is that the kind of justice to which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is accustomed? Why should a complaint be made against any person or any department without that person being represented by counsel or without being present?

I wish to quote now the late Mackenzie King, a member of the Liberal party, and I am sure members of that party will agree with these words. They relate to the law which the all-powerful commissioner will be able to implement:

> Now let us come to another point, which I wish particularly to stress. I refer to the right set out in Magna Carta that no man shall be dispossessed of his rights without the lawful judgment of his peers under the law of the land; not the law as made by the Governor in Council, not the law as made by some unnamed and as yet unexisting body, but the law of the land as known to everyone. It is an essential principle of liberty and freedom that the law of the land should be known, that it should be so known that every man as he runs may read. The law should not be something which is to make its appearance in the Canada Gazette after some board or Governor in Council, not parliament, has passed a regulation; it is something that should appear in the statutes of the country.

The kind of law that is going to be implemented by the commissioner is not even published in the Canada Gazette; it is a secret law. No one knows how the commissioner will exercise his powers, and I challenge any great lawyer or parliamentarian here to tell us how much power this commissioner will have. We do not know. I should like to read a statement made by Mr. Powers at a time when a number of public servants were arrested because they were allegedly spying for the socialists. They were held in custody without counsel, without a hearing, for days on end by a secret order in council. What did that great Liberal, "Chubby" Powers, have to say? I want to read this to the Liberals here. It reads as follows:

> As for me, brought up in an atmosphere wherein a framed photograph of Magna Carta was on almost every wall, accompanied with a warrant for the execution of Charles I, and steeped through my reading in the traditions of the martyrs of liberty and freedom, I cannot wish to turn back the pages of history 700 years and repeal Magna Carta. I cannot by my silence appear to approve even tacitly what I believe to have been a great mistake on the part of the government. If this is to be the funeral of liberalism I do not desire to be even an honorary pallbearer at the funeral, and I do not wish by not taking part in this debate to give silent approval to the procedure which has taken place.

The Magna Carta says that every man will have a fair hearing. It says that nobody will be held in custody without counsel and that if a complaint is made against a person, he is entitled to be heard. But this bill takes away these inherent rights which this nation and other nations have enjoyed for 700 years. The commissioner can call in a person against whom the complaint is made one quarter of the way through the hearing. If this is to be the just society, then God help the nation and God help justice.

I wish to emphasize therefore that every citizen, every department and every institution should have the right of appeal from the reports and recommendations of the commissioner, or the decisions flowing from the reports made by him, to protect the livelihood and the civil rights of every Canadian. Let me put the following questions to the house. Who can say here today that the language commissioner will be totally free from chicanery? Who can say that he will exercise proper administrative discretion according to natural justice? Who can say that he will always exercise the discretion given to him under the act in a fair, just and legal manner? He hears evidence, good or bad; he holds a hearing; he swears witnesses; he demands documents, and he makes a decision. All this can be done in camera without the public being present and without the person who is accused of any violation of the statute being present. It seems to me that this is in contravention of our civil rights.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

The Minister of Justice can argue legal niceties as much as he likes. Men before him, men now, and men after him will use this method, but legal terminology does not determine people's rights. It is as the late prime minister Mackenzie King said: Men and women in Canada must know their rights so well that as they run they may read.

My real concern is for the average men and women in Canada who have no knowledge of the law, whose livelihood will be affected and whose children's education may be brought to an end because some all-powerful officer may make decisions. Their only remedy is to hope that some day parliament will rectify some inequalities. What kind of justice would parliament dispense, made up of politicians, of which I am one? One only has to examine the power of the state in expropriation laws to find out how little justice a citizen receives. When the great state moves, the citizen is squeezed and his civil rights are usurped.

The legal nicety to which I referred is the minister's statement that since the commissioner does not have the power to make judicial decisions there should be no appeal. But I say to him that if the decision that is made, whether it be administrative or judicial, has the same force and effect as a judgment made in a court or a judgment of an administrative board, then those persons who consider themselves aggrieved should have the right of appeal. Why does the minister oppose natural justice? What is he afraid of? If he ignores this plea, never again will he be looked upon as a great reformer. Why do the promoters of this legislation fear appeal? Why do they fear a public hearing? The great dictators of Europe gave no right of hearing to six million people who met death without a defence. The discretionary power was executed in an administrative fashion, but let us remember that these people were executed as effectively as a convicted murderer who dies on the scaffold, the only difference being that they had committed no crime against society with the exception of belonging to a different race and a different culture.

Now, I should like to refer to some of the cases in connection with the administrative law. I want to deal with a case in the Supreme Court of Canada. I do not think time will permit me to read the decisions of Mr. Justice Rand and Mr. Justice Abbot, who sat here in the distinguished position of minister of finance. Let us consider the facts in the Roncarelli versus Duplessis case, if administrators can be trusted. There was a man who belonged to the Jehovah's witnesses sect. He had a liquor licence from the provincial government but because he believed in a certain kind of religion and because he had bailed out of jail some people who belonged to that sect, they took away his licence to sell liquor. Suppose there were no appeal from that decision, what would happen then? The only reason an appeal was possible in his case was that under the great Anglo-Saxon traditions, an appeal can be made to the Supreme Court of Canada in a case where a decision is contrary to natural justice and where civil rights are eroded and usurped. The ruling was that no administrator, no premier and no powerful executive could cancel a man's licence because he held a certain religious beliefs.

That is the kind of law I want to see in this nation, not the kind of law set out by one man with all this power. This is why we need provision for appeal. Incidentally, the case to which I have just referred is cited in S.C.R. 1959 at page 123. Mr. Justice Rand said:

To deny or revoke a permit because a citizen exercises an unchallengeable right totally irrelevant to the sale of liquor in a restaurant is beyond the scope of the discretion conferred upon the commission by the Alcoholic Liquor Act.

The judge went on to point out the danger inherent in such a situation. Mr. Justice Abbott said he was shocked to find the act being administered in such a way. But I would have been even more shocked if there had not been the right of appeal to the Supreme Court against this kind of erosion of a man's civil rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: There is, of course, developing in the British courts a line of law which holds that when the scope of an act has been exceeded there is always the right to appeal to the courts on the grounds that natural justice has been denied. Viscount Kilmuir had this to say after reviewing the operation of powerful administrative boards in Great Britain:

We are firmly of the opinion that all decisions of tribunals should be subject to review by the courts on points of law. This review could be obtained either by proceedings for certiorari or by appeal.

If tribunals act in a judicial capacity and make errors in law, Viscount Kilmuir recommends that the decision may be quashed by order of certiorari in England.

The courts in Scotland do not, however, exercise this jurisdiction to quash a decision for error of law on the face of the record. Moreover, an application to quash a decision on this ground is quite different from an appeal on a point of law.

In the former case the court can only quash the decision, while in the latter case the court may substitute, or in effect substitute, its own decision. Again, in the former case, the court must find the error if it can, on the face of the record. It cannot look at anything else. In the latter case the court can in addition look at the notes of the evidence given before the tribunal if the point of law is whether there was evidence on which the tribunal could in law have arrived at its decision.

But here, as the Minister of Justice so ably stated, where an act is interpreted as being an administrative act, not a judicial act, there is no right to quash the decision of a board, as was done in the case to which I have just referred involving the cancellation of an individual's liquor licence.

These special remedies which exist in the law are good. But they depend upon astute and able lawyers if they are to be effective. Why can the procedure not be simplified so that whenever an individual or an agency of the government feels aggrieved there is the right of review by a judge. If the judge says he believes the commissioner acted in accordance with the principles of law and natural justice, there will be no problem. But if the commissioner goes beyond the scope allotted to him, a remedy will be possible. It is only by granting this right of appeal that the rights of Canadians can be protected. This is why Viscount Kilmuir, after holding hearings throughout Great Britain, said the only thing to do was to give the right of appeal to individuals, to agencies, to Crown corporations, or anyone else affected.

I agree with this recommendation. All lawyers—and the Minister of Justice is no exception—fear today that an all-powerful state is infringing on the rights of individuals. The only way to safeguard the rights we now enjoy is by writing into our laws provision for appeal to an independent judiciary. Otherwise we may find, in this case, that the livelihood of many an individual in the public service is in jeopardy. No one can say that the points I have raised in this regard are not worthy of serious consideration. The other day the Secretary of State said I had made an emotional speech. Well, I have spent days and nights reviewing this situation and reading what has been said about it. Whenever I read decisions and recommendations by the courts I find they all reach the same conclusion. The courts are now holding that the rules or principles of natural justice are in themselves a sufficiently independent criterion of review as to provoke their intervention without there being any question of excess of jurisdiction.

In the case of Ridge v. Baldwin in 1964, the House of Lords held that the decision of the Watch Committee of the Town of Brighton to dismiss the chief of police and so deprive him of the right to a pension was null ab initio because he was not given an opportunity to be heard. In this case, the highest judicial authority in England formally declared that the violation of the rule of natural justice is a separate and independent criterion which the courts may use as the basis for review of the legality of administrative acts or decisions of a judicial or quasi judicial character.

The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) says, if I understand him correctly, that we in this country have labour boards from whose decisions there is no provision for appeal. Mr. Speaker, there are statutes so numerous that it would take me all night to enumerate them, which do give the right to appeal. Let us consider the famous case of Calgary Power v. Copithorne in 1959. Calgary Power had expropriated a certain amount of land, and there was no right of appeal provided. The courts held that because the terms of the statute had been exceeded the decision could nevertheless, be appealed. But what ordinary citizen can afford the luxury of justice in such cases? Let me show hon. members how much justice can cost. Eighteen men stand charged in Calgary for bookmaking. The preliminary hearing lasted ten days—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you very much.

If each of the accused is represented by a lawyer, what does it cost to get to trial? The evidence in the preliminary hearing costs $2,000, so, those court reporters want $2,000 from each of the 18 accused. So, it would cost at least $36,000 to get into a court of justice in this country. The point I am making is this: where one has to rely on special, prerogative rights and remedies, the situation becomes both expensive and complex, requiring highly skilled and efficient lawyers. I say to the Minister of Justice and to the Secretary of State that what we need is a simple right to appeal, so that when a report or decision is made which adversely affects any individual, whether French speaking or English speaking, such a person, if he feels aggrieved, may have his case reviewed by a judge. If he has been wrongfully dismissed, he could be reinstated by that same judge. Then, whether he is a scientist, or an economist, or a medical specialist, Canada will not be denied the benefit of his skills, and we can move toward the affluent society to which we all look forward on the basis of the resources available to us. We can learn to compete in world markets with our wheat, our oil, and our industrial products.

I end with these words. I hope the Minister of Justice is not going to say that this is only an administrative decision. I do not care whether the decision is made by a board, a court or an individual; if that decision carries the weight of a judgment that affects the human rights of Canadians, particularly the right of a Canadian to make a living, then the person concerned should be heard. The door should be open to him. No decision should be made in camera. He must have the right to counsel, and he must have the right to the best counsel available.

If this government denies these privileges to Canadian citizens, it is doing them the gravest injustice. The principle of the bill, I endorse. The principle itself is good. Why destroy this great principle by denying Canadian citizens the right to be heard in the way I have suggested? I warn Canadians, and particularly French Canadians, that without this right of appeal it is they who stand to lose.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy listening to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) but I must say that his speech this afternoon was a rerun in colour of a speech he made on an earlier occasion in this house with regard to an earlier amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) which related to clauses 28, 29 and 30 of this bill. My remarks will be brief because I should like to refer Your Honour and other hon. members to the reply that I made on a rather enthusiastic evening to the hon. member for Calgary North, to be found on page 10363 of Hansard for June 18, and which dealt in substance with the powers of the official languages commissioner, the nature of his duties and the sanctions he has at his command.

In concluding his speech the hon. member said that he does not want any Canadian citizen to have his civil rights adversely affected by any decision carrying the weight of a judgment and affecting those civil rights. Nor do I. I will not take second place to the hon. member—indeed, he would not expect me to—in his support of civil rights in this country. It is because no decision of the official languages commissioner does have the force or weight of a judgment that every argument adduced by the hon. member this afternoon is absolutely irrelevant—and I say that with the greatest respect—to the scope of the bill and the powers of the commissioner.

Let me summarize as briefly as I can what it is the official languages commissioner does. First of all, he is not a court. He performs an investigatory or fact finding function. He in no way can attach a sanction or penalty to any individual, whether within or without the public service of Canada. His job is to ensure that the departments and agencies of the government are meeting the spirit and letter of the law, the official languages bill.

Mr. Woolliams: The minister would not dare permit a question at this point.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member will appreciate that I should like to keep my speech coherent, and this does become difficult when he puts a question.

Mr. Horner: Deal with line 41 of clause 28.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The official languages commissioner has as his function, and his sole function, to ensure that departments and agencies of the government fulfil the spirit and letter of the law. His sanction against those departments is limited to a report that is made to the deputy head of the department; to a report that is made to the minister of the department; and if no action is taken on a particular investigation, to a report that is made to parliament itself. Under clause 33 and clause 34 of the bill he has a duty to report on an annual basis to parliament.

What the hon. member is suggesting to the house is that this administrative function of comparing the operation of a department or agency of the government with the requirements of the bill ought to be reviewed by a court of law. This is an institutional situation affecting policy and administration. Surely, we do not want to have the administration of government at an institutional level referred to the courts or reviewed by the courts. What is the position vis-à-vis individuals? I said on an earlier occasion that this commissioner has no power to fine, no sanction or penalty to impose. He decides no rights either for or against any member of the public service or agency of government.

Mr. McQuaid: He recommends.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He makes a report to parliament. So far as any recommendation he may make is concerned, any public servant, any member of a department or agency of the government, has the right to be heard and, if necessary, to be represented by counsel; and this is adequately set forth in clause 28.

With regard to the rights of an employee of the government or a public servant being indirectly affected by a report, which after all is directed to the department concerned, through the department to the deputy head, and thence to the minister of that department, that employee has his rights protected under his collective agreement with the public service and as set forth under statute in the Public Service Employment Act. Those rights are in no way forfeited or restricted, and they are protected by the present law and by collective agreements.

That is my reply, in brief, to the hon. member. May I refer the hon. member for Calgary North to the speech he heard two weeks ago. In my opinion, and in the opinion of the government, the complete answer to his contention that a judicial review or an appeal is necessary here is that the hon. member has misread the functions of the commissioner. The commissioner in no way exercises a quasi-judicial function or a judicial function. Therefore there is no scope in the bill for a judicial review in the courts. That is quite clear.

I am quite familiar with the Roncarelli case to which he referred dealing with the role and function of the police in regard to individual rights, penalties and crimes.

Mr. Woolliams: And loss of licence.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No loss of licence is created by this bill. There is no penalty attaching to an individual member of a department; nowhere in the bill is there that provision.

May I summarize the argument once again? The hon. member has misread the scope of the commissioner's powers. With the greatest respect he has misread the duties of the commissioner as set out in the bill. They relate to government departments. So far as individual rights are concerned, these are preserved under collective agreements and under the Public Service Employment Act, and they are in no way jeopardized by the provisions of this bill. The hon. member has altogether misread the commissioner's powers.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Calgary North rising to pose a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The minister said he was familiar with the case law, particularly the Copithorne case. In that case, a cabinet minister acting on behalf of the Alberta cabinet made a decision in regard to a man by the name of Copithorne which affected that man's rights. As a result, the decision was appealed on the ground that the executive had gone beyond its powers.

I should like to ask the minister this. Assume that a deputy minister loses his job or is demoted; or perhaps he is discriminated against. Surely, such a person has the right to appeal and to say that the commissioner, or the executive, or the minister concerned, has done something that is against the law of natural justice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I do not know whether the minister wants to answer the question first, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: He cannot answer it.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The question turned into a speech.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, we in this party made it very clear that we do not think this is a perfect bill, or that we approve of all its principles. We want it to work. We have also made amendments. We felt that the failure to give a person the right to a public hearing in the case of an adverse report was a serious defect of the bill. We pointed this out to the minister, but he did not agree with us.

I must say that, although I listened to the predictably eloquent speech of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), I was not convinced by it. In my judgment, the amendment is unnecessary. If it did anything, it would militate against a satisfactory working of the act. The reason the amendment is unnecessary was indicated by the hon. member for Calgary North. As a lawyer, he is naturally familiar with this. He pointed out that if the commissioner exceeds the authority given to him by the statute, if he declines to exercise the jurisdiction given to him, if he disregards the rules of natural justice or elementary fairness, he can be restrained by the courts by motions, writs or other processes that the court has.

The granting of the right of appeal is a very different thing indeed. The right of appeal means that even while the commissioner is still acting under the authority given to him, still acting in perfect fairness, the appeal can be dragged out for years. This would tie up the effective working of the commissioner and the act. One of the main reasons the appeal is inappropriate is the reason given by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) a while ago. There is no such thing as an inherent right of appeal to the courts from every administrative tribunal, as was suggested by the hon. member for Calgary North. Quite the contrary is the case.

This is a matter that has been the subject of controversy for decades. In many cases the rights of appeal are being limited to the major items covered by such things as a prerogative writs, yet the amendment before us grants a right of appeal without any finding of fact, question of law or matter of the merits. This right would take something away from the commissioner appointed under this act and put the effective administration of this act in the hands of the courts. As much as I respect the courts, I want to make it clear I think they are entirely unsuitable tribunals for this particular purpose. When the Norris-LaGuardia bill, which confirmed or certified the rights of collective bargaining by unions, was passed in the United States, the process blew up because there were rights of appeal given. The appeals in relation to that matter were before the court for four years, and at the end of the four years the union was no longer in existence. There are many such cases. I think this is pre-eminently a case where the decisions of administrative tribunals should not be subject to appeal through the courts of the land.

As I have stated, the courts have their function. If there is a disregard of jurisdiction, unfairness, a breach of fundamental rights, they can be called into question in the courts which will consider every finding of fact by the commissioner and give an expression of opinion on the merits. The right to appeal to the courts would invite chaos and, I suggest, the destruction of the effective purpose of the act. I do not have the slightest hesitation in saying that this administrative tribunal is not the sort that lends itself to a general right of appeal. Like the minister I do not want to take second place to anyone who might be concerned with individual human rights and rights of appeal. I say the right of appeal is not a right that has to be preserved or is required to be preserved in this particular case.

I find it odd, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member himself was not convinced of his case at the proceedings of the special committee on the official languages bill. I have the official transcript, No. 4, of the minutes of proceedings and the evidence taken on June 10, 1969. It appears, as reported on page 305, that the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) moved an amendment in similar form which read:

(2) Any person who considers himself aggrieved by an investigation, a report, or a recommendation of the Commissioner may appeal in respect thereof to a judge of a superior court of record within sixty days of the day he is informed of the report or recommendation.

That amendment, in substance, is the same as we have had presented to us here today. In the course of the discussion, my colleague the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), made a number of objections to the amendment which I would like to read into the record because they represent my views on this subject, and I endorse them then. I quote from page 307:

Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate the reasons which moved Mr. McQuaid to think in the terms of this amendment; however, I cannot support it for the following reasons: first for the reasons given by Mr. Stanbury and Mr. Cantin that—and it seems to me that there should not be anything in the law which suggests that the Commissioner has any authority other than that of an administrative officer making an inquiry to report to the authorities, with the competence to make a decision—anything in here that suggests that he does anything else, something from which you can appeal, is to suggest, I think, something that is not within the confines of the law.

Secondly, it seems to me that if this law is to work, that the responsibility is on the Minister and all the people under him in a department. It is on the management of the public corporations and the agencies; they have to be held responsible by the Members of Parliament in the end result.

Thirdly, I do not think that the court is the forum for this kind of thing. I am a lawyer and I show the courts the respect they deserve, in particular instances; however, I do not think that a court is a place for this kind of thing.

The Chairman: Do you have a supplementary question or a point of order?

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order. We might save some time, and Mr. McQuaid and I were discussing this. I am inclined to agree with Mr. Lewis; I am not trying to interrupt; we can save time. If you would hear Mr. McQuaid, now, you would save a lot of speeches, because he is prepared—I think the point is well taken. You are really into an investigation. You cannot appeal an investigation in the sense, because it then becomes an administrative act of someone to take some action on something.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Woolliams. Mr. Lewis is agreed. Mr. Matte, could we go now to Mr. McQuaid? Mr. Matte may want to say something afterwards on the subject,—

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure my distinguished friend does not want to misrepresent the facts. When I was talking about a decision, I said I did not believe there should be a right of appeal from an investigation; with that I agree. If the hon. member reads my amendment, he will see there was no amendment of that kind or calibre moved in the committee.

I am talking about a recommendation which goes to a deputy minister and upon which he makes a decision. From the decision or recommendation of the deputy minister, or any agency or person, which flows from the report of the commissioner, there should be a right of appeal. I agree that you cannot appeal an investigation by the police. They may say there is nothing here or there may be something here. I am talking about an appeal. I want that clarified because I saw my friend from York East (Mr. Otto) smiling. He thinks the member for Calgary North has put himself into an untenable position.

Mr. Brewin: Is that a point of order?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, it is a point of order. The hon. member would not want to misquote me in any way. I took the same position in the committee as I take now, and have always taken, with reference to an appeal from a decision.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has made a somewhat vehement point of order. So far as I am concerned it is no point of order, but apart from that I can see no substantial difference between the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) in the committee and the present amendment. It dealt with the right of appeal, and I had not quite reached the punchline in this. I quote:

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Chairman, I think I am convinced that this is not a necessary amendment—

Apparently convinced by the hon. member for Calgary North.

—I am prepared to withdraw it. I can see now, although I must confess I did not see before, that the reason we are sitting here is to be enlightened.

And so the amendment was withdrawn. I cannot speak with the emphasis and the volume of the hon. member for Calgary North, but I can say that there is not the slightest doubt in the world that the amendment he advised his colleague, the hon. member for Cardigan, to withdraw was in substance the amendment that is now before the house. At that time they did not see any merit in it, and I suggest there is no merit in it now. I suggest it should be defeated.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to rise on another point of order, Mr. Speaker. I say this, as the minister and others have said, that this is the highest court in the land and it is entitled to an interpretation. I am not going to be unkind, even though the hon. member referred to my volume. I might be unkind and refer to his tone, but I point out that the amendment I moved today is an amendment in relation to decisions. It is different from the previous one. It was drawn up by a draftsman and myself. It had nothing to do with the group of people who sat on the special committee. I asked my party could they accept it, and a party decision was made accepting it. I am not going to be misquoted and misrepresented. If the hon. member wants to get nasty, in return I would ask him to put his voice on a tape and if it hasn't got a bit of a squeak in it, then there isn't a squeak in this house.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word or two about this amendment and I shall not be loud or long. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is doing an honourable job in piloting this piece of legislation through the house, a piece of legislation in which he does not really believe. I commend him for the job he is doing, and I point out that his heart and soul are not in it. That is clearly evident from the reasoning and the logic that he has been using. The minister would be the first to admit that the bill gives the commissioner the right to report. Does not this bill give this commissioner the right to report to the government, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would invite the hon. member to address his remarks through the Chair.

[Mr. Brewin.]

Mr. Horner: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I got a little carried away, and I wanted a clear cut answer to the question I was posing. I think the Minister of Justice would agree that the commissioner does have the right to report to a member of the cabinet, but we have not been told to which minister. I am sure also the Minister of Justice will agree that the commissioner reports from an inquiry held in private. In other words, his opinion is based on a private inquiry held about somebody or some department. It is hard to say whether the opinion he reaches is based on valid or invalid premises, since the inquiry itself has been held in private. If it is based on invalid or false premises it should be immediately disregarded, but how can the public judge if the inquiry is in private.

Time and time again, the minister has said that no action will be taken on the commissioner's reports which will be laid before the public, and that the onus will be on the government and the public to determine whether or not action is really necessary. But how will the public be in a position to know whether action is necessary when the reports are based on private inquiries? It has often been said that justice must not only be done but it must appear to be done. How can it appear to be done in these cases when inquiries are held in private? A few minutes ago the minister spoke about the individual's rights which are written into the bill, and said that these rights were included in clause 28. They are not. The only rights written into clause 28 are the rights of the commissioner. This clause states that if the commissioner, at any time during the course of an investigation, deems that there may be sufficient grounds for making a report that may adversely affect an individual he shall give that individual an opportunity to answer any adverse allegation or criticism.

By contrast the amendment proposes the right of appeal. Nobody can convince me that we should not establish the right of appeal, particularly when opinions are formed on the basis of a private investigation that may condemn an individual. The commissioner has the right to report, recommend and condemn. Lest the Minister of Justice take exception to that let him read line 41 in clause 28. I start reading at line 40 as follows:

—a full and ample opportunity to answer any adverse allegation or criticism.

That is clear enough. The commissioner may make a report that may be adverse to or may offer adverse criticism of an individual or a department. Whether the minister likes it or not, the fact of the matter is that the minister's opinions will be formulated in private and the accused person or persons will have no right of appeal because that right is not written into this bill any place. I challenge the minister to stand in his place and say in what line of what clause the right to be heard is written into this bill. There is a right to be heard in clause 28 if the commissioner really wants to hear the person, but that is the only clause which deals with such a complaint. The rights of an accused person or a department are not written into this bill in any place. The evidence is gathered in private. The individual is condemned in private and the public and the government will judge him. He has no right to recourse whatsoever under this bill as it now stands. To me it would seem that the opinions may be formulated on a pretty invalid and false premise. I suggest the public should be present to witness and judge whether or not the premise on which the opinions were formulated was sound, and in fact represented what actually happened in respect of the administration of the department or the carrying out of the person's responsibility.

I believe this is a very important amendment. I shall not become involved in the judicial question of whether or not an appeal should be allowed from an administrative tribunal, but I believe that right should be written into the bill somewhere. Whether the appeal is to the supreme court, to the minister, to the cabinet or to parliament itself, there should be the right of appeal. The evidence should be gathered in public and the person should have the right to be heard, period, and not "if". A few minutes ago, the minister said about three times that the individual has this right. Nowhere in this bill is he given this right. The commissioner may—and I emphasize the point because I believe it is extremely important—if he feels someone is adversely affected grant a public hearing. This is not good enough. Knowing the Minister of Justice, I realize he cannot stand up in his place and wholeheartedly support the position of his government on this bill because his heart and soul is not in this administration. He is just doing yeoman service for an all-powerful commissioner and giving no rights whatsoever to the individual. I wholeheartedly support the amendment.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I need no more than the three or four minutes left before six o'clock. I am sorry the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has had to leave. I rise mainly to deal with his alleged point of order and to say also—I am sorry to say this in his absence—that the good natured jocular remark of my friend the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) did not justify the boorish retort of the hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: —for Calgary North. The hon. member for Calgary North can speak in volume or by squeaks or in any other way he likes, but the fact is that the amendment which the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) withdrew on the advice of the hon. member for Calgary North before the special committee is precisely the same amendment which is now before this chamber. When he says he is being misrepresented, it is he who is misrepresenting the situation. No one is misrepresenting him.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Cardigan before the special committee, which my friend the hon. member for Greenwood read, stated that any person who considered himself aggrieved by an investigation, a report or recommendation of the commissioner may appeal to a court. The amendment we are now discussing says that where an individual, department or institution is aggrieved by a report or recommendation of the commissioner or by a decision made by him or other person or authority acting upon his report, and so on, they may appeal. It is true that the hon. member for Calgary North has now added the word "decision" and taken out the word "investigation" which was in the amendment with which we dealt before the special committee, but in his amendment he has included an appeal from the report and recommendation of the commissioner as did the hon. member for Cardigan in his amendment.

That is the guts of the thing. The appeal from the action of the minister or department which is suggested in the amendment now before us is irrelevant to this bill. That appeal is relevant to the normal channels of grievance procedure. A person who is aggrieved can still go to court. The law cases contain many examples of people going to court when they think they are aggrieved. I say, despite the volume, or whatever, of the hon. member for Calgary North, the fact is that in substance the same amendment came before the special committee. The hon. member for Calgary North agreed with me that it was a bad amendment. The hon. member for Cardigan agreed with both of us that it was a bad amendment and withdrew it. To have it back here is just sheer silliness, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my view the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

It being six o'clock this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROCEDURE

NEW PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEBATING TIME ALLOTMENT—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order. A point of order was raised yesterday by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) in respect of a notice of motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) dealing with proposed amendments to the Standing Orders of the house. Other hon. members, including the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) supported the contention that the minister's motion should not be accepted by the Chair for purposes of transfer to government orders pursuant to Standing Order 21. The President of the Privy Council argued in support of the government's position. At the conclusion of the procedural debate I undertook to study the arguments advanced in the course of the discussion and to make an early ruling.

Stated briefly, the problem is whether the government can set down a motion that follows substantially the terms of a committee report presented to the house, but the concurrence of which has not yet been moved by the committee chairman. I must remind hon. members that the Speaker can only rule on points of order and questions of procedure. The decision to be made at this time is whether it is procedurally in order to transfer the minister's motion for debate. During the discussion yesterday serious questions of principle were raised by hon. members who questioned the propriety of a government motion which, if proceeded with, might in effect block the discussion of a motion to concur in the report of a standing committee.

It has been suggested that the government's motion as it now stands is in contempt of the house; and that the Chair, on its own initiative, should determine that the house will consider the proposed rules changes within the framework of the committee report rather than under the heading of the proposed motion. I am not convinced that the question can be considered by the Chair in those terms.

Generally speaking, hon. members who have taken part in the procedural argument in opposition to the government, have based their objections on the rule of anticipation. It is of interest to note that while the British practice in reference to this rule is sufficiently clear, the same cannot be said about Canadian precedents where attempts have been made to apply the rule to our own Canadian practice. The difficulty stems from the fact that the British Commons' standing orders include a specific rule on this subject. Standing Order 11 of the British House of Commons is as follows:

> In determining whether a discussion is out of order on the ground of anticipation, regard shall be had by Mr. Speaker to the probability of the matter anticipated being brought before the house within a reasonable time.

In our own house, we have attempted over the years to develop a practice which has no support in our own standing order and where British precedents are not always relevant. If hon. members will study May's definition of the rule, they will see that the rule relates to discussion or debate of a matter already set down, and not to the setting down itself of an item of business on the order paper.

Campion's third edition, at page 180, indicates that the anticipation rule applies to the discussion by anticipation of an order already set down by the house. But, there is nothing in our rules and no precedent in Canadian parliamentary practice to prevent the setting down of more than one bill or motion dealing with the same subject. No precedents have been quoted by hon. members who took part in yesterday's procedural debate that could support the contention that the minister's motion cannot appear on the order paper along with a notice of motion to be moved in similar terms by a committee chairman.

What we are concerned with at the moment is whether the minister's notice of motion can be transferred for debate under government orders. Standing Order 21 is perfectly clear on this point. The rule is as follows:

> When any other government notice of motion is called from the Chair, it shall be deemed to have been forthwith transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders in the same or at the next sitting of the House.

Once the motion has been transferred for debate under government orders it becomes the government's decision and the government's responsibility to decide whether it will proceed with its motion. It is at that point that the anticipation rule might become operative in the sense that the minister's motion, if proceeded with, might block consideration of the committee report.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) has been at liberty for several days to proceed with his motion. Indeed, he could move it later this day if he wishes to do so.

On the other hand, that notice of motion cannot be used to "block" consideration of the government's notice of motion. It is suggested that the question of priority should not be confused with the rule of anticipation.

At this time the notice of motion in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has priority because of its present position on the order paper. If the hon. member has not moved his motion when it is called later today, the Chair will have no alternative, at the appropriate moment in our proceedings, but to order that the notice of motion standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council, be transferred for debate pursuant to Standing Order 21.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS SIGNED BY CANADA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table in French and English a number of international agreements which have recently been signed by Canada, subject to ratification or have entered into force in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton? Stands.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gatineau? Stands.

PROCEDURE

NEW PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEBATING TIME ALLOTMENT

On the order: Government notices of motions: June 26, 1969—The President of the Privy Council:

That the Standing Orders of the house be amended by adding the following new Standing Orders immediately after Standing Order 75:

75A. When a Minister of the Crown, from his place in the house, states that there is agreement among the representatives of all parties to allot a specified number of days or hours to the proceedings at one or more stages of any public bill, he may propose a motion, without notice, setting forth the terms of such agreed allocation; and every such motion shall be decided forthwith, without debate or amendment.

75B. When a Minister of the Crown, from his place in the house, states that a majority of the representatives of the several parties, including that of the government, have come to an agreement in respect of a proposed allotment of days or hours for the proceedings at any stage of the passing of a public bill, he may propose a motion, without notice, setting forth the terms of the said proposed allocation; provided that for the purposes of this standing order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages of a bill if that motion is consistent with the provisions of Standing Order 75(13). During the consideration of any such motion no member may speak more than once or longer than ten minutes. Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, Mr. Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

75C. A Minister of the Crown who from his place in the house at a previous sitting has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration either in the house or in any committee and has given notice at that sitting of his intention so to do may propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage; provided that the time allotted for any stage is not to be less than one sitting day and provided that for the purposes of this standing order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages on a bill if that motion is consistent with the provisions of Standing Order 75(13). During the consideration of any such motion no member may speak more than once or longer than ten minutes. Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, Mr. Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 21 (2) this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later today or at the next sitting of the house.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONSULTATION ON IDENTITY OF COMMISSIONER AND TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether he will assure the house that the National Indian Brotherhood or some other representative of the Indian body will be fully consulted about the terms of reference and the identity of the commissioner proposed to be appointed, in place of a full claims commission?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I met with the members of this National Indian Brotherhood last Thursday and I discussed the problem with them. I told them that finally the appointment of a commissioner was the responsibility of the government but that I was open to their suggestions regarding possible applicants and that if they did not make any, I would advise them of the appointee selected by the government.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: When will the commissioner be appointed and under what authority? In other words, will he be appointed under the Public Inquiries Act, some other statute or some other authority?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the commissioner will be appointed as soon as possible, I hope, and the appointment will come under the federal Inquiries Act.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: I take it that means under the Public Inquiries Act. Is it a fair summary of the proposed duties of the commissioner that he will decide whether or not there is to be a claims commission and, if so, what claims would be permitted to go before that commission?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the commissioner's duties will be announced upon his appointment, and we will table a copy of the order in council in the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he would consult with his colleagues in the government to determine whether he might be prepared to consider his basic premise in respect of the operation of the commissioner, so that the commissioner might be an agent of the Indian people rather than an agent of the government?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the commissioner will be nobody's agent but a man appointed by the government of Canada to represent all Canadians, including parliament and the Indians themselves.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON ADMINISTRATION TRANSFER—DISCUSSION OF TERMS OF REFERENCE BEFORE APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): A supplementary question to the minister, Mr. Speaker. Could he tell us if his offer to transfer the administration of Indian affairs to the provinces has been accepted by all Canadian provinces?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this is not a short term policy. We shall enter upon numerous negotiations with the Indians and the provincial authorities. In fact, I intend, beginning this week, to visit the various provincial capitals in order to meet the leaders of Indian organizations and of provincial governments.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister assure the house and the country that all proper complaints which the Indian people may have as to breaches of treaty of one kind or another will be the subject of consideration by the commissioner and by the parliament of Canada in due course?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in the terms of reference, it will be established of course that the government intends to abide by the treaties and any claim from the Indian people as regards treaties shall certainly be considered by the commissioner.

[English]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the government to continue making the treaty payments, or will this be a matter for negotiation?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we do not intend now to discontinue the payments we are making to the Indian people under the treaties.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the terms of reference under which the commissioner will operate be discussed in detail with the Indians before the commissioner is appointed and given his duties to perform?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the Indians and their claims, we have been discussing such matters with them for a year. However, the final decision always rests with the government which must assume responsibility for the decision.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Témiscamingue wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue.

SUBMISSIONS BY CAUGHNAWAGA IROQUOIS—REPRESENTATION ON COMMISSION

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister.

Could he tell us first of all—my question is twofold—whether the Caughnawaga Iroquois have made representations asking to come under either the federal government or the provincial government?

Secondly, have the Caughnawaga Indians asked to be represented on the commission with a view to submitting claims to or dealing with the federal government? Finally, and this is vital, do they wish to come under provincial rather than federal jurisdiction?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we intend to have discussions with all Indians in every province, including the province of Quebec. When we go to the province of Quebec to negotiate, we will meet with the leaders of the Quebec Brotherhood of Indians and those of the provincial government.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

[English]

REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMISSION—RIGHTS OF ST. REGIS RESERVE INDIANS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield: A supplementary question Mr. Speaker. If the minister is not prepared to give the house an idea of the terms of reference of the commission, is he not prepared to give the house a brief description of the function and task the commissioner is to perform?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition had taken the trouble to read the government's statement on its policy concerning Indian affairs, he would have found there some most useful information.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In connection with the government's new policy on Indian affairs, can the minister give his assurance that nothing will be done to limit the existing rights and privileges of Indians residing on the Canadian side at the St. Regis reserve and working in plants on the United States side?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, since the matter of customs duties and the free crossing of the border by Indians come under the Minister of National Revenue, I think the question should be put to him.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of clarification. In connection with the situation where a reservation straddles the international boundary, could the minister make a statement on motions or persuade his colleague the Minister of National Revenue to make a statement that will clarify the matter?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, that matter is the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue. I will inform him of the hon. member's representations.

[English]

RESEARCH

REQUEST FOR CESSATION OF DEVELOPMENT OF CHEMICAL AND BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It arises out of the report on chemical and biological weapons prepared by a committee of 14 at the request of the General Assembly of the United Nations and released by the Secretary General of that organization. In view of the terrible consequences of the use of such weaponry as indicated in the report, would the Prime Minister consider ceasing immediately the defence research activities in this field now carried on at Shirleys Bay and Suffield, Alberta?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It might be well to remind the house that any use of this research would be merely for the purpose of defence. This being said, however, I should like to state that a few weeks ago I reported to the house that I asked that this question be reviewed by the government, so that we may have a better understanding of what is going on in this area in Canada. This review is not yet completed.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the report of this committee of experts on the research into the alleged defensive measures is not likely to be very useful, and in view of the appeal of the Secretary General of the United Nations for a treaty banning the use of such weaponry, would the Prime Minister be prepared today to state the government's intention to support that appeal and to support any initiatives taken to arrive at an agreement on the use of these weapons.

Mr. Trudeau: Under the Geneva protocol these questions are already being discussed. There is a difference of opinion among the countries concerning the meaning of biological and bacteriological warfare and whether or not bacteriological warfare includes biological warfare. This is the point of contention among the signatories to the protocol. However, Canada's position has been, as the hon. member suggests, to favour a greater restriction of the use of such weaponry, and our representatives on the disarmament committee have been instructed to proceed accordingly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIOLOGICAL WARFARE—TRANSFER OF MATERIALS ACROSS CANADIAN TERRITORY

Mr. Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question which I wish to direct this time to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On June 23 last I asked the minister to inform the house as to how the materials used in the research at Shirleys Bay and at Suffield, Alberta, got there and how they were transported from one point in Canada to another, if that is where the material comes from, or from the United States to these points in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not remember exactly when the hon. member asked the question. My recollection, however, is that I had thought, at least to myself, that that question might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister said at that time that he would inquire into the matter. In fact, he said that he would have to take the question as notice. Perhaps he has some information which he can give us, without doing violence to the rules.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer I have is very simple, and that is that the Minister of National Defence will answer the question tomorrow.

Mr. Lewis: That is passing the germ.

WATER RESOURCES

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION ON HYDRAULIC DEVELOPMENT—EXPORT OF WATER TO U.S.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house if he intends to introduce at the next session a bill on Canada's water policy? If so, does he intend to consult the provinces on that matter before hand?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt that it is in order to ask the Prime Minister for information on the bills which may be introduced at the next session. I fear that if we allow this kind of question, we will unduly prolong the question period. Moreover, if the hon. member feels there is any urgency to his question, it might be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rephrase my question and ask the Prime Minister whether the Canadian government was represented at the conference held in Banff, Alberta, last week, with respect to the export of water to the United States?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will have to inquire about that, Mr. Speaker, but as far as I know, the Canadian government was not represented at a conference held in Banff last week.

[English]

GRAIN

BOX CAR DISTRIBUTION—EXTENSION OF CROP YEAR

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the statement by Mr. E. K. Turner of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool that a shortage of boxcars was holding up the flow of grain to space in the terminals at the Lakehead and Vancouver, can the minister report to the house on the action being taken to alleviate this condition?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I think the best thing I could do to answer this question would be to read the message sent on this subject by the chief commissioner of the Wheat Board to the Minister of Agriculture in Saskatchewan. In his telegram the chief commissioner says:

> Would advise that railways have been concentrating on provision of box cars to lowest quota points and will continue to do so until end of crop year . . . Would further advise that both railways currently have a very substantial number of cars under load to lakehead and Pacific coast and are spotting cars for additional loads each week to the full unload capacity of the terminals . . . With a heavy export movement out of Pacific coast for the next few weeks and a good volume of grain to be moved from the Lakehead east, we are still hopeful that adequate terminal space will be available to accommodate the five bushel quota and that this target will be reached by August 1.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Bearing in mind what the minister has just said about the situation at the terminals, will he tell the house whether he has given favourable consideration to the request to extend the present crop year until such time as a five bushel quota can be delivered? This question has been asked before, but I put it to the minister again because of the special circumstances prevailing in the current crop year. This is a matter for special consideration.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, you would say that the question is hypothetical.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: So is the transport of a lot of the grain.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Will the minister tell the house specifically what action is being taken by the Wheat Board or through his department to require the railways to provide sufficient cars to fill the space in the Saskatchewan Pool terminals at the Lakehead and in Vancouver? The minister's statement is in direct variance from that of the president of the Saskatchewan Pool. Is the minister misleading the house, or is his information not sufficiently up to date?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, my job is to impress the importance of these matters upon all concerned. We have questioned the railway companies and I am told—I am informed—that the position is as stated. As to the Wheat Board, we are in touch with them all the time. If the hon. member wants to deny that my information is right, it is up to him to do so, but to my knowledge a maximum effort is being made at the present time by all concerned.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): May I ask whether the minister is still acting as co-ordinator and controller of the movement of grain in western Canada, as he indicated he was doing earlier this year?

Mr. Pepin: I am sorry; I was answering a comment I overheard from the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Horner: Important place, Crowfoot.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): I will repeat my question, then. Is the minister still acting as co-ordinator and controller of the movement of grain in western Canada, as he indicated earlier?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I do that every day. I intend to be in Winnipeg on Monday next, performing this function.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dean Gundlock (Lethbridge): A supplementary question to the minister, Mr. Speaker. Is he being informed, or is he being told?

WHEAT—U.S. DISREGARD OF I.G.A. MINIMUM—WASHINGTON MEETING

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): In view of reports that the United States, following subsidized sales of French wheat, is considering suspending certain clauses of the International Grains Arrangement, or even disregarding the minimum price provisions of that agreement, can the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce inform the house whether the United States is keeping the Canadian government informed of any new approaches it may be making with regard to the International Grains Arrangement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the co-operation we are receiving from that country is very good. Largely as a result of this I am in a position to say that a meeting will be held next week in Washington at the ministerial level, attended by Canada, Australia, Argentina the European economic community and the United States. The purpose of the meeting is to review the world wheat marketing situation and to see what can be done about strengthening co-operation among wheat exporters to resolve the problems that have arisen in regard to wheat prices.

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary question. Might I ask the minister again whether he or the government would give consideration to establishing a floor price for wheat at the International Grains Arrangement minimum in order to protect the grain farmer from the effects of undercutting the prices presently established, and from other possibilities that may be envisaged as a result of the United States statement?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this idea and many others are being examined by the government.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister who will represent Canada at the proposed meeting in Washington next week to discuss the whole question of the International Grains Arrangement?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I will be, accompanied by members of the Wheat Board and Canadian government officials.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, again in respect of wheat.

Since a socialist majority has been elected in Manitoba, are the prospects for the sale of wheat any better, especially in the socialist countries of the world?

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN B.C. TELEPHONE AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Is it the intention of the minister to intervene constructively in the serious and disruptive dispute between the British Columbia Telephone Company and its employees?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this strike is unfortunate inasmuch as this is the first time in almost 50 years that there has been a strike in this particular industry in British Columbia. Both parties are aware that mediation services are available and when they feel it necessary to ask the Department of Labour for assistance they will probably do so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Crowfoot on a supplementary.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour regarding another labour condition on the west coast.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question does not appear to be supplementary and I will return to the hon. member in a moment.

POLLUTION

EXHAUST FUMES FROM VEHICULAR TRAFFIC

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to compliment the minister of health on his courageous and successful stand against the dangers of cigarette smoking. I should like also to ask the minister about other dangers in our environment, and specifically to ask him what steps he is taking to prod his laggard colleagues into compelling filtration of harmful exhaust fumes emitted by road vehicles.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for a statement of a general nature that should normally be made on motions.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the minister undertake to make a statement on motions, before the house adjourns for a recess, in order to bring the house up to date on the situation concerning summer employment for students? I ask this question because it has been asked before in the house, and also in view of the fact that during the last few days the problem has been greatly aggravated by grade 13 students being put on the labour market. Would the minister bring the house up to date on this question by making a statement on motions, and would he also give us details of any emergency plan that he has for employing these students?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to consider making a statement next week. I will consider the matter very carefully.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that on May 23 last the minister spoke to the Canadian Vocational Association and talked of a plan prepared by his department as a result of the work of a special task force, will he outline to the house at the same time what this plan is, so the house may be fully aware of what plans, if any, the government has with respect to summer employment?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If the statement is made I will be happy to include every relevant consideration in the statement.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

APPEARANCE OF ORGANIZATIONS BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE—CONSIDERATION OF WOODS REPORT

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I understand that yesterday the veterans affairs committee agreed to consider the Woods report in September, prior to the house resuming. I wonder whether the minister will give us an assurance that all veterans affairs organizations that wish to be heard will be heard by the committee at that time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I bring to the attention of the hon. member that this question relates to the internal management of the committee, and the question may not be asked in those terms at this time.

Mr. McKinley: Then would it be possible, Mr. Speaker, to ask the chairman of the committee whether the organizations that wish to be heard in regard to veterans affairs could be heard at that time when the committee sits?

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it was the recommendation of the committee that an invitation be extended to all interested veterans organizations to appear before it.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—ROLE OF CANAIRELIEF AND RED CROSS—U.N. DISCUSSION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which arises out of the minister's meeting yesterday with officials of Canairelief. I am wondering whether he is able to announce any positive conclusions which might have been reached at that meeting.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had a very useful discussion with Dr. Johnson and the other gentleman who came with him from Canairelief. Dr. Johnson made certain suggestions to us about ways in which we might work together in order to try to get relief supplies resumed to Biafra, and we are studying these suggestions. Altogether I think it was a constructive meeting and I am hopeful that there will be some results.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in dealing with this question the minister said on a couple of occasions that there were still elements of uncertainty that needed to be clarified by the government before it could determine its future policy on matters, and specifically in regard to relief. Can the minister indicate to the house the nature of these uncertainties and when they might become clarified so that some very important action can be taken in this desperate situation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, one of the most important uncertainties, for example, is the role that the international committee of the Red Cross will play in the provision of relief in Nigeria and Biafra. So far the International Red Cross has been carrying on in the Nigerian territory—that is, the federally controlled territory—and I am still hopeful, and I think that all hon. members will share my hope, that an arrangement can be made for the resumption of relief by air.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when the situation does clarify itself, whether he would consider, if the house is still in session, making a statement on motions in view of the very great interest in this matter both in this house and in Canada?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Following upon my reading of some of the minister's statements I should like to ask him whether he can advise if the government is now giving consideration to the suggestion I made last September, namely that Canada as a member of the United Nations take an initiative in having inscribed upon the provisional agenda of the General Assembly the whole question of Nigeria-Biafra, which situation seems to be deteriorating before our eyes?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman and the house know, we have been discouraged from taking any initiative in the United Nations upon the advice of the Secretary General. However as a result of the most recent stoppage of relief in that area a new situation arises, and I certainly would not rule out any type of action that might be useful being taken.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since it is necessary that relief efforts to Biafra-Nigeria be resumed, has the government considered following the suggestion Senator Kennedy made a couple of weeks ago. He suggested that the United Nations might convene a relief conference in Geneva, perhaps, at which the disputants and other interested third parties might agree on regulations governing some relief program.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, that might turn out to be a useful method of proceeding. Nonetheless I would think it would be much more useful if those countries providing the relief were to get together. They could put the most effective pressures on both sides in this conflict.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

NATURAL GAS—ANNOUNCED PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday I asked him if he would look into rising prices of natural gas in the west. It seems that demand in the United States for Canadian gas is forcing the price of our gas up, and making it too expensive for Canadian consumers. Has the minister had a chance to look at the report I alluded to? If so, what action will he take on behalf of the consumers of Canada?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to find the report the hon. member referred to. I believe my office has asked him to supply me with a copy of the report he referred to yesterday. I understand that the National Energy Board expects to hold hearings this fall on applications for additional export licences. At such hearings the board is bound to take into account the need to ensure adequate supply for Canadian consumers. It would of course take into account the effect on Canadian prices.

If the hon. member will supply me with a copy of the report he mentioned I will be glad to refer it to the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan, who has jurisdiction over the National Energy Board.

Mr. Saltsman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the serious situation that will prevail in Canada as a result of increased gas prices, is he contemplating taking with respect to natural gas an action similar to that taken with respect to the price of copper, when copper prices were going up in international markets? On that occasion he indicated that he would take effective steps to make sure that the price of copper did not rise excessively, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker.

FARM MACHINERY

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF BARBER REPORT

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he advise whether the long awaited report of the Barber Commission on the price of farm machinery will be tabled in the house before it adjourns for the summer recess?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not have this report in my hands yet. After I receive it I shall go through the customary procedure of considering whether it is to be tabled in the house.

Mr. Southam: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise us when we may expect to get this long awaited report?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, when my hon. friend talks of a long awaited report I wish to say that in March and April several aspects of the inquiry were reported on by way of interim reports. There has been therefore no undue delay. Dr. Barber's commission has reported on certain aspects that were inquired about in this house earlier this year.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

NEGOTIATIONS TO PURCHASE FOUR STAR COLLIERY

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who reports to this house for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Is it the intention of the corporation to expand its holdings in Cape Breton through the purchase of Four Star Colliery? Are negotiations in progress towards that end? If the minister does not have the answer at the moment perhaps he can take my question as notice and reply on Monday.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, may I take that question as notice and reply later.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the Prime Minister's office will be putting out an itinerary of his western visit. I ask this question to enable us to prepare a friendly reception for him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Korchinski: It will be a friendly reception even though it may not be too elaborate. We do not have too much money out there.

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

INTENT ON INSTRUCTION TO SEEK CONCURRENCE IN COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton in his capacity as chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. Since the hon. member as chairman of the committee was instructed by a majority vote to seek the concurrence of the house in the third report of that committee, may I ask if he is going to carry out that instruction?

[Mr. Southam.]

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a matter of common knowledge that the report made by this committee has been attacked from the very moment of its tabling as a report from one side of the house only. I have already commented on this, and at an earlier stage indicated that in my opinion this is an unfair attack. As to the action which should or can be taken, in the light of all that has developed I must say now that one will have to await the outcome of events.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blair: I say to my hon. friend that if he will continue to sit with us in the house he will find out what action shall be taken.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member does not intend to carry out the instruction of the committee will he call another meeting of the committee, so that we can decide what course we should take?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

NATIONAL PARKS

NOVA SCOTIA—ACCEPTANCE OF LANDS ON NINETY-NINE YEAR LEASE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are having difficulty in obtaining straight answers from the government.

An hon. Member: Let's have some straight questions from the opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: Keep it up. Keep it up. May I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In negotiations or discussions going on with respect to additional parklands in Nova-Scotia, is the minister prepared to accept a 99 year lease from Nova Scotia, the lease to be entered into under terms similar to those prevailing with respect to the Gaspé park agreement recently entered into?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition has asked a question similar to one which was asked on another occasion, at which time the Chair was prompted to suggest that the question might be placed on the order paper.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SEPT ILES, QUE.—PROTECTION OF NATIVE PEOPLE IN R.C.M.P. ACTIVITIES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which is related to a clash last week between the native Indian people of Sept Iles, Quebec, and the R.C.M.P., provincial police, wardens and others. Will he take steps to preserve and protect the native Indian people of this area and make sure that they retain their right to hunt and fish?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this problem arose between the Indians of Sept Iles and the provincial authorities about the administration of justice. I have asked the officials of my department for a report on this situation in order to get better acquainted with the facts.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since many reports indicate that these flair-ups are likely to continue and grow in future, may I ask the minister to ask his colleagues to take steps in order to preserve law and order in the area on behalf of the native people?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the administration of justice within provincial boundaries is the responsibility of the provincial government.

[English]

COMBINES

REPORT OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL—REQUEST FOR HOUSE STATEMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has he yet received the report of the Economic Council of Canada on combines and competition. If not, and if he receives the report before parliament adjourns, will he assure the house that he will make a statement on it here?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, so far I have not received the report although I had hoped to receive it in June. The hon. member is waiting for it with just as much interest as

I am. All we can do is hope the council reports as quickly as possible. If the house is sitting when I receive the report, then naturally I will be making a statement as soon as I receive it.

Mr. Baldwin: In Vancouver, no doubt.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AGREMENT BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS OF QUEBEC AND GABON

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to thank the Prime Minister for his visit to the Joliette constituency last Monday evening, when he attended a play starring the lovely Louise Marleau.

In view of the agreement signed yesterday between the government of Quebec and that of Gabon concerning a university centre for sciences and health, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he considers that agreement acceptable by the government?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked can hardly be considered in order. The hon. member might wish to rephrase it.

Mr. La Salle: I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I would like the Prime Minister to indicate to the house whether the Quebec government was free to sign the agreement yesterday, or if it should have asked Ottawa for permission to sign it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will perhaps agree that he is asking the Prime Minister to express an opinion on a constitutional matter, and I think the question is out of order.

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the honourable and learned Minister of Communications. It is in reference to the minister's announcement re the Name-the-Satellite-Contest, replete with misspellings, which indicates that he is sending posters to the 8,000 post offices still left in the country. Can he advise how he is publicizing this intriguing contest to those many thousands of Canadians who have already lost their post offices?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Business of the House

GRAIN

ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS TO THE LAKEHEAD AND VANCOUVER

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce which is the result of earlier exchanges. In view of the fact that there is some 10 million bushels of space available at wheat pool terminals at the Lakehead as of yesterday, that the terminal at Vancouver is half full, and that there is no backlog of cars at those facilities, will the minister advise what action is being taken by the railroads or by his department to double the allocation of railway rolling stock for those terminals?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will investigate the two situations described by my hon. friend.

TRADE

WHEAT—SALE TO SOUTH AMERICAN COUNTRY

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is it true that an important sale of wheat has recently been made to a South American country?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to advise the hon. member that it is not in order to ask the minister to confirm or deny allegations.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think it will be found that there is agreement to take at this point the four deferred votes on amendments Nos. 2, 3, 6 and 5 which are to be found on the notice paper, page iii, with respect to the official languages bill. If this is agreeable it could be made an order of the house, with the prospect of completing the report stage of the bill this evening.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the President of the Privy Council. At the same time it will be recalled that the Chair had indicated to hon. members that these deferred votes would be taken after all the motions had been considered by the house. In view of the suggestion made in previous debate, on which some hon. members might rely, I think we should proceed with the new suggestion of the President of the Privy Council only with the unanimous agreement of the house. Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISION RESPECTING STATUS AND USE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, July 2, consideration of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now revert on the taking of deferred divisions on motions Nos, 2, 3, 6 and 5, standing on the deferred divisions paper, in that order.

The question is on motion No. 2, Mr. McQuaid:

That Bill C-120, an act respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be amended by deleting subclause (1) of clause 14 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(1) As soon as possible following the completion of each decennial census, or, in the case of the decennial census taken in the year 1961, forthwith after the coming into force of this act, the Dominion Statistician shall prepare and send to the Clerk of the Privy Council a return certified by him showing the population of each of the provinces and census districts in Canada, categorized according to the official languages spoken as a mother tongue by presons resident therein as ascertained by that census, and as soon as possible thereafter the Governor in Council shall, pursuant to Part 1 of the Inquiries Act, appoint not less than twelve persons, being representative of residents of the several provinces, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, as commissioners to constitute a Bilingual Districts Advisory Board for the purpose of conducting an inquiry as described in section 15."

The house divided on motion No. 2 (Mr. McQuaid) which was negatived on the following division:

(3) The Commissioner shall not make a report or recommendation in respect of any person, department or other institution so complained against until that person, department or other institution, as the case may be, has been given reasonable notice of the complaint and has been allowed full opportunity to be heard in public or in private as that person, department or other institution may elect.

(a) the powers of a Commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries Act; and

(b) the power, subject to such limitations as the Governor in Council in the interests of defence or security may prescribe, to enter any premises occupied by any department or other institution of the parliament or government of Canada and carry out therein such inquiries within his authority under this act as he sees fit."

(2) The Governor in Council may by Order in Council enter into an agreement with the government of any province which has been authorized by legislation so to do, for the purpose of encouraging natural development of any such minority language especially as regards the use of such language in matters of education."

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I did not vote for or against the amendment as I oppose the principle of the bill.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. McIntosh: I will sit down when I want to. You can't make me.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER REFORM

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether we might have consent to revert to motions for the purpose of putting forward a proposal with regard to income tax reform.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Certain discussions have taken place with respect to the possibility of a joint parliamentary committee on income tax reform being established. If the house is generally agreeable, perhaps the following could be made an order of the house:

That a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, to be known as the joint parliamentary committee on income tax reform, be appointed to consider government proposals for the reform of the income tax, with powers to report its observations and opinions thereon from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the house, to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by the committee;

That 12 members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, act on behalf of the house as members of the said committee, seven of whom shall be required for a quorum;

That when a quorum is not present, the chairman of the said committee be authorized to proceed with meetings for the purpose of receiving and printing evidence; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed special joint committee.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, perhaps a word is necessary by way of explanation. Why are we to have a committee on income tax, when earlier statements from the government were to the effect that they were concerned with tax reform in general?

Mr. Benson: The white paper will deal with the subject of corporate and personal income tax.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to raise a point of order with reference to this announcement. The minister is saying, in effect, that it does not matter whether or not there is a quorum, that if one little Liberal is present the government will get its decisions. That is the philosophy behind the announcement. The committees are nothing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that the motion is to be put. Is there no agreement, or is there agreement? There is no unanimous agreement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISION RESPECTING STATUS AND USE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill.

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan) moved:

That Bill C-120, an act respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be amended by deleting subclause (4) of clause 40 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(4) In relation to the appointment and advancement in employment of personnel the duties of whose positions include duties relating to the provision of services by authorities to members of the public, it is the duty

(a) of the Public Service Commission, in cases where it has the authority to make appointments,

(b) of the authority respectively concerned in the cases of the Canadian Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and

(c) of the authority concerned in all other cases, to ensure that, in the exercise and performance of the powers, duties and functions conferred or imposed upon it by law, due account is taken of the purposes and provisions of this Act, subject always to the maintenance of the principle of selection of personnel according to merit as required by the Public Service Employment Act or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada respectively applicable to the Canadian Forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and the authority concerned in all other cases."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a plainly worded and easily understood amendment, and I do not propose to take much of the time of the house in presenting it. It is submitted largely to clear up ambiguities which we contend exist in the bill as now drafted, as well as in the amendment submitted to the committee and to the house some time ago.

If we refer to the original Bill C-120, the bill which received first reading on October 17, 1968, we find that clause 9 was apparently considered to cover all the services which the government had in mind. The clause at that time said that every department and agency of the government of Canada and every judicial, quasi-judicial or administrative body or Crown corporation established by or pursuant to an act of the Parliament of Canada had the duty to ensure that the services provided by them were provided in the two languages in areas where this was necessary.

For some unexplained reason the minister saw fit to bring in an amendment of his own. Strangely enough, he amended the interpretation clause of the bill. Naturally we wonder why this provision was not included in the interpretation section when the bill was originally drafted. The interpretation section of a statute is, of course, a very important section, and ordinarily the draftsman of a bill is very careful to include in the interpretation section an expansion of all of the words in the bill that he thinks require explanation.

However, clause 36 was amended by the minister in order to bring the members of the Canadian forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under the provisions of the bill. I have wondered why clause 9 of the original bill was not considered wide enough to include members of the R.C.M.P. and the Canadian forces. Clause 9 provided:

> Every department and agency of the government of Canada and every judicial, quasi-judicial or administrative body or crown corporation—

And so on. They were the bodies originally included in clause 9, but in its wisdom the government apparently felt that an additional clause had to be brought in to make sure that members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were included in the provisions of the bill, and therefore were subject to the provisions of every clause in the bill. Since the government saw fit to take this step, I do not think we can take objection to it.

The government also decided to amend clause 40 by adding an additional subclause 4. Subclause 4 provides:

> In relation to the appointment and advancement in employment of personnel the duties of whose positions include duties relating to the provision of services by authorities to members of the public, it is the duty
> (a) of the Public Service Commission, in cases where it has the authority to make appointments,
> (b) of the authority concerned, in all other cases, to ensure that, in the exercise and performance of the powers, duties and functions conferred or imposed upon it by law, due account is taken of the purposes and provisions of this Act—

[Mr. McQuaid.]

These are the important words.

> —subject always to the maintenance of the principle of selection of personnel according to merit as required by the Public Service Employment Act.

That clause was designed to establish and to protect—and I think it effectively does so—the merit principle, and to make it applicable to those who fall within the provisions of the Public Service Employment Act. However, I hasten to point out that members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police do not fall within the provisions of the Public Service Employment Act, at least in most respects. The Public Service Employment Act, which is chapter 71 of the 1966-67 Statutes of Canada, provides in section 2 (2):

> For the purpose of being eligible to enter competitions and for the purposes of sections 11 and 13, the following persons shall be deemed to be persons employed in the Public Service, namely:
> (a) members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police;
> (b) members of the Canadian forces;—

I ask the house to note that these members of the R.C.M.P. and the Canadian forces are deemed to be employed by the public service only for the purpose of being eligible to enter competitions and for the purposes of sections 11 and 13. Section 11 of that act provides:

> Appointments shall be made from within the Public Service except where, in the opinion of the Commission, it is not in the best interests of the Public Service to do so.

That section has nothing to do with merit. If the members also examine section 13 they will find it has nothing to do with appointment according to merit. The section of the Public Service Employment Act that deals with merit is section 10, and specifically by that act members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the armed forces are excluded from the provisions of that section. The only sections of the act that do apply to members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are sections 11 and 13.

Our contention, Mr. Speaker, is that members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the armed forces should be afforded the protection given other public servants under the Public Service Employment Act. Since they are going to be governed by the provisions of the official languages bill, the principle of merit so far as promotion is concerned should certainly be made applicable to them. All we are asking the house to do is to clarify the terms of the bill so there is no shadow of doubt that the members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have the same protection as that afforded to members of the public service under the provisions of the Public Service Employment Act.

During the deliberations of the special committee the government draftsmen themselves agreed that the Public Service Employment Act does not apply to members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Mr. Thorson, an employee of the Department of Justice who I understand did much of the drafting of the bill, when speaking to a very similar amendment introduced in the committee which dealt with the same point, had this to say as reported at page 248 of committee report No. 3:

The reservation at the end—

That is the reservation in regard to merit, as required by the Public Service Employment Act.

—ensures that the principle of selection according to merit is maintained in those circumstances—

I ask the house to note these words.

—where it now applies by law.

The principle of merit does not apply by law to members of the armed forces and the R.C.M.P. under the terms of the Public Service Employment Act. Mr. Thorson continued:

To take an illustration, Air Canada, a Crown corporation makes its own appointments and promotions, and does not come under the terms of the Public Service Employment Act.

The principle of selection according to merit, which is found in the Public Service Employment Act, simply does not extend to Air Canada, and indeed parliament itself has never considered it appropriate to attempt to extend the merit principle to all of the bodies to which this law would apply. Examples of this are the armed forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and the many Crown corporations.

The only reason I submit this amendment for the consideration of the house is to protect those members of the armed forces and the R.C.M.P. who cannot come here to protect themselves. We feel it is our responsibility to see to it that the principle of merit applies to these men as well as to other public servants, and I am sure the government will agree that this is our responsibility. This is all the amendment is seeking. I realize the government considers the amendment unnecessary in that these men are already protected; the minister will probably reply that the words in subclause (4) of clause 40, "of the authority concerned, in all other cases", meet this point. We say that it is not absolutely clear. We say that there is some doubt about the meaning of the following words of clause 40(4): —subject . . . to the maintenance of the principle of selection of personnel according to merit as required by the Public Service Employment Act.

If we were sure that members of the armed forces and the R.C.M.P. came within the Public Service Employment Act, we would be satisfied. As matters now stand we suggest seriously that the wording of the clause is ambiguous. For the life of me I cannot see why the government refuses to accept an amendment which will clarify that ambiguity. If the government accepts the amendment, those who sit on this side of the house will be much more satisfied. I am equally certain that members of the armed forces and the R.C.M.P., who could be adversely affected by the present wording of the clause, would also be satisfied.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the reason for the original amendment which was accepted by the special committee to clause 40 of the bill, that part now being clause 40(4), was to satisfy those people, particularly in western Canada and in the Atlantic provinces whose views were reflected by their provincial governments, that nothing in this bill as it is will change the principle of nation-wide recruitment to and promotion in the federal public service and the federal agencies of government. One of the concerns I encountered when discussing the bill with the Attorneys General of the four western provinces and with the Attorney General of Nova Scotia was that this bill would effectively exclude from the Public Service of Canada young men and women from those parts of the country where English was the dominant language and where there was little opportunity for them to learn or practise French. They feared that this bill would exclude from the Public Service of Canada English speaking candidates from the western and Atlantic provinces.

We have added clause 40(4) to make it quite clear that the principle of merit now found and contained in section 12 of the Public Service Employment Act is in no way over-ridden, repealed, or affected by the passage of this bill, and that merit as defined in the Public Service Employment Act will continue to govern the recruitment and promotion of public servants in Canada. That is the purpose of the clause.

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows me well enough to be sure that I will entertain all questions at the conclusion of what I have to say. Certainly I have made it clear in speeches in the national capital, western Canada and elsewhere that I will not hold office in a government that adopts legislation which in any way limits recruitment to the Public Service of Canada to one or two provinces because there happen to be in those provinces facilities to help one learn and speak a second language.

Mr. Woolliams: In that case you had better resign now.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am satisfied, and I introduced figures at the second reading stage of the bill to illustrate this quite conclusively, that since 1965-66, since the policy of bilingualism in the public service was adopted by the former Pearson administration, the number of recruits from English speaking provinces not only has not decreased but has increased in great measure.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would not want the minister to mislead the house. I think he should check his records. I think he will see that what was referred to previously was the number of applications from each area. I do not think the house has been told how many of those were accepted. There is a great difference between those who apply and those who are accepted. The difference between applications and recruits is the difference between black and white.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, not only am I prepared to stand by the figures as to the number of applications that were received and accepted, but I am also willing to produce those figures. The figures bear me out not only as to the number of applications made but also as to the number of applications accepted from western Canada and the Atlantic provinces. They bear me out quite conclusively.

Surely for the sake of national unity we want a public service that reflects in its make-up every region and province of this country. The Public Service Commission is sensitively aware of this problem and intends to continue to administer public service promotion and recruitment to the public service in such a way as to ensure that the public service properly represents all regions of Canada.

The hon. member referred to clause 36(3) of the bill and the amendment which was proposed by the government at the committee stage. That amendment was accepted. That amendment said that any reference to any of the institutions of the government or Parliament of Canada shall be deemed to include the Canadian Forces and Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In other words, the word "institutions" shall be deemed to cover those bodies. We said at that time that we believed that "institutions" as found in clause 2, the declaratory clause of the bill, and in other clauses is clear enough but that in order to satisfy doubts we were quite willing to have it spelled out. In the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, at any rate, nothing in clause 36(3) which was added to clause 36 in committee changes the purport or intent of the bill.

Having laid down a little background, Mr. Speaker, I now want to analyse the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid). As I divine his object, and I am basing my opinion on what he said this afternoon in the house and what he said earlier before the special committee, he wishes to spell out in the bill a requirement that the definition of merit not be supplanted in the selection of personnel of the Canadian Armed Forces, the R.C.M.P. and federal agencies by any addition to the definition already inserted in the Public Service Employment Act covering those employees to whom that act applies. In other words he is saying, "You have a merit principle which applies to those agencies and departments that are covered by the Public Service Employment Act. Section 12 of the act applies to them. But you have not covered those agencies of the federal government to which that act does not apply."

Mr. Woolliams: That is quite right.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member for Cardigan is saying, and I hope I am putting his words fairly, that "we want to ensure that the merit principle applies to other agencies, namely the armed forces and the R.C.M.P."

• (4:10 p.m.)

The amendment which was proposed by the government at the committee stage in relation to clause 40(4) was a clarifying amendment in the sense that we wanted to make it perfectly clear that the fact that the official languages bill was a later bill in terms of time to the Public Service Employment Act could not be interpreted by the government, or by anybody looking at this bill, as an implication that anything in the Public Service Employment Act had been amended or rescinded. In other words, we merely continued and restated the merit principle as it appears in an earlier statute, the Public Service Employment Act, to ensure that nothing in this bill will derogate from it.

There is no amendment made to the Public Service Employment Act by reason of the official languages bill. The purpose of clause 40(4) is merely to protect the merit principle as beyond the scope of this bill and to ensure that nothing in this bill can be construed as an amendment to the earlier act. It does not change the merit principle in the Public Service Employment Act, nor does it extend the merit principle to the other public agencies of government not covered by the Public Service Employment Act. Therefore the existing clause 40(4) is a saving clause and it does nothing more.

In so far as it preserves the present legal situation it will ensure that the merit principle, where it applies, remains. There are several areas of the government service where the merit principle does not apply, where parliament in its wisdom to date has said that the merit principle shall not apply within the definition of section 12 of the Public Service Employment Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The cabinet, for example.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will take that riposte as being well meant.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Present company excepted.

Mr. Horner: And only at the present time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is a fairly fluid situation, as my hon. friend says.

As the hon. member for Cardigan knows, this subject was discussed at some length in the special committee and it was pointed out that there is no special requirement as to merit for the Canadian forces, the R.C.M.P. and those other agencies that do not presently come under the Public Service Employment Act. Parliament has not extended that requirement specifically to them.

Not all bodies apply the same standards as are imposed upon the Public Service Commission by the Public Service Employment Act. The armed forces have their own selection standards, and I will not go into the nature of them at the moment. Air Canada has its own standards, and the R.C.M.P. has its standards. They may not correspond to "merit" as currently defined in section 12 of the Public Service Employment Act, and it is not the purpose of this bill either to extend or restrict the merit principle. The purpose of this bill is not to interfere with the merit principle as presently found in the statutes of Canada. This is merely a saving clause.

Where merit applies today under the Public Service Employment Act it will not be interfered with by this bill. Where it does not apply, then of course it is up to parliament when reviewing the statutes relating to the armed forces, the R.C.M.P., Air Canada, the C.N.R. and other agencies of government not currently covered by the Public Service Employment Act to decide in its good judgment whether that merit principle ought to apply.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, since the purpose of this bill is not germane either to restricting or extending the merit principle but only to ensuring by way of clarification, and by way of a saving clause, that the merit principle so far as it now applies in the statutes of Canada will not be interfered with, we recommend to the house at this report stage that the amendment be rejected. I suggest that it is ill-conceived and that it would convert clause 40(4) into more than a saving provision. It would not clarify. It might well confuse the whole issue as to whether or not, to use the words of the hon. member for Cardigan, we were extending the merit principle by indirection into other statutes regarding other institutions of government that are currently not covered by the Public Service Employment Act.

If parliament in its good judgment in the days and years ahead wishes to analyse the recruiting, hiring and promoting practices of these other agencies of government, parliament should directly set its attention to it and not do it indirectly by way of a provision that would confuse the statutes of Canada. That is the reason we suggest to the house that this amendment be rejected.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, having listened to the minister's argument with great interest he has left me with the impression that this clause really does nothing. If so, why have the clause in the bill at all? Why not just leave it silent?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Because a lot of concern was expressed in western Canada and the Atlantic provinces that the merit system was in some way being derogated from by this bill, we wanted to make it perfectly clear that where the merit principle applied nothing in this bill derogated from the provisions of section 12 of the Public Service Employment Act where that act applied.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words—

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, during his remarks the minister indicated that he would answer a question that the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) was going to put to him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I did not see the hon. member for Cardigan rising, and I have recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is agreeable we could probably recognize the hon. member for Cardigan.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I agree gladly.

Mr. McQuaid: In his speech the minister repeatedly said, and I copied down what he said and have it here word for word, "merit as currently defined in the Public Service Employment Act." Where does he find merit defined in the Public Service Employment Act? Nowhere is merit defined in that act that I can see.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will try to find it for the hon. member. So far as I can recall it is defined in section 12.

Mr. McQuaid: I have the act here and all section 12 says is:

> The Commission may, in determining pursuant to section 10 the basis of assessment of merit—

It speaks about merit but does not define it.

> —in relation to any position or class of positions, prescribe selection standards as to education, knowledge, experience, language, age, residence or any other matters that, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary or desirable having regard to the nature of the duties to be performed, but any such selection standards shall not be inconsistent with any classification standard prescribed pursuant to the Financial Administration Act for that position or any position in that class.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that does not define merit. This is what bothers me. Where are we going to find the definition of merit?

I now come to my second question. On May 20, as reported at pages 8840 and 8841 of Hansard, the minister gave figures showing the total number of university candidates who applied for positions with the Public Service Commission of Canada for the years 1966 and 1969. Of those who applied in those particular years, how many were accepted into the public service and from what areas did they come?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am looking for the appropriate document because I made that inquiry myself. I am perfectly willing to table it at the third reading stage if the house would be good enough to allow me to intervene when I get the document.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to appeal to the minister to give further consideration to the proposal made by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) in the motion that is now before the house.

Mr. Woolliams: I knew the hon. member would support it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) says he knew I would support this motion. I suppose he probably relies on the fact that I frequently have something to say about retired civil servants, and almost every time I do I mention retired members of the R.C.M.P. and retired members of the armed forces. I do so because I have learned in my studies in that field having to do with the pensions of these various groups that it is not enough just to say retired civil servants and assume that this includes the rest. If one wants these other groups included one has to say so. I believe, therefore, that that principle applies in this instance.

Even though the Minister of Justice, I thought, argued that subclause 4 of clause 40 really was not necessary, I congratulate him for having it included in the bill when the bill was in the hands of the special committee. It seems to me the other clauses that have been quoted today do leave some ambiguity, and that it is a good idea to make it clear in this bill that the merit principle in the federal public service will not be interfered with because of the operation of this legislation. Therefore it seems to me it is simple and elementary logic, if one is to take that position with regard to those in the public service, and inasmuch as clause 36(3) of the bill says that the institutions of Canada include in addition to the federal public service, the R.C.M.P. and the armed forces, that protection for these other groups ought to be included in clause 40(4). If the saving clause is necessary at all—there is some doubt about it but I rather think it is necessary—I suggest it ought to be applied to all three groups that have been mentioned in clause 36(3).

Another argument the minister has against the motion of the hon. member for Cardigan is that in his view it would make new law rather than simply write in a saving provision. I find it difficult to follow that argument because all the hon. member for Cardigan asks is that these other personnel, those in the R.C.M.P. and the armed forces, be given the protection of the merit principle as required by the Public Service Employment Act or any other act of the parliament of Canada respectively applicable to the Canadian forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and so on. Surely that is clear. The hon. member for Cardigan is not writing new law. He is not writing a new merit principle. He is not saying there shall be for the R.C.M.P. or the armed forces a merit principle they do not now have. He is saying that in so far as they have the protection of the merit principle under some of the sections of the Public Service Employment Act or any other act of the parliament of Canada that is on the books, that protection shall be guaranteed to them under the provisions of this bill.

As I say, in this case we are not arguing with the minister over something that he is dead against. As a matter of fact, as he himself said it was he on behalf of the government who brought in the amendment to the bill which resulted in new subclause 4. If my colleague the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) had not had to leave, I am sure he would be standing on his feet saying he had something to say about urging it to be brought in.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker. I had considerable co-operation from the hon. member for York South, for which I am grateful, but this amendment was introduced by me and my colleagues as a result of the representations I received while I was in western Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I will let the hon. member for York South speak for himself when he returns. It may be with regard to some related clause that he was active, as I am sure he was. At any rate, this is a principle which the minister has accepted. He is the father of the amendment which put subclause 4 into clause 40. Since he was prepared to agree that it should be there for the sake of those in the public service generally, I believe the same protection ought to be provided to those other two groups that are referred to as being included in the institutions of the parliament or government of Canada in clause 36(3).

As I say, we are not arguing with the minister over something to which he is violently opposed. We are discussing a matter of detail in an area where there is a wide measure of agreement. We know what we are seeking. I think the minister ought to consider this matter and should be willing to accept the amendment now before us in the name of the hon. member for Cardigan.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, as far as this motion is concerned, I should like first to clear up a few things which, I think, are tremendously important.

In my opinion the amendment contains certain assumptions which we precisely want to get rid of, in this country, because they seem to convey the feeling that French Canadians are unable to assume certain functions, particularly in the Canadian Armed Forces and in the R.C.M.P. In fact, one would believe that within these two organizations, French-speaking Canadians should not be granted too generous a share.

If we analyze the reasons which brought about the introduction of a bill on official languages, we notice that it is precisely because it has never been agreed that French-speaking Canadians should have their fair share in the country's administration.

And when we seriously consider what this bill stands for, we feel that it is quite useless.

Occasionally, competence in a given field makes an individual bilingual. I should like to illustrate this by giving a few examples.

In a bilingual district, in an area where the great majority is either French-speaking or English-speaking, if the head of the R.C.M.P. cannot understand the other language he is an incompetent. This amendment, just as the original clause of the bill, seems to minimize the importance of this. Is there anything more annoying, than having to deal with policemen, with detectives who cannot understand you?

Early in the session one of my colleagues was arrested by the Ottawa police, as always English unilingual.

I say it is inadmissible that, in the capital of a country where at least 40 per cent of the population speaks French, one should not be arrested in his own tongue at least.

Mr. Speaker, if we do not recognize bilingualism as an element of competence in bilingual districts, this bill is absolutely worthless. It will change nothing and bring nothing new to this country. Even now, this is roughly what we hear in Quebec. Of course, at this stage in the province of Quebec, the situation is well understood and people smile at our quibbling, at our hesitations about a problem which should have been settled not in 1969, but in 1867. We are already 102 years late and we still have doubts about the importance and necessity of establishing bilingualism in the public service of our country.

Mr. Speaker, even that bill was not required to take those steps. Instead of bringing about divisions, instead of trying to convince Canadians that the problems of the country were being settled through a bill on official languages, the government should merely have enforced section 133 of the constitution. To establish bilingualism wherever it is required in the public service, that bill was not required at all. It is obvious that steps should have been taken a long time ago.

If in a municipality, like, say Maillardville, in British Columbia, there are 5,000 or 10,000 French-speaking post office users, obviously the postmaster there should understand and speak French. And if there is a member of the R.C.M.P. on duty there, again it is obvious that he must understand those who come under his authority. All that could have been accomplished without introducing a bill. They want, with the help of a bill, to create in the province of Quebec the impression that Canada is becoming bilingual. It is not true. There are still many reservations. This will not be a step forward but backward.

Therefore, I agree with the minister's statement that there is no need to define anything as that constitutes a kind of insult to the French Canadians. Some people are afraid that French Canadians might become members of such organizations, afraid that they might be appointed to certain positions because they have a better knowledge of both languages and, with an amendment like this one, those people would like to prevent such a thing. I would hate to suspect the motives of the hon. member who is introducing this amendment, but when you have taken the trouble to study the problems of the country as well as the development of the French fact in Canada, you are able to guess pretty well the motives behind this proposition.

The aim is to maintain at all costs this situation thanks to which those who only speak English have always precedence over those who are bilingual. That is aberrant! The question of proficiency is only a face-saving device. Of course, French Canadians will never match the proficiency of their counterpart if the yardstick is the majority of the country.

Our laws are democratically conceived for the country as a whole according to its general frame of mind. It is therefore always difficult for those whose mother tongue is not English to display the same proficiency as that of their English-speaking countrymen since they have a different mentality. The problem is not there.

I shall go as far as to say that the problem of national unity will not be solved by such a bill. On the contrary. It will only breed dissension without fostering in the least the unity of the country. The French Canadians, and the Quebecers in particular, will not feel happy until they have a share in the management of the country. In other words, the bill should not be a bill on the official languages but a bill concerning the participation of the Quebecers, of the French Canadians in the management of public affairs. They should assume at least one third of the administration of the whole country. This is what the French Canadians want and they will not back out as long as they do not get it.

Mr. Speaker, however harsh these few remarks may sound, they are true because what will have been changed by the official languages bill in a few years since nobody will be transferred. For the time being, the government does not want to create fear. Nobody will be transferred. Everything will remain as it is and in a few years there will be bilingual employees whose mother tongue will be English. Then, the French Canadians, the Quebecers, will be excluded or almost so from the administration.

If we take into consideration all the Crown corporations or the government departments, everything that is related to the federal administration, the participation of the French Canadians as such is about from zero to 2 or 3 per cent at the most.

One needs only to review the questions put on the order paper by my colleague, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), to ascertain the truth of such statements. And that is what the French Canadian wants to change. He no longer wants to have a 2 per cent participation in the administration of this country when he makes up one third of the population.

The bill before us, with all the reservations it contains and amendments that clarify them, instead of fostering unity, is causing a final division. When Quebecers understand the uselessness, the futility of this legislation, they will say: We knew that there was nothing to be done.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand that some members of this house fail to grasp the true problem that now exists in Canada, that one can insult part of the population with such amendments. I read between the lines, and I see that the competence of the French Canadian is questioned. That is one of the purposes of this amendment.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, it may happen that the major criterion of competence is precisely and exactly that a person is bilingual. So, if the enforcement of this legislation is not seen in its proper light, we might end in a blind alley.

Having sat on the special committee on official languages, I have heard with my own ears what the hon. member who moved the amendment had to say and he even stated categorically that French Canadians in provinces other than Quebec were against this bill.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. McQuaid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, do I understand the hon. member correctly, that I said in committee that our party does not want any part of this bill? Is that what he said?

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: I did not say that the party was against this bill but that, according to you, the French-speaking minority outside Quebec was not interested in bilingualism and, consequently, was not interested in giving approval to this bill concerning the official languages.

I could refer to the proceedings—

[English]

Mr. McQuaid: Again on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I categorically deny ever having made such a statement in committee or anywhere else.

Mr. Woolliams: Or this party.

Mr. McQuaid: I would ask the hon. member to point out specifically where I made such a statement. If he cannot point it out, I would ask him to withdraw the remark.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, if I had in hand the report of the committee, I could read what the hon. member said then. It is, I believe, in Proceedings and Evidence No. 4. I recall that the hon. member for Matane (Mr. de Bané) flared up at that statement of the hon. member.

Anyhow, we are faced with an actual situation, and we are trying to answer the problem by means of solutions likely to foster national unity. Since this is one of the ostensible purposes of this official languages bill, in order to be logical, we must act accordingly, that is make sure that this bill really promotes bilingualism in the civil service. Furthermore, we must avoid including so many reservations in the implementation of that principle, because sooner or later the consequences of this bill, which will foster division instead of unity, will be realized.

If those possibilities are seriously taken into consideration, we must be deeply convinced of the need to turn down those amendments, which imply no more and no less that French-Canadians are unqualified in some areas, and consequently, that care should be taken so that competence takes precedence over bilingualism.

Mr. Speaker, there will always be plenty of reasons for claiming that French Canadians are incompetent. The creation of bilingual districts for the specific purpose of providing adequate services for minorities does not matter. However gifted and intelligent an individual may be, Mr. Speaker, if he is unable to make himself understood by those he must work with, then he is incompetent.

If the purpose is to fight discrimination, it is important not to jeopardize, by this policy of reservations, an effect which in the long run could prove beneficial, if only the government would move forward and forget its fears. It is too late to be afraid. If that is our aim, let us simply establish bilingualism in the entire federal public service. In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that it could have been done without introducing an official language bill because it was not necessary to establish bilingualism.

Under the constitution, even if it is a little out of date, the federal government should have preserved the rights, prerogatives and privileges of the minorities in provinces other than Quebec, but it never did.

In the present framework of the constitution, the only thing to do was to take our responsibilities, and there would have been no problem. The introduction of such a bill succeeded in scaring a major part of the country and it is now up to the minister and the government to patch things up.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might have the consent of the house to reply now to the question put to me just a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member asked me whether I would produce figures to complement those I introduced on May 20 at second reading stage, which are found at pages 8839, 8840 and 8841 of Hansard. At that time I produced figures to show the comparison in the number of applications from university students to the public service of Canada in the years 1966 and 1969. I said they had doubled and that in 1965-66 there were 4,000 applications from university students of Canada and this year there had been 9,000. As will be found on pages 8840 and 8841, I listed the number of applications by universities.

I am prepared to table the figures for the year 1968-69 of the number of applications, the number appointed and the number of those appointed who were, in the opinion of the commission, bilingual, and to break those down in the form in which they appear at pages 8840 and 8841 of Hansard, by universities. Before doing that, in reply to the question asked I think I would be entitled to recite some of the more significant figures and let the rest of the table speak for itself.

The total number of applications as a result of the university recruitment programs in 1968-69 was 8,719. Of that number 410 were appointed, and of that number 140 were bilingual. These figures are broken down in this way: administrative trainee group, number of applications 4,013, number appointed 135, number of bilinguals 62. Foreign affairs group: number of applications, 1,746; number appointed, 54; number of bilinguals, 21. Social-economic groups: number of applications, 776; number appointed, 63; number of bilinguals, 19. Biophysical groups: number of applications, 1,440; number appointed, 126; number of bilinguals, 30. Applied science groups: number of applications, 744; number appointed, 32; number of bilinguals, 8. The total of all groups: number of applications, 8,719; number appointed, 410; number of bilinguals, 140.

The university breakdown speaks for itself. The total number of graduates appointed was 410 in 1969, and 140 were bilingual. This is broken down university by university in the same order in which I tabled it on May 20.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISION RESPECTING STATUS AND USE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill, and motion No. 7, Mr. McQuaid.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in supporting this amendment, and taking into consideration what the minister said, I think it may be well to refer briefly to what the Public Service Employment Act really says. I should like to read three of the sections. Section 10 reads as follows:

Appointments to or from within the Public Service shall be based on selection according to merit—

In that regard I think the minister was right.

—as determined by the Commission, and shall be made by the Commission, at the request of the deputy head concerned, by competition or by such other process of personnel selection designed to establish the merit of candidates as the Commission considers is in the best interests of the Public Service.

Section 11 reads:

Appointments shall be made from within the Public Service except where, in the opinion of the Commission, it is not in the best interests of the Public Service to do so.

Section 12 emphasizes this and reads as follows:

The Commission may, in determining pursuant to section 10 the basis of assessment of merit in relation to any position or class of positions, prescribe selection standards as to education, knowledge, experience, language, age, residence or any other matters that, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary or desirable—

For promotion.

All we are asking here is that members of the Canadian Armed Forces and members of the R.C.M.P. be protected in the same way because, as I understand the wording in the Public Service Employment Act, they are not included and do not have the same protection as those in the public service. Surely that is not too much to ask. I have spoken to members of the R.C.M.P. across the nation and have found there is real fear that there will be some discrimination with regard to promotion, particularly of those who have not had the opportunity to learn and to become fluent in both official languages.

I agree with the last speaker who said that everyone should have the right to be arrested in his own language. I think there is some merit in that. I believe it would be very difficult for a member of the R.C.M.P. from the province of Quebec who spoke only French if he were sent to Banff for the summer, just as it would be very difficult for an English speaking member of the R.C.M.P. to be sent to the province of Quebec.

Mr. Pelletier: No, no.

Mr. Woolliams: The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) disagrees. I like to have his attention because he will not speak on this bill. He wants the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) to be his mouthpiece. Be that as it may, I will proceed with what I am saying. I think it would be very difficult.

When my good friend says that my party is against bilingualism, I would remind the house that before the Secretary of State had even been heard of the late R. B. Bennett was the first prime minister to put the English and French languages on the dollar bills of Canada and, flowing from that decision, all the doments that came from all departments of government were printed in both the languages. So I think we have to get some of the history straight. Second, a former prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), brought in simultaneous translation in the House of Commons. Before that time those of us who were not totally bilingual had to guess what was said. Some hon. members shake their heads, but that was before they left other parties to join the Liberal ranks and take advantage of that great opportunity.

When someone suggests that men such as myself who believe in Conservative principles may be against bilingualism, they are historically incorrect and incorrect in so far as our philosophy is concerned. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has stated over and over again where he stands on the bill.

An hon. Member: What about Diefenbaker?

Mr. Woolliams: Every Member of Parliament has a right to his own views. I know that people from different regions hold different views. I listen to my good friends, the French Canadians, I like to hear them speak and I learn a lot about their province and their philosophy. I do not always agree with them, and I am sure they do not always agree with the westerners, but all we ask of them is that they show the same tolerance toward the west as the west shows them. My city of Calgary, for instance, encourages this relationship through the chamber of commerce by being the twin city of the city of Quebec. However, I do not wish to go off on a tangent; all I wanted to do was to set the record straight.

Mr. Orlikow: What a record!

Mr. Horner: You should not talk about records. You did not even stand up and vote; you left the house.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not want to get into an argument with my friends. All I can say is that I was here until ten minutes to six last night and I would be the last one to make a personal attack on any member of the hon. member's party.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): That was after you left, Eldon. Be honest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: I was not here when the attack was made on me.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): That is your own fault.

Mr. Woolliams: He did it deliberately.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I think one might call that a lie.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock the house will proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills. However, before proceeding I understand the hon. member for Champlain wishes to speak to a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, in order to be fair to the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) whom I seemed to attack a while ago, if you will allow me, I might quote the statement he made in the official languages committee, which is as follows:

We must realize that there are some areas in Canada—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but this hardly constitutes a point of order. If there is a point of order or a question of privilege, it lies with the hon. member for Cardigan to raise it.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, there is agreement on this side of the house to waive private members' hour and to proceed with the consideration of Bill C-120. I suggest that this might be done if there is unanimous agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: May I digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his courtesy in making that suggestion so I could continue my remarks.

All we ask is that members of the armed forces and members of the R.C.M.P. be accorded the same protection that is given to people employed in the public service. As I was saying, there is a real fear among members of the R.C.M.P. and members of the armed services that the fact that they are not totally bilingual may affect their promotions.

The greatest skill that is necessary is scientific knowledge. The Public Service Employment Act says that the commission may, in determining assessment of merit in relation to any position or class of positions, prescribe selection standards as to education, knowledge, experience, language, age, and so on. Knowledge is certainly of great importance so far as those who serve in the armed forces and the R.C.M.P. are concerned. Experience is certainly of great importance. If a person has the necessary knowledge and has served in the R.C.M.P. or in the services for 15 or 20 years, and there is a certain type of promotion open for which he is suited, then surely he has the necessary qualifications. All the amendment is asking is that the position of those who have been omitted should be safeguarded. I agree that language would be important, depending upon where the service is to be carried out.

The minister's main argument seems to be that clause 40 really added nothing by way of rights but simply spelled out what the rights were. Clause 40(4) says:

In relation to the appointment and advancement in employment of personnel the duties of whose positions include duties relating to the provision of services by authorities to members of the public, it is the duty

(a) of the Public Service Commisson . . . and

(b) of the authority concerned, in all other cases, to ensure that, in the exercise and performance of the powers, duties and functions conferred or imposed upon it by law, due account is taken of the purposes and provisions of this Act, subject always to the maintenance of the principle of selection of personnel according to merit—

All we are saying is that the two classes of persons to whom we have referred should not have been omitted. Acceptance of the motion would give them the psychological security that those in the R.C.M.P. and in the Canadian Armed Forces need. Why not give them the same protection as is spelled out in the Public Service Employment Act?

The minister tells us the amendment would not really change the law. But I feel that if there were a disposition to include this provision for the safeguarding of those who serve in the Canadian Armed Forces and the R.C.M.P., no one would oppose it.

It seems to me, though, that under the new rules every opposition amendment, regardless of its merits, is voted down unless it has had the prior approval of the government or of the standing committee. We saw this happen this afternoon and we shall see it again with regard to the amendment now before us. What we are really doing in the House of Commons nowadays is playing games. Can the taxpayers afford to keep us here playing games when what we do has no effect? The government is saying: We shall run the country and we shall not listen to any suggestions put forward whether they have merit or not; we shall ram our legislation through, and we shall bring in further new rules so as to stop the opposition getting across to the people what is really going on in this country.

An hon. Member: Stop playing games.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) I should like to second almost all what the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) said earlier about a situation that has been going on in Canada for quite some time.

I also wish to say that I agree with him that it is highly frustrating to be arrested by a constable or to be admonished by a unilingual peace officer in a city such as Ottawa which, of course, should be bilingual. The hon. member for Champlain will nevertheless agree that there is some progress in this field and that we should give enough time to the new generation of public servants to acquire a reasonable knowledge of the second language, which they never had the opportunity to learn.

I would say to the hon. member for Champlain that bilingualism applies even to federal members of Parliament, because they must serve the whole Canadian population. I would hope that the hon. member for Champlain and all his colleagues who are not yet bilingual, who are as yet unable to understand the observations directed at them by peace officers, will themselves take courses in English as soon as possible, to set the example and to become truly bilingual.

In order to really prove to the hon. member for Champlain that I am not prejudiced about it, I would like to quote what he wanted to quote a while ago but could not because he was not allowed to do so, when he attributed to the hon. member for Cardigan words he would have said during a meeting of the special committee on official languages.

I draw it from page 231 of report No. 2. I checked with the hon. member for Champlain to see whether these were the words he alluded to, and he said yes. Here is the text which I will read in the hon. member's tongue to assure the house that I change nothing.

Someone had said that in Canada, everyone might not be in favour of bilingual districts, and the hon. member said this:

[English]

Mr. McQuaid: May I be permitted to answer that? I think we have to recognize that there are areas in Canada particularly in western Canada Mr. Pelletier—

An hon. Member: And in Quebec.

Mr. McQuaid: —and probably in Quebec too—but I am referring now particularly to the west—where 10 per cent of the people are French speaking. Now, these people are violently opposed to having a bilingual district established in their particular area. They feel that they are progressing satisfactorily among themselves the way they are, and are not anxious to have a bilingual district established. Surely such people have a right to be heard—or, at least, have their expressions and views put forward to the advisory board. There is nothing wrong with that, is there?

[Translation]

That is the text alluded to by the hon. member for Champlain, and I am one of those who think that bilingual districts may not be the best formula. It should not be inferred though that English-speaking Canadians living in Western Canada, are opposed to the principle of official bilingualism. If they have restrictions concerning bilingual districts, it would not be proper to infer that they are opposed to the principle of official bilingualism. I think that, on the contrary, if a poll were taken, it would be seen that the great majority are in favour of official bilingualism.

Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised to note that a bill on official languages which answers an aspiration as basic as that of national unity as well as that of a group of people as large as the French-Canadian group, who want to live on an equal footing with English-speaking Canadians, should be the subject of so many precautions.

I am happy to note that, for the most part, my colleagues in this house are in favour of the principle of this bill. They have said so openly. However, although there is no direct objection to the principle, the discussion drags on and many precautions are taken, a great number of distinctions are made and an infinite number of constitutional concerns are put forward. And many subtle definitions, complaints and restrictions are made; in short, we are trying by all sorts of means to put so many buffers that, for all practical purposes, the bill finally becomes inoperative. No one dares attack it directly.

Some civil servants might suffer injustices on account of this legislation. Compulsion certainly exists since some people will have to learn French. In some quarters, some even say: You should not get carried away, you, the Quebec people; you are still the inhabitants of a conquered province. Since constitutional matters are added to that, let us settle them before we pass any legislation on official languages.

We are also told: Other ethnic groups are entitled to their own language. Large ethnic groups will have to be treated on the same footing as the French-speaking Canadians.

It is being said also: For all practical purposes, the Commissioner of Languages will become some kind of dictator in this field. All sorts of things are being said, Mr. Speaker, with an almost machiavellian subtlety which barely hides the desire to neutralize this bill.

Mr. Speaker, if somebody talks about injustice in the public service, I should like to remind those who are against this bill that French-speaking Canadians have been suffering injustice and discrimination for 200 years in the public service.

If anybody says that employees of the public service are compelled to learn French, I shall point out that for 200 years we have been compelled to learn English and we have learned it.

To those who remind us that we are a conquered nation, I say that this is an incident in an insignificant war and that no people endowed with a modicum of feelings and of pride will reconcile itself to centuries of subjection without sporadic outbursts, such as those which are happening at present in the province of Quebec and in the rest of this country, in order to obtain full equality with all other Canadians. In my opinion, this is not a serious argument; it is an insult to French-speaking Canadians.

To those who put forward the constitutional red tape, I say, Mr. Speaker, that men are not made to serve the law but that the law is made to serve men.

When it comes to fulfilling as basic a need as that concerning respect for a given language or religion, for instance, no constitutional red tape can ever be more important than this essential need, the existence of which must be urgently recognized.

Other ethnic groups also have rights, Mr. Speaker. We know that and we treat them well. We have welcomed them to Canada and given them all the rights enjoyed by Canadian people. When they came to this country, they knew they would have to choose between two official languages, French and English. They are allowed in addition to keep their own mother tongue in their schools, and no law prevents them from continuing to use it in their relations, with the members of their family or ethnic group.

Finally, all the other objections that are put forth are, to my mind, fictitious, and seem to have no other purpose but to confuse the issue, to throw dust in people's eyes and to keep the Canadian public from understanding well the reasons for this legislation.

A while ago I heard the member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) asking hon. members, in particular the French-speaking group, to be tolerant and to understand the aspirations of Canadians of foreign or English origin who live in Western Canada. For 200 years now, we, in Quebec, have set the example of respect for English-speaking citizens; we have given them their schools, we have heard them in their own tongue in our courts, in our municipal assemblies, in our provincial legislature.

We have proved our tolerance and what we want now is not tolerance but justice. We are one of the founding peoples and we want to be treated, throughout the country, throughout the ten provinces, like other Canadians and, in particular, like the English-speaking Canadians whose equals we want to be.

We have been tolerant, but at this time the young people of my province and even the middle-aged and the older people protest against that kind of prejudice which excluded from the civil service our French-speaking people because they had an inadequate knowledge of the English language, and prevented them from being promoted. Now those times are gone by. We have taken the trouble to learn English and we want to have access to those promotions. We demand that all the others do as we did. Let them learn the second language if they want to be paid with the money collected from our taxes. We have been thinking about it for a hundred years.

We have been persecuted and not more than 25 years ago we were still scornfully urged to "Speak White"! We have borne that for 200 years, Mr. Speaker.

When our number was sufficient in some provinces, when, after Canada was ceded to England, we were promised that our sacred rights would be respected, we had to finance our schools with our own money after paying taxes for the English schools which were closed to us.

For 200 years, we were kept outside the public service which was financed with the taxes we were paying. We were forced to learn English and we did learn it.

None the less we have dealt well by the English Canadians. We have served in the wars fought by Canada in which many of our sons gave their life.

If at the present time separatism is prevailing in Quebec, the fault lies with some fanatics who oppose this bill, as they opposed the adoption of the Canadian flag, who object to French Canadians being put on an equal footing with all other citizens. They are the agitators and the fomenters of separatism in this country. We are trying to get across to them that the young people will not be treated as colonists, slaves or second class citizens. And those who refuse to understand it might bear the responsibility of seeing the fabric of confederation being torn apart and this country divided into several factions.

When I see them rise and protest against the excesses of our separatists, against the excesses of those who, in our country, are showing prejudice—there are some everywhere—and who demand integral unilingualism, or who do not want equal treatment for English-speaking and French-speaking students in the Quebec schools, I feel that they should be the last ones to denounce such a situation, because they are responsible for it or because they are the sons of those who are responsible.

We, in the province of Quebec, who are federalists, who are not afraid to show our convictions and our principles anywhere in Canada, who have for many generations respected all the Canadians living in our country but who did not speak our language, we, in Quebec, who forced ourselves to learn English, even in areas where we did not need to, have the right today to ask the remainder of the country to respect us and to follow the example which we have given for 200 years.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I object to all those amendements which are mere window-dressing to try to prevent the passage of that bill which is quite relevant but perhaps somewhat late, as stated by the hon. member for Champlain.

And when I hear the hon. member laughing and lightly discussing the matter, say that it is because of such narrowmindness that we will continue to see those divisions in Canada.

If Quebec ever separated from the rest of the country, the hon. member and all those who are like him would be held responsible and would have to account for their actions to the rest of the country.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words at this time partly as a result of the interjection made a few moments ago by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). The hon. member suggested that because I was not here when the vote on second reading of the bill took place I was afraid to put my position on the record. For the information of the hon. member may I tell him I was not here because the premier of the Conservative government of Manitoba saw fit to call an election, and as a citizen of Manitoba I thought I ought to play a small part in that election.

I spoke on this bill on May 26, and at that time I made my position very clear. I want to quote one paragraph—

Mr. Horner: You are supposed to be speaking to the amendment.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member says that I am supposed to be speaking to the amendment. I can assure him that I will be no more out of order than he and his colleague from Calgary North have been repeatedly out of order during the last couple of days. On that occasion I said, as reported at page 9071 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill, I realize that contained in it is one of the most important principles which the people of this country must face up to and resolve if our country is to survive. The deputy leader of our party, speaking on second reading of the bill some days ago, put the position of our party very clearly as one of support for the bill. I shall support this bill.

My hon. friend and colleague, the former member for Selkirk, who will be premier of Manitoba in a few days, in speaking on the principle of the bill on October 17 of last year, as reported at page 1498 of Hansard had this to say:

> I find the resolution easy to support in spirit, intent and in purpose. I find it laudable. The only thing I would add is that what we are being asked to do by this resolution we should have done years ago.

It seems to me that in this debate some hon. members have attempted to re-enact the fight that took place during the election campaign in June, 1968. By opposing this bill some hon. members think they are mobilizing the support of those who harbour anti-French and anti-Quebec sentiments. I suggest to those hon. members, particularly to those hon. members from Manitoba who voted against the bill at second reading, that it is best to forget about the election of June 25, 1968.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Aiken: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, neither the hon. member now speaking nor the hon. member who preceded him have mentioned the amendment, other than in passing. I suggest that this is not a general debate on the official languages bill. We are considering a specific motion to amend. Unless hon. member's remarks are confined to the relevant points at issue, we shall be here until Christmas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I agree with the hon. member. Hon. members ought to confine their remarks to the amendment being discussed. I know that great latitude has been given to hon. members this afternoon in the debate on the amendment, but I hope that from now on hon. members will kindly confine their remarks to the amendment before us.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Horner: Read the amendment. It might help you to think.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the last person in this house I am likely to take advice from is the hon. member for Crowfoot. I suggest that he has strayed from the matter being discussed more often than anyone else. I do not question your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I intend to confine my remarks to the amendment. However, since Your Honour has, so to speak, pulled me up after other hon. members have enjoyed some latitude, I cannot help being a little resentful. I will take the opportunity on another occasion to say what I want to say about this bill and about the feelings of the people of Manitoba in regard to it. May I say that I shall join my colleagues in supporting this amendment, it being one of the few moved by members of the official opposition that does not negate the spirit of the bill. In clear form it spells out the basic intent of the bill. No doubt the hon. member for Crowfoot will range far and wide in speaking in support of the amendment. If I do as he does, I hope I may be in order. I conclude by saying that I shall support this amendment.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Speaker, I request permission to revert to routine business for a moment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is that agreed?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I have been acting as house leader for my party and I have been given no notice of any amendment.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with an amendment. The hon. member wishes to present the report of the special committee with respect to certain private bills which we hope can be dealt with tomorrow. I hope the house will permit us to revert to routine proceedings.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member be permitted to move any motion the committee instructed him to move?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member wishes to present certain reports.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISION RESPECTING STATUS AND USE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill, and motion No. 7 (Mr. McQuaid).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands reserved.

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot) moved:

That Bill C-120, An Act respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be amended by adding to clause 40, the following subclause 5:

"(5) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, no person shall be refused employment or promotion within the Public Service of Canada on grounds alone of inadequate acquaintance with either of the official languages mentioned in this Act, provided that the applicant has declared his intention and willingness to learn the other official language."

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I say at the beginning of my remarks that I intend to do what Your Honour instructed the hon. member who preceded me to do. I shall confine my remarks to the subject matter of this motion. If anyone cares to check the record he will find that the speech I made yesterday on another amendment was short, succinct, entirely in order, and dealt specifically with that amendment. This being the last of a series of seven amendments I think it should receive serious consideration by the house, particularly in view of the remarks made earlier this afternoon by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and in view of the information which he tabled. He assured us that clause 40 will not change the merit principle, but will only ensure that that principle will stand as it is already written into the Public Service Employment Act. On the basis of that statement, and on the basis of the information he tabled about the hiring of university students, the numbers of them who were bilingual and the numbers who were not, I do not think he can have any real objection to this amendment.

My amendment clearly states:

Notwithstanding anything in this act, no person shall be refused employment or promotion within the Public Service of Canada on grounds alone of inadequate acquaintance with either of the official languages mentioned in this act, provided that the applicant—

And I underline these words.

—has declared his intention and willingness to learn the other official language.

I can see no reason for any unilingual French speaking member of parliament, or French speaking Canadian seeking employment or promotion in the federal civil service objecting to this amendment.

Many of the suspicions and fears about this bill are based on its possible effects within the civil service. An article in the Calgary Albertan of Wednesday, July 2 headed, "Civil Servants Perturbed—Languages Hit Morale" points out how badly the morale of the civil service has been affected by this bill. Adoption of this amendment would assure applicants for jobs in the civil service that they would be treated with equality and fairness.

An article in today's Ottawa Journal is headed, "Multi-Million Dollar Federal Plan to Aid Teaching of French," and in effect it supports the purposes of this amendment. Many people fear the scope of this bill. Clause 9 spells out its scope fairly clearly when it refers to:

> Every department and agency of the Government of Canada and every judicial, quasi-judicial or administrative body or Crown corporation established by or pursuant to an act of the Parliament of Canada—

That covers a lot of ground. Clause 10 states:

> Every department and agency of the Government of Canada and every Crown corporation established by or pursuant to an act of the Parliament of Canada has the duty to ensure that, at any office, location or facility in Canada or elsewhere at which any services to the travelling public are provided or made available by it, or by any other person pursuant to a contract for the provision of such services entered into by it or on its behalf after the coming into force of this act, such services can be provided or made available in both official languages.

Even contracts with the federal government fall within the scope of this bill. What does all this mean? The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) spelled it out very clearly as recorded in volume No. 1 of the Special Committee proceedings, at page 18, and I quote:

> As I read clause 9, and the same thing applies to clause 10, these requirements about service in both languages are placed upon Crown corporations only. That is, when they are placed upon corporations, they are placed upon Crown corporations only. I leave out the civil service and the agencies.
> What this means in practice is that, to take three examples, this requirement is placed upon the Canadian National Railways but not the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is placed upon Air Canada but not on Canadian Pacific Airlines or any small air line. It is placed upon the C.B.C. but not on the private television networks. It is obvious that the provision of services at the national capital or anywhere else involves an additional expense—

In that same paragraph, he pointed out that Crown corporations will be put to great expense that will not have to be met by private corporations with which they are in competition. He asked the minister was this fair, and why not encompass all corporations dealing with the federal government or having a federal charter. As recorded at page 20 of the committee proceedings, the Minister of Justice said:

> Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the committee I want to make it clear to the hon. member that we are not relying on any constitutional argument in failing to move beyond the limits already set in the bill. I tend to agree with the hon. member that we would probably have legislative jurisdiction.
> There are two points that I would like to make, probably by way of reiteration. The first is that the policy decision was to be limited to federal public institutions and agencies; if we were to take it into private enterprise we would have had the problem of deciding where to draw the line; should it merely be that part of private enterprise that competes with public enterprise as in the railways or in the public broadcasting system, or do we go into those other areas in which we have clear jurisdiction, banks, pipe lines, even companies having a federal charter? That is why the decision on policy was taken the way it was.

As recorded at page 19 of the proceedings, the minister said:

> We hope that the influence of this bill will go beyond the strict legal limits, and the hon. member is right in assessing those strict legal limits.

Let us not kid ourselves. This bill will have an influence on a wide range of activities. It will affect the hiring and the promotion of many, many Canadians. To understand this, one has only to consider the interjection made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) this afternoon when the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) was speaking. At that time the minister said, "Why shouldn't a person have the right to be arrested or given a traffic ticket in his mother tongue"? This gives us some idea of the scope envisioned for this bill.

Mr. Pelletier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did not make any remarks about traffic tickets or anything of that kind. I think the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) mistook somebody else for me and did not recognize my voice, which is something I would never do to him.

Mr. Horner: Well, I am not going to argue with the Secretary of State on that point. Hansard will prove whether I am right or wrong. But the Secretary of State was reported in this article in the Albertan as saying:

> We should realize bilingualism is one of the necessities and wake up to the requirements.

Is this really true? Do all applicants for jobs in the civil service have to be bilingual? I do not think so, particularly in view of the information tabled this afternoon by the Minister of Justice.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we do not really know who will be responsible for seeing that the provisions of this legislation are carried out. We note that the Minister of Justice is being used to pilot the bill through the house. But will his fairmindedness be used in the application of this bill? We have some suspicions in that regard. We see the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) sitting ever-watchful. It is common belief that the administration of this bill will come under his jurisdiction, that it will be he who will appoint the commissioner and that it will be to him the commissioner will report. So, we have these fears. I believe the amendment I am proposing is a very good one. I hope the Secretary of State can support it, because I think it brings about that degree of security which the Minister of Justice wanted to ensure. He stated that this bill would really ensure that the merit system would be upheld. There is not much point in my reading clause 12 of the Public Service Employment Act. It was read earlier this afternoon and spells out the merit system very clearly. In his speech earlier in this debate I believe the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) spelled out quite clearly what I believe should have been done. I believe this paragraph should be emphasized. As reported at page 9111 of Hansard he said:

> But here it is not that simple. Having examined the issues, having read the bill carefully and having studied the constitutional background, I am convinced that we are enacting an administrative measure. Virtually all those things the government seeks to have us approve are things which the government of its own volition could bring about without the concurrence of this house or the other place. We might well have had, and I should have preferred this, a resolution of this house to the other place expressing the views of hon. members and saying that in their opinion there are two official languages in this country and that it would be desirable for the people of this country, so far as it lies within the constitutional jurisdiction of the federal government and in co-operation with the provincial governments, to work toward the greater acceptance of the two official languages. A resolution like that could easily have been concurred in.

I agree with that statement, but here we have the situation in respect of a commissioner and bilingual districts. Along with that there is a great deal of fear among the members of the public service and applicants for employment in the public service because of the question in their minds concerning whether they must become bilingual. The Secretary of State said, "Certainly; wake up to the fact that bilingualism is going to be or should be a necessity". Then, we have the Minister of Justice saying that bilingualism is not quite a necessity yet. He tabled facts this afternoon supporting the argument that a unilingual person could be hired by the federal government. Today's Ottawa Journal indicates quite clearly that the government is prepared to spend millions of dollars teaching, I imagine, the official languages to civil servants and Canadians all across Canada. The objection I have to that, of course, is that this money might be spent only in the bilingual districts. If one does not live in a bilingual district he may not reap the benefit of that expenditure.

I do not intend to speak any longer on the amendment. I think it is self-explanatory. I believe it spells out quite clearly what most people have been concerned about. I know I mentioned it earlier in a speech I made on this subject on October 17. At that time I said that western Canada has a growing fear that it is being left out of the policy decisions of parliament. Western Canada also has a growing fear that it is being left out of the administrative decisions of the federal government. That fear will only be strengthened and increased twofold if this amendment is voted down. If this amendment is supported, western Canadians and Canadians from the provice of Quebec or from any other part of Canada whether or not they are bilingual, will be able to feel secure in the knowledge that they may apply for a position if they meet the qualifications for that position and provided they express a willingness to learn the other language. This to me does not seem to cloud the issue. Rather, it would seem to clarify it.

The minister said that in this bill there is the intention to ensure that the merit system as laid down in the Public Service Employment Act shall be followed. I seriously ask the Minister of Justice to persuade his colleagues to accept this amendment. I understand the vote on the amendment is to be deferred until this evening. I hope that during the supper hour he and his colleagues can find time to discuss this amendment and find a way to support it.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I just propose to state in a few words the reasons I cannot support this amendment, although it is very attractive in form and has been presented very moderately and excellently by the hon. member. The reason we cannot support it is really that we think it is totally inconsistent with the principle of the whole bill. It cuts out the guts of the bill. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) has risen in this house a number of times during the debate to say that he is against the other amendments and because he is against the other amendments is against the whole bill. So far as I am concerned, however, there is more than one way to skin a cat. One way is to be against the principle of the bill and the other way is to remove the principle from the bill. I suggest that is what is being done here.

Mr. Horner: You give me too much credit.

Mr. Brewin: No, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was doing a good job. I believe the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner)—and I respect his right to have this view—is one of those who voted against the bill on second reading. I believe this amendment is very sweeping. It reads:

> Notwithstanding anything in this Act, no person shall be refused employment or promotion within the Public Service of Canada on grounds alone of inadequate acquaintance with either of the official languages mentioned in this Act, provided that the applicant has declared his intention and willingness to learn the other official language.

There must be very many occasions on which the knowledge of one or the other of the official languages is absolutely essential to the performance of a function, and therefore I do not believe it would be appropriate to say that no person shall be refused employment or promotion because of his inadequate acquaintance with either of the official languages. It seems to me this would be carrying the thing very far.

I am sure there are situations in the public service where it is essential that someone know both official languages and not just one because he would be unable to handle the job without that particular knowledge. This bill is full of safeguards. Clause 40 contains many of these safeguards, such as the postponement of early application and matters of that sort, which would be difficult to bring about and which would prejudice the interests of the public. If this amendment should pass, all a person would have to do to make the act completely dead would be to declare his intention and willingness to learn the official language. I have declared my intention and willingness to learn the other official language, although I must say I am finding the actual task of doing so considerably more difficult than my expression of intention to do so. I would not hesitate to say there are many jobs in the pulbic service to which it would be totally wrong to appoint a person with my inadequate acquaintance with one of the official languages. Yet, this amendment says that notwithstanding anything in this act, no person shall be refused employment or promotion within the Public Service of Canada on grounds alone of inadequate acquaintance with either of the official languages mentioned in this act, provided that the applicant has declared his intention and willingness to learn the other official language.

All a person need do is make that declaration. As I say, I believe the bill contains many safeguards which would protect persons from being wrongfully dismissed in cases where a knowledge of the two languages is not essential. Subsection (4) of Section 40 of the act provides for the maintenance of the principle of selection of personnel according to merit. This is required by the Public Service Employment Act and that basic principle is preserved.

This measure will have to be worked out in a reasonable manner so as not to deprive people of the right to effective maintenance of this principle of the act. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) spoke of the fears of many people in the west. I can understand why there would be such fears, but I think it is the task of those of us in this house to diminish any fears there may be.

Mr. Horner: Diminish them by our actions.

Mr. Brewin: Yes, that is right, diminish them by our actions. That does not mean we should adopt amendments that would destroy the effective working of the act, and for this reason we are opposed to the amendment.

Mr. Horner: You are nit-picking.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I shall say only a few words on the amendment that has just been presented by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). While I listened to the hon. member making his point, and since he had already said he was against the principle of the bill, I find his amendment is logical, because he has confirmed—

[English]

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member suggests that I stated in this house I was against the principle of this bill. I do not recall ever stating that. I said the legislation was poor.

An hon. Member: You voted against it.

Mr. Horner: I voted against it on second reading because I wanted the committee to change it during committee consideration.

Mr. Deachman: Are you opposed to the principle of the bill?

Mr. Horner: Ask me that sometime when I have the floor, and I will answer it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Crowfoot has just demonstrated his inconsistency when he said that he voted against the principle of the bill on second reading, and he would not state that he is actually against the principle of the bill. So he claims to be in favour of the bill, but in fact he is against it.

For 200 years, we have been witnessing those demonstrations of intentions and good will. Today, we are against that because we wish to live according to reality. It is for that reason that I commend the minister who introduced this bill so that once and for all everything will be done openly and the English-speaking group who are asking themselves what Quebec wants will have to take a stand.

What Quebec wants, we know it, is justice pure and simple. Quebec wants implementation of the policy it has been applying in favour of minorities for the past 200 years.

I feel the bill precisely confirms this policy and that is why I certainly cannot approve the amendment moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), who states that it can result in discrimination against unilinguals within the Public Service. For instance, when he says: "If I were a French-speaking unilingual", I can give him an immediate reply: "If you were a French-speaking unilingual, you would never become a public servant because, in the past 200 years, non-bilingual French Canadians have never been admitted to the Public Service." That is the reply.

It is suggested today that by means of this bill that irregular situation prevailing through Canada must be corrected. I am not speaking of a small area even located in the province of Quebec. Let us see what goes on in the remotest areas. In my riding, where there only 2 per cent English-speaking people, all official publications are issued in both languages. The same cannot be said about the western provinces and that is why we want bilingualism to be respected throughout Canada. The amendment reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything in this act, no person shall be refused employment or promotion within the Public Service of Canada on grounds alone of inadequate acquaintance with either of the official languages mentioned in this act—

If we were to accept this amendment, we might just as well totally reject the bill, because by accepting the amendment you destroy all the effect of the bill.

I go on quoting:

> —provided that the applicant has declared his intention and willingness to learn the other official language—

Imagine the terrific joke of the hon. member for Crowfoot! We have been living on good intentions for the past 200 years. We are told that the English-speaking Canadians are well-meaning. Possibly, but they have never shown any good will. They are well-meaning but they have never made up their minds.

[English]

Mr. Horner: Would the hon. member permit a question? In respect of his belief as to the principle of the bill, does he feel that a person has to be bilingual before he can get a job or a promotion in the civil service?

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: In the future, Mr. Speaker, when the bill has been passed, it will be absolutely necessary for an individual to be bilingual. This has been going on for a hundred years. An individual will have to be bilingual to enter the public service.

I think this is not asking too much because it has been asked of us for 200 years—

[English]

Mr. Horner: May I ask the hon. member another question on that very point? After listening to the debate does he think that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) agrees with the principle he has just enunciated?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) Oh, come on, Jack!

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: I refer to the bilingual districts. I know that there are small English-speaking villages where there is not one French Canadian, but I refer to the public service here in Ottawa and to all the bilingual districts. We must use our judgment and I think that if the member for Crowfoot had used his, he would not have presented such an argumentative amendment. May I point out that it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-202, an act to provide incentives for the development of productive employment opportunities in regions of Canada determined to require special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment, without any amendment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISION RESPECTING STATUS AND USE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill, and motion No. 8 (Mr. Horner).

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I was saying just before recess that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) was not acceptable to this house because it goes against the principles of the bill, and renders void the purpose of clause 40. In fact, it says that the languages bill should be amended by adding subclause 5 to clause 40.

Clause 40, which already has four subclauses, proves that the minister and the government are very tolerant, because first there is the power to postpone, or to defer in some cases, the implementation of the act. This is what the bill says:

40. (1) Where upon the submission of any Minister it is established to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that the immediate application of any provision of this Act to any department or other institution of the Parliament or Government of Canada (hereinafter in this section called an "authority") or in respect of any service provided or made available by it

(a) would unduly prejudice the interests of the public served by the authority, or

(b) would be seriously detrimental to the good government of the authority, employer and employee relations or the effective management of its affairs, the Governor in Council may by order defer or suspend the application of any such provision to the authority or in respect of any such service for such period, not exceeding sixty months from the coming into force of this Act, as the Governor in Council deems necessary or expedient.

I think that if the hon. member had very carefully read clause 40 of the bill, he would not have even thought of moving this amendment.

And, in the following paragraph, we can read the following under the terms of order and directions to ensure an early application.

(2) Any order made under this section may contain such directions and be subject to such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council deems appropriate to ensure the earliest possible application of any deferred or suspended provision provided for in the order, and in addition may prescribe different periods, not exceeding in any case the maximum period provided for under subsection (1), for different operations carried on or services performed or made available by the authority, to or in respect of which the application of any such provision is deferred or suspended.

Mr. Speaker, I think that in all regions throughout Canada, the legislator has provided for all the exceptional cases which might arise to afford that advantage, for instance, to a constituency without a single French Canadian, in the same way as we might do in the province of Quebec, in parishes and in ridings where not a single English Canadian is to be found. Nevertheless, we publish all court judgments in French and in English, even if the English provinces have never done so and have never adjusted to that full bilingualism.

We find the law very permissive because—as I said this afternoon—it establishes once and for all that bilingualism must be respected all across Canada.

The hon. member says in his amendment that on grounds alone of inadequate acquaintance with either of the official languages, an applicant for employment in the Public Service cannot be denied employment provided that he has declared his intention and willingness to learn the other language.

Those are the very intentions we want to exclude from the legislation. We are living in the century of realities and the period of good intentions has gone by. We have endured the good intentions of the other group for two hundred years, and I think that now is the time, more than ever, to come back to today's realities in Canada, that is to bilingualism as is now required by conditions prevailing in Canada.

I now want to congratulate all the groups in this house who have made progress in that direction these last years, because the vote on this motion will indicate to all Canadians that all sincere people in Canada want Canadian unity, that is full bilingualism in Canada. After this vote, Mr. Speaker, there will be some twenty opponents, but I think that by pitching into them the idea that they also must become Canadians, and stop being unilingual, we will make them understand that the salvation of Canada rests upon bilingualism.

If the question is finally put tonight with respect to this motion, I think the Canadian people will realize that government members are determined to recognize once and for all the bilingual nature of Canada, not only in theory, but also in practice.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we listened with great care to the speech made by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) this afternoon just before we rose for the adjournment at six o'clock. I gave careful and sympathetic consideration to the amendment which he proposes. Before dealing with it in specific terms, I think it is perhaps necessary to give the house some background material in order that members may understand fully the significance of the proposal made by the hon. member for Crowfoot in the light of the impact which it would have on the long standing traditional practices in the public service of Canada.

In the early 1930's, parliament amended the Civil Service Act of 1918 in such a way as to direct the Civil Service Commission to ensure, in making an appointment to a local office—that is to say a position not in the headquarters establishment—that the candidate to be appointed be proficient in English or French, whichever of these languages was used by the majority of the members of the community in which he was to be posted and which the local office served. Thus was established the principle that a prerequisite to appointment was a sufficient knowledge of either his first or his second language to enable the public servant to provide services to members of the community in the language used by the majority of those members.

I am told by the chairman of the Public Service Commission that the records of the commission show that in the 1930's it required on an administrative basis, certain linguistic skills to serve the minority linguistic group throughout the period preceding and succeeding the amendment to the Civil Service Act of 1918 to which I just referred. In 1961, when the legislation governing appointments and promotions in the public service was under review by the parliament of the day under the administration of the then prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), parliament decided, and in my view quite rightly, both to extend the principle to which I just referred and at the same time to provide in the statutes an explicit direction to the Civil Service Commission to the effect that in making appointments or in promoting prospective candidates care should be given to ensuring that the candidates be sufficiently proficient in English or French or both so that service to the public may be effective.

Again in 1967 when parliament endorsed the Public Service Employment Act, this extension of the basic principle to which I just referred was incorporated in section 20 of the act. I should like to read the section. It is part of the law of Canada. It reads:

> Employees appointed to serve in any department or other portion of the Public Service, or part thereof, shall be qualified in the knowledge and use of the English or French language or both, to the extent that the Commission deems necessary in order that the functions of such department, portion or part can be performed adequately and effective service can be provided to the public.

I believe this is a brief review of the history of the practice and traditions of the public service of this country for the past 30 years or more. To an increasing degree, as is evident in the policies of succeeding governments representing both the party to which I belong and the party of the official opposition, we have recognized the need to insist, in cases where in fact there is a need, that the possession of the appropriate linguistic skills, either by way of a first or second language, must be an element in the administration of the principle of merit. This proposition was made explicit by the then prime minister, Mr. Pearson, in his statement to this house on April 6, 1966, when he said the following:

> The achievement of bilingualism is in itself a desirable objective for any Canadian citizen. Where the need for bilingualism clearly exists in practice, above all in the National Capital, it should be recognized as an element of merit in selection for civil service positions.

As the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) said this afternoon in referring to section 12 in the assessment of merit, although it may not be a direct definition certainly it sets the guidelines or standards by which merit is to be judged, that is general proficiency, the intellectual formation and education, knowledge of the language of the community, and the other factors mentioned in that section which are deemed to be relevant.

The hon. member for Crowfoot, in proposing this amendment, has two objectives in mind I am sure. First, he wants to ensure as far as possible that any public servant is not subjected unnecessarily to the selection standards which would be a barrier to the development of his own personal career, either in his opportunities to achieve recruitment—

Mr. Horner: Not my own personal career.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He was speaking on behalf of his party. As I said, either by way of recruitment to the public service or, once having obtained admission to the service of Canada, in his promotional opportunities.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Second, I believe the amendment seeks to ensure as far as possible that entry into the public service is not unnecessarily barred to one who through no fault of his own has found himself unable to acquire appropriate skill in the second language. To this end, the hon. member has suggested—and I use the words of his amendment—that willingness to learn the other language should be a sufficient qualification. In this connection, we have reviewed the possibility of exploiting language training resources in such a way as to meet the objectives of the hon. member without prejudice to the principles which have been established in the management of the Public Service of Canada over the past 30 years.

I might suggest to hon. members that we in this house are obliged to consider two aspects of the administrative problem. First, I have been informed by the Public Service Commission that 75 per cent of the men and women who work for the people of Canada as employees in the public service never leave the town or locality in which they are recruited. The likelihood of new language requirements from persons recruited in unilingual localities is therefore remote. I have in mind areas such as those represented by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) or by several hon. members from the Province of Quebec—Rimouski and Chicoutimi, for instance. Thus, if the amendment is designed tt protect the person who has never had an oppoetunity to learn the second language, it would really have only a limited application. Second, if one places the extensive language training facilities available, presently 5,000 places—the number is soon to be increased to 7,000 and ultimately to 9,000—against the potential demand—and the global figure today is 370,000 public servants, excluding members of the Armed Forces—

Mr. Horner: The hon. gentleman is not including the Crown corporations.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am including them, but not the employees of the C.N.R. As I was saying, if one places the facilities available against the potential demand it is easily seen that while the requirements for language training might, in the ordinary course of things, be easily met, periods could arise in which this would not be possible because of an unusually high demand. We feel, therefore, that it would not be appropriate to tie the public service into a legislative straitjacket in connection with language training which might well frustrate its development in certain unusual circumstances.

Mr. Horner: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member for Crowfoot knows me well. I am at his disposition, but I wonder whether he will allow me to finish my exposé. His memory is very good at this time of the evening and I am sure he will be able to return to the question later when I have finished what I have to say.

Mr. Horner: My memory is good at any time of the day.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Further, it is estimated that of the total of 370,000 mentioned, barely one sixth, or 50,000, will need any bilingual capability, and of that number one-half, or 25,000, are already bilingual. This is the size of the problem we have to deal with. The question I put to the hon. member for Crowfoot and to the house in general is: In these circumstances should we tie ourselves to the rigid concept of a statutory requirement such as the amendment envisages?

The position of the government in relation to the proposed amendment must now be obvious to members of the house. There are, however, one or two smaller points which perhaps should be made with regard to the administration of such a proposal. For instance, how does one interpret the words of the amendment "inadequate acquaintance with either of the official languages"? It seems to me that this phrase defies definition and, consequently, application. The same problem arises in connection with the phrase "willingness to learn". The point was made very succinctly by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

Mr. Horner: Who gets the 7½ per cent increase in pay?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If applied in the rigid statutory form it could be fulfilled by a candidate simply saying: "Yes, I am willing to acquire a second language." I agree with the hon. member for Greenwood that if this concept were set out in statutory form it would render ineffective not only the clause which the hon. member seeks to amend, but the entire bill.

This is a subjective concept difficult of objective definition and application. There may well be various degrees of willingness. One person might be willing to learn but not willing to make the effort required in order to succeed. As the hon. member for Greenwood said—and this is confirmed by the experience of everybody in the house who has immersed himself in the second language—willingness is one thing, but the persistence necessary to acquire a satisfactory knowledge of the second language is another.

For these reasons the government cannot accept this proposal. We are committed to the principle set out in section 20 of the Public Service Employment Act. We are committed jointly with the governments of the early 'thirties, the early 'sixties, under the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and of 1967, to the establishment and development of that principle.

In the third place, we do not believe that the rigid concept set forth in the amendment—

Mr. Horner: There is nothing rigid about it at all.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —should be put into law, particularly when that concept is difficult to define and not easily applicable.

With respect, the point about which the hon. member is concerned is a valid one but I do not think he has put forward the appropriate solution. The government is concerned as to the necessity for applying a bilingual policy for the Public Service of Canada with equity and justice. The people of French speaking Canada who complain of 100 years of injustice—

Mr. Horner: Two hundred.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is not necessary to reciprocate that injustice with another against the majority of the people of Canada by an unjust application of what we believe to be a legitimate policy.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: You are saying that two wrongs make a right.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. Horner: That is what you are saying in this bill.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We deny that categorically, and I say that through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for Crowfoot. We contend that the hon. member's solution would be impracticable, one not capable of realization.

I have reviewed with the chairman of the public service commission, and the government is also reviewing with him, the two aspects of this policy which must always remain in mind. They are, first of all, that no one should be penalized, either by way of recruitment or by promotion, for his failure to have a second language until he is given adequate opportunity to learn that second language. That is the policy of the government of Canada which was first enunciated in 1966 by the then Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, and it is still our policy today. We are in continual contact with the Public Service Commission to see that this policy is ensured.

Secondly, as Mr. Pearson said in 1966—and this statement still governs today—no one who was recruited to the public service of this country under what he believed were different ground rules should be subjected to a situation where government policy, in his mind, has changed without being given an opportunity to learn the other language, or at least to preserve his career that was launched under different circumstances. In justice to members of the public service who have a certain seniority in service to the people of Canada, they have certain rights and at least must be given the opportunity to learn that second language; and this we recognize as part of the policy of the administration of government.

In saying that, Mr. Speaker, I am saying to the hon. member for Crowfoot, through Your Honour, that his amendment does not achieve that objective. His amendment would render null and void the purposes of the official languages bill. The policy that he is trying to achieve I believe the government is trying to achieve by ensuring that the public service of Canada is made equally accessible both to French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians across the country. We do not want to force bilingualism on any citizen of this country. What we want is an institutional bilingualism that is achieved with fairness to those men and women who have been recruited to the public service of Canada. The legislative straitjacket which the hon. member is attempting to force on the government would not achieve what the hon. member wants to achieve but would indeed deny the principle of this bill.

For these reasons the government recommends to the house that it rejects this amendment.

Mr. Horner: Now the minister has concluded, would he permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Crowfoot on a question.

Mr. Horner: I will direct my question to the minister in this way. Let me assume his point is valid. If he finds fault with the wording of the amendment, would he ask his legal draftsmen to use their ability to bring in an amendment that will substantiate the point made by the amendment, which the minister has said is a valid one?

My second question is this: The minister says that all civil servants who so desire will be given ample opportunity to learn the second language, be it English or French. Are we now led to believe that every member of the public service will, in the future, have an opportunity to learn the other language? Will everyone in the 9,000 areas that the minister said will be set up be given an opportunity to learn the other language?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's first question no amount of skilful drafting—and I do not think we could improve upon the drafting of the hon. member for Crowfoot—could convert an inadequate acquaintance with either of the official languages and a willingness to learn into an objective standard that would enable this bill to achieve this purpose. This must depend on flexibility and on justice of administration. That is the answer to the hon. member's first question. I could bring all the forces of the law officers of the Crown to bear on this particular amendment and none of them could achieve what the hon. member is attempting to achieve.

In answer to the second question if, as I have said, the bilingual capability really relates to 25,000 public servants—

Mr. Horner: You said one sixth.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, one sixth. But 25,000 are, in the opinion of the commission, fully bilingual, so we are dealing with one twelfth—one half of one sixth.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I have to watch the minister's arithmetic. One sixth of 370,000 is 60,000.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the minister to direct his remarks to the Chair, and I invite the hon. member for Crowfoot to hear the minister out.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I accept your reprimand, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. member for Crowfoot is a pretty magnetic personality and sometimes I get carried away by him. I suggest that if the hon. member for Crowfoot and I were sitting on the fence watching cattle go through the gate, he would have no trouble with his mathematics. At the moment we are dealing with one twelfth of the public servants of Canada, 25,000, for whom a capability of 9,000 places will be available. As a result of the advice given to me by the chairman of the public service commission. I am convinced that our facilities will be adequate to achieve the desired result. They are my two answers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) since it is the only apparent hope of making undesirable legislation at least tolerable. I would have preferred to see this bill withdrawn and redrafted or, failing this measure of good sense, at least held in abeyance until the question of its constitutionality was cleared up and the effects of its provisions more closely studied. But as things now stand, it is clear the government intends to push it through parliament, heedless of probable consequences. In these circumstances, the best we can hope for is to mitigate some of the injustices it will obviously create.

Like other members of my party who support this amendment, I am chiefly concerned with the damage that will be done, by the implementation of this bill in its present form, to Canadians of all ethnic origins as well as to the national interest. This damage will arise from the discriminatory nature of the bill.

Discrimination is the very essence of this legislation. It will discriminate against all Canadians who, because of the area of Canada in which they were born and the total lack of second language facilities in those areas, have little hope of being classed as bilingual. It will favour those born into one language and brought up in two—in other words, French Canadians.

I very much doubt whether there is in Canada, or anywhere else for that matter, a person who is truly bilingual in the sense envisaged by this bill. Neither do I believe that it is possible for anyone, be he of French or English language background, to reach the condition of bilingualism espoused by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) in this theory of a fully bilingual state, and which they are attempting to create by this legislation.

In saying this I am not being critical, bigoted or stubborn. I am not saying bilingualism is good or bad, desirable or undesirable, fortunate or unfortunate. I believe that human limitations and the facts of life in Canada and in North America as a whole make my statement true. When you have legislation that prescribes, as a condition of employment and career advancement, that a person must be bilingual, you are imposing upon that person something that he is powerless to acquire of his own volition. To my mind it is similar to the arbitrary physical standards set out as a condition of employment in the R.C.M.P. or armed forces. It is a physical attribute that is imposed by nature, not by individual desire or initiative. It is an accident of birth.

The facts of life in Canada are that many Canadians of French ancestry have been born into French speaking homes and raised largely in an English speaking environment. The reverse is true of very few Canadians of English or other ethnic backgrounds. Any law that has the effect of compelling employees of the public service to be bilingual automatically restricts the recruiting ground of the Public service to the French sector of the country. It openly discriminates against those who by chance of birth come from other areas of the country and from a background other than French. As reported in the Montreal Star of April 16 last, Mr. S. A. Blackburn, the man responsible for the language training program in the Public Service of Canada said:

> —a second language can only be attained by one who is prepared to work on a full-time basis in a second linguistic and cultural milieu for a long period—a year or more.
> Indeed, it is obvious that most Canadians cannot be fluently bilingual.

Mr. Blackburn is further reported to have stated that in his opinion the truly bilingual person is virtually non-existent. "Even the bilingual person", he added, "is at an enormous disadvantage if he has to do intellectual, creative work in a second language."

One does not need to have particularly clear perception in order to see what the effect upon Canada and Canadians will be if the public service of the nation is closed to all who are not already partly bilingual. In this regard it might be well to look at the experience of the Public Service Commission with respect to recruitment on a language basis and in language training, as set out in the 1968 report of the Public Service Commission. On page 24 of the 1968 annual report is found this paragraph:

> Furthermore, the Commission felt it could not rely mainly on external recruitment of personnel already proficient in both English and French to staff positions where both languages were required since this course of action would have had unfortunate consequences. Opportunities for acquiring second language skills in many parts of Canada would have resulted in the Commission's having only a limited capacity to recruit in certain regions of the country. Secondly the career status of employees already in the service would have been adversely affected since through no fault of their own they found themselves lacking second language skills. Finally to have relied mainly on external recruitment to meet required linguistic objectives would have taken perhaps 20 to 25 years in order to attain a satisfactory situation unless a wholesale replacement program was undertaken.

On page 30 of this document is a table headed "Distribution by Training Levels of the Total Active Student Nominations, November 30, 1968". Underneath the table are to be found the following words:

> It will be seen that approximately 88% of those studying French as a second language are in the two lowest levels while this is the case for only 41% of those studying English.

Furthermore, in Table VII, which shows distribution of identified population in the designated categories by levels of instruction, we see that 13,520 English speaking students are learning French whereas 3,200 French speaking students are studying English. On page 44 of this document are to be found these words with respect to language proficiency:

> Section 12 of the Act authorizes the Commission to 'prescribe selection standards as to education, knowledge, experience, language, age, residence or any other matters that, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary or desirable having regard to the nature of the duties to be performed . . .', in determining 'the basis of assessment of merit in relation to any position or group of positions . . .' Thus language proficiency is an element of merit pursuant to the Public Service Employment Act.

On page 46 the commission goes on to say this:

> —proficiency in both languages is always a desirable qualification when it is not an essential one when 'ten per cent or more of the public served by the unit have the English language or the French language as their mother tongue—
> The Commission's Regulations stipulate that any English-speaking or French-speaking minority group constituting 10% or more of the overall population of a given area justifies provision of service in both official languages.

I am not in any way attempting to impugn the idealism of either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State. I simply say that the facts of life in the world in which we live make it impossible for this legislation to achieve its ends. In fact, I believe this legislation will create the very conditions it seeks to alleviate and will bring about the opposite of that which it is intended to do. It will create in this country a preferred class and discriminate against the majority of Canadians. It will create language reservations which will be force fed behind protective legislative fencing. The result will be that the bill will create outside these fences resentment and animosity. These feelings in turn will create walls and the people inside the language reservations will not be able to break through them. We are setting the clock back. We are imposing immobility on our French speaking population and not providing for mobility. We are raising up an entire new system of internal barriers at the cost of our unity.

May I now return to the specific question of bilingualism in the public service, Mr. Speaker. It has been stated that merit alone will decide who is to enter or who is to be promoted in the government service. The public service regulations nevertheless make it clear that bilingualism is very important in assessing merit. In the 10 per cent areas envisaged under the bill I can see that merit will mean linguistic ability alone. As I have already previously noted, such linguistic ability on the part of our people in Canada is not a self-acquired characteristic. It is an accident of birth. It so happens that our history and development as a nation have made sure that the bulk of Canadians born with this linguistic attribute are to be found in our French speaking areas. The facts of history and not the people of this country have dictated that the world of North America shall be overwhelmingly English speaking.

A man's facility in the second language will be a prerequisite for his entry into and promotion within the public service. In most cases the second language facility will become an absolute requirement. This, in turn, gives a lopsided advantage to people of French language background. French language areas will become prime recruiting ground for the public service which will become unbalanced. I submit there will be more French Canadians who speak English than English speaking Canadians who will be proficient in French. This state of affairs, certainly, will not be a fair reflection of Canada or Canadian society. It will be unjust and discriminatory and a poor example of the just society.

We must face the problem of defining bilingualism, Mr. Speaker. What is a bilingual person? I have already quoted the leading government authority on the question, who has said that a truly bilingual person probably does not exist. We must therefore recognize that the degree of a person's bilingualism is hard to measure. It is a volatile variable in our calculations. The degree may vary from day to day, month to month and year to year. The degree of bilingualism will vary as the area in which people work varies. Again, this bill will confer undue advantages on the minority at the expense of the majority. I am very concerned as to the sort of national job the Canadian public service will do if it is forced to depend for recruits largely on French Canada because of the provisions of this bill.

Also, Mr. Speaker, will we not present a schizophrenic face to the world in international affairs? Can a predominantly French oriented public service adequately serve a country that is overwhelmingly English-oriented? The highly respected publisher of Le Devoir, Gérard Filion, said recently that Quebec is relatively poor and backward because it has failed to develop its vast natural resources and "Above all, its resources of human talent."

Mr. Blackburn, in the remarks I have already quoted, has noted that even when different groups share the same language, let alone two languages, that is not enough for them to understand each other and communicate adequately. He spoke of Great Britain and the United States as being two countries that share the same language but differ widely in cultural background. He said:

> They have most words in common but the words do not necessarily mean the same thing.

Mr. Blackburn said that satisfactory communication and understanding can only come from two groups thoroughly understanding each other's cultural backgrounds and from experience. All these factors, Mr. Speaker, make me wonder whether this bill is nothing more than an empty gesture, a futile attempt to achieve something foredoomed to failure by the immutable facts of the world in which we find ourselves.

As I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, I support this amendment simply because I believe it would make a bad bill a little better. It is now apparent that the government's majority and the stubbornness of its leaders make passage of the legislation inevitable. The best we who oppose it can do in the circumstances is to try to make it less objectionable, and hopefully less discriminatory.

In closing, I would simply like to quote another leading thinker and writer from the province of Quebec, Claude Ryan, editor of Le Devoir. He said, as reported in Canada Month magazine:

> Quebeckers would like to have the best of two worlds, you know. They would like to be as free as possible—and I set no limit here. And on the other hand they want to be as comfortable and prosperous as the rest of North America, in particular the more prosperous parts of North America.

I echo those sentiments, Mr. Speaker, and to them I say "amen". But if the people of Quebec and the rest of French Canada are to find the freedom and the just share in North American prosperity to which they are entitled I do not believe it will be by means of artificial contrivances such as the bill now before us. They cannot find what they seek through legislative measures that will only end by segregating them behind legalistic barbed wire on isolated language reservations. They will not find it by accepting a false and unjust position of preferment. Neither the French people of this country nor the unity of Canada can come fully into their own on the basis of injustice and discrimination.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Secretary of State.

Mr. Alexander: Some hon. members "Oh, oh."

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I had made up my mind to speak in French to avoid the rather troublesome and, on the whole, rather vulgar, interruptions my colleague, the Minister of Justice, had to put up with earlier while he was quietly and soberly expressing his point of view.

I see that my decision was justified because I had hardly opened my mouth that I heard coming from the other side of the house certain noises hardly identifiable, which did not make any sense to me, perhaps because did not have any, which would not surprise me a bit.

At this point of the debate, I should like to point out a number of particulars on two interventions: First of all, the one from the sponsor of the amendment that is before us now, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and then, the more surprising one and the least explainable, from the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie).

I merely wish to clarify some points because during this debate, Mr. Speaker, a certain number of statements were made which neither the facts nor the bill under study can justify.

For instance, the hon. member for Crowfoot stated, on the basis of a very fragmentary and truncated quotation taken from a newspaper article, that I had said that I believed it necessary for all federal public servants to become bilingual. That is pure fantasy. Because I have said, on many occasions, that there was an obvious need in the Canadian public service for a certain number of bilingual public servants, but that in all likelihood it would never become necessary for all federal employees to be fluent in the two official languages of Canada.

When I said that we need a number of bilingual civil servants, I was thinking in fact of views such as those expressed by the hon. member for Crowfoot in the amendment he put before the house today. In fact, the hon. member wants us to include in the legislation that no appointment nor promotion will ever be refused to a civil servant on the sole basis that he cannot express himself in both the languages of this country.

Mr. Speaker, how can one reasonably propose such a thing? And I would put this question to the hon. member for Crowfoot if he were still in the house, but he has the art of vanishing into thin air when his opponents take the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pelletier: I never had the pleasure—besides, I wonder whether it is a pleasure or not—to speak while he was here. How can the hon. member for Crowfoot seriously move that amendment and face up to cases such as this one, for instance: a unilingual French-speaking federal civil servant who, by his sole competence, becomes the head, let us say, of the Income Tax office in Toronto, or else, to come closer to the hon. member for Crowfoot, of the Income Tax office in Edmonton.

[English]

Mr. McIntosh: How about the commissionaires you fired?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I would not know how to reply to the objections of this honourable member of whose constituency I am not exactly sure. I feel he has nothing to do with this discussion, since he is not interested in the bill. Besides, as far as I am concerned, he could leave the house right now and I would not feel the difference. I do not understand what he is saying but I suspect that it would not be very useful to me even if I did.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot study an amendment such as this one without considering also its practical consequences. And its practical consequences—I see that the honourable member has returned; I welcome him back—if it were passed and fully implemented, would make it possible for the honourable member for Crowfoot, if defeated in a future election, to be admitted in the Civil Service and become, for instance, an office head in the province of Quebec where nobody would be able to understand him. Has he truly considered the consequences of an amendment which, to my mind, is completely thoughtless and against one of the basic objects of the bill now under consideration?

I would also like to point out also—to throw light on the hon. member's statement—that he made some allegations which seem to me extremely gratuitous. He said, for example, that according to the bill, the responsible minister would appoint the Commissioner of official languages and that the latter would report to the responsible minister.

[Mr. Pelletier.]

I was wondering when listening to him, whether the hon. member had read the bill. If so, he would have found in clause 19 (2)—

> The Commissioner shall be appointed by commission under the Great Seal after approval of the appointment by resolution of the Senate and House of Commons.

As for reporting to the responsible minister, he would have read in clause 33, and I quote:

> If within a reasonable time after the making of a report containing any recommendations under section 31, no action is taken thereon that seems to the Commissioner to be adequate and appropriate, the Commissioner, in his discretion and after considering any reply made by or on behalf of any department or other institution concerned, may transmit a copy of the report and recommendations to the Governor in Council and may thereafter make such report thereon to parliament as he deems appropriate.

Therefore, the Commissioner of Official Languages would report to parliament, and the same provision is contained in clause 34 (2):

> Every report or statement to parliament made by the Commissioner under section 33—

• (9:00 p.m.)

Nowhere is it mentioned that the minister responsible shall appoint the Commissioner of Languages nor that the Commissioner of Languages shall report to the minister responsible.

Of course, any member may look at this legislation with a critical eye—this is what we are here for—but he should at least read it first.

I should like to raise another point. Much has been said tonight about a fair treatment being given to civil servants and God knows I am all for it. It has been said and acknowledged that injustice has been done. That is right. It has been asserted that two wrongs do not make a right, and that is also true.

Now what surprises me is that no reference is never made to the fairness extended to the public, while the legislation respecting the official languages is essentially intended to render justice, at the language level, to a whole section of the Canadian public, that is to the English-speaking Canadian public and the French-speaking one as well living in communities with a different linguistic majority.

Now it is most important, Mr. Speaker, for one not to worry exclusively, nor even primarily, when considering such legislation, about the fairness exercised with respect to civil servants, but to worry above all about the fairness extended to the public. A French-speaking or an English-speaking taxpayer, in an officially bilingual country, is entitled in all fairness to communicate with his government in the language of his choice, that is most likely in his mother tongue.

Thus, any rational appraisal of the text of the legislation, to be neither emotional nor biased, should give some consideration to that very important entity, the Canadian people, which through its historical fate and also its own will happens to belong to two different cultures and to speak two different languages.

I return now, Mr. Speaker, to certain points in the hon. member for Dauphin's intervention. According to him, we are dealing with an undesirable legislation. When the hon. member for Dauphin used the adjective "undesirable", I found myself wondering what he would consider to be a desirable legislation in the language field.

I felt I could guess, as he pursued his intervention, for instance when he told us—and it was like hearing Quebec separatists speaking—that there are no real bilinguals and when he mentioned that French Canadians were bilingual as a result of an historical accident. I relished the expression "historical accident", being, like almost all French-speaking Canadians who speak English, one of those who have had to the language, and at their own expense, with no government paying to have them taught.

I like very much the "historical accident" referred to by the hon. member for Dauphin. He seems to think that French Canadians are born bilingual, like the people who are born black or yellow. I can set him straight on that. No Canadian is born bilingual. Those who are bilingual have become so through their own efforts.

[English]

But I could also reassure him and say it does not take that much intelligence or effort to become bilingual, once you have decided that you want to do so.

Mr. McIntosh: Tell us what you mean by bilingual now.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: So, Mr. Speaker, I understand what a desirable legislation means for the hon. member for Dauphin. I apologize for straying a little from the subject of this amendment, but that is exactly what the hon. member did himself.

He says there are no bilingual people. He thinks that Canada is a country with such an English-speaking majority that we should not go to so much trouble for the language minority, precisely because it is a minority. He thinks that serving the French-speaking public in French and the English-speaking public in English is a means of discrimination for the federal government.

He did not tell us how he came to that conclusion and that does not surprise me, Mr. Speaker, because I have a notion that he does not know himself. The connection between the two statements is not clear to anybody, and probably not to the hon. member for Dauphin himself.

I merely want to say that once more we find, in his speech, one of those ill-omened prophecies—"the effort is doomed to failure". According to him, Canadian parliament is considering a bill which is doomed to failure. If the failure is inevitable, in the mind of the member for Dauphin, Mr. Speaker, I wonder why he entertains so many fears, because nothing he fears is likely to happen. He might as well leave the house safely, go to sleep soundly and let us discuss quietly.

Finally, I think, Mr. Speaker, and I want to stress this—I do not know which parliamentary language I should use—that it is a shame to quote out of context people like Mr. Gérard Filion or Mr. Claude Ryan, as the member has just done.

Those are men who when they analyse their society are not afraid to recognize its defects and to state them. But, the member for Dauphin uses a truncated quotation, for instance, to present Mr. Gérard Filion, as a detractor of the culture in which he was born and of the people to which he belongs.

I just want to say to the hon. member for Dauphin that if Mr. Filion were here, he would get a rather severe tongue-lashing, because Mr. Filion is capable of defending himself and his views differ fundamentally from those of the hon. member.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall what I thought the most unbelievable statement of the evening: this legislation, the hon. member said, will be passed through the obstinacy, the stubborness of the government.

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that it is not only through the obstinacy or the stubborness of the government, but also because of the enlightened views of many members of the opposition—and I would like to pay my respects to them—among which there are some of our colleagues of the New Democratic Party, and because finally of the enlightened and intelligent attitude of the leader of the hon. member for Dauphin, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, would the minister allow me one question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) on a question of the minister.

Mr. Alexander: I just wish to ask the minister one question. I was very impressed with the minister and his usual brilliant footwork in bringing about—I shall use the word of the Minister of Justice—the exposé of the importance of the bill. I stand behind the bill with certain qualifications, but of course I wonder why this government does not want to appreciate the—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Alexander: What amazes me is that we now have an opportunity to do something, but the hon. member and the government do not seem to realize that we are discussing an important matter. I will get to the question and hon. members will have an opportunity to hear it. I am very impressed with the minister's statement to the effect that if anybody wants to be bilingual he can become bilingual. I take issue with that statement.

What I should like to know is what happens after a civil servant has been involved in one avocation for a period of 15 years and has not only shown a willingness but an integrity in his desire to become efficient in a second language, but for some God known reason cannot become proficient in that second language? This individual might well have all the attributes necessary to handle the particular job he is now holding, but what happens to him after he has attempted with all his God given attributes to become bilingual and cannot? The answer to this question will perhaps clarify this whole matter, particularly in the minds of a great many people in Canada. I hope the minister can answer it, keeping in mind the importance of a lifetime of work on the part of one individual in one particular avocation who cannot become bilingual.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I should first of all like to tell the hon. member it is always possible that there may be exceptions. I would say that for a man who was, let us say—I am sure this is what the hon. member had in mind—only able to speak French, and he is applying—

Mr. Alexander: Or English.

Mr. Pelletier: I am sure the hon. member had in mind a unilingual French speaking civil servant who would like to—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Pelletier: That is not what you had in mind?

An hon. Member: Do not be so facetious. You are not good at being funny.

Mr. Alexander: After I make a statement it is amazing to me that the minister is able to read my mind. I say, with all due respect, that it was most unfair of the minister to say he thought I was thinking along a particular line. I was not thinking of anyone in particular. I had in mind a person who had given 15 years of his life to a particular vocation, had shown a willingness and an integrity to learn a second language but could not do so. What would happen to such a person who had the scholastic background and know-how to handle the position which that individual aspired to but could not learn a second language? I think it is very unfair for the minister to attribute to me the thought that I was trying to channel my ideas in a specific direction.

Mr. Pelletier: I cannot understand the objection of the hon. member. I was taking for granted that he was thinking of a French speaking civil servant.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Pelletier: I thought the hon. member was a very generous man and wanted to put himself in the boots of an individual who spoke another language. If he is thinking of an individual who only speaks French my answer to the hon. member is very simple. If that individual were among the few exceptions who found it really impossible over a period of five, ten or fifteen years to learn a second language, he would still have access to other positions.

Let me refer to a specific case. Let us consider a unilingual French-speaking civil servant who wanted to be the head of the income tax office in Toronto. Being French speaking, he would still have access to 25 per cent of similar jobs. If he were English speaking he would still have access to 75 per cent of these jobs. Instead of becoming head of the income tax office in Montreal an English-speaking civil servant could become head of the income tax office in Toronto, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Vancouver, Halifax, St. John's, Newfoundland or any other major city throughout the land.

Mr. Alexander: Perhaps I was not paying too much attention to the exposé and explanation of the minister, for which I am very grateful. I should like the minister to explain to me what would happen after a man had given 15 years of his life and was the best suited for a specific job but found that his capabilities did not allow him to become bilingual. Would he be the one considered for that job notwithstanding his ability to become bilingual? That is a very simple question, and I hope the minister can answer it in simple terms.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I used very simple language, but I suspect the hon. member does not understand because he does not care to understand. What I said was very simple.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Let the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) take on this question. At least he would be a gentleman.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) understood my opening remarks in which I said that the amendment before us would lead to impossible complications. I used the example of a unilingual French speaking civil servant who might be qualified for the job as head of the income tax office in Toronto but could not speak a word of English. I posed the question to him in simple terms. I am surprised that the hon. member needs my help to understand a very exceptional case that he might judge from a common sense point of view.

An hon. Member: Just because the seals are flapping does not make it right.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments I should like to make in respect of this bill and the amendment posed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Tonight we have been given an example of a situation where two ministers differ in opinion. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) stated that the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) moved an amendment which had a lot of merit. On the other hand, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) has said the hon. member's amendment was so poor he did not think he had even read the bill. Perhaps they should get together to see which of them is right.

Someone remarked that the Minister of Justice is a fine fellow. I would say that, on occasion, he has a lot of good sense. He has tried to make a good job of a poor argument. He always tries to gild the lily, even though it may be a poor lily. He did that tonight. The minister pointed out that there were some 370,000 public servants of whom approximately one sixth would be bilingual. He went on to say that 75 per cent of them would never move from their original localities. Do these people not get an opportunity to move to the top, 25 per cent of the jobs in Ottawa because they do not have the opportunity to become bilingual? I should like to know whether this is not straight discrimination against them. Perhaps the minister can also indicate why he does not accept the amendment of the hon. member for Crowfoot, in view of the opportunity given to civil servants in Ottawa who are or can become bilingual to obtain an increase of 7½ per cent in salary. Why in the world should the people in my riding or other ridings be discriminated against by not being given that opportunity to become bilingual?

I am perturbed because the government did not consult the provincial premiers before bringing in this bill. Education is basically a provincial matter. I do not know why the government did not consult the provincial premiers and then come to the house with a plan that it knew could be put into operation across Canada, with the ground rules well laid.

I am interested to learn that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is involving the government in shared-cost programs. Just the other day he said the government was getting out of this type of program. He promised the provincial premiers that there would be no more high-jinks like medicare. Yet, as I understand this bill, it will involve a multi million dollar program for French language education in English speaking provinces and English language education in the province of Quebec.

More schools and teachers will be required. In fact, this program will require a third school system. From where shall we get the teachers? A feasibility study has never been undertaken to obtain the facts. The B and B Commission brought in a report, but it did not know the cost involved. This government does not know the cost. Perhaps the government will find itself in the position the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) predicted the other day when he said that if we do not control hospital and medicare costs, we will be bankrupt.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member would mind very much if I interrupted to remind him that the discussion should be limited to the motion before the house. I anticipate that there will be further general debate on third reading, and it seems to me that the very interesting remarks being made by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) would be more pertinently made on third reading than on a motion moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) which deals with a rather specialized aspect of the bill now before the house.

An hon. Member: What about the minister?

Mr. Rynard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am coming to the point as fast as I can. I am laying the ground work. I have not spoken previously on the bill. I find fault with it because the provincial premiers were not consulted and a consensus has not been arrived at in Canada. If we are to have three school systems, what will happen to the separate schools in the province of Ontario? Will they have less and less funds with which to carry on? They are short of funds now, particularly in secondary education. It may sound fine to the English in Quebec to have English schools, and the French elsewhere to have French schools. I agree with this program provided we can afford it and it will not mean poor quality schools which will make our young people second-class students and non-competitive in a world of quality scholars.

This is an age of irresponsible financing. Do we know if we can handle this program? I want the people of my riding, be they French, English or of any other ethnic origin, to be not discriminated against when they apply for a civil service job at Malton, Toronto or anywhere else. I do not want any French speaking person from my riding discriminated against because he does not speak English. I do not want people of any ethnic origin discriminated against if they want a job and qualify other than in respect of language. I do not want language to be made a barrier. People must have the opportunity to learn the other language in a reasonable period of time. There are not in this bill adequate safeguards to prevent discrimination of this type.

Like everything else the government does, this matter has been handled in a dictatorial way, with little acceptance of ideas and thoughts from anyone else. This has been proven by amendment after amendment getting the axe. When you think you know it all, you are hopeless. That is our problem today in this house. There has been today a great deal of talk about the civil service. You may be a civil servant for years. I met a civil servant who some years ago went to lengths to become bilingual. He obtained a civil service job in Ottawa and took a position that never required the bilingualism he had acquired. I ask, Mr. Speaker: Is he still bilingual?

We have in the civil service some very brilliant people who speak only one language. Are they to be discriminated against, as the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) asked, because they cannot learn the second language, or because they have been in the civil service for so many years that they do not feel they are capable of learning it or should do so? I believe this provision would put the civil service at a distinct disadvantage in respect of its ability to hire competent people. Many of these employees with ability cannot be replaced. Are we to discriminate against them because they speak only French or English? As the hon. member for Hamilton West asked: Are people to be discriminated against because they find it impossible to learn the second language? Perhaps we should look at our Bill of Rights, but frankly, Mr. Speaker, I do not expect this government to do anything but muddle up the languages bill.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, we have discussed several amendments concerning this bill on the official languages, but we are astounded by the impertinence of the amendment now before us.

I must now congratulate the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) for setting the record straight so adequately that I wonder whether the movers of the amendment will ever understand things which I consider elementary, since everything said by the hon. members of the Conservative party is completely beside the point and they seem to overlook the principle that full bilingualism will apply only in bilingual districts. Therefore, there is no possibility, in a practically unilingual area, English or French, for a unilingual civil servant to be deprived of his office on the ground that he is not bilingual. This will not happen in a unilingual area; this will happen in the bilingual districts.

And to come back to an argument that was put forward a while ago, if in a bilingual district there is a rather important linguistic minority and if a civil servant has been living for 10 or 15 years among people that speak a language other than his own, which language he never cared to learn, I say it is time to abolish such an anomaly. I cannot even understand that such a situation can be tolerated, even to save some civil servants, and I do not think there are any, Mr. Speaker. But, if there happened to be in the city of Quebec a person who speaks English only, who has been living in a French-speaking surrounding for 10 or 15 years, this anomaly should not be tolerated on the ground that he has 10 or 15 years' service.

Mr. Speaker, as I said when the other amendment was being discussed, it is time to deal with such situations and I think that those who oppose, who wish to restrict too much the scope of the bill have not understood its purpose.

Our Conservative friends are "toryfied" by this bill. This fright, this unjustified fear, reminded me of the fable by La Fontaine: "The Wolf and the Lamb", in which the wolf is afraid and complains, although it always had a great advantage over the lamb. However, it is afraid of being swallowed by the lamb.

The great majority of the country is English-speaking. Everybody knows it. However, they fear, Mr. Speaker, that the small minority will take over the country. Those are simply absurd considerations. It is to believe in myths: the French domination. It is especially to take every possible means to divide this country which however we would like to see better united than it is now.

Therefore, I believe that the time has come to speak frankly. It is time to dot the "i's" and to realize that it is necessary to have true bilingualism and not just intentional bilingualism. I cannot get over the proposed amendment. It seems impossible to me that, in 1969, in the light of all the events which have occurred during the past few years, that a member for parliament could even think of moving an amendment which reads in part as follows:

—has declared his intention and willingness to learn the other official language.

Mr. Speaker, it is almost inconceivable, almost unbelievable. We know fully well that if it were ever implemented, it would work only one way. There is no precedent enabling us to find out that a unilingual French-speaking person would be hired exclusively because of its qualifications. Again, unfairness would prevail and perhaps even worse than now.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, how "off-the-track" one is when saying that. Therefore, with such arguments and opinions it is not surprising that for all practical purposes the Progressive Conservative party has disappeared from the province of Quebec. And the four who succeeded in coming off well were lucky. Why? Because that party never understood that the basic problem was perhaps less a matter of language than one of participation by the founding people of this country, a participation that we want to regularize today, to bring to normal. We want abnormal things to become normal and it is unfortunately for some people some kind of revolution. And this is too bad because everybody can rest easy, everybody can be sure that there will never be a case in a district with an English majority where a French-speaking person will enjoy priority for the only reason that such a person is French-speaking.

On the other hand, we hope we shall never see in such a district public service employees unable to communicate with the local people. Should such anomalies exist at present, they must absolutely be abolished.

And if need be, Mr. Speaker, I will suggest something to the government. I admit that people are not born bilingual and that it is difficult for an English-speaking person, in the North-American context, to learn French. On the other hand, even if it were to be more costly, I wonder whether it would not be a good idea to provide service both in French and in English at the same time.

Besides, that is what is done in other bilingual countries to avoid frictions between races and having a unilingual civil servant located in a bilingual district lose his job. I even agree with the idea of waiting until he retires. If that is what is feared, then let another civil servant be appointed, bilingual this time, and have the two perform the same duties. Then it can be said that the service is truly bilingual. The service could be bilingual in two ways: through a bilingual civil servant, or through different persons providing services in the two languages. I feel that if this bill could achieve this, and all federal organizations could provide bilingual services, regardless of the way in which it is done, we should have made great progress.

Once again we are confronted with amendments that prove all too obviously the lack of understanding, logic and common sense of some hon. members. If at least the reasons for the amendments had been explained to us clearly, but until now the arguments have had absolutely no bearing on the fundamental principles of the bill. One of the main articles, that of the creation of bilingual districts, and the necessity of bilingualism strictly in those districts where there is need for it, has been ignored.

It seems to me that sheer justice, would require us to provide people with adequate service, irrespective of language. We deplore, in view of the present development, especially in Quebec, the lack of concern for the wishes of the French Canadians towards emancipation and fulfillment. To think that we are still discussing such amendments! Mr. Speaker, the amendment under consideration is a step backwards. It would have been better had it not been introduced.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the said amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75 (11) the vote on this amendment stands deferred.

We will now resume consideration of the motion of the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid).

Is the house ready for the question? The question is on the amendment to the motion which reads as follows:

That the motion be further amended by deleting the words "to a committee designated"—

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

[Mr. Matte.]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Does the minister not intend to make a statement on the position of the government with regard to this amendment?

Mr. Baldwin: The question has been put

Mr. Speaker: The question has, of course, been put to the house. That is the purpose of the exercise the Chair has been going through for a couple of minutes now. I am in the hands of the house, of course, but when a question has been put I doubt that we should go back.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I rise on a point of order. I assume that what Your Honour is doing is putting the amendment to the amendment—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has put the amendment to the motion.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Lewis) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the motion lost.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I did not vote for or against the amendment because I oppose the bill in principle.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether it might be called ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INCOME TAX—EXEMPTION INCREASES IN BUDGETARY PROPOSALS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I do not know which is worse, the audience or the noise.

On May 14 I drew the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to the fact that the Economic Council had recently set new poverty levels at $1,800 a year for single persons and $3,000 for married couples. My question was:

> Will the minister in preparing his new budget consider raising income tax exemption levels from $1,000 for single persons and $2,000 for married couples who have survived 21 years of inflation?

You found my question Mr. Speaker, unacceptable but assured me that I had made a suggestion which I must assume would be considered. Perhaps it was, but the fact remains that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) brought down his new budget two weeks later, on June 3, there was no mention in it of raising the income tax exemption levels. This was the case in spite of the fact that the cost of living in May of this year had risen 4.7 per cent over the cost of living in May of 1968. The cost of food was up by 4.2 per cent; the cost of housing by 5.3 per cent, the cost of transportation by 5.2 per cent and the cost of living is still going up.

I wonder whether the minister is deluged by letters of the kind I get? An example is this one from a woman in Alberta who says:

> If only people like our Mr. Trudeau could experience the frustration of being put through the degradation of never having enough money to go around, I am certain some drastic changes would be made. I'd like to cover the rising food costs also, and what they mean to us. At the present time we cannot afford to have meat on the table once a day. Try and explain that to a grade 2 child who is being taught the importance of Canada's food rules in school.
> I would like to explain that my husband is a graduate of the University of Alberta in Edmonton. He worked steadily for 8 years before entering university, and through the years he held a part time job as well as working all summer. He is presently working Saturdays, hours which should be devoted to classroom preparation as he is a high school teacher. During summer vacations he will also have to find a job instead of going to summer school as he had planned.

These are people who would be helped by raising income tax exemption levels—they and their three small children. So would some of the elderly people whose incomes are just enough to keep life in their bodies, but who are continually obliged to find survival in ways which are dubious and disgusting to them as well as to every sensitive person who hears about them.

This government must surely be compelled to make a determined effort to shut out the thought of their misery. Fortunately for cabinet ministers, they do not have to think about it, except once in a while, as when those elderly people told them about old age pensioners being obliged to eke out their food by eating dog and cat food. Undoubtedly, ministers made sympathetic noises in reply, but it is action that counts. The finance minister's budget was a cool and modern edition of Marie Antoinette's famous reply, which paraphrased, would be: If they haven't meat, let them eat cat.

I realize that my question of nearly two months ago referred to the minister's current budget. He will soon be hard at work doing the necessary thinking in preparation for his next budget. At this time I urge him to consider carefully the need for raising income tax exemption levels to at least $2,000 for single persons and $4,000 for married couples.

[Mrs. MacInnis.]

In this way, persons below these levels should not have to pay any income tax whatsoever. Income taxes are essential to carry on the public services of this country, but they should be levied according to ability to pay. Instead of scraping the last few cents from the pockets of young families and elderly pensioners, we should provide them with enough income to lead a modern and decent life, secure in their dignity as human beings. At the same time we should place the tax burden on the shoulders of those who have incomes, in the measure of their ability to pay. It is not what you pay in taxes that counts, it is what you have left to live on.

I do hope that the next time the Minister of Finance will be guided in preparing his budget by the principle of taxation according to ability to pay. Let him raise the exemption levels from the present $1,000 for single persons and $2,000 for married couples to at least $2,000 for single persons and $4,000 for married couples.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, proposals of the type just made by the hon. lady have already been made in this house by many hon. members, including members on this side who support the government. As the hon. lady must know, the government is completing work on a comprehensive program of tax reform, and it is expected that this will be made public in the not too distant future in the form of a white paper. One would think that the matter of exemptions would be one of a number of matters under active consideration in the course of the preparation of this program of tax reform.

As the hon. lady knows under our British and Canadian parliamentary tradition matters involving possible changes of taxes are considered to be secret and confidential until formally announced in the house by the government in the course of a budget presentation or through a white paper. May I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by again pointing to the interest and concern in this question on the part of many hon. members, including those on the government side of the house and again giving the assurance that this matter is one of those under consideration at the present time.

FISHERIES—DOGFISH—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN AND JAPANESE OFFICIALS

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I understand that meetings are being held this week between representatives of the Japanese fishing industry and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) for Canada. Yesterday, I asked whether the subject of dogfish would be on the agenda of these meetings. I hope that tonight the parliamentary secretary can provide confirmation of reports that the subject of dogfish and their disposition will be a matter of serious discussion at the Japanese-Canadian conference.

Dogfish are far more sinister than merely fish with a funny name. They are of great importance on the west coast. Dogfish are a resourceful, predatory species of baby shark. They are suspected of doing real damage to our salmon stocks. They are proven mortal enemies of our herring industry. It is safe to say that dogfish directly or indirectly exact an immense toll amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars, perhaps even millions, from our fishermen and those in the allied trades. The economic impact of dogfish is beginning to have serious repercussions on the west coast. It is to be hoped that an effective dogfish control program will be evolved without delay, hopefully through the development of an economically viable dogfish industry on the west coast. The industry, hopefully, can exist without the need of federal government subsidies.

It has been suggested that Japanese fishing interests be invited to harvest and process dogfish within the territorial waters of Canada or our exclusive fishing zones. I hope it will not be necessary—I think this feeling is shared by British Columbia members of all parties—to have them engage in the actual fishing. One can comprehend the fears of those in Canada's fishing industry who see dangers in this kind of precedent. Let harvesting and delivering of dogfish be carried out by Canadians. If economics will not support the establishment of a viable dogfish industry in Canada, developed by Canadians with processing carried out by Canadians, let the processing for the world market be carried out by Japanese factory ships or factory ships of other nations.

At one time dogfish were harvested profitably in Canada, primarily for the vitamin-rich dogfish liver oil. A profitable and useful industry existed on the west coast between 1920 and 1944. In 1944 the synthesized vitamins industry effectively displaced the need for dogfish liver oil and the industry was rendered non-competitive. It may be more than significant that during this 24-year period herring and salmon stocks on the west coast were far more abundant than they are at the present time. In 1944 it was assumed that the dogfish was virtually extinct, but this ingenious, resilient fish has come back by feasting on the other treasures of the sea. Today the dogfish population on the west coast is back to 80 per cent of the 1920 population and constitutes a serious problem. The dogfish population is growing rapidly, so much so that whether or not a commercially successful program can be developed to reduce their numbers, with or without the co-operation of other nations, there must be a systematic counter-attack to reduce the toll exacted by this predatory creature.

Let us not be deterred by the failure, success or partial success of past programs involving various types of subsidies. In 1956-57, a $10, a ton dogfish subsidy was instituted. Only 220 tons were processed. In the period 1958-62 various bounties were paid on dogfish liver with rather inconclusive results. In 1966 another try was made. I will not go into all the details because time does not permit but let me say in summary that it is encouraging to note the interest in the problem which has been demonstrated by the minister. We wish him well in his meetings with the Japanese this week. It is to be hoped that the precedent can be avoided of allowing foreign fleets to move into our territorial waters or our exclusive fishing zones. It is to be hoped that negotiations can be completed successfully with our friends from Japan which would see Canadian fishermen harvesting and processing dogfish with the resultant product sold to Japan and other nations. If this is not feasible, then let Canadians fish and deliver their catch to the Japanese who could do the processing.

These activities may require a degree of government support for a period of time. But this support could be minimized if, through research, we evolve new uses and new markets for dogfish. Perhaps we had better start by renaming the species. No one will rush to the grocery store to buy tins of dogfish. All sorts of suggestions have been proposed, but surely the name needs changing. Government dollar support combined with an all-out program of scientific and market research could reduce the population of the dogfish predator, help our salmon and herring industries, reduce fishing gear damage, and help our fishermen. As the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Borrie) proposed so constructively at meetings a few months ago, our unemployed herring fleet, representing a fantastic tie up of capital at the present time, could be converted to dogfish harvesting, thus solving another acute financial problem of at least a section of our fishing industry in British Columbia.

Off season employment would effect substantial savings in the matters of unemployment insurance and welfare payments. But, above all, let us not be defeatist about the challenge of the dogfish. Many other resources have been dismissed as valueless because, seemingly, they held out little potential, and we have known them in the history of Canada. Yet, subsequently, they became very valuable because we have applied know-how in research and some development dollars.

With the application of some foresight, some well distributed dollars, and some Canadian ingenuity, the lowly dogfish or the Pacific tuna, however it may be named—the deep sea turkey, as my friend here suggests—would become a major source of wealth to our fishing community in the nation. Let us hope that at least a beginning of a solution will be found this week.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question I should like to say, first of all, that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) is meeting representatives of the fishing industry and of the fishermen themselves in British Columbia this week, along with Japanese officials. That is why he is not present in the house.

The suggestions for exploratory discussions were initiated during meetings between the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry for Canada and the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry for Japan during the Canada-Japan ministerial meetings in Tokyo in April. We realize that only 25 years ago the dogfish, which was the most valuable single species contributing to the fisheries economy of British Columbia, was so heavily exploited that it was threatened with depletion. However, before appropriate conservation measures could be developed and enacted, the problem was solved by economics.

In 1950 the market for dogfish liver collapsed, as the hon. member said, and brought the fishery to an abrupt end. We are told that in Japan the dogfish catch has dropped from 67,000 tons a year a decade ago to around 15,000 tons in 1968.

I agree with the hon. member that dogfish should be renamed. In parts of Europe it is called the greyfish and used in fish and chips.

[Mr. Perrault.]

In other parts of Europe it is used as a salted delicacy and eaten to the accompaniment of beer in beer gardens. In Japan it is used in many different ways. If dogfish is properly harvested, cleaned, etc. after being caught, it can be made into a very good food for human consumption.

• (10:30 p.m.)

I will stress again that it is in our interest in the Department of Fisheries to make sure that the fishermen of British Columbia are protected. These meetings are exploratory, and we hope some good will come out of them. We are optimistic at this time because of the Japanese initiative in seeking to take part in some program which we may be able to work out to the mutual benefit of all concerned.

FISHERIES—ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—LICENSING OF FOREIGN VESSELS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on July 2, as reported at page 10755 of Hansard, I asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Whelan) a question relating to the prohibition of the granting of licences enabling foreign trawlers to use the Port of St. John's.

At that time, in your wisdom, Your Honour ruled that my question should more properly be asked at the time of adjournment. I am sure you did not mean to reflect in any way upon the urgency of my question, because it is one of great urgency. Under present Canadian law, all foreign fishing vessels desiring to use Canadian ports on the east coast must first obtain licences. These licences used to be granted by the local customs officers. Recently, however, this function has been taken over by the federal Department of Fisheries.

On June 23 last, the St. John's office of the Department of Fisheries issued the following circular concerning the issuance of licences, that is circular No. 12-1969, File No. 728-1-2, and it reads:

To: All shipping agents re issuance of foreign fishing vessels licences and permits.

When the issuance of foreign fishing vessel licences was transferred from the Canadian customs to this department, you were advised that it was not our intention to issue these licences and/or other permits on Saturdays, Sundays or statutory holidays. Realizing that it would take some time for you to acquaint the foreign fishing vessel captains with this procedure, we have been providing issuance service on a limited basis during the weekends. During the month of July, an officer will be on duty for the issuance of foreign fishing vessel licences at our district office in the Marshall Building in St. John's from 0900 hours to 1000 hours on Saturday only. After July 31, neither foreign fishing vessel licences or other permits will be issued during weekends or on statutory holidays except in the case of an emergency entry involving medical need or the safety of the vessel.

The circular is signed by the assistant regional director.

Last year the department issued another edict to the effect that each time a vessel wanted to use the port it had to obtain a new licence. This was another move in a general campaign to discourage these vessels from using east coast Canadian ports. Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious matter—so serious, indeed, that it can mean a direct loss in revenue to the port and city of St. John's of an amount in excess of $20 million. This is a conservative estimate of what the presence of these ships means in terms of money spent in the port. Where will these ships go if they are discouraged from using St. John's? It is obvious the will go to the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon where they will be welcomed with open arms. The French government has recently completed extensive harbour facilities there. In April of this year they announced they were building a 28,000 sq. ft. warehouse for the storage of fish by fishing companies from Holland, France and West Germany, all common market countries.

The Canadian Fisherman in its issue of April, 1969 last stated:

> Construction is scheduled to begin this spring of a huge refrigerated warehouse on St. Pierre which will contain about 28,000 square feet of refrigerated space for the storage of fish by Dutch, French and West German fishing companies. This was announced in St. Pierre by Albert Pen, the representative of the French islands in the Senate in Paris.
> The refrigerated warehouse is another step in the continuing program of modernizing and expanding the facilities on the French islands to attract the foreign fleets which operate on the Grand Banks.
> Although some of the European fleets still visit St. John's on a more or less regular basis, the St. Pierre facilities are attracting more and more foreign trawlers for servicing and provisions.

Today, the St. John's city council passed a resolution unanimously condemning this latest move on the part of the federal government to discourage foreign fishing vessels from using the port, stating it would mean a loss in revenue to the city of between $15 and $40 million. Only recently a group of foreign skippers got together and decided to recommend to their owners that they boycott the Port of St. John's for one year to protest what they consider to be discrimination. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has received a telegram from the St. John's Port Association calling the move highly discriminatory and reprehensible—I am quoting directly from this telegram.

I am sorry the minister is not here tonight. Perhaps he can draw some comfort from the resolution recently passed by the Fisheries Council of Canada calling for a continuance of the prohibition which prevents foreign vessels unloading their cargoes in Canadian ports for trans-shipment. It is a well known fact that fishing interests of eastern Canada have a reputation for caring for no one but themselves. The industry is so poorly managed that, in my view, it could not stand to see the much more efficient operators use Newfoundland ports to tranship their fish, notwithstanding the fact that this would mean a lucrative new industry creating hundreds of new jobs and pumping millions of dollars into what is now a sagging economy.

The port of St. John's has excellent facilities and is probably one of the best ports in Canada in this regard. Its facilities were built by the government of Canada at great public expense. In my view, for the government to discriminate against foreign vessels that want to use this port is to deprive the port and the city I represent in this house of revenue amounting to millions of dollars, revenue that this city and the province from which I come can ill afford to lose.

St. John's is ideally suited, as I say, to handling traffic of this nature. It has the reputation of being the service station of the North Atlantic. This really is the function of the port of St. John's. Therefore, I ask the Minister of Fisheries, through his parliamentary secretary, in the name of reason to reconsider this order and to rescind it as soon as possible.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, under the coastal fisheries protection regulations, foreign fishing vessels entering Canadian ports must obtain a permit from the Department of Fisheries. For some time the issuance of these permits has been handled by the customs officers of the Department of National Revenue, but recently customs asked that they be relieved of these duties. For this reason the Department of Fisheries and Forestry must once again assume the responsibility, and is prepared to do so. However, the department believes that these permits can be issued during normal business hours, and that it is not necessary to have our office remain open during the entire week end and on statutory holidays solely for the purpose of issuing the permits that would be required by the limited number of foreign fishing vessels entering the port of St. John's.

Under the present arrangement, permits can be obtained on any weekday and on Saturday mornings. Foreign fishing vessels using the port facilities at St. John's have a ship's agent in that city who can determine in advance when a ship may be entering port. The shipping agents have been advised that any foreign fishing vessel wishing to enter St. John's on Saturday afternoons, Sundays or statutory holidays have only to advise our office in advance of their intentions and a permit for entry will be issued on the Friday preceding, or on any day earlier in the week. This is not at all unreasonable, because any fishing vessel captain, except in an emergency, knows several days beforehand when he will be entering port. The captain simply has to notify his agent, who in turn can secure the necessary permit from our department's office without delay. In cases of emergency, such as illness of a crew member or danger to the vessel, our office is prepared to give oral clearance at any time to the vessel to enter port on request from the ship's agent or the master of the vessel.

It should be pointed out that there has been a general lack of observance of the coastal fisheries protection regulations by foreign fishing vessels entering the port of St. John's.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that arrangements similar to those now proposed for St. John's were adopted for the port of Halifax some months ago. These arrangements have proved workable and satisfactory in Halifax, which has a larger number of vessels entering and clearing port, and we believe that similar arrangements can work satisfactorily for all concerned in the port of St. John's without in any way jeopardizing the economic benefits which the foreign fishing fleets contribute to the economy of the port.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.42 p.m.

AIR TRANSPORT

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL POLICY AND INSTALLATIONS—TABLING OF SECOND VOLUME OF ROBINSON REPORT

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with an undertaking to make a statement regarding air traffic control policy, I should like to make the statement now.

Recently I, together with officials of my department, met with the president of the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association. We discussed a number of matters of mutual interest and I am pleased to say that there was unanimous agreement that the air traffic control system in Canada continues to operate as the acknowledged leader in its field. I share the department's determination that it should be kept this way. Safety standards maintained by the department in civil aviation services are second to no other country, and this I feel is a direct and proud reflection of the dedication and professionalism of the people we have working in this field.

The remarkable growth in the aviation industry in all major centres during the past decade is self-evident. The next few years will see even more dramatic advances. The Department of Transport is taking steps to meet these rapidly accelerating needs by, for example, comprehensive planning for the development of a supersonic jumbo jet airport at St. Scholastique, and the provision of greatly expanded facilities to serve Toronto and the southern Ontario region. Considerable growth can also be anticipated in many other parts of Canada. An integral and vital part of this forward planning must include provision of an adequate number of skilled air traffic controllers and the most modern equipment to enable them to do their work efficiently and with maximum security for the travelling public.

In this connection I am pleased to announce that a contract amounting to $3.9 million has been awarded by the federal Department of Transport to Philips Electronic Industries Limited of Toronto for 29 instrument landing systems, known as "I.L.S.", for Canadian airports.

The 29 installations have been purchased as a part of a continuing program to improve the safety and efficiency of aircraft approach and landing operations at airports. The department now has I.L.S. equipment installed at 55 airports and the new ones will be put into service during the next five years.

Each system provides both vertical and horizontal guidance to pilots approaching the runway and is particularly valuable during conditions of poor visibility. The new equipment is of fully solid state design and surpasses the requirements of the International Civil Aviation Organization. Delivery of the first unit is expected in April 1971.

To help in the achievement of the best possible system, Judge John Beverley Robinson was commissioned in 1966 to enquire into the working conditions of the air traffic controllers. I am tabling Volume II of his report today, and I am pleased to advise the house that 75 per cent of the recommendations made by Judge Robinson in this document have been or are being implemented. Some of the remaining recommendations could properly be termed matters for collective bargaining. Such collective bargaining is now under way, having begun on June 11 of this year. This represents the second series of negotiations with the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association, the first having been completed in August of last year with results that produced substantial improvements in pay and working conditions.

In addition to those matters which are the subject of direct collective bargaining, officials of the Department of Transport and members of the controllers association meet regularly to discuss all phases of air control policy and related matters. I have given an assurance that such consultation will be stepped up in future and that I am ready at all times to hear and consider the controllers' recommendations.

Report on Air Traffic Control Policy

In order to ensure that an adequate number of new controllers will be available to meet the increasing demand and also to alleviate the current shortage in some regions, the Department of Transport has begun a more intensive recruiting campaign with the immediate objective of engaging an additional 70 trainees over and above the normal number in the department's continuing training program. Other plans call for a further increase in the department's air traffic controller strength in order to keep up with the development of new airports such as those planned for Montreal and Toronto. Detailed studies are under way also to determine the best types of new equipment that should be obtained so that our controllers will have the most advanced and efficient technological aids at their disposal.

I can assure the house and the Canadian public that the Department of Transport will continue to give the highest priority to matters of air safety, and I am confident that through the measures I have outlined, and with the continuing co-operation of the controllers, we will preserve and enhance the enviable record that Canada has achieved in this field.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of the house welcome the statement just made by the minister with respect to air safety in general and air traffic controllers in particular. This has been a matter of great concern in the press and elsewhere by members of the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association. The matter has on various occasions been brought before this house by myself, the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas), the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and others. I think we are all delighted to see that the minister has fulfilled his undertaking to make a comprehensive statement in this regard; this is pretty good.

I should like to make one or two comments on the minister's statement. We are very glad to hear from him that plans are under way for greatly expanded airport facilities to serve Toronto and the southern Ontario region, which is by far the most densely populated region of Canada. Arrangements have already been made for the Montreal region. I hope that in the near future the minister will be in a position to give the house details of the expanded arrangement for Toronto and southern Ontario becaus there has been a great deal of interest an debate in that part of the country in thi regard. I hope the minister will hurry up hi planners so he can give us details in thi respect at least when the house reassemble in the fall.

With respect to continual consultation o the matter of air safety between air traffi controllers and officials of the Department o Transport, this is an excellent move. I an glad to hear that arrangements are under wa with regard to detailed studies that are to b carried out with respect to equipment an various arrangements for proven safety con ditions. But I suggest to the minister that thi matter could very well be referred to ou Standing Committee on Transport and Com munications in order that the committee ca look into the question during the comin session of parliament.

There has in the past been some suggestio that departmental officials have brushed asid some of the suggestions of the air traffic con trollers. I am not suggesting this is correct but one hears these allegations and I think i would clear the air if everybody concerned i these matters were brought before the trans port committee. Those who have complaint or alleged complaints about air safety coul then present their case to the committee. I would be extremely helpful if the Air Traffi Controllers Association in particular could d this. Officials of the department should b able to present their views to the committee together with any other interested and knowl edgeable parties. The transport committee after hearing the views of people concerne in this question, might very well be able t make many worth-while suggestions.

If the program is to operate in the way i which the government suggested it woul operate—it has not operated too well so far— this would be a good opportunity for one o the major committees of the house to accom plish something useful and substantial in th coming session.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speak er, I think I can meet the rule requirement that you have drawn to our attention on a number of occasions because I have brie comments on only two or three points.

First, I often wonder why it takes so lon to get under way something that obviously needs to be done. The inadequate number o air traffic controllers has been the point at issue between the controllers association and the department for some years. They have complained about the fact that there are not enough of them to do the increasingly important and expanding job. Why it has taken the department until now to realize that they have to start getting more people and training them for this important job, God only knows. I just do not understand this long delay. I hope that the minister and the department this time will really undertake the job of recruitment and training with an eye to the next decade or so, because the job is an important one, the training requires time, and I hope there will be a sufficient work force to do the job properly.

The second point I want to make is that I do not know why the second volume of the Robinson report is being tabled only today. I suppose it has only recently been received. As a matter of fact, I am ashamed to admit that I had forgotten there was a second volume which parliament had not yet seen, even though it is almost three years since Judge Robinson was appointed. I hope that the figure of 75 per cent of the recommendations which have been implemented is not merely a quantitive figure but also a qualitative one. You can implement niggling things that do not mean anything and have them add up to 75 per cent. From what air traffic controllers have told me I have a strong suspicion that the arithmetic is of that kind and that some of the really important matters about which Judge Robinson was concerned have not yet been implemented.

Finally, I want to draw to the minister's attention the fact that there is still a great deal of objection from residents in the area to the proposed extension of one of the Toronto runways, and those of us in the Toronto area at least who are in the house have received briefs from an association that is deeply concerned about that. I hope the minister will meet with these people and satisfy them that whatever is to be done is essential, necessary, and will not be done at the expense of their comfort and welfare.

The matter of the air traffic controllers has taken far too long, for a start at least, to give us a sufficient work force to assure not only the safety of the people travelling by air but also to ensure that the welfare of the air traffic controllers themselves will be protected and that their lives will not be darkened by overwork and overanxiety.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

RESEARCH

LETTER FROM DR. O. M. SOLANDT RESPECTING SCIENCE POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but since he is not in the house I will put a different question to the Prime Minister asking him whether he has replied to the letter from Dr. O. M. Solandt dated January 6 concerning science policy. In view of the fact that Dr. Solandt's letter has been published in the Science Council's report tabled in this house, will the Prime Minister table his own reply?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will look into the matter. I must confess that I am not familiar with the letter to which the Leader of the Opposition has just referred.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board arising out of criticism concerning the past year contained in Dr. Solandt's letter. Can the President of the Treasury Board say if the Science Council has now received approximations of federal spending on science for 1969-70? At the same time can the minister assure the house that the Science Council will be given the necessary information next year early enough for it to be of use to the council in the manner indicated by Dr. Solandt?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I think Dr. Solandt was addressing himself rather more to the general problem of the lack of adequate statistics in Canada relating to expenditures on research and development. The Science Council has had and will continue to have made available to them all the figures that the government has in relation to its expenditures on research and development. I think Dr. Solandt was concerned rather more with the general lack of information from government channels in relation to expenditures on research and development outside the government sector.

Mr. Stanfield: It is clear that Dr. Solandt was critical of the role of the government in this matter and I hope the minister can give us some assurance that the situation is being corrected. May I ask whether the government takes the position that the total expenditure on research and development should be raised to the level of 2 per cent of the gross national product by 1972?

Mr. Speaker: I think we are getting involved in a subject which is very wide in scope at this point; it is akin to a debate and I would not think that the further supplementary is in order.

COMMUNICATIONS

SUPPORT BY DR. O. M. SOLANDT OF BELL CANADA RATE INCREASE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Some time ago I asked the President of the Treasury Board a question about the appearance of Dr. Solandt before the Canadian Transport Commission. The minister gave me an answer privately but I think the matter is of sufficient public interest to justify an answer being given in the house.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Speaking from recollection, Dr. Solandt appeared before the Canadian Transport Commission at the request of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. He went there as chairman of the Science Council of Canada and his remarks were addressed to advocating before the Transport Commission an increase in expenditures on research and development in Canada generally. That was the purpose of his intervention, as well as to testify to the good record of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada in this particular field.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): In view of the fact that the President of the Treasury Board has promised the house for a number of months that he will make a statement on motions concerning the government's general science policy, will he now undertake to make such a statement in the house some time next week?

Mr. Drury: I know the house has a limited agenda ahead of it and I am not sure it will be sitting all next week.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A further supplementary to the minister arising from his answer on the subject of Dr. Solandt's appearance before the Canadian Transport Commission. Do I understand that Dr. Solandt appeared as chairman of the Science Council in support of further research and in support of an increase in the rates charged by the Bell Telephone Company to enable the company, as it claimed, to do further research?

Mr. Drury: Dr. Solandt made it quite clear in his statement—unfortunately I do not have a copy with me—that he was not offering an opinion or evidence in relation to any increase in rates—whether this was necessary or not—on behalf of Bell Telephone.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister whether he has considered the propriety of the chairman of a government board appearing before another public body at the request of, and in support of, necessarily, a private or public corporation asking for favours from that public body?

Mr. Drury: I am not sure I would agree that the applicant in this case was seeking favours. I reject the dialectic used by the hon. member. Dr. Solandt appeared at the request of Bell Telephone Company to offer expert evidence in relation to the research and development effort being put forward by Bell. He was not asked to address himself, nor did he address himself, to the question whether or not a rate increase was necessary or desirable.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that we are becoming involved in a debate. We are now discussing matters that have already happened. This is clearly debate, and I suggest that this type of question should not be asked at this time.

ESTABLISHMENT OF INFORMATION AGENCIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Prime Minister with respect to the task force on information which was appointed last August. In view of the importance of the assignment given to this task force, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has yet received a report and, if not, can he give the house any indication when he does anticipate receiving a report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have received a report and it is now being considered by the government.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the importance of the report, and in view of the unconfirmed leaks that are made from time to time as to what is in reports can the Prime Minister indicate whether or not this report will be made public?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the leaks will have to remain unconfirmed until the government decides whether it is in the interests of both parliament and the country to make the report public. It is a task force report and is meant to inform the government of certain attitudes and recommendations. It is not intended primarily for publication.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question. Is the government considering issuing a white paper, at least with respect to the recommendations. It is not primarily for publication. intends to implement?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. The government may want to implement certain recommendations made by the task force, if they are found useful. I hope that parts or the totality of the task force report will be published by the government, but I do not want parliament to regard that as a commitment until the government has studied the report. I repeat that task force reports are for the government, whereas royal commissions make reports for publication.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister at least indicate whether the task force will recommend that the government be less secretive in its approach to public affairs?

LOANS TO MUNICIPALITIES AND INDUSTRIES TO COMBAT POLLUTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In order to help get an effective nationwide anti-pollution program underway, is it the intention of the government in the near future to make available low interest rate loans to those municipalities and industries that wish to instal the expensive machinery that is necessary to remove pollution from waste, in the same way as the government made loans available to industries that wished to commence war production during the last world war?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I find that an interesting suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, that is the minister's usual way of brushing off these matters. Does the minister mean that he is going to give the matter serious consideration?

Mr. Benson: I consider seriously all suggestions made by my hon. friend.

Mr. Hees: Then may I ask a further supplementary. Would he be straightforward and answer my question? Is the minister going to give this matter serious consideration?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Is the answer yes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: I will write you a note.

Mr. Hees: Just say yes, like a plain, ordinary human being.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I just wonder whether the Chair might have the co-operation of the hon. member, so that the Chair has an opportunity to recognize the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Hees: Say it like a man; don't mumble.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AGREEMENT BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS OF QUEBEC AND GABON

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Prime Minister.

Since the question I asked yesterday concerning the agreement passed between the governments of Quebec and Gabon was ruled out of order, and having heard that the Gabonese Minister of Education had officially met the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), here in Ottawa, may I ask the Prime Minister if that agreement, which had first been discussed in Ottawa and was passed in Quebec city with the Gabonese Minister of Education, is approved by the Prime Minister or by the Canadian government?

Moreover, I would like to ask him if, after that meeting with the Gabonese Minister of Education, the relations between Gabon and Canada, severed in 1967, are in the course of being re-established, if that has not already been done?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as the first part of the question is concerned, I have not studied the specific exchange between the government of Quebec and the Gabonese Minister of Education, but I heard from the Quebec authorities themselves that the Minister of Education had stated that no agreement or treaty was involved but a mere exchange between both governments. Therefore, subject to examination as to what took place exactly, I cannot answer the first part of the question.

As for the second part, the meeting in Ottawa between the Gabonese minister and the Canadian minister led us to conclude that the relations between Gabon and Canada were satisfactory, and we hope that they will remain so.

RHODESIA—INQUIRY AS TO WITHDRAWAL OF SANCTIONS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since the policy announced by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in respect of future treatment of Indian people is based on the concept that white is right, is the Prime Minister considering withdrawing Canada's sanctions against Rhodesia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is not in order. It contains allegations.

Mr. Trudeau: Not only is it not in order; it is very low.

TRADE

WHEAT—SALE TO PERU—CONTRACT WITH RUSSIA

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question I attempted to direct to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce yesterday, and ask him whether the Wheat Board has recently completed an important wheat sale to a South American country?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly happy to say that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pepin: —the Peruvian Minister of Finance is coming to Ottawa today in order to conclude governmental negotiations. I am having lunch with him in a few minutes and will be making an announcement at that time, making known certain details. I might add that this is the largest sale of Canadian wheat made to a Latin American country in recent years. I might also add that the sale was facilitated by the new credit arrangements for developing countries indicated in the discussion of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce estimates earlier this year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have there been any recent developments with regard to the balance of the wheat contract with the U.S.S.R.?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to add on this at the moment.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since this sale, hopefully, will mean that space will be available for more shipments, will the minister advise me if I can take to the meeting to be held in the northern part of Alberta on Sunday, which the minister unfortunately will not be able to attend, some useful information to the effect that a great number of box cars will be made available to that very depressed area so that farmers can meet their quotas?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the hon. member that he read at page 10784 of Hansard a declaration of the chief commissioner of the Wheat Board.

Mr. Baldwin: I have read it. That is why I asked the question.

Mr. Trudeau: Read it slowly.

WHEAT—SALE IN AREA OVERSOLD BY ARGENTINA

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of current reports that our competitor, Argentina, has oversold its wheat supplies to some of our competitors and that there is a vacuum in that situation, will the minister or his officials look into the situation and see if Canada can dispose of some of her surplus in that area?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board is bidding on that sale as well as on all others.

GRAIN

ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS TO THE LAKEHEAD AND VANCOUVER

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In response to questions asked yesterday the minister advised the house that he will investigate the allegations of the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool that the pool has space at its terminals at Vancouver and the Lakehead and that only half the required number of box cars are being allocated for unloading. He replied that he would investigate and inform the house of his findings. Has he been able to do so and, if so, what are his findings?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I do not have that information yet. I shall be in Winnipeg on Monday, obtain the information, and report to the house on Tuesday, when I am here.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the statement of the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool has a direct bearing on the telegram sent by the commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board to which the minister replied yesterday, will the minister investigate the allegations of the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and advise this house on Monday whether enough box cars will be allocated to those terminals to fill the space there?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I will be in Winnipeg on Monday. I will try on Tuesday to do as the hon. member suggests.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ON DELIVERY QUOTA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister now assure us that farmers of western Canada will be able to deliver the five bushel quota, or in the alternative, that in view of the sale just made, which means a few million dollars, quotas will be increased to more than five bushels?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have answered similar questions almost every day for the last few weeks. There is nothing to be added. As you yourself might say, Mr. Speaker, the question is hypothetical. I have read on a number of occasions declarations by the chief commissioner of the Wheat Board to the effect that the five bushel quota will be met by the end of the month.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister, on motions, at some time in the near future will list the delivery points in western Canada that are down to as little as a two bushel delivery quota, and that have no hope of reaching the five bushel quota?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker I keep in touch with these things on an every-day basis. I have the latest figures before me at the moment. I will be glad to send to my hon. friend information about the number of stations on three, four and five bushels.

ALLEGED PADDING OF ORDERS TO SECURE BOX CAR ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister investigate allegations of the Canadian Wheat Board that certain elevator companies are padding their numbers of shipping orders in order to secure box cars they are not entitled to?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will add that to my shopping list for Monday.

Mr. Baldwin: When for?—next Christmas?

TRANSPORT

BORDEN-TORMENTINE FERRY—SERVICE BELOW CAPACITY

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Transport is now in a position to answer the question I asked last Friday. The acting Minister of Transport took it as notice.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. member's question has to do with the number of passengers being carried on the Prince Edward Island ferry. In the hon. member's absence a few days ago I explained that we were quite prepared to examine the matter and to see whether we needed to change the present pattern. The problem seems to arise from the fact that the passenger-to-car ratio is not steady. In any event I am having the whole matter looked into to see whether we can make changes that will enable us to accommodate more passengers.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSING

DISCUSSIONS WITH FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS RESPECTING RATES ON MORTGAGE FUNDS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the minister in charge of housing. I wonder if the minister will tell us what are the results of the consultations he had with various financial institutions on the subject of mortgage moneys and interest rates?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I had useful meetings with the representatives of the banks on Monday, the insurance companies on Wednesday, and the trust companies yesterday. We covered a wide range of subject matters, including emphasis on measures to be taken as a result of amendments to the National Housing Act. The financial institutions are now in a better position to enter more actively into the residential housing market, and I believe have an obligation to do so. I talked to them about the possibility of increasing their lending for modest housing, even though that might mean some reduction in lending for luxury homes. We talked about further measures to improve our relations and the contacts between us, and we agreed to meet at least twice a year with more formal and precise agendas in order to make these meetings more meaningful.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask whether these financial institutions agreed that the level of interest rates fixed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was sufficiently high, or is it to go higher?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the National Housing Act amendment freed the interest rate at which N.H.A. insured loans can be made. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation set its own direct lending rate, for the present time, at 9 per cent. I think this will have some influence on the activity of approved lenders.

INCOME TAX

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF REFUNDS

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Is he seeking for the government new sources of revenue through the device of delaying income tax refunds?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is similar to one asked yesterday although, as I recognize, it is in a somewhat different form.

AIR TRANSPORT

SERVICE OF AIR LINE PILOTS UNDER CONDITIONS OF FATIGUE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since the minister this morning made a statement about air safety with respect to air traffic controllers, will he be in a position to make a statement within the next few days about another aspect of air safety? Allegations have been brought forward in this house concerning complaints that pilots of Air Canada and other air lines have been given permission by Department of Transport officials to fly up to 150 hours a month.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are no such pilots to our knowledge. Certainly there has not been any such permission given.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the hon. member was whether a statement would be made. The second part of the question was ruled out of order some days ago.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Would he take note of the straightforward way that the minister answers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —and try to do a hell of a lot better—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must again seek the co-operation of the hon. member to look to the direction of the Chair.

Mr. Hees: He can teach you a lot!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PENITENTIARIES

SPRINGHILL, N.S.—TRANSFER OF INMATES TO OTHER MINIMUM SECURITY ACCOMMODATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General, and ask him whether the minimum security institution at Springhill is being closed? If so, what arrangements are being made to deal with those inmates who have been so successfully treated in that institution?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The temporary minimum security institution at Springhill is being closed on September 1. The institution, when it was created, was on a temporary basis. Since that time two other minimum security institutions have been created in the area. The prisoners will be transferred to the other minimum security institutions in the area.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish to ask the minister if that is the institution he told me about a month ago, that is being used to test new treatment facilities for psychiatric care?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker. The institution referred to in answer to the question a month ago was the medium security penitentiary at Springhill.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Will the Solicitor General advise if there are any current plans for closing any other minimum institutions at this time?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker. This particular one at Springhill is a matter of there not being enough inmates to require the services of that institution. There are three minimum security institutions in the maritimes. Two will adequately service the inmate population.

FARM MACHINERY

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Since the government does not appear disposed to making a policy statement until the information is received, I ask the minister when he anticipates the reports of the task force on agriculture and the Barber Commission will be completed and provided to the government?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give an indication of when that study will be completed because, as Dr. Barber has pointed out, there have been some significant changes in the pricing patterns in farm machinery in North America and as related to Europe, for example, in the last two or three months. He indicated in an interim paper he prepared for the Canadian Agriculture Congress that he wanted to look deeply into it. Indeed, members of this house asked that it be done. This of course makes it difficult to predict when his study will be completed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

WILLINGNESS OF QUEBEC GOVERNMENT TO ACCEPT FEDERAL GRANT FOR ENGLISH LANGUAGE TRAINING

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): My question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it is prompted by an article that appeared in yesterday's press. Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether the government of the province of Quebec has indicated its willingness to accept what amounts to a conditional grant from the federal government to assist in financing English language education in the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not have that information. This question should be addressed to the Secretary of State, as it comes under his jurisdiction. He might answer when he is in the house.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FREEZE IN TRACKER AIRCRAFT OVERHAUL

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is to the Minister of Supply and Services. Notice of this question was given a few days ago by my colleague the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. Can the minister say when a review of the Tracker and other contract programs involving Fairey Aviation of Canada will be completed?

Mr. Speaker: I forget what the reaction of the Chair was at the time the question was asked originally. If the question was allowed, perhaps the minister might answer now.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, the question was allowed last week. In fact two questions were allowed at much greater length—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister does not reply twice; he may reply once.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I believe that question was directed to the Minister of National Defence. My understanding is that his parliamentary secretary has an answer.

Mr. McCleave: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This involves the roster system again, and statements made by some ministers that they will bring questions to the attention of other ministers. At page 10706 of Hansard for June 27 the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt said:

> Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring the hon. member's question to the attention of the Minister of Supply and Services.

I wish the hon. gentlemen would get together.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister without Portfolio did bring the question to my attention. As I have indicated, the original question was directed to the Minister of National Defence. My information is that he has an answer prepared for that question.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether this matter is also being discussed with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, in view of the unemployment that may result from this stop work order?

Mr. Richardson: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

ALLEGATION RESPECTING NEWFOUNDLAND SECTION OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): I wish to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries. Last night during the late show as appears at page 10835 of Hansard the hon. member for St. John's East stated that the fishing industry in Newfoundland is poorly managed. Will the Department of Fisheries and Forestry investigate these very serious allegations and take any action which may be necessary?

Mr. Speaker: I think the debate might be resumed at ten o'clock.

SENATOR KEITH DAVEY—EMPLOYMENT OF LIBERAL SUPPORTERS IN MEDIA INQUIRY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister advise the house whether he intends to bring forward a supplementary estimate or, if not, what other procedure is to be followed, to enable parliament to decide on the grant of $150,000 being contracted for by Senator Keith Davey to employ a number of prominent Liberal Party workers on his fishing expedition into press, radio and television?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the matter of detailed expenditures is a matter for my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Stanfield: Then Mr. Speaker, may I direct the question to the President of the Treasury Board?

[Mr. McCleave.]

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, he has referred to a committee of the other place. It has not been the practice of this house to try to exercise detailed control over their affairs.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it not any longer the practice of the government to seek the approval of the house on estimates of money being expended?

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It has been the practice and will continue to be the practice to seek the approval of the house in respect to parliamentary appropriations.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the government intend to bring forward a supplementary estimate in this regard?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, there has not as yet been any request made either to the government or to this house for supplementary moneys to carry on the operation of the Senate for the current fiscal year.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

NATURAL GAS—ANNOUNCED PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is with reference to a question I asked yesterday. Is the minister prepared to take action against the anticipated rise in natural gas prices in the west? He answered with his trade and commerce hat yesterday, and said, no. Today in his capacity as minister of industry, concerned about costs to industry in Canada, would he put that hat on and answer the question?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I might have to see my doctor. I was not aware that I might suffer from schizophrenia.

The question raised is a very complex one. I do not think I could answer it in just a few sentences. The price of gas indeed is going up, but there are regulatory agencies in the provinces, on the production as well as on the consumption side, to keep a check on that. The Canadian Energy Board has responsibility to make sure that the gas exported to the United States is surplus to Canadian needs. It must make sure also that the price is "just and reasonable". I am informed—there is no distinction between "told" and "informed" in French—that at the moment, in some cases anyway, the price of gas going to the United States is at a higher level than—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that perhaps we might revert to motions to allow the minister to make a statement.

Mr. Saltsman: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While thanking the minister for his lesson in French, in view of his responsibility to industry may I ask him whether it is his intention either to see about refusing export permits for natural gas or to make representations before the National Energy Board on behalf of the manufacturers of Canada.

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member is hoping that I will say whether or not I am in favour of a two-price system for gas. As usual there are advantages and disadvantages on both sides of the argumentation. I shall consult with the minister in charge of energy to see whether the two of us can develop some kind of an answer.

TORONTO—FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE IN CONSTRUCTION OF DOMED STADIUM

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In light of the approval in principle by the Toronto board of control for a domed sports stadium for metro, and in the light of the decision to approach the federal government for funds should approval be given by plebiscite in December, will the Prime Minister say whether it is the intention of the federal government to give favourable consideration to assisting financially in the construction of such a domed sports stadium—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the question should be placed on the order paper.

PENSIONS

ACTION TO ASSURE ADEQUATE BENEFITS FOR ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, a week ago I directed a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The acting minister said that he would take note of the question and have it answered at the earliest possible opportunity. Following that I was advised by two departments to try the President of the Treasury Board; so I shall redirect my question to him now. In view of the appeal received from the Naval Officers Association of Canada, what immediate steps can the government take to update to an adequate level the pension benefits of long service pensioners in Canada's fighting forces, and their wives and children.

Mr. Speaker: If I did not say so when the question was asked earlier, I should have said that this is a question which normally should be answered by way of a statement on motions.

Mrs. MacInnis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister make a statement on motions, perhaps on Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday of next week.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I am not sure whether the house will be sitting on Monday and Tuesday—

Mr. Hees: It will be sitting.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member for Wetaskiwin that we will have to yield to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker I was very respectfully going to draw to your attention the fact that you cut off the President of the Treasury Board in the middle of a sentence. I think he should have had the opportunity to complete that sentence.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister did not appear to complain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

DAIRYING—GREATER BUTTERFAT QUOTA ON PRAIRIES

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try again. My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister any plan to change the policy of the Dairy Commission to allow the retention of more butterfat quota in the prairie provinces.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have received a great deal of representation to set up regional quotas. We have decided we do not like to set up the kind of program that would inhibit interprovincial trade within Canada.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REQUEST FOR TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, this question really relates to a question asked a few moments ago of the Minister of Agriculture. It has to do with the task force on agriculture. I should like to know when the task force might be reporting to the government.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the task force expects to report before the end of this year.

AIRPORTS

CHARLOTTETOWN—INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF TERMINAL

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Transport, who in his last reply to a question of mine demonstrated his capacity to get to the bottom of things. Can he advise whether, as a result of his upgrading, progress is being made on the provision of new facilities at the Charlottetown airport, where there is a unique situation.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anything new, in addition to what I reported a few days ago. An examination is being made of the airport facilities to see what is there, but that examination is not completed.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—DISCUSSION WITH TRADE UNIONS ON PACT EXTENSION—DISPARITY IN PRICES

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the genial Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A few days ago I asked the minister a question concerning an extension of the area of the auto pact. I asked him whether he had discussed with the affected trade unions the specific proposals presented by the Canadian government, and he said he would look into the question.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pépin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have received representations in respect of the auto pact in general but not on the question of broadening—I was going to say "broadbenting"—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: I think you are bringing vaudeville back.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Pepin: Jealousy on the part of the hon. member! The subject of broadening will be fully surveyed in the coming months. Representations will be received from everybody who wants to make a contribution and I hope the unions will make theirs.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISION RESPECTING STATUS AND USE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed, from Thursday, July 3, consideration of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill, and Motion No. 4, Mr. McQuaid, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baldwin.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am rising because I had hoped the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) or the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) would be making some comment in respect of why the government apparently is rejecting the amendment now before us. Last night we received no indication concerning the reason the amendment of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) was opposed by the government.

It seems to me there is a good deal to be said for the merit of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). It suggests that the statement to parliament made by the commissioner and any report that may be made by him under clause 33 should be referred to a committee of the House and also to a committee of the Senate. I would be interested in knowing what the government's view is. When the amendments were being discussed the other day I thought the minister was prepared to give some consideration to this. He has not indicated to the house at all why the government has now decided to reject these amendments.

When this legislation was first introduced the hon. member for York South, in pointing out the views of this party, indicated that we support the principle of the legislation. At that time the hon. member said something with which I wholly concur, that the value of this legislation will be largely dependent upon how it is administered. This legislation, which we support, can have a unifying influence in Canada. It could also be the subject of acrimony and have a divisive effect if it is not properly administered and, even more important, if it is not properly understood.

There is a great deal to be said for having machinery set up whereby any reports the commissioner makes under clause 33 will be discussed by a committee of this house in order that the whole question may be thoroughly aired. I should not need to tell the government that there is a good deal of suspicion about this legislation. Personally I think the government has done a lamentably poor job of selling it to the people of Canada. For a government that talks a good deal about involvement, consensus and participation, this government has done very little about selling this legislation. I except here the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), who I think has made a valiant attempt, but on the whole the government has done a very poor job of explaining this legislation to the people of Canada.

In many areas of the country this legislation is misunderstood and, unfortunately in some cases, misrepresented. The government ought to be trying to do a selling job. There has been a breakdown in communications between the government and the people of Canada in respect of the purport of this measure. I want to say also that this situation has not been helped by the inflexible attitude the government has taken in regard to the amendments that have been discussed during the report stage.

I do not want to discuss the amendments now as I would be out of order, but certainly some of them were reasonable and would have improved the legislation. We heard a most specious argument advanced as to why they should not be accepted. The Minister of Justice dealt with the amendments with his usual charm and urbanity, but I have the feeling that behind his pleasantry there is a very firm iron hand which indicated to him that no changes or amendments are to be accepted irrespective of whether or not they improve the legislation. If that type of ruthless arrogance is continued in the administration of the legislation this act, which could be a great forward step in Canada, will have a divisive effect. Therefore I am at a loss to understand why the government should not be prepared to give an assurance, and even put it in the legislation, that the reports of the commissioner will be sent to a committee so that there will be the fullest possible discussion and the widest possible understanding of what this is all about.

We are not going to have public hearings for those adversely affected. There will be some suspicion as to what has happened when reports are submitted which adversely affect some people, perhaps based on tittle-tattle and malicious gossip. There should be the fullest opportunity for a complete airing of any complaints. Certainly the best way to obtain that kind of airing and understanding of a misunderstanding that might arise would be to have all reports made under clause 33 sent to a committee of the house. I think the government should consider very seriously the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

I know the minister will say it is not usual to put instructions to the House of Commons in legislation. The fact remains that what will happen is that these reports will be tabled in due course in the House of Commons but there will be no opportunity to discuss them under Standing Order 26 because they will not be matters of urgent importance. Questions may be asked from time to time. Even if we take one of the allotted days, this will mean just a formal debate with the minister closing it at the end of the day. What is needed is a dialogue in respect of the report. What is needed is a forum in which there can be informal discussions. A committee could call the people adversely affected and could have the benefit of the opinions of witnesses who are concerned with the particular items in the commissioner's report. That can only be done by having these reports sent to a committee of the house.

We would have preferred, of course, to have an appropriate standing committee named. This amendment calls for a committee designated by His Honour the Speaker. That would be the second best choice. In whatever way the committee is appointed, particularly in the initial stages of the administration of this legislation, surely there ought to be provision made for discussion of the reports and for the widest possible understanding of them. We automatically send reports in respect of other activities of the government to committees for discussion. Why not send these reports to a committee? I make the plea, not on any political ground but for the government's own sake, that hon. members opposite accept this amendment.

I congratulate the minister on having done a very masterful job of studying this whole question. He and the government want this legislation to be a success. I assume they want it to be understood, appreciated and supported in those areas of Canada where, to say the least, at the present time it has not been welcomed. I cannot imagine any better way of having this whole question examined properly than by sending the reports of the commissioner to a committee where members will be able to ask questions, call witnesses and make a report to the house which can be discussed by the whole house. The result would be twofold. There would be publicity and there would be no feeling that the commissioner's reports were made in secrecy and that persons were adversely affected behind closed doors. This would also give members of this house the opportunity to become fully familiar with the operations of the commission, its activities, the commissioner's duties and how he has discharged them. They in turn would be able to go back to their constituencies and remove any fears which now exist regarding this legislation.

I hope the government will give serious consideration either to accepting the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River or suggesting some alternative procedure which will assure the house that when the commissioner's report is received it will be fully discussed by the members of this house in order that we may have all the facts and in order that suspicions, whether justified or unjustified, can be fully investigated.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, when this motion was originally before the house, as introduced by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid), amended with his consent by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and then amended again by the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), I said I would be prepared to consider and reflect upon it.

The official languages commissioner will be in effect a servant of parliament. He will make his report of any adverse investigation to parliament under clause 33 of the bill. Under clause 34 of the bill he will be required to make an annual report to parliament. After very serious reflection we decided we would take the position that we should recommend to the house that the amendment be rejected, for this reason: The House of Commons is master of its own proceedings.

• (12:10 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Amazing!

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It would in our view be very inadvisable to restrict parliament in advance, to tie the hands of parliament in advance, by way of a statute, with regard to how parliament ought to deal with any particular report, in this case the report of the official languages commissioner. We believe that the internal proceedings of the house and its committees should be a matter for the House of Commons of the day to decide in its own good, collective judgment.

We believe that the proceedings of the House of Commons ought not to be delineated by statutory provisions, and we have been unable to find any other statute which so requires. I think parliament has, in its wisdom, always reserved to parliament the right to determine how reports are to be dealt with. A report submitted to parliament under clause 33 by way of a specific investigation or under clause 34 by way of an annual report will be dealt with by parliament as it sees fit. It will be open to the house to examine it under Standing Order 26. It will be in order for the house to examine it by way of reviewing the estimates relating to the commission or by way of referring the report, in its judgment, to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs or whatever committee the house should decide, or it could set up a special committee to examine the report. It is not the intention of the government that this report should lie fallow and unattended when it reaches the house.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister says that the house is master of its own destiny. He also knows, of course, that the government, having a majority in the house, can always decide what disposition is to be made of a report that is laid on the table. What does the present administration intend to do with the commissioner's report when it is tabled?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I cannot say—

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is the problem.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —because that will depend on what the parliament of the day intends to do with it. But nothing in the subamendment of the hon. member for York South which was defeated last night, or in the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), will cure the happy fact that the government happens to have a majority in the House of Commons. The amendment will not cure that. Our argument is that parliament should be left to deal with any report submitted to it and should not be restricted by any statutory framework attached to it.

Mr. Hees: You sound like the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): But the amendment would get the report off the table of the house and into a committee.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The house may send it to any committee of its choice. This procedure has always been adopted by the house, namely, leaving the house the master of its own procedure. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), who is a parliamentarian of great experience and usually sticks up for the rights of the house in all his flushed vigour, knows that this is a very proper precedent to maintain.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister should take his tongue out of his cheek.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I simply say the minister knows perfectly well that the government does not want these reports examined by a committee of the house and will not have any of them examined by a committee. Why not be honest and say that?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is right.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Finally, Mr. Speaker, I shall deal with remarks, which perhaps went beyond the scope of the amendment, as to the treatment the government has accorded this bill since it received first reading. I do not believe any bill has been the subject of so much consultation across this country, within and without parliament, with the provincial governments and interested institutions and bodies. There have been over 29 amendments, some introduced by the government as a result of consultations with the provinces, some introduced by members of the opposition of all political parties. There have been 29 amendments, fully dealt with and accepted.

We have attempted to adopt a reasonable attitude in dealing with this bill because, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands recognizes, it is a bill of great sensitivity; it is a bill that has provoked a good deal of controversy in certain quarters; it is a bill that labours under some misunderstanding. We intend that the commissioner's report be public, that it be placed on the table of parliament. But we want to leave it to parliament in its good judgment to deal with the report, just as is the case in every other area.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Hon. members may not like it, but I am sticking up for parliamentary privilege and the rights of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: You are just doing what the Prime Minister told you to do.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Lewis: I have already spoken on the amendment and I am not trying to speak again. The minister will recall that this matter was discussed in the special committee.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Lewis: At the end of those deliberations I moved a motion that the committee recommend to parliament that these reports be sent to a committee of parliament. That motion was ruled out of order on the ground that our terms of reference did not permit us to deal with that matter. I am not going into that question. At the time I moved my motion there was expression of support for it from members of all parties on the committee. I now ask the minister a very simple question: Can he undertake, on behalf of the government, that as long as this government remains in office, until the next election at least which may be a year, two years or three years away, the reports of the commissioner will in fact be referred to a committee of parliament, and that the government house leader will undertake to do this? That is a simple question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is a simple question which is difficult for me to answer at the moment without consulting my colleagues, and the house leader in particular. The hon. member is perfectly correct. At the committee stage we felt that if there was to be a recommendation from the committee it should be made to an organ of the house, to the committee on procedure, the government house leader or the house leaders of the parties. We felt it should be a recommendation to one of these bodies because it concerned the procedures of the house and should not be incorporated within the statute. At the time the hon. member was willing to accept that position because I think he himself realized there would be a certain rigidity attached to a statutory, mandatory order imposed upon parliament. He would have preferred at that time, as I would—we were at one on this; our minds were ad idem at that time—that parliament be left to its own devices and its own procedure.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask one follow-up question, Mr. Speaker? I can understand that the Minister of Justice would perhaps hesitate to speak for the government house leader without having talked to him. I ask the minister this simple question: Is he prepared to state on his own behalf that as a member of the government he will do everything he can to see that these reports are referred to a committee of parliament? I put the minister on the spot without any hesitation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member is putting me deliciously on the spot, Mr. Speaker. I believe it is in the interests of the people of Canada and of parliament that public notice and public viewing be given in respect of the commissioner's reports. Having said that, I will draw the hon. member's remarks to the attention of my colleague.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words at this time because of the jeers the leader of our party received from members on the government side when a few moments ago he suggested to the government and the minister piloting this bill through the house that (a) there is a great deal of misunderstanding in all parts of the country about the bill and (b), that all of us must do as much as we can and a great deal more than we have done to make people understand the real principles behind the bill and how it will operate. It seems obvious to me, as it did to the leader of our party a few moments ago, that if we want to do this, the more public airing there is of how the bill will work and how the commissioner will operate the better it will be. Therefore I am all for getting the report of the commissioner before a committee which can deal with it.

I say to the minister that he does not encourage those of us who have supported the principle of this bill from the day it was brought in, those of us who have gone back to our own areas and stood up for the bill, unlike his colleagues. I have just come back after participating in the provincial election in my own province in which the provincial members of the Liberal party ran away from this bill and in which the Conservative premier, at least until today, opposed it. We in our party were not afraid to take the same position in Manitoba that we took in this house.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order. I am not attempting to speak for other members of my party from Manitoba, but I want to make it abundantly clear that the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) can in no way apply to me, and I can prove it if he wishes me to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should like to make a comment on the point of order. May I remind hon. members that we are now considering an amendment to the motion, and interesting though the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North may be I would not want the debate to stray into a discussion of the recent election in Manitoba. I invite the hon. member to restrict his remarks as much as possible to the amendment now before the house.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking much of the time of the house at this stage. I intend to make some remarks on third reading of the bill, which I think will be in order. I am simply pointing out one of the reasons why I think we should adopt the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), namely, the tremendous amount of misinformation and misunderstanding of what we are trying to do that exists. With regard to the point of order of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler), may I say I was not referring to Liberal members of parliament from Manitoba. I was referring very specifically to the attitude taken by the provincial leader of the Liberal party and by the Liberal members of the legislature as well as the Liberal candidates. I repeat that they ran away from this bill and we did not. My colleague, the former member for Selkirk who led our party to victory, made his position quite clear.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Orlikow: He made quite clear the position which we have taken in this house. This is more than a political matter. If the minister wants the basic principles of this bill to be understood by the people of Canada, he should co-operate with those members of parliament from all parties who want to see the bill implemented, and agree to reasonable amendments which will help the people of Canada to understand what we are trying to do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? The question is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River to the motion moved by the hon. member for Cardigan. All those in favour of the said amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: We shall now take the deferred votes on motions Nos. 7 and 8. The question is on motion No. 7, Mr. McQuaid:

That Bill C-120, an act respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be amended by deleting subclause (4) of clause 40 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(4) In relation to the appointment and advancement in employment of personnel the duties of whose positions include duties relating to the provision of services by authorities to members of the public, it is the duty

(a) of the Public Service Commission, in cases where it has the authority to make appointments,

(b) of the authority respectively concerned in the cases of the Canadian Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and

(c) of the authority concerned in all other cases, to ensure that, in the exercise and performance of the powers, duties and functions conferred or imposed upon it by law, due account is taken of the purposes and provisions of this Act, subject always to the maintenance of the principle of selection of personnel according to merit as required by the Public Service Employment Act or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada respectively applicable to the Canadian Forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and the authority concerned in all other cases."

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on motion No. 8.

Mr. McIntosh: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should be allowed to register my presence in the house today. I did not vote for or against the last motion because I oppose the principle of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps this would not be the appropriate time to make a ruling on the hon. member's point of order. We will continue putting the question on motion No. 8. The question now is on motion No. 8, Mr. Horner:

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I did not vote for or against the motion because I oppose the principle of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house that the Chair put formally the motion that precedes third reading?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Official Languages Bill, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion for concurrence agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Baldwin: One o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: As agreed earlier today, the house will rise until ten minutes after two. Members will be reconvened by the bell.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.10 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my understanding that the house has extended leave to proceed at this sitting with third reading of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada.

Hon. John N. Turner (for the Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the importance of this measure has been emphasized by the widespread support it has received from leaders of political parties and of public opinion throughout the country. Included in this support, which has been evidenced by speeches made both in this chamber and outside it, is a notable contribution made in my own constituency by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I might say we always feel honoured when distinguished visitors come to our constituency. I am sure that in coming my hon. friend had no ulterior motive so far as the sitting member is concerned.

We are dealing with an important principle of national policy. Undoubtedly there is a general concensus in the country that this policy is sound and will contribute a great deal to the future development of Canada. Policies and objectives are important and vital in many important areas of our life, but the means used to accomplish these policies are also important.

I wish to speak for a few minutes about one group of people which is greatly affected by the policy involved in this legislation. I refer to the public service. The first thing I should like to say is that, as all hon. members know, the public service of Canada is in a unique position in relation to this legislation and indeed in relation to any general policy expounded by the various governments of this country. The very nature of their occupations makes it difficult, if not impossible, for them to comment publicly as individuals on policies of this type as they may affect them in their employment.

Having said that, I should also like to express the opinion that we in this parliament are under a special obligation toward the members of the public service who in a very real sense are our employees. These are people who rightfully look not only to government but to parliamentarians to protect them. Indeed, I think it is fair to say—and one could put it stronger than that by saying it is perfectly evident—that the public service of Canada has been one of the greatest unifying forces in the nation. There are many people here in this chamber and certainly in this city who like myself came originally from the far regions of Canada to Ottawa to work for the public service. The contribution the public service has made toward national unity because of its composition, representing all parts of Canada and all regions of government in Canada, has been immense. It is certainly to be hoped that as a result of the passage of this bill this contribution will be enhanced in the future by virtue of the fact that people whose native language is French will feel even more welcome in the public service and as a consequence be in a position to make an even greater contribution to the life of the nation.

When the policy of bilingualism was first expressed for the government of Canada by the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson in April of 1966 there was in my judgment a general acceptance of that policy by the members of the public service. This judgment has been confirmed by the frequent contacts I have had with members of the public service since that time and more particularly since my election to the house.

There are many aspects to the question of bilingualism and to the application of two official languages. This has already been commented upon in the discussions which have taken place. I do not intend to go over all the ground again. Since I represent a large number of public servants, people who will be and are being affected by this policy, I feel it my duty to call the attention of the house not only to their general approbation of the policy but to some concerns they have about it.

At the time the policy was announced by Mr. Pearson on April 6, 1966, he made a number of detailed comments about its application to the public service. Two of them have always been deemed by the public service in this city at any rate to be of singular and great importance. I now quote from page 3916 of Hansard for April 6, 1966, where Mr. Pearson set out the following as point (e) in his exposé:

> For similar reasons of equity, the careers of civil servants who are not bilingual and who have devoted many years of their lives to the service of their country must not be prejudiced in any way by measures to develop bilingualism.

The next paragraph, item (f), reads as follows:

> The government will consult from time to time with civil service associations concerning its policy on bilingualism in order to obtain their point of view, and to provide them with all reasonable assurances and remove any possible misunderstandings in regard to measures being proposed.

• (2:20 p.m.)

In many circles in the public service these statements are referred to as "the Pearson pledge". Because of the singularly important position which Mr. Pearson occupied and because of his long experience as a public servant these two items in his statement were given great value by the public service. One reason the policy of greater bilingualism in the public service has been introduced with so much ease and general acceptance is that the public service believes that these two principles are not only important but will be adhered to.

As I said a moment ago, one of the greatest problems facing the public service is the expression of viewpoints on important issues of this kind. I am very conscious of this problem. If I may be permitted a personal reference I might explain to the house something which I attempted to do in April of this year. When my constituency association had its annual meeting, arrangements were made for a discussion on the policy of bilingualism. That meeting was attended by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister and the executive secretary of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada.

During that discussion two points were made which I think are important to record at this time. The first point was that the Professional Institute, and I think other organizations representing public servants, felt that the policy as it had developed up to that time had not really protected unilingual civil servants of long experience and service in the way this was contemplated in Mr. Pearson's statement. The other point, which is equally important, is that the staff associations representing the public service were very definitely of the opinion that there had not been consultation between them and the authorities of the government of Canada in respect of the implementation of this policy, as was contemplated in the statement of Mr. Pearson.

The position in which we now find ourselves is that the policy of bilingualism in the public service, which, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) pointed out the other night, had been expressed in a previous statute, the Public Service Employment Act passed in 1967, will now receive wider application and greater authority by virtue of the passage of this bill. It seems to me quite clear that as we embark upon this very great enterprise of providing greater access to our public institutions to those people speaking either French or English, we must be sure that this aim or policy is not in any sense defeated by the means used to implement it. It is my view that the success of this policy over the next few years and, indeed, over a longer period of time, will depend to a very considerable extent upon the degree of support and confidence it enlists from the public service.

I see no evidence now that it will not have the support and confidence of the type required. There is no evidence that the authorities of the government responsible for the administration of this policy will be anything but diligent in an effort to make sure that the basic principles of equity and justice, implicit in Mr. Pearson's remarks, are continued in the forefront of the application of the policy.

Now that we have had some experience with the application of this policy and how it can be made effective by virtue of regulations and procedures within the public service, I believe the time has come to review the position of public servants with seniority and experience. Certainly it seems to me that in any case where bilingualism is not an absolute requisite for a particular position in the public service, any preference or special points given to persons with bilingual capability should be balanced off in the case of experienced unilingual civil servants by a formula which takes into account their years of service.

This policy, to be effective and fair, will have to be one of gradualism. As my colleague the Minister of Justice stated last night, it will have to be applied with common sense and with considerable attention to the position of individuals affected by it. I have every confidence that it is within the power, compassion and authority of this government, and indeed of any government of Canada, to see that the policy is applied in this way. I have equal confidence that if it is so applied it will, as the promoters of this bill hope, contribute greatly to the future strength and unity of our nation.

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, before beginning my discussion of this very important bill I believe I would be less than fair if I did not take advantage of this opportunity to express my thanks and appreciation to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) who very fairly and effectively chaired the special committee of the house which studied the bill and reported on it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McQuaid: It was my privilege to serve as a member of the committee. I say quite frankly to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the house that I was impressed throughout the hearings by the very fair and impartial manner in which the chairman carried out his duties. For this I now publicly thank and congratulate him. I feel, too, that I would be less than fair if I did not at this time express my appreciation to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) for the contributions they made to the work of the committee. I found them very co-operative and helpful in many ways. While they were not inclined to go along with all the proposals we saw fit to submit to the committee, they entertained them with quite a bit of consideration and in some cases saw fit to accept them. I will deal later in more detail with that aspect of the committee hearings. I also say without hesitation that the law officers of the Crown were extremely helpful in assisting me to draft some of the amendments we had in mind and put them in proper legal form. To them we also extend our sincere thanks.

In speaking to the bill at this stage I would like to do three things specifically. First, I shall speak to the general principle embodied in the bill and, of course, its several amendments. I say without reservation that I support the principle represented in the bill. In this connection, if you will permit me to do so, Mr. Speaker, I want to take very serious exception to the allegation made in the house yesterday by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) when speaking in the debate. I notice that unfortunately the hon. member is not in his seat at the moment. He was here a few minutes ago. As reported on page 10803 of Hansard, while speaking to an amendment to the bill which I had the privilege of submitting to the house, namely, that dealing with the armed forces and members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the hon. member said:

> I read between the lines, and I see that the competence of the French Canadian is questioned. That is one of the purposes of this amendment.

I categorically deny that there was ever any such intention in my mind or the minds of members of our party in introducing that amendment, that is, that one of its purposes was to question the competence of French Canadians. We have the utmost respect for and confidence in the competence of all the people of Canada, be they French speaking, English speaking or of any other ethnic origin. I am very sorry that the hon. member for Champlain saw fit to read into our amendment such a meaning because it certainly was not intended.

That statement can probably be excused but, if I am permitted to say so, what the hon. member then said cannot be excused. I suggest that it was a direct misrepresentation of what I said during the committee study of the bill. As reported at page 10803 of Hansard, the hon. member for Champlain continued in these words:

> Having sat on the special committee on official languages, I have heard with my own ears what the hon. member who moved the amendment—

That was I.

> —had to say and he even stated categorically that French Canadians in provinces other than Quebec were against this bill.

I never said that, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Champlain is now in his seat. If Your Honour will permit me to do so, I will resume my seat for the moment and ask the hon. member where he finds in the proceedings of the committee that I ever said any such thing. The proceedings of the committee will show what I said. We were discussing an amendment to the bill, and I said:

> I think we have to recognize that there are areas in Canada, particularly in western Canada . . . and probably in Quebec too—but I am referring now particularly to the west—where 10 per cent of the people are French speaking.

I continued in these words:

> Now, these people are violently opposed to having a bilingual district established in their particular area.

I said that the people of Quebec were in many cases opposed to having bilingual districts established in their area. This is exactly what the Prime Minister of Quebec said, that we were establishing linguistic ghettoes; but it is not what the hon. member for Champlain said I said. He said I stated categorically that French Canadians in provinces other than Quebec were against this bill. I never said any such thing. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to resume my seat now and ask the hon. member either to withdraw that statement or prove that it was said by me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt because I know the hon. member for Cardigan feels very strongly on this point, but this is an unusual procedure and I think it would be more proper for the hon. member for Champlain, when he makes his contribution on third reading, to deal with the point raised by the hon. member for Cardigan. I think that is probably the more correct procedure to follow.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether with the consent of the house the hon. member for Champlain might be allowed, without prejudicing the hon. member for Cardigan and having him forefeit his right to continue speaking afterwards, to speak to this point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course, with consent the house can do anything. But I again make the point that I think it is an irregular procedure and I would not like to encourage it. It is obviously a procedure that can be used on other occasions even though it is not particularly correct. Although I appreciate the strength of the feeling of the hon. member for Cardigan, I would encourage the house to allow the hon. member for Champlain to deal with the point when he makes his contribution on third reading.

An hon. Member: He may not make a contribution then.

Mr. Woolliams: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say with the greatest respect that perhaps the distinguished hon. member will not want to make a contribution at that time. I believe he did want to say something and I suspect he will likely withdraw the remarks he made if he feels so inclined. So I hope that with the consent of the house you will permit him to speak, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see the disposition of the house is more in favour of the view taken by the Minister of Justice. If there is agreement of the house, the hon. member for Champlain may have the floor.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I want to make the following remark, as a reply to the request of the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid).

I believe that the establishment of bilingual districts is the basic principle of the bill, and that this is significant. But the hon. member undoubtedly said that French-Canadians, within the province of Quebec but especially outside Quebec, were against the establishment of bilingual districts. That is what took place in the special committee on official languages, and those who are against the establishment of bilingual districts are simply against bilingualism, which this bill attempts to implement. So, I maintain what I said.

[English]

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Speaker, I can only say I am very disappointed that the hon. member has not seen fit to withdraw his remarks. I am sure he must realize that the objective of this bill is not the setting up of bilingual districts but rather the establishment of the French and English languages within the government services throughout Canada. I can only repeat that I am sorry the hon. member did not withdraw his remarks.

As I said before, what I would like to do first of all is to speak to the general principle embodied in the bill, but I also feel I would be doing less than my duty if I failed to point out some of the general deficiencies in the bill, despite the surgery which was attempted and in some cases performed in the committee, which will affect the people of Canada. I realize that even for experienced draftsmen it is very difficult to draft a perfect bill. Probably they felt they had done the best they could under the circumstances, but we submitted some proposals in the committee which we felt would improve the bill. As I mentioned at the beginning, some of them were accepted while others the committee in its wisdom saw fit to reject. We are convinced that if those proposals which were submitted by us in the committee and later, in somewhat modified or different form, to the house had been adopted, they would have improved the mechanism and the functional operation of the bill. Incidentally, we suggested that they would probably have made it much easier for the government to administer the bill properly when it does become law.

Third, I wish to draw the attention of the house to some rather specific weaknesses in the bill which we on this side of the house still feel should be corrected. We attempted to correct them by several amendments which we introduced but which, so far at least, have not met with the approval of the other side of the house.

As I see it, the basic principle of the legislation before us is to declare explicitly that English and French will be the two official languages of this country after the passing of this bill, as they have been actually in practice since confederation. I do not think anybody will attempt to deny that since confederation, in fact if not in law, English and French have been recognized as our two official languages. So I suggest it is not a very remarkable feat in itself to have introduced this legislation, but the many experts—and no doubt many experts have worked on this matter—have assured us and convinced me personally that the declaration we now find embodied in this bill which will very soon become the law of Canada will certainly strengthen the determination of the two language groups in this country to live happily together.

I believe it is admitted by all fairminded people that as a general rule we have got along very well together in the past. There have been differences, as naturally there are bound to be, and this bill may strengthen our determination to live happily with each other. Such an objective, and I take this to be the objective of the bill, certainly cannot be opposed, and it is simply because of that objective that I and the party I have the honour to represent support the principle embodied in this bill.

To further the determination of the English and French speaking peoples to live happily together, the bill seeks to ensure that no matter which of the two official languages Canadians speak they will be able to enjoy the services of the government in their own language. Surely no fairminded person can take any serious exception to that. The bill directs federal government agencies to provide public services in both languages in areas which have been determined by the advisory board to be bilingual, that is, where at least 10 per cent of the people living in these areas speak either French or English or, in other areas, where in the opinion of the commissioner it is practical to have bilingualism. Under the bill public services in both languages will be provided wherever there are enough speakers of both languages to make the use of those languages a workable and worth-while objective. As legislators I think we will agree it is the very essence of good government to deal with all citizens in ways which are clear and unambiguous, and to the extent that this bill promotes that object we support it.

However, I would point out that to whatever extent this bill tends to bring about confusion, resentment or misunderstanding as between citizens and their government, we have serious reservations about it. This is one of the reasons we introduced the amendments put forward from this side of the house, namely, in order to clear up areas of confusion and misunderstanding which we believe exist in this legislation. We did not submit our amendments for the purpose of interfering with the principles embodied in the bill. If you examine our amendments carefully, Mr. Speaker, I think you will conclude that not one of the amendments proposed by our party interfered in any way with the principles embodied in the measure.

The purpose of the bill is not to compel everybody to learn to speak both English and French. That is not its purpose, though unfortunately I am afraid there are some people throughout Canada who have an idea that this is the case. Such a step—I would call it imposed bilingualism—would certainly spell disaster and it is clear there is no such intention inherent in the legislation before us. As a matter of fact, this is confirmed by an assurance from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) himself. As I gather it, the purpose of the bill is to make for a happier relationship between French speaking and English speaking Canadians. The leader of our party has stated, and I quote:

> The Canadian confederation will work only if the French-Canadian people do not feel threatened in their development as such.

That is a correct statement. If the bill we are now considering reassures French speaking Canadians, especially those who live outside the Province of Quebec, if it reassures them substantially as to the willingness and eagerness of the people who live side by side with them to understand their aspirations, it will have done a great deal for our country. I was surprised to hear some of those who spoke yesterday on behalf of the Creditiste party suggesting that the bill would have a divisive effect. I am confident it will not.

There is another point which is often overlooked. In this connection I refer to English speaking Canadians who find themselves in what is essentially a minority position. Many of these are of British origin. But for the most part these islands of English speaking people are today largely composed of non-British immigrants representative of the "third force group" as we are sometimes fond of saying. This bill seeks to guarantee the provision of federal services in English to these people to the same extent and on the same terms as to French speaking people outside Quebec.

I express the sincere hope that our colleagues everywhere will remember that confederation will only work if not only French speaking Canadians but English speaking Canadians wherever they live do not feel any kind of threat to their cultural rights and opportunities for development. The leader of our party has always stated that English speaking people should accept and welcome the French language and culture as a continuing fact in Canada. He stated, and I quote:

> This involves no more than the acceptance of reality and the recognition that the French tradition is a great tradition which has contributed and will contribute much to our national life.

I suggest that nobody can validly take exception to a statement of that kind.

We say no one is taking anything away from anybody else and, indeed, the bill guarantees this. No one is denying the contribution made by other groups in this country. To make this point even more explicit, we on this side made a proposal to alter the bill slightly. An amendment was introduced by a member of our party which would have made it abundantly clear—though it is reasonably clear in the bill as it stands—that no one is attempting to deny the valuable contribution which the ethnic groups have made to Canadian life. Unfortunately, our proposal was not accepted. But we believe the bill will do nothing to take away from these people the privileges, rights and honours to which they are justly entitled.

As I said earlier, the bill is unfortunately much misunderstood throughout the country. With all due respect, I suggest that responsibility for this situation lies at the doorstep of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whose complete failure to engage personally in a dialogue with the Canadian people about this measure is a major factor in permitting the amount of misunderstanding which exists today.

The Prime Minister would like to blame the press. But I think the press has done an excellent job in trying to get across to the Canadian people the principles embodied in this bill. The people of Canada did not necessarily want to hear from the press. So many of the things they see in the press they take with a grain of salt. They wanted to hear these things from the lips of the Prime Minister of Canada. He was the man who carried the responsibility for promoting the principles of the official languages bill. I cannot for the life of me understand why he did not promote the measure to a greater extent. Surely, there is nothing in the bill of which he need be ashamed. As far as the principle is concerned, he can be proud of it. Why he did not go out and properly explain the purpose of the measure to the people of Canada, thus avoiding all the confusion and misunderstanding which now exists in the minds of the people, is beyond my comprehension. We on this side continue to be baffled by the Prime Minister's gross neglect in this respect.

We know he cares about this measure. At least, I feel he does. He was the man who conceived it. Why has he not explained it to the people personally? He could have done much to end the unhappiness felt in some parts of our country where this bill has been misinterpreted and misunderstood. The blame for the present situation lies directly on the doorstep of the Prime Minister of Canada. He could have made a major contribution to Canadian unity during the past few weeks by explaining to the people of this country what this bill is all about. Unfortunately, the Prime Minister chose not to do this. Indeed, it seems to us that at times the Prime Minister prefers to leave to the opposition parties the task of trying to explain this government measure. I suggest that is a very strange situation.

Far too many commentators, both in the press and on the radio, have treated this bill as an ethnic measure, as a racist bill. This bill does not deal with race but with language; let that be very clearly understood. This bill deals with two great linguistic cultures, with a great partnership of two groups of people, each with its hopes and fears, its aspirations, its pride in the other and faith in the future, in terms of two tongues, two languages. I submit the so-called third force is not a third force; its members belong to one of two great, co-equal first forces. We in this country are united by a common language, which is one of the two official languages. No Canadian can be properly classed as a third class citizen or even as a second class citizen in so far as his rights, his privileges and his citizenship are concerned.

If this bill were concerned with the dominance of French-speaking Canadians, or with those who are commonly referred to as WASPS, over other kinds of Canadians, as some who misunderstand the bill would have us believe, then the bill would not receive support from the members of this party. Neither would it be supported by those of Scottish, Irish or Welsh origin or by those of non-Protestant religious faith. The members of this party are proud to rank in exactly the same order of equality as all other Canadians who speak the French or English languages, regardless of place of birth or line of descent.

To summarize this part of my remarks, let me say that we support this bill because we sincerely and firmly believe that it asserts the essential equality of all Canadian citizens regardless of their origin. The bill is based on the essential equality for official purposes of the two great language communities. The bill recognizes the necessity for providing equal government services at the federal level to all citizens whether they speak English or French. We support the bill because we believe that it can prove to be an instrument to bring about greater unity rather than division.

Having said that, I would not want the house to gain the impression that, because we support certain important principles inherent in the bill we are, therefore, happy about every aspect of it; far from it. We have very serious reservations about the means by which the government proposes to implement these principles. The means used to implement the bill may very well prove to be equally as important to the objects of the bill as are the principles.

We see some very grave and serious dangers arising if this bill is not properly administered. In committee we sought to remedy some of the rather glaring weak spots in the bill in terms of its administrative provisions. It is with some justifiable pride that I say that some of the proposals we made in the committee were accepted. I should like briefly to review for the house the proposals that were made by us in committee and which the government members of the committee as well as the committee as a whole saw fit to accept.

Clause 15 as originally drafted set up the bilingual districts advisory board. An examination of the original clause 15 revealed that the advisory board was given the power to determine whether or not a certain area should be classified as a bilingual district, and this determination could be made without holding a public hearing. We felt that this function was important enough to warrant a public hearing in the area concerned before that determination was made. We, therefore, submitted a proposal to the committee which the committee accepted. As a result, before determining that a given area shall be classified as a bilingual district, the bilingual districts advisory board must now hold at least one public hearing in that area, at which hearing organizations and individuals are free to make known their views.

Clause 24 of the original bill authorized the commissioner of official languages—and make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker; this man is given great powers—not only to carry out the duties assigned to him under the languages bill, but also, the original bill states, to:

> —carry out such other assignments and engage in such other activities as may be authorized by the Governor in Council.

We conceived that to mean that, if the Governor in Council saw fit he could authorize this commissioner to carry out practically any kind of investigation, even though it may not be related to his duties under the official languages act. Therefore, we asked the committee, and the committee agreed, to include the word "related", in the clause, and now the bill provides that the commissioner can carry out only those assignments that are related to the official languages act which may be authorized by the Governor in Council.

Clause 25 of the original bill gave the commissioner power to interfere in the affairs of parliament. We felt that this was much too broad a power to give the commissioner and so we had the clause amended. As a result of our amendment, his power now extends only to the institutions of the parliament of Canada and not to the parliament of Canada itself.

Clause 26 (5) as originally drafted provided that, if the commissioner thought fit, he could give his reasons for any decision that he made. For example, if a complaint were made against a department of government or an individual, the commissioner would hold a hearing; but under the bill as originally drafted the commissioner was not required to make his decision known to the department of government or individual concerned. We suggested, and I think properly suggested because the committee accepted our suggestion, that the words "if he thinks fit" should be dropped. As a result of our proposal in committee, the commissioner is now required to make known the reasons for his decision. Before that the bill said the commissioner did not have to inform the complainant of the reasons for his decision. Now, the commissioner is required to notify not only the complainant but also the people complained against of the reasons for his decision. We were happy indeed that the minister and the committee went as far as they did in meeting our suggestions in committee. We were glad to see the changes brought in; nevertheless, we still feel that other changes to the bill could have been made to improve it. We tried to introduce those changes by bringing amendments before this house, but unfortunately they did not carry.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) proposed an important amendment, which was accepted, to the effect that section 107 of the Criminal Code shall not apply to the official languages act. We do not think the government has gone far enough in protecting those civil servants who are not bilingual and who, because of their age, have little prospect of becoming bilingual. We should have liked to see those civil servants more adequately protected. Those who are getting along in years especially need protecting in this regard. I think we all realize that as we grow older we find it increasingly difficult to acquire a working knowledge of any tongue other than our mother tongue. We hoped to see civil servants falling into this category being given a little more protection.

We are not at all happy about the administrative process under which bilingual districts are to be established. We were particularly dissatisfied and unhappy with the government's obvious reluctance to have the people of the affected districts participate in meaningful discussion. When we put our proposals in this area to the government in committee, the government went along with what we said.

We are particularly unhappy with that part of the bill which provides that once a bilingual district has been set up it will remain a bilingual district even though its population changes. That is firmly spelled out in the bill. Once a bilingual district, always a bilingual district—that is what the bill says. In these days people move about quickly and easily from one area to another. We can easily conceive of a situation in which, over a 15 year period, the 10 per cent of the people speaking French in a bilingual area may, because of their mobility and changing circumstances, move away from the area and leave behind, say, 1 per cent of the total population of the area which can speak French. In other words, only 1 per cent of those in the bilingual district will speak French—and the argument is equally applicable to English speaking people in a French area—but the bilingual district will still remain a bilingual district. The government will still have to supply bilingual services in the area for the entire population, even though 1 per cent of the population speaks one of the official languages and 99 per cent speaks the other. We feel that is not right.

This matter was mentioned in committee. We feel that it entails a waste of the taxpayers' money. We do not object to money being spent on bilingual services where they are required and where they will be used. If however, as a result of changing population patterns there is no longer any reason for those services to be provided, then the continued provision of those services entails a waste of the taxpayers' money. If the government had accepted our amendment it would not, surely, have detracted one iota from the principle of the bill. We suggested that once the percentage of those speaking French or English in a bilingual area fell below a certain level, there ought to be no further obligation on the government to provide bilingual services which are expensive and which, under those circumstances, entail a great waste of the taxpayers' money.

The bill provides for the appointment of a linguistic ombudsman. This point has been thoroughly debated in committee and in this house and I will not belabour it. It is sufficient for me to say that precisely the sort of man he is to be has not been spelled out. We are sincerely of the opinion that even now the bill gives this languages commissioner excessive powers. We think it would have been much better if the bill had confined his powers to those which are given to a commissioner under the Inquiries Act. We made that suggestion in committee and in this house but again, and I say this with all due respect, we were unfortunate in that the government did not go along with our proposal.

I must be frank, Mr. Speaker, and say that I was far from satisfied with the explanation the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) gave this morning for refusing to accept the amendment which would have had the effect of referring the report of the commissioner to a committee of this house. With all sincerity, we say that that provision ought to have been written into the bill. As the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and the leader of the N.D.P. pointed out this morning, once the report has been tabled there is no effective way for us, so to speak, to get it off the table. It is all very well for the Minister of Justice to say that I or other hon. members on this side of the house may introduce motions saying that this report shall be referred to a committee. What the minister said looks great on paper. We must look at this question realistically and not forget that no matter what government is in power—and another government will be in power in four years time—if the members of the government do not want that report to go to committee, it will not go. The government, having the majority of the votes in the house at its command, can always vote against such motion, and the report will not go to committee. So I say that even though I and others in the opposition may want to see the report, we have no effective way of obtaining it.

I cannot stress this point too strongly, Mr. Speaker. Members of the opposition have no effective power to obtain the report of the advisory board or the commissioner. They cannot force that report to be referred to a committee of this house, and that is not right. This report ought to be subject to the scrutiny of the appropriate standing committee of this house. That was the gist of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York South. If accepted, his amendment would have guaranteed that the report would be referred to the appropriate standing committee of this house. The Minister of Justice was asked to give an assurance that he would not object, on behalf of the government, to the referral of such report to a committee. I know he cannot give that assurance today and I appreciate his position; but I cannot understand why he did not accept that amendment. I have confidence enough to think that, despite his powers, the commissioner will effectively and efficiently carry out his duties. All the same his report should be subject to the scrutiny of the representatives of the people of Canada, because it is the people of Canada with whom the commissioner is dealing. If he is not scrupulously careful about doing his duty in an efficient manner, there is all the more reason for sending his report to a committee of this house rather than leaving it to the discretion of the government. I do not care which Party forms the government, it should not be left in their discretion to decide whether or not this man's report should be submitted to a committee of this house.

I realize I have probably taken up more time than I should, and the house has been very lenient toward me. These are some of the objections we have to the bill. These are some of the things which we in our party, and members of other opposition parties, earnestly tried to correct in committee. Unfortunately, the government did not see fit to go along with them. We want to see this bill work. We can only hope and pray that the bill will be properly administered once it becomes law. If it is, I do not think there is any question but that it will promote the unity in this country to which we as Canadian citizens look forward.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the aims and principles of this bill have received overwhelming support from hon. members in all parties at every stage at which the bill has been discussed. If I remember correctly, in the vote on second reading every Liberal member, every member of New Democratic Party, every Creditiste member and a very substantial majority of the members of the official opposition voted in support of the bill.

We must realize that in this country there is a good deal of doubt, hard feeling and objection to this bill. I believe to a large extent these doubts and objections are based on misconceptions. They are based on objections by people who have not even read the bill. I do not think anyone questions the fact that there is a good deal of doubt about this bill. One needs only remind hon. members that the former premier of Alberta indicated he would, in all probability, challenge the legality of this bill in the Supreme Court. The present Liberal Premier of Saskatchewan indicated he may challenge the validity of this bill, and the Conservative Premier of Manitoba made it clear that he not only opposed this bill, but that he would in all likelihood take this bill to the Supreme Court of Canada.

An hon. Member: The former premier.

Mr. Orlikow: The premier until next week. I will come to that in a few moments. The deputy leader of our party, the former member for Selkirk who will be the Premier of Manitoba next week, to whose speech I will refer in a few moments, and I myself gave unreserved support to the basic principles of this bill. We realize it is necessary if this country is to survive as one country. We English speaking people, and I say that as a person who is not of Anglo-Saxon origin but a member of the third force, as it has been called so often inside and outside this house, have been portrayed as people who oppose this bill. This measure supposedly makes us second or third class citizens. I will come back to that in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. We support this bill because we realize unless the French speaking people of Canada, and particularly the French speaking people of Quebec, are made to feel they are equal partners in Confederation the urge to separate will grow rather than diminish.

I say to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), who has had the task of piloting this bill through the house, that the government has not helped those of us who voted for the bill in spite of the fact we knew many of our constituents were confused about it. The government has not helped in getting the message in relation to this measure across to the people. I join with the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) in saying that it was a dereliction on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). During the last election the Prime Minister campaigned from one end of Canada to the other for a united Canada. He explained to the people in the key centres of our country that this legislation was necessary to maintain one Canada.

The Minister of Justice went across the country. He did not talk to the ordinary citizens. He made the mistake, I think the Manitoba election proved it was a mistake, of talking to the premiers as though the premiers necessarily represented the people. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) also went across the country. He does not turn me off as he seems to turn off so many members of this house. I did not object to the things he said inside or outside of the house. However, I want to say the representations I received have indicated he is not a very good salesman for this bill, whatever his other problems may be.

I am amazed at the total lack of participation in explaining this bill not just by the Prime Minister, but by virtually every English speaking cabinet minister of this government. If the minister from Manitoba, the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) or the ministers from British Columbia spoke on this bill in their own provinces, I certainly did not see any reports to that effect. It is not surprising the people are still confused.

When I spoke on second reading of this bill in May, I said that many of the people in my constituency, particularly the people of non-English or non-French speaking origin, the Ukraines, Poles, Czechs and the Jewish people I represent in such large numbers, had doubts about it. They wondered whether this bill would make them into second or third class citizens. I had no hesitation in voting in support of this measure but I suggest to the Secretary of State, as did the former member for Selkirk when he spoke on October 17, 1968, that the federal government ought not to merely pass this kind of legislation, but ought to promote the cultures and languages of the other ethnic groups of this country, the Germans, Czechs, Poles, Ukrainians and other groups. This is what the Prime Minister suggested in a press interview at the time he was Minister of Justice.

One of the first announcements the former hon. member for Selkirk made was that his government in Manitoba will set up a task force to study what a provincial government ought to do about this language problem. Had this kind of thing been done, we would not have the tremendous doubts which still exist. Five members of parliament from Manitoba voted against this bill at the second reading stage. I do not question their right to do this or their motives. I think they did so because they believed substantial numbers of the people they represent oppose this bill. One of the important lessons the people of Canada can learn from the election held in Manitoba last week is that while the people of Manitoba are concerned about this bill, they are not opposed to it.

The facts are very clear. The Toronto Globe and Mail of Friday, June 27, 1969 in an editorial dealing with the Manitoba election said this:

> It is an illuminating sidelight on the man that of the three leaders in the campaign, he alone publicly supported the federal Official Languages Act—

They are speaking of course of Mr. Schreyer.

> —which is not popular in Manitoba. He had voted for it in Parliament and he was honest enough to stand by his convictions. The Liberals, whose brothers in Ottawa had introduced the bill, and Mr. Weir, who attacked it, appear to have alienated the public by pandering to its prejudices.

I shall not say that our party won the election because Mr. Schreyer stood firm in his conviction that this bill must pass parliament, but I do say that opposition to this bill was used extensively, not just by Mr. Weir but by candidates all across the province, particularly in those areas in which it was felt there was opposition to the bill.

I should like to place on the record part of a pamphlet which was circulated by the Conservative candidate in one of the provincial constituencies which is contained in my federal constituency. The candidate, Mr. Swysten, was a candidate in the constituency of Burrows in which the people are probably 80 per cent Slavic in their ethnic origin. This pamphlet reads:

> I'm completely against the official languages act which will ultimately make French compulsory for everybody. The official languages act is unconstitutional and discriminates against and disregards the rights of all ethnic groups other than English and French such as Ukrainian, Polish, German, Jewish, Czech, Slovak, Baltic groups, etc. No one language is superior to another.
> Right hon. John Diefenbaker stated just three weeks ago about the language bill, "There is a recognition that one third of our Canadian people from other than English and French origins are to be placed in a lower category".

The Liberals are pushing the official languages act and the N.D.P. blindly supports it.

I am for minority rights. I am for teaching your language of descent in the public schools from Grade 1 and your second language, not compulsory French, on an optional basis where economically feasible and practicable.

The hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) and the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield), in their speeches at various stages of this bill, denied everything that is written in that pamphlet; but this was the kind of—

An hon. Member: Garbage.

Mr. Orlikow: "Garbage" one of my colleagues says—the kind of propaganda that was disseminated in the province of Manitoba from one end to the other. It was completely unsuccessful in my constituency which has a large ethnic population. Not only were all our candidates elected, but the percentage of the total vote they received ranged from a low of 60 per cent to a high of 70 per cent. The same was true in the provincial constituencies contained in the federal constituencies of St. Boniface, Selkirk, Provencher, Winnipeg South, Winnipeg South Centre and Winnipeg North Centre. We carried or came close to carrying the constituencies of Dauphin and Churchill.

Mr. Stanbury: What bill are we discussing?

Mr. Orlikow: I am trying to tell the parliamentary secretary that there is no need to worry. The people of the country are not so angry they will vote against any party which supports Canadian unity.

I have no hesitation in supporting this bill at this stage. I do not think it is a perfect bill. Members of our party and of the official opposition have moved amendments which I think would have improved the bill. I am a little concerned about the commissioner and his authority, as well as the manner in which he is to report. The one thing which would harm our country or create dissension would be a feeling on the part of any group that the people in that group were not being treated as first class citizens. I said before, and say again, that I did not think there was anything in this bill that did that. However, as members of parliament and as Canadian citizens, it is our duty to guarantee to the people of Canada that their rights are not being infringed by this bill.

I would hope that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and other members of the government who drafted this bill, who sponsored it and who piloted it through parliament, would assume responsibility for explaining to the people of Canada, as the Minister of Justice and the Secretary of State have done, that not every person in Canada must become bilingual and that not every civil servant must be bilingual. They should explain that every person of English origin or French origin has a right to conduct business with the government in his own language, but that not every civil servant must be able to speak French. As the Secretary of State said, the head of the income tax office in Toronto, Winnipeg or Vancouver does not have to be able to speak French. I say this fact has not yet been explained to the people of Canada.

We, as individual members, have spoken in support of this bill both in the house and outside the house. We have tried to explain to the people precisely what this measure means, but after all we are members of the opposition and the people would not expect us, nor could the government expect us to be treated as representatives of the government. I say to the Prime Minister that he has a responsibility to travel across the country talking about his concept of one Canada and explaining how this bill, as well as similar legislation in the future, help the one-Canada concept. I hope that he would do this in the same eloquent and convincing manner he did it in June of 1968.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few words to those of the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid), by way of thanks to the hon. member for York-Sincoe (Mr. Roberts), who served as chairman of the special committee on the official languages bill, and the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin), who served as vice-chairman.

Let me say, as one who was concerned with the details of this bill and its passage, how much I admired the work of all the members of that committee from all parties. They did their very best to bring to this house a bill which was worthy of parliamentary approval. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) deserves mention as the chief spokesman for his party on that committee, particularly because of his very constructive contribution to its work.

I was gratified today to hear the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) say he unreservedly supports the principle of this bill, and that there is nothing in the bill of which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) need be ashamed. I regret that is not the attitude of all the members of his party, but I am convinced that this is truly his attitude and his party should be proud of the manner in which he conducted himself as its spokesman.

The only exception I take to his remarks, and those of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) is regarding the alleged lack of effort on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government to explain this bill. I cannot imagine any parliamentary proposal which has received so much discussion in the country as has this bill. During the election and since, I suppose there is not one minister of this government who has not spoken about this bill and in all parts of the country. As a parliamentary secretary I have had the opportunity of speaking about it in at least three provinces.

I must say, like the hon. member for Winnipeg North, I did not find in Winnipeg the same antagonism toward this bill as that reflected in the remarks of some hon. members of the opposition from that province who have spoken during this debate. I did not find that kind of response or antagonism when I spoke about this bill in Vancouver. I did not find that kind of antagonistic response when I spoke at a meeting of Ukrainian Canadians in Winnipeg, a national convention of Canadian Ukrainians.

Contrary to what has been said, allegedly on behalf of certain ethnic groups, it might be of interest to know that Ukrainian-Canadian university groups across Canada officially approve of the official languages bill. I think this is an indication of the attitude of young Canadians of all ethnic origins.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the hon. member permit a question on this particular issue? I am glad he referred to Ukrainian university students. Is the hon. member aware of the fact that a telegram was sent to me as the sponsor of a resolution to substitute a new clause 38 approving the position I took? I am not in any way trying to deprecate what the hon. member said, I am wondering whether he is aware of this fact.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps I might ask a question of the hon. member. Is he aware—

[Mr. Stanbury.]

Mr. Aiken: Hold on; what's going on?

Mr. Stanbury: I should be glad to entertain a question from the Hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I should like to know whether the hon. member is aware of the opinion of the committee of this house to the effect that if we proceeded with clause 38 we would do more in this particular situation than we might have done by accepting the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps hon. members will realize that there has already been a disposition of that matter and the discussion now is in respect of the motion now before the house.

Mr. Stanbury: I can say that I am aware of the matter to which the Minister of Justice has referred. The fact is that university students of Ukrainian extraction have recognized, as I presume the house leader of the official opposition has recognized, the intrinsic value of this bill. We may each have different opinions about how best to protect the rights of Canadians whose first language is other than English or French, but the principle of the bill has been clearly approved by these young Canadians. This illustrates the attitude taken generally by young Canadians toward this bill which, I am pleased to say, has been unreservedly approved today by the official spokesman of the official opposition.

Many members who have spoken during this debate have expressed approval of this measure in principle, but some in their remarks have tended to encourage rather than allay the fears they claim exists among Canadian citizens. Let me say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North and the hon. member for Cardigan that there is a responsibility on members of opposition parties. The hon. member for York South has carried out that responsibility most admirably. There is a responsibility on the part of members who belong to parties other than the party on this side to explain this measure to the people of Canada.

This has been a government bill up to this point because the government has the responsibility of putting it forward. When this bill is passed, as I presume it will be, with almost unanimous approval in this house, it will become an act of the parliament of Canada. Under this act the commissioner will be appointed by the parliament of Canada, not by the government. He will report to the parliament of Canada and not to the government.

When the purposes of this bill have been approved by nearly all of us in this house, and when this measure is passed, I hope that all of us here will accept responsibility as members of parliament to explain this historic piece of legislation to make sure it contributes as most of us believe it will to the greater unity of Canada and greater opportunity for all its citizens.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few minutes to express some of my feelings on this subject. I feel very strongly about this bill, not because it will make it possible to speak both English and French within the civil service, but because, as a member who belongs to neither the English or French ethnic group, I have a responsibility to the people back in my constituency. This is the first opportunity I have had to discharge that responsibility during my 11 years in this house and to thank my people for sending me here. There are those who may scoff at this suggestion. However, the experience in my lifetime, short as it may have been until now, is of some very humiliating and trying episodes brought on by people who subjected not only myself but people of my kind to a great deal of ridicule and humiliation.

Hon. members must understand that I represent a constituency that is perhaps different from theirs, and I may have to speak a little differently from those who have already spoken in the debate. I have to express an opinion that is not necessarily that which a lot of other people would like to hear. I say this because this is the first opportunity I have had to thank those people who sent me here and to express their views.

There are many things I would like to deal with, such as, for example, the constitutionality of this bill. I do not think the government appreciates the constitution at all. I think those people who have come to this country from countries whose constitutions have been overridden would appreciate someone saying to the government that a constitution either means something or it does not. It is evident that this government has about as much respect for the constitution as a tom cat has for morals. I could say a great deal more on that subject, but I shall go on to my next point.

I know what the position of the government is with regard to the bill; I can read the signs. It is quite apparent from the votes that have already been taken. I know that I should not discuss votes that have been taken, Mr. Speaker, but it is obvious that the government does not want to improve the bill. I do not claim to speak on behalf of other ethnic groups; I can speak only for myself. I tell the house and the country that I am able to think just as members on the other side of the house are able to do. They cannot take this away from me.

This will be a very expensive exercise, and we have gone about it the wrong way if we believe the civil service should be bilingual. I have not too much quarrel with that, but let us bring bilingualism to the people out in the country; let us give them the opportunity to learn the other language. Let us start the program where it should be started, in the little, red school house. I would like the program to be started at this level, rather than flouting the constitution and telling us that it does not mean a damn. We are told that the constitution has been changed once, twice or three times and it may have to be changed again because of this and other bills. I think this is a wrong way of going about it. If we have the money with which to carry out this expensive exercise, let us start it where it should be started. I took five years of French. To what avail? The type of French that was available to me was a waste of time. I might as well have studied the stars, because I would at least have got something out of that. I might as well have studied heavenly bodies, anyway.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Korchinski: We have gone about this in the wrong way. The Acting Minister of Mines and Resources wrote an article in my local paper suggesting, lo and behold, that the bill does not require federal civil servants to learn the French language, but in areas where a significant number of people have French as their mother tongue those people will be able to obtain federal services and information in that language. He suggested that perhaps secretaries should have this bilingual ability. Perhaps he has a secretary who satisfies his requirements, but not everybody is entitled to a secretary, especially a bilingual one. Undertaking this program will involve a huge amount of money. I shall not read what the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté) said, because I have only a few minutes and I wish to deal with other points. In my constituency about 41,000 people speak English—these figures are based on the old constituency—and only 100 speak French. Can anyone imagine me supporting this measure and thereby making it impossible for 97½ per cent of my people to get a job in the civil service or obtain promotion? I ask, should I take that position? I do not think that is fair.

Other ethnic groups have been mentioned in the debate. I want to cover a lot of territory in a short time. The ethnic composition of the people in my area is as follows: Those from the British Isles, which include English, Welsh, Scots and Irish, 12,000; French, 2,100; German, 3,500; Italian, 94; Jewish, 25; Netherlands, 765; Polish, 3,000; Russian, 1,306; Scandinavian, 4,100; Ukrainian, 10,248; other European, 2,500; Asiatic, 82; native Indian and Eskimo, 4,100. We are overlooking that aspect of the matter. Now, with the proposed changes to the rules—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being four o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills. public bills, notices of motions.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe there would be general agreement in the house that we proceed with items Nos. 1 and 2 on the list of private bills, that is, Bill S-32 and Bill S-39, and once those two bills have been disposed of the house would entertain a motion to adjourn.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF ADJUDICATION REPORTS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), to move the adjournment of the house under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the serious situation revealed by the adjudication report of W. S. Martin in the dispute between the Council of Postal Unions and the Post Office. Considering the vital and essential nature of efficient postal service to all Canadians, and considering that there have been two nationwide strikes in this service in recent years, the importance of such a debate cannot be overstated.

In addition, given the fact that negotiations are now under way for the labour contract to replace the current contract which will expire before parliament is likely to reconvene, and given the fact that there will be no opportunity before these negotiations take place for parliament to debate this national issue of the attitude the Post Office should take in upcoming negotiations, it is vitally urgent that there be a full and comprehensive discussion of this matter in the House of Commons at this time.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, a number of factors have to be taken into account in determining if the house is to be adjourned under Standing Order 26 as suggested by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). In particular, the Chair has to consider whether the situation proposed for immediate debate is in the nature of a sudden and new emergency. If the issue raised by the proposed motion is in effect a continuing grievance, then the motion cannot be allowed.

It should be mentioned at the outset that similar motions dealing essentially with the same matter were proposed on March 10 and March 11 last. This fact in itself shows that the situation of which the hon. member complains is more in the nature of a continuing grievance.

Even the new circumstances outlined by the hon. member for Hillsborough do not appear to constitute a sudden emergency nor do they suggest an impending crisis the progress of which might be influenced by an immediate parliamentary debate.

Hon. members will also recall that the general subject of postal services was considered at length last May 15 on a motion pursuant to Standing Order 58 which motion had been proposed by the hon. member for Hillsborough and was resolved by division at the conclusion of the debate.

I think I should add one word in connection with the form of the notice given by the hon. member for Hillsborough. I have suggested to hon. members in the past that according to the terms of Standing Order 26 only a statement of the question to be debated should be indicated in the motion proposed for consideration by the Chair. The purpose of the new rule is to eliminate argument as to whether the matter should be debated urgently, and if hon. members as part of their notice are allowed to include argument on this subject, it would be only fair to allow argument by other members who may feel differently than does the mover of the proposed motion.

For this reason I have to insist again that the motions proposed by hon. members for the consideration of the Chair should be restricted as far as possible to a statement of the fact, and should not include argument. In any event, on the substance of the proposal advanced by the hon. member for Hillsborough I must rule that the motion cannot be put to the house at this time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ALLEGED IMPROPRIETY IN SUPPRESSION OF ADJUDICATION REPORTS—APPLICATION OF FINDINGS—RE-NEGOTIATION FOLLOWING ALLEGED BREACH—COMMITTEE INQUIRY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Communications and Postmaster General. Will he say for what reason the adjudication reports of the decisions made on April 30 and May 15 on disputes between the government and the Council of Postal Workers were suppressed until Friday, July 4, a delay of seven and nine weeks?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to say on that really, except that I have been pressing to have the reports myself almost weekly since May 1. I think the question should be directed to the Public Service Staff Relations Board. As the Leader of the Opposition said, one report was dated April 30, another May 15 and a third one May 16. I am at a loss to understand why they have not been released before now.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question for whoever is speaking for the government today. May we have some explanation as to why these reports have been suppressed for this length of time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have to take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister will have to do better than that on a matter of great importance. It cannot have come with any surprise to the Acting Prime Minister and to other ministers of the government that the house is interested in this question today. It is a prima facie case of serious suppression, and I think the house is entitled to an answer to the question.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege arising either out of the government's inability or its unwillingness to disclose information as to the delay in the publication of this report. I say that the privileges of the members of this house in particular have been affected, in that the house has had to deal with this particular question all along. May I say, with due respect to Your Honour's decision a moment ago, that this situation has arisen as a result of the unavailability of the report at the time of the discussion prior to today in the house.

Therefore I say that at the moment there is a question of privilege as to why the house and all those concerned have been denied this report. The question is whether the report has been delayed this long in order to relieve the minister involved from having to answer any question in the house on a point on which the ministry and its officials have been found to be guilty of dereliction in not living up to the standards laid down in labour relations.

I therefore put it to Your Honour that we just cannot be fobbed off continually, letting the question be avoided in one way or another. At this point in the session the whole matter should be dealt with.

Mr. Kierans: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, relating to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I wish to repeat that I have no knowledge at all of the reasons for which the reports were not released until just now. I have been as anxious as anyone else to obtain them. The implication in the statement of the hon. member for Edmonton West is that I have been afraid to face this house. Mr. Speaker, with an opposition like that, what is there to be afraid of?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We shall see.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the Minister of Communications to be afraid of anything. I am asking him to be honest and straightforward with this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that one report of the adjudicator granted the grievances of five workers, and since other grievances may fall within the same realm of facts, and since this means additional pay for those workers, will the minister undertake that the five workers concerned and others in a like situation will receive that pay retroactive to May 15, the date of the award.

Mr. Kierans: I have already instructed the officials of the department to contact the leaders of the unions and of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers to determine the best way of proceeding as a result of this report.

Mr. Lewis: May I also ask this question: in view of the fact that the other report, dated April 30, found that government agencies—more the Treasury Board, perhaps, than the Post Office—had violated section 40 of the agreement by not consulting the union prior to making up their minds with respect to changes in working conditions, will the minister now revert to the conditions which obtained prior to February 9 and negotiate with the union as the agreement requires?

Mr. Kierans: I am glad the hon. member raised that question. There were three principal conclusions reached in the report. I should like to quote from the adjudicator: "The employer, under the collective bargaining agreement, had the right to implement single mail processing." Now comes point No. 2, and again I quote: "The error lay in the method of implementation." The third point is this: Both parties erred. I quote: "It is held as a fact that neither the representatives of the employer nor the union were mentally disposed to engage in meaningful consultation."

On May 15—and you have already referred to this, Mr. Speaker—I said something along the same lines in this house:

> There has been on both sides perhaps a tendency to interpret that contract too literally; to look at the words than to treat it as a human document.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You ruled in your judgment that the motion of the hon. member for Hillsborough could not be entertained and that a debate should not take place at this time. I want to say that the Postmaster General has taken sentences out of context; that the adjudicator went further than to say that both parties were responsible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether I might interrupt the hon. member. I might say that prima facie the point raised by the hon. member is well taken. I did not know at what time to interrupt the Postmaster General. At the same time the question asked by the hon. member for York South in a way prompted the lengthy reply. I suggest to hon. members that there should not be debate at this time, that questions should be short and the answers equally brief.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lewis: Then I repeat my question, Mr. Speaker, which was whether or not the minister will revert to the procedures used prior to February 9 in view of the findings of the adjudicator.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, the adjudicator has not asked us to make any change from the single mail processing system. The adjudicator has asked us simply to ensure that there be more consultation prior to issuing new directives, and with this I am heartily in accord. I agree with the spirit—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the Postmaster General have no knowledge of the contents of the report until he read the report when it was issued on July 4?

Mr. Kierans: Not a word, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I should like to direct to the Minister of Labour. On March 18, as reported at page 6742 of Hansard, the Postmaster General replied in the affirmative when he was asked whether "the services and the ability of his colleague, the Minister of Labour, are being used" in the handling of the postal dispute. My question is this: When does the minister intend to dissociate himself publicly from the arrogant and high-handed labour tactics of his colleague the Postmaster General?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the Postmaster General mean to indicate that he had asked through the appropriate channels for this report before July 4, that he had failed to get a copy and that one was withheld from him until July 4?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, from the beginning of May I kept asking how long it would take to get the adjudicator's report. From then on I kept asking whether the adjudicator's report was in yet, and so on. That is exactly what I meant by my reply.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question. To whom did the minister direct his inquiries, and what reasons were given for the delay?

Mr. Kierans: I inquired of my officials, including the deputy minister, asking them to find out whether there was any information as to when the report would be forthcoming.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made earlier by the Postmaster General, that the blame for the delay in getting these reports was to be placed on the Public Service Staff Relations Board, and in view of the fact that that board comes under the authority of the Privy Council, may I ask the President of the Privy Council whether he can give us the reason for the delay?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad, as the Acting Prime Minister has indicated, to make an investigation into this matter, and I will respond in due course.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he would discuss with the Prime Minister the possibility of reactivating the task force on information to inquire into the secrecy and furtiveness practised by this government?

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the President of the Privy Council? Now that it appears that the house itself will not have an opportunity to discuss this matter, will he take the initiative to have this newly revealed report, which must have been sent by mail, referred to an appropriate standing committee before negotiations begin, so that the committee may look at the report?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I shall allow one more supplementary, after which we might go to another subject. Perhaps we may return to this matter in a few minutes. For the time being I recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to ask the Postmaster General if he can tell us on what date he received the two reports.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, I heard a verbal report of the reports on Friday night. I studied the reports this morning.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They must have been sent by mail.

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT CANADIAN PRODUCER FROM IMPORTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but in his absence, perhaps the Minister of Agriculture could answer it.

Since there is a joint and firmly established plan among egg producers in Quebec for the marketing of that product and since those people are having a hard time of it due to the importation of eggs, could the minister tell us whether the government has taken or will soon take steps to prevent the importation of eggs and to protect our Canadian producers?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would not agree with me that this important question could profitably be discussed at the time of adjournment this evening.

Mr. Lambert: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

B.C. TELEPHONE STRIKE—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL INTERVENTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour about the strike of telephone workers in British Columbia which has been going on for some time. Since Mr. J. Ernest Richardson, the president and chief executive officer of British Columbia Telephone Company, has refused to meet the officers of the union may I ask the minister if he intends to intervene in the strike in an endeavour to bring both parties together, so that free collective bargaining may take place.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the strike of the British Columbia Telephone Company is unfortunate. The hon. member knows that the services of the Department of Labour are available to both sides. There has been no request from the union for any assistance by the Department of Labour in a mediation role. Until one side or the other asks for such assistance the Department of Labour does not intend to interfere in a legitimate strike.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the chief executive officer of the British Columbia Telephone Company will not meet the officers of the union, does the minister not consider it incumbent on his department at least to bring the parties together in an endeavour to have them take up the process of collective bargaining?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the union went on strike of its own volition. It had the right to go on strike, just as the company had the right to lock workers out when legal delays expired after certain reports were tabled. If the union feels that Mr. Richardson's attitude is unfair, they can ask for the assistance of the Department of Labour. They need only to ask for it and we will then review the matter and make whatever contacts are needed with the company. In the meantime, until we are requested by either one side or the other to intervene, we have no intention of intervening.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the union were to ask the minister to try to bring the parties together, would he be willing to undertake this assignment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This further supplementary is hypothetical.

HARBOURS

CHANDLER (P.Q.)—INQUIRY AS TO WHARF CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Since a member of the Liberal caucus has said that the people from the Gaspé peninsula are about to rebel because the federal government failed to keep its promise to build a new wharf in Chandler, will the minister now undertake to erect a new wharf as first promised?

Mr. Speaker: I call the hon. member's attention to the fact that his question, as put, is out of order because it deals with a statement made outside the house.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since there are in western Canada thousands of students who are looking for work, I wonder if the minister will look into the activities of some departments of government which are sending to western Canada thousands of students from parts of the country other than western Canada. Those students are taking up jobs which might be filled by western Canadian students seeking jobs.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will be glad to look into that.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—ROLE OF CANAIRELIEF AND RED CROSS—BLOCKING OF NIGHT FLIGHTS BY FOREIGN PILOTS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister now tell the house about the results of the constructive meeting he had with Canairelief and Dr. Johnson, about which on Thursday he expressed hope, with respect to relieving the grim situation in Nigeria-Biafra?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Johnson put certain suggestions to us which might help in attaining some acceptable method of inspecting cargoes being flown into Biafra. These proposals are being pursued.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs say whether Canada has joined with the government of Great Britain in suggesting specifically to the federal Nigerian government that night flights be resumed on a temporary basis in order to avoid imminent mass starvation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, some days ago, as I reported to the house, the government was in touch with the Nigerian authorities, urging them not to interfere with the provision of relief. That would include night flights. I repeat what I said before, that there would be a good deal less trouble, less danger for the pilots, and greater opportunity for provisioning of the people in Biafra if daylight flights were permitted.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact there is imminent danger of starvation, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate whether any further steps are being taken by the government of Canada to join with Britain or any other countries in bringing about the necessary measures to ensure that the relief will come to the people who are threatened with starvation?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I do not think we should lose hope about the possibility of getting the International Red Cross to resume flights on conditions acceptable to both sides. We are working very hard on these objectives, which I am sure are shared by everyone.

Mr. Stanfield: It is not difficult to ask us to be hopeful about the International Red Cross, but can the minister expect to be hopeful about the Canadian government's efforts?

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the house whether he has any information as to the report that foreign pilots, presumably Russian and British, are flying the new sophisticated aircraft that are blocking night flights as far as relief to that area is concerned?

Mr. Sharp: I have only the reports I have seen in the press. From the knowledge I have I would say the reports I read in the paper are exaggerated.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

SURVEY OF EFFECTS OF POSTAL RATES ON MAGAZINES

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I wish to put a question to the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications.

As regards the implementation of the new Post Office Act and postal rates, does the minister intend to have his officials study the implications of the disappearance of several magazines and publications and to issue a report on the matter for the information of hon. members?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed the matter at length with the newspaper owners and all those affected by the increased postal rates and explained the difficulties involved in an eventual deficit of $130 million. To reply directly to the hon.

member's question, I must say that we have no intention whatsoever of changing the postal rates.

Mr. Fortin: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker, we were not asking whether the government intended to change the postal rates, but whether the Post Office and Communications Departments would be ordered to make a study of the economic possibilities and the consequences of the new Post Office Act, for the information of hon. members.

Mr. Kierans: Perhaps we could discuss the consequences of the postal rates when the estimates of my department are considered, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

VANCOUVER—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware of the very real danger of a longshoremen's strike this summer at the port of Vancouver? If so, what action is he taking to try to prevent it?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am always aware of the possibility, since their collective agreement expires at the end of July. On the other hand, I am not as pessimistic as the hon. member. I think both parties appreciate the futility of a long and costly strike in that particular port this summer.

WHEAT—DESIRABILITY OF AVOIDING RESTRICTED MOVEMENT THROUGH STRIKE ACTION

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In the absence of the Prime Minister, I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of today's Richardson's Grain Marketing Review stating that no offers of wheat were made this week to the Japanese food agency by the Canadian Wheat Board because of the distinct possibility of a strike in the very near future by the Vancouver port longshoremen, will the Prime Minister use his good offices to prevent this threatened strike, and thus avert making even more serious what is already recognized as a serious grain pile-up?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government is very much aware of the desirability of continuing the shipment of grain and preventing any strikes. I am sure the Minister of Labour, who is one of the more effective negotiators we have had in our time, will do a good job.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, both ministers said they are aware of the danger of a strike. What really is being asked the ministers is what action or policy the government has to prevent such a hold-up at the ports, which would of course cause another deterioration in our grain market?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this government does not adopt the policy that there are two types of workers, those entitled to strike legitimately and those who are not. The longshoremen in British Columbia have a very legitimate right to strike, provided they meet the full requirements of the law as presently enunciated on the statute books. I am not quite sure whether the hon. member suggests we should order the companies to give the unions all they want, or order the unions to accept the terms that the companies think are valid in this time and age.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. As a member of the opposition, I am not suggesting anything. I am asking the minister what his policy is. He says the labourers have rights: Surely the farmers have some rights. I ask him—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has already asked a question. I am not sure he is satisfied with the reply given by the minister, but he has already asked the question.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe I could rephrase it in a little more gracious manner, with your assistance, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering if the minister could give us any positive suggestions as to what he has in mind by way of keeping in balance his views on fair play and a due consideration of what is necessary for the economics of the country?

Mr. Mackasey: I think I should answer graciously, Mr. Speaker, and assure the hon. member that the one thing we should not do at this moment is panic. This is the type of advice I can give to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Woolliams: One thing about this government, they never move until there is a crisis.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PENITENTIARIES

INCREASED SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS TO PREVENT ESCAPES

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I direct a question to the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker? In the interest of protecting the public, I ask the Solicitor General if immediate steps are being taken to increase the security arrangements for prisons and penitentiaries in view of the increasing number of escapes, culminating in three escaping yesterday from St. Vincent de Paul, two of whom are guilty of homicide?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I will be very glad to take the hon. member's suggestions under consideration.

SHIPPING

CHURCHILL—INQUIRY INTO EXTENSION OF SEASON

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): In the absence of the Minister of Transport, I wish to direct my question to the acting minister. In view of the extensive assistance being provided by Canada in relation to the test run of the Manhattan to determine the feasibility of year round navigation in the Arctic, will the minister also combine this to a comprehensive study in relation to an extended shipping season at Port Churchill?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the department will respond to questions tomorrow.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF FEDERAL PLAN FOR EASTERN QUEBEC

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Was the minister told in advance of the decision to cancel some projects in eastern Quebec, and did he approve such a decision which constitutes a violation of a federal undertaking in respect of a development program for Eastern Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would agree to have the matter discussed with the others tonight at the time of adjournment.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PRESENCE OF RUSSIAN NAVAL VESSELS OFF EAST COAST

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister in a position to relate any information to the house concerning the presence of Russian naval vessels off the east coast of Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There are some Soviet naval vessels, three destroyers and one submarine supply ship, in non-territorial waters some 150 miles off the coast of Newfoundland, and proceeding southward. As is normal procedure, our maritime forces are carrying out a surveillance of this Soviet force.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. In connection with the meetings that were held last week with Russian officials, did the minister tell the Russians about the plans which his government has to throttle opposition here in the Canadian parliament?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

COMBINES

DRUGS—ACTION BY QUEBEC PHARMACISTS TO REDUCE DISCOUNT ADVERTISING

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs of which I have given him notice. Can he indicate to the house whether the Combines Branch of his department is investigating the action taken by the Quebec College of Pharmacists ordering reductions in drug advertising by discount pharmacists, which has the effect of creating price monopoly in the sale of drugs to the consumers?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to look into this matter on June 11 and it would appear that a valid regulation has been passed pursuant to section 5 of the Quebec Pharmacy Act, legislation which is totally within the control of the Quebec government.

HARBOURS

CHANDLER, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO WHARF CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works in reference to the harbour project in Chandler. When this project was changed from the original plan to the new plan, were the local authorities contacted, was there any consultation or exchange of ideas with them, or was the decision taken unilaterally by the officials of his department who feel that there is too much money being spent in the Gaspé peninsula?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate that his question in its present form cannot be considered in order at this time, and should he wish to have it debated at the time of adjournment, I will gladly see to it that it receives the priority which it deserves.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I would like you to tell me with your usual good nature why my question is not in order.

Mr. Speaker: We could discuss the matter when the orders of the day have been called.

EXCHEQUER COURT OF CANADA

PUBLICATION IN FRENCH OF RULES OF PROCEDURE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Is he now in a position to advise us when the rules of procedure of the Exchequer Court are to be published in good French?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the situation is just the same as it was the last time I replied to that question. However, I shall contact again the president of the Exchequer Court.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

The minister says that the situation is the same, and I rise on a point of order.

The last time I asked that question, the minister said that his officials were doing everything possible, and if things are still at the same point, this means that they did not really work.

Since I have asked that question several time since the beginning of the session—and since I always get the same reply—may I ask the Minister of Justice to do his utmost to make sure that the rules of procedure will be published before the end of the session, the summer recess seems a long way off.

Mr. Turner: This matter is as important for me as it can be for the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN STRUCTURE—RESIGNATIONS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In light of the elections now in progress to establish a permanent council of the Company of Young Canadians will the minister say whether anything is being done to alter the original intention or structure of the C.Y.C. before the permanent council has been elected and has met, and in particular will he report to the house upon the status of the program department of the C.Y.C.?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is not contemplated to amend the Company of Young Canadians Act, at least at this time.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: As a supplementary question will the minister say whether any of the members of the program department have submitted their resignations to the executive director, giving as their reasons dissatisfaction with a change in the program department?

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary question might be placed on the order paper.

B.C. TELEPHONE STRIKE—REPORTED USE OF U.S. STRIKE BREAKERS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this is really supplementary to a previous question asked about the telephone strike in British Columbia, and I direct it to the Minister of Labour. In view of the persistent reports that the B.C. Telephone Company is using American personnel as strike breakers in some of its operations, has the Department of Labour fully investigated this aspect of the strike and, if so, what type of investigation was carried out, and what were the findings?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if they are persistent reports as much as persistent rumours. We have investigated the rumours, but in the fairly complete investigation that we have made in the last couple of days we have found no evidence, of Americans coming into Canada to act as strike breakers in this particular dispute.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister which I had wished to direct to the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) in charge of housing. Can the Acting Prime Minister throw any light on whether that minister intends to make a statement this week with respect to urban renewal projects throughout the nation? I ask this question, Mr. Speaker, because I understand that we were to hear from the minister prior to the time that the house adjourns for the summer recess, and it now appears that we are getting close to that time.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I expect that the minister concerned will be in the house tomorrow, and since I do not expect that we will adjourn before tomorrow I will bring this question to his attention and urge him to take the necessary action, if he is in a position to make a statement.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, can the Acting Prime Minister say whether the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Resources will be in the house tomorrow, or at least some time this week, to answer questions?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have no reason to think he will not be here at his accustomed time.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF GROWTH CENTRES UNDER INDUSTRIAL INCENTIVES MEASURE

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can he indicate to the house when he intends to announce the growth centres as provided for under the Industrial Incentives Act?

[Mr. Harding.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to announce the growth centres. What we are going to announce are the designated regions.

Mr. Broadbent: As a supplementary question and with that change in terminology, when does the minister intend to announce the designated regions?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): As soon as possible, Mr. Speaker. I hope before two or three weeks have elapsed.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INGERSOLL, ONT.—STEPS TO RESTORE CUSTOMS SERVICES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, In view of the serious disruption to certain major industries in the area, would the minister take immediate steps to restore customs services at the port of Ingersoll, Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that this is the type of question which can always be debated with profit and advantage at the hour of adjournment.

Mr. Nesbitt: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND WESTERN FARM GROUPS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister may I direct this question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of reports of his intended trip to western Canada, is the Prime Minister planning to meet with the farm unions or other farm organizations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will put that question to the Prime Minister. I am sure that he would like to meet with all groups in western Canada to discuss the problems and the opportunities of that area.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ON DELIVERY QUOTA

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that two thirds of the delivery points in western Canada are still on a three or four bushel quota, can the minister tell the house what plans the government has in hand that will enable those points to reach the objective of a five bushel quota as of August 1?

Mr. Speaker: I have the impression, without being an expert in these things, that this is a question which was asked during the last few days. If I am wrong I am sure the minister will want to ask the house to revert to motions for the purpose of making a statement.

LEVEL OF INITIAL PAYMENTS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether there has been a determination by the government to establish the initial payment on wheat, oats and barley at the same level or higher than that of last year?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INVOLVEMENT OF GREEK EMBASSY IN TERRORIZING COMMUNITY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister now prepared to report to the house on the results of his investigation into the alleged involvement of the Greek embassy in a pro-junta group that was allegedly terrorizing members of the Greek community in Canada? I may add that this question was originally asked about a month ago.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been investigating these complaints. I should like to say that we have received a preliminary report, but it is rather inconclusive and I would hesitate to make a definitive statement at this time.

MURIEL MILLARD—TREATMENT BY CANADIAN EMBASSY IN URUGUAY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, this is a supplementary question and is related to this general subject matter. Is the minister investigating the complaint of Canadian singer, Muriel Millard, that when she was arrested in Uruguay and sought help from the Canadian embassy our attaché there said she "was lucky to find him because he was going to play golf", and that his only assistance was to send her a basket of fruit and some cigarettes to make her stay in prison more pleasant?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member would want to place that question on the order paper.

TORTURING OF GREEK POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, about a week or so ago I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs about allegations in respect of the torture of women political prisoners in Greece. He said he would look into that matter. Has he had an opportunity to do so, and what is the government going to do about this?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet completed inquiries.

INCOME TAX

UNILATERAL DECISION ON JOINT COMMITTEE STUDY

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council asking him whether he has received a request from the chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on behalf of its members for an explanation of the unilateral decision taken by the President of the Privy Council for the establishment of a joint parliamentary committee on income tax reform without consultation with the committee and, if so, can he give a reply to this request or indicate whether an answer has been provided?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my understanding was, when I put the motion forward and furnished copies to the house leaders of other parties, that there had been consultation at the committee level. I found later that in fact there was not this consultation by the persons responsible and I can only apologize for having put it forward. I believed that consultation had taken place. I gather that further consultation is now going on in order to arrive at a harmonious compromise acceptable to members of the committee on both sides of the house.

Mr. Saltsman: Can the President of the Privy Council assure the house that this kind of action will not take place in the future?

Official Languages

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISIONS RESPECTING STATUS AND USE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.

The house resumed, from Friday, July 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau that Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak for the second time against passage of this bill I have no apologies to make to anyone. I have no desire to prolong the debate unduly or to add to the bitterness and ill will that the introduction of this piece of legislation has already provoked across Canada. But I feel compelled, in conscience and on principle, to speak out against what I, together with many thousands of other Canadians, feel sincerely to be an iniquitous measure.

When I spoke on this bill on second reading I said I was aware that what I said would be twisted and misinterpreted to belittle me as a bigot and a reactionary. I realized that anyone who spoke against the bill, even with genuine sincerity and from honest conviction, would be ridiculed and derided. While I have been somewhat surprised at the source and nature of some of these attacks, I have been greatly heartened by the overwhelming support my stand has received from a wide representation of the Canadian people. Regardless of criticism or support, however, I intend to make this last attempt to persuade the house that this legislation should not now be proceeded with. My reasons for doing so are simple. I believe Bill C-120 to be not only unconstitutional but also anti-constitutional. Above and beyond that, I believe it to be undesirable and unnecessary.

When I spoke on this measure at an earlier time I explained in some detail just why I believed this legislation to be unconstitutional. There is little purpose in repeating those details at this time; they are all on record.

Any Canadian who reads section 133 and section 91(1) of the British North America Act in conjunction with the provisions of Bill C-120, particularly clause 2, can see at a glance that this measure is patently unconstitutional. Its unconstitutionality is so obvious, Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that the government, with all the constitutional and legal perception represented in the cabinet, can honestly hold it to be otherwise. I am therefore driven to the conclusion that this government, even while knowing its measure to be flagrantly unconstitutional, is still determined to ram it through parliament and make it law.

One can only speculate on the motive behind such a cynical misuse of the parliamentary process and such an arrogant perversion of accepted practice. But the motive is comparatively unimportant. What is of vital importance to parliament, to every Canadian, and most particularly to the people of the province of Quebec, is the precedent that passage of this legislation will create. If the parliament of Canada knowingly accepts an unconstitutional measure and enacts it into law, then we have destroyed our constitution. Perhaps this is the motivation—perhaps this is the purpose. No Canadian government will ever again feel any necessity to be bound by the provisions of the British North America Act which, despite whatever shortcomings we may consider it possesses, is our constitution.

Let us never forget that while the constitution may impose difficulties and delays upon the federal government in putting its legislative program and its social and economic theories into effect, it is also the only political rudder we possess, the only stabilizer we can rely on in the constitutional storms we periodically experience in this troubled confederation. The British North America Act provides the only jurisdictional blueprint for development of a nation with divided governmental interests and responsibilities. The British North America Act provides the only protection for minority groups, for regional interests, for provincial rights. No province should be as aware of the British North America Act or cherish it more than the province of Quebec.

If we create a precedent of flouting our constitution by passage of the bill now before us, who or what can set a limit on the acts of any future Canadian government with the majority and determination to ram legislation through parliament as this government has done? It may sound far-fetched today, Mr. Speaker, but if the constitution is made simply another scrap of paper by consent of this parliament, who could argue against or stop a government which suddenly decided to legislate provincial boundaries out of existence? That is why I say this legislation is more than unconstitutional—it is anti-constitutional. Its passage will create a precedent that will emasculate our constitution.

I have yet to hear from any government spokesman any good explanation of why this bill must be rushed through parliament without the reasonable preliminary of having its constitutionality approved by the Supreme Court of Canada. If the government is so sure that it is in fact constitutional, surely no harm can be done by having this attested by the nation's highest judicial authority.

The government's stubborn refusal to listen and its arrogant determination to jam this bill through can only lead to speculation that it is to them merely a political expedient, a device for deluding the people of French Canada into believing that something is being done to further their aspirations. I cannot believe that we will be doing the people of French Canada any favour by destroying their constitutional protection, the protection they welcomed and cherished at the time of confederation. The protection the French speaking people of Quebec received under the constitution was one of the main factors that brought about confederation.

From the first moment this legislation was announced by the government I have been struck by the undemocratic manner in which it has been advanced and supported. The whole debate, if we can call it a debate, has been tainted by pressure and propaganda tactics reminiscent of some of the more infamous totalitarian regimes of recent times. As was said by one of my colleagues on a former occasion, I also feel sure that Dr. Goebbels would feel quite at home in the atmosphere that has developed around the consideration of this bill.

I mentioned earlier the derision and ridicule that have been heaped upon anyone daring to question this measure. We who have dared to speak against it have been accused of malice and stupidity. This is the technique of the schoolyard, and is to my mind childish. No dialogue is possible in these circumstances. Instead, we have the monologue of the closed mind. In many recent intemperate outbursts there has been a distinct overtone of desperation. It now appears that the time has passed when conscience or principle can command any respect, or reasoned argument can carry any force in this house.

I noticed with regret that the bill's chief proponent, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), in a recent television appearance was so bankrupt of ideas and arguments that he could only attack with abuse critics of the bill. His favourite word was "nonsense"; everything anyone else said or believed was nonsense. It was a perfect example of the closed mind of the true fanatic. It brought a strong whiff of the inquisition and the witch hunts of Old Salem. Surely a measure as important as this is held to be deserved a better defence, a more reasoned argument.

Part of the campaign of derision and ridicule to which the supporters of the bill have resorted is reflected in the juvenile pursuit of name-calling and the derogatory remarks by the Secretary of State in respect of certain western members in his most recent speech in the house on this issue. Anyone can pick up Hansard and read what the Secretary of State has said. One of the favourite descriptions employed by members of the government and, unfortunately, their partisans in the communications media is that Canadians, especially western Canadians, who oppose this bill are "afraid". I would like to quote in this regard some words written by Dennis Braithwaite in the Toronto Telegram of June 11. He was speaking about westerners, in particular his red-necked Saskatchewan relatives. He made six points which I would like to record in Hansard. With regard to the first point he said:

> We are not "afraid" of any aspect of the languages bill. We simply regard it as unnecessary, politically motivated, costly to implement, divisive and, as it affects the non-English, non-French third of the population, wholly discriminatory.

His second point was:

> It is unnecessary because the status of French as an official language was spelled out in the British North America Act and has been sturdily upheld for 100 years. There is no threat to the French language except that posed by history, which is that it must inevitably give way to the dominant language of this country, this continent and the western world, English.

His third point was:

> Institutional bilingualism, as the Prime Minister calls it, will be costly to maintain in the courts and government bureaux. As it continues to nudge our own provincial government along the road to a dual language society, without regard to real need, the thrust of federal bilingualism will impose a heavy burden on Ontario taxpayers for the provision of French secondary schools and universities.

This is already reflected in the increase in the Ottawa schools mill rate. Dennis Braithwaite's fourth point was as follows:

> The language bill is divisive because it arouses more tensions and hostilities than it allays. French Canadians living outside of Quebec long ago were reconciled to having to use English in dealing with the institutions of the various provinces. Agitation for government services in French came from Quebec. English speaking Canadians naturally resent having to provide a service that is not needed and the demand for which is merely an expression of Quebec-based nationalist extremism.

This was his fifth point:

The languages bill cannot help but discriminate against those Canadians who came here as immigrants and who voluntarily submerged their national loyalties and cultures to become free and equal citizens of a new nation. Discrimination lies in the implication that, for example, Toronto's 300,000 Italians count for less with their federal government than the 50,000 French here, or that the Ukrainians on the prairies have no culture or language worth preserving.

His sixth and final point was:

Finally, the bill helps to encourage the rewriting of Canadian history and gives legitimacy to the squishy doctrine that in Canada, if nowhere else on earth or above it, a part can be equal to the whole—so long as it votes as a block at every federal election.

These are frank statements by the press, but I believe them to be a fair representation of what many Canadians from east and west, including myself, feel about the bill. I could go on to elaborate these points, but I have become convinced that there is little hope of the government listening to the opinions of others.

I would like to add briefly to my previous remarks about the questionable constitutional status of this legislation. I have mentioned that clause 2 of Bill C-120 effectively amends section 133 of the British North America Act, and that clause 2 and subsequent clauses constitute amendments to the British North America Act in defiance of specific restrictions set out in section 91(1) of that act as amended by the St. Laurent government in 1949.

It is interesting in this regard to note that not even the B and B Commission went nearly as far as does this legislation. In its report of October 8, 1967, the commission recommended that section 133 be amended to include the statement "English and French are the two official languages of Canada". I wish to emphasize that the British North America Act does not, and never did, state that the English and French languages are the official languages of Canada for any purpose, much less for all purposes of parliament; and by no implication can the provisions of section 133 include those languages as the official languages of Canada for all purposes of the government of Canada, or as clause 2 adds, "and possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the parliament and government of Canada".

Although other changes were proposed, the commission went nowhere near as far as clause 2 of the legislation now before us. In fact, it went out of its way to point out that section 133 of the British North America Act is "firmly entrenched". It pointed out that the 1949 version of the act as amended in that year "specifically excluded from the operation of the new amending power the use of the English or French language and obviously thus excluded section 133". There is nothing new in this. I dealt with it in detail in my previous speech outlining the unconstitutionality of Bill C-120. I merely cite it now to try to convince advocates of the bill who also swear by the B and B Commission.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to voice my suspicion that those in the government who are determined to have this legislation passed, in the full knowledge that clause 2 effectively amends section 133, do so hoping that later clause 2, then being law, may be cited in support of a move to officially amend or disregard altogether the British North America Act. Let me simply say that I deplore the whole manner in which this legislation has been brought forward. I deeply regret the damage that has already been done to national unity by discussion of the bill's intent and by the attitude of the government in forcing its passage. I stand against its principle and effect. Above all, I am unalterably opposed to Bill C-120 because I believe it to be unconstitutional and, as I have said, anti-constitutional. If I had the financial resources and the requisite legal assistance, I would personally challenge the legality of this bill in the highest court of our land.

Knowing the situation in the house, which is dictated by an arrogant majority government, I am under no illustion that my amendment will carry. Neither do I have any doubt that this bill will shortly thereafter be voted into law. In these circumstances I have no choice but to abstain from voting when final approval is sought. I have done my utmost to persuade the government that this measure is obviously and entirely unconstitutional. While any chance remained of making this view prevail and having the legislation withdrawn, I have taken a full part in the proceedings. All attempts to condemn the bill as unconstitutional having been unavailing, I am not able to take any further part.

I will not lend myself in any manner whatever to what I believe to be a calculated and deliberate breach of the constitution. Let my abstention on third reading stand as a clear indictment, one which I trust will be even more positive than a vote against this legislation.

With this clear understanding of my position I nevertheless move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Gundlock):

That the said bill be not now read the third time but that the government of Canada take such steps as may be necessary to have the Supreme Court of Canada provide a decision with respect to the constitutionality of the provisions of the said bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I should like to refer the said amendment for a decision by the Chair.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Do I take it that Your Honour is reserving judgment on the admissibility of the amendment?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): That is what I said, that I was referring the amendment to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): May I take it that at that time hon. members will be given an opportunity to make representations?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): That is correct.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to participate in the debate on third reading of Bill C-120, but having listened to the previous speaker, the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh), I believe it is my duty to say a few words on the bill said to be unconstitutional.

If, according to the hon. member, the constitution does not state that both English and French are official languages, did he find anything in the same constitution which would prevent the recognition of English and French as the official languages of Canada? I think parliament is absolutely free to take a decision which could affect the implementation of the constitution.

Mr. Speaker, when Bill C-120 was introduced, I personally thought, and I still do, that it was an error of judgment by the government creating or giving the impression that every Canadian had to know both official languages, that is English and French, while such is not the object of the bill.

Recently, I had the opportunity to visit Manitoba, where I met Canadians of German, Ukrainian and Polish origin. Those people are somewhat afraid of Bill C-120, because the necessary explanations have not been provided. The government is responsible for that. People are under the impression that it absolutely wants to impose bilingualism throughout the country. This is surely not the object of the bill.

Moreover, the minister said the other day that the bill would change absolutely nothing in Canada, not even in the public service. So, if the bill changes nothing, why has it been introduced? Why not instead continue to get people to realize the importance of understanding both languages throughout the country?

Here is what I said in western Canada to representatives of the provincial governments, with regard to education: Treat the French minorities in your provinces as Quebec treats the English minority. I feel that such an opinion is better accepted than Bill C-120. Canada will not become a bilingual country within a few weeks or a few months. However, provincial governments, which have jurisdiction over education, should be led to teach both languages from the very first grade and, within five or six years, a whole new generation of Canadians will speak and have a working knowledge of both official languages.

The federal government or the minister will say that this is outside his field, that the bill does not say that, and as for the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, he will say that it is unconstitutional. In fact, he said earlier that this bill frightens the people in the western provinces. It can, if it is not explained. Not only does the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek not bother to explain it in his region, Saskatchewan, but he tells the people that they will have to learn French, which is not very nice of him. In that case, it is not the government that plays the game of those who spread division in the country, but the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

The hon. member quotes Section 133 of the British North America Act, which does not provide that English or French must be learned, or that French must be regarded as an official language.

In the province of Quebec, we are free to accept the English language or to reject it. We have accepted it with pleasure. We have studied it, we have learned it because we think that one who knows two languages is the richer for it not the poorer. I am convinced that if the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek had learned French at the time I was learning English in Amos, Abitibi, where there were not two English-speaking citizens, perhaps he would understand better today the importance of national unity.

[English]

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question? Where did I ever in any of my speeches say that the people of Canada will have to speak both languages? I have been one of those who said that this is not in the bill. My point is that the bill is unconstitutional. The hon. member should not put words in my mouth. I can speak for myself at any time. In particular, he should not attribute to me statements which I did not make.

Mr. Caouette: This is not a question, Mr. Speaker, but a statement by the hon. member. What I know is that you people are not trying to explain the bill. All you say is that the bill is unconstitutional.

Mr. McIntosh: You are the one who is making the argument now.

Mr. Caouette: You said it a moment ago.

Mr. McIntosh: I did not.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what the hon. member has just said: Bill C-120 is not constitutional. On what does he base his allegation? He does not even know. He wishes to refer the bill to the Supreme Court of Canada so that a further six months or ten years will pass before everyone in Canada recognizes the importance of knowing two languages. It is very important that they be official.

The hon. member even gives another reason: it relates to immigrants from Germany, Poland, the Ukraine, etc. Yet, immigrants, before settling in Canada, are well aware that two languages are used here, namely English and French, and they are entirely free to learn either one or the other.

All such immigrants were welcome to Canada.

In Manitoba, the other day, I met people of German descent, who speak German generally at home. It is a pleasure to hear them. However, they have learned English. If they had settled in a French-speaking area, they would probably have learned French.

If, for some reason or other, the authorities in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or any other province decided to have the second official language taught at school, I think that the mess which now appears likely to last in Canada would quickly disappear, probably in a matter of a few years only, and that would allow people to understand one another better.

Panic is now created by saying: No one has to do it, the constitution does not permit it. But parliament has the required power to pass such legislation. It is its responsibility. If someone wants to question the constitutionality of the bill before the Supreme Court he needs only to lay his grievances before the said court and to take proceedings against the governement if necessary.

To come back to the immigrants, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that bill C-120 is depriving them of anything whatsoever. I know some Ukrainians in Rouyn who continue to speak in their tongue at home and who use English frequently. However, their children express themselves in French just like me because they were taught so in school. This means that in my region Ukrainians, Poles and Germans are not protesting because the two official languages are recognized. No opposition is shown either in eastern or in Western Canada, so long as people are explained exactly what it is all about.

But here, we hear all kinds of statements. We hear people protesting against the use of French, because that language has never been acknowledged as an official language. It is probably a pity that step was not taken at the time of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in 1896, because the matter would be settled by now.

Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about political jingoism; I am not referring to the political belicfs of anyone, but, since the bill is under study, I suggest that we should recognize that both languages are official, not only in western Canada, but also in the East, in the province of Quebec, as elsewhere.

At a time when some people in Quebec claim that we must come back to the use of the French language in Quebec, we are of the opposite opinion. We believe that both languages are necessary, that we must use both languages for they facilitate self-fulfillment and above all the development of the human personality.

In my opinion, anybody from Quebec who learns both languages is enhancing his cultural knowledge, and people from the West would enhance theirs if they had the same attitude.

So, I cannot see why there is all this misunderstanding or lack of unity because we have to pass legislation to recognize two official languages in Canada, without affecting other languages.

Ukrainians, or Germans for that matter, who cannot speak or use their language in Rouyn, Montreal, Vancouver, Winnipeg or elsewhere, should not complain, and we would be the first to protest if they were the victims of any discrimination, since we believe that they are as fully Canadians as we are, even though we call ourselves the founders of the country. On a recent trip to Manitoba, I noticed that those people are sincerely and deeply attached to their Canadian nationality but will not forget where they are from, would not brush aside what they have been.

There are top-notch Canadian citizens in Manitoba or Saskatchewan, far better than those who explode bombs in Montreal—and we had another one this morning—who perhaps are neither Ukrainians, Poles or former Germans. The bombings are the work of cocky little French Canadians. I think they could find another way of standing up and helping the cause of French-speaking Canadians.

At any rate, I have nothing more to add on this bill, but I feel that for the sake of a well-meant Canadianism, and not for reasons of sectarianism, we must set an example to the Canadian people by passing this bill which sanctions both French and English as the official languages of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to rise in my place at this time to make my views known on the third reading of Bill C-120, the official languages bill, a piece of legislation which in my opinion is not only controversial but unnecessary. I shall begin with a quotation:

> A well organized minority in a democracy can easily impose its opinions upon an indifferent majority. These views, if unanswered and unopposed can, depending on the issue, cause serious trouble.

That statement was made by the Right Hon. Vincent Massey, former Governor General of Canada, in an address to the Canadian Club in Toronto, and it can be applied with startling relevance to the role Quebec is playing in the life of Canada today.

As is well known, I voted against this legislation on second reading, as did 16 others of my colleagues, and I feel sure, Mr. Speaker, that by the time the history of another election is written in Canada many more members from all parties in this house will wish that they, too, had voted against this innocuous piece of legislation. In referring to the stand that 17 of us took on second reading I would like to say, if I may be excused for paraphrasing that great statesman, Sir Winston Churchill: "Never in Canadian history did so few have to speak for so many."

My reasons for opposing this bill are many but three important ones come to mind:

1. The legality of the bill;

2. The bill is divisive rather than unifying, and

3. Economically it is disastrous.

Let us look at the legal aspect first. All four western provinces questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on this point at the February federal-provincial conference. Some even stated they would challenge the bill in the Supreme Court of Canada. I certainly hope they will. Even the province of Quebec is not too sure it wants this kind of legislation.

Nothing in the B.N.A. Act states that Canada has two official languages, nor is it stated that it should have. The present government is trying to bring in through the back door what it cannot do legally through the front door, at least not until there is an amendment to Canada's constitution, and members opposite know very well they are not likely to get an amendment along these lines.

The Hon. J. T. Thorson, one of Canada's foremost legal authorities, former chief justice of the Exchequer Court of Canada and a Liberal, no less, has publicly stated time and time again that this proposed language bill is not legal. His most recent public statement was made at a large meeting in Edmonton, Alberta, on June 2, 1969, and I would like to quote the following from Mr. Justice Thorson's speech:

> In spite of the facts of history, there have been intensive efforts, particularly since 1963, to give life to this concept of a dual French-English nation on the alleged ground that its acceptance is essential to Canadian unity.
> It has been asserted that Canada is a bilingual country in which French and English are the official languages throughout Canada and that our constitution guarantees their equal status throughout the country. The assertion has been repeated so frequently and with such intensity of feeling that Canadians have been in grave danger of being brainwashed into the belief that it is true. The contention is not true, either as a matter of law or in fact. Indeed, the pretension is a false pretence.

Many other legal minds in Canada and elsewhere are of the same opinion as the Hon. J. T. Thorson, including the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), three times prime minister of this country.

Another instance which gives rise to suspicion in my mind about the legality of this whole issue has to do with a point raised by my right hon. friend from Prince Albert prior to the debate on second reading, when he questioned the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) on the government's authority to bring in this legislation. The Minister of Justice quoted the law officers of the Crown, but when my right hon. friend requested that the documents substantiating this authority be tabled in the house for all to see, the Minister of Justice refused to do so. What goes on over there, Mr. Speaker? What political subterfuge is being used?

My second reason for opposing this bill is the divisiveness of this obnoxious piece of legislation, the discrimination that could develop between the various ethnic groups of this great country if everybody started to assert language rights. How can Canada thrive, grow and become a leader among nations if we are going to balkanize ourselves? If one needs any evidence of what trying to force two languages on a people can do to break down unity and cause eternal strife, one has only to look at the wonderful little country of Belgium that has been torn apart for centuries over a parallel issue. Why look any further for warning of danger? How can there be peace and harmony in this country if our people of French origin want a special status, separate schools, two languages, two cultures, a separate pension plan, a separate medicare plan, and want to opt out of this and opt out of that? The very prefixes "bi" and "tri" have the connotation of division rather than unity.

Where is this government taking us? I ask hon. members to look at the discrimination that is already rearing its ugly head in our civil service. I have here an article written as recently as July 5 which appeared in the Globe and Mail. The writer of the article is

William Morris and it is headed "Language lessons that are no joke". The article reads in part:

The Newfie joke is out and the bilingual joke is in around here these days.

One joke tells of a man who swam beyond his depth, thought he was drowning and called for help. The lifeguard on shore shouted back: "I can't swim, I got my job because I was bilingual."

For many civil servants, bilingualism is no joke.

Rumours float around that technicians are hired, without proper qualifications, in preference to people who are competent, but can't speak French.

The word is passed that a French name will automatically give you an advantage in a civil service competition.

Civil servants write anonymously to newspapers complaining about a reign of terror. They don't speak out openly against its discriminatory practices, they say, because of fear.

"If a man speaks two languages, he is bilingual; if he speaks one language, he is English," a saying goes.

Mr. Stanbury: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Southam: Certainly.

Mr. Stanbury: Would the hon. member read the next sentence in that article?

Mr. Southam: I would be glad to read the whole thing because it is very edifying. Mr. Carson says that many people—

Mr. Stanbury: No—the next sentence, please.

Mr. Southam: The heading is "Bearing The Brunt".

Mr. Stanbury: I mean the sentence that begins with the words "Although it is".

Mr. Southam:

Although it is the Trudeau government which is bearing the brunt of the jokes, the policy is one it inherited from the Diefenbaker and Pearson governments.

Mr. Stanbury: Thank you.

Mr. Southam: This, of course, is the writer's way of trying to get Mr. Pearson and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) off the hook, but nevertheless they are the facts. Mr. Carson is a very knowledgeable man and cites the facts as they are today.

Mr. Stanbury: Read the article as it is.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Carson, who is very knowledgeable about the civil service, has this to say, according to the article:

—many people are using bilingualism to hide their own inadequacies.

One group of civil servants that has protested is the Professional Institute of the Public Service. Without success, it appealed to Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau late last year to remove "areas of apparent contradiction" between the policy enunciated by Mr. Pearson, with its emphasis on safeguards, and current government administrative practice.

Leslie Barnes, director of the institute, in a recent interview said: "What we object to is the arbitrary whitewash of the entire civil service, not the policy announced in the Pearson formula. If there are no abuses why are they so afraid of safeguards? If there are safeguards, we would know we had nothing to worry about. But until they do something about this situation, the suspicion will always remain that the government, under the guise of bilingualism, is promoting an ethnic policy.

"We know there are abuses. We know that some people are being promoted because they are French or have a French name. But because there are no safeguards, no right of appeal, there is nothing we can do about it.

"For many of our people, learning German or Russian would be a more useful undertaking for these are now the languages of science. But we can't interest the government in educational leaves to upgrade or update the qualifications of scientists.

"For example, a scientist on an experimental farm in an area of Alberta, which by no stretch of the imagination could be considered bilingual, is going to be discriminated against.

"In the normal course of his promotion he will have to spend a period of time in Ottawa. Now, is he going to be denied his promotion because he doesn't know French, or if he gets here, spend two months out of every year learning French when it has nothing to do with his job. Ultimately, he would likely be promoted back to Alberta. It doesn't make sense."

That is the sort of thing one finds written about discrimination in the civil service in our newspapers these days.

Last October the Prime Minister made the now infamous statement that he would find jobs for English-speaking civil servants running elevators at the back of buildings if they did not learn to speak French. I also ask hon. members to read what the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) said on his tour of western Canada. If anybody wants further proof of the disunity that this bill is causing among Canadians, I ask them to read an article that appeared in the last issue of Maclean's magazine on the "Coming Showdown In The West". I fear that the Prime Minister will be in for a rough time on his forthcoming trip to western Canada in view of some of the statements he has already made.

I should now like to deal for a few moments with my third objection to this bill, namely, the effect it will have on our economy. Herein, in my opinion, lies the whole crux of the problem. I have many friends among Canadians of French origin. I have 3,500 of them in my riding of Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and, believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, a great many of them support me. Many of them see the problem as I do. The problem is really one of an inferiority complex which is based on economic factors. To a large degree the matter is an emotional one, but in cases like this, it is essential that we let our heads rule our hearts and not, as do our separatists, let our hearts rule our heads.

In Quebec the cruel fact is that language is only one of the root causes of the problem. The educational system is another and very important factor, as is land tenure and the father patriarch approach which has resulted in thousands and thousands of small uneconomic farms being established. Another hurdle is the religious concept that one should not control the birth rate; and there is also the system of the French elite. These and other factors have combined over the years to keep the vast majority of our French speaking Canadians in Quebec at the bottom of the economic totem pole. No wonder there is unrest.

As a Canadian I am desperately sorry to see this situation. As a member of parliament I publicly plead with my Anglo-Saxon constituents and other ethnic groups to have patience, forbearance, sympathy and understanding for French Canadians in Quebec in the hope that, given time and proper leadership, the situation will change and the problem will be gradually rectified. However, proper leadership is very essential, and we are not getting that leadership from this government.

Coming back to the language factor and to the economic aspect to which I referred, the cold hard fact is that Canadians of French origin should be learning English as fast as they can, instead of the English learning French. I exclude from that statement the small percentage of English speaking Canadians that do have a special aptitude or facility for learning more than one language.

I had an interesting experience several months ago when returning home on a plane. During the journey I started to talk to a professor from the University of British Columbia. He did not know I was a politician, but during the course of conversation I casually asked him what he thought of the proposed language bill. This man was a professor of languages and I assumed he was a linguistic expert. His reply was that he thought the government had got the whole thing out of joint, that bilingualism was really not feasible. He explained to me that the facility for learning a language was rather like the facility for learning music. He said only about 20 per cent of the population could be trained to be musicians, and only one-quarter of those would be good musicians. He thought that regardless how much time was devoted to the study of language, bilingualism was just not attainable, that all that would happen would be that we would bastardize the two languages.

This professor of languages thought that far more emphasis should be placed on helping people become articulate in one language. Those with special aptitudes could be trained to fill positions in the civil service such as in the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Trade and Commerce, and other departments requiring bilingual personnel, until such time as all Canadians were able to speak English. I thought this suggestion was rather interesting, because I have heard many stories about English being easier to learn than French. If you put a number of French speaking children with English speaking children and leave them together for some time you will not find that the English children learn French but that the French children will learn English. It seems that English is the easier and more reasonable language to learn.

May I now refer to factors of geography and population. In the United States 210 million people speak English. In Canada 19 million people speak English or are bilingual; the remaining two million do not speak English. Let us see what the effect of this is on the Canadian in Quebec who speaks French only. In this connection may I refer to an article that appeared in February, 1969, in a Canadian magazine. It is entitled, "The High Cost of Speaking French", the reference obviously being to French Canadians who speak French, and goes on to say immediately beneath the heading:

The first volume of the full report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism contains the following survey, which traces the relationship between ethnic origin and socio-economic position in Canada. The English press took no notice of it, but Le Magazine Maclean published the following summary in October, 1968.

The writer of the article also cited statistics put out by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I wish to read certain of the statistics into the record because they are enlightening. I cannot understand why they did not enlighten Messrs. Dunton and Laurendeau who headed the B and B Commission. That commission speaks of a crisis in Canada; the truth is that it ought to be speaking of the crisis in Quebec. Statistics indicate that in Quebec there are 14 different ethnic groups. It is interesting to note that French Canadians who speak French only come third from the bottom of the list so far as income is concerned, immigrant Italians and native Indians being the only lower groups. This is a most serious situation. I apologize to hon. members if the article I am about to read proves to be monotonous, but I feel constrained to read it into the record. It reads as follows:

The salaries of French Canadians—non-agricultural, male—are 80 per cent of those made by Canadians of British origin, in Canada as a whole.

The salaries of French Canadians in Quebec are 65 per cent of those of English Canadians in Quebec.

Also, in the matter of occupations, French Canadians are found at the bottom of the list, immediately above Italians, both in Quebec and in the rest of the country.

We think French Canadians perceive the differences in income (and in standard of living) and in occupation that distinguish them from Canadians of British origin.

We think, equally, that such division of income along ethnic lines exercises a profound influence on the prevalent thinking about the future of Canada.

In these terms, three economists put their finger on the connections between the famous constitutional debate and "bread and butter" issues.

Why are French Canadians poorer? Is it education? Regional disparity? Discrimination? The answers will have a profound effect on the political and social positions of the communities in question.

In Canada, the factor which carries the most weight in explaining the unequal distribution of income is regional disparity. People are poorer in Abitibi and Newfoundland than in Montreal and Toronto.

But this doesn't explain the differences in salary between ethnic groups living side by side in the same economic region.

Above and beyond regional factors, ethnic characteristics remain very, very important. Canadians of British origin have incomes 10 per cent higher than the average in every province except Quebec, where they earn 40 per cent more than the average.

In Quebec, if one arranges ethnic groups in descending order by salary, one gets the table you see on this page, where it is found that French Canadians, Italians and native Indians are the only groups which earn less than the provincial average.

These statistics refer only to the labour force. If one takes account of demographic factors in each group (women, aged, children who don't work) and calculates the per capita revenue of each ethnic group, one finds the French Canadians are even poorer.

The French Canadian population being younger, it makes up the majority of children and young workers; its level of work is the lowest in Quebec.

Education is one of the most important factors in the determination of salary. The various ethnic groups have quite different levels of education. The French Canadians, with an average of 7.08 years of study, come just ahead of the Italians, with 6.05 years.

Jews lead with 10.05 years and the English have 9.43. The economists point out that the English in Quebec are better educated than the English in any other province except British Columbia.

If the advantages of education are analysed, one concludes that "French Canadians derive the least from education." When a French Canadian passes from elementary school to university, he profits less, financially, than Canadians from other groups.

Studying ethnic groups according to occupation, the report concludes: "The respective status of English Canadians and French Canadians is absolutely systematic in all provinces. If occupations are divided into ten categories, one finds that the English Canadians are over-represented in the first (and wealthiest) four categories and under-represented in the four lowest (and poorest). French Canadians are the diametric opposite: under-represented in the first four, over-represented in the poorest categories."

Is the situation getting any better?

On the contrary. "Since 1941, while the English, Jewish and 'other' groups have been progressing strongly on the occupation scale, the Italian and French have been dropping just as dramatically. In the case of Italian Canadians, the reason for this disparity is unquestionably their recent immigration (new arrivals generally have the least money) but in the case of French Canadians, the drop cannot be explained away."

Beyond that, for equal work, the salaries of French speaking people are again lower than those of the English, and the gap increases with time, so that the French Canadians appear clearly handicapped in their ability to advance in their careers.

One might have believed that bilingualism would be profitable at least in Quebec. According to the economists, "the answer is overwhelmingly negative. Unilingual English Canadians earn as much as bilingual English Canadians while French Canadians who speak only English (the assimilated) earn considerably more than bilingual French Canadians. And bilingual French Canadians earn considerably less than unilingual English."

In total... unilingual English Canadians earn $5,502 while bilingual persons earn $4,772. In short, it isn't the knowledge of two languages that is beneficial to the French Canadian in Quebec, but rather the knowledge of one language—English.

"In Quebec," the authors add, "as in the rest of the country, it is better to be a unilingual English Canadian than a bilingual French Canadian."

And they conclude the survey: "English Canadians have very little reason to become bilingual, even in Quebec, while for French Canadians, bilingualism is a prerequisite to income. And even if bilingual, French Canadians cannot hope to equal the salaries of unilingual English."

I apologize for taking up so much of the time of the house in reading the article but I think it is important for hon. members to realize that when we say this country must plunge headlong into bilingualism we shall be enacting legislation that will help mainly French Canadians who learn English.

Another factor so far as the economics of the language bill are concerned which must be considered, this factor having been unceremoniously sloughed off by the Prime Minister several times when he was questioned on it, is what this two language splurge will cost the Canadian taxpayer. The cost will be fabulous, Mr. Speaker. Only last Friday the Ottawa Journal carried the following headline: "Multi-million Dollar Federal Plan To Aid Teaching of French." Goodness knows how much the entire program will cost once the provinces kick in their contributions. The cost of the program in terms of duplication alone will be almost inestimable. It is just another economic millstone around Canada's neck and a penalty we cannot afford.

We as Canadians are striving day by day to compete in this fast moving world. Already we have economic problems stemming from our living in perpetuity alongside our great neighbour to the south with ten times our population. Climatic factors weigh heavily in favour of the United States. Since we live on the northern half of this continent we shall never have the net income on an individual basis of our United States friends. I base that assertion on climatic factors alone. Why, then, should we saddle ourselves with another economic millstone as unproductive as a two language binge? These are serious questions, Mr. Speaker. For these reasons I implore the government and its supporters to look again at where they are taking us. These, too, are some reasons why I cannot support this bill.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): It is not my intention to speak very long, Mr. Speaker. I oppose the amendment for a very simple reason. It seems that the government and the people of Canada have gone far enough now—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to bring to the attention of the hon. member that to the best of my knowledge the amendment is not actually before the house. This might be a good moment to interrupt the proceedings and invite hon. members to indicate to the Chair their views regarding the acceptability of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. I would be pleased to hear these opinions, after which I will be in a position to give a ruling in the light of this wise advice and counsel.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather unusual amendment challenging at the third reading stage the constitutionality of the proceedings on a bill which has proceeded through virtually all stages before the House of Commons. I have not had the opportunity to do as much research on the authorities as I should have, but I offer for what they are worth some submissions on the admissibility of the amendment. At page 417, of May, 17th edition, it is observed that the debate on third reading is limited to the contents of the bill and a reasoned amendment should not urge the rejection of the bill on the ground of what it omits or, I assume, any failings that may attach to it. The effect of moving an amendment of this type would restrict the field of debate which would otherwise be open on the question.

I think it is the practice in this house, though it is difficult to substantiate it, Your Honour, because I doubt that it has very often been questioned, that a bill is presumed to be constitutional when before parliament and within the power of parliament to enact unless and until its constitutionality is challenged and successfully attacked before the courts. To use the issue of constitutionality at this stage to impede the progress of the bill seems to be dilatory and tardy, and if undertaken in a regular manner in the house would tend to render our proceedings null and void. It also brings up the question of whether the house can proceed with the matter once it has been submitted before the courts and become sub judice.

I also want to refer Your Honour to page 419 of May, 17th edition, where it is stated that at certain stages of debate, among which are listed the second and third reading stages only certain recognized forms of amendment are permissible. We are then referred to pages 526 and 527 of May's 17th edition. I am now dealing with what has been called a reasoned amendment, Your Honour, and I quote:

> It is also competent for a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill—

[Mr. Speaker.]

When I refer to second reading, I think there are sufficient authorities to apply this to third reading as well.

I now refer Your Honour to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 418, page 288:

> When a motion is made "that the bill be now read a third time", the same kind of amendments are permissible as on the second reading—

The three or six months hoist is then referred to. I take it, Your Honour, that my argument, if it applies to the second reading, would also apply to the third reading stage. I quote from pages 527 and 527 of May's 17th edition:

> It is also competent for a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill—

I assume this also applies to third reading on a bill.

> —to move what is known as a "reasoned amendment." This amendment is to leave out all the words in the main question after the word "that" and to add other words; and the question proposed upon the amendment is, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question. A reasoned amendment is placed on the paper in the form of a motion and may fall into one of several categories.
> 1. It may be declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy or provisions of the bill.

I submit to Your Honour that the amendment in this case does not fall within that category. It declares no principle adverse to the bill.

> 2. It may express opinions as to any circumstances connected with the introduction or prosecution of the bill, or otherwise opposed to its progress.

I fail to see, Your Honour, how the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek can qualify under that heading.

> 3. It may seek further information in relation to the bill by committees, commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence.

That is the head which gives the precedent for delaying third reading and referring it back to a committee for further information. Of course, the hon. member has not sought that type of remedy. Those are the prime arguments, Your Honour.

I now wish to refer to some citations in Beauchesne's fourth edition which may be helpful to your judgment. I wish to refer to citation 202(10) at page 170:

> 10. An amendment cannot be made, by the addition of words, to the question for reading a bill a second time.

I read the words "a third time".

The same rule applies to the question for the Speaker's leaving the Chair or going into Committee of Supply.

I now refer to 202(13):

13. An amendment to alter the main question, by substituting a proposition with the opposite conclusion, is not an expanded negative and may be moved.

I will now read citation 203(5):

5. An amendment was ruled out because it raised a new question which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

I submit this would then qualify the amendment as well. Finally, and this is usually a basket argument, there is the rule of relevancy. An amendment must be relevant and cannot raise a new issue. The amendment sought to be admitted by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek raises a new issue. It raises the constitutionality of the bill. It does not deal with the contents of the bill as such.

For these reasons, I urge that Your Honour hold this amendment to be irrelevant and inadmissible and not pertinent for debate at the third reading stage.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, believe it or not I had not intended to take part in this debate, but some of the things the Minister of Justice has said prompt me to say just a word, and the word I offer has to do only with the procedural aspect of the amendment. In my view the course suggested by the amendment is not necessary but it seems to me there is a case to be made for the hon. member's right to move it.

The one point I should like Your Honour to consider arises out of the fact that when the Special Committee on Procedure of the House presented its third report on Friday, December 6, 1968, it included in that report paragraphs of comment concerning second reading and third reading. The paragraphs are a bit lengthy, so I do not think it is necessary for me to read them all, but the first of those comments was the view of the committee that the significance of the second reading stage had been exaggerated in the past and that the decisive stage should occur later in a bill's passage after it has emerged from a committee.

Then in the comment on third reading—I am looking at page 433 of Votes and Proceedings for the date I have indicated—there are these words:

At present the third reading is seldom debated and has become almost a formal stage. Your committee does not envisage that a debate should necessarily take place at the third reading, but it attaches great importance to the preservation of the opportunity for debate at this stage.

Perhaps I should have commenced this quotation by reading the sentence before that which says:

This wording would indicate clearly and unambiguously that the final and most crucial decision relating to the passage of a bill would be taken at the third reading.

The point I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, is that I think some of the citations that are in the authorities have to be looked at again in the light of the changes we have made in our legislative process. In the old days there were citations that said that some of the things that could be done at second reading could not be done at third reading and there were certain precise limits on the third reading stage. But if we have decided as a parliament that third reading is a more important stage, a more crucial stage, and if in practice we debate it more than we used to do, then it seems to me there is a case for providing an opportunity at this stage to raise an issue of importance to the bill.

I do not see that the hon. member has introduced something new into the bill itself. He is simply asking for a delay in order that something might be done before we vote on this third and final reading. I think I made it clear at the outset that I do not look favourably upon the substance of the amendment. Indeed, I do not think it is necessary, but I have pleasure in defending the hon. member's right to move it.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their advice and counsel in respect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. Essentially the argument advanced by the Minister of Justice is based on citations in May's 17th edition, which of course have to be taken very seriously, and I think that the Minister of Justice was quite right in bringing this particular difficulty to the attention of the Chair. The argument of the minister is that this kind of amendment cannot be moved on third reading if it goes beyond the scope of the bill itself or, to use the words of May as quoted at page 417:

—a reasoned amendment should not urge the rejection of the bill on the ground of what it omits.

Although this is a good citation and one which certainly ought to be kept in mind at all times, I doubt that it applies to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. It seems to me that the hon. member is not suggesting that the bill be set aside on the basis of a proposition which the bill omits. He only proposes that certain action should be taken by the government before the bill is accepted by parliament. In other words, his amendment, to my way of thinking, is essentially a reasoned amendment. He indicates his view, in the terms of a reasoned amendment, why the proposed bill should not be proceeded with further.

There may be a slight difficulty in connection with the wording of the amendment itself. We have accepted in recent months a series of reasoned amendments, either on second or third reading, following closely enough the wording of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek but which had four additional words, and these would make this amendment read as follows:

That the said bill be not now read a third time but that it be resolved that the government of Canada take such steps—

In order to facilitate future procedure I wonder whether the hon. member might be allowed to include these four words which would make this proposed amendment conform with the procedure which has been followed in the past, so that the amendment would read:

That the said bill be not now read a third time but that it be resolved that the Government of Canada take such steps as may be necessary to have the Supreme Court of Canada provide a decision with respect to the constitutionality of the provisions of the said bill.

I assume that hon. members would have no objection to having the amendment amended in this regard so that this would be the way in which it would formally be put to the house.

I have to add that I had also considered the point of view raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Certainly some of the citations which appear now in May, Beauchesne or in some of our other authorities, Canadian, British or other, are not entirely relevant to our rules which have been changed fundamentally. The relative importance and significance of second reading and third reading have changed materially, and in this way I would think that citations which previously might have been relevant when dealing with amendments on third reading are no longer valid. Taking all this into account I would think that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek should be accepted as a reasoned amendment and should be put to the house at the present time. Mr. McIntosh, seconded by Mr. Gundlock moves:

That the said bill be not now read a third time but that it be resolved that the Government of Canada take such steps as may be necessary to have the Supreme Court of Canada provide a decision with respect to the constitutionality of the provisions of the said bill.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I assumed that the amendment was going to be accepted but I had not realized it would be in exactly this form. However, I am still of the opinion that we have gone so far through this linguistic mess in Canada that we should not go backward now that we have reached this stage.

I have always been interested in hearing the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) when he speaks on this and other national subjects, and have been surprised at the similarity of view expressed by the two areas, the riding of Timiskaming in Ontario and the riding of Témiscamingue in Quebec. There is a great similarity between these ridings, and the hon. member for Témiscamingue represents about the same percentage of English speaking people as I represent of French speaking people. Further, over the years there has been a great similarity in the way the minorities in both ridings have been treated.

When I was a child going to school a number of French Canadians attended the same school, and no English was spoken in their homes at all. They learned their second language at the public school. Similarly, I know of many people in the province of Quebec, particularly in the Noranda area, who did not know French until they learned it at school, and then grew up to become totally bilingual. There has not been any particular difficulty in either of these areas, with the French minority in Timiskaming, Ontario, or the English minority in Témiscamingue, Quebec.

It is of interest to note the methods through which these people have been given a great deal of equality and, for a period of years, a great degree of assistance in developing their ability in their own language and in a second language.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to interrupt him again. Perhaps I am imposing by interrupting his trend of thought a second time. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek has been put to the house. It seems that hon. members should confine their remarks to the limited scope of that amendment, at least until the amendment has been disposed of in one way or another. If there is to be any kind of order to our debates we must apply as much as possible the rule of relevancy. Inasmuch as this rule still exists in respect of our debates it should apply to the extent that hon. members should limit their speeches to the subject matter of the amendment before the house. After the amendment is put to the house and disposed of in one way or another members will then be in a position to make a contribution of a more general nature, having reference more directly to the bill itself.

Mr. Peters: Question.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, at this time I wish to speak specifically on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh). It is the lack of reference to the Supreme Court that has created my greatest problem regarding this bill. Had the government taken steps to make such a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada in respect of the constitutionality of the bill, or had it indicated there was agreement by all the provinces to amend the British North America Act, requiring action to obtain passage of an act by the parliament of the United Kingdom, I might have been willing to support the bill.

A great many Canadians are bound to feel that the government is embarking upon something it has no right to embark upon. Many Canadians may well be deprived of certain rights they now possess. The leader of the Ralliement Créditiste referred to this aspect which is of such concern to me. He spoke of the constitutionality of the bill and asked why parliament did not have the right to legislate on the basis of the principle embodied in this bill. It was very obvious that the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste had not read the British North America Act and certainly had not studied section 91(1), which was brought about by the St. Laurent administration.

Let me ask the leader of that party whether he would feel the same about the government if it proposed a bill to eliminate completely the rights of French speaking Canadians as contained in the constitution, particularly in section 133? If the government did that there would certainly be great alarm immediately in the province of Quebec regarding those rights they have considered theirs since the British North America Act was conceived.

The St. Laurent administration brought in an amendment to the British North America Act. That government was told by many constitutional experts in this nation that it was putting a constitutional straitjacket on the nation by amending the act and placing section 91(1) in it. I must assume that at that time Prime Minister St. Laurent had more concern about the diminution of French speaking rights than about their extension. As a result of that concern he proposed an amendment which was adopted and is today part of the constitution.

To leave the impression with the public that there is no concern about the constitutionality of this bill is to deceive the public. When a jurist of the stature of J. T. Thorson places before the Canadian people his concern about the constitutionality of the bill, I would think the government would be quick to make a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada to clarify this aspect in the minds of all Canadians. There could have been no great objection to this bill had such a reference been made to the Supreme Court of Canada and that body had found the bill to be constitutional. Let me read from a speech delivered by Mr. Justice Thorson in Edmonton, Alberta, on June 2, 1969. He said:

> There is no provision in section 133, or in any other section, or in any law, that makes French an official language throughout Canada or gives it the status of equality with English as an official language across Canada.

Later he stated:

> It must be accepted also, that, except as provided by section 133 and perhaps in New Brunswick by reason of its recent legislation, the only official language in Canada is English.
> It is clear, beyond even a shadow of doubt, that this was intended by the Fathers of Confederation. The section guaranteed to the new province of Quebec, formerly lower Canada, equality of status of the French and English languages in the legislature and in the courts of Quebec and it guaranteed similar equality of status in the new parliament of Canada and in the federal courts.
> This guarantee was gladly accepted by the French speaking Fathers of Confederation. It is significant that this equality was not extended to the provinces of Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. There is no justification for assuming that the Fathers of Confederation intended any such extension. On the contrary, it is clear that they intended that it should not extend to them. This intention was deliberate. Indeed, it may fairly be assumed that if there had been any attempt to make French an official language in the legislature or the courts of Ontario, George Brown would have left the coalition government of the province of Canada, with the result that Confederation would have been set back or would never have been accomplished at all. Similarly it may fairly be assumed that if any attempt had been made to make French an official language in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick it would have been strenuously opposed by Charles Tupper and Leonard Tilley. There is support for this assumption in the views expressed by Professor D. G. Creighton, our most distinguished Canadian historian.

I believe I can also say that if the Fathers of Confederation could have looked in on parliament discussing this bill within the confines of what they conceived to be our constitution, they would not have appreciated that it was the same constitution or the same British North America Act.

I realize that times are changing and that in times of change people arrive at a different appreciation of what words in the constitution mean. I appreciate that the Supreme Court of Canada might today very well give a broad rather than a narrow interpretation to sections 133 and 91 (1) of the British North America Act. That is possible. But that is not what we are talking about now. We are talking about a bill that, as far as I am concerned, is completely ultra vires the parliament of Canada until it has been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada and a decision secured as to its constitutionality. If the government were as certain of the constitutionality of the bill as it indicates it is, there would be no hesitancy in referring it to the Supreme Court of Canada. It has not been referred to that court because there is real concern about its constitutionality.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has a smile on his face. I say to him that Mr. Justice Thorson was a former minister in a Liberal administration who was appointed by a Liberal government to the second highest judicial office in the land, and I think his attitude and opinion should be given very serious consideration by a Liberal or any other government. Further, his appointment came about only after an illustrious legal career during which he was Dean of the Manitoba Law School.

This matter is not as simple as the government would have the public believe. It is serious because I believe this institution is not competent to consider the legislation without first having its constitutionality clarified by the Supreme Court of Canada. I believe the amendment we are considering should have been proposed as soon as the bill was introduced. If the bill had been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada and the decision of that court had been that the government had the competence to act, there would be no dissenters in this house and Canadians would believe, rightfully so, that the government could legislate as it intends to legislate. But because the bill has not been referred to that court and there are grave fears in the minds of many Canadians as to its result, I have no hesitation in opposing it. Indeed, my conscience would not allow me to do otherwise.

I appreciate the words of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. I realize that his amendment will be defeated, but I shall support it. I am pleased the amendment is before the house because at least future generations of Canadians will appreciate that every attempt was made to secure clarification of the constitutional aspect of the bill. Some people may be misguided into thinking that an attempt may be made by an individual to challenge before the Supreme Court of Canada the constitutionality of the bill. The government is well aware that this cannot be done. As far as I know, only the governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan have enabling legislation with which to attack the constitutionality of the bill. No individual Canadian can do this before the Supreme Court of Canada. Therefore we will be placed in the position where there will never be a clarification of the constitutionality of the bill. There will always be a cloud hanging over the bill because Canadians were not allowed to be informed by the Supreme Court of Canada since this government would not act in the interest of all Canadians and be certain of its rights. As a result, I shall support the amendment. Although I anticipate it will be defeated, I hope it will pass.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise for just two or three minutes to say that we cannot support the amendment, and to give very briefly our reasons for taking this position. First of all, it is clear from the speeches in favour of the amendment that hon. gentlemen are trying to persuade parliament to express doubts about the constitutionality of the bill that is before us. In other words, if the amendment were passed parliament would be saying that we do not really believe the bill is within the competence of parliament to pass. I notice that the hon.

Hon. gentlemen are trying to get parliament to say at this stage that the bill is not within our constitutional competence. I respectfully suggest that this is an impossible position for members to take. We gave the bill second reading and referred it to a committee of the house. We have, in fact, said that the bill is within our competence. To ask us now to say it is not within our competence seems to me to be something parliament cannot do at this stage.

Second, I disagree with the hon. member when he suggests that unless the government refers the bill to the Supreme Court of Canada for a decision before it is passed there can never be any settling of the constitutional point, if there is such a point. I shall suggest in a moment that in my view there is no constitutional problem. However, surely the hon. gentleman is wrong in that respect. I know that the province of Ontario has an act which enables it to refer a constitutional matter to the appropriate court. To my knowledge most of the provinces of Canada have such legislation. It would certainly be possible for any individual affected by the operations of this act, if he has occasion to take the matter to court, to raise the constitutional validity of any section of the act that is related to his particular situation.

Mr. Coates: Will the hon. member permit a question? In view of the fact that the hon. member sat through the debate in the special committee that was set up for the purpose of considering the bill, would he give me an example of how a Canadian citizen may be able to challenge its constitutionality before the courts?

Mr. Lewis: Let us assume for a moment that someone is adversely affected by the operation of this act and thinks he has a case which he can take to court on a motion for an injunction to stop the deputy minister from doing something to him as the result of a report of the commissioner, or any such set of circumstances, and that citizen of Canada went to court; he could challenge the validity of a particular section or the whole act which has affected him adversely. There are all sorts of ways in which this matter could come to court for a constitutional decision if the occasion arose.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is how lawyers make their living.

Mr. Lewis: Unfortunately that is so. I do not claim to be a constitutional expert but I simply cannot accept the argument that this bill is in any way contrary to section 133 of the B.N.A. Act or to section 91(1) of the same act. It seems to me that the bill in no way impinges on the provisions of those sections and is limited strictly to operations within the federal departments and within the federal sphere of constitutional competence.

As a lawyer I do not share the fears that some people have expressed about the constitutionality of the bill that is before us. In any case, since when has parliament had to make such a decision at the stage of a bill at which we are now? That decision was made by the government on the basis of the opinion received from the law officers of the Crown and whatever other opinions they sought. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) travelled across the country and met with the Attorneys General of the provinces, as a result of which certain amendments were proposed to the special committee, and later adopted, to meet some of the objections that were raised. I repeat that since parliament has already passed this bill on second reading and therefore said that it is within its competence to deal with this measure, it seems to me illogical for parliament to say now that we should reverse ourselves on that point, which is what the amendment in effect means. I can understand the present amendment being one way of attacking the bill if one is opposed to it, as some hon. members are, but the majority which supported the bill in principle on second reading cannot, it seems to me, accept such an approach.

I want to add that in my view the injection into this discussion and into the discussion across the country of the legal point of whether or not there may be constitutional objections to this bill does not do a service either to the law which we are attempting to put through the house or to the objectives which we are attempting to achieve, assuming that those objectives are achieved by the bill which is now before us. I do not think it serves the purpose of Canadian unity or Canadian understanding to insist that parliament deal with this measure, not on the basis of the principles involved in the measure, not on the basis of the means provided in the measure to deal with the question of language rights in this country, but on the basis of an argument about whether or not the bill is constitutional. Some of us, who are perhaps as competent as others, are firmly of the opinion that there is no constitutional obstacle to this bill. Others, equally competent are of the opinion that there is. That is something which may be decided in the future by some court, if the matter is brought to court. However, I suggest that is not something on which the house should spend very much time.

Our problem is to deal with this bill in terms of the objectives it seeks to accomplish for greater unity and greater understanding among Canadians. Our purpose is to see to it that the bill is implemented in a way which will promote greater unity and understanding and not implement it in a way which may cause even more divisiveness in the future than we have had in the past. I submit that these are the purposes to which our attention should be directed, and they are the purposes to which our attention has been directed. A good many of the amendments moved by members of the official opposition and by some of us have been directed to making the bill better from the point of view of the objective of national unity and national understanding. That should be our purpose in this parliament, not a rather arid legal argument.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a few words about the amendment.

Since the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) has asked me what stand I would take if this bill meant to abolish the French language in Canada—it seems that he wants to imply that the bill under consideration tends to abolish the use of the English language in Canada—I shall answer him that it is not at all the purpose of this bill.

The amendment is intended to refer the bill to the supreme court or to a court authorized to decide upon its constitutionality.

Mr. Speaker, let the hon. member from Nova Scotia compare the situation which prevails now in his province, where there are conflicts with regard to the French language, with that which is found in Quebec.

Was it necessary to appeal to the Canadian constitution to have both official languages respected in the province of Quebec? If somebody attempted to abolish one of the two languages in the province of Quebec—the English language for instance—the hon. member would be the first to say we are mentally retarded and that we do not understand the importance of national unity.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Does this concept of unity, Mr. Speaker, apply to the sole province of Quebec? In that case, I would be the first to object to discontinuing the teaching of English in Quebec. In my opinion, and from the point of view of constitutionality, the province of Quebec should follow the example of Nova Scotia where they abolished in 1864 the use of the French language at school.

In 1871, French was abolished in the New Brunswick schools. In 1890, it was abolished, as an official language, in Manitoba. In 1915, French was abolished, for all practical purposes, in Ontario schools. Was the constitution invoked at that time?

If, in Quebec, an attempt had been made at that time to abolish the English language, would the hon. member not have risen against the fact that the English were being discriminated against? He would not have cared a hoot about the constitution.

But, at this time when the leader of the Progressive Conservative party accepts the principle of the two official languages, we still find some mentally retarded in the Conservative party who would prevent national unity at any cost, by launching a useless debate here in the house which once again will incite the English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians to tear each other apart, while the problem in Canada is not one of languages but one of economics.

Even if the right to two official languages throughout Canada were to be recognized, the retarded member for Cumberland-Colchester North would not be obliged to learn French. I hope he never learns it because he does not deserve to know two languages.

Mr. Speaker, there are limits to being spoken to in this way. The Progressive Conservative party cannot even agree on that matter. Why not? Because there are people who are trying to play politics with the question of the official languages.

Mr. Speaker, national unity must not be tampered with. The basic principle of national unity, that people be tolerant of one another, must be respected. But we find in the Progressive Conservative party disunity which spreads to or is felt in all the Canadian provinces.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved by the Progressive Conservative member is a stupid amendment, which is going to widen the gap existing at present between two ethnic groups in this country. And that is why the Ralliement créditiste is going to vote with all its might against that amendment through which, as I said, some members of the Progressive Conservative party are trying to serve their own ends and purposes by playing politics.

Mr. Speaker, some of the representatives here are neither French- nor English-speaking. For instance, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), is not British at all nor a Frenchman from France and he states plainly, wherever he goes throughout Canada that he supports the recognition of two official languages. I believe the hon. member for York South serves the cause of national unity in taking such a stand.

I think that we promote national unity, like the government, when we do not sing two different tunes, one in the West, the other in the East, when we hold the same beliefs across Canada, when we say that we are one Canada. And I repeat again that there is only one Canada and not two nor ten.

Since the bill is under study, it is important that the principle of the recognition of both official languages be accepted without the question having to be submitted to a court. Nothing in the bill compels an hon. member to learn French or compels me to learn English. However, the legislation is to the effect that he, English-speaking, and I, French-speaking, must be equally respected in Canada. What we want is respect for the individuals.

The hon. member said that when he spoke like that, he was thinking of the welfare of the future generations. Now, having heard these explanations, I think that if we continue in the same direction, the future generations will be just as backward as the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North was a while ago when he proposed his amendment.

There are limits, Mr. Speaker, to playing politics about a serious subject. I admit that we should be discussing other things than official languages at this moment when the economy is going downhill. However, since the bill has been introduced and since the government does not want to withdraw it, we favour the principle that both languages be officially recognized in the whole of Canada. We want English to be equal to French in the province of Quebec and that French be equal to English in Ontario, in Nova Scotia and in the other provinces so that Canadians will be united and our national unity will come true. Let us stop saying that this subject must be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada so that judges may decide whether hon. members can make decisions by themselves or whether they are in a fog, as the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North clearly seems to be.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I wish to speak briefly on this amendment, Mr. Speaker. I tried to persuade Your Honour not to admit it but now it is before us I should like to speak briefly to it.

I shall not go deeply into the constitutional arguments because I agree with the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) that this is not the forum in which to decide whether this bill in its finality is constitutional or otherwise. Only the courts can do that. But I shall summarize the arguments I attempted to adduce on second reading in the strongest terms that on the best advice we have, the advice of the law officers of the Crown and others, supported by that of the law officers of most of the Attorneys General across Canada, this bill is constitutional and within the competence of parliament to enact.

Two constitutional arguments have been raised against it and they were referred to this afternoon by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates). The first is that the 1949 amendment to the B.N.A. Act, which is now found in section 91(1), prohibits this legislation. That article says: that the parliament of Canada has, among other powers, the power to amend from time to time the constitution of Canada except—and there are some items listed—as regards the use of the English or French language. The answer to the argument that this bill transgressed section 91(1) of the B.N.A. Act is that it does not amend the constitution in so far as it affects the use of the French or the English language.

The second part of the argument against the constitutionality of the bill is that the legislation contravenes section 133 of the B.N.A. Act. Section 133 reads:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Houses of the Parliament of Canada and of the Houses of the Legislature of Quebec; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this Act, and in or from all or any of the courts of Quebec.

This section merely says that in four particular situations it shall be open to any citizen of Canada to use either the French or the English language. There is nothing in the section which is limiting or restricting. There is nothing which says that the French or the English language can be used only in those situations. I would point out that if this were the case we would not have been able to extend the use of the English language across the North American continent. If that section is a bar to the extension of the French language it is equally a bar to the extension of the English language and this, surely, would be an absurd construction to place upon such a provision. The section is permissive, it is not restrictive.

Finally, since this bill relates to federal institutions operating within the federal power and within the competence of parliament, it is our submission on the basis of the legal opinion given to us that it does not constitute an amendment to section 133 and, not being an amendment to that section, it is not affected by 91(1).

This, in brief, is the answer to the argument that the bill is unconstitutional. We are firmly of the view that it is constitutional. But I am not going to decide it. No hon. member of this chamber will decide it. We have to operate, I believe, on the assumption that any measure which is put forward by the government is constitutional unless and until it is successfully attacked in the courts. If we were to operate in any other way we would never do any business here.

For the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North to say that if the Minister of Justice were sure of his ground he would have gone to the Supreme Court of Canada first is unreasonable, since that argument could be applied to any piece of legislation introduced into this chamber. Once a bill has been introduced on the basis of the best advice obtainable, parliament moves on the assumption that it is constitutional until some citizen who feels himself aggrieved, or some province which feels itself aggrieved—I trust it will not happen in this case—challenges the constitutionality of the measure. Parliament must go on the assumption that it has power to enact bills put forward, an undertaking having been given by the government that, on the best advice available, parliament is competent to deal with the legislation.

We have to urge the house to reject this amendment so that we can reach the final stage and decide whether or not this legislation is to receive third reading.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, at an earlier stage in this debate, following a speech setting out his position by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) who moved this amendment, I was obliged to differ from the point of view he put forward. In doing so I said—and I repeat it now—that I respected the sincerity of his motives. He has maintained a constant position. To use the words of Voltaire, while I may disagree with him I defend his right to say what he has to say and make his views known.

Speaking for this party, I must declare that we cannot support this amendment. I will give in two or three sentences my reasons for being unable to follow the hon. member's reasoning. Before I do that, Mr. Speaker, in reply to something that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) said may I say that merely because a government brings in a measure which has received the approval of the law officers of the Crown, and which it is advised is properly drafted and is constitutional, is no reason at all that the house must accept it. If I honestly and sincerely believed that this or any other measure was unconstitutional I would be derelict in my duty if I failed to attack it.

Outside the house I have attacked a great many statutes of the federal parliament and of provincial legislatures. In some cases I have been successful in persuading the courts that I was right. Without in any way disparaging the knowledge and professional skill of those who work in the minister's department, having been here a great many years I do not have that sublime faith in their ultimate judgment that the minister must necessarily have. Therefore I enter the caveat that if at any time in the future it is my honest belief that a measure introduced in this house is constitutional, I shall not hesitate to say so and to attack it.

In this case I cannot do so. The pertinent section here is section 133 of the British North America Act. The language of section 91(1) drives one back to section 133, and that is the section we must consider. As I see it, clause 2 of the bill deals with what in my opinion are the administrative rights of the federal government, rights that have been exercised in one way or another over a great many years. In my opinion, clause 2 meets the pith and substance of section 133 of the British North America Act and fits within the scope and pattern of that section.

In my view, and in the view of this party, one cannot find that there is a conflict on this issue, and consequently that clause 2 of the bill and other aspects of the bill are unconstitutional, thus requiring a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada as outlined in the amendment. Therefore we are unable to support the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the amendment? All those in favour will please say yea?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Amendment (Mr. McIntosh) negatived.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before the interjections concerning the amendment, I have been very concerned about how this bill has been received throughout the country. I had referred to the fact that the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and myself represented the same sort of riding, his with a predominance of French speaking constituents and an English minority and mine with a French speaking minority and an English majority. Yet both ridings have met the same problem in similar fashion. It is also of interest to note that at least 25 per cent of our constituents are members of other ethnic groups, yet little difficulty has arisen in either riding. I would hope that this would be true in similar situations elsewhere in Canada.

Since I sometimes differ with the views of my colleagues I am often asked, and I was asked as recently as last weekend, whether or not I find it difficult to justify the stand I take on this issue in relation to the people I represent in my riding. When I was asked this question the other night I replied that this was one instance where I was not sure what my constituents would like the result to be. In fact, I am not really too sure what my own position is.

In my opinion the Canadian people should have faced a long time ago the question whether or not bilingualism is desirable for Canada as a nation, though there are many other problems we should have faced as well. It surprises me that after all this time this issue has become so important. I have heard hon. members who have taken part in this debate declare that this bill will encourage bilingualism; I believe the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) espoused that view. In my opinion this bill will not encourage bilingualism; indeed, the very opposite may result.

This bill raises a much more fundamental problem, that of education. It seems to me that if we are to have a nation with a distinct culture, one tempered by the many nationalities that have chosen Canada as their home, one factor that will make our culture distinct from that of the United States will be our ability to speak the two languages. If that is a desirable state of affairs, and I am of the opinion that it is, then those who are interested in the subject must decide what are the educational requirements to bring this about. If this bill is used to promote a bilingual civil service, which in effect will mean that jobs will be allocated in the main on linguistic ability rather than on merit, it will be the most divisive piece of legislation the Canadian people have ever had to face. On the other hand, if we are tolerant and make it possible for all areas of Canada to benefit from bilingual education, this bill will have been worth while. I know that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is interested in this subject. If all our school children are to become fully bilingual the federal government may have to step into the field of education.

At present the regulations with respect to bilingualism seem somewhat discriminatory and senseless. I have seen some public service employment application forms, and I was interested the other day to see that a dietitian working for the government has to be bilingual. I do not know much about dietitians, my experience of them having been confined to the armed services. I and my friends always look upon dietitians as people who make up bland diets. Why a dietitian needs to be bilingual I do not know. About the only benefit in having a bilingual dietitian is that she will understand the abuse that is hurled at her in both languages. It is clear, therefore, that the authorities will have to exercise discretion in the selection of applicants for appointments. A bilingual candidate need not necessarily be the best candidate for the job.

I live in an area which to all intents and purposes is bilingual. Not long ago a man was moved out of my area to another area in which he will not need to speak both languages. Unless that man can perform his job satisfactorily to begin with, it will not matter whether he is fluent in one or both languages because his services will satisfy no one. I remember an occasion not long ago when several young French speaking people were compaining about certain problems having to do with unemployment insurance and the local manpower centre in my area. They came to me with their troubles and I asked them who it was they had dealt with. They told me. Evidently they had been to see a French Canadian who was not much good at his job. In the end I told them to go to somebody else. They went to that man, discussed their problem and it was solved. I have mentioned this incident merely to illustrate the fact that if you want a job well done you must hire qualified personnel and that it does not matter whether the person you are hiring speaks one language or two languages. Of predominant importance is that person's ability to do the job well.

On a number of occasions I have heard of men who think that because they are fluently bilingual they are in some ways superior to the rest of us. They expect to receive preferential treatment when they apply for jobs. People like that are not interested in bilingualism as such; they are only interested in promoting their own advancement. That sort of thing we do not need. This bill only transforms into law what has been happening in Ottawa and in the public service for several years. For many years the public service has been hiring increasing numbers of bilingual employees, the idea being to develop bilingual services in various departments of government. That seems to be a good idea and, frankly, I do not see why we should not extend the philosophy underlying bilingualism right across Canada.

I believe that all our school children should be taught to speak French. But when some of our public school teachers who teach our youngsters French are put alongside French speaking people, one finds that the French teachers and the French speaking people cannot talk to each other. Clearly we are not teaching our school children conversational French, and we should be. If we do not teach our children conversational French we will not teach them to be truly bilingual, and we will all be the losers.

Although I have been perturbed at the utterances of some hon. members on the other side of the house with regard to what this bill is to accomplish, I must say it is my impression that French speaking and English speaking Canadians are broadminded enough to put aside their prejudices in an attempt to make this legislation work. Fundamentally, all the people of this country will have to decide whether the concept of bilingualism is to work. If we are to become a bilingual nation we shall have to create a federal department of education so that both languages may be taught to all Canadians from coast to coast. We shall have to begin training our youngsters in kindergarten when they are five years old. All our children must become like the children of an hon. member of this house whom I have known for many years. Only recently did I realize that his family was equally at home in either language. That is how well trained all our children must be. As I said, our French teachers must teach our children conversational as well as written French if our children are to become bilingual. Our schools will have to use a system similar to that used by the Berlitz school of languages. Unless we treat all Canadians equally and give them all a chance to learn the two languages, we shall merely be legislating preferential treatment for one limited group.

All political parties will have to consider how best to implement the policy of bilingualism. The question is, do we or do we not want to become a bilingual country? That is the major problem we must face, and unless we face it and solve it adequately I say that this bill could cause unlimited division. Nothing but bad feeling will flow from any policy which insists that jobs be allocated on a language basis.

A few minutes ago I was speaking to an hon. member who told me that a man who applied to the Public Service Commission for a job was turned down on the ground that his name was too English-sounding. They wanted a bilingual person to fill the job and his name sounded too English. The hon. member took this matter up with the commission and indicated that the man had been an instructor in French at McGill, had taught in the government's language school for one year and was the head of the French department in a United States university. The people in the Public Service Commission probably did not read his application but only his name. I suggest that if that kind of result flows from this bill we will have divisions which will cause the type of concern that some hon. members have shown.

I hope the minister responsible for the administration of the bill will use every discretion possible. I hope there will be no need for the commissioner to investigate individual problems because every time a problem is investigated, whether it is satisfactorily concluded or not, everyone in that department will know about it. In my opinion this type of concern will lead to divisions that will be very hard to heal.

Members of the House of Commons and the press should give serious consideration over the next few years to this problem. It can only be solved if the federal government will provide the educational facilities in all schools in Canada so that the next generation, although they may not avail themselves of it, will at least have the opportunity to be bilingual, something which most of us in my generation were denied.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Prior to recognizing the hon. member for Vegreville, I wish to advise the house of the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Social Security—increased pensions to meet cost of living; the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert)—Agriculture—income of Quebec manufactured milk producers; the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Health and Welfare—call for services of medical doctors.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROVISIONS RESPECTING STATUS AND USE—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau for the third reading of Bill C-120, respecting the status of the official languages of Canada.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in the debate on third and final reading of this measure, it is not my intention to add further to the bitter feelings already stirred up by its introduction. Further, it certainly is not my intention to fan the fires of racial animosity or attempt to increase the damage to national unity. Indeed, it is because this legislation does these very things that I have serious reservations about it. I believe this bill has aroused unnecessary bitterness and controversy and has seriously undermined the high degree of national unity achieved in Canada prior to its introduction. I think this bill represents a retrograde step because it will stir up more animosity than it will overcome. It will erect a series of artificial boundaries within this country when the great need is to remove barriers that already exist.

I seriously question the theory of bilingual districts incorporated in this legislation. I maintain that it will tend to segregate rather than unite, consequently doing more damage to racial relations at the community level, and it is upon relations at the community level that national unity rests.

In the past we have had our full share of ethnic, religious and social differences, but over the years these were largely overcome. By 1967, the 100th anniversary of Confederation, these differences were well on the way to being completely removed. That year, in fact, brought a tremendous upsurge of national feeling, of love for Canada, one country and one people. It was the time of real birth of a Canadian nationality. Introduction of this bill by the government and the subsequent discussion of it have plunged us back and precipitated a new wave of suspicion and distrust.

As I have said, throughout the past 100 years, certainly there have been differences among the people of this country—social differences, religious differences and linguistic differences. However, and I speak here of western Canada, at no time has there been deliberate discrimination against any minority group by any majority, most certainly not against those of French origin. All have been treated equal, with no special rights or privileges, all working in a spirit of co-operation, sincerely desirous of building a great country founded on a multicultural mosaic wherein each group is given the opportunity to add to its character.

We in the west can in no way be attached to the so-called guilt complex of discrimination which seems to exist in the central part of Canada and resulted in bringing forth this legislation. The people of our land are of some 40 different origins. People came to this country of their own free will, with nothing but their own two hands and the desire and courage to make this country their homeland. These people have since intermarried. They have raised their families with one thing in mind, the promoting of Canadianism. The last thing that is considered is the brand of hyphenated Canadian that one is. In my part of the country there is only one kind of citizen, whatever his origin may be, and that is Canadian. There is no place in this country for second class citizens.

I believe that this bill has a tendency to create two categories of citizenship. For this reason I take particular objection to clause 38. We in the Conservative Party tried to amend it in order that the numerous members of Canada's third force might feel they have a place in the development of the nation's cultural life. But the government appears adamant that status within Canada shall be confined to two groups only, the English language group and the French language group. I know there are many hon. members on the other side of the house who feel as I do. Why did they not stand up and support our amendment? Perhaps they have been threatened by the powers that be and are not able to vote as their consciences dictate.

This bill is supposed to symbolize the government's choice of the multiple society over the melting-pot society. In my estimation its provisions simply ensure that instead of one melting pot there shall be two melting pots. Canadians of Ukrainian, German, Italian or Scandinavian origin will have no choice but to be absorbed either in the French melting pot or the English.

Another one of the principal points of this legislation that I believe should be made crystal clear is its effect upon public servants and public service careers. We tried to clarify the matter by proposing an amendment in an attempt to dispel fears of discrimination within the civil service. However, the government, which evidently has a monopoly on all good ideas, rejected the measure. The fact is that the bill certainly raises a great deal of apprehension among members of the civil service.

We heard one minister, a Minister without Portfolio, explain to a western audience that no Canadian will have to be bilingual in order to be appointed to the public service, or once appointed, to be promoted. He suggested that a bilingual secretary in one's office may suffice. Yet we heard shortly after and in unmistakable terms from the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté) that henceforth bilingualism would be a necessity in the public service and the chance of a unilingual person being hired, let alone promoted, would be nil. I believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should immediately give the country reassurance on this point and spell out in clear, concise terms just what this bill will mean to public service careers.

The general idea behind this bill may be fine and quite acceptable to all reasonable Canadians, but its detail and the cloud of confusion and doubt that surround its portable workings have made many people suspicious of its purpose and its operation. Certainly there remains a great deal of suspicion and doubt about the duties of the language commissioner, his interpretations of the bill, his administration, his degree of neutrality and his degree of scrupulousness, which we in this party have tried to clarify. We have been sincere about making this a workable, practical bill, but here again our suggestions and proposals have not been accepted. Why, Mr. Speaker? Is it because the government purposely wants to leave certain clauses and regulations vague in order that it may apply its own interpretation?

The Prime Minister has blamed the press for failing to explain the bill adequately. Surely the onus for explanation rests primarily upon the Prime Minister and, second, upon the members of his government. If there has been, as he claims, a misrepresentation of this legislation, the blame rests solely on the shoulders of the government and no one else. I believe it is the government's duty to clear up this mystery in the interests of the nation.

Why does the Prime Minister not clear up some of the fears and doubts that exist about this bill, particularly in western Canada? In western Canada the bill is regarded merely as yet another in a series of concessions to Quebec. It is taken as further proof of the government's exclusive interest in central Canada. It is one of the prime reasons for the growing feeling of alienation from the rest of the country that is becoming so prevalent in western Canada.

Perhaps this is one of the reasons that in the series "Canada 70" conducted by the Toronto Telegram we find a majority of 52 per cent of those polled in western Canada placing their attachment and dedication to their region rather than to Canada as a nation. Is it because that part of the country has been overlooked, ignored and discriminated against? I submit that perhaps it is, and I suggest that as a result the bonds of Confederation are more precarious today than at any time in our history. However well intentioned, legislation that produces results such as this cannot be anything but harmful to national unity.

As I have said before, one of the weaknesses of the bill, and the one that seriously affects the majority in western Canada, is that it is vague in its guidance to minority ethnic groups throughout the country. It provides no reassurance or guarantee as to their status in the national pattern of living. It simply states that their rights will not be taken away but fails to open any doors to future cultural development or promise them a share in the cultural development of Canada. It excludes them and, I maintain, reduces them to a position secondary to that of those of English or French background.

If we are truly serious about maintaining and promoting the mosaic concept, positive measures must be taken to encourage, promote and preserve the cultures of the minority groups. There is nothing in this legislation to suggest any encouragement, only a minor clause to indicate that there are other languages and cultures.

My leader suggested a preamble to the bill in his remarks as recorded at page 8792 of Hansard. We moved an amendment and it was rejected. I submit that with this attitude it will only be a matter of time until the third group will be forced to assimilate into either the French or English melting pot, giving up their cultural and linguistic heritage which forms such an important and refreshing part of our society.

The just society announced by the Prime Minister finds no echo in this bill. The multicultured whole that was to be the new Canada under his government has been reduced to a severely restricted dual culture nationality. The Canadian mosaic is shattered by this bill, and the pieces will be swept out and forgotten when this measure is enacted.

Many of the people of racial origins other than Anglo-Saxon or French are Canadians by choice. They have fully accepted our Canadian customs, our Canadian institutions and our Canadian heritage. They have always demonstrated an intense loyalty to this country. Yet with this legislation we now tell them that by an accident of birth and ancestry they cannot aspire to a full life as 100 per cent Canadians. We should not forget, Mr. Speaker, that these people of whom I speak are a good third of all our people. Surely it is of the utmost importance to bring this third of the population fully into our national life and not exclude them on a part-time basis.

In my constituency of Vegreville where the population is made up of approximately 50 per cent Ukrainian, 30 per cent English, 7 per cent French and the balance of other ethnic origins, we are going to have a bilingual district. In light of these figures, what justification is there for creating a boundary which singles out a minority group and grants them special privileges? I wonder whether they are particularly pleased about being singled out and granted special consideration when they live within a community of understanding, of brotherhood, and in a climate of regard and respect for their fellowman regardless of culture, race, religion or creed. Their prime motivation is to work together on equal grounds as equal Canadians in creating a community of good will, a community of progress, in a spirit of good fellowship and understanding. How are those of other ethnic groups, who are a majority, to feel about such a measure being enacted? Nothing can be created but a mood of animosity and bitterness detrimental to national unity at the community level.

The government believes that this bill is essential in building national unity. I believe it could be destructive of national unity. I believe we should be trying to get back to the original concept of a multicultural society. I have always felt that one way to do this is to get to know each other better. The greatest enemy of national unity is the regionalism forced upon us by the pattern of our settlement and development and by our geography. It is this regionalism which creates areas of economic disparity. Canada is a nation of regions, each with its own peculiar background, nature and way of living. These regional differences must be rationalized if we are to know true unity. One method of achieving this could be by large scale exchanges of young people between one region and another. This idea has been tried on a limited basis and the results have shown that it works. When I think of the millions of dollars that have been spent on the B and B Commission I cannot help but think how much more could have been done for national unity if the money had been spent on projects such as youth exchanges between regions.

Canadians of all ethnic backgrounds are Canadians, and they must be able to feel so wherever they go in this country. To the extent that this bill will help Canadians of French origin to do so I believe it to be a good measure. However, I wonder whether the bill is likely to achieve this end. I think the bill will only succeed in entrenching English-French differences while reducing the potential for progress that is represented by the third group. It is even more unfortunate because I believe that the best way in which the historic differences between the two founding peoples can be bridged is by the intervention and intercession of the third group. I see the great number of Canadians of racial origins other than French or English as a catalytic agent that, with good will and good sense, could be made a successful neutralizer of ancient divisions and a base upon which to build a sound, cohesive, multicultural mosaic.

I wonder what the Fathers of Confederation wanted when they proposed the Canadian constitution. I think it would be well for us to review some of the thoughts of our only living Father of Confederation, the man who once said that he is "heart to heart, mind to mind" with the Prime Minister. That man is Joseph Smallwood, Premier of Newfoundland, often billed as the only living Father of Confederation. In a recent proclamation during Canada Week he said:

> This I believe:
> That Canada under God is one of the most beautiful and one of the greatest countries in the world;
> That Canada is potentially as great as her people are great;
> That Canada is one nation, indivisible, where no race or creed has special rights, and where all are equal, English and French, Italian and Russian, Portuguese and Ukrainian or whatever the ethnical origin may be;
> That Canada is not a melting pot but a country where peoples of many racial origins can live and work together as unhyphenated Canadians, yet maintaining cherished traditions and distinguishing cultures;
> [Mr. Mazankowski.]
> That our system of government is a good system, and the best to ensure that all Canadians have equal guaranteed rights and equal opportunities;
> That there should not be a rich Canada and a poorer Canada, but that material well-being and the good life should be as equal as can be.

To me, Mr. Speaker, there is somewhat of a conflict between the ideals of that living Father of Confederation and the aims of this bill. I can only hope that those who are responsible for its administration will pay particular attention to these clauses of this proclamation in order that we may truly work together to promote and preserve unity within this country, the country I love—Canada.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): This is one of the most important bills ever to come before this house, because the future of this country may depend on whether or not we make the principle of this bill work. If I thought only about the legality of this bill I might worry about it, and I have studied a little constitutional law. I am not at all sure that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), or the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), are entirely correct in their assessment of the legality or constitutionality of this bill. I beg hon. members of this house to consider it from a more important angle.

Is there anything in this bill which might tend to bring us together? You might consider these to be strange words coming from me because from time to time, in my rather rasping voice, I speak in this chamber on controversial subjects and I am considered in some respects to be a backer of lost causes. I have been told more than once to get off my white horse and come down to earth. At this time I want to do just that for a few minutes.

There is something of value in this bill and that is the spirit behind it, if nothing else. Let us go back perhaps 100 years and figure out what it was the Fathers of Confederation meant when they gave the people of French origin the right to their own language. Let me beg of those people of French origin, not only in this chamber but across Canada, to remember the second group of people who granted these rights. I am sure if they remembered this fact half the problems of Canada would disappear.

This agreement was signed by gentlemen. They had faith in the future and great respect for that great Gallic race alongside of whom they had lived for something over 1,000 years. They had reason to respect that race. The only successful invasion of the British isles was carried out by those people, and my ancestors were among them. I refer to the Norman French. These people learned to live together in England and have done so for 900 years. They developed a parliamentary system, about which we will have more to say during the rest of this week. The English and French signed an agreement 100 years ago in an attempt to carry out a bold experiment. They wanted to see whether they could live peacefully together after all the useless bloodshed that had taken place in Europe for years. They wanted to try this experiment on this northern half of the North American continent.

There are bigoted families living on both sides of the Ottawa river. In spite of this we have developed a great nation. I have a great hope and belief that this nation is not about to fall apart. Those people on both sides of the river who might do this nation damage are in the minority. Let us look at the legality of this bill and try to remember that gentleman's agreement of 100 years ago which began this experiment on the basis of a certain equality.

There are many things about this bill which could create great fears, some imaginary and some otherwise. The bill provides great power, and power could be abused. There are powers given by the Criminal Code in respect of the arrest of individuals. A bad policeman could abuse those powers. I know something about this, but I did not abuse them.

Let me attempt to take a positive approach. One cannot write a statute that does not contain powers which cannot be abused. Let me gives the government the benefit of the doubt in this respect. This may not be a perfectly worded statute but it does contain these powers which may create stronger fears in some sections of our community than in others. I have in mind those roles played by one party and another party over a period of years. The civil service has been supported by one party or another party, and this in itself is reason for fear. The morale of the armed forces has not always been excellent as a result of the exercise of political authority, whether or not the exercise of that authority has been carried out by bilingual, unilingual or multi-lingual people.

I intend to speak of something other than the fears often expressed by members of our armed forces. I have said all I intend to say about politics in this area. Let me move to a discussion of whether or not it is worthwhile spending a great deal of money—the price of a battleship or two—for cultural purposes. Is it worthwhile to spend this considerable amount of money to advance the French language? I have spent a lot of money trying to learn this language and have found it is difficult once you get beyond a certain age to learn a second language.

I hope the government will not abuse the powers written into this act by preventing a person who has spent the major portion of his life in the civil service from obtaining a well deserved promotion in either the civil service, the mounted police or the armed forces. I should hate to think a man who has distinguished himself in battle and risen to the rank of Brigadier-General could not be promoted to Lieutenant-General or a full General because his cultural aptitude had become calcified. It would be strange if that cultural aptitude did not become calcified over a period of time.

It would be very useful for a member of the diplomatic service to have two languages, or if one were selling corsets in Quebec. I do not intend to stress that. Let me return to the main theme. Within this bill there is an aspect of national unity. I have in mind one Canada, strong and free. This cannot be accomplished only by "Les Anglais", and it cannot be done only by people of French origin. This must be a team effort. This is something that cannot be settled by a third group in Canada, those who came here by choice. This is something which first of all must be settled by those of us who have perhaps neglected our duty in respect of our French speaking brethren. I have no hesitation in saying that our French speaking brethren from time to time have been somewhat lacking in their tolerance of us. I could cite an example of this which took place no longer than a day or two ago.

When we pass this bill, and I say "we" because I intend to vote for it, let us take another look at the whole situation. The passage of this bill will provide us with a new opportunity to go ahead in Canada in our 102nd year to show the scoffers that they were wrong. We want to keep Quebec in Canada, not to make this country strong in numbers but because we like the people of Quebec. This is not idle chatter on my part. If you come to Alberta, my province, you will see that in some districts at least one third of the population is French speaking. We like these people; they are hard working, co-operative, aggressive, happy-go-lucky Canadians earning a good living. They are great people. Some of them are getting rich. At the present time some are not getting rich quite as quickly as they or we would like. But we like them as Canadians.

If we who are not of French speaking stock feel self-confident, then we need no special privileges. I appeal to my own people in this regard. The strong can always afford to be generous. I think this is a generous bill. If passed, it will bring up to date in Canada's 102nd year something which may well have been neglected in the past 102 years. Let us bring ourselves up to date. I appeal to those to whom the bill is directed to be generous, patient and gentle with us, as we hope to be with them. Nations, like people, are strong only when they are right. I believe it is always right to be as generous and as gentle as we can.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak very briefly in this debate. I support the intent and principle of the bill, but I do not agree that a crash program should be instituted at this time for the implementation of bilingualism, whether it involves the learning of the English or French language. It was stated before the committee that in the next four years over $7 million will be spent on this crash program. I imagine this will be the greatest underestimate ever given. In my opinion, bilingual education must begin in the elementary schools. Rather than instituting a crash program at this time in our history, let this federal money be allocated to the elementary schools system across Canada. I agree 100 per cent with my colleague and the leader of the Creditistes who suggested that bilingual education should begin at the elementary school level and not with the top civil servants. Having read articles about unilingual schools, it has become apparent to me that such a system means segregation rather than integration. It means we are compelling our children to be segregated by background, rather than using a forward-looking approach. We should have across Canada truly bilingual schools, with the federal authorities picking up the added cost of such instruction rather than the property taxpayer, who is now completely overburdened.

I am sure every member of the house agrees that there must be unity and understanding if this bill is to be effective. I believe the bill must be passed and I shall support it on third reading. We all know it is long past due. At the same time, before passing a bill of this nature there should be attached to it an addendum to the effect that the full intent and provisions of the legislation will not be enforceable for a period of time. I am sure we all realize that many people have to prepare themselves for the change in system. There should be a period of time set down before the provisions of the bill come into effect, so that people may prepare themselves in this fast-changing society. I believe that if Canadians were given this assurance by the minister who will draft the regulations under this bill, there would not be the apprehension there is at the present time. In addition, such a provision would give the provinces an opportunity to effect an orderly system of education which is so necessary at this time in our history. This is my opinion. I express it as an individual and not as a representative of the party of which I am a member. If we are to have an effective bilingual education system, we should start not with older civil servants but with school children; we should make sure they are brought into the picture at an early age.

The federal government should at long last accept its responsibility and effect a federal system of education. There should be no hesitation or concern on the part of the government because of the constitution or anything else. Why cannot the federal government carry out such a program with regard to education? Civil servants, members of the armed forces, members of parliament and many other people move from province to province and there is no concern about the effect this movement has upon the education of their children. I believe this is a matter the house should consider. Liberal members opposite should have the courage to rise and suggest that it be considered.

We have been asked why one would support the amendments proposed to the bill. The answer is simple. The government, particularly in the last two weeks, has proven itself suspect in the eyes of Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It is suspect in the eyes of the people of Newfoundland because of its complete disregard for the Terms of Union. It is suspect in the eyes of people of western Canada who are fighting to survive against great economic pressure. It is suspect in the eyes of the Indians because consultations are not being carried on with them. The government is suspect in the eyes of members of parliament who believed there was sincerity in statements made in the house and they could place their trust in them.

This is why I believe amendments proposed by the official opposition merited consideration. Those amendments may not have been necessary to complement the legislation, but they spelled out in clear language exactly what the people of this land wanted. I suggest that the indifference of the government is sufficient justification for the suspicion that exists in the minds of many Canadians. Nothing is more damaging to our democracy than the mistrust and suspicion of our people, yet the government has accomplished that feat in just one year, and at a time when justice and understanding for all of Canada is urgently required if we are really and truly concerned about achieving unity.

I suggest to the ministers responsible for Bill C-120 that if they are concerned about unity in this country they had better do something about it; they should get out on the hustings, accept their responsibility and explain to the people of Canada what the bill is all about. I believe there is unity and purpose in Bill C-120, but the actions of government members, particularly those of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), will never achieve this desirable goal. The amendments that were not acceptable to the government were probably unnecessary in many instances, as I have already said. But safeguards must be written into the legislation if it is to be effective. I was particularly amazed at the government's refusal to consider having representation from every area of Canada on the advisory board. I believe this is an absolute must if the government is concerned about national unity at this time.

When one considers the smart aleck remarks of the Secretary of State, as reported at page 10823 of Hansard, is it any wonder that we are suspicious? I remind the minister that approximately one hour after his damaging speech on the bill, almost all his honey-covered colleagues put on the greatest demonstration of rudeness I have had the displeasure of witnessing. When the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) rose to speak, the majority of members opposite showed their rudeness by the interjections made at that time. The Secretary of State should consider what was done on that occasion before he refers to the rudeness of the opposition.

The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) asked a question in all seriousness. All we heard was sarcasm before any attempt was made to answer the question. I can assure the Secretary of State that he will hear a great many noises from one end of this country to the other if he does not show fair play in implementing the regulations of Bill C-120. This is a matter that concerns me. Once the bill has been passed, members of parliament will have no knowledge of the regulations under which it will operate. I dealt with this matter on a previous occasion.

I believe the regulations should be before the members of this house so that we can have a thorough knowledge of what we are really talking about before passing this bill. The principle of the bill is brilliant, but the regulations are not here.

I would like to say that I do not want to associate myself with the remarks made by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh), particularly in view of the fact that my constituency borders on his. In fact, a short while ago I was amazed that the amendment introduced by the hon. member was voted upon in his absence. It amazes me that anyone should introduce an amendment and not be here to vote on the amendment.

Mr. McIntosh: You know the reason.

Mr. Skoberg: I suggest that the people of that area are quite prepared to accept the principle of this bill but at the same time expect fair and just treatment from the minister responsible for the implementation of the regulations. The people of that area will give fair play if they receive the same treatment. I believe that deep down the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek agrees with me that we have in our constituencies the fairest minded people of all of western Canada. They are prepared to accept change if they know what the change is all about. But this government has failed completely to tell the house and the country about the change. They sat on their laurels and said nothing. They debated, they criticized, but they did nothing to let the people know what this measure is all about. According to Hansard, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) in fact suggested that a member of this house was not interested in this bill and would have nothing to do with it. I believe that this is a disgraceful statement for a minister of the government to make. I can assure the minister and the government that the people of Canada are entitled to decide, when the final ballot is cast, who their elected representative will be. When a member is elected and comes here he is entitled to have a say, whether or not the minister likes it. In the next election there may possibly be a change in the area bordering my constituency. Any responsible and sensible member of the house who is even remotely concerned about the nation and its unity must support the principle of this bill, and those who do not are intentionally damaging the esprit de corps of our great nation.

This government has done one of the worst selling jobs in history in explaining the bill, and no amount of explaining or passing the buck, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) suggested, will take them off the hook in this regard. I suggest to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of this country, if and when he goes to the west, he will have a wonderful opportunity at that time to explain to the people what the bill is all about. I am sure he will hear many people express to him what they think about it. They are open minded, if they receive the truth from responsible people.

I am sure that all members of this house must know that the French and English speaking people are prepared to meet on equal ground as equals, and to have a mutual understanding to a degree which would surprise even an imaginative mind in this house. We have heard a lot of talk about imagination and about people not accepting each other. These people are prepared to accept one another, and most of them will realize that if given a chance. Our young people will lead the way in proving that this bill is workable. I have to remind the house that only a short two years ago a band from St. Jerome went to our city of Moose Jaw and in exchange a band from Moose Jaw went to St. Jerome. After these two bands visited back and forth, they found they got along very well. This does not amaze me because an intermingling of the two races is bound to bring harmony. I am sure that if the Secretary of State were to provide sufficient funds for student exchanges from east to west, he would find this so-called problem which he expects in some areas would not exist at all.

I should like to conclude by saying that the greatest danger which I believe exists with regard to the implementation of Bill C-120, is in having too many jackasses trying to fit either the French or the English speaking people into some patterns in our society. All that is needed is an opportunity for everyone in this country to live together in an economic atmosphere which will provide an equal opportunity for all, be they of English, French, Scandinavian, European, Asiatic, Indian, African or any other ancestry.

I am sure that the Secretary of State will realize that these people are really concerned about economic problems. They are also concerned about living together in harmony, and this will not be achieved by sarcasm from a member of the government.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I will take only a very few moments to express a few views that I have with regard to the bill and to relate what I gather are the viewpoints of people in my part of Canada. So far as I am concerned, I thoroughly approve the principle of the bill and intend to vote for it. I think that everybody in Canada who belongs to the two major races is entitled under our constitution to the provision of federal government services in their own language, wherever they are grouped in sufficient numbers. It is bad enough trying to figure out the intricacies of the Income Tax Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act in your own language, let alone trying to do so in some language with which you are not too familiar.

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and others have suggested that the government might well give consideration at a future date to the provision of services to new immigrants in their own language. Often people who are fairly well advanced in years and who have newly arrived in Canada have difficulty in learning a new language. They may learn it sufficiently to become Canadian citizens, but they are not fluent in it. If we are going to establish a program of expanded immigration into Canada I hope the government will consider the provision of federal services under the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Income Tax Act to new Canadians in their own language for a short period of time wherever the concentration of that one linguistic group makes it appropriate. I do not want to be misinterpreted and I do not want it to be said that I am trying to fragment Canada by language. I am not. My point is that elderly people coming to this country have difficulty learning a new language, and I think something might be done to help them if we wish to encourage immigration.

I am thoroughly in agreement with the principle of the bill and intend to vote for it as I have before at other stages, but the administration of the bill is a matter of concern to me and to many Canadians. I have heard this from many people in my own part of the country. In my view far too much latitude is given under this bill with regard to the administration of the regulations by the commissioner. The commissioner is given powers such as were wielded by men like Torquemada and Robespierre. The hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) may shake his head all he wants, but this is my view of it, and I am also entitled to my view.

The editorial in today's Globe and Mail, a newspaper which is usually uncritical of the government to say the least, is critical of the government in this respect. However, I will not elaborate on that because I am sure that everyone either has read the editorial or is able to do so. The power given under this bill to the commissioner is very great. In my view some of the terms of this bill may well violate the Bill of Rights. The fears that many people have regarding how the provisions in this bill will be implemented will certainly not be alleviated in any way by the government's refusal to accept any substantial amendments from the opposition. A few minutes ago the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) pointed out that the purpose of most of the amendments put forward by members of the opposition was to try to improve the bill and to get it to work. However, the amendments were met with an adamant rejection by the government. Despite the eloquent, smooth and slick explanations given by the Minister of Justice many of us were not entirely convinced that these amendments should not be accepted, especially the right to appeal.

Additional worry in this regard has been caused by conflicting statements and remarks made by members of the government. As the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has pointed out, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté) makes one statement, and other ministers make statements of a different kind. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) paraphrasing, as it were, a former Queen of France who lost her head, said: If they are not bilingual let them run elevators. Or something to that effect. Then, one of the heads of the public service division said that by the early 'seventies everyone must be fluent in both languages to obtain employment or promotion. No amount of explanation afterwards will allay suspicion caused by remarks of this kind. I am reminded of the famous speech of Lady MacBeth during her sleep-walking scene in which she said: "All the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand."

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Nesbitt: I heard someone say "six o'clock". I need about one minute more.

An hon. Member: Carry on.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to continue beyond six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nesbitt: Another thing which has caused concern to many of us is the unfortunate attitude of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) during the conduct of this debate. It has not done much to alleviate our anxieties. Nor has his peculiar use of mathematics in a C.B.C. interview the other Thursday evening. He said that if you were French speaking alone you would be eligible for 25 per cent of the jobs available, but if you were English speaking alone you would be eligible for 75 per cent of the jobs available. This makes 100 per cent. But what happens to all the others who have to be bilingual? I do not know where they come in. This kind of odd explanation does not reassure people at all.

In conclusion, I will simply say this: I hope the bill works. I think most hon. members wish it to work. But there is certainly a great deal of apprehension in the country at large as to the manner in which it may be made to work. I, for one, hope my fears and suspicions with regard to the administration of this bill and those who will be chosen to administer it, are unfounded. I certainly wish to enter one caveat in connection with my vote when I vote in favour of the measure. I hope the suspicions which are rampant in most parts of the country today are unfounded and that the government will administer the bill in good faith as has been promised.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

Debating Time Allotment

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

PROCEDURE

NEW PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEBATING TIME ALLOTMENT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the Standing Orders of the House be amended by adding the following new Standing Orders immediately after Standing Order 75:

75A. When a Minister of the Crown, from his place in the House, states that there is agreement among the representatives of all parties to allot a specified number of days or hours to the proceedings at one or more stages of any public bill, he may propose a motion, without notice, setting forth the terms of such agreed allocation; and every such motion shall be decided forthwith, without debate or amendment.

75B. When a Minister of the Crown, from his place in the House, states that a majority of the representatives of the several parties, including that of the Government, have come to an agreement in respect of a proposed allotment of days or hours for the proceedings at any stage of the passing of a public bill, he may propose a motion, without notice, setting forth the terms of the said proposed allocation; provided that for the purposes of this standing order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages of a bill if that motion is consistent with the provisions of Standing Order 75(13). During the consideration of any such motion no member may speak more than once or longer than ten minutes. Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, Mr. Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

75C. A Minister of the Crown who from his place in the House at a previous sitting has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration either in the House or in any committee and has given notice at that sitting of his intention so to do may propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage; provided that the time allotted for any stage is not to be less than one sitting day and provided that for the purposes of this standing order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages on a bill if that motion is consistent with the provisions of Standing Order 75(13). During the consideration of any such motion no member may speak more than once or longer than ten minutes. Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, Mr. Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Baldwin: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am wondering whether there are two or three points of order or just the one. The hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring Your Honour's attention to the fact that the translation system is not working and we have been unable to find out what is happening.

Mr. Speaker: I am just wondering whether the hon. member is complaining that he did not understand the French translation. He must have heard me put the question in English.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I have been reading, as you may understand, with great care and anxiety, and I hope with some benefit, the decision that was delivered by Your Honour last Thursday, July 3, and which appears at pages 10778 and 10779 of Hansard. In delivering your decision with respect to the point of order that I had raised the day before, a decision that is binding on the house and which is not being challenged in any way, Your Honour ruled that the point of order I had raised should not be upheld. However, as I construed Your Honour's words, I think Your Honour was ruling that the point of order had been raised prematurely; that what I had said at the time and been supported in by other members of the house was not sufficient for the Chair to hold that the government notice of motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council should not be transferred to government orders pursuant to standing order 21.

Your Honour went on to say, as reported at page 10779:

Once the motion has been transferred for debate under government orders it becomes the government's decision and the government's responsibility to decide whether it will proceed with its motion. It is at that point that the anticipation rule might become operative in the sense that the minister's motion, if proceeded with, might block consideration of the committee report.

I know Your Honour was not inviting further discussion, but I gathered from the words that were used that if there was merit in the substance of the point of order I raised I should be given an opportunity to raise that point again at an appropriate time, that time being now. I could repeat the speech I delivered earlier but I do not think I need to. I have simply raised my present point of order because it may well be that Your Honour has further considered the matter and has further words of wisdom for our ears.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Peace River. I see the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) wishes to contribute to the point of order that has been raised. Of course, I would not presume to make a ruling without first hearing from the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I will not refer to the anticipation rule. It seems to me that in the ruling Your Honour gave previously you agreed with the argument that had been made, which was that the report brought in by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) was one that he was directed to bring in by the committee. He was directed by the committee to seek concurrence in that report. This is not a private member's motion on some subject or other which the government can take over as its own. The substance of this report is one that has been directed, Mr. Speaker. I must emphasize that over and over again. There must be a clear distinction between a decision of this house and a decision of the government or a wish of the government. With the greatest respect, it is the duty of the Chair to enforce the decisions of the house and not the decisions of the government. I am not going to insist on that point any more at this time because I know Your Honour agrees with it.

There was a decision, as the result of which this house directed the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to deal with a particular motion. The committee did so. It came to a conclusion, and I am not going into the nature of the conclusion. The Committee then directed its chairman to bring in a report and to seek concurrence. I said the other day, and I repeat now, that the government, in trying to supersede the report of the committee, is actually in contempt of this house. It is the rights of the house and of all hon. members in it that must be considered, and not just the rights of the treasury benches. I therefore say, Mr. Speaker, that the decision to be rendered by Your Honour will be very, very important. The committee report could have been the report of the Committee on Transport and Communications, or it could have been the report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. I was responsible for the insertion in the report of that latter Committee of two paragraphs which were highly critical of the government. Those paragraphs were accepted by the majority of committee members, including Liberals. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) may chuckle at that, but it so happened. But, Mr. Speaker, the effect of the action that is contemplated, that is if Your Honour approves of it, is that the government can take over any committee report; it can muzzle any committee chairman—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —and then bring in an excised version of that report. If we couple that action with the allocation of time, which is the substance of this order, this house will be bound hand and foot, and delivered to the mercy of the government. That, Mr. Speaker, is not parliamentary government. This house is not the servant of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The first responsibility of the treasury benches is to parliament, and parliament must never be a mere rubberstamp for some ambitious ministers. Much more is implied in the point of order raised by my colleague for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), than merely whether the government can, by dressing up a motion on the order paper and adding a couple of words, take unto itself the report of a committee. I will not repeat my arguments, Mr. Speaker, but this is the clear implication of the point of order raised by my colleague, and that is what Your Honour must decide upon.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. members for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I shall restrict my remarks at this time to what I think are the two points that ought to be made at this stage of these proceedings. In the first place, I should like to confirm, by reading from the appropriate record, the statement made by the hon. member for Edmonton West that the chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization was instructed to bring this matter before the House of Commons and seek concurrence. Before I refer to the record, I wish to say that we agreed in our committee, once we realized we would get into a bit of a debate, not to rely on the minutes of our committee, since those minutes are not a verbatim report but a summary written in paragraph form with regard to what was said. It was agreed, however, that we could refer to the record for motions and decisions. I draw attention therefore to page 148 of the minutes of our committee covering the meeting held on June 17, 1969. This is the entry:

Mr. Macdonald—

That is the President of the Privy Council:

—moved that the Committee report 75A, 75B and 75C to the House and that the Chairman be instructed to seek concurrence in the report.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): And how did the hon. member vote?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall refer to the record with alacrity and with pleasure—with pleasure, at any rate. I do not see, Mr. Speaker, how under any organization's rules a situation can be tolerated in which a minister in a standing committee can bring in a motion instructing the chairman of that committee to take a certain action and then come into this house himself and move another motion that upsets the one he urged the chairman of the standing committee to move. The rest of the entry I referred to reads as follows:

The question being put on the motion it was adopted on the following division:

YEAS	NAYS
Deachman	Fairweather
Francis	Knowles
Jerome	Lambert (3)
Macdonald
MacGuigan
Reid (6)

Yes, under the nays is mentioned that same hon. member for Edmonton West who just spoke. My hon. friend for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) was also on the committee. The hon. member for Edmonton West pointed out that this committee was acting in the light of instructions given to it by the house last December, those instructions being that it should deal with this question and report back to the house.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The committee dealt with the matter. It came to a decision that was a majority decision only. As I have noted, three of us, the only opposition members present on that day, voted against it. We did not approve of the report but nevertheless, when the majority of a committee has so decided that is the report of the committee. The crux of that entry I just read was that the committee chairman, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), was instructed to seek concurrence in the report. He was instructed by a majority vote of the committee and it was on the motion of the same President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), who now comes into this house to move a motion to set aside the other motion, under which the chairman of that committee was directed to seek concurrence.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What kind of a deliberating free parliament is this? Where is all this talk about participatory democracy? Never mind what is being done to us on the opposition side of the house. We are being asked to deal with a set of rule changes which represented the will of the government only, but look at what is being done by the government, by the representatives of the treasury benches, to the Liberal members of that committee.

The instruction in the committee was that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton was to bring the motion before the house and seek concurrence. Before he could get to his feet to move it—mind you, he could have risen if he had not been told not to—the President of the Privy Council came in with this motion.

I said I had two things I felt should be drawn to Your Honour's attention. That is one of them. The other, Mr. Speaker, is related to something that happened this afternoon. Your Honour will recall that a third reading amendment was moved and that the procedural admissibility of it was protested by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), following which there was a bit of discussion. In the end, Your Honour ruled that the amendment was in order. Your Honour stated quite clearly that one of the reasons the amendment had to be admitted was that there had been changes in our rules. Many of the citations in the books no longer apply because we have altered the status of second and third reading. In support of my argument this afternoon that that was the case, I quoted from a few paragraphs of the third report of the special committee on procedure of the house which was presented on Friday, December 6, 1968.

I now wish to draw to the attention of Your Honour, hon. members, and if they will listen, the government, another paragraph from that same report. It is found at page 434 of Votes and Proceedings for Friday, December 6, 1968:

V. The Committee—Structure of the House

12. It will be apparent from the recommendations already made in relation to supply and the legislative process that your committee envisages a significant extension of the functions of the Standing Committees and in consequence a substantial strengthening of their importance and influence.

How we are throwing those words down the drain, Mr. Speaker!

They would become the forums in which the details of expenditure and legislation would be closely considered. They would investigate the operations and continuing programs of government departments and would develop areas of subject specialization. We would expect debate in the Standing Committees to be well-informed and pertinent; their members to become influential in the areas of their specialized experience; and their reports to the house to assume a critical significance related more closely to the national interest as a whole than to simple political differences. We also anticipate that the business of the house would be greatly expedited and handled more efficiently through exploiting the potential of the committee system of the house to the full.

If we are going to do to standing committees what the government has indicated, Mr. Speaker, those words might as well be torn from the record. May I draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that the Committee on Procedure and Organization is not now just a special committee as it was last December, but is a standing committee of the house. In fact, we asked for that in paragraph 15 of the same report from which I have been reading, and I quote again:

15. Your committee believes that a Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization should be established with the function of keeping the rules and practice and the internal administrative organization of the house under continuing review, and that this committee should consist of not more than twelve members. If the recommendations contained in your Committee's Fourth and Fifth Reports are implemented, we would urge that this proposed Standing Committee be given an opportunity of reviewing the revised Standing Orders after they have been in operation for a certain length of time.

I ask Your Honour to put those two paragraphs, 12 and 15, together and note how clear their message is. This was a report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. It was not necessary to adopt this report because it contained expressions of opinion as to how the house should operate. It was the basis for a later report which provided for actual changes in rules.

This afternoon Your Honour agreed with the contention that there had been a change with regard to third reading. That change is reflected in this same report. Put those two paragraphs together, 12 and 15, and the message is very clear. We said that we wanted a new régime as far as committees were concerned. We wanted the importance of committee work to be strengthened, made more critical and crucial in the legislative process. We wanted members to develop expertise, specialized talent, in their particular fields. We wanted this to happen in all of the standing committees. With regard to procedure, we wanted the committee to have an opportunity to review the procedure and rules of the house so it could make recommendations back to the house. I submit this is not just exhortation. This is something the chair has to consider. There has been a change, just as this afternoon Your Honour had to say there had been a change with respect to the status of third reading.

I submit there has been a change in respect of the status of committees. They now exercise a more important part in the whole process of this parliament. For us to be faced with a situation in which a committee has given consideration to a matter, has made a report, only to have it completely upstaged by the action of a Minister of the Crown, is an affront to that committee. It is an affront to all members, especially those on the Liberal side, who voted for this proposition. It is an affront to parliament. We thought we were operating under a new régime.

Just as Your Honour had to say this afternoon that the old citations did not completely apply in view of the changes that have been made, so I suggest it is with respect to committees. Some new jurisprudence may be necessary. The facts are clear. Last December this matter was referred to the committee, which by that time had been made a standing committee. This committee was called upon to make a report. We spent months working on this and other issues. A report was decided on in the committee. My friends across the way like to laugh and say, I voted against it. I certainly did. I will get into that when we get into the substance of the matter. Technically speaking, the committee carried out its instruction. It brought back a report. It did so in the light of a new régime which says that the work of the committees has critical significance to the job that is being done in parliament. Then, we get here and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) puts this motion on the order paper which means that all the work we did last year in trying to upgrade the work of committees, to make parliament function more efficiently on the basis of the committee system, was just so much waste of time.

• (8:30 p.m.)

I agree completely with the position taken by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), stated again by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), that this is not just a one shot decision. This is not just some minor point because we are involved in a fight over procedure, and I regret it has come to that. It would be far better if we were doing things by agreement, but this point involves more than a procedural matter. This is a ruling that will affect the whole question of how our committee system is going to operate. I am one who believes this parliament will work better if its committees are upgraded and are treated as important, and if the members on them, whatever party they belong to, are respected for the work they do. You will ruin it all if this procedure is allowed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my comments will be rather short.

Having heard the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on the point of order of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), we must draw some conclusions. Moreover, I was impressed by the argumentation of an expert in that field, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, especially when he stated that the work done in committee is becoming increasingly important.

Having read the reports of the proceedings of committees and studied the development of their work, I have come to the conclusion as did several of my colleagues that the work done in committee will have to be freed from the influence of certain ministers who wish to impose their views on the committees.

As a matter of fact, this is not the first time this year that we meet the same problem and we must agree that the point of order of the hon. member for Peace River is justified and acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, in the Votes and Proceedings of June 20 last, we read the following:

> Mr. Blair, from the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, presented the Third Report of the said Committee, which is as follows:
> Your Committee recommends—

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, this was an unfortunate decision, but it was made by a majority of the committee. However, Mr. Speaker, there is something else with regard to the proceedings of the committee.

What about those proceedings? The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), if I may use an expression I find very suitable in this instance, does not care a rap about that and goes his own way, just as if he was the one to decide, on behalf of the committee, of what it will do and how.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the ruling you will give presently is, according to the Ralliement créditiste, of the utmost importance, because it will establish, in fact, to what extent the report of a committee is really consistent with the wishes of its members or those of a particular minister.

Mr. Speaker, I had the honour of sitting on the committee on privileges and elections. Sometime this year, that committee studied a problem concerning one aspect of the field of transportation. It stemmed from a report of the committee on transport and communications which, according to some hon. members, was not consistent with the proceedings. Now, the President of the Privy Council intervened in the house a few days later, to dictate a ruling concerning the report of the committee on transport and communications.

Mr. Speaker, at that time, the President of the Privy Council anticipated on the decision of the committee on privileges and elections. He assumed powers that he did not have. He passed judgment, which he was not entitled to do, and thus put the members of the committee on privileges and elections in a very awkward position.

Mr. Speaker, it is therefore obvious that this situation has occurred time and time again, and that some day sooner or later a decision must be reached on the procedure to be followed. We feel that the time has come to decide to what extent the recommendations of a committee, since this procedure is becoming more and more important, must be decided upon independently of the will of the ministers. Otherwise, we will have to believe, or will be inclined to believe, that the will of the government with regard to the work in committee is the same as that which prompted it to propose Standing Order 75C which, to my mind, is dictatorial.

[English]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that very little need be said about the point of order brought forward by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) in that it is really covered by the ruling of the Chair as recorded at page 10780 of Hansard. This ruling points out that the question of anticipation was not to be confused with the question of priority; that the notice of motion in the government's name was entitled to be transferred to government orders, and that at this point I would be entitled to seek priority for that particular motion. Therefore, I think the decision is quite clear on this point and little more need be said about it.

This whole matter will require few words from me because I do not think we need take seriously the remarks made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). They are two members who, according to the passage quoted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, voted expressly against the instruction to the committee chairman to introduce the committee motion. In other words, the two hon. gentlemen who, several days ago, found it expedient to vote against the introduction of the motion have now risen to their feet asking that it be called.

An. hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I hope it is true because I am only repeating what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre read out. If hon. members opposite insist I will be glad to read it again.

Mr. Bell: Read it many times.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I know hon. members opposite are afraid to get to the substance of this matter. I quote:

> Mr. Macdonald moved that the committee report 75A, 75B and 75C to the house and that the chairman be instructed to seek concurrence in the report.

That was the motion that was adopted. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) voted against it. So these hon. members, who several weeks ago did not want the report introduced in the house, are now complaining because it was not introduced. I think I can say on behalf of hon. gentlemen on this side of the house that they concur in the notice of motion I have put on this particular matter. I believe they will agree that, while it is not verbally the same motion that the committee chairman was instructed to introduce, it does represent an improvement because of amendments made which will bring about greater certainty. The procedure now proposed will give the house what it did not previously have and, incidentally, for which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre argued last December when he suggested that this type of procedural change be not made by motion to adopt a report but by motion to concur in the actual wording of the rule change.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In committee of the whole.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In committee of the whole, yes; but I would point out to the hon. member that in 1965, when the then prime minister and house leader introduced a motion to amend the rules, he took no exception to the fact that it was moved by a minister with Mr. Speaker in the Chair. There is a good precedent for what is being done in these circumstances. I consider that this is the most efficacious way of dealing with this matter and, accordingly, I propose that we proceed with the motion.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I was a member of this ill-fated committee set up to make a report. I was not present at the time the vote was taken,—

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Aiken: —for a very good reason. If you follow the argument of the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), then the fact that I was not there to vote leaves me free today to criticize the action he has taken. If that is the viewpoint he takes, that is the one I adopt. I ask him where the Liberal members of this committee—the majority of six—are tonight. Where is the chairman of the committee? I see he is sitting in his seat, but why is he not moving the motion his colleagues asked him to move?

• (8:40 p.m.)

There has been no reason given to the house why this report has not been presented, and why the motion of the President of the Privy Council has been given priority. The committee spent many hours discussing a great many other matters than the allocation of time in respect of which the report was made. Many meetings were held and good progress was made. When the time came for the report the government was interested in only one item, and that was the allocation of time rule. All of the good work done on the other items was allowed to go into limbo and will be allowed to die when this session dies. The sooner this session dies the better, in the light of the way it is progressing now.

Regardless of what the President of the Privy Council may or may not say, it is quite obvious that the only object in getting this report was to provide an opportunity to bring in the allocation of time measure. When the report did not appear to be identical with what the government wanted, it walked over that report and brought in its own motion.

Let me repeat briefly one point I made on July 2 when the issue was first raised. We are talking about a fundamental matter, and by that I mean a matter which goes to the basis of parliament. The House of Commons, when it is sitting, should be the master of the government, not the reverse. The house, not the government, set up the committee in question, asked it to consider various matters and report. This committee which the house set up proceeded to hold meetings. The committee voted on a majority report and presented it to the house. The orders of the house have been carried out and this report has been made. We now have that report on the order paper, and we are ready to proceed with it.

It is fundamental that if the House of Commons itself is to have priority and seniority in this country, the orders of the house should be followed and should have precedence over motions of the government. This involves a fundamental matter in respect of which Your Honour should make a determination. This does not involve just a matter of rules, but involves a matter of going beyond those rules to the basis of the power structure of this country.

Is the House of Commons the master of its own proceedings or can the government, by intervention, stall or stop these proceedings? This is a fundamental question which must be considered and decided in favour of the House of Commons. If it is not, then we have moved into the second stage of deterioration of the power of the people.

The first stage of this deterioration was when this report was brought forward by means of a government majority. I do not claim long experience but I have been here over 12 years, and for the last 7 or 8 years a member of most of the procedural committees set up under previous speakers. Each one of these committees brought forward a report. As a matter of fact the reports were unanimous and were brought in with no dissenters. It was never considered that this house could properly function unless we were agreed at least upon our rules. For the second time during this new parliament, which the people elected in June of last year, a majority report has been brought in without the concurrence of opposition parties. This exemplifies the first breakdown in the procedures of the house.

For many years we have agreed that committees set up by this house should consider and bring in unanimous reports in respect of our rules. The present occasion is the first example of a breakdown in this regard, to my knowledge. The government, having broken the first rule, is now proceeding to break the second rule by walking over a committee report on the procedures of the house.

This is not the report of a standing committee but the report of a special committee set up for a special purpose. It is essential at this time that Your Honour give very serious thought to the fundamental questions being considered. You should not consider this as just a parliamentary procedural matter, but as a fundamental matter on which the future importance of parliament may very well depend.

If Your Honour decides against the proposition we on this side support, that may well lead to a series of breakdowns in parliament, which in turn could lead to greater disrepute of this house. This may be particularly true if the government is allowed to overwhelm us by putting forward a principle contrary to the basic rules of this house. This is not the type of ruling which would be useful to parliament in years to come.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I suggest there is a very basic and fundamental matter before you if you accept suggestions made by members on the other side. The basic and fundamental matter is whether or not any motion on the order paper does, in fact, rule out or prohibit the government from introducing a motion on the same or essentially the same subject matter. Obviously that is not so, because we have dozens, in fact scores of motions, bills and that sort of thing on the order paper relating to matters in many ways almost the same or at least dealing with the same subject matters as government legislation introduced some time later.

I agree completely with the ruling Your Honour made last July 3, that we must not confuse the issue of priority with the rule of anticipation. The rule of anticipation, of course, is involved here, but it should not prevent the transfer of this motion from notices of motions to government orders. That is what we are dealing with now. The second point that is extremely important is that after Your Honour was in the position where you transferred—as I said, in compliance with the decision you made—the motion to government orders, we were not dealing with the process under routine proceedings but were dealing with the sequence of those matters called by the government. Hon. members opposite will agree that is the proper thing at this stage. Then, of course, it is the prerogative of the government house leader to call any one, in any sequence that he sees fit, of those matters that are listed on the order paper under government business. That is precisely what is happening at this point in time. Therefore I suggest there has been no valid point of order outlined by hon. members opposite.

In this connection I would refer to May's 17th edition, page 400, which gives a number of prohibitions respecting the rule of anticipation and reads as follows:

> In determining, however, whether a discussion is out of order on the ground of anticipation, the Speaker must have regard to the probability of the matter anticipated being brought before the house within a reasonable time.

As has been clearly stated by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and other members who were on the committee, they did not wish this motion put before the house. Now, they are taking exactly the opposite side of the argument.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: I never said that.

Mr. Olson: The record of the vote in that committee has been read out twice. They were not in favour of this motion being brought before the House of Commons. Having voted that way and having made that decision, it seems to me the absolute apex of hypocrisy to now argue for and insist upon the motion being brought before the house. In addition—

Mr. Danforth: What about the Liberal members?

Mr. Olson: That has nothing to do with the point of order; that is just a point of argument. In addition, as I am sure Your Honour is well aware, this motion is not exactly the same as the motion moved by the hon. member for—

Mr. Baldwin: No, it is worse.

Mr. Olson: That is the opinion of the hon. member for Peace River. This motion is not exactly the same as the motion moved by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). As has been said not only dozens and scores, but indeed hundreds of times, the government has to take the responsibility for moving motions under that section of the order paper which deals with government business. That is precisely what is being asked at this point in time.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Olson: Certainly.

Mr. Aiken: I ask the minister whether he considers that the order standing in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, is a government order. If it is not how does he justify its not having precedence under Standing Order 18, which gives only government orders priority?

Mr. Olson: Item 99 of government orders in our Orders of the Day, which is that part of the day with which we are now dealing, is the motion that has been moved by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), and any other motions on the order paper do not apply.

Mr. Stanfield: Why don't you answer the question?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate because I had, if I may say so with respect, a great deal of sympathy for the position into which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) pushed Your Honour by putting a motion on the order paper. I was not at all sure that any contribution I could make would be of assistance to Your Honour in deciding the point of procedure. But I was raised to my feet by the arrogance of the President of the Privy Council—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: —and by the irrelevant insults of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: There may have been good reasons why the President of the Privy Council put his motion on the order paper. If there were reasons, I would have sat and listened patiently to the President of the Privy Council for having the decency and the necessary modesty to tell the house why he put his motion ahead of the motion of the chairman of the committee. Instead of that he said: I wanted to put this motion on the order paper. I had the right to do so, and you had better lump it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: That is right.

Mr. Lewis: It is this sort of behaviour that is souring the atmosphere in this parliament. It is this sort of behaviour that is making the people of Canada wonder what this parliament is about. I happen to be a relatively junior member of the house, and I have supported with all the strength I could the notion that the committees of the house should be strenghtened and given a more important role. I have made speeches not only in this house but across the country from one end to the other pointing out that the business of parliament has now become so complex, so difficult; that the issues before members of parliament are so numerous that it is impossible for the house as a whole to deal with all of them in the depth they require. The only way to overcome this difficulty is to strengthen the role of committees of parliament, to give them the necessary staff and the necessary status in the proceedings of parliament so that they become the avenues through which these important, complex and difficult issues are discussed and debated in depth.

This is what most of us have hoped for. This is what most of us have believed the committees of parliament ought to become. It is surely the duty of the government, above all, in this house, to see it that the status of those committees is honoured and observed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: In addition to the legislative duty of a government, it is the duty of a government to lead this house; to give the house a program; to see to it that parliament functions in a way which will promote the benefits and welfare of the country and the worthwhileness of parliament itself. That is the duty of the President of the Privy Council; that is the duty of the government house leader, namely, to assist this house, parliament and its committees to function properly. It is not his duty to step on the work of committees of the house. As I said, there may well have been a good reason why the President of the Privy Council decided that the government ought to put forward a motion to supersede the motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair).

• (9:00 p.m.)

Why did he not tell us what those reasons were? If he had humbly said to this house "there are the reasons and I would like to listen to hon. members", it would have been better. But he did not say anything of the sort. He just said that the government wanted to put a notice of motion and therefore they did, no matter what the committee did.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has the nerve—and I cannot describe it in any other way—he has the unmitigated gall, to say to this house that what we are dealing with is a motion put on the order paper by a member and that the government should have the authority to put another motion in its place. If he meant it seriously, he was not thinking. If he was thinking, he was being hypocritical.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I give him the benefit of the doubt, Mr. Speaker, and say that he was thinking. He knows perfectly well that this was not a motion by any member of the house. This was a motion by the chairman of the committee who was instructed by the committee to put that motion on the order paper. What difference does it make how many members voted against or for it? Ever since I have been in this house, I have learned that there is no such thing as a majority report of a committee. I have been in the minority on committees of this house but I have not been able to file a minority report; the rules do not permit me to do that. All I can do is put out a press release and deal with the press outside. If anyone should know this, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and the Minister of Agriculture should know, that so far as the house is concerned there is merely a report of the committee—whether it is a majority report or a unanimous report is irrelevant.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Lewis: I am sure that the President of the Privy Council had good reason for making the Minister of Agriculture sit down, and I am sure that the Minister of Agriculture has learned to be sat upon before now.

Mr. Hees: Yes, knock him down, meat ball.

Mr. Lewis: In all seriousness, I am speaking in this way because of the annoyance I felt at the attitude of the two ministers in this debate. I appreciate the difficulty in which Your Honour finds himself. I draw your attention, as did the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), to your ruling the other day as recorded at page 10780 of Hansard where you said:

> Once the motion has been transferred for debate under government orders it becomes the government's decision and the government's responsibility to decide whether it will proceed with its motion.

The government has decided to proceed with it. Your ruling reads:

> It is at that point that the anticipation rule might become operative in the sense that the minister's motion, if proceeded with, might block consideration of the committee report.

As I understood the hon. member for Peace River and others who have spoken in support of this motion, they have drawn Your Honour's attention to your statement on July 3 and have said that now the motion has been transferred to government orders, now that the government is moving its motion, the question of anticipation becomes relevant. We ask you to say that the government's motion will in fact block consideration of the committee report, and that should not be permitted. As I understood it, that was the point of order raised this evening by the hon. member for Peace River, and may I say with respect that on July 3 you did not deal with that point of order. This is a new point of order which is precisely in line with the ruling you gave on July 3.

The sadness which I feel as I am about to sit down is at the way in which the work of the committees of this house, which were drummed up to be important and which everyone hoped would be significant, is being downgraded by the actions of this government which has the duty to make sure that the committees of parliament are in fact important.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with what the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has just said about the behaviour of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) who, under his own authority, puts before the house a motion which is textually the report of the standing committee on procedure and organization, although that report has not been adopted by the house.

Mr. Speaker, what is the use of the committees if the President of the Privy Council can present to the house a motion which is textually—

Mr. Georges-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): No, no.

Mr. Caouette: The motion contains a few minor differences but it boils down to almost the same thing.

Mr. Lachance: The differences are important.

Mr. Caouette: The motion moved by the President of the Privy Council strangely resembles the report of the standing committee on procedure and organization.

So, as I said earlier, what is the use of having committees if at any time the minister can ignore everything and put himself before the house a motion that does not take into account the work of the committees?

For instance, has the President of the Privy Council any consideration for hon. members who sit on the committees? Are they mere ciphers? Are they appointed to a committee for the simple pleasure of knowing they will sit there and with no intention of considering the report they will make?

The President of the Privy Council presents a motion to set the new standards of parliamentary procedure. In my opinion, he is completely wrong in doing it that way and showing no respect for the wishes of the committee that presented its report on June 20 last. It was ignored.

And today the President of the Privy Council must face up to a situation which is unacceptable. He is afraid. It is all very well to say that the committee has nothing to do with his stand or his motion but it is quite obvious however, in the eyes of all hon. members, that the President of the Privy Council has disregarded the committee, that his action is meant to prove that a committee is totally inefficient with regard to the sound management of the nation's business. I would even dare say that the President of the Privy Council should apologize and withdraw his motion as long as the third report of the standing committee on procedure and organization has not been adopted by parliament.

Mr. Speaker, the arrogance of the President of the Privy Council is obvious. I understand that with a majority government it is possible to disregard the actions, decisions or recommendations of any committee, on the ground that the majority rules. However, if that is democracy, it is rather shaky and the President of the Privy Council has the duty to change his attitude with regard to the rights of hon. members who sit on the committee on procedure and organization.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the committee on procedure some years back and I have retained a cursory interest in this subject since then. As a result, I feel impelled to make a few comments on three points of argument which have been presented to us this evening from the government side. The first two points were advanced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and no doubt he intended that we should take them seriously, though it was difficult to do so. The third argument was advanced by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald).

The Minister of Agriculture contended that the government has the right to move government orders. This is a ridiculous red herring to bring into the debate on which we are now engaged, a debate which is being conducted in an extremely tense atmosphere. The right to which he refers is not involved at all. What is involved is whether the government is entitled to make its own substitute for something parliament has ordered somebody else to do.

On September 28 of last year this house ordered a special committee to look into certain questions of procedure, among other things, the allocation of time for debate, and to bring its views before us. The committee has now carried out this work. Whether we agree with its suggestions is not germane to the debate. The question is whether the government has the right to disassociate itself from recommendations which the committee thought were acceptable, and bring something like this before us.

The second argument advanced by the Minister of Agriculture was that the government must direct the manner in which the house runs its business. I say an emphatic no to this proposition, and I believe any member of the opposition would do the same. Indeed, I believe many hon. members opposite would share my attitude, though they have to express themselves secretly; they cannot present their true Liberal views openly on this particular point. I say it is not the business of the government to tell us how we are to run our own affairs. It is the business of each and every one of us.

We succeed best in this chamber when there is a consensus, and we succeed least when our course of action is dictated to us. I reject the reasoning of the Minister of Agriculture in this connection. The house must itself decide how to run its business. If it is not allowed to do so, there can only be trouble.

Finally, there is the argument put forward by the President of the Privy Council. He told us the Liberal members of the committee agreed that the government motion was the better one. What kind of an argument is that? As if these people, who had worked hard and long in the committee, would suddenly say: Well, after all, father knows best.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McCleave: In the days ahead, when a large issue involving the freedom of parliament is concerned, or the right of parliamentary control of the executive—kings have lost their heads because they would not listen—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McCleave: I say that in the days ahead, if the procedure envisaged in this motion is adopted and put into operation, the people of this country can expect no hope when they look to any member on the government side of the house.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether hon. members do not feel they have used all the arguments which could be advanced. Hon. members must recognize that discussion on a point of order is not for the pleasure of arguing the procedure but for the specific purpose of advising the Chair. I have a definite impression that all possible arguments on this point have been advanced, although I would not want to prevent hon. members from putting any further arguments which they might feel have not already been submitted. If the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) thinks he qualifies in this regard, I shall be pleased to call him and thank him for his assistance.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I always defer to your good judgment and wisdom, Mr. Speaker. I enter this debate not as an expert on the rules, but as a backbencher who has seen two elections since taking his place in this chamber. Although I do not intend to go into all the technicalities of the rules, I do wish to bring out a few points which, so far, have not been brought to Your Honour's attention.

In the parliament elected before the present parliament, the 27th Parliament of Canada, we heard a great deal about the way in which the air of democracy had been polluted by the battles of the past. Regardless of partisan differences on questions of policy, especially at election time, we are all Members of Parliament. I read about hon. members opposite going into a seance at weekends with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and other members of the Privy Council to hold their lovefest or love-in. They came out saying: Now the Prime Minister is on our side; the cabinet understands us. Yet, within a week or so they are confronted with an action of this kind on the part of the government, and participatory politics becomes just a sham.

If parliament is hamstrung, every member on the back benches is silenced, no matter on which side of the house he is sitting. Members opposite attend their lovely soirées at the weekends—I am a little jealous, I suppose—and leave feeling that their point of view has been accepted—only to find themselves confronted with a proposal such as this, one which will profoundly affect the workings of parliament. We were told that parliament would recess on June 27. How misleading this has proved to be. I was a member of the former parliament when, as has been said, the atmosphere was polluted. I well remember speaking during tense moments in the early days of the 27th Parliament. Has a lesson been learned? In the first year of the 28th Parliament, for no good reason which rules 75A and 75B would not take care of, the government has decided to ram rule 75C through the house. They may succeed eventually. I do not know. But I suggest to Your Honour and particularly to the 100 or so members who came here little more than a year ago looking for the new politics, participatory politics, that as a result the atmosphere will again be so polluted that the present parliament will encounter all the pitfalls and sandtraps which bedevilled previous parliaments.

To turn, now, to the point at issue. The committee system is under attack. We ask the question: Is it a charade or will the President of the Privy Council be the puppeteer to pull the strings—

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Nowlan: I am sorry the President of the Privy Council does not share the enthusiasm and idealism of the hon. member for York South. Neither has he accepted the advice of some of the veterans on this side who have suggested that the fact our parliamentary committee system does not work is the responsibility of cabinet. If that is true, then let the cabinet inform members of all parties of this house that the committee system is a charade.

The present situation is the last straw. I should like to refer to reports submitted by three committees, of two of which I have been a member. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) knows more about the fifth report of the transportation committee than I do, but I would like to refer to the report on maritime transportation. While the committee was considering its report, the minister brought into this house the transportation bill without reference to the committee's report.

Then again, the Minister of National Defence, (Mr. Cadieux) honourable gentleman that he is, said that no decision would be made on defence policy until the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence had made its report. The committee went to Europe and had a very informative and illuminating tour, but I am not so naïve as to believe that basic decisions on NATO and/or NORAD and/or maritime command were not made before the committee submitted its report.

Then tonight, the Minister of Agriculture, (Mr. Olson) who knows something about the rules, certainly more than I—though he did not display that knowledge this evening—set up a straw man. In view of all the wheat that still remains for him to sell, I do not think he should compound the problem by adding all the straw he built up tonight, to say nothing of some of the beef that he was distributing. Certainly, his performance was not a fair reflection of his knowledge of the rules. The hon. gentleman knows that the report presented by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) was not one that he composed himself, having sat and considered the matter for some months entirely on his own. The house gave the committee an instruction to bring in a report.

As the hon. member for York South so ably said, talk of majority reports and minority reports is hypocrisy. I have sat on committees with the hon. member. There is even one member on the other side of the house, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, (Mr. Allmand), who regularly issues his own minority press statement. But no issue has ever been taken over whether a committee's report is a minority report or a majority report; it is a report of the committee.

I suggest we might as well face the facts. Perhaps it is just as well that this debate is had during the first year of the reign of this Prime Minister in the 28th parliament, because it will show us how serious and sincere is the government about reforming the committee system. This debate will indicate whether the governments' action will constitute a challenge for the members of this house, and particularly whether members on the government side will be made to dance like puppets as the President of the Privy Council pulls the strings.

Mr. Speaker: Since there are no further contributions to this debate, I might try to make a ruling. For a while I was hoping that contributions would continue until ten o'clock, in which case I would have had further time to consider the interesting arguments adduced by hon. members in the course of this enlightening discussion on procedure.

I have to indicate to hon. members that, in my view many, if not all, of the arguments which were advanced by learned members of the opposition this evening in the course of this debate were essentially those which were presented for the consideration of the chair when the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) initially raised his point of order. He himself recognized this this evening, though I am sure that when he heard the lengthy presentations that followed his cursory submission to the house he must have felt a little unhappy that he had not taken the opportunity to repeat for the guidance of the Chair the lengthy and very cogent arguments that he had earlier submitted on July 2.

At that time I considered at length the arguments that were advanced by the hon. member for Peace River, by the hon. member for Edmonton West, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. With the advice, counsel and guidance of the clerks and other advisers who assist the Chair in such difficult matters, I considered all aspects of the problem. Following this consideration I reached the decision that is recorded in Hansard for July 3.

I am afraid that the situation has not changed. We have exactly the same situation this evening as we had originally. I ruled on the former occasion that the motion that had been proposed by the President of the Privy Council for the consideration of the house should be transferred to government orders under the provisions of Standing Order 21. As pointed out by the hon. member for York South, (Mr. Lewis) I had said that it is at the point we are now reaching that the anticipation rule might become operative in the sense that the minister's motion, if proceeded with, might block consideration of the committee report.

If I were asked to rule on this point at this time, I would have to say that I agree that our proceeding with the minister's motion at this time does effectively block consideration of the motion that might have been proposed by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

At the same time, I might say, having taken into account the arguments advanced by members of the opposition, that if the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton had moved his motion I would have recognized that the rule of anticipation would have given his motion precedence, that I would have allowed his motion to go forward in preference to the motion that is now before the house in the name of the President of the Privy Council. I would have so ruled in view of the fact that our committees have now taken on a new significance. Under the rules of the house and in the reports of the Standing Committee on Procedure we have given a new role to our committees. Since the hon. member's motion refers to the report of a committee of the House of Commons, I would have recognized that the hon. member's motion had precedence over the motion of the President of the Privy Council and, if moved, would have blocked the minister's motion.

However, the minister's motion is now before the house. Certainly the rules allow the minister to make a motion at the present time. The motion having been moved, I suggest to hon. members that it has to be considered.

Many other issues were brought before the house for the consideration of the Chair, though I am not sure they were entirely relevant. Hon. members want me to substitute my judgment and my ruling for that of the House of Commons. If a majority of the members of the house think that this motion should not be adopted, that it should be voted down and we should proceed later on with another motion, then it is up to them to take this course. Hon. members should not ask the Speaker to do this on their behalf. My duty and my responsibility is to rule according to the rules that hon. members adopt and pass, and which they expect the Speaker to respect on their behalf. I think it might be a dictatorial act on the part of the Chair to assume the responsibility that hon. members are suggesting be placed on its shoulders, and I am not prepared to do so. As the servant of the house I must respect the rules. Therefore, I suggest to hon. members that the motion is properly before the house at this time and must be considered.

Whether I approve of the procedure, whether I think it is in accord with the new and exalted role that we would like to assign to our committees, is another matter. I am not sure whether I am entitled to have an opinion about this; certainly if I do have one I cannot tell the house what it is. I will humbly and with good grace accept the role which hon. members accord to their Speaker and be the servant of the house, rule according to the rules which they themselves have adopted, and say that this motion is properly before the house at this time.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on another point of order. I now wish to place before Your Honour the second of the three points of order I wish to raise with regard to this particular issue. Your Honour has decided on one and we have no recourse except to consider what action the house may take with respect to an hon. member who, as chairman of a committee, has not carried out instructions the house gave to him. My second point relates to an entirely different point of order. The house is asked to consider and adopt the recommendation of the standing committee of this house. It is also asked to adopt a motion of the President of the Privy Council. I submit to Your Honour that the motion is out of order in as much as it proposes that this house shall adopt a Standing Order already rejected by this house in this session as a substantive part of proposed standing order 16A which was negatived on December 20, 1968. Many hon. members in this house, and many outside the house have noticed a striking similarity between the government's present proposed order and the order which was negatived. On December 20, 1968, the order was read for resuming debate on the motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) the order being that the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 4, 1968, be concurred in.

With the unanimous consent of this house the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) moved, and I quote:

> That the motion be amended by inserting . . . after the words "Procedure of the House," the words "except the proposal with respect to the proposed Standing Order 16A".

I repeat the last words, "except the proposal with respect to the proposed Standing Order 16A". It is now well known that the motion of the President of the Privy Council was agreed to. The main motion as amended was agreed to. That motion, as amended, then read:

> That the Fourth Report of the Special Committee on Procedure of the House, except the proposal with respect to the Standing Order 16A, presented to the House on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in.

The report, as so amended, was then concurred in. The standing orders proposed in that report are now in effect, except standing order 16A. The house made its will known last year. Obviously, the main motion as amended put a positive question and a negative question, and to these questions the house answered that it did not concur in the committee's recommendation to adopt rule 16A but that it did concur in the remainder of the committee's recommendation. If it had been intended that no decision be taken on rule 16A, the procedure exists under which this matter could have been deleted or withdrawn.

The rule of the United Kingdom House of Commons which was adopted on April 2, 1604, is as follows:

> That a question being once made, and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again, but must stand as a judgment of the House.

That rule has been accepted in this house over and over again. In the face of the judgment of this house made last December that rule 16A should be negatived, the house is now being asked to adopt rules 75A, 75B and 75C. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that essentially the two proposed standing orders are the same. Each provides a procedure under which a minister of the Crown may, subject to agreement or consultation with a designated committee or group, bring in or move a time allocation order. In the case of rule 16A, he could do that with respect to all the business of the house, including public bills, and in the case of rules 75A, 75B and 75C he may do that with respect to public bills.

I submit that qualitatively, former proposed rule 16A and the present rules 75A, 75B and 75C, are identical. Quantitatively there is a slight difference. Nevertheless, they are the same in concept fundamentally. There is no question about that at all. The point at issue is, however, that the house, in rejecting the quantitatively larger rule 16A, has also rejected proposed rules 75A, 75B and 75C.

We are not without guidance on this subject, Mr. Speaker. The most recent precedent was the salutory and wise decision rendered by Mr. Speaker, on January 16, 1967. It is reported in House of Commons Journals for March 11, 1968, at page 753. I shall refer to this precedent later. It may be remembered on that occasion this house had rejected a tax bill and, in violation of the long established principles and precedents of centuries, parliament was ruthlessly violated by the government. Having stripped parliament of its cloak of decency, the government brought in a tax bill similar in many respects, although differing in quantum, to a previous tax bill. At that time the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raised the question of the right of the government to so proceed. On March 11, 1968, Your Honour rendered a decision. I will not read it all; the lateness of the hour prevents my so doing. In part, Your Honour said this:

> It then becomes a matter of interpretation or judgment whether, in the words of the rule,—

That is the rule I have already quoted. Your Honour of course had that in mind. I continue:

> —the motion offered—

That was the motion to accept the new tax bill.

> —is substantially the same as one on which the decision of the House has been expressed. The only way to interpret the two measures in relation to the rule is to compare the proposals offered in each case: that is, in the previous Bill and in the new Bill now before the House.

Your Honour continued at pages 755 and 756. I think your decision is well known. It was that the bill was not to be proceeded with but was to be withdrawn. I submit that the two cases, the case of the previous bill and the case of the rules, are identical and on all fours. The second tax bill contained the principles of the first, although the quantum of tax was different. Here, we have two measures which touch on the procedure of the house. Each provides for a time allocation order at the instigation of a minister after certain preliminary procedures have been followed. I submit to Your Honour, therefore, that since this house in December of last year, by accepting the motion of the President of the Privy Council and concurring in the rules then brought in, negatived the right of the government to bring in rule 16A. At this time, therefore, the motion the President of the Privy Council seeks to bring before the house should not be allowed.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I deal with three of the points raised by the hon. member. In the first place, may I draw Your Honour's attention to page 579 of Votes and Proceedings of December 20, 1968, where this house, as hon. members have already mentioned, instructed the committee to consider the allocation of time proposals. Those proposals referred to allocation of time orders which could be brought by ministers of the Crown after they had been in consultation with the committee.

Mr. Stanfield: We are not dealing with a committee report.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is quite right. I hope the Leader of the Opposition will give me an opportunity to put my argument to the house.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister has lots of time.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I point out that at that time the house recognized it would consider later in this session the question of an allocation of time procedure. It specifically instructed the committee to consider, for the purpose of having that matter further considered in this house, an allocation of time procedure along the lines of the proposal put forward by my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture. This invited full consideration of the British practice which, as hon. members know, provides for the right of the minister to make a motion for the purpose of allocating time for debates. In fact, the house at that time gave every indication in the proceedings which occurred that day that it wished this question of allocation to be brought to a final decision in this session. It did not clearly at that time disentitle the house from further considering allocation of time proposals along the lines of that which I propose in my motion.

The second matter is with regard to the terms of 16A. If I have an opportunity of debating the substantive proposals, I will go into at some length the manner in which the proposed 75(A), (B) and (C) differ from 16A. I suggest they differ very substantially in the form of procedure provided. There appeared to be concurrence on the other side of the house at the time they were under consideration.

Going back to my previous point, I think the real consideration to be looked at is how the committee could be seized with the question at all if, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said, it was out of order. If so, how can we give further consideration in the course of this session, to the question of allocation of time at the instance of the minister?

The final point that has to be made is that in effect the proceedings which occurred on December 20, as hon. members know, were, as a whole, the subject matter of agreement among all parties in the house. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) withdrew his amendment; I withdrew my proposal with regard to 16A and we arrived at a certain proposal with regard to dealing with the subject matter further. In other words, I submit that the various proceedings on that afternoon of December 20 should be regarded as a whole. They are not to be regarded as a negativing by this house of the principle of time allocation, including the possibility that time be allocated in accordance with an order to be introduced by a minister. For that reason, the motion I put this evening is not out of order.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) for getting to the floor ahead of me in the course of this debate because the argument he has put forward is so easy to demolish. I had hoped he would advance it, and he has done so.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has already read citations which lay down the basic rules of parliament in the matter of dealing again in the same session with something which has already been dealt with earlier in the session. To have this basic law as part of my remarks, I wish to read a couple of citations from Beauchesne. I draw attention first to citation 194(1):

(1) A motion or amendment cannot be brought forward which is the same in substance as a question which has already been decided, because a proposition being once submitted and carried in the affirmative or negative cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the house.

Citation 200(1) states this again. I read it for emphasis:

(1) An old rule of parliament reads: "That a question being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the house." Unless such a rule were in existence, the time of the house might be used in the discussion of motions of the same nature and contradictory decisions would be sometimes arrived at in the course of the same session.

That rule is quoted again in citation 203(7). The wording there is the same, so I need not read it. May I also point out, Mr. Speaker, that this rule has been used as the basis for some important decisions from the Chair in recent years. I refer in particular to the effort of Mr. Pickersgill, the former minister of transport, who back in January of 1967 tried to get a reversal of a decision that had been made on matters having to do with Crowsnest Pass rates. The Chair ruled very clearly on that occasion that a decision had been taken by the house in committee of the whole and it could not be reversed in that session, even though the attempt to reverse it was spelled out in language that was slightly different from the motion which had earlier been defeated.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has also drawn attention to the 5 per cent surtax measure that was defeated on third reading in the last parliament, following which the former minister of finance tried to bring in another measure which was so similar to the first one that the Chair had to rule it out of order. The rule is there. The practice of the house is clear and so are the rulings of the Chair.

The President of the Privy Council now stands and says, oh, but just a minute, a motion was passed by this house on December 20, 1968, which covers the matter. What did that motion say, Mr. Speaker? The motion said that this matter was to be referred to a committee, the committee was to discuss and consider this matter and it was given authority to bring back a report. I suggest that if the President of the Privy Council had not brought in his motion, but had let the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) move concurrence in the report of the committee, it would be in order. It would be in keeping with the instruction that was given to that committee by the house.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the decision of the house on December 20, 1968, that gave the committee the authority to deal with this matter and bring in a report and their recommendation was in keeping with the rule, provided it was done that way. When the President of the Privy Council seeks to bring in a government notice of motion, a proposition that changes the decision that was taken on December 20, he is just as far out of line as was Mr. Pickersgill and the former minister of finance.

This is the kind of thing that happens, Mr. Speaker, when you start trying to dictate to parliament, instead of achieving these things by a process of consultation and getting along together, arriving at some kind of consensus. That is the tragedy of this debate we are now going to have. We must get along. We got along for four or five months on the basis of arriving at one consensus after another. Now, it has been decided that we are going to deal at arm's length and so the minister resorts to these various devices. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, this point of order would not be one that could be raised if we were dealing with the motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). He would have had the authority of the motion passed last December 20. But no, he sits in his seat, not saying a word, and apparently the other six Liberal members of that committee have concurred in this process. So, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) brings in a motion which is in defiance of the basic rule of parliament, an old rule that has been brought up to date by yourself, sir, which says that a decision having been taken the matter cannot be raised again in the same session.

The President of the Privy Council says that there are some differences between 75c and 16A. Oh, yes, there are some differences but the basic proposition in 75c is the same as the basic proposition in 16A, namely, that if the government house leader cannot get the concurrence of the house leaders of the other parties for a time allocation order, he can bring in such an order himself.

There is a slight difference. Last December we talked about meetings of the Business Committee that would be held in the shower of the President of the Privy Council. Well, we do not have that kind of arrangement now. We do not have a formal meeting of the committee under 75c but we have the same fundamental proposition that the government house leader can by himself, unilaterally, dictatorially, tell this house what time allocation he is going to make. In principle, in essence 16A and 75c are exactly the same.

The President of the Privy Council also has the nerve to stand up and say that no decision was taken last December 20. Mr. Speaker, what nonsense are we supposed to take in this place? We had a long debate last December on the whole question of the rules that were brought in. As hon. members will recall, practically all of us were in support of most of the rules that were in that package. In fact if I recall correctly I was in favour of all of them but 16A, as were most hon. members.

As I say, we had a long debate and the debate zeroed in on 16A. As a result of that debate the house, by means of compromise, by withdrawal of one motion and amendment of another, reached a decision and, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is just as much a decision as if the house were to vote tonight on the straight motion the government is trying to move.

What was that decision? The decision was that 16A, in the form in which it was before us, was not acceptable to the House of Commons. Mr. Speaker, that proposition that 16A was not acceptable was agreed to on December 20, 1968, unanimously. It was a decision concurred in by every member of the House of Commons. Granted, so far as the government was concerned, there was a condition. The condition was that the matter was being referred back to the committee, or to a new standing committee that was being set up. That is quite true, but nevertheless even though there was that condition in the mind of the government the fact of the matter is that the decision was made and 16A was out. We have been operating ever since under the new package of rules that did not include 16A. It was every bit as much a decision of the House of Commons that 16A was rejected as it was a decision that we accepted all the other rules in the package.

I come back to the condition upon which the government accepted the decision of last December. That condition was that the matter be referred to a committee. At that time we were dealing with the report of a special committee on the procedure of the House of Commons, but under the new rules we provided that there would be a Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Procedure and Organization. It was set up under the new rules and later the same day, December 20, a special motion was passed referring this matter to that standing committee.

The President of the Privy Council says that this thing has to be taken in its entirety as a package—the whole content of what was done last December. He is perfectly right, and the whole content is perfectly clear. The house took a decision against 16A but the House of Commons, by unanimous decision, made a special arrangement for the subject of time allocation to be referred to the standing committee with the authority for that committee to bring back a report recommending that something be done about it.

As I said before, and I repeat it now, if this were being done that way then the rule against dealing with something that has been dealt with in the same session would be covered by that proposition. But it is not so covered. What we have got before us is a government motion that seeks to reverse a decision made by the House of Commons unanimously last December, and it is a government notice of motion which does not have the consent of the entire House of Commons.

I have done a little homework on this as a possible point of order, but I was doing most of my research on the question as the hon. member for Peace River was speaking and I ran across certain citations which, unfortunately, I did not note, but I know they are there. They make the point that in a situation like this something like this can be done only by unanimous consent. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the only possibility by which the government, as distinct from the committee of the silent member for Grenville-Carleton, can introduce a motion to reverse the decision taken last December is by unanimous consent. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you cannot quarrel with that proposition.

This is the straitjacket the government has got itself into through the means by which it is proposing to operate. I submit that this is a clear violation of one of the oldest rules of parliament, that the government has no right to put this motion before us and, as a matter of fact, that Your Honour cannot possibly see this as a simple proposition.

I see that Your Honour is looking at the clock, as I am. My hon. friends are encouraging me to keep going. The only difficulty is that there are three late shows coming on at ten o'clock. I have the first of them and I have not had much chance to prepare for it. But it does seem to me that this is a point to which Your Honour should give consideration. I would like to look up the precise citations I was referring to a moment ago and therefore, Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock.

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SOCIAL SECURITY—INCREASED PENSIONS TO MEET COST OF LIVING

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, May 29 as recorded in Hansard at page 9214, I asked this question:

> Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the ever-widening gap between the level of the consumer price index and the 2 per cent increases which are permitted annually to those on old age security pensions, is the government considering amending the act to permit these increases to reflect the full extent of the increases in the cost of living?
> Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.
> Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

• (10:00 p.m.)

I want to come back in a moment to as strong a comment as I can make about that monosyllabic answer of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). Before I do so let me indicate what we are talking about when we refer to the ever-widening gap between the level of the consumer price index and the amount of the pensions our old age penisoners are receiving.

The present $75 level was fixed in 1963, some six years ago. In 1965 a bill was passed which brought in the Canada Pension Plan and amended the old age security act in various respects. It provided for a cost of living increase in the old age security pension, but provided that it was to be limited to 2 per cent in any one year.

I mention these two dates, 1963 and 1965, because I think in considering the position of our pensioners, one must start from one of those two years. One must start, either from 1963 when the pension was fixed at $75, or from 1965 when it was decided by law that there was to be this increase due to the cost of living. What has happened?

In 1963 the consumer price index on the old basis of 1949 equalling 100 stood at 133.0. In 1965 it stood at 138.7, and now in 1969 it stands at 161.4. That is the consumer price index on the old 1949 basis, not on the new basis which has been established recently, but in order to make comparisons I have to use like quantities.

This means that since 1963 when the pension was fixed at $75 the cost of living has gone up by 28.4 percentage points, or by 21 per cent over the cost of living in 1963. By the same manner of arithmetic the cost of living has gone up since 1965 by 22.7 percentage points, or 16 per cent over the cost of living as it stood in 1965. Members can take a choice. If they work from 1965, the year the law was passed to provide an increase, that increase is now of the order of 16 per cent. If they work from 1963 when the pension was set at $75, the increase is now in the order of 21 per cent.

In others words, the $75 pension should now be $87 per month, if you work it from the year 1965, or $90.75 a month if you work it from 1963. Yet, as hon. members know, all that has happened is that two 2 per cent increases have been added, a total of only 4 per cent, so that the pension now stands at $78. For the purposes of the argument I will settle for the lower figure. It should be at $87 right now to keep faith with the decision of this parliament in 1965, that we were going to raise the pension in accordance with the rise in the cost of living. In any event it is only $78. This is just the same as though we were taking $9 out of the pockets of every person in Canada who is drawing an old age security pension.

It is not good enough to go on telling us week after week, month after month, that all these matters are under review. This involves a principle and an obligation. As a matter of justice we ought to insist that the time has come to amend the Old Age Security Act and increase that ceiling in order that the increase in pension will reflect not just 2 per cent but whatever the actual increase in the cost of living happens to be.

A friend has reminded me, and he does not need to because this has been my song all along, that we have to go further than this. We have to give our elderly people a share of the increase in productivity. Surely, the least we can do is give them the full measure of the increase in the cost of living.

I see you are moving to the edge of your chair, Mr. Speaker, so in conclusion let me say what bothers me most about the answer given to me by the minister on May 29. That is the ease with which he just said "No". That is the answer we get all the time from this government.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He has had a lot of practice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The answer is "No" to these old age pensioners, to war veterans, to retired civil servants, to railway pensioners—to anyone in this pension field.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Nyet.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Nyet, that is the language they speak over there. This is one of the most serious questions facing this country. We must make sure that our retired people have a share of the increased productivty of this society. It is not good enough to go on answering "No". The time for action has come.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we often say in French that you know a good cook by her recipes. Well, I dare say that you know the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre by his questions which are always in the same area.

I agree with the hon. member who says that the old age pension, the guaranteed income, in short, all the different kinds of pensions are not high enough. On the other hand, I may comfort him by quoting some statistics to show him what the Canadian government spends on these different kinds of pensions.

Were I to tell the hon. member that the government is in the process of revising all the social welfare legislation, he would reply: This is nothing new, the minister has said that before. He was shocked when the minister said no last May 29. And if the minister had said something else, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would have objected in some other way.

Tonight, he choses to object in this way because the minister has simply told him no. If the minister had answered: We are in the process of considering the legislation as a whole, he would have said: It is too little, too late, or something like that. One way or the other, I understand his position as a member of the opposition party, and I hope he will understand mine as a government member.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may well admit—

Mr. Davis Lewis (York South): He could answer yes.

Mr. Loiselle: No, he cannot say "yes" when it is not "yes".

Mr. Lewis: The minister could answer "yes".

Mr. Loiselle: Yes, and what argument would the member then bring up?

Mr. Speaker, the member will surely remember that it was the Liberal party that decided to lower from 70 to 65 the age of eligibility for the old age pension.

And so, next year, from the 1st of January, that is in five months, every Canadian citizen of 65 or more will be eligible to the old age pension; that will cost the government an additional $600 million a year.

The old age security pension now costs, according to the budget for 1969-70, $1,500 million. In 1970-71, it will cost $1,620 million.

With regard to the guaranteed income supplement, according to the budget for 1969-70, it will cost the federal government $269 million more, and in 1970-71, $286 million.

However, the 2 per cent increase, for 1969-70, which is taken into account in the figures quoted a while ago—

AGRICULTURE—QUEBEC—NET INCOME OF INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to point out to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) the general displeasure of the manufactured milk producers whose income is decreasing as a result of the government dairy policy for the year 1969-70.

There is a tendency at times to blame the farmers for many things. Still, in 1966, the government itself was concerned about the decrease in dairy production. Indeed, the then Minister of Agriculture stated, on March 23, 1966, and I quote:

> Unless the producer's confidence in his ability to make a decent living from dairy farming is restored, we face the prospect of shortages.

And so, a policy was adopted to encourage the farmers to increase their production, to enlarge their farms with a view to making their operations more profitable, and to provide the dairy production that is necessary for Canadian consumption.

The same day the former Minister of Agriculture said that the main cause which induced the government to act was the great number of dairy producers who were abandoning this industry in order to raise pigs and cattle. He said also that he was concerned with the fact that a great number of dairy producers had given up agriculture so that Canada was facing the possibility of a great shortage of dairy products necessary for national consumption.

He also said that we needed productive and adequate lands and that measures had been taken to this end through the Farm Credit Corporation and through ARDA. The present minister said this: I do not see how we will help the farmers by giving them more credit, by helping them to get into debt, unless we get more involved in marketing and particularly by giving more protection to our producers.

Now, on March 31, 1969, the Minister of Agriculture announced a new dairy policy. According to this policy there was a reduction of the quota price. I am not prepared to blame the whole policy but I am opposed to the established price and to the export tax.

Let us remember that in 1967 a march on Ottawa was organized by the farmers. At that time the Minister of Agriculture came to meet them in front of the parliament buildings. I was among them and the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé) told us that we were right to make claims, that we should have organized our march on Ottawa ten years before and that we had been very patient.

Therefore, once again we had hoped that the government would establish a long term dairy policy, that prices would get stabilized and that with an effort, we would finally succeed in solving the problem.

In 1968, which was an election year, the government which was then a minority government decided to raise the subsidy to $1.31.

That served our purpose. We were happy about it. The farmers too were happy. The year 1968 was a rather good year as far as agriculture was concerned, and especially the dairy industry.

However, in 1969 we had a majority government. The price of milk was reduced, the dairy policy was disrupted and today the dairy producers' plight is desperate. Those who tried to answer the call or our governments in order to get better organized, to modernize their equipment and improve the quality of their milk so as to receive a sufficient income in order to survive, had to get into debt.

Mr. Speaker, it is only in the agricultural field that salaries went down in 1969 in Canada. The farm worker is the only one to be penalized. In spite of the labour surplus on the labour market, it was recognized that a man who works is entitled to a reasonable salary and salaries as a whole, were not reduced. Thank God, we must be happy about such a policy.

The same thing should be done, I think, in the dairy industry. Those who organized themselves in order to be able to provide the necessary efforts and production in the dairy field should not be penalized.

Now the April Commission, appointed by the Quebec government, presented its report last year. According to that Commission, the farm worker is not hard to please and gets only 83 cents per hour for his work, while keeping a heard of 30 milk cows producing an average of 9,000 lbs. of milk.

In 1949, Mr. Speaker, butter was selling at 63 cents a pound and the hourly wage of skilled workers was averaging $1.25. For each of his working hours, a man could get two pounds of butter.

Now in 1969, the price of butter is 71 cents a pound and the average hourly wage in Canada as a whole, is $2.93. For every working hour, the worker can get four pounds of butter.

Mr. Speaker, a number of farmers will be severely penalized this year and will have to sell part of their production at $3.13 per cwt., after having paid the export tax. I am using the word "tax" because the former Minister of Agriculture had stated, in answer to a question, which was asked on March 23, 1966, and I quote:

> The levy on exports is not in the form of government payments; it is a levy from the producers.

That is the reason why I am using the word "tax", because of the expression used by the minister himself.

The present minister is very well aware of the situation, as he stated in the house that the essential problem in agriculture was that of the very low prices and that certain steps had to be taken to bring them up.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question, as reported in Hansard on June 23, asks the minister's opinion as to whether or not the lower price obtained by the farmer for his manufactured milk, taking account of the export tax, would contribute to an increase in income in 1969 as compared with 1968.

It would be possible to quote a lot of statistics to show that in 1968 there was an increase in gross receipts, farm cash receipts in Quebec, compared with 1967, and so on. I certainly do not wish to try to make that case here tonight, because it is not my intention to assert that the farmer is getting enough, or too much, for the sale of his products. The question in connection with the change in the hold back—what the hon. member refers to as the export tax—from the subsidy, is far simpler than that.

From the time this subsidy program was introduced, farmers accepted the fact that there would be a hold back on the subsidy in any year sufficient to pay for the losses or shortfall with respect to the support program, taking into account what was obtained on the international market for those milk products, particularly cheese and skim milk powder which it was necessary to sell some on the international market.

The hon. member knows this very well. He knows it very well because I have explained to him in the agriculture committee and in many other places that the change we made this year in increasing the holdback was necessary because there was production over and above the quota which was supported at 20 cents a pound and 65 cents for butterfat. With respect to any of these products which have to be sold on the international market, losses are incurred by the Canadian Dairy Commission which must be paid for out of the holdback. The change was made in anticipation of the probable cost for the current dairy year, 1969-70. In addition, we increased substantially—in fact, we doubled—the holdback on the amount of production which was over the quota. It is a well known fact that unless we are able to keep this production within our total domestic requirements, we will be losing more and more money on the international market simply because prices in that market are very depressed at the present time. That is all that has been done, and it is in complete compliance with the policy announced by the government when it entered into the dairy support program in the first instance.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—CALL FOR SERVICES OF MEDICAL DOCTORS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on June 26 I asked the minister a question concerning the very unfavourable situation regarding medical care in Canada. In an address to the International Association of Nurses in Montreal he had estimated that out of every 1,000 people who need medical attention, only 275 see a doctor, that only 10 out of the 275 went to hospital. The minister went on to add that not all of the remaining 990 people needed hospital care.

I would like to ask the minister if he could state or estimate what number, over and above the ten, were left without hospital care because of the shortage of hospital beds. I would have to remind the minister that it was probably unwise to take away the grant of $2,000 per bed for new hospital construction, and to cut the health resources fund, which would mean cutting some beds out of the proposed university teaching complexes.

Getting back to the 72 per cent of the people who do not see a doctor for one reason or another, is not the crux of the argument that people who need medical care are not getting it? This is because there are not enough general practitioners to go around. It is estimated by experienced physicians in this field that the work load is just about 25 per cent too great. We have today about one general practitioner for every 2,000 people. For the work to be done reasonably well, we need at least one general practitioner for every 1,500 people.

This is the point I have made to the minister over and over again. I have asked that medical schools be operated during the summer. This could step up the graduation of doctors by 25 per cent and help overcome the shortage of doctors. The answer was always a promise to confer with the provinces and the universities. To date, this is as far as the matter has gone.

The minister states that something must be done. Let us do it. I congratulated him on his wisdom and celerity in handling the cigarette smoking issue. Let us enable the general practitioners to do the diagnosing and treating. Unless this is done there is no point sending out public health nurses to find those who need treatment, because there will be no beds, and no doctors to provide the treatment.

If the government want to help ease the work load of the doctors a little, let them cut out the paper work that is inundating their desks and menacing their hospital work, taking time that is better spent with the patient. If this bureaucracy keeps increasing, the doctor will become a glorified referral secretary; he simply will not have the time to see his patient and diagnose his illness.

In many cases general practitioners are so harassed by this work load that their image and their communications have suffered. They are forced to admit patients to hospital without a proper clinical workup; they then write orders for a vast number of investigations in the hope that one of them will help in the diagnosis. This is very unfair to the doctors of this country as well as very costly to the government. Medical costs are increasing, I am told, at the rate of about $1 per person per month in Ontario.

We must not forget that the general practitioner is the only one who can give comprehensive care. He treats the baby, the child, the mother, the whole family, and in 95 illnesses out of 100 he is equipped to do so. It therefore follows that no medicare plan can work without a sufficient supply of general practitioners. The federal government has made medicare compulsory. It is up to the government to co-operate in supplying the doctors required in order to make the plan work successfully.

In conclusion, I look forward to hearing what are the minister's plans. It is his responsibility to make sure that the Canadian people receive adequate medical treatment.

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the hon. member on behalf of the minister. May I ask for your indulgence in case I am unable to complete my reply in three minutes. The federal government is making every possible effort to increase medical care to the people of Canada. This is why we adopted the national medicare program—to see that there was universal accessibility to physician care for everyone. In addition, the federal government in combination with the provinces will be promoting a consolidation of health care facilities on the municipal, regional and provincial levels to see that they are employed to their greatest potentials.

The two levels of government are also hopeful of seeing reforms in medical education as well as inter-mural and extra-mural reforms through all the various health professions in the crucial matters of destruction of services, types of personnel most suited to the health problems involved and patterns of medical practice. As one example, we hope and trust there will be a widespread growth of such commodities as interdisciplinary family-care practice teams and community-level health centres.

To aid in the search for the best possible answers the federal-provincial conference of health ministers last year commissioned a set of task forces to look into the question of health services.

Four of these are looking specifically at the fields of beds and facilities, utilization, operational efficiency, and salaries and wages. Others are looking at the prices and the delivery of medical care and also at the cost of public health services.

The task forces will provide us with a set of new, unique and dynamic recommendations which will go a long way in improving health care facilities for all Canadians. On the basis of these recommendations the federal-provincial conference of health ministers will be moving in for action this coming autumn.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, July 8, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PROCEDURE

NEW PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEBATING TIME ALLOTMENT—WITHDRAWAL OF MOTION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a suggestion with respect to today's business in the house which I hope might find general acceptance. As you know, government order No. 99 standing in my name is a motion to add proposed standing orders 75A, 75B and 75C. As I indicated last night, the advantage of this motion over the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) is that my motion would enable the house to amend directly the proposed standing orders, if that be desired, rather than refer them back to the standing committee for amendment. Although the former motion would obviously be the simpler procedure, I think it was apparent from last evening's discussion that that motion would be resisted by some hon. members and indeed that there would be protracted objections by way of points of order and perhaps questions of privilege before the merits of the proposals could be discussed.

It seems to me therefore that the quickest way to get down to the merits of the proposed standing orders would be to enable my colleague, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, to put his motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It seems to me that this is what hon. members were seeking last night.

Mr. Woolliams: Did the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) talk to you?

An hon. Member: You must be overworked.

Mr. Trudeau: Do you want flexibility or not?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would be quite prepared to yield on my motion, in case there is any risk that as a result of the Chair's ruling last night my motion would have precedence, and if necessary, with the unanimous consent of the house, will be glad to withdraw it so the hon. member can move his motion.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Whether or not the minister wishes to withdraw his motion is a matter for him. The position we have taken regarding the point on which Your Honour has partly ruled is that certain vestigial rights are possessed by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. If he chooses to exercise his rights, or, rather, to carry out the duty imposed on him by the committee, we shall, of course, contribute to the debate which will follow in accordance with our responsibilities. But we shall do this without compromising the position we have taken, namely that the President of the Privy Council had no right to bring on the motion he did in the circumstances which existed.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As the house is well aware, Mr. Speaker, the only reason we are still in session is to deal with this question of procedure. It is not our desire to stay and deal with it at all. But the government has reached a certain decision, and so we are here. We feel that if we must deal with this question we should deal with it according to the rules and we are glad, therefore, that the President of the Privy Council has seen fit to let the house proceed in accordance with the standing orders.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, first I want to say how happy I am. The attitude of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) proves that the House of Commons is not wasting its time, that the perhaps virulent debate of last night has borne fruit and that the President of the Privy Council having slept on it has, so to speak, seen the light.

Mr. Speaker, we are happy that the President of the Privy Council has realized that we were right concerning our express demand that the Standing Orders and the work of the committees be respected. On behalf of my colleagues, I wish to congratulate him for it and to encourage him, throughout the whole debate on the procedure, to stay as positive and as open to the suggestions of the opposition.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Having participated extensively in the debate on points of order in connection with the motion of the President of the Privy Council I would say that the points which have arisen in connection therewith, and the ruling which Your Honour has made, become an academic exercise: many of the arguments were not answered and it cannot serve as a precedent.

Mr. Speaker: Whether the hon. member for Edmonton West likes it or not, the very learned ruling which the Chair has given is inscribed in the annals of the House of Commons and will guide generations of parliamentarians to come.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the house be prepared to give consideration to following the procedure adopted in the debate some years ago, when we were discussing the question of the flag? It was agreed that the debate which then took place would be postponed day by day in accordance with the normal routine of our proceedings so that hon. members who had important and urgent questions to ask might have an opportunity to put them before the house.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Baldwin: I know the Prime Minister has been away for some time and I am sure he will have all kinds of answers ready.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should put the motion, because at this point the question is academic. The point of order can be raised later.

Mr. Baldwin: May I be permitted to advise Your Honour that if the hon. member wishes to speak we intend to pursue the same point of order as the one I raised yesterday; it applies with equal validity to the motion which is about to be put.

Mr. Speaker: I will put the motion and the hon. member can then raise his point of order.

[Mr. Fortin.]

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton) moved:

That the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, presented to the house on Friday, June 20, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Peace River has a point of order.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour will probably recall from the interesting session that we had last night that I had occasion to rise on a point of order in respect of the motion that the President of the Privy Council was struggling to make. That point of order was a very simple one, and though tempted as I am I do not intend to traverse the ground that I then covered. For the purposes of my point of order I hope that the house will take into consideration the fact that the things I said last night apply equally to the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

My basic point last night was that this house decided last December that this particular question was then negatived by the proceedings of the house, and consequently cannot be brought forward for discussion now. I raise the same point of order at this time. I ask the house to take into account what I then said and apply them to this context. At the time of the adjournment yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was half way through a very interesting and persuasive argument that I assume he is going to seek permission to resume at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would be pleased to hear from hon. members, but let me assure them that a lot of arguing will be needed to convince the Chair that the motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is not properly before the house. There might have been some doubt in connection with the other motion but the situation has now changed. However, I would be prepared to hear argument and make a decision on the point. The hon. member for Peace River submitted an argument yesterday which I listened to with great attention and which I have studied since that time. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has participated in the debate, and if he feels that he should complete the argument that he was making last night I will of course be pleased to hear him further, following which I shall be in a position to reach a decision.

Apparently the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre does not wish to pursue the argument he was making last night.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the reason for my not rising is that the argument that I was putting forward last night had to do with the motion moved by the President of the Privy Council. I contended that whatever authority the house might have given to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to bring back a proposal, it did not give such authority to the President of the Privy Council. That was the argument I was making last night.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre obviously is correct and he is confirming what I was suggesting a moment ago. Whatever validity his argument might have had yesterday, it loses much of its strength in view of the fact that what the house is now doing is considering a motion by the chairman of the committee on the instructions of the house itself. I think this would have to be my ruling on the point of order that was raised last evening.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I have a moment to thank you for saying that I was correct in my argument last night. It is good to have that on the record.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, may I speak very briefly to the point of order that has arisen and ask the President of the Privy Council whether it is his intention or the intention of any member of the ministry to bring in an amendment to the report that is going to be presented to us?

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has the floor.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Skeena on a point of order.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I raise a matter that I think deserves some consideration by the house. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been active in a safari to certain parts of western Canada. There exists in Canada at the moment a very strong, growing discontent among the native Indian people about the policy of this government. I wonder if, in order that we can get on—

• (2:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Hon. members can yell, "Order" all they like, but the native Indian people of this country don't give a damn what those hon. members think. They are concerned about realities. I will put the matter in the form of a request. I wonder if the Prime Minister would consider allowing us to have an oral question period, in order that some of these very important matters may be raised. If they are not to be raised, Mr. Speaker, we may have some tribal wars in this nation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Our people are not playing games, as hon. members will find out for themselves.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, although Your Honour has ruled on the second point of order that was raised, because of changed circumstances arising from the fact that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) now wishes to proceed with the report of the committee, may I put before Your Honour another point of order which I ask Your Honour to consider and, hopefully, which all hon. members of the house including hon. members on the other side may also consider. My point involves, Mr. Speaker, the whole question of the validity of the government's right to proceed as it has been, in an attempt to change or add to the rules of this house. Before Your Honour considers the substantial magnitude of our objection I seek to place before Your Honour some arguments arising out of constitutional implications which Your Honour may take under cognizance.

In the first place, I submit that proposed rule 75A as reported by the committee is invalid. The invalidity taints the remainder of proposed standing order 75. May I draw Your Honour's attention to sections 48 and 49 of the British North America Act which read as follows:

> 48. The presence of at least twenty members of the House of Commons shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the house for the Exercise of its powers; and for that purpose the Speaker shall be reckoned as a member.

49. Questions arising in the House of Commons shall be decided by a majority of voices other than that of the Speaker, and when the voices are equal, but not otherwise, the Speaker shall have a vote.

What does proposed standing order 75A do, Mr. Speaker? As I recall its wording, it proposes to put into the hands of the representatives of the parties the right to come to a decision which, automatically and with no further debate or discussion, shall become an order of this house. There are not 20 members who will make that decision. The standing order does not say that Your Honour must be present and so constitute the legal entity which the law requires in order to give effect to that decision.

May I also point out this further, collateral defect. Who are these representatives that are mentioned? Is there any certainty that they must be members of this house? Hon. members may say that I am quibbling only and that this is a technical irregularity. I suggest that when the government or a committee seeks to come to this house in order to suggest or impose changes or additions to the rules under which we operate, the government or the committee must be prepared to come here with a perfect case legally documented and based on our jurisprudence.

I suggest that the proposal would impose upon this house a standing order which would have the effect of placing in the hands of undefined and unnamed representatives the power to make an order as to allotment or limitation of time on any specific debate which shall automatically become an order of this house. I suggest this contravenes all the specific requirements of the British North America Act.

This is only the minor part of the point of order I propose to raise. Later on I will get into the particular aspect in a broader manner. It must be understood once and for all that, for all that has been said about this being a sovereign parliament and a sovereign house, this is not a technical expression of the facts. Unlike the mother of parliaments in the United Kingdom, this parliament derives powers. The rights and powers which this house has stem from statutes, the British North America Act and, I am ashamed to have to say, the Colonial Laws Validity Act.

I say in a collateral sense that while the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been playing silly games with the constitution, hiding experts in dark corners and having conferences which have been ineffective, the main issue that faces this parliament, our right to be a sovereign parliament and to make our own laws and rules, remains in jeopardy. Consequently I anticipate the rebuttal which may well be made, that this house has the right to do anything it wants. It has not, Mr. Speaker. It should have, but it has not. It is bound by the provisions of some of the statutes. I intend to quote some of these statutes to Your Honour as I develop what I consider to be one of the major aspects of this particular argument.

If one examines the constitutions of most of the countries which have received their independence from the United Kingdom, it will be seen in the enabling legislation in the constitutional statutes,—and I can quote two, dealing with the provinces of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland,—that in each instance there was set out in the statute providing for independence power in the hands of the legislature to make its rules, provide for its procedure and protect its privileges.

I suggest if one searches through the British North America Act from beginning to end, it will be found that, apart from clauses 48, 49 and one or two others dealing with money bills and the signification of bills for His Excellency's signature, there is nothing investing this house with the right to make rules of order and rules of procedure.

Hon. members should bear in mind that we are a legislature with a derived authority, not an authority such as obtains in the United Kingdom parliament, one which is derived from the strength, early beginnings, traditions, practices, precedents and the moods of the British parliamentary practice. Under these circumstances we are then driven back to the only statute which in any way purports to provide for the consideration of the establishment of rules, practice and procedure.

As I promised, I will refer the house to the Nova Scotia Act, passed in 1884, to illustrate my point. Section 20 provides the house and the legislature of that province with authority to establish rules of practice and also rules for the protection of its privileges.

The Newfoundland Act, which established the province of Newfoundland some years ago, provided precisely the same thing in sections 4 and 8. Jamaica and all the other dependencies in the West Indies have specific provisions in their statutes.

Now all we have left to rely on, Mr. Speaker, is the Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865, which in section 5(a) provides that a legislature, a representative legislature which is defined in the act, has the right to pass laws—I emphasize those words, "to pass laws"—providing for the constitution, for changes in the constitution, and for matters dealing with procedure and privileges relative to that legislature. The words used are "to pass laws in the manner and form provided."

The only law relating to Canada is, of course, the imperial statute of 1867, the British North America Act, which is largely silent on this issue except for the sections I have mentioned. I therefore suggest to Your Honour and this house that we are in a very grave position. As my research has developed, as I have examined these records and read some of the cases which went to the Privy Council, I have come to the conclusion that this parliament and previous parliaments have been most neglectful in failing to cover this very serious and grave omission.

The Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865 defines "colonial legislature"—I am sure the Prime Minister will be delighted to hear that word colonial—and "representative legislature." The two are not mutually exclusive; rather, a representative legislature is included within a colonial legislature, and in order to have any right at all even to pass laws we have to come within that definition, shameful though it may be.

An hon. Member: What year is this?

Mr. Baldwin: This year is 1969. I am glad some member of the government has awakened to know what day it is.

The power given a representative legislature only to make laws respecting procedure applies in the first instance at least to action by both chambers and the Governor General in the form of a bill, passed by both houses and given Royal Assent. I have already referred to this in the British North America Act.

The proviso contained in section 5 of the Colonial Laws Validity Act has operated in three ways. The first is by an imperial act of parliament, that is, the B.N.A. Act and amendments which entrench the quorum and majority rule in each chamber; the provision that a money bill cannot originate in the Senate, and in the Commons must be accompanied by the recommendation of the Governor General. Those are three aspects in which the British North America Act deals with procedure and privilege in respect of the legislature.

The second way in which it has operated has been by the royal instructions to the Governor General accompanying his Letters Patent, and the third way is by procedural laws of the Parliament of Canada, which are very rare.

It is also my recollection that there are some provisions in the Interpretation Act which do invest parliament with certain procedural rights. In this connection there is also the War Measures Act. Hon. members who have been in this house for some time will recall the debates which surrounded it. Finally there is the House of Commons Act, which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) discussed the other day, and which provides for the appointment of the Commissioners of Internal Economy and so on.

But, Mr. Speaker, even the passing of the Statute of Westminster and even the 1949 amendment to the constitution do not change this limitation on the capacity of this house to deal with matters of procedure. The 1949 amendment to the B.N.A. Act and the Statute of Westminster did allow an extension of powers so far as matters of the constitution are concerned, but they left strictly alone this question of dealing with matters of procedure. Not to this date, Mr. Speaker, save with the exceptions I have mentioned, has the Parliament of Canada passed a law to establish rules, regulations or standing orders for the Senate and the Commons or, alternatively, passed a law to empower each chamber to adopt its own rules or standing orders. No statute, no law has been passed within the meaning of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, and once more I repeat you search in vain in the B.N.A. Act to find such a right.

The House of Commons when it first sat on November 7, 1867, adopted of its own motion the rules, regulations and standing orders of the legislative assembly of the late Province of Canada, according to the Commons Journals of 1867-68. On November 15, 1867—I do not know whether I hear dissent or approval, Mr. Speaker. With this noise I find it rather difficult to place these matters before the house, matters which I think are of exceeding importance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: On November 15, 1867, the House of Commons appointed a special committee to assist Mr. Speaker in forming rules, regulations and standing orders for the government of the house. On December 20, 1867, the House of Commons concurred in the committee's report and adopted the standing orders recommended by the committee. The same unilateral method of adopting or amending our standing orders has been followed to this day, and a similar procedure has obtained in the Senate. The only lawful method, as set out in section 5 of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, has never been followed.

I have already pointed out that the Statute of Westminster, which did extend certain rights of the Parliament of Canada and of other dominion legislatures in respect of the constitution, did not touch this question of passing orders of practice and procedure, and the same applies to the 1949 amendment. Therefore I submit that it follows that the motion to concur in the committee's report as one respecting the procedures of this house is out of order, and does not comply with the authority given parliament in compliance with section 5 of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, which states that such a matter must be introduced as a bill, pass both houses, and receive Royal Assent. But even in the event it returns in that form it is questionable at the present time—and I raise this so that the government might give it some thought—that the house has a lawful procedure with which to deal with it.

I know, Mr. Speaker that you have expressed, as have your predecessors, certain limitations with respect to the decisions you make, but I think this matter goes so much to the root of our practice that it involves a careful inquiry as to how far Your Honour as the receiver of the rights, customs and traditions of this house, and as our protector, must take into account the argument I am making.

There was one very interesting case which I will cite to Your Honour, and then sit down. The State of New South Wales some years ago amended its constitution by providing that no amendment to the constitution to abolish the upper body should be accepted until there had been a popular referendum following which, if a majority was received in the referendum, the matter then could be brought back to the government and have Royal Assent by the representative of the Crown. A subsequent government desiring to short-circuit this proposal proposed two amendments to the constitution, one of which would strike out and repeal the section in question, and the other one had the effect of directly, by act of the legislature, abolishing the upper house. These two proposals passed the house and then there was an attempt to let them receive Royal Assent.

Before this was done two members of the legislature appealed. I point this out, not in terms of a threat but in terms of probability. This is an opportunity which is available to any citizen of Canada or any member of the house, if I am correct in my argument. Two members of the legislature can appeal to the court for a writ of prohibition to deny the right of the Crown to give royal assent, on the ground that the constitution and statutes of that country attached a certain condition that the condition had not been met, and that because of the section of the Colonial Laws Validity Act which I quoted it was impossible and illegal for this to be made the law of the country.

This went to the Privy Council, which included some of the most distinguished counsel who ever practised before that court. Stafford Cripp, D. M. Britt and others appeared. A judgment was delivered by Lord Sanky which I shall not quote, although I have it here. The judgment said very simply that despite the length of time which had elapsed the legislature, as all other legislatures, was bound by section 5 of the Colonial Laws Validity Act and under the circumstances the Privy Council declared that the sections were invalid because they had not followed the procedure which had been prescribed.

Yesterday we spent a great deal of time debating the procedural aspects of the matter with which we are now dealing and I know the house is quite anxious to get on with our business and reject the motion which may be placed by the hon. member. Therefore I shall not develop the argument at as great length as I could. Briefly, this is it: We are a legislature with a derived authority; the only way in which we can pass proper standing orders governing our practices, procedures and privileges is by an act of parliament, and the proposal of the hon. member does not fall within this category. Under the circumstances Your Honour this house must reject it.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's arguments really relate to a chain of statutory title. I should like to bring to Your Honour's attention a number of provisions. First of all I would refer to the British North America Act and the Senate and House of Commons Act. Section 18 of the British North America Act provides that——the privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons, and by the members thereof respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that any act of the Parliament of Canada defining such privileges, immunities, and powers shall not confer any privileges, immunities, or powers exceeding those at the passing of such act held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the members thereof.

Pursuant to that authority the Senate and House of Commons Act was enacted. Section 4 of Chapter 249 of the Revised Statutes of Canada provides:

The Senate and the House of Commons respectively, and the members thereof respectively, shall hold, enjoy and exercise,

(a) such and the like privileges, immunities and powers as, at the time of the passing of the British North America Act 1867, were held, enjoyed and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom, and by the members thereof, so far as the same are consistent with and not repugnant to the said act; and

(b) such privileges, immunities and powers as are from time to time defined by act of the Parliament of Canada, not exceeding those at the time of the passing of such act held, enjoyed and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom and by the members thereof respectively.

In other words the chain runs from the B.N.A. Act—the original constitutional document—to the Senate and House of Commons Act, which gives the House of Commons certain powers, including the power to make its own rules of procedure by way of standing orders, and pursuant to the provisions stipulated in chapter 12 of May's 17th edition. I therefore suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is a direct chain of title from the constitutional authority, that is to say the legislature of the United Kingdom, and that that authority has been exercised by the Senate and House of Commons Act so that the powers are held by the house to make changes in its own standing orders from time to time, pursuant to that power in the statute. Therefore the hon. member's argument falls to one side.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no further contributions on this very interesting point raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) I would presume to make a ruling at this time. As I am sure the hon. member for Peace River suspects, the Chair would have to rule that the point of order he has made at the present time is not so much a point of order as a point of debate which would perhaps be valid in the course of the discussion. I would assume the hon. member would raise the point when we reach the moment in our proceedings when the substance of the hon. member's motion is before us.

I have had occasion in the past to indicate that it is not the responsibility of the Chair to rule on questions of law or on constitutional questions. This ruling has been made in many instances by previous Speakers. I should like, if hon. members would allow me to do so, to quote at this time a ruling made by the Deputy Speaker on Friday October 25, 1963. It reviews some of the authorities on this point:

I have listened with much interest to the argument made by the honourable and learned member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald). I gather the essence of the argument he submits now is that the bill should not be considered, that it is out of order because it is ultra vires the Parliament of Canada. My submission at this time is that it should not be the responsibility of the Chair to rule whether a particular bill or particular piece of legislation submitted to parliament is or is not within the competence of this house. Firstly, I should like to refer honourable members to Standing Order 12(1) which limits and defines the duties and responsibilities of the Speaker: "Mr. Speaker shall preserve order and decorum, and shall decide questions of order, subject to an appeal to the house without debate—"

In other words, this limits the powers and responsibilities of the Speaker to deciding on questions of order, not questions of law. This is further confirmed in citation 69(3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, at page 59: "Standing Order 12 being restrictive should be given the strictest literal interpretation—"

There is another citation referred to in the same ruling. I am still quoting from the same ruling of Friday October 25, 1963:

—I should like to refer at this time to citation 71(5) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, at page 61: "The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law, though the same may be raised on a point of order or privilege," which is what the honourable member did at the moment he raised it as a question of order. But it shall not be the responsibility of the Chair or the Speaker to make a decision.

Lastly, I should like to refer to a more recent ruling made by Mr. Speaker Lemieux, reported in Hansard for June 4, 1925, page 3875:

I apologize to the hon. member for Peace River for going back almost as far as he has in his argument.

"The Parliament of Canada is supreme, and if it should pass any act which is ultra vires, the courts would decide the validity of such act. It is not for the Speaker to declare—although he presides over the highest court in the land—as to whether any proposed legislation is ultra vires—"

Of course at this point we are not dealing with legislation but rather amendments to the rules of the house. But if I follow the hon. member's argument, it still is based on a constitutional point. I would think this is an argument which might be advanced by the hon. member or by other hon. members in the course of the debate, if they oppose the motion proposed by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). In the circumstances I do not think the point of order raised by the hon. member should be sustained.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I feel there has been some advance billing in the presentation of this motion for concurrence. I wish to thank all hon. members who have expressed concern about the presentation of this motion, and those hon. members who have made the necessary procedural changes possible today so that it could be presented.

I believe that before I begin to describe the rules of procedure which are proposed I might be permitted to say a word about the work of the procedure committee. This is an extraordinary committee because it seems—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blair: —that its various reports made from time to time to the house have occasioned great controversy. This might suggest to hon. members, and indeed to the public, that the proceedings in the committee have carried on in a violent partisan and controversial fashion.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Blair: I think that in fairness to my colleagues in the committee I should here state publicly that the proceedings of the committee have been marked at all times with cordiality and a sincere desire on the part of all hon. members of the committee to get ahead with its work. I am particularly grateful to the members of the committee for the consideration they have shown at all times to their chairman. I suggest that as we embark on this debate we should be under no misapprehension about the nature of the proceedings within the committee, and where we have perforce agreed to disagree we must also take into account that on many grave and important matters we have made recommendations to the house based upon agreement within the committee. I begin by referring to the order of reference which was passed on December 20, 1968. This order reads:

That the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization be instructed, and hereby is instructed, to consider and to propose ways to allocate time to the legislative business of the house and to include in its report or reports a draft of a proposed standing order drawn to give effect, if adopted by the house, to the proposal of the committee; and for greater certainty but not to restrict the generality of the foregoing, the committee is instructed to consider the British rules and practice for the allocation of time, the suggestions made by the Leader of the Opposition on December 10, 1968, the suggestions made by the Minister of Agriculture on December 13, 1968, and other proposals and suggestions made in the debate on the motion for concurrence in the fourth report of the Special Committee on Procedure.

Pursuant to the direction given to the committee by the house, it devoted seven of its meetings during this term to the question of allocation of time. It considered a special report on allocation of time procedures in the British House of Commons, and at all times the committee had the benefit of the knowledge of several very experienced parliamentarians who were members of the committee.

As hon. members know, the committee's report to the house consists of three proposed standing orders. If it would help hon. members in following the remarks I am going to make on these proposed standing orders, they are set forth in full in Votes and Proceedings for June 20 of this year.

The first standing order proposed is 75A. This standing order contemplates a position where the leaders of all the parties in the house are in agreement as to the programming of legislation and the allocation of time to legislation at all stages. Where this result is obtained, a minister of the crown has the right to notify the house of the agreement which has been reached by unanimity, and thereupon the motion is put. In my submission, this is the answer to the argument raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), because the final and ultimate decision as to an allocation of time is not made in any sense by private agreement by members of this house, but rather by a motion properly put and properly adopted in accordance with our usual rules.

The second rule is known as 75B. This contemplates a position where a majority of the party leaders agree on a proposal for the allocation of time. This means, for all practical purposes in this house, that three out of the four parties would agree on the proposal. Again, pursuant to such an agreement the motion is put by a minister of the Crown, but there is one significant difference between the type of allocation of time which is possible under proposed order 75B and the allocation which is possible under proposed order 75A. A motion under 75B can cover only one stage of a bill at one time. For practical purposes, the stages contemplated in the proposed order are second reading, the committee stage, report and third reading. The order provides that only report and third reading can be combined in one allocation of time order. Where such a motion is put pursuant to this order by a minister of the Crown, it will be decided after a maximum of two hours of debate. In the course of this debate no hon. member would be permitted to speak for more than ten minutes.

It appears that there may be some ambiguity in the wording of proposed order 75B as it is presented in the report of the committee. The question which appears to have arisen is whether at all times the government party must be one of the parties forming a majority for the purpose of activating the order. I must express my personal view that there is no doubt in my mind that the committee intended that the government party must be part of the majority, for the simple reason that the motion pursuant to the order can only be presented by a minister of the Crown.

However, if there is an ambiguity, it is the kind of thing which undoubtedly will be exposed in debate and the consequences of that ambiguity will be explored. I have confidence that this house itself is capable in an orderly manner of resolving any ambiguity which might arise from this proposed standing order in our committee's report.

The third standing order proposed is 75C, and this standing order, I need hardly say for the benefit of hon. members, is the one which gave occasion to a partisan dispute. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) properly stated last evening that recorded votes were taken at the end of the sittings of the committee. The committee unanimously adopted standing order 75A. It adopted proposed standing order 75B, with one dissenting vote, and standing order 75C was adopted by a vote which placed the members of the government in opposition to the members of the other parties.

I would like to say first of all with reference to standing order 75C that it cannot be invoked unilaterally by the government. This order is premised upon prior consultation between the government and the other parties, and indeed in its opening words it is made clear that the order can only be invoked if the provisions of standing order 75A and 75B could not be made effective.

The order is plain, but I think it is important to comment on some of its detailed provisions. First of all, any order made under standing order 75C can only apply to one stage of one bill at one time, and again, as is specified in the order and is made plain elsewhere, the stages referred to are second reading, committee stage, report and third reading. As is the case with standing order 75B, an allocation of time order can be made with respect to the report stage and third reading at one time, subject however to the provisions of standing order 75 (13) which specifies that third reading cannot occur on the same day as the report stage unless it has the unanimous consent of the members of the house.

The second important point to note about the proposed standing order 75C is that it cannot be invoked, as it were, in advance by the government. It can only be activated after the specific proceedings have begun. That is to say, if we choose an example of the second reading of any bill, it would not be possible under this order for the government to propose an allocation of time order for the second reading stage in advance of the commencement of the debate on second reading, and any proposal for allocation of time could only occur after that second reading debate had commenced.

The order provides that in the course of any proceedings on a bill a minister of the Crown may give notice of his intention to propose an allocation of time order, and this of course means that notice is dealt with in the ordinary way and any debate on such an allocation order would occur on a following day. The order is similar to standing order 75B in proposing that any debate on an allocation of time order would be limited to two hours and the speeches of hon. members would be limited to ten minutes. It is also provided in standing order 75C that any allocation of time order made pursuant to this standing order must provide for at least one full day of debate, not less than one sitting day.

I imagine that some of the hon. members have a recollection of a proposed standing order which was known as Standing Order 16A, and I would like to suggest to the house that the proposed standing order 75C is quite unlike the proposed Standing Order 16A. That standing order contemplated that orders for the allocation of time for legislation could be made in advance of any proceedings on the legislation, that they could cover any number of bills and any number of stages in debate on the bills. Under standing order 75c it is clearly provided that it can apply only to one bill and one stage at a time, and this, in my submission, should meet an objection made to standing order 16A that the country could not under that order be guaranteed of being advised of important issues coming forward in debate in this chamber. In a nutshell—

Mr. Stanfield: That is where it was.

Mr. Blair: —having explained the mechanics of standing order 75c, one can say that at the very minimum it contemplates three days at second reading, three days in committee and four days to cover report and third reading stages, and in the very unlikely event that these times were cut to a minimum, no bill can go through this chamber unless it is the subject of at least ten days of debate.

Some hon. Members: That is not true.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. member permit a question? I have a lot of respect for the hon. member. We came from the same university and I believe he is very able, but I should like to put this question to him. As a person of integrity can he stand up in his place and say that there would be no debate on any bill which would be of shorter duration than ten days under this rule?

Mr. Blair: In answer to my hon. friend, who was my junior at law school, may I say that I fail to see how under this bill less than ten days of elapsed time could be occupied in the discussion of these procedures.

An hon. Member: Not elapsed time, but time in debate.

Mr. Blair: Anybody who disagrees with that should rise in his place and say so.

An hon. Member: Do you want a republic?

Mr. Blair: I would not wish the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) to bring his tribal warfare into the chamber.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As I understood the hon. member, he gave the impression that, taking in all stages of the bill, the debate on it could not be shorter than ten days. If that is not what he said, let him declare it now so we can follow the debate. If that is his position, let him come out clearly and say so. Unless he clarifies the situation he is misleading this house, the public and the press.

Mr. Blair: I think that what I have said is clearly on record. There are ten days of elapsed time at least which will be taken up in the discussion of any measure, and procedural matters in relation thereto. If hon. members have comments to make, as they appear to have, they can make them at an appropriate time.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask a question, so that we shall be clear about the point the hon. member is making? Unless I misunderstood him, his first statement was that there would be ten days of debate. Now he is talking about ten days of elapsed time, and every hon. member knows there is a great deal of difference between the two. Would he clarify what he meant to say? Does he wish to retract his statement about ten days of debate and say there would be ten days of elapsed time?

Mr. Blair: I do not think there is any compulsion on me to retract anything. The rule is clear and I have stated its effect to the best of my ability. Hon. members may have some comments to make on it at a later stage.

I suggest that although they do present some controversial aspects, these rules represent the best recommendations which the committee found it possible to make to enable the house to cope with the vast and increasing volume of business before it. Concern—and I think it is legitimate concern—has been expressed that if there are provisions in our rules which permit the allocation of time to be instituted by motions on behalf of the government, this might have the effect of destroying the good feeling and co-operation which is the basis upon which most of the business of the house is carried on. With respect to this contention it might be of some assistance if I were to mention a few figures presented to us in a report on the practice in the United Kingdom.

It is estimated that 50 per cent of the business of the House of Commons in the United Kingdom proceeds in accordance with an agreed timetable; that 25 per cent is so uncontentious that it requires the application of no timetable, and that of the balance of 25 per cent deemed to be contentious, the majority, or a substantial part, is dealt with through the ordinary process of negotiation, with the result that orders allocating time are not the procedures which are usually or habitually employed at Westminster.

The committee on procedure has made a number of recommendations to this house since last fall, and it is my submission that their effect has been to improve our procedure and in many ways to make it easier for ordinary private members in particular to participate in its affairs. It must be borne in mind that the creation of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization means that the continual review and study of the procedures of the house is now one of our regular concerns. None of the rules which we have adopted or which may be proposed can reasonably be likened to the edicts of Justinian, that is, intended to last for all time and regulate the affairs of all future generations.

It is in this spirit that I commend the report of the standing committee. I trust it will be adopted. It does not violate the ancient traditions and procedures of this house. It has been framed with a proper regard for the prerogatives of members, and its full intent and purpose is to enable the House of Commons in this year 1969 to meet the intense pressures placed on a modern parliament.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, we have listened with great interest to the speech made by the hon. member. Let me say right now that it is our intention to move an amendment to the motion for concurrence which he has made; it will be within the terms approved by the practice and precedents of the house.

I am sorry the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not here. The Prime Minister is an expert on traps. When he came back and saw the trap in which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) had placed himself and his party, it is quite obvious that the hon. gentleman was repudiated. The cork was pulled out of the bottle and out popped the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), who had been waiting patiently, letting his motion stand day after day, wondering what it was all about.

To an extent, I am glad this happened. It is an indication of the way in which, when there is a good and righteous cause, and it is presented strongly enough by the opposition with the support of the public media, the government can be made to see, at least in part, the light of reason.

Thus, while I do not like some of the proposals contained in standing order 75A, B and C, I am glad we are at least proceeding now in the proper manner and that the government has been made to understand even in a limited way that it does have responsibilities, and that it must accept its position as being subordinate to, not superior to, this house.

Before I deal with the substance of the proposal I think it would be helpful to retrace the progress made by this parliament since last September. At that time we were locked in another struggle comparable to this one. We had indicated our willingness to remain here, if necessary, throughout what would normally have been the Christmas recess to make our point. Faced with this overwhelming pressure of public opinion and parliamentary opposition, opposition not only on this side of the house, I am sure, but substantial opposition on the other side as well, the government took the abhorrent and repugnant 16A out of the order that was then before the house for approval.

It was then that the Prime Minister made the statement that the opposition had fallen into a trap, that all he had ever wanted were the rules changes contained within the proposed order, with the exception of 16A. That is the sort of statement that I suggest no responsible man in public life would ever make. In saying this I am bearing in mind that the right hon. gentleman is back again attempting to get approval of, if not rule 16A, a substantial part of the principle therein involved. He is back again trying to peddle the same bad hardware.

What was the course of events after December, Mr. Speaker? The house made good progress. There was co-operation on all sides, as well as understanding. Meetings, both official and unofficial, were held. Meetings in this house were held of the kind that never take place in the United Kingdom parliament. I think the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) will agree with me that we were amazed to learn of the sort of running discussions held by the house leaders and others involved. Sensing the mood of the house, the needs of the day and the requirements of government in coming to day-to-day decisions, are conditions precedent to the proper operation of a legislative body. Such procedures are not followed in the United Kingdom. I am not going to go into the details of their alternative, which is something that I do not think this house or this country would ever tolerate.

These procedures to which I have referred have, I think, been shown at their best since last December. There were numerous occasions when the government was faced with the task of asking for unanimous consent to revert to certain matters for disposition, or when the government required certain matters to be expedited for policy reasons or in the interest of the national good. On such occasions the government approached the representatives of the other parties and agreements were made. This happened over and over again.

I also call to mind the situation that developed as a result of the opposition parties agreeing to sacrifice certain days that should have been dedicated to debating problems which members of the opposition, and members on the government side for that matter, thought should be ventilated and dealt with. At these times private members said to the government, in effect: "We know there are difficulties, that time is now of the essence. We will waive two of the six days on which we are entitled to debate the budget." Those days then became days on which government business was conducted. It was not as if those days were added, as they could have been under existing orders, to the number of opposition days.

As I say, private members have been prepared to accede to certain courses of action in order to meet what they thought were the needs of the government. As long as this is done without damage to the welfare of the country and as long as it still permits us to discharge our responsibilities, not only as private members but as members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, we are prepared to take this course of action again.

Then again, on other occasions the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), myself, other members of this party and members of the other parties suggested granting additional sitting hours in order that the government might complete certain business and send it to the other place to be dealt with.

I am not going to recite all of these occasions; they are well known to members of this house and to Your Honour. Under the new standing orders members of the opposition have days that belong to the opposition and on which they can move motions touching upon many of the problems that afflict us, problems with which the government has neither the knowledge nor the wit to deal.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

The course of action we took in this regard was during the time when we believed we were approaching the pursuit of a new direction of thought which would make the House of Commons different from what it was in the past. We understood we were going to begin our deliberations at a certain time and were going to end them at a certain time. In the belief that this was what was meant and that certain measures would be dealt with within that period, during the course of some two or three weeks we agreed to extension of the hours. We sat late, and we sat late quite frequently, so that government business could be expedited; and in fact it was.

I am not attempting to deny that there was one occasion, the debate on the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code, when we took what was, in my opinion, perhaps a somewhat longer time than was required. But this place is a forum for the reflection of the views of a substantial portion of the people of Canada, and the hon. members of the Creditistes party, genuinely believing that they had a mandate to oppose certain of the provisions contained in the amendments to the Criminal Code, conceived it to be their duty to debate them rather extensively. I do not fault them for that, though, as I say, I personally did not think the debate required the time it took.

We must remember that we are 264 representatives assembled here to reflect the views of the people of Canada. We are the people of Canada with all their warts and defects. We are no better and no worse. We reflect their thinking. If one group in this house genuinely and sincerely believes it has the duty to attempt to prevent a government measure from being passed—although in this case I did not agree—then I think that group has that right. The question of what is reasonable is another issue, of course. Apart from that one occasion I think the work of this house has proceeded harmoniously and reasonably.

What does the government think will be the spirit that will prevail next session? Let me say at once that I am not making any threats; I merely recognize the hard facts of human nature. Let me contemplate what is going to be the situation next year. If the government persists in this ill advised and improper attempt to obtain the full package contained in proposed standing order 75 I am afraid that, knowing human nature for what it is, we shall not see prevailing here the same measure of harmony, understanding and co-operation that has existed in the past. And these conditions must be present within any legislative body if it is to do its job properly.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that whatever the rules are, and no matter what changes to the rules are introduced, if hon. members of this house become convinced that the government is attempting to operate improperly, without due regard for those matters which must be undertaken, we shall not have a good parliament. When harmony, reason and co-operation fly out the window, the result will not be happy for this house or this country. I am offering no threat; I am speaking simply from my knowledge of human beings in public life. I know what the results of the government's action will be. I say that the government's insistence in pressing on with this dogmatic, ruthless authoritarianism does not bode well for this house and this country.

When I practised law in my younger years I enjoyed nothing so much as a good fight. I enjoyed fighting in the courts.

An hon. Member: You are now junior to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Baldwin: Only in the sense that I follow him as a speaker in this debate, Mr. Speaker. As I say, I enjoyed nothing so much as a good fight in court. With the passage of years, when I became more mellow—and I recommend to my hon. friends opposite that they, too, should become mellow—I became a great believer in the cardinal principle that a case settled is a case won. When you settle a case both sides gain something and neither side loses. I based my practice on the precepts of arbitration, agreement, understanding and reason, precepts which also make parliament work. If these precepts are not followed I fear what the result may be when we come back next year.

At this time I shall confine my present argument mainly to proposed standing order 76B. In his remarks the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton tried to tell us that proposed standing order 76C is to be invoked only where agreement cannot be reached under 75A or 75B. When speaking on 75B the hon. member indicated that included among the parties which are to reach agreement under that standing order must be the government. I am having difficulties with my eyes at this time, Mr. Speaker, but even so I fail to find any language in proposed standing order 75B which supports the hon. member's contention. Nor can the President of the Privy Council point to any such wording. I think it is clear that if that wording were included in the proposed standing order, it would never have seen the light of day. The omission may have been unintentional, and may have resulted from a spirit of magnanimity on the part of the government party—which I very much doubt—but the fact is that there is nothing within the four corners of proposed standing order 75B which suggests that "a majority" must include the government. It need not necessarily include the government merely because a minister is delegated as being a person who must make the application for allocation of time in the house.

I ask the President of the Privy Council, what will be the situation if representatives of parties meet, discuss allocation of time and then hear the government's representative say that the government is prepared to allot one day, two hours, or whatever the time may be, for this stage of the debate. The representatives of the other three parties may say, "Oh, no; we have certain amendments to propose; in the interest of our constituents we feel that certain aspects of the bill must be resisted, and in order to make our case properly, submit amendments and subamendments, we feel that six days is essential." Let us say that, ultimately, the representatives of opposition parties, who are always reasonable people, reduce their demand from six days to four days.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Is that six days for each stage, or in total?

Mr. Baldwin: It could be for each stage or for one stage. I am speaking of a hypothetical case, Mr. Speaker. Let us say that the minister then says, "No, you will have one day only." What will happen? It is clear that the representatives in question, whoever they may be, constitute a committee emanating from this house with decision making powers. Having exercised their decision making powers the majority of those representatives may say, "We need four days." It could easily happen that the minister may say, "Phooey on your four days. I will not stand up in the house and move the motion." That situation could easily develop, and it is therefore clear that proposed rule 75B is completely useless. Of course the President of the Privy Council and his colleagues may say that a different interpretation is to be placed on the proposed standing order.

We have had experience in this house of how this government operates, Mr. Speaker. Only a little while ago we had a situation in which it might have been said that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton refused to obey instructions of his committee and move a motion. We may well arrive at a situation in which the government representative on that group duly appointed under the standing order may say, "We care nothing at all for the decision of the majority of the committee," and the minister or government house leader may refuse to move the motion. What will happen then, Mr. Speaker. The minister can say immediately, "There is no agreement," even though the majority of that committee may have agreed. The result may be that the minister may say, "There being no agreement under 75B, I am proceeding under 75C to move a motion to impose limitation of time on terms acceptable to the government only." That is an inevitable result of putting together proposed standing orders 75B and 75C. I therefore say that you may as well toss 75B out the window.

Mr. Stanfield: You might as well toss the government out.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is where the hon. gentleman's party failed last year. His party is quite liable to toss him out.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: The trouble is, Mr. Speaker, that inflation has not got the government up high enough. It would not hurt enough at this time. The effect of this is very simple. Because of the government's insistence in proceeding as it has, I am afraid the opportunities for reaching a consensus, particularly having in mind the character of this government and the way it operates, are going to be extremely limited.

What we obviously have is a proposed new standing order, of which the government proposes to use only 75C. This is the whole purpose of the exercise. The rest is simply chocolate covering over the pill. I have no doubt it will be the intention of the government to move on 75C without regard to the duty cast on the minister to follow the majority decision under 75B. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton suggested that there would be ten days. I am not going to get into the controversy which has arisen from the repartee passing back and forth across the floor. I think hon. members on this side made it quite plain what he said.

If there is an issue, a crisis or a new and novel proposal advocated by the government and brought into this house, I suggest that the ten days between the time the debate is initiated and the time the last question is put is not adequate. We have many duties in this house. One of them is that hon. members, if they are in fact performing their duties, must maintain the closest liaison between the people of their constituencies in particular and the people of Canada in general. In the exercise of that responsibility they must from time to time keep their fingers on the pulse of public thinking. What do people want? What will be the impact of government proposals being made. For this reason, if by exercising their responsibility in a responsible way they become convinced that what the government is proposing is wrong and must not be passed, they have a duty, using this house as a forum and using the public media to report our deliberations, to make a case so that the public may be aroused. They must gather together public opinion to such an extent that the government will be compelled to yield. If it does not yield, it must face the consequences of a general election.

I submit that ten days is inadequate for that purpose. I am not talking about the question of the number of days of debate, I say it is inadequate. Having in mind the size and the vastness of the diverse economic and social configurations of Canada there must be a reasonable opportunity for the opposition to make their case for the people of Canada. This cannot be done in ten days. The house should not allow the government by the passage of this measure to proceed in that way.

Last December I might have been tempted to go along with 75C, not in its present form but with some possible variations. But I had some suspicions about the conduct of the government and what it was likely to do. I had some opportunity to see some of their members in action. They had not yet manifested the full strength of their contempt, their disregard for parliament, their authoritarianism, and the casual and callous contempt which the Prime Minister shows in his treatment of this House of Commons. That had not yet manifested itself in full. Today, six or seven months later, we have seen this. Any doubts I might have had in December have now been resolved against the government and against the passage of a rule of this kind. I would consider myself derelict in my duty if I did not say as strongly as I could that this government has not shown that it has earned the right to secure the passage of a measure of this kind.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I move the following amendment:

That the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization be referred back to the committee, with instructions to amend it by deleting therefrom proposed standing order 75c.

I must apologize, Mr. Speaker, for not having other copies. I was not expecting the withdrawal of the motion by the government. I had other motions ready in case we were proceeding with the motion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) on being given the green light to proceed with his motion today. He may feel we have been hard on him during the last few days. He does not know what we had planned to say today, but may I assure him we have felt great sympathy for him in having to sit there without moving the motion he had been instructed to present to the house.

Mr. Blair: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fairweather: Have you got permission to speak?

Mr. Blair: That remark is unworthy of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make clear to the house that there had been an orderly disposition of the proceedings disclosed by the President of the Privy Council some time ago, that encompassed the idea that the public business would be transacted before the procedural matters with which we are now dealing. When that public business was concluded last night, I think prematurely, I was unable to proceed. I resist the idea of any suggestion that I have been derelict in my duty.

Mr. Hees: You don't have to explain; we know.

Mr. Ricard: You are only making it worse.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We will let the record speak for itself, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton when he says that in our Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, at least to a certain point, we had very satisfactory sittings. We dealt with a great deal of work, and produced a number of reports which I think will bear fruit in the future in terms of improving the work of parliament. I would express the hope, too, that when tempers cool over this matter more study will be given to some of the other recommendations we have made. As a matter of fact our deliberations were quite friendly, quite productive and very enjoyable, except for the last two sessions before the third report was presented to the house on June 20.

• (3:50 p.m.)

What was wrong with those last two sessions? I say to my hon. friend from Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) that I take issue with a statement he made toward the end of his speech, and in taking issue with it I indicate what was wrong with those last two sessions. In his concluding paragraph he said he hoped that what parliament was now going to do would not violate the ancient traditions and procedures of this house. Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what is happening. The ancient traditions and procedures of this house with respect to its rules are being violated. The tradition that the rules belong to all members of the house, that they belong to parliament, is being violated by a proposal that the rules be written the way the government wants them written.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what was wrong with the last two sittings of our committee before the third report was presented to the house. All the harmony and amity we had went out the window, as we were told what the government was insisting on putting through and, as has already been made clear, the decision to put 75c before the house was on a vote of six to three, the six being Liberal members of the committee and the three being representatives of the opposition parties.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is much that one could say, but there are only 40 minutes in which to say it, so I had better not waste too much time congratulating people, especially if that produces points of order. But I must say to you, sir, who found it rather strange that I resisted your invitation to continue the debate on the point of order we were making last night, that I found it rather strange myself; but the answer is that I was quite satisfied that the point we made last night got home, namely that it was proper for the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton to move concurrence in the third report of the committee but it was not proper for the government to move the motion that was in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). Whether the President of the Privy Council agrees with that or not, he has decided not to, proceed with his motion and so we are dealing with this matter in what in my view is the proper way.

I am completely opposed to this committee report. I will do everything I can to see that it is not adopted, and certainly to see, at least, that 75c is deleted. I support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and my colleagues and I will vote for it, but I repeat that I am glad we are dealing with the report properly under the rules of the house.

Hon. members, are aware of what has brought us to this point. They know that last summer there were discussions as to the possibility of some time allocation rule. We could not reach agreement at the beginning of the session, and so the matter was referred to a Special Committee on Procedure of the House of Commons. That committee brought in its famous report of last December which resulted in a package of new rules being adopted, but not 16A.

Hon. members will recall that that subject was referred to the incoming Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, and that it is the report of that committee, supported only by the majority on the committee, that we have before us at the present time. So the issue through all of this is whether or not we have the wit to find some way to allocate the time of the house on the basis of consultation, on the basis of consensus, or whether the allocation of the time of the house is to be done at the dictation of the government. That was the issue all last fall; that was the issue in December over 16A; that is the issue now.

I still take my stand in favour of planning the use of our time, in favour of allocating the time of the House of Commons, but I take my stand firmly with that being done on the basis of consultation, with that being done on the basis of participatory democracy, on the basis of all parties in this house being involved, and not on the basis of unilateral dictation from the government side. But, Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what we have in 75c, a proposal under which the allocating of the time of the house to debate is completely in the hands of the government house leader, supported by his government majority.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton devoted a few paragraphs in his speech to a description of proposed rules, 75A, 75B and 75c, and in the first part of that description he said things with which I do not quarrel.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

But as he went along he did say things to which I take very strong exception.

I believe we have already straightened out the mistake he made when he said—and I trust Hansard will bear out what he said—that under 75c there would have to be a minimum of ten days of debate on any individual bill. Later he corrected that to say there had to be a lapse of time of not less than ten days. That is correct, Mr. Speaker; but as far as debate is concerned the fact of the matter is that under 75c a bill—any bill—can be put through the House of Commons with only four days of debate—one day on second reading, one day in committee whether it is committee of the whole or a standing committee, one day on the report stage, no matter how many amendments there might be on the order paper, and one day on the third reading.

If one takes into account that under our new rules most of our bills go to a standing committee and there are only three stages on the floor of the House of Commons, this means that under 75c every bill brought before parliament, except those very few bills dealt with in committee of the whole, could be put through parliament with only three days of debate on the floor of the house.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is no point in talking about an elapsed time of ten days. As the hon. member for Peace River has already pointed out, there is need in our kind of political democracy for public reaction, for people to know what is going on, for time for them to respond, and I suggest this needs more than ten days from the introduction of an important measure until it is finally passed.

But even though the ten days are there, and even though that is not enough time for public reaction, the harm of this rule is that it makes it possible for debate on bills that have only three stages on the floor of the house to be limited to three days of debate in the Canadian House of Commons. Mr. Speaker, that is not good enough; and I suggest we on this side of the house are doing a service to democracy, to parliament and to the people of Canada in resisting this with all the power that we have, in the hope that, just as on previous occasions majority governments have seen the light, so in this case the government will come to its senses and permit 75c to be taken out of this proposed new set of rules.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton says that 75c does not come into play until 75A and 75B have been used. He said there has to be prior consultation. The government house leader has to be able to stand up and say that he tried to get agreement under 75A or 75B. Therefore we are supposed to have some kind of protection. Does he not realize that what will happen will be along these lines: There will be a meeting of the government house leader with the house leaders of the opposition parties, and there will be a suggestion that we agree under 75A to a certain limited period of time. Then, if we cannot all agree he will try to get three of us to agree under 75B. We won't like the small amount of time that will be offered, and we will start to argue for a little more time. And after that is done we will be told, "If you are not prepared to operate under 75A or 75B I will use 75C." Even if he does not say this, 75C is there like the sword of Damocles—although not quite, because the sword of Damocles did not come down. The rule is there like a real sword over our heads, which means that 75A and 75B are practically nullified by the power which 75C puts into the hands of the government house leader.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The government house leader and others who will take part in this debate may say that 75A and 75B represent suggestions I made before the committee. That is correct. The minutes of the committee will show that I proposed them almost in the wording in which they can be found now. But I proposed 75A and 75B as a total package. If you remove 75C I will still buy 75A and 75B and be proud to have had something to do with suggesting them, but I cannot buy 75A and 75B in a package with 75C which completely nullifies any possibility of the kind of bargaining that should be possible under 75A or 75B. It is like collective bargaining with compulsory arbitration hanging over people's heads or the threat of government action. Bargaining between the house leaders under 75A and 75B will not be free and meaningful as long as 75C is part of the set-up.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes.

Mr. Francis: Through you, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member in respect of 75B whether he agrees with the submission of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that the representatives of the opposition parties could constitute a majority, not including the representative of the government party?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think that is a nice little point on which one could spend time and not have time to deal with other matters.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Let the little men howl.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If I could have the time to deal with it I would be quite happy to do so. I do not think the amendment the President of the Privy Council wanted to put into 75B was necessary at all. I think that the wording in 75B which says that the government house leader "may move a motion under 75B does not require him to move it and therefore 75B does not operate unless one of the majority is the government representative. Concerning what would happen to 75C if it was argued that 75B had not been fully brought into play, that is one of the fine procedural arguments we could have if 75C comes into play. I suggest this is highly hypothetical because surely debate in this parliament is still effective, surely we are still concerned about the procedural rules of parliament, and before this is all over we will not have a 75C.

I congratulate the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton—please do not raise a point of order until you hear what I am about to say—for not making a mistake when he talked about the point at which 75C could be brought into play. He said it could be applied only after there had been debate. I was listening carefully for him to make the mistake of saying how much debate, but he did not make that mistake because he knows that as that rule reads there could be debate for two minutes or indeed for one minute. Let no one stand in the house and tell me I am dreaming something. I was here in 1956. Not many of those who were here then are still here. But C. D. Howe is still here.

In 1956 there was a rule, Standing Order 33, which provided that closure could not be applied until all aspects of the measure had been under debate. We thought that when we got into committee on the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation bill we would have a debate on the separate clauses of the bill. But when the chairman called clause 1 Mr. C. D. Howe got up over there, picked up the bill and read the marginal note, taking 40 or 50 seconds, and then said, "I move that we proceed to clause 2." He did the same thing on clauses 2 and 3 and the following clauses. I think there were five or six in all. There were protests and points of order, but in a short space of time Mr. Howe and Walter Harris, who was leading the house, said that we had had a debate on those five or six clauses and that the closure rule would be applied. Mr. King, by the way, in the mid-1930's attacked Mr. Bennett very strongly for having done something like that and quoted Mr. Meighen as having said that the closure rule could not be applied until there has been reasonable debate. But Mr. Bennett applied closure in that way in 1932 or 1933 and Mr. Howe applied it that way in 1956.

Under the closure rule the debate could be concluded in 40 or 50 seconds. Similarly, under 75c a minister could utter one or two sentences and then move the adjournment of the debate. The house leader could then get up and say, "By the way, I have not been able to obtain agreement so I move under 75c that the debate be limited to one day."

An hon. Member: It could be a Wednesday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, it could be a Wednesday, which is a short day. That is what could happen in respect of the second reading stage. Look also at what could happen at the report stage. While it is not stated in the report and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) has not yet taken part in this debate, he has read what I have said and I have read what he said as reported in the newspapers. I understand the reason he feels Standing Order 33 is not adequate is that we now have the report stage and there was no report stage when Standing Order 33 was adopted.

At the report stage we could have 5, 10 or 20 amendments just as we did in respect of the omnibus Criminal Code bill. A motion could be brought in to terminate the debate at the report stage after one day. So if there were 10 or 20 amendments on the order paper for the report stage, a one day debate would allow discussion on one or two of them and no debate on the others. This kind of process of using the closure rule to cut off debate even before there is an opportunity to debate and vote on amendments was described by King in 1933, I believe, as the most oppressive abuse of parliamentary procedure he had ever heard of. This is what we are up against. This kind of rule would permit at the report stage what Bennett and Howe did. The report stage would be out the window.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

In the very good package of rules we brought in last December there were several extremely valuable things. I think we did well in getting many items off the floor of the house into committee such as the estimates and the committee stage of bills. I think parliament operates better because of this. But I also believe that one of the rule changes which has proven to be very worth while is the report stage. This means that a bill which has been dealt with in detail in a standing committee can be dealt with on the floor of the house by members zeroing in on contentious issues. But if all of a sudden the government house leader can bring in a proposal that the whole report stage, no matter how many amendments there are, be limited to one day, then the value of this tremendous innovation, I suggest, is out the window.

So despite the explanation of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton that the rule is very good and is an advance by parliament in meeting the problems of our time and all the rest of it, I submit it is a form of closure even more forceful than the one in Standing Order 33. If time permitted I would have liked to go back and read some of the things that were said about closure in 1913 by a great Canadian statesman. I refer to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Even I was not here then, but from reading Hansard it would appear that he must have been an orator par excellence. But I say, as a result of reading his speeches, it was evident that he was at his best when he was denouncing the government of that day for limiting the right of free speech in parliament. I remind members opposite that he stood in this chamber—not this chamber but the one that was burned down—and said he would rather be here and out of office than to have remained in power by the power of the gag, that true Liberalism believes in freedom of speech and would not use its majority to impose that kind of limitation on parliament.

I urge very strongly that we settle in, accept the fact that we are going to have a few days of debate, and hope that within those few days we can settle this matter in the proper way. Last night's debate was not in vain; we got rid of a motion that was out of order and we are now dealing with this matter on a proper basis. Last December's debate was not in vain, despite the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said just afterwards that we had fallen into a trap. We got a good package of rules and left 16A out. I hope the result of this debate will be that the government will again decide that this vicious rule 75c will be dropped.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton suggested that proposed rule 75c is greatly different from 16A. I did a bit of study on the subject this morning in preparation for what I thought would be another point of order, which was obviated when the President of the Privy Council changed the plans for us today. I would have liked to quote Mr. Speaker Lamoureux and give examples of things that seemed different but which were really alike. I suggest that the effects of 16A and proposed 75c are the same. They give the ultimate, dictatorial power to the government house leader to act even when the entire opposition disagrees with what the government is trying to do to the rules of parliament.

I see the time is moving, Mr. Speaker, and I must move on. What I think really has to be said, and to which there is no answer, is that 75c is not needed; there is no call for it whatsoever. We have been getting along well since Christmas in parliament up until a couple of weeks ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We had a couple of delays. The only piece of legislation with regard to which we had any significant delay was the omnibus Criminal Code bill. I was in favour of it, but I submit that there was a case for hon. members to have the opportunity to debate that bill because of the strong feelings they held about it. Even that bill could have been dealt with under 75B. With regard to the languages bill, if you want to say it was debated at length, it could have been dealt with under 75B. Perhaps it could have been dealt with under 75A. There has not been a single instance since Christmas when 75c was needed—not one.

Why, then, spoil the relationships we have had in this house in the past five months? We have had our disagreements and arguments, but we have agreed scores of times. The President of the Privy Council has risen in the house on many occasions and said: Mr. Speaker, I think you will find there is general agreement about this. What do we do? We get up over here and say: Yes, that is agreed, Mr. Speaker. It is as simple as that. We have settled scores of things. We have given up a lot of days. We have made switches of various kinds. We have had, in my view, one of the best sessions we have ever had procedurally in regard to getting things through the house.

We have dealt with these questions on the basis of consultation. We have reached a consensus most of the time. There have been a few slips. Sometimes my friend the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has said no, and we have sometimes had to agree that he was right. Once in a while a Conservative has said no. It does not do any harm to have a little difference once in a while and take a little time to debate a subject upon which even one hon. member feels strongly. But in the main parliament has operated on the basis of consultation. It has gone well. One of my colleagues, if he gets the floor today, will list the number of items we have put through the house. It has been a good session. Now the government wants to spoil it all by putting us at arm's length, which it has done in the past two or three weeks. We are at arm's length over this issue, and this is a good way to stall parliament.

I submit that the government, having come to its senses last night over one point, should now come to its senses over this proposed rule and drop it. When we talk to people outside, or to the press boys at the coffee table, the one thing everybody seems to agree upon is that this rule is not needed. They ask: Why has the government brought it in? It is not really necessary at all.

Mr. Speaker, I now want to deal with what is perhaps a fundamental, almost philosophical question in relation to this whole business. If someone stands, as I do, and says he believes in allocating time and planning the work of the year, as I do, the question comes back: If you agree to that, if you are in favour of planning, don't you have to do something to limit debate? I agree it is necessary to limit debate. This parliament has done it. We have limited the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. It is eight days now, it was ten days a few years ago, and at times took 30 days when I first came here. There was no limit, but it went on for as many as 28 or 30 days. We have limited the debate on the budget. We have limited the debate on the estimates. We have made life easy for this government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friends over there are laughing. They just have not been around here long enough.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is right; they are too green.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And they will not be around here long enough to learn much, either.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dinsdale: They are neophytes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): For example, it used to be possible for the opposition, by withholding supply on the main estimates or interim supply, to keep the government at bay three, four or five times a year and obtain commitments and answers from the government on important issues. But now the government receives interim supply for three months on a certain date in March just as automatically as the coming of spring. It receives its main estimates for the full year on a certain day at the end of June just as automatically as the coming of summer. We have the right to vote against the main estimates, but who is going to vote against estimates which include money for agriculture, labour, pensions, or what have you, in the general package? The government does not know what struggles governments in the past have had to obtain this money. We have simplified the rules; we have made it easy for the government. I mentioned Mackenzie King a few minutes ago. I recall him very well. If he came back—

An hon. Member: He is back.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —he would not recognize the rules of this place. Debate has to be limited, and we have accepted that principle. The time limit on all speeches used to be 40 minutes; now it is sometimes 30 minutes, 20 minutes, 10 minutes, 5 minutes, and we even have a 3 minute rule. We have all kinds of limitations. The point about limiting debate is that it is proper for us to do it, but we must do it by agreement and we must all share in the decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My right to speak in this House of Commons is not given to me by the government, it is not given to me by the Prime Minister, it is given to me by the people of Winnipeg North Centre who sent me here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Burton: You boys had better remember it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The right of the Prime Minister to speak in this house, his freedom of speech, is given to him not by the opposition or the government but by the people of Mount Royal who sent him here.

Some hon. Members: By Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Canada did not send the Prime Minister here.

An hon. Member: Yes, it did.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The people of Mount Royal sent him here. I say to you as strongly as I can, Mr. Speaker, that we come here as equals, every one of us, with the right to speak on behalf of our people in the parliament of Canada. It may be said to me: If we all exercised that right and there were no limit on debate, there would be no time for anything. My answer is that this is the reason we get together and by consent and with common sense do what will be fair to everyone. We reach agreement as to limitations we will impose upon ourselves. But these are limitations imposed by agreement amongst all of us. No majority, merely because it has a majority in this House of Commons, has the right to take away from members of this house freedom of speech which they do not want to surrender. That is what this government is trying to do by allocating time by a majority vote.

• (4:20 p.m.)

There is nothing wrong with parliament as a whole deciding to limit speech, provided we do it with the consent of all, perhaps not unanimously to the extent of every last member but certainly by general consent. That is what we have done across the years. Every change there has been in the amount of time members can take has been made under the tradition or procedures of this house which are being violated by the proposal today, despite the fine statement made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. I submit that the whole question of the right of individual members to speak is a basic right given to them not by the government, not by the government house leader, no matter how much of a dictator he may be, not by a majority on the government side but the people who sent us here, and we are entitled to retain that right except in so far as we agree to surrender it on the basis of common sense.

I still argue that we should work our heads off to arrive at arrangements for allocating the time of the house, but let us do this by agreement. I thought that is what we were working toward in the committee until the last two meetings.

An hon. Member: You were fooled.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, I was fooled. I thought we were going in that general direction. There was good will, good humour and a camaraderie was built up as we get together, ate together, and so on. All this went down the drain when we were suddenly told, "No, it is not going to be done that way. The government is doing to decide when free speech is to be limited."

That is why I feel that standing order 75c simply must be reconsidered. I do not know how long this debate will go on. Last night it took only two hours to win a certain point; I hope it will not take two or three weeks to win this one. We are all going to make the best speeches we can. We are going to argue our cases as strongly as we can, but not just for the fun of hearing ourselves speak or of getting our names on the record. We want parliament to win this issue.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What happened in December was not that we or they won but that parliament won when the decision was made to adopt the rules to which everyone agreed and not to adopt the one to which there was violent objection.

I submit that a victory will be won by parliament if out of this discussion we can reach the decision to continue to wrestle with the problem of time allocation. I am not asking the government to drop the idea of time allocation and of planning the year. I am proud of the start we made and of the calendarization that we put into our rules. Let us keep wrestling with the problem until we arrive at a scheme for programming the year, a scheme for allocating time to which we all agree, not one that is imposed upon us. What we have is a rule that is before the house today because it was supported by the government majority in a committee, but only by that government majority. If it goes through, it will go through only on the votes of the government majority, and I suspect that some of them have their doubts about it. If it is put through and is brought into play, the farcical votes that will take place after two hours debate will be votes in which a decision to cut off debate will be made on the basis of a government majority. The government wins a decision three times as to what the rules of the house should be. It wins on the basis of its majority three times and parliament is out.

My friends over there will say to me in private and in public, "Don't we operate on the basis of a majority?" Yes, we do when we pass laws, when we legislate. But when we make the rules of the game it is not the strongest side that makes the rules but everybody who is involved. One wins this battle not by muscle but by merit, not by brawn but by brain, and I think we have the wit to do it.

I appeal as strongly as I can to the house to support the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that the report be referred back to the committee. Perhaps we can do the same thing that we did last December. Instead of having to take the time to send the report back to the committee and let it report again, we can do what was done on December 20. The minister can get up and suggest that the third report of the standing committee be adopted minus rule 75c. That was what was done on December 20 and it can be done now. It would save much time and we could get out of here. All we are here for is to try to straighten out this rule situation. I hope it will be done that way.

If I still have time I should like to read something that was said by the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, Prime Minister of Canada for a number of years. These words impressed me greatly at the time.

An hon. Member: He was a real Liberal.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This statement was made in the year 1946 before he became Prime Minister. We were debating the subject of redistribution, which at that time was dealt with by a committee, and also the means of seeking an amendment to the constitution from Westminster. In the course of a debate on how far the government could go in amending the B.N.A. Act by a simple resolution to Westminster, Mr. St. Laurent was asked by Mr. Arthur Smith of Calgary, the late father of one whom some of you know, whether it would be possible for the government to change the language provision of the B.N.A. Act by the simple device of a resolution to the parliament at Westminster. The debate came back to my mind because of the discussion we have had lately.

Mr. St. Laurent made what I thought was a most courageous reply. Obviously he had given some thought to the matter and had prepared himself to reply. He said that this could be done legally, that under the constitution parliament could pass a resolution, send it to the King, who was the monarch in those days, and ask for it to be laid before the British parliament, and that in this way the B.N.A. Act could be amended to take away the use of the French language. To quote his exact words as recorded at page 2621 of Hansard of June 18, 1946, he said:

> Legally I say it can. The situation appears to me to be this. There are persons and nations who reach a high estate in the affairs of men, and the high estate they reach imposes upon them high obligations. There was no obligation on the Tribune Festus to say to King Agrippa that he could not deliver Paul to the Jews when they requested that he be put to death. It occurs to one, however, that they also had reached a high estate, which imposes a corresponding obligation.

And then Mr. St. Laurent said:

> I copied out of the Bible on the table of this house, from the Acts, the quite natural statement of Festus:
> "It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him."

Then in two or three paragraphs on pages 2621 and 2622 of Hansard for that day—and I invite hon. members to read those paragraphs—Mr. St. Laurent went on to indicate some of the things that his ancestors of French speaking origin had gone through. He spoke about some of the things that had been done, but he declared that certain wrongs would not be committed because, like the Romans, we had reached a higher estate. Finally, he ended with these words:

> If it is fair, if it is just, if it is proper according to the standards of human decency, it will be done; if it is unfair, if it is unjust, if it is improper, all members of this house will say, "It is not our manner to do such things."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. St. Laurent said of the Romans that there were certain things they would not do even though they had the legal right to do them. Mr. St. Laurent said of the government majority of that day—and he spoke of the government majority in any parliament—that though there were certain things they might have the legal right to do, it was not their manner to do them.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I say to the government opposite that they have the majority and they can put this sort of thing through, wrong though it is. They can throttle parliament in the process and they can interfere with the right of free speech. But I thought that as Liberals it was not their manner to do such things.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I was happy to hear the eloquent speeches made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles); I was truly impressed, in view of the fact that they have much more experience in this house than myself, as this is my first session here.

For several reasons, I do not intend to go back as far as 1946, but I would rather consider the present situation of a Canadian member of Parliament, in 1969, in an attempt to see how much standing orders 75A, 75B and 75C are really in the interest of Canadian parliamentary life.

Mr. Speaker, today the Canadian member of Parliament asks himself certain questions, after having done much research. On many occasions, this parliament has attempted to improve its procedure, its operations, to act more effectively, to give a better performance, in order to bring about a better recognition of each hon. member's right. Every improvement has been done in the interest of the Canadian parliament.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that my words will not be misinterpreted. The amendments proposed by the government party represent for the most part a definite improvement as regards what exists presently in the Standing Orders. I refer more particularly to Standing Orders 75A and 75B, about which the members of my party are in agreement. In this sense, my party wishes to congratulate the government on his contribution.

However, we are not going any further, we do not support the government any longer, we are opposing and we shall continue to oppose, with all our strength, the adoption of Standing Order 75C for reasons that are not due so much to the past as to the present and that I should like to enumerate briefly in a moment.

Mr. Speaker, to sum up the whole thing, I believe that any majority government, be it made up of Progressive Conservatives, Liberals, New Democrats or Créditistes, will always be very strongly tempted to control everything.

A majority government has control over its members. A very complex system has been established to control not only the attendance of hon. members in the house but also what they must say and do. The government should not be blamed for that, Mr. Speaker, since it is trying to ensure its survival. I do not say that not because the Liberals are on the other side; I would say the same thing if it were the Progressive Conservatives, the New Democrats or the Créditistes because it is so strong a temptation that one is inclined to yield to it.

Therefore, the control of hon. members, of what they say and of the introduction of proposed legislation is possible. In fact, any government, whatever its political colour, controls also the contents of the legislation, and the standing orders that have been adopted say it clearly: No member of the opposition can introduce a measure that entails the spending of money.

That means, Mr. Speaker, that members of the opposition cannot introduce money bills liable to help the Canadian people. If they did, they would be called to order pursuant to the standing orders and the tradition of this house.

So, any government controls not only its own members but also its own ministers. It may happen that one of them goes astray but he is always called back to order, and many precedents prove it. The government controls not only its members but also the legislation. It controls the spending of money and sets up the legislative program.

In fact, one can never blame the opposition for the fact that during a given session, no significant legislation has been passed. Why? Because all legislative action comes and will continue to come—and this is in accordance with the Standing Orders—from the majority government. The same holds true in the case of a minority government.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, because of the majority it holds, a government controls parliament in a certain way. What displeases me most in the house is to realize that a government is able to control this supreme institution called parliament.

Since September, Mr. Speaker, we have noted a certain change in the way that committees carry on their work. We have seen that, more and more, the government is giving in to the temptation of controlling everything, and in particular the work of the committees.

Again last night, in this house, several hon. members were raising such questions. I was one of them, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that the work done in committee is important. That work must be carried on independently from the ministers' will, because the hon. members' work is not subordinated to the political parties. Such must be the situation.

Then, Mr. Speaker, besides controlling parliament and the hon. members on the government side, in committee as well as in the house, the government, by means of rule 75c could—if it was ever passed, and that would be unfortunate—also have control over the opposition members. It could shelve the third parties and, on that score, Mr. Speaker, I need not say that we shall never give in.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said so eloquently, we have all been elected on an equal footing. We have all received a mandate from our electors and once elected, we represent our constituents, and also the whole Canadian population.

• (4:40 p.m.)

As such, we are all equal in the house and should be treated accordingly.

This morning I had the pleasure of taking part in the C.B.C. program "Présent", with the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Forest) who recognized that closure was archaic, harsh and unpopular with the population.

Though he did not say it in so many words, it meant that the government was looking for another way to control debates, to stop them when it saw fit and even to impose a time limit.

But what distresses me even more, Mr. Speaker—and I would be remiss in my duties if I did not say it, though it might hurt some people—are the statements made about the opposition. Some seem to believe in this house that the Créditistes are mainly responsible for the extension of our proceedings, and so on, and so forth. The government has often attempted to put the blame on the Créditistes.

When I attended one of the meetings of the committee on procedure and organization—I was then one of its members—I saw many sniggers and noted many hints and allegations, some of which were downright scornful. This was meant to imply that because of the unfortunate behaviour of the Ralliement créditiste when the Criminal Code was under consideration, it was now necessary to force upon us, willy-nilly, a provision on closure which is as hateful as the present one and which although it is more concealed, more modern, would also be a weapon, a guillotine to put an end to the squawks of the members of the Ralliement créditiste.

Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with that allegation and if it were only for this reason, the government has not heard the last of us, because they are not being honest in making such insinuations.

Mr. Speaker, it is unacceptable to be criticized by some government members who never rise to speak in the house, who sit here doing nothing, who get their allowance but remain idle in parliament. In accusing members of the Ralliement créditiste, of the New Democratic Party or the Progressive Conservative party of talking too much when they are making every effort to fulfil the mandate they have received from their constituents, I believe those government members are going too far.

That shows you in what spirit the present government introduces Standing Order 75c. That is why I wish to congratulate the member for Peace River and his colleagues, as well as the member for Winnipeg North Centre and his colleagues, for not letting go, and showing the government that even though it has managed to muzzle its men, it will never manage to muzzle the members of the opposition, at least certainly not the members of the Ralliement créditiste, and I would like that to be clear. Past experience has proved that those two parties teach lessons to the two old parties. Indeed, all the members of the Ralliement créditiste, like the N.D.P. members, make it a point of honour, a duty to participate in the drawing up of legislation, and not in delaying it, to reject the government proposals, to amend or study them. To my mind, those members certainly deserve congratulations, and certainly not censure or the imposition of Standing Order 75c.

Mr. Speaker, I say that Standing Order 75c is unfair to those members who are in earnest about their role as members, and who want to fulfil their electoral mandate adequately.

The government will soon rise in defence of efficiency. The partisans of efficiency, of production, of profitability are having their fling today, under the boot of the Prime Minister. Nothing is left to chance. It is a question of anticipating everything, of regulating everything, of prescribing, if necessary, always on the ground of efficiency and of output. The content or the quality of the bills matters little. What is important is the number of laws that we shall adopt to impress the Canadian people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we maintain that it is the quality that matters rather than the quantity. This should not make you conclude, Mr. Speaker, that we are agreed to filibuster or to delay the proceedings of the house. That is not the question. We are ready to co-operate and we have proved it.

It will also be necessary, Mr. Speaker, to examine the content of the bills. One is right to oppose a bill when it does not contain anything or when it contains controversial measures. The government can certainly not blame us then because we perform our duty.

Under to the Canadian parliamentary system, the contents of legislation has to be controlled, imposed by the government and more precisely by the government members. In fact, no member, not even a government member, can move a piece of legislation that would involve expenditures. That is important in my opinion and that is why I come back to it.

So members of the opposition are fully restricted as to the presentation of bills. There is only one possibility left to them, which is nevertheless tremendous: To consider government proposals, government projects and then give them unreserved support, criticize them in part, move amendments or reject them completely. Such is our lot. In short, opposition members cannot avail or pride themselves of any serious move, because they cannot make any proposal involving the expenditure of public funds.

The opposition as it is now designed must necessarily wait for government initiatives before initiating constructive criticism on behalf of the Canadian people. The purpose of Standing Order 75c is to take away from the opposition the right of free speech with regard to government proposals. This is the way things are now.

Therefore, the sole asset, the only working tool of the opposition, is the time factor. For the opposition this factor is essential and basic. It makes it possible for it to study bills which generally are introduced at the last minute by the government for fear that they might be considered, that certain controversial questions might be let out in the open such as, for instance, the omnibus bill. The government is afraid that these subjects might be considered and scrutinized and that one or more amendments may be moved or that the whole bill may be thrown out, which remains the basic privilege of democracy. In fact, it is even its corner-stone.

Under Standing Order 75c, opposition members will not only be unable to take any financial or government initiative but the time allotted for the thorough consideration of such measures could also be limited by any minister, at any time, on any subject.

This is sheer nonsense.

Opposition members are blamed for taking too much time but we can indeed blame the government members for never making good use of the time of the house, for never participating in any debate. We even wonder what they are doing here. Why have they been elected? Why are they paid for?

I think that the present debate will, at least, serve the best interests of parliament because members will ask themselves questions about their duties in parliament.

It is easy to blame the members who speak in the house but let us also blame those who never participate in any debate.

Those are the people who would prevent opposition members from doing their job, from doing their part in considering legislation. Mr. Speaker, it is sheer nonsense.

We agree that the rules should be changed in order to avoid, as far as possible any waste of time. We wholeheartedly agree on the wording of orders 75A and 75B, but not on that of 75c.

We must think over the role of the government member as well as that of the opposition member. We must equip ourselves with modern and efficient tools.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that a few days ago, government members met for a famous symposium that will probably go on record, to think over their function. They all asked themselves the following question: What are we doing in Ottawa? What are we doing in parliament? Why did they hold this meeting? Precisely because most of them realized they could not take part in debate. Their role is restricted to being mere numbers in the voting machine.

Mr. Speaker, government members envy opposition members who can be active in debate, and that is why they ought to be congratulated for having asked themselves questions. However, I am at a loss to understand that those same hon. members, who now demand from their Prime Minister the power, the privilege—which indeed they have and do not exercise—to take part in discussions, would like the opposition members to remain seated and say: You are absolutely right. All bills are good; we remain in our seats. Keep on governing, and in four years, we will have an election.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is preposterous. We cannot tolerate that.

Now back to rules 75A, B and C. Under rule 75A, as one knows, unanimity is required among members of all parties. That means, Mr. Speaker, that whenever the government introduces a bill of national interest or a bill which they believe important and which they want passed as quickly as possible, for all kinds of reason, good in themselves, they seek the advice of the house leader of each opposition party and try to come to what they call a gentlemen's agreement, a friendly agreement between the parties. And if the government does not get that unanimous consent, they could resort to rule 75B, that is a decision between the representatives of the various parties could be reached on a majority basis.

It is clearly mentioned in the amendment, and I quote:

—including that of the government,—

That is more or less what has been happening since the beginning of this session, and it seems that the principle has worked out quite well. Indeed, all parties have been very co-operative, and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) could vouch for it were he in the house at this time.

When the omnibus bill was debated, the Minister of Justice decided at one point to ask for our co-operation. Right away we replied: "We are ready to co-operate." Indeed, Mr. Speaker, an hour and thirty minutes later we were asking ourselves that the question be put. They cannot therefore blame us for uselessly extending the proceedings. We are ready to co-operate. We are showing our good will, but we would like hon. members opposite to do likewise.

However, Standing Order 75c is unacceptable for many reasons. It states that if an agreement cannot be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A, a minister from his seat, in connection with any question, at any time, can propose a motion aimed at limiting the debate.

This, Mr. Speaker, is strangely similar to the present Standing Order 33 which reads as follows:

Immediately before the order of the day for resuming an adjourned debate is called, or if the House be in committee of the whole—

That becomes interesting. And note that is nearly word for word.

—any Minister of the Crown who, standing in his place, shall have given notice at a previous sitting—

This, Mr. Speaker, is exactly how Standing Order 75c reads.

—of his intention so to do may move that the debate shall not be further adjourned, or that the further consideration shall be the first business of the committee—

This is rule 33, at page 28 of the Standing Orders adopted in January 1969.

Mr. Speaker, there is a strange similarity between Standing Orders 75c and 33. We can find it also between Standing Orders 16A and 75c.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, that is all one.

Standing order 16A 3(b) read as follows, and I quote:

The Chairman—

In other words, the President of the Privy Council—

—from his place in the house can give verbal notice of the meetings arranged for the said committee—

Or for the sittings of the house—

—in any case, written notice of such a meeting, etc.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would not want to take the time of the house to read rule 16A, which was rejected, besides, and rightly so. If any hon. member put side by side on his desk rule 75c, standing order 33 and rule 16A, he would find, on reading them that they are almost identical. He would see that the object is the same in the three cases: to limit debate and to put a stop to it.

Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what we do not accept. The opposition has no wish to be controlled or muzzled.

Mr. Speaker, I would not want to take up too much of the time allotted to hon. members nor to impose upon my hon. colleagues' kindness, but I still have some important comments to make at this time.

Many before me have spoken with emphasis and have expressed the hope of greater co-operation between the party in power and the opposition.

[Mr. Fortin.]

The President of the Privy Council has complained in the house about the lack of co-operation between the parties. However, the opposition calls the hon. members on the government side high-handed people, who want to establish a totalitarian system.

Mr. Speaker, this is what gave birth, I think, to Standing Order 75c. As a matter of fact, while yielding to the temptation to control everything, the majority government said to itself: By controlling the business of the house, we will avoid quibbling, discussions and loss of time.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that does not make any sense for the following reason. In the same way that the government is asking the opposition every day to compromise, to make concessions and to co-operate, it should also compromise and co-operate.

I suggest this is the stumbling-block of this discussion which is altogether too often forgotten.

Members of the house rise at any time to blame their colleagues of their lack of co-operation, of abuse of power, of the rules, of anything you wish, but everyone seems to forget that if we were willing to co-operate, nothing would be easier as far as setting up time limits is concerned.

Here is the proof. The whole opposition seems to agree on rules 75A and 75B. Most government members say that the standing orders of the House of Commons are archaic. That is true, Mr. Speaker. They say that the House of Commons is held up to ridicule, in many respects, by Canadian people. That also is true, Mr. Speaker. But blocking the business, imposing closure, muzzling hon. members from all sides of the house, that is not a step forward, it is a step backward.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, if there is to be real co-operation, there must not be on any side drastic measures or filibustering, except if we are deliberately provoked, as the government did during the debate on the omnibus bill.

And even there, we were right, because we were faithful to the mandate conferred on us by our electors, for is that not the purpose of our presence here? Were we not commissioned to act in conformity with the will of our electors and to see that it is respected?

However, it goes without saying that in certain circumstances, during consideration of this or that bill, where public opinion is aroused against its adoption, where the consequences of its adoption could be very detrimental to a large part of the population, hon.

members, whatever their party, should have the privilege of making themselves heard on a controversial bill. I think it is a privilege that no party, no man will ever be able to take away from the house, without destroying Canadian parliamentarianism.

Mr. Speaker, what strikes me even more is this: If we replace the Liberals by the Conservatives and if the Conservatives brought forward this same standing order 75c we would see the best speakers of the Liberal party—such as the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) for instance—make telling speeches and say to the Conservative government that it is authoritarian, totalitarian and dictatorial, and that it is keeping Parliament under its heel. Then we would hear great speeches, by Liberal members, including the President of the Privy Council himself, and I think that he is fair enough to admit it. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté) who is smiling, would be the first one to stand up and blame the government for being authoritarian, autocratic and anything you want.

Today, these people are in power and they would like to do so. One wonders whether they are really serving the Canadian parliament and the Canadian people or whether they are as always serving the interests of only one man, the Prime Minister, who wants to rule everything. One can ask the question but I do not know what is the answer. However, they know it. Their conscience dictates it to them.

Mr. Speaker, one must not lose sight, of the fact during this debate which questions and jeopardizes the ability for each member, in particular for opposition members, to speak freely, that we are the spokesmen of the Canadian people, and that on that basis the quantity of the bills must necessarily give place to quality.

Let us come back to the main argument advanced by the President of the Privy Council who clearly stated, during consideration of standing order 16A and who said it again on many instances during the meetings of the committee on procedure and organization and again yesterday, during the consideration of the motion which he introduced, that the business of the house is lagging behind which results into a great loss of time. That is a fact, and everyone admits it. There is no argument about that Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the President of the Privy Council on that score; but that does not mean that we should hurl ourselves at the other extreme to the extent of limiting the debate to one day for instance as standing order 75c stipulates.

Mr. Speaker, let us work it out: after the movers of the motion have spoken, as well as those who reply officially on behalf of each party, I can assure you that there is not much time left for those members who are known as the back-benchers. In other words, a very small minority, not even 1 per cent of the members, would be able to speak on standing order 75c. The other members would sit here to allow the government to either be overthrown or stay in power. We are not voting machines; we are here to participate.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind you that the Canadian parliament, in my humble opinion, is an instrument put at the disposal of the representatives of the Canadian people to legislate; it gives every member the power to participate in the drawing up of legislation. I feel it would be an error on our part if we were to take away that right from the members.

Mr. Speaker, just one more thing before bringing my remarks to a close: any debate on any topic, always gives us the opportunity to throw light on every aspect of a question, and enables us to put it before the public. It also gives us the opportunity of expressing the public opinion in the House of Commons. It affords the public, as well as the members of every party, the opportunity to protest, to judge, to criticize, or to accept a proposal, as the case may be. It also gives the opportunity of delving more deeply into a subject, and to do some research. A debate can compel the members to think, to work and to prepare speeches. Lastly, it enables us to better understand the implications of a piece of legislation and maybe, if it is in the best interests of the Canadian people, to amend it.

If we limit debate according to the state of health or good will of a minister, whoever he may be, Mr. Speaker, then the sovereignty of parliament does not make any sense.

Several government members here are bringing up again the notorious matter of the omnibus bill. I would like then not to consider that matter as a refusal on our part to participate or to co-operate. It would be unfair of them, because they are aware, as well as president of the Privy Council that we did co-operate. In fact, many times he has sought the co-operation of the Ralliement Créditiste members, and we had never turned him down, we have always accepted to co-operate. On the other hand, every time he has tried to impose his own views on us without seeking our advice, we have always refused our co-operation, because as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Center said, we refuse, under the pretext of modernizing the rules of the House of Commons, to be pushed around. We readily accept modernization but we want to truly and fully participate in it.

Mr. Speaker, members of the Ralliement Créditiste will not allow those members who never take part in the business of the house to blame us for extending our debates unnecessarily. This is nonsense and it should cause the President of the Privy Council and his colleagues to ponder and urge the opposition members to be a little more brief in order not to delay our proceedings too much. But at the same time, he should see to it that his own people participate more in our discussions so that parliament would not only for the opposition but also for government members who do not speak too often.

This is why we believe, Mr. Speaker, that there would be an advantage at this moment, even if we support section 75A and 75B, in withdrawing section 75C and in referring the whole thing to the committee for a deeper and more serious study. The very definition of the Canadian parliament, of the meaning of a debate, of the role of a member, whether of the government or of the opposition, is at stake, and I think the question should be of interest to all hon. members.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. colleagues for their patience and to ask those who are most experienced to express their views in order to preserve the rights of this parliament. I would also ask them to set an example to the younger members in order to prove to them that this parliament still mean something in 1969, because even if it is modernized, one must still respect the right of every member to speak.

[English]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as a number of hon. members have already suggested, the committee which has considered and produced the recommended rules spent a fair amount of its time since Christmas trying to arrive at some kind of compromise between the position taken by hon. members on the other side and the position taken by the government. I think it is fitting that this difference in point of view is expressed in the amendment put forward. That is the real controversy that has been before the committee and in fact before the house for most of this session, namely, the point of view taken by the opposition that the majority of the members should not in the long run have the opportunity of determining how the time of the house is to be utilized.

As hon. members have already mentioned, principally in seven sittings of the committee the question of time allocation was discussed. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in one of his lyrical moments, suggested that everything was going swimmingly and there was no hint of difficulty or controversy until we got down to the last two meetings. I think the hon. member will agree he was being lyrical. At all times it was made perfectly clear on behalf of the majority of members of the house, and my colleagues on the committee made it perfectly clear they considered that this and all other questions in the house were to be decided by the majority of voices, including the decision of programming.

The committee devoted itself to arriving at some kind of compromise to find means whereby the rights of the minority to express their viewpoint in opposition to a particular bill could be made available and at the same time so that ultimately a decision could be taken on all of the measures put before parliament. This is the basic question, and apparently this basic question still remains to be decided in the house and between the various parties in the house.

I will not spend any time describing in detail 75A and 75B. The proposed rule 75A really makes formal what has been an informal practice of the house, that is to say, by general agreement of the representatives of the parties a decision is made as to how time is to be allocated. The advantage that 75A offers which has not hitherto been available under our rules is that it will make it possible for the representatives of the parties to agree on an appropriate order. We will not be in the situation we have sometimes found ourselves in where one or two members can prevent the vast majority of members of the house from arriving at a decision as to how the time is to be allocated at the various stages of a bill.

As has already been indicated, under rule 75B there is a different procedure, recognizing the fact that there is a dissent. One of the opposition parties may well dissent to the proposal put forward. One stage of the bill is to be dealt with at a time. Of course, the report stage and third reading are to be dealt with together. There is to be a two hour debate with opportunities of ten minutes each for hon. members to express their reasons why the order should or should not be made, and in the house, by a majority decision of the house, the majority of voices decides whether or not the order should pass.

I think hon. members will recognize these are useful tools which will greatly facilitate the work of the house. I do not think we can lay down our pens on this particular task without also dealing with the pathological situation, the one that will occur from time to time where perhaps a united opposition, or in the case of 75B two of the opposition parties, perhaps the two minor opposition parties, will not be in agreement with the proposed order and thereby be able to bring the business of the house to a halt.

Rule 75c has a deadlock provision, Mr. Speaker. It is to apply in a situation where, as I have said, there is a united opposition against the government or where even two of the opposition parties, perhaps two of the minor opposition parties, are united in opposing the timetable which may be agreeable to the other two parties in the house.

I think it is only fair to point out the particular aspect of 75B which makes this safeguard proposal necessary, and that is that 75B really declares those things equal which in effect are not equal. For example, 75B declares that the 153 Liberals in the house are equal in weight and quantity to the 14 Creditistes. It declares that the 22 members of the N.D.P., are equivalent in size to the 72 members of the Progressive Conservative party. In other words, it equates groups that have large differences between them and thereby creates what is in effect an unreal equity between them.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said he assumes, and I take it he meant this seriously, that in most cases the government house leader will say, "This is it; either you agree to this order or I will make one of my own." I use his quotation from Mr. St. Laurent, and perhaps more in the vein in which Mr. St. Laurent intended it:

> While there are certain things which we have a legal right to do it is not our manner to do so.

I would suggest that during the course of this particular session that fact has been quite evident in the running of the house. But I equally put to you, Mr. Speaker, the possibility of two opposition parties using the leverage which 75B would give them to hold the house up to ransom, or even the possibility of one of the minor parties—where the other has indicated it was unalterably opposed to the legislation—trying to squeeze concessions in terms of time or of amendments to the legislation or other particular concessions which in the opinion of the majority might be neither wise nor just. It is because of this leverage that we feel there should be some safeguard against a provision which could so aptly be described as being undemocratic, which can certainly be described as being unparliamentary, and which equally can be described as contrary to the expressed written provisions of our constitution.

First, with respect to its undemocratic character, what it really indicates is that we would have minority rule, that a minority of members would rule how the house should carry on its business. That is not consistent with the basic tenets of democracy. In the long run the majority should be in a position to decide.

Second, I suggest it is an unparliamentary provision in the sense that there is no other assembly in the parliamentary system which in this way gives the whip hand to the small parties in the house, to a small minority of members. Equally I suggest it is contrary to the expressed written provisions of our constitution, about which we have heard reference already today. Section 49 of the British North America Act states:

> Questions arising in the House of Commons shall be decided by a majority of voices—

In other words, I think that without more than is advocated in 75B, we have a rule that is undemocratic, contrary to the parliamentary tradition, and contrary to the expressed terms of our constitution. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was prepared to claim fatherhood for 75B, and I am prepared to accord him the responsibility or, if he prefers it, the credit for having produced this particular proposal. But I just point out that in trying to get minority control of this house under 75B, and 75B only, he is really reaching for that which the electors of Canada refused to him and his party, namely, control of the House of Commons.

Because of the extensive description already given of 75c I will not delay over it long, but I do wish to emphasize its principal aspects. The first is that the application under 75c is conducted only with respect to a single bill, and with the exception of the combination of report stage and third reading it is applied only to a single stage of a single bill.

The way in which the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) described it in his second formulation was correct, when he described it as requiring the lapse of at least ten days before the full rule could be worked in detail. In fact, under our procedures I would suggest that as a minimum much more than ten days would be required. This is because, as hon. members know, there is now a rule of the house that unless a special order is made the committee stage of public bills is automatically conducted in a standing committee, and the experience we have of our standing committees during the course of this session is that it is has taken them two to three weeks to deal with major bills. What is more, under our Standing Orders the report stage of a bill cannot be called until at least 48 hours have elapsed from the time the report is received from the standing committee. In fact, and in accordance with our experience in the house, many more than ten days will elapse before all the various stages of a bill are gone through.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Under this proposal how long will a bill be before a standing committee? That time can also be reduced to one day.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It can indeed, although I think what we have to talk about is the reality of life and, to repeat again what Mr. St. Laurent said, this is the way public bills have been dealt with. I would point out to the hon. member that up until now we have in fact been in the position in standing committees, merely by the use of a majority, to bring debate in committees to an end, but that has not happened. I would suggest that the practical way in which this proposed rule will be operated in the house is that there will certainly be at least one month's time before a bill goes through all its stages.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Do I take it from the minister's remarks that he would be prepared to take out of this proposed rule the one day application in reference to the committee stage?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, it is a worth-while suggestion and I would agree it follows naturally from my remarks, but perhaps at this point I could put forward the general principles which I think should apply to the writing of a time limit into a bill. I agree that four days on all stages of an important bill may be far too short, but writing in four days may be far too long for many less important bills, and one of the facts of life in this house is that when you have this kind of minimum time limit then, whether it is necessary or not, the debate expands to fill the time limit. So I think it is a reasonable safeguard to have one sitting day although in fact, under the procedures followed in the house, committee stage on occasion has taken many more days than one sitting day.

Mr. Bell: And hasn't it worked? I ask that as a serious question. Would the minister not admit that report stage and committee stage have worked this session?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No. I point out to the hon. member that it is the specific weakness in our procedures with regard to the report stage that makes it necessary that we have this provision now. The experience has been that under the arrangements we made for the rules at Christmas time we have put more reasonable time limits on second reading and third reading, but the experience has also been that where there is an uncontrolled stage the debate tends to shift over into it and grow there. Therefore we are trying to provide for that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when the house last gave major consideration to this basic question of programming the time of the house and we were considering the proposed new rule 16A, the complaint was made that it would provide for an order with regard to more than one bill and more than one stage of a single bill. What the present proposed rule does is provide that on three different occasions the government will have to come into the house to seek an order of the house, after a two hour debate, on the manner in which time is to be allocated. In other words, there will have to be three separate applications for such an order, and to that extent the objections to 16A have been met. In addition, we have stipulated—and this was a matter of some considerable negotiation in the committee—a minimum of one day's debate at each of the three stages.

The second objection made to the previous proposal with regard to time allocation was that it would be possible to limit the debate on a bill at all stages even before the debate had started. Because of the one stage provision that, of course, is no longer possible and in addition the debate will have to have started on the particular stage before the rule may be invoked.

An hon. Member: For how long?

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, would the minister answer a question? I put the same question to him that I put to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton this afternoon, in reply to which he said that the debate under the rules would last ten days as a minimum. Does the minister go along with that or was the hon. member somewhat exaggerating?

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I checked what I said in reply to the hon. member's question and Hansard will show I said there will be an elapsed time.

Mr. Peters: Did you change the blues?

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has made a completely and unworthy parliamentary suggestion. I made no alteration. I tell the house now I was not speaking from a prepared text and my first formulation, as the hon. member has said, was different from the second.

Mr. Woolliams: You made a correction.

Mr. Blair: In answer to the question, I make no correction because I gave the correct answer.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think I actually have the floor, Mr. Speaker, and should be allowed to continue.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister answer the question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Actually it may have been before the hon. member came back in the house, but I indicated what I was talking about was the lapsing of a period of time. I did not say there would be a minimum of ten days debate. I indicated that with the period of time customarily taken at the committee stage it may be closer to a month than a minimum of ten days.

Mr. Woolliams: What do you say is the minimum under the rule?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My experience in dealing with major legislation in the house—

Mr. Woolliams: Just answer the question.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will answer it if the hon. member will be patient. The anticipated experience is about a month's elapsed time.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I say nicely to the minister that I hope he would not mislead either the house or the communications media. I have asked a point-blank question. Surely the minister can tell us the minimum number of days that would be involved if the rule were implemented. I do not mean his experience. I mean under the rule as it is drafted.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I must say I do not think I should have to repeat the remarks I made when the hon. member was not in the chamber.

Mr. Bell: He did not say anything.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In respect of bills which have been referred to the standing committee our experience has been that a period of two or three weeks has been involved and even the report from the committee stage has a minimum of a two day delay before it can be taken up again. It would be difficult to use the procedure in a shorter period than one month's elapsed time.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, surely this is a deliberate attempt to mislead the house. The minister knows perfectly well that the time in which a matter may be before a committee can be limited to one day. We are not talking about anticipated time or past experience—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I want to point out to the hon. member that there is no point of order; this is debate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting that an hon. member who apparently can be very indignant about the rights of others to speak should interfere with my right to speak. I point out to the hon. member for the third time that the proceedings of the committees of this house in respect of a major bill can take two to three weeks and that the report cannot be dealt with again for a period of 48 hours.

An hon. Member: It sounds like an auctioneer.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is right. What we are involved with here, after all, is a mathematical calculation involving the number of bills to be dealt with in the course of a parliamentary year and the number of sitting days.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Would the President of the Privy Council permit me a question at this time?

I would like to ask him this: In view of his statement concerning the allocation of time at different stages of the bill, would he tell us if he would be prepared to amend section 75c so as to insert a certain guarantee for the house, in particular a certain period of time for the study of a bill?

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I point out to the hon. member that I already indicated that if we put in a limit of greater amounts of time, then for smaller bills that may turn out to be too much and on larger bills it may turn out to be too little. What we want to arrive at is some kind of a median which will provide a basic minimum for any piece of legislation, recognizing, however, that in respect of important bills very much more time will be taken up.

In the last debate it was suggested that the change here is more severe than the procedure being used in the British parliament. The fact of the matter is that in the British parliament the procedure in respect of allocation of time for debate is far more drastic than that proposed here. In that procedure it is customary for the debate on second reading to take only one sitting day. This is generally respected by members and may be enforced by the Speaker if it appears that the time may be exceeded.

It is the general practice in the British parliament to have an order not unlike the one proposed under 16A except that it is confined to three stages of a single bill whereby the committee stage, report stage and third reading are all allocated under the same order. While the practice of the British house provides for a single day to debate whether or not an order has been made, the procedure provided here gives many more opportunities at different stages for the opposition to debate whether or not the order should go, and since the orders are confined to a single stage of a bill they are less encompassing than the British orders.

It has been said in the discussions which took place that you, Mr. Speaker, should be involved in the proceedings. Indeed, there was an article to this effect written by a former colleague of the members of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Douglas Fisher, in respect of the question as to why the Chair had not been involved in these proceedings. Without disclosing the committee discussions in that regard, I think it is fair to point out that there was, I believe, a general consensus that in what is essentially a partisan political matter that is the amount of time to be taken on a matter Mr. Speaker should not be caught in the middle of that particular debate. Reference can be made in that regard to the fact that the British in their allocation of time procedure equally have been very careful not to put Mr. Speaker in the position of having a conflict of interest in which he would have to choose between two contending sides on a political question.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Certainly.

Mr. Fairweather: What alternative did the British have to involving the Speaker in these delicate negotiations?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): They have an institution. It is interesting that the hon. member should mention it. I see the hon. member for Peace River is smiling. They have a very able gentleman known as "usual channels", a public servant who negotiates between the government and the official opposition. It is very interesting that "usual channels" in the United Kingdom does not consider the minor parties, for instance, in Canada the N.D.P., in that regard.

Mr. Woolliams: They are getting pretty important.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): They certainly think they are anyway. The question has been raised from time to time as to why Standing Order 33—

• (5:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is the hon. member for Lotbinière rising in order to ask a question or to raise a point of order?

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have only a limited time.

Mr. Baldwin: We will give you extra time.

Mr. Bell: We will give the President of the Privy Council extra time, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Does the hon. member for Lotbinière wish to direct a question to the minister?

Mr. Fortin: I wish to rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Lotbinière rises on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: It seems to me that since standing order 75c has not yet been carried, it may still be dealt with in this house, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to ask the minister whether his intention is to eventually become more Canadian than British. We have heard enough of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The question has been raised on many occasions, why has not closure been used? For example, it was raised a great deal in connection with the omnibus Criminal Code bill and people asked why closure was not used at that time in order to shut off the debate. This was particularly so in connection with the very lengthy debate that occurred at the report stage of that bill. The shortest answer to that question is that in effect Standing Order 33 is not effective in dealing with our new procedures. In particular, it is not effective in dealing with the report stage when you can have, as we did in the debate on the Criminal Code bill, many different questions, each one of which would have to be the subject of a closure motion.

I believe I am right in saying that 44 amendments were filed in the omnibus Criminal Code debate, and by the ruling of the Chair that number was reduced to around 30. Given the fact that under Standing Order 33 closure requires two sitting days to run its full course, this would have meant that 60 days or a longer period would have been necessary to close off that stage alone. In other words, I think it is important that we have this new procedure.

When we adopted the new procedure last December we failed to provide for the eventuality, which subsequently was proven to be an actuality, that the debate would be prolonged at the report stage far beyond a reasonable discussion of the issues.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the President of the Privy Council permit a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will he deal with the point I tried to make, that that situation could have been dealt with under 75B? I recognize the report stage problem, but I wonder whether 75A or 75B would not be sufficient to deal with the situation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I have said, Mr. Speaker, if the two minor parties, that is, the hon. gentleman and his colleagues and the party to his left, were not in agreement with the time allocation, we would be no farther ahead; we would have, in effect, a deadlock in the house brought about by the agreement of the two minor parties. Again may I point out that the difference with regard to Standing Order 33 is this: under proposed standing order 75c there is an obligation on the part of the minister to consult with the parties in accordance with the consultation process. This is prerequisite to his attempting the programming.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member may laugh, but the fact of the matter is that under 75c the procedure cannot be used unless there has been advance consultation. The final objection—this is really the basic objection—of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is that with regard to a small minority in this house, or even with respect to the minority in the house represented by the united opposition parties, the majority should not be able to compel a decision as to the amount of time to be taken on a bill. I would point out that there is also, in effect, minority closure; that is to say, there is the position that the house is put in when so much time is taken on one or two measures, such as was taken in this session by the Ralliement Créditiste on the Criminal Code bill, that as a result a dozen measures are left on the order paper and could not be dealt with.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, this confirms what I was saying a moment ago. I should like the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) to withdraw his remarks and to say clearly that if we took a greater part than usual in the debate on the omnibus bill, it is because it was a controversial bill. It is exactly the principle we are advocating at this time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, this is not a point of order, the hon. member is starting a debate.

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I point out that what happens, in effect, when an excess of time is taken on one or two bills is, as has happened so often in this parliament recently and as is the case with the present order paper, that major matters of importance on the current order paper, for example, with regard to educational television, financial institutions and expropriation, cannot be dealt with in the time available. As I have already indicated, there are only so many sitting days in the year and the time has to be divided carefully among the number of sitting days so that we can assure that each measure will be dealt with.

Perhaps the best statement with regard to minority closure, that is, where a small number of members of the house take up so much time that all the measures on the order paper cannot be dealt with, was made in the debate of May 20, 1965, on the resolution regarding House of Commons procedures. The particular passage to which I refer will be found at page 1531 of Hansard, when the speaker said:

> Let us on the opposition side of the house realize that arrangements for the limitation of debate—

Mr. Woolliams: Who said this?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale):

> —arrangements for the allocation of time, are not to be shouted down by calling them closure. Methods whereby debate is limited, whereby debate comes to an end at a certain time, are not nearly as serious a form of closure as is the situation we are faced with when, by endless talk on one or two subjects, the opportunity to get at other subjects is completely foreclosed. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is in the interests of those of us on the opposition side of the house that there be planning of our time so that we can get at all of the items that are before parliament—all of the matters of business that demand our attention.

[Mr. Fortin.]

That is what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said in 1965. I agree with him that minority closure involved in not allowing sufficient time to deal with major measures before the house is something which has to be dealt with in this parliament. The present set of rules suggested by this side of the house is, in our opinion, the best means of assuring this in any particular case.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I might be allowed to continue, Mr. Speaker, because my time is limited.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We will give the President of the Privy Council all kinds of time. In addition to his agreeing with what I said, will he also agree with my contention that this should be arrived at by consent?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member, of course, says that this should be arrived at by consent. To say that agreement has to be arrived at by the consent of all four parties is to say that one of those parties is to have a veto. That is what the hon. member seeks; he seeks to have a veto over the conduct of the house. I do not blame him. I do not suggest it is immoral or that there is anything improper about it. It is an attempt to gain political power, and he is entitled to do that. Equally, we on our side are entitled to reject his attempt to get that power and control over parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: There is no doubt about it; Perrault is the toughest pounder in the west.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Fortin: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Lotbinière on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to call your attention to the fact that in many instances since the beginning of this debate, the President of the Privy Council—perhaps he is not to blame and the fault lies with the interpreters, I do not know has spoken of the "minor parties" when referring to the Ralliement créditiste and the New Democratic party.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that speaking in this manner of those two parties in the house is disparaging and a violation of our privileges.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. members has just made his opinion known and the question of privilege does not arise.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I had not completed my explanation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order or on a question of privilege?

Mr. Fortin: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

I wish to point out that I had not concluded my remarks.

When someone says that we belong to "minor parties", that implies, in a disparaging sense, that we do not represent the whole population across the country. The same remark would apply to the New Democratic party. I believe that we should be referred to as "minority parties".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would point out to the hon. gentleman that the categorization of his party as a small party was not imposed on his party by me but rather was imposed upon them by the electors of Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You represent a minority of the electors.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): This is a very interesting argument because if the hon. gentleman and his colleagues are really in favour of a system of proportionate representation they should be advocating that when they stand at the polls. Of course they have not advocated any such thing. I am sure that nobody is denying, for example, the former hon. member for Selkirk the right to form the government of Manitoba because he happens to represent such a minor fraction of the total vote cast in that province. So this applies both ways.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are not showing your elegance.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am not indeed. It would be interesting to remark on the comments made in anticipation of the debate by a newspaper which is not unfriendly to the hon. gentleman opposite. Indeed, it was referred to favourably by both the hon. members for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) yesterday, although not on this subject. I am referring to the Toronto Telegram of Friday July 4, 1969, and its lead article entitled "The Battle Of The Rules". It commences in this way:

> Conservative and New Democratic M.P.s aren't likely to elicit much public sympathy if they continue to delay approval of new parliamentary rules that will empower the government to limit House of Commons debates—
> Despite the criticism of rule 75c, it seems to be reasonable. For, in effect, it has two main objectives that remove it from the category of closure. It would preserve the power of the opposition long enough to arouse public opinion. At the same time, it would enable the government to bring an issue to a decision within a reasonable period.
> To suggest, as some Opposition M.P.s have, that the passage of rule 75c would degrade parliament and make it a rubberstamp of the executive, is stretching matters.

I suggest that, given the usual inflation in debate which occurs, this is a pretty fair statement of the situation by a newspaper which, as I said, has not been known to be uncritical of this government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What does the Ottawa Citizen say?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You have it, so you should know.

Mr. Fairweather: I have it and I will read it to you in a minute.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am glad that we will be entertained by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather).

While it is the essence of our parliamentary system that the opposition must have an opportunity to criticize government measures, it is also essential that after debate the house should be permitted to come to a decision. Unhappily, the Canadian House of Commons has acquired the habit in recent years of opposition by delay, and experience in recent years indicates that with this habit the increasingly heavy legislative work load which our house must face is met not by analysis and criticism but merely by delay.

Let the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) look at the order paper and be convinced in this regard. It is fair to point out that until now—and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed this out himself—time limits have already been provided for in other aspects of house business, such as in the throne speech and budget debates and in the supply procedure for scrutinizing government spending. What is needed is some flexible procedure for dividing the time needed for public bills in a way that will ensure that each one is debated and brought to decision in that particular session.

As time goes on—and this is already evident in the order papers of recent years—the carrying on of the public business requires an increasingly large number of bills. For example, on the program for October there will be 83 measures which, of course, may be added to or subtracted from as time goes on. The fact that these 83 measures must be divided into approximately 155 to 160 sitting days that we have in our parliamentary calendar, and allowing for approximately 45 to 50 days of generalized debate such as the throne speech and budget debates as well as opposition days, means that a very strict timetable will have to be worked out for planning the business of the house.

Mr. Aiken: Would the minister permit a question? On the basis of the mathematics he has just given, if it is going to take a month for any bill to be passed by the house, how many bills are we going to get through in a session?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps this gives the best demonstration. As the hon. member may not be aware, under our rules this would not mean a month of actual sitting time of the house. In view of the two or three weeks in committee stage, of course it will not be necessary for a bill to be under full consideration in the house itself for a month. It is a fact that we do have the committee stage in our legislation which now provides the elasticity that was not available previously when bills had to pass through committee of the whole stage in the house.

In conclusion I wish to say that efforts were made in the committee to arrive at some solution which we felt would be fair to both sides, that would be fair to the government in attempting to put its programs through parliament and would be fair to the opposition in giving them the opportunity to criticize legislation. What have been arrived at are medium time targets to be set which, in the case of important bills, are minimal. I think it is fair to point out that, as hon. members feel perhaps rightly, they should take every step possible to prevent these particular measures from being adopted by the house. That is their view in this debate and presumably they will also have the same conviction about measures which are not just related to procedures of the house, that is to say, major legislation such as with regard to taxation, Indian policy or other important questions.

But I should like to make clear to the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) that I do not think his party should be criticized for having felt on a matter of principle that they had to take a long time in debating the omnibus Criminal Code bill. What the house has to do is to make a provision that while hon. members may feel they have to take that time they can at least be relieved of that obligation by some kind of fair allocation of time order which will enable other measures to be dealt with.

I really do not expect hon. members to support this. On the other hand, I am sure they do not expect me to favour a system whereby a minority in this house controls the business of the house. However, I trust we will have a meaningful debate in this regard, and I hope that perhaps even at this late date we may reach a general agreement in the house as to some effective means of programming the business, bearing in mind that section 49 of the B.N.A. Act says that ultimately the decisions of the house are to be made by a majority of voices.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Post Office Department—zoning of postal addresses in large centres; the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom)—Agriculture—possibility of aid to western farmers following meeting between premier and Prime Minister; the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt)—National Revenue—Ingersoll, Ont.—steps to restore customs services.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, presented to the house on Friday, June 20, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): The Speaker, it is the arrogance of the government that sticks in my crop. In July the place to play the numbers game is at country fairs and not in the House of Commons. The minister who has just spoken knows perfectly well that the committee on which we served held meetings all through the spring, and it was not until he served his ultimatum in May that we realized that he and the government were determined to bring on a form of closure which had proved to be such an impossible plan last December.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I ask the hon. member a question? Is it not a fact that by general consent of the committee the question of the allocation of time was left over to be dealt with in the latter part of the session while other matters, such as the committee system, were dealt with? At all times hon. members knew that this was something which we felt the house would have to deal with in this session.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We thought you would be reasonable.

Mr. Fairweather: That is the point. We made a mistake, and that is the problem with this motion. Because some people in this parliament are reasonable we had expected that we would not be faced with such an arrogant proposal. We went on to discuss other issues upon which agreement could readily be reached.

• (5:50 p.m.)

If we are in the game of reading editorials I suppose it is only fair to give measure for measure. I shall not go through a long preamble as to which party the Ottawa Citizen usually supports but, by coincidence, on the same day the Toronto Telegram was giving the minister the benefit of its editorial excellence there appeared an editorial in the Citizen entitled "Rights Imperilled". Not a bad day, July 4, considering the significance of that date in the history of this continent. Criticizing the closure rule as being too drastic, the article reads:

> It is no accident that the government decided to wait until the dying hours of the present session to introduce its new closure rule—and that is what rule 75-C is.
> The apparent fatigue of all members might help the government slip it through. But the weapon will backfire if the opposition remains determined to fight.
> No parliamentarians can become as intractable, as unwilling to compromise, as those who are tired, who want to go home, but can't because they feel put upon and must stay to do battle. Much of the good work accomplished in gaining opposition co-operation to speed the work of parliament may be undone if the government keeps to its course.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) raised this important question in his contribution to the debate. The article continues:

> When a majority of the house leaders cannot agree on a time limit for debate on a bill, rule 75-C would permit the government to impose a limit of one day at each stage. The result could be a mockery of parliament's rights.

It is impossible for the President of the Privy Council to admit what the ultimate result of this change would be, because he finds it inconvenient to share this information. He talks about meaningful debate. Certainly we could have a meaningful debate if the facts were given frankly. I return to the editorial.

> The opposition should be given reasonable time—perhaps two or three weeks—to rally public opinion against legislation it considers iniquitous. If, after that, the public is still unmoved by opposition arguments, further debate becomes wilful obstruction. Closure can then be imposed without the taint of dictatorship.

That is a frank editorial and I read it in totality, which all too often is not the practice here. The minister speaks of the difficulty he would face in connection with the closure rule, rule 33. Surely it is within the capacity of the ministry and its programming department to put before parliament a reasonable amendment to that rule.

No matter what numbers game the minister plays the rules are not the property of the government of Canada. They are the property of individual members of this house. I presume we shall hear this from speaker after speaker. They are the property not only of members who belong to large parties but of those who belong to the smaller parties, even to those who may be independents. It is the rules of parliament that we are debating, and it is because these rules were not altogether acceptable to the members who make up this parliament that we are engaged in the present exercise of altering them.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in the course of what I thought was a masterly speech, ended with a quotation from Louis St. Laurent. Since it is almost six o'clock I hope the minister will eat his dinner recalling a quotation from a speech by one of his colleagues, a minister who has been under fire lately. This comes from yesterday's Toronto Star; it is an editorial commenting on a speech made recently by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans). The editorial speaks of the debt of gratitude the people owe him, and goes on to say:

> Their real debt of gratitude will be for the thinking he is doing to try to determine what is needed to restore a human dimension to the world; to restore to man his status of man; to give him mastery over himself once more; in short to protect man from the very efficiency the communications minister is expected to provide.
> In his second speech in recent weeks on the need for creating a new humanism, Mr. Kierans put the problem rather well when he said: "Mechanization, speed, technology, communications and computers; these are the key words which predominate today. These are the words which are driving men forward. But the one factor which is often forgotten in all this, I am afraid, is man himself—
> Recent generations have failed to create a new humanism, he said, because in a hectic century they have failed to take time out to ponder their own position in the scheme of things. As a consequence, man has become a stranger to himself, to his own personality.
> One way to overcome this, in Mr. Kierans' view, is for government to provide not only efficiency and leadership, but also sensitivity.

It is the absence of sensitivity on the part of the President of the Privy Council and his colleagues which has got us into the dilemma we face today. The editorial goes on:

> That won't be easy, because "government naturally is a self-perpetuating institution which justifies its existence on grounds that are often quite unclear."

I do not know what went on in the cabinet when the Minister of Communications was taking part in the discussion which led the government to change its course and permit the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) to introduce his motion. But I have the notion that the hon. gentleman did not think of the word "sensitivity". Nevertheless, because we are sensitive people, I suggest this is a good point at which to observe that it is six o'clock.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

[English]

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, when I demonstrated my sensitivity at six o'clock by not asking for an extension of time I was reminding Your Honour and others of the warning given by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans) about the danger of a government that lacks the essential element of sensitivity.

I should like to move on to a thesis that should be obvious to all. I refer to the property of the rules of parliament. Generally speaking, if the rules of this parliament have broad acceptance in this chamber they are bound to work efficiently. If, on the other hand, they are rammed down our throats by an insensitive government, they are likely to frustrate the very purpose the government has in mind in introducing them. Other hon. members have said that the rules are not the property of parties; that in fact parties, in our parliamentary system, have no place in parliament.

I should like to make one or two suggestions that I think might result in a much better examination of government bills. My first suggestion, to which I think the government is agreeable, is in connection with the laxity displayed by governments up to this time in getting their bills to the first reading stage. I hope that early publication of the new stream of legislation we are about to be faced with will be the rule, and that the exception will be the introduction of a bill in the latter stages of a session. This would bring about much better public understanding of the issues involved.

If I recall, it was a committee of this parliament that prepared the public for such fundamental changes as were embodied in the Divorce Act, and this made it possible for parliament to consider those changes quickly and effectively without requiring allocation of time or any unilateral decision by the ministry.

We have also had two examples of this laxity during this session. Although the piece of legislation that the house completed yesterday, the official languages bill, was clearly acceptable in principle to the majority of the citizens of this country, owing to the lack of explanation of the provisions contained in the bill I think there is real danger of its being misunderstood. The second example was the Criminal Code amendments which went to the basic consciences of a good many people.

Again, had the issues involved in that legislation received wider public discussion, perhaps there would not have been quite as much resistance to those reforms as was the case.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) used the British experience and the British rules as an analogy. There are a couple of procedures used by the United Kingdom parliament that I think should be copied here. The first is the use of what is known as the "honest broker"—"the usual channels". The President of the Privy Council made reference to this officer and stated that in the United Kingdom parliament he did not pay attention to other parties in the house. We make our own jurisprudence in this house and no one suggests, that in the Canadian context, the senior public servant who acts as "honest broker" between the parties in parliament should not have due regard for the wishes of all parties represented in this parliament.

The second procedure, one which I think is fundamentally different from ours, is the use of the panel of committee chairmen. There is much less partisanship in the British parliamentary committee system than has unfortunately been evident in several cases in this parliament. The Order Paper for today displays evidence of an extraordinary manoeuvre that was used by the government in order to try to circumvent the wishes of the transport committee. An attempt was made by the minister, the last speaker, to frustrate the debate upon which we are now engaged. It is clear why hon. members are taking some time. We have an obligation to the country to spend some time examining this nefarious proposal embodied in proposed rule 75c. In the United Kingdom they have a panel made up of committee chairmen who are representatives of all parties in that house. Those chairmen are potential speakers. In many cases when an important government measure is being processed in parliament, the committee chairman may come from a party in opposition—a civilized way of doing things that we might emulate in this country. I have been informed that often when the United Kingdom government has a particularly ticklish bill that it wishes to put through the house, it is glad indeed to employ a committee chairman from some opposition party. The neutrality of the United Kingdom government in these instances is very obvious.

The minister spoke sadly but unconvincingly about the number of items to be processed on the order paper. If he will examine the order paper closely, and I might add that I did not spend my entire supper hour reviewing the order paper, I think he will find that from pages 8 to 17 inclusive are listed more than 100 proposals that this house has approved. There are 18 items on the order paper, but many of them are routine and are not ones about which we need be overly concerned. The minister spoke about the Expropriation Act amendments. He ought to know that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is not disposed to move those amendments forward at this time. The matter has been referred quite properly to the lawyers of this country for comment, and undoubtedly this fall the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will consider the implications of the new bill. Even if this house were to give its unanimous consent, the Minister of Justice could not move this bill forward at this time; and the President of the Privy Council knows that to be so. There are one or two items to do with the Senate that the government does not wish to put before parliament at the moment; neither does it wish to proceed with item 29, the bill to amend the Supreme Court Act. Educational television has been under consideraton for some time and no one in this house wishes in the least to hold up this measure. The minister knows that policy in this important area is in process of evolution and that the government is not ready to proceed with the bill until certain policy considerations have been thrashed out. I think the minister is being unjust to the most co-operative parliament, of which I have had the privilege of being a member when he says that we have hamstrung the government. If anything, we have been far too easy with the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell: Especially when one considers how the government acts.

Mr. Fairweather: If we ignore the one example alluded to earlier in the debate, government spokesmen have advanced a specious argument in support of reasons for introducing a ruthless new rule such as the one proposed by the President of the Privy Council and the Liberal majority on the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

I have had the privilege since coming to parliament of serving on several committees on procedure; and always, and I say this with the greatest respect to those government supporters who serve on the present Committee on Procedure and Organization, we have tried to get the widest agreement from hon. members who espouse the various political doctrines prevalent in this country. We have tried to accommodate all shades of opinion existing within our political spectrum. If this government had followed such a precept in this instance it would not be in the trouble in which it now finds itself.

I wish to refer to one or two other points that have come to my mind. It might not be amiss, when speaking of our obligations, to read remarks attributed to Edmund Burke in 1774. He said many important things on that occasion, and particularly apt is the following statement:

—government and legislation are matters of reason and judgment, and not of inclination; and what sort of reason is that, in which the determination preceded the discussion;—

It is because the government intends to predetermine parliament's program in advance of that program being deliberated in this assembly that Burke's words uttered almost 200 years ago apply clearly to this debate. Is I see the issue, it is that we are a deliberative assembly and the government should not be surprised that members of parliament need time to examine matters coming before parliament and to muster the public opinion of Canada. Any legislation not supported by widespread and well informed public opinion is apt to become bad law from the standpoint of the public's acceptance of that law. That law may entail good draftmanship; that is, the law may be well drafted and the statute may be very neat and tidy. The law, nevertheless, will be bad.

Over the years many people have wondered what are the obligations of hon. members under the parliamentary system. I suppose one could say that we play a part as representatives. In a minor sense we are indeed representatives; but that is not our primary obligation. Our second obligation is to take up what one might term an educative role. We are here not only as representatives of our people in parliament; we are here also, for good or ill, as educators. If the departments of government wish members of the house to fulfil their obligations to their constituents in full, they will have to give members the opportunity to exercise the educative part of their duties. Only in the narrowest sense are we representatives. In a much broader sense we are agents of all the country, and we therefore are under the obligation when considering government measures to exercise whatever native judgment we have. I am very serious about this. These three rules are inherent in membership in parliament. This is why I deplore this illiberal and arrogant challenge to a 700 year old institution which many, many times has done things for the betterment of the citizens of the country. Far more times has it been a positive aspect of our lives than it has been a negative aspect.

The people from the party I have the honour to serve who were on that Procedure and Organization Committee felt we had an obligation, an obligation we were glad to try to exercise, to assist parliament to reform its procedures. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) have said, we have taken giant steps toward bringing up to date our system of government and our rules and procedures.

The minister should be more frank. The order paper has dozens of items to the credit of the government to some extent, but also to the credit of the total institution of which we are a part. Whether the minister likes to continue his game of numbers, the 12's, 15's, 22's and 72's, we too have been sent here to exercise a constitutional role. This role is recognized by the jurisprudence, the conventions and the rules that have been adopted. This is not a threat, but I hope that this debate that is trying to turn an illiberal aspect of the government's policy toward a more sensitive and co-operative understanding of the fundamental issue which is involved here will challenge this illiberality until the government comes to its senses.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I think we now have under debate the motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), the Chairman of the Procedure and Organization Committee because of the government house leader's attempt this afternoon to make a virtue out of necessity. I feel that the clear presentation that was made here last night to Your Honour to the effect that the government was asking the house to reverse a decision which it had already taken may have influenced the decision the house leader has taken. At least he may have felt inclined to believe, as I did, that the argument was clear and lucid enough to make an impression on the mind of Your Honour. Therefore, I feel the opportunity to debate this committee report was not brought about by any real change of heart on the part of the government house leader.

It is a real tragedy, Mr. Speaker, that the first serious attempt of the Canadian parliament to arrive at a procedure for the allocation of time for debate of government legislation should be marred by the poisonous atmosphere that is being created in this chamber. This atmosphere is being generated by the way in which the government has sought to impose upon this house the proposed rule 75c.

This proposal, and this particular rule which gives the government house leader the unilateral right to seek an allocation of time, should be considered in light of the fact that the house, by general agreement, has already arrived at some very drastic limitations of time as distinct from allocation of time for debate. This has been done by mutual consent of members from all parties in this house working through our various procedural committees. I could give examples, and a number have already been mentioned in the course of this debate.

Very drastic changes have been made in the whole manner of dealing with supply, and also in the procedure for dealing with bills in standing committees. To anyone who has been in this house for any length of time, Mr. Speaker, these time restrictions cannot help but appear to be very drastic. Only a few years ago these time restrictions would have been opposed most vigorously by many members in different parts of the house.

This proposal for time allocation under rule 75c should also be considered in light of the fact that these various restrictions on time began in a minor way quite a few years ago with the fixing of time limits for speeches in certain debates, such as the address and budget debates. In addition, there was a limitation on the actual number of days to be allotted to these debates. All of these things which have been agreed to at various times by members of the opposition have restricted in a very drastic way the rights of private members to challenge the government which, after all, is the Crown in our midst.

We should not lose sight of the fact that the original function of parliament, as an institution, was to protect the people from the tyranny of the Crown. Many changes are necessary in these fast changing times. We required to consider and alter the techniques under which parliament must operate. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, we should never lose sight of the fact that the basic function of this institution is still to protect the people against tyranny.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that through careful consideration, and through arriving at a consensus on previous occasions concerning the manner in which our rules should be changed, we have kept pace with our times. We have arrived at techniques which make parliament a more effective institution. We have done the things which were necessary to restore the image of parliament in the minds of the Canadian people. We have done these things in a manner which, while it has placed some restrictions on private members, nevertheless has not altered our fundamental freedom to oppose tyranny as and when it may appear in our midst. I believe this should be the approach that hon. members should take when dealing with proposed changes to our rules.

The placing of the allocation of time into the category into which the government house leader has tried to put it is a result of a disregard for, and misunderstanding of the fundamental nature of parliament. I readily agree that it is not the fault of the government house leader that he was thrust into a position of power and responsibility in this house after serving only a relatively short period of time as a member of this institution. However, having been put in that position, he might have applied himself a little more to reaching an understanding of what parliament is all about, at least more than he has revealed so far in this debate and in some of the discussions antecedent to it.

In his speech this afternoon, the government house leader revealed the government's lack of understanding of what parliament is all about, and having allowed himself to accept responsibility for pushing this proposal forward he cannot absolve himself from blame for the situation in which we find ourselves. I submit that his argument this afternoon was specious on at least three counts, and I wish to deal briefly with each of them.

He made a lot about the number of items of government legislation that must be dealt with, and mentioned the fact that in a certain debate which took place not long ago one group in this house took up a fair amount of time discussing something about which they felt very strongly. The implication of his argument in this respect, seeking unilateral authority to allocate time, completely ignored an equal responsibility resting on members of the Liberal party with respect to a legislative timetable. When I mention the Liberal party members may I say in parenthesis that they may have been liberal at some time or another in their history.

The minister ignored the very development of the party system which gave to the Crown, as it moved into the centre of parliament through the instrument of cabinet, a greater potential for tyranny than it ever exercised when it remained outside parliament. At that time your predecessors in office, Mr. Speaker, had to be bold and courageous men to present the messages of parliament to the king.

The minister also ignored the political history of recent years. He ignored the fact that the political manoeuverings of his party were certainly as much responsible for any backlog of public legislation as any action taken on this side of the house. Here, I am referring to the period that goes back to 1963. I have said it before, Mr. Speaker, and I will say it again, that I do not recall ever being more angry in my life than when I was sitting at home and heard the Prime Minister's predecessor in office announce that he was calling the 1965 general election. We had just left Ottawa for a recess with full arrangements made for a timetable of programmed legislation in the fall.

If I may mention one thing in which I happened to be involved, arrangements had been made for a program of visits by the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs to various Indian reservations across the country, so that members of the committee would come to know the needs and ideas of the Indian people. Had that tour taken place, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) might not be in quite so much hot water as he is with the Indian people. In the light of the performance of his own political friends, I submit that the government house leader should take a second look at his request for this authority on the basis of what he suggests was obstruction on the part of the opposition.

The minister also made much of the argument that the will of the majority must prevail in this house. I listened to him carefully on this point. Nobody would quarrel with the statement that the will of the majority prevails in making decisions in a democratic assembly. However, he failed to recognize the distinction between coming to a majority decision on a government proposal and the fact that the basic rules of parliament should not be altered by a majority vote without regard to the wishes of members of a particular group who, at a particular moment in the history of this institution, happen to be in a minority position.

He also failed to draw a distinction between arriving at decisions on time allocation and arriving at decisions on how and under what circumstances we should change the rules of the house. I would agree that in considering the allocation of time there is a point at which the decision of the majority of the house must prevail. But the minister's argument on this score was specious because he ignored another fact. It is that the rules of the house already provide for a means of terminating debate according to the wishes of the majority of the members of the house.

While that rule in its present form may not be perfect, nevertheless it was put into our standing orders after a great deal of wrestling and rather violent debate many years ago. Its existence in the Standing Orders has not been seriously challenged during the last several parliaments. In fact, I have heard no suggestion from any quarter of the house that the present closure rule be taken out of our rule book.

If the closure rule is not quite appropriate to deal with certain situations brought about by recent rule changes, then this is a matter which the house could very well ask the Procedures Committee to consider. I have not been one of the members of this house who has seriously attempted to become knowledgeable on some of the finer points of the rules of this house. I have had, however, a considerable exposure to argumentation on the subject over a period of years, and there have been a good many arguments about the rules in recent parliaments. Certainly, during my experience as a member of this house in six of the last seven parliaments, this is the second time a naked attempt has been made by the government to use its will to bend parliament as an institution. I do not like it now any more than I did when I witnessed it in this house in 1956. I have in my hand volumes 4 and 5 of Hansard for the sessions of 1956. I took them home a week ago last Sunday and read a certain debate, commonly referred to as the pipeline debate, more or less from cover to cover. I should like to commend these volumes of Hansard to members of this house, particularly those members who sit as supporters of the government. I commend these volumes as required and interesting reading for the next few days or few weeks during which we may have this matter under consideration in this house.

If the government supporters want to understand what their government is attempting to do on this occasion I do not know of any better way they can find it out than by reading these debates. In the parliament of 1956, there were a great many members with a great many years of experience as parliamentarians. Those men, as a result of their own experience and a reading of the debates which have taken place in the past, have had distilled in them a great deal of the essence of what parliament is all about. That is why I feel, as a member of this house, that really in order to come to grips with what is being attempted here perhaps there should be some reference to some of the things which were said during that previous debate about the meaning of this institution. If I may I should like to trespass on the time of the house just to quote one or two excerpts from the debate. I shall quote from page 4512 of Hansard for May 31, 1956. I shall quote the right hon. member for Prince Albert, (Mr. Diefenbaker) but this was before he acquired that particular title. He also quotes another distinguished parliamentarian.

Mr. Diefenbaker was speaking after the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, had moved a motion that the consideration of clauses 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, the title of the said bill, and any amendments proposed thereto shall be the first business of the committee and shall not be further postponed. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made a brief reference to this situation this afternoon when he mentioned that a few words had been read from the notes about clauses 1, 2 and 3 and that they were then considered to have been debated. There was some debate on clause 4 and clauses 5, 6 and 7 were never even called. The argument here is how you can have further consideration of something which has not been considered. Mr. Diefenbaker said:

> I am going to quote one who has a distinguished son as a member of this cabinet. In 1932 the late Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe, the leader from the province of Quebec whose successor is the Prime Minister, had this to say as reported on page 1497 of Hansard for that year:
> "It means that parliament is being asked to abrogate its position as the predominant factor in legislation. It means that we are being asked to agree to be dragged at the wheels of the Prime Minister and to make parliament an appendage of the executive."

Mr. Harris: He was not talking about closure.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will read it all.

> "This attitude of the Prime Minister makes our duty to resist this legislation more imperative."

I am glad the minister suggested that because it is more applicable having regard to the Prime Minister's conduct in the last day or two.

> "The first duty of parliament is to remain a parliament, not to become a subservient and ornamental body. Parliament has a right which is certainly paramount to the convenience of the Prime Minister, the right to live."

May I interpolate, it is also superior to the frustration of a prime minister.

> "It has the duty to defend itself and not to allow anybody to invade its rights and privileges. It is the will of parliament, not that of the government that is the will of the nation. When the Prime Minister says that he speaks for the whole of the country, he is mistaking the echo of his words for the voice of the Canadian people. It is parliament which is and must remain the authorized exponent of public opinion and of the public will."

And then later on:

> "The sovereignty of the people is delegated to parliament, not to the executive, and when I say "parliament", it means the minority as well as the majority in parliament."

Later on, he quotes the following remarks made by the Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe:

> "What he would conceive as a parliament is that we should stand at attention and salute when the Prime Minister wants us to do so, a parliament that would be ready to goose-step at the behest of the Prime Minister. Sir, the methods of the czar have produced bolshevism, and we do not wish to introduce that in Canada. It is an evil work. I claim, on the part of those who are in this way undermining the authority of parliament—"

I submit that is precisely what the government house leader of this parliament is attempting to do by putting forward the proposal in this way. I suggest we already have in our rules a way to arrive at a majority decision so far as allocation of time is concerned or so far as termination of debate is concerned. I submit in this initial effort on the part of the Canadian parliament to put into its rules an arrangement for allocation of time of debate, the waters should not be muddied by bringing into the picture the unilateral authority of the government to make the decision in its name concerning when and how a debate will be terminated, unless it is prepared to use the rules we already have and unless it feels it can establish before the people of Canada that there has been a clear case of obstruction. Then, and only then, and under the proper circumstances do I believe that kind of motion should be made in this house. Then, the people of Canada would be in a clear position to come to a decision concerning on which side of the argument their interests lie.

To attempt to take this proposed method of establishing the will of the majority in respect of the allocation of time for the ordinary processing of business in the interests of the people of this country, I submit is to invite disaster for this institution and to make virtually impossible the free exchange of ideas between the representatives of the various political groupings in this house. If I have time, I should like to quote one other extract from the debates to which I have referred. It has to do with the use of what is commonly referred to as closure.

The speech was made by a member who was at that time in the political group with which I sat in the house. He was considered, under the particular circumstances that prevailed and the atmosphere of the house at the time, to be rather heretical in making the speech. I refer to the former hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, Mr. MacInnis, who if I recall correctly came to this chamber against the advice of his doctor to make his speech. At the beginning of his remarks the hon. member said:

> This is the first word that I have uttered in this debate—

He went on to say:

> —and I would not have risen now if it had not been for what has happened since this house opened today. At the opening of the house the Prime Minister made a statement that after we had disposed of the motion before us, then we could proceed with debating the bill.

Later in his remarks, which are reported at page 4377 of Hansard for May 28, 1956, in connection with closure he said:

> What has happened, and this was the initial mistake that was made, was that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce introduced the resolution preceding this bill he also made a motion that closure would be applied. Closure would be applied, why? Because the debate had been obstructed? No, closure was to be applied because the government had set a time limit to the debate and because it was anticipated that there would be obstruction. We do not carry on business in this house on the basis of anticipation.

It seems to me we have heard recent references to this basic principle of parliamentary procedure. The then hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway went on to say:

> I have been here for over a quarter of a century and I have never yet seen a Speaker who would make a ruling on an anticipated situation.

[Mr. Barnett.]

> However, rulings and decisions have been made and the decisions made today will be the precedents for tomorrow. I suggest to my hon. friends on the Liberal side of the house that they read the speech which their former leader, the late W. L. Mackenzie King, made when he was leader of the opposition in connection with a motion for closure moved in 1932.

The hon. member said later:

> What has happened is that from now on any time the government introduces a resolution preceding a bill and there is some talk that the opposition is opposed to it—that is why the opposition is here; it is their duty to obstruct from time to time; that is their right. I have seen my friends over here put on a filibuster.

He was referring to the then Social Credit group from Alberta. The hon. member went into the whole question of the rights of the opposition in relation to debate in the light of what had been happening regarding the question of closure being moved on the basis of anticipation rather than on the basis of the fact. In another part of his remarks, the hon. member had this to say:

> I think the initial issue in this debate is the question of closure. May I tell hon. members, government members, official opposition members, C.C.F. members and Social Credit members, that I favour closure. The government has a perfect right—not only a right but a duty—to invoke closure at the right time; that is, when it has been demonstrated that the business of the house cannot be carried on in any other way but by closure. I said I am in favour of closure. I am in favour of closure, old style. I am not in favour of closure, new style. I do not believe that the members of this house, I do not believe that the members of the government understand, indeed I cannot believe that the Prime Minister understands what has happened.

I think those remarks are applicable to the present situation. It seems to me that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government house leader cannot understand what they are seeking to do in the context of the motion, and the proposal in the amendment moved earlier today which we are now considering. If it had not been for certain developments in the sequence of events, the proposal might very well be before us now as a direct motion of the government house leader.

I hope that private members on both sides of the house will give some thought to these issues. There are not very many members in the house who have personal knowledge of the previous attempt of the government to use its power nakedly to alter the basic facts of this institution. As I look across the way, the only hon. member I can see on that side of the house who was present at that time is the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen). I suggest that he should do a great deal of whispering in the ears of his colleagues in the government as this debate progresses, and he may be able to help them understand what they are seeking to do to this institution, which I think all of us in our hearts cherish as a very important part of the fabric of Canadian life.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is not new that the major and serious problem in this house is its incapacity or rather its inability to set up its program and foresee its business or its proceedings on a more realistic, more practical and more efficient basis, and also more in keeping with the increased volume and the complexity of present legislation, more in line with new needs and the present times.

When last December this house approved the vast majority of the recommendations of the committee on procedure and organization, we made a greater step forward than ever before to modernize our procedures, recognized by all as obsolete. Moreover, this question was raised many times, particularly during the last election campaign, and I think we might say that we received a formal mandate from the people, to go ahead with reforms in respect of our procedures.

All are now aware, I believe, in spite of certain apprehensions expressed during the debate, that the prestige of parliament has grown, that bills are examined more adequately and that estimates receive a more serious and profound study. We must also point out that the opposition has better opportunities of changing the legislation when expressing its point of view, particularly through the amendments it can propose in committee as well as in the house.

Naturally, there are still improvements to be made, particularly as regards the operations of the committees. Certain committees are overloaded with work and need, for instance, experts, additional personnel, more appropriate and more numerous locals, etc. Besides, the committee on procedure and organization has studied this problem and has made certain recommendations.

But we still have to complete the work so well begun and bring ourselves to the same level as the modern legislatures of the democratic world, which have, most of them, if not all, adopted rules to limit the debates that drag on without reason.

It is yet impossible to establish or to provide a legislative timetable during a session. The present one will be adjourned while there is still on the order paper or in abeyance, here, or in the other place, a whole series of important bills that could have been considered and passed.

It is impossible to allocate time for the passage of a bill at any stage, either in the house or in the committee. This session that was to adjourn on June 27 is still going on and the end is not in sight.

It seems obvious to me that our parliament must have, in order to meet this country's needs and to work efficiently, and in an orderly and constructive manner, a procedure that will enable it to impose a limit when no agreement has been reached and that we are faced with systematic obstruction on the part of a minority that endlessly repeats the same arguments solely for the purpose of delaying a decision, to upset the government's legislative program or, perhaps for political or party purposes.

Last December, no decision was reached, contrary to what has lately been stated in that regard. The only decision was to refer once again this important question to the same committee so that it could re-examine it in the light of the views expressed during the debate in December and taking into consideration the rules and practices applied at Westminster which is always considered as the model of all parliaments, especially of our own.

During the first debate and again now, those who wish to strengthen their hold on the proceedings in parliament and also their right to veto the opinion of the majority which, constitutionally and normally, must make the final decision, have suggested that we should rely on common sense and on the judgment of all hon. members or party representatives.

Mr. Speaker, experience has shown that this is neither practical or realistic, and I am sure that if all opposition members are reasonable—let us not forget that there are three opposition parties, and that a party cannot speak on behalf of another to guarantee an order given or deemed to be given with regard to expediting the business of the house—there will never be any danger that Standing Order 75c shall be applied because the government which would certainly not want to be accused of dictatorship and so forth will do its utmost to reach an understanding with the other parties and provide more than reasonable delays indeed regarding the various stages of a bill. Everyone will benefit from it and that Standing Order will only be there as the Sword of Damocles, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said.

We had such an instance not so long ago, when a minority party comprising 14 members kept the house back for 20 days on a bill which had had also 14 extended hearings before the committee on justice and legal affairs. Without entering into the aims and reasons the members of the Ralliement créditiste had in mind when making use of their rights and privileges under the present Standing Orders, I should point out that they could have made that verbal marathon last still much longer.

However, when a deadlock occurs, when the right of speech and discussion becomes a closure in reverse, an exercise which is a deliberate violation of the majority's right to come to a decision, it is absolutely necessary in such cases—possible, though scarce—that our procedure contain a machinery for closure, and that, quite often, will greatly relieve even the opposition.

I am satisfied that is what the great majority of the Canadian people want: that we discuss, of course, but that we finally take a decision after a sufficient and reasonable time.

That is what is proposed, Mr. Speaker, in the recommendation of the committee that considered the matter at length and which took into account most of the objections raised last December, and which proposed a procedure considerably different from that known as rule 16A.

Last December, several members of the opposition agreed that the government should assume its responsibilities and its powers, and put an end to an endless debate, by closure or otherwise. The closure rule has seldom been applied here, in fact, 16 times only since 1913, and since the latest amendment of the Standing Orders, it is now very difficult to apply. The experience of 1956 proved to what extent that procedure can be complicated in its implementation. It is in fact proposed to apply it only when the difficulty arises, when the debate becomes violent and when the minds become excited. It is not, Mr. Speaker, a proper cure for the problems which could come up in the house.

I would refer you particularly to what the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) said in December, as reported on page 3867 of Hansard, and I quote:

[English]

Surely some reasonable provision can be found. The case of an impasse between government and opposition occurs, and I think should be dealt with. It is true that in a case where all of the opposition parties obstinately refuse to agree to any reasonable time allocation on an individual item, the process of closure would be open to the government. But it may be, however, that in respect of individual items and after a reasonable time for the opposition to state its objections in debate, and subject to some reasonable limitation, the majority supporting the government should be able to resolve the impasse. I am not pleading that there should be no rule dealing with situations where there is an impasse, but this is a far cry from the present proposed rule.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the proposal of the hon. member for Greenwood was supported by many other members, and I refer to the debates which took place at that time.

This afternoon, I understood the Leader of the Opposition to say that in December he relied on the support of the press, and that he still had it. Yet, this afternoon, two editorials were read to us and I would like to quote to the house what the Montreal Daily Star particularly said on June 30 last. Here it is:

[English]

Opposition parties need not expect much public sympathy if they launch another filibuster to prevent the House of Commons from adopting the government's proposed new time-allocation rule. The experience of the past six months has provided sufficient proof of the need for machinery to ration the time spent on public business.

[Translation]

And it goes on to say:

[English]

Every day wasted by an opposition filibuster will provide more evidence of the need for rules to insure that parliament is a place not only to debate, but also to decide.

[Translation]

And on May 24 last, the Financial Post which is surely a very responsible newspaper stated in its editorial and I quote:

[English]

The government, whether this one or the next one, must have the power to carry out its prime responsibility which is to pass legislation. There is no justification in the name of democracy which allows a small group of MPs to frustrate that extremely important responsibility.

The opposition must now accept its true limitation and join with the government in approving some form of restraint on debate. The time for anything less has run out.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the Financial Times, on April 7 last as well as on July 7, 1969, the following could be read and I quote:

[English]

It is clear that what is still needed is an orderly flow of legislation through the system. The only way to ensure this is to set progressive deadlines for bills at each stage. These deadlines need not be inflexible, but they should be postponed only in special cases.

[Translation]

• (9:10 p.m.)

I go on quoting.

[English]

There will be cries, of course, that this is anti-democratic. In fact, the ability of the opposition to influence policy is greater, because of the increased use of committees, than it was before. The rules will not really be reformed until there is time allocation. And until then, Parliament will not be prepared to meet the demands on it in this fast moving and difficult age.

[Translation]

And on July 7 last, Mr. Speaker, one could read this:

[English]

The genius of parliamentary government should be to ensure that all legislation is open to criticism by any minority, that it is examined as fully as it can be and that it always carries the assent of the majority. But it is also to ensure that the important business of the nation is attended to.

The rights of adequate debate are very thoroughly safeguarded—in some respects too thoroughly—in the procedural proposals now before parliament. What is still lacking, but is partially provided in Rule 75c, is some means of providing (as we put it on April 7 this year) "an orderly flow of legislation through the system".

The basic problem of the House of Commons is no different from the problem which faces all of us—how best to use a limited amount of time. The new use of Committees and the increased number of opposition days have already given the opposition more chance than it ever had to influence legislation. What it is now claiming is the right to stage a sit-in or a teach-in whenever it likes. And that is the negation of orderly government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I shall not go on quoting but I want to draw your attention to the fact that the new proposal of the committee differs from that which was made in December, which provided only for the establishment of a business committee made up of the representatives of the various parties. At that time, even prior to debate and whether there was unanimous consent or not, a minister of the crown was allowed to propose a motion providing for a time allocation for one or several stages and for one or several bills at one time.

I do not intend to come back over details about standing orders 75A, 75B, and 75C which have been very clearly explained this afternoon, especially by the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). I would however, like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that standing order 75C will only be used in the last resort, when no agreement has been reached under orders 75A and 75B. My contention is that there will always be an agreement if the opposition is as sensible as it claims to be. It will not be possible to invoke it in advance but once the debate has begun, its use will be limited to one stage only and also to only one bill.

The use of this method will certainly take more time than the minimum period of 10 days and in contrast to what was said this afternoon, the opposition will have all the time and all the means to warn the public against any measure that it would deem harmful or dangerous.

I am convinced that most opposition members realize the necessity of this procedure but since we have not yet reached here the same degree of political maturity as in England, for instance, we will hear the same old stories to the effect that democracy is in danger, that parliament will disappear and so on, while we are not denying the right to discuss, the freedom of speech. We only want to put an end to the endless discussions and to the repetitions which rather discredit Parliament and which the Canadians of today do not accept any more.

It is obvious that the government, in its own interest will do all it can and will make all the reasonable concessions to proceed by agreement, before using rule 75C in the extreme cases which will probably be even scarcer because of this rule.

What must be avoided above all is that a small minority can prevent almost indefinitely a majority elected by the people to adopt the measures that are necessary for the welfare and the progress of that nation during the time which is still necessarily limited for the discussion of public business.

Mr. Speaker, among the democratic parliaments of free countries we are almost the only one that has not yet adopted any rule to restrict the length of debates. I would even say that democracy is not yet in danger, nor has it disappeared in the countries which have adopted it, like Australia, New Zealand, India or England, for example.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the United Kingdom which is rightly considered as the model or the mother of all parliaments, they have realized long ago that there are only 365 days in a year and that in the course of any debate there comes a time when a decision must be taken and when the rules must be applied.

And in the British parliament, the closure rule is not the same as ours and is even more drastic. It is often applied without raising a general outcry.

In this case, the government will be able to plan a legislative program and at least expect it to be considered and adopted if necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by quoting from a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in December of last year:

> We must not refuse to make the necessary adjustments and improvements in our institutions. For it is true that parliament and each of its component parts are, like living organisms, subject to the universal law of life: adapt or wither away. It is not sufficient for us merely to cherish this heritage as if it were a relic, of interest only to historians. We must reform it so that in our time it will serve us well. We must revitalize it so that our successors will receive from us, not an outdated, moribund survival from an earlier age, but a vital and responsive institution of democratic government.

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Speak up, we cannot hear you.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not got started yet, but I know you fellows have patience. Let me refer first of all to the remark made by the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) to the effect that he was a senior member of the university from which we both graduated. Well, we young fellows, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and myself, can appreciate that when we get to his age we see things through different eyes.

I believe the first question I should ask tonight is: what are we doing here? After all, the government said it would run parliament according to a timetable, and that we would adjourn on June 27. We are here, Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend from Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) said, quoting from the Citizen, because the government thought it could put something over on the opposition parties by rushing these proposals through, anticipating that members of the opposition would want to go home for their holidays, like some on the opposite side whose empty seats we see here this evening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: I hope those who are in their places tonight will realize that they have underestimated the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Let me say that we intend to stay here to oppose these proposals, and if we have to stay here all summer, we intend to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Our party intends to do so, and after listening to spokesmen of other opposition parties in the house I have the impression they intend to do the same. I might say here and now to all those who want to write articles about a fillibuster that if this place does not close until October 8, when it is supposed to open again, it will not cost the taxpayers one more dollar, since the cost of this institution is identical whether it is open or closed. We are really travelling on our own time for the sake of preserving for the people of Canada this living institution, namely, parliament.

In my introductory remarks I should like to say I was shocked that this proposed new rule, which is 16A in another form, should have been introduced into this particular parliament. I have sat in this institution since 1958. Many in this chamber have been here even longer than I have. But there is one thing on which I believe we can all agree: none of the parties ever had more responsible leadership, whether it be the Official Opposition or the N.D.P. or the Ralliement des Créditistes.

It would seem to me that having regard to this kind of leadership—and I refer, now, in particular, to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), a reasonable man—this is the wrong time at which to come to parliament and try to ram down our throats a proposition of the kind now being advanced.

This country has called for responsible leadership for a long time. Whenever we got into prolonged debates in the past our actions have been called irresponsible. Now that we have responsible leadership throughout the whole house—and this is no criticism of any leadership we have had in parliament on previous occasions—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: Now that we have responsible leadership under a very reasonable man, a man who has always been ready to work for parliament, I would have expected a far different approach from the other side.

Let us consider for a few moments the record of my hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition. When the government put forward the omnibus bill amending the Criminal Code we asked that it be split into three parts. This was refused. But our leader went along with the party opposite and the N.D.P.—the Ralliement took a somewhat different view with regard to certain clauses of the bill—because we believe in reform and we thought there was a great deal in the bill which was commendable. We voted for the bill and we helped its passage through parliament. If the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) were here tonight he would confirm that both in this chamber and in the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs we were co-operative at every stage. We were co-operative during the report stage, on second reading and on third reading. There was no fillibuster or hold up on our part.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Let me give one more example before I move to the rules themselves, the official languages bill. No one could have taken a more nationalistic or realistic approach in the interests of this nation than the leader of my party. In this regard he was supported by the leaders of the other opposition parties. We have co-operated with the government and tried to assist them to plan a timetable for getting legislation and other matters through this house. In spite of this, we are today faced with what I call a guillotine rule. What has brought about this new approach by the Liberal party?

Mr. Nowlan: Not new, it is old.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, it has been given new leadership. I should like to quote from the 1967 debates. An examination of the index to the debates reveals that the former minister of justice, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of Canada, was not a man who made many speeches. One can say that he was conspicuous by his absence in this institution. After all, he was a newcomer.

Procedure and Organization

On the occasion when the opposition parties defeated a former government on a tax measure, he was asked several questions, one of them put by the then hon. member for Calgary North. The former member for Calgary North at that time asked why the minister of justice called the defeat of the government a technicality, and why the government did not resign according to the constitution of the country. I feel sorry for the president of the privy council, but I feel far more sorry, Mr. Speaker, for this newcomer to parliament who represents the riding of Grenville-Carleton, because he has been used as a government yo-yo. First of all, he thought he could move his committee report. Then he was told he could not, and then that he could after all. He should really thank us, because if the opposition had not won the day yesterday he could not have made the speech he did today.

Mr. Blair: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is rising to a point of order.

Mr. Hees: Somebody must have pulled the strings.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I mentioned my hon. friend had been to the same university as I. I should point out that he was not a graduate in history.

Some hon. Members: Yo-yo.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I will not deal with that point except to remind the members of the house that at university the hon. member led the Conservative party, but since then has become an opportunist and joined the Liberal party. I had the misfortune to sit under his leadership at university, and he was such an opportunist that that was the only time one could flush him out.

Let me go on and relate what the Prime Minister said. Replying to the then hon. member for Calgary North, the right hon. gentleman said: "We are masters in the house in the sense that we have to conduct the affairs of the government".

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Does the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) wish to rise on a question of privilege?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): It is not very serious, Mr. Speaker, but the interpreter does not hear the hon. member who is speaking. I do not know why, but the simultaneous translation system is not working. If it were possible to re-establish communications, we would be very grateful.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Before I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, I was going to quote what the present Prime Minister said in one of the first speeches he made on February 27, 1968, reported at page 7042 of Hansard. In answer to the then hon. member for Calgary North he said:

> We are masters of the house in the sense that we have to conduct the affairs of government.

When the right hon. gentleman took over the leadership of the Liberal party he said: "I am going to be master as soon as I get a majority in this country". It is he who is using members of parliament and the President of the Privy Council to pilot through this kind of measure.

Let me refer to another statement of the Prime Minister, one I have quoted on other occasions, made in February, 1963 before he was even a Liberal. Let us also remember that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton was not always a Liberal. At that time the right hon. gentleman was attacking the Liberal party for their opportunism and expediency, and he said their philosophy was:

> Say anything, think anything you like. But put us in power, because we are best fitted to govern.

As he said, the political philosophy of the Liberal party is simplicity itself. That is the attitude that is behind these proposed rules.

Mr. Peters: And they believe that.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, they do. I am not surprised, as a member of the opposition, that the right hon. gentleman stated "We are the masters of this house", because on a former occasion before he had joined the party he had criticized that same party's philosophy of:

> Say anything, think anything you like. But put us in power, because we are best fitted to govern.

When the Canadian people give the Liberal party a majority, the Liberals become drunk with power. This is the reason they are proposing these rules.

I turn now to some of the arguments that were made this afternoon. Proposed rule 75c states:

> A minister of the crown who from his place in the house at a previous sitting has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration—

Stopping there, if no agreement is reached under 75A, and 75B, which is pretty ambiguous, is not put into operation, the government can move in with their guillotine rule 75c.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: The backbenchers in the Liberal party applaud. The adoption of this rule would mean that they would be even more silent in the next two or three years than they have been in the first year of parliament. This guillotine rule will operate just as effectively against them as against opposition members. They should be on our side, not on the side of this all-powerful cabinet.

The government is saying, in effect, that in the absence of agreement under 75A or 75B, the government will bring down the guillotine rule 75c. In other words, that remains as an ever present threat that hangs over the leaders of the major parties if they cannot reach agreement. The house leader of the Liberal party, this all-powerful baron in the House of Commons, is saying that unless agreement is reached under 75A or the formula of 75B is adopted, the government will bring into operation 75c. The government wants not only to use this rule but to abuse its implementation in the sense that it will use it to destroy any chance of real consultation. How can there be consultation, Mr. Speaker, when we are blackmailed into either agreeing or being guillotined? That would be the position if these rules were adopted.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton said this afternoon that there is nothing really bad at all about 75c. He said that if no agreement is reached under 75A or 75B, debate can continue for ten days. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton no doubt is a senior member of parliament.

• (9:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: He is still wet behind the ears.

Mr. Woolliams: I continue quoting proposed rule 75c. The nub of it is contained in the part I am about to read:

> —in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration either in the House or in any committee and has given notice at that sitting of his intention so to do may propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage; provided that the time allotted for any stage is not to be less than one sitting day and provided that for the purposes of this standing order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages of a bill—

Really this proposal sets a minimum as well as a maximum time. It says that you can spend one day on second reading, one day in committee—and just imagine what would have happened if we had spent one day only in committee on the Criminal Code amendments—one day on the report stage when amendments have to be moved, and one day on the third reading stage. According to my mathematics it seems that we are to be allowed four days to debate a bill. Of course, the hon. member says, "But we can have a little hanky-panky; before the introduction of each stage we can have a two hour debate." What a waste of time that will be. None of us is here to waste time. I think I speak for all intelligent members of parliament when I say that we are interested in debating the substance and principle of a bill. We are not interested in wasting time at the second reading stage, the committee stage, the report stage and the third reading stage by indulging in a two hour procedural wrangle. At every stage we are to have a two hour debate. Well, those of us in opposition are interested in getting to the substance of the bill. We want to get at the principle of a bill and let our people in this country know what the import and purport of the legislation is.

A few minutes ago the minister read briefly from the Toronto Telegram. I, too, wish to read from the Toronto Telegram of July 8, 1969. In my copy the author of this article, Mr. Lubor J. Zink, writes as follows:

With rule 75c in operation, they say, the Government would be in a position to arbitrarily limit the debate of any controversial Bill to three days and thereby make it impossible for the opposition to alert the public to potentially detrimental measures.

It is this danger and not the principle of allocation of time for debate the opposition is determined to fight resolutely. For unless the opposition parties manage to hold on to the weapon of prolonged debate when they see danger to the nation in some specific legislation or policy proposal, the Government will be in a position to enforce its will before the public grasps the issues involved.

What is parliament all about, Mr. Speaker? I know my friends of the Liberal party will not be influenced by what I and others in the opposition have to say. The only time the government changes its position is when the opposition brings something to the attention of public opinion. Only when public opinion has been made fully aware of something does the government back off and amend legislation. That is what the opposition does and that, in part, is what parliament is about. I know that when hon. members opposite come out of caucus, they are brainwashed and trained seals; but they are nevertheless sensitive. Oh, yes, they are sensitive because they love power, as the Prime Minister so aptly said before he became a Liberal. They love power so much that they have been forced to respond to public opinion in western Canada. The Prime Minister is to make a trip out west to try to calm the fears of our farmers.

An hon. Member: He does not know when he is going.

Mr. Woolliams: That is right. He does not know when he is to go; but the very fact that he is going indicates that he is sensitive to public opinion. He is also sensitive to the pin pricks of his backbenchers who say to him in caucus, "You've got to do something, Pierre; we are going to be defeated next time round."

Mr. Perrault: That is arrant nonsense.

Mr. Woolliams: I hear the mountain of British Columbia rumbling. I always call the hon. member Rip Van Winkle because he rumbles like a mountain. You can always tell when he comes into the house. The Prime Minister should know who he is, this hon. member who comes from the mountains. I continue quoting from Mr. Zink's article:

This danger is acute despite the marvels of instant communications. For while three days of debate may be sufficient for raising most of the arguments the opposition wishes to make in the Commons, they are woefully inadequate for making an impression on the public mind.

He continues:

There is no objection to limitation of debating time by agreement as stipulated in the proposed rules 75A and 75B, but the opposition parties cannot swallow the arbitrariness of Rule 75c. It is their duty to block the dictatorial measure until the Government either rams it through by invoking the standing closure rule or removes the unacceptable part of the package as it did before Christmas.

Is it not a coincidence, Mr. Speaker, that every time we are about to adjourn for a holiday the government brings in a proposal to change the rules. Just before Christmas they brought in the proposal for rule 16A and now, just before we are to rise for the summer, they bring in proposed Standing Order 75A, 75B and 75C. What does the government expect to gain by its tactics? What does the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton expect to gain?

Mr. Nowlan: He is the Santa Claus of summertime.

Mr. Woolliams: He certainly is. At Christmastime, when the government withdrew proposed rule 16A, I knew that we should have to face another discussion on the rules. At that time the Prime Minister said he had trapped the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of all other parties in this house. He suggested that he withdrew the motion with respect to 16A because he had rammed down our throats the other part of the package then before parliament. How can one negotiate with a Prime Minister who talks this way?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: How can you establish good will among members and good faith in this house in the light of such remarks?

An hon. Member: Where is the just society?

Mr. Woolliams: I would expect some hon. members who did not take part in the Liberal leadership race to display a much more intelligent attitude than has been displayed here. I am not referring to the acting prime minister, either.

An hon. Member: You are talking about the "Gold Dust twins".

Mr. Woolliams: I am talking about the "Gold Dust twins", that is right. This government does not want members of parliament to discharge their duties. This government supports the principle of dictatorship. It wants to dictate to committees and it wants to dictate to this house how debates shall be conducted. The government does not want information to be disseminated to our people; it only wants our people to know what it thinks the people ought to know. It only wants the kind of opposition it can stand comfortably—it only wants nice, quiet, gentlemanly opposition that will do nothing to disturb the all powerful Liberal party.

Mr. Stanfield: It would like to suppress committee reports.

Mr. Woolliams: That is right. This government thinks it can do without parliament. It imagines that parliament is here to serve the government. What the government really would like to do is ignore parliament entirely. That is what the government wants to do.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Woolliams: I know it is a shame. That is why I am talking tonight and that is why I intend to talk all summer so you will not get a holiday.

Mr. Perrault: You took your holiday in the winter.

Mr. Woolliams: I hear Rip Van Winkle again in the distance! We can just see what will happen as soon as this legislation is passed. As soon as the government can say we have four days to debate a major bill, they are going to ram through the legislation without the people being informed. Take the language bill, for example. I am one who supports the principle of the bill.

Mr. Perrault: Good for you.

An hon. Member: There's the nut again!

Mr. Woolliams: That Rip Van Winkle is an amazing man!

Even today Canadians do not understand what the language bill means, although there was a fairly intelligent debate. Because of the opposition, Canadians do know that there will be decisions made by this great commissioner who was not supposed to have any power.

Canadians know today that this so-called non-powerful commissioner can summon witnesses. They know he can have hearings in camera without even that great lawyer, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), being present. Even he will not be able to be present. They also know this commissioner can get documents, go into offices without search warrants and make decisions. All this can be done in the great image of an investigator, according to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). All of this can be done under this bill which was passed by this chamber, and which contained no right of appeal.

If a French Canadian member of a minority group in some area of Canada lost his job and was unable to educate his family because the commissioner, for some reason or other, was prejudiced, he would have no right of appeal. The Canadian people know this, not as a result of any explanation made by the government but because of the actions of the opposition.

What is the function of the opposition? Perhaps it is time a few words were said about this. The opposition is not a piece of furniture or a piece of ivory, nor does the opposition want to spend the summer here in order to debate something we know is inherently wrong as far as this institution and as far as Canadians are concerned. What is the major role of the opposition? The opposition has a continuing responsibility of vigilance. It must do the job of checking the government, opposing the government vigorously when necessary with all the tools and ability at its command. What the government is trying to do is take away those tools.

Checking the government is the most obvious task of the opposition. This applies to legislation such as the Criminal Code bill, medicare, and it should apply to measures to increase our taxation. The opposition must prod and push the government into action. Goodness only knows this government needs some pushing! They do not know how to sell wheat; they are losing the oil and industrial markets and they are prepared to lose $80 million to the automobile industry. I say they have to be pushed.

Mr. Stanfield: They have inflation under control!

Mr. Woolliams: As my leader has said, inflation—

An hon. Member: Which leader?

Mr. Woolliams: Governments everywhere must find a solution to inflation and the housing problem. Who would have thought during the election campaign that interest rates today in the city of Calgary and other major cities in this country would be as high as 10 per cent? Only Benson!

The opposition must be the type to advance policies. What do we mean by that? We recommended in our amendment that the language bill should contain a right of appeal in order to guarantee the civil rights of this nation. We are recommending positive policies, and that is our function. If the government implements this rule, in spite of what the hon. member says about ten days, the government will be able to ram a bill through in four days, so what chance will we have to make any serious recommendations? They do not want to hear the opposition. It just bothers them.

The opposition must advance policies that will persuade the electors that its members should be on the treasury benches, and therefore, form the government. These members could provide a better government, one that the Canadian people realize would bring about changes. The failure of the opposition to perform these functions will relegate them to the role of the opposition forever. Sir Charles Tupper said:

> The duty of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is to exercise its vast influence in restraining vicious legislation, and in giving a loyal support to proposals of the interests of the country; while initiating itself such measures for the commonwealth as are neglected by the administration.

We have heard many quotations, and perhaps some of them should be referred to again.

Mr. Gibson: Who are your research teams?

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe some Liberal backbenchers should have research teams because all they do is laugh and scoff. They are not interested. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) is just back from another holiday.

Mr. Gibson: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Perrault: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Extensive quotations are being delivered from a document and no source date or page reference has been given. I ask the hon. member to give us details of the document from which he is quoting.

Mr. Woolliams: If the hon. member really wants to know, this is a speech prepared by me this afternoon. I am quoting some political scientists to whom, no doubt, Rip Van Winkle has never exposed his intelligence.

Quentin Hogg said:

> Countries cannot be fully free until they have an organized opposition. It is not a long step from the absence of an organized opposition to a complete dictatorship.

Possibly I should quote Lord Acton again:

> All power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely.

And that fits the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault). A former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson quoted the late R. B. Bennett with approval as follows:

> Oppositions are essential and necessary in the development of a democratic state. They serve a great and useful purpose. To the extent that criticism is frank and thorough, to that extent they do a great service to the country.

Disraeli said:

No government can be long secure without a formidable opposition.

I think it was the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) who quoted Edmund Burke. Edmund Burke said:

He that wrestles with us strengthens our nerves and sharpens our skill. Our antagonist is our helper.

I might just end on this note. We have gone along with reform on the rules of parliament, and we have gone a long way. When that reform did away with committee of the whole procedure for bills and did away with committee of supply in relation to estimates, I said we should at least retain control of 15 per cent or 20 per cent of the estimates in the house, because the only control the opposition has over this kind of arrogance and dictatorship is the control of the purse strings of parliament. The government has gone a long way on the road towards dictatorship. The Liberal party said their government was going to be made up of young men with a new image and new vision. We were going to plan our work so that we would be able to leave here on June 27 and resume the session in October. Surely, the government did not think it could try to ram this rule change through parliament without the opposition being aware of its tactics? What the government is doing today is taking away the effective tools of all members of parliament, and particularly the effective tools of an opposition whose functions are as I have outlined them this evening.

• (9:50 p.m.)

I had hoped that the Prime Minister would have been in the chamber tonight. In his absence I would ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) to have another look at this matter in the hope that the government would withdraw this motion, just as it did at Christmas, and let parliament remain a living institution where Canadians can speak through their elected representatives.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): I would like to express my opinion on rules 75A, 75B and 75C. We have every reason to say that every day, matters were presented in this house that led the minority to believe that it was its duty to object strongly.

If this government, blinded by its majority, would care to open its eyes, there would be no ground for discussions such as the one we are having today. What proves me right, Mr. Speaker, is that Bill C-202, even though it is far from perfect, was passed thanks to our support.

After all, what we want as Canadian members of parliament is to express the voice of the people who cannot be heard at a moment when we are threatened with a dictatorial regime. Once again, I say there are circumstances when the opposition, called the minority, must make its views known vigorously because public opinion must know the dictatorial rule which is imposed upon the house.

I am not setting forth a new doctrine, Mr. Speaker. It goes back to the time of Charles I. History books are full of such references. The house leader had, at that time, introduced what was called the great remonstrance which was debated during a whole night. On another occasion, in 1771, the majority of the house did not want to allow the debates of the house to be published. Edmund Burke fought against this and succeeded in wrecking the majority's plan. He himself declared: posterity will bless the penetrating insight we showed on that day.

Since the Prime Minister is now travelling across Canada stating that we must have one Canada, one nation, and since, together, we have celebrated the 102nd anniversary of Canada last week, allow me, Mr. Speaker and hon. colleagues, to point out how in 1867, when Parliament was organized, following Confederation, rules were established for this house.

A special committee was then appointed to draft such rules. The committee's report was tabled in the house for further study as is stated in Hansard of December 27, 1867.

Dictatorial measures were also applied in 1885, 1896, 1908 and 1911, in order to deprive the opposition of all freedom of action. All governments who took such a step regretted it bitterly.

That is the reason why, today, I hold out to the Liberal members who condemn the dictatorial manner in which they are led, the olive-branch to replace the golden chains offered them by the Prime Minister.

I say to my good friends the Liberal members: If you should accept such measures, if you should approve rules 75A, 75B and 75C, you will regret it bitterly, as did the Borden government in 1913 and the St-Laurent government in 1956.

When I refer to the dictatorial manner in which parliament is led by a Prime Minister who, today, is asking the house leader the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to pilot an indefensible bill, I base myself on a recent newspaper article which points out that such dictatorship is not only felt by Canadians but that it is also noticed by people beyond our borders.

And I have in hand a newspaper of last May which reproduced an article from the representative in Washington, Mr. John Rarick, who stated that the threat of a Canada governed by Mr. Trudeau is, and I quote:

> —but a segment of a world scale conspiracy against free men—

And he went on saying:

> The "Canadian Castro"
> While calling Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau a "Canadian Castro" Mr. John R. Rarick stated that Canada has "jeopardized its position" within the free world and—

He said also that there was no hope right now that freedom could continue to exist in this country.

Such a statement was made by someone who does not live in Canada and who is studying the Canadian situation.

If dictatorial rules are imposed on us, preventing the opposition to warn public opinion and tell the people that harmful bills are being prepared, we could then also read the statements of certain of our newspapermen.

I have in hand a statement of Mr. Claude Ryan published in a newspaper of October 30, 1968, four months after the coming into power of the Liberals. It indicates what was thought about the new government. This is what it said and I quote:

> Mr. Pierre Elliott Trudeau had the extraordinary chance of being elected leader of his party, then brought back to power without having to disclose to the Canadian people the true nature of his political ideas. He could utter for months the worse blunders in a climate of euphoria created by the appearance of the Messiah.

May I point out that it is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In accordance with Standing Order 40, a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time. Therefore, the question is: "That this house do now adjourn."

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order No. 40 deemed to have been moved.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—ZONING OF POSTAL ADDRESSES IN LARGE CENTRES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my inquiry of the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) was made on May 29 shortly after it became apparent that yet another administrative fiasco was being chalked up in the Post Office Department, which of late has far out-distanced all other government departments in the number, range and variety of its bureaucratic snafus, and I do not exclude the Passport Office of the Department of External Affairs. Just when one begins to think that nothing more can go wrong in the Post Office Department and that the minister has finally come to the end of his semi-eternal process of creating task forces, another problem looms.

With costly fanfare, expensive publicity, and after many months of work by an expert team, the three digit zone system was to be unveiled for Metro Toronto on May 1. How expensive this great development was is seen in the answers to my order paper questions on July 2. One hundred and fifty thousand books were printed, and there was a reprint order of 200,000. The total cost of printing was $50,000, and the entire operation cost $130,681. How many small post offices could have been kept in operation for that amount of money? Advertising in all the media cost $72,785, and this was to be a job which when done was to stay done forever. In the green book which introduced this plan to the people in Toronto, and I may say there was a red book too, there was a foreword by the District Director of Postal Service which reads:

> I am sure that you will be interested in knowing that the numbers have been set up in such a way as to eliminate the necessity of any changes over the next 30 years.

But the permanence became somewhat undermined and the precise became somewhat uncertain. The green book, with its May date, did not have a very long run as an outstanding best seller. In the Toronto Star of May 29, the people of Toronto read this:

• (10:00 p.m.)

> The Post Office has put a freeze on its new three-digit postal zone policy.

The new policy was announced in a flurry of publicity in newspapers, on radio, billboards and handbills. It cost the Post Office $60,000 in Metro alone to tell you "Your Number is up."

The new system was supposed to have become effective May 1. But it isn't, and may never be. It seems somebody forgot to tell somebody else about a policy change.

And left holding the bag are hundreds of Metro firms who already have had new business forms printed to incorporate the change. All the Post Office can advise them to do is store the letterheads somewhere—maybe they'll be useful some day.

R. F. Horgan, acting director of information and public relations for the post office in Ottawa said yesterday that firms requiring new letterheads and stationery anyway should use the new three-digit forms. "But we certainly wouldn't advise them to destroy present stocks."

Then, in the Toronto Telegram of May 30 we read:

Local post office officials are telling confused callers they can use either of two sets of zone numbers, whichever they please. "Use the old one, it's easier," one official told the Telegram today.

As recorded at page 10742 of Hansard for July 2 I asked:

Is it possible that the 3 digit zone system now in force in these cities—

These are three large cities, including Toronto.

—will be dropped as a result of the review of zoning systems suggested by the Minister of Communications on May 29?

The answer was:

Yes, but not probable. It is expected that, if a national postal code is adopted—

And so on.

But, what do we do in the next two or three years? Are our numbers up or down, frozen or evaporated? Perhaps Vancouver is the scene of the most complete compounding of the confusion. The Province of May 23 provides some insight along these lines:

The post office department apparently is going to amend postal zone changes that were to become effective in the Lower Mainland on June 1.

The further change—possibly to a full, five-number zip code system—was hinted Thursday when local postal officials said the original change to three-number ones was being "deferred or postponed."

A telegraphed message from Ottawa suggested the change had been "deferred or postponed" and that "an explanation was on the way."

The explanation was expected to arrive today.

"We're in the dark on this," the Vancouver spokesman said.

The official went on to say:

The new system was described as one that would speed sorting and delivery of mail.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

All this from the man who was going to make the Post Office businesslike and efficient. If this is efficiency, Mr. Speaker, give me some good old fashioned sloppiness. Doubtless the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) will tell us that all is well; that the numbers game is good for us; that the unofficial intercity guessing contest will give us some of the kick of a national lottery. The minister is expert at giving assurances and reassurances. I recall how confident he was when he said that the new rates would not injure publications and how pleased the carriers were with the new arrangements following the institution of the five day delivery. I need not talk about the debunking of the pre-conclusions. It would be amusing, even ludicrous, it would be a modern Gilbert and Sullivan. But it is also serious. It cannot be doing much to speed the nation's mail if the largest post offices in the country are in such a state of confusion and so much time and energy is wasted in such feckless planning.

Is it any wonder that our post office is becoming a source of derision? We read this in the Dominion Travellers Association magazine under the caption "Who trusts the mail anymore?":

Uganda, or whatever they call the place now, has a better postal system than Canada has. Afghanistan has a better system. Even the United States—once the unhappy owner of the world's worst postal system—has a better one than Canada has now.

They do a better job in Bechuanaland, using runners with forked sticks, than they do in Winnipeg using a computer and hundreds of poorly paid civil servants. The Pony Express defied Indians to deliver mail faster between San Francisco and Houston—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications and Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am frequently fascinated by the flowery phrases of the Falstaff of the Conservative court, a court that I might remind hon. members of the house is now in exile. If the calibre of his criticism remains at the present level, the court is likely to remain in exile. While the hon. member's criticism of the Post Office may indeed merit the term "flowery", it is certainly not factual.

I do not think the hon. member or anyone else can prove the statement that the post office departments in the United States, Uganda or Afghanistan are better than that of Canada. The confusion that exists about the decision that we made exists only in his own mind. We decided some years ago to start zoning Canadian cities according to two or three digits. Early this year, as part of an over-all review of the operations of the Post Office, we came to the decision that we should examine the possibility of a national coding system into which we could integrate all sections of the country.

The purpose of a national coding system is to enable the Post Office to take full advantage of mechanized and automated sorting machines—not the kind of manual process that was such a boon to the patronage of the Conservative government. Its advantage, also, is to examine the feasibility of the present three-character postal zoning systems being continued as part of a national coding system and to determine whether from a practical operating standpoint such a national coding system can identify sections or units within a city. It is a system which allows us to go directly to an automated system of letter carrier walks and recommend detailed plans for the implementation of such a system.

Perhaps we are looking one or two years into the future, but there comes a time when you make a decision to provide, if it is at all feasible, an ideal system; therefore, you halt temporarily city by city, ad hoc measures. This is exactly what we have done. Anyone can use the existing two-digit or three-digit system. No one has to store any letterheads or any mail, and business is quite aware of this. There is no loss to them in this system.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired.

AGRICULTURE—POSSIBILITY OF AID TO WESTERN FARMERS FOLLOWING MEETING BETWEEN PREMIER AND PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, on June 4 I directed a supplementary question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asking him, because of his responsibility for establishing priorities in the government, whether in view of the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) had announced a budgetary surplus of $250 million, the government would divert some of this surplus into an emergency program to alleviate the economic crisis confronting western agriculture. I asked this question, first because agriculture was barely mentioned in the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance, and second there was a $250 million projected surplus in the budget.

In view of a number of circumstances in agriculture in western Canada, I was suggesting in my question to the Prime Minister that we should divert some of this surplus into some sort of emergency plan. I realize there are many other areas into which some of this surplus could be diverted. However, the farmers of western Canada are frustrated by the attitude of the government. I came back from western Canada just yesterday, and a number of them were talking about the government giving subsidies and making concessions to many business corporations, automobile manufacturers, mining and Time magazine.

I should like to suggest that some kind of emergency plan in western Canada is of absolute necessity right now. I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) would agree with me on this since he also has been in the province quite recently. I think that right now the farmer has very little cash. He is met with escalating expenses and high interest rates, and this goes on and on. It is not only the farmer who is being hit in this way. This affects also the businessmen in larger and smaller communities in Western Canada. So I think that if nothing is done, there will be some real poverty in western Canada. There is already poverty in many of the farming areas there. I think it also makes economic sense to put some cash into the western economy. I know that the Saskatchewan Farmers Union, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and other organizations have suggested this to the government not once but many times.

There are many solutions. I am not saying that this is the only solution. We all know that many long range plans and activities have to be carried out in this area. I should like to suggest to the government that they spend $60 to $80 million on some emergency plan. In the past few months our party has been talking about something like this. I believe they have suggested a number of times that we pay farmers 20 cents a bushel as a deficiency payment on grain. If the government does not do something like this, there will not only be real poverty among the farming population of western Canada but many of these people will move into the cities and will join the ranks of the urban poor and unemployed. I think there will also be many more severe consequences. There will be much unrest which is already shaping up among the farmers. They are talking in terms which have never been used before. I should like to appeal to the minister at this time to consider this suggestion seriously because I think this problem will escalate if something is not done immediately.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): As the hon. member pointed out, this question was asked on June 4. It came not only from the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) but the hon. member for Regina Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) also participated by way of supplementary questions.

I do not wish to indicate that the number of programs the government has initiated, and indeed the other actions that have been extended and expanded but not initiated during this past year, do in fact add up to a complete solution of the problem of grain marketing and the restriction of the cash flow that comes from that problem.

If the hon. member will look at page 10,264 of Hansard of June 17 he will find listed there a number of measures. As I said, none of them is a complete solution, but there are a number of measures which do in fact cost the treasury substantial sums of money that go a long way toward alleviating the situation.

The hon. member spoke about the matter of a transfer of some $60 million to $70 million from the treasury into the wheat economy. If he added up what has been paid by the treasury into the wheat economy by way of the temporary Grain Reserves Act plus the interest that is paid on cash advances, plus a number of other items all of which are listed on the pages I mentioned, he would find that it comes to $60 million or $70 million or indeed more.

Furthermore, since that time another announcement was made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) who reports to the house for the Canadian Wheat Board. He indicated that the cash advances which were doubled last November by parliament will be fully reinstated in the new crop year in about three weeks, regardless of whether or not the advances for the past crop year have been fully paid.

These are the series of measures that have been brought in, and they are substantial. In addition to that, as has already been announced very frequently, there will be a meeting in Washington of the ministers of the major exporting nations to the international wheat market to see if a basis cannot be found for re-establishing some stability in the international market. The hon. member knows that Canada has taken the lead in seeking to make the International Grains Arrangement work for and on behalf of producers of grain in this country and in the rest of the world, but we do not have complete control beyond our borders.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. minister, but his time has expired.

NATIONAL REVENUE—INGERSOLL, ONT.—STEPS TO RESTORE CUSTOMS SERVICES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes at my disposal I wish to bring to the attention of the house and of the minister a gross example of administrative incompetence in his department, and express the hope that the hon. gentleman will be able to do something to rectify this.

I am in no way blaming the minister or even his deputy minister for what has taken place. I suggest that officials further down the line have supplied the minister and his senior officials with inaccurate information in that they have misled the minister with regard to the subject I am about to raise. I suggest they are the same officials who caused the administrative mess at Port Dover, Ontario, where the customs officer was removed to the inconvenience of visiting Americans who were then set upon by the R.C.M.P. and fined for not clearing their boats that weekend, although no arrangements had been made to enable them to do so.

In this case a decision was made to close the customs port at Ingersoll, Ontario for reasons of economy. I have no quarrel with that motivation. I received a letter from the minister last January marked private and confidential, so I was not able to discuss the matter with other parties concerned, indicating that the local interests had been consulted in advance of the decision. In fact, none of the important local interests involved were informed that the customs port would be closed, until 12 days before the event and this caused great inconvenience and confusion. The mayor of Ingersoll called a meeting attended by representatives of the industries concerned, and the responsible official of the Department of National Revenue from London, Ontario was in attendance. I attended the meeting myself. I regret to say that the behaviour of the customs official was not only high handed but exceedingly discourteous to the mayor of Ingersoll and to myself. There is certainly no politics involved here as the mayor is a senior official of the Liberal party.

It turned out that none of the local industries had been consulted by the department before the decision was made, or before a recommendation was sent to the minister. The customs official did agree that he would try to work out an effective service for the industries concerned. But nothing has been worked out to date, and the only person sent to consult with representatives of the industries was an official junior to the one who made the decision—and one can well imagine the situation this would create.

I received a letter from the minister's office dated July 3, a copy of a letter which had been sent to the mayor, indicating that everybody was happy and that all the industries were satisfied. Today, I discussed the matter with the heads of the companies concerned and I found that no one is happy at all. They are all extremely dissatisfied.

The industries concerned are all industries which require large amounts of material from the United States. They include the Ingersoll Machine Company and its related company, the Morrow Company, the Chemical Lime division of "STELCO" Chicago Vitreous, North American Cyanamid, Moto-Mower Limited and Standard Brands.

The removal of the customs port has caused the greatest possible inconvenience. Let me say that Ingersoll Machine alone has to bring in 175,000 lbs. a week of forgings and castings for use in the automobile industry, particularly in the making of gears. If normal customs duty were paid it would amount to nearly $12,000 a week; it is not the fault of the local industry that the government entered into an automobile pact with the United States with the result that duties are not collected. As a result of the closing of the port, 90 tons a week now have to be shipped to Woodstock and sent back 20 miles with all the extra cost which this involves. I do not have the time to give further examples, though I have pages of them before me. I have given the minister an account of the administrative incompetence of certain officials who act without proper consultation and, much worse, misinform senior officials of the department and the minister. This cannot help but cause embarrassment.

I shall be glad to provide the minister with any additional information he may require; he will understand I do not have sufficient time to do so at the moment under the limit imposed. I hope the minister will take a firm stand in this matter and do something to clean up the mess.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the hon. member this evening are quite different from the question he asked in the house the other day, which was whether it was the government's intention to reopen the customs port of Ingersoll, Ontario. It is the feeling of the department that equivalent and equally satisfactory service could be provided more economically from the nearby port of Woodstock, which is ten miles distant. I know it is always very hard when a customs port is closed but this department, like every other department, has been asked to cut its expenditures, if possible without hurting anybody.

As far as the disruption of major industries is concerned, I will have my officials look into this matter, with a view to giving advice and assistance to the industries affected, if the hon. member will provide me with the names of the companies in question. I see he is ready to give me some more information.

I will take note of other remarks made by the hon. member. I am surprised at the serious accusation he made in connection with officials in the area, but I will certainly look into the matter and write a report to the hon. member later on.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 9th of July, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

Esmond Butler,
Secretary to the Governor General.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR CONSENT UNDER S.O. 43 TO DEBATE MOTION RESPECTING GRIEVANCES OF POSTAL WORKERS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to ask the unanimous consent of the house, seconded by my hon. friend from Oxford, to move the following motion pursuant to standing order 43:

That the reports of W. S. Martin of the grievances by postal workers against the Post Office be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Under the terms of the standing order, I am entitled to explain the urgency of this motion. In the coming weeks the Post Office will be entering into negotiations with the postal workers, and unless some extremely pressing situation arises it appears unlikely that the house will have an opportunity to discuss this matter before adjourning for the summer recess. Consequently, we shall have no opportunity to consider the attitude of the Post Office in dealing with its employees until these important and delicate negotiations have been completed.

I would therefore ask that the house grant unanimous consent that this motion go forward in order that these reports and the important matters with which they deal may receive the immediate attention of a committee of this house.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, had there been advance consultation it might perhaps have been possible to give unanimous consent; but there was none. Consequently the government is unable to agree to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest that unless hon. members have a point of order to raise we should not allow debate of a motion moved under Standing Order 43. The hon. member is quite right to present a motion in this way under Standing Order 43, but he does require unanimous consent. If unanimous agreement is not given, then the matter cannot be proceeded with and there should not be a debate. However I do not wish to preclude other hon. members from raising other questions by way of a point of order.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR CONSENT UNDER S.O. 43 TO DEBATE MOTION RESPECTING MOVEMENT OF FEED GRAIN

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am not rising on a point of order. I also have a matter with respect to which I am sure the house will grant unanimous consent, since the question relates to a very urgent situation. The motion to which I am asking the house to give unanimous consent is as follows:

That this house recommends that the government take immediate steps to alleviate the particularly distressing and urgent agricultural situation prevailing in the area of Peace River, by expediting the delivery and transportation of large quantities of feed grain in the hands of farmers, including the appointment of a person or persons to take charge of the expediting of this feed grain movement.

Movement of Feed Grain

I should like to make five brief points which I am sure will persuade the government to consent to the motion.

First, farmers in the Peace River country have experienced unusually difficult conditions in five out of the last seven years which have aggravated their position.

Second, there is in the Peace River country, and in the district of Falher in particular, between five and six million bushels of feed grain including barley, oats, and low grade wheat, for which there is an immediate market for sale in British Columbia and eastern Canada.

Third, so few box cars have come into Peace River country that some farmers have not even had a one bushel quota and most are still limited to the two and three bushel quotas and may well not achieve the five bushels promised by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pépin). Farmers will be able to sell feed grain to the British Columbia part of the Peace River country where buyers are willing and available to purchase it.

Fourth, a meeting of farm representatives was held on Sunday morning at the town of Falher which I attended and to which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) were invited but were unable to attend.

Fifth—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid I have suffered as long as I can. I suggest to the hon. member that the rules do not allow a lengthy statement at this point. In attempting to use standing order 43 in this way, the hon. member is circumventing the provisions of standing order 26. I think that standing order 43 was never intended to be used in the way hon. members are attempting to use it today. If I am wrong about this the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization ought to take a look at standing order 43.

Mr. Baldwin: Your Honour is quite right, but I have only one more sentence.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Baldwin: At this meeting it was made perfectly clear—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member might be allowed to finish his statement.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Baldwin: At this meeting it was made perfectly clear that the situation was urgent and difficult, but that great help would be provided by moving this feed grain, particularly as it could be immediately used in other parts of Canada and the box cars would only be required for a short time. I hope that the house will give unanimous consent, in light of this statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member having put the question under Standing Order 43 I have to ask the house whether the hon. member has unanimous agreement to proceed as suggested.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the hon. member that he does not have unanimous consent.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

LAW GOVERNING OFFICIAL DOCUMENTS PUBLICATION

Question No. 1,419—Mr. Fortin:

1. Is the government studying, has it studied or will it study the desirability of passing a law dealing with the publication of official documents?
2. Will the government examine the Swedish legislation in this respect?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): 1. and 2. The government's policy concerning access to public records was announced in the House of Commons on May 1, 1969. In the formulation of that policy, due account was taken of the methods of publication of official documents in a number of other countries, including Sweden.

RECEIPT OF FUNDS BY U.S. COMPANY UNDER DEPARTMENTAL VOTE

Question No. 2,007—Mr. Saltsman:

What is the name of the Canadian company referred to in the 1968 Auditor General's Report, on page 60, paragraph 107, whose United States' parent company received $552,000 under the Department of Industry, Vote 10?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The name of the Canadian company referred to in the 1968 Auditor General's Report, on page 60, paragraph 107, is FMC Beloit Sorel Limited.

OVERPAYMENT TO CANADIAN COMPANY

Question No. 2,009—Mr. Saltsman:

1. What is the name of the Canadian company, referred to in the 1968 Auditor General's Report, page 61, paragraph 109, which received an overpayment from the Canadian Government of $86,000?

2. Is the Government of Canada presently attempting to obtain this overpayment from the above company?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The project referred to in the Auditor General's Report, page 61, paragraph 109, is still current and the interests of more than one allied country are involved. It is not considered in the public interest to disclose the name of the company at this time.

2. The Auditor General and the Justice Department differ as to whether an overpayment situation exists. The Justice Department is of the opinion, relating to this specific agreement, that no distribution of the proceeds of sale can be effected until the sale is concluded. When the sale is concluded the government will receive all monies due under the contract.

TREATY RIGHTS RESEARCH BY INDIANS

Question No. 2,225—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. Is the Minister committed to granting the Indian people the resources they need to undertake their own research into treaty rights and related matters as was requested by Indians at the April 28-May 2 National Indian Conference in Ottawa?

2. Did the Minister take the opportunity on the weekend of May 2, 1969 for a preliminary meeting with the Committee of six designated by the National Indian Conference to deal with him on this matter?

3. When will the first formal meeting of that group occur, and when will the Minister announce a firm decision regarding financial assistance to Indian research?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. At a meeting with the Indians during the National Indian Consultation Conference April 28-May 2 it was stated, as in December 1968, that the Canadian government was ready to help them form into an association and take advantage of the most modern means of operation; these statements are still valid today.

2. An opportunity has not yet arisen to meet officially with the members of the Committee of six designated by the national Indian delegation.

3. The Committee has not yet informed the department when their first formal meeting will occur. An announcement will be made in the near future as to the form of financial assistance which will be made available for Indian research.

CRIME VICTIMS COMPENSATORY BOARD

Question No. 2,245—Mr. Fortin:

1. Is the government considering, has it considered or will it consider, establishing a crime victims compensation board?

2. Will these studies be tabled in the House?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): 1 and 2. On May 15 and again on May 21, I stated, as recorded in Hansard, that I shall defer this matter to the commissioners of legislation uniformity and to the representatives of the provinces' Attorneys General.

CREATION OF POST OF OMBUDSMAN

Question No. 2,249—Mr. Fortin:

1. Is the government considering the advisability of presenting a Bill which would create the post of ombudsman to ensure better protection for citizens?

2. At what stage are the studies on the protection of the citizen vis-à-vis the government and bureaucracy?

3. Who is carrying out these studies and will they be tabled in Parliament?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): 1. The government has not announced any policy with regard to the advisability of creating an office of ombudsman.

2. The protection of the citizen vis-à-vis the government and bureaucracy is a matter which is under continuous study by the government.

3. Such study is done in particular in relation to the formulation of policies by the various departments concerned and the preparation of legislation by the Department of Justice.

Question No. 2,389—Mr. Beaudoin:

Is it the federal government's intention to require of applicants for fire-arms permits the same proof of proficiency required of applicants for driving permits?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): No specific test of proficiency is laid down in Bill C-150 but the persons authorized to issue firearms permits are entitled to consider the question of proficiency in deciding whether to issue a permit.

Question No. 2,431—Mr. Sulatycky:

1. How many timber berths are at present held in National Parks?

2. How many mining claims exist at present in the National Parks?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Twelve timber berths.

2. Two mining claims exist.

READJUSTMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE FINANCIAL PENALTIES

Question No. 2,447—Mr. Fortin:

With regard to the financial penalties provided for in the Criminal Code, does the government intend to adjust these penalties to reflect the capacity of those concerned to pay, in order that the poor may not be penalized more severely than the rich and, if not, for what reason?

[Mr. Pelletier.]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Sections 622 and 694 of the Criminal Code make special provision for allowing time for payment of a fine if the court is satisfied that a convicted person is not possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay forthwith.

COMPENSATION TO VICTIMS OF CRIMINAL ACTS

Question No. 2,448—Mr. Fortin:

1. Is the government studying, will it study or has it studied the problem of compensating the victims of criminal acts?

2. Will a report on such a study be laid before the House and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, on what date?

3. Will the government introduce a bill to provide for compensation for the victims of criminal acts?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): 1, 2 and 3. On May 15 and again on May 21, I stated, as recorded in Hansard, that I shall defer this matter to the commissioners of legislation uniformity and to the representatives of the provinces' Attorneys General.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES INFORMATION SERVICE

Question No. 2,488—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources provide an information service and, if so, what was the cost for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

2. How many publications and/or periodicals and/or information sheets and/or public releases were provided by the Department for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive and what was the cost for each publication for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

3. How many copies of each publication are provided and to whom are they distributed and how is the distribution effected?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): 1, 2 and 3. The Public Relations and Information Services Branch of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has a total staff of 42, which include 15 people working at public information on a full time basis. The remaining staff is concerned exclusively with the editing and production of scores of scientific and semi-technical reports intended for scientific and specialized audiences.

The information requested is not immediately available from departmental records, as it is not recorded separately. To obtain such information would require an extensive search of departmental files, in various branch distribution centres and many man hours of clerical work. It would also require the hiring of additional casual staff.

COST OF AIR CANADA MACHINISTS STRIKE

Question No. 2,497—Mr. Robinson:

1 What was the total cost to Canada of the recent Air Canada strike of machinists?

2. Has the government any knowledge of the total cost to the Union of the recent Air Canada strike and, if so, what was such total?

3. How many Air Canada employees were unemployed as a result of the recent Air Canada strike and how many of them were strikers?

4. What was the total loss in wages and other benefits to Air Canada employees other than strikers, as a result of the recent Air Canada strike?

5. Has the government any knowledge of the amount of strike pay a striker received per week from (a) Canadian Union or Union Headquarters (b) International Union or International Union Headquarters (c) income from any other source and, if so, what amount or amounts?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Air Canada and the Department of Labour as follows: 1. Air Canada has no information available on this.

2. It is assumed this question refers to the International Association of Machinists, and could only be procured from them directly.

3. 6,300 strikers were removed from the payroll and 5,000 other employees were placed on off-duty status without pay. In addition approximately 1,300 employees had their work week reduced in varying degrees; i.e. were put on part-time duty.

4. $3,750,000.

5. (a) The government has no confirmed knowledge on amounts of strike pay received by strikers. Indications are, however, that all strikers, who were IAM members for six months or more, were eligible for strike pay of $25 per week after a two-week waiting period. The strike pay is reputed to be paid out of an international strike fund to which all U.S. and Canadian IAM members contribute $0.50 per month; (b) As in item (a) above; (c) The government has no knowledge of income strikers received from sources other than the strike fund.

2. Does the government intend to alter the membership of the Northern Canada Power Commission, of which the above companies are subsidiaries?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Action was commenced in the fiscal year 1968-69, through the Department of Justice, to wind up the Dawson City Water and Power Company Limited, the Dawson Electric Light and Power Company Limited, and the Yukon Telephone Syndicate Ltd. Questions

PUBLICATION OF REVISED STATUTES

Question No. 2,510—Mr. Fortin:

1. How much progress has been made in the revision of the Statutes of Canada and when will the Revised Statutes be published?

2. Will the expression "Crown" be replaced by the words "Government" and/or "State" in the Statutes and, if not, for what reason?

3 In the French version, will the expression "statuts revisés" be replaced by the expression "lois revisées" and, if not, for what reason?

4. Are the French and English versions written independently or is one version a translation of the other?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): 1. Manuscript for the revision is going to printers for composition; new legislative matter from this session is being incorporated into the manuscript when received from parliament. The printing schedule still calls for completion of copy by October 31st, 1969. Publication would follow acceptance of revisors' report by Governor in Council and the fixing of an appropriate promulgation date.

2. No. There is neither statutory nor constitutional authority for a change of this kind.

3. No. The Commission is not authorized to do so under the Act respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1964-65, c. 48.

4. Neither version is "written". Each version is reviewed and revised independently and adjusted to each other as far as possible under the authority provided by 1964-65, c. 48. In this sense, there is no "translation" of versions.

Questions

YEARLY INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING INDEX

Question No. 2,608—Mr. Robinson:

What was the increase per year in the cost of living index since its inception?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that: The yearly percentage change in the Consumer Price Index since 1913, is shown in the attached table. An explanation of the linking of the indexes to produce a continuous series is given below.

The All-Items Consumer Price Index for Canada
(1949=100)

The primary purpose of a consumer price index is the measurement of current price movements. Therefore, the items and their weights in the index should reflect the full range and relative importance of commodities and services bought by the population group to which the index relates. As the spending habits of the population change over time, the index based on a particular pattern of expenditure becomes a less and less reliable measure of price movement. For this reason major revisions of the index "basket" are made periodically. Such revisions break the continuity of the index and the separate indexes must be linked to provide an historical index.

The All-Items Consumer Price Index, from 1913 to date expressed in terms of 1949=100, incorporates five distinct series each covering part of the entire period. In each index the items and their weights are appropriate to the period covered by the specific index; i.e. each index relates to a particular "basket" of commodities and services.

The five indexes "linked" to produce one continuous series from 1913 to date are designated in the following table in terms of the period for which each constitutes the measure of price movement. The successive weight base periods are also indicated. The beginning and ending months of each index are specific link dates.

Index	Base Weight Period
1913, January 1914—January 1926	1913
January 1926—January 1935	1926
January 1935—January 1949	1937-38
January 1949—January 1961	1947-48

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

AGRICULTURE

ALLEGED SERIOUS SITUATION FACING MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a speciific and important matter requiring urgent consideration.

[English]

Because of the urgency and importance of this matter and this motion, may I be permitted to explain in the second official language.

I wish, under the provisions of Standing Order 26, to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the serious situation facing the milk producers of Canada as indicated in the release of the B.F.S. of July 17, 1969. There is an urgent need for this matter to be discussed in parliament, so that hon. members can make known the needs of their constituents and so that the government may make a statement of policy without delay.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think that under standing order 26 of the House of Commons, this motion to adjourn the business of the house is extremely important because the house could give its full attention to a more than alarming situation since there is every indication that a very serious agricultural crisis is impending.

The situation has fallen upon us very suddenly. It is new in that it could not be foreseen. In fact, specialists had at best underestimated it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that under the rules, he can only indicate the subject of his motion. He cannot make any points to prove the urgency of the debate, the decision being left to the Speaker. The hon. member should conclude his statement as soon as possible.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your helpful remarks and your kindness.

The famous report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics dated July 7 states that in 1968 the farmers' net income accruing from the agricultural industry was 8.7 per cent lower than for the worst year since 1961.

Now, this same document states that this is due to higher operating and amortizing costs.

As such a situation could not be foreseen and will certainly not come up for debate, judging from the orders of the day, I ask, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse, for the consent of the house to study this matter, to put forward the views of our electors and to find out the government's policy on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has given notice to the Chair of the question he intended to ask pursuant to Standing Order 26. Even by bending over backward and even if his argument was put to the house in what he terms the second official language of this country, I am not fully satisfied that his motion is in order and can now be considered by the house.

I feel that the subject that the hon. member wants to discuss refers to a lasting situation and not to one of sudden urgency. May I be allowed to refer the hon. member to Citation 100 (8) of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, and I quote:

> —what I think was contemplated, was an occurrence of some sudden emergency, either in home or in foreign affairs. But I do not think it was contemplated—if the House will allow me to state my views—that a question of very wide scope, which would demand legislation to deal with it in any effective manner, should be the subject of discussion on a motion for the adjournment of the House.

To my mind, the relevant part of that quotation is that the motion is acceptable only if it concerns a matter that has unexpectedly become urgent, to a certain extent, and not if it concerns a situation that has prevailed for some time.

If I understood correctly the hon. member's comments, the question is no doubt both important and urgent, but it has prevailed for some time. To that extent, I do not believe that it would be in order to adjourn the business of the house to allow the hon. member to make known his views on the matter.

Mr. Fortin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I willingly accept your comments but, in all kindness, if you would allow me to show that there is a new set of circumstances—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In all kindness, I might allow you to do this, but the rules do not allow it.

Mr. H. E. Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary is it the pleasure of the house that notice of motion No. 109 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

PRELIMINARY REPORT OF O.E.C.D.

Motion No. 158—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Preliminary Report of the OECD submitted to the government after its assessment of Canada's Science Policy in 1968.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the report, the tabling of which is being sought, was received in draft form and is to be revised and published in the fall of this year. The Organization of European Co-operation and Development has asked that this document not be released pending publication of the final report. In view of this the hon. member might wish to withdraw the notice of motion.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I am in a congenial mood today, and so I agree.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motion stand?

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, more than two months ago the house agreed to a motion calling for the tabling of the research documents prepared for the Woods committee. I have not yet received them and I wonder when we will get some action on this?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I recall the discussions which took place at the time and I will make an inquiry right away.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, two months isn't too bad. It is about six or seven months ago that some notices of motions in my name were adopted asking for the production of correspondence between the government and various provinces relating to the education of native Indian children, and an order made then has not yet totally been fulfilled.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I shall make inquiries about that as well, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motion stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN PROMOTION OF PEACE—ARMS SHIPMENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the Secretary General of the United Nations that warfare has been resumed throughout the Suez Canal ceasefire zone, I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can assure the house that Canada is responding to the Secretary General's plea that all members of the United Nations exert all possible influence in promoting peace in that area?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can associate myself fully with the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. We fully support the Secretary General's appeal to the parties to put an immediate end to all military actions, and to observe the ceasefire.

Mr. Stanfield: As a supplementary question, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate to the house what he is doing, in addition to agreeing with the Secretary General of the United Nations, and in particular will he say whether Canada has called upon the countries that are the chief suppliers of arms to the belligerents to impose an embargo on arms shipments to that area?

Mr. Sharp: As the hon. gentleman knows, Mr. Speaker, Canada is not supplying arms to either side. We have expressed ourselves as opposed to this. I do not think we can exercise any more influence than by publicly supporting these pleas that are being made by the Secretary General and by others for a cessation of the arms shipments.

Mr. Stanfield: I gather from what the Secretary of State for External Affairs says that in fact the government of Canada is doing nothing, except endorsing the position taken by the Secretary General of the United Nations. Perhaps he would say what position the government of Canada is taking with regard to the possibility of a Middle East settlement being imposed by the great powers. Can he indicate to the house what positive movements, what activities the government of Canada is engaged in, with regard to helping out in this area?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have been working as effectively as we can with the governments of the area concerned to get them to support the efforts being made by the Security Council through the aegis of Ambassador Jarring to reach a peaceful settlement of this dispute. When we were on the Security Council we helped in drafting that resolution, and since then we have been supporting it very strongly.

Mr. Stanfield: Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs considering visiting the area himself, to see what he can do directly?

Mr. Sharp: I thank the hon. gentleman for his confidence in me, which I accept with gratitude. I trust he will continue to have supreme confidence in my ability to handle these matters. It had been my intention at some time to visit that area, and I hope it can be done soon.

FINANCE

DISCUSSION OF INTEREST RATES WITH CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Minister of Finance. Since the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, David Kennedy, had a meeting with the 24 leading bankers of the United States at which he asked them to hold the line on interest rates and use selective lending rather than raise interest rates any higher, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether in the meetings he held recently with the bankers of this country he made similar representations, and whether or not he received any assurances to the effect that an attempt would be made to hold the line on bank interest rates.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the question of interest rates is presently undergoing a public inquiry before a committee of this house. I should say to my hon. friend that I did urge the banks, when their credit was tight, to lend money in areas of lesser development in the country, and also to small businesses.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the minister secured any assurances from the representatives of the chartered banks of Canada that an attempt would be made to hold the line on bank interest rates?

Mr. Benson: I think the matter of interest rates and how they are formulated and determined was pretty fully explained just a day or two ago by the governor of the Bank of Canada before a committee of this house. The banks themselves, as my hon. friend knows, do not determine over-all interest rates in Canada, as was ably expressed by the governor of the Bank of Canada. For me to forecast what interest rates will be in the future is rather impossible because so much depends on what happens in the United States and in Canada, and on whether we succeed in our battle against inflation in this country.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the minister to forecast anything and I am not asking for a dissertation on bank rates. I am asking the minister whether he made representations to the chartered banks of Canada and whether he has received any assurance from them that they will attempt to follow the same course the bankers in the United States agreed to follow, namely to hold the line and to use selective lending rather than to raise interest rates.

Mr. Benson: No one in this country would like less to see interest rates increase than I would. The government of Canada is the major borrower in the country and would not want to see interest rates go any higher.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Finance has chosen to hide behind the fact that a public inquiry is going on by a committee of the house, will the minister undertake to carry out the recommendations of the committee of the house when it reports?

Mr. Benson: I will await with interest the recommendations of the committee of the house. I can assure the Leader of the Opposition I am not trying to hide behind a committee of the house. I simply suggested to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, as I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition, that he read the very able evidence given by the governor of the Bank of Canada before that committee.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the minister that not only did I read the evidence of the governor of the Bank of Canada but also the evidence of the minister, and I am still rather confused.

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege, I should like to point out to the Leader of the Opposition that I have not appeared to date before the committee.

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance with regard to the committee that is studying interest rates. Can he give the house any guarantee that the recommendations of that committee will not be written by the house leader?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

ALLEGED INCONSISTENCY IN APPLICATION OF PENALTY

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Would he tell the house for what considerations Mr. Justice J. A. Archambault's decision has been reversed in the Borg case, when it was a matter of implementing the law enacted by parliament on capital punishment to the effect that any person found guilty of the murder of a police officer or a prison guard must be put to death? Why does the law say one thing and the people responsible for the administration of justice do the contrary?

Mr. Speaker, a death sentence has just been commuted—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me the hon. member's question is put to the house in the form of an argument and is therefore out of order.

Mr. Latulippe: It is not an argument, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of justice, a social matter, and justice must follow its course. Justice rather than injustice must prevail. As for me, Mr. Speaker, that represents—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that when the Chair suggests that a question is not in order, he can of course rephrase it differently or, if he so wishes, he can give the Chair notice for its consideration at the time of adjournment. It is always possible to do that. I am sure the hon. member would have the chance at that time to consider the problem.

I am not suggesting to the hon. member that his question is not important or urgent, but I am telling him that in my humble opinion, it is raised under the form of an argument and as such, is out of order.

Mr. Latulippe: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

MEDICARE—DISCONTINUANCE OF EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTION IN PROVINCES IMPLEMENTING PLAN—APPLICATION TO ARMED FORCES AND R.C.M.P.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last I asked the President of the Treasury Board a question which appears at page 10753 of Hansard concerning the discontinuance of employer contribution by the government of Canada in provinces implementing the medicare plan. I wonder whether the minister is in a position to reply to that question today.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in provinces which are implementing federal medicare programs the basic Government Services Medical Insurance plan is being discontinued since, in large measure, the benefits under this plan are provided by the medicare program in the province. Accordingly, neither employer nor employee contributions are now required for this basic G.S.M.I. plan in such provinces. Of course the hon. member is aware that the government contributes a substantial portion of the cost of the medicare program.

A supplementary G.S.M.I.P. is being introduced in these provinces coincident with the changeover to medicare to provide those benefits which were provided under the government plan but which are not provided by the medicare program and thus at least maintain the level of benefits which had existed previously. The cost of the supplementary G.S.M.I. plan is being shared by the government and the employees on a 50-50 basis.

I may say to the hon. member that in his own province where we sought the agreement of the minister of health of that province to making available a reduced contribution rate under the provincial medicare plan for members of the armed forces that was not agreed as it has been in the other provinces.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence because I believe there are variations in respect of the services. Is the Minister of National Defence prepared to outline just what is happening with regard to the federal government's contribution for basic medical care programs for servicemen serving in a province?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the President of the Treasury Board has indicated that in all provinces which have implemented medicare, except Alberta, the provincial government has reduced premiums for the armed forces personnel in recognition of the fact that they already receive medical services from the armed forces themselves.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but in respect of this problem federal employees of the armed forces and the R.C.M.P. are in a turmoil.

Mr. Speaker: I am wondering whether the hon. member thinks the question should be asked about all the services.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is the last. The question is whether the R.C.M.P. are dealt with in the same way and whether the policy of the government is the same with regard to them.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the question as notice and bring forward a reply.

CONSUMER CREDIT

CO-OPERATION WITH PROVINCES TO EFFECT CONTROL OF INFLATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement yesterday by the governor of the Bank of Canada that consumer credit restrictions would probably have been imposed during the past two years if federal authorities had possessed the power to impose them, does the government intend to approach the provinces with a view to obtaining these powers in order to obtain an effective means of controlling inflation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Not at this particular moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: Is it the intention of the government to completely disregard this effective means of controlling inflation and do nothing about it?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: Well, what in the world do you intend to do to control inflation? Let the house know what you intend to do, for heavens sake.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIOLOGICAL WARFARE—TRANSFER OF MATERIALS ACROSS CANADIAN TERRITORY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on June 23 and again last Thursday on July 3, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs to inform the house as to how materials used for research at Shirleys Bay and Suffield, Alberta, in connection with biological and chemical warfare get to either or both of these laboratory grounds from one point in Canada to another, or from the United States to points in Canada. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said the Minister of National Defence would answer the question. May we now have an answer?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I think I should preface my answer by saying that all activities of the Department of National Defence pertaining to these materials are only of a defensive nature. As far as the particular question is concerned, I am informed that the Defence Research Board does not ship toxic materials by commercial aircraft, and has never at any time shipped disease producing organisms by commercial carriers of any kind. Canadian Forces motor vehicles and cargo aircraft have been used to transport small quantities of toxic materials to Suffield for testing purposes.

Small laboratory samples of chemical materials have been shipped by rail in accordance with Board of Transport regulations. These shipments are in the same category as those made by a hospital or laboratory to another such institution. The samples have been about the equivalent of a tablespoonful, carried in specially designed containers, and the shipments occur very infrequently—on the basis of about one or two a year.

Mr. Lewis: The minister has not stated whether these shipments come from the United States to these points in Canada. May I have an answer as to where they originate?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I have one example I can give my hon. friend, involving the last shipment of these organisms. They came from the United States in 1965.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the information given by the minister in reply to the supplementary question asked by the hon. member is the type of information that should normally appear on the order paper.

[Mr. Hees.]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the governor of the Bank of Canada, who appeared yesterday before the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, stated that the steps to be taken to check inflation will cause the number of unemployed to increase, would the Prime Minister tell us whether he shares that opinion, and also how many jobless he needs to govern the country properly?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might put this question on the order paper.

WATER RESOURCES

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF WATER ACT—POLLUTION CONTROL

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister without Portfolio in charge of resources. Several weeks ago, in answering a question concerning a water act, the minister advised the house that it would probably not be reached until mid-July. At that time it was believed the house would not be sitting in July. Will the minister now be presenting the proposed water act during the current session of parliament, so that we may know what he proposes concerning water pollution.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I believe that my words to which the hon. member refers indicated I would present the water act in July, and that is still my expectation.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

RESIGNATION OF MR. DOUGLAS FULLERTON, CHAIRMAN

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to advise the house whether Mr. Douglas Fullerton, chairman of the Cape Breton Development Corporation has resigned and, if so, will he provide the house with the reason for his resignation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that he has sent a letter to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, since the minister is in charge of the department responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation, can he tell the house whether this resignation is going to be accepted, whether it was given voluntarily to the government and whether a reason was asked for by the minister?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed by the office of the Prime Minister that the resignation was accepted.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): While I am on my feet may I ask in relation to this particular development corporation whether the minister is in a position to reply to the question I posed to him on Thursday?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This matter was discussed by the standing committee of this house, particularly on April 22 and there has been nothing new since.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, was this resignation voluntary or was it asked for by the government?

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in light of unusual developments and things that have taken place, will the minister present to parliament its long term plans so members of this house will not be accused of discriminating against the miners of Cape Breton and these miners will have a choice to decide for themselves to come within these plans?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, there is no discrimination at all in respect of these plans.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he does not consider it discrimination in respect of a man who, after 49 years service, is arbitrarily dismissed?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): These are isolated cases.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister reply to my last question?

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question regarding traffic safety—

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond is rising on a point of order. Perhaps the hon. member for Surrey would defer his question.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises from the fact that I asked the minister a question to which he gave an answer, but for some reason the answer did not come across. Would he repeat it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure the question should have been allowed or that the minister should have been allowed to reply. He did reply, but in my opinion the simple answer would be for the hon. member to put his answer on the order paper. The supplementary question was allowed and perhaps the minister now may wish to reply.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what in the hon. member's question is really a question and what is a statement. However, if I am asked whether we are ready to disclose information about the early retirement plan and whether it is a public plan, I will answer that one can easily get such information and I do not object at all to its being given to hon. members in the house.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, in the future will the minister listen to the question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will now listen to the hon. member for Surrey.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

AUTOMOBILES—INSTALLATION OF INFLATABLE AUTOMATIC DEVICES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with traffic safety and I should like to direct it to the Minister of Transport. Will he consider taking similar action to that taken last week by his counterpart in the United States, who at that time told car manufacturers that they are going to be required to instal on their new automobiles an automatic inflatable device which, at the instant of a car crash, expands and cushions the shock to the occupants of the car? Will the minister consider taking this or similar action?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a representation to the minister in respect of an assumption he may take into account.

PEST CONTROL

USE OF D.D.T. IN FOOD CROPS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is it the intention of the Food and Drug Directorate to issue new standards reducing the amount of d.d.t. allowed in the cultivation of crops used for food? If so, when will these new standards be issued?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The matter is under review by the Food and Drug Directorate. No decision has been made as yet.

Mr. Harding: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the constantly increasing mass of evidence that d.d.t. and other toxic pesticides are reaching unsafe proportions in many areas of Canada, will the minister, in conjunction with other government departments, initiate a full study of the effects on our environment of d.d.t. and other toxic pesticides, and in particular on the source of our food supply?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked by the hon. member comes close to being an argument. However, perhaps the minister might want to reply.

Mr. Munro: The most recent surveys we have had from the department indicate that they are not at levels such as to constitute a danger in the terms described by the hon. member.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ALLEGED IMPROPRIETY IN SUPPRESSION OF ADJUDICATION REPORTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council whether he is now in a position to explain why the reports of Mr. Martin relating to the Post Office were released only last Friday, seven to nine weeks after the decisions were made. I direct this question to the President of the Privy Council because the Postmaster General indicated last week that it was the responsibility of the President of the Privy Council.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): This is not my responsibility, Mr. Speaker. I believe that one of my colleagues is ready to answer the question.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): The three reports, which are inter-related, of the chief adjudicator of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, and which pertain to the grievances of the Council of Postal Unions were received by the Public Service Staff Relations Board on June 16, 1969. These reports were distributed on July 4, 1969. The thirteen working days between the date of receipt of the reports and the date of distribution were spent in printing, proof reading, final printing and distribution. That period of time is normal and there was no evidence of delay in these procedures.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The time may be normal, but if so it requires further explanation.

However, I should like to ask the Minister of Supply and Services whether he has any explanation to give of the fact that Mr. Martin's decisions were dated in one case April 30 and in the other case May 15. Are the mail services in this country that slow?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FIR PLYWOOD—DIFFERENCE BETWEEN CANADIAN AND U.S. PRICES

Mr. J. G. Lind (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I wonder if the minister can assure the Canadian people that he will investigate the difference in the cost of U.S. fir plywood, which is approximately $40 per thousand cheaper than Canadian fir plywood, and would he also investigate the possibility that the B.C. Plywood Association is not maintaining prices for the manufacturers, thus milking the Canadian public?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to look into this matter, although I understand that Canadian, and particularly B.C. plywood, is far superior to U.S. plywood.

Mr. Lind: I realize that some grades of U.S. fir plywood are inferior to our Canadian plywood, but their waterproof plywood, I should like to point out to the minister, is of far better quality.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

RESIGNATION OF PUBLIC RELATIONS DIRECTOR—SUPPLEMENTARY GRANT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is directed to the Secretary of State. Has Miss Mary Jolliffe resigned as public relations director of the Performing Arts Centre because of the provision of inadequate funds from his department, and if so, what action does the government contemplate to deal with this problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet been able to confirm the news published in some newspapers this morning. I myself learned about it through the newspapers and the radio, but I have asked the authorities of the National Arts Centre for a report on the incident, and I will gladly communicate to the house any information I receive.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Secretary of State been advised of the intention of the Performing Arts Centre to request a supplementary grant of $300,000 to cover its financial problems?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I have received no official notice, Mr. Speaker. It was mentioned casually in a conversation with the director and the president of the Centre.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a further supplementary question. Is it the opinion of the government that the present administrative structure of the Performing Arts Centre is adequate, or does the minister contemplate a reorganization?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a statement of opinion. We have reached the point at which, according to practice, I should remind hon. members that we are running short of time. I still see a large number of members who are anxious to ask questions and who have risen from the first moment. May I say that the time I took to make this announcement to the house will not be charged to the question period.

SPORTS

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO MEET PAN-AMERICAN GAMES DEFICIT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. On June 10 I asked him the following question:

> In view of the government's action in writing off the Expo deficit of $125 million, will it consider making similar arrangements in respect of the Pan-Am games, also a 1967 national event?

There was a supplementary question and then the minister said he would look into the matter. I wonder if he has anything further to report at this time.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Not at this moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

STUDY OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE BEFORE ADJOURNMENT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture was in his seat earlier, but in his absence, the President of the Privy Council could perhaps answer my question.

Could the minister tell us whether the report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, which must normally be submitted to the house and which has been prepared following a trip in eastern Canada, could be considered by the house before the recess?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I doubt it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question arising from the one put by the hon. member for Bellechasse a moment ago to the President of the Privy Council.

In view of the fact that the President of the Privy Council stated that it is unlikely that the report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, just back from its visit in eastern Canada, will be published to enlighten hon. members, would the President of the Privy Council tell us if he is willing to meet with the Minister of Agriculture in this respect and perhaps change his decision?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire on this matter and give an answer to the house.

[English]

PENITENTIARIES

SPRINGHILL, N.S.—TRANSFER OF INMATES TO OTHER MINIMUM SECURITY ACCOMMODATION

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): I have a question for the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Is he in a position to outline the program he intends to carry out with regard to the Canadian penitentiary service in the maritime provinces which will result in the closure of the minimum security penal institution at Springhill, Nova Scotia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that if the minister were to make such an announcement it would have to be made by way of a statement on motions.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder if the minister would make such a statement on motions at an early date.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I would be very glad to do so but I do not think it would require a great length of time. The Springhill minimum security institution was set up in 1959 to meet an emergency situation on a temporary basis. Since that time the new medium security penitentiary has been built at Springhill and two new minimum security institutions have been built in the maritimes and there is no longer any need for the minimum security institution at Springhill.

Mr. Coates: Is the minister in a position to give us an assurance that the 43 members of the staff of the minimum security penal institution will be integrated in the operations of the penitentiary service?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

SUGGESTION TO REFER ADJUDICATION REPORTS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as government house leader. Has he given any consideration to my question of Monday requesting his initiative in taking steps to have the newly discovered reports of the chief adjudicator, Mr. Martin, referred to the standing committee before our summer or autumn adjournment, and before the conclusion of the employer-employee negotiations in the Post Office?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I have been giving certain other things consideration, but I thank the hon. member for his reminder and I will give this matter further consideration.

[Mr. Coates.]

FISHERIES

COHOE SALMON—BANNING OF OPERATION IN STRAIT OF GEORGIA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry whether he intends to ban fishing for cohoe salmon in the Straits of Georgia to commercial fishermen during July and August?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): This matter is under active consideration because of the concurrent demand by the sports fishermen, but I am not prepared at this moment to say what decision will ultimately be made.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Is the minister considering applying any such closure to the sports fishermen or is it to be applied only to commercial fishermen?

Mr. Davis: Consideration will be given to both sides and to the claims of both parties.

DOGFISH—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN AND JAPANESE OFFICIALS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Has the minister any report to make on his recent visit to British Columbia and especially on his proposal that the Japanese be permitted to harvest dogfish in British Columbia waters to protect our salmon from this predator?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The visitors from Japan are men from the technical level. They were not prepared to discuss policy but we have some hope we can develop a trade with the Japanese in this surplus fish.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In view of the interest taken in this matter by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour, would the minister consider changing the name of this species from the bigmouthed dogfish to the Burnaby cod?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DRUGS—SUPPLY WITHOUT CHARGE TO SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would he consider entering into negotiations with his opposite numbers in the various provinces with a view to making arrangements to provide free drugs to senior citizens who are receiving old age supplements? I ask this question in view of the fact that all provinces are not able to participate in the arrangements under the Canada Assistance Act, which are not working out too well.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I do not believe that information to be correct. To the best of my knowledge all the provinces are participating in the Canada Assistance Plan under which provision is made to meet these payments on the basis of need. This includes medical charges and drugs.

WATER RESOURCES

DIVERSION OF WATER FROM HUDSON AND JAMES BAYS

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): My question is for the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan, Mr. Speaker. Is the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in co-operation with the Ontario department of energy and resources actively involved in the planning of a proposed massive water diversion program to take water from the Hudson and James Bays watershed in northwestern Ontario and divert it into Lake Superior?

An hon. Member: Ten years old.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure to what degree the hon. member's question is urgent. It might very well be discussed at the time of adjournment. If there is urgency, I will be pleased to see that his question is given priority at ten o'clock.

Mr. Penner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With due respect, there is a great deal of urgency attached to this question. I have just returned from this region.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Penner: A great many of the Indian population as well as the tourist camp operators have heard there may be such a plan for massive water diversion. They are fearful and uncertain—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister may wish to reply—at ten o'clock.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REQUEST FOR REASONS PROMPTING BORG REPRIEVE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of public disquiet in connection with the reprieve in the Borg case, I put this question very seriously: Does the right hon. gentleman not think it would help toward a public understanding of the reasoning behind reprieves if some kind of statement could be issued giving the background? For example, could we be told whether there was a recommendation from the jury, or whether psychological or psychiatric considerations were involved?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am prepared to raise the matter with the Solicitor General. I thank the hon. member for his question. I think the reasoning might be more apparent if the house were to remind itself that at the time the present law concerning capital punishment was passed there was a clear statement on behalf of the government by the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General then in office that this in no way interfered with the use of the royal prerogative by the cabinet.

It was pointed out that cases in which it might be used were cases where, for instance, the jury recommended clemency, as they did in the instance to which the hon. member has referred.

ELIGIBILITY OF BORG FOR PAROLE

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Have any instructions been given to the National Parole Board concerning Borg's eligibility for parole in approximately ten years time?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question might be placed on the order paper.

DRUGS

MARIJUANA—TRANSFER IN CONTROL METHOD

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister indicate to the house whether he is giving favourable consideration to the resolution passed yesterday by the Canadian Home and School and Parent-Teacher Federation requesting the federal government to remove regulation of marijuana from the Narcotic Control Act and place it under the Food and Drugs Act?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may be aware that there was recently an amendment to the law which provided that a first offence for possession of marijuana could be dealt with by summary proceeding rather than by indictment. As for extending this principle to deal with any offence of this nature in accordance with the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act, I imagine that this subject will be very pertinent to the study now being undertaken by those conducting the drug inquiry which has been instituted. This inquiry has been asked to let us have a report in approximately six months time.

Mrs. MacInnis: Is it the intention of the minister to introduce legislation this fall with regard to changing—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps that question might be asked when we resume the session.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

REQUEST FOR AGREEMENT TO PROCEED WITH DEBATE ON AMENDING MEASURE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand there have been discussions among those involved in the work of the Transport and Communications Committee with respect to government order 65, the bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act. There is some urgency in this matter. I understand that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is prepared to withdraw the amendment which appears in his name on the notice paper, and that there is general agreement that all stages of this bill would be completed at this sitting without debate or amendment. If my statement of that matter is correct, perhaps an order to that effect can be made, and we could call order No. 65 before returning to the debate on the procedure motion.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): That is correct as far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker. I operate on the premise that half a good loaf is better than no loaf at all.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement to the proposition that has been advanced by the President of the Privy Council?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to agree. I think this is an example of what can be accomplished through agreement and consulation.

[Mrs. MacInnis.]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, in view of the kind of subject matter now before us I see no reason that there should be any agreement on anything.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, would the President of the Privy Council give in some detail the business of the house for the balance of this month?

• (3:10 p.m.)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I hope we may be finished before the end of the month but I will consider making a statement not only in respect of this month but in respect of the following month as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: What about September?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): In view of the fact that the Committee on Procedure and Organization may be sitting again to consider those parts of standing order 43 to which Your Honour has referred, would the leader of the house give every assurance that he will not attempt to interfere with the ability of that committee to report honestly to the house, and not treat the chairman like a puppet?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, July 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, presented to the house on Friday, June 20, 1969, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baldwin (p. 10963).

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, when we interrupted the business of the house last night at ten o'clock, I was saying that we, of the Ralliement créditiste, were not opposed to the adoption of orders

75A and 75B, but that under no consideration could we accept order 75c, which says among other things, and I quote:

A Minister of the Crown ... may propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage;—

Mr. Speaker, when we read that, we can realize that it amounts to closure, and since such a rule already exists, the government should have the courage to apply it when they are not satisfied with the course of events. As for us, we will fight all summer long if necessary this measure which, in our view, would be nothing more than a permanent and automatic rule of closure.

All hon. members know that we have collaborated with the government, as for instance in the case of a motion moved by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), to change the hours of sitting to expedite the business of the house.

Yesterday, I also pointed out that Bill C-202 had been passed quickly, even if it was not perfect.

It seems to me that proves our co-operation, and now the government alone is responsible for the fact that the house sits on and on, because it will insist on having a rule of closure adopted when one already exists.

Besides, we all wonder what the government wants to hide in the next three years of administration. Every time an attempt has been made to muzzle the opposition, it was done to camouflage something fishy.

Let us assume, for one moment, that this parliament is living situations similar to those of 1963 and 1964, namely the furniture deal, that of the hon. Yvon Dupuis, whose friends deserted him, the escape of the prisoner who was to water a skating rink in the middle of May. Suppose, Mr. Speaker, that similar situations should occur. We would then see the majority government apply Standing Order 75c, in order to prevent the Canadian people from finding out the truth.

We are also wondering whether the government intends to do away with the family allowances as it indicated some time ago. Does it intend to restrict credit or to let the interest rates increase? What new tax does it intend to levy? Finally, does the government intend to muzzle the provinces in deciding what it wants? We wonder about all these things and that is why we ask that Standing Order 75c be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker, when I was young, my father who had an orchard, used to forbid us to place a rotten apple in a barrel. The role of the opposition, today, is to prevent the bad apples from spoiling the others. Our role wants that we should adopt the good laws and reject the others, that rot should not invade the whole barrel.

Last night, at the time of adjournment, at ten o'clock, I was quoting a statement by a very well known journalist, Mr. Claude Ryan, who wrote in Le Devoir on October 30 an article on "The true face of the new federalism".

In my opinion, such an attitude must be exposed because the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) is doing the Prime Minister's bidding. In the past, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) fought articles such as this, but today, the President of the Privy Council, because of the orders he gets from the Prime Minister, is compelled to act.

I subscribe to this statement by Mr. Claude Ryan and I quote:

Mr. Pierre Elliott Trudeau had the extraordinary luck to be elected leader of his party, then brought back to power without having to reveal to the Canadian public the real nature of his political ideas.

He was able for months to say the most outrageous things in the euphoria created by the advent of the Messiah.

No criticism could seriously reach public opinion. Even beforehand, confidence was placed in the hands of the wonder child of Canadian politics: every reasonable discussion was, as it were, interrupted during the time of the epiphany of Mr. Trudeau.

Four months after the election of June 25, things began to get back to normal. Fancy must give way to fact. Now, what we have been given to see for some time bodes no good—

When such a statement is made, we come to the conclusion, because of the orders that are given to the President of the Privy Council, in co-operation with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), that the Prime Minister gives orders and that all the government members obey them.

Besides I have in hand another statement published in the June last issue of L'Action nationale, where one can read:

In resolving to oppose constantly that opinion, to deny it the right to be heard at the negotiating table, on the false pretence of having to ignore its existence in favour of a Canadian prejudice, Mr. Trudeau obviously tramples a whole sector of the French Canadian nation perhaps even the whole of it, gives insult to the dignity of those who believe in it and directly and immediately incites the extremes of such an opinion to violence which in any event rumbles in the heart of those who have not been spoiled by partisanship.

Besides it is in that manner that statesmen become oppressors, by justifying themselves of the violence they provoke in order to establish the police state, and crush the opposition instead of allowing it to dialogue.

● (3:20 p.m.)

It is obvious that, by refusing to face facts and to make a real try at consultation, Mr. Trudeau is progressing from the violence of a refusal to co-operate to the violence found in a police state.

We agree with him that we are now under the threat of tyranny. We beg of him to give thought to the responsibilities that will be his if he persists in closing his mind to the real problems through plain arrogance and ideological intransigence.

Everything will come to a standstill in Canada. In the face of such statements, the only possible conclusion, with regard to what we have before us, is that it is precisely because of his arrogance that the Prime Minister wishes through permanent and automatic rule of closure, as I was saying a short while ago, to impose or prevent possible debates that could take place so that the Canadian people could at least be aware of what is going on in the Canadian parliament.

In support of my contention, I have here some quotations and, in particular an article entitled La liberté des débats et de la discussion publique, written by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Members on the government side who have known Sir Wilfrid Laurier are no doubt in a position to state that he wanted liberty to prevail in this parliament. I shall read an article that was published in 1913. It is customary in this parliament to refer to facts already belonging to the past. Therefore, it should be normal that I read in full what Mr. Borden, prime minister at the time, had to say on the matter and what was the reply of the Liberal members sitting in the opposition.

We realize that Tories or Grits always feel the same way. When one party is in office, the other one feels that the government is too arrogant, and if the latter is in power, the other party feels that a dictatorship is being established.

But let us rather read the reported facts and I quote:

On April 9, the right hon. R. L. Borden, M.P., brought before the House of Commons some amendments to the standing orders, the purpose of which was to limit the freedom of the proceedings and of the public discussion through a procedure generally known under the names of "closure" and "guillotine".

If this is not similar to standing order 75c, Mr. Speaker, I wonder what it is.

And Mr. Borden went on:

The excessive strictness of his amendments were already blameworthy, but the methods by which it was attempted to force them on the opposition are far more arbitrary and hypocrit than anything bad that has ever been done in the parliament of Canada. The Prime Minister first protested his good faith and that of the government.

What the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) said yesterday: If the opposition parties are reasonable, we shall never use rule 75c, was stated in 1913.

At that time, a Conservative prime minister told the Liberals: Be quiet, there are only two parties. There is no minority party, as has been said. We shall get along very well and when you leave, you will be appointed to other places, lucrative positions and there will be no problem. That happened in 1913.

Let us examine the statement made by Borden to strengthen his position. He declared, and I quote:

No one is more ready than I to acknowledge that freedom of speech and of debate must be preserved.

It is with those words that the prime minister began his speech on the amendments which he was moving for concurrence.

And to further eliminate any doubts he had raised, he added:

My hon. friends are very suspicious; I think they should be prepared to accept my word in the matter.

And Sir Wilfrid Laurier pointed out, on behalf of the opposition, that as a result of those amendments, a constant threat was hanging over them. Borden protested so candidly and with such frankness that one can hardly recognize the same man in the person who was talking that way and the one who, a few minutes later, was to become guilty of such a shameful treason.

He replied to Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the following words:

Not at all; that is not the way in which I would desire to exercise a power of this kind. I would think that if this rule passes, things might go on in future just as they have in the past.

That is the same statement as the one we heard yesterday. We are assured that everything will go well, that no problem will arise. Yet, as I said a while ago, except for the consideration of the omnibus bill, we have fully co-operated. During the debate on the omnibus bill, it was a matter of principle. We had the duty, as Christians, to oppose it, but except for that bill, many other pieces of legislation have been introduced.

We have agreed to longer working hours, as proposed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), and not satisfied with that, he comes back at us with a closure rule to which we cannot agree and as I said earlier, we are ready to fight all summer if we have to, to prevent its passing.

I continue quoting Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who said:

All through that speech the right hon. gentleman stated—

Speaking of Mr. Borden.

—and reiterated that the object of the Government in proposing this new resolution was not to impede in any way the freedom of debate or to prevent free discussion, but simply to avoid the abuse of it. My right hon. friend was profuse of declarations that the minority, when these rules have been adopted, can always rely upon fair play; but the words were scarcely out of his lips when we were brought to realize how much fair play we may expect at the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite. By the unwritten law of Parliament, not to speak of the courtesy which generally prevails between the two sides of the House, it is expected that when the Prime Minister brings an important measure to the consideration of the House, the Opposition, by its leader shall be allowed to present the views which are entertained on the other side.

These statements were made in 1913 and today a majority government would once again have us accept rules which are unacceptable. And I quote again from the statement made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

The task which he set himself to accomplish, and which the majority will accomplish, I have no doubt, was simply to put a gag upon the rules which we, in this House, have looked upon almost as sacred and which have come to us from the Mother of Parliaments.

These are the same words as those I heard yesterday from the parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Forest). Sir Wilfrid Laurier went on saying:

These rules were not made in a day; they are the embodiment of the wisdom of many generations of statesmen and the result of the experience of men, whose whole life was devoted to the public welfare, and who brought British institutions to the degree of excellency which they had reached at the time Confederation was established.

We have heard it stated that these rules are antiquated. I do not admit that at all. These rules are not antiquated. They were not made for a day or for a period; they were made for the ages. It can be said of them, as has been said of the maxims of civil law which have come to us from the Roman jurists and which are the basis of the civil law of most of the nations of Europe, and they are reason crystallized into writing.

The maxims of the civil law have been applied to the relations of the people in daily life and the maxims of our parliamentary procedure have been accepted as the duties of the transaction of business in all deliberative assemblies.

Statements such as these were made in 1913, and today those who would always remind us with pleasure that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was one of them—he who made statements such as I have just quoted—would be ready to throw all those things overboard by introducing a rule of closure in Standing Order 75c. We certainly cannot accept Standing Order 75c, but we will accept Standing Order 75A and 75B. In fact, immediately after the withdrawal of 75c we would be prepared to extend the sitting hours.

Mr. Speaker, I should like also to quote a few words, of the late Ernest Lapointe, who was also a member of the opposition and who said the following:

The duties of an opposition are to discuss the measures introduced in parliament during the various stages of the bills and certainly not to filibuster.

He said that it would be a crime against the state. I continue the quotation:

But, Mr. Speaker, when a measure is intended to eradicate parliament, to deprive it of all its rights, privileges and powers, it is the duty of the opposition to seek to prevent its adoption, and those who are guilty of a crime against the state are those responsible for the introduction of such legislation—

It is believed, Mr. Speaker, that we should stand at attention and salute when the Prime Minister wishes it. In fact, Parliament should be ready to do the goose-step at the Prime Minister's will.

Czarist methods have given birth to Bolshevism, and that is something we do not want in Canada. It is blameworthy to undermine in this way parliament's authority and to do so, the Prime Minister orders the President of the Privy Council and the Minister of Agriculture to muzzle the opposition.

Have no fear, hon. members of this house. If we must—as I said a while ago—spend the whole summer here, we will, because history is written thanks to defenders of liberty and not by hypocritical dictators, who represent the Liberal party.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Furthermore, here is what Mr. Ernest Lapointe had to say in this regard, and I quote:

I have followed the discussion very closely and listening to the supporters of this legislation, I could not help but think of Disraeli's words: "A Tory government is organized hypocrisy".

If that could be said in 1913, why should we on this side of the house not be able to say it today, since an attempt is being made to impose rules of closure on us, as I said a while ago?

I go one with the quotation:

> The Secretary of State, to whom this undemocratic legislation was attributed, after having been recognized as the author of the rule of closure and other narrow Tory legislations, was more honest when he cynically admitted that he excepted the Conservative party to obtain the votes of those to whom is given the right to vote on this bill and the Liberal party to lose the votes of those to whom that right is denied.
> I hope the Secretary of State was not talking seriously; he did not do himself justice. I have great admiration for his talent, but I do not hesitate to say that a man whose morals and convictions allow him to consider as justifiable the trituration of the elections act just before a general election in order to ensure the return to power of his party, is not morally fit to hold a high administrative position in this country.

Mr. Speaker, this motion constitutes, in my view, an expression of non-confidence on the part of the government, in itself and in the Canadian people. It is an admission that it does not have the support nor the confidence of the country. It is a self-accusation, which proves its weakness as a democratic government.

Parliament is forced by the government to pass a measure which is contrary to the most elementary principles of a democratic government. It breaks the fundamental law without which liberty cannot exist, that is, the equality of all citizens before the law. One of the major clauses of the Magna Charta for which the French people have fought in the past provides that any citizen has an equal right to take part in law-making and in the appointment of his representatives and agents.

A representative parliament must properly and justly reflect the nation, as well as its proportions and characteristics. Any Canadian citizen has a sacred right to have his fair share of the national representation. Those are not German principles, but the tenets of freedom. And it is in order to uphold and preserve such principles throughout the world that Canadian soldiers have fought in Europe.

The rights of the people and the privileges of parliament must be preserved against all comers. But, Mr. Speaker, what can we expect of the present government which sets a bad example and shows absolute contempt for the authority of parliament.

During a trip that I made to Paris last December, I had the opportunity of discussing with French Parliamentarians all the improvements that they wanted to make to the National Assembly. In this connection, I shall mention only one article which stated that members who wished to have the right to speak in the National Assembly were justified.

England and France, cradles of culture, surely deserve our attention.

What was this new amendment seeking? It reads as follows:

> Of course, the representation of the isolated members—that is those not registered with a political group (approximately 3 per cent of the total number) gives rise to a special problem. Special provisions have been approved in June 1967 to allow them to have access to committees; previously, once established the committees could appoint isolated members by means of a vote. The present orders have been worked out so as to allow any isolated member to sit on a committee, although there remains the principle that a member can be appointed to only one standing committee.

While within the Canadian parliament some people try in every way to prevent democracy from making itself heard, in a country as old as France, on the contrary, elected citizens, even though they do not belong to a political party, are allowed to express their views in committees. And it is in the name of that freedom which can express itself in those democratic countries that we ask that democracy be also respected in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, because they were for convenience and efficiency, democratic governments throughout history have collapsed. In the absence of other grounds, hon. members would be well advised to establish the kind of government that now exists in Russia and that existed yesterday in Nazi Germany. Of course, such governments leave nothing to be desired with regard to convenience and efficiency, but they do not put up with certain other things, as hon. members, I am sure, will readily understand.

History offers plenty of pertinent instances. I have some before me. However, I shall not take my time nor that of the other members to quote long excerpts of history books to show how convenience and efficiency have wrecked democratic governments in the past, but I shall merely refer to a few cases.

Let us think, for instance, of Athens, Rome and Venice, which had democratic governments, as well as of England at the time of Oliver Cromwell.

We can make a remarkable comparison between the present situation and the one which cost Athens its democracy. I shall quote a short paragraph of the works of Basil

Hammond regarding the conditions prevailing at the time Athens was threatened. Here it is:

> Alcibiade's contribution to that revolution was only to get it under way by raising the false hope of a Persian alliance. His agents went to Athens, and Pisandre, their leader, said to the citizen's assembly that their only hope of survival was an alliance with the Persians. He declared it possible if Alcibiade were asked to come back, if the democracy which the Persian king did not like were abolished and if in its place an oligarchy on which the king could rely were established. The assembly did not like the idea of losing its democratic constitution but, yielding to the circumstances, it nevertheless approved the suggested change.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, in view of the quick changes the government wants to make on the eve of the adjournment of the 1st Session of the 28th Parliament, we cannot accept the closure rule which it wants to impose upon us and we will fight for the survival of this democracy.

This, Mr. Speaker, was happening in ancient Athens. It was the first step towards the fall of democracy. They received a proposal which it was impossible for them to look into. Its approval had to be hastened so as to conclude the alliance. It was passed in haste without the required consideration and that was the end of the democratic government.

A little later, the same thing happened with the Romans. They were compelled on many occasions to resort to dictatorial powers in order to dispose of certain matters. That was more efficient, as the government seems to tell us in the house. What happened then? The house knows it. The Senate of Rome was so well used to totalitarian methods that it was easy for dictator Julius Caesar to eventually assume full powers.

Well, I can say that today there are Julius Caesars who introduce amendments under another form, such as standing order 75c and who wish to set up in parliament an unacceptable dictatorship. The hon. members might think that could not happen.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Clothes, cars, TV sets, material things can change, but human nature is unalterable from one generation to another. Once the thin edge of the wedge—in the present case it is rather blunt—has penetrated, the destruction of democratic machinery has begun. When opportunism and efficiency are the arguments used to destroy parliamentarian rules, a long step forward has been taken towards the destruction of democracy itself.

We are here, we should not forget it, not for ourselves, but to form a Parliament for the Canadian people. Among our duties, we have to facilitate relations between both sides of the house, in order to enable us to contribute, as is suitable, to the affairs of the state.

Without wishing at all to blame someone or express recriminations, I can say that whoever objectively studies the atmosphere in the House of Commons at the present time will admit that we do not have the kind of institution to which the Canadian people are entitled. I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and the whole government to consider the situation from that angle.

I do not want to quote authorities, citations, or the Standing Orders; in a frank and straightforward manner, I tell the government what I think. It is obvious that the present atmosphere in the House of Commons does not allow us to deal with the affairs of the country, because of Rule 75c which, in my opinion, should be removed without more ado.

At the beginning of the debate on the omnibus bill, we said: Remove from the bill the provisions on abortion and homosexuality, and we shall immediately vote for this legislation which, without being perfect, is nonetheless acceptable.

Today, we say: Remove Rule 75c and we shall agree to expedite the business of the house and get on with our jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I read complete official report of the 1913 debate, when they inserted in the Standing Orders, the provision which was merely a rule of closure of which Rule 75c is a replica. I read the report of debates when the closure was applied in 1913, 1917, 1921, 1926 and 1932.

Mr. Speaker, in that vast documentation on the rule of closure, nowhere can we find a definition which would allow the government to impose a limit of time. Rule 75c is precisely a permanent and automatic rule of closure which is unacceptable to us.

Mr. Speaker, how long will justice prevail in our country under such a system? What will happen to order and honesty? That is precisely what happened in the House of Commons.

Those who lived through the events of the last two or three weeks will no longer have for parliament the feeling and the respect they had for that institution. No unbiased observer, Mr. Speaker, can deny that a climate of tension prevails. There is bitterness and resentment on both sides of the house. Because of what happened, has the house the right morally to carry on its business? There will be doubts in that respect, as long as that rule 75c will keep on being brought before us.

I presume, Mr. Speaker, that we can say that nobody is overly impressed by efficiency as a means to carry out concrete programs in a democratic parliament.

It has been said that democracy would not even exist were it possible to establish other types even less desirable of government. I think that is true. In spite of all its deficiencies, it is the best system we could find. But in order to retain the respect of the people for it—and that is an important factor—it is therefore essential that the house should do nothing that might lead the people to believe that they are not well represented here, no matter whether they support the government or the opposition.

I have only one more word, Mr. Speaker, before I resume my seat. I quote Frank Oliver, another Liberal whom I particularly commend to the house. That man had said that closure is not a blow aimed at the opposition, but at the rights of Canadians. When a provision such as rule 75c is moved, it is a blow aimed straight at the heart of democracy.

The primary duty of a Parliament is to be a sovereign body, not a subordinate institution, of a purely decorative character. Parliament holds an undeniable right, transcending the whims of the Prime Minister, or of the President of the Privy Council, and that is the right to exist. That right, may I suggest, comes before the disappointments of the Prime Minister or of the Minister of Agriculture. Parliament has the obligation to prevent any encroachment on its rights and privileges. It is the will of Parliament and not that of the Prime Minister which represents the will of the country. When the Prime Minister suggests that he speaks for the whole country, he is mistaking the echo of his own words for the voice of the Canadian people.

Parliament is and must remain the approved representative of public opinion and public will. The people's sovereignty is delegated to parliament not to the executive, and when I say parliament, I mean the minority as well as the majority.

This parliament, this institution, should be the temple of freedom, not a place where restraint and a false interpretation of the rules are used as a means to brush aside the rights, in order to gain some precarious advantage.

And before concluding my remarks, I can assure the house that I am wondering, in short, I am much concerned about the survival of democracy in Canada. That concern stems from the fact that the government is resorting a little too much to "Castro-type" methods. That is why those Castro-type methods, a concrete example of which can be found in 75c, will never get our support and the generations to come will commend us for having fought against the passage of this order which imposes dictatorship in this country.

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, before the debate continues may I say that I understand the discussions about government order No. 65 have been progressing favourably, and I believe there might now be agreement in the house to pass the order which I previously suggested. If that be the case I wonder whether we can temporarily interrupt this debate in order to call order No. 65 and put it through all stages?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is this agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS DEFINING "AIR CUSHION VEHICLE" AND CLARIFYING OTHER PROVISIONS—REPORT STAGE—BILL No. S-23

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill S-23, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Before proceeding to the consideration of this bill, I should like to point out to the house that a notice of amendment appears on the order paper, in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) and—

[English]

I believe that the hon. member wishes to drop his notice of motion.

Mr. Barnett: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have agreed not to move that amendment.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill S-23, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Stanfield: By leave.

Mr. Jamieson moved that Bill S-23, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You see what can be done by consultation.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF POWERS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have also been discussions held with regard to a proposal made by the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments for an expansion of its order of reference, and I wonder whether the house might be agreeable to adopting an order in the following form:

That the powers of the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments, appointed by order of the house on September 30, 1968, be extended by adding the following powers:

To consider and, from time to time, to report on the adequacy of existing statutory authority for the making and publication of statutory instruments and on the adequacy of existing procedures for the drafting, scrutiny, and operational review of such instruments, and to make recommendations with respect thereto.

Perhaps there is general agreement that this could be made an order of the house.

Mr. Stanfield: I am not objecting, Mr. Speaker, but I know nothing about it, and I would prefer if there were an opportunity for consultation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I believe the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) was the source of my information. However, if there is not consent I will not put a motion now.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, presented to the house on Friday, June 20, 1969, be concurred in, and on the amendment thereto of Mr. Baldwin (p. 10963).

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the matter which is now before us is one of the most important subjects we will debate in this 28th parliament because it has to do with nothing less than the rights of parliament itself and the rights of members in a free assembly to have an adequate opportunity to express the views of those who sent them here. If this matter were not so serious the government's handling of it could be described as a comedy of errors. It began last December when the government endeavoured to ram through the house the iniquitous and abhorrent rule 16A which would have virtually given the government power to cut off discussion in any debate, and even to limit the time of debate before it began.

The government backed down on that proposition because of the united opposition of all the parties on this side of the house. It is noteworthy that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tried to save face by telling press and television audiences that he had set a trap for the opposition. He implied that he had never really wanted to put 16A into effect but by drawing the opposition's fire to that clause he had succeeded in getting all the other rule changes accepted by the house. If this is true, Mr. Speaker, then I would like to know why the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) has brought in a motion which is almost identical with 16A. By his action the President of the Privy Council has destroyed the Prime Minister's credibility and has exposed his transparent attempt at face-saving.

The second act in this comedy of errors has to do with the work of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, to which the matter of time allocation was referred. The representatives of the opposition parties on that committee not only agreed to but helped to formulate 75A and 75B. I think both those provisions would help bring about a more orderly handling of the business of the house and would provide for an allocation of time on the basis of agreement and consensus. But the President of the Privy Council was not satisfied with that. Noting the approach of the end of the session he rammed 75c through that committee supported only by the government members on the committee. Then he sought to ram it through the house, not in the way it is being done now by discussion of the committee's report, but by introducing a motion.

Yesterday the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) sought to excuse his quiescent inactivity by saying he was waiting until the business of the house had been disposed of before he got up. Well, of course, if it was the intention of the government that the report of this committee would be discussed, why is item 99 on the order paper? Why did the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) find it necessary to file his motion? He did so for the obvious reason that he wanted to make two minor changes in the report of the committee. He knew that if those changes were to be made they could be made only by referring the report back to the committee. Therefore he sought to block the report of the committee and to produce his interpretation and altered version of the committee report.

The government has been caught in its own tangled web of duplicity and subterfuge. Its machinations have backfired and it stands exposed for its blatant attempts to muzzle parliament and denigrate the rights of opposition members.

Mr. Stanfield: An arrogant, miserable bunch.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the government members across the way have now dwindled to three. I see two of them in the rump, which makes five. There are no cabinet members present. They certainly are interested in this subject. I suppose if all the opposition members left we would not have a quorum. I think this is an indication of this government's attitude toward parliament and a—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Crouse: No respect for parliament at all.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —complete contempt for a democratic deliberative assembly. The question which has been asked and which must be answered in this debate is, why has rule 75c been introduced? It was rammed through in committee and now it has been brought in after all the business of the house has been disposed of and normally members would not be here to deal with this rule 75c. The government has given us no valid reason for introducing a streamlined form of the guillotine. The President of the Privy Council, if this rule is passed, will go down in Canadian parliamentary history as "Mac the Gag", because that is the sole purpose of rule 75c. The government cannot claim it is introducing this rule because it has faced obstruction in this session of parliament.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): There has been no obstruction. The opposition have co-operated fully with the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I point out first of all that the opposition voluntarily gave up four allotted days during which it would have been the privilege of members of the opposition to criticize the government and raise matters which they thought were of interest to their constituents and the country.

An hon. Member: So that we could adjourn on June 27.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We gave up those four days in order that government business could be discussed. I wish to point out what may not be generally known. Through the house leaders of the various parties on this side we offered to sit extra hours during the latter part of the month of June so that we could finish up the business of the house by June 27, provided the government would not proceed with rule 75c. The government turned that down. The government's legislative program could have been finished on June 27 as planned. There was no question of obstruction.

When the members of the government complain about the length of debates I should like to say that in no parliament with which I have had any association has there been any government which has had more co-operation than this government has had. When I compare this parliament with the antics of the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse—Pearson, Pickersgill, Martin and Chevrier—from 1957 to 1962 when they kept this house in a constant wrangle for weeks on end on constitutional and procedural matters, I say that this government has been very fortunate in the kind of co-operation it has received from this side of the house.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) in his speech yesterday complained that if the debates during this session had been shorter we would have been able to deal with some additional legislation. Let me ask two questions. First, let me ask which debates he thinks were too long. There were only two lengthy debates. The first was the debate on the omnibus bill amending the Criminal Code. Of course that took time. It was a very large bill. I for one supported all the provisions of that bill except the provision for a national lottery. But I respect the rights of those who were vigorously opposed to the clauses dealing with abortion and homosexuality. They were not arguing a political question. They were arguing a moral question, a matter of conscience, and nobody in this house has a right to curtail the views of any member who is trying to express his moral opposition and the moral opposition of his constituents to a proposed piece of legislation.

The other piece of legislation which took some time was the official languages bill. It also was an important piece of legislation which has far-reaching implications. Does anyone suggest it could have been curtailed? My complaint was that the government had not done a good enough job in explaining it to the public. I think that the fact it was a fairly lengthy debate helped to disabuse the public's mind and remove some of the fears existing in some parts of Canada in respect of the purport of that legislation, and other legislation that has resulted in extended debate.

The second thing I want to ask is, what legislation that the government wanted could not have been dealt with at this time? If the government had additional pieces of legislation it thought was important, the house could have continued on into July or reconvened after Labour Day. There is nothing sacrosanct about adjourning the house until October. There is no legislation the government really wants that could not be dealt with now. The government has had so much co-operation it has really had no problems. As a matter of fact, members on the government side have been making speeches, according to press reports, indicating to their constituents how much fine legislation has been passed this session. The government members cannot have it both ways. They cannot boast about how much legislation has been passed and talk about obstruction by the opposition. The real fact is that the government does not have very much important legislation and is not being prevented from proceeding with anything it deems sufficiently important to place before parliament.

Another reason given for the need for rule 75c was put forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on a television program I watched. He said that the rule change was necessary so that parliament could respond more quickly in order to meet changing social and economic needs in Canada. The truth is that it is the government which is failing to respond to the social and economic needs of Canada, not parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Parliament has been prepared for months to deal with some of the major problems facing this country. It is the government which does not know how to respond. Day after day in the house we have asked the government what it intends to do about rising prices. We asked for months about setting up the commission on incomes and prices. It has taken the government almost a year to get around to naming the personnel. We have talked about high interest rates and the government is still doing nothing. Only after a high degree of prodding was the matter finally sent to a standing committee of the house.

How did the government respond to the problem of housing in Canada? It did absolutely nothing until a minister of the Crown resigned in disgust and disappointment. Only then did it bring in a half-baked commitment that hardly deals with this problem. How has this government responded to the question of pollution?

Mr. Stanfield: It has created a lot.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Volumes of data are available about the terrible ravages of pollution in this country. Member after member on this side of the house has risen day after day to ask the government to take some steps, but there has been no action. It is not parliament that cannot respond quickly, it is the government which is completely ineffective, inefficient and unresponsive.

We have had a report on veterans for which we waited over five years. The government has been sitting on it now for over a year. It was only after a great deal of probing that it was sent to a standing committee, and we are now waiting for a white paper.

We have been waiting for a year for a white paper on the Carter commission report. We have been waiting for some action on old age pensions to compensate the old people for the effect of the rise in the cost of living. It has been increasing at a rate of 4 per cent per year but the old age pensioners cost of living bonus is set at only 2 per cent per year.

Members on this side of the house have been pointing out to the government that the farmers in western Canada are facing bankruptcy. Day after day and month after month we have been pressing the government for some action, for some statement of policy, but nothing has been forthcoming. If anyone thinks this is exaggeration let me refer them to a statement in the Ottawa Citizen on June 25 in an article by Charles King, which he wrote at a place called St. Jean, Manitoba. The article was headed "Peter Trudeau's The Ogre in St. Gene". This is what he said:

> Because the feeling is deep and genuine, Trudeau is broadly considered to be the greatest disaster that has hit the west since the great drought of the thirties, if it doesn't go back to the Riel rebellion.

The article goes on to state:

> It's a bit late now, Peter Trudeau, but you should come out here and check the situation for yourself.

I certainly hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will do that, but if he does not react any more effectively to what he will face in the west than he has in the last eight months I fear the farmers of western Canada will get no relief. To suggest that 75c is needed in order that parliament can respond quickly to an emergency situation is a farce. This government's response to the social and economic needs of the country has been continual reviews, the appointment of task forces and the setting up of commissions. It has done absolutely nothing about the major problems facing the country which are causing such widespread dismay and disaffection.

There is only one reason we have 75c before us. The government is contemptuous of parliament and is going to use its majority to muzzle dissent in the name of efficiency. The Prime Minister's statement last year in the house when he said, "We are the masters of the house", is now taking tangible form in an amendment to the rules. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has never been able to conceal his complete disregard and contempt for parliament. He has never been able to make up his mind whether he wants to be a reincarnation of Joan of Arc or Louis XIV. "L'état, c'est moi" has become the attitude of the Prime Minister in respect of parliament. He has shown contempt for parliament first of all by blocking the report of the committee on transportation, then by attempting to block the discussion of the report now before us through the motion introduced by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). He is now seeking to reduce debate on any measure to a minimum of four days, and where a bill is sent to a standing committee, to only three days in the house.

The President of the Privy Council, in his address to the house, suggested we should remember that this will only be done after consultation. I laughed and he rebuked me for laughing. I apologize for that burst of laughter, but I want to point out that such laughter was almost inevitable. Consultation with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) is not an easy thing in any case because he has the diplomatic finesse of a piledriver. But just imagine negotiating with the President of the Privy Council when he has a meat axe in one hand and rule 75c in the other. It would be like going to a poker game to play against a fellow who had a loaded gun pointed at your head.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Hees: And a loaded deck as well.

An hon. Member: And an olive branch in the other hand.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This contempt for parliament and for parliamentary tradition always seems to assail the Liberal party whenever it gets into office with a large majority. It is true that power sometimes corrupts but absolute power corrupts absolutely. Many of us remember the statement made in 1956 by the Right Hon. C. D. Howe, who was a great Canadian. Few men made a greater contribution to Canada's war effort than Mr. Howe. But long years of power brought him to the point at which in 1956 he said, "Who is going to stop us" and "what is a million bucks?". The pipeline bill was pushed through parliament by closure before members could open their mouths and it was applied on every clause of the bill. But a day of reckoning came. The people of Canada are patient and slow to anger but when they are aroused their wrath is something to behold, and in 1957 and 1958 that wrath was aroused.

I remind the members of the government that the Canadian people cherish the right of dissent and they will not sit idly by if this government tries to ride roughshod over the rights of private members, particularly the members of the opposition. I am not thinking only in terms of those of us who sit in the house. A letter which I thought was very significant came in my mail this morning. It was written by a young man from the province of Ontario whom I have never met. This is what he wrote:

> I am a student in grade 10. At this time I would like to express to you my views on the government's proposed rule change which would limit debating time in the House of Commons.
> I cannot see how such a measure has a place in Mr. Trudeau's "Just Society".
>
> By adopting such a measure legislation could be railroaded through before it could be fully debated. The opinions of many members and those of their numerous constituents would not be heard if debating time was so limited. And this seems out of place in a democratic country such as Canada. With mail service as slow as it is, some members would not receive letters from concerned constituents commenting on legislation before it is given third reading.
> I sincerely hope that such a measure is not adopted and the opposition parties will work against its adoption.
> Sincerely and with all best wishes.

An hon. Member: What is the postmark?

Mr. Morison: Have you a son in grade 10?

An hon. Member: Go back to sleep.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since the hon. member has recovered from his afternoon nap may I tell him that, as I just said, I do not know the young man and have never met him but I would be very proud to have a son like him. I would be surprised if the hon. member had a son as intelligent as that young man. Here is a boy who I think represents thousands of young people across this country who believe that dissent and the right to express one's views and, even more important, to express the views of the people one represents in parliament, is an inalienable part of our democratic system.

I urge the house, before we come to a final vote on this matter, to stop and realize that the measure of our democracy is the extent to which we recognize the rights of minorities. After all, a free parliament is the basis of all our freedoms. Destroy it and our democracy will begin to crumble before our eyes.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) argued in his speech yesterday that the small parties have too much power. I can understand his impatience with the small parties that keep trying to prod the government out of its lethargy. But I want to say that we are not here by virtue of the good graces of the President of the Privy Council or of the government. The New Democratic party is here because nearly 1,400,000 Canadian voters voted for us last June. Our party and the Ralliement Créditiste represent 1,875,000 voters, and much has happened since then. On June 25 a Gallup poll was published which showed the New Democratic party at 22 per cent, the Créditistes and others at 7 per cent, making a total of 29 per cent, and the government at 41 per cent. These small parties at which the President of the Privy Council sneers are not a miniscule body.

Mr. Stanfield: You may have overtaken the government by this time.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): They represent nearly a third of the voters of this country, and if the government keeps on in this way we will soon represent more than the government in the Gallup poll. I want to tell the government that the minor parties will not disappear if the government resorts to measures of repression and curtailment of free speech. I want to tell the gentlemen opposite that the representatives of this party will be here long after some of those who are seeking to destroy them have disappeared from the political scene.

In a free parliament what we have to do is to find the fine balance between the right of dissent and the right of the government to get on with the business of the country. Everyone recognizes that no member or group of members should have the power to prevent important decisions being made by the parliament of Canada. I believe that rules 75A and 75B go a long way toward finding that balance. After all, the government is not dealing in this parliament with obstructionists. They are dealing with reasonable and responsible men who are answerable to their constituents. I want to ask the government members, when they rise to speak, to point out any instances in this parliament during this session when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the Leader of the Ralliement Créditiste (Mr. Caouette) or myself have acted irresponsibly and held up the business of the house or tried to prevent the government from getting measures before the house and reaching decisions with respect to them. They have been dealing with reasonable and responsible people. If they come to the point where they are faced with obstruction and filibuster, then of course it is a different matter. They then have the right, if they want to, to use Standing Order 33, to use the power of closure, and let the public decide whether they are justified in using it.

• (4:20 p.m.)

What the government seems to forget is that we are answerable on both sides of the house to the public. If we on this side obstruct needlessly, if we waste time, if we facetiously prevent decisions from being reached, our constituents will deal with us. The voters will react against any party which conducts itself irresponsibly and the public will support a government bringing in closure if it finds it necessary to do so after a prolonged debate has taken place. But the public will not support the idea of imposing closure virtually in advance; the public will not support any government which makes rules so that a minister can introduce a measure and after speaking we would be allowed two hours of debate, then one day on the bill for the first stage, two hours and another day of debate on the second stage, one day on third reading and one day in committee—three days in all.

The Ottawa Citizen, which has always been very friendly to the Liberal party, carried an editorial on Wednesday, June 25 with the heading: "Hidden Closure. Proposed Rule Violates Rights." I shall not read the whole of the editorial, though it is an excellent one. I shall read the last two paragraphs:

> A minority has more than a right to debate legislation. It has a right to try to rally public opinion to its side. Especially should it be able to exercise this right when examining legislation dealing with matters of conscience. Only when the minority has had a full opportunity to do this should debate be cut off.
> Some form of closure is necessary if parliament is to do business but it should be applied after exhaustive debate, not before.

This is not what the government is proposing to do. We believe that 90 per cent of the business of the house could be allocated on the basis of orders as to time through 75A and that probably the rest could be dealt with through 75B. If there is one per cent which cannot be arranged through either 75A or 75B, the government always has the right after protracted debate to resort to Standing Order 33.

By ramming 75c through the house the government is doing violence to parliament and is weakening the democratic process. I remind hon. members that when we demean parliament we demean ourselves. As Members of Parliament the only power we have is derived from the fact that we are Members of Parliament. We are here by virtue of the fact that the people in our constituencies sent us here. If we belittle this house, if we make it irrelevant, if we make it a mere rubberstamp for a dictatorial government, we make ourselves mere puppets and will be so judged by the people we represent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If we are muzzled, if dissent cannot be expressed in this assembly, I warn the government that dissent will take to the streets. If democracy is to survive it must survive in this place of all places. If dissent cannot express itself in words it will inevitably express itself in violence. I remind supporters of the government, particularly the younger members who sit on the back benches, that rule 75c is a two-edged sword and that it can cut both ways. Governments come and governments go. I have seen five different prime ministers sit in that seat. I have seen scores of cabinet ministers come and go. Political fortune is a fickle goddess.

An hon. Member: Who knows better?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. gentleman will learn it.

An hon. Member: The people will decide.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes. And may I point out to the hon. member that when they decide it is quite possible that many of those who sit opposite today will be sitting on this side of the house. Not all of them, of course. Some of them will not be back at all; they came in for one term on the coat tails of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). But there are some who will sit on this side of the house. I wonder what they will think then about rule 75c. What will they think, for instance, about a bill to rescind the Official Languages Act to be passed in three days of debate—one day on second reading, one on the report stage and one on third reading? What will they think of a bill to discontinue family allowances, to be passed by parliament in a total of four days? Or what about a resolution to amend the British North America Act to take away some of the privileges of French-speaking Canadians?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): This is your program you are setting out?

Mr. Stanfield: A great sense of humour.

An hon. Member: A great sense of stupidity.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) is showing just how much regard he has for parliamentary tradition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Paproski: Shame.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He couldn't care less about parliamentary tradition. He sits where he does because he happened to back the right man at a political convention and because he is an obedient and supine hatchet-man.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): He is being pretty funny so I hope he will continue.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am almost through, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You have been through for some time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Has the hon. member unanimous consent to continue?

An hon. Member: By all means.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I do not intend to waste any more time on the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) because that is not the important question. The important thing is that whoever may sit in the seats of government—it may be the Liberal party today, it may be another party four years from now—ought to remember that the day may come when it will be on the other side of the house and that it has a duty to ensure that members of the house will always have the inalienable right to be heard and to express the views of the people they represent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is what the present debate is all about—the right to be heard. I believe in the democratic process. I have always said throughout my adult life that if ideas can be argued and debated in the marketplace of ideas the truth will ultimately prevail.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have great faith in the common sense of the ordinary man and woman. I believe that if they are given the opportunity to listen to both sides, in most cases they will make the right decision. But they can only make that decision if adequate opportunity is given for discussion, if there is a proper dialogue. I refer not to a dialogue in this chamber alone but to a dialogue that is carried on across the country as a result of the debates in this chamber. That is what makes this chamber important; not the fact that we argue here back and forth but that we express ideas which are reproduced in the press and propagated on radio and television. Out of this comes public discussion in various communities, and there is a feedback to members of parliament. Little by little a consensus is developed. That is what democracy is all about.

• (4:30 p.m.)

If discussion is curtailed and we reach the point where one day is allotted to the report stage, for instance, and the house is facing five or ten amendments, I ask private members who is going to do the talking? The talking will be done by the minister in charge of the bill, the Leader of the Opposition, the leaders of the other parties, and then time will just about be gone. When will the backbenchers be given a chance to say anything? They will have no chance at all. Rule 75c will choke off private members and in most instances will deny them the oppostunity to express the views of their constituents.

I say that this situation will be very dangerous. The very essence of democracy is the right to speak and to be heard, to argue and to debate. Whether we agree among ourselves is not important; what is important is that we all have the right to express our views. Voltaire said this a long time ago but it is still true. Writing to a man with whom he violently disagreed, he said: "I disapprove of what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it". That is what we are fighting for here—the right for people to speak. We may not agree with what they say, but their right to express themselves is an inalienable part of our democracy.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my growing experience in this house continues to be very rewarding, but perhaps the remarks of the last speaker, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), demonstrate best of all the theatrical skill that can be developed after many years' experience in this chamber. One could scarcely detect, in light of the pontifical attitude that he displayed in his remarks about good will and co-operation among the members of the house, that he came fresh from having to rap on the wrist one member of his party, the obstreperous member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), who only a few moments ago on his own initiative and in that "spirit of good will and co-operation" that the last speaker was boasting about, frustrated what had apparently been an agreement reached by all parties in the house.

Mr. Aiken: No, it was not frustrated at all.

Mr. Jerome: I say to the leader of that party—

Mr. Peters: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Timiskaming is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, at no time was I instructed by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) to make any retraction; neither did he suggest in the first place that I should give my agreement. I believe, and I have always believed, that members of parliament should make up their own minds. When certain matters were brought to my attention I withdrew my objection, and if the hon. member had been in this chamber he would have known that this matter was taken care of in another manner.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I cannot imagine what it is that I am supposed to have witnessed since I have been here all afternoon.

Mr. Fairweather: The measure was passed, that is all.

Mr. Jerome: The hon. member who just raised a question of privilege stood in his place and frustrated an agreement that had been reached. He withdrew and entered later, the party having somehow managed to control him. This is why we are discussing this subject at this time.

Other experiences as a member of the standing committee have taught me that when members of the house speak of good will and co-operation among members it is proper to heed the advice of one of the senior members of the committee given to me at the beginning of the deliberations, first, of the special committee on procedure and, latterly, of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. The advice was that good will that is spoken of in that way rapidly vanishes when the prize of political advantage looms on the horizon.

If there is any doubt about that let me quickly move to a discussion of the attitude of all members of that committee to the proposal made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in regard to rule 75B. I was pleased and delighted to hear his answer to a question that was put yesterday by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), who asked whether or not it was the opinion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that it was necessary to include in rule 75B a specific reference to the presence of the government house leader among the majority that the rule anticipates. I submit that his answer, to be found in yesterday's Hansard, gives a clear indication of the thought that was in the mind of every committee member when his proposal was discussed and then passed by the committee.

However, when the members of the opposition parties saw that there was a potential trap, that it looked as though, in the absence of that specific phrase, there might be an opportunity for three opposition members to try to gang up on the government house leader and to use the rule in this way, how quickly did they rise to the occasion! I might even quote the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), who in his remarks welcomed back the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the ground, he said, that the right hon. gentleman was here to bail out the government house leader from the trap he had walked into. "Trap" was the word he used.

Mr. Nesbitt: It was the Prime Minister who used the word first.

Mr. Jerome: I hasten to say that I do not give hon. members opposite credit for setting that trap. I do not think they even saw any difficulty until it was pointed out to them. But as soon as it was pointed out to them they descended upon it and are now cherishing the point to the death. That shows how fast good will and co-operation in this house, at least in the eyes of a fledgling member, can dissolve in the face of political advantage. This is precisely what was taking place—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Jerome: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member say whether he thinks there is any possibility of rule 75B being brought into play, worded as it now is, unless the minister representing the government is part of the majority?

Mr. Jerome: No. I agree with that interpretation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then what is all the talking about?

Mr. Jerome: We are talking about the fact that the house leader for the official opposition took precisely the opposite view from that just stated by the hon. member. I completely agree with the hon. member's view. I think his is a proper and sensible interpretation of the rule.

That was the atmosphere in which the rule was discussed in the committee. The rule was inserted into the committee's report. But the minute the difficulty to which I have referred became apparent, all opposition members who have spoken, as did the hon. member, of good will and co-operation dropped the expression like a hot potato because they thought they had an opportunity to gain political advantage over the government. This is what happens to this kind of good will and co-operation in the face of political advantage.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit one more question? If the hon. member is satisfied that there is no difficulty about the rule, then why all the panic?

Mr. Jerome: The reason I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, is that what we are dealing with here is whether or not it is necessary to leave in the hands of the government an instrument for resolving our difficulties when good will and co-operation break down. If anyone thinks that good will and co-operation do not break down quickly, then I suggest they are being totally unrealistic. That is why we need rule 75c: where good will and co-operation break down, the situation must be resolved.

To highlight this aspect of the discussion and to put the matter in its proper perspective, I draw the attention of the house to the fact that the last speaker said that we are talking here about one per cent of our business. In giving examples of the kind of difficulties that could be encountered, the hon. member listed three or four items that I think are so ridiculous as to be absurd. However, it was the nature of his argument, and when you do not have a strong argument, Mr. Speaker, the best thing to do is to try to reduce it to absurd and ridiculous terms. The same can be said of last Christmas, when instead of facing the real issues we talked about one-man meetings of the house leaders—a reduction to absurdity.

In order to maintain a proper perspective, we are talking about the application of rule 75c to about one per cent of the business of the house. If I have misquoted the hon. member who last spoke, then I stand to be corrected.

An hon. Member: Then why do you need the rule?

Mr. Jerome: May I explain why I believe the government needs precisely this power. One of the difficulties about debate and discussion in this chamber is that all hon. members have a tendency to look inward, and they fail to step back and look at the entire problem before them in perspective. Certainly when we concentrate our attention on one subsection of one rule we tend not to see the ramifications of the entire picture.

• (4:40 p.m.)

One manifestation of our concentration is that we fail to appreciate that we have in this matter a long-standing impasse. We are not talking about the elimination of obstruction by opposition parties and anyone who says we are is simply confusing the issue. We are not talking here about something that is designed to eliminate obstruction. We are not trying to whip members of the opposition into line. We have come to the point of realizing that it is a good idea to have meetings of house leaders and that it is a good idea for them to agree on how debates should be limited. Let us remember, therefore, that substantially we agree that proposed rules 75A and 75B are a good idea. These rules do say that there must be time allocation before the debate has begun. They contain good ideas and there is nothing reprehensible about them. When the hon. member stands up and says with tears in his eyes that the nation will never stand for the allocation of time in advance of a debate he is losing sight of the fact that his party promoted and supported the provisions of proposed rules 75A and 75B.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jerome: The nub of the situation is this. Having started on the road of allocation of time for debate, the opposition feels that the ultimate control of how time shall be allocated ought to rest with it. Our simple position is that we think that control ought to rest with the government. If we have arrived at an impasse because of our positions, by all means let us conclude our discussion, cast our ballots and suffer the political consequences or rewards that may flow from our decisions, as the case may be.

When members of the opposition speak about resolving these matters by consent they surely cannot deny that the withholding of such consent amounts to a veto. If one looks at the proceedings of the United Nations Security Council, one will see that that body proceeds on the basis of consent. Where that consent is withheld, that is tantamount to a veto. We hear little about consent operating in the United Nations and we hear much more about the veto. The nub of this issue, therefore, is not obstruction.

Where is the ultimate control here going to rest, Mr. Speaker? Is it to rest with the opposition, which is what it wants and all it will tolerate, or is it going to rest with the government, which has been given a majority by the people of this nation and which, I submit, should be entitled to submit its program, have it considered and rest on its majority strength, and if that is not the right thing for it to do it can face the voters at the next election. That is the way the country is supposed to be run.

Mr. Barnett: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he not recall that when the hon. member for Nanaïmo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) was discussing the one per cent he was talking about cases with respect to closure? Has the hon. member forgotten the existence of Standing Order 33?

Mr. Jerome: I have not forgotten Standing Order 33, but I say it is time we got into something that is a little more sensible—programming our time for debate in advance. This is something entirely different. I cannot help feeling that the opposition is inclined to accept the idea of having programming in advance but is not inclined to let go of old traditions because it feels that difficulties may arise. I cannot help comparing the position of the opposition—and I cannot claim originality for this thought—with that of the Australian who was very pleased with his new boomerang but who could not bring himself to throw his old boomerang away.

[Mr. Jerome.]

I think the second manifestation of the opposition's inability to see the whole picture here stems from its failure to grasp the fact that this particular rule change is part of a composite series of rule changes which will enable the government, as part of its program, to change its way of doing business in this house. Let us make no mistake about this. There are hon. members opposite who said, when the Ralliement Creditiste day after day kept talking about the question of conscience and how that was related to the proposed changes in the Criminal Code, that in debates of that kind this new concept ought to be invoked. I say that we ought to divide here and now, because the kind of parliament I want to see is the kind of parliament to which Canadians can come and instead of saying, "My God, is this the way you have been doing things for 100 years", say, "I am glad to see how efficiently and diligently parliamentary work is being done." That is the kind of parliament I want and I would not hesitate in going to my constituents and saying that is the kind of parliament I want.

We are promoting these rule changes because, as other rule changes have been salutary, so we think these will be. Opposition members welcomed the changes in the standing committee structure which enabled all members of the house in a very real way to take part in the work of the standing committees. Every single member of the house now enjoys the opportunity of participating in a much more meaningful way in the machinations of government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is a good word.

Mr. Jerome: The individual member can now question the minister when estimates are being discussed or when legislation is before a committee. He now has the opportunity to examine and cross-examine a wide range of witnesses who may deal with any relevant subject matter before the committee. I think every hon. member will agree that those rule changes enable him to participate in a much better way in the affairs of this house.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Another aspect which appears to have been forgotten by hon. members opposite is that the funds which were allocated to opposition members for research assistance have given them a better opportunity to anticipate in a very meaningful way the deliberations of this house and its committees. The manifestation of the use of those funds for research assistance is often different with various members. In one case it may take one house leader back to the days of the Colonial Laws Validity Act and in another case it may give assistance in writing a letter to a constituent. One must at the same time realize that these rules are part of an over-all program to try to modernize the way of doing business in this house.

If those hon. members opposite who have participated in this debate say we do not need modernization and programming, they should fire away and say so to the public of this nation. I say we need programming and modernization very badly and we need it now. If hon. members have a role to play in pursuing a given subject matter, a given department, a phase or activity of the house or government and are required to attend a particular committee, when that debate is called in the House of Commons, on estimates or any other aspect of our work, if the time is programmed in advance so the number of speakers from any party who can rise is limited, for example, to one frontbencher and one backbencher from that committee who has become knowledgeable and specialized in that particular field, I have no hesitation in saying that is a step forward.

The stand taken by the Creditiste party on the abortion amendments to the Criminal Code, which was repeated many times, could have been adequately handled by one or two of their members. I have no hesitation in saying we wasted time that could have been used on very important legislation. It is folly to carry out business in that way.

Mr. Benjamin: What legislation was held up?

Mr. Peters: We are going to be here for two weeks, so let's get on with it.

Mr. Jerome: If the time in this chamber is limited, what will happen is that the length of the debate will diminish but the quality will increase. That is what we should strive to do. We should arrange our affairs so that the paramount feature of the debate is its quality and not its length. I personally do not feel this nation is being served by a debate featuring only its length. That is what took place in that filibuster that has been talked about so much. It was a performance that had as its focus of attention one singular point, its length. I cannot feel that the needs of the nation were in any way served by that particular performance. The sooner we move to eliminate that kind of thing and require a debate to be meaningful and to the point, the better off we will be.

The tragic manifestation of our inability to look at the composite picture of this problem is in respect of the youth of our country who have been referred to so frequently. I said this in December when talking about the rule changes proposed at that time and I say it again. It has been mentioned here this afternoon that if democracy does not rest in this institution and if resentment and opposition cannot be expressed in words, they will be expressed in violence. I think that is a very important point. It is capable of many interpretations.

The youth of our country are a tremendously powerful force in our nation. They are protesting and demonstrating in public. There are riots and insurrection—in our universities. When that kind of performance takes place, we must wake up to the fact that the youth of our country have the power to change our society and way of life. In addition to possessing this power, they also possess the inclination.

I believe we all respect this institution. If we do, we must give the youth of our country the sense that change can take place here and that we can keep pace with the needs of our nation. If we do not do that, their expression will be one of protest against this chamber, as well as disinterest and hostility.

We have a solemn duty to encourage the youth of our country to participate in the parliamentary way of life. Before we can do that we must show them that this is a place where they can make a meaningful contribution. This must be a place that will command their respect and attention. This is not a place which simply has roots in the past that will never die, an institution built solely on tradition, but a place where we are striving to do a good job of administering the affairs of the citizens of our country.

We have the opportunity to demonstrate that this is not a parliament that intends at any cost to preserve and cling to those anachronistic traditions which tie our hands and hold us back from carrying out the business of the nation. We have an opportunity to demonstrate the revolutionary spirit present in the youth of our country today. That has been an essential ingredient of every great nation. It is present in the youth of our nation and we do not have to look very far to see it.

That revolutionary spirit has a place here and we are fooling ourselves if we think the youth will not demonstrate this spirit when they are dissatisfied with the institutions of our country. We must be prepared to say that the business of the country is being carried out in a proper, meaningful and intelligent way and that the parliamentary process can and will exercise good judgment and control without giving the appearance of senility or petrification from age.

We have the opportunity to demonstrate that this house is not just a haven for orators. We should not insist on operating under the terms and conditions popular in the days of the Colonial Laws Validity Act which, I might say, does not mean a colonial damn to anyone who voted me into this House of Commons.

Mr. Aiken: Why don't you dispose of it then and change the constitution?

Mr. Jerome: One might anticipate the difficulty we would have in changing the constitution when we are having this kind of difficulty making a change in the rules. We have an opportunity to demonstrate that this House of Commons is not merely something from the past but is and will continue to be the heartbeat of our nation, worthy of the zeal and talent of the young people of our country.

I plead with members opposite to face the real dangers in this regard of their resistance to intelligent change. I plead with them to embrace these changes and look for more. Instead of staying on this point, we should move on to considering whether proceedings in committees should be such that freedom can be exercised to make changes for or against the government. We should discuss whether the people of this country are better served when governments can be defeated and put out of office in a year or two, or whether the government should be allowed to carry out its program in four or five years. These are changes we should be speaking about. We should embrace these present changes and accept them as being the first step. We should look for many more changes so we will always be able to ensure that parliament will remain a source of pride, not just to retrospective historians but to all Canadians, especially the youth of our country who, thank God, do not have their eyes constantly on the past but on the future.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the speech just made by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) cries out for a reply.

[Mr. Jerome.]

An hon. Member: From you?

Mr. Aiken: From me, and I am going to tell him a few facts of life. The great plea that the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) have made on behalf of proposed rule 75c is that the government wants to program its business. How can it possibly program its legislation when nobody knows what its legislative program is? What kind of programming is it when the government puts an item on the order paper one day and wants it passed the next? What kind of programming is it when bills like the water act are promised for a year and a half but never appear on the order paper? How can parliament support the government in programming its legislation when items are put on the order paper but never proceeded with, when promised bills are never put on the order paper, and when other things which are promised never appear in parliament so that we may consider them?

What kind of programming is it when committees report after due deliberation and their reports lie on the order paper without concurrence being moved in them? What kind of programming is it when government decisions are made and announced in the house even when committees are still in session deliberating the subject matter of those announcements? How on earth can the government say in these circumstances that it wants support for programming its legislation?

There are other circumstances to consider. We have an order paper. What is on it of importance that still remains to be passed? Nothing at all. Everything of importance was duly considered and passed in this parliament. But there were lots of things in the Speech from the Throne that never appeared on the order paper. Is that the kind of programming we want to support? This is nonsense. The whole question of programming is an invalid excuse for putting the opposition out of business.

What the government really wants is programmed disorganization. Members of the government want to be able to do what they want when they want, but they do not want to tell the house anything about it. They do not want us to know what they are planning. They do not want the public to know what they are planning, because they might change their minds before their plan appears in final form.

I cite as an example something I am keenly interested in, the Canada Water Act, which we have been asking about for three years. I cannot blame this government and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for all the delay. He has been in office a little over a year, and that is the amount of delay he has caused. But the previous Liberal government was responsible for the rest.

I am informed that the water act has been revised two or three times in the departments concerned. Cabinet ministers cannot agree among themselves on what should be in it. There is a feud among the various departments as to which will have authority in administering it. Now the attitude of the government is, "After three years when we have our quarrels all settled you fellows must dispose of this thing in 24 hours." That is the kind of programming the government wants, and that is what we are not going to give it.

Much more can be said about programming but now I wish to deal with something else. It is fairly obvious that planning is the purpose of 75c in the mind of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome). But he destroyed his own argument because he said 75c will be used only one per cent of the time. Then he went on to add, "We want to use it so that we can program our whole legislative program for a year." What can one do with an argument like that? It has no validity. Programming is the poorest excuse for the enactment of rule 75c.

The position we are in now is a pretty fair example of the kind of programming the government has in mind. The procedure committee made a report. That report was substantially the same as the motion put on the order paper by the President of the Privy Council, which he subsequently allowed to stand in priority but for some reason or other has not withdrawn. I wonder whether he intends to withdraw it as soon as we have disposed of this item one way or another. Certainly it has no advantage just in lying on the order paper.

What happened was that the actual wording of the committee report was not just what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) liked. I do not know why he did not like it because he was the one who personally pushed it through the committee. I shall not go into the internal proceedings of the committee as the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) did, but it is quite clear that proposed rule 75B, which the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) said was brought on by the government, was actually proposed by someone else. Those of us who were on the committee know who that was. It was not a government proposition at all, but the government eventually bought it, put it in and tacked on 75c to go with it. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) then pushed it all through the committee with a majority vote, all the opposition members voting against it. But as I say the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) did not like the exact wording in it and he did not want the bother of referring it back to the committee for reconsideration. He said, "We have got a majority in the house. Why should we worry about the committee? We will just put an item on the order paper and jam it through."

As I mentioned on a previous occasion, Mr. Speaker, it is easier and faster to blot out the opposition here in this chamber in one nice little motion than to introduce the committee report, send it back to the committee, and later bring it back into the house again. All I am doing is showing what the government is prepared to do if it has the power. This warns us that if the government gets rule 75c it will use it, properly or improperly. I do not restrict my remarks to the present government. We are putting a rule into our Standing Orders for parliament, not for this government and not for this opposition, and we have to be constantly alert that the government, no matter who it is, and the government house leader, no matter who he is, do not have the authority to wipe out the opposition and have legislative items, that they are particularly concerned about, pass without any discussion.

The hon. member for Sudbury said that what the people of this country want is to participate. That is what we want to do, Mr. Speaker; we want to participate in these legislative matters; we want to take part in the discussions and debates. If the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) wants to talk about the young people, and if he feels so darn happy about them I suggest he had better start looking around the country and see what has happened to young people in the past year, because they are not as great supporters of the Liberal party as they were a year ago. Great promises were made to them, but those promises have been ignored to the point where the young people no longer believe that the government wants them to participate. They no longer believe this. They see examples time after time of the government wanting merely to make its own proposals, go its own way and not care who participates.

The very simple fact is that this is the place in which the public should participate. Fortunately we have young people in this parliament. There is no one under 21 years of age because that is where the line is drawn. But we have one who is 22 years of age and we have others who are in their twenties. These young people are here to participate. Will the government give them an opportunity to participate or will they be cut off?

I think the whole program that has been put forward by the government in respect of this rule which we are considering is not one that would permit reasonable parliamentary participation by the people of Canada. Fundamentally that is the reason we intend to stay here to oppose it. This is the only power an opposition has. We always lose. We lose every vote when it comes to a division. We might as well be somewhere else because it does not matter what I say, what the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) or anybody else says.

We are not likely to change the opinion of any members opposite and even if we do we will not change their vote because they will support the government. So we lose every time there is a vote. The only defence the opposition has is to prevent a vote in cases where it is unjust to proceed with the legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Aiken: I hope we can prevent a vote by carrying on an orderly debate. I think we can do this because we have plenty to talk about. We have plenty of speakers and we have plenty of people in the opposition parties who feel there is a principle involved here which is being downgraded. I refer to the principle that parliament is a place where public opinion should be aired, where discussions should be held and where the public is informed through the medium of the press, radio and television so that they will know what is being said and can form their own conclusions.

On this particular point it was most discouraging last night for anyone who watched the C.B.C. news to find that there was no mention whatever of this debate.

An hon. Member: What—

Mr. Aiken: The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) or perhaps some other hon. member said—

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman).

[Mr. Aiken.]

Mr. Aiken: If he said that, I think it is a disgrace—"What difference does it make; there is nothing worth talking about."

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I believe the record will show I did not make any such remark and have not made any remarks since the hon. member began his speech.

Mr. Aiken: As my colleague said, perhaps it was the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman). If it was not he then perhaps he could stand up and say so.

Mr. Deachman: I was not even listening to the hon. member.

Mr. Aiken: He generally talks without thinking anyway. In any case there is something here worth talking about. If the C.B.C. does not know this then they had better make some changes in their news broadcasting system because there is a principle involved here. The feature item last night was the resignation of the publicity director of the National Arts Centre. That was considered to be much more important than the fact that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) backed down in his effort to bulldoze and overrule the Standing Committee on Procedure of this house to the point where parliament was being downgraded. Maybe there are people who do not think this is important. The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) did not seem to think it was. He seemed to think our main business is to get the program through. I do not know whether he said what the program is, but I can assure him that there is more involved than that. If the other news media can carry this particular debate as a matter of importance then the C.B.C. ought to wake up. I am not one of those who stand up daily to criticize the C.B.C. It has a tough job to do. I think, however, when a mistake has been made by the C.B.C. it should be pointed out. I think in this instance it has made a mistake. I am not suggesting they should report this speech, but there have been a few good ones today. I believe the C.B.C. could at least mention the fact that a good principle is being debated.

I should like to get down to the matter of rule 75c. There has been a good deal of discussion about what it really means. How many days of debate will be allowed if 75c becomes effective and how many days of elapsed time will be involved? I think this in a sense is an academic question because it is too short a time under any circumstances for debate to be limited on a particular item. I estimate that it could take 11 days from first reading to third reading. It could take 11 days to put a bill through. But as I read the rule, in those 11 days there would be three days of debate on the subject which would be assured. Those days would be the fourth day on which there would be one day allotted on second reading, one day which would be day 10 allotted on the report stage and one day which would be day 11 on the third reading stage. Those are the three days which would be provided for debate on any of the legislation which is so important and so earthshaking that the government wants to put it through without the public finding out what is going on.

The only reason the government wants this provision is so that it will be able to get legislation through which it feels the public will not like. They do not mind stretching out the time spent on bills which they feel are popular. The back-benchers on the government side can get up and talk about the good legislation. It is the bad legislation which the government wants to ram through. It is our business to stop that and we must. There might be a day at the committee stage. A day is allotted but no one knows what might happen in the committee. So we may have three or four days on which there will be debate on a bill on which closure has been used under rule 75c.

There are some immutable laws in this parliament. They are immutable because no matter how many governments try to override them the attempt is never successful. If they are overriden it is only for a short period of time. One immutable law is that there must be co-operation and negotiation on both sides of the house in order to accomplish anything at all. There must be co-operation. Things cannot be done by closure. There is a second one. Undertakings and understandings cannot be broken without adverse consequences. These are the rules I would commend to members on the government side who may feel that perhaps the opposition is dragging its feet.

• (5:20 p.m.)

It is impossible to put through legislation immediately if the opposition does not want it to go through. Remember this because it is immutable. If you do not find a loophole in one place you can find one in another. This is where the government is making its greatest mistake, in trying to force rule 75c on us. If it does so against the wish of the opposition it may be assured it will not get any co-operation in respect of other legislation. I am not making a threat; I am merely stating the position of the house. This is a very difficult thing to define or envisage. One must be here a while to be able to recognize a mood. If the mood is bad it does not matter what rules the government may have; it will not get its legislation put through. This is why I urge the government to be reasonable.

The opposition has gone along with rule 75A and 75B with some hesitation, but 75c is much too strong for us to accept.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): It is dictatorial.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to point out as an example to hon. members who have come to this house in the last year what can really happen when an opposition sets out to stop a legislative program. There was a legislative program on the order paper between the years 1958 and 1962. I was sitting on the opposite side of the house when the government had a majority of 208 members, yet there were four or five members sitting on this side on the front benches, all now departed from this place, who held up the legislative program and brought the government down at the expense of the country. This indicates how short our term here is, and I have in mind Messrs. Pearson, Pickersgill, Martin and Chevrier. They managed to hold up that legislative program.

I am not citing this as the most terrible example I have ever had the misfortune to sit and watch, but I do know this can happen and has happened in the past. I quote this example to show hon. members on the other side that it would be well to remember that an opposition has a duty to let pass in parliament what it considers valid and oppose legislation that it considers bad. This does not necessarily mean there are more members who agree with the legislation than disagree.

I have had the good fortune to sit on both sides of the house, and know that most of the government's legislation comes from within the depths of the government services. It comes to the ministers, then to cabinet and hon. members on the government side go along with it or complain. Occasionally they are successful in changing the legislation. The legislative program itself is not necessarily supported by a majority merely because it comes from that side of the house. It may be that in many cases the majority of members in the house feel a legislative measure is wrong.

Very often we on this side of the house must defend members on the government side who do not agree with a certain legislative measure because they must sit mute in their places. We have seen a terrible example of this during the past week. An hon. member who was chairman of a committee was being compromised daily but had to sit mute in his seat because he was a member of the government party. It was only because the opposition on a united basis managed to get the government to change its attitude that he was relieved of a duty to resign his seat.

Let me mention some of the things which have happened during this session in proof of what I suggest can happen on a co-operative basis, and in proof of my suggestion that rule 75c will be of no particular benefit in the over-all picture and very damaging in the narrow picture. I have here today's order paper in which is listed the government orders adopted during this session. This is issue No. 185, so presumably we have been sitting for 185 days. Listed on pages 8 to 17 are those government orders adopted at this session of parliament. There are 116, and that does not include various items referred to committees as shown on pages 12 to 15. The opposition permitted, if I may use that word—perhaps allowed is a better word—116 government orders, to go through with debate in some cases and without debate in other cases. What will the government do if it puts through this closure measure in an attempt to jam everything through parliament? Under rule 75c I suggest we will have to multiply the number of days to put through as many legislative measures by four. This would increase our sitting days to approximately 450, or approximately two years of continuous sitting.

I am merely trying to prove that you cannot successfully proceed with a legislative program, even if you know what it is, by pressure. If an opposition takes it upon itself to force the government into using a rule such as 75c on each of its legislative items a government could not get through a quarter of what we have accomplished so far this session. What I am trying to point out is that you do not successfully pass legislative items in parliament by using a heavy hand. This has never been the case and I have seen this on several occasions.

[Mr. Aiken.]

Let me close my remarks by pointing out that the proposed rule 75c is too severe for the opposition to accept. We are prepared to co-operate in respect of any legislative program. We have co-operated to a great extent during this session. Hon. members might ask what we intend to do next session. They will have to wait to find out, and a good deal will depend on what happens with this proposed rule 75c.

We have had a good legislative session and we have done a great deal of work. We in the opposition are prepared to co-operate if we know what the legislative program is, but how can the house leaders sit down and decide what they are going to do at certain times without letting us know about the government's intention? We now have a reasonably programmed timetable. New rules were brought in last December, and other rules have evolved over the last ten years. This has assisted us somewhat in dealing with certain legislative matters including the debate in reply to the throne speech, our consideration of the estimates, legislation and so forth. In this regard the opposition has co-operated. It is up to the government to decide what legislation it intends to bring in, and it is up to the government to persuade the opposition from time to time that this legislation is necessary.

We are prepared to accept a reasonable arrangement for the orderly conduct of business. Rule 75A is reasonable. Rule 75B, if the majority of the parties of this house agree, can be acted upon. But I am going to call on the government now to have its spokesman stand up and advise us whether it is prepared to withdraw the limitation on the committee stage, for example. There was an intimation in what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) said yesterday that perhaps the one day in committee stage was unreasonable, that perhaps the time could be extended. All right, that is a good place to start because the committees need time to consider these matters.

Is the government prepared to increase the minimum number of days spent in debating a bill? If so, I would like to hear them say so. Is the government prepared to set an over-all time during which any piece of legislation may be passed? I think it is reasonable to expect them to say what it is because yesterday the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) said that the way things go in the house, it will take three to four weeks to get through any bill under rule 75c. If that is what he believes, is he prepared to accept an amendment that no bill shall pass in less than four weeks from the time it is first introduced? Many measures go through here in a day and many go through in two days, but if it is a piece of legislation to which we object, surely the government should be prepared to give us a month in which to debate it. These are the sort of things that could perhaps get us out of here some time before we are due to come back.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Before the hon. member takes his seat I should like to ask him to clarify his last point. He said that the opposition would like a month in which to debate a piece of legislation. I take it he means a month of elapsed time, not debating time.

Mr. Aiken: Oh, yes, the proposal which I understood the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) to make yesterday was that it should take at least a month of elapsed time. I do not think we would ever suggest that we want to debate any item for a month.

Mr. Nowlan: Except this rule.

Mr. Aiken: There are always exceptions. But certainly the suggestion I am making is not that we should have a month's debate. I am suggesting that we should have a reasonable number of days on any item and a month of elapsed time.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): How many days would the hon. member consider reasonable, bearing in mind that there must be a general rule relating to the time for debate of bills?

Mr. Aiken: The house leader has three opposite numbers here with whom he can consult and I am sure they are anxious to consult with him. I do not happen to be one of them.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would find it interesting to hear the hon. member's views on this question.

Mr. Aiken: You have heard them.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, debates on matters such as this always bring out interesting aspects of the house during the process of debate. Even if members do take a rather long time in debate sometimes because of a lack of will to co-operate and make arrangements, perhaps it may be a good thing—every cloud has a silver lining—because we at times learn some quite unexpected things from debates.

I noted with some interest as, I have observed, a number of hon. members did this afternoon, the remarks of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome). He is a new member of the house and apparently a very promising one. I take it he is expressing the views of the new bright young men in the Liberal party who are represented in the house. If not, perhaps members on the other side would correct me in that regard. But I was certainly most interested in his theories regarding parliamentary government and how it should be run. For a while I thought I was listening to a speech which I had heard before. I tried to search my memory to discover where I had heard it. It was not a speech of Joseph Goebbels or Benito Mussolini, but after a while I realized where I had heard it and I was quite surprised. It was a speech I heard as quite a young man in the days when I was attending university. The speech was made over the radio—we did not have television at that time—by Ann Morrow Lindbergh in the late 1930's. It was called "The Wave of the Future". She spoke about what the young people must look forward to and what they must expect from the government.

People of my generation listened to that speech with interest because the Lindbergh family was very famous. Charles Lindbergh had achieved many things in the field of aviation, they had an unfortunate family tragedy, and they were also mixed up in political theories regarding the German-American Bund in the 1930's. That speech made by a member of the Lindbergh family was the closest thing I could recall to what I heard from the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome), except that it was more moderate than the views he expressed. Perhaps I misunderstood him. I will have an opportunity to read Hansard tomorrow, but I would be rather upset, as I think other hon. members might be, if he was in fact expressing the views of the bright new members of the Liberal party.

So far as the motion before us now is concerned, may I say that one should never impute motives to others for a very good reason, because no one really knows what goes on in the skulls of hon. members opposite or indeed of anyone else. So one can only draw conclusions from evidence and facts. It seems to be a reasonable conclusion to most people that in view of the timing of this debate there was not much good faith exercised in bringing up this matter at this time.

As has been pointed out by the other hon. members, we ran into the same situation last Christmas. This matter was brought up just when everybody was getting ready to go home for Christmas. I hesitate to use the word "vacation" because all hon. members know very well that when they return home it is not much of a vacation since so many people wait to see one with requests, but at least all members were getting ready to change the locale of their work.

What was brought in was called rule 16A. After a few days' discussion some arrangement was made to refer the matter back for further discussion. I am not a member of the particular committee but I understand that there was discussion off and on during the winter and spring and then, just before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced that parliament would adjourn for the summer months on June 27, the matter was brought up again. Everything else that the government wished to be done was cleared off the order paper and only this was left. It is like putting a carrot in front of a horse and telling it "you eat it and then you will get out to pas ure for the summer". This is the gimmick. They tried it at Christmas but it did not work. Again they are trying it now. Many people are on vacation. The press gallery is empty, and that is important to the government. Nevertheless, they are trying to see if this ruse will work again. This bit of gamesmanship is all right, I suppose.

There is another aspect I should like to bring before Your Honour, and it is one which I believe to be important. Under 75c as now proposed, the length of time during which a bill may be discussed in a standing committee can be laid down by the leader of the house. But suppose a complicated bill dealing with transport, the Criminal Code, finance or taxation is before a committee. Witnesses are, of course, asked to give their views. The other day in the Finance Committee the President of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Rasminsky, gave evidence. He was asked a very simple question, or at least it was a very short question. Being an eminent man in his field, Mr. Rasminsky attempted to give a complete answer, which took him 20 to 25 minutes. How can the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) or anyone else for that matter possibly figure out in advance how long it would take to examine adequately a complicated bill on taxation, justice, or what have you? Witnesses are invited to express their opinions, and to say in advance that they should be limited to an hour or an hour and a half is utter nonsense. I do not know whether the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) has thought of this aspect or not, but if he has not he should have done so.

There is another area which has been well dealt with by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), among other hon. members. What are we here for? One of the purposes of this place is to allow opportunities for elected members to express their views and those of their constituents. It does not matter whether they are from Montreal or Toronto or Prince Edward Island or British Columbia. Every member here has a right to express himself on matters which concern his conscience, his constituents, and so on. This may not be very interesting to members from Montreal or Toronto who dominate the government party, but members from western Canada, a region which is now facing problems in connection with the sale of grain, or members from Cape Breton, which is having trouble with the coal industry, have a right to make those difficulties known. It may not be of much interest to members from Toronto or Montreal, but it is of great interest to people in the parts of Canada which are directly concerned. It should not be necessary to remind people of this, but obviously it is.

Everyone agrees that the government must not be unnecessarily impeded in the discharge of its business. The leader of the N.D.P. put it very well this afternoon, I thought. The whole question here is now to strike a balance between a reasonably expeditious conduct of the government's program on the one hand, and opportunities for members who are really interested in these things to express themselves. As several hon. members have said this afternoon, this is best done by agreement. In parliament as everywhere else, you cannot do business by forcing people or by threatening them at gunpoint or by using rules such as 75c. You can bring in all the rules you like but if there is not agreement to get things done, ways can be found of frustrating them.

I have not seen much evidence of business being held up in the present session. Some have suggested that members of the Creditiste party did so. That is not my opinion. They felt very deeply about some of the matters dealt with in the Criminal Code, perhaps more deeply than did others, but they were matters of conscience and it is understandable they should have taken advantage of the opportunity to express their views.

In any event, why should there be such haste all of a sudden? When parliament is dealing with moral questions such as abortion, homosexuality or gambling, or with income tax matters which will be around in one form or another in years to come, what difference does it make whether a debate takes three days or five days? Really, there is none at all except that some members on the government side are anxious to get things done, or to get measures passed so that they can build up their image. As one old fellow is supposed to have said when he saw people hurrying to get things done in a rush: Why the hurry; it will all be the same in a hundred years? It will not make much difference in the end if a debate takes five days or six days or seven days, especially if it provides an opportunity for someone from some part of the country to express a viewpoint which he believes to be important. I know this is annoying to people from the Montreal and Toronto areas. They do not particularly want to hear from people outside those areas. I know. I see those members laughing and scratching over there. That shows the regard they have for this house.

We might ask ourselves exactly why the government has seen fit to bring in the present motion at this time. The question has been asked by other hon. members and I do not wish to be repetitious. Why was it thought necessary? Under Standing Order 33 they have power to institute closure if there is unnecessary obstruction. In my view there has been pretty good co-operation from this side of the house in getting things arranged with regard to the government's program, whatever that may be. The only reason I can think of is that there must be a genuine desire on the part of the government to emasculate parliament. I do not think the triumvirate which runs this country—I mean the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier)—

Mr. Dinsdale: The troika.

Mr. Nesbitt: —and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), to judge from their writings and speeches, have any great regard for the parliamentary system of government.

They appear to have a much greater regard for the presidential system, either that of France or of the United States, whose system derives from that of France. It is a matter of viewpoint. It might be that the presidential system is the better one. I do not happen to think so, but it is a legitimate point of view. I can understand why those three gentlemen, who are of French cultural background, would prefer it. After all, the parliamentary system of Canada is an Anglo-Saxon institution and it has never worked very well in areas of French culture—in France, for example. Perhaps this is why they would be in favour of changing to a presidential system of the kind established in the United States. But in that case, why not tell us so and let the matter be debated openly?

The Anglo-Saxon parliamentary system operates on a pragmatic, ad hoc basis. Of course it does. It is intended to deal with human beings, not to run in accordance with strict rules or with computerlike precision. I can understand rule 75c being put forward by the leader of the house; it is the kind of rule which would fit into an application of the presidential theory. Everything must fit into its little slot. The government must be able to tell how long everything will take—half an hour for this, an hour for that, and so on. It is just the kind of thing which would fit into a cabinet system of government. I think it should be made clear to us whether this is what is being sought to be done. I think, on the other hand, one can assume that it is not part of an over-all plan that the triumvirate wishes to impose upon Canada. Perhaps one can express the less charitable view that the house leader is plain greedy for power. I would not want to think that for one moment, of course, but that view has been expressed by others.

What makes me curious about this is that the house leader has suggested that rule 75c is necessary, though it may only be brought into use in about one per cent of the cases, in order to arrange the government program. If that is the case, it would not be needed very often. This makes me very suspicious. Perhaps one should not be suspicious, but in view of what has been happening in the house during the first session of this new parliament one cannot help but be suspicious.

The remainder of my remarks will be devoted to some of the reasons why I think members on this side of the house, regardless of to which opposition party they belong, have every reason to be exceedingly suspicious. At this point may I adjourn the debate.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, July 10, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate requesting this house to unite with the Senate in the appointment of a special joint committee to consider the government's proposals for tax reform and also to select members of this house to act on the special joint committee.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—OUTLINE OF STEPS TAKEN BY CANADA TO EFFECT DAYLIGHT RELIEF FLIGHTS—NEUTRAL INSPECTION

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that members of the house would like to know the steps Canada is taking as a result of recent developments in Nigeria.

I have instructed our High Commissioner in Lagos to tell the federal military government that Canada is prepared to supply the neutral inspectors both sides are ready to accept as a precondition for the resumption of relief flights into the secessionist territory. We are prepared to supply these inspectors for service either inside or outside Nigeria. We have urged the Nigerian government to give careful consideration to the acceptance of outside inspection sites.

We are told that if these flights are not resumed there will be countless deaths from starvation. Urgent action is required and Canada is ready to act urgently. Contingency planning is now under way so that we can move immediately if agreement is reached.

All interested parties are now looking to daylight flights as the best way of getting the food to those who need it. Canada has advocated this course for many months. There appears now to be agreement that a way must be found to get these flights going.

Relief flights in this civil war situation should be readily recognizable as relief flights and it should be clear that the aircraft are carrying only relief goods. If these things are done, both sides should be able to agree on the necessary details.

There is no problem identifying relief flights in the daylight hours. Our proposal to the Nigerian government further suggests that this could be reinforced by filing flight plans of agreed daylight flights with the interested authorities before take-off.

We are encouraged by the fact that the principle of inspection by neutral as well as Nigerian inspectors has been accepted by the authorities on both sides. We and others are continuing efforts to see whether agreement can be reached in this matter.

I must point out however that the success of our efforts, and those of others, to get the relief goods moving again regularly and in large quantity into the secessionist area still depends on the parties to the conflict. Unless they co-operate, a great human tragedy may take place. This we will do all we can to avoid.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I think one must resist the temptation to say to the government, "We told you so." This issue has been before parliament since last September and perhaps the words of this folk song are apt. They go something like this:

If I could have the world the way I want it, I would set these children free.

Some think that some of us here are becoming emotional about this issue. I do not apologize one whit for our emotions. Although the countdown tonight begins for what promises to be the most spectacular achievement so far of science and technology, the landing of man on the moon, it seems that man has not yet found a way to feed his brother's children. Actually, through the medium of joint Churchaid, Canairelief and the International Committee of the Red Cross, man has found a way, but his efforts have been frustrated by narrow concepts of national interest and thwarted by policies of non-intervention not now acceptable to civilized men. A deliberate policy of famine stopped those efforts; the world now finds unacceptable such policies. We do not approve any longer of policies of non-intervention.

We can do some things to help and I think we all welcome the positive steps the minister has outlined. Canada could also take other steps, such as providing a ship which could be used as a neutral site for discussions between Nigeria and Biafra. I notice that in his statement the minister referred to Biafra as the secessionist area. Calling it Biafra is better, I think, since we are all used to the name. We could also press more vigorously for the establishment of an agency of the United Nations which could provide formal relief to areas afflicted by civil as well as international strife. We are lucky now to live in a world in which people are increasingly willing to cross boundaries,—boundaries which are artificial, anyway,—and see that aid is given to people on the other sides of those boundaries.

The heading of the most powerful editorial on this subject I have so far read, contained in the London Times of June 28, 1969, is, "A policy of famine". The editorial says in part:

> It is the principle of dissociation of sensibility—out of sight out of mind—which permits the most evil things to be done by quite ordinary men.

I think a good many ordinary men of the world ought to be accused of this "dissociation". Arms supplied so cynically by the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and, to a lesser extent, France, have only served to make a terrible situation worse. I hope that in making this announcement the Canadian government is at last showing evidence of willingness to pursue a policy of supplying food and medicines to a distressed area now cut off by a government that feels starvation is an acceptable part of war.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I warmly welcome the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We understand that delicate negotiations are presently going on in an effort to obtain consent for daylight flights, which are essential if this matter is to be solved. In the face of what is an immense and grim human tragedy it would be wrong for us to speak in any but non-partisan tones.

I too would like to quote from the editorial in the London Times of June 28 to which the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has already referred. This is the tone of the spirit we should all have. These words were directed to the government of the United Kingdom and I direct them to this government. "We should now devote all our diplomatic power, all the influence that remains and all the effort of the government to secure the effective relief in terms of food for Biafra at all costs and at once.

I welcome the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has indicated Canada's willingness to provide neutral inspectors. I think this is an important suggestion. I believe it was made to the minister by Canairelief, which has played such an important part in the relief of starvation in Biafra. I agree with the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) that Canada should offer to take the initiative in providing a neutral locality for the parties to negotiate face to face, which might relieve the atmosphere of suspicion which the long distance negotiations have produced.

The arrangement as to conditions for daylight flights can only be made if the parties are brought face to face in the presence of some party which is neutral and friendly to both sides. There are two other matters which must be considered. I hope in future this government will direct its assistance to aid, not only to the International Red Cross, which has done a terrific job, but also to the joint Churchaid of which Canairelief is a part. This has been the most successful and effective agency. It has been assisted by the United States government and I hope this government will do the same.

I hope too that this government will follow through on the invocation of the jurisdiction of the United Nations to deal collectively in the name of humanity with the humanitarian problems involved. I hope this government will express publicly, repeatedly and clearly its objection to the importation of arms from Europe or anywhere else by either of the warring factions.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to note that the government seems to be doing all it can to relieve this grim and tragic situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, while listening a while ago to the Secretary of State for External Affairs delivering to us a quite important message, it reminded me of another message which we must never forget: Peace on earth to men of good will!

The Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to the facilities which Canada could provide for the transport of food to Nigeria and Biafra and this is to the credit of all Canadians. I welcome the fact that the government is ready to provide the neutral inspectors needed in order to organize those relief flights.

Canada must do its best to help those who are suffering, because not only do we have food in abundance but we have surplusses, so we are told. Therefore, while helping those who are suffering, Canadians will be able, through their work, to make a greater contribution to peace in order to alleviate world suffering.

I really hope we shall find proper ways to organize those relief flights as soon as possible. Some were found during the war, for the transport of all kinds of weapons. So I hope that we, who are enjoying peace, will do all we can to help those unfortunate people who do not want war and who are the victims of war. This way, we shall contribute to the establishment of true peace in the world.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO CONSULT NATIVE PEOPLE IN DEVELOPMENT OF POLICY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the house under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the failure of the government to have consulted the native Indian people in Canada in the development of its policy statement on Indian Affairs presented to this house on June 25, the almost universal rejection of this policy statement by Indian people, the growing discontent among Indian people over the manner in which the government has treated them both with respect to the policy statement and in general terms, the refusal of the government so far to indicate it is prepared to enshrine in the constitution those aboriginal and hereditary rights arising out of the treaties, and the similar rights relating to land, resources and the like in areas where no treaties exist, the general refusal of the government to enter into meaningful discussions with the native peoples of Canada over such rights and inheritances, and the attendant possible turbulence and fury which may follow from the aforementioned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) gave the Chair the necessary notice pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 26 and I have had an opportunity to study his proposal at length and in depth.

There is no doubt but that the question raised by the hon. member's proposed motion is one of importance; indeed it is one which I am sure is of deep and continuing interest to all hon. members of the house. However this is not the only consideration which the Chair has to take into account in making a ruling at this point. The Speaker has to determine whether under the terms of Standing Order 26 the house should be adjourned for the purpose of a debate on the subject matter dealt with in the hon. member's motion.

I have suggested before that Standing Order 26 requires a statement of the problem and that hon. members should not attempt to argue the case for or against the adjournment of the house. It is a bit difficult to determine in the hon. member's motion what is the statement of the matter requiring urgent consideration and what might be considered argument in support of his proposal for the adjournment of the house.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has based his motion on what he terms, and I quote from his statement to the house > —the failure of the government to have consulted the native Indian people of Canada in the development of its policy statement on Indian affairs presented to this house on June 25.

This statement is accompanied by a number of additional statements which might well be interpreted as debate or argument. In any event my understanding or interpretation of the hon. member's motion is that he calls into question the failure or alleged failure of the government to hold consultations with the Indian people of Canada in the development of the policy announced on June 25 last. Essentially the hon. member's complaint deals with matters of record which are already some weeks old. I have serious doubts as to whether the debate today could correct a situation which occurred before June 25.

According to my interpretation of Standing Order 26 and my understanding of the motion proposed by the hon. member, it is not open to the Chair to agree to the adjournment of the house at this time under the provisions of that standing order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I intend to do this, anyway; but I give Your Honour notice of my desire to rewrite the motion in accordance with your prescription and present it again tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Before the next item of business is called I might add that notice of a proposed motion was received over the signature of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle). It is my understanding the proposed motion was not submitted for the consideration of the Chair within the time limit prescribed by the rules. I wonder whether tomorrow or on some other occasion the hon. member might not consider the advisability of giving the necessary notice as required by the rule.

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would it be in order for me to ask the unanimous consent of the house to hear the motion.

Mr. Speaker: It is always in order—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: It is always in order for the hon. member to seek the unanimous consent of the house. However, there is at least one nay coming from the house.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALBERTA—CONSIDERATION OF POLICY PRECEDING FEDERAL ACCESS TO LANDS—GUARANTEE OF HEREDITARY RIGHTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development what action he proposes to take in light of the decision of the Indian Association of Alberta to instruct the Indian people in that province not to talk to federal officials and if necessary forcibly to exclude federal officials from Indian lands until there is time to consider the new policy statement made by the minister and to consider it in depth.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take any particular decision, and in that sense, I have already announced that policy. I also stated that I intended to meet with the provincial premiers and the leaders of the various Indian associations, and if they wish to talk with me, I will be glad to oblige. However, if they are not prepared to do so at this time, and that is their privilege, we intend to enter in the next few months into numerous consultations with the Indians, and we do not intend to change that policy of consultation.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Is the special unit which was created within the department to discuss the minister's statement with the Indian people now in the field and, if so, will the minister recall it or instruct it to take into consideration the view of the Indian people that they need a fair chance to consider the implications of the minister's proposals before an attempt is made to involve them in discussions?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the body concerned is not yet in operation to meet the various Indian bands in Canada. I think it is very wise, on the part of the Indians, to take a few months to consider that policy and I am sure that after it has been studied for a while, they will see that in the best interest of all Canadians, their own interest included, there is no discriminatory legislation in this country.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: I have one supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In view of the attempted motion by the hon. member for Skeena under Standing Order 26, perhaps he might be allowed a supplementary question at this point.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): It is very kind of you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the translation system did not clearly reflect what the minister said, but I understood him to say in response to the first question of the Leader of the Opposition that the government had no intention of changing its policy. Would the minister clarify that first?

Mr. Chrétien: I said the government did not intend to change the policy of consulting the Indians.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question in a supplemental way. Would the right hon. gentleman be prepared to make a statement on behalf of the government indicating that the government is prepared to set out in the constitution those guarantees necessarily related to hereditary and aboriginal rights of the native Indian people, which appear to be a prerequisite to any meaningful consultation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the statement issued by the minister some weeks ago, I seem to recall, had the approval of all parties in the house. If there were comments they were just to the effect that we had not done quickly enough what for many years hon. members had asked us to do. It is also true to say that the minister had the authority of the government, and on the question of aboriginal rights the government stands by the statement.

FUNDS TO PERMIT STUDIES BY NATIVE PEOPLE—MEETING BETWEEN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL OFFICIALS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he has reached any decision in respect of making any grants of funds to the appropriate national committee of the Indian peoples to enable it to conduct the studies they consider necessary to determine their position, and to get the necessary professional advice to put them in a position where they can form appropriate opinions about this proposal or others they may suggest as an alternative?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it was clearly indicated in the Indian policy statement that as soon as the ombudsman is appointed, he will be empowered by the government to provide the committee on Indian rights and treaties with the necessary funds to undertake its own research.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Am I to understand from what the minister has said that he is refusing to make any grants to assist the Indian people in order that they may determine their stance or attitude in respect of their total position vis-à-vis the federal government and the country?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: No, Mr. Speaker. I think that the hon. Leader of the Opposition is confusing the two organizations. I was just speaking about the committee appointed by the Indians themselves in April to study Indian rights and treaties. The funds to be provided to that committee will be granted through the ombudsman who is to be appointed for that purpose.

In regard to the financing of the Indian organizations, provincial as well as national. I hope to be able to announce a decision soon.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

Is the minister in a position to tell us whether official meetings have been held between officials of his department and those of the provincial governments concerned and, if so, will the report of those official meetings be published or made available in some way or other for the guidance of the members of this house?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have undertaken to visit the provinces. During those visits I meet with the premiers and the leaders of Indian associations who wish to see me and I explain to them our policy with regard to Indians. To date, I have visited two provinces, Ontario and Saskatchewan, and tomorrow I will be in Nova Scotia, I hope to be in British Columbia early next week.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a further supplementary question.

If I understand the remarks made by the minister, he is now conferring with provincial governments and Indian associations, and making policy statements. Do those policy statements include negotiations with the provincial governments and Indian associations?

Mr. Chrétien: No, Mr. Speaker. We have not yet reached the stage of negotiations on matters of policy. This trip is merely for educational purposes. In fact, I answer the questions put by the premiers and their ministers as well as by the Indian chiefs whom I meet.

[English]

REQUEST FOR PRIOR SETTLEMENT OF TITLE AND TREATY RIGHTS—FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY PENDING POSSIBLE COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary, a related or a new question, whichever you like, for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that the difficulties which have arisen in respect of the statement of June 25 appear to relate to the fears of the Indians about their lands, and similar rights which will go down the drain once the policy of getting rid of the discriminatory laws is implemented through provincial action, can the minister state to this house and thereby assure the Indians of Canada that the problems in respect of their title to land, as well as related treaty and other rights will be settled before they are handed over to the provinces?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, with regard to Indian lands, we have stated that we intended to submit a legislation in this regard, and, as for the observance of the treaties, the government has repeatedly stated that it would respect them.

In order to clarify the situation and help the government and the Indians to understand the exact nature of the treaties, we intend to appoint a commissioner who, together with the Indians, will study the nature and the scope of the treaties that were signed with the native peoples of our country.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I know perfectly well, as do all other hon. members, about the intended appointment of a commissioner to study the laws, treaties and so on. May I ask the minister that, in order to make sure the consultations with the Indians are on a proper basis and that there is no fear on their behalf in respect of the consultations, he will give the Indians the assurance that nothing will be done to remove federal responsibility until such time as the issue of their rights under treaty is definitely disposed of?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the question is not to take away anything from the Indians. We wish to assure them that they are to become full citizens not only at the national but also at the provincial level, and the idea is not at all to deprive them of any services they may enjoy at the present time.

For instance some provincial governments provide them with various services in the fields of education and welfare and we only wish that the process be speeded up in future.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I have a further short supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the commissioner's investigation is likely to be very lengthy and that it might even result in some approach to the court or courts, is the minister in a position to assure the Indians that until that issue is settled the federal parliament and the federal government will remain the authority responsible for their welfare?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, let me make this quite clear. The Indian Act is a federal law and it will not be amended until the government has passed a new legislation to protect the rights of Indians to their lands.

We told the Indians that we intend to respect their treaties. It is obvious that by giving them such an assurance, we do not intend to hand over their lands to the provincial governments or to disregard the treaties. Furthermore, Indians will be reassured and ready to take the place which belongs to them in Canadian society, as provincial citizens.

CONSIDERATION OF NEW LEGISLATION BY COMMITTEE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, since the legislation respecting Indian lands is a federal statute, could the minister indicate when he thinks his new legislative proposal in that regard will be introduced in the House of Commons?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we announced our intention to submit this policy to the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As soon as the house reconvenes in the fall, I hope to be able to refer it to the committee.

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

VERIGIN, SASK.—ALLEGED UNDUE SURVEILLANCE OF DOUKHOBOR CELEBRATION

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General, but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Justice. In view of the orderly and quiet celebration by the Doukhobor sect in Verigin, Saskatchewan, of the 70th anniversary of the sect's arrival in Canada, will the minister inform the house why there was an excessive number of R.C.M.P. officers present?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe that question should be considered at the time of adjournment.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON STATUS OF PROGRAMMING FUNCTION

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Secretary of State and preface it by saying it has nothing to do with asking for an amendment to the act establishing the Company of Young Canadians. In light of the elections now in progress to establish a permanent council of the Company of Young Canadians, will the minister say whether anything is being done to alter the original intention or structure of the Company of Young Canadians before the permanent council has been elected and has met, and in particular will he report to the house upon the status of the program department of the company?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the statement the hon. member is asking for at this time should normally be made on motions. Perhaps the hon. member might invite the minister to make such a statement on motions.

Mr. Schumacher: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister whether he would be prepared to make a statement at an early opportunity before these elections have been completed. If necessary, I would ask for the unanimous consent of the house for the minister to make a statement at this time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister the unanimous agreement of the house to return to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me there are slight objections to the hon. member's proposition.

Mr. Baldwin: We will remember this: No dialogue.

GRAIN

INFORMATION ON I.G.A. WASHINGTON DISCUSSIONS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received any information concerning the discussions on the international grains arrangement now taking place in Washington?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The two ministers concerned are down there representing the interests of the grain producers. I have no report as yet.

Mr. Skoberg: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister assure the house that there will be a full statement on motions immediately upon the return of the two ministers?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—AMENDMENT TRANSFERRING POWER TO LEGISLATURES

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister advise the house whether it is the policy of the government to arrange with the provinces to amend the British North America Act by deleting therefrom section 91, subsection 24, so that all legislation affecting Indians in Canada will henceforth come within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures rather than of parliament?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that question is no; it is in no way our intention. If the hon. member wants to ask for supplementary explanations, perhaps he could address them to the minister who speaks for the government on Indian affairs.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

KENNEDY ROUND—PASSING ON OF LOWER PRICES TO CONSUMERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Now, shall we start again?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: That's a lot better. Has the minister's department completed setting up the machinery necessary to require importers to pass along to consumers in their entirety the tariff reductions which were introduced in the budget of June 3? If so, how effective has this move proved to be in achieving this desirable end?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I outlined the position of the department in a speech I made in the house some two weeks ago.

Mr. Hees: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I have read the minister's speech word for word and there is not in it one word dealing with the matter about which I have asked. As I have said before, there is not in that speech one word answering my question. The minister has said he is setting up this machinery. I ask him a straightforward question: Has that machinery been set up? Would he honour his obligation as a minister in this house and answer the question yes or no?

Mr. Basford: I said I would consider the matter, Mr. Speaker, and this situation was dealt with carefully in the speech I made.

Mr. Hees: Has the minister's department completed setting up that machinery or is it in the process of setting it up; and if so, when does he expect it will be set up? This matter is not dealt with in the minister's speech.

Mr. Basford: I have completed my consideration of the matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister insists on making statements which have no basis whatsoever in fact, and is deceiving the house.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

FISHERIES

D.D.T. IN GREAT LAKES—CONDITION OF CATCH

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the alarming d.d.t. levels found in fish in Lake Michigan, will the minister state if this condition exists in fish taken from Canadian waters?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I made some inquiries through our departmental officials about d.d.t. levels in fish caught in the Great Lakes. I am told that the samples tested are well below the level of five parts per million, accepted by the United States Food and Drug Directorate. In practically all instances the residue has been less than two parts per million, and on the average less than one part per million.

[Mr. Hees.]

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

RESIGNATION OF MR. DOUGLAS FULLERTON, CHAIRMAN

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I ask whether Mr. Douglas Fullerton indicated to the Prime Minister or the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, either in writing or verbally, the reason for resigning from his position.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, he expressed his reasons in writing. I have had no verbal communication with the gentleman for a long, long while. The reason he gave in the letter tendering his official resignation was that he was resigning for personal reasons.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman would be so kind as to table the letter of resignation.

Mr. Trudeau: I will check whether this is the practice, Mr. Speaker, and if it is usual I will do so. But I remember that the letter stated quite clearly that it was for personal reasons. If the house doubts my word, hon. members can always check with Mr. Fullerton. There was no pressure of any kind by the government on Mr. Fullerton to resign. We received a letter to that effect.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the right hon. gentleman how soon he expects to fill this most important position.

Mr. Trudeau: I would have to defer to the minister responsible for this agency to answer that question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Then may I direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): As soon as we find someone as competent and effective as Mr. Fullerton, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Referring to this question, yesterday I asked the minister responsible to assure us that the discrimination against the Cape Breton miners would cease. I would point to Hansard to verify that the minister accepts the statement that discrimination has been practised. I ask the Prime Minister whether when choosing a replacement for Mr. Fullerton he will assure that whoever takes over as chairman of the Devco board will stop the discrimination carried on against Cape Breton miners, as indicated by the minister yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising from the answer I got from the minister yesterday. I would call the attention of the Prime Minister, and his just society, to answers given to me by the minister. In answering my question about discrimination, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion said:

> Mr. Speaker, there is no discrimination at all in respect of these plans.

A further question brought this answer from the minister:

> These are isolated cases.

This is a definite indication that the minister recognizes there is discrimination against the Cape Breton miners, and I would ask the Prime Minister and his just society to do something about it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a representation, and he has to assume that it will be taken into consideration.

DRUGS

ALLEGED INEFFECTIVENESS OF PRESCRIPTION PRODUCT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Given the similarity of drug production in Canada and the United States, could the minister indicate to the house whether his department is investigating the results of the study released yesterday, prepared for the United States Food and Drug Directorate, which showed that large numbers of prescription drugs were ineffective; and if so, would he make a statement on motions regarding what action his department will be taking?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will agree that his question is acceptable only in the sense that he is asking whether the minister will make a statement on motions. To that extent the question is in order.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I shall be glad to consider making a statement.

LABOUR RELATIONS

B.C. TELEPHONE STRIKE—POSSIBILITY OF MINISTERIAL INTERVENTION

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): My question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Is the Parliamentary Secretary in a position to inform the house whether in view of the increasingly serious nature of the telephone strike in British Columbia any action by the Minister of Labour is anticipated in the next 24 hours to assist both sides to reach an agreement?

Mr. Jim McNulty (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): There has been no official request for federal intervention, but I can assure both parties in this dispute that if such a request is forthcoming we are ready to render assistance at any time. The house may not be surprised to learn that the Minister of Labour, who is in the west on official business at the present time, may be in informal contact with either or both of the parties.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a question to address to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, Mr. Speaker. It arises out of a statement the minister made in this house on March 25 in which he said his department was considering a government program this summer to assist students, not merely to obtain jobs but also to obtain jobs which would have a socially meaningful content. I should like to ask the minister whether such a program has been initiated and, if so, how many students are now involved in it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As I recollect, I was referring to a long term consideration presently under way with respect to a possible program of this nature in a future year. It is not proposed to introduce a program of this kind during the present year, but it is one of the alternatives now under consideration.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lewis: Would the minister undertake to make a statement in this house on the programs which the department does have with respect to student employment this year?

Mr. MacEachen: I will undertake to make a progress report which will be available to the house, either by tabling it or by making it orally.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): When the minister makes that statement will he give this house the best information the department has on the extent of employment among university and high school students?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to outline the situation which is facing the country in respect of this matter.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—ISSUE OF SUBSIDY PAYMENTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, could his parliamentary secretary tell us whether the cheques for the adjustment of subsidies to the producers of manufactured milk for the 1968-69 dairy year have been sent, and if so, when?

If you allow me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a further question. Has the subsidy for April and May been paid and if so, when were the cheques mailed?

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I know that the cheques will be issued from July 15 to the end of July, but since there are over 256,000 milk producers, some delays might occur. Starting July 15, we will start forwarding cheques to farmers.

Mr. Lambert: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The parliamentary secretary answered insofar as the subsidies for April and May are concerned, but in connection with the adjustment for the 1968-69 dairy year, many producers have complained, that is at least what they told me, that they had not received anything as yet.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Côté: Mr. Speaker, I answer again in the same fashion. Some have not received any cheques, because their production was equal to the average production of the year. As to those who are entitled to subsidies, they will begin receiving them as of July 15.

FINANCE

IMPOSITION OF RESTRICTIONS WITHOUT REGARD FOR ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I wish to address my question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance. In the light of the disclosure by the Bank of Canada that the chartered banks are rapidly reducing their lending, and that loans were off by $20 million in one week alone, does the government intend to impose this tight money situation on all the regions of Canada equally, regardless of the economic conditions which face them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I believe the Minister of Finance has commented on this aspect and indicated what he hopes the banks will do. He will be in the house tomorrow if the hon. member wishes to ask him a question.

GRAIN

ADDITION TO FUTURE DELIVERIES OF SHORTFALL IN QUOTAS

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): My question is directed to the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt. Will those grain producers who undoubtedly will not be able to deliver their 5-bushel quotas by July 31 be permitted to add their shortfall to the 1969-70 deliveries?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has been in constant touch with the Wheat Board and with the railways in connection with deliveries of grain in order that quotas may be equalized, and the latest report is that the Wheat Board is still hopeful that the objective of equalizing delivery quotas at five bushels will be attained. The board has indicated that the railways are co-operating—and the minister himself was given their assurance—to do whatever is physically possible.

PEACE RIVER AREA—BOX CAR SHORTAGE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Would the minister make enquiries of the railroad companies and the Wheat Board to see what can be done to improve the position of farmers in the Peace River area who have five or six million bushels of feed grain to sell, for which there is a market in Canada but for which no box cars seem likely to be provided at the present time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): The indication I gave that the Wheat Board is hopeful of equalizing quotas applies to the Peace River district as well as to other parts of the country.

TRADE

WHEAT—EFFECT ON SALES OF STRIKE OF VANCOUVER LONGSHOREMEN

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Is the threat of a longshoremen's strike at Vancouver having a detrimental effect on wheat sales via the west coast?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): I have no report on any such effect as yet. I think it would not have such an effect at the moment, but I will be glad to look into this question further.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I had a question for the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. In his absence perhaps I can direct it to the Minister of Justice. Would the minister consult his colleague the Solicitor General, and perhaps Your Honour, with a view to making arrangements to supply a protective service of the R.C.M.P. to members of the Press Gallery?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ADJUDICATION REPORTS ALLEGEDLY SUPPRESSED

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister, after his Sherlockian search, has obtained a copy of the reports of April 30 and May 15 by Chief Adjudicator Martin, will he take steps to have these documents tabled in this house and will he also give consideration to making a statement on motions concerning the plans he has in mind to improve the department's role in the consultative process?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): The tabling of the documents is not my responsibility, Mr. Speaker, but that of my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services. With respect to the second part of the question, my officials met this morning in a preliminary meeting with officials of the Letter Carriers Union and meetings will continue. One is already scheduled for next week.

Some hon. Members: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again, and this is the point at which I deliver my sermon, I feel very sincerely and deeply for hon. members who from the very start of the question period have been rising in an attempt to ask questions. When there are a number of supplementary questions, it becomes difficult for other hon. members to join the fray. The hon. member for Peace River has a supplementary question and perhaps we will allow him to ask it—

Mr. Baldwin: I will forgo it, Mr. Speaker. When I ask the President of the Privy Council about the business of the house I shall be able to introduce it as a related question.

FISHERIES

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—LICENSING OF FOREIGN VESSELS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Speaker. In view of the adverse reaction on the part of municipal and port authorities of St. John's to the directive prohibiting the licensing of foreign trawlers on weekends and statutory holidays, will the minister pay regard to the importance of this matter and reconsider the order?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): We are reconsidering the order in the sense that we may be granting licences for a longer period of time. I want to assure the hon. member that every consideration is being given to applications made during normal working hours. We are, however, thinking of extending the term of the permit itself.

HALIBUT TREATY—SEIZURE BY U.S. OF CANADIAN VESSEL "SHIRLEY ROSE"

Mr. Tom H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. Has the Canadian halibut vessel Shirley Rose been seized illegally by the United States coast guard off west coast waters, and could the minister advise the house whether this international incident is an indication that the U.S. authorities are no longer honouring the North Pacific Halibut Treaty?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, there is no question of the U.S. authorities seizing Canadian vessels. Indeed the United States fish and wildlife authorities have reaffirmed that Canadians can fish in U.S. waters, just as Americans can fish in Canadian waters. The U.S. coast guard captain in question today reported that he did not order this vessel to leave the United States 12-mile zone, and this conflicts with the story given by the captain of the Shirley Rose that that was indeed the case.

NATIONAL PARKS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—AGREEMENT RESPECTING FIRST PARK ON PACIFIC COAST

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development; he will be relieved to know that it relates to an area of his responsibilities different from that about which he was questioned earlier. I should like to ask whether the department is any closer to establishing the first national park on the Pacific coast of Canada than it was when I asked him about this subject on an earlier occasion.

Mr. Speaker: That question should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FAILURE TO REPORT DEBATE ON PROCEDURE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Would the hon. gentleman inquire of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation whether it is their policy to ignore the current debate in this chamber?

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED REVISION OF DAIRY POLICY

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put my question yesterday to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence, I saw fit to wait until today. However, because of his absence and of the importance of the question, since it follows from the motion I moved yesterday for the adjournment of the house, I shall then put it to the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Goode.]

In view of the fact that the net income of dairy producers was 8.7 per cent lower than that of the least prosperous year since 1961, and in view of the urgency of the situation, is the Prime Minister ready to tell us whether he intends to recommend to the Canadian Dairy Commission, through the Minister of Agriculture, to review that policy for the benefit of Canadian and Quebec dairy producers?

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, since that question should have been put to the Minister of Agriculture, with your leave, I shall take it as notice. Then the hon. member for Lotbinière would know that the Minister of Agriculture has a parliamentary secretary.

Before referring this question to the minister, may I ask the hon. mmeber for Lotbinière where he obtained his statistics pertaining to the percentage he has just quoted?

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, although time is running out I did have a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lotbinière is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would have been happy to direct my question to the parliamentary secretary of the Minister of Agriculture but I did not know there was one, since this is the first time that we hear him speak on behalf of the minister.

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED ADDITIONS TO ONTARIO JUDICIARY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Justice. In view of the urgent and very serious situation that is now existing in the province of Ontario as a result of the backlog of civil and divorce cases, I wonder whether the minister is in a position to advise the house when he expects to appoint additional Supreme Court justices to handle the backlog.

An hon. Member: What about Blair?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I regret to tell the hon. member that there are no vacancies at the moment. Any request for new apointments must come from the Attorney General of Ontario. Then of course in the judges bill that appears on the order paper once a year, parliament provides for the salaries and expenses of these judges. But until I receive a request from the Attorney General of Ontario I cannot satisfy the hon. member.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ANXIETY RESPECTING DELIVERY OF CHRISTMAS MAIL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Communications in his capacity as Postmaster General. In view of the advice that appeared in a Toronto paper a few days ago to the effect that people should mail their Christmas cards now if they want them delivered on time—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): — may I ask the minister whether he will confirm this advice, or is there a danger that by the time Christmas comes we might not have home delivery any more?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SPORTS

TROTTING RACES—REFUSAL TO LICENSE LADY DRIVERS

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. Would he ask the minister to investigate whether or not Rule 17, section 1, of the Canadian Trotting Association rules and regulations, 1969, is contrary to the Bill of Rights, in that it declares the association's refusal to license lady drivers for extended meets who have not previously held such a licence—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

NEWSPRINT—INVESTIGATION INTO PRICING POLICIES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the intended investigation by the United States department of justice into the United States paper industry and the notification that was sent to United States branches of Canadian firms, and also in view of the fact that the investigation may have been set off by a statement by the Canadian companies in connection with an intended newsprint price increase in early 1970, is it the intention of the minister to conduct an investigation into the pricing policies and conduct of these Canadian companies?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it that the hon. member's question refers to the investigation that was launched before the grand jury of New York into the paper industry. We were advised some time ago on a confidential basis, pursuant to the Fulton-Rogers agreement, that this action was being taken. We have been advised that it does not involve any Canadian companies except one, Kamloops Pulp and Paper, which was served with a subpoena in error.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. The Minister may take it as notice and give a full reply at a later date. Can the minister state whether the government is following a policy of increasing immigration, and what means are being employed to encourage people to come here in greater numbers?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will agree that what he is inviting the minister to do is to make a statement on motions. Perhaps the minister might like to make a brief reply.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will consider some method of getting the information to the hon. member.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WASHINGTON DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING QUOTA ON CANADIAN EMIGRATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question has to do, not with immigration but with emigration. In the recent talks in Washington last week with the minister's counterparts, was any formal protest made by the Canadian government to the United States government over the quota system imposed by the United States authorities last July which, in effect, through a quota on immigrants from the western hemisphere, militates also against prospective Canadian emigrés to the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we had a long discussion with the United States authorities and the two governments are establishing a committee to examine the best means of improving the situation.

Mr. Nowlan: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that the question period expired some minutes ago. I did allow the hon. member a supplementary, and I tried previously to allow as many members as possible to participate in the question period. This is why I did not permit supplementaries that might have been allowed in other circumstances. Under the circumstances I would think that supplementaries might be asked again tomorrow. I will again attempt tomorrow to give priority to hon. members who did not have the opportunity of being recognized today.

• (3:10 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I invite the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) to outline in some detail the business of the house for the rest of this month and next month. Could he also give some indication of whether the government is to give some effect to the suggestion of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), which was that the report of the chief adjudicator, Mr. Martin, be referred to the appropriate standing committee of the house.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is the government's intention to proceed with government order No. 99. How long that is to be proceeded with will depend of course on how long the hon. member and his colleagues, to use the words of the Globe and Mail, maintain the filibuster they have begun. As for the suggestion of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), we have concluded that it will not be particularly helpful to make that reference at this time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) has said that the government intends to proceed with item 99 on the order paper, does that mean that it is calling the government motion and that it will not proceed with the motion that is in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair)?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I stand corrected. For once the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is right. Item No. 99 was stood and we shall be proceeding with item No. 100.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, July 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, presented to the house on Friday, June 20, 1969, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baldwin (p. 10963).

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in the early part of my remarks yesterday that many of us feel available evidence points to the fact that the government has deliberately set out on a course of downgrading parliament and wishes to institute in this country what in effect will be a presidential system of government similar to that of France or the United States. I will support my contention by giving examples in a positive and not in the negative way as is the usual course followed in discussions like this.

One indication that the government seeks to downgrade parliament is to be seen in the enormous increase in the number of assistant secretaries in the Privy Council office and on the Prime Minister's staff. Apparently they are usurping to a considerable degree the functions of the ministers who are responsible for the administration of the various government departments. This is one of the positive indications pointing to the truth of my contention. In the next few moments I shall deal with some of the more negative aspects of this trend.

There is ample evidence to show that in the year the government has been in office it has embarked on a policy of replacing the parliament of this country by what in effect is tantamount to a form of presidential government. All these innovations intended to downgrade parliament have been introduced as being beneficial and in the interest of updating parliament. These new ideas have been introduced in almost soporific terms, and it is clear that proposed rule 75c is one more nail in the coffin of parliament. Viewed in relation to all the other actions of the government to which I have alluded, it becomes clear that with respect to proposed rule 75c we cannot accept the assurances of the minister or the government.

As the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) said a few moments ago, the Globe and Mail, one of this country's leading newspapers, has alluded to the fact that a filibuster is going on. That newspaper does not trust the motives of the government or the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). Many of us here do not trust the government or the house leader, especially in view of what has taken place during the last year. Let me give some examples, Mr. Speaker.

First, let us consider the committee system. When the new committee system was set up it was said that it was a great step forward. Members of parliament were going to become specialists in fields they were interested in—agriculture, defence, transport, foreign affairs, health and welfare, and so on. All sorts of latitude was to be given to committees in calling evidence and witnesses. The committees were to be non-partisan and independent; they were to take over certain functions of the house with respect to the study of estimates and consideration of bills. It all sounded very fine and some of us thought the millenium had arrived.

Let us look at what happened, Mr. Speaker. First let us consider what happened with respect to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, it being probably one of the most notorious of our committees at the present time. I need not repeat to hon. members what took place in that committee last fall except to allude to the fact that there are allegations before the house and before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to the effect that the government house leader tampered and meddled with that committee's report by leaving out recommendations made by the majority of that committee. There have been other developments which led to the replacement of the committee chairman by another member of the government party. Only recently it appears that someone on the government side has been playing checkers with the members of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. It seems that some government supporters who apparently did not agree with their colleagues were replaced, apparently without their consent and without being given notice.

Some hon. members may think I am making this up. Only this morning, in a meeting of that committee, one of the government's parliamentary secretaries brought up this matter himself. That is how serious it has become. It will be remembered that at great expense to the public purse that committee, with its staff of translators and others, was sent to the Atlantic provinces for several weeks to study the quite unique transport problems of that part of Canada. I can safely say, Mr. Speaker, that all members of that committee worked hard for long hours. They heard dozens and dozens of long briefs on the subject of transportation difficulties in the Atlantic provinces. The trip had one beneficial effect. It provided a very useful education to those members who went on the trip, albeit a very expensive education from the standpoint of the Canadian taxpayers. That trip certainly accomplished nothing else. Why do I say that, Mr. Speaker? Because, having sent the committee to the maritimes to hear representations on matters like the Prince Edward Island causeway, a subject of considerable discussion over the years, and other matters, the government went merrily ahead before the committee had even returned to Ottawa with a decision in this area. In fact, it did so before the committee members had even time to write their report.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nesbitt: Another example is the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I am not a member of that committee but I have discussed this matter with my colleagues the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) and other members of that committee. Apparently the members of that committee travelled all over Canada, making appearances, asking questions and studying important agricultural matters. Again, the members of the committee derived great educational benefits from their travels at the expense of the taxpayers. Apparently the chairman of the committee, a government supporter of course, presented a report which had little relation to anything the members of the committee had been doing.

Then there is the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs which is studying the question of tobacco and the alleged evil effects of smoking, as well as other interesting matters. Now that the minister has made known his determination to dispense with the tobacco industry, perhaps he might apply his attention to other industries whose activites may have an effect on health. Although committee members were studying the subject of tobacco and smoking, the Minister of National Health and Welfare disregarded the opinions of members of that committee and announced what the government intended to do.

The Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence is a thoroughly good example. The government said it wanted to review foreign policy, what Canada's role should be with regard to the United Nations, peace-keeping, and other fields. The 30 members of that committee, with a staff of translators and others, were sent to Cyprus, Germany, Sweden—to find out what the neutrals are doing—Switzerland, Britain and France. You name it—we went there. The committee spent long hours on the road. It spent a long time in drawing up a report and—you have guessed it, Mr. Speaker—the government did not pay the slightest attention to that report. Of course, just because a lot of hard work has gone into the preparation of a report does not mean that the government is obliged to pay attention to it. Nevertheless, after all the talk about participatory democracy and how individual members were going to work and contribute so much toward participatory democracy, this apparently is the result at the end of the first year of the government's term of office. I do not think these actions show that the government is particularly good or particularly convincing, but they certainly show that we cannot put great weight on what government supporters say.

The committees were to be non-partisan. They were to study matters carefully and make independent recommendations. Some of us who have been here a while and know how government parties operate had some misgivings whether that would be done. Despite the fact there was a new leader and many new members, some of us felt that the old tendencies would linger on, and they did.

All committee chairmen except one are government appointees and the government has control of all the committees so far as membership is concerned. That certainly has always been the custom. Under the old parliamentary scheme that was quite proper, but we were going to have a new sort of committee system, openly copied from the United States, with committees having some independence. It has not worked out this way at all. While chairmen of committees are supposed to be analogous to Your Honour, I do not think all the chairmen have the experience and other attributes found in Your Honour.

Sometimes we have had difficulties in getting the work done in committees. On some occasions government members have shown some independence, to their eternal credit. One instance was in the defence committee. There was a lot of arm-twisting in that committee but despite that a great number of government members maintained their independence, with the result that the committee report was ignored. When government members of the transport committee did not agree with their colleagues—I would hesitate to allude to this except that a senior member of the government raised the matter this morning—one would have thought a game of checkers was being played. They were removed from the committee and other members were substituted. One can hardly expect the committee system to operate satisfactorily in this way.

The government made pious pronouncements at the start of the year that the committees were going to be independent and about all they were going to do. Then they treat them in this way. It is no wonder the people have very grave doubts about equally pious statements by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) as to the purpose of rule 75c.

I could spend the balance of my time giving other examples. I cannot help but lack confidence in the promises of the government. Take the roster system, for example. This is one more way to downgrade parliament. Without consulting anyone, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said it would make parliament more efficient. Certain ministers were to appear only on certain days as they had work to do in their offices and questions were to be asked on the days they were present in the house. This had some logic to it. But what are the parliamentary secretaries for? They should be in the house when the ministers are not. On one occasion when someone wanted to ask a question of a parliamentary secretary, he was told that the parliamentary secretary was to be seen and not heard, just like a bad child. The whole purpose despite the reason given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), was to down-grade parliament and prevent questions being asked.

There are many other matters, one or two of which I have already alluded to. I try not to be repetitious. Having been a member of the house for quite some time, I have noticed various things over the years. In the last few years some ill feeling has been engendered in parliament as a whole. I think hon. members will agree this has certainly prevented the satisfactory working of parliament. You can have all the rules you want, but if people are not disposed to co-operate there are always means of evading the rules. No one knows of these attempts better than Your Honour.

There has to be a feeling of good will and mutual co-operation. Without that parliament simply cannot work. This parliament started off on the right foot. There were a number of new personalities in high places and 100-odd new members untainted by some of the activities and prejudices of the past. The picture looked pretty good. In some of the committees there were many new members from both sides of the house. Unquestionably they tried to get along and to be non-partisan. Their attempts have been frustrated by some of the leaders on the government side.

It is a great pity that the government house leader (Mr. Macdonald), no doubt at the behest of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), is insisting on this rule being passed. Although the minister protests it is not very important, it is important enough to hold up the house for weeks in order to push it through. It is bad enough to attempt to cut off debate. I will not go into that because other members have discussed it on other occasions. But what is almost as bad is the fact that the atmosphere in the house is being soured by the activities of the government house leader (Mr. Macdonald). Once that is done, it cannot be undone. Once the atmosphere has been soured, members constantly eye each other with suspicion and no longer speak to each other in the corridors.

We have had a good many difficulties in making the committee system work, but generally speaking there has been considerable co-operation in the house during the present session, perhaps better than in any other parliament since I have been here. Despite some difficulties in the committees, members try to work on a friendly basis. If the present atmosphere in the house is soured much more, I think it will be a very safe prediction that it will not be easy to conduct the business of the house in the future, and certainly it will be more difficult in committees.

I feel the whole plan of the government is to downgrade this institution and to replace it de facto with some form of presidential government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his two cohorts have indicated this is so. All the activities of the government in the present session of parliament have corroborated this evidence. I hope parliament will see fit to reject the attempt of the government house leader (Mr. Macdonald) to insist on forcing through rule 75c. As I have already said, such a rule would only be one more nail in the coffin of parliament, perhaps the last nail.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are here today to discuss an amendment to the recommendation contained in the report of the committee and, more specifically, to fight proposed rule 75c. We are ready to stay for the days and weeks that may be necessary to win this fight. Quite frankly, it is a matter of some regret to me that hon. members are compelled to stay here during a time when they could be doing something else. It is not quite as inconvenient for me and most of the ministers as it is for other members of the house. I have a home here, as have most of the ministers, but most of the other members do not. This situation is causing them not only a good deal of personal inconvenience but is preventing them from doing other things that urgently require their attention. I regret this, but we are dealing with a matter of the greatest importance and we must be prepared to fight just as long as is necessary.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Spokesmen for the government say that they need 75c in order to get through their legislative program. I say quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that 75c, even if adopted, would not enable or assist the government in getting through its legislative program. The government can get through a substantial legislative program only with the co-operation of the house based on an allocation of time in turn based on agreement among the parties in the house. If the opposition does not co-operate, then whether 75c is in effect or not the government cannot hope to get through as much legislation in the next session as it did in this session.

It is a very simple thing for the opposition parties to use far more time than was taken this session on many measures that were before the house. I do not need to remind the house of how many opposition days, in the form of budget and other debates, the opposition parties gave up on the assumption that the government house leader (Mr. Macdonald) was acting in good faith and really intended to adjourn on June 26 or 27. We thought we were entitled to rely on his good faith, but I do not think any member of the house will ever do so again, at least on this side of the house.

I emphasize that it is only through co-operation of the parties in the house and allocation of time on that basis that the government can hope to get through a large legislative program. Proposed rule 75c would not enable the government to get through a large legislative program. It is nonsense for the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) or the chairman of the appropriate committee to suggest that it would. I would even go so far as to say it is almost dishonest for any experienced parliamentarian to suggest that 75c would help the government to get through a heavier legislative program than is the case under the existing rules.

It is true that 75c would enable the government to bull through a particular measure, a particular project or a particular bill, but it would not enable the government to get through a substantial program. It would enable it to bull through a particular measure despite the need there might be for debate, despite the need there might be for the country to have adequate time to familiarize itself with the contents of a bill.

Some suggestion has been made, though outside the house, that with modern means of communication there does not need to be as much time as previously for the country to become familiar with the contents of a bill before the house and to consider the measure. Sir, through you may I remind the house that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) introduced his taxation measure relating to estates, despite the fact that a number of us immediately directed attention on two occasions in the house to the significance of that measure it was really a matter of months, certainly of weeks, before the country at large became aware of its significance, before the backbenchers on the government side became aware of its significance. It was only then that the country, the opposition and backbenchers on the government side persuaded the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to modify very substantially the proposal he was making to the house and therefore to the country. I mention this as an indication of the danger involved in 75c.

Proposed rule 75c will not do what the government suggests it would, even if this were desirable. It will not enable the government to bull through a large legislative program. It will simply enable the government to cut off debate on a particular measure when cutting off that debate would perhaps be the last thing that should happen.

The government now has the means for proposing closure to stop a protracted debate which it considers to have gone on for too long on a particular stage of a measure. It already has the ability and the right to impose closure. What the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) is seeking is not power for the government to enact a bigger program but power to restrict the right of the opposition to examine particular projects. Rule 75c will do nothing to make the government more efficient. It will do a great deal to limit criticism when the government wishes to limit criticism and therefore limit freedom.

Rule 75c would not make parliament more efficient in handling the legislative program, but there is no doubt it would make closure more efficient with regard to particular measures. Closure as it now exists is noisy and messy. It is not the sort of thing that is done in Mount Royal today, at least not out in the open. Closure exists to choke off the right of the representatives of the people to express their opinions, and it has been accepted because it is recognized that on certain rare occasions there ought to be this control of parliament. But it has been accepted with a caveat, with the knowledge that a government which adopts such a procedure must be prepared to pay the price for using it. It has always been the case so far that if a government wants to choke off parliament it runs the risk of getting some blood on its hands.

This is what the government wants to change. It wants to make its control of parliament less messy and more automatic. It wants to throttle parliament in a more genteel way. Sir, if members of this government were directors of Murder Incorporated they would insist on a silencer, just as today they are insisting on a quiet kind of closure, but we will not let them get away with it.

From personal discussions I know that a good many backbenchers on the government side, particularly newer members, are impatient with debate in this chamber. I would like to make three comments about that. Some members on the other side take the attitude that the government was elected in a general election, that it was given power for four years, given the authority of the people of Canada to settle everything and to govern for a period of four years. In their view, therefore, the government goes ahead and governs, and debate in the House of Commons is irrelevant. In effect the members opposite who hold this view—it is not held by all of them but by some—wish to scrap the parliamentary system of responsible government. It is just as simple as that. They may mean well but they are a menace to a free society.

Second, Mr. Speaker, some hon. members opposite are bored with the debates that take place in the house, partly because they cannot take part in them and partly because they feel they have not been involved by the government in any meaningful role in parliament. Therefore they are bored; therefore they are impatient with the time debate takes in the House of Commons. Through you, sir, I want to tell them that parliament was not designed for their convenience, was not really designed to provide entertainment or interest for them. The purpose of parliament, of this house, is to expose the proposals of the government to examination and debate and, where necessary, to criticism, to provide time for the public to become informed and to react to proposals the government is putting forward to be enacted into law.

To hon. members opposite who are impatient with debate in the house I say that proposed rule 75c will not accomplish what they want to be accomplished. Rule 75c will not in fact reduce the average length of debates in the house. It will enable the government to chop off some debates which it may be very important to have continued, but 75c will not enable the government to reduce the average length of debate. Indeed, if the government passes 75c and resorts to it the chances are this will provoke debate in the house on many occasions which would not otherwise be used for such debate. The only way the aim of increasing further the standard of debate in the house can be achieved, and the only way in which the effectiveness of the house can be further increased, is through co-operation and through the adoption of rules which carry the support of the house generally. Such rules were adopted last December.

I say with all sincerity that 75c will not accomplish the purposes of members opposite who are impatient with debate in the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I am afraid some hon. gentlemen opposite have been misled. Rule 75c should not be adopted, first, because it will not achieve the purposes some of the backbenchers have in mind. It will not achieve the purpose the President of the Privy Council says he has in mind of enabling the government to get through a bigger program. I do not think any experienced parliamentarian could really stand up in the house and say that the passage of 75c will in fact effectively enable the government to get through a bigger legislative program. All it will do will be to put the house on a collision course.

Hon. members opposite may have noticed an event which took place in the British House of Commons yesterday as a result of the application of the guillotine. I do not expect to be throwing things at the President of the Privy Council. I have too few things I would want to waste in that way. But this is the sort of thing which is provoked even in one of the most civilized parliaments in the world. Rule 75c will not do what the government is suggesting. It will simply cause a deterioration in the effectiveness of parliament.

Second, in any event the government has not shown the need really for getting more done. It has not shown the need for a drastic reform in this house of parliament in order to get any important program through the house. I would ask any hon. gentleman opposite what important program parliament has held up. One of the great problems in this country today is that of constitutional reform. Has parliament held up the progress of constitutional reform? We all know that parliament has been kept out of the discussions on constitutional reform because of the narrowly partisan attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) toward the question. Discussion has been going on for over a year and a half. What is there to show for it? Now that it appears that the Prime Minister and the government are to be involved in an imminent failure with regard to their consultations in the constitutional area, there is some indication that parliament might be involved in a parliamentary committee on this subject. But what indication is there that parliament held up constitutional reform in this country? None, sir.

Another great problem is inflation. In what sense has parliament held up the fight, if you can call it a fight, of the government against inflation? I ask again, in what sense, Mr. Speaker? The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) took six months to set up a commission which was the only proposal the government had to fight inflation. In what sense has this parliament impeded in any way any measure the government had to attack inflation? None at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: We might take another problem, that of the economic disparity which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and others talk so much about. Has parliament held up the government's attack on economic disparity? It took the government a year to bring in its bill. How long did it take parliament to pass the bill when it was brought forward despite the vast powers the bill gave the minister? Parliament has not held up the government, sir.

Is parliament holding up the development of a sensible oil policy or a sensible agricultural policy? What about the attitude of the government toward Indian affairs? Has parliament held up the government? We were not even able to get a statement from the minister until two weeks ago and now we have no opportunity to debate it.

What about tax reform? I had not been long in the house in the fall of 1967 when the then Minister of Finance, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), solemnly assured the parliament of the day there would be a white paper on tax reform as near as possible to the beginning of 1968—January, 1968. Here we are in 1969. We were promised the white paper before parliament recessed. Now we are promised one some time during the summer. Has parliament held up tax reform?

What about the war against poverty? Well, I do not need to ask any more questions. There is only one answer. Parliament has not held up these things. The truth is that the government has not known what to do in order to adopt valid and effective programs. The government has had no idea how to proceed. It obviously has been abysmally slow in making decisions.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Let us take the prices and incomes commission. I ask whether there is anything in the history of parliament to equal it. Imagine taking six months to appoint a commission like that. Imagine taking a year and a half to produce a white paper on tax reform. They talk about parliament being slow. The evidence is that the government is hopelessly inadequate in making decisions and placing them before the house.

Then we might consider the Woods report on veterans affairs. Where is the white paper in respect of that? Is parliament holding up veterans affairs? Not at all. These fellows opposite are just trying to blame parliament for their own inadequacies. They will not get away with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I say that this government ought not to be given further authority. It is abusing the rule changes already made to expedite the business of parliament. Formerly the government or a minister would have had to come clean. A minister would have had to give an explanation to the house because if he did not his estimates would never pass. I do not suggest that we go back to those days but at least we did carry out the process of enabling the representatives of the people to get straightforward answers from the minister. We cannot do that any more. These gentlemen are hiding behind the new rules day after day and week after week.

When we try to find out from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), for example, the present status of discussions between the federal government and the provinces with regard to the entrenchment of his bill of rights, a matter which he insisted all along was of the greatest importance to the country, he refuses to make a statement to the house. When that poor devil, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux), comes back from a meeting of the NATO ministers and makes a statement in the house, it is clearly a non-statement. He does not say a word. A year ago he would never have had his estimates passed by the house on the basis of that kind of statement. It is very clear that the ministers have taken advantage of the changes which have been made. Just to get his attention and so he will not feel I am overlooking him, I am sure there has never been a more bullheaded government leader in the house than the present one. This is not just a matter of my opinion.

There are many independent observers in Canada who believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the coterie around him are deliberately trying to downgrade parliament. Here we have the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) going out west and making a public statement about a legislative program relating to minimum wages; yet he had refused to give this information in the house. My colleague the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) asked time after time whether the government proposed to do anything about minimum wages. All we received were evasive answers or no answers at all. The Minister of Labour has shown his contempt for parliament by going out west and making an announcement on what the government proposes to do.

Rule 75c is the crowning glory of the first year of the just society. We must ask ourselves, is it not appropriate that this should be the year, and does it not really sum up brilliantly the style, the content and the record of this government in the first year of the just society? What could be more fitting than that this year should come to an end with those hon. gentlemen in the cabinet who have such a thirst for justice trying to get a firm grip on the throat of a minority parliamentary opposition? What could be more appropriate?

Behold the modern men who were going to make parliament and democracy mean something again, especially to the poor and the disadvantaged—literally millions of people in our Canadian society. Behold the politics of participation. Behold the government that excited the youth of Canada a year ago and has so disillusioned them since. Behold the just society—secretive, intolerant, vengeful, petulant, autocratic and childish.

The government probably feels it has to bring in 75c in the hope that it can blame parliament for its miserable record of accomplishment in its first year, so conspicuous for its under-achievement. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has blamed everybody else for the government's lack of action. He has blamed the provinces, he has hidden behind the constitution and he has whined about his treatment by the newspapers and the press. Indeed, Sir, the first session of Parliament with him as Prime Minister might well be described as being for him "the days of 'whine' and roses"—w-h-i-n-e.

What a dismal end to the first year of the just society—rule 75c! A year ago there were high hopes and expectations throughout this country. Now for a whole year, on some of the most pressing economic, social, political and international issues in face of truly gripping human problems at home and throughout the world, the Prime Minister of Canada has played intellectual games. In answer to questions on urgent human problems, whether posed in this house or elsewhere, he likes to argue about how many angels can stand on the head of a constitutional pin. And the most depressing spectacle of all is that of ministers of the Crown trying to emulate him and in the process performing acrobatics with their intellects and contortions with their principles.

These are grown men, some of whom once had a little fire in their souls and some convictions in their heads and in their voices. Now they are all kept on an intellectual leash by their leader, led into the house three times a week and led out again three days a week.

I am sorry the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) is not here because he comes to mind as a once formidable debater and an experienced parliamentarian. He was one of the most important members of the Pearson government from 1963 to 1968. He has not made a speech in the house on a government measure since last Christmas. Even then he was put up to erect a verbal smokescreen behind which the government quickly withdrew rule 16A. There is a rumour in Nova Scotia that the minister fell down a mineshaft seven months ago and has not been heard from since.

What comes from all this submissiveness and where does it lead to? I commend for the study of all members opposite, in fact all members of the house but especially the backbenchers on the government side, the case of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). I do not think it is putting it too strongly to say that up until Tuesday the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) was willing to use the hon. member and to see him destroyed as chairman of a committee and as a member of the house in order that the minister and the cabinet could get their own way. That is a fact. The minister cared nothing for the integrity, the reputation or even the pride of the chairman of the Committee on Procedure and Organization. Indeed, the handful of members opposite, some of whom waited on the President of the Privy Council, (Mr. Macdonald) perhaps in his office, on Tuesday morning should not think it was their entreaties that changed his mind. What changed his mind was that there was a motion coming from this side of the house concerning the failure of the committee chairman to move concurrence in his report as he had been instructed to do. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) I am sure knew, or certainly should have anticipated, that such a motion was coming and that we would be prepared to discuss it for some time.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) withdrew the government order. Yes, he withdrew the government order standing in his name only because he wanted to keep 75c before the house, not because he cares one iota for the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) personally or as chairman of a committee, or for the committee system, for that matter. I ask any fair minded member opposite, especially those who saw the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) in his office on Tuesday morning, if the government is so casually willing to see one of its prominent backbenchers destroyed and to contribute positively to his destruction. Can anyone blame the members of the opposition for trying to hold on to the few prerogatives we have left in this house? Indeed, can anyone blame the opposition for being very wary of this government when hon. members on the backbenches opposite a few weeks ago had to send in their dear wives to plead with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for fairness and justice?

Rule 75c—what a grim and pathetic thing it is that this should be the triumphant climax to the first year of the just society. I do not for a moment believe that there are any new members, not one of them, who ever thought that the just society would come to this.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Look who is coming out of the mineshaft.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not for a moment believe that hon. members who are fair and objective do not know perfectly well in their own hearts that the government has—

An hon. Member: I think he is going to make another speech.

Mr. Stanfield: I hope so. That will be the first indication that the government is caving in. He will make a strong plea in favour of the government's position and then the government will yield.

Mr. MacEachen: Tell your friends in the New Democratic party.

Mr. Stanfield: Hon. members who are fair and objective know perfectly well in their hearts that the government has not been prevented by the opposition from bringing in the kind of creative and useful legislation that had been hoped for, and if any such legislation is ready we should be discussing it now.

Hon. members, especially the new members on the other side, know in their own hearts that it is not parliament that is destroying the reputation of the government and the governing party. Hon. members know from talking to their own constituents and their own friends who are not in politics how it happened that the just society, so-called, is becoming a term of derision, indeed a term of contempt.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Hees: All they have to do is read the Gallup polls. That tells them.

Mr. Stanfield: It is our duty to fight. I point out to hon. members that the fight has already had considerable success because the retreat of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald)—I hope he will bring himself to listen to this because he may learn something—

Mr. Harkness: That is not likely.

Mr. Stanfield: —was not just a procedural retreat. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) was forced to withdraw his motion; he was forced to change his method of proceeding. There was a procedural change in that sense. But the change that took place when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) yielded was not just a procedural change, because what we are now being asked to accept in the form of the adoption of the committee's report is substantially different from the proposal the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) put before the house.

Hon. members will remember that the committee's report contains three separate recommendations, 75A, 75B and 75C. Proposed Standing Order 75A provides for the allocation of time under a house order when there is unanimous consent among the representatives of all parties in the house. Proposed Standing Order 75B provides, in the motion we are now considering, for cases when there is agreement among the majority of the representatives of the parties. The chairman of the committee argued that this did not mean that the opposition parties, by agreeing, could compel an allocation of time. He argued, and probably properly, that there is no way of compelling a minister to come into the house and act on the agreement reached by the representatives of the opposition parties. That is probably a sound position.

However, it is necessary to consider 75B in relation to 75C. What is the effect? When can 75C be invoked by a minister of the crown? Proposed Standing Order 75C provides:

A minister of the Crown who from his place in the house at a previous sitting has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B in respect of proceedings—

And so on. The minister can then move a motion. He has to state in the house that agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B. Let us suppose there is a meeting and the representatives of the opposition parties all agree as to the time to be allocated to a certain proceeding and the President of the Privy Council does not agree; he does not accept it. He does not have to act on that agreement; he can come into the house and invoke 75C. Can he then come into the house and say there has been no agreement under the provisions of 75A or 75B? What is the opinion of the chairman of the committee on that one? Clearly he could do that under the motion presented by the President of the Privy Council, because that motion changed 75B and provided that there could be no agreement under 75B unless the representative of the government party was a party to the agreement. There is no doubt that had the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) been allowed to go ahead with his motion, he or a representative of the government could have invoked 75C, if adopted, every time the government did not agree with the opposition parties.

But can he do so under the report we are now being asked to adopt? It seems to me pretty clear that a representative of the government could not invoke 75C unless he is able to stand in his place and say there has been no agreement under 75A or 75B. In other words, he cannot invoke 75C with regard to the allocation of time on a particular measure if the representatives of the opposition parties are in agreement upon some other time allocation. I suggest that this is so. If my interpretation is right, the President of the Privy Council or anybody else speaking for the government in the house can make no use of 75C as long as the representatives of the opposition parties are in agreement among themselves as to how much time is to be allocated for a certain proposal before the house. If my interpretation is correct, the representatives of the opposition parties will control the allocation of time in the house as long as they are in agreement.

I would suppose that as far as the rest of the life of this parliament is concerned, in view of the lessons the opposition parties have learned in dealing with the government the representatives of the opposition parties will have very little difficult reaching agreement among themselves in order to protect themselves against the government. It may very well be argued that 75C can be used. A minister could say that no agreement had been reached under 75A. I do not believe this is so, but the President of the Privy Council, the chairman of the committee or somebody else may argue it. If the argument is put forward, it will depend upon the ruling of the Speaker at the time. The Speaker will have to decide what 75C means as it is drafted. Does the government intend to push this rule through the house if, in fact, 75C can be invoked only when the opposition parties disagree within the meaning of 75B? Do backbenchers on the other side of the house understand that all the fighting now going on is to get a 75C that the government could use only in those cases when the representatives of the opposition parties could not agree among themselves? Whose tail is in the trap?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hello.

Some hon. Members: Hurrah!

Mr. MacEachen: If that is the interpretation the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is making and he is taking that view, what is the purpose of the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman's house leader?

Mr. Stanfield: I am coming to that, Mr. Speaker, if my friend would be patient.

Mr. MacEachen: There is more than one tail in the trap.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister just came into the house and he can be patient for a few minutes. I shall not keep him too long.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): The P.M. is allowing you to say something again, Allan, is he?

Mr. Stanfield: I assume from what has been said by hon. members opposite, and emphasized from time to time, that the government will not allow itself to be controlled by the opposition parties in regard to the allocation of time. Therefore, I assume the government says that my interpretation is wrong. The most they can argue is that I am wrong and they are right. The most they can argue is that the Speaker would at some time in the future have to determine this question. We do not even know who the Speaker would be. I am not casting reflections on anybody, but we do not know who would be in the chair at the time the government put this up for decision. It is very clear, however, that the house should not be asked to consider ambiguous rules.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member acknowledges that there is ambiguity, then?

Mr. Stanfield: I will argue that when the time comes. But I assume the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) will argue the other way. I assume he will argue that he can bypass 75B. I do not think members of this house should be asked to consider seriously a rule about which there will be serious argument as to what it means. I think it is an absurdity for the government to insist that we consider 75C in relation to 75B.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? If he feels it is absurd to consider it in its ambiguous state, would he be agreeable to considering the motion in my name, in which the ambiguity is not present?

Mr. Stanfield: No, Mr. Speaker, because the minister's motion was altogether improper. It involved trampling on the committee system, and he has withdrawn it in any event.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Stanfield: I am glad to see the government is listening to me now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a point of order, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) should not mislead the house by saying that my motion was withdrawn. If he looks at page six of the order paper he will see that it still stands.

Mr. Stanfield: We should not be asked to consider adopting a rule which is ambiguous. I do not think anyone on the other side will argue that it is clearly what they say it means. It is clearly ambiguous. Clearly, it ought not to be proceeded with. Clearly, it is an affront to the house, and clearly it should be withdrawn. I emphasize that I do not accept 75C even on my interpretation, even putting aside those who say they agree with what the house leader said about its meaning. It would not be satisfactory on that basis. It would not be satisfactory on the basis that it would only be used when the representatives of the opposition parties could not agree among themselves as to allocation of time.

I cannot accept 75C because in the first place the government has not shown that anything of this kind is necessary. The failure has been in its own policy and in the development of its own policy. It has not been a failure of parliament. Second, the adoption of 75C would not help the government to get through a larger legislative program; it would simply enable the government to cut off debate from time to time. So I cannot accept it on either of those two counts. Furthermore, I repeat that the government is not to be trusted with any more authority, as has been very clearly demonstrated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: In addition, I do not think this house should consider 75C or anything like it in any form without a more adequate provision relating to the time during which bills are before the house for consideration. It is absurd, in its present form, that any bill could be passed in ten days, for example. There will be many occasions on which the public would not have any idea of the implications of a bill in this context.

Second, I do not think it would be proper to consider anything like 75C even if someone could satisfy me—it has not been done so far and I do not think it can be done—that it would enable the government to get through more business, and that it is parliament which is holding up legislation rather than the government. There would have to be, for example some structural safeguards with regard to 75B concerning the kind of meetings which would take place, the kind of effort to reach agreement among representatives of the opposition with regard to the allocation of time, and so on. There would have to be minutes kept. The group would have to be presided over by someone a good deal more conciliatory than the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), who is probably the last man in Canada likely to achieve agreement.

Rule 75B should be strengthened at this stage. This is what we should be doing now. We should be strengthening 75B so that it relates to a more formalized structure, so that the meeting is presided over by somebody with a more independent and conciliatory point of view. And we should be sure that a real effort is made to achieve agreement. We do not want to take any chances on the President of the Privy Council calling some kind of meeting, saying that the leaders of the opposition parties cannot agree, and coming to the house immediately to announce that he cannot get agreement under 75B. What we should do is strengthen 75B and make it a useful instrument for the allocation of time in the house. Until we provide some safeguards there, we are not prepared to consider anything like 75C.

In other words, the house should send this report back. The house should accept the amendment of my hon. friend the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). The leader of the house has not only made a fool of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) but of all the backbenchers on the other side, according to my interpretation of what is being done. In any event, placing 75C before the house with all its ambiguity, while there is a lack of proper safeguards in 75B, amounts to wasting everybody's time, including the house leader's. He had better agree now to send the report back to the committee. Let him accept the amendment and let us get on with the business of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the concluding remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), particularly those in connection with the motion standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). I think the hon. gentleman unconsciously stumbled on the reason for the presentation of that motion. It was presented, of course, in order to clear up the ambiguity in 75B. If anybody wishes to compare the report presented by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) with the motion appearing in today's order paper, he will find there are two significant differences. The first is in rule 75B. I will read it as amended:

> When a Minister of the Crown, from his place in the house, states that a majority of the representatives of the several parties, including that of the government, have come to an agreement in respect of a proposed allotment of days or hours for the proceedings at any stage of the passing of a private bill, he may propose a motion, without notice—

• (4:20 p.m.)

The significant change is "including that of the government". That would eliminate the ambiguity to which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) properly drew attention. The reason for it is that there is a difference of opinion between the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the members of the New Democratic party. For proof of that one need only go to Hansard for July 8, page 10965, and a question asked by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The question is:

> Through you, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member in respect of 75B whether he agrees with the submission of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that the representatives of the opposition parties could constitute a majority, not including the representative of the government party?
> Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think that is a nice little point on which one could spend time and not have time to deal with other matters.

Then after one or two interruptions the hon. member went on:

> If I could have the time to deal with it I would be quite happy to do so. I do not think the amendment the President of the Privy Council wanted to put into 75B was necessary at all. I think that the wording in 75B which says that the government house leader "may move a motion under 75B" does not require him to move it and therefore 75B does not operate unless one of the majority is the government representative. Concerning what would happen to 75C if it was argued that 75B had not been fully brought into play, that is one of the fine procedural arguments we could have if 75C comes into play. I suggest this is highly hypothetical because surely debate in this parliament is still effective, surely we are still concerned about the procedural rules of parliament, and before this is all over we will not have a 75C.

That was the hon. member's reply, and it is the reason the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) moved government order No. 99.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Reid: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): When he is discussing the wording of 75B, will he distinguish between the question whether 75B requires clarification for its own sake and what would happen when 75C is called? I quite agree with the view taken on the other side of the house that 75B does not need clarification for its own sake but, as I said the other day, the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) with regard to 75C is another matter.

Mr. Reid: My response to the hon. member is that I tend to the view that 75B for its own sake does not require further clarification. I also accept that if that is accepted in the first case it also applies equally well to the second case, which is the application to 75c.

My feeling is that there does have to be some clarification of the two rules taken together. I fully appreciate and support the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition in that, before the order is adopted, there must be some clarification in respect of 75B, as well as 75c, to which an amendment has been moved. The problem would be to work out some appropriate method of dealing with the question.

Mr. Crouse: Then let us send the report back to the committee.

Mr. Reid: I think we will have to have some form of motion moved during this debate to send the matter back to committee, with specific instructions to clear up this ambiguity.

Mr. McGrath: Then do it now.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the hon. member permit a question? If I am prepared to alter my amendment to so provide, would the hon. member be prepared to second it?

Mr. Reid: I do not think I could accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) because of its effect to 75c. But if the hon. member moved a motion to send 75B back to the committee for amendment, I would certainly support it. I would go even further and say that I would be prepared to support an amendment to 75B that would recognize the position of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), as an officer of this house, so that in implementing 75B any majority would have to have the support not only of the government party but also that of the official opposition. I think that is a perfectly reasonable position to take.

I should like to deal with one argument that has been raised in respect of the proposed rules 75A, 75B and 75c with regard to elapsed time. How much time would it to take to impose 75c during the course of the passage of a bill? We have had a number of estimates and I have made one of my own which is made up of a day to day schedule.

On day one you would have first reading of the bill. On day two you begin debate on second reading, with notice being given of 75c. On day three you would have the two-hour debate and the order approved. On day four you would have a one-day debate on second reading with referral to committee. On day five you would have the commencement of the committee proceedings, plus the motion giving notice of 75c in the house. On day six you would have the two-hour debate under 75c; the committee could sit while this was going on. On day seven you would have a full day's sitting in committee, as provided for under Standing Order 75c. On day eight you would have the report of the committee to the House of Commons. On day nine you would have the delay in proceeding imposed by standing order 75, which is the provision of 48 hours' notice. On day ten you would have commencement of the report stage and the moving of Standing Order 75c. On day 11 you would have the two-hour debate under 75c. On day 12 you would have one full sitting day on the report stage. On day 13 you would have a full sitting day for third reading of the bill. That amounts to 13 days of sittings, which is two and a half weeks of sitting time.

In addition, when dealing with the question of elapsed time we have also to consider that no matter how you slice it you still have two weekends intervening. This means the amount of elapsed time is increased from 13 days to a total of 17 days. I need hardly remind hon. gentlemen that it is on weekends that some of us make our political impact, particularly on the available electronic media such as television—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't be so modest.

Mr. Reid: —which greatly assist the dissemination of news and events for the edification of the voters. The major television public affairs programs are aired over the weekend.

I do not feel that the proposed 75c is the threat to democracy that it is made out to be. May I indicate what the mother of parliaments has done in regard to implementing closure. I should like to read into the record their Standing Order 31 which deals with closure of debate, and also the business committee formed under standing order 43. Standing order 31 reads:

> After a question has been proposed a member rising in his place may claim to move, "That the question be now put," and unless it shall appear to the Chair that such motion is an abuse of the rules of the House, or an infringement of the rights of the minority, the question, "That the question be now put," shall be put forthwith, and decided without amendment or debate.
> 2. When a question "That the question be now put" has been decided in the affirmative, and the question consequent thereon has been decided, a member may claim that any further question be put which may be requisite to bring to a decision any question already proposed from the Chair, and if the assent of the Chair, as aforesaid, be not withheld, any question so claimed shall be put forthwith and decided without amendment or debate.

3. When a clause or schedule is under consideration, a motion may be made that the question, that certain words of the clause or schedule defined in the motion stand part of the clause or schedule or "That the clause (or the clause as amended) stand part of the bill", or "That this schedule (or, this schedule as amended) be the schedule to the bill", or "That the clause or schedule be added to the bill", be now put and if the assent of the Chair, as aforesaid, be not withheld, the question on that motion shall be put forthwith and decided without amendment or debate.

4. This order shall be put in force only when Mr. Speaker or, in committee, the Chairman of Ways and Means or Deputy Chairman is in the chair; except that,

(a) during any proceedings on or in relation to the business of supply, and

(b) during proceedings upon consideration of the report of a bill, the order may be put in force when Mr. Deputy Speaker is in the chair.

Standing order 32 reads:

If a division be held upon a question for the closure of debate under Standing Order 31 (closure of debate) that question shall not be decided in the affirmative unless it appears by the numbers declared from the Chair, that not less than one hundred members voted in the majority in support of the motion.

• (4:30 p.m.)

That is the effective rule under which the British parliament operates as a matter of course.

Mr. Crouse: Will the hon. member permit a question? Is he aware that these rules precipitated a major row in the British House of Commons in which nearly 500 members mounted a clamour of insults over a decision by government leader, Fred Peart, to impose a guillotine on a controversial bill, and that in this row members hurled books and paper missiles at each other? The row was unlike anything the United Kingdom house has seen for a very long time. Is he aware of this?

Mr. Reid: If the hon. member wishes to refer to the overseas edition of the Times he will find in there a full report of the debate. He will be interested to learn that the row broke out over the provisions of the United Kingdom redistribution of boundaries act. It seems that the Socialists were trying to gerrymander electoral boundaries and so prevent the Tories from winning the next election.

Mr. McGrath: But that is not a federal parliament.

Mr. Reid: I should like to continue by reading British standing order No. 43, some aspects of which, incidentally, have not been effective because they have not been generally accepted by the people directed to perform certain duties, namely the chairman's panel. I quote rule 43:

There shall be a committee, to be designated the Business Committee, consisting of the members of the Chairmen's Panel together with not more than five other members to be nominated by Mr. Speaker in respect of each bill to which subparagraph (b) of this order applies. The quorum of the committee shall be seven. The committee—

(a) shall, in the case of any bill in respect of which an order has been made by the House, allotting a specified number of days or portions of days to the consideration of the bill in committee of the whole House or on report, divide the bill into such parts as they may see fit and allot to each part so many days or portions of a day so allotted as they may consider appropriate;

(b) may, if they think fit, do the like in respect of any bill to the consideration of which in committee of the whole House or on report a specified number of days or portions of days has been allotted by general agreement notified orally to the House by a Minister of the Crown; and

(c) shall report their resolution (or resolutions) to the House, and on a motion being made for the consideration of such report, the question thereon shall be put forthwith and on consideration of the said report the question "That this House both agree with the committee in the said resolution (or resolutions)" shall be put forthwith and, if agreed to, shall have effect as if it were an order of the House.

Proceedings in pursuance of this subparagraph, though opposed, may be decided after the expiration of the time for opposed business.

I have quoted some of the rules under which the British parliament operates and I find it difficult to believe that these rules, much more onerous than proposed rule 75c, could be regarded by opposition members as being destructive of democracy. In any event, it appears that the opposition in the United Kingdom has performed under those closure rules to such good effect that it seems very likely the Tories will win the next election. And those rules are far more Draconian than proposed Standing Order 75c. The opposition's argument that democracy is going to collapse because of these new rules just does not make sense.

We must ask ourselves, who really is to run parliament?

An hon. Member: Who is to be master?

Mr. Reid: Precisely. Someone must be master. We can go a long way if there is co-operation and good feeling, and I expect that this will be the main way in which we will proceed. But to judge from our experience over the last eight or nine years, we know that we do not necessarily proceed that way. We must therefore provide some means for the government, which is responsible to the people, to bring matters to a head. A decision has to be made and it seems to me that the residual responsibility for the conduct of business in the House of Commons must belong to the government party, that party which has been given responsibility for the conduct of the nation's business by the Canadian electorate. The residual responsibility must therefore rest with the governing party. An article in today's Globe and Mail by Mr. George Bain makes that clear. I wish to read one small part of his argument since it illustrates clearly the position in which we find ourselves:

> It would be in any government's own interest to try to get agreement on a time allocation—why provoke howls of outrage needlessly?—but, if there is to be a time allocation procedure at all, the power to propose must rest somewhere to be used on those occasions when agreement proves impossible.

I suggest that the government, in its proposals, wishes to accept that responsibility. In cases when no compromise is possible, when honest consultation has failed, the government feels that it must use its majority. It has the power to use its majority, and that majority ought to be made use of by the government. For the opposition to say that responsibility for action in this field rests with it is a travesty of democracy. The opposition is not elected to govern. It is elected to oppose.

An hon. Member: That is just what we are doing.

Mr. Reid: It has a duty to point out what it considers weaknesses and shortcomings in the government's program. Once it has done that its responsibility is discharged. The government, on the other hand, has its responsibilities to discharge and it will stand or fall during the next election on how it has discharged those responsibilities.

Mr. Dinsdale: The tyranny of the majority.

Mr. Reid: The opposition seems to imply that the moment proposed rule 75c is incorporated into the Standing Orders of the house, the world will end. I do not think it will. This rule is merely a modification and extension of changes that were introduced last December. In any event, I suggest to hon. members of the opposition that the House of Commons is not the only democratic institution in this country. Parliament includes the Senate, and in the past the Senate has applied a brake to the activities of the House of Commons.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Shame.

Mr. Reid: I thought my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would appreciate my remark.

Mr. Alexander: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. Would he mind reverting to the earlier part of his notes and explain in detail what he meant when he said that he would consider seriously sending this report back to the committee? His remarks were somewhat ambiguous and for the edification of the house perhaps he would not mind elaborating on what he meant.

Mr. Reid: I am sorry if I was not clear. What I said was that under proposed rule 75B the Leader of the Official Opposition ought to be recognized. The two minority opposition parties should not be in a position of forcing their decisions on this house, along with the government, on the official opposition. The Leader of the Official Opposition, being a responsible officer of this house, should have an important role to play under this proposed rule. I point out that here I do not speak for the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) or the government.

Mr. Alexander: We are aware of that.

Mr. Reid: That is the position I have taken, and I think it quite defensible.

It is important to remember that under the new rules bills will be before the house for a period of 13 days of elapsed time plus two weekends, or a total of 17 days, long enough for people to be made aware of the substance of bills. Although the House of Commons is the most important institution in our democratic system, it is not the be-all and end-all of democracy, being merely an institution which reflects in its make-up and membership the wishes of electors who have elected their members to parliament in order to carry out a certain program. The government has certain time at its disposal to carry out that program. It is when debates take far longer than they should, when they continue long past the day when a decision ought to have been taken, that the very institution of parliament is held in odium. The whole concept of democracy suffers then because people ask how we can govern them if we cannot govern ourselves. I feel that this has been one of the factors in the public's disenchantment with parliament and the democratic process in general.

It is important to realize that in years gone by it may have been necessary to take four, five or six months for an issue to percolate across the country. But the electronic media have changed this.

I, like the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), wish to give examples to indicate how radically our whole political system has been transformed by the growth and effectiveness of the electronic medium. Slightly over 90 per cent of the country is now covered by television. When the Pearson government was defeated in February, 1968, the battle over the defeat of the government respecting a money bill was fought not so much in this chamber but over the television air-waves and in the rotunda of this building. It was fought through interviews on television with the Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, and with leading spokesmen of the opposition. When we received the feedback and when the public had made their decision, opposition ceased and the government was sustained in power.

The second point I want to make is that government issues are not brought down to the floor of the House of Commons out of the blue. There usually is a long debate in the body politic before that issue arises in the form of a government motion or bill. It is important to realize this because we have opted for a system of consensus politics in Canada. There are very few issues that have not been vetted before the public first and that have not been the subject of debate in election campaigns prior to coming before parliament.

As an example of this, I wish to refer to the report of the Carter Commission on tax reform. This indicates some of the studies and the amount of public debate that have been carried on in consequence. First of all there was debate in the house and across the country which led to the appointment of the royal commission. Then there was debate on the terms of reference of that commission. Then there were the public hearings when submissions were made to that commission. Then followed the report of the commission and public debate on the report. Now there is to be a white paper. There will be public debate respecting the white paper. There will be public debate with regard to that white paper when it is sent to committee. There will be committee hearings, a committee report, a government bill and finally it will begin its way through the House of Commons.

This will probably be one of the most important bills we will deal with in this House of Commons. The policies of the government will probably be acceptable to most of the Canadian population. We will concern ourselves in this House of Commons with the details and application of those policies. I suggest it is not necessary to take innumerable months of time to discuss this bill intelligently.

Mr. Barnett: Will the hon. member permit a question? I wish to ask the hon. member on what grounds he speaks with such confidence that the government proposals in the tax reform bill when it is introduced in parliament will be generally accepted by the Canadian people? How does the hon. member know that now?

Mr. Reid: The only way I know that is because of how the Canadian political system operates. Very seldom do the extremists get into power, as I am sure the hon. member and the party of the other extreme realize. Normally items introduced by a government have a great deal of public support because political parties tend to aim for the middle of the political spectrum. That is where the majority is. You can be sure the government will introduce measures which are generally acceptable. There are minor exceptions. We all admit that. Generally speaking, though on a matter of importance there can be absolutely no doubt that the government will do what it thinks the majority of the electors wants it to do.

Another example is the genesis of the national Broadcasting Act which followed almost that same pattern. You can look at the public debate which was initiated and to a large extent sponsored by the government—

Mr. Paproski: What about 75c?

Mr. Reid: That was vetted before. We had about six reports from the committee on procedure. There was a good debate on rule 16A last December. The matter has been raised before. I suggest to the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) that this is an item on which the public is fully informed. I suggest 75c will find general approval among the electors of Canada.

The last aspect I wish to deal with is the type of government we have in Canada which can be described as not only democratic but responsible. The government is responsible for its actions. In the United States they have a system of government in which there is no responsibility when something goes wrong. If there is runaway inflation do you blame the President, the House of Representatives, the Senate or the Judiciary? You can almost blame all three branches equally at times simply because they do not work in concert. When something goes wrong in the Canadian system, the people have a very good idea where they should point the finger namely, at the government in power.

If this is the way our system is to operate, the government must have the power to control the business of the House of Commons because it is responsible to the electors and to the House of Commons. All members of the governing party are members of the House of Commons and they ought to be considered equally with all other members. It is not a question of parties having individual or equal status, but of parties having certain support in the House of Commons and being permitted to go ahead and determine the conduct of business as they see fit according to that support given to each party by the Canadian people.

Mr. Barnett: Will the hon. member permit a further question?

Mr. Reid: Yes.

Mr. Barnett: The hon. member in almost the same breath said that the government should control parliament and then said that the government is responsible to parliament. How does the hon. member reconcile those two statements?

An hon. Member: Because he is a Liberal.

Mr. Reid: The government does two things. The government carries on the administration of the country through the members of the Privy Council. The ministry has members in the house to support it. As long as the ministry has the support of the backbenchers in the party it remains in power if it is, of course, in a majority position. In a minority parliament it depends on the support of a majority of the house. If it loses that support, it goes out of power. I do not see any contradiction in what I said.

On the grounds of responsibility it is far better for the responsibility for the conduct of business of the House of Commons to rest with the government and not with the opposition parties or the minor parties. I think rule 75c is a reasonable compromise. I myself think that 75c is not sufficient because it does not go far enough. I would have preferred to see something more along the lines of the British system. I recognize this is an evolving system in Canada. We have not yet come to the state where we can discipline ourselves in order to deal with our workload. Therefore we must approach this over a period of time, taking it step by step.

Most of the reasons for opposition to 75c are not justifiable. I commend rules 75A, 75B and 75c to the house. I suspect that in three, four or five years after 75c is adopted we will be back looking for a much more effective system.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit a question? In view of the reference the hon. member made to the nature of our system, will he answer this question? When the people of Canada go to the polls, do they elect a government or a parliament? Perhaps when he is answering that question he might also answer this one: Is the government responsible to parliament or does it go over the head of parliament to the people?

Mr. Reid: That is a very interesting question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to think I was elected to the House of Commons as an individual to represent my constituents. Coming from a rural riding this may perhaps be true, but I rather suspect that the majority of the members here were elected to this house because they belonged to a particular political party with a particular political program. Therefore my answer would be that the majority of the members owe their presence here to a political party with a program. There is another group here because of tradition or who, if you wish, have pocket boroughs, or who came here on individual merit.

I would say we now elect a government and an opposition. I do not think we come here as individuals. I think that once the democratic system or parliamentary system evolved into a mass democracy, and evoked a system in which parties were responsible to the electors, we came here as members of political parties. I suggest to the hon. member that this point is recognized for the first time in proposed Standing Orders 75A, 75B and 75C, and I think the greatest break with tradition is 75A in which we have said that the parties shall have the responsibility for determining the business of the house, and that the mavericks who exist in all parties, and the independents who come here from time to time, shall no longer have a voice by refusing unanimous consent and enforcing their veto in that way.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member try again to answer my second question? Is it not a fact that under our system the government is responsible to parliament?

Mr. Reid: Yes, the government is responsible to parliament as long as it maintains the support of the House of Commons, which in practical terms in the House of Commons means the support of its own backbenchers if it be a majority, and the support of members in opposition if it be a minority. But as I said I do not think we were elected as individual members of parliament. The brutal fact is that we came here as members of political parties, and we shall live or die on the hustings as our parties perform.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Post Office Department—Vancouver—Dissatisfaction of letter carriers with five day delivery; the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett)—Unemployment Insurance—government policy respecting modification of operation; the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner)—Water Resources—diversion of waters from Hudson and James Bays.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

EXTENSION OF POWERS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): On a question of order, Mr. Speaker, and before the next member rises to his feet I wonder if we could have permission to revert to motions to attempt to pass the order again which has been so much desired by members of all parties serving on the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, this motion was proposed yesterday by the minister and we did not agree merely because we did not have time for consultation and had not been notified. There is no objection at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is no objection here, either. This is another of those examples of what can be done by consultation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as to the question of non-notification I would point out that the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) insisted that this order be moved yesterday, and again today. If there is general agreement perhaps the following could be made an order of the house:

That the powers of the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments, appointed by order of the house on September 30, 1968, be extended by adding the following powers:

To consider and, from time to time, to report on the adequacy of existing statutory authority for the making and publication of statutory instruments and on the adequacy of existing procedures for the drafting, scrutiny, and operational review of such instruments, and to make recommendations with respect thereto.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, presented to the house on Friday, June 20, 1969, be concurred in, and on the amendment thereto of Mr. Baldwin (p. 10963).

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate, which in my opinion centres around rule 75c, I find it most easy to support the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that the report be referred back to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. I believe all reasonable and intelligent members realize that if there is to be a reasonable attempt at co-operation in the house this report must be referred back to the committee, particularly since debate has centred around one portion of it. Having referred it back, surely reasonable men could reasonably discuss the problem and bring about a solution that would avoid a long drawn-out debate.

It amazed me that the last speaker in this debate, the Liberal-Labour member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), spoke about the residual responsibility having been given to the governing party by the electorate. In fact it surprises me very much that he runs under the name Liberal-Labour. I am certain that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) at this particular time, and wherever he may be in his travels, must find small chills going up his spine when he hears of the Liberal-Labour member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) talking about residual rights.

Labour has well documented its case that it does not believe in the managerial prerogative. I suggest that what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) advocated in his speech was managerial prerogative to the worst degree possible, because proposed rule 75c is recognized as nothing but managerial prerogative. I suggest that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) has made it very clear that he does not believe in the theory of residual right or authority but believes in the rights of individuals, whether in management or labour, to express themselves as they see fit. In fact he does not believe in such a thing as a managerial prerogative or labour prerogative and recognizes that there must be co-operation.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is now suggesting something that is heartily disliked by those people who possibly supported him because he ran under a partly labour banner. I hope that he will have an opportunity later this month, or next month, to speak on another amendment to the motion and clarify his position in this regard.

When speaking of proposed rule 75c I think we should at this time assess the responsibility of the person introducing this proposal. Somehow or other I find it difficult to think that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) introduced it, but I find it quite easy to suggest and think that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) issued the running order to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and that he had no alternative but to follow those directions. May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills, public bills.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the items that are listed under this heading hon. members will be aware of the fact that the first four are in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and that they are similar in the papers that they seek. My colleague has suggested, and I put it forward on his behalf, that the house might be willing to deal with all four in one motion or one debate. In other words, if there is to be debate we would accept the one hour and 40 minute limit to cover all of them, and if there is a vote we would accept the one vote to cover all four.

If hon. members will look at them they will see that we are not trying to pull a trick of any kind. It is a straightforward matter. It is a case of dealing with these four motions in a way that will make more time available for some of the other notices of motions for the production of papers that are on the order paper. This could be done by having the debate on the first one and when it is disposed of we could consider that the other three have been disposed of, or there could be unanimous consent to consider the four of them as one motion.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government I can say that we have no objection to the four motions being discussed as one. We have no objection to the procedure outlined by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Further, Mr. Speaker, if there is a vote, one vote will suffice and the time limit of one hour and 40 minutes will apply to the one debate on all four.

Mr. Forest: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, before you call the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) I wonder whether we might have the unanimous consent of the house to call notice of motion No. 63. At the time the motion was made the agreement referred to in the motion had not been finalized. It has now been finalized. If we had consent we could file the information requested by the hon. member and clear the motion from the order paper.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. gentleman is now offering to table the correspondence without any reservation, which was the intention of my original motion. If this is the case I shall be very happy to accept the order.

Mr. Honey: Mr. Speaker, there was the question of finalizing the correspondence and obtaining the consent of the province. This has now been done. I think we could make the information available to the house.

Mr. Dinsdale: I will accept the order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It could be agreed, Mr. Speaker, that order No. 63 be now passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We might first have the motion and it could be agreed to in the normal procedure.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION ACT

TRANSFER OF PART OF COST TO PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all documents and correspondence exchanged between the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba with respect to transferring part of the cost of Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act projects from Ottawa to the provincial governments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MANPOWER

STUDY BY BELANGER, OUELLETTE AND ASSOCIATES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study done for the Department of Manpower and Immigration by Belanger, Ouellette and Associates Inc., Montreal, Quebec.

Study on Manpower

He said: Mr. Speaker, the four motions which were moved on February 12, 1969 arose out of questions which I asked with reference to the studies done by these companies for the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Question No. 1042 asked about a study done by Belanger, Ouellette and Associates Inc., for which the department agreed to pay $50,000. Question 1043 dealt with an arrangement made by the department with Operations Research Incorporated under which the department agreed to pay $165,000 for the study. Question No. 1044 dealt with an agreement made by the department with Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company under which the department agreed to pay that company $24,000. Question 1045 dealt with an agreement made with Operations Research Industries under which the department agreed to pay just over $98,000 for some research.

These are just four small examples of a practice with which we are being faced more and more. I refer to the practice of government departments hiring outside consultants to do specific studies. I should like to make certain observations about these studies. This practice is continuing and accelerating at a time when the government, pleading poverty and the need for caution, has put a freeze or a semi-freeze on the hiring of public servants. The government has directed the public service not to increase its staff on the one hand and on the other hand has encouraged the public service to expand and increase expenditures to a very great extent through the hiring of private consultants.

In the summary of estimates for the year 1969-70 prepared by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) or under his direction members can see that the amount of money allocated for professional services—I presume the hiring of consultants is included in this figure—is $396 million, an increase from $329 million last year, or an increase of $67 million. This is a rather sharp increase at a time when supposedly the government wants the public service to be cautious.

Not only is this increase of 20 per cent very sharp but it also goes against every basic principle under which we are supposedly operating. When the government wants services or wants to purchase supplies or equipment the usual practice is for it to call for public tenders so that the people who are qualified to provide the equipment or anything else which the government wants can make a public tender indicating that they will do the job for such and such an amount.

Members need simply look at the answers to questions in the orders for returns filed for my colleague the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) to see how in case after case the government has given the contract for such studies to some company without calling for a public tender.

I do not know what particular qualifications these companies and individuals have but I am suspicious enough and have been in politics long enough to be reasonably certain that none of these people are antagonistic to the Liberal party or to the Liberal government. As a citizen of Canada and as a member of parliament I resent these substantial amounts of money being paid to people partly at least because of political patronage. I say it is not only wrong but immoral for this to be done.

Let us look at how these things are done. Let us take, for example, the Post Office Department. The Post Office Department, to say the least, is in a mess. Never in my years of public service which now go back almost 25 years have I seen a report made by an impartial person so critical of a department as the three reports made by the adjudicator about the workings of the Post Office Department. Mr. Martin's reports are a real condemnation of the operation of the Post Office Department. The department is in a mess. Hon. members have been trying to tell the minister that since he undertook this job. What has happened since the minister has taken over the department? He has hired three or four consulting firms to prepare studies. Who lays out the terms of reference for these firms? Who tells them what to study and look at? The officials of the Post Office Department who permitted the department to get in the mess it is in. So it is those who have made the mess who instruct the consultants to undertake studies which will of course gloss over, because they know what ought not to be looked at, the mess which exists.

Then we have the final indignity. We are told repeatedly that these studies which are done for the government and which are paid for by the people of Canada who may or may not be Liberals—and more than 50 per cent of them did not vote Liberal in the last election—are private and confidential and belong to the minister and can only be tabled and made public if the minister so desires. It is my experience with Liberal ministers that they do not usually desire that these studies be made public, so they become essentially the private property of the government and the minister. I say that this is wrong in principle and that it involves a principle which the people of Canada increasingly will refuse to support.

Let me again direct the attention of this government and its ministers to the election which took place just a few days ago in the province of Manitoba. One of the important issues in that election was a large power development project on the Nelson river being financed jointly by the federal and provincial governments.

One of the problems which the hydroelectric system of Manitoba and the government faced involved the relocation of some 600 Indian and Métis people. It was proposed to move them from where they had been living quite well at South Indian Lake. The government of Manitoba and the hydro system commissioned a large number of studies into all aspects of what this move would mean in financial costs, social problems and so on. Despite all the requests by not only members of the legislature of all parties but by a university professor and other people concerned, the government of Manitoba refused completely to make public the studies that had been made.

The leader of the provincial New Democratic party will be the premier of Manitoba next week. He promised and has reiterated his promise since the election that all these studies will be made public so the people of Manitoba can know what were the findings and the recommendations, not the expurgated version which the former government of Manitoba tried to foist on them. That was a very important factor in the election campaign and in the election of our party as the government.

I suggest to the government of Canada that it get off its high horse and stop thinking it has some God-given right to be the government. It should stop thinking it will always be the government of Canada. There will come a time—I do not know whether it will be next week, three years from now or even eight years—when the Liberal party will no longer be the government. This happened in 1957. They will again be in the opposition and when that time comes I presume they will have the same desire as those of us now in the opposition to look at the documents which are prepared for the government in relation to problems such as those facing the people of Manitoba. I suggest to the government that it stop being so arrogant and start realizing that democracy, if it means anything, means that all the people of Canada and all Members of Parliament have a right to be given as much information as possible.

I know there are some government documents that deal with personnel matters which cannot and ought not to be made public. I am not suggesting at this time—

Mr. Knowles (Winnpeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there are only 14 or 15 members present in the house. If that is the case there is no quorum and the house should be adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): According to the rules I will have to ask the Clerk to count the members in the house.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to your attention that there are at least half a dozen members behind the curtains and they are all looking into the chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, to my mind, the hon. member is mistaken.

Come in, gentlemen of the Progressive Conservative party.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the hon. member who spoke a few moments ago has now taken refuge behind the curtains.

[English]

Mr. Haidasz: There are six over there.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Read the rules.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who just put the question, is not even in the house. Under those circumstances, the request is not in order.

Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I should like to point out that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who asked that the members be counted, is not even present. To my mind, this is against the rules.

I should also like to point out that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is the only Progressive Conservative member present in this house.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is citation 60. You should read the rules.

Mr. Haidasz: Why don't you come in and read it for us?

Mr. Pilon: You can stay out now; we don't need you at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I draw to the attention of the house citation 60 in Beauchesne's fourth edition which states in part:

> Any member may direct the Speaker's attention to the fact that there is not a quorum present. The Speaker will proceed at once to count the house, and if there are not twenty members present, including himself, the clerk will take down the names, and the speaker will then adjourn the house without question first put until the usual hour on the next sitting day.

[Translation]

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

If you add up the number of hon. members present, you will see that we have a quorum.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I would like to point out that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who asked that the hon. members be counted, is not even in the house.

Mr. Boulanger: I ask that the hon. members be counted, Mr. Speaker. You will find that we have a quorum.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have just had a conversation with the Clerk Assistant who is busy taking the names down. Hon. members will be advised in a few moments of the names of those members who are present at this time. If there are more than 20 then the motion cannot be accepted.

Mr. Pilon: We don't need their names now. They can stay out.

Mr. Haidasz: Stay out and stick to your principles.

• (5:20 p.m.)

On the count being made, 26 members were declared to be present.

Mr. Speaker: The advice received from the Clerk Assistant is that the list taken of members present indicates 26 members in the House of Commons.

Study on Manpower

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): For the benefit of hon. members who seem to get a great deal of satisfaction out of the fact that I called attention to there not being a quorum and then went behind the curtain myself, I would refer to paragraph 60 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which is to be found at page 48. We are now being told that we are going to play it according to the rules, and if hon. members will look at page 49 of Beauchesne they will find these words:

An honourable member need not remain in the house after giving notice that a quorum is not present.

Therefore, what I did was in accordance with the rules. The rule provides:

Any member may direct the Speaker's attention to the fact that there is not a quorum present. The Speaker will proceed at once to count the house—

I repeat, sir, "at once".

—and if there are not 20 members present, including himself, the Clerk will take down the names, and the Speaker will then adjourn the house without question first put until the usual hour on the next sitting day.

I submit that when the Clerk Assistant counted the names after I had drawn attention to the fact that there was not a quorum in the house, many of the members who are now here were not present at that time. What counts is the number of members present at the time the question is raised.

An hon. Member: You were not present.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I was, and then I went out. I exercised my right under the rules. You want new rules around this place, and if you want to work to rules, that is what we shall do. The Chair waited five or seven minutes until more members came in, and then there was a list of 26 members. But when I raised the point of order there were, on a liberal count, 14 members in the house, perhaps even fewer than 14. I submit that the rule has not been complied with, namely, that there has to be a count at once. A count five minutes later does not meet the rule.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) will have noticed that I was not in the house when he raised the point of order. The point having been raised, I was called back to the house, as the Speaker is in such circumstances, and when I returned to the chair I was advised by the Clerk Assistant that he did follow the instructions in the citation referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that there was some confusion when he made the count immediately because some hon. members were coming into the house and others were leaving.

The hon. member will realize that I was not here and I did not make the count. I have to go by the count which is given to me by the Clerk Assistant. The Clerk Assistant asures me that it was difficult, if not impossible, at that moment to determine exactly how many members were in the house. If I had been in the chair and it had been evident to me when the count was made that there were fewer than 20 members present, I would have had no hesitation in applying the rule contained in citation 60 of Beauchesne's fourth edition.

I wonder whether I have any alternative but to accept the suggestion that a count was made and that this was followed by the usual taking down of names, which indicated there were more than 20 members present. I am placed in a difficult position; I have to accept the count which was taken by the table and about which I have been advised. I wonder whether the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would not agree that I have no alternative but to follow this suggestion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You have no alternative, sir, but to accept the statement that was made to you by the Clerk Assistant when Your Honour reached the chair. That would be a report on the number of members then present. But I submit that we have the right to know—

Mr. Pilon: You are still on western rules.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —what report the Clerk Assistant made to the Acting Speaker who was in the chair at the time this matter was raised. There is no doubt about this. We were behind the curtain; there wasn't a quorum before we went out, but when we went out the attendance dropped to about seven or eight. There was a total of only 14 members present when I raised the point.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am satisfied that when the Clerk Assistant made the first count and reported to the Acting Speaker who was in the chair, he must have reported fewer than 20. What counts for the purpose of the rules is what happened then, not what happened later. I submit that stalling in this way is violating our traditions and the principles of citation 60. I submit that if we are to have the kind of rules this government wants, we had better comply with them to the letter.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) should have quoted the paragraph in Beauchesne's fourth edition which precedes the one he read. That paragraph provides:

> While the house is being counted the doors remain open and members can come in during the whole time occupied by the counting.

That is what happened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Forest: While hon. members were running out, others were running in. I would ask hon. members to note that of the 26 members in the house at the time, one was a Conservative, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), one a Créditiste, and 24 were Liberals.

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not intend to become involved in this matter, but I have no hesitation in saying that when I was in the house there were not 20 members present when the count was taken. As an observer I can say that there were not 20 members here—I do not make anything of it—including any who came in.

Mr. Haidasz: Name them.

Mr. Stanfield: I just say that, Mr. Speaker. There is no question about it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there can be only one Speaker at a time, and when the Acting Speaker was in the chair and this point was raised there were not 20 members present. With the coming and going during the first count made by the Clerk Assistant, it did not produce 20 members. We were here; we saw what was going on. There were only 14, or 15 at most. Only when the second count was taken, ten minutes later, were there 26 members present. I submit that in terms of the count made when the Acting Speaker was in the chair, which was reported to him by the Clerk Assistant, there could not have been 20 members present.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I note that under paragraph 3, which is not often used in such circumstances, the task of making the count of hon. members in order to see if there is a quorum does not rest with the clerk but with the Speaker himself.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have just learned something new.

I find it strange that responsible people like the members of parliament refuse to recognize an accomplished fact. I was here a while ago when the problem was raised. I was writing, but I was listening just the same to the proceedings of the house and I did see that there were fewer than 20 members in the house. Now, I feel that this will never occur again. I hope so at least, because if we do not comply with the rules that exist, why should we waste our time discussing sections 75A, 75B and 75C to try to improve conditions. The standing orders exist, but they are not enforced.

Now, Mr. Speaker, members on both sides of the house are trying to interpret the standing orders but if I understand the circumstances, I admit that when Your Honour took the chair again there were more members in the house, but when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) indicated to the Acting Speaker there was no quorum, of course it was so.

Mr. Boulanger: Because the members had gone out.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Of course, if they had not gone out, there would have been enough members in the house. That is precisely why the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is objecting, because quite a few members are not in the house.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the point of order is justified.

An hon. Member: How many Créditistes are there?

Study on Manpower

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): There are 14 Créditistes and nearly 160 Liberals. I am the only one representing my party. Of course, the ratio happens to be quite good.

An hon. Member: Quality matters more than quantity.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): You are right. That is why there are only 14 of us.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I should add to the consideration of this point of order a comment about the conduct of the Chair—the occupant was not yourself—during the time the original question relating to the quorum was raised and a count was taken. The submission has been made that it is the counting by the Clerk at that time which should apply. In substantiation of the conclusion to which the Clerk came at that time, we have the statement of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who is highly regarded and highly respected as a man of great integrity. He was sitting in the house. He rose in his place a moment ago and said that by his count there were fewer than 20 members present. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) who was also in his place at the time the Clerk took the count, also said there were fewer than 20 members in the house. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who was behind the curtain as it was his right to be, also counted, and I too counted. We both counted 14.

Hon. members can cast reflections on my count if they like, but certainly not on that of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The other party in the house was the Liberal party. Not one of them has said, nor can he say because it would not be true, that there were more than 20 members in the house at the time the Clerk made the count after the point of order had been raised in the first instance. It was only subsequent to that time that hon. gentlemen opposite were able to find enough of their members skulking around in the corridors to make up the 20 or so members whose names were taken down officially.

I submit that the only thing to which Your Honour can pay regard is the original count by the Clerk and the declarations by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), who have indicated what conclusion they reached, in the absence of any declarations to the contrary on behalf of the government.

Mr. Honey: On the point of order raised by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) it might be of some assistance to Your Honour if I could ask him a question in line with his argument as to the point at which the count should have been taken. When he says "immediately", does he mean immediately before the N.D.P. members left or immediately after they left?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The hon. member knows the rule as well as I do. If he does not, he should have paid attention when it was read. No matter how you try to distort it you cannot distort the fact that the Clerk made a count of members, and this is the count which the Chair should take into consideration. He reported the result of that count to The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard) when he was in the chair, and this is the count which should apply. I submit there is no alternative but to rely on the situation which existed immediately prior to Your Honour taking the chair. There can only be one Speaker in the chair at a time, of course, even though the situation may change. It is the situation which confronted the Acting Speaker when he occupied the chair and when the report was made to him which should count.

Mr. Speaker: We have a very difficult situation here. Whether there were 14, 16, 18 or 20 members present when the count was made is not easy to say. I have taken into consideration what has been said by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and others to the effect that when the count was made originally there were only 14 members present in the house. The fact that some members left the house caused some difficulty for the Acting Speaker and for the Clerk Assistant; they were counting people who were coming in and people who were going out.

At the same time I feel I have to consider that there were probably not 20 members in the house when the first count was made. When the Clerk Assistant on instructions from the Acting Speaker took the names down—he has a list which is now inscribed in the records of the house—there were more than 20, but I think that for the purposes of citation 60 it cannot be the number of names inscribed in the record which is decisive but the number of members present at the time the original count was made.

It is very unfortunate, but I cannot see how I can reach any other conclusion than to apply the provisions of citation 60 and say that when the count was originally made there were fewer than 20 members in the house. If that is the situation, it seems to me I have no alternative but to declare the adjournment of the house and invite hon. members to return in large numbers at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. I regret I have to reach this conclusion but I cannot see how I could expect continuing respect for the Chair without doing so.

At 5.38 p.m. the house adjourned.

FINANCE

TABLING OF TARIFF BOARD REPORT ON POLYETHYLENE

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have tabled today copies in English and in French of the report of the Tariff Board, the reference number being No. 143, Polyethylene, together with a transcript of the evidence presented to the board in public hearings. I assure the house that the Tariff Board's recommendations will receive most careful consideration by the government. Interested parties who wish to comment on this report should do so as soon as possible.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND—EMBARGO AFFECTING LABRADOR CITY-WABUSH AREA

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), to move the adjournment of the house under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the rail embargo imposed on shipments of gasoline, automobiles, domestic heating and cooking fuels and other necessary supplies via the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway between the province of Quebec and the towns of Labrador City and Wabush, Newfoundland, which is now causing serious shortages and severe hardship to residents of these two towns because of the depletion of fuel supplies and the unseasonably low temperatures being experienced in the area. There is need for emergency action by the Minister of Transport to avoid the impending crisis.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador has brought to the attention of the house a matter which undoubtedly and clearly is of considerable urgency. The determination which must be made by the Chair is whether the house should be adjourned for the purpose of debating the situation mentioned in the hon. member's proposed motion. After much thought, I am inclined to the view that debate at this time could hardly be expected to relieve the hardships to which the hon. member refers. It should also be remembered that in order for there to be an adjournment of the house under Standing Order 26 parliament should be faced with a genuine emergency which might be termed national in character. Having considered all the aspects of the very important matter referred to by the hon. member, I do not think that the motion ought to be put to the house at this time.

SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS AT PRAIRIE POINTS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), to move the adjournment of the house under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the dire shortage of railway box cars at grain shipping points in western Canada and the fast approaching deadline of the end of the crop year on July 31.

With the government's announcement of an equalized five bushel quota over western Canada by the end of the crop year, it will be absolutely impossible to meet this commitment unless emergency measures are established by setting up a transport co-ordinator and by extending the end of the crop year to August 31.

As there will be no opportunity for parliament to debate this national emergency, it is vitally urgent that there be a full and comprehensive discussion of this matter in the House of Commons at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I think in the circumstances it is incumbent on the Chair to bring to the attention of the hon. member the provisions of subsection 16(d) of Standing Order 26 which has reference to a motion under the terms of the standing order:

(d) the motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session pursuant to the provisions of this standing order;

My understanding of the hon. member's motion is that it is substantially the same as one which was discussed under the provisions of Standing Order 26 on January 22 last when a similar motion moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) was accepted by the Chair. I think the provisions of the standing order are clear. It would not be possible even under the circumstances outlined by the hon. member to allow the adjournment of the house at the present time for the purpose of discussing the hon. member's motion.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO CONSULT NATIVE PEOPLE IN DEVELOPMENT OF POLICY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, that this is the second day in a row that I am moving a motion. I am trying to pay careful attention to Your Honour's ruling of yesterday.

I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the house under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the current discussions which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is having with the premiers of provinces and with Indian people and the turbulence and fury which is arising therefrom.

An hon. member is saying that I am out of my mind.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has given the Chair notice of the proposed motion. I have to admit that this is one of four motions submitted earlier today, or yesterday, for the consideration of the Chair and which has given me very serious difficulties. I sincerely think it is a borderline case and I have been wondering whether the motion of the hon. member might be allowed in the present circumstances.

[Mr. Southam.]

Even as I stand before hon. members now, I am not sure that this motion ought not to be granted. The matter raised by the hon. member is certainly one of urgency. It might appeal to hon. members to debate it in the sense that, as the hon. member has suggested, the proposed debate would have reference to discussions which the minister is having at the present time with the Indian people and with provincial authorities.

It may be that hon. members might want to have an opportunity to express to the house and to the government their views in connection with these discussions. In view of the fact that I have had these serious doubts I would think that they should be resolved in favour of the motion.

Some hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will take into account that actually such an adjournment debate may take place only later today and that only one hour—I was going to say of government time but that would be incorrect; it would be House of Commons time—would be involved. In view of this I think hon. members would not mind giving up one hour of discussion in the debate now before the house, for the purpose of considering this important matter.

I would add one word of caution at the present time, and remind hon. members that the staff of the house has been under pressure lately. I would hope some arrangement would be arrived at between hon. members to limit the length and number of speeches during the adjournment debate later this day, so that the staff could be given an opportunity to leave the premises at a reasonable hour, and not late at night as has happened in the case of two or three of the previous debates embarked upon by the house under standing order 26. This is a suggestion I am making to hon. members, and the house leaders may want to have discussion on this point later.

In view of what I have said, the motion will be put. Has the hon. member leave to proceed with the motion pursuant to Standing Order 26?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 26 the debate will take place from three o'clock this afternoon.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED UNDUE INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING INDEX

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), to move the adjournment of the house under Standing Order 26, either today or on Monday, for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the serious increase in the consumer price index—the cost of living—by one full point during the past month, which is a yearly rate of increase of 10 per cent a year, and is the culmination of the steady rise in the cost of living which has been taking place for the past several years brought about by the failure of the government to take steps to deal with this serious situation.

I bring this motion forward at this time because the time table announced by the government house leader—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot argue the urgency of debate. He must rely on the Chair. I am sure the hon. member appreciates that only one such motion can be granted per day. The Chair has already ruled in favour of the previous motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). However I will not wait until Monday to rule on the hon. member's proposed motion. I would tell him that after much consideration I would have to rule along the lines of the previous decisions made when similar motions were proposed by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) and, I believe, by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), when it was indicated that these types of motions based on such circumstances are not normally accepted by the Chair, or by the house.

I refer the hon. member to the ruling which was made by the Chair on May 8 last when the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings proposed a motion under Standing Order 26 in connection with the consumer price index. I suggest to him and to other hon. members that the ruling made at that time would apply in the present situation, and so I regret that the motion of the hon. member should not be put to the house.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, with great deference may I rise on a point of order to remind Your Honour that at that time you ruled there would be an opportunity in the next few days to discuss the important matter I brought up, namely, during the debate on the budget, and I accepted your ruling—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member refers to Standing Order 26 he will see it is not possible to argue either before or after the decision or the ruling of the Chair. This is the very purpose of the new Standing Orders, to try to save the house from the difficulties of the interminable arguments we had in previous years as to whether the Chair ought to, or ought not to accept these motions.

• (11:20 a.m.)

The hon. member has made a motion and I assure him I have given the matter much consideration. I might say in passing that the decision reached before was not based entirely on the point he has just raised. If he will read the decision which was made then and on other similar occasions, in particular when the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) sought to adjourn the house in similar circumstances, I would think the hon. member would realize that the ruling which applied then would apply also in the present circumstances.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT STEPS TO CURTAIL INCREASING COST OF LIVING

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance, in view of the increase in the cost of living disclosed today and referred to by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, whether the government has any special plans not yet disclosed to help bring relief immediately to ease the burden and to prevent the burden from increasing, particularly for those who are aged, those who are poor and those who live on fixed incomes.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Of course, Mr. Speaker, the government is always concerned about the people on fixed incomes, and indeed the policy we have enunciated, which I hope the opposition will support, to fight inflation is the only way to overcome this difficulty. The major cause of the increase in the cost of living in the month of June by .8 per cent was a 12.7 per cent increase in the price of beef.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact that the increase of nearly 3 per cent already in this calendar year would amount to something approaching an emergency, I wonder whether the minister is prepared to review the methods he has adopted and enunciated to date, and consider mobilizing the country to adopt some kind of guideline policy to meet this grave situation.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I certainly intend to continue to review vigorously the policy of the government in this regard, and I would hope that the Leader of the Opposition would join with me in urging all Canadians to be modest in their demands on the economy, and not take more out of it than is being put in through increased productivity.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, as the cost of living now is increasing at a rate of 10 per cent per year, would the minister not agree that the policy which he put forward in his budget is completely ineffective in curtailing inflation, and that he should accept the suggestions put forward by members of the opposition and get something done about inflation.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will agree that his supplementary is argumentative.

[Later:]

EXPEDITION IN PRESENTING ECONOMIC COUNCIL REPORT ON COMBINES AND PRICES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that posed by the Leader of the Opposition to the Prime Minister. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would bring his considerable influence to bear on the Economic Council of Canada to expedite the report on combines and prices, in view of the seriousness of the increase in the cost of living index.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I thank the hon. member for assuming I have considerable influence on the Economic Council of Canada, but I do not have all that much influence.

GRAIN

BOX CARS REQUIRED FOR DELIVERY OF QUOTA

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether any special arrangements have been worked out with the railways, particularly the C.P.R., so that extra box cars may be provided on C.P.R. lines to move grain, since many of the points are on a quota of two bushels and less and it is impossible to visualize how they can possibly meet the five bushel quota by the end of this month.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was in Winnipeg earlier this week and held some discussions with regard to the transportation problem. I have also been in touch with the presidents of both railways and propose to invite them to Ottawa after the weekend for further discussions, to see whether we can do something along the lines the hon. member outlined.

RESEARCH

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF SCIENCE POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether, in view of the fact the house will be sitting next week, he will make a statement on government science policy which he indicated a few days ago he might make if the house was still in session.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I do not know that it would be a good idea to interrupt for this purpose the interesting debate that is going on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask whether the government is giving consideration to the recommendations of the O.E.C.D., that the government appoint a minister responsible for all aspects of science policy priorities?

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED REVISION OF MILK POLICY

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, following my question yesterday, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture said he wished to check on the figures I quoted, which I have sent to him. I should like today to put to him the following question.

In the light of the date supplied by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, would the parliamentary secretary be ready to recommend to the Minister of Agriculture to review the policy being carried out by the Canadian Dairy Commission in order to help dairy producers?

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Lotbinière for having passed on to me the statistical data he had, since I was wondering whether they were accurate or whether the hon. member was finding it somewhat difficult to understand them. As a matter of fact, if he had read the whole bulletin, he would have seen that instead of a decrease, it is actually an increase for 1968 in comparison with 1967, and that with regard to the 1963-67 average, it is an increase of 14.8 per cent.

It seems to be exactly the opposite of what the hon. member said, and the misunderstanding comes from the fact he does not understand the figures.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Would the Parliamentary Secretary be ready, with all the vicious honesty for which he is known, to go and explain those figures to the farmers in Quebec?

An hon. Member: Think before you speak!

[English]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NEWFOUNDLAND—AGREEMENT ON PROGRAM —MEETING WITH PREMIER

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wished to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Will he advise whether the federal government is about to sign an agreement with the province of Newfoundland in respect of a regional development program?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, similar questions have been asked within the last month or five weeks and I think the minister's answer is on record. If there are any recent developments I will advise the hon. member.

Mr. Marshall: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport? Is he in a position to disclose to me and to the house the results of a meeting held yesterday with the premier of Newfoundland in respect of a regional development program?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I have to intervene in this regard because I doubt whether the Minister of Transport is the minister who should reply to that particular question.

Mr. Marshall: Perhaps I could direct it to the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could direct the hon. member's question to the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Go ahead.

Mr. McGrath: Did the Prime Minister meet with the premier of Newfoundland in the last few days to discuss a regional development program for that province?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX

INCREASED EXEMPTIONS FOR PENSIONERS AND SUPERANNUATES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance which is related to questions asked a few minutes ago in respect of the further increase in the cost of living, as it affects pensioners. In view of the situation will the minister consider increasing the income tax exemptions for pensioners and superannuates?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, although I will consider any suggestion made by the hon. member, I cannot undertake that I will consider this in the immediate future.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO ALLEGED DELAY IN RECEIPT OF REPORT BY STAFF RELATIONS BOARD —REQUEST FOR TABLING

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services in reference to a report of the chief adjudicator to the Public Service Staff Relations Board, in respect of which he replied on Wednesday last.

I now ask whether he has investigated the considerable gap between the date of the decision, namely April 30, and the date the report was received by the Public Service

Staff Relations Board, namely June 16. If he has, will he say what was the cause of this lengthy delay and whether such delays are to be considered normal, to use his adjective?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the explanation is that Mr. Martin's appointment as chief adjudicator ended on April 30, 1969. Some drafting and editing of the report was necessary after that date, but it was thought he should sign the report on April 30 to correspond with his term of office.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the minister understands the time sequence that I have in mind. I am interested in what happened between April 30 and June 16.

Mr. Richardson: I can only answer for the Public Service Staff Relations Board. As I explained to the house recently, the board received the chief adjudicator's report on June 16 and made a distribution of the report on July 4. I have explained that this is a normal period of time. I cannot go beyond my responsibility, which is to explain the action of the board.

Mr. Macquarrie: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister see that the report is tabled so that the members of the house who have been denied the chance to discuss it may at least have the privilege of reading it?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I believe the President of the Privy Council has been considering that question, which was asked recently.

Mr. Fairweather: Then we will never see it.

Mr. Richardson: If there is to be a tabling of the report, it will be announced in due course.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): On a point of order, may I with your permission, Mr. Speaker, point out to the minister that the document is a public document. The hon. member for Hillsborough asked that the minister be kind enough to put a copy on the table so that everyone may see it. It is not within the government's ambit to withhold the report; it is a public document which anyone can obtain by going to the Public Service Staff Relations Board. The minister is being asked to give us an opportunity to read the report.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member was referring to the suggestion that there be a motion for the subject matter to be referred to the committee. I will undertake to get copies and table them.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

WATER RESOURCES

DIVERSION OF WATER FROM HUDSON AND JAMES BAYS

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is it the policy of this government to proceed with certain plans and proposals for the extensive exporting of fresh water to the United States, particularly into the Great Lakes basin, by means of a northern Ontario water diversion scheme?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the question asked by the hon. member is of such wide scope that it should be replied to by way of a statement on motions. If the hon. member thinks this matter should be discussed earlier, I would be pleased to see that the question is given priority for consideration at the time of adjournment.

FINANCE

IMPOSITION OF RESTRICTIONS WITHOUT REGARD FOR ECONOMIC CONDITIONS—CREDIT IN SLOW GROWTH AREAS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, in light of the disclosure by the Bank of Canada that chartered banks are rapidly reducing their lending, and that loans were off $20 million in one week alone, does the government intend to impose this tight money situation on all regions of the country equally, regardless of their economic condition?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered this question yesterday. Both the Governor of the Bank of Canada and I have—

Mr. Crouse: You weren't here yesterday.

Mr. Benson: I am sorry, the day before yesterday. Both the Governor of the Bank of Canada and I urged the banks, which have to ration credit, not to do so in areas of high unemployment or areas of development in Canada, and also not, where possible, to small businesses which depend almost entirely on bank borrowings for their working capital.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question supplementary to the question directed to him by the hon. member for South Shore. Will the minister tell the house whether he received any indications from the banks as to whether they would accept the recommendation made by himself and the Governor of the Bank of Canada with regard to the non-rationing of credit in areas of slow growth?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, in my conversation with the chief general managers of the banks they indicated this was the policy they were following.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A supplementary question Mr. Speaker. In his recommendation, did the Minister of Finance suggest that particularly the prairie regions be not restricted in their credit, even though the high interest rates may add to their difficulties later on?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Could the minister tell the house whether he deems it advisable to intervene in order to reduce the interest rates, since their increase has been of no avail and the government is taking other steps to restrict credit?

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the question of interest rates is not one that the Minister of Finance can determine by simply saying interest rates should be lower. As I indicated yesterday, the government of Canada would of course like to see lower interest rates. I would again refer the hon. member to the very learned statement in this regard by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, made before a committee of the house last week.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON INTEREST RATES—CREDIT CONTROL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Governor of the Bank of Canada informed the committee that in the present circumstances a high interest rate was desirable in order to slow down the economy, would the minister explain exactly what he means by the government being in favour of lower interest rates at this time?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I did not say "at this time", Mr. Speaker, I think interest rates—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, you mean ten years from now?

Mr. Benson: —at the present level are necessary at this time in order to protect the Canadian economy in the long run. When my hon. friend has co-operated with the government in its attempt to fight inflation, and when people such as him become conscious of the problem we really are facing, then we will have lower interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: You are fighting the poor of Canada, not inflation.

Mr. Barney Danson (York-North): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the governor of the Bank of Canada did not say that high interest rates are desirable, but quite the reverse, and in view of the fact that he related this to inflationary pressures, would the minister consider semi-emergency measures such as meeting with the provinces to discuss credit controls, the possible imposition of forced savings and the delay of some major government programs?

Mr. Benson: This is a very complicated question, Mr. Speaker. To answer the third part of the question first, the government has taken steps toward curtailing and reducing expenditures where it is at all possible. With respect to meeting with the provinces regarding credit controls, I have no immediate intention of doing this.

[Translation]

INQUIRY AS TO METHOD OF SETTING INTEREST RATE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I should like to put a supplementary question Mr. Speaker.

Since the Minister of Finance has stated that it is not the government which sets the interest rates and since the governor of the Bank of Canada said himself yesterday at a sitting of the committee that he did not do it either, could the minister tell us who does?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are now reaching the area of debate and I would not think the matter should be pursued further.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like, in a non-debating way, to ask the Minister of Finance if he would re-read the Auditor General's report over the weekend.

Mr. Benson (Minister of Finance): I have read the Auditor General's report, Mr. Speaker. I hope my hon. friend has read Mr. Rasminsky's statement.

HARBOURS

IMPLEMENTATION OF REPORT ON ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURES

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. On May 20 the minister answered yes when I asked if he would make a statement on motions at his earliest convenience concerning the administration of small boat harbours on the Pacific coast of British Columbia. I wonder whether his earliest convenience means that the minister can make a statement within the next few days on this important and urgent matter.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I will do my best, Mr. Speaker. This is a complex matter. The representations made have been noted. There is a good deal of logic in what hon. members have said, and I am trying to work out something imaginative.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN FORCES BASES REORGANIZATION PROGRAM

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister be making an announcement with respect to the reorganization program for Canadian forces bases before the adjournment of the session or at least before the end of July?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can make an announcement before the end of this session, because I cannot foresee when it is going to end. As far as the end of July is concerned, I had a target date which was August 1. The subject is very complicated. Many departments of government are getting involved in the study of the implications of base closure. I still hope that I can meet that target date of August 1, but I am not quite so sure now.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can I take it from the minister's observations that because of the serious economic implications which this may have on certain regions in Canada, the whole matter has been or will be thoroughly processed with respect to the impact on regional disparity?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is what I indicated when I referred to the different government departments involved in the study of each base.

CANADIAN LEGION REPRESENTATIONS ON NEWFOUNDLAND BASE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. Would he advise the house whether he has studied a brief from the Newfoundland command of the Canadian Legion to establish a military base in Newfoundland, and if he has made a decision—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is not a supplementary question.

GRAIN

SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS AT PRAIRIE POINTS—EXTENDED GRAIN YEAR

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): My question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister and it is related to the one put a few moments ago by the hon. member for Mackenzie and addressed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the dire shortage of box cars to be used in the emergency in trying to meet the deadline of July 31 in the crop year, will the Prime Minister confer with his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on his return from Washington regarding an extension of the crop year for at least several weeks so that this emergency can be met?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will consider the matter.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): I should like to preface my remarks by saying that it is very nice to see so many Liberals here today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member was recognized for the purpose of asking a question. May I point out that we are running short of time.

Mr. Gilbert: My question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. In view of the fact that the minister has promised on different occasions to make a statement on the policy on urban development and public housing, will he fulfil that promise by making a statement on motions next week setting forth the government's policy in these matters?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as sometimes occurs, there is a slight distortion in the premise on which the hon. member's question is based. I made no commitment to make a full statement on the policy regarding urban development and public housing at any given time. What I said was that I would be meeting the officials of the provinces to establish new criteria for public housing, and that I would do my best to deal with the urban renewal projects as soon as possible. That date of decision is getting closer every day that goes by.

INDUSTRY

DEVCO—COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF MINERS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I wish to ask him whether he and his government endorse the compulsory retirement at the age of 60 of Devco employees?

Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Prime Minister. I do not wish to rush him but I want to ask him whether he cares to carry out the promise which he made on April 14 to answer the question which I put to him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked his question and, as he knows, if there is no reply given to it or if he is unsatisfied with the reply, there is not much that he or the Chair can do about it.

Mr. MacInnis: I wish to give the Prime Minister one more chance, and ask him whether he accepts the remarks made by his own Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in which he admits there is discrimination by Devco against Cape Breton miners? What is he going to do about it in his "just society"?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FREEZE IN TRACKER AIRCRAFT OVERHAUL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Macdonald has to go.

An hon. Member: Tell them to shut up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): There is lots of time. Keep it up.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I do not know what the fuss is all about. I have not yet said a word.

Mr. Aiken: Yes, but they know what you are going to say.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. As he knows, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants and I have been asking questions about a stop work order affecting Fairey Aviation of Canada. We have been told that the Minister of National Defence has a reply. Can he give it now?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if I remember correctly, the question was to the effect that we had imposed a freeze on the repair of the Tracker aircraft by Fairey Aviation of Canada. The answer to the question is that there is no freeze, and that the work in hand is continuing. It is true that we have reviewed the future contract programs, but this is normal practice.

WATER RESOURCES

DIVERSION OF WATER FROM HUDSON AND JAMES BAYS—AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR REPORTS

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of resources (Mr. Lang) and it relates to a question asked previously by the hon. member for Thunder Bay concerning the diversion of waters in northern Ontario. Has the government entered into any agreement with the province of Ontario on this particular matter or has the government made any decision since the question was raised in the Committee on Resources in the month of May?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): There is no question of any decision on either diversion or export of water, as the hon. member mentioned in his question, and as has been mentioned in previous questions. There is co-ordinated activity between the government of Canada and the government of Ontario in the matter of studying the water available in the northern area of Ontario, studies which are wide in scope and which may take another year to complete. They may be the base of some future action at some future time but are certainly not determining action at this time. I may add that the studies were originally inspired by a recommendation on the International Joint Commission at a time when the water in the Great Lakes was very low.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): I have a supplementary question. Will the minister responsible for energy and water resources undertake to table in this house a report which is entitled "A Proposed Water Diversion Program out of North Western Ontario into Lake Superior" dated June 25, 1964, and six progress reports which have followed it?

Mr. Lang: I will give consideration to this request. The reports are of an interim nature and I will certainly look at the question of whether it would be appropriate to table them at this stage.

Mr. Aiken: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister could answer the specific question I asked as to whether there has been any change in the situation since the matter was raised in the Committee on Resources earlier this year, or whether this is a continuation of the policy then explained and which has been carried out since 1964?

Mr. Lang: I am not sure of the date referred to by the hon. member, but I do not know of any change made recently.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I have a question for the Prime Minister. May I ask the right hon. gentleman, in view of the difficulties experienced by the government in this chamber yesterday afternoon, whether he is giving consideration to the appointment of a new house leader?

An hon. Member: Where were you?

[Mr. Aiken.]

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND—EMBARGO AFFECTING LABRADOR CITY-WABUSH AREA

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): My question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that some 2,000 private automobiles at Wabush and Labrador city are inoperable because there is no gasoline, and stocks of domestic fuel are depleted at a time when these towns are experiencing unseasonably low temperatures, will the minister advise what action his department is taking with regard to the removal of a rail embargo on gasoline and fuel oils?

Hon. Donald Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I should make it clear that the embargo referred to by the hon. member is imposed by union representatives who are refusing to load such cargo, except under restrictions which make it impossible for the railway to complete deliveries. As of this morning the railways indicated to me that they are prepared to carry fuel into the area, provided they get agreement with the unions involved.

Secondly, I have asked the Canadian Transport Commission to send a representative into all four areas to check on the situation.

Thirdly, I am advised that the discussion with regard to settlement of the strike is progressing favourably, and hopefully it will be over within a very short time.

INCOME TAX

RETURN OF REFUNDS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Arising from the assurances given by the minister to this house on June 6 to the effect that there is no delay in processing income tax returns, and in view of the fact that some 700,000 returns have still to be processed, what special efforts will now be made in the organization of the minister's department to ensure that those who are entitled to refunds receive them before Christmas?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, we have already processed 200,000—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is not in order and should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Paproski: May I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister assure the house that the government is not improperly retaining these funds to bolster its revenue position?

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister and ask the right hon. gentleman whether he can confirm that his planned trip to the west will commence on July 12, or is he going to reconsider the date in view of the fact that it is Orangemen's day?

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

PARTICIPATION OF PRIME MINISTER IN DEBATE

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister inform the house whether he intends to be here next week to participate in the debate, or is he carrying forward his plans to visit the west?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the west is more important than listening to a stupid filibuster.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is a rule in our book—it is one of the standing orders—which provides that answers to questions should give information, and should not be such as to provoke debate. There is also a tradition in this house that the Prime Minister is the leader of the house and as the principal member must lead the house in the maintenance of respect for parliament.

Mr. Crouse: They have no respect for anything over there.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): What a joke, this P.M.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I submit that the answer of the Prime Minister is contrary to the rule relating to answers to questions, and is uncalled for. The house is debating a very serious matter, namely the rules of this House of Commons, and I submit that if the Prime Minister has a modicum of respect for this place he will withdraw his remark.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think any impartial observer of the question period in this house would say that about 80 per cent of the questions are not to elicit information, are not of a serious nature. I think my only qualification of the hon. member's point of order is that it is sheer hypocrisy.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has the floor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister wishes to compound the situation by his further remark, then that is, of course, his privilege. However I draw to Your Honour's attention that the previous statement, the one to which I objected, did not refer to the question period but to what he called a filibuster, a debate that is taking place. The Prime Minister cannot escape his responsibility for the untoward remark that he made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see several hon. members seeking to rise, either on supplementary questions or supplementary points of order, but I doubt whether anything can be gained by continuing the point of order.

The initial point of order was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who suggested that referring to a debate as a filibuster—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a "stupid" filibuster.

Mr. Speaker: I would have to consult the precedents to determine whether that word is unparliamentary. It seems to me that in my short years in parliament I have often heard a debate called a filibuster by members on either one side of the house or the other. No suggestion was made at those times that that term was unparliamentary, and I would not think that it is. Whether an adjective describing that word makes it less or more unparliamentary, I am not sure. I would not think the word was unparliamentary to the extent that if a member used the word he ought to be required to withdraw it. I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would agree that my expression of opinion in this regard is probably supported by the precedents.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I submit—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is indicating, I think, perhaps not that he is dissatisfied with my ruling but that—

Mr. Nowlan: I rise on another point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In order to make clear what I said, may I—

Some hon. Members: No, sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I was unable to hear all of the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre owing to the catcalls and noise from hon. members across the way, but aside from the question concerning an adjective placed before a noun in describing a debate in this chamber, the Prime Minister went on in all his honest glory to use the word "hypocrisy".

I have always taken the stand that sticks and stones may break my bones but words will never hurt me. However I suggest that the word "hypocrisy" does impute motives. We have had a lot of catcalls from many of the members across the way while we have been discussing a serious subject, though the Prime Minister has not set an example in maintaining the decorum of this chamber.

I am coming to the point that one is not allowed to impute motives. I am not so much worried about whether the Prime Minister thinks in his mind—whatever is in his mind—that the debate is a stupid filibuster; that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the point of view raised by the hon. member, but it is a basic rule of parliamentary debate that no hon. member may impute motives. If the hon. member suggests the Prime Minister, in referring to the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, was imputing motives, I am sure that the Prime Minister will want to say that he was not imputing motives.

Mr. Lewis: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: I am going to stand still, Mr. Speaker, until hon. members opposite have the dignity and decency to shut up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I can indulge in a wordless filibuster until there is silence, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly proceed with his point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to suggest seriously to Your Honour that the issue is not merely an issue of whether any hon. member said a certain word or took a certain attitude towards a debate in this house. The issue before this house and Your Honour is the position of the Prime Minister of Canada in this house. The issue is whether the Prime Minister of this country can act in such a way as to induce every hon. member of this house, particularly on his side, to make a shambles of this parliament, as it is his intention to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Is this not imputing motives?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me we are not making much progress. It is now the hon. member for York South who is imputing motives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I ask hon. members whether they seriously think this house should continue much longer in this way. I have some serious reservations. A moment ago I suggested, and I believe I was right in my suggestion, that attributing hyprocrisy to another hon. member is imputing motives and to that extent I suggest that that word is unparliamentary. The Chair has intervened in similar circumstances before. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley suggested that I should intervene now, and that is precisely what I am doing. We will not make much progress, certainly, in the consideration of the affairs of the House of Commons if hon. members one after another rise on points of order and take it upon themselves to impute motives to other hon. members. I wonder where that will lead to?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I point out to Your Honour that although there are other things I might say, and I may say them on another occasion, I will obey your wish. May I suggest to Your Honour that, despite your suggestion that that word be withdrawn, the Prime Minister has not made any gesture of rising to his feet. That is why I have risen to my feet. If the Prime Minister will be decent enough, man enough and Prime Minister enough to withdraw, I will be glad to sit down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the same point of order.

We feel that the Prime Minister of Canada is imputing to us motives we do not have. As for us, we can remind him of certain facts. Indeed, he never participates in any debate on procedure in this house.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if this intervention is useful.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, after the second slight occurred I rose in my place, because I wanted the Prime Minister to withdraw what he said. He has not done so. Your Honour pointed out that imputation of motives is contrary to the rules. Unfortunately the hon. member for York South has fallen into the trap of seeming to impute motives. Imputation of motives can undermine our whole system of debate in this house and I say that I will not stay quiet unless the Prime Minister withdraws.

Mr. Speaker: My ruling was not that the Prime Minister should withdraw his remark but that he should indicate to the house that he was not imputing motives. That is the difference. I should like the Prime Minister to say that to the Chair and to all hon. members. I have not suggested, nor do I suggest now, that he should withdraw the word he used; but he knows as well as I do that we can neither impute motives, nor say we are imputing motives. I invite the Prime Minister to agree with me.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, although that word used may describe the seriousness of questions asked by the opposition, I certainly wish to obey your ruling, sir, and I do so.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, does that cover—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —Your Honour's suggestion that it would be imputing motives to say that the point of order raised was tantamount to hypocrisy, and that the Prime Minister is withdrawing that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have already made my ruling on the first point of order raised by the hon. member. I told the hon. member I did not think it was unparliamentary to refer to a debate in this house as a filibuster because I think, if we are to rationalize the situation, that this is imputing collective motives. I wonder if that is unparliamentary. Perhaps it is not. In any event I should not like to renew the argument which started 15 minutes ago. I have made my ruling indicating that it is my view that saying that debate is a filibuster is not in itself unparliamentary. I asked whether the qualifications which have been added have made the situation worse. I have some doubts, but I do not think so. I have made my ruling and the hon. gentleman agreed with me. I think, so far as that aspect of the matter is concerned, that is the end of it.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I raised the original point of order inasmuch as it was my question that brought on this furore.

Mr. Trudeau: Nobody even noticed.

Mr. Thompson: I do not know whether the Prime Minister considers that 80 per cent of the questions coming from this side of the house are hypocritical or that 80 per cent of us are hypocrites.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask for the co-operation of hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I had a supplementary question to ask and I think it is most important to clear this matter up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member will kindly resume his seat I will recognize him and give him the opportunity to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this. First, will the Prime Minister inform us whether he expects the debate in this house to continue on the subject we are presently debating; under whose leadership will it continue in view of difficulties this house faced last night. Second, will he please advise the people of western Canada, and I consider it a dubious honour for them to be told, whether they are more important than his problems with the House of Commons are. Would he also say what his program and itinerary is to be?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Thursday, July 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, presented to the house on Friday, June 20, 1969, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baldwin (p. 10963).

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster! Filibuster!

Some hon. Members: Leaky Deaky! Leaky Deaky!

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest hon. members should forget the question period and give the hon. member an opportunity to make a speech.

Some hon. Members: Filibuster! Filibuster!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think hon. members ought to know that I have no intention of ruling that using the word "filibuster" is unparliamentary. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Bell: He is a real hypocrite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are obviously getting into more difficulty. The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster might perhaps use other words that are not unparliamentary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The suggestion I made when that word was used earlier was that we cannot impute motives. I am sure the hon. member did not want to impute motives.

Mr. Bell: With a great deal of respect, I did exactly the same as the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Now that we have established that there were no motives imputed on either side of the house, we shall go on with the business of the house.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, it is not often that a private member has the opportunity to be welcomed with such fervour in the house in rising to intervene in a debate—

An hon. Member: You had better check your dictionary.

Mr. Deachman: I must say I welcome the opportunity of intervening for a short time this morning, especially as the house is in such a light and jocular mood when discussing such a serious topic.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deachman: Before I come to the remarks I want to make, there is one point which I would like to straighten out for the purpose of the record. On the C.B.C. program, "The World At Eight", this morning the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) claimed that the lack of a quorum yesterday demonstrated the lack of interest by Liberal M.P.'s in the rules debate.

An hon. Member: We have you all here this morning.

Mr. Deachman: I know the hon. member wants to have it straight on the record because he has great pride in parliament and its procedures. I think he would want to have it on the record that the private members' hour was under way at that time. I think he would also want it to be known that debate on government business does not take place during that hour.

Mr. Baldwin: Speak on the subject.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Stop your filibustering.

Mr. Speaker: I trust the hon. member will keep to the subject matter of the debate.

An hon. Member: Tell the truth.

Mr. Deachman: I believe the point I am making affects all of us who are interested and are taking part in this debate. While it is a matter which might have been raised as a question of personal privilege, I think it can be straightened out on the record by saying that according to long-standing custom we really do not look for a quorum during private members' hour. With respect to hon. members, this is not done.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker is on his feet.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members are not helping the Chair, and I find the situation most unbecoming. Hon. members are not assisting the Chair at all by conducting themselves in this way. I invite the house—

An hon. Member: Adjourn the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite hon. members to co-operate with the Chair and I invite the hon. member who has the floor to limit his remarks to the subject now under consideration.

Mr. Deachman: I do not want to embarrass the hon. gentleman or his party further; therefore I will address myself to the subject of the debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You should have been here yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Deachman: The amendment to the motion before us seeks to return the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to the committee with instructions to delete proposed Standing Order 75c. This would mean, of course, that we would have to give up the idea that the House of Commons can come to agreement with regard to the programming of its work when it is agreed by a majority of the members of the house that a particular legislative measure should be programmed. The effect of the amendment would be that we would have to give this up.

This was not the sense of the committee report. The committee report recommended a way in which we would move logically forward step by step to the point where, failing to reach party agreement, at least the majority of members of the House of Commons could vote to determine whether time should be allocated for any step of the legislative procedure. The sense of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) yesterday does not really meet the sense of the report of the committee as it was made to the house. If the report is to be sent back to the committee for revision I think it is desirable that this be done in the form of a resolution enabling the majority of members of the house to allocate the time for a legislative stage, and not send it back to the committee with instructions from the house to negate the report of the committtee by striking out 75c. If the report is sent back to the committee it must be made clear that a majority under 75B would always include the representative of the government party which has the responsibility for legislation and represents a majority and the will of the people who have sent us to this house. In fact, it should include not only the representative of the government but also the representative of the official opposition.

This idea was put forward yesterday in the remarks of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). It flows from a suggestion made by the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell). I want to refer to the remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) when he said:

> I am sorry if I was not clear. What I said was that under proposed rule 75B the Leader of the Official Opposition ought to be recognized. The two minority opposition parties should not be in a position of forcing their decisions on this house, along with the government, on the Official Opposition. The Leader of the Official Opposition, being a responsible officer of this house, should have an important role to play under this proposed rule. I point out that here I do not speak for the President of the Privy Council or the government.

Following upon that suggestion I wish to introduce in a moment an amendment to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the house leader of the Official Opposition. But before doing so I wish to speak of how essential it is, with our growing responsibilities, that each member of the house should be aware of the necessity to program the work of the house in such a way as to afford members time to get back to their constituencies and to go into other matters than those which are debated here on Parliament Hill week after week and month after month throughout the year. I think we all feel that we spend too much time here, that we spend so much time here that our life in the House of Commons becomes unrealistic and, like people living in a monastery or a boy's boarding school, we begin to look upon it as the centre of the world or the centre of the nation when in fact the centres of the nation may be in many other places.

I believe all of us would welcome the opportunity to know the sort of schedule we were going to operate on throughout the year, to know when we could expect with certainty to visit our constituencies to reacquaint ourselves with our electors, refresh our memories about our own regions, their economic and social problems, and thus become better members of the house. With the evolution of the committee system which has blossomed within a year or two into a very formidable structure, absorbing an enormous amount of the time of members, I think we all realize that unless we can bring about a proper allocation of our time between the work of the committees and the work of this chamber, we cannot possibly discharge our duties as honest, elected members of this house.

All of us, whether we are in the opposition or on this side of the house, know we have a duty to the nation in respect of legislation, a duty that involves more than the obstruction of legislation which we may oppose. We have a duty to understand legislation, to understand it by contact with our constituents outside the house, to understand it through time for reflection, to understand it by contact with experts through the committee system, and then to apply our minds to expressing our ideas in the house, voting on the issues, and moving on to the next subject. If we cannot find a way of almost totally programming our work, then as our duties become heavier and heavier our efficiency and capability to deal with legislation will suffer and the people of the nation will suffer because of our inability to cope with our own problems and our own programming.

[Mr. Deachman.]

In the situation in which we find ourselves now, as the summer disappears and as we struggle with the job of programming our work, the first proposition to be made must concern good will. Most of the things that we do in this house are done on a basis of good will. For the greater part of the year we find we do not need to avail ourselves of the rules, to come to grips with one rule in particular to bring a procedure or process to an end. Even though as members of parliament we may be dogmatically opposed on matters of policy we find we must act here in the interests of the nation, and that we must come to a settlement among ourselves as to how a matter is to be disposed of. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, may I say we also know there are instances throughout the year when negotiation breaks down, when lines become hardened, when members spend more time in cat-calling and banter. In fact on occasion I find myself—and I regret it—indulging in such things under tense circumstances, as do other hon. members. But I do not think we leave the chamber feeling any great pride after doing so.

To revert to my theme, we do get into situations where negotiation will not solve the impasse. Therefore we have to move one step beyond that to a rule that will break the jam, not because we want to throttle parliament, not because we want to put a bridle on the opposition, not because we want to bull or ram something through parliament, as suggested yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), but because we are compelled to act by the fact that we are elected representatives, by the fact that we come here to serve our constituencies and the nation. And the way we can act is to program a legislative timetable, irrespective of whether this party sits on this side of the house or whether some other party sits on this side of the house. We must not continue unprogrammed, heading into the year without knowing how we are going to bring it to an end. We must find ways of breaking the deadlocks that sometimes occur.

So, Mr. Speaker, this morning I wish to make a suggestion, stemming from the suggestion of the hon. member for Peel South as expressed yesterday by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, in the form of an amendment to the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River, which would add at the end thereof the following words:

—and in substitution therefor to recommend to the house a proposed standing order by which an allocation of time motion may be proposed to the house by a Minister of the Crown in the event that no agreement could be obtained pursuant to the provisions of proposed Standing Order 75A, or when the representatives of the government and of the Official Opposition were not included in the majority of the representatives of the several parties referred to in proposed Standing Order 75B and to report back the proposed Standing Orders to the next sitting of the house.

• (12:30 p.m.)

I have copies here—

[Translation]

—and I have copies in French and in English.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might wait a minute or two to give hon. members an opportunity to look closely at the proposed subamendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I would ask Your Honour to give consideration to the validity of the subamendment on the basic principle that it seeks to introduce a completely new principle to the amendment which I offered to the house in respect of the main motion. The amendment I introduced was a very simple one involving the deletion of rule 75c, in respect of which I expressed some very considerable dislike. I was supported in that stand by a great many other hon. members from this part of the house and to my left. That was the reason I moved the amendment. There will be, of course, an opportunity for those hon. members who disagree to express their view by voting against the amendment. But surely the subamendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra seeks to introduce a completely new departure or new principle.

For this reason I submit that on the very basic and elementary principle governing amendments Your Honour should not allow the subamendment at this time. If in due course the amendment I have offered comes before the house by way of a question and the house comes to a decision on it and if it should happen that my reasoning and that of those who support me does not move members to support my amendment, my friend could offer his amendment at a later time, but I submit he cannot do it by tacking it on as a subamendment at this time.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to a number of citations in Beauchesne's fourth edition, in particular citation 202(13) which reads as follows:

An amendment to alter the main question, by substituting a proposition with the opposite conclusion, is not an expanded negative and may be moved.

Again, I should like to refer to citation 203(3) in Beauchesne:

An amendment setting forth a proposition dealing with a matter which is foreign to the proposition involved in the main—

I beg your pardon. I have the wrong citation.

An hon. Member: Read on. It sounds fine.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale):

A subamendment which proposed an alternative to the original amendment is in order provided it is relevant to the question.

I pick up the last phrase first and suggest, of course, that the actual terminology used is entirely relevant to the question of whether or not 75c as such should be adopted by the house. The purpose of providing the opportunity for amendment—and as Mr. Speaker knows there are quite a few precedents in this regard—is to give an opportunity to those who might find the proposition acceptable under a slightly different form to move alternative or substantial propositions which would enable them to support the original amendment. I think it might be helpful if I referred to a ruling of Mr. Speaker to be found in volume 63 of the Journals of the House of Commons for 1926. The ruling begins at page 468 but I should like to refer particularly to the terminology of the Speaker at the top of page 469 where he points out in general terms:

The object of an amendment is to effect such an alteration in a question as will obtain the support of those who, without such alteration, must either vote against it or abstain from voting thereon, or—

Here the Speaker makes reference to the then current edition of May.

—to present to the House an alternative proposition either wholly or partially opposed to the original question.

The effect of making an amendment is for the time being to link the amendment with the main motion so that the subject matter of both is thereby placed under the consideration of the House.

Then the Speaker went on to say that bearing this principle in mind there could be little question in that instance that both the amendment and the subamendment referred to the particular subject matter there. I suggest there can be little doubt in this case that the subamendment moved by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra relates both to the subject matter of allocation of time and the Standing Orders of the house and relates in particular to the proceedings conducted under proposed Standing Order 75c.

The argument commonly posed against an amendment of this type is that it amounts in effect to an expanded negative. That is to say, it involves a more complicated way of saying no to the amendment when preferably one might simply move against it. I suggest that in these circumstances it is not just an expanded negative. It is an alternative or substitutive proposition to that introduced in the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River, and for this reason it would be in order for the Chair to accept the subamendment of my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra and the debate should continue on this point.

I would submit, therefore, that for the purpose of giving hon. members an opportunity to pass judgment on this alternative or substitutive principle, which is relevant to the main principle involved in the original motion and is relevant to the amendment itself, it would be in order to accept the subamendment of my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra does raise some interesting procedural points, not to mention the interesting points of substance which are also involved and with which we shall deal later, if necessary. It seems to me that all the citations referred to Your Honour by the President of the Privy Council fall to the ground because they relate to motions of substance, to general motions that are placed before the house. What we have to consider is that what is now before the house is a motion to adopt a report of a committtee. There is a clear rule of parliament stated in citation 323(2) of Beauchesne's fourth edition which reads as follows:

> A report from a committee cannot be amended by the House, but it must be referred back to the committee.

It seems to me that any amendment to the motion that is before the house must pay full regard to that provision, namely, that a committee's report cannot be amended on the floor of the house. It may be argued that in effect the hon. member for Peace River is seeking to do this indirectly because his motion, while it seeks to refer the report back to the committee, does suggest a change that ought to be made. However, I draw to your attention this fact. The change suggested in the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River is a change in respect of a subject matter related to the way of doing things which is before us. Rule 75c is in front of us in cold print, and the proposal is that 75c be deleted by the committee. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, while he is employing the device of helping to send the report back to the committee, introduces a whole new proposition. He does not talk just in respect of 75c; he wants a new 75c put into it with a new principle which happens to be one he would not expect some of us to go along with, but we must not get into the substance.

• (12:40 p.m.)

In that connection may I draw Your Honour's attention to one of the subparagraphs of citation 203, namely subparagraph (5) which says:

> An amendment was ruled out because it raised a new question which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

I submit that if this was a general resolution in itself which we were dealing with, and it was in the terms the President of the Privy Council tried to put forward under order 100 or 99—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Under 99.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are even now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Fair enough.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Even under those terms this amendment would have to be called into question because it raises a new question which can only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

When you put the two things together, the fact that it is clearly a brand new question plus the fact that it is in violation of the proposition that a report from a committee cannot be amended on the floor of the house, there are very serious procedural questions about the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in my humble submission for Your Honour's consideration in respect of the proposed subamendment, may I say first of all it is in my mind a form of an expanded negative. In actual fact the amendment is that the report of the committee be returned to the committee to delete a particular section. That is all it seeks to do. But the subamendment adds something else which is quite new. Within the terms of the subamendment there is an entirely new principle involving what should be considered under 75B. The fact is that it seeks to amend 75B. It does not make any mention whatsoever of 75B, but rule 75B would be amended as a result of the acceptance of the subamendment. One must amend 75B to carry out part of the purport of the subamendment by defining what shall be a majority. That is where it must be done. It cannot be done in 75C. If that is the purpose then I say the subamendment is deficient. If that is not the purpose I suggest to Your Honour that the whole subamendment is meaningless.

There arises a further procedural difficulty in respect of reporting back the proposed Standing Orders at the next sitting of the house. The subamendment is definite and clear that the committee must report back at the next sitting of the house. If the subamendment were accepted by Your Honour it might ultimately be voted on at ten o'clock some night. When it refers to the next sitting does that mean the committee would report back at the next sitting, or does it mean that this is something to be thought about during the summer adjournment in order that the committee may come back with a new 75C, or a new proposed Standing Order regarding the allocation of time? That is what it really says. It would involve a proposed new Standing Order for the allocation of time. Would that be for the next session of the house? If that is the purpose of the subamendment, it does not say so.

I put it to you that this is impossible and that no one in the house would seriously suggest that if the subamendment were accepted at ten o'clock on a Thursday night the standing committee would come back with an appropriate Standing Order by 11 o'clock on Friday morning, or at least until an appropriate report had been posted. In this way it is quite wrong. It refers to the next sitting of the house. That does not mean anything else but the next sitting because this is all the business now before us.

Therefore I put it to you that the subamendment is out of order in that it is clearly an expanded negative. Second, it introduces an extraneous and new principle. Any amendment under the circumstances would have to refer to 75B if the purport of the amendment is as I have indicated. Third, it is indefinite and impossible to carry out from a logical and administrative point of view in the way it is now worded.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to submit to you that the subamendment is in order. The committee, under its original terms of instruction from the House, dealt with the problem of allocation of time and reported on three phases of that problem, namely, 75A dealing with one set of circumstances, 75B dealing with another set, and 75C purporting to deal with still another set of circumstances.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River attempts to give instructions from the house to the committee to delete one phase in respect of a matter on which the committee has now reported. It is abundantly clear that the committee can only do what it is instructed to do by the house. I should like to refer to citation 220 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. Citation 220(1) states:

> An instruction is a motion empowering a committee to do something which it could not otherwise do, or to direct it to do something which it might otherwise not do. It directs the order and course of the committee's proceedings and extends or restricts the order of reference according to the discretion of the house.

The argument I put to you, Mr. Speaker, is that if the committee were bound purely by the amendment in the terms offered by the hon. member for Peace River it would be unduly restricted in discharging its responsibility under the instructions which have been given it by the house. Citation 220(2) states:

> "On May 5, 1893, the Speaker of the Commons of the United Kingdom laid down the following rulings with reference to the instructions: The principles which guide a limit in the system of instructions on going into committee may be thus stated: First, an instruction must empower the committee to do something which the committee is not otherwise empowered to do. Secondly, the purpose of the instruction must be supplementary and ancillary to the purpose of the bill"—

I would argue that the committee report in this case is not to be distinguished from a bill and must, generally speaking, fall within the framework of a bill. The citation then states:

> "Thirdly, it is irregular to introduce into a bill, by an instruction to the committee, a subject which should properly form the substance of a distinct measure, having regard to usage and the general practice of enacting distinct statutes for distinct branches of law."

• (12:50 p.m.)

In discharging its instructions and responsibilities to the house the committee brought forward three recommendations in the form of 75A, 75B and 75C. If the committee were to follow the instructions contained in the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River it would in effect be inhibited and restricted in discharging its responsibilities under the instructions given to it. The subamendment put forward by my colleague a short while ago would permit the committee to deal with this question in a way that has not been dealt with in the discussion regarding the report dealing with the allocation of time in the house. Nothing in the subamendment is in any way inconsistent or negatives the instructions given to the committee.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I have had only a brief opportunity to examine the wording of the subamendment, but it seems to me it is an effort to amend proposed rule 75B indirectly rather than dealing with 75c and the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River. In other words, I think the subamendment, if accepted, would not amend 75c but 75B. To that extent it is not in any way related to the amendment we are now considering, which proposes to delete 75c. For that reason alone I submit that the subamendment is out of order. I do not think we can go this far beyond the scope of what is proposed in the amendment by trying to amend a proposed Standing Order which is not dealt with at all in the original amendment.

Mr. Stanfield: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the subamendment, which I too have had only a brief opportunity to examine, clearly contradicts and negatives the amendment. What the hon. member for Ottawa West said might be relevant if there were no amendment before the house. He directed his remarks to instructions to the committee, and that sort of thing. I suggest that the hon. member's remarks were irrelevant in the circumstances and were not directed to one of the major points Your Honour has to consider.

Clearly, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River involves the deletion of proposed Standing Order 75c. Equally clearly, it seems to me that the subamendment is the exact opposite of that and its effect is that 75c be retained. It is in direct contradiction of the amendment. I am not addressing myself to the question whether an amendment such as this would be in order if it were proposed to the house after the amendment is dealt with. That is an entirely different question.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and others have put forward perfectly valid objections. Clearly, the subamendment is directly opposed to the amendment and therefore is out of order. If at some future time after the amendment is disposed of a motion like this were presented as an amendment, that would be an entirely different question. I suggest that the subamendment is clearly out of order because it negatives and is directly contradictory of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thank hon. members for their learned contribution to the debate on the procedural point. There is some difficulty in determining whether the amendment can be accepted at this time. Some hon. members who took part in the debate indicated that the only matter we have to decide is whether the amendment is an amendment to the main motion or a subamendment. I assume that in practice it does not make very much difference. At the same time, the procedural point has been raised and I think it should be resolved.

Hon. members have referred to a number of citations and precedents. In view of the fact that it is one o'clock, hon. members might want to wait with bated breath until two o'clock, when I will deliver a learned opinion on the point of order raised by hon. members.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish to thank the hon. members who were kind enough this morning to provide some assistance to the Chair in connection with the interesting point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

During the lunch hour, I have considered that point of order very seriously. Following my own inquiries as well as the advice and opinions that were generously supplied to me, I am now in a position to give a decision.

[English]

Hon. members will realize, of course, that what the Chair is concerned with especially is the relevancy and scope of the subamendment. I am worried particularly by the description of the amendment included in the subamendment. I refer to the fact that the mover of the subamendment suggests that the subamendment is presented as a substitution for the original amendment. I am wondering whether this in itself is not an indication that the amendment cannot be accepted on the basis of relevancy.

In the course of the procedural debate hon. members mentioned the fact that we are dealing with an amendment which is limited in scope in that it suggests that the report be referred back to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization with instructions to amend it by deleting therefrom proposed Standing Order 75c. It seems to me that the amendment which the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra proposed to the house this morning does go beyond the scope of this very limited amendment. In my view and in my interpretation of the subamendment, it seeks to do many other things, one of them being to correct proposed standing order 75B. Because of that I have very serious reservations about the procedural acceptability of the subamendment.

Hon. members know that the role of the Chair essentially is to see that discussion is relevant to the matter before the house and that amendments be relevant to the questions before the house. If the Speaker has a role to perform that is particularly significant, it is precisely to see that the rule of relevancy, to some extent at least, is respected. It is not all that easy to ensure that it is respected in the course of debate. It is not easy either to see that it is accepted and respected in connection with amendments proposed by hon. members.

After much serious thought I have come to the conclusion that the subamendment proposed by the hon. member enlarges the scope of the amendment which, as I said, is limited in nature being restricted exclusively to a reconsideration of proposed Standing Order 75c. I indicated before one o'clock, and I reiterate now, that perhaps the method by which the proposition advanced by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra might be considered by the house is in the form of an amendment to the main motion. I cannot rule in anticipation but it would appear to me to be the reasonable way in which to consider the hon. member's amendment.

For this reason and in the hope that we can ensure respect for and acceptance by all hon. members of the rule of relevancy, I suggest that the subamendment be not considered now and that we proceed for the time being with the consideration of the amendment itself.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I say that I feel the discussion today, the question period this morning and the incident of the lack of a quorum yesterday afternoon are direct consequences of the introduction of and insistence by the government on this type of amendment which tries to ram closure—I do not know what else to call it since it is closure—down our throats when the house will not accept that. It must be remembered, and I have indicated this before on previous occasions when we were speaking on points of order, that the rules of the house are the rules by general acceptance of the house. They are no more the prerogative of the government than they are the prerogative of the Chair. The Chair does not make the rules. Neither are they the prerogative of the opposition.

Why this government at the present time should feel that they have become the anointed to impose their version of the rules and the version of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the house is not obvious to anyone. If some of the new members would look back on the traditions and customs of this house they would see that June 25, 1968, was not the date of the second coming of Christ and was not the dawning of a new parliamentary system. It was a continuation of our parliamentary system of government.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Prior to my coming to the house in 1957 many rule changes were made. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) was in the house at that time and so was the hon. member for LaSalle (Mr. Lessard). The hon. member for LaSalle will agree that the changes made in 1954-55 received the consensus of the house. Lest some of the neophytes think that many of the changes brought in then were not of a major nature, let them refer to the committee report and to Votes and Proceedings, of the day when they will discover that that was the time when limitations were first imposed on the debate on the speech from the throne and the debate on the budget. Other limitations were also imposed which were for the benefit of the executive.

Mr. Winch: And by agreement.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, by agreement. Subsequently other changes were brought in during the 1960-61 administration which modified our daily proceedings.

Mr. Goyer: What about the debate on the flag?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about the debate on the defence production bill and on the trans-Canada pipe line?

Mr. Goyer: But what about the flag?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have no shame in that connection. I place no stricture whatever on the debate on the flag.

[Translation]

I shall only say that even if one was not born in Montreal, one is not compelled to share the views which are popular there.

Mr. Speaker, if we want to talk about protracted debate, let us recall the pipe-line debate which although more violent than the flag debate lasted as long.

[English]

The hon. member would not even know what the government tried to do with the Defence Production Act of 1955. It was a bad law. As a result of opposition to it public opinion was mobilized, and the then prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent, had to send Mr. Howe fishing so that the offensive clauses upon which Mr. Howe was insisting could be removed from the bill.

This is why we in this house must have the power to oppose if necessary. As a member of the committee on procedure I opposed many of the changes that were brought in by consent last December. My stand on this proposal today is absolutely clear: I think it is wrong.

With all due respect to the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the ruling the Chair made in regard to acceptance of the motion moved by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) was also wrong. There is no rule that says I cannot disagree with a finding of the Chair. Although I accept the ruling made by the Chair I do not think it is correct. It is wrong because the motion that appeared on the order paper was in clear defiance of an order of the house.

The only member who had a right to bring forward a motion in regard to the procedure of the house was the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) as chairman of a committee that had been instructed by the house to study a certain matter and report. He, in turn, had been instructed by the committee to seek concurrence in the committee report. A government minister had no prerogative to bring forward an amended version of the motion. That action was totally and irretrievably wrong.

If that ruling is to persist and rule 75c is approved, the house will have been delivered bound hand and foot, with a gag ready to be placed in the mouths of its members, right on the doorstep of the government as it wants.

Under 75c, which deals with legislation and not with estimates, if a committee brings in a report to the house that is in any way critical of the government the government will tell a supine chairman of that committee—many of them have been supine chairmen or have behaved as such—

Mr. Drury: Shame.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I say shame on the government for its actions in regard to the chairman of the transport committee, the man the government put in hospital. The government is also guilty of shameless conduct in regard to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. He was put under intolerable pressure. He was put in an impossible position, his committee having decided in its wisdom to bring in a certain report.

A great deal has been said about the merits of our new committee system. It was going to be the beginning of the dawning of a new era.

Mr. Crouse: The cornerstone of the just society.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes. All members were going to participate. They would be able to question witnesses and to express their opinions. They would be able to bring forward the reports they wished.

We must remember that committees consist of a majority of government members. In this regard I could say something about government members who express a degree of independence. As a result of the new method of appointing members to committees, government members are being yanked off without their consent or consultation. An example of this took place in the transport committee last week.

Mr. Lessard (LaSalle): It was done in your time too.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, it was not.

Mr. Peters: They had to come to the house first.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Let me ask the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) or the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) whether they were consulted about being pulled off the transport committee. Did they consent to that?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary South is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Under what guise is the hon. member attempting to speak?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary South is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I was taken off the transport committee at my own request because I was going to be necessarily absent from Ottawa. I returned to the committee immediately I came back to the house.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is nice to have the record clear on that point, but I should like to know why it was said otherwise in the committee. In any event, as long as the government has the power to remove members from committees, as it has, we will see independent-minded committee members suddenly taken off committees. No motion in this house is necessary. The hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Lind) last year suddenly found himself involuntarily taken off a committee, though at that time the government had to make a motion in the house before it could do so.

If the government does not like the report of a committee it can prepare a government motion to excise the portions of the report in question. Then it will claim the right of precedence simply by instructing the chairman not to move the motion for concurrence. On top of this we have allocation of time. As I have said, the house would be bound hand and foot, with a gag less than an inch from the mouths of its members, always at the ready, if 75c were approved.

[Translation]

If we want to consider closure, I will tell you that it is provided for implicitly in the Standing Orders.

Hon. Members: Give examples.

Mr. Lambert: Of closure? I am willing to tell you how it can work.

[English]

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and others have indicated that in the future there could be a change of government. We must remember that these proposed rules are not temporary but will be in force until the house decides otherwise, and the examples put forward by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands related to matters about which there would be a great deal of controversy in the house. Let us assume that old age security is made—

• (2:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Go home.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is all right, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is new here and a member of that arrogant majority. Let us assume that the government is going to amend the Old Age Security Act by imposing a means test.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am only assuming that this would be the proposal. Let us say that the government of the day says, "We are going to allow one day for second reading," and that at the end of that one day's debate the motion is put, after which the bill is sent to a committee of the house. Let us say that it is to be in committee for two days.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): For one and a half hours each day.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes. The committee could be allocated one period a day in a committee room. It is all too easy to have 15 or 17 committees programmed for a day. Committees are fairly simple to schedule, although they do not always go ahead. At any rate, there is discussion in a committee primarily composed of government supporters for two days, and then the committee has to report. When the bill comes to the house at the report stage an allocation order is made and there is a further two days' debate at the report stage, followed by third reading. But, Mr. Speaker, there will be debate at the report stage only if there are amendments; if no amendments are put forward at that stage there will be no debate. So there might be two days of debate followed by third reading. That is all that would be allowed.

I know the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) said he thought that allowing one member from the front bench and one backbench member from each party to speak would be a sufficient expression of opinion. Isn't that cosy, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The backbenchers over there have as much respect for parliament as the Prime Minister has.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You know, Mr. Speaker, if some of our neophyte members had had a chance of serving in the opposition as well as on the government side, and my experience is about evenly divided between both sides of the house so I ought to know what I am talking about, it would be much better for them. There must be ample opportunities for discussion. And who shall say on a particular bill affecting constituencies from one end of the country to another that such and such a frontbencher who represents his constituents and such and such a backbencher or private member who represents his constituents shall be the only ones to speak? Who is going to arrogate unto himself the role of God in saying, "You, from the province of Nova Scotia, on this particular subject, you cannot be heard; and you, from Ontario, on this subject, you will not be heard." Hon. members forget that in this house we are equals and have equal rights to speak. But no, only the exalted 27 or 28 in this house are to be given the opportunity to speak extensively.

This situation applies to the government backbenchers, if only they knew it. At present it makes no difference to them because they are not allowed to speak and will not be allowed to speak. Talk about participatory government! Here we have a government in which the front benches have lost contact with the back benches. We have all heard good stories going around of the yards and yards of ministerial skin that were scraped off walls following complaints at the Liberal love-in. Government backbenchers are overheard talking in coffee shops and elevators. They gripe and their gripes are heard by others so that they become public knowledge.

I now wish to deal with some other matters, Mr. Speaker. I am participating in this debate at this time because, as vice-chairman of the committee, I can say that the chairman who presided over the committee's sessions last year and this year, without exception, did an excellent job, and no member of that committee can point a finger at him for being partial or for not having the committee under good control. It was because he was being hamstrung and humiliated by the government that I have insisted on taking part in this debate. I am taking part to protect the position of the chairman of the committee because I feared he was going to be destroyed. But that, of course, did not seem to affect the conscience of the government house leader.

I wish to place on record as vice-chairman of the committee, and I think I speak for all members of the committee, that I appreciate the services performed by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). I put my remarks in those terms. I have no words of condemnation in my vocabulary that are strong enough to condemn the government's attitude in this connection. May I also say that the Leader of the Opposition indicated that there was a rumour, and he was quite right, that a motion might be brought in order to vindicate the conduct and position of the chairman. I was prepared to bring in a motion of privilege on behalf of the committee in order to protect the chairman.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We were ready, too.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We just could not allow this matter to pass without making the strongest representations. Members of other committees will have to take the same steps in order to protect the position of chairmen. We have developed a committee system that will fail if we do not have strong, impartial chairmen. And, Mr. Speaker, we want our chairmen to be as free from pressure and as impartial with members of the committee as Your Honour is in the House of Commons.

In many ways our committee chairmen must be carbon copies of Mr. Speaker and display an impartiality of conduct and a knowledge of how committee meetings ought to be conducted. Otherwise our committees may become arenas for hatchet games in which government instructions will be carried out to the letter. After all, have we not heard that the government house leader has indicated to government members that their function in the committee system is not primarily to amend legislation and alter estimates, but to protect the government. They are part of the government's team and they are to act as such. Well, Mr. Speaker, the natural consequence of that is, as I said a moment ago, that the committees will become arenas for hatchet games. The whole of the process is spurious if it is felt that the committees are not going to be a forum for discussing and examining legislation and estimates and/or going into questions that the government has put before them.

Some people do not have much hope for the committee system. I do not share that pessimism. I will be personal again and say that the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs had developed a spirit of co-operation. Its members work with the chairman who understands their aspirations and is quite prepared to work along with them. We get along fine in that committee. That type of committee produces good results. It may be one of the exceptions.

I have great hopes for the committee system, but it will have to work differently from the way in which it has been working. The committee will have to work with much less influence from the government. The chairman cannot be either the chief protector of the government or the hatchetman. He must always bear foremost in mind the interests of the committee. It must be remembered that committees are composed of members from all parties in the house just as the house is composed of members of different political persuasions. Your Honour must protect the interests of all members, not just those of the government supporters. The chairman of a committee must represent the interests of all members of that committee.

I hope we will see some consequential changes. I hope we will have a panel of chairmen who will occupy a position in the house much greater than at present. If the government wants to do something about hatchetmen or chief defenders, why do they not employ some of their parliamentary secretaries who are terribly under-employed at the present time in that position?

All the changes that have been made over the years have been for the benefit of the executive. I suppose it is a case of always bowing before the altar or burning incense at the altar of super-efficiency, or supposed efficiency. We are now told that the Privy Council office is going to become an empire of technocrats. We are going to see what will happen to the office of the Privy Council, with parliamentary secretaries going over the heads of deputy ministers and around ministers. These stories get out, Mr. Speaker. What is being set up? An empire for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). A presidential system is being put together. Parliament? It is only an institution that must be tolerated for the time being, but too much attention should not be paid to it.

For example, there are regional desks. Hon. members need not be listened to. Somewhere in the field there is a man reporting to the Prime Minister. Recent negotiations in the field of external affairs have not been carried out by the officials of that department. Special emissaries not connected with the department are being sent out who report directly to the Prime Minister. The Department of External Affairs does not know what is going on in connection with these negotiations.

While all this is happening, hon. members on the government side sit back and say: Everything is fine, what are you talking about? They say that these are mere rule changes which are being introduced. They have been brought in under the aegis of the Prime Minister, and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) is merely the instrument with regard to them. He is the chief executive officer in this abolition of the rights of parliamentarians.

Hon. members opposite are no different than I. They represent their constituencies in the same manner and have the same rights as do I. Somehow they should realize our rights are being trampled upon and we are being muzzled. What do they think is happening to them? Is their parliament going to be every Wednesday morning in caucus where, because of their numbers, each man may be limited to two minutes? What rights have they got to speak? How are they going to speak on behalf of their constituents when the power is given to the President of the Privy Council who cares not a fig for the interests of private members? An example of this is what happened to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. The cabinet did not care a fig for him and were quite prepared to offer him up on the altar of expediency.

Mr. Goyer: Do you prefer a two-leader system?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I challenge the hon. member for Dollard to make an intelligent speech on the subject of the rules.

An hon. Member: It is not possible.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member should stand up and represent his constituents as he has an obligation to do.

Mr. Barnett: He does not know anything about it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member gets a lot of information, doesn't he? He gets it, all right! The only time he rises is when some minister or parliamentary secretary says: "Why don't you rise and ask this or that question? I happen to have my music with me and you can ask a question today." That is the only time government backbenchers are tolerated. That is the only time they are heard. The only time the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works has spoken is when he says he will take something as notice. The hon. member is a great one to speak from his seat.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) spoke this morning in exculpation of the attendance of members yesterday afternoon. The hon. member does not realize it, but from approximately 3.15 p.m. yesterday afternoon the same move could have been made as was made at 5.05 p.m. I was in the house until just before five o'clock and at least half a dozen times I counted the number of government members present. When the Leader of the Opposition was speaking they had the effrontery to be absent, while the opposition had over 30 members.

An hon. Member: Instead of leaving it—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Will the hon. member please let me speak.

Some hon. Members: Sit down!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West has the floor.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): When the Leader of the Opposition was speaking at no time were there more than eight members on the government side in their seats.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There were no more than eight.

An hon. Member: There was only one of your members here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. I ask hon. gentlemen to maintain some decorum and allow the hon. member for Edmonton West to complete his remarks. If the hon. member has a question, he may request permission from the Chair to ask it.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member keeps insisting there was only one member here. He does not even know he had been sucked in.

Mr. Deachman: It is recorded.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That may be at 5.05 p.m. but, as I said, the same action was quite possible from 3.15 onward. You do not know how many times you were counted in your lobby to see how many members you had there. It was clearly understood. This pattern had been apparent for quite some time, and it is very simple to do it. I do not have to explain, but it could have happened at 4.30 just as well as at five minutes after five o'clock, and the day before as well.

Let us be clear about it. The hon. member will not go on television tonight hollering "filibuster, filibuster." Why, to him two speeches in a row constitute a filibuster. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, when he speaks we consider that a filibuster on the part of the government. He makes only the one speech.

I wish to say a few things now about 75B and 75C. I oppose 75B, but not at all on the basis of the majority question. I feel, again in anticipation of the worth of the committee system, that no government house leader, and this includes my own party's house leader, can be well enough advised as to agree with the other house leaders that the committee proceedings on this or that bill shall take so many days, say, five days. For one thing there is already a committee on allocation of space and facilities. The house leaders would be competing against other requirements. In committees we are short of space and of staff. We do not know what witnesses are going to come before us and what priority we will have with regard to the printing of the transcript. This is important to the administration of committees. Committee members must have quick reproduction of the testimony given in a committee if they are to make intelligent comments.

As a classic example I cite the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which has been discussing high interest rates with the governor of the Bank of Canada. The governor brought in a very complex statement of 29 typewritten pages which took over a committee session to read. There were questions. The problems are difficult. The governor gave very lengthy, reasoned answers. But who on earth could sit there and make a complete note of them, particularly those members who signified their intention to ask further questions? How can they keep all of this in their heads from Tuesday to Thursday or from Thursday to Tuesday, or from one session to another if sessions are more numerous than that. We need the transcripts but as yet there is no established priority for them. There is no indication that we are going to get them.

Then there is the question of how long a witness is going to take. I can give many examples during the past winter of very erudite, very learned witnesses, where a 30-second question prompted a 19-minute answer. This meant that a member with a 20-minute allocation of time during a round of questions got in one question, or perhaps two, and the answers took up the balance of his time allocation. How is the house leader going to deal with that? I say that the house leaders, with respect to bills over which there is controversy and with respect to lengthy bills, have no business imposing a time limit in committee. They do not know, except within very wide parameters, how long it is going to take. During the past winter we did not have any allocation of time in committees, but no one can point a finger at even one bill that was held up in committee.

On top of that, is it the intention of the government house leader to say that a committee shall sit morning, afternoon and evening? He may think so, but what about the staff? I have seen such decisions made on the spur of the moment, decisions like, "Oh, let us sit tonight," but there was no thought of checking with the staff about it. And remember, Mr. Speaker, every committee, for example the finance committee, takes between 30 and 40 people to attend to its needs. These include translators, transcribers, the electronic equipment operators and all of the other people involved. As I say, it takes a staff of between 30 and 40. Are you going to tell them on just the spur of the moment, "We are going to sit in the evening", or make an offhand decision that results in evening sittings?

The next thing we are going to meet is that these very competent and willing staffs are going to take the whole business and say, "Here, you get on with it. We quit."

An hon. Member: They are now.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Even now when we are still sitting in committees some have been delayed. Why? Because several of the staff have had to be given holidays in order to work off the great accumulations of overtime they have had built up to their credit. Yet this is what this proposal would load on to them. Mr. Speaker, I cannot say enough in condemnation of 75B in so far as it deals with the committee system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In so far as 75c is concerned, as I said before it is nothing but an assault on parliament, completely and utterly, by the executive, not by the government backbenchers because they are frightened, unwilling and ignorant victims of what they propose to support through the allocation of time. Parliament as such is being delivered, tied hand and foot, with a gag already half way over its mouth.

How do you expect you are going to get voluntary agreement when the government house leader sits with 75c as a club behind his back and says, "Gentlemen, can we agree on this particular bill? If not, you know I have got 75c here. My proposal is that we are going to take it two days at a time, and that is it." Is this how one gets general agreement?

We are going to work to rule in this house, if and when 75c comes in. You will see the house work to rule, and the Lord only knows how slow that is going to be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Will there be accommodation? Will the house leaders and committee chairmen go to see ministers or opposite members to discuss these matters and say, "Well, bring on that particular bill tonight because we have agreed among ourselves that it will take an hour to get it through this particular stage." Nothing doing, Mr. Speaker. All that will be said to the government will be, "Go back to 75c and do your damnedest because we will see you freeze in Hades before we agree voluntarily.

This house gets along and has got along well on good, personal relations. It has gotten on pretty well this year, better than I have seen it for some years. But this proposed rule having been brought in by the government we saw an incident yesterday afternoon which would never have been even thought of under any circumstances during the period when we were getting on well together. And this morning we had a snap and snarl question session and we saw the petulant behavior of the Prime Minister even though, mind you, it was mild compared with what many of us have seen in the house in years past. Under these circumstances people become very concerned.

What do you think happened in the British house the other night when closure was brought on? Nobody has thrown order papers in this house; nobody has seen such a tumult. It does not matter about the subject matter, it is the attitude that is important. Closure and the guillotine, unless agreed upon, will never result in any greater volume of work going through. I plead with hon. members, particularly with government backbenchers. If they think we of the opposition are being gagged, Mr. Speaker, let me point out that the gag is being put on them too, and they are assisting in putting it on themselves. It could conceivably be that they will be sitting over here and they may also want time—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. Possibly I might ask the house whether there is unanimous consent for him to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right; fine. I know where the no is from. This is a bad motion, Mr. Speaker, to adopt the committee report.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in the debate this afternoon, that is why I shall be very brief, but I cannot let pass unnoticed the allegations and suspicions voiced by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in this house.

The hon. member for Edmonton West has insisted that the government, and in particular the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), intended to muzzle the opposition and prevent the free exercise of democracy in this house. In addition, he made vague accusations which, when he defined them, were refuted flatly. The hon. member for Edmonton West gave the impression that the Liberal party and its members were muzzled, no less, by the government and by the Prime Minister.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): It is obvious.

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, once again, those allegations are vague, especially because they are not based on facts.

How strange to see a member of the opposition complain about the government, and in particular about the Prime Minister, saying that he interferes with hon. members' participation in the debate, that he intends to deprive the opposition of their rights and prerogatives when, just recently, those same parties and specially their leaders received supplementary credits from the government to enable them to fulfil their role adequately in the house, to do some research and prepare sensible speeches instead of merely making accusations which have nothing to do with the matter now under study.

How strange to see an opposition, that is better equipped today than it has ever been, complain about being muzzled and being ostracized. There's no mistake about it: those who receive are biting the hand that gives to them.

As for us, we have but to congratulate ourselves on the action of the government and on our greater participation not only in committees, or in this house but also in the Liberal party's caucus.

The Prime Minister has taken steps recently that enable us in our caucus to participate much more actively than before in the elaboration of bills and discussion of principles that are to be brought forward in this house.

Moreover, the committees operate better than they used to. They are now provided with better research facilities, especially the committee on external affairs and national defence, which has at its disposal a staff of experts to assist committee members in their work. Here is a move which, far from hindering participation in debates, will help those who wish to contribute in an intelligent way to the business of the house.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): What happens to the committee reports? Are they shelved?

Mr. Goyer: Perhaps the hon. member for Edmonton West could say how many reports tabled in the house were concurred in instead of always being over-critical and seeking the exceptional cases.

The object of the measure before us is to modernize the workings of our parliamentary institutions. Of course, in days gone by, it was difficult to let the people what was going on since the mass media were not as they are today.

Filibusters had to be accepted in the past, so that people would know about the legislation that was being considered.

Today, when television, radio and newspapers are always present, when journalists give a daily account of what is going on in the house and in the committees every minute, it is normal for the government to want an efficient tool to allow it to expedite the business of the house without for all that keeping the people in the dark.

Needless to say that if two weeks, three weeks or a month were, in the past, necessary to inform the people about the business of the house, today it is a matter of days and the citizens who want to be well-informed, who want to participate and to give their opinion on what we are doing in the house, can do it far more easily.

Mr. Speaker, participation also means that hon. members can and must be present in their ridings to meet their constituents and to listen to what they have to say about what is going on in the house. However, since the sessions, these last few years, have been very long, even endless, that pleases only those who enjoy dealing with legal and procedural technicalities while preventing citizens and hon. members from participating in the democratic process.

Therefore we must find some means of shortening the sessions so that hon. members may have some time available to visit their ridings and to live with the people they represent. The purpose of this legislation is precisely to speed up the business of the house. There is no question of putting a gag over anyone's mouth but rather to make it possible for hon. members to work in a more orderly fashion.

Mr. Speaker, it has become a matter of mental health to bear with endless and repetitious debates which contribute nothing of any positive nature.

Therefore, it is not surprising that serious-minded members are not always in the house listening to the same rubbish and rehashed nonsense.

I think that it is normal for hon. members to do some work outside this house while still serving the people they represent, and Canada.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being three o'clock I do now interrupt the debate in order that the house may consider a motion by the hon. member for Skeena pursuant to Standing Order 26.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, before the debate commences may I explain to the house and the hon. member in particular that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) is returning from Halifax where he was in consultation with Indian representatives this morning. He will be in the house within the next 20 minutes, I hope, to participate in the debate.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO CONSULT NATIVE PEOPLE IN DEVELOPMENT OF POLICY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved the adjournment of the house under Standing Order 26.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I thank the government house leader for the information that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) will be here later to participate in this debate. In light of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said yesterday about the refusal on the part of the government to change its policy in this regard, the only hope and expectation is that the minister will have a change of heart and will be able to enunciate to the house, and consequently to the Indian people of this country, something really meaningful and worth while in terms of the government's desires as to its relationship with the Indian people.

The views I wish to express at the outset are not exclusively mine. In fact, on all occasions when we have had an opportunity to express ideas about Indian affairs here I have always tried, as have the members of the New Democratic party who have spoken on the subject, to make my speeches reflect the views of the Indian people and, in other words, to assist in making a presentation to parliament on behalf of the native Indian people of this nation.

We never did feel at any time that it devolved upon a member of parliament, and particularly a government official, to substitute his views for those of the people affected. As was expressed earlier, I do not think there is a great deal of disagreement about the general principle of equality before the law, or that there is a desire on the part of people, Indians or otherwise, that government services should not be made available on an equitable basis. We mentioned this principle as well on June 25. Such things, and I only enumerate these as examples, as health, access to hospitals, social welfare programs, roads, electricity and similar services should be made available without discrimination on the basis of race or colour.

Where the disagreement occurs is in respect of the policy statement of the minister, and I submit these involve two items. There was not at any time any indication whatsoever that there would be any constitutional protection for the hereditary, statutory and committed rights of the native Indian peoples. These were ignored. The matter of Indian lands and the inheritance of Indian people in respect of resources, which should have been enshrined in our constitutional law has been ignored so far by the government. This is one of the reasons for disagreement and resentment on the part of the Indian people.

The other reason, generally speaking, is the lack of consultation in the social preparation and the development of the policy declared by the minister on June 25. It is true that there was consultation of a sort prior to that time, and it might be worth while to trace a little bit of the history of this so-called consultation process to indicate why the native people feel they have been cheated and deceived in this regard.

When Mr. Tremblay was the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in a previous government, he announced that the government was going to develop a program involving advisory boards and councils. As a consequence there was established provincial and national councils or advisory boards in respect of Indian affairs. These boards met on numerous occasions and worked out, so far as I know with the minister and subsequent ministers, a program relating to Indian affairs revolving around the Indian Act. This also involved what should be done about historic rights.

The present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), when he was the minister of Indian affairs, not longer ago than December of 1967, announced in this house that as a result of these advisory boards and council meetings he had almost completed a draft of Indian Act changes. I submit this was done with an eye to the then expected federal election of 1968. There was a change of course; almost a disregard of the advisory board and council meetings. The minister then embarked upon a program which he called "consultation", designed to begin just prior to the then expected 1968 election.

It seemed to many of the Indian people who had attended these advisory council and board meetings and worked with the minister in preparing something in which they thought they were participating, that their ideas had been scuttled. The Indian people accepted the concept because they wanted consultative meetings. They agreed to start all over again, to put to the minister what they had been saying for years. This culminated in a meeting in Ottawa at the end of April and during the first of May at a national level. The minister went to that meeting and listened, but made no declaration whatsoever except that in respect of the development of ideas and policy that he would make a statement sometime before the end of June. He did so, but at that stage the consultation stopped.

There was no consultation whatsoever with native Indian people about the actual preparation of the document the minister tabled in this house on June 25 of this year, a few weeks ago. Consultation ended when it should have reached its peak; when the crunch was put on and when the real guts of the situation was to be developed. The minister secluded himself with his advisors in whatever private offices he has and developed a policy and program in isolation from the native people, without regard to their feelings or to consultation. The minister has subsequently said the Indian people do not know what they want in this regard; that their opinion is divided.

On April 29 the National Indian Brotherhood, in consort with delegates who were elected to attend that national conference, made a statement to the government of Canada. I will not bother to read it in its entirety, but I want to say they expressed doubts about the course of consultation meetings, and specifically said:

> It has been made abundantly clear, both by the consultations to date and through Indian meetings throughout the land, that the principal concerns of Indian people center around;—

They then list four principles as follows:

> Recognition of the treaties and the obligations imposed by same;
>
> Recognition of aboriginal rights;
> Reconciliation of injustices done by the imposition of restrictions on Indian hunting through the ratification of the migratory birds convention and subsequent federal and provincial legislation;
> Claims commission—It is our opinion that before meaningful consultation on amendments to the Indian Act can take place these four items must be dealt with and a position of mutual understanding and commitment reached.

Those are exactly the points the government seems to have missed or ignored. The manner of implementing these programs is also bringing a halt to a great deal of the development which should have taken place and was expected among the Indian people on the Indian reserves. These Indian people are now reluctant to participate in programs of development under the department in respect of such matters as housing, welfare and grants to assist in the economic development of these areas because these people are fearful of what may happen to these programs if the government proceeds blindly, as has been the case.

Let me refer to the example of the Eel River Bar Reserve in New Brunswick. The Indian band there made an application for $125,000 to the Indian affairs branch of the department, and put up $40,000 of its own money plus additional collateral in the form of $13,000 per year expected revenue the band would receive. The band has now dropped that program for economic development of that reserve because it does not know what will flow from the present conversation the minister is having with the province, or from the direction which has been outlined. Consequently, they feel they have been cheated; that they have been exploited and that the government and the minister have chosen to ignore the fundamentals involved in an Indian affairs policy.

Many Indian people feel that the government went into the consultation process with its mind made up. They feel the government went there to listen but not to heed. The government has consulted but has not heeded, and these native people feel there may have been a basic misunderstanding or a lack of knowledge on the part of the minister and the government as to Indian affairs.

• (3:10 p.m.)

The minister gave an interview to Time magazine following the introduction of the policy statement in this house. In the issue of July 4 we find these words of the minister:

> The more I thought, I realized that the Indians come to the federal government for one reason; because of the colour of their skins.

That is a ridiculously ignorant statement. We are involved here with the rights of people. We are involved here with something that should not have attached to it a condescending remark like that, semi-racist in nature. Surely, the minister knows that the Indian people do not come to the federal government because of the colour of their skin, hair or eyes. They come to the federal government because of our constitution. They come here because the federal government has sole, exclusive jurisdiction over Indians and lands reserved for Indians. That is what the British North America Act says. They come here because of the proclamation of King George III which respected their rights and which successive federal governments have ignored. They come here because the agency representing the government of Canada at that time signed the treaties. They come to the federal government because it has a legal, moral and ethical obligation to deal with their affairs. They do not come here on the basis of the colour of their skin. If that is truly what the minister and the government think, it is the cause of the difficulties and misunderstanding. Part of the program enunciated by the minister is already in effect and is the cause of resentment by the Indian people. The program has been announced and put into effect.

A cause of wonderment on the part of the native Indian people is the fact that we in this house tried to obtain a document headed "Local government on Indian reserves", and were unable to do so. This document was prepared in secret and hidden from the native people. I tried to obtain it in this house. The house made a decision on it by voting. I am not casting any reflection on the decision. I am not entitled, under the rules, to do that in any event. The minister said: Local government on Indian reserves is not my policy. If it is not his policy, why is it in effect? Who is running the department, the minister or the mandarins who work in it? If it is not the government's policy, why is it there? There is also the implementation of the program under the Department of the Secretary of State and the Department of Indian Affairs. They are starting to put into effect the policy announced on June 25.

The Indian people are very much concerned about the declaration that the government will respect what it calls the legal rights of Indians. They look at the Jay treaty and say: We have certain rights, but the Supreme Court of Canada has said the Jay treaty does not apply because the parliament of Canada never endorsed it. Is that the legal right the minister is prepared to accept, that the treaty is invalid? The native Indian people look at the Migratory Birds Convention Act, which they thought preserved their rights, and find that the courts have overruled them. The minister is prepared to endorse the ruling of the courts which has wiped out treaties in a number of instances across this country, treaties concerning health, the medicine chest treaty in the prairies and fishing rights in New Brunswick.

When the minister was asked about the Jay treaty in this house, Mr. Speaker, he said that the people who thought they were covered by that treaty could go to court. Is that the way he intends to respect what the native Indian people believe to be their rights? These matters have caused a great deal of concern among the native Indian people. John MacDonald, Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs, circulated a letter to the employees of the department on June 25, the same day the minister announced his policy. I notice that Mr. MacDonald is sitting in the gallery today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I do not know why hon. members applaud him. In that letter Mr. MacDonald told his employees that they were going to embark upon a new policy. He set out in the letter what the government intended to do. Let me read part of it:

> The government therefore proposes to negotiate with the provinces and arrange with other federal departments for the early transfer of programs and services carried on by this department for the benefit of the Indian people.

The letter refers also to the steps necessary to protect the job positions of the people working in the department, and special steps to deal with the problems of career development. In other words, the program the Minister announced is already being implemented, namely, transferring the programs and services carried on by the department for the benefit of the Indian people. These people have been making life miserable for the Indian people for many years, and now they are being transferred to other departments.

Is this part of the consultation process? The minister has just come back from Nova Scotia where he had meetings, with whom I do not know. Presumably those meetings were to talk about the policy the minister had announced and, hopefully, to change his ideas if they were rejected. At the same time he is doing that he is putting into effect a program which the native Indian people look upon with suspicion. It is fundamental to the whole problem—we have said this innumerable times—in the field of Indian affairs that any program or policy for the Indian people has to be commensurate with their needs and desires. A program or policy should not be developed within the sanctity of the minister's office or by the people working in the department, and imposed from above.

There has been almost universal rejection of this policy by the native Indian people in Alberta, Ontario, New Brunswick and parts of Manitoba; for all I know, perhaps all of Manitoba. In the face of this rejection, the minister still goes blindly on his way like a man compelled by a hidden force, unable to see, unwilling to hear. Let me read what the Indian Association of Alberta said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we are having only one hour of debate, as far as I know, and if not I consent.

Mr. Danforth: Oh, no. It is unlimited.

Mr. Lewis: We are having at least three hours.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house give the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Gilbert: Christian charity!

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying that at least five of the hon. member's colleagues remained in the chamber this afternoon to hear the debate on this matter of public importance. It is refreshing to see the New Democratic party so concerned about this matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Where have you been?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I would remind the hon. member that that matter has been settled.

Mr. Perrault: I made the point simply to indicate that this is a very important question, and I am shocked to find so few members of the New Democratic party present for the debate.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I would ask the co-operation of hon. members. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) has the floor.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has risen on a question of privilege.

Mr. Brewin: The hon. member has put on the record of the house the fact that there are five members of our party in the chamber at this time. I regret to say that his eyesight must be defective because there have been eight, nine or ten members at all times.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, we are perfectly capable of counting. If they were skulking behind the curtain and are now present, then I must withdraw my original statement that only five members were listening.

We heard from the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who, in a rare act of verbal contortionism, has completely reversed the position he adopted on June 25. His party has now incorporated into the list of 5BX exercises the "Skeena flipflop". That is the only way to describe it. Now, we have the hon. member for Skeena posing as the fierce defender of the view that the government has acted precipitately in the matter of revising its policy toward our first citizens, that there has been inadequate consultation, and that the policy is defective.

I think we must remind ourselves that according to Hansard of June 25, at page 10584, the following words were used by the hon. member for Skeena with regard to the announcement made by the minister:

> The hon. member for Peace River and I had the opportunity in 1959, 1960 and 1961 of participating in the joint Senate and House of Commons Committee on Indian Affairs... the report of which committee contained the same ideas and concepts that the minister has now outlined. Even though it has taken some period of time to get a cabinet minister to agree with those concepts, it is still welcomed.

Those were the words which he used. Then, he went on to say that many of his comments must necessarily be vague. Certainly they must necessarily be vague—they had not been worked out. The hon. member said:

> Many of his comments must necessarily be vague, as he is not dealing with this matter in a unilateral sense but in an area of conversation and discussions with the native people and with the provinces.

Now, we hear that there have been inadequate discussions. On June 25, the hon. member said that of course there will be discussions, and there must be discussions. He acknowledged this fact, and he said that naturally the minister cannot have any predetermined position to outline to them. The words which he employs today are at total variance with the statement with which he greeted the announcement of the minister last June 25. At that time he said, as recorded at page 10585 of Hansard:

> The policy statement is a step in the right direction,

He went on to say:

> I think the success of this program depends on two factors: It depends upon the continued acceptance by the government of the views of the native Indian people themselves because they are of primary importance; it also depends upon the speed with which the government puts into effect those accepted views.

I suggest that this was a responsible statement, and I hope the hon. member will come out from behind the curtain before we are finished this afternoon.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): May I say, for the information of the hon. member, that I have been requested to answer the telephone.

Mr. Perrault: He said there had been inadequate consultation. He said that the minister had callously disregarded the views of the Indian people. This must mark the most dramatic conversion since St. Paul was converted on the road to Damascus. On June 25 this hon. member who was speaking for his party sought eagerly to attach himself to very concept advanced in the report on Indian policy, claiming paternity for the child. Today it is different; he rejects the infant and he would abandon it to its fate because he sees some sort of shoddy political advantage. Anybody who goes around the country making statements of the kind he made is irresponsible.

I will quote again from page 10951 of Hansard in which he predicts that there is going to be tribal warfare, turbulence and fury—these are the words he employed. It would be wrong to question the motives of any member in this house, but one can only wonder why the attitude of the hon. member of June 25 has deteriorated into the position he takes today. On July 10, he spoke about a matter of urgent public importance, referring to the almost universal rejection of the policy statement of the minister. He spoke of the manner in which the government has treated the Indians, and the refusal of the government so far to indicate that it is prepared to enshrine in the constitution their aboriginal and hereditary rights. He went on to speak about turbulence, fury, tribal warfare, and the rest. This is not a responsible statement by a member of the House of Commons, regardless of his party. The only word which would apply to this remarkable flipflop, to these verbal pyrotechnics, is disreputable.

What have the members of the New Democratic party been advocating these past few weeks? I have before me some of the words which they have uttered in this house. On September 19, 1968, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) called for self-determination. He said:

> It is about time they were given the right to make more of the decisions affecting their own lives—

On September 23, the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) said:

> —Indian people have the right of self-determination. The implications of this principle are that not only does it give Indian people the full right of integration into the community and society as we know it, but also that it gives them the right to live their own existence as they wish to live it—

Then, we heard from the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on October 28, 1968. He was attacking the idea of paternalism and centralization, saying that more decisions should be made by the Indian people themselves.

Then, on December 17, 1968, we heard the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), again attacking paternalism. He said:

> —in spite of repeated proposals from the natives that they take part in the decisions which affect them.

Then, we heard once again on January 14, 1969 from the hon. member for Winnipeg North who spoke about self-determination. He said:

> —one thing which the Indians want more than anything else is their right as citizens of Canada, and surely they are the original citizens of Canada, to direct and manage their own affairs,—

This is the consistent N.D.P. demand.

Then, we heard from the hon. member for Skeena who has spoken many times on the subject of Indians. On March 6, 1969 he said:

> The Indian Act gave birth in 1867 to a system of paternalism which has been like a fungus growth that unfortunately is still with us today and still growing—
> As long as we have an Indian Act, a special law relating to people with a different cultural inheritance from everybody else, and as long as we have a separate department, we will have discrimination and denials of fundamental human rights.

The hon. member called for the abolition of the Indian Act. He said:

> We in this party have suggested for a long time that the objective of the government and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development must be self-destruction of the department and the minister's position.

These are the statements which have been placed on the record by a party which today sponsors a resolution questioning the motives of the minister and questioning the report which he brought to the house. I ask the house whether or not this is a responsible attitude.

Mr. Lewis: Where is the contradiction?

Mr. Perrault: I can go on and on.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) on a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member says we have been questioning the motives of the minister. The hon. member may be questioning the motives of the minister, but at no time have we suggested that we question his motives. Quite the reverse.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Perrault: I am pleased to hear at least a partial return to a responsible attitude by the party to our left.

These are the suggestions made in the report on Indian policy:

> —this is the right time to change long-standing policies. The Indian people have shown their determination that present conditions shall not persist—
> This government believes in equality. It believes that all men and women have equal rights. It is determined that all shall be treated fairly and that not one shall be shut out of Canadian life, and especially that no one shall be shut out because of his race.

Then, a new policy is advanced in the report, which reads:

> The government would be prepared to take the following steps to create this framework.

It does not say that the government is determined arbitrarily and unilaterally, without consultation, to impose this policy. There is an offer from this government. The government says that this is what they are prepared to do and the report states very explicitly that the measures for implementation of the policy are straightforward. They require discussion, consultation and negotiation with the Indian people, individuals, bands and associations and with provincial governments.

This is a statement by a responsible government, earnestly seeking solutions to a problem which has plagued this nation ever since confederation. Today there has been an attempt, and I suggest it is a very shoddy and disreputable attempt, to create the impression that there is some sort of deliberate policy on the part of this government and those who support it, not to work toward the best interests of the Indian people.

Then, we see in the report, under the heading "The Immediate Steps", the following:

> Some changes could take place quickly. Others would take longer. It is expected that within five years the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would cease to operate in the field of Indian affairs; the new laws would be in effect and existing programs would have been devolved. The Indian lands would require special attention for some time.

These are only approximate targets, and may I remind the house once again that the government has said it would be prepared to hold discussions. This is not the time, I suggest, for any political party in Canada to muddy the waters by suggesting less than worthy motives on the part of the government or anybody else. I suggest that the party sponsoring this resolution should not yield to the temptation to till the fields of misunderstanding. It is easy to say that one does not blame the Indians for going on the warpath in the hope that a few more gains will be made, but time would be better invested working constructively with the Indian people and providing them with full equality in Canadian society. This means reassuring them that there are enough responsible people in this parliament who will ensure that their rights will not be flushed down the drain.

It is incumbent upon a responsible opposition to see to it that the Indian people are told this. In view of all the meetings held with Conservatives, Liberals and others in this house not one member of the house could claim that another member is not interested in the problems of the Indian people. It is unfair and unworthy to suggest that somehow some of the members of this house are trying to get rid of a responsibility that is justly and legally theirs.

Having talked with my associates in the Liberal party, I see in the proposed program possibility for great advances by the Indian people, but only after full consultation as spelled out by the minister in his original statement. The rights that they possess at the present time should, I believe, in no way diminish; and I believe that view is held by every member of the House of Commons.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to make a few comments this afternoon because I was not able to be present in the house when the minister made his statement. However, I did read it with some degree of optimism, though with a number of reservations, and I should like to put these forward in a constructive way.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I have some reservations too.

Mr. Stanfield: I am glad to find a more lively group across the way than was the case yesterday, Mr. Speaker. However, since I am limited to 20 minutes I should like to use my time as constructively as possible.

The contentious part of the minister's proposals concerned the relationships with the government and other groups; on the one hand, relations with the provincial governments, and principally, of course, relations with the Indian people. With regard to relations with the provincial governments, the proposal seems to amount to a transfer of what must be some very expensive functions that are now being performed by Ottawa, functions that it must be the hope of the minister will be improved. However, there is no guarantee that this will in fact happen, because there is no guarantee that a transfer of adequate revenues commensurate with the responsibilities that the minister contemplates handing out to the provinces will be made.

Indeed, the statement made by the minister specifically suggested that the financial contributions of the government over a time will diminish, and then disappear. Such a statement is not likely to be very encouraging to responsible provincial ministers, and consequently not very encouraging to the Indian people.

This, of course, is the same government that promised there would be no more medicare, meaning there would be no more of these unilaterally dictated arrangements with the provinces. Yet clearly this proposal appears to be another announcement of an imposition on the provinces that involves potentially as much expense, and unfortunately as little consultation with the provinces, as was the case with the medicare program.

With regard to the Indian people themselves, the statement of the government very nearly treats as irrelevant the issue of treaty and aboriginal rights which the Indian people consider paramount. The government takes the position that the issue concerns which level of government is to deal with the Indian people. This seems to be the fundamental concern of the government. To the Indian people themselves, one very hot and important issue concerns the rights that they will be able to enjoy as a result of treaties, traditions and other settlements. This matter is one to which there is no easy answer. However, it cannot be ignored, and it is clear that the Indians are very concerned that the government may be trying to ignore it.

In passing, may I say that it has been reported that the proposed trip west to be made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not include a visit among the Indian people, which I think is not exactly reassuring to them. If that report is correct, then I hope the oversight will be corrected.

Here again the government's procedures seem to be very much at fault. There has been a long process of consultation with the Indian people, but in many ways the real question is how much effective consultation was had. Certainly, there is a suspicion among representatives of the Indian people that the government had decided upon its course before the consultation began, and proceeded on that course regardless of what was proposed by the representatives of the Indian people.

Frequently throughout the consultations the question of treaty and aboriginal rights was raised. It was raised again dramatically at the final consultative meeting that was held in Ottawa this spring. No government that is seriously concerned with knowing what the Indian people want could have conducted those consultations and then have produced a report in this form. As well as appearing to ignore the matter upon which the Indian people placed emphasis—perhaps it was not exactly ignored, I do not want to exaggerate the position, but I think it was downgraded—the government focused its atttention on a matter that was raised seldom, if at all, in the nationwide series of consultation meetings. I refer to the proposed transfer of responsibility to the provincial governments.

I want to emphasize my concern about the position in which the Indian people would find themselves if the responsibility for their future welfare and development were transferred to the provinces without a continuing responsibility of some sort being accepted by the government of Canada. We all recognize that many of our Indian peoples have very serious social and economic problems which will require a highly integrated program to overcome, calling not only for co-operation from the Indians themselves but also for a highly co-operative effort on the part of various governments in this country.

In terms of talking about equality and justice, it seems to me a vast oversimplification to assume that total responsibility for the Indians can be turned over to the provinces, particularly without any real assurance of adequate financial support from the federal government. While some of the provinces might be capable of discharging this responsibility, there is no particular reason to believe at this point that all provinces would be capable of discharging it.

The minister's method of introducing policy changes may seem to involve the abolition of the Indian Affairs branch, which as a goal I gather has general approval. I do not hesitate to accept this to the degree that it is capable of achievement, but there is some real doubt that other arrangements will be made that will be adequate. The objections of the Indian people are one indication of the difficulty. As the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said on June 25, as reported at page 10583 of Hansard:

> While the Indian Act and the federal authority have been unpopular, they have also been familiar. Their proposed removal will raise questions and concern about Indian lands and other rights. In some cases the Indian people may not welcome the prospect of having to rely upon provincial authorities.

The predictable reluctance of the provinces to assume responsibilities they feel they cannot afford, and with respect to which the federal government has not made adequate arrangements, constitutes another difficulty. Of course, I appreciate that the Hawthorne report recommended, after extensive study of Indian matters, that the Indian affairs branch should continue in some form. One of my motives in speaking this afternoon is to urge on the federal government the idea that it must continue to accept responsibility and involvement in this area. If the minister accepts that position then I, in turn, cannot accept a program which involves the complete transfer of all responsibilities in these areas to the provinces. I cannot accept the idea that there will be no continuing responsibility of any kind on the part of the federal government and that it will not even ensure that the provinces are dealing adequately with the Indian people.

Yet the minister has proposed, virtually unilaterally, to do away with the Indian Affairs Branch; and we must all face this question, Mr. Speaker. What will the minister do if he cannot make the necessary arrangements and do away with the branch? His statement in this house has virtually destroyed the effectiveness of the Indian affairs branch. There are reports that personnel of the branch, particularly in western Canada, are seeking new employment. There is no doubt that if the branch survives it will bear a stigma which will make it unattractive to potential employees. I suggest that unless the minister in future proves to be a better negotiator than he has been in the past—in fact, unless the government proves to be better at negotiating than in the past—he will find himself in the position of having destroyed the effectiveness of the department without having set up any satisfactory entity to carry on its work. He will not have made any effective, continuing arrangements, Mr. Speaker.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the government's methods of dealing with the provinces have been full of faults. The minister proposes to transfer jurisdiction to the provinces; yet it is becoming increasingly clear that the first official word the provinces heard of this proposal was when they read the white paper. I do not think that is a satisfactory way to launch a program like this, and I do not think it is a satisfactory way to conduct federal-provincial relations. All this makes me wonder, sir, just how successful the minister is going to be in implementing his program.

An attempt is being made to wrap this proposal in a progressive aura and to make it seem a kind of Magna Carta for the Indian people. It is far from being that. This debate will serve a most important function if it reveals the fact that this statement was made in the knowledge that it would probably be unacceptable to the Indian people, and if it reveals that no effort was made to determine whether it would be acceptable to the provinces. In those circumstances, it is no wonder that the document has proved far more popular with the press than with the people and provinces it affects directly.

It would be most unfortunate if an attempt were made to cast the Indian people who protest this document today in the role of those who speak merely in defence of a special interest or to suggest that they are merely protesting the disappearance of special rights and privileges they have enjoyed to date. Such accusations would be unjust and inaccurate. We cannot belittle or dismiss the seriousness of the protest of the Indian people. Reference has been made to threats of violence, and I do not make light of those. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we must face the fact that there has never existed an atmosphere of trust between the Department of Indian Affairs and the people it ought to serve. That atmosphere of distrust was intensified when the government's white paper contained proposals about which consultation did not occur, in effect dismissing representations about treaty and aboriginal rights. We must be honest with each other. I believe there are few more vexing problems in this country than the problem concerning treaty and aboriginal rights which could involve heavy federal expenditures. These are difficult questions of justice and equity which we must consider.

The central concern of the Indian people, and it ought to be our central concern, is that the effect of the minister's statement seems to be to downgrade the importance of this question. I hope the minister will take this opportunity of putting this matter into proper perspective before saying publicly that it has been misinterpreted. The Indian people themselves have made it clear that they are not prepared to discuss the matter with the minister until they have ample opportunity to prepare themselves. I gather the minister is prepared to give an assurance adequate time and resources will be provided to enable them to prepare themselves. I hope the minister will give the necessary assurances in the house this afternoon.

The point of this debate is not to condemn this government for what it has done, although it does seem to have been guilty of trying sleights of hand. The point of this debate is that we want to prevent the government from continuing to take steps which will create a serious atmosphere of suspicion and, perhaps, of disruption. The proposal to achieve equality for the Indian people is not at issue. This is a goal everyone shares. But you do not create equality, Mr. Speaker, by writing on a piece of paper or by making an announcement. You do not create equality by declaring your intention of achieving that state of equality. Equality for the Indian people of Canada requires far more than a transfer of jurisdiction to the provinces. We must face the fact that a transfer of jurisdiction by itself could make economic equality for some Indian people, and especially for those who live in the less wealthy provinces, a much more distant goal. We must recognize the fact that some provinces are in a better position to help the Indian people in terms of encouraging economic self determination, jobs, and the like. There are other provinces which are in a less fortunate economic situation and it would be simply unrealistic to expect them to carry the added burden of services to the Indian people. If there is to be a genuine concern for equality, and I am not prepared to question the minister's motives, it is imperative that the government now move ahead with full consultations with the Indian peoples and the provinces. The government must recognize that progress will be made much more difficult if the consultations are carried out in an atmosphere of distrust on the part of the Indian people and representatives of the provinces.

There have been enough unilateral announcements by the government. We all accept the goals of equity laid down by the minister and I accept his sincerity of purpose. I am disappointed this new effort has been launched in an atmosphere which indicates a failure to consult. I am pleased to learn the minister is now visiting the provinces. I hope he will not try to proceed with a program that simply involves a declaration of intention on the part of the government of Canada to transfer the rights of the Indians to the Provinces.

I hope the minister will settle down to the very serious and prolonged problem of developing a program that will be satisfactory to the Indian people, a program which the provinces would be willing to undertake and for which they will be given the financial resources to enable them to carry out this responsibility.

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in this debate at this time because I have to leave for Vancouver. Perhaps I can make a few remarks, however. This is a very important matter. There are approximately ten reservations in my riding. The reason I am going to Vancouver and the interior of British Columbia is to meet many of these people. I want to know their opinions. I want to know what they think of this particular policy before I make a lot of statements on their behalf.

There have been a lot of misrepresentations and misunderstandings as a result of some of the statements which have been made. A lot of these things that are embraced in the policy are things for which the Indian people have been asking. We have been asking ourselves, are we going to be treated as children for the rest of our lives or are we going to take on the responsibilities of adults? We must accept these responsibilities in the same way that other people do. We want to do these things. We want to take on the responsibilities which other people have. We cannot be treated like children forever. We cannot look upon ourselves as children. We have to participate in all aspects of Canadian life as human beings. I think this particular policy is paying off. It sets out some of the goals to which the Indian people have been aspiring. We have the same aspirations as other people.

Reference has been made to some of the things which are unacceptable. One of the major fears of the Indian people is that there will be a constitutional change which will turn over the responsibility for Indians to the provinces. This is something which the Indian people have feared for a long time. I plead with the minister to look at this matter very carefully, and clarify it so that it will be clearly understood.

Even though there is some fear on the part of the Indian people with respect to turning over the constitutional responsibility with regard to Indians, this does not mean that they do not want provincial services. We want provincial services, but there is another way of doing it. Many people have asked for this, including the North American Brotherhood, of which I have been a member for a very long time, as well as the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia.

The provincial governments are in the best position to provide many services, such as social welfare and education. They are in the best position to provide education because that is their responsibility. It is only right that we obtain our education from the same source as other people. It is not a matter of the federal government abdicating a responsibility. The government is trying to provide the best services possible for the Indian people. On many occasions I have asked the minister to give consideration to giving jurisdiction to the provinces on a function by function basis rather than granting complete jurisdiction to the provinces. This should be done in consultation with the Indian people and with the provinces.

Another program the Indian people have been requesting for a long time is a program of economic development. I hope the minister will clarify some of the present programs for economic developments. I understand that $6 million has already been provided for this economic development program. I hope the minister will spell this out. One of the big difficulties connected with the development of Indian people has been the lack of adequate funds. One of the hang-ups has been the peculiar mortgage position of our land. We have not been able to mortgage our land in the same way as other people. There is an historical aspect to this. As one Indian chief pointed out, the Indian people are afraid that if they have this responsibility, some people will sell their land for a bottle of wine. I do not know whether this will happen, but the Indian people are afraid something like this might happen.

I hope as a result of the announcement of the provision of this $50 million we will see a greater development of Indian reserves across the country. There are some very valuable Indian reserves in this country. Caughnawaga is one of these, as the hon. member who represents that area will tell you. I have heard various estimates of the value of that reserve ranging from $400 million to $800 million. This $50 million program over the next few years will be very, very meaningful to those people. Time is running short. I would like to make more comments but if I do I will miss my flight.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): The last time I spoke in this house, Mr. Speaker, it was with regard to the official languages bill. I said that was one of the most important pieces of legislation which had come before this house. I think I took a positive approach to that bill and I will attempt to take a positive approach to this debate.

The Indian people were the first citizens of Canada. In all their dealings with the white man, both in peace and in war, they have treated us with honour. This is the point at which we should pick up the threads, because I must admit on behalf of the white race that we have let them down in this regard. When you let people down on points of honour, you lose all the way down the line.

I think I speak with some knowledge of the Indian people. My ancestors pioneered the west. My grandfather ran a Hudson Bay Fort. My mother was raised with Indian children because there were no white children in the area. She was the eldest in the family of nine. Both my grandfather and grandmother loved these people. I think that if we, the white people of Canada, can only get that one point across, that we love them the way my grandfather did, the way my mother did and the way I claim I do, then 99.9 per cent of the battle will be won. That is all they really want to know. When I say love them, I mean love on the highest plane. I mean that we have their best interests at heart. And if we have their best interests at heart we will treat them with honour. If we can convince the Indian people that we intend to treat them with honour we have won that battle.

They have always treated us with honour. If we can get them to sit around the council table now, roughly 100 years after most of the treaties were signed, the Indian people will meet us in exactly the same spirit. There have been threats of violence. I will not add anything except to say I would not blame them if they thought that during the next hundred years we were not going to treat them any better than we did in the last 100 years. But I do not think that is the case.

I want to compliment our young minister—after all, there is nothing wrong in being young—on the fact that he has taken the treaties out of the mothballs. Whether he intends to discard them or not I do not know, but I do not think so. I don't think he wants to, and I don't think he will. I agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) that he can expect the fullest co-operation from all sides of the house in arriving at a reasonable agreement on what we can do for these, our people.

I have some personal views on the matter, Mr. Speaker, and if you will rule that I am not veering too far from the narrow confines of the white paper I wish to outline a few of them. First of all, you cannot love people unless you understand them. It is very dangerous to go about such basic things as telling Indians the kind of house they should live in unless you understand the kind of house, in which they want to live. Assuming that we want a house made of sticks and stones, like one of the three little pigs, this does not necessarily mean that Indian people want the same kind of house.

The Indians may want a house made of canvas. They may prefer a good house made of canvas to an evil house made of bad sticks and bad stones. If they want to live like nomadic people, they have a right to do so, the same as we have. When we are tired of living in our highrise apartments, tired of the rat race in our great cities where most of us work 11 months of the year or more, we want to escape and go back to some form of nomadic existence for at least two weeks. We want to live in a canvas house, or one made of aluminum, on wheels. The Indians know that outdoor living is good for the soul and the body. Why should we, in our city-raised splendor, tell them how to live?

If we are going to spend large sums of the taxpayers' money building homes for Indians, for goodness sake let us consult them before we start. We should ask them what they think could be done with X dollars to provide the type of accommodation they want for themselves and their children, the type which fits into their lives, which fits into the kind of cooking arrangements they need. If we do that they will know we love them and they will be ready to take the next step, if they want to, towards our enlightened, civilized way of life.

Religion is a subject too hot to handle for most people, but not for Buffalo Two Horns, which is what the Indians call me. I have two horns and I am going to use them. I speak for the Indians I know on the western plains. They had a wonderful religion. They believed in the Great Manitou, the Great White Spirit. Today we almost have to apologize when we use that name—the Great White Spirit indeed, the Father of Mankind, the Creator of the Universe. They did not think he was dead; they had not buried him. Why should we go about trying to sell them our half-dead God when, left to their own devices, they still believe in the Great White Spirit who made them, who loved them, who made the whole human race, and who still watches over them? If we cannot give them a better God than the one we are peddling in our institutions, we should leave them with the one they have. But I am not one who thinks that God is dead, and I say let the churches join with us in parliament in giving the Indians a live religion in which they can believe, a religion which will help us to love them and make them love us in the way that we want to be loved by them.

In our civilized way of life we have tried to find an answer through labour unions. These have their place. Some people think labour unions have ennobled labour almost to the point of worship. As I say, I think labour unions have their place, but they have not given man fulfilment. They do not give men fulfilment if they contribute to unemployment, if they call strikes the men do not want. Why should we go to the Indians and ask them to accept our standards of labour, or even our standards of wages, if we do not give them the dignity and the type of fulfilment that we ourselves would like to have?

I think it goes without saying that if we ask an Indian to work he certainly has a right to equality of wages with the white man, equality of working conditions, equality of advancement and opportunity. I have worked with these people in the ditches, over the pack trail, paddling canoes, and I have fought with them in the army. In every respect and in every endeavour in which they have competed with me I have found them my equal, and in a great many cases out in a natural environment have found them vastly my superior.

Some people would interpret the health provision clauses of the Indian treaties as meaning that we offered the Indians only the Hudson Bay Company's medicine box. But I think we must agree that we offered them whatever small advances we have made and will make in medicine. If the white doctor at Fort Garry was able to help them get through the fever, or could mend the bones of their children we were glad that they got that service. We were glad because we claimed we loved them, because we claimed we wanted to live in peace and harmony with them.

When the Indians signed treaties with us they did not later attack us and burn our wagon trains, as is usually depicted in Hollywood movies. In fact at the very time we most needed peace and quiet throughout the western plains, they remained peaceful and stayed on the side of law and order. In fact some of them were accused of being white-man lovers when they folded their arms and said, "There is nothing good for black, red or white in murdering each other." When we offered them health I believe we offered them both mental health and physical health. Here I mean equality of health services, the same as equality of work and equality of religion. If we are to put first things first then mental health starts with spiritual health. You cannot have a happy mind unless you have a happy spirit.

So we must proceed with this religion of love and faith. We must give them that. We must give them mental health, self respect, love and brotherhood. Then they will be ready to clean up their lives and their bodies. I venture to say that the people of the Indian race even today, neglected as they are, would pass physical tests equally as well as their white brethren. When we speak of health, of course, we mean economic health. We mean food and lodging; it is all of a piece. When we speak of integration what do we really mean? Do we really mean that we will try to make white men or Canadian citizens out of the Indians? I say to the minister and to parliament that if by integration we mean we will try to give these people the equality, fraternity and opportunity which every Canadian citizen demands and expects, and which every Canadian citizen should have, then I say let us integrate them. But if it is our intention to make poor white men out of the Indian people then I say let them alone; they are better off starving on their own Indian reserves than living with people who do not want to give them the equality, opportunity and fraternity which is the birthright of every Canadian.

The program which is involved here is a large one. If my figures are correct there are approximately a quarter of a million people of native blood in this country. They are increasing in numbers faster than any other group of people. Fifteen years from now there will probably be one million. I believe these people are willing to meet us more than half way. As I read this statement it would seem to represent positive action on the part of the government. If we can forget our petty differences here and work together to help the Indian, and above all teach him that we do in fact love him as a Canadian, it may well be that long before 100 years from now these people will be integrated, as I said before, as full fledged Canadian citizens. This parliament may well be proud that today, this week, this session, we have taken the first step which is long overdue.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, this debate this afternoon arises from the position in which the minister is now in respect of his dealings with the Indian people and the provincial governments. I think we realize, however, that it also arises out of his statement made in this house not too long ago. In other words, the current situation flows from that statement and we cannot, I submit, have a meaningful discussion unless we base it on that statement. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), who is so glib, made some comment on the statement made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) following the minister's announcement. I should like to make one or two references to just what was said on that occasion by the hon. member for Skeena. His remarks are reported at page 10584 of Hansard for June 25.

> Some of the ideas contained in the minister's statement are good. Some of them are not so good. A great many of them are rather vague. I do not say this in an unkind way, and I am sure the minister does not take it in an unkind way.

A little farther on, we find this:

> I submit it is extremely important that in the negotiations, discussions, or whatever they may be that the minister will have with the provincial governments, the negotiations or discussions proceed only at a speed commensurate with the desires of the Indian people in the provinces concerned.

I think those remarks bear a very close resemblance to some of the remarks made a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand). I point this out in an effort to make clear to Your Honour and the members of this house that the hon. member for Skeena has tried to show, as he said in his remarks earlier today, that he does not seek to enter into this discussion in any sort of a partisan way. He feels he has some responsibility, as one of the members in this house who comes from an area where there are a great many of these people, to try to understand and voice in this house the real thoughts of the Indian people.

I understand that the minister's dilemma, as the motion moved by the hon. member suggests, arises not so much from what is in the statement but from what is not in it. It arises in part from some of the clarifications of the minister's statement that have been elicited as a result of subsequent questioning in the house and the statements that have been issued by the Indian people themselves. The hon. member for Skeena, quoting from the document issued by the Indian people here in Ottawa prior to the minister's statement, outlined what the principal omissions were. I think the minister confirmed that those are the omissions from his statement.

I am sure the minister will recall that on June 26 a number of questions were asked, initiated by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). At one point I asked the minister the following question:

> Does the statement which terms aboriginal claims to land as being unrealistic and not capable of being dealt with specifically represent a fixed government policy, or is this merely an idea which has been put forward for discussion and negotiation with the Indian people?

The minister's introductory statement was couched in many honeyed words indicating that these were simply the ideas of the government which were open to discussion. Therefore, it was difficult to know what was fixed government policy and what was open for discussion. This was the reason I asked this question of the minister. In reply, the minister had this to say:

> The government acknowledges the legal rights of the Indians and the rights derived from legal documents. As for the other rights they are the same as those of the Canadian citizens.

Any member of this house who participated in the earlier debates on the subject of the establishment of a claims commission cannot be unaware of the fact that when we start talking about Indian rights that are contained only in legal documents we are talking about a very narrow segment of the whole question of their aboriginal rights.

The statement of the minister, so far as he is concerned, may seem quite legitimate. The outrage that has been expressed by Indian spokesmen since the minister made his statement results from the fact the Indian people did not have a chance to look at it. On that same day the minister made the following statement in reply to a question concerning the appointment of a commissioner:

> —but the appointment of a commissoner rests solely with the government which alone is authorized to appoint one.

• (4:20 p.m.)

As far as I am concerned this is the attitude which goes to the nub of the matter. This is basically why there is unrest among the Indian people and dissatisfac ion with the minister. He has continued to insist that this question can be dealt with solely within the normal authority of the government of Canada. While it may be true that the kind of policy statement the minister prepared is normally a proper function of the government of Canada, it is not of much use in this regard. It is similar to other statements of policy announced as a result of decisions made by the cabinet in the privacy of the cabinet chamber. We accept this fact because we recognize the validity of the proper exercise of the authority of the Crown in this parliament. I submit that what the minister has failed to understand, and what the government across the way has consistently failed to see as a result of the discussions we have had on claims commission bills, is that when we get into this particular area in respect of the rights of people in what is now Canada, we have to go beyond the normal terms of reference if we are to consider this question in any realistic and meaningful way. As a result, I can understand at least in part the reaction of one of the younger, but in my opinion most responsible, Indian representatives here in Ottawa with whom I had a conversation the day following the minister's statement. This Indian told me that the young Indians are going to be very bitter about this whole matter. He said there are going to be riots. I suggested to him that he might agree with me that riots were pretty stupid. He gave me a questioning look until I added that, usually they are caused by someone else's stupidity.

I submit that if unfortunately situations of that kind develop, the responsibility will rest fairly and squarely upon those of us who sit in this parliament at this time. They will result because of our own stupidity and because of our failure to recognize that we are dealing with something that goes beyond the normal confines of the jurisdiction of this parliament. We have to look at this problem in broader terms than we look at normal questions of Canadian policy. Unless and until we are prepared to recognize that fact, the so-called Indian problem in this country will never be solved. To me this is the nub of the whole matter, and this is why I feel sorry, like my colleague the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) for the present occupant of this difficult position. We both have a very kindly feeling toward him. So far, at least, he has not appeared to grasp this point, nor have his colleagues in the government.

Let me go back to the remarks I made during a debate we had a week or so before the minister made his statement, during which I said I was hopeful but a little skeptical on the basis of the past experience with government, that there would be something in the statement recognizing the principles I have been trying to outline. On July 4 I addressed a question to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as recorded at page 10842 of Hansard for that day:

> Since the policy announced by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in respect of future treatment of Indian people is based on the concept that white is right, is the Prime Minister considering withdrawing Canada's sanctions against Rhodesia?

Mr. Speaker ruled the question out of order on the ground that it contained an allegation. I do not seriously quarrel with the ruling of the Chair but, as everyone who has been a member of this chamber knows, that is perhaps the only way one can attempt to make a point in this house. I did not hear the Prime Minister make a reply to the question and he did not rise in his place, but Hansard has reported him as having said:

Not only is it not in order; it is very low.

I fully admit it was not a nice question. In fact, it was a nasty question and it was deliberately nasty. I feel it was justified under the circumstances. I want now to raise this question about just who and what is low. The point I am really attempting to make, in the hope that the Prime Minister might give some thought to whether the government of Canada might be prepared to go a bit beyond the normal approach accepted in this country, is that we should recognize that the jurisdiction of the Crown does not cover the entire situation. We have all taken an oath of allegiance to Her Majesty, but we know that the prerogatives of the Crown exercised in the right of Canada do not completely encompass this whole question of rights due to the Indian people of this country.

This establishes the relationship. I hope I can make it clear that I am not talking about any form of narrow racism, nor was I when I put that question in those terms. What I was trying to get at was the idea that the policy statement of the minister was based on a concept of white colonial supremacy, which is what brought Canada into being. What I was trying to get across was that in other parts of the world, the initial colonial powers have been divesting themselves of a colonial policy. Because the British North America Act and the Statute of Westminster of 1931 made Canada a sovereign power in the ordinary context of the term, we have this heritage in our midst. I believe there was a statement made by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom the other day which bears this out. We have a responsibility in Canada to do what Britain did in India.

I can remember as a young Canadian being quite smug and complacent, and one of those who was willing to go to great lengths to do something about Britain freeing these other people called Indians. Down through the years we have been very smug and virtuous about the failings of colonialism and how Britain should free the peoples in Africa and in her other colonies. It has been very easy to get that kind of reaction. We have listened to a lot of statements in this house in the last year or so about the problems of Nigeria. Unless we are prepared to approach this matter of dealing with the Indian people with the same spirit we expect Britain, France, Germany or any of the other Imperial powers to approach that question of freeing the peoples of Africa and Asia, we do not really understand the problem. If we are going to understand our Indian people we must first try to understand ourselves, understand what we are and recognize how we came to be.

Some of my ancestors came to this continent in the 1600's. I have colonial blood in my veins, like most hon. members in the chamber, at least those who are not in what is sometimes referred to in other discussions as the third group. If I have learned anything in the last few years from sitting down and talking to Indian people, it is that with humility I should look at myself in the mirror and try to understand what I am before I can hope to understand what they are. I submit this is the whole point behind the motion of the hon. member for Skeena. The hon. member moved his motion in the hope that the minister having moved to the point in time where he now is, may be willing to recognize this concept in his approach to the question of aboriginal rights and rights to land, particularly in a province like British Columbia where we negotiated no treaties with the Indian people and therefore there are no legal documents. It is our hope that the minister will approach the problem in this way. For this reason we thought it desirable to have this debate this afternoon.

I submit, as I submitted when we had a discussion on Indian matters a week or so before the minister made his statement, that we are at a turning point. The Indian people have re-awakened, as peoples are re-awakening in many parts of the world and in certain provinces of this country. We now have the opportunity to sow the seeds of peace and brotherhood, or we can perpetuate the growth of the seeds of bitterness, which the minister must have experienced, as a result of his recent policy statement.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, over the hundred years since confederation the government of Canada has made many fundamental mistakes in the treatment of the group of people in this country whom we sometimes call, euphemistically, our first Canadians. However, I do not think there has been any greater mistake than the premature policy statement the minister made a short time ago. I was startled as I read it. I have been bombarded by telegrams, briefs and personal letters from Indians in every part of this country, and obviously, their reaction was the same as mine. It is all the more incomprehensible because the government had achieved a dialogue with the Indian people of Canada. There had been gradually built up over the past few years a basis for understanding and mutual respect which gave promise that at long last the government would produce a policy, approved by the parliament of Canada, that would overcome the grave mistakes to which I have referred.

Just to review the matter briefly, the fundamental error, of course, in the treatment of our first Canadians was the establishment of the reservation system, or the ghetto system, which destroyed the Indian way of life and unfortunately, by the very nature of ghettoism, made it impossible for them to become a part of the developing Canadian way of life. This created a situation wherein our Indians, who have a proud culture and heritage, became a marginal people. They were neither Indians nor Canadians; they were subject to discrimination and isolation, with the result that up until about two decades ago they were often referred to as a vanishing people. The only reason they were vanishing was that they were being decimated by disease by reason of many years of neglect.

The government of Canada at long last accepted its responsibility to our Indian citizens and in the past two decades, rather than being a vanishing people the Indian population of Canada has become one of the fastest growing segments of the great Canadian mosaic. There has been progress, as I say, in other areas over the past two decades. For example, just ten years ago the Indians received the fundamental right of citizenship in this country, the vote. Just as recently as that a new educational approach was adopted whereby it was possible for at least the children of our Indian citizens to break through the barrier of segregation on the reservation ghettoes and attend school with other Canadian children in the normal community situation in this country. As recently as this there has been an attempt to encourage Indian citizens living on reservations to accept more and more responsibility for handling their own affairs, in the hope that eventually the reserves will become self-governing communities on much the same lines as normal municipal organizations.

In the midst of this progress toward the assumption of full citizenship and all the rights pertaining thereto, the minister arouses a storm of protest by his premature, arbitrary announcement which has come under debate in the house this afternoon. The situation is quite different from that which used to exist. As a result of the granting of the universal franchise to Indian citizens they have become more keenly aware of their rights and responsibilities. The new educational process has produced a generation of leaders who are no longer content to sit by and be regarded as nonentities to be manipulated by the representatives of the Great White Father. In other words, paternalism which was the curse of the reservation system has long ago gone by the board. This new leadership is represented by men whose names have now become well known in public affairs in Canada, particularly the presidents of the various provincial brotherhoods and the president of the National Indian Brotherhood.

Just a month ago there was a major breakthrough in the province of Manitoba. This breakthrough in the area of economic responsibility was achieved by Chief Dave Courchene, who is one of the prominent, capable leaders of the Indian community today. The provincial government agreed to make it possible for Indian communities themselves to have full responsibility for community development programs in the province.

The lack of wisdom in the minister's premature announcement is manifest by the fact that there has been universal condemnation on the part of these newly emerged responsible Indian leaders of the announcement that has been made. There has been failure to consult in detail or, worse still, it has been the attitude of the government and of the Indian Affairs branch to completely ignore consultation that has been taking place over the past few months. It almost goes back to the situation that occurred a year ago which caused so much confusion and consternation among the Indians and became a cause célèbre across the nation when the government decided to arbitrarily remove long standing medical benefits without any preliminary consultations with the Indians themselves. The government backed down from its decision, the breach was healed as a result of special meetings and consultations, and this seemed to have been a salutary lesson for the government.

However, the same mistake is now repeated, unbelievably, inexplicably and incomprehensibly, by the minister. The announcement he made—and this has been pointed out by other speakers this afternoon—ignores the fundamental issue of aboriginal treaty rights, the land claims, the hunting rights, and so on, subjects that have been discussed ad nauseam in this house and also by the Indians themselves. The responsible leaders of the Indians will not be satisfied until these fundamental rights, which have been long ignored by successive governments of Canada, are dealt with. Perhaps the greatest error of all was the setting aside of something that had been promised by successive governments, including this government, namely the setting up of a long delayed land claims commission which would be able to deal in an impartial and judicial manner with the fundamental rights of our Indian people. This has raised once again the accusation which appears in the excellently documented briefs of the National Indian Brotherhood and the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood that the white man is once again speaking with forked tongue. The basis of confidence and understanding that had been gradually established over the recent years of negotiation, and a more positive attitude toward the problem, have been destroyed unfortunately in one fell swoop by the arbitrary announcement of the minister.

Perhaps the government should be reminded once again that it can no longer unilaterally impose its will on the Indian people of Canada. Their fundamental rights have been ignored far too long. There is the matter of cultural survival which arises from the policy announcement of the minister. The situation has been aggravated by the government's own attitude of confrontation on these matters of fundamental rights. I think the most fundamental aspect of the minister's announcement is its complete failure to take into consideration the constitutional situation as it relates to our Indian population. It is constitutionally impossible to pass laws in this house conferring special treatment on Indians as Indians except under federal jurisdiction.

In other words, the minister's announcement that he is going to transfer responsibility to the provincial governments rather abruptly in a short period of five years is in complete disagreement with the constitutional provisions which cover our Indian population under section 91 (24) of the B.N.A. Act. This section gives the exclusive grant of authority to the federal government in Ottawa, and only the federal government can single out the Indians as Indians and confer special benefits on them in that capacity. Provincial governments are quite free to give special treatment to any number of other special groups in our society. It can extend all manner and kind of services to the Indians so long as it is done in a way that does not recognize Indians as Indians. But the moment those provincial governments try to help the Indian people as such—and it is up to them to decide of course—they are legislating unconstitutionally. The tragedy is that the minister's announcement completely ignores this basic fact.

There is no way in which this government can ensure that our special obligations to the Indian people are carried out without doing one of three things: First, amending the distribution of powers in the B.N.A. Act; second, delegating administration of federal legislation to provincial agencies which should now be named, and should have been named long before this generalized statement was made; and, third, carrying out these responsibilities themselves through a new and re-invigorated Indian affairs branch in full and complete consultation with the Indian people. I submit that the latter is the only honourable course and the only constitutional way that is open to the government at the present time. Unfortunately, it now seems that this government is in the process of completely shattering its own Indian affairs branch. After some years of painful rebuilding, after taking on some of the most dedicated public servants of the country, this government has, by its latest action, destroyed the only administrative vehicle left to it which might have been capable of rendering a measure of justice to the Indian people. This is the point that is raised in the briefs that have been submitted by the National Indian Brotherhood and the one that has come into my hands as a member from the province of Manitoba from the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood over the signature of Chief David Courchene. Here is what the chief has to say on the point:

> —when our opinions are ignored, when we are to be bargained over in federal-provincial negotiations like cattle at an auction mart—

They feel they have no other recourse than to protest. The brief goes on:

> The just society that Mr. Trudeau alludes to must be based on mutual respect, mutual consideration, mutual understanding, integrity and good faith. This document, this policy, does not reflect any of this. More important it ignores one fundamental fact that is inescapable and that is that if Indian people are to become equal citizens of this country it must be because they want to, not because they are told to. Mr. Chrétien's policy gives us little reason to want to.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Perhaps I can make an aside in the middle of Chief Courchene's quotation. The point is that the government has made an arbitrary announcement. It has ignored the recommendations of the various Indian leaders and communities across the country that have resulted from the recent consultations.

In fact, the government has repudiated the policy that it has been talking about over the last few years in this house. The government has said that a new Indian Act was going to emerge from these consultations, that this Indian Act would be an Indian Act in fact as well as in name. As has been pointed out, the present Indian Act was an enactment of the attitudes of the white community to the Indian population. We were assured over the past two or three years that the new act would emerge only after long, continued and very careful consultation with the Indian community. These consultations have been carried out.

A Minister without Portfolio was appointed to carry on these negotiations, and he established an excellent rapport with the Indian community. This responsibility was suddenly removed from him by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when a disagreement developed between the minister of Indian affairs and the Minister without Portfolio. I suppose it was a result of that disagreement that the government rushed pell mell into making an ill-conceived announcement of this kind.

Let me continue the quotation from Chief Courchene because I think it is fundamental to the issue:

> I am calling together the Indian leaders in Manitoba—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member as his time has expired. If he wishes to pursue his remarks, he can do so with the unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale: May I just complete the quotation from Chief Courchene because I think it is basic to the argument:

> I am calling together the Indian leaders in Manitoba to discuss the statement in depth. It is our intention to prepare a brief that will contain realistic alternatives to social disaster.
> We will not meekly accept cultural genocide—we will marshal support from all sectors—we will fight.

That is the opinion of the Indian leaders themselves, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), in one of his typically partisan speeches, quoted extensively from statements made in this house by my colleague, the member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and myself, each of which purported, in his opinion, to express a position that was completely contrary to that which we are taking today. Nothing that we said in the quotations to which the hon. member referred is at variance with our criticism of the statement made by the minister.

We maintain that Indians must be first class citizens equal with all other Canadian citizens. We have said that Indians are entitled to be treated as equals, that separate education and health and welfare facilities for Indians are wrong. I said on one occasion, and I repeat now, that just as the United States Supreme Court has ruled that separate but equal educational facilities for Negro citizens are not equal because they are separate, so must separate educational facilities for Indians be considered not equal to the educational facilities of other Canadian citizens. I personally look forward to the day when educational facilities for Indians will be administered by the provinces, as is the case with educational facilities for other citizens.

We have said that the Indians are entitled to see an end to the paternalism that has been so characteristic of the Indian affairs branch. I hope to see the day when the Indian affairs branch as we have known it, and more sadly as the Indians have known it, will disappear. I make no apology for saying this. But none of these things can take place unless and until the Indian people themselves want them to take place and are prepared to give their co-operation and support. Even if we know that opposition on the part of the Indians to a particular proposal is wrong, we cannot impose the proposal upon the Indians. Obviously, if we really believe in consultation and co-operation with the Indians, in letting the Indians make the major decisions on how to improve their living conditions, then we must oppose the method that the minister has in good faith used in bringing forward his white paper.

I am going to put on record the fact that there is almost unanimous rejection by the Indian people of Canada of the white paper that has been brought forward by the minister. I should like to quote from some telegrams I have received and which have been received by the leader of our party. I am sure the minister has also received them.

The first one is addressed to me and is from the president of the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood, Dave Courchene, to whom the hon.

member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) referred:

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development announced a new policy on Indian affairs yesterday. As an organization we totally reject the policy as outlined in the statement.

The next telegram is from the president of the Indian Association of Alberta and reads:

The Indian Association of Alberta rejects the policy paper enunciated by the Honourable Minister John Chrétien. Our association fully supports the position taken by the National Indian Brotherhood—

Our association is appalled by the fact that the policy statement of the federal government was written in isolation from the Indian people of Canada without any consideration whatsoever of the issues most sacred to them.

Another telegram that I received from the Fraser district bands representative reads:

Delegates representing the bands and band councils of the Fraser district meeting, Vancouver, B.C. June 26 and 27 request that no further action be taken in the implementation of the Indian policy white paper dated June 25 until there have been consultations with band representations on the same manner as for the revision of the Indian Act.

Another one from four chiefs in British Columbia reads:

We the four chiefs of Hobbema reject the policy statement of the federal government in support to position taken by the National Indian Brotherhood.

Chief Nor Yellowbird
Chief Same Currie
Chief James Bull
Acting Chief Maurice Wolfe

I am sorry that the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) had to leave the chamber because I have a telegram signed by the president of the North American Indian Brotherhood of British Columbia, of which he is a member. The telegram reads:

We, the undersigned wish to make the following statements: 1) It is quite evident that the new "white" paper policy made by the federal government is a complete "sell out" of the Indian birthright as the first citizens of Canada.

A little further on the telegram reads:

• (5:00 p.m.)

The new policy does not spell out legal guarantees in terms of lands, education, health, welfare, hunting, fishing and usufructuary rights of the Indians of Canada.

Here is another telegram from the chairman of the Fraser District Bands. It reads in part:

Delegates representing the bands and band councils of the Fraser District meeting Vancouver B.C., June 26 and 27 request that no further action be taken in the implementations of the Indian policy white paper dated June 25 until there have been consultations with band representations on the same manner as for the revision of the Indian Act.

The National Indian Brotherhood, the representatives of which represent all the major Indian areas in the provinces, issued a statement on June 26, 1969, and I want to spend a few minutes reading from it. It is signed by W. Dieter, Chief of the National Indian Brotherhood; D. Courchene, Vice President of the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood; P. Doubois, Director of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians; P. Paul, Director of the National Indian Brotherhood of Victoria, British Columbia; A. Deslisle, President of the Association of Quebec Indians; W. Nadjiwan, Director of the National Indian Brotherhood and the President of the Union of Ontario Indians; J. Snow, Secretary of the Indian Association of Alberta; L. Stevenson, Director of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians; J. Pete, Chairman of the Saskatchewan Native Development Fund, and M. Bellegarde, Chairman of the National Native Communications Society, Ottawa. That is a pretty impressive list and, for the next few minutes, I shall read from the statement. I quote:

—in their present form, the policy proposals put forward by the Minister of Indian Affairs are not acceptable to the Indian people of Canada ... We know it was not the intent of the new policy but we fear the end result of the proposal will be the destruction of a nation of people by legislation and cultural genocide ... an essential first step in developing a new approach to the so-called Indian problem would be to honour the existing obligations; the outstanding promises and commitments made to the Indian people—

At all consultations across Canada the Indian people expressed concern over the abrogation of their Treaty rights by the Migratory Birds Convention Act and Regulations—

At all consultation meetings the Indian people expressed a desire to take on greater responsibility in running their own affairs. Yet the new policy will have the affairs of Indian people run by still another bureaucratic structure—

It is apparent to us that while there was a show of consultation, neither the Minister nor his Department really heard and understood the Indian people—

The policy statement was prepared unilaterally. There was no negotiation with Indian people, nor was any part of the policy discussed with Indian people while the Minister's office was preparing it—

The policy mentions a Claims Commission and a Commissioner to be named soon. Will we be consulted as to the make-up of this commission or will there be a unilateral appointment by government?

Since that statement was made, the minister has answered that question in precisely the way the native Indian people did not want it answered. As my colleague for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) has pointed out, who the commissioner is to be and what his terms of reference are to be will be decided by the government. In other words, the government is to treat our Indians exactly as it has treated them for the past 100 years. The great White Father is to make his decision and the Indian people must like it or lump it. The minister who has displayed good intentions is now shown in the paternalistic and bureaucratic light in which his predecessors have been shown. I continue quoting:

> Throughout the consultation period we re-iterated that the Government must afford constitutional recognition of existing Treaties and obligations at which time the Indian people would meet in good faith with the government to clarify the meaning and intent of existing agreements.

Nowhere in the minister's statement was there any indication that the government had the slightest intention of dealing with basic treaty rights which Indians consider were spelled out many years ago. I continue quoting:

> The Minister's policy statement appears to be a departure from the year's consultations. We view this as a policy designed to divest us of our aboriginal, residual and statutory rights. If we accept this policy, and in the process lose our rights and our lands, we become willing partners in cultural genocide. This we cannot do.

I submit that nothing said in this house by any hon. member at any time will contradict the truth of the statements I have just read. I hope the minister realizes that consultation does not mean simply listening politely to representatives of Indian peoples, as the minister and his officials have done. It does not mean the minister, after listening, will make a unilateral decision, as has happened in the past. In a participatory democracy, about which the Prime Minister spoke eloquently during the election campaign, people have the right, not only to be heard but to participate in final decisions affecting their lives and welfare. The record is clear. The government has not adopted this kind of approach. All too often in the past the Minister, in the final analysis, has consulted his departmental officials and adopted their views. All too often he has embarked on a policy which did not meet the needs and wishes of the Indians themselves. It is they, after all, who are important and it is they who have the right to say what their future shall be. The minister is a reasonable man with good intentions. I urge him to adopt policies leading towards real consultation. They are the only policies we can really tolerate in the sort of participatory democracy the Prime Minister has spoken about in the past.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, before the minister begins his remarks I wonder, notwithstanding what may be the attitude of the Christian member for Renfrew and Lanark (Mr. McBride), whether hon. members would be agreeable to allowing more than 20 minutes for the minister to complete his remarks. He ought to be given all the time he needs and I think the 20 minute limitation ought to be suspended.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I thank every hon. member who has contributed to this debate which, in many instances, has been rewarding. It is refreshing to realize that the members of all parties in the house consider our goals to be the right ones. The problem seems to lie in how we are to implement our plans and how we are to discuss this matter with the Indian people of Canada.

One thing that stands out after a careful review of statements made by Indian leaders and by hon. members in this debate is that many have not read carefully the government's statement. In this connection the first point I wish to make is that the government's statement was a proposal. May I quote from the foreword, which is as follows:

> In the pages which follow, the Government has outlined a number of measures and a policy which it is convinced will offer another road for Indians, a road that will lead gradually away from different status to full social, economic and political participation in Canadian life. This is the choice.

• (5:10 p.m.)

I quote again from the foreword:

> The government commends this policy for the consideration of all Canadians, Indians and non-Indians, and all governments in Canada.

What the government was doing in issuing this statement was putting forward its view after having been in consultation with Indians for over a year, having listened to what they considered to be the evils and the faults of the present system and having formed its own view in the same connection. The government's view which was incorporated in the policy statement, was deeply influenced by everything that the Indian people have been saying about the Indian Act, about the department about their separate status, about discrimination, not only in the period of consultation to which I have referred, but for many years.

The government's view, of course, also arose out of an analysis of the merits of the situation in each of these particulars. It so happened that the results of this analysis coincided almost exactly in every instance with the views the Indian representatives had been expressing for years. However, the point which appears to have been missed is that the government is offering it as a view, a proposal, something upon which the consultations will now take place. The government considered that it had the duty to put forward proposals for public debate by the Indian people and by all the people of Canada. The language of the policy statement was carefully drawn to make this point.

Again, I quote from the document on page 6:

> The government believes that the framework within which individual Indians and bands could achieve full participation requires:

There follows the six points which indicate the government's view of the principles involved, followed immediately by this sentence:

> The government would be prepared to take the following steps to create this framework.

Following this are the four steps which the government would be prepared to take if, following consultations and public debate in Canada, these seemed to be the appropriate things to do. Similar references can be found throughout the document, but the emphasis is on consultations and participation of the Indian people themselves in the development and implementation of the proposed policy. Reference is also made to financial support to Indian organizations so that they may have the capacity to fulfil this role. In general, the whole thrust of the paper is the offering of a policy for consultation and debate.

Another misapprehension which seems to have arisen is that the negotiations and arrangements may be pressed too fast. The five year period that is mentioned in the statement is, I think, the key to this concern. Here again, however, a careful reading of the document will indicate that this is not a firm deadline. The actual language is as follows:

> The government hopes to have the bulk of the policy in effect within five years.

Obviously this is not a hard and fast matter. It is a hope. If, in fact, it cannot be realized, it will not be realized. This apprehension has also been linked with the subject of land, which is probably the most sensitive area to Indian people—and appropriately so. Many have assumed that the five year period implies some distribution of land to individual Indian people within that period. Nothing could be further from what is proposed.

In the item under "immediate steps" in the document on page 6 where we talk about our hope that within five years we could phase out that part of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development we state, and I quote:

> Indian lands would require special attention for some time. This process of transferring control to the Indian people would be under continuous review—

What we tried to indicate was that we saw the land question as one taking many years and that the Indian people ultimately would assume their rights in this respect. The present system of land control has satisfied no one. It has been under attack for years and the government agrees with these attacks. The system is paternalistic in the extreme. What we seek to do is to eventually transfer the lands of which the Indians now have de facto possession. What has been suggested is not the distribution of land to individuals but the transfer in law to the bands of Indian lands, now controlled by them, subject to the legal requirement of the minister's consent.

We seek to do it under the proposed Indian Lands Act which would have within it a number of protective devices which would ensure that the nature of Indian ownership of land would only change if a considerable majority of the Indian owners so desired and would additionally protect minority rights within these communities and, finally, probably have some novel provisions found in legislation in other countries to control transactions between Indians and non-Indians, should those arise in the future by provision for court review if either the Indian vendor or the band felt that the transaction was not a fair and proper one.

These are the matters upon which we want to consult with the Indian people: Do they want legal ownership of their own lands? Do they want to be free of ministerial supervision? What kind of protection do they want? What other provisions may there be of which we have not thought?

To sum up, I feel that there has not been a complete reading of the government's policy statement by many, and that many of the misapprehensions would have been found to have been answered within the document. It is a proposal for consultation. It happens that the government's view reflects much of what has been said in recent consultations by Indian people and many members in this house, including those who have been prominent in this debate and as recently as the day on which this policy was announced. As I recall it, the comment of members opposite on that occasion was that the government's policy was not very novel, but that it was what had been advocated by Indians for years. We do not intend to rush, the Indian lands question is one which we have contemplated from the outset and would take a number of years to work out in consultation with the Indian people.

I urge the house and all Canadians, Indians and non-Indians, to look again at the language in the foreword of the policy statement in which we concluded, and I will repeat it:

> The government commends this policy for the consideration of all Canadians.

It is our sincere hope that everyone will take time to read the policy statement carefully. We will be involved in extensive consultations with the Indian people in the years ahead. We want to offer the Indian people a very real opportunity to participate in shaping their future.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Finally, it is quite clear that the more generalized concerns about Indian rights and treaties are clouding consideration of the specifics of the government's proposed policy. We believe that the specifics of our proposed policy have to be considered for their value to Indian life today and in the future. It is important that the future not be sacrificed by undue concentration on the past. However, we have not neglected the past. We understand and appreciate the feeling of the Indian people with regard to possible past injustices in regard to treaties and, as indicated in the statement, we propose to appoint a commissioner who, in the quality of his person, will satisfy everyone as to his objectivity to meet with Indian representatives and any others. He will consider these matters very carefully and make his recommendations to the government as to what action the government might take in this regard.

I would, therefore, urge the Indian people to make use of this means of putting forward their views and feelings with respect to their treaty rights so that a greater understanding may be had by the government and by all Canadians, but not to let this interfere with getting on with providing a better way of life for Indians today and in the future. This is a very serious and important problem that the country faces and I hope that no one in this house or in the country will take a narrow or partisan approach to it. Hon. members have spoken about consultation, and have said we should have more consultation about the implementation of this policy. I agree, and I point out that this is mentioned in the policy statement that I made. It is clear that we want to consult.

I have been visiting some of the provinces. I want to meet representatives of the provincial governments at this stage, not to negotiate but to give them information and to reply to the questions that they wish to raise. I may say they have many questions that they want to ask. I have met with some representatives of the Indians and have listened to them. They have put many specific questions to me and I have tried to reply. I am planning to visit all of the provinces within the next few weeks for information purposes.

We are not rushing anything or anyone. We want to reassure the Indians on the land question. It was alleged that we wanted to see the Indians sell their land for two bottles of wine, or something like that. This is not so, Mr. Speaker. We want to give them what every other Canadian has in this country, namely, the right to make decisions for themselves.

At present Indians have to seek permission from the Minister of Indian Affairs if they wish to lease their lands. I do not think they should be obliged to do so. I feel very strongly about this matter. The procedure they must follow is through the district agency and on to the department in Ottawa, to my desk, and then back again from there. Sometimes this procedure takes weeks and weeks, even months and months for minor decisions to be made. I do not think it is right, and I want to change it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chrétien: I know that the members of this house agree with me on that.

Some hon. Members: Hear hear.

Mr. Chrétien: These Indian people are human beings and I want to get rid of our paternalistic approach to them. It is said that they are afraid we want to dump them. This is not so, Mr. Speaker. We do not want to dump any of the programs that we have for Indians. But we do want Indian children to receive the same education as their neighbours.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said there could be no equality of services when separate services were provided to white people and to Indian people. That is right. We want to give the Indians the same kind of services that the other citizens of Canada have. I repeat that we do not want to go ahead with this program too quickly. We will consult with the Indians. If they have some good suggestions to make we will listen to them. We will send a special team of people to meet Indians all across the nation, to try to find ways for Indians who live on reserves to make their own decisions.

I do not want to have to make decisions for them any longer. But if they suggest that the present system be retained for a period of years I may agree. However, I hope they will realize it is in their own interests to take their future into their own hands. They have many new leaders. During the past ten years there has been a great improvement in the education of Indians. Ten years ago only 15 per cent of Indians received education above the fifth grade. Now, 95 per cent of them go above the fifth grade.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes.

Mr. Stanfield: Is he sticking to his proposal that any grants to the provinces covering the costs of services to the Indian people would gradually be phased out?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think that it will take some time. I have not negotiated anything, but I hope there will be a day in Canada when there will be no special programs attached to a group of people because of their race.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chrétien: How long this will take I do not know, Mr. Speaker, but I am ready to negotiate and to discuss it with the provinces and with the Indians. I know the Indians have to catch up. I realize this. It is a collective responsibility of the people of Canada to make sure that they catch up. But we should not deal with these problems simply on the basis that these people are Indians. We should deal with these matters on the basis that they are human beings.

Often the problem of the Indian is the same problem as that of the Metis or of the white people who live in the north. Sometimes it is a problem of regional development rather than a problem of racial development. Anyway we have to correct the situation. It will take some time, but I believe Canadian Indians are citizens of the provinces on the same basis as other citizens, and I want to assure them of that.

I have seen a situation in which a provincial government has refused to build a road to an Indian reserve simply because it said, "We build roads only for the public." The province did not want to build even one mile of road to reach a reserve. I do not think that is right, because the Indians who live in a province are citizens equal with others within the province.

It has been said many times that Indians do not pay taxes. When they go to buy gasoline, or into stores to buy other things they pay the indirect taxes that all other Canadians must pay. They contribute to the provincial treasuries in the same way as other citizens. I think it is fair to ask the provinces to extend their services to them. Now, we do not want to transfer responsibility. What we want to do is to ask the provinces to treat the Indians as citizens of the provinces, and we are willing to contribute financially to achieve that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not want to press the minister unfairly but I am wondering now whether he expects the Indian people to feel easy about the services that the provinces, particularly some of the provinces, would be able to provide without a full assurance from the Government of Canada that it will enable those provinces to provide services which are now the responsibility of the Government of Canada, and which services will increase in expense?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said that we want to contribute, to make arrangements with the provinces, and we will negotiate that. But I hope that there will be a day when Indians within the provinces, will be considered as full citizens of the provinces and will be treated in that manner. I think this is the goal we have to achieve. As I said, the problem is also a problem of regional development. It is not a problem related to the Indians alone. In the northern part of Ontario, Quebec, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, the white people who live there often are faced with the same problems. The Métis are often in a worse situation in these localities than the Indians.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired unless there is agreement on the part of hon. members that he continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chrétien: Thank you. I shall not take too much more of the time of the house. But we do want to discuss these possibilities with the Indians. I think we must help the Indian people obtain economic equality. We want to offer them economic and social equality in Canada. We do not want, however, to destroy them as Indians. I believe it is possible in Canada to be a full Canadian and at the same time be different.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chrétien: The Indian culture is worth preserving. These people were in Canada before we arrived here. They have contributed to making Canada the country it is. We must help them retain their traditions and their own culture, because in themselves they have good values. We can help them. There is no such thing in Canada as "assimilation". I do not want anyone in Canada to be assimilated. No one will assimilate me. I am a different person, a Canadian who speaks French, but I want to share the advantages and the responsibilities of being a Canadian. I know that it is possible for the Indians of Canada to be Canadians of Indian origin and share in the advantages and responsibilities of having Canadian citizenship.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I wish to stress once more that we will be flexible. We do not want to impose anything on these people we want to negotiate and counsel. If people have good ideas concerning how the Indian people may be permitted or helped to catch up further I would be glad to hear them. These people, however, are not the only ones with problems. There are the Métis who have been left out because there are laws which pertain to a certain number of citizens of Canada. Therefore, I maintain the Indian Act is not one which should be retained in Canada because in it we take a distinction between people because of their colour. The language, colour or religion of people should not make any difference. What is important in respect of a human being is the grey stuff he has inside. It is grey for everyone.

We will take whatever time is necessary to implement this policy. The Indians are concerned about their land. I am concerned about it too. I do not want to see it fall into the hands of some speculators. We must design the Indian Act to protect the land of the Indian people. At the same time we must give them an opportunity to make their own decisions in respect of the development of these lands. We shall do so in consultation with them and with the provincial governments. I want to say again that there will be a good deal of consultation. I am not referring simply to negotiation. We want to inform the people. I was glad to see a few days ago that the Indian people asked for more time. I think this is a very good request on the part of their leaders because it is necessary that they look into all the implications. We will take all the time that is necessary.

It is important that the government and all the people know in which direction we must go. For a period of a year there have been consultations with the Indians. They say that they want to make their own decisions. They ask us to get off their backs. We want the same thing for them. We want them to make their own decisions. This policy is designed to give them that opportunity. So far as implementation is concerned, there are many ways in which this can be done. We will listen to them and offer them some solutions. There are some solutions which we have offered to them. But if they should wish to retain the same system for many, many years, I would be disappointed because I think with the new possibilities and their new leaders they are able to make more decisions. I believe we should let them do this.

The problem is one of human dignity. I think this policy in general terms has been approved by everyone in this House of Commons. So far as the implementation of the policy is concerned, we will consult with the Indians and give them an opportunity to make their point of view known both to the Canadian public and to the government through more consultation. I think, however, that never in the past has there been so much consultation with the Indians; never in the past has there been a government which has given so much opportunity to the Indian people to make their case not only to the government but to the Canadian public. During the past year 18 consultation meetings were held. We have paid people to make sure that these consultations would be covered by the press and television so that not only the Indians and the employees of the department but also the general public would be informed. I believe this has been a great achievement because never before have we heard so much about the Indian problems. This was due to the fact that, as a government, we were not afraid to put the case of the Indian people before the public. We did not carry on the consultations through the back door. We opened the door to the general public in Canada.

Before ending my contribution to this debate, Mr. Speaker, I should like to cover one more point. A reference was made to a message my deputy minister sent to the employees of the department. I was quite disappointed about the remark that was made in this regard because we had announced the intention of the government, if the provinces and the Indians agreed, to extend provincial services to Indians and at the same time the department would be phased out. It was of the utmost importance that the government should inform these people who have devoted many years of their lives to working very hard for the Indians that their rights as citizens, and as civil servants, would be protected. I am saddened that a member of the New Democratic party would make reference to that because these people deserve better treatment. We must make sure that all the teachers, for example, who have worked for years and years on the reserves devoting their time to the Indian people will not be left out on the streets because we are implementing a new policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chrétien: The action that was taken was taken to reassure these people that we would protect their rights as employees and as people who have served their country and the Indians. I wish to stress once more that we will continue the consultations. I will be in British Columbia next week to carry on discussions with representatives of the provincial government. While I am there I will stop at three different cities, not to have consultations but information sessions with the Indian people in which I will answer their questions and make sure they understand the policy.

I hope there will not be too much of a partisan approach to this problem because it is an important problem. I do not believe that in our society we can accept a situation in which there are people who are considered to be second class citizens. We must offer these people full citizenship in the Canadian society. At the same time, however, we will respect the treaties we have signed with them. We will respect the special rights we have given them by treaty. One will see by the policy statement that we have taken steps to make sure that these rights will be protected. But these things must be analysed not only by the government but by the Indians themselves.

This is now the policy and what the Indians have asked us to do. They have asked us to provide them with funds. This we will do. At the same time, we will have a commissioner look into these matters on behalf of the Indians of Canada and make recommendations to the government. The Indians will draw their own conclusions. Following that it will be up to the parliament of Canada to make a final decision. I thank every member, Mr. Speaker for being gracious enough to extend my time. I hope in the weeks ahead every one of us will try to persuade the Indian people of Canada that we want to offer them a choice, and that they should accept that choice, because they should not be ashamed to become full citizens in the Canadian society.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the minister would permit me to ask him a question before he concludes his remarks. It seems that one of the nubs of the disagreement which has developed over the policy statement is the manner in which it was prepared. Is the minister now prepared to discuss with the native Indian people the possibility of enshrining within the constitution, and this is what a great number of them want, these aboriginal, hereditary or treaty rights—that is a misunderstood term—favourable to Indian people? Is he prepared to discuss this possibility and make a commitment that if it is desirable to the Indian people we will put those rights into the constitution?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian constitution should be drafted in such a way that the rights of every citizen are protected. We want to respect these treaties and we will. To suggest that we should have in the constitution a provision to make the Indian citizens of Canada something other than full citizens is wrong. What we must do is prove to the Indians that we respect the treaties. If we have not respected these treaties, we must make sure to correct these injustices. When we have corrected these injustices by respecting the treaties the Indians will become equal citizens in Canada. That is a desirable step in our society.

Mr. Dinsdale: Would the minister accept another question? Before posing it, I should like to indicate that the latter part of his statement this afternoon was much better than the policy statement delivered the other day.

Mr. Speaker: I hope we do not re-open the debate. The hon. member has already had his time and has been recognized now for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Dinsdale: My question, Mr. Speaker, is, how does the minister answer the criticism of the Indian leaders who have almost universally expressed the idea that the policy statement enunciated ignores the recommendations they have made during recent consultations?

Mr. Chrétien: This often involves the kind of dilemma faced by the government. We have consulted with them. They have made their representations and we have noted and studied them. I have studied them myself and they have been studied by officials and employees of my department as well as by other officials of the government. I said to the Indians that we will propose a policy which they may consider. We had to say something and I spoke on behalf of the government. We now say this is the direction in which we sish to proceed. Let us study it along with the Indian people of Canada and the provincial governments, and then implement a proper policy. If we were proposing legislation today, there might be a valid criticism. We are not ready to legislate. We are ready to discuss this policy and bring forward legislation next fall, or perhaps two or three years from now. I do not care very much when, as long as everyone will agree that we are on the right path.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to ask another question relating to a subject upon which neither one of us has touched. It has to do with consultation. I should like to ask the minister whether in the course of these consultations, and in light of the fact he has indicated a flexible approach to policy, he will be prepared to make some sort of payment and set up some sort of procedure which might result in the culmination of a national conference on Indian affairs such as the one held from April 28 to May 2? Will he guarantee some procedure to provide the Indian people with the wherewithal to meet with him to express their opinions?

Mr. Chrétien: I have said in the house many times that we are ready to provide the Indian associations with funds to assist them in their job with their own people and to consult with the government. I hope soon to be in a position to make an announcement in this regard. I have made a proposal to the Treasury Board and I hope soon to receive a definite answer. I have referred to the special committee on Indian rights and treaties. Funds will be made available to that committee, not directly through me, but through the commissioner who will be appointed soon.

Mr. Speaker: I trust that hon. members will not be dissatisfied if I say that pursuant to Section 13 of Standing Order 26 I am satisfied that the debate has now been concluded. This house stands adjourned until Monday, July 14 at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

At 5:50 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TRADE

WHEAT—STATEMENT ON INTERNATIONAL MARKETING SITUATION FOLLOWING WASHINGTON MEETING

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members are aware, the international wheat marketing situation has in recent weeks become increasingly more difficult. This is not a specific Canadian problem but reflects, rather, an over-all international situation which Canada must seek to influence and to which we must also adapt. Record stocks of wheat are held by exporting countries at a time when world trade in wheat, both commercial and non-commercial, has dropped substantially below the levels of two years ago.

Not surprisingly, this underlying supply-demand situation has exerted downward pressure on wheat prices from the inception of the International Grains Arrangement in July, 1968. There have been a growing number of infractions of its minimum price provisions as individual exporting countries, both members and non-members of the agreement, have sought a temporary advantage over competitors by reducing prices. Earlier this year, the Canadian Wheat Board found it difficult to move wheat at the I.G.A. minimum prices in competition with lower prices offered by other countries. As hon. members will recall, I announced on March 14 that the Canadian Wheat Board would have to reduce prices to remain competitive even if this meant going below the I.G.A. minimum levels. In maintaining its competitive position the Canadian Wheat Board is of course being careful to ensure that the best possible price levels are maintained.

All exporting countries have in common a real concern about what would happen if the structure of international co-operation built up over the years were to disappear. Thus, over the last many months the major exporting countries have held a series of meetings, notably in Canberra in September, 1968, and in Washington in April this year, to seek to rectify the problems which had been identified. Despite these efforts, pressures for further price cuts had built up in recent weeks and we were faced with the prospect of imminent unilateral price reductions. This might easily have triggered an uncontrollable downward spiral, to the detriment of all exporting countries and of the future of international co-operation in wheat marketing.

Following my visit with the United States Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Hardin, on June 18, the discussions in the International Wheat Council in London, and the Canada-United States ministerial meeting in the following week, Canada supported the early convening of a ministerial meeting of major exporting countries. This meeting was held in Washington on July 10 and 11 and was attended by ministerial representatives from Argentina, Australia, Canada, the E.E.C. and the United States. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and I took part in this meeting and we were accompanied by the chief commissioner and commissioners of the Canadian Wheat Board and senior departmental officials.

I would like to table, under Standing Order 41(2), copies in French and in English of the communiqué issued in Washington regarding the wheat exporters' meeting, which reads in part as follows:

> The ministers, in reviewing current prices in world markets, recognized that distortions had appeared and that corrective action would be taken by some exporters to bring prices into proper competitive relationship in the interests of orderly marketing and price stability.
> The ministers reiterated their support for the International Grains Arrangement and expressed their determination to strengthen its operations.
> As a means of making the arrangement more effective, the ministers agreed to maintain continuing consultations to deal with problems that may arise.

In the case of the E.E.C., the understandings reached in Washington will be subject to the approval of the Council of Ministers representing their member countries.

This ministerial meeting has served to strengthen the determination of the major wheat exporting countries to co-operate closely in the interests of price stability in accordance with the principles of the I.G.A. Canada has played and is continuing to play a leading role in very difficult circumstances in the achievement of these results. I would not like to give the impression that this Washington meeting has resolved all our difficulties, but I am encouraged by the constructive approach demonstrated by exporting countries at this meeting. The new arrangement for continuing consultation among exporting countries will facilitate more effective co-operation.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I will not be able to give any precision to the measures of corrective action referred to in the communiqué. I am anticipating questions that are to come. Wheat pricing is a highly sensitive matter, and I know that hon. members would not expect me to divulge specific marketing information which could undermine the day to day selling operations of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I think it was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) who a few days ago suggested that one of the members of the official opposition should attend a university in order to be able to read and understand communiqués better than he had been able to interpret one. All the universities we have in this country would not be sufficient to enable anyone to understand what the minister has tried to tell us today. The final sentence in the minister's statement reads as follows:

> I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I will not be able to give any precision to the measures of corrective action referred to in the communiqué.

In a previous sentence the minister said:

> —I am encouraged by the constructive approach demonstrated by exporting countries at this meeting.

• (2:10 p.m.)

The minister has told us that the Washington meeting was another failure. This is not encouraging to the western farmer who during the past year or so has found himself under pressure by reason of not being able to deliver grain. The results of the meeting will be no encouragement to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who at the present time is visiting the west in an attempt to bring some kind of message of encouragement to the western farmers. It will be difficult for him to tell them that not only can they expect deliveries to be less but that their income will suffer accordingly.

I have before me a Wall Street Journal report dated June 19 which reads as follows:

> As a result, to assure that ends meet, the Argentine government will start buying wheat in the world market. It was announced that a purchase of 7,348,000 bushels will be made next week. Argentina will seek to buy the wheat from Canada, the U.S., Australia and Russia.

Argentina was among the countries which participated in the discussions. I cannot visualize how a Canadian minister can return from the United States and tell us that Canada has not been successful in concluding a sensible arrangement in respect of marketing our wheat. Apparently Argentina has some idea of how to deal with its marketing situation. In view of the fact a previous Liberal government assured the western farmers that there would be a minimum price of $1.95½ a bushel, does the minister not think there is an obligation on the part of the present government to ensure that the Canadian farmer will receive this price? In view of the economic situation today I ask the government whether this might not be a desirable course to follow, especially since the government has suffered a failure not only at the last meeting but at previous ones?

I do not understand how any minister can expect us to begin the summer recess with the realization that we do not know whether there will even be a five bushel quota in many areas. Some farmers with low grades are not even able to obtain $1.48 or $1.45 a bushel. This is the kind of economic situation we face. Yet this government cannot give any assurance to the farmers or to their creditors. I believe the government has an obligation to the Canadian people. I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to telephone the Prime Minister who is out west and, considering the failure of the minister's mission in Washington, suggest a type of approach that will make the Prime Minister's trip a little easier.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the minister has been able to report to the house today. I am sure he has returned from a difficult mission. Judging from the communiqué it would seem that he probably is not too well satisfied with the results. The information he gave us is inconclusive. It is not the type of report upon which I could advise the farmers of my constituency to build firm hopes and make firm plans in respect of their general operations as grain farmers.

The International Grains Arrangement has been an ill-starred agreement from the time it was signed. Whether this is due to the fact that it was not carefully considered or because some of the parties did not feel they wanted to be wholly committed to it, I do not know.

The minister's report does not tell us what is going to be done to correct the substantial differentials of 20 to 25 cents a bushel which exist between our grain and grain of comparative quality with which we compete in the markets. The report does not say that the European common market countries are prepared to support this agreement. It merely says that understandings have been reached with the European Economic Community, subject to the approval of the Council of Ministers representing their member countries, whatever that means. This is the area from which the disruption of the agreement has been coming.

The report speaks of constructive approaches, and I hope there are some. What we need from the minister at this moment is a clear statement of government policy toward the wheat producers of this country in view of the fact that the International Grains Arrangement is not working too well. I hope it will work well in the future. I hope it can be shored up and that these other countries will accept their responsibility as Canada has done. We cannot expect the wheat producers of western Canada to hold an umbrella over the International Grains Arrangement all by themselves. I am sure the minister knows very well this cannot be done by this group of wheat producers.

Therefore I think it is time the government told the grain producers of western Canada frankly what its position is. It should make it clear that it will make support available to the grain producers in terms of price and in terms of quantity, and will also take the responsibility along with other nations of the world to see that the International Grains Arrangement does work. I plead with the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, to come down to earth and say that there will be a support price at some level. If it is to be at $1.95½ on the basis of the present International Grains Arrangement, let the government say that. If it is going to be $2, let the government say so. Let us not leave the farmers in the limbo of uncertainty in which they find themselves today.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we heard the statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) on his return from Washington where he had talks with the representatives of other countries that signed the International Grains Arrangement.

Before making any comments, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the minister that we did not receive the French version of his statement, which assuredly causes us some prejudice. Since there are two official languages in this country, it would be normal that a bilingual copy of ministers' statements should be available to us.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of the minister's statement, it seems to me that Canada is, with regard to the present situation, prisoner of its own production. Caught in an international context of negotiations and agreements on wheat, Canada has had in the way of imaginative trade, over a number of years, nothing to say but to accept this pernicious situation, as it will no doubt continue to do, and to make wheat producers submit to it.

In the meantime, Canadian wheat producers are faced with hardship in one of the richest agricultural countries, especially with regard to wheat.

On the international level, a situation has developed wherein the big wheat exporters have adopted uniform systems and wherein guaranteed prices higher than Canadian prices have been established. Such prices are often much higher than ours, in the case of France for instance, and consequently exports are subsidized and this Canada cannot do. Competition has caused a decrease in prices and Canada has followed suit as always, so as not to destroy competition.

What to my mind is of primary importance, Mr. Speaker, what may be deduced from the minister's trip, and this seems very clear to me, is that we cannot require the Canadian producers to pay for this government's lack of responsibility.

Since 1949, the cost of products and services used by the farmers of western Canada has increased by close to 50 per cent, while the price of wheat is still below the levels of the 1949-50 crop year. That is one factor of the decline in the Canadian wheat trade.

In such circumstances, Mr. Speaker, price decreases like the recent ones which will not be the last apparently, due to the irresponsibility of this government. place on the shoulders of wheat producers a load which they should not be obliged to accept. To conclude my brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, I find most regrettable that the government, with all its commercial imagination, could only come up with the idea of sending the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) check its popularity rating, rather than the quantitites of unsold wheat.

Members' Attire in House

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion such a position shows irresponsibility. Before checking on the popularity of the Prime Minister, the government should look into the problem of the wheat producers of western Canada in order to help them. They should not be held responsible for the wheat situation caused by the obvious irresponsibility of the present government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER ON MEMBERS' ATTIRE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before we proceed with motions I wonder whether hon. members would mind my reminding them that it has always been the practice in this house that hon. members come into the house wearing a jacket and tie. It may be that in certain circumstances and certain places a turtleneck sweater is acceptable. I suggest to hon. members that it is not acceptable, in so far as my own standards are concerned, in any event. If hon. members were allowed to make exceptions to the rule, they might eventually come into the chamber in shorts and sportshirts.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Sandals?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not pointing to any one hon. member at the present time. Hon. members will probably realize that from the chair it is sometimes a little difficult to determine exactly how hon. members are dressed and whether they are dressed in conformity with our practice. I do not wish to be difficult about this matter but I mention it in a general way and hope hon. members will agree with what I am saying. I do not suggest it is applicable today and that anyone is now contravening the rules. However, perhaps on a future day we will have the situation where someone's dress will contravene our practice in this respect, and I hope that what I have said will then be borne in mind.

Mr. Lewis: Will someone convey this to the Prime Minister?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Since I am the member concerned, I merely wish to explain to the house that I am now receiving cobalt treatment for my throat and, according to the physician, circumstances do not allow me to wear a collar and a necktie.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The explanation of the hon. member can certainly be accepted—I am sure,—not necessarily by the Chair, because I am here to express the wishes of hon. members. I am sure that I express the wish and the opinion of hon. members when I agree that, due to special circumstances, the hon. member is entitled to be exempted from the application of Standing Orders. ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

WHEAT—INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT—EFFECT OF PRICE REDUCTIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a question based on an excerpt from the communique which he read. I quote the excerpt: "The ministers—recognized that distortions had appeared and that corrective action would be taken by some exporters to bring prices into proper competitive relationship in the interests of orderly marketing and price stability."

Does this mean that the ministers attending the meeting on behalf of the various countries recognize the right of exporting nations to reduce their prices to competitive levels, and does this constitute a recognition by the ministers that such reductions would not be tantamount to a violation of the International Grains Arrangement and that therefore, in effect, the agreement is a dead letter?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the communiqué recognizes that some exporters were in a difficult situation because of present circumstances which I will not go into. Those exporters who have been doing well recognize that those who have not been doing quite so well have the right to adjust their prices in order to become competitive. That applies particularly to the United States and Canada. This means, I would think, that minimum prices under the I.G.A. are to be de facto temporarily suspended. Exporters believe however that these minimums still have some orderly effect in the sense that they remain an indication of what is fair and reasonable, at least as far as Canadian wheat farmers and the Canadian government are concerned.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the I.G.A. minimum prices appear to have become guidelines only and since our grain farmers, wheat farmers in particular, face a very grim cash situation, what substitute does the government propose for the floor price which everyone thought was guaranteed under the International Grains Arrangement?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this is another subject involving the incomes of wheat farmers. The Minister of Agriculture, the Prime Minister and I have said on a number of occasions that this matter is under study. We must deal with events as they occur. May I be permitted to say that no one in the world knew precisely what was going to happen in world wheat marketing when a few months ago this government was being asked to guarantee the floor at $1.95½ a bushel.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since there is no longer any doubt that a new policy will have to be implemented, can the minister indicate to the house when the government will bring in the policy it will implement as a substitute for the floor price that had prevailed under the I.G.A.? It appears that that floor price is temporarily in abeyance.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If I heard the minister correctly, he said that exporters were inclined to support the minimums under the International Grains Arrangement. As I recall, that agreement includes both exporters and importers. What is the attitude of the importers? Are they also inclined to support the minimums laid down under this arrangement?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the conduct of importers in recent months has clearly indicated that they are not keen to do that. Most of them are keen to buy at the cheapest possible price. In my view these are taking a very short term view of the necessity of preserving an orderly market in the world. The hon. member should not forget, however, that exporters are basically responsible for maintaining stable prices in the world. That was the spirit in which we approached these questions in Washington last week.

Mr. Gleave: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement the minister has just made and considering that this is an international agreement signed under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, will the government consider asking the United Nations, under whose auspices these negotiations were carried on, to reconvene the conference in order to discuss this matter?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, in time that may be the right approach to take. At this time I do not think it would be a practical crusade to undertake.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In view of the ministers' statements and of the fact that the wheat problem is twofold, having to do with exporting countries and with Canadian wheat producers, and because the problem partly falls on the producers who are now burdened with it, could the minister tell us whether the studies presently considered by himself, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture aim at the establishment of support prices for the production of Canadian wheat?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, at the moment, I do not wish to make any comments about that.

[English]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the I.G.A. minimums are no longer effective, at what price below these I.G.A. minimums is the Canadian Wheat Board offering our wheat at the present time in order to meet world competition?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, we are offering it at the best possible price. What was done in Washington was to prevent a great downward movement and collapse of prices. That was the purpose of our meeting. We thought that some exporters who had been quite successful in recent weeks, and I will not comment on how they went about their business, would restrain their aggressiveness. Some of them have offered to do that. There will be a readjustment of prices but at a lower level obviously than the minimums under the I.G.A. but a higher level than might otherwise have been the case. Exactly what will happen I do not know. We shall have to wait and see. It is possible that some exporters will strengthen their prices and that others will adjust them downwards, thus bringing about a new level of prices. We must also remember that some exporters do not belong to the I.G.A. They must also be taken into consideration.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. At the meeting was there any indication of how long this present trend will endure? Is relief in sight? Will there be any relief in the next several months? Can the minister indicate whether there will be any relief for the farmers who are growing crops and delivering grain?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the exercise was to prevent a possible collapse of international prices. We wanted to prevent a greater downward movement of prices and to restore the co-operation among IGA exporters. On both counts, I am an optimist. I think progress was made. I am not in the habit of telling the house anything except what I feel I am justified in telling it. In this case, and I have said this in answers to previous questions, I am optimistic but without illusions. We are working hard, both diplomatically and commercially, in order to arrest the downward movement which has been going on in this connection.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, will the situation last for the duration of the present crop year?

Mr. Pepin: It depends on how willing exporters are to co-operate and on the will of importers to take a long view of these matters.

Mr. Harkness: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did I understand the minister correctly, when he answered my previous question, that the Wheat Board is not quoting prices at this time? If that is so, how are we to make sales? Unless prices are quoted to prospective customers, how are we to sell wheat?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Wheat Board is quoting prices at this time. I am also under the impression that importers at the moment are being restrained because of the uncertainty connected with current developments.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, then may I repeat my first question. If the Wheat Board is quoting prices, what prices is it quoting in order to sell Canadian wheat?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I will send the hon. member a price schedule tomorrow.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did not those at the conference conclude that an agreement among sellers could only stand as long as a sellers' market prevailed?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, there is some truth to that, and it applies not only to wheat marketing. That is true of all other kinds of commercial activity. However, that proposition is not infallible because, as I have said previously, there must be co-operation between exporters. In the long run that will serve the best interests of importers.

Mr. Hees: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, human nature prevails.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Although I recognize the importance of this matter and although I have displayed great leniency in allowing hon. members to ask supplementary questions, I think it might be a good idea for the house to turn to another subject matter on the understanding, of course, that we might return to the present one later.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—REPLY TO CANADIAN OFFER TO PROVIDE NEUTRAL RELIEF FLIGHT OBSERVERS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the Canadian government yet received from the Nigerian or Biafran authorities a reply to its offer to provide neutral observers to inspect flights flying into Biafra from points outside Nigeria?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer to that particular question is no, Mr. Speaker. We have not yet received any response. Hon. members will have noticed that the discussions are still going on in Lagos. At least one relief shipment by the International Red Cross was approved. We still hope to work out a system which will be acceptable to both sides. If our offer has been helpful, I am sure everybody will applaud.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED LOANS TO EASTERN CANADIAN MILK PRODUCERS

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

We have just learned that the government has lent $1 million to Korea for the development of its milk industry. Would the Department of Agriculture grant similar loans to dairy producers in eastern Canada?

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): I think, Mr. Speaker, if we look back on what has been done these past years by the Canadian Dairy Commission, it will be found that grants totalling $125 million are now being handed out to Canadian dairy producers.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, will the Acting Prime Minister accept the condolences of the opposition because of the fact that during the weekend, despite the offer of free food and ten-cent beer, the joint Liberal rally in Calgary could only attract 400 people?

GRAIN

BOX CAR ALLOCATION—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On Thursday and Friday, July 3 and 4, the minister replied to a series of questions I asked concerning the allocation of railway rolling stock to terminal elevators that have space. The minister advised he would have that on his shopping list when he was in Winnipeg on Monday, July 7. I ask the minister to advise the house specifically—I emphasize the word "specifically"—what action the government is taking to require the railways—I emphasize the word "require"—to supply sufficient additional railway rolling stock to allow for the full maximum unload capacity in the terminals at the Lakehead to the used?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I said previously, and as confirmed by the acting minister when I was away, this is now being done. The fact is that full co-operation of the railways was requested and is being given.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the house whether he and the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board have given specific figures to the railways as to the additional number of cars that will be required, in addition to those now in service, to meet the five bushel quota by the end of the July and have the railways responded that they will supply these additional cars?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have a copy of the report showing the number of cars needed at the west coast, at the Lakehead and at the interior terminals and mills per day for the whole duration of time until August 1. I will be glad to show it to the hon. member if it will assist him. As the acting minister stated on Thursday, I believe it was, the totals I have here demonstrate that physically it can be done. As is normally said by the Creditistes, that which is physically possible can also be politically or materially achieved.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PUBLIC AFFAIRS DIVISION—POLITICAL AFFILIATION OF THOSE EMPLOYED

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In light of the minister's confirmation of a strong bias favouring the Liberal party in public affairs programming of the C.B.C., will the minister advise whether any record is kept of the political party affiliation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Paproski: —of persons permanently or frequently employed in the public affairs division of the C.B.C. or of Radio Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not in order because it contains an allegation. The hon. member knows that a question in those terms is not acceptable.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FISHERIES

COHOE SALMON—BANNING OF OPERATION IN STRAIT OF GEORGIA

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries arising from a question asked the minister last Wednesday by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. Have there been any further developments since last Wednesday in connection with the closure of salmon fishing to commercial fishermen in the Strait of Georgia?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): There are no new developments, Mr. Speaker. Fishing is closed for the weekend for commercial salmon fishermen, but not sports fishermen.

Mr. Barnett: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister under consideration, in view of the fact commercial fishermen cannot operate on weekends, closing sports fishing from Monday to Friday when the commercial fishermen are allowed to fish?

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Davis: It is well known that the commercial fishermen catch 90 per cent or more of the fish. At this stage of the year we do not know how many fish are coming in; therefore we are going slow with respect to the catch.

INDUSTRY

FINE PAPERS—EFFECT OF TARIFF REDUCTIONS

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the rising unemployment in the fine papers industry, especially in areas of the province of Quebec which have been designated as regions of underemployment, is the government reconsidering the tariff cuts affecting this industry, or are any special arrangements contemplated to alleviate the situation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will not deny that the advanced cuts have caused some preoccupation in the fine papers industry. I have been so informed, and I agree this is so.

There is quite an intensive study being carried out by my department with regard to the fine papers industry. This study tends to show that Kennedy round cuts are only one of many factors causing the difficulties of the industry at the present time and not the most important. My department is cooperating fully with that industry in order to find some solution to their difficulties.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the tariff cuts affecting the fine papers industry are forcing delays and abandonment of the long-range capital expenditure programs which the industry had planned in order to increase its efficiency and competitiveness to be able to meet the reduction in tariffs which they expected would take place in 1972, is the minister pressing his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to take steps to postpone the coming into effect of these reductions?

Mr. Pepin: I was under the impression the industry was very keen to get to the root of the problems it faces, right away. Would delay on the Kennedy round exemption acceleration help that to any substantial extent? I'll inquire.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, since one of the roots of the difficulties is sitting immediately behind the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, will the minister consider pulling that one?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL RATE FOR EDUCATIONAL PERIODICALS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications.

Since a great number of periodicals had to stop their circulation because postal rates are too high, does the government intend to set special rates for periodicals directly involved with data processing in the field of education?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question should be put on the order paper or debated at the time of adjournment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WASHINGTON DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING QUOTA ON CANADIAN EMIGRATION—ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Thursday last I asked a question about the quota system imposed by the United States which effectively discriminates against Canadians who wish to move to that country. The minister replied that a committee was being established. Has the committee been established and, if so, is it an officials' committee or a ministerial committee? What is the timetable for that committee to report on this long outstanding problem?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the ministerial meeting was held in Washington we brought two questions to the attention of the secretaries in the United States administration. One was in respect of the quota system to which the hon. member has referred and the second was the limitation upon Canadian musicians performing in the United States. I think the United States secretaries were sufficiently impressed with the cogency of the representations that they said they would like to establish a joint committee between the two countries to see what could be done to rectify the situation. The hon. member will understand that Congressional action may be required because it is not simply the cabinet which is concerned.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, would the minister be good enough to table the representations the Canadian government made in respect of the quota system referred to previously? They were sought on two previous occasions. The first was on May 5, 1969, as recorded on page 8295 of Hansard, and the second occasion I believe was February 10, 1969 as recorded on page 5314 of Hansard.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to consider the question. As the hon. member knows, it is not customary to reveal exchanges of this nature between two governments, although there is nothing in these exchanges which I would have any hesitation in showing to my hon. friend. There is simply the question of whether one should reveal publicly diplomatic dispatches.

[Later:]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, during this peaceful and unhypocritical question period I should like to direct a further supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs relating to the first question I asked. When will he table a report, and when can we expect some action on this problem?

Mr. Sharp: Following the ministerial meetings officials are now considering the establishment of a committee which probably will be at the official level. It is most important to establish the terms of reference in such a way as will meet our requirements. That is the only reason there has been any delay.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ADJUDICATION REPORTS—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN DEPARTMENT AND UNIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct the following question to the Postmaster General. A week ago today the matter of the awards of Mr. Martin was raised in the house. The minister said he had asked for staff meetings with the postal unions to discuss the effect of one of the awards. May I ask whether or not there have been negotiations between the Post Office Department and the relevant postal unions with regard to the awards tabled today?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Yes. There was a preliminary meeting last week. There is to be another more formal session tomorrow morning.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister whether these meetings are limited to the award dealing with the pay of those people who did not go back to the post office at noon hour—I forget the date that award was made—or are these meetings concerned with the general problem of the introduction of new working conditions on February 9?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, the meetings are concerned with the general interpretation of the awards tabled today.

EDUCATION

UNIVERSITIES—EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR CANADIANS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I am glad to see he is here. Following the recent statement by the Canadian Association of University Teachers, can the minister advise whether he is contemplating any measures to assist Canadian graduates of Canadian universities to obtain fully and promptly information on employment opportunities on the faculty and staff of the universities of this country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are not contemplating any additional measures to improve the information in this field. We have recently undertaken on an experimental basis a placement service in the various manpower centres and in addition circulate information on job opportunities at the conventions.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister consider surveying Canadian graduate students who are studying abroad and the experience of Operation Retrieval with a view to seeing whether the program is in fact effective or whether there are ways in which it could be improved?

Mr. MacEachen: That is a good suggestion. We think operation "Retrieval" has had some good results in encouraging Canadians to return to Canada. I think it should be mentioned that regardless of the number of graduates or scholars from Canada who have failed to return there is a general demand for scholars in Canada which cannot be satisfied for some years from the Canadian output.

[Mr. Kierans.]

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

PUBLICITY BRANCH—ALLEGED PROMOTION WITHOUT COMPETITION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerning an internal matter within his department. Is he aware that promotions within the publicity branch of his department have been made without competition and therefore qualified officers have been bypassed by this procedure? If the minister is not aware of this, would he look into the situation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made a representation to the minister and may assume it will be considered.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF STUDY, PUBLISHING OF REPORT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the way in which the C.B.C. has been turning a searchlight on the dire poverty which faces a great many Canadians, may I ask the minister whether the study or review of all our social security measures which the government has undertaken has yet been completed and when it is completed whether the report will be made public?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): We hope the review will be completed some time early in the fall. We have under consideration now the question of making it public or not.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

GUIDELINES RESPECTING PARTICIPANTS IN POLITICAL INTERVIEWS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Secretary of State. Could the minister advise whether the C.B.C. will be issuing guidelines regarding the allotment of people for political interviews and, if so, whether the guidelines will be established by the minister, or the national leader of the Liberal party?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If this question is in order it ought to be placed on the order paper.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF DESIGNATED REGIONS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, I will put my question to his substitute, probably the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Would the minister or whoever is responsible for this field tell the house if the study to establish the so-called designated regions in Canada is about completed? If so, may we expect an enrly statement on this in the house?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question was asked only a few days ago.

POLLUTION

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF FEDERAL CONTROLS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport perhaps I might address this question to the well informed Minister of National Health and Welfare. Having in mind the action of the Ontario government over the weekend in announcing strict new controls against exhaust from cars and diesel vehicles, I should like to know whether the federal government is considering taking complementary action?

Mr. Speaker: I would think the hon. member's question is of a very general nature which would invite a statement on motions. However, the minister may wish to reply.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, naturally I would consider making a statement. I can answer very shortly today that the Minister of Transport and myself have been in touch with our respective departments on this matter and hope to have something more informative and more detailed for the house in the fairly near future.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—ATTITUDE TO CHURCHAID RELIEF EFFORTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs relating to Nigeria and Biafra. It has been indicated that the negotiations are continuing, but they appear to be protracted. In the meantime could the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate the attitude of the government toward assisting Joint Churchaid which is attempting to fly relief supplies into Biafra. Has the minister reached any decision with regard to channelling aid through Joint Churchaid?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government has been looking at all the possibilities. Our main problem, as the Leader of the Opposition knows, is not that relief is lacking but the matter of transportation. This is the problem on which we have concentrated. That is the reason we made our offer to provide neutral observers both inside and outside Nigeria. I am also prepared to recommend to my colleagues, and I think they will accept the recommendation, that an addition be made to the appropriation for relief supplies. However, there are indications that this is not the problem at the moment, and I believe we should wait until we see how the negotiations proceed.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the minister say whether the government is prepared to use Joint Churchaid or will it continue its policy to date of channelling relief solely through the International Red Cross?

Mr. Sharp: This really depends upon the outcome of these discussions. I think everyone will agree it would be better for the Canadian government to channel its relief through an agency that supplies relief to both sides, Biafra and other parts of Nigeria. That has been the principle upon which our policy has been founded. If, however, the situation changes the government does not rule out any possibility. Until that situation is clarified I really cannot give any further answer.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, is the Secretary of State for External Affairs implying that Joint Churchaid does not channel relief to the federally occupied parts of Biafra?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, but the application that was made to me was made on behalf of Canairelief which works with Joint Churchaid. They made an application to me and as of the last discussion with them they were supplying aid only to Biafra.

GRAIN

BOX CAR ALLOCATION—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I return to the matter I raised earlier. In view of the statement earlier this month by the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and the representations made to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on July 4, did the minister acquaint himself with the situation at the Saskatchewan Pool terminals at the Lakehead in terms of car unloadings, and what action was he able to have taken following his visit to Winnipeg to have an increase in the allotment of cars for unloading at the Lakehead?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member referring to the Lakehead or to Vancouver?

Mr. Benjamin: I was referring to the Lakehead, Mr. Speaker, but Vancouver could stand an increase as well.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this information which I have in my hand could also be the subject matter of a discussion the hon. member and myself could have later. I have figures also in respect of Vancouver indicating the number of box cars needed to reach the 5 bushel quota.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—APPLICATION TO R.C.M.P.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, is the Solicitor General now in a position to reply to my question about the federal government's participation through grants in supporting the cost of medicare for the R.C.M.P. in the province of Alberta?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the situation in relation to Medicare in Alberta is exactly the same in the R.C.M.P. as it is in the armed forces. I think that deals with the question asked by the hon. member on July 9.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FROM FARM UNIONS TO MEET PRIME MINISTER ON WESTERN TRIP

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister's office received a request from the farm unions to meet with the Prime Minister when he is in western Canada and, if so, will he accede to that request and meet them?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I will make inquiries of the Prime Minister's office, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

POSSIBILITY OF VACATIONS FOR SOME MEMBERS OF STAFF

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as government house leader. In view of the fact that we could probably get along during the remainder of this session with something less than a full staff, at least in some areas, will the government house leader take up with the appropriate authorities the possibility of letting some of our employees take their holidays while the weather is so good?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that such questions have to be directed to the Chair in writing and that his question cannot be asked in that way.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, in presenting this rule change—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: I thought you had called orders of the day, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Not yet.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I did. I apologize to the hon. member as I had called orders of the day. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was recognized and asked another question. I shall now call orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Friday, July 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization presented to the house on Friday, June 20, 1969, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baldwin (p. 10963).

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in presenting this proposed rule change in 75c the government claims that the purpose of the change is to speed up the parliamentary process through the elimination of what it alleges to be unnecessary debate. The opposition parties are convinced that this measure would deny to the opposition, when a majority government is in power, the time for debate which is needed to point out the weaknesses of proposed legislation to the public through the press, in order that public opinion may bring pressure to bear on the government to correct those weaknesses and thus prevent bad legislation from passing into law.

I think every member of the house and all people in this country who pay attention to public affairs will agree that at a time when parliamentary schedules are becoming increasingly heavy, year by year, the parliamentary process should be speeded up if this can be done without denying to the opposition the means of enabling public opinion to bring pressure to bear to prevent a majority government from passing bad legislation into law.

The question facing us today is whether there is any way of doing this. I say that the answer is emphatically yes, and I am going to make three suggestions to cut down the time consumed by parliament without reducing the ability of the opposition to do the job it was elected to do.

The first suggestion deals with time allotted for speeches. The time allotted for individual speeches has not changed in any important fashion ever since the parliamentary session lasted no longer than four or five months a year, compared with a full year now. In those days it was generally considered that an aratorical performance was required by an hon. member to present his views adequately to the house. That was when time was of very little importance, but as we know today all of that has changed. In this day of the computer, space flights and instant replay, long-winded oratory is out and short factual presentations are in.

President Kennedy set the pattern for this new type of presentation when he made his inaugural address in 1961. He startled the governmental and political world by giving that most important address in no more than 1,200 words, which required no longer than 12 minutes to deliver. President Kennedy was fond of saying of speeches that if you cannot get your idea across in 20 minutes it becomes increasingly more difficult to do so after that.

• (3:10 p.m.)

President Lincoln was another example of a man who expressed himself very well and very clearly in very few words. I think we all remember that one of the most famous speeches known to mankind, the Gettysburg address, required less than two minutes to deliver. We also remember the most famous speeches of Sir Winston Churchill. They were short. When you examine them you see that the words and phrases used were extremely simple. He gave the key to this whole presentation problem when asked how long it took him to prepare a speech. He answered, "It depends on the length of the speech. If I am to speak for two hours, it will take me ten minutes to prepare the speech; but if I am to make a ten minute speech, it will take me two days." I am convinced that in the future we must spend far more time preparing our presentations to the house and take up far less of the time of the house in making those presentations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: Therefore my first suggestion is that we do something that will not only greatly reduce the time taken by the house in carrying out the business of the country but will greatly improve the speeches made in the house. They will be more understandable; they will be better reported; they will have far more effect on the government. I suggest that we cut in half the time presently allotted for all speeches in the house. Instead of allowing ministers and leaders of opposition parties unlimited time to make their presentations, they should be allotted the same time as that allowed other hon. members, with ten minutes added. I believe the result of such a move would in itself reduce by at least one-third the time taken by the house to deal with the matters that come before it. In addition to greatly reducing the time spent in the house to deal with the business of the country, we would greatly increase the effectiveness of our presentations. They would of necessity be far better prepared. They would be far more in logical sequence. They would be far more easily understood.

I remember very clearly that when I first came to this house I was very impressed with the presentations made by Mr. M. J. Coldwell, the leader of the then C.C.F. party. I thought his speeches were a masterpiece of clarity. He always started by stating clearly the proposition with which he intended to deal, and then proceeded logically to develop it step by step and come to a conclusion. His speeches were short, they were always effective, they were always well understood by every member of the house.

My second suggestion deals with the long, typewritten speeches that members of the house all too often deliver, to the complete boredom of all other members. These speeches are read in their entirety. Members of the house who are still here when an hon. member has finished such a speech are literally bored to death. One can see the effect of this kind of speech on the house by watching hon. members and the members of the press gallery when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) delivers one of his read speeches. People become more and more bored, and often you can hear the snores for blocks away. When members deliver long, read speeches in the house no one pays attention to the most important things in them. The people who should be paying attention from the members' point of view, the ministers of the government and the press gallery, do not do so because the speeches are too dull to merit attention. Therefore, the speeches delivered in this way have no effect whatsoever on debate in the House of Commons.

They have one direct purpose; that is, to advise a member's constituents of his views on matters which are important to them, and what he intends doing to see that action is taken on very real problems. The important thing about these speeches is that they appear in Hansard so that an hon. member may send them home for his constituents to read, and to the newspapers in his constituency so they may be published. In this way his constituents may know he is doing a good job, understands their problems and intends to speak to the minister concerned, or raise the matter later in the house and try to get some action. This gives the member a chance to report to his constituency what he has done.

In reality this is a member's white paper to his constituency. It is very important to him. These speeches should continue to be written and should get into the hands of the newspapers in a member's constituency, or into the hands of his constituents. But I do not believe there is any reason or justification for their taking up the time of the house and wasting our time, because they have no effect on anybody in the house. If any hon. member has doubt about that, I ask him to look around the chamber when somebody is reading a speech, and he will see the impression the speech is making.

The United States Congress have developed a method of handling this situation without wasting the time of Congress. The United States Congress allow a congressman to file a copy of his speech with the Clerk of Congress. The speech then appears in the Congressional Record just as if it had been delivered in Congress. In this way it does the job it is supposed to do. It is sent to the congressman's constituents and the newspapers in his riding. His constituents learn what he is doing, they are appraised of his views; but Congress does not waste the infinite amount of time that we in this chamber waste listening to such speeches. Every one of us is bored listening to speeches of this kind and there is no reason or justification for it. No member expects to impress the government, no matter what its political stripe may be, because he is talking directly to his constituents. He is not talking to the government or anyone in parliament; he is not trying to influence parliament.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, my second suggestion is that we adopt what I consider to be a very successful practice adopted by the United States Congress many years ago, namely, allowing hon. members who have speeches they feel they must make to their constituents—and it is very necessary that they make this kind of speech, but not in the house—to have them printed in Hansard without their being read. In this way the speeches could be sent to the hon. member's constituents and the result would be exactly the same, with the advantage that we would not have to spend interminable hours listening to them. The time of the house would therefore be used more effectively and a great deal of the time of this chamber would be saved, thereby allowing more time to deal with the country's business.

I should now like to deal with my third suggestion. It refers to the making of speeches that are intended to influence our debate. Anybody who has been a member of a government will tell you that ministers pay attention to members of parliament only when they are convinced by the delivery of a speech that a member thoroughly knows his subject and feels strongly about it. This can be judged by the method of delivery of the speech. This kind of impression can only be created by a member knowing his subject thoroughly in advance, studying it very carefully and being convinced that what he has to say is of importance to the house in general and the government in particular.

A member wants certain changes to be made. He feels very strongly about it, and has no need to follow a written script because his thoughts are clearly in his mind. In view of this I suggest we enforce a rule which has existed for many years but which has been left unenforced because hon. members did not want it enforced by Mr. Speaker, or the chairman, or whoever was in charge of a particular debate. I say we should ask Mr. Speaker to enforce this rule in our own best interests. If this were done we would be required to learn our subjects better, to get them clear in our minds, to work out a logical sequence in the delivery of our ideas, and to make a brief rather than a wordy presentation. This would have a greater impact on the ministers concerned and on members of the Press Gallery. This latter point is important, because if our speeches are not reported to the public they really might as well not be made. So I say that in order to make our debates far more effective, in order to obtain far better coverage in the press, we should adopt the suggestion I am putting forward.

At present we often make our speeches so dull, so poor and so mixed up that members of the press cannot figure out what we are trying to get at. Nor do we give ourselves as good a chance to persuade members of the government to make the changes we believe are needed to improve legislation and consequently conditions in the country generally. It is only when our speeches are reported to the nation that public opinion is influenced by our views. Then in turn, through reports and editorials in the newspapers, the government, if it is not influenced by our presentations on the floor of the house, can be influenced by what appears in the newspapers or by what is said in the news media generally, as feedback develops following editorial comments and column features.

These are the three suggestions I make. I believe we should allow ministers to read quotations or statistical material. This, of course, is necessary. If the rule to which I have referred were strictly enforced, speeches would be briefer and far better. As we know, many speeches are now read in their entirety much to the boredom of the house. Far more attention would be paid to them by members of the government and members of the press if they were delivered without notes, or with the aid of very brief notes.

Speaking as a former minister I know that it is only when a man stands up and speaks with conviction and clarity that one begins to take note that he is calling attention to matters to which attention ought to be paid. I also know, having for many years talked to members of the Press Gallery that they are only impressed when they believe a man really understands his subject and speaks with conviction. It is only then that they pay attention to what he says and report it.

If we were to adopt these three changes I believe we could cut the time required to deal with legislation and other matters to about one third of what is spent today. In addition to accelerating the processes of parliament I believe we would make this house a far more effective place. Our speeches would be easier to listen to and carry more weight with Ministers of the Crown; they would be far more likely to influence debate than they are today. I therefore strongly urge all members to give consideration to these suggestions on measures we can take to help ourselves to run our own affairs better.

I come, now, to this question: if it is the desire of the government, as we are told it is, to speed up the processes of parliament, why has there been no inclination on the part of the government to move in the direction I have indicated? I have mentioned three things which could have been done long ago to improve the effectiveness of parliament. Yet the government has shown no interest in making any of these changes. Instead, it seeks to introduce a change which would completely nullify the effectiveness of the opposition in dealing with a majority government.

The answer is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not interested in accelerating the processes of parliament. He wants to control parliament. He is far more interested in controlling and in programming parliament than in speeding up parliament. He wishes to treat parliament as he treated his classroom when he was a teacher. I know the Prime Minister would like to play the role of a little colonel in parliament; he would like to crack the whip and have parliament jump to attention. He would like to know that on a certain date certain things would be accomplished, just as he would announce a lecture for a certain time and date, or say that on another date an examination would be held and that everything had to be cleared up in accordance with a timetable set out in advance. He sees parliament operating as an assembly line or as a computer, legislation being fed in at one end and laws coming out at the other in a certain form, that form being the way in which the government wants them to come out, irrespective of the views of the opposition.

The Prime Minister seems to think that he can operate in parliament by utilizing methods which dictators have developed to a very high degree. He does not want any opposition in parliament. He simply wants to squeeze it and have it jump. He wants to call the tune and have us dance to that tune. That is not the way to run a modern parliament.

Parliament is not a computer; it is not a classroom, an assembly line or a sausage factory. It is a forum for debate. Debate in parliament must be carried on for as long as is necessary. It must be carried on until the opposition has had a chance to bring to the attention of the press and other media, which in turn will communicate with the people, the weakness of any piece of legislation being considered.

There must be time for newspapers and periodicals to comment. Our people read what is written in our newspapers and magazines about legislation under consideration, and "get the message". Then they write letters to the newspapers, to the Prime Minister or the government minister concerned, and the government "gets the message" that the people do not think the legislation being considered is good and that it should not be passed. This process takes considerable time.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I want to mention three examples to show why we must have time for debate. The first of these, Mr. Speaker, was the transport bill presented to parliament two years ago. At that time the opposition thought a great deal was wrong with the bill and that many of its clauses should be changed. As we know, debate lasted several weeks. During that time about 100 amendments were proposed, many being accepted by the government. Of course, we had a good minister of transport then; Mr. Pickersgill was a man who appreciated the rights of hon. members. After listening to their arguments he agreed that certain parts of the bill should be changed, and the changes were made.

Mr. Bell: A great Canadian.

Mr. Hees: As a result, although debate on the bill was protracted, the legislation coming out of parliament was better than it would have been had there been no lengthy debate. If proposed rule 75c had been in force then it is possible that that debate could have lasted only four days, and we should have had a bad transport bill. Parliament could have done absolutely nothing to improve it.

My second example is the defence production bill of 1955. Hon. members who were here then will no doubt recall that Mr. C. D. Howe asked parliament to give him, under the defence production bill, powers in peacetime that the government had given him in wartime. Those powers would have made him a virtual dictator over Canadian industry in peacetime. The opposition said that no minister had the right to have powers in peacetime which he was given in wartime, and we fought, fought, and fought for many weeks. Mr. St. Laurent, a great prime minister, at last recognized that the legislation was bad and that no minister of any government had the right to have powers in peacetime that he had been given in wartime.

We said to the government, "If there is any emergency situation or any crisis, call parliament and we shall see that you get adequate powers to deal with the crisis right away." Of course Mr. Howe had tasted power in wartime and he wanted more of that same power. We said he could have it in an emergency, but he wanted it then and there. At last Mr. St. Laurent solved the problem by sending Mr. Howe away for a long fishing week end, giving the opposition a chance to propose amendments. That again shows how important is debate in this chamber.

My third example is the famous pipe line debate. Most of us supported the idea of the pipe line, but when a minister of the Crown, the same Mr. C. D. Howe, said he would not give the opposition information as to what part his friend, Clint Murchison, was to play in building the pipe line, we had to continue protracted debate. In the end Mr. Howe decided to implement closure, and we know what the result of that action was. It led to the defeat of the government eight months later.

I could cite many other examples but these three show how important it is for an opposition to have ample time to bring a case before the people. It needs time to do the job so that the people of the country can become aware, through the speeches of members, articles in the press, editorials and so on, of the importance of a matter. When the people of Canada know what legislation is all about and the government gets a feedback, legislation is amended. This process is good and necessary, and that is why we are going to fight proposed rule 75c right down the line.

I think we all wish to see the parliamentary process speeded up. I have made several suggestions as to how that process could be speeded, and I and others like me will make more suggestions in future. I have made personal recommendations, based on 19 years' experience in parliament, as to how we ought to reduce time spent on various stages of discussion.

We all want to make parliament more effective. Why does the government not try to hurry up parliamentary processes by adopting some of the suggestions we have made? I think they would work very well. Why does it not give our suggestions a try? Let us implement some of this new thinking.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we were told that this session, which apparently is ending with debate on the new proposed rules, was to end on June 27. We were to go home for our summer recess and come back, according to my information, on October 9. If the government has been so held up on its legislative program, why was it willing to give us a recess of 3½ months? I am human, I like a 3½ month recess, and so does everybody else here. But, Mr. Speaker, if legislation was being held up, if legislation was not moving through parliament as quickly as it ought, why did the government propose such a long summer recess? It is not right under those circumstances that we should be sent home for 3½ months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the government wanted us to rise for two reasons. First, it does not like being questioned by the opposition during the question period and, second, Liberal Members of Parliament—and there are many fine, new Liberal members here—do not want to stay around here during the summer months. They feel that being asked to stay here is an imposition on them. Consequently they have exerted great pressure on the government to rise for a summer recess.

I say this to Liberal Members of Parliament. We are well paid on a year round basis and it is our duty to stay here for 12 months of the year if necessary, and do our jobs. We are here to put pressure on the government. Many problems face this nation. We should be considering how to check inflation, and how to stop the rise in the cost of living which is going up at the rate of 10 per cent every year. The government brought in its budget. When I spoke on the budget I think the minister paid attention to me. He answered several of my questions, but there were several he did not answer. I told him that the imposition of new taxes calculated to slow down building in our major centres would have no effect. I said that no builder would wait for two years and have his cost of building increase by 24 per cent, and that sooner than do that a builder would prefer to absorb any extra tax. The minister did not answer that. I also said that the government is doing nothing about controlling inflation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. May I remind the hon. member that we are discussing a specific amendment relating to proposed standing order 75c. I think the hon. member should talk about that.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I always bow to your rulings, and will do so at this time. I was dealing with an important matter, but I think I have made my point.

In closing I say to the government that if it is sincere in wanting the parliamentary process speeded up, it ought to consider some of the suggestions which some of us here have put forward. The ones I made would not curtail anybody's rights in parliament. They would still allow the opposition to do the effective job it was elected to do. They would make parliament a far more effective place because the speeches would be shorter, better prepared, and would be listened to by more gentlemen in the press gallery and by ministers of the government who have to make any necessary changes. My suggestions would speed up parliament and make it a far more effective place in which to work. I say to the government: delete this foolish, stupid, dictatorial rule 75c which would hamstring the opposition and make it impossible for them to do their job. It should be thrown out the window so that parliament can be put on the rails once again.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Before the hon. member takes his seat, may I be permitted to ask him two questions? He was talking about time limits. I do not know whether the hon. member is aware that some of the time limits are 20 minutes. Is the hon. member suggesting they be cut to 10 minutes? My second question—

Mr. Hees: I will answer your questions one by one. Yes, certainly. This was proved during this session when we of the opposition of our own volition on certain opposition days decided that in order to allow twice as many speeches we would cut our speeches to 10 minutes. Do you know what the result was? The 10-minute speeches were infinitely better than 20-minute speeches. The members prepared their remarks and gave excellent speeches. We are very much in favour of 10-minute speeches, so the government can cut them to 10 minutes any time they want.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Does the hon. member agree his 35 minute speech would have been a good one to have been tabled without delivery?

Mr. Hees: I did not understand. I am afraid the minister was mumbling.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I ask the hon. member whether he agrees his 35 minute speech would have been better tabled rather then delivered?

Mr. Hees: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. As Your Honour and every member sitting in this house noticed, all hon. members were sitting listening to every word I said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: You bet your boots you were! I was speaking with the sort of notes I said all members should use. We would have far better speeches if all hon. members used them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. Hees: I suggest to the hon. minister that when he speaks he should try using this method. His speeches will be far more effective as a result.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Are there any further questions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The answer has been given.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech which has just been made by the hon. member. I do not know whether the hon. member had his tongue in his cheek when he said everyone in the House of Commons was listening. In any event, I listened. I want to say that the first 10 minutes of his speech comprised one of the best speeches I have heard in the House of Commons since I have been here. The last 25 minutes were one of the worst. In the first 10 minutes, he made some suggestions that certainly should be looked into by the government. Hon. members should think about these suggestions and perhaps they can be implemented in the future.

First, the hon. member suggested that speeches should be short. He will be pleased to know that the speech I am about to make will be short. I hope it will not be more than 10 minutes' duration. The hon. member emphasized the fact that speeches should not be written. My speech is not. The hon. member mentioned the fact that we should not use notes too liberally. He will be very pleased to know that I have no notes to assist me in this speech.

Second, the hon. member suggested that we should look into the proposition of filing some of the written speeches that members of the House of Commons might wish to deliver, as is the practice in the United States Congress. I think the hon. member is quite correct in this suggestion because there are members who must get their ideas back to the people at home, the voters, supporters, and citizens they are proud to represent, in order that they will know what a particular member may be thinking. The hon. gentleman was quite correct in suggesting that the government should look at the proposition of filing written speeches.

Third, the hon. member suggested we would have better speeches if they were shorter. In the first part of his address he quoted names such as Lincoln and Winston Churchill. Of course there are innumerable speakers throughout the world who have done a wonderful job delivering short speeches. Quite frankly, I believe it would be a better assembly if the speeches were shorter.

In the last part of his speech the hon. member lectured the government, and, in his absence, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He said the Prime Minister wished to use this house as a classroom. He compared him with a professor in college, saying an examination was going to be held on such and such a day and that he expected people to stand at attention whenever he came along; in other words, to act as a dictator.

This is not correct, Mr. Speaker. What my hon. friend, and all members to the left of Your Honour, must realize is that on June 25 one year ago the people of Canada made a choice and, Mr. Speaker, they did not choose those to the left of Your Honour. This is something the opposition are not bearing in mind. They must realize the reason they were not chosen was because the electors did not think they could do as good a job as the people who sit to the right of Your Honour. The right hon. Prime Minister was chosen to lead this country. By attempting to bring this rule into force in the House of Commons, the Prime Minister is attempting to do the job he is supposed to do, namely, lead Canada to a better and just society.

My hon. friend can very well be critical, but this is one of the fundamental points members to the left of Your Honour must appreciate. They were not put in government because the Canadian people did not want them there. They wanted the Prime Minister and his government to lead them and carry out their business.

I believe the thinking behind the government's attempt to bring this rule change into force was that they appreciated the fact they must allow the opposition to debate all bills, regardless of the subject matter, long enough to become acquainted with all the details so that the news media, newspapers, television and radio, would have the opportunity to put these before the people of Canada.

If it is a poor bill, the government may withdraw it. If on the other hand they feel it is acceptable to the nation and themselves, they can pass the bill.

I agree with the last speaker when he says that it is a necessity that the public media must have an opportunity to debate a bill. The question is, Mr. Speaker, how long is long enough? How long should a bill be debated? I know my hon. friend is not thinking in these terms, but obviously we cannot debate one bill in the House of Commons for a year. That would be ridiculous. Obviously it cannot even be debated for three or four months. How long should we have to debate a bill? The hon. member suggested four days.

The hon. member suggested that before a speech is given it should be researched, notes condensed, and the person giving the speech should know what he is talking about. I suggest to the hon. member he should look back over his own notes and do a little research. He says the government can put a bill through in four days. He is absolutely wrong, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if you look at the proposed rule change only one day is allotted for each stage of a bill. At the most four days debate could be spread over ten days. Four days debate spread over ten days!

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Whicher: That is absolutely right, but the hon. member also spoke about the newspapers, television and radio. Surely if this is a matter which arouses public opinion it could be discussed during the week and throughout the country. My hon. friend, perhaps unintentionally, left an impression that the news media and the Canadian public would have an opportunity to discuss a proposed bill for only four days. This is not correct. I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the allocation allows for at least three days at each stage of a bill.

Mr. Hees: No. One day.

Mr. Whicher: On top of that there are the week ends. In some instances there would be two week ends. Therefore it would be quite possible that from the first reading stage until the final stage of a bill two weeks could elapse. In addition there are the committees of the house. Bills would go into the committees. On the committees my hon. friends in the opposition have a larger percentage of the membership than they have in the House of Commons. They have the right at that time to bring any matter which is before a committee to the attention of the press, radio and television.

I suggest there will be plenty of time for the people of Canada to be informed about whatever bill may be under consideration. The various arguments will be recorded in the press and public opinion will be fed back into the House of Commons where government members and members of the opposition will have the opportunity to use their consciences and vote as they see fit.

I do not wish to take too much time on this. I say that this government was put in office on June 25, over a year ago now, to do a job. It is all very well for my hon. friend to ask what they are holding up, or what they have held up in the past. I think this is a fair enough question. He also went on to say, and I agree with him, that there are many serious problems in Canada. He mentioned inflation. Of course it is a serious problem which must be tackled. There are many other problems. Canada must be developed. We need more people here. There are a great many other problems which could be mentioned.

I might mention the omnibus Criminal Code bill in respect of which there were many, many amendments. When the government sees that it is involved in a very lengthy debate obviously there is no useful purpose in placing a good deal of legislation on the order paper because there would be no opportunity to present it. The government must know where it stands. It must know that within a reasonable period of time a bill will be passed or tossed out.

My hon. friends, particularly those of the Official Opposition, on numerous occasions have mentioned the Mother of Parliaments in England. I think every member of this house will bow to that great parliament which over the last few hundred years has done so much for democracy and the whole world. But what the government has asked for here is far less than what the government has in England. This is something I should like to bring to the attention of my hon. friend.

I feel the government must have an opportunity and the ability to bring matters to a conclusion, whether successful or otherwise. I believe that is the reason the people of Canada chose this government. They wanted a government that would bring in a new way of doing business.

My hon. friend quite rightly said there are many new members in the Liberal party. I respectfully suggest there are more new Liberal members than there are new Conservative members. However, there are many new members in our party who do not like sitting around doing what they consider to be nothing. Therefore, they want some action. We want things done in respect of the development of Canada. We want to know that at the end of so many days, within reason, a bill will be completed so that we can carry on and undertake another job. There are many things to be done in this land.

Some people say that this proposed rule is the same as closure. They say it is not different from closure and therefore, if closure is available to the government, there is no need to bring in this rule. With closure debate can be stifled immediately. Rule 75c gives hon. members the opportunity of advance consultation. As I say there is no comparison between the power given by this proposed rule and the power the government now has in respect of closure.

In respect of what I am about to say I would point out that I have not been in consultation with any of my colleagues, and certainly not with any members of the cabinet. I also say this as one who spent many years in opposition in a provincial legislature. I say that the hon. member was quite right in stating that he does not want to sit around here all summer discussing a measure such as this. I have gone into the proposal very thoroughly and I am firmly convinced that this is a good thing not only for the House of Commons but also for the people of Canada, by whom we were sent here. Therefore I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think we should sit around this place all summer. I do not think the people of Canada expect us to remain here.

I have just returned from my constituency. I spoke to a lot of the people there, some of whom are Conservatives. I mention that name kindly because we do not have any Créditistes or N.D.P.'s in my riding. Many of these people asked why does the government not bring in closure now and complete this silly debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Whicher: This is the feeling they have. If you go back to your ridings and if you ask you will find the same feeling. As one member of this house I say I believe that when we have listened to these people in the opposition for a reasonable length of time, another week or a few more days, we should have closure on this matter not only for the benefit of the House of Commons but also for the benefit of the people of Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) a question which is perhaps twofold. I did listen to all his remarks and as he said in respect of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) I too enjoyed the first part of his speech better than the second. I think he made a real attempt to be constructive. I ask the hon. member, as a former member of a provincial legislature, whether he can point to one piece of legislation the government has brought in, or which is on the order paper, which could not have been processed or moved along under rule 75A or 75B? I might refer to the omnibus Criminal Code bill. I suggest that any objective observer would agree that rule 75A and rule 75B would have taken care of that. Secondly, can the hon. member mention one provincial legislature in which there is anything similar to rule 75c? I do not care about the parliamentary system in England, unless the hon. member is willing to adopt all of it.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Whicher: It is a pleasure to answer these questions, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member asked me whether I know of any legislature in which there is a rule comparable to this. I am not familiar with all the legislatures here in Canada. But I want to say this. If you think as far as shouting—I don't know the word you would like to use here—and pushing legislation through are concerned—and if you think these fellows over here in the Liberal party of Canada are dummies—you should see the way the Tories of Ontario operate, because they are perfectionists. They have been doing this for years and years. I don't know what rules they operate under, but I tell you it is most effective. I am glad the hon. member brought this up.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Whicher: They often sit there until two or three o'clock in the morning until they are worn out and glad to let any bill go through.

Mr. Hees: Answer the question.

Mr. Whicher: I have told you I do not know everything about all the legislatures here in Canada. I have not done my research, as no doubt the hon. member has, into what is exactly taking place, but I say that the Tories in Ontario really push things through. That is how the Tories do it in Ontario.

An hon. Member: Because it is good legislation.

Mr. Whicher: The first question had to do with the omnibus bill.

Mr. Nowlan: We are not so much concerned with talking about 75A and 75B as we are with talking about 75C.

Mr. Whicher: The point is that there are going to be many other bills coming before the House of Commons. I cannot accept the proposition that the Omnibus Bill could have been handled by the three parties. We never know how you people are going to react. How can half of you in the house vote one way in favour of a measure, and the other half vote against it?

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, I rose to ask a question of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings before he sat down. I should like to ask him that question now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member would require unanimous consent.

Mr. Hees: Let him ask the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gibson: I was very interested in the hon. member's proposition relating to the United States Congress and the fact that some of the speeches there are filed. The hon. member suggested that speeches here might be filed as they are in the United States. Does the hon. member suggest that these be printed in a separate section of Hansard, or would he simply have these filed in the regular way? If they were filed in the regular way would this not lead to a complete ruination of parliament, everybody simply filing their speeches? Would that not make a complete mockery of the whole process?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, this does not make a mockery of the legislative system in the United States. As I said in the first place, nobody, but nobody, and you know it, pays attention to these regularly read speeches which just bore everybody in the house. If the house does not hear a speech anyway there would be no loss, and there would be a gain because we would save time. Let us file some of our speeches as representing the views presented by an hon. member of parliament. A member would bring them in and present them to the Clerk of the House. They could then be put in Hansard as though they had been spoken here. Nobody would interject, nobody would find fault, nobody would ask questions. In this way they could be recorded in Hansard and sent home to his constituents, and we would save a great deal of time and a great deal of boredom.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, it was not my original intention to speak on the measure presently before this house. In fact the record will show that I did not participate in the rules debate last December. Other members of the Official Opposition participated in the deliberations preceding the tabling of the special committee report. They spoke ably and well on behalf of my party, and it was not necessary therefore for me to participate at that time.

You will recall that during that debate the government showed at least a measure of reasonableness. The bulk of the report was acceptable and good. We in the opposition objected forcefully to the infamous 16A and its restrictions on our rights. It was this objection which eventually caused the government to reconsider its position and decide that 16A should be sent back to the committee.

We were pleased that this course was followed because at that time all of us were concerned with national issues. We were looking forward to debating several measures of fundamental importance to the physical well being of Canadians, including the housing report and legislation stemming from it, and I was expecting momentarily the presentation of legislation designed to assist fishermen and the fishing industry. Since I have a special interest in those measures I looked forward to reviewing the provisions of this legislation and hoped to suggest some improvements to the minister when it was brought forward.

At that time we were also looking forward to reviewing the estimates of the departments in committees in order that we might determine the strengths and weaknesses of the government. As a matter of fact it was my understanding that the committee system was to be the cornerstone of the Prime Minister's, (Mr. Trudeau) concept of the just society, a place where duly elected members could take part in the new participatory democracy, and freely express their viewpoint gleaned at the grass root level in respect of matters of national importance. The government would then know the feelings of Canadians in general in respect of legislation placed before parliament. We have since learned otherwise.

There was much to be done and the committees set out on bold new voyages of discovery. For example, the External Affairs Committee went to Europe and returned with its report, a report I might add which was significantly ignored by the Prime Minister and his colleagues. The Agriculture Committee also reviewed at close range the serious difficulties facing the west. Another committee, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, studied the problems of particular interest in the Atlantic provinces, and the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry travelled to the west coast to study the problems of the fisheries and forestry industry in that area. At that time those of us on the committee learned that there is more than the Rocky Mountains separating and dividing British Columbia from the rest of Canada.

As we looked forward at the beginning of 1969 to participating in the work of these committees, many members in the house did not speak on the special committee report last December, leaving consideration of these matters to members more practised in procedure, and at that time the government bowed to our objections. However, on this occasion it would appear that the one ingredient necessary to provide good government, namely, common sense, has been thrown out the window. Therefore I feel compelled to speak out about the government's unacceptable and objectionable attempt to ram 16A, by another name, down the throats of members of this house.

It is necessary that I speak out against the implementation of rule 75c because my constituents take strong exception to compulsion of any kind. My constituents are rugged individualists. In a free democratic society, they believe they should have the right to choose or reject any government program or policy. They did not like, for example, the compulsory aspect of the Canada Pension Plan. I received numerous letters attesting to that fact. They did not like the compulsory aspect of the federal medicare plan, and again I had numerous letters attesting to that fact. They do not like the idea of their member of parliament being compelled to sit silent on the order of the President of the Privy Council, or of any other cabinet minister, while legislation is introduced in this house which may not meet with their overall approval.

I believe it is necessary for me to speak out against rule 75c. If this rule should be approved this may well be the last opportunity open to me to speak on any legislation of a controversial nature debated in this house in the future.

This rule seeks to throttle parliament. It will limit and destroy the rights of members of this house whose sole purpose is to represent the views of those who elected them. I believe that what I now say represents accurately the opinions and concerns of some 63,000 people who reside in my constituency. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, they do not expect me to speak on every measure brought before the house, because if all members did so legislation would be bogged down in this chamber. But my constituents expect me to reserve the right to speak on any issue. It is that right I hope to preserve by participating in this debate.

My constituents are also concerned that the government should try to muzzle parliament instead of turning its attention to the real problems of Canadians. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), who preceded me, pointed out that his party at the last federal election received a majority and not us, and this gave them the right to determine the time that would be required to debate issues brought before the house. I remind him and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) that they represent the government and the government has a majority in the house, which gives them the privilege of sitting on the right hand of the Speaker and bringing down legislation for consideration by the house. But the rules under which legislation is to be examined are, in my view, the prerogative of the house. They are not the prerogative of the government. They are not the prerogative of you, Mr. Speaker, whose duty it is, in my opinion, to interpret the rules and act as a referee.

Therefore, the rules can be effective only if they are established by agreement among all parties in the house. As an example of what can happen when there is no agreement, government members need only look at the record of events as they occurred in this chamber since June 27, the day on which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated parliament would adjourn. If he were to look at the record, even a man as bull-headed as the President of the Privy Council would get the picture.

Just what is happening at the present time? The Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, to which the matter of time allocation had been referred, worked with all parties to formulate 75A and 75B which would provide for an allocation of time for government legislation on the basis of consensus and agreement. But this was too orderly for the President of the Privy Council. Since we were nearing the Prime Minister's cut-off date for this session, he rammed 75c through the committee, supported only by government members. Then he sought to bulldoze it through this house, not through discussion of the committee report but by introducing a government motion.

Why did the President of the Privy Council follow this course? I submit that he made a mistake when he drew up 75c and had it incorporated in the committee report. Having noticed this mistake, he wanted to make a few minor changes to the report of the committee, changes which are so slight that you must read very closely the committee report and the minister's motion in order to detect the differences; but changes, nevertheless, which would make Mac the Muzzler the all-powerful czar of this chamber. After the shameful display on the part of the Prime Minister in this chamber on Friday, July 11, I can never agree, and my party will never willingly agree, to the implementation of 75c or to the placing of this kind of power in the hands of the present government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Crouse: The Prime Minister has by his words and actions lowered the dignity of the high office to which he was elected. He has shown contempt for this chamber and its elected members by his arrogant, childish, petulant and intolerant remarks.

Why is the government following this course? We have heard a number of speakers on the government side of the house say they need 75c so they can plan and program their legislation. What arrogant nonsense; what gall! Rotten wood cannot be carved, neither can it be glued nor nailed. We who live on the east coast know that you cannot build the hull of a ship with rotten or faulty materials. You cannot make a co-operative and productive House of Commons, our ship of state, with rotten or faulty rules. This government can get through a substantial legislative program only with the co-operation of the house based on an allocation of time which has been achieved by agreement among all parties in the house.

If the opposition does not co-operate, whether or not 75c is in effect the government cannot hope to get through as much legislation next session as it did in the first session of the 28th parliament. I am not threatening the government when I say this. All I ask hon. gentlemen who sit to the right of the Speaker to do is consider what is happening in the Post Office Department. Your Post Office Department has had rules laid down by the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans), and they are working to rule.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is only one rule I would remind the hon. member of, and it is that he should always address the Chair.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it very interesting when government supporters complain about the length of debate in this session, because there is nothing that indicates more clearly their lack of knowledge about past events here. I am not implying that I am an old, experienced member, but I was first elected to this chamber on June 10, 1957. This represents six federal elections and quite a number of sessions, starting with the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent and the Liberal party sitting on the opposition side of the house.

Mr. Bell: He was a great Liberal.

Mr. Crouse: It takes me through the progressive years under the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), through the uncertain years—these are not my views but those of former cabinet members who have written books on the subject—under Mr. Pearson, to the year under the Prime Minister. In all the sessions which I have attended, no government has received more co-operation in the passing of its legislative program than the present government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: There has been too much co-operation. We have spoiled them.

Mr. Crouse: Some hon. members who support the government have already referred to the rules debate as a filibuster. If they want to read about real filibusters I suggest they read some of the drivel that was put on the record during the years 1957 to 1962 by Mr. Pearson, Mr. Martin, Mr. Chevrier and Mr. Pickersgill. If wishing could come true, the men of Apollo 11 would not be the first men on the moon, because I sat here many times and wished these four men would leave this house for another place. In one way or another I suppose my wish has come true.

Let me review the record in that respect. The second session of the 24th parliament in 1959 opened on January 15 and prorogued on July 18 of that year. The third session of the 24th parliament opened on January 14, 1960, and prorogued on August 10 of that year. The fourth session of the 24th parliament opened on November 17, 1960, and did not prorogue until September 29, 1961. These were filibusters carried on by four men. If hon. members look at the record they will see that at one time one of these men filled seven pages of the Hansard Index, while the other three filled six. Heaven only knows how many thousands of words those four men put on the record during that time.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and the government have received outstanding co-operation during this session from the opposition in regard to the passage of their legislative program. To substantiate that statement all one has to do is to look at the record. According to my recollection only two of our debates were lengthy. First of all, there was the omnibus bill amending the Criminal Code. Quite naturally this measure took considerable time since many members were opposed, as I was, to the clauses dealing with abortion and homosexuality. These clauses went to the very basis of moral behaviour and to the very roots of our Christian beliefs. Since it was the government that introduced this kind of legislation to the house, I do not believe that this self same government should have had the right to limit the views of any member who tried to express his objections and the objections of his constituents to the legislation.

The second piece of legislation that took some time was the official languages bill. However, it was also an important piece of legislation, the implementation of which will have far reaching effects throughout the length and breadth of the country. Surely the President of the Privy Council is not going to state that the rights of members to express their opinions on these matters, in what to date has been a free parliament, should have been curtailed.

Quite frankly, if the government have important legislation that they wish to implement, why do they not bring it forward at this time? As I have just pointed out, the house has sat through the summer on other occasions. I would point out that it was not the Official Opposition that suggested that the Commons adjourn on June 27; this was the cut-off date that was set by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). We of the Official Opposition agreed to sit extra hours, meeting in this chamber at ten o'clock in the morning, in order to facilitate the passage of government legislation.

It is the bull headed stupidity of the present government in arranging their own program that has brought us to the present situation. Since we will never agree to the acceptance of 75c. I suggest to the President of the Privy Council that he withdraw it. And since most of the summer is now over, let him bring on any important legislation that the government have so we may deal with it now. The Prime Minister has called our fight to protect the rights of parliament a stupid filibuster. He has already prejudged 80 per cent of members' questions as sheer hypocrisy and therefore the room that is left to manoeuvre in this parliament is becoming limited.

We as members will insist on our right to be heard. If the Prime Minister and his cabinet are bored with parliament, if it is interfering with their vacation or entertainment plans, or if parliament no longer interests them, then they should at least have the courage and decency to stand in their place and to tell their story to the people who elected them.

Mr. Kaplan: It is your people who are having the vacation.

Mr. Crouse: It is now evident that rule 75c is, on second thought, no longer acceptable to the government or to the President of the Privy Council. The interjection by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) is unworthy of comment, since it was the members of his party who were counted out in the house for non-attendance last Thursday.

We have seen two retreats already in this debate. The first was made by the President of the Privy Council when he agreed to a debate on the report of the committee rather than on his motion. The second retreat occurred on Friday when the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman), the television specialist on filibusters, brought in an amendment to the motion moved by our house leader. It was obvious that the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra had the sanction and support of the President of the Privy Council for his action, but it was not found acceptable to the Chair.

Since the Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council move members up and down like a yo-yo on a string, it will be interesting to see which member the spider next entices into his web of intrigue to try to trap the opposition—in the words of the Prime Minister—into accepting that which to us is unacceptable.

I say to the President of the Privy Council: Withdraw 75c and bring on your legislation. Parliament and the official opposition have been prepared for months to deal with some of the major problems facing this country. However, it is the government that has been dilatory, ineffective and uncertain about the course that it wishes to follow.

Rule 75c would not do for the government what it suggests it would, even if its adoption were the desirable course to follow. It would not enable the government to bulldoze a large legislative program through this chamber. It would simply enable the government to cut off debate, at a time when it may be vitally necessary to continue debate so that the voice of the people, through their elected representatives, is heard on the matter.

I cannot help but wonder what the government is up to. Just what are those schemers in the cabinet planning? What secretive, cunning, destructive legislation is in the making that requires the type of control that is vested in 75c?

The record to date in this session indicates that this rule is definitely not required for the orderly conduct of the proceedings of this house. In all conscience I ask the government what in the name of heaven are they planning for the next session? What are the government planning for the future that they deem it necessary to have this type of club, this muzzle, this guillotine for silencing parliament? What important program has parliament delayed?

Every day we hear of increasing interest rates, increasing inflation and higher prices. In what manner has parliament held up the government in its so-called fight against inflation? The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has been asking for months about the commission on incomes and prices, and after almost a year the government finally got around to naming the personnel of the commission. And during all this time prices went higher and higher.

In what manner has parliament held up government action on the housing problem? We have plenty of land in Canada. There is all kinds of lumber, bricks, cement, stone, and lots of unemployed men who could usefully be occupied in putting these materials together to build homes. This being the case, why is there a housing shortage in Canada? Why was it necessary for a minister of the Crown to resign in disgust over the policies of the present government?

Surely the President of the Privy Council cannot accuse us of preventing him from bringing forward legislation to deal, for example, with the mounting torrent of water pollution in this country. The problem is national in scope and frightening in its over-all effect on the health and food supply of Canadians. Last year the federal Department of Fisheries opened a $3.5 million salmon hatchery on the Saint John River, only to find that thousands of smolt have died in the hatchery this year owing to polluted river water.

In Placentia Bay, Newfoundland, man made pollution has destroyed thousands of tons of fish, as well as the income of hundreds of Canadians, and the federal government has still not embarked on a national water quality program. Such a program was promised by the right hon. Lester Pearson in 1967. This is now 1969 and still there is no leadership in this regard given by the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member because I am afraid we will get into a pattern whereby hon. members are more inclined to discuss general problems in the country than the proposal that is before the house. I think it is an abuse of the rules of the house if members take half of the 40 minutes that is reserved to them, perhaps even longer, to discuss the aspects of all of the 18 or 20 departments of government. I suggest to hon. members that what they are discussing at the present time is essentially the motion before the house and the amendment thereto. The Acting Speaker reminded the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings of this a moment ago, and I am in full accord with the opinion he expressed at that time. Certainly I intend to invite hon. members as often as necessary to observe the rules. Since we are debating the rules it is elementary that hon. members observe this fundamental rule in particular.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your advice. I know you will understand our confusion and difficulty. It is hard to know where to cut off debate—how to apply your comments strictly, while at the same time ignoring the tremendous problems which Canadians are facing in the absence of government action to deal with them. I might mention the shipbuilding industry, the fishing industry, the failure to deal with the Woods Report concerning veterans—the list goes on interminably but I will abide by your ruling and avoid getting into a lengthy discussion about these matters.

To suggest that the government needs rule 75c in order to respond quickly by way of legislation to some of the problems to which I have referred is nothing but hypocrisy in high places. The government is aware of these problems but the only action it has taken to deal with them is to set up task forces or royal commissions, or to take them under review. We know the previous Liberal administration left a mess to be cleaned up; the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said it would take some time for him to get his house in order. But he cannot lay the blame, or even attempt to lay the blame, on the opposition for the government's failure to deal with problems which are causing widespread concern and dismay.

When the Prime Minister was minister of justice he was asked when he would decide whether a defeat was not a defeat—before or after a vote. He replied: Before or after the vote; we are the masters of this house. I submit that by this answer the Prime Minister showed us his true colours; he displayed his arrogance and his contempt for parliament. He is now seeking, through the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), to ride roughshod over the rights of private members—not only those who sit with the opposition, but also those who support the government. I ask hon. members who belong to the government party: what opportunity do you believe you will have to take part in debate if, through some miscarriage of justice, rule 75c should become a reality?

[Mr. Speaker.]

When the people in my constituency went to the polls they gave me majority support intending that I should come to Ottawa to speak out on their behalf whenever necessary. This statement applies to every constituency in Canada and to every member of this house. The government of the day will only remain the government of the day as long as it obtains the support of a majority in the house. In my view this places a responsibility on the cabinet for putting their heads together, analysing Canada's needs and coming forward with suitable legislation to satisfy them. If the legislation is well thought out, if it is constructive and beneficial to Canada, no responsible opposition will unduly delay its passage, as has been evidenced to date during the present session. Should the government reach a point at which it is faced with intentional obstruction and wilful delay in the passage of legislation, it has the right to use Standing Order 33, with its power of closure. Then, at the next election, the public can decide whether or not its action was justified.

It is most unfortunate that the cabinet and Prime Minister should have decided to force rule 75c through the house. This decision has already done violence to parliament by lowering the morale of its members and lessening the mutual respect and tolerance which has been built up among representatives of all parties. When passions are aroused and when angry words are exchanged across the floor of the house, how can a rational decision be reached, particularly as it was the stupidity of the government which provoked the row in the first place?

As a Member of Parliament, the only power I have is the right to be heard in this chamber. Any government which seeks to rob me of that power is treading on dangerous ground. The very essence of democracy is the right to debate—the right to speak out and be heard. I am not prepared to abrogate this right to the present government, because those who sit on the front benches opposite have not shown by their actions that they are humble enough to govern Canada; they have not shown that they have enough respect for our parliamentary traditions; they are not kind enough in their views with regard to the major problems facing Canadians, and they are not just in their program of priorities for dealing with these problems.

For all these reasons I ask the President of the Privy Council to seriously consider withdrawing rule 75c so that members may direct their thoughts and energies not toward a debate on the rules but rather toward solving some of the many urgent problems presently facing Canadians.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to have an opportunity to take part in one of the great and important debates which occasionally arise in this house. In my humble opinion the debate which is going on now is the most important one in which we have engaged in the present session of parliament. We are debating the real essence of parliamentary procedure, the very institution of democracy. This is why members on this side of the house have made up their minds to debate the subject fully and do their best to persuade the people of Canada that a rule of the type now proposed should never be written into the Standing Orders of this house.

I should like to examine for a minute or two several of the points raised by previous speakers. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) said that a year ago the present administration was elected to govern Canada. No one disputes this. No one disputes the right of a majority party to bring in legislation and get that legislation through parliament. But then the hon. member made another statement. He said that the job placed on the shoulders of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today required that a change in procedure involving 75c be made.

I ask the hon. member for Bruce, as I have asked other hon. members, to name one piece of legislation which has been held up in this chamber, or which could not have been processed prior to the adjournment date on which we had agreed, namely, June 27? No member of this house can rise and say we have held up government legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harding: Yet the government is determined to bring in rule changes which will gag not only opposition members but members on the government side as well. We do not change the rules, Mr. Speaker, because we are looking for some immediate gain. That is not the way we ought to operate in parliament. We bring in rule changes because they will enable hon. members of this house to process bills democratically and, possibly, quickly. But we do not need these proposed changes. Nothing that has happened in the past few years indicates that we need rule changes as drastic as these.

It concerns me to think that a number of freshman members, they are scattered throughout all parties but predominate in the Liberal party, should demand that there be a gag which will be effective in cutting off debate on some of the most important pieces of legislation that could come before this house. Surely the hon. member for Bruce was speaking with tongue in cheek when he said a few moments ago that four days debating time is ample for the Canadian people to learn what is happening here. How foolish and unthinking hon. members are when they make statements like that. I appeal to hon. members of the house to send these rule changes back to committee. There are 12 men on the standing committee—let us call them reasonable men—who can examine these changes again. Let them wrestle with the problem and bring it back to the house later on. The opposition is as anxious as the government to see Canada well governed. We want good legislation and good government and we are not here to obstruct good legislation. All of us are sent here to do a job, but we do not need the guillotine that is contained in rule 75c to help us do our job.

I wish to refer to something the Prime Minister said in this house last Friday. He said that this debate on the rules change is a stupid filibuster. I have great respect for the Prime Minister, as we all ought to have. The Prime Minister especially should give guidance and leadership at all times to the people of Canada. If anyone is to act like a statesman it ought to be the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harding: It was with a sense of shock that I heard him describe this debate as a stupid filibuster. I want members on the government side to pay attention. For how long have we been discussing these rule changes? It may seem a long time, because most of us had hoped to go home on June 27. Actually, the amendment before us was introduced last Tuesday. Yet on Friday morning, after three days of debate, the Prime Minister told the Canadian nation that this is a stupid filibuster. I have looked carefully at the record, and I think my figures are accurate. Why did the Prime Minister of this nation say, after we had had three days of debate, that this is a stupid filibuster? We know why you want proposed rule 75c. The government is going to guillotine every major piece of legislation coming before this house. Let us see what has happened since last Monday.

Last Monday we were not discussing rules. We had a hassle about whether the government house leader or committee chairman should have the honour of beginning this debate. That hassle took the whole day, so on Monday we were not discussing rule changes. And what happened on Tuesday? The government house leader withdrew his motion in order to allow the committee chairman to proceed with his report. On Tuesday ten members took part in the debate which lasted approximately five hours. The lead off speaker, the chairman of the committee, began talking in this rules debate at 2.50 p.m. last Tuesday. Altogether three Liberals, three Conservatives, two N.D.P. and two Creditiste members took part in that debate, one Creditiste member carrying over into the following day. As I say, we had five hours of debating time. On Wednesday five speakers, one of them being the carry over Creditiste member, spoke for three hours. The other speakers included two Liberals, one Conservative and one from the N.D.P.

On Thursday we had two hours of debating time, the house rising early because there were not enough members here to constitute a quorum. There were four speakers including one Liberal, two Conservatives and one from the N.D.P. Altogether up to that time there had been ten hours of debate in the house, and the Prime Minister got up and announced to the nation that this was a filibuster.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Harding: I say to hon. members opposite, it is about time you understood what is going on and did something about it. We are hearing talk today about a filibuster being in progress. Last Friday we debated the rule change for one hour and 55 minutes. If we ignore debating time for today, we have spent less than 12 hours in debating these rule changes, and government members from all parts of Canada are talking about a rules filibuster. I say that if this is your definition of a filibuster—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member to remind him that he should at all times address the Chair.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If this is the government's definition of a filibuster then I am afraid that in future debates this house is in for a lot of trouble.

In summarizing, may I point out that until the end of last Friday's sitting 21 speakers had taken part in this debate. There were seven Liberals, eight Conservatives, four from the N.D.P. and two Creditistes. Although there has been much talk about a filibuster in this chamber, no one group in particular can be accused of having carried it on.

I support the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). He proposes in his amendment to send this matter back to committee so that it can deal with 75c.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Rule changes in any parliamentary democracy should be made by agreement and not by force. As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, agreement can be reached on sensible changes required to make a modern parliamentary system work effectively. We have had that agreement. We saw it last fall when major rule changes were made in this house by agreement. It must be obvious to everyone there will never be agreement by the opposition parties to the dictatorial powers proposed by this administration in rule 75c.

I believe this parliament for the most part is made up of reasonable members. They are found in every party. Despite their various political philosophies most hon. members want to make our parliamentary democracy function efficiently and well. I suggest to the house and to the government house leader in particular that rule 75c should be withdrawn by the government and sent back to the committee for redrafting.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Harding: I will be very happy if Mr. Speaker will permit it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member has suggested that it be sent back for redrafting. He therefore opposes the motion of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who proposes its deletion altogether.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, I am supporting the amendment to send this draft back to the committee. I believe changes can be worked out. That is why this debate has been good. We have been trying to convince the government house leader and others that if these rule changes are to be effective and co-operatively used in the house, they must have the endorsement of all groups. Again I urge the government house leader to consider sending it back. Members are not unreasonable. If the Special Committee on Rules had been composed of unreasonable members of parliament, we never would have had the vast changes that were drafted, brought in, and accepted by this house last December.

As I have read rule 75c, it seems to me that the most objectionable feature is the fact that it could effectively gag the opposition on major and controversial legislation. It is not good enough to have the government house leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), or someone else stand up in the House of Commons and say, you can trust us, we will make certain this is only used on those rare occasions when debate has exceeded the limits to which we think it should go."

That is not good enough. You do not draft laws that way. You do not draft procedures that way. What would happen if the laws of this country were left wide open in this manner? You must legislate or make changes that cannot be circumvented by people who might want to use them for their own purposes. That is one of the obvious reasons why this particular piece of legislation should go back to the committee.

As I understand 75c, Mr. Speaker, if it becomes operative it will make legal the right of any government to plan and carry out closure in advance. I feel this is a dangerous and dictatorial move that will boomerang on the present administration. It is not worthy of any Canadian political party which is supposed to be based on democratic ideas. It is difficult to imagine how it fits into the government slogan of a just society.

Parliamentary freedom is above both the party and the individual. No one group should ever have the right indiscriminately to deny this basic right to others under our parliamentary constitution. I am surprised that the Liberal Party have asked for this dictatorial power. I am more concerned that not one of their elected members has had the courage to speak out against what is obviously a blatant attempt to gag opposition spokesmen in parliament.

Provision for closure in advance of adequate debate is an insult to every Canadian citizen. It is an insulting defiance of every elector who cast a Liberal vote in the federal election of one year ago. It is another crystal clear sign of the contemptuous attitude being displayed by the government and its leader to our parliamentary traditions.

Again I urge the house to turn down the proposal made by the committee and the government, and to send it back for further discussion with other parties. Reasonable members in all parties can work out any procedural differences if enough effort is put into resolving them. If a solution cannot be found by these members, then our nation is in a bad way. Perhaps a paragraph from a recent editorial in the December 12, 1968, issue of the Globe and Mail will best illustrate the point I have mentioned, and I quote:

> Nothing is more fundamental to democracy than the belief that society is composed of reasonable men. They will have their irrational moments and a system of checks and balances will be needed. And there will be occasions when reason seems forfeited to hysteria, opportunism, malice or any number of things. But if faith in the reasonableness of men is lost, then so is democracy. For government must then become authoritarian. It must cast aside all pretence of governing according to the wishes of the people. At its most enlightened, it will govern according to what it considers is best for the people. Although it may be benevolent, it can never be democratic.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that our differences on procedure can be ironed out in committee. I fully support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River. The proposed amendment asks that the house refer the report back to the committee with instructions to delete proposed rule 75c.

There is no objection from any of the opposition parties in the house to 75A and 75B. At least I have not heard any objection during this debate. In fact the members of the opposition groups helped to draft these changes in committee and will endorse them now. However, 75c is the undemocratic creation of the government. It is their suggested method of gagging the opposition parties in the House of Commons. The mere fact that the present government, with their large group of freshmen members, insist on this dictatorial rule is a fair indication of their dismay and panic at the loss of prestige suffered in just one year by their administration. They seem to have lost all sense of history and feel that by muzzling the opposition their troubles will go away.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The fact is that this government is in trouble. It is in major trouble, and that trouble is nation wide because of a lack of policy and direction seldom before seen to the extent it has been displayed by the present administration. We have all heard the old theory of the divine right of kings. It was a belief that the king could do no wrong. It would seem to me there has been a rebirth of this old idea so far as the present administration is concerned. The Liberal group in parliament feel that Pierre can do no wrong. This blind faith, as exhibited in the proposed rule changes, will lead to political oblivion for most of them.

The proposals by this administration to muzzle free speech, and slyly to attempt to initiate rules which will force closure in advance of adequate debate are a sure sign that those leading the government are totally unaware of the mood of our present day society. More than ever before those in our society, especially the young people, are demanding more discussion, more information, more answers and more participatory democracy.

These cannot be obtained when those in power try to gag a democratically elected parliament which should give the lead to our people in discussing fully those major problems which will shape the future of the nation. In parliamentary terms, closure is an odious word. It is something that should be used rarely. Closure in advance of adequate debate which proposed rule 75c could well bring about is no credit to those in the present administration who advocate its acceptance.

Complete and utter disregard for our parliamentary democracy has been the earmark of this administration. It was first demonstrated last December in its abortive attempt to foist rule 16A on parliament. It is demonstrated again in its attempt to force rule 75C, which is very similar to rule 16A, on an unwilling House of Commons.

It is interesting to note that last December, when the government was forced to withdraw rule 16A because of Canada-wide opposition, the Prime Minister indicated that the government did not really want it. He claimed that the opposition had been trapped and tripped by the government. He told the press that the opposition was forced to focus on rule 16A so that all the other rule changes would be accepted. He implied that the government had never really wanted to put 16A into effect and that it was used only as a ploy to fool the opposition. However, in view of the introduction of 75c we might well question the credibility of the Prime Minister's statement on the December debate.

If the government did not want another closure rule in December, why does it want one now? As I mentioned before, not one piece of legislation requested by the government had been held up from passage through the House of Commons by the June 27 adjournment date. The only delay in important legislation this session is due to the fact that the various ministers have not prepared and brought into the house for consideration some very important legislation promised to the Canadian people many months ago. This government, not the opposition, has delayed legislation. I need only mention the Canada Water Act, the Canadian Development Corporation Act and the proposed legislation on the Woods report recommentations, so desperately needed by the veterans, as fields in which there have been government promises but no action.

We are told that the government needs 75c so that it can program its work. I suggest that the best parliamentary system in the world could not work effectively if an inefficient government were doing the programming. Evidence of inefficiency in programming so far as the government is concerned is to be found everywhere. This current debate on parliamentary rule changes is the most important issue with which this particular parliament will have to deal.

The key issue before us today is a simple one. It is the right of all elected members to speak fully and freely in the house on the issues affecting our nation, and our whole system of parliamentary democracy revolves around it. It is difficult to believe that in Canada today any party or any minister, would dare to ask for the sweeping and restrictive powers outlined in section 75c. It is equally difficult to understand how any member of this house could support this obvious government move to muzzle the opposition.

If rule 75c is passed, private members—we are all in the same position, with the exception of those who sit in the cabinet and the leaders of the various parties—could be effectively gagged in major debates from presenting alternatives to government proposals. The opposition could be denied the opportunity effectively to make the nation fully aware of contentious legislation. The citizens of our nation could be denied the right to hear all sides of contentious issues and might not be given time to make their views known to those who sit in the parliament of Canada. This is the crux of the rule change.

By including this rule we might well eliminate all the citizens of Canada outside the house from participating in the workings of parliament. If rule 75c is passed the government could by law force any piece of legislation through parliament with only four days of debate, including the second reading stage, the committee stage, the report stage and third reading stage. All the talk in the world by government members cannot change that fact. This is evident from a reading of the amendment.

It would be possible for major legislation to receive only cursory examination, and entire legislation could be passed through parliament before the Canadian public had any opportunity to express its opinions. In fact, a major piece of legislation could, if the government so desired, receive less than 10 hours of actual debate in the House of Commons, and this would include every phase of a bill.

We could see an unscrupulous government, with the use of 75c, start second reading on a major piece of legislation, perhaps on a Wednesday, when the House of Commons sits only four hours. As usual debate would start after the question period, and in three hours or less the debate on the principle of the bill would be over, with only a handful of members having participated. Surely rules allowing such obvious abuse of our parliamentary democracy will never be enacted by our Canadian parliament. Surely the members on the government benches will never allow rules of this nature to become law.

Once through second reading, the bill in one day could be forced through the committee to which it had been referred, again without full discussion. It would then come back to the House of Commons where another three or four hour debate could take care of proposed amendments and other criticism, and at the end of the day this stage of the bill would be completed, regardless of what remained to be discussed.

The third and final reading of any bill could again be completed in one day, and could be a repetition of the above, with only a three or four hour debate. A total of ten hours or less in the House of Commons could see major legislation ready for the Senate and royal assent. I say again that regardless of the good intention of any party it will be a major political and democratic blunder if the members of this house ever make this proposed rule change legal.

Rule 75c is a dangerous, a vicious and a foolish proposal. It strikes at the very roots of democracy. It gives the ruling party the legal power to effectively gag those who oppose its policies. It could only be the creation of a party which has become contemptuous of both our democratic parliamentary tradition and of the general public. It is another example of the political blundering and inept manoeuvering of the Trudeau administration. It shows how thoroughly Liberal backbenchers have been whipped into line, for none of them dare to raise their voices in protest. If this is a part of the Liberal plan for a just society then our nation is in real trouble. If this Liberal administration needs the type of rule change as proposed in 75c to govern this nation, then one is justified in asking what type of legislation does it have in mind for the future which would require the use of such restrictive measures?

The minister talks about the committee report which was brought in by the chairman, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). Let me put on the record the composition of the committee so that no one will get the idea that 75c was part of any joint report in which other parties participated. The procedure committee is proposed of 12 members. There are 7 Liberals, 3 Conservatives, 1 N.D.P. and 1 Creditiste. The Liberals have a clear majority in the committee. The only members of the committee voting for 75c were Liberals. All the other members were opposed.

To put the whole problem of parliamentary procedure in its proper perspective I feel that a short review of our efforts in this field is necessary. Again I am going to take us back to the fall of 1968 when the first session of this Parliament started.

All parties agreed that some major changes had to be made. An all party committee was set up and a report was brought in. Over 95 per cent of that lengthy report was adopted by the House of Commons. Only one section was rejected, and that was the infamous 16A which is somewhat similar to the measure we are debating today. These major rule changes received the full support of all the members of the house. The opposition parties helped to draft them, and we tried to make them work. We have streamlined much of our parliamentary procedure. We have already drastically reduced the debating time spent on legislation in this chamber. However, we cannot agree to accept the changes suggested by 75c, and no democratic government should insist on proceeding with these changes when they are so unanimously and vigorously opposed by members of all the opposition parties in the house.

We are told by the government that 75c is needed in order that parliament can respond quickly to an emergency situation. This is a complete farce. A closure rule is already on the books and it has been there for over 50 years. We have also heard from the Liberal members that legislation was unduly held up during this current session. Again there is no indication of this, and no member of the government side can point to one piece of legislation that has been held up or stopped from passing because of the work of the opposition in this house.

I spent some time in a provincial legislature and I know the problems which opposition parties have in putting their views forward. I say to the members of this house that this government has had full co-operation from all the parties in the House of Commons in making rule changes and in trying to process the work of this parliament more efficiently and more effectively.

We found last June, or earlier, that a plan had been made to adjourn this house on June 27. All groups agreed that this was a proper date to adjourn and we worked towards that adjournment date, co-operating fully. We sat longer hours in the latter part of June, and we worked out an agreement with the government house leader on private bills. We agreed to limit debate on a number of measures. There is only one group which has broken the co-operative arrangement which had been set up, and that is the government group under the government house leader.

As I said before, if there is any party in this house that has held up legislation it is the government, particularly on major issues some of which have been enumerated by other speakers this afternoon. I do not intend to cover them again.

I should like to point out in closing that all across Canada the feeling is becoming more evident every day, through editorials, newspaper and radio comment, that the people of this nation do not want restrictive measures such as 75c to become legal in the parliament of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because I feel I must, as a member of parliament honoured to represent thousands of citizens of Canada who live in Ontario. I cannot see how any man who is determined to make a real, honest effort on behalf of those he represents could in any way support, to any degree, the measure outlined in 75c. That is why I have no hesitation whatsoever in supporting the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I have been impressed with the high calibre of speeches we have had this afternoon from two hon. members, the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) and the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding). You will find that they have pointed out in no uncertain terms what would happen to parliament, and what could be the outcome in respect of the rights of members should such rule changes be passed.

The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) indicated that all members of parliament should accept proposed rule 75c. The fact that backbenchers on the government side of the house have in the main accepted the gag rule is no reason why we should follow suit. As a matter of fact it is one of the things that makes me very suspicious about 75c. Hon. members opposite speak only when they are allowed to speak. I witness the humility of ministers who come into the house only when they are allowed. It creates great awe in the House of Commons when, by order, ministers absent themselves from the chamber. They, too, are members of parliament. They, too, have the responsibility of representing their constituents. I would never call myself a member of parliament if I allowed anyone in the house, except Your Honour, to order me to vacate my seat for even a moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Danforth: Why are we suspicous? It is because we know the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has not enough confidence in his members to allow them to carry out their responsibilities, and sets up regional desks to find out what is happening in their areas. These commissars report on what government members are doing and how they are doing it. Is this what we want in a democratic Canada?

A great deal has been said in this debate about committees and the government members who serve on them. We know that if they have dared to oppose the wishes of the government they have been quickly removed from membership of the committee.

Mr. Deakon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would draw the hon. member's attention to the justice committee, and for his information—

Mr. Danforth: What is the point of order?

Mr. Deakon: —the members of committees can speak their own minds.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth).

Mr. Danforth: The hon. member who has interjected says government members on committees are allowed to speak their minds. I would believe this if it were done in the quiet of a committee room without members of the press being present so that the rumour would get back to the government only in a committee report, handed down five weeks late in some cases. I have grave doubts about our committee system when chairmen of committees appointed by the government are not allowed to make a report to the house until it is convenient to the government to do so.

Mr. Deakon: You should come to the justice committee sometime.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): What did Steve Otto say about committees?

Mr. Danforth: As my colleague has pointed out, the Hansard record shows that instructions have been given to government members of committees. How can we have confidence in a government of this calibre? As a member from Ontario I have the right to oppose in every way possible a measure which I believe would make it impossible for members from that province to put forward adequately in the house the wishes and views of the citizens they represent.

So far we have had in this parliament harmony to a degree that I have not before experienced in the years I have been here. I was amazed and gratified to see how much work could be accomplished when there was a measure of agreement among the leaders of the parties. I believed this was the dawn of a new era. Although many of us were suspicious, we were delighted to see what could happen by agreement. But this harmony has gone. We now have a House of Commons that is ugly in its attitude. Why is this? It is because the government has introduced a measure that we believe will make it impossible for us to perform our duties in the way they should be performed. On every occasion the government asks us to place confidence in it, and breaks that trust. How can we then have confidence in it? The government reiterates that this measure will never be imposed except in extreme circumstances. How can we possibly accept this?

I have always had the greatest respect for the office of the Prime Minister. I still have that respect, but I now have very little respect for the man who holds that high office. Any man who stands in this house and calls a debate on such an important matter as rule changes a stupid filibuster either does not understand our parliamentary system, or cares nothing for it.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): He cannot be bothered with it.

Mr. Danforth: The Prime Minister says that 80 per cent of the questions asked by hon. members are sheer hypocrisy. As far as I am concerned, that statement is the ultimate in hypocrisy. The government has said there is need for rule changes, that we must increase the efficiency of the house, that it has a majority in the house and therefore represents the wishes of the people. I agree that it received a mandate. The members of the opposition have always accepted the fact that the government received a mandate, but it was to bring in legislation and to lead this nation. When the government introduces a new rule which provides that the right of opposition members to speak will be removed, it no longer represents the majority of people in this country.

Mr. MacInnis: They do not represent the majority.

Mr. Danforth: By way of this legislation the government is asking the opposition parties to agree to leave 12 million Canadians voiceless in their parliament. We can never accept laws of this type which deny the right of Canadians to be heard in their parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Danforth: The government talks of limiting debate to four, five or six days. We know that four or five hours a day are devoted to debate. There are 264 members in this house. Each one of us represents a different area of Canada, sometimes a different ethnic group. Does anyone believe we could limit debate to four, five or six speakers a day, from members representing all parties in the house, and adequately express the views of this great nation to the extent that we could form a consensus and vote on important issues?

• (5:30 p.m.)

What do the new rules mean to me? I try to be reasonable in my approach to parliamentary activities. I agree with those who believe we should conduct ourselves on a businesslike basis. I have watched with uneasiness the continual infringement of the rights of the ordinary citizens of Canada by this parliament to a degree that makes me fear for the future of this country. I have seen bills passed by the government majority in this house giving rights to government appointees that are greater than those given to members of the R.C.M.P. I have seen government appointed individuals protected by statutes to the degree that if anyone challenged these officials they would be liable to fines and a penalty of up to two years in jail. Their power is such that if a Canadian citizen disagrees with a particular decision his only recourse is an appeal to a government appointed arbitrator. Canadian citizens have to appeal a government decision to an appointee of the government. What I particularly object to is the provision that the decision of the arbitrator in question is final, that there is no appeal to, or review by, any other court. In other words, Canadians are losing their right to appeal to the courts of the land.

Under the provisions of another statute, which I shall not identify, an appointed official of the government is given what I as a layman feel are rights that are greater than those given to a Supreme Court judge. Under this statute a deputy minister can issue subpoenas, require oaths to be taken, demand that witnesses give evidence, and accept testimony that would be inadmissible in any court of the land. This power goes beyond the courts and to me is an infringement on my rights as a Canadian, in the same way as this proposed rule is an infringement on my rights as a member of parliament. This is why I cannot and will not accept the approach taken by this government.

I respect the hon. members of this house. I learned long ago that wisdom does not lie within any one particular political party in this house but that all political parties have men of great knowledge and wisdom. Together they form a great parliament. I feel the time will never come when only one party will present the best legislation. Certainly, this cannot be achieved by denying contributions from one half of the members of the house who collectively have wisdom, knowledge and experience. Such a suggestion does not make sense.

As one who has enjoyed the harmony and co-operation that has been evident in the house, I am now beginning to realize what is meant when members declare that, if they are compelled by sheer weight of numbers to accept this particular measure, we must work to rule. This was not a threat; it was said in desperation, after they had pleaded with the government to be reasonable in their approach. This was said after it had been pointed out that 75A and 75B are the tools that have been used to make progress thus far in this parliament. These provisions have made it possible for us to deal with hundreds of issues.

Having listened to hon. members declaring they cannot accept 75c, that they will not accept 75c; that they will find ways of circumventing it if it is adopted, all I can say is: God bless these men for being men, and thank God for Canada that they are in this house. Only in this way can this parliament survive.

We must have the right to speak in this house. It is not good enough for members on the government side to tell me that I have ample opportunity to speak in committee and to discuss bills.

Mr. Deakon: We cannot.

Mr. Danforth: The hon. member is right; they cannot tell me this. Having sat in committees for years and seen the committee system in operation under different governments, I would say that the present committees are hamstrung to a degree unprecedented in parliamentary history. Having said that, I will also admit that there are some committees sitting today for which I have the greatest respect, because the membership of those committees have divested themselves of partisanship and are trying to work for the good of the country. We need more men with this approach.

Other committees have but one thing in mind, that is the promotion of government measures irrespective of their value or their weaknesses. This is why I cannot accept the present committee structure. Committees are told that they have the right to summon and hear witnesses, to ask for papers and documents and to travel from place to place, and this sounds good and is well meant. But I have sat in committee meetings dealing with government legislation at which the minister in charge has stated we could summon only government officials. When this happens the committee defeats itself. There are men of learning and experience other than government officials who can improve legislation put before this house. Either we are going to have a democracy or we are going to have a dictatorship. I say this country is not ready for parliamentary dictatorship.

This matter first came before the house last December. I thought at that time that the government showed wisdom in accepting the will of this house. But when it was inferred immediately after a decision had been made that the opposition had walked into a trap, I began to lose respect for this government. Up until that time I had thought their proposals were honourable ones. I had thought they were willing to accept the will of the house with regard to proposals presented to the House of Commons. Instead, I became very suspicious, and the measure before the house today proves that my suspicions were well founded.

I cannot, and I will not, accept the implication behind 75c. This is why, as a member of parliament representing the citizens of a riding in Ontario, I support wholeheartedly the amendment moved to delete the proposed rule 75c and to send the report back to the committee. As a member of Parliament, a man who took on the obligation to represent to the best of his ability a large number of citizens of this country, I cannot accept the fact that I shall not be allowed to speak in this house; I cannot accept a situation in which my propositions will not be endorsed by a committee; I cannot accept that the Parliament of Canada must deteriorate because a few individuals in high places so desire.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate some two hours and sixteen minutes earlier than I had expected. I was hoping the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) would continue until six o'clock. He owes me a supper for making me get up before I was ready, though I hope this will not be too obvious to the house in the time remaining before six o'clock.

I am another of those who did not take part in the debate on the rule changes last December. However, I listened to almost everything that was said during that debate, and I carefully read the rest. I was impressed by the arguments put forward from both sides of the house, though I did not agree with those advanced by speakers from the government side. I am sure all hon. members felt greatly relieved that the government was wise enough in the end to withdraw its proposed rule 16A. I thought that would be the end of the matter. In fact, I was convinced it was the end as far as a rule along the lines of 16A was concerned.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated at that time, as my hon. friend and deskmate, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) has reminded us, that the opposition was trapped. This caused me to believe that the government had decided against bringing in the equivalent of such a rule, certainly not in the present session and probably not during the lifetime of this parliament.

In any case, if a government felt the need for a rule of this kind it could be expected to produce overwhelming evidence to show it was completely justified. As sincerely and seriously as I can, I ask all hon. members who support the government: why do you need this change? What evidence do you have as to the need of such a rule as this? Why do you feel this rule is a proper one for a government to use? Several hon. members have pointed out that the government has failed to provide any evidence of obstruction or failure to co-operate. There has been no evidence that the opposition has deliberately or otherwise delayed the passage of legislation, or engaged in filibusters.

Speaking of filibustering, I hope that following the remarks of my hon. friend from Kootenay West, some hon. member on the government side will give us a definition of a filibustering from his point of view. I think my hon. friend did an excellent job of exposing the remark made by the Prime Minister last Friday. If, in fact, the government's definition of a filibuster is a 12-hour debate, I am all the more convinced that rule 75c has to be opposed all summer and fall if necessary. If this is their definition of a filibuster we can easily see what is in store for us should 75c be passed.

The degree of co-operation forthcoming from opposition parties in this session has been immeasurably greater than in any previous parliament in our history. There is good reason for this. There are more than 100 new members in this house and all of us, as new members, regardless of party, had been feeling parliament was too slow and that its actions were sometimes irrelevant. All of us hoped we could play a part in improving parliament in terms of the speed with which it handles business as well as in terms of the relevancy of its debates.

Since legislation so far has not been unduly delayed or obstructed, the question arises: why does the government feel it must have this rule? There is plenty of evidence to show that opposition parties have co-operated.

There is plenty of evidence to show that an imposing amount of legislation and other matters has been dealt with in this chamber since September. It is certainly no fault of the opposition if much of this legislation has not been of great national importance. Some of it may have been valuable in itself, but a lot of it was not legislation to deal with the major problems confronting our country. At any rate, the legislation which was brought forward was dealt with more speedily than similar legislation in previous parliaments.

In some 190 sitting days to date there have been 100 government orders on the order paper. A few have been withdrawn, but all the rest have been dealt with. There are about 18 orders remaining on the order paper now, which means that 85 or so have been dealt with. Abut 50 bills have been passed.

During the debate on the Speech from the Throne last fall, a debate which under the rules can last for eight days, the four house leaders were, I am sure, somewhat nonplussed to find that after five days they were running out of speakers. They were surprised to find that new members of Parliament were not anxious to get up and speak, on the ground that enough had been said already. As a result, the debate lasted only six days. Many of us felt this was enough. The additional two days were made available for the government. The budget debate which took place in the spring could have lasted six days under the rules. Opposition parties agreed that it should last only four days, thus providing two additional days for the government. Counting six days spent on the address, four days on the budget and 16 opposition days among the total to be subtracted from the number of sitting days available, we are left with 150 or 155 days for legislation. During this time some 50 pieces of legislation were dealt with and passed. I submit that is a very good record. How good the legislation is, is another matter. When you consider the number of items that have been dealt with, no one in this country can say this parliament has not been productive.

Proposed rules 75A and 75B have been arrived at by consensus and agreement. I suggest to the silent 66 members in the two back rows on the government side that these two rules ought to be enough to make parliament function more efficiently. But we can only find out if these rules work if we try them for a while. I urge the government, and those occupying the two back rows on the government side, to withdraw proposed rule 75c. Let us adopt the motion of the hon. member for Peace River and try to work under proposed rules 75A and 75B. If there is evidence that opposition parties are obstructing parliament, carrying on a filibuster or hamstringing the government I, for one, will not be nearly so vociferous in objecting to the introduction of 75c. But I am prepared to take my chances.

If the opposition obstructs parliament, it will deserve to work under rule 75c. But is it not reasonable for us to see whether we can work harmoniously under the other two proposed rules first? The government has not made out a sufficiently strong case to show that a rule like 75c is necessary. It has not brought forward evidence that might prompt the people of Canada to say, "Go ahead; with an opposition like that you need 75c." Hon. members may talk about debates in previous parliaments, but this is a new parliament. This is supposed to be a new Liberal government. Let us see how it performs. Let us not refer to past history. In this parliament there are many new members who are anxious to see parliament performing its functions more efficiently.

Ever since I was a small boy—we lived in the middle of the Saskatchewan dust bowl—I remember people talking politics and saying that there was a chronic ailment in the Liberal party. For many decades the Liberals have been convinced that they are the only ones who know how to govern and who are fit to govern. They really believe this. This belief constitutes a chronic ailment within the Liberal party and is one reason that party, despite its choice of new leaders, has continued to be called an old time party.

It has been said many times in this debate that the rules of parliament are the rules of every member of parliament and not of the government alone. No reasonable member of Parliament, particularly if he is in opposition, will acquiesce to rule changes such as are proposed. People are asking how long this debate is to continue. Employees of this house come up to me and ask that question. My answer is that it may continue until September, October or November. We may be here until then and we shall continue talking, Mr. Speaker, until this obnoxious rule is withdrawn. I notice that the government is seeking to hold a club over our heads. There is a motion on the order paper to extend sitting hours. Although I may be out of order in my remarks, may I say briefly that it does not matter whether we are to sit four hours a day or fourteen. We shall all be here for quite a while. On this matter no one in opposition is bluffing, and I wish to emphasize to hon. members on the government side that we are not bluffing.

Although it is not quite six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, may I, since I wish to draw up some more notes for further comments, call it six o'clock at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before we call it six o'clock, may I advise hon. members of the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment. They are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Post Office Department, Vancouver—dissatisfaction of letter carriers with five day delivery; the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett)—Unemployment Insurance—government policy respecting modification of operation; the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner)—Water Resources—diversion of waters from Hudson and James Bays.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the third report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization presented to the house on Friday, June 20, 1969, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baldwin (p. 10963).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I must confess I was still struggling. I hope that during whatever time I have left I will not appear to be struggling, even if I am. First, I wish to apologize for my sore throat. It is what is called convention throat or preacher's throat. I just returned from a New Democratic Party convention in Saskatoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I imagine the house is not interested in that at this moment. Speak to the amendment.

Mr. Benjamin: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I was afraid that by the time I was through Your Honour would have wished I had given an explanation.

At six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was asking when and if a government speaker would get up to present some evidence to this house of opposition obstruction, deliberate or otherwise, to their legislation in order to present a concrete case for their need for rule 75c. None have yet done so. Previous Liberal speakers have failed to present any argument or evidence to support any contention for their need of 75c.
