Ayer's Sarsaparilla

The Best Blood Medicine

So say Leading Physicians and Druggists, and their opinion is endorsed by thousands cured by it of Scrofula, Eczema, Erysipelas, and other diseases of the blood.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla has won its reputation by years of valuable service to the community. It is the best."—E. S. Lang, Druggist, 212 Merrimack St., Lowell, Mass.

Dr. W. P. Wright, Paw Paw Ford, Tenn., says: "In my practice, I invariably prescribe Ayer's Sarsaparilla for chronic diseases of the blood."

Dr. R. E. Boyle, Third and Oxford Sts., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "For two years I have prescribed Ayer's Sarsaparilla in numerous instances, and I find it highly efficacious in the treatment of all disorders of the blood."

L. M. Robinson, Pharmacist, Sabina, O., certifies: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has always been a great seller. My customers think there is no blood-purifier equal to it."

"For many years I was afflicted with scrofulous running sores, which, at last became so bad that the doctors advised amputation of my legs to save my life. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla and soon saw an improvement. After using about two dozen bottles the sores were healed. I continue to take a few bottles of this medicine each week with me, and am no longer troubled with sores. I have tried other reputed blood-purifiers, but none does so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—D. A. Robinson, Neol, Kansas.

So the wrapper was folded away and the next day it went with Helen Kendall

to her new home.

Time passed, and in the absorption of her new place, the box and its contents were almost forgotten. One day, in making some changes, the box happened

to be brought to light, and the wrapper

was taken out to be put in some other place. Before it was disposed of Helen was interrupted, and it lay upon a chair

in her room all night.

The next morning was dark and rainy,

and in hurrying her dressing she remembered her gray morning dress was out of repair.

Hesitating a moment, her eye caught sight of the card with 'A Rainy Day

Wrapper' on it. She smiled at the ridi-culousness of wearing such a thing on such a morning; then, as she paused, a sudden inspiration came to her.

"What if I should? I declare! I'll do it!" she exclaimed, and in spite of mischievous she hastily threw it on. A glance in the mirror assured her that at 48 the color was becoming to her clear,

dark complexion and brown hair and eyes. But she went out and took her place at the breakfast table, a little shame-terms an attack made by Sir Richard Cartwright on the morals and intelligence of the maritime province people. It is rather unusual for the opening speech to be aggressive, but Sir Hazen looks through the custom in fine style, winning more applause than was ever before won by a member on a like occasion.

In rising to move the address in reply, the member for St. John made the usual request for forbearance, after which he remarked on the importance of the matters contained in the bill of fare. Referring to the early paragraphs, he observed that in a young country it was highly essential that great public effort should be made to develop its resources, and it was pleasing to recognize the success already attained in making the great Northwest country available for settlement and development. The visit of the tenant farmers of the old country, skilled men, known at home to have no interest of their own to serve, by visiting the country, ought to be made good to the dominion that a hundred paid agents sent out from this country could perform. The reports of these delegates which had been circulated extensively in the old world were highly, but not untruthfully, complimentary to this country.

The first trust of applause which greeted Mr. Hazen was called out by his observations respecting the negotiations with the United States. He began this part of the subject by expressing his approval of the course of the government in intimating its willingness to negotiate reciprocity with the United States, thus following out the traditional and continuous policy of the present government and the party to which he belonged.

Coming from a part of the country much interested in fisheries, he might also be excused for expressing the hope that in any treaty the interests of the Canadian fishermen, or their territorial rights, would be taken care of. He would also take this opportunity to point out the danger to the fishery of the Bay of Fundy, as well as to the cod-fishing, which depended on the presence of herring in the bay. Of the same fishing on the islands, something should be done to prevent or limit the destruction of small fish for the Eastport sandine factories.

Mr. Hazen also dealt at some length with the local legislation, and in detail the English legislation on this subject and the injury done by it to Canadian tonnage, owing to differences in shape and style of our ships from the iron ships of England. Since it had apparently been agreed that Great Britain would accept Canadian regulations on the same lines as the English act, he had only to hope that Canadian legislation would not place the soft wood ships of this country in unfair competition with the wooden ships of any other country, and also that the coasting vessels would be exempt. After some remarks on the collection of laws, and references to the excellent financial condition of the country in respect to the debt and interest charges, Mr. Hazen closed his address so far as it dealt with the subject matter of motion before the house.

But he had not gone before. There was matter outside the lines of the speech from the throne to which he felt it his duty to refer. A gentleman occupying an exalted position in this country had caused to be brought through this country a statement so completely at variance with fact and so grossly insulting to the maritime provinces of Canada and the west, that he as a maritime man thought it right to take this very opportunity of contradicting it. The member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) had, right after election made and caused to be published an address to his constituents, in which among other things he said:

Our opponents' array on the other hand is most literally a string of shreds and patches, made up of ragged remnants from half a dozen maritime provinces, the great majority of whom do not even pretend to represent the principle save that of securing a good slice of booty for themselves and the sections and constituencies they respectively represent, and who know besides that popular feeling in these very provinces is strongly and distinctly in favor of our policy, though actual cash in hand on the shape of railway subsidies has proved too much for the vote of a majority of the voting population in many instances.

Members of the opposition cheered approval when Hazen read these words and Cartwright himself shouted "Hear, hear!" Looking straight at Cartwright, Hazen said: "I might, perhaps, have been ready to excuse something of what was said at the end of the disappointing campaign, and would have been glad to know that the hon. gentleman in his cooler moments was sorry for his slanderous charges. Continuing, he said that the people of the maritime provinces had as much regard for principle and as strong sense of right as Sir Richard himself. He would moreover, assure the house and the hon. gentleman that to far as his province was concerned and he believed the same was true of the neighboring province, there was not in the whole campaign any mention of subsidies. There were no side issues. There was one—unrestricted reciprocity, as defined by Cartwright himself, by Laurier and by Ernest Wimen. The statements of Cartwright would not be supported by Cartwright's defeated friends in the lower provinces. The defeated candidates in St. John would readily admit that the triumph of government was on the strict issue chosen by Cartwright himself. The recorder of St. John, one of the leading speakers on the opposition side in the campaign, had written to the Toronto Week explaining the issue of the campaign as proving that the consolidation of Canada was complete, and that people were still loyal to Great Britain. Mr. Hazen referred to the great majority in the maritime province cities, and to the majority of more than two thousand received by his friend at his right, Mr.

Wood of Westmorland, to the popular majority of five thousand in New Brunswick, the largest ever won by any party, and declared that it was absurd to attribute this to any incidental cause. In closing, Mr. Hazen observed that a young man coming here for the first time to learn from his superiors in age and experience, he regretted to find party leaders setting province against province, Young men in the lower provinces were no longer concerned with the battles of confederation or any old questions. They wanted to see the country grow strong and to become more firmly united as time went by.

On resuming his seat after a speech nearly an hour long Mr. Hazen received a perfect ovation, and at recess he was congratulated by friend and foe.

Mr. Ferguson of Leeds said to a friend that Hazen's was the best opening speech in manner and matter that he had heard in eighteen years, and Laurier tonight, on being introduced to Mrs. Hazen, told her that her husband had made the best debut he had seen in fifteen years.

Conbold, the new member for New Westminister, made a much shorter and less aggressive speech. It was of a formal character, but he referred at some length to the growth and progress of British Columbia. One observation brought down the house. It could hardly be said that the government was losing ground in the extreme west. Of six conservative members from his province, two were elected by acclamation. In the case of three their opponents had their deposits, while the remaining member was opposed by a conservative.

Hon. Mr. Laurier spoke for an hour with a vigor somewhat unusual with him. He objected to the Queen's speech on the ground that it contained no explanation of the premature dissolution, nor to the election law, nor to the ocean mail subsidies. At present mails were conveyed to England via New York, on which ground he accused the postmaster general of treason. He accounted for the defeat of his party by declaring that the people have been gagged, shackled and manacled by long changing the boundaries of counties, by the franchise laws, by partisan revisers and partisan returning officers. Let the government repeal the franchise act, the gerrymander act and these other laws and Mr. Laurier would meet them before the people and leave them without a corporal's guard. Mr. Laurier spent a great part of his time complaining about the late dissolution and denouncing it as unconstitutional and a breach of faith. The real reason of the dissolution was that the people were withdrawing their support, but since the government had not sustained the people should now be told what was to be done in support of the reciprocity pledges. He counted as nothing what he called "the officials view" of two members of the government to Washington, and delivered a rather heated denunciation of Sir John's reference to the United States in his Halifax picnic speech. He made the somewhat startling statement that on Sir Charles Tupper's last visit to Westmorland, as he was preparing to leave, he was asked to sign a petition, whereupon Sir John MacDonald laughed audibly.

The opposition leader made a modest claim that his party had carried the two provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which called out signs of disagreement from the conservative representatives belonging to each province. In closing, Mr. Laurier found it necessary to protest his loyalty to Great Britain.

Sir John Macdonald made a short speech in reply to Mr. Laurier, and was in his usual cheerful tone, treating with tantalizing lightness the allegations and denunciations of Mr. Laurier, observing that the recent disappointing circumstances had produced its obvious results on the opposition leader's usual charming manner. He seriously affirmed that it had not been the intention of the government to recommend a dissolution, but the reasons given for that course were sufficient. After all, why did the western people feel so exasperated about the dissolution? He appealed to Sir Richard Cartwright to say whether he (Cartwright) had not on more than one occasion expressed his desire for an early opportunity to hear from the people. The people had been heard from, and Sir John was prepared to listen with equanimity to the threats of the government overture five years hence. He regretted that it was necessary to send mails to England by way of New York, and he hoped that one result of the liberal appropriation by parliament for the Atlantic service would result in the establishment of a Canadian line such as the glory and pride of New York. Meanwhile the government had been late to face with the fact that two-thirds of the mail had been going by way of New York, while a very large subsidy was being paid for a slower and somewhat antiquated service. There was no change of policy about mails nor in other matters. The old policy, the old party and the old friends, he said, were still to the front. Some old friends of his in Ontario and other provinces had gone down in the fight. He was sorry for this, but he rejoiced in the knowledge that every one of them had the hope of a glorious resurrection. Mr. Laurier had said that the policy of unrestricted reciprocity would tend to annexation. Sir John did not neglect to point out that Mr. Blake was not a man whose view Mr. Laurier could afford to treat with disrespect. Mr. Laurier had many views, but without Mr. Blake without hesitation or a shadow of tinging, Blake had withdrawn from the parliament of which he had been an ornament because he thought the policy of that party tended to annexation. Referring to the gerrymander, Sir John observed that this measure was necessary to keep Sir Richard Cartwright in parliament. It was necessary to provide what was called a gift in order to give Sir Richard a constituency which he could hold, and even in the North Oxford have his majority at this time had been reduced to one-half.

Sir John explained, defended and resented the statements made by him in Halifax—an important declaration of Sir John in connection with the statement of Mr. Laurier that Canada was united, and equally to the United States. He could produce proof to the contrary, and would do so. He could show that the United States government had officially thanked the Canadian government for its friendliness and careful work of it.

frontier during the war. Sir John Macdonald was followed by Sir Richard Cartwright, who made one of his old-time speeches, full of invective, imputations, wrath, bitterness and sarcasm. He resumed after recess and gave the house two hours of denunciation. While scolding the government for many things he chiefly dealt with the conduct of the ministry in respect to reciprocity, making all sorts of allegations as to the difference of opinion among the ministers as to the rebuff and rebuff the ministers by the United States government to Canada.
