NARKA,

THE Nihilist.

They were now assembled in the drawing-room, Sibyl busy at her tapestry, Narka sitting with her long white hands in her lap, waiting to pour out the tea, Marguerite turning over the leaves of a book of old engravings with an air of excited interest, M. de Beaulieu deep in his newspapers, and Basil measuring the length of the room, slowly pacing up and down, his hands in his pockets and a cigarette in his mouth, his handsome face clouded by an air of abstraction, almost of sadness, his thoughts were far away from the company, groped round the table, he looked up, and his eyes rested on his cousin. It was a picture on which man's eyes must have rested complacently. Marguerite's face had little claim to admiration, indeed Sibyl's blond hair and Narka's rich beauty of line and coloring, and yet there was a charm about its irregular features that made it no contemptible rival to either. It was the very perfection of youthful brightness and health; the small, spirited nose was more piquant than if it had been classical, and the whole face sparkled with happiness and curiosity. This evening all her pretensions and brightness were further enhanced by an irresistible little demitout of a white gauze material, rose-colored ribbons in bows and loops sprang out of the curls and coils of her glossy brown hair. Marguerite was intent on the engraving. Suddenly, with an exclamation of dismay, 'Sibyl,' she cried, 'I have made a dreadful mistake!'

'What head-dress I stretched and sent to Paris for will be out of keeping I now remember it was in a portrait of Velasquez that I saw it; so fancy how I will clash with that Foretine thirteenth century costume! What shall I do?' 'What were we all thinking about?' said Sibyl. Then, after a moment's reflection, 'Really, ma chérie,' she added, 'I don't think you need to worry about it. No one here is likely to find out the anachronism. If it were in Paris, now—' 'That is a pretty chatterbox you are giving me,' said Basil, who had been listening with intense amusement to Marguerite's distressing confusion. 'You want to make me look like a woman in a set of barbarian and dunces.' 'Dear, I would not worry about it, Sibyl continued, addressing herself with sympathetic earnestness to Marguerite. 'As a head-dress it will suit you beautifully, and that is the great point. Not that I fully approved of it, but the costume, you know I said I thought a Greuze would suit you better.'

'A Greuze!' exclaimed Basil, contemptuously, and he threw his hands up at the ceiling. 'Trust one pretty woman for advising another to run!' 'You ought to have consulted me, cousin,' you might have consulted me, I would have advised you, however, to your advantage. Since you won't be led by the nose, and let me play Wolf to you, you shouldn't go as Greuze or Judith.' 'Jesabel with a halberd, or Judith with a drawn sword! I'll lend you one as big as yourself, and show you how to carry it. You would look superbly tragic in a Jewish rurban. Or, if you like some thing more modern, there is Charlotte Corday.'

Marguerite seized one of Sibyl's balls of wool, took aim, and hit the scotcher right on the nose. ' Bravo! What a capital shot! If this had been a bullet aimed at my heart, I was a dead man,' said Basil, catching the ball and weighing it in his hand. 'By the way, as you are such a shot, little cousin, why should you not go as Diana the huntress?' 'I will teach you how to draw the bow if you like.'

'Cousin Basil,' said Marguerite, slipping the engraving of Anna of Austria with a heavy paper-knife, and feeling her forehead, 'can't think why I don't hate and detest you, for you aggravate me more than anybody I know.'

'That is precisely why,' said Basil. 'Why what?' 'Why you are so fond of me. It's because I aggravate you.'

'Oh!—is it? Well, just leave off aggravating, and see if I don't grow fonder and fonder of you.'

'You might grow too fond of me if I were with a comical air of alarm. She placed up at him with a look of mirth and mischief in her brown eyes. 'Well,' she said, slowly, as if weighing consequences, 'I might, but I'll risk it, if you don't mind.'

He sat down to her, leaned forward, and began stroking his cousin's head meditatively; this skinning with his pretty cousin was delightful. It is a desperate risk for me to run, he re marked, solemnly.

'Then it is said Sibyl, entering merrily into the fray, 'don't be a coward!'

'I'll tell you what,' said Marguerite, slipping Anna of Austria again with the paper-knife, there are three contempt judges: there is Narka, an artist and a mystic; Sibyl, a superior and cultivated woman; Gaston, a philanthropist and a politician.'

'Heavens! what names you are giving us all!' protested M. de Beaulieu, laying down his newspaper and looking up in surprised expectation. 'Something in her brother's astonished face, or perhaps a twinkle in Basil's eyes, recalled Marguerite to the fact that she was on slippery ground, and out short the appeal she was about to make to the three judges. 'I wish Gaston would tell you not to be so disagreeable,' she said turning away like a naughty child, and blushing as red as the flower in her hair.

'For goodness' sake don't set them fighting, or there will be no living in the house!' protested Sibyl, coming to the rescue with her subtle tact, for she saw Marguerite's embarrassment; and she shall want peace amongst ourselves if we are to keep any kind of order amongst our friends and relations.'

'How many are we going to be, all told—do you know?' asked Basil. 'All staying in the house!' exclaimed Marguerite. 'Oh! how many guests—rooms have you?' 'Twenty-five. But then there is the army, about a hundred man to sleep there, they did at my marriage.'

'But there are no beds in the army,' said Marguerite, more and more amused. 'We don't put up beds,' said Basil. 'People bring their own beds and pillows, that is our barbarian mode of proceeding.'

POOR COPY

'What fun!' said Marguerite. 'It must be like camping out, with all the war-torn and coats of mail mounting guard over one. I dare say they enjoy it very much.'

'They seemed to do so last time, if one might judge from the noise they made,' remarked Narka, who had been silent for a while, and watching Marguerite with a coldy critical expression that would have frightened the girl if she had noticed it. 'They kept it up till all the hours of the morning, and I got very little sleep, for my room was over the encampment.'

'They did make a most infernal racket one night,' said Basil, with a boyish laugh, as it the recollection of the racket were very pleasant. 'Some youngster proposed that they should all get into the coats of mail and march out into the park like a phantom procession, and frighten the wits out of everybody. The joke was at once adopted, and they were buckling themselves into the armor, when Leuchoff, who was too drunk to know what he was about, pulled off his boot and began hammering at some warren's helmet. They had to fall on him, but a dose of them, and strap him into a big suit of mail, and then send him leg to the door. He believed under the operation like a bull. It was awful. No wonder Narka could not sleep.'

'You won't put Leuchoff in the army this time, Sibyl?' 'You don't mean to say that that dreadful man is in the army?' Marguerite exclaimed, in a tone of incredulity. 'He was not invited then,' said Sibyl; 'but he thought it would be pleasant, so he went on his own hook. Leuchoff is no one here.'

'I can't understand your letting him into the house at all,' said Marguerite. 'You mean there are many things in this country that you can't understand,' remarked Basil, with a peculiar laugh. 'There were indeed! Very few things in Russia, life, it seemed to Marguerite, that could be understood. The mixture of oriental magnificence and barbarian civility, of lavish expenditure and abject squalor—letting guests bring their bed-dressing and cooking on foot, and setting them gold plate to eat off—these things were in their way as puzzling as the Prince Zerkoff himself could be to her in his newspaper; but he had finished them, and got up and drew a chair to the tea-table. (Mademoiselle, should like you to sit down.)'

Narka took the teapot from the manor, and was proceeding to pour out the tea under his roof, when a sudden knock, pale and scared, stood on the threshold, and said something in the Russian tongue. It was answered by an exclamation of horror from the three who stood round.

'What is the matter?' asked M. de Beaulieu. 'The man who spoke French freely,' replied, 'Count Larchoff has been murdered.'

For a moment horror seemed to have rendered every one speechless; then they all fell into questions. His story was short. 'Two peasants had found the body under his roof, and he had been found in his chest. They thought he was dead, and carried him to the nearest house, and he had been found there. OODS AND ENDS.

It is claimed that about five dollars' worth of dogs have been killed about $10,000 worth of sheep in Michigan the past year.

Norman Lee Jr.—'I was troubled with liver complaint for a good many years, but was cured by one bottle of Burdock Blood Purifier. I have proved for myself its value to help me like B. B. in fact one bottle made a complete cure.' W. J. West, Park Hill, Ont.

A bill has passed the Nevada Assembly prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to women.

Concom Chert—Is often fatal when not reached in time. Leslie B. Nicholson, 19 Wellesley Ave., Toronto, says: 'As a quick cure for croup, colds, sore throat, chills, etc., I can recommend Hagar's Yellow Oil.' It is a sure cure. Directions accompany each bottle.

Only one member of the Kansas House of Representatives is native of the State.

Harry Gave Up—In the year 1885 I coughed for six months, and having unsuccessfully tried many remedies, I finally gave up, thinking I had consumption. At last I tried Hagar's Yellow Oil, and in a few days I was able to eat and sleep, and in a few more I was well. I am quite well, and I think there is no medicine equal to B. B. and I feel I am a true friend. Joseph Hertz, Lincoln, Ont.

Black is effectively introduced into many of the light ribbons for spring wear.

A BIRD VALUATION.—'If there were only one bottle of Hagar's Yellow Oil in each house, I would give one hundred dollars for it,' writes Philip H. Brant, of Montreal, Quebec, after having used it for a severe cold and for frozen fingers, with as much success as with any other remedy.

Stringless bonnets should always be accompanied by a flimsy mark veil.

A Diamond Dress.—To be made to satisfy longer, without being distressed by many of the old-fashioned dresses, which are so often so uncomfortable, and so often so expensive, is a great desideratum. The new diamond dress is the answer to this. It is made of a fine, light, and comfortable material, and is so designed that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the label, and is fully carried out for many years.

Brilliant is again seen on ball dresses, opera cloaks and gowns.

Now's Your Year! The old lady who replied, when asked how her life was, 'God bless me, I never heard that there was such a thing in the house,' was asked for her annuity. From that time she was a happy, contented, and healthy old woman, and she was a great help to her family.

Veil of jaded net should be worn with millinery.
