VOL. II.

CHARLOTTETOWN, P. E. ISLAND, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31, 1866.

NO. 17.

A FINE CHANCE FOR SPECULATORS —AND— ENTERPRISING MEN!

THE undersigned are instructed by the Owners to offer for SALE, or to RENT, several valuable FREEHOLD well wooded, and possessing other advantages; and for which good and valid titles, and immediate possession can be given.

Also, four LOTS, being the residue of thirteen Building Lots, (the other nine having been sold the present season) in that most advantageous position known as "SUMMER HILL," adjoining MONTAGUE BRIDGE, ten miles from Georgetown, where close to 100,000 bushels of Produce are annually shipped, and nearly all paid for in Cash. A number of Stores, Wharfs, a Meeting House, Post Office, and other buildings, and a Temperance Society have been established for some time; with many Oats and Saw and Cloth Mills in the vicinity; where also any quantity of all kinds of timber can be had in trade at low rates. "SUMMER HILL" is the only Freehold Property for sale in the place which renders it most desirable for some more class of persons than is usually to be found in this island.

A STORE and DWELLING on it, capable of holding 15,000 bushels produce, with a double Wharf and site for a Lane kiln, will be sold or leased on reasonable terms.

Plans, particulars or any other information can be obtained by calling at the office of Messrs. BALL & SON, Land Surveyors, Charlottetown. Reference may also be had from W. SANDERSON, F. P. NORTON, THOS. ANKRA, Georgetown; JAS. BROADBENT, Campbell, Lot 4; F. W. HENRI, Esq., Esplanade, Charlottetown, and to the undersigned at Orwell, who is also Agent for the sale of Manny's Mowing Machine, the celebrated Yarmouth COOKING STOVE, and also for the Filling Mills of Messrs. BOURKE, Mill View, the Honble. JAS. McLAREN, New Park, FINLAY W. McDONALD, Pictou; where CLOTH is received and returned with dispatch.

AMY MOSS;

OR,
THE BANKS OF THE OHIO.

BY PERCY B. ST. JOHN.

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Continued.)

Hackett groaned and wrung his hand. The educated villain had taken precautions of which he had never thought.

"And pray, Sir Charles, what does all this mean?" asked Hackett.

"That I have a great mind," said Sir Charles, raising his pistol to a level with Hackett's head, "to drag you to my cousin's room, reveal to him all your rascality, and hand you over to the mercy. We should have no difficulty in getting you to England, and I will undertake to find Kate."

"But what am I to do?" groaned Hackett.

"You see, my good fellow, that either you or Andrew must be got out of the way. If you like to hang, I will undertake to be reconciled to him; but if you wish to live the young girl knows nothing."

"Nothing," repeated Hackett mechanically, at the same time drawing off a goblet of rum.

"Then, if you wish to live, and keep the girl and the annuity, why, you know the alternative."

The baronet spoke coldly and distinctly, as if it were the most ordinary matter of business. This, however, was merely an assumed ease, to crush the resistance of Hackett. His heart beat all the while tumultuously, and it was with difficulty he kept the pistol in his hand from shaking.

"If it must be, it must be," said Hackett with a shiver.

"And how do you propose to do it?" asked the baronet coldly.

"I will," said Hackett, fixing his eyes doggedly on the ground, "the game's up in this part of the world—I tell you what, Sir Charles—I'll just take what few things I want, and then I'll fire the place. There will be plenty of time for the others to escape, but he can't."

"Well, Mr. Hackett," continued Sir Charles, "when you try your hand at arson, perhaps you'll give me fair notice."

"But I hope you will do it properly—I suppose it will be your first appearance as an incendiary?"

"No," said Hackett wildly, and in choking accents, "it will not—but that matters little to you, Sir Charles."

"Not a bit, my fellow," replied the other; "but now show me a room where I can rest my weary limbs, and wake me at dusk."

Hackett rose and showed him to Kate's room, and as he heard him lock himself in, shook his fist at the door. He was then about to return to his seat, when the two men announced the return of the expedition, at the head of which was Simon Girty.

The supposed Ralph Regis moved towards the door, and saw the motley group of Indians and renegades headed by Simon Girty. In their midst walked Amy and Jane Moss, scarcely able to support themselves. It was true, but endeavouring to show a resolute front to the villainous gang who had succeeded in capturing them.

"Welcome, ladies," said Hackett, alias Regis, affecting a friendly tone, "I am glad to see you in my house—it's not a first chop hotel, but it's a comfortable one."

They entered slowly, sweeping by the highwayman as if he were a pestilence, followed by Jane, who trembled and shuddered, lest accustomed to her sister to the wilds. They were both dressed. They had been gugged in their room before addressing, by four men they found they concealed there, and hence away to the woods through theicket gate when all was still in the Moss.

"Where are we to go?" said Amy, impatiently fixing her eyes on the keeper.

"I'll show you a nice little room, anyhow," replied Regis, bowing.

He then led the way, Amy and Jane quietly following, until they reached one of the many rooms similar to that which they had just left. On their road they were joined by the negroes, who were introduced to the two young girls as their future attendants as long as they honored the Frog's Hole with their presence.

The room was the best of the whole number, and stood midway between those occupied by Andrew Carstone and Regis on the night of their arrival. The girls retained their composure until they were left alone.

"Oh, Amy, who has done this?" said Jane, sobbing in a way that seemed to threaten the breaking of a blood-vessel.

"I know not," cried Amy wildly; "I have strange suspicions, but I can say nothing. We must wait, my dear girl, and put our trust in Him who alone can save us."

And by an instinctive impulse the two young girls clasped each other, and their voices alone in earnest and heartfelt prayer.

Meanwhile Ralph Regis—we call him by the name he went by in that house—had gone back to the common cause. "And squire, since we are pretty thick, I must tell you Kate's father's turned up, and wants to kill everybody as interloper with her."

"Indeed!" said the squire moodily, as he remembered where he had left Kate.

"And Colonel Butler did say that Robert Jay would give you a call about that, some time," continued Ralph, who enjoyed the terror of his fellow-criminal.

"There is no time to be lost," cried Barton in a tremulous tone, "the time for action has come. Ralph! at eight this evening I will be ready!"

"Very good, squire."

"See that my knives make themselves respectable by that time," said Barton, "so that Amy may not know them."

The innkeeper acquiesced, and then Barton went to his room, and throwing his weary frame on a couch, was soon in a sound sleep.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The shades of evening were falling, the band of desperadoes had unpaired their faces, and as far as possible had endeavored to look the decent retainers of the wealthy house; Ralph was eating his supper, having got everything ready but his gold, when an Indian came slouching into the place. He was a man of middle height, with hideous paints all over his body, streaks of red and black, especially those which usually characterize the half-drunken conjurer. He had an ample supply of bells upon his person, that jingled as he went.

The guard outside let him pass unmolested, but looked lazily in to see what reception he would meet with, and advanced near, "Come, brother—glass whiskey!" said the Indian in a deep guttural tone.

"Take it and be hanged to you," replied Regis savagely. "Here dallas," said the Indian with a grin.

"Oh, if you have a dollar, it's all right!" exclaimed the mollified innkeeper, holding out his hand for the coin, which he pocketed without offering change; "you'd better take a bottle, I guess."

"No want bottle," continued the other in broken English, "me want drink, eat, sleep."

"Well, we're pretty full of strangers, but you can sleep outside, I guess, follow you," said Barton, advancing from behind the bar; "you expect gentlemen to put up here, and you give shelter to drunken Indians."

"Drunken Indian as good as you," replied the Shawnee with offended dignity.

Barton started, looked nervously at the Indian, and advanced near, "Come, brother—glass whiskey!" said the Indian in a deep guttural tone.

"Take it and be hanged to you," replied Regis savagely. "Here dallas," said the Indian with a grin.

When Amy and Jane Moss were placed together in one of the many rooms of the mysterious building familiarly known as the Frog's Hole, they stood motionless for some time, so overwhelmed were they by this cruel and double misfortune. They clasped each other's hands, too much overwhelmed with woe and grief to speak. The room, to which their eyes were rapidly accustomed, was neat, provided with a bed, a table, and some chairs; the whole illuminated in a dim, mysterious way from the roof. All this was taken in at a glance, and then the sisters sat down.

"Amy, dear Jane, in a low whisper, creeping close to her, as if for protection, 'what is the meaning of this? Are we dreaming? Is this some dreadful nightmare from which we shall presently awake?'"

"No, child," replied Amy, who had from experience more courage to bear the ill-fortune that had again befallen them, having so lately passed through much that was worse; "this is, unfortunately, reality."

"Where are we?"

"I know not, and yet I suspect," replied Amy. "I have heard so much of the Frog's Hole, that I feel persuaded this is it."

"The Frog's Hole! Why they tried to murder Esram Cook there," said Jane with a shudder.

"They did," continued Amy quietly; "but they will attempt to murder us."

"Why not?" asked the terrified girl.

"We are taken from the Moss, Jane, by one who has reason to fear the future. It is to force me to become his wife that Barton has done this."

"Barton—do you think it is Barton, Amy?"

"Who else, my dear sister, could have done it—who else could have penetrated to our chamber and gagged us with wine? Doubt it not, Jane; we are that man's prisoners."

"But why has he done this?" exclaimed Jane wildly.

"Jane, he must feel in his heart that Castaloga has made no vain boast, and dressing exposure, as he has dragged us away."

"You think, then, that what Castaloga says may be true?" mused Jane.

"I do."

"I mean that Castaloga is really Reginald Morton?"

"I am almost as convinced of it as of my life," replied Amy warmly.

"But he may have been deceived," continued Jane.

"Father said his features were exactly those of the parent he claimed. Besides, I saw enough of Barton's look of dread not to doubt that even he believed it."

"Then all that story of the Indians having killed them is untrue?"

"Jane, if what we suspect be true, it is horrible. Barton, released from all influence at his mother's death, must have invited a band of murderers to assault the hall, slay Mr. Morton, and steal away the children."

"Horrible! Barton can never be so wicked," urged Jane.

"I doubt if Barton be not capable of anything," said Amy coldly.

"Then it is quite possible," said Jane, hiding her face, "that what Castaloga says be true, Harvey may be his brother."

"From his story I should think it most probable. Simon Girty is known to have been present at the attack on the Block; he must have saved one child at least—who saved the other we shall know in time."

"'Tis very strange," said Jane, "that I never could think Castaloga quite an Indian."

"I did," replied Amy; "I thought him a noble fellow for an Indian."

"I always knew it," said her elder sister with a strange smile.

"Since you know it?"

"Of course. When I first knew Barton I was a child, and I received his address and accepted his hand out of the window—no, many months, however, before I began to understand his character and to appreciate the silent affection of Casta. You recollect I gave up teaching him."

"I know you did; you handed him over to me; I could never understand it before," said Jane, quite startled.

"I began to feel that, considering my position, I had no right to be so intimate terms with any one. I am sorry for the pain I gave him."

"You were always very kind to poor Casta," said Jane gently, "very unkind."

"How could I be otherwise? It was an affront and he was an Indian. Had I been free, I could not have accepted his affection."

"I know it," repeated Jane, "I know it—and yet 'tis a weak and silly prejudice. Why is not a good Indian as good as a white man?"

"That would take us too long to argue, dear girl. We must think now, not of the past, but of the future. It is a terrible one. As for our imprisonment here, I care not. We are here for ransom or for sale. If for ransom, our dear father will soon ransom us; if for sale, 'tis to Barton, and I shall know how to deal with him."

"What a strange place!" said Jane, gazing around at the walls of their prison.

"Strange indeed. Many an evil deed, I fear, has been done in this Frog's Hole. Jane, dear, do you not notice a strong smell of burning?" exclaimed Amy, starting up.

"Yes, it smells through the chinks in the door, replied Jane wildly; "the room is filling with smoke."

"What is to be done?" said Amy, pressing her sister to her heart; "the place is on fire!"

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

$2,000,000 was said to be Mr. Fleming's estimate of the cost of the project.

The course of the line would be, it appears, from the eastern end of the Grand Trunk at Riviere du Loup to Woodstock, 188 miles, passing through a most beautiful and fertile valley.

If the line is only 188 miles long, and traverses every route all the way, surely $2,000,000 would be very ample for its construction.

At Woodstock it would meet the existing line to St. Andrew's. From St. Andrew's to St. John the line is under contract.

Taking this route, which would utilize the existing lines and those making, an intercolonial railway could be completed by making only 188 miles of new line from Woodstock to Riviere du Loup.

Let it be borne in mind that the greater part of the whole line from Halifax to Riviere du Loup is made and making, and that the 188 miles to be made would be easy work.

The most direct intercolonial line would be from Riviere du Loup to Halifax via the greater part of the length of the Riviere du Loup and Woodstock line, then striking across New Brunswick via Boiestown, direct to a junction with the existing line from Moncton to St. John.

LATE FROM THE STATES.

NOB-INTERCOURSE WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

In the United States Senate on Tuesday, a resolution introduced by Mr. Chandler, of Michigan, to withdraw the American Minister from London, and have no intercourse with Great Britain, was tabled by a vote of 25 to 12.

A Bill providing for the reorganization of the Regular Army of the United States, was unanimously reported from the Military Committee of the Senate.

Section 1st provides that the army shall hereafter consist of 5 regiments of artillery of 9,000 men, 12 regiments of cavalry of 12,000 men, and 55 regiments of infantry of 35,000 men, to be known as the Army of the United States.

Section 4th the 55 infantry regiments are to consist of the 10 regiments of 10 companies, each now in service. The remaining 9 regiments will be made into twenty-seven, by adding two companies to each battalion with the same provision respecting officers.

Section 5 prescribes the organization of the infantry to be the same as the first ten regiments, but companies to have only 48 privates, making about 85,000, and may be increased to 95,000, if necessary.

ALL CURES MADE EASY! BY HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT. Bad Legs, Ulcerous Sores, Bad Breasts, and Old Wounds.

No description of wound, sore or ulcer can resist the healing properties of this excellent Ointment. The worst use a remedy assumes a healthy appearance whenever this medicine is applied; sound flesh springs up from the bottom of the wound, inflammation of the surrounding skin is arrested, and a complete and permanent cure quickly follows the use of the Ointment.

Piles, Fistulas, and Internal Inflammation. These distressing and weakening diseases may with certainty be cured by the sufferer themselves, if they will use Holloway's Ointment, and closely attend to the printed instructions. It should be well rubbed upon the neighboring parts, when all obnoxious matter must be removed. A poultice of bread and water may sometimes be applied at bed time with advantage; the most scrupulous cleanliness must be observed. If those who read this paragraph will bring under the notice of such a service that will not be far gone in, as a cure is certain.

Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia. Nothing has the power of reducing inflammation and subduing pain in these complaints in the same degree as Holloway's cooling Ointment and purifying Pills. When used simultaneously they drive all inflammation and depression from the system, subdue and remove all enlargement of the veins, and leave the sinews and muscles lax and uncontracted. A cure may always be effected, even under the worst circumstances, if the use of these medicines be persevered in. Eruptions, Scald Head, Ringworm, and other Skin Diseases.

After foundation with warm water, the utmost relief and speediest cure can be readily obtained in all complaints affecting the skin and joints, by the simultaneous use of the Ointment and Pills. But it must be remembered that nearly all skin diseases indicate the depravity of the blood and derangement of the liver and stomach, consequently, in many cases it is requisite to purify the blood, which will be effected by a judicious use of the Pills. The general health will readily be improved, although the eruption may be driven out more freely than before, and which should be promoted; perseverance is necessary.

Sore Throats, Diphtheria, Quinsey, Mumps, and all other Derangements of the Throat.

On the appearance of any of these maladies the Ointment should be well rubbed upon the throat, and a day upon the neck and upper part of the chest, so that it may penetrate the glands, as salt is forced into meat: this course will at once remove inflammation and ulceration. The worst cases will yield to this treatment by following the printed directions.

Scrofula or King's Evil and Swelling of the Glands. This class of cases may be cured by Holloway's purifying Pills and Ointment, as their double action of purifying the blood and strengthening the system renders them more effectual than any other remedy for all complaints of a scrofulous nature. As the blood is impure, liver, stomach and bowels, being much deranged, require purifying medicine to bring about a cure.

Both the Ointment and Pills should be used in the following manner:—

Bad Legs, Ulcerous Sores, Bad Breasts, and Old Wounds. Pills—Dose, 2 or 3 Pills 3 or 4 times a day.

Scrofula or King's Evil and Swelling of the Glands. Pills—Dose, 2 or 3 Pills 3 or 4 times a day.

Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia. Pills—Dose, 2 or 3 Pills 3 or 4 times a day.

Sore Throats, Diphtheria, Quinsey, Mumps, and all other Derangements of the Throat. Pills—Dose, 2 or 3 Pills 3 or 4 times a day.
