of a candle at a window opposite, from whence there came sounds of music, and a little head peeped out and something was said in Italian.

"They'll be over directly," said Hazan, "and I think you'll say she's a beauty. I want to get her away, because that brute Schelmer is there tonight, and the old mother will be making play with him."

In a minute or two a little Grock girl, Philina, a sister of Athenca, came bounding up the stairs, and shook Hazan by the hand. "They'd hardly let us come, Mr. Hagan," she said laughingly, "for Athence was just geing to dance with that dreadful man Mr. Schelmer; but I made them."

lagify, "for Ahenee was just gening loance with that dreadful man Mr. Schelmer; but I made them."

By this time the party had swept in. The father, an old Arab, with a fine beard and a significant face; the cross vulgar looking Greek mother, much overdressed; and the fair Athenea, her time black eyes looking cloudy and rueful, ongthe arm of the German banker, a cunning-looking, impertinent upstart, with dyed hair and mustaches. By his side was a little, sleek, obsequious man, whom I found to be Gulheim, Schelmer's partner. The mother was indignant at the interruption of their festivity. The old Arab father tried in vain, by soft words, to mitigate his wife's anger,—Athenes gave Hagan a look that subdued for a seement the storm that was evidently fast rising. I was introduced, and we all set and talked in
