The County House Bill.

It may be taken for granted that the new court house and city hall will be located on the site of the old court house on the east side of Yonge street.

The plan above quoted, backed by the contention of The World that the new court house ought to be on the east side of Yonge street and on the block bounded by Lombard, Richmond, Victoria and Church streets.

Canada's New Atlantic Port.

People in the west might find it of some interest to observe what is going on in the east with reference to the projected short line railway which is to connect all the rest of the dominion with Lousburg.

The line is intended to form an eastern connection for a numerous group of Canadian railways, including the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific.

A Zoo For Toronto.

We trust that the meeting this evening to put the Toronto zoo in first class shape will be well attended.

The Evangelical Churchmen call upon the dominion government to disallow the Quebec lottery act.

The only portion of this continent where men sell their hair in the Canadian provinces is in the province of Ontario.

An American paper says that Grant lost something more than his money in Wall Street.

It is not for insufficient warning given to Mr. Venables, waterworks engineer, if we now name him as one of our officials who is now buying himself with things that do not concern him.

On a subject which The World has already drawn attention here—the turn of the tide of investment in real estate instead of stocks and produce—the New York Herald of Wednesday has these remarks:

There can never be a panic or anything akin to a panic in real estate. No doubt there have been some severe collapses of prices where misplaced judgment has overtaken itself, or too heavily discounted the future.

They Want a Releaser. From the London Times. We want some one to invent an argument that will hit the nail on the point.

A Tourist's Experience. From the Hamilton Spectator. But, as a matter of fact, money will not go any further in Britain than in Canada.

Just the Thing. From the Embury Courier. How would it do for Embury to have its civic holiday this year during the Toronto semi-centennial, and take in one of the excursions to that city?

The Festive Bygone Days. From the St. John, N.B., Telegraph. A young man who picked the inside of a dynamite detonator with his knife, found a thumb and forefinger of his left hand were blown off and his other fingers lacerated.

Prisoner Instead of Preacher. From the Kingston Whig. Papers in the Queen's pocket of Newbold, the champion bigamist, are mistaken in saying he was a preacher in Kingston. His time in Kingston was wholly spent in the penitentiary.

Questions For Dr. Wild Answered. To the Editor of The World. Sir: A correspondent writing from Stouffville disputes the statement made by Dr. Wild that Moses and Elijah are the two famous witnesses mentioned in the scriptures.

They must have been on very intimate, confidential and protective terms with the California farmer, for they were all in good health.

THE FAITHFUL FRIEND.
From early childhood Mildred Bird and Amy Gray were playmates and loving friends. Their homes were separated only by a great crimson-topped clover field where the bees gathered honey and the wind drove the heavy clover into drifts of green and crimson.
They were both the only children of their parents, and with no brother or sister to share their sports, they clung to each other with all the fondness and devotion of sisters.
They walked hand in hand to the brown little school house on the hillside and played together on the long and bright vacation days.
A day seldom passed without witnessing a meeting between them. If one was sick, the other carried fresh flowers and tempting dainties to her bedside. They never quarreled or said a harsh word to each other. In everything they stood side by side. The advancement of one was measured by the advancement of the other; their lessons were always on the same page, and they were always in the same class.
So much were they together that the neighbors seldom spoke of them separately but as "Mildred and Amy."
With their love and friendship increasing, they grew to maidenhood and graduated at the same time in the same academy.
They had no secrets from each other. Their tastes were identical, both of them possessed fair complexions, blue eyes and rosy cheeks, and their wardrobes were always exactly alike.
They wandered together through the grand old forests, in hidden nooks and valleys, over hills and through the wide fields of their fathers, their arms interlaced as their voices blended in some melodious song, or they talked glowingly of their future days, and in the plans of a continued life together, accepting separation at the hands of night and death.
They read the same books, committed to memory the same poetry, repeating it often, as they wandered together in the wilds of nature. They lived within themselves, and had very few associates, but their friends were always true, displaying no partiality.
It was early in June, the seventeenth birthday month, when both that Milton Graham came to their quiet little village. He was a very handsome and fascinating man, with soft and slender white hands, an enticing and a slender white face, and in his mild, dark eyes. The similarity of dress, the remarkable friendship, and more than all, the sweet and lovely face of the two young friends, attracted his attention, and it was not long before he became installed as their friend, and at last became master of their affection.
They were not so constantly together, now, and displayed less freedom in their conversation, speaking a little constrainedly of the handsome Milton Graham who walked with them, and took them often to ride in his handsome carriage. Neither wished her feelings to be suspected by the other, and each thought herself the favorite one.
But Mildred, by accident, learned the feelings of her friend, and in anguish of spirit she determined to sacrifice her own happiness, however hard it might be, and allow Amy to win the prize which she would avoid Graham and wept in solitude over her disappointment. At first she was called on her changed appearance; but at last she was left almost wholly to herself, while Amy became more and more attached to the fascinating man from the fact that they were almost constantly together in the long, bright afternoons and cool starry evenings.
The days slipped along one by one into the great cauldron of the past, until the cool September winds played among the many-colored leaves, driving them in little showers, or sometimes one by one from their summer abode, and sprinkling them in gold and crimson hues upon the grass.
Mildred had not seen her friend for several days, but had wandered alone in their old familiar haunts, sighing and sometimes weeping over the great change which had taken place in the few last months.
One day, toward sunset, as she sat near the miniature lake where she and Amy had so often gathered pond lilies, and been so very happy, she fell asleep with her head leaning against the trunk of a great pine tree, and her hands idly resting among the flowers in her lap.
Her face had grown thin, and there was no trace of red in her cheeks, but a gentle, tender expression hovered about her mouth, and with the long brown curls sweeping over her cheeks, and the wind sighing softly and sultry through the pine boughs over her head, she dreamed a dream that filled her with a strange unrest, and for many months haunted her as a foreboding of evil.
She thought she was standing by the great, restless, moaning sea, when suddenly there came to her Milton Graham and her dear friend Amy, and walking hurriedly toward a small boat lying in readiness on the clear white sea.
Amy was lifted tenderly into the boat, and sitting with her lover's arm about her, they glided out upon the waves. They sang a little, happy song as they glided on with the sunset's rays bathing them in shining gold, while the boat rocked gently on the calm and apparently sleeping waters.
In a short time, however, the clouds grew black above them; the sea began to heave and moan restlessly; the boat was swayed to and fro in the white foam. She thought she saw Amy cast a frightened look about her, and then look longingly toward the shore; at last she stretched her white arms shoreward, and Mildred, in her dream, went to the water's edge calling to her, but was powerless to aid her.
At last, when the storm grew frightfully furious and threatened immediate destruction, she saw Graham snatch Amy from her kneeling posture in the boat and hurl her, in spite of her clinging entreaties, into the foaming, maddest water.
Then the boat tilted on more gently, and at last was lost to sight in a bend of the sea. She saw Amy rising and sinking in the water, but floating nearer and nearer to her until at last a great billowy wave washed the slender and apparently lifeless form on the sand at her feet.
She was about to stoop down and take her in her arms, when she awoke and looked about her. The moon was shining down as still sighing and whispering in the pine boughs. She shuddered and rising hastened to her home.
Possessed of a strange, indefinable fear, she went immediately to the house of her friend, determined to relate to her her dream.
All was still and quiet about the cottage, she found the mother of Amy knitting by the lamp-light. To her enquiry for Amy Graham and sitting down in an easy chair she determined to wait for her return.
An hour passed away but she did not come, and her mother grew anxious and went to the window to listen, but heard the sound of no carriage wheels.

Another hour passed, and another, until it was midnight, and still she did not come. Then Mildred seized the lamp, ran to her friend's room, trembling lest what she had expected should prove true.
She found on the dressing table there two letters, one addressed to herself and the other to the mother of Amy.
Almost frantic, she flew back to the sitting room, and then in the dead of night learned that they need wait no longer for her dear friend, for she had secretly fled with Milton Graham.
A year passed away, and the cold December came again.
One day, when the snow lay white upon the ground, and yet the air was filled with silent, feathery flakes, which were heaping the snow higher and higher, a poor old and ailing woman, with an infant in her arms, hurried as fast as her feet would allow toward the cottage which had once been the happy home of Amy Gray.
The gray shadows of twilight were creeping over the earth in its white mantle, when she stood trembling at the door.
She raised her hand to the latch but it fell again to her side. She clasped her infant closer to her breast and looked behind her through the pure, white snow.
"Once I was pure as the snow, but I fell," she murmured. "Can they receive me, poor fallen creature that I am?"
She half turned away, but the low wail from the babe in her arms decided her, and she rapped feebly on the door.
It was soon opened and an father and daughter stood face to face.
"Oh, father!" she cried, falling at his feet, "forgive me and let me go into my dear old home that I may die there, and my innocent babe may be saved;" but the cold, stern man said a few hard, unfeeling words and closing the door left her crouching there in the snow, her babe wailing at her bosom.
After a moment of desolation and despair, she rose and left the cottage behind her.
She turned her face toward the home of Milton Graham, her early friend. Feebly she walked through the wide clover field, now covered with snow, and thought of the time when hand in hand she walked there with Mildred, her soul pure as the white snow about her.
At last she stood at the door of her friend, and knocked for admittance. In a moment Mildred stood before her, but in the gray twilight knew her not. But when she spoke only the one little word "Mildred," then she was known, and the arms of her friend were about her, and warm fervent kisses were pressed to her tear-stained face. She drew her into the cozy sitting-room, took her babe from her arms, and hugged it to her breast, kissing it oft and over.
Any told the common story of seduction and desertion, and Mildred, with her arms closely twined about her and tears of sympathy falling from her eyes, said:
"You are innocent in heart, dear Amy, and just as dear to me as in the olden time."
Any lived but a few weeks, but was cared for with the greatest tenderness, and died at last in her friend's arms, blessing her with her last breath.
Her father was summoned to her dying bed, but arrived too late, and in remorse and agony he tore his gray hair and groaned aloud. Her mother was with her when she died, forgiving, as all mothers are.
Amy gave to Mildred her beautiful boy, and it was all in vain that her father begged to take him and rear him as his own child.
The boy grew, and was all the world to Mildred, and he gave her all the love of his youthful heart.
He became a good and honored man, and always cherished Mildred as his beloved mother, and when she died he had her laid by the side of Amy, his mother, and they were almost constantly together in the long, bright afternoons and cool starry evenings.
"And of all good things upon earth, I hold that a faithful friend is the best."

Great Scott, man! Just think of seven years of Hayes.
"Lands are measured in rods, leagues and so forth," said the teacher. "Now, what is a surveyor?" "A land lawyer," shouted one of the boys.
A west end bank in London, with a humor that half atones for tyranny of the sea, has issued an order that "gentlemen must not wear beards or mustaches during office hours."
With Grant, John B. Smith, Senator Sabin and other republicans badly hit financially, the sapacious old party will be unable to put much Indiana soap into the campaign this year.
New York city spends $3,000,000 annually on churches and $7,000,000 on amusements, which goes to show that she is having more fun in this world than she will see in the next.
Many ladies admire gray hair—but on some other ladies. But few care to try its effects on their own beards. Now, gentlemen, since Ayer's Hair Vigor prevents the hair from turning gray, and restores gray hair to its original color. It cleanses the scalp, prevents the formation of dandruff, and wonderfully stimulates the growth of the hair.
Very large shipments of horses are being made from Saratoga to the railway works on the North shore.
Within the past ten years not a dollar has been lost in purchasing lots in Toronto or its suburbs. On the contrary, every dollar so invested has doubled itself in five years, some in three. West Toronto Junction is the rising suburb of the city, and a few dollars invested in a lot there will soon double itself. Geo. Clarke of the Li-Quor Tea Co. is offering a few terms that are acceptable to all: An advance fee of $10, and $2 a week for 182 weeks will purchase a fine lot 50x150 at the Junction, including interest and taxes.

A HOME DRUGGIST TESTIFIES.
Popularity at home is not always the best sign of merit, but we point proudly to the fact that our medicine has won for itself such universal approbation in its own city, state, and country, and among all people, as to interest to every sufferer.
Ayer's Sarsaparilla.
The following letter from one of our best-known Massachusetts Druggists should be of interest to every sufferer:
"Eight years ago I was afflicted with Rheumatism, and it was so severe that I could not move from the bed, or dress, without help. I tried several remedies without much if any relief, until I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, by the use of two bottles of which I was completely cured. Here I sold large quantities of your Sarsaparilla, and it still retains its wonderful popularity. The many notable cures it has effected in this vicinity convince me that it is the best blood medicine ever offered to the public."
S. F. HARRIS,
River St., Duxbury, Mass., May 13, 1882.
SALT RHEUM.
GEORGE ANDREWS, corner in the Lowell Carpet Corporation, was for over twenty years before his removal to Lowell afflicted with Salt Rheum in its worst form. His rheumatism actually covered his face, and the surface of his body and limbs. He was entirely cured by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. See certificate in Ayer's Almanac for 1882.
STRANGER THAN FICTION.
—are the records of some of the cures of consumption effected by that most wonderful remedy—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Thousands of grateful men and women who had been snatched almost from the very jaws of death, can testify that consumption in its early stages is no longer incurable. The Discovery has no equal as a pectoral and alterative, and the most obstinate affections of the throat and lungs yield to its power. All druggists.
RECORDED IN THE NEW YORK SUN.
A tolerably well-known banker, these few years past, betook himself last week to his brokers, Goddard, Gordon and Smith, to get stock short for his account, explaining that he was aware of a heavy devaluation on the part of a manager of a bank, which would probably be made public, and which could not fail to depress the market.
Yesterday he called upon his brokers and told them to cover his shorts and long of matters generally for him, as the devaluation would not occur.
"I fear myself," he explained, "that I was in default, but my family has been around, and the thing is fixed up."
—No other preparation so concentrates and combines blood-purifying, vitalizing, and invigorating qualities as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Quality should be considered when making comparisons.

EPPS' COCOA
BREAKFAST.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal ailment by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure food and a properly nourished frame."

CHARLES O'CONNOR ON SLAVERY.
From the New York Sun.
Throughout his whole career Mr. O'Connor was an advocate and supporter of human slavery. He did not, like most slave owners, regard it as an evil difficult to get rid of, but as something in itself good and right, a benediction, a necessary institution. In 1859 the Lemmon slave case was argued before the court of appeals. A Virginian named Lemmon had brought eight slaves to this city and placed them on a steamer here, about to sail for Texas. A writ of habeas corpus was issued out of the superior court in their behalf, and they were discharged on the ground that our statutes rendered them free. Mr. O'Connor argued the case for the slave owner before the court of appeals, not only on the letter of the law, but on principle. "There is no violation of the principles of enlightened justice," he said, "nor any departure from the dictates of pure benevolence, in holding negroes in a state of slavery. 'No civilized state on earth can maintain this absolute outcast of negro slavery, for in some of its forms slavery has existed in all ages, and no lawyer of permanent standing has ever condemned it.' We select these sentences out of many of like import, to show the position of our country in the world, and in regard to the most important question of his age. He was successfully opposed in this case by William M. Evarts, and the court rendered judgment in favor of the slave. With the abolition of slavery, Mr. O'Connor's excessive devotion to that institution, which has made his name characteristic as a public man, was rendered powerless.
