TRADE

CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING— REPORT BY MINISTER

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that early in February the Prime Minister announced plans for the tenth meeting of the Joint Canada-United States Ministerial Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs. This meeting took place last Friday and Saturday in Washington. With the co-operation of the house it was possible for me and my colleagues, the Ministers of Trade and Commerce, Finance, Industry, Mines and Technical Surveys and Agriculture, together with the Governor of the Bank of Canada, to meet with a United States delegation led by Secretary of State Dean Rusk and including Secretaries Fowler, Connor and Freeman. I now wish to table the English and French language versions of the communiqué issued at the end of the meetings. For the convenience of hon. members, the house might wish the text of the communique to be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard, as was done in other years.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the communiqué records the nature of the discussions and agreement reached on a number of subjects of concern to Canadians and of great significance for Canadian-United States relations. Naturally, a document of this kind cannot do full justice to the spirit of understanding and friendship in which the meetings took place, nor to the fullness and vigour of the exchange of views we had on a wide range of subjects of common interest, both in the meetings and on the various other occasions which provided me and my colleagues with opportunities for private and less formal discussion with our United States counterparts.

• (2:40 p.m.)

May I draw the attention of the house to the references in the communiqué to three of the specific subjects which we raised at the meetings: the United States balance of payments program; the proposed S.E.C. regulations on "over the counter trading in securities"; and the United States foreign assets controls which affect trade with countries such as Communist China and Cuba.

We reiterated in some detail our views on the implications for Canada of the United States guide lines regarding direct investment as they have been commonly understood, and our objections to them. The United States response made it clear that there is no thought that these guide lines given to their corporations should lead to companies in Canada being requested to operate other than in accordance with their normal commercial objectives.

The United States secretaries explicitly recognized that companies in Canada should be governed by Canadian national interest as good citizens of this country. As the communiqué states:

> The committee discussed the balance of payments of both countries. They recognized that decisive progress had been made toward reducing the United States balance of payments deficit and reviewed measures being taken to bring the U.S. external accounts into balance. In this connection, the committee noted measures that have been taken to maintain access to the U.S. capital market for an unlimited amount of new Canadian securities free of interest equalization tax. The United States members reaffirmed that in buying such issues U.S. investors were completely free to be guided by market considerations.

For our part we expressed our concern over the possible implications for Canada of the United States voluntary program on direct investment and the relation of this program to the position of Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. corporations. The United States members made clear that the U.S. government was not requesting U.S. corporations to induce their Canadian subsidiaries to act in any way that differed from their normal business practices as regards the repatriation of earnings, purchasing and sales policies, or their other financial and commercial activities. The United States members re-emphasized the view that U.S. subsidiaries abroad should behave as good citizens of the country where they are located.

Secretary Rusk later confirmed to the press that we had tried to resolve, and he thought succeeded in resolving, "any misunderstanding or differences of approach on this problem as between our two countries". The communiqué, moreover, records the agreement reached that the United States government would ensure that any misunderstandings on the part of United States companies as to the government's views would be dispelled.

Turning now to the S.E.C. problem, we put forward the strong Canadian views on the proposed regulations as an intrusion into our sovereignty. Responsibility for securities and exchange matters in the United States rests with a quasi-judicial body, but the chairman of the S.E.C., Mr. Emmanuel Cohen, was present for this part of the joint committee's discussion and the communiqué records that:

> —the United States members appreciated the concern of the government of Canada and assured Canadian members that most careful consideration would be given to Canadian views in an effort to work out at an early date mutually satisfactory arrangements.

There was also a thorough and useful discussion of United States foreign assets controls which have on occasion created serious difficulty for Canadian companies trading with such countries as Communist China and Cuba. As the communiqué states:

> —the United States members reaffirmed their readiness to consult promptly on any transactions of importance to Canada which are affected by United States foreign assets control. They also stated that regulations over exports of technical data are being revised and that, in the light of the committee's discussions, further consideration will be given to the possibilities of additional modifications to these regulations.

On all these major subjects I consider that the results achieved are very substantial. The government is confident that, on the basis of the understandings reached, experience will confirm our judgment that the problems which were threatening have been effectively dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, the Joint Committee also discussed a wide variety of other matters of common interest to our two countries. In particular we reviewed the Kennedy round negotiations in Geneva and agreed on the importance of their timely and successful conclusion; we agreed to continue to work closely together towards this objective.

In addition to dealing with these matters of general concern, the committee also discussed a number of questions of great practical interest to different sectors of our economy, including the progress which has been achieved under the automotive agreement, Canadian exports of cheese and oil to the United States and trade in agricultural equipment, tractors and aircraft between the two countries, the problem of water pollution in the Great Lakes and the food aid programs of our two countries, notably in the light of the current Indian food situation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I had several opportunities to review a wide range of international problems with Secretary Rusk. One that I might mention here is Viet Nam. Secretary Rusk made it amply clear that he recognizes and appreciates the obligations and commitments we have assumed as a member of the International Control Commission and that he hoped we would continue in this capacity to make such contributions as we can toward a peaceful settlement of the Viet Nam problem. At no time did Secretary Rusk press for any contribution other than that which the Canadian government decides in the light of these responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, this was the tenth meeting of the Joint Committee. I am sure that hon. members on the other side who have participated in the past recognize how useful these meetings can be and I would say that this particular session has been the most constructive and fruitful of the three meetings in which I have had the privilege of taking part.

In taking my seat, I want to thank my colleagues for their co-operation on the Canadian delegation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is it the wish of the house that the communiqué referred to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For the communiqué referred to above see appendix A].

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I again express the thanks of the opposition to the government for the courtesy extended by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in providing a copy of the statement that he has just made. In so far as the concluding words of the statement are concerned, as to the benefits that flow from these meetings, all of us who have participated at any time in any of these meetings are fully aware of the beneficial effects of meeting together and exchanging views. However, in so far as the statement is concerned, I think it is far too optimistic, regarding the attainments of this meeting. I might point out that it has been apparent for a considerable time that this government has been carrying into effect rather too literally the recommendations and suggestions of Mr. Merchant and Mr. Heeney, which were issued I think last July, and which placed Canada in the category of being seen and not heard. As I review the events which have taken place since the imposition of the United States guide lines, I can only say that the attitude of the Canadian government has been so supine, so meek, so weak, that interferences with our sovereignty have taken place, which are, and have been, unfair and unreasonable.

Yet as I read the statement of the hon. gentleman I find that the only place in which strong views were expressed was in connection with the S.E.C. program. It is stated in this regard:

> Turning now to the SEC problem, we put forward the strong Canadian views on the proposed regulations as an intrusion into our sovereignty.

In so far as the guide lines were concerned, the words used do not give that degree of certainty which should be expected and which the Canadian people have the right to demand. It is stated:

> We reiterated in some detail our views on the implications of the guide lines for Canada.

When these guide lines were first imposed no serious objection was taken by the government. The attitude was, indeed, that some of these guide lines might perhaps be a kind of windfall for Canada—if I might use that expression without appearing to intrude on any royal commission investigation which is taking place.

The communiqué says:

> The United States members made clear that the United States government was not requesting United States corporations to induce their Canadian subsidiaries to act in any ways that differed from their normal business practices as regards the repatriation of earnings, purchasing and sales policies, or their other financial and commercial activities.

I say that those guide lines have been detrimental to Canada, and are detrimental, and that they constitute an invasion of what should be an exclusively Canadian area of decision and regulations. The wording of the communiqué gives no indication that this problem has been met in a way which is acceptable and reasonable.

There was mention also of the two or three other phases which were dealt with, including the United States balance of payments program. What has happened here is that the United States has a balance of payments problem because of the fact that it sells so much elsewhere less than it is importing. Our position is the very reverse. Yet Canada is made to pay for the settlement or the solution of a United States problem.

In the field of automobiles to which the hon. gentleman made reference, it is of interest to note that according to the communiqué, the arrangement entered into has been of benefit to Canada. Well, in the latest weekly bulletin of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, dated March 4, we find the following figures: September, 1964, 52,144; September, 1965, 52,-421.

There is very little difference there. Now we come to passenger automobiles. The Canadian consumer still buys, and pays through the nose, though under this agreement Canadian manufacturers are selling their cars abroad and meeting American competition while the Canadian has to pay. Imports of passenger automobiles in 1964 amounted to $96,184,000 from January to September. In the same period in 1965, the amount of imports was $144,315,000.

I am disappointed in this statement. It is simply a diplomatic statement which could have been made before the minister made his visit together with those others who took part in the pilgrimage. It is simply a general summary of a serious situation which in no way has been resolved by the communiqué.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I desire to thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs for sending me a copy of the statement which he has just made to the house.

The communiqué, in the main, has dealt with three topics. The first had to do with the application of the United States guide lines to Canadian subsidiaries of American corporations, and I was interested in the minister's statement that the communiqué could not possibly convey the vigour with which the views of the Canadian delegates were expressed. I hope the vigour in Washington was much stronger than has ever been expressed in Ottawa—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: —because I recall that last December the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) said of these United States guide lines that they were in effect in line with the Canadian government's policy, and they constituted a political economic windfall for the Canadian government.

Had it not been for the objections which were raised to those guide lines on this side of the house, buttressed by the letters sent by Hon. Eric Kierans of the Quebec government, there would have been no serious objections to these guide lines.

It is true that the government began to have second thoughts about this matter, and a few days ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs said on a national television program that Mr. Kierans was not the only one who had registered objections with the United States government, and that the Canadian government had registered objection. However, I have not been able to find any written objection from the Minister of Finance, from whom one would expect it to come, and other than an aide memoire, which the Secretary of State for External Affairs says he sent, but which so far he refuses to table, and which dealt only with the S.E.C. regulations, no formal objection has been registered by the government to the United States guide lines. Now we are told the ministers have expressed themselves with great vigour, and the communiqué says they have expressed their concern over the possible implications for Canada of the U.S. guide lines.

It seems to me the communiqué is most unrevealing in saying what the attitude of the United States government will be. It says:

> The United States members made clear that the U.S. government was not requesting U.S. corporations to induce their Canadian subsidiaries to act in any ways that differed from their normal business practices as regards the repatriation of earnings, purchasing and sales policies, or their other financial and commercial activities.

But, Mr. Speaker, I point out that this very vague and general statement is, to a very large extent, offset by Mr. Thomas C. Mann, United States Under-Secretary for Economic Affairs who, at the week end, when asked in Washington by the press what it meant when the American government said it expected firms in Canada, which were subsidiaries of United States corporations, to act as good citizens of the country, replied that—> —the guide lines are flexible enough to let American subsidiaries abroad be good citizens although unnecessary retention of earnings abroad is not desirable.

Which of the guide lines is the United States going to follow—the vague, nebulous statement of the communiqué, or the very specific statement of the U.S. Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs that a retention of earnings abroad is not desirable?

I think the Canadian government has a responsibility to tell the house what this communiqué means. Does it mean that the United States government is not going to apply these voluntary economic guide lines to Canada? Certainly Mr. Mann, when he was asked, did not say that there would be any difference in the application of these guide lines to Canada from their application to any other country.

The second matter which is dealt with in the communiqué has to do with the change in the Security Exchange Commission regulations. I am glad the Canadian government in this case put forward strong views to the effect that these proposed regulations constitute a violation to our sovereignty. The communiqué does not offer too much comfort. It says that the United States members appreciated the concern of the government of Canada and assured the Canadian members that the most careful consideration would be given to Canadian views.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know how much that means; but I certainly want to urge the government to press for more than consideration and, if early action is not taken, that the government take a much more forceful and forthright attitude than they have taken to date.

The third matter which was dealt with had to do with the United States foreign assets controls which, the minister's statement says, have on occasions created serious difficulty for Canadian companies trading with such countries as Communist China and Cuba.

Again we are not given any specific information other than the statement from the communiqué that the United States members reaffirm their readiness to consult promptly on any transactions of importance to Canada which are affected by United States foreign assets control.

Mr. Speaker, this does not answer the concrete questions. Is there to be any repetition of the deplorable situation which arose last summer when three milling companies in this country, wholly owned subsidiaries of United States corporations, refused to mill Canadian wheat into flour because that flour was going to be sold by the Soviet Union to Cuba. Has the government received any undertaking that there will be no repetition of this kind of incident which makes Canada look like nothing other than an economic satellite of the United States?

There is one last observation in the statement of the minister which intrigues me; that is the one which says that at no time did Secretary Rusk press for any contribution other than that which the Canadian government decides in the light of these responsibilities—referring of course to the Viet Nam situation. Knowing with what care the Secretary of State for External Affairs selects his words, sometimes in order to clarify a situation and sometimes in order to confuse it, I am intrigued by the word "press".

When the minister says that Secretary of State Rusk did not press for any contribution, I want to know whether he has asked for any; I want to know whether he has suggested any. I want the minister at the earliest opportunity to tell the house exactly what position the Canadian delegates took at the Washington meeting. It is not enough for us to hide behind the fact that we are a member of the International Control Commission.

It seems to me the Secretary of State had a clearly defined responsibility to make it clear to the United States that since they have intervened unilaterally in southeast Asia, the Canadian government feels no responsibility to give any support whatsoever in this military venture irrespective of whether or not we are a member of the International Control Commission.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we listened intently to the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin).

I thank him for sending me a copy of his press release. But I call his attention to the fact that he has sent me an English copy. We hear all the ministers of the crown tell us that there are two official languages in Canada. I wonder a little what the reaction of the Leader of the Opposition would have been if he had received that statement in French without an English copy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If it is true that I have sent an English copy to the hon. member, I must say that the French copy which should have been sent to him was received by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas).

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister to inform his departmental officials that the leader of the Créditistes is not the leader of the New Democratic party and that we do not want the leader of the New Democratic party with the Créditistes.

Mr. Speaker, I see four main items in the minister's statement.

First, American investments in Canada;

Second, trade with the communist countries, for which we must secure the Americans' blessing;

Third, the situation in Viet Nam;

Fourth, co-operation in other areas with the United States, in this case the matter of water pollution with regard to the Great Lakes, etc.

But there is one point which we must consider a little more closely, because the statement does not change in any way the statements which we have been hearing in the house in the last month and a half, that is since the opening of the new session. I would even say that there is not much change between last year and this year.

Here is the paragraph which caught our attention and was read a short while ago by the Leader of the Official Opposition. Here it is:

[English]

We reiterated in some detail our views on the implications for Canada of the United States guide lines, regarding direct investment as they have been commonly understood, and our objections to them. The United States response made it clear that there is no thought that these guide lines given to their corporations should lead to companies in Canada being requested to operate other than in accordance with their normal commercial activities.

Canada—U.S. Ministerial Meeting

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this whole matter concerning the United States can be summed up as follows: when American companies decided to ask their Canadian subsidiaries to refrain from investing in Canada and to try and repatriate their earnings without delay to the United States, the situation changed considerably as soon as the U.S. Federal Reserve Commission announced early in February that the interest rate on its loans would be raised from 4 to 4.5 per cent.

Shortly after, the Bank of Canada followed suit and increased its rate by .5 per cent or 1/200th.

The obvious purpose of the American government in announcing a stop to investments at the time was to increase its interest rate; afterwards, as soon as the interest rates were accepted, as soon as the Bank of Canada had followed suit and the Minister of Finance had given his consent, we are told today that the United States does not intend to prevent Canadian subsidiaries from acting otherwise than Canadian companies proper and as good Canadian citizens.

So much for investments, Mr. Speaker.

As far as trade with communist countries is concerned—I said only a word about it a while ago—the minister must ask the Americans permission to trade with China, Russia or Cuba, in short with any communist country in the world; otherwise, the U.S. will resort to reprisals against Canada. The minister is aware of this but breathes not a word about it.

I believe that to insure respect of our sovereignty, we should make up our own minds about trade with these communist countries and the Americans should keep their noses out of our national affairs. I think the minister should take a strong position in this matter.

I come now to my third point: Our participation or contribution in Viet Nam. There is here, and the minister himself stated—

• (3:10 p.m.)

[English]

"Finally, Mr. Speaker, I had several opportunities to review a wide range of international problems with Secretary Rusk."

Reference is made here to our participation in Viet Nam. Canada is a member of the international control commission for the maintenance of peace. When the Canadian government decides to send technical aid, doctors, nurses or equipment to Viet Nam while being one of the three members of a control commission for peace in the world whose aim is to help solve the problems that might come up here and there, I wonder if there is not a glaring contradiction in our sending technical aid to Viet Nam when we must work to have peace respected in that country, or at least for the establishment of a peace that does not exist at the present time.

The fourth point, Mr. Speaker, has to do with co-operation and collaboration in other fields. I think we are in favour of that. There are several fields, I believe, where we are already co-operating and collaborating with the United States. Inasmuch as our sovereignty and our internal administration are respected, we can co-operate with the United States in many fields, as long as it is to the advantage of both Canada and the United States, but not at the expense of one or the other. That is a sound policy. I feel that is the policy our government should follow.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this side of the house, and particularly our group feels that the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs did not tell us very much that was new today. We are naturally eager for something more concrete, more details and especially to see more action on the part of the federal government.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to thank the hon. minister for seeing that we had copies of his statement prior to the convening of the house. I would say that this general conference now taking place annually between the cabinet members of the Canadian and United States governments is a good thing. We hope it will continue. We hope that as a result of this conference many of the problems that we face will be clarified.

One of the points that concerns me is this. Where does Canada come out of this so-called voluntary investment squeeze with the United States? This statement certainly does not clarify the picture. What is the situation going to be for the more than 900 American subsidiaries that are now operating in Canada? Is it true that Canada has really been given some special status under this United States guide lines program aimed at trimming direct investment and the repatriation of the earnings of these subsidiaries?

These are items upon which there will have to be much more elaboration if we are to understand what the situation really is in Canada. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the report of the minister and the communiqué that is referred to mentions that these guide lines which have been set out by the American government are intended to act toward reducing the deficit of the United States' external accounts. Recognizing that the United States does have a balance of payments problem and that it is a very acute problem for them, I find there is no mention at all of the tremendous imbalance in our own trading situation with the United States.

Certainly it is a good thing for us to consider their problems, but what about our problems? While we may be able to ease our own conscience in this regard because of our comparatively favourable balance in the over-all world trade picture, it would be much more favourable than it is if it were not for our imbalance of trade with the United States.

Another point I am concerned about is whether or not these guide lines will permit the United States subsidiaries in Canada to float loans in Canada for the international operations of these companies in their development outside both the United States and Canada. Just the other day the Chrysler Corporation in Canada announced that they were going to raise $50 million outside of the United States for their international operations. Does this mean they are going to do it in Canada? If so, this matter should certainly be clarified as well.

The statement also referred to the Viet Nam situation. I gather from the remarks of Secretary Rusk that he agrees that the contribution of Canada in so far as the Viet Nam picture is concerned can best be made through the International Control Commission. I wonder whether this means that the so-called secret letters that are supposed to have passed between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of our country now indicate that the Americans have changed their policy from that of a few months ago in relation to our contribution.

I find, also, reference in today's press to the fact that the United States maritime unions are concerned about United States companies trading with North Viet Nam and are planning a waterfront strike to protest against this action. Can it be that Canada is trading with North Viet Nam as well? We would like answers to these questions and I believe the minister must elaborate in much greater detail than he has so far.

We note that the headlines about this conference say that it has been most profitable and productive and that the exchanges covered numerous topics. I think the minister owes it to the house to report on some of the discussions as they relate to topics other than just the guide lines and the Viet Nam picture. We trust that the government will see fit to report on these matters, because not only do I think it is our right in this house to know what the situation is but the Canadian public should have more information in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps hon. members would allow me at this point to bring to the attention of the house the provisions of provisional standing order 15 (2a) regarding ministerial statements and comments. I shall not read the standing order to hon. members and I have purposely up till now refrained from bringing this matter again to the attention of hon. members so that it would not be suggested that I am pointing an accusing finger at any particular commentator. But in my view, when we spend something over 40 minutes commenting on a statement at this time of the day we are in some way offending the requirements of the provisional standing order dealing with this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all hon. members will want to take this into consideration whenever ministerial statements and comments are made.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GEORGE VICTOR SPENCER—TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like the permission of the house to table copies of correspondence between the solicitor for Mr. George Victor Spencer and officials of the Post Office Department and the Privy Council, referred to in last Friday's debate.

Mr. Speaker: Does the parliamentary secretary have the consent of the house to table the documents he has referred to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA PENSION PLAN AMENDMENT

CONTRIBUTIONS TO AND BENEFITS BY HOUSEWIVES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South) moved the first reading of Bill No. C-135, to amend the Canada Pension Plan (housewives contributions and benefits).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to enable housewives to make contributions to and collect benefits from the Canada Pension Plan.

Since many housewives spend part of their careers working in industry as well as working at home, they should be permitted to continue their contributions to the Canada Pension Plan while at home, to ensure them a full pension at retiring age.

The bill recognizes the equal importance of work performed at home with the work performed in industry and provides housewives with the same pension opportunity.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT AMENDMENT

EXTENSION OF DUTIES OF AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer) moved the first reading of Bill No. C-136, to amend the Financial Administration Act (parliamentary commissioner for administration).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, this bill is related in intent but not necessarily complementary to Bill No. C-113 which would provide for a parliamentary commissioner or ombudsman.

I believe this bill is necessitated by the tremendous number of cases coming before members of parliament regarding the administration, to which it becomes increasingly difficult to obtain adequate answers.

This bill would extend the duties of an office already in existence, that of the Auditor General. This is an office which is already organized to deal with such matters. This bill would provide authority for certain functions and duties which the Auditor General has by his own admission already assumed because of the nature of his office. This would not require a new appointment or new personnel but would merely extend the authority and would eliminate possible conflict of jurisdiction by channelling complaints through members of the federal house—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to remind the hon. member of the provisions of standing order 71(2), which allow an hon. member to make a short or brief statement. It seems to me that he is now going beyond the limitations of that standing order.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

UNION GRIEVANCES WITH C.N.R.

Question No. 20—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many grievances have the unions representing C.N.R. employees filed with the company in each of the past three years?

2. How many of these grievances (a) have been settled (b) are still outstanding?

3. Of the grievances that were settled, how many took longer than (a) one month to be settled (b) two months to be settled?

4. Does the C.N.R. use a system of demerits for disciplining its employees, and, if so (a) when was this system established (b) was the system established unilaterally, discussed or negotiated with the unions representing C.N.R. employees?

5. Have the unions representing C.N.R. employees made representations to the company urging abolition or revision of the system of demerits and, if so, on what occasions and what was the response of the C.N.R. management?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Management advises that all collective agreements set out procedures to be followed in the handling and adjudication of grievances between the Company and its employees. It has not been the practice to disclose information as embraced by the questions, it being considered that such information concerns confidential matters between the signatories of the collective agreements.

The C.N.R. has 168 collective agreements covering 85,000 employees. Such information has not been compiled in the form asked, nor is it a requirement under the various requests for information and statistical material made upon the Company by the Board of Transport Commissioners or the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which publishes extensive material concerning the railways.

The traditional and accepted system of railway discipline is known as the Brown System which was inaugurated by the Company in 1923. No representations have been made for its abolition.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the disposition of television rights for the Canadian Football League is not a matter which falls under the purview of the government. However, I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that it is holding preliminary discussions on this subject with other interested parties and that the corporation, for its part, is making every effort to bring about a solution. It is my further understanding that to this point there has been no final disposition of the rights as between the vendor of them and any purchaser.

and privy councillors and the summoning of parliament?

6. What is the accepted constitutional technique to advise the Governor General in respect of other matters?

7. What is the constitutional or other reason for the differentiation between those matters upon which the Governor General is advised by instrument of advice and those in respect of which the advice is submitted in accordance with the answer to part 6?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. For appointment of Minister and Privy Councillor: 17 Sept., 1953; for summoning of Parliament: 7 Oct., 1953.

*CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—COLOUR TELECASTS

Question No. 889—Mr. Allmand:

1. Was an announcement made on Friday, February 25, 1966, that the C.B.C. will start colour telecasts on the English network for 30 hours per week starting on October 1, 1966, and on the French network for 15 hours per week sometime during the fall?

2. If so, how much of this colour programming, both in English and French will be produced in Montreal?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of this question is yes. The C.B.C. issued a press release to this effect on February 25.

In reply to the second part, the C.B.C. advises that most of the estimated 15 hours of French network colour programming plus some English network originations such as sports telecasts will be Montreal produced. The English network will have a greater volume of network and colour film imports available, making up perhaps two thirds of the 30 hours of English network colour programming. Canadian colour production by C.B.C. Montreal is expected to be approximately the same as that for C.B.C. Toronto. The corporation's Ottawa studio will originate a small portion of the colour programming for both networks.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—POSITION TAKEN AT CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, asking him if he would outline in general the views expressed by Canada in regard to Viet Nam. I should like to ask him whether, on the basis of the information which he has obtained but without revealing it, he can comment on the dire and frightening statement made by the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Fulbright, to the effect that what is taking place now may very well lead to war with communist China.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the right hon. gentleman will appreciate that, much as I would like to be able to deal fully with his question, it is not possible on the orders of the day to do so. In any event, as my talks with Mr. Rusk must necessarily be regarded as having been of a nature which cannot be fully disclosed, I cannot really answer the question in the detail I should like.

I may say that there were certain aspects of this problem which I frankly discussed with him, ten days ago. My main concern had to do with the Canadian proposition that there should be a negotiated settlement, and that the international control commission was the vehicle which I felt was more calculated to serve this purpose at the present time than the United Nations or any other available medium.

I think the Secretary of State agrees fully that the situation must be brought within the Geneva framework. I indicated some of the steps which Canada has taken to try and bring about understanding in this area along with our two colleague states on the commission. The observation made by Senator Fulbright was one which appeared in the press over the week end, and it undoubtedly covers an area which concerns not only Senator Fulbright but the government of the United States, as it must concern all people in the world at the present time.

I hope there will be an opportunity very soon for the external affairs committee to meet, and I hope my right hon. friend will understand if my answer does not satisfy his question. He will fully appreciate that our procedures as well as the circumstances of the question, important as it is, do not really offer me the opportunity to make a more extended reply.

VIET NAM—SENDING OF CANADIAN TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that my question did not get a more affable reply than it did get. I would ask the minister whether there is any foundation for the statement, made by one of the ministers of the cabinet in a television appearance the other evening, that Canada made its own policies and did not fall in line with those of the United States. Then the minister went on to say that Canada resisted being pressed into a position of supplying troops for Viet Nam.

Is there any foundation for that suggestion, particularly in view of the words of the communique, which would indicate that if that were so in the past it is not the case now?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that at the press conference on Saturday afternoon Secretary Rusk himself, without any prompting or questioning, volunteered the statement that the United States had not pressed and was not pressing Canada to occupy a role other than that on the commission. I can tell my right hon. friend, in view of what we have been endeavouring to do in this regard during the past three weeks, that I am sure it would not be in the interests of a negotiated settlement for anyone to press Canada to play a role other than the one we are now seeking to maintain on the international control commission.

INDUSTRY

HAMILTON, ONT.—CESSATION OF OPERATIONS OF STUDEBAKER COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the announcement that the Studebaker company will be closing its auto manufacturing plant in Hamilton, I should like to ask the minister two questions. First of all, has he looked into the reasons for the proposed discontinuance of the company's operations? Second, are the reasons in any way connected either with the United States economic guide lines or with the Canada-United States auto agreement?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, we have had a preliminary look into this problem and have been able to find no evidence whatever that the decision taken by Studebaker to close its operations in Hamilton was in any way related to the operation of the United States guide lines. Second, so far as the automobile agreement with the United States is concerned, it would appear that the effect of this agreement has largely been to enable Studebaker to continue its operations longer than might otherwise have been the case.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I may say that, seized with the problems of facing Hamilton in this particular situation, the Department of Industry is urgently canvassing the possibilities of alternative industrial use for this plant. At the same time my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is urgently undertaking a survey of the proposed release of men by Studebaker with a view to formulating some constructive proposal.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Industry. I wonder whether the minister would give his comments on the suggestion made in the telegram received by the government today from the mayor of Hamilton to the effect that the government consider taking over this industry as a national industry. Further, what action is the government specifically contemplating in the way of adjustments under the T.A.B. arrangements similar to those which are received by other auto workers.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion made by the mayor of Hamilton is an interesting one. Perhaps I would be misleading the house if I were to indicate that there was any likelihood that the government would nationalize this particular concern. In so far as the arrangements under T.A.B. are concerned, this is largely the purpose of the survey which is being carried out by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to elaborate on that question by asking the minister when a decision on this question could be made by the government, because it does involve between 600 and 900 men who will become unemployed in Hamilton.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think the government has acted with considerable speed and vigour.

[Later:]

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, in his capacity as minister of manpower. Is the minister prepared to meet, or has he made arrangements to meet, with representatives of the auto workers employed in the Studebaker plant to discuss the placement of these displaced workers, and particularly the placement of those auto workers who, because of their age, will find it difficult to obtain other employment?

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand that when the hon. member for Hamilton West was asking his question the translation system was not operative. This is the report I have received from the table and I would like to give the hon. member an opportunity to ask his question again.

Mr. Macaluso: That is the same information I received, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in his capacity as designate minister of manpower. Is he prepared to meet, or is he going to meet with representatives of the employees at the Studebaker plant in Hamilton to discuss the placement of these auto workers, and especially to deal with the placement of those who, because of age, will find it difficult to obtain other employment?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the N.E.S. is already in contact with the company and the unions. We are sending somebody from Toronto today to meet with the unions and the company, and to solve as many problems as we can at this stage.

[Later:]

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a somewhat supplementary question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the frequency with which these lay-offs are taking place would the minister give serious consideration to the setting up of machinery for prior consultation before plants dismiss their employees?

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MUNSINGER INVESTIGATION—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON SECURITY MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

Last Friday the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) surprised the whole house when he brought out the Munsinger case.

In the interest of justice and truth, does the Prime Minister intend to tell parliament all he knows about the Munsinger case, so that we might know if the security of the state was in danger or only that of the former minister?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind the hon. member that the order of business for the house today will be to go into committee of supply to consider the estimates of the Department of Justice, which I hope will take place very shortly. I suggest that question might be asked of the minister at that time by the hon. member for Villeneuve.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

It seems to me that the Chair allowed the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) to ask similar questions about the Spencer case, and now I would not have the same rights as the Leader of the Opposition to ask similar questions?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair must give a ruling in each particular case. With regard to the question asked by the hon. member for Villeneuve, the Chair feels that it could be dealt with when the department's estimates are considered.

FINANCE

PARIS MEETING—PERSONNEL OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the meetings now taking place in Paris between the ten great financial powers of the world. Would the Minister of Finance inform us who are the members of the Canadian delegation to this meeting, and what is their policy as it relates to the maintenance of the status quo, the new suggested gold policy, or some other alternative.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I think that this question is urgent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING—STEPS TO OVERCOME DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Did the Minister of Finance outline to the United States ministers conference in Washington at the end of last week the definite steps which Canada proposes to take now, to overcome the $1.4 billion current account deficit which this country has with the United States, as outlined by Dr. Andrew Brimmer, Assistant U.S. Secretary of Commerce, when he spoke in Toronto last week?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how you answer a question of that kind on orders of the day. The United States is very well aware of the policies of Canada in the field of trade. The United States knows that, in contrast to the policies which have been followed in the past by the previous administration, we made a very successful effort in reducing our balance of payments deficit—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: —while increasing the prosperity of the country, and today Canada's dollar is stronger than it was then.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that our current account deficit with the United States is greater than their current account deficit with the whole world, has the minister asked the United States government to understand the magnitude of our problem?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now entering into argument with the minister.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Did the minister point out to the secretary for commerce of the United States, with whom he was talking during the weekend, that Canada's deficit in commodity trade with the United States in 1965 amounted to more than $1 billion, a figure which increased by $300 million during the last year, and did he outline the steps he was taking to overcome this shocking situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not asking a question. He is making a speech.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON BILINGUALISM—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. May I ask the Prime Minister if he will consider holding consultations with the civil service staff organizations before he and his colleagues reach a final decision in relation to the report of the interdepartmental committee on bilingualism in the public service.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): My hon. friend knows that the interdepartmental committee had consultations with all those concerned. Its report is now before the government. I would be very glad to give consideration to my hon. friend's suggestion.

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY MINES MINISTER RESPECTING BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of National Defence I believe. In view of statements made by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to the effect that all recruits to the civil service will have to be bilingual, is it the intention of the Minister of National Defence to issue the same directives with regard to recruits for the armed forces.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I rise on a point of personal privilege. I should like to say some words to the hon. member on—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, Mr. Speaker. Was the minister stating government policy, when he said, as he is reported to have said, that civil servants in western Canada who have reached the top of their departments in that area will not be eligible for senior positions in Ottawa unless they are bilingual?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that they refer to Beauchesne, citation 171, which is to the effect that a question, oral or written, must not refer to a speech made outside the house. In the case of a cabinet minister it is permissible to ask the Prime Minister whether such a speech represents the policy of the government. I do not think the question, in the way it was asked, can be accepted at this time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Would he say whether the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys was stating government policy when he said, as was attributed to him, that civil servants from western Canada who have reached the top of their department in that area will not be eligible for senior positions in Ottawa unless they are bilingual.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The hon. member referred to a statement alleged to have been made by the minister. Naturally I am not going to comment at this time, until I confirm that statement. It may not have been said.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GEORGE VICTOR SPENCER—ALLEGED CONTRADICTIONS IN STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister?

Could he tell us whether consultations took place among cabinet members before he contradicted himself a second time Friday and disowned the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) and a few other ministers with regard to the Spencer case?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is probably aware that he cannot put questions referring to consultations held among members of the cabinet.

GEORGE VICTOR SPENCER—REQUEST FOR TERMS OF REFERENCE OF INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. May I ask him if he is in a position to table a copy of the terms of reference of the inquiry which he said on Friday would be set up in connection with the Spencer case?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Perhaps the hon. member would wait until we come to the estimates of the department concerned, when I shall have something to say.

Mr. Fulton: A supplementary question. My question is simply whether the Prime Minister is in a position to table the terms of reference; whether they have been set up and whether we could see them today. This is very important with relation to the discussion later on the estimates.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the first question has been answered by the Prime Minister. I should like to follow up the suggestion I made a moment ago, that this type of question might be asked when the house resumes in committee of supply.

Mr. Fulton: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I think I am right in stating that documents cannot be tabled in committee. I think they can only be tabled in the house. That is why I asked whether the terms of reference are ready; and if so, whether they will be tabled now so that we can have them officially before us.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If such a statement is made, then the committee might decide at that time to rise, report progress, and table the document. At the moment this is purely hypothetical.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the order in council has been passed, and whether we can see the terms of reference today?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked a question, and he is not entitled to insist, as he knows very well under the rules, on any specific reply. In fact, he is not entitled to receive a reply at all. I urge him to follow the suggestion I have made in this regard.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

HEALTH AND MORALE OF NAVAL PERSONNEL IN BRAZILIAN WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, some days ago the hon. member for Calgary North asked a question with respect to conditions with respect to and the situation on the R.C.N. vessel Cape Scott, now in Brazilian waters. On Thursday, I indicated that I would give a reply today. As the hon. member knows, the Cape Scott is a mobile repair ship accompanying the fleet to provide the backup repair facilities required in extended manoeuvres.

According to temperature readings obtained from H.M.C.S. Cape Scott, the average below deck temperatures were about 12 degrees higher than the outside air temperatures while the ship was in harbour. The average high temperature for Rio for the month of February is 93 degrees, and in only one area has the below deck temperature risen to above 110 degrees.

Mr. Nielsen: How comfortable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Hot enough for the cabinet.

Mr. Hellyer: While operating in southern waters awnings have been rigged to reduce the heat built up by the sun's rays. The ship's hospital is equipped with an air conditioning unit and while the ship is at sea trade winds ease the temperature somewhat. The morale of the ship's crew is good.

BROADCASTING

FOWLER COMMISSION—ACCEPTANCE OF RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wish to direct to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the house when the cabinet committee studying the Fowler report will be in a position to indicate which of the recommendations of that committee will be accepted by the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if that is a question that can be answered at this time. The implication is not clear to the Chair, but it does appear to me that it is the type of question which should wait for a reply, and which should be placed on the order paper.

FISHERIES

SEAL HUNT—ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This house being aware that the seal hunt begins today in the gulf, would the right hon. gentleman soothe our anxieties by denying the rumour that the Minister of Fisheries, who was with the hunters today, was skinned alive.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

DENIAL OF PARTICIPATION TO TAXPAYING SEAMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, of which I have given him notice. Is it the intention of the government to deprive 160 Canadian citizens who are employed as seamen on gypsum transportation vessels the right of participating in the Canada Pension Plan, while at the same time demanding that they pay Canadian income tax?

Mr. Speaker: I should like to invite the hon. member to place this question on the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as leader of the house. Has the government given any consideration to the statement made last Friday by the Leader of the Opposition, who said we had covered some 15 departments during our consideration of the estimates, and that in order to assure that supply would be available the official opposition would be prepared to give consent to the introduction of the necessary appropriation bill, and then give it first, second and third readings right away.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): I am afraid the opposition house leader was under some misapprehension as to what the Leader of the Opposition did say on that occasion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: Well, some of the newspapermen who wrote stories for today's papers were also under this same misapprehension.

An hon. Member: Read Hansard.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I have read it very carefully in the light of what was said. I have read it several times. In any event, Hansard now indicates that the departments which the Leader of the Opposition had in mind at the time were those which had already been passed. I had heard that, and I heard him say at one point that he included the other items in the Department of Justice except, presumably, item one. Then, at another point, I thought he intended to include the other departments not yet passed. Unfortunately, when I checked to inquire what was meant when this second reference was made, I was told it meant only the departments which had already been passed. This does not help materially to solve the very serious problems confronting the government with respect to paying its accounts. The expenditures which are required to be made involve all the departments, particularly the Department of Public Works, as well as those already passed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Call Public Works immediately this afternoon, so that you will not be troubled.

Mr. McIlraith: That was my request at five o'clock on Friday, and that was the request which was rejected.

In any event, rather than try to discuss the matter here in the house I would prefer to discuss it with the house leaders and consider what our position should be, because it seems to me the suggestion would not meet the problem. However, I will look into it and communicate with the other house leaders.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Ontario about the matter of an appropriations bill, I want to ask the government house leader if he has been able to determine what date the appropriations bill is required, so that no salaries, wages or cheques for government services during the current month will be issued later than usual?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I doubt whether this question is in order because the hon. member is asking for an interpretation of a statute, or for a legal opinion. On the other hand, I realize the importance of the matter, and if the hon. minister is prepared to reply to the question at this time I shall allow him to reply.

Mr. Olson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am not asking for an interpretation. This is a matter of mechanics and I hope the government house leader would know when some cheques may have to be withheld.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the strict answer to the question is Friday of last week, but that involved relatively small amounts arising mainly out of certain payments to contractors for services rendered. Some of the service work, like cleaning and that sort of thing, is done under contract, and in some of the smaller cases payments have not been made to the contractors. Then, there is the question of casual help, which is spread about the country in different places, and some of this casual help may not have been paid.

When it comes to the main body of the civil service, or what we in Ottawa commonly refer to as the civil service, Wednesday of this week would be the latest possible moment before salaried civil servants would be injured. But long before that, and increasingly each day, other persons are being affected, many of them being people working for the government as casual, prevailing rate employees, or employees of these smaller types of contractors.

FINANCE

PORTER COMMISSION REPORT—POSSIBILITY OF SECURITY EXCHANGE REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): My question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. It arises from a statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that mutually satisfactory arrangements concerning the S.E.C. would be made between the two countries, that is, between Canada and the United States. Does this imply that the federal government is now planning to set up some form of regulatory machinery in relation to a national security commission as recommended by the Porter commission?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The mutually satisfactory arrangements referred to in the communiqué were mutually satisfactory arrangements concerning the United States law. We took very strong exception to the extraterritoriality of that law, and we are hopeful that this aspect will be removed.

We did not bargain about our own regulations, but we did say that it is our intention to support the passage here and in the provinces of whatever legislative action we have to take in order to ensure that Canadian securities regulations are satisfactory for us.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STEVEN TRUSCOTT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General and ask him whether he will order an immediate investigation by royal commission into the bizarre circumstances surrounding the trial and conviction of 14 year old Steven Truscott for rape and murder, so shockingly revealed in a book released by publishers McClelland and Stewart over the week end, in order to rectify what appears to be an astounding example of a miscarriage of justice in the courts of Ontario—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper, if it is in order. The Chair will have to look at the question before it is allowed to go on the order paper.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): On a point of order. Would Your Honour at some stage in the future take under consideration the point of order which I raised earlier in relation to parliamentary secretaries making inquiries of members of the ministry?

Mr. Speaker: I might tell the hon. member for Carleton that the Chair has taken that question under consideration. The point has been raised before. It seemed to the Chair, after looking at the precedents and relating our practice to the practice in Britain, that there is an essential difference between the office of parliamentary secretaries here and the position of parliamentary secretaries in the British house, where they are junior ministers.

I suggest to the hon. member that there is nothing in our rules, nothing in our precedents and nothing in our practice, to prevent parliamentary secretaries from asking questions, though I realize there may be a question of propriety in certain instances. This is as far as the Chair can go at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Byrne: Are we, as parliamentary secretaries, to be deprived of our rights as sitting members of parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that he read the ruling I have just made when it is printed in Hansard tomorrow.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN WAR DISABILITY PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It arises from the representations he received from the Royal Canadian Legion on November 25 and from other veterans' associations regarding the urgent need for an increase in war disability pensions. Has the right hon. gentleman replied to these representations, and if so would he indicate to the house the nature of his reply?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I would have to check into that. It was last November. I will be very glad to table my reply when it is appropriate to do so.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question: Can the minister tell us whether the report of Hon. Mr. Justice Wood has yet been received and, if not when he expects it?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I have made inquiries as a result of a question which was asked a few days ago. I am informed that Mr. Justice Wood expects to complete his hearings at the end of this month. I have no indication when the report will be completed, but this work is being done as quickly as possible.

CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that this is consumer week and that the Prime Minister has personally endorsed it, is the right hon. gentleman planning any action this week to check the rising cost of living?

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I give notice that I intend to raise this matter at ten o'clock.

THE MINISTRY

REQUEST FOR COMMENT ON REPORTED RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I wish to direct this question to the Prime Minister, since it raises the question of public confidence in the government, following the news reports on the radio at one o'clock today. Has the Prime Minister received a letter of resignation from the Minister of Justice, or been informed of his intention to resign?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. More.]

AGRICULTURE

BONNYVILLE, ALTA.—REQUEST FOR ACREAGE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): I wish to direct a question to the eastern Minister of Agriculture. In view of the serious crop failure in the Bonnyville district of Alberta, would the minister say whether in the last week he has received a request for assistance by way of acreage payments from the Minister of Agriculture of Alberta?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe we received any further request during the past week. I think we received only the original request from the provincial minister last December. However, I shall check, and if there has been any correspondence during the past week I shall let the hon. member know tomorrow.

INCOME TAX

H.M.C. "DOCKYARD"—FAILURE OF PERSONNEL TO RECEIVE FORMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Is the minister aware that prevailing rate employees at H.M.C. Dockyard in Halifax did not receive their T-4 slips prior to the end of February, as required by law? If he has been so informed, is the government giving any extension of time for them to file their 1965 income tax returns?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this situation but I shall be very glad to investigate it and communicate with the hon. member.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REFUSAL BY C.B.C. TO BARGAIN WITH UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State or the Minister of Labour if she or he can report briefly to the house regarding the labour dispute which has arisen between the C.B.C. and certain of its employees, resulting allegedly from the refusal of the corporation to bargain collectively with several unions which have been certified as bargaining agents?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the question is very urgent.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Perhaps the hon. member might indicate the urgency of the question by rephrasing it.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Well, Mr. Speaker, I venture to suggest, and I am sure the Minister of Labour will agree, it has very considerable urgency in that the present collective bargaining agreements have run out and there is grave danger of problems arising in the C.B.C.

Mr. Nicholson: On the question of urgency—

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend seems not very clear in what he is talking about, but if he is talking about matters which have arisen in connection with the C.B.C. in Quebec province, of course I am aware of these. That is the only question he asked me. He did not even mention where the labour trouble might be, and of course I could not know every place where there might be labour trouble.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. lady if she would report.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR REPORT OF ENGINEERING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys a question which comes strictly within the rules. I regret I have not been able to send him notice because I have been sitting here in anticipation since the sitting commenced. Will the minister inform the house when he intends to table the 1965 report of the permanent engineering board on the Columbia?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Because the question is asked with so much charm, Mr. Speaker, I shall do it tomorrow.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the great interest taken by Hon. Eric Kierans and the Quebec government in American decisions, does the minister or the government plan to report to the Quebec goverment, as soon as possible, on the results of recent meetings between Canadian and U.S. authorities and to communicate their confidence and their optimism to that provincial government?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I presume that the hon. members have had the opportunity to look over the report which I read to the House this afternoon, but I will add, if I may, that I believe the suggestion to be worthy, and I will look into the situation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—INQUIRY AS TO ITEMS COMPRISING ADDITIONAL AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he supply the house with the information he is alleged to have given Secretary Rusk, namely the amount by which Canadian agricultural aid to India will be increased?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister indicated on Friday last, it is the intention of the Canadian government to provide assistance in addition to the total of $25 million that has been made available in accordance with the announcement of this February. The amount of additional aid will be substantial, and over and above this figure of $25 million.

There is soon to be a meeting perhaps in Washington when Canada and the United States hope that other countries, both wheat producing and non-wheat producing, will find it possible to join with us in giving the assistance which India so badly needs at this very critical period. We feel that the course we have taken is one that is calculated to encourage other countries to follow our example.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Scott (Danforth): As a supplementary question, can the minister inform the house whether or not he gave Secretary Rusk the precise amount by which the Canadian aid is to be increased, information which he has now denied us?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I gave Secretary Rusk an indication of our intention, but as we have not finally agreed on the amount it was not possible to put it as precisely as my hon. friend suggests.

PAKISTAN—POSSIBILITY OF REQUEST FOR FOOD AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, could the minister say whether a request of very recent date has come from another Commonwealth country, Pakistan, for assistance of a similar kind, and what has been the response thereto?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this matter is now being seriously considered.

DIVORCE

REQUEST TO ESTABLISH JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pose a question to the Prime Minister of which I have given him notice. Would the government consider setting up a joint committee of both houses to consider the matter of divorce legislation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my hon. friend for giving me notice of this question as I was coming into the house, and I can tell him we will certainly consider this matter.

AGRICULTURE

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—GRAIN ELEVATOR EXTENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture? I should like to ask the minister whether he has yet made a favourable decision in respect of the proposed grain elevator extension at Prince Rupert.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES RESPECTING BASE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether, as a result of the ministerial meeting in Washington, the government now is in a position to establish geographical co-ordinates in order to delineate the base lines from which Canada's territorial waters and exclusive fishing zones may be measured.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations in connection with Canada's proposals with regard to the law of the sea were discussed two weeks ago in Washington. The government of the United States has not yet responded to the proposals we have made, but we do expect to hear from them shortly.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the house whether negotiations with all other countries have been completed, and is it only the negotiations with the government in Washington that have not been concluded?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government considers it would prefer, in Canadian interests, to wait until it has a response from the government of the United States before proceeding further with other governments.

Mr. Crouse: I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. minister tell the house how many countries have not yet agreed to these base lines.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The particular proposal has just been put to the United States.

GRAIN

OATS AND BARLEY—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF FINAL PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. When may we expect an announcement with regard to the final accounting of the oats and barley pools of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am expecting the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board to arrive, as soon as he can dig himself out of Winnipeg.

STORMS

WINNIPEG, MAN.—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it arises out of the answer just given by the Minister of Finance. In view of the very heavy costs being faced by Winnipeg and its environs as a result of the unprecedented storm over the week end, will the government consider making an offer to assist in paying these costs?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend of course knows the normal procedure in these matters is for the municipalities to get in touch with the federal government first.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Legal and other services—

1. Administration including the office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, gratuities to the widows or such dependents as may be approved by Treasury Board of judges who die while in office and authority to make recoverable advances for the administration of justice on behalf of the governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, $2,504,300.

The Chairman: On Friday when the committee rose the committee was discussing item 1. The hon. member for York South had moved an amendment thereto and later requested unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make clear, in view of the fact that the terms of reference have not been laid before the house and in view of the time which has elapsed, that my request for withdrawal is, with your permission, on the table until the terms of reference are seen by hon. members including myself.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I will do my best to satisfy the very legitimate interests of my hon. friend and other members of the committee in this and perhaps one or two other related matters.

I indicated to this committee last Friday, Mr. Chairman, that in light of the very considerable concern which has been expressed about the nature of the dismissal of George Victor Spencer from the public service and the resultant denial of his pension and other benefits because of the nature of the action taken by the Civil Service Commission, I would favour an inquiry into the nature of the dismissal, particularly because Mr. Spencer for the first time the day before asked for such an inquiry.

The committee may recall that I indicated then, because all we had was a telegram addressed to a member of the house signed by a lawyer in Vancouver and Mr. Spencer, that I would determine myself—having given the commitment myself—whether Mr. Spencer in fact sent the telegram, although I underline that I had no reason to doubt my hon. friend's word, and whether the telegram represented his view in respect of the inquiry. So, I talked to Mr. Spencer by telephone on Friday evening and asked him simply this question, whether the telegram which had been read into the record of the House of Commons, and his name as having signed it, were confirmed by him and whether he confirmed the request for an inquiry in the terms outlined in the telegram. He did confirm both his signature on the telegram and the wording of the telegram with regard to the inquiry that he requested.

Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, an order in council was passed this morning, the text of which I have now before me, having received it a very short time ago. I should like to read that order in council and then, if the committee gives unanimous consent, I will be very glad to table it. The pertinent parts of the order in council read:

(1) that the Honourable Mr. Justice Dalton Courtright Wells, Toronto, Ontario, be appointed a Commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries Act to make such investigation, as in his absolute discretion he deems necessary, into the complaints made by George Victor Spencer as set out in the following telegram of 4th March, 1966:

"I have had a long interview with Victor Spencer with the approval of his solicitor, Harry Rankin. Spencer wants an inquiry of his case, either a judicial inquiry or by parliamentary committee because he does not feel he has been fairly dealt with. His complaint is with the nature of his dismissal and the unfair deprivation of benefits associated with his job such as pension and insurance benefits. He has no complaint with the treatment he has received from the R.C.M.P. but on the contrary feels they have been most considerate with him. Mr. Harry Rankin has also authorized the sending of this telegram."

The order in council goes on, having quoted the message:

—and to report whether, in his opinion, Mr. Spencer has been dealt with fairly and, if not, what rectification appears to him to be fair;

(2) that the procedure to be followed be in the absolute discretion of the Commissioner, including the power to hold the sessions in camera and to adopt such procedures as the Commissioner considers appropriate for the protection of the security of Canada;

3. that the Commissioner be authorized to exercise all the powers conferred upon him by section 11 of the Inquiries Act;

4. that the Commissioner be authorized to sit at such times, and at such places as he may decide from time to time;

5. that the Commissioner be authorized to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as he may require at rates of remuneration and reimbursement approved by the Treasury Board; and

6. that the Commissioner report to the Governor in Council with all reasonable dispatch.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the unanimous consent of the committee to table the document which I have just read into the record.

The Chairman: Order. I think our procedure might be more properly carried out if the unanimous consent of the house were requested when the Speaker is in the chair.

Mr. Fulton: With respect, Mr. Chairman, I think it is important that we have the document before us as soon as possible in order to serve our purposes in the subsequent discussion. I would agree with you, Mr. Chairman, that the proper procedure is to have it produced in the house. May I request that it be done at once, and the Speaker asked to return to the chair immediately for the purpose of allowing this document to be tabled.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I support the request the hon. member has made. We, also, would like to see these terms of reference as quickly as possible.

Mr. Fulton: It would have saved time, Mr. Chairman, if they had been tabled earlier in the day.

Progress reported.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the order in council which has just been read into the record of the committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Does the Prime Minister have the leave of the house to table the document referred to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Legal and other services—

1. Administration including the office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, gratuities to the widows or such dependents as may be approved by Treasury Board of judges who die while in office and authority to make recoverable advances for the administration of justice on behalf of the governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, $2,504,300.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, vote No. 1, Department of Justice.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I would have been glad to have spared the committee that slight delay except that I received the order in council only a short time ago, found in it a slight typographical error and had to send it back to be retyped. I wanted to make sure that I read the retyped version before it was tabled, otherwise it could have been tabled, of course, on motions.

I think the order in council is very clear in the terms of reference it sets out for the inquiry in question. It is limited in the sense that it emphasizes the employee-employer nature of the inquiry. I myself believe very strongly that it should be limited in this sense. It has been in our minds from the beginning that an ordinary royal commission or commission of inquiry in which security matters concerning this case could have been discussed, even in camera, and where there would be a number of people present, might be prejudicial to the security services of the state.

The Minister of Justice who I believe, Mr. Chairman, in dealing with this matter has been scrupulously fair, honourable and correct in his desire to protect—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —the rights of the individual and the security of the state, has felt that such a limitation would be essential in regard to the security aspects concerned. I hold very strong views on this score myself. But, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the terms of reference are sufficiently wide to deal fairly with Mr. Spencer himself in the kind of request he has made. Indeed, Mr. Spencer has already given himself an inquiry by agreeing to appear on television, where in a very interesting, I think I can use that word, interview—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was the government consulted on that?

Mr. Pearson: The government was not consulted about this appearance in any way, shape or form and I was just as surprised when I heard about it as no doubt my right hon. friend was. But it was in Mr. Spencer's mind no doubt when he asked for this inquiry, because I have the text of what he said. He stated the following when speaking last night:

> I asked for the inquiry because I thought that there were certain things that happened after I was fired that I did not quite like:

Then the questioner said:

> In other words, you lost your pension rights and your health benefit rights and your insurance rights and your death benefit rights. Is that what you are referring to?

Mr. Spencer said "Yes". Mr. Spencer later in the interview was asked by the inquirer:

> Do you feel that your rights have been violated as a Canadian citizen? Have your rights been violated?

And Mr. Spencer said "No." Those are his words, Mr. Chairman. There was a discussion about the terms of reference of such an inquiry on Friday afternoon in the committee, and I should like to read to the committee the words used in this connection by the hon. member for York South, who moved the amendment in question. I am quoting from page 2228 of Hansard of March 4 when the hon. member said:

> It is certainly possible for a commissioner of inquiry to consider in camera the treatment of this man in respect of his insurance, pension and other benefits without affecting the security of Canada. It is certainly possible to give this man justice without affecting the security of Canada, particularly in an inquiry held in camera.

Later in the afternoon the hon. member for York South said this:

> I think the terms of reference ought to be broad enough not merely to enable the judge sitting to say whether or not the action was legal. I do not have very grave doubts about that, anyway, and it is a very narrow thing. The terms of reference should be broad enough to enable the person making the inquiry to say whether, in his view, in all the circumstances of this case, what was done with respect to the insurance and pension was right, in terms of human and decent treatment of an employee of the government.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the terms of reference that I have tabled and read to the committee are so drawn as to give the commissioner an opportunity to inquire into this matter in the light of the words used by the hon. member for York South and give Mr. Spencer that kind of inquiry and that kind of protection. I believe that these terms of reference are such that the interests of justice will be served. While there have to be limitations on security investigations it is natural that an inquiry into the nature of his dismissal and the rights which he may claim have been prejudiced by that dismissal should lead into an inquiry into the nature of his offence. I do not believe that it does, and I do not believe it should, substitute the opinion of a commissioner for that of the Civil Service Commission. It should only determine whether the Civil Service Commission had a reasonable basis for its decision, which it made within the law, and as the result of that decision, Spencer was deprived of his job and certain superannuation rights.

Mr. Chairman, there is of course a wider issue in this particular matter that has been referred to on occasions during the discussions. In recent months there has been a good deal of controversy over the handling of security cases generally in this country. The result has been to throw some doubt on measures which have been established over the years to insure the protection of the national security—doubt not so much as to their effectiveness, because I believe myself they are effective, but doubt as to whether they afford adequate protection to the rights of individuals involved.

I should like in this regard to remind the house that on October 25, 1963, I and the then Minister of Justice announced a number of new procedures to apply to public servants whose duties required them to have access to secret and confidential information. I made quite a lengthy speech in the house on that occasion, and the then Minister of Justice made an even longer one. These procedures were put into effect after a most careful and exhaustive review of those which had been in effect up to that time; since 1947. Mr. Chairman, it is this wider aspect of the situation and the more general question of our security procedures that I want to deal with for a few moments.

We did attempt to deal with a certain category of public servants in October of 1963 in a way which would reconcile or balance, if you like, the rights of these individuals with the security of the state. We introduced procedures then, for the first time in our parliamentary history, which I think improved the effectiveness of this reconciliation by establishing a system of appeal against decisions, by establishing a procedure by which a person involved would first be informed that his security or reliability was in doubt, and by giving him an opportunity to resolve that doubt.

Mr. Chairman, we then improved the effectiveness by also introducing a requirement to insure that a second look would always be taken by a separate body before a dismissal was finally decided upon. This second body was to be a board of review drawn from members of the interdepartmental security panel. Since 1963, Mr. Chairman, this procedure has worked effectively and well.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, would the Prime Minister permit a question? I do not wish to interrupt his train of thought, but can he tell the committee how often that board has been used and why it was not effective in the Spencer case?

Mr. Pearson: I cannot tell my hon. friend exactly how often it has been used because I would have to look that up, but this was a procedure designed to deal with members of the public service who had access to confidential and secret information, and who had to be given special clearance before they were given this kind of an appointment.

Mr. Spencer's case does not come within these procedures because of that fact, but his case, excluded as it was from this procedure, because of the nature of his employment and because of certain other considerations, raised a number of broader issues and has caused a good deal of broad public concern.

Mr. Chairman, the government feels strongly that its actions in the case of Mr. Spencer were correct and that he was treated fairly. It was on that basis we took the action which we have taken. On the other hand, it is the responsibility of the government to insure that the public is satisfied that our security procedures on the whole and in general, covering all public servants and others, preserve that balance of national security and individual rights.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said in the house last Friday the time had come for a full and complete investigation to see whether our security measures are what they should be. I expressed that view in the past and, indeed, in debates we have had on the Spencer case I have said that a full examination of our security procedures is now desirable. My hon. friend, the member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, has raised this at least once of which I know, on January 31, as recorded at page 434 of Hansard, and I believe on other occasions, when he referred to questions of security. In answer to his query on the orders of the day, I believe on January 31, I indicated that I was concerned with the individual case but that I was also concerned that the inquiry might be extended to other cases, the examination of which might throw further light on our security matters generally. This has already been under discussion now for many weeks.

I should like to assure the members of this committee that in 1963, we took very seriously the request made by certain members and others outside the house that we go into the whole question of security in regard to confidential information and in regard to the attitudes—perhaps "attitudes" is the wrong word—the activities of security officers on university campuses and the like. We did spend a great deal of time on that with the result that in 1963 we brought in the changed procedures to which I have referred.

Just as we were concerned with these general security procedures and problems at that time, so are we concerned now with doubts about our security procedures generally. In the last month or so especially, indeed this goes back over a year, we have been giving careful consideration to the most appropriate means of re-examining these procedures in relation to the security problem that makes them necessary. Unfortunately there is a very real problem which does make security measures necessary.

We hope to introduce legislation shortly which will establish, among other things, the department of the Solicitor General under a minister who will have responsibility for the R.C.M.P. and for security matters. This will be a responsibility to which he will be able to give considerable time, because this increasingly important aspect of the work of the present Department of Justice will then become the responsibility of a separate minister. The new minister will be able to give much closer attention to these difficult problems than has been possible in the past. A high priority function of the new department will be to examine in detail the problems of espionage and subversive activities, and to determine how best to deal with them.

There is also the question, which has been raised by nearly every member who has participated in the discussion, of section 50 of the Civil Service Act, under which Mr. Spencer was discharged, which does not provide for an appeal, and which was retained in the civil service legislation in 1962 by a unanimous vote of this house. The civil service legislation will, I hope, shortly—and again I emphasize "I hope shortly"—be reviewed because of the desirability, indeed the necessity, of bringing in a bill to establish, among other things, collective bargaining inside the civil service, a bill which has been prepared. At that time I think it would be well for this parliament to consider not only collective bargaining in the civil service but the sections in the existing legislation, sections 50 and 60, which provide for dismissal of civil servants. This will be another occasion, and an important occasion, to discuss an important matter which has come up in the study of this particular case—the use of section 50 with regard to the dismissal of civil servants.

It is now about 20 years, Mr. Chairman, since a royal commission examined in detail a very serious wartime situation in Canada, one which threatened not only our own security but that of our allies. It was as a result of that inquiry into matters in this security field arising out of the war that most of our present security procedures were established. They have been under review since that time by successive governments and a number of changes have been made, I know, during these years in the light of changing circumstances; I have already mentioned one this afternoon.

In the intervening 20 years, peacetime years technically, so far as Canada was concerned, profound changes have taken place in international affairs, some of a very subtle nature and others quite obvious. Measures taken to deal with a situation prevalent at one time, say 20 years ago, have been shown on occasion to be inadequate or inappropriate to a later situation. Restrictive measures, such as those in the field of security, tend to have their own inertia and to prolong themselves without change after the reasons for their initial establishment may have changed.

We have been aware of this tendency, Mr. Chairman, as have no doubt governments which have preceded us, and we have attempted by continuous review of our procedures in the last three years, as well as by one very important change, to ensure that the procedures which were in operation were appropriate to the conditions of the moment. But by the very nature of the problem based on the fear of subversive action from within our own borders,—and unfortunately there is reason still for that fear—it is immensely difficult to adjust such procedures to the subtly shifting concerns and desires of the people of this country in whose interests such procedures were established. Therefore I repeat that it is desirable that they should be subjected periodically to close examination by an outside objective authority.

Dealing as we are with a matter of national security, which transcends parliamentary and party considerations in the security sense but not in the individual freedom sense, I hope that any approach to this problem in the general field as to what we should do now, in the light of our experience over the years, in national security procedures, should be something on which we in this house would find general agreement.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in the light of the public concern which has been expressed, not only over a particular case but over the general situation, and in order to assist the Solicitor General in his particular and new responsibility, the government has decided to institute a judicial inquiry, but not into any particular case. This has been done already through the order in council in connection with the case before the committee. The inquiry will be into the operation of our security procedures generally, with a view to ascertaining firstly whether they are now adequate in light of present circumstances for the protection of the state against subversive action; secondly, whether they sufficiently protect the rights of private individuals in any investigations which are made under existing procedures.

I would not, Mr. Chairman, nor would this committee, desire such an inquiry to be considered in any way a reflection of the present conduct of security investigations. On the contrary, I believe that in addition to reassuring the public in this matter, it would confirm that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police act in this field with great care and great efficiency.

Having taken a decision of this kind in principle, Mr. Chairman, we now have to decide how to implement that decision most effectively by deciding on the nature and the form of such an inquiry. Announcements will be made on that score, Mr. Chairman, without delay. In working out the terms of reference of an inquiry of this kind dealing with national security and security procedures, perhaps it would be desirable for a representative of the government to consult with representatives of other parties to see whether agreement could be reached on the terms of reference to cover this wider question.

The Spencer case with which we have been dealing and which has received so much publicity is only one of many cases which would be relevant, of course, to such a study so far as the procedures adopted in the case were concerned. Many others have occurred since security became a problem. I feel quite certain that any commissioner who was appointed to look into this matter would naturally wish to go as far back as he might want to go in order to ascertain the procedures of the past. Then he could decide how they should be changed, in light of the experience gained over the last 15 to 20 years, to be brought into line with the requirements of the present time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Prime Minister allow a question at this stage. Would this commission have the responsibility to go into individual cases, and would it have available to it the evidence given before the United States Senate sub-committee on security, which met in 1951 and 1952?

Mr. Pearson: I cannot speak for the commissioner but I am certain in my own mind that any terms of reference of a commission of this kind should make it possible for the commissioner to go into exactly the kind of thing my right hon. friend has mentioned. If there have been hearings held in Washington or London or any other foreign capital which affect Canada, or there are any documents bearing on our security procedures and problems, the commissioner should have the right to ask for them and to study them in camera. I myself have no feeling that he should be limited in any way as to how far back he might wish to go. That is my view of the nature of this kind of inquiry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that on procedure? Is the Prime Minister saying there will be no limitation as to how far back he can go on the question of the procedures followed?

Mr. Pearson: That is right, Mr. Chairman, as well as the effect of these procedures; their adequacy or inadequacy in regard to the security problems of the time, and the responsibility of the government in carrying out these procedures.

I should think that the commission, or if it was one man, the commissioner, should have great discretion in this regard. The terms of reference, if this house agrees he should not be limited in any way by time or the nature of the inquiry as long as it bears on national security procedures and the responsibility of the government for that very important national question.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I have tried to deal with two aspects of this question this afternoon. One, the immediate problem of Mr. Spencer and the kind of inquiry which I believe will meet the necessities of this particular case as they were outlined by me on Friday afternoon when I talked about the new element which had been introduced into this question when Mr. Spencer himself requested an inquiry. He himself laid down the kind of inquiry he would desire to have and he repeated that last night. This would be inquiry into the employee-employer relationship, the nature of the dismissal, and matters which the commissioner would have to look into in order to determine whether the nature of his dismissal inflicted any wrong on him.

Then, the other question, Mr. Chairman, is the general question of national security procedures and what might be done in regard to investigation into that whole, very important field.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, in the last few days we have witnessed a change of front and of attitude that gives added weight to the sovereignty of parliament, and the effect of parliament upon a government which, up to the present time, has shown no signs of accepting the suggestions of the opposition.

I say at once that in the field of security the responsibility that rests on the Prime Minister is a great one. If, a few days ago, or at any time during the past two weeks the Prime Minister had taken the stand which he today adopts with such equanimity, and which he and his ministers opposed with such harshness, the debates would not have been as acrid as they have been. However, I want to say that these things were requested by the opposition. They were ridiculed out of hand. These requests were answered by successive ministers speaking for the government, including the Prime Minister, with derision and contempt. But all these things are over.

On Friday, minister after minister stood up and said, "Never, never, never will a judicial inquiry be permitted." "Jamais, jamais, jamais" was the answer on Friday. On Friday three ministers stood up and said "Never, under any circumstances would there be any inquiries permitted or allowed."

Mr. Chairman, not since Saul's journey to Damascus has parliament seen such a welcomed conversion.

I know that it will be embarrassing to the Minister of Justice after he said, "Here I stand." He said, "No change will be made in any circumstances; we are right." The Prime Minister had taken the same stand. Along came the Solicitor General who, with a suavity that appeals to me greatly, spoke against anything being done. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration made a very brilliant contribution, and ended up by agreeing with the government and the stand that it had taken. I welcome this change of heart from the Prime Minister to the youngest of the cabinet ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It just shows the power of parliament to convert what appeared to be the unconvertible, and to bring about such a change of heart that even the President of the Privy Council must marvel. As for the Minister of Justice, I feel very keenly for him, because he stood where the government stood. He stood absolutely firmly and said, "Never." When he went to sit down, the Prime Minister had removed the chair. Everything that he said—and he followed the Prime Minister meekly in this—and that the other ministers said, today is cast overboard. Common sense has taken the place of stubbornness and absolute stupidity.

I want to make one further reference, and it is this: I cannot understand the endeavour to blackmail the opposition. That is what it was.

Mr. Churchill: Shameful.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The President of the Privy Council some days ago told one of the hon. members sitting on this side of the house that if we pressed the Spencer case there would be a revelation relating to what took place during my administration.

Mr. Churchill: Shameful.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes. We shall have more to say about that.

An hon. Member: Terrible.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of Justice looked over at me and said, in effect, "We will fix you." Threats and intimidation, Mr. Chairman, do not work. We do not scare easily.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, for the past two or three weeks the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well now—

The Chairman: Is this a question of privilege?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the floor. Is the Minister going into another of these tirades? I have that fear.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no privilege going back two or three weeks.

The Chairman: The Minister of Justice rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, for the past two or three weeks the right hon. gentleman and others on the other side of the house have been making insinuations of all types to the effect that this government was hiding something from the people, and that we have acted in a wrong way. Hon. members opposite have been making insinuations of that sort continuously.

No one on the opposite side of the house, or on this side, ever mentioned anything about blackmail. I have during the course of the debate just asked that the hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cardin: —explain his part—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Cardin: —and go home.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: The Chair is not able to discern any question of privilege in the minister's remarks. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, he thought by that—and the threat was made over and over again as to what they were going to do—that they were going to close our mouths. Let me make this statement unequivocally: in no case, and I am naturally bound by my oath as a privy councillor —which apparently did not apply to the Minister of Justice—was there ever any breach of security in this nation in any case referred to or conjured up by him. Second, there was no danger to national security, and I will go into that tonight, in anything that took place.

I would have to deal with some of the criticism of those of us who have responsibilities regarding certain of the procedures that took place.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I am not now dealing with procedures in the detection of wrongdoing. One of the things which has to be examined is the whole matter of wire-tapping, telephone tapping, if this is taking place. I read in the papers that the R.C.M.P. had a secret camera ensconced in some of the lights, and brought about pictures I have never heard of before. I do say this: if that kind of thing is going on, it needs to be looked into and carefully expunged.

Mr. Cardin: What year was that?

Mr. Diefenbaker: What does the hon. gentleman say now, by insinuation?

Mr. Cardin: When was that?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, the minister is the man who dropped the insinuation and began the cowardly attack he made. Now, he has to run. Never in the years I have been in the House of Commons have I seen ministers placed in such positions as they are placed in today since the complete turnabout on the part of the Prime Minister. I welcome what has been achieved. We fought for it. We were condemned. They thought by intimidation we could be kept quiet.

Mr. Cardin: Just explain the case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Explain? I say to the Minister of Justice that all his explaining went out with the refuse today. There he stands, naked and unashamed, deprived of every argument he brought before this house. He said: "This is the position I will take, and no other." But the force of public opinion, the force of right, has brought about on the part of the Prime Minister the decision to take another course.

Last evening I heard Spencer. The Prime Minister said the government was not consulted in any way. I do not want to prejudge any case which might be taken against Spencer. But the mounted police, with the surveillance they placed over him, denied the hon. member for Vancouver East an opportunity to see this man.

Mr. Pearson: They did not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what he says, and he is the one who knows. The Prime Minister does not know. The hon. member does. He tried for hours without success. Suddenly this person who has been out of circulation for three months finds himself persona grata on the television screens of our country.

I add this: reformation, however late, is always welcome. The Minister of Justice said: "I am right. I know I am right. Nothing is going to change." Now it is changed. He was in this fight for ten days supporting the Prime Minister. Now, the Prime Minister in effect says: "Goodbye, Minister of Justice. Your views do not in any way bind me and as far as I am concerned we are going ahead with the necessary action."

It has been an incredible performance all the way along. I will always find it one of those rather unbelievable things—the Prime Minister on the telephone talking to the spy.

Mr. Pearson: He is a spy, now, is he?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I never will understand that. I can only say I am glad to see that the power of argument is not lost in this chamber, that public opinion cannot be ostracized in this chamber. The government has antennae, and even if these do not work for a long while, these enable it to understand—after matters have been brought home, as this has been brought home. The government got the message that the people want the protection and preservation of their security. At the same time they want the maintenance of that degree of freedom which, while not denying security, will not prostitute the rights of citizens.

It is a difficult balance to achieve. To the Prime Minister, I say: I am glad that you saw the error of your ways so definitely and that you were not convinced either by the arguments advanced by the Minister of Justice or by other ministers who spoke. Security is one thing which haunts the hours of a Prime Minister. The problem is before him at all times. I had but one principle when I occupied that position. It was this: there shall be no consideration given to anyone who would undermine the security of the state. That course, I followed. That course was the one which all of us, I believe, in the tradition of our parliamentary life, must follow. All I can say to those opposite who threatened is this, when blackmail failed, the government altered its position.

Mr. Lewis: I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that what the Prime Minister dealt with today were precisely the things which members on this side of the house have been asking about for some weeks. My own leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, asked the first question on this subject way back on January 21.

While the Prime Minister was, of course, right in a literal sense when he said he had received no request from Spencer for a review of his case, I respectfully suggest that in the light of the correspondence which was tabled today, neither he nor any one of his colleagues had to be a genius in order to recognize that Spencer and his attorney were not satisfied. Indeed, the first letter which was tabled today, the letter dated December 21 and written by Mr. Spencer's solicitor to the personnel director of the post office, says:

> I understand that Mr. Spencer has spoken to you on several occasions about being allowed to go on superannuation because of his health.

That was the first request made by Mr. Spencer to his superior. Later in this correspondence one finds letters from Mr. Rankin, the solicitor, to people in the Post Office Department and to people in the Privy Council office clearly indicating that Mr. Rankin, on behalf of Mr. Spencer, wanted to know the reasons for his dismissal. He would obviously not direct those questions if Mr. Spencer was entirely satisfied with the treatment he had received. I submit that a careful reading of those letters would have persuaded the government that Mr. Spencer was not satisfied.

It was not necessary for the government to wait for me, as happened in this case, or for any other member on this side of the chamber to get in touch with Mr. Spencer, through some solicitor in Vancouver, to find out what his wishes were. The government could have done that weeks ago. The Minister of Justice, through the R.C.M.P., could have found out weeks ago that Mr. Spencer wanted an inquiry, or that his solicitor was advising him to have an inquiry.

I must say it is an astonishing thing that not only did the government fail to make the simple inquiry I made last Wednesday but it insisted, every minister insisted, that there had been nothing wrong; that Mr. Spencer was happy, and that everything was going to be left as it was, no matter what. Then the Prime Minister on Friday last—and I do not for one moment question his statement—said that my reading of Mr. Spencer's telegram to me into the record was the first time he heard Mr. Spencer was dissatisfied. Undoubtedly that was so but, if it was so, it was the result of obvious incompetence, obvious callousness on the part of members of the government or their advisers who could have found out that simple fact before I found it out last Thursday.

I cannot understand why that was not done, except it be the suggestion I made last Friday that the minister was so obsessed by an obstinate determination not to budge that his common sense left him at that point. If he had not been so obsessed, he could have acted in a proper and humane way.

I regretted very much, Mr. Chairman, some of the things the Prime Minister said in his remarks after he tabled the order in council. It seemed to me he arrogated to himself the right to lay down guide lines for Mr. Justice Wells to follow as commissioner under the order in council, and I submit the right hon. gentleman did not have the right to do that. It was not his business to tell the commissioner what he ought to do or how he should behave himself. It is the order in council that tells him what to do and how he is to behave. The right hon. gentleman had no right to lay down guide lines, and I am certain Mr. Justice Wells, who is a respected member of the bench in Ontario, will go by the order in council and not by any attempt by someone here to tell him what to do.

I submit that Mr. Justice Wells will not be able to do his job, the job that Mr. Spencer asks him to do, unless he makes some investigation into at least the reasons for Spencer's dismissal. It is not possible, as I suggested elsewhere, for Mr. Justice Wells to say whether the punishment fits the crime unless he can make an investigation which will show him, (a) what the crime was, and (b) the extent of the man's culpability in that crime, if there was any.

This is the simple proposition that I am sure was in the mind of the Governor in Council when the order in council was drafted.

I agree that parliament has prevailed in this. Public opinion has prevailed, and remembering that none is so zealous as the convert, I hope the government will proceed in similar cases when they arise in such a way that no one here will be able to criticize it.

I think the debate in the last number of days has been regrettable in many respects, and in some respects was a shameful one. Personal vindictiveness and personal attack have been followed by a return of personal vindictiveness and personal attack. The time of this parliament was taken up with references and accusations which have nothing to do with the welfare of the people of Canada, or the welfare of people anywhere on this earth, which should be our job. It is regrettable to me as a member of the house that some of those exchanges took place. I hope they are now ended, Mr. Chairman. I hope that the order in council tabled by the right hon. Prime Minister, and the inquiry which he has undertaken to promulgate, will now end the recriminations, personal attacks and personal accusations to which we have been listening for some days, in my case with some shame and some very considerable regret that this kind of thing was happening in the parliament of Canada.

As to the inquiry into the procedures of our security system, that is something which our leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, will comment on when we see the order in council, or he will designate someone else from our party to do so. I will not say anything about it at this time.

I must say the order in council for the inquiry into Mr. Spencer's complaint, in my opinion gives Mr. Justice Wells all the authority he requires to make a thorough inquiry into that complaint. I took the trouble last night to ascertain once again by a long distance telephone call whether there was any change in the position taken by Mr. Spencer's solicitor, given in the language of the telegram which I read into the record on Friday. I was assured by a return long distance call that there was no change. As I read the order in council the government has said to Mr. Justice Wells, "Here in the language of Spencer himself is the complaint which he makes," and Mr. Justice Wells is given unlimited discretion to investigate that complaint.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, I would be merely destructive, negative, and would be wasting the time of this parliament if I did not say that the order in council and the terms of reference are such as to make it my duty to withdraw the motion which I moved. I ask for the consent of the house to do so.

Mr. Churchill: We are in no hurry about it.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent?

Mr. Nielsen: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, after hearing the statement of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) about Victor Spencer, who was dismissed under section 50 on the Civil Service Act and after hearing the usual harangue of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), who sought to crush others to prove that he alone was right, I suggest that we must point out in all frankness and in all fairness that it is due to the initiative of the leader of the New Democratic party that the Spencer case was drawn to the attention of this parliament on January 21, 1966. Only then did the Leader of the Opposition intervene. Today, he tries to give the impression that he is the great champion of Mr. Victor Spencer. Mr. Spencer was dismissed under section 50 which clearly stipulates that there is no right to appeal and, in view of the fact that section 50 was passed unanimously by the house, by the Conservative party as well as by all the others, I wonder why the Prime Minister reversed his stand, when the order in council—once again, I am sorry but I have just the English copy—reads as follows:

[English]

The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Right Honourable Lester Bowles Pearson, the Prime Minister, advise

(1) that the Honourable Mr. Justice Dalton Courtright Wells, Toronto, Ontario, be appointed a Commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries Act to make such investigation, as in his absolute discretion he deems necessary, into the complaints made by George Victor Spencer as set out in the following telegram of 4th March, 1966:

That telegram was read by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) last Friday.

Mr. Chairman, I am not against the Leader of the Official Opposition raising that matter, even trying to make political hay, in the name of justice in Canada, in the name of common sense, as he said earlier; the hon. member for York South says that abuse was hurled from both sides of the house and that the business of the house was delayed. I say that if such a situation exists with regard to the Spencer case, the opposition parties cannot be blamed, because the government itself is responsible.

The Minister of Justice spends three weeks stating that that he will not appoint a judge or a commission and will not change his mind, and the Prime Minister, about that matter, asserts: "No, Mr. Speaker, no commission will be established to study the Spencer case because it is closed". At a certain moment, on Friday, after standing up to the opposition for three weeks, the Prime Minister declares that a judge will be appointed to study the Spencer case.

Mr. Chairman, I say that the Prime Minister has led his Minister of Justice to the guillotine. It is the Prime Minister who is responsible for this situation, because he does not know how to make a decision when one is needed. He forgets that he is the Prime Minister of Canada and that he may no longer act like a mere diplomat. The Prime Minister must forget that he was a diplomat, he must devote his energies to making decisions.

In the Minister of Justice's place, Friday afternoon, I would simply have handed my resignation to the Prime Minister, because the latter had just placed him in an utterly intolerable situation. I did not understand the attitude of the Minister of Justice at that time.

That the Spencer case should crop up again today, that it should be decided to appoint a judge to investigate the facts, even going back to 15 or 20 years, to determine whether sabotage took place in 1944, 1951 or 1961, it is unthinkable that a Prime Minister should put on such a show at the expense of the Canadian people. We have already spent too much time on that matter and I hope those who are trying to make a political football out of the Spencer case will fail miserably.

We, in this group, want justice. We favour respect of human rights. We want a man implicated in something to have a chance to be heard. Until a man is proven guilty, we want him to have the benefit of the doubt. Apparently, this is not the case with Spencer, because after three weeks of debate and four weeks of questions on the order paper, there is a change of attitude.

It is not my intention to belabour the point. Nevertheless, if this situation is prevailing at present in parliament, the blame should not be put on the opposition but on the Prime Minister who could not take his own responsibilities at the proper time.

The other question in my mind is one mentioned Friday night by the Minister of Justice himself, the Munsinger affair. The Munsinger case was thrown like a charge, without warning, right here in the house, and no details were given. We ask for details. We do not know anything, but we hear all sorts of rumours about that. No charge should be made in this house without proof. Let this whole Munsinger matter be brought before the federal parliament. If there has been sabotage or spying, if ministers were involved, or a former minister of the previous government, as we hear it said in the corridors of parliament, let the light be made, but no one should make all sorts of accusations while talking through his hat. When one makes such a serious charge in front of all the members, one should at least have the courage to give details.

We want equal justice for all, not only for a small group here and there, but for all. If there are things to be revealed in the better interest of the nation, of the Canadian parliament, let them be revealed, let that accusation be cleared up.

I urge the Minister of Justice to do away with discretion. He made charges in connection with a so-called Munsinger case. I ask the Minister of Justice to enlighten us as he is supposed to know something about it. Let him rise and tell us what he knows about the Munsinger case. With regard to Mr. Spencer, he has the opportunity of pleading his case before a judge appointed by the cabinet. And, in that connection, I say to the Prime Minister that Section 50 of the Civil Service Act is pretty worthless. If this section 50 gives no recourse to an accused, let us repeal it; let us keep and use section 60, which gives a right of appeal to an employee who is dismissed from the civil service for certain reasons. Then we will not look ridiculous in the eyes of the Canadian people.

In concluding my remarks, I ask the right hon. Prime Minister to come to a decision in due time so that we may no longer consider that we have been taken in.

• (5:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the hon. member for Villeneuve. Would the hon. member for Villeneuve permit this question. I have had a debate with myself about modesty, but modesty has lost. The first question on the unnatural surveillance of Spencer was asked by the member for Royal on January 19, the first day on which questions were allowed. I do not care who receives the credit, but I think the record should be straight.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, it would seem to me that the situation in which we presently are in this house borders almost on the ridiculous. The estimates for the year practically past have been under debate now for several weeks. There is a financial crisis. There is not money to pay for the administration of government and the situation daily becomes more critical. There is no money for the civil servants, there is no money for the military, and there is no money for the pensioners.

The government stands in complete confusion, after weeks of resisting the demands of the opposition in justification of their position on the Spencer case. Then the Prime Minister chooses to capitulate completely, and in so doing has completely pulled the rug out from under the ministers who have, in making the case, ably carried out the argument of the government. At this point the words that the hon. leader of the official opposition has spoken, while they were hard, do present the actual situation in which we find ourselves.

I find that my sympathies in this situation rest with the three ministers who spoke last Friday and to whom reference has already been made. Certainly the case for the government's position prior to five o'clock last Friday was well presented by these men. In fact I am personally grateful to the hon. Solicitor General for his brevity in explaining the situation as he saw it. Certainly his contribution was most helpful, as was that of the hon. minister of manpower. These ministers, having done this, the picture changed completely because the Prime Minister chose to capitulate to the requests of the opposition. Even the hon. Minister of Justice presented a fairly clear case, which indicated that part of his argument was sound and well taken. If he had not lost his temper in the heat of debate, his position would have been stronger.

Today we find the government almost like a ship in a storm without a rudder. I believe that the general public of Canada are confused as they see the situation. I am not speaking as a lawyer because I am not a member of that profession. I must look at this situation through the eyes with which I believe most Canadian laymen see the situation. It makes one wonder just what is taking place within the ranks of the government at this time.

After all, Mr. Chairman, we have here a man, who, on his own confession, is a Communist collaborator, sympathizer, spy, or call him whatever you wish. He has not been charged with this offence by any member of the government. This is on his own confession. He does not even mind coming before the people of Canada and admitting it on a television program, as he did last night.

This is not a new case. It has been dealt with by four successive Ministers of Justice; first by the hon. member for Kamloops, who last Friday made a very worthwhile temperate and reasonable presentation in the house of the case as he saw it; and by his successor Hon. Donald Fleming. The President of the Privy Council dealt with it when he was Minister of Justice and now the present Minister of Justice has taken charge of the case. He has been assisted by the Solicitor General since his new duties project him into a case such as that involving Mr. Spencer. In addition, Mr. Chairman, two commissioners of the R.C.M.P. have dealt with this case, Commissioner Harvison and Commissioner McClellan.

For the Prime Minister to take the stand that he has taken, in view of this, even in the face of the demands of the opposition, is something which I say verges on the ridiculous. Then, Mr. Chairman, the record of the previous Conservative government is such that if they had had this case to handle today, they would not have dealt with it in a way too much different from the way it was handled prior to last Friday.

Therefore we find a situation that is not only critical, but it is one to which we must return with a reasonable sense of responsibility in order that we may go on with the business of the house. I believe that the Spencer case is an example of bumbling by the government. We do not share the concern of the other opposition parties that there has been any attempt in this case to hide corruption or skulduggery behind the scenes. As far as we can see, even the words of Mr. Spencer himself, seem to deny this. Thus, we do not consider an inquiry into the firing procedures of Mr. Spencer to be anything but a minute part of the kind of investigation that has been previously demanded, unless we can be assured that the government will now investigate the whole area of crime, not only of crime but of subversion within this country; the impact of international crime and, yes, the question of corruption.

Unless this is done, Mr. Chairman, I do not see how the public of Canada will ever be satisfied or have any assurance that what is being done is the right thing. So, it would seem that it has become evident that in agreeing to this inquiry, the government have forced themselves into a corner where they will have to agree to the setting up of a commission to investigate crime in this country as it relates to every facet of those things that we read and hear about continually through our news media. It is not that we blame the government for the fact that there is crime in Canada. It is not that we blame them for the fact that world communism might send its agents here to try and subvert some of our governmental employees. What we can and do blame them for is that in the face of continuing appeals from all parties for an investigation of crime in its wider aspects, they have refused to do so. Now they have capitulated in such a way that in my opinion, the ministers who are concerned with this case, particularly the Minister of Justice, has been placed in an untenable situation. It seems almost an impossibility now for the Minister of Justice to carry on and do the work expected of him, while maintaining the confidence of this house and the public.

I do not intend to belabour this matter any further, Mr. Chairman, but in two respected newspapers today there are comments which I believe should be drawn to the attention of the committee. I believe these comments to be indicative of the situation as the general public sees it, putting this matter in its correct perspective. In the first place I would quote very briefly from an editorial in today's Ottawa Journal. It begins in this way:

Whether Mr. Spencer had too little or too much justice is something we may learn now that the government has granted the inquiry it should have granted months ago.

The editorial says later:

What possessed the Prime Minister to telephone Mr. Spencer. It is all like a bad movie, a James Bond sillied for juveniles. The R.C.M.P. could have checked Mr. Spencer's wishes as to that telegram, or the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Justice; or, better still, the Deputy Postmaster General whose department is the only one concerned with Mr. Spencer's complaints.

Mr. Spencer's complaints are not about security or injustice, they are that he was fired by his employer for reasons about which he is not satisfied and on terms which do not satisfy him. The editorial continues:

But no, the Prime Minister himself phones this dubious character and invites Mr. Lewis to listen in—

I think we can be thankful that the hon. member for York South had the common sense to refuse such an invitation. The editorial continues:

—pitiful pantomime of the propriety and processes of government.

We don't know yet whether Mr. Pearson and his government have offended the human rights of a man at the bottom but they have certainly offended the public's right to expect that the men at the top will do the right thing, in the right way, at the right time.

Today's edition of the Globe and Mail contains an editorial that I believe is pertinent and relevant as well at this time. It says:

It is impossible to believe that any government would hush up such a scandal—that the Conservatives would have dared to conceal it or that the Liberals would continue the conspiracy of silence only to refer to the sensational story when they themselves were cornered in an embarrassing security debate. If such were the case, substance would be added to the charge of former Justice Minister E. Davie Fulton that Mr. Cardin was making an approach to blackmail.

The editorial says later:

The tragedy, of course, is that we cannot much longer afford such federal blood-letting. Almost no legislation has been passed in this session of our parliament; our government is running out of money and must beg for supply; our provincial governments gain muscle every day while the federal house dissipates its strength.

"When discords and quarrels and factions are carried openly and audaciously," wrote Francis Bacon, "it is a sign the reverence of government is lost."

In such a time, said Bacon, men have need to 'pray for fair weather'. In March of 1966 we are indeed standing in such a need.

So I say, Mr. Chairman, that regardless of these things the right hon. Prime Minister has chosen to capitulate to the demands of the opposition. I do not believe that should have been necessary. I believe the government had, in a lumbering way, presented its case. Nevertheless, the Prime Minister has done this and the hon. member for York South has withdrawn his motion of censure, because that is, in effect, what it was. I think the only action left to us in this house now is to let these estimates pass for this year, so that the business of the government can be carried on with the estimates for the next fiscal year, as well as budget matters and many other items of importance being placed before us.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, in view of what has transpired in the committee today, and the Prime Minister's statement, we withdraw our objection to the request that the motion be withdrawn.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed by the committee that the motion put forward be now withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

1. Departmental administration, $1,257,800.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: Just one moment; let us not get over enthusiastic, Mr. Chairman. There are a number of members who would like to ask questions, and I know a member of this party would like to say a few words at the commencement of our consideration of vote 1. If I may make a suggestion, Mr. Chairman, perhaps you should take your time on item 1.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The minister is not here, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Woolliams: We do not want to pass his estimates before he arrives.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, the hon. minister is here.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, is it the hon. minister's intention to make an opening statement?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to make a short statement at this time. I will be receiving the estimates which are still in my office. I never thought that things would go so fast this afternoon.

[Translation]

First of all, Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate my predecessor, the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), for the progress he achieved when he was Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

I should like also to pay special tribute to all the former Ministers of Citizenship and Immigration now sitting in this house—I think there are six. Of all ministers, I am probably the one most closely watched by his ancestors knowing that they are all men of distinction, I am glad to pay tribute to them.

Now, as you know, the immigration branch will eventually become part of the department of manpower. In due course, we shall have the opportunity to discuss this aspect of the matter. For the present, concerning immigration, I should like to point out to the house that, last year, 142,000 immigrants entered Canada, an increase of probably 30 per cent over the previous year. According to figures just received for January, another increase of 30 per cent also is shown over January 1965.

There is no doubt that, for the development and growth of Canada, continuing immigration adequate to meet the needs of the labour market is essential.

Now, I do not wish to limit or restrict if you wish, the value of immigration to mere statistics, but the house may be interested in knowing that to bring an immigrant into the country costs approximately $100, while the investment value, that is, the money the immigrant brings with him to Canada, is approximately $1,000. That is to say, last year, the financial investments of immigrants are said to have reached $150 million.

Our immigration is surely not always what we would hope it to be, and for many reasons. As a matter of fact, we are unable to obtain all the skilled labour we would like at present, not through fanaticism or, let us say, owing to a predetermined policy, but because certain countries refuse or are reluctant to send immigrants to Canada. For instance, France rather frowns upon the immigration of its citizens. There is also the fact that we do not have an immigration office in every country of the world. And, finally, I must point out that, at this time, we are not the only country seeking skilled labour. Most European countries enjoy full employment and want to keep their skilled labour, and rightly so, but this obviously puts a limit on our immigration sources.

This is the first time I submit to this committee estimates which are already spent, and were spent by another minister, but nevertheless I shall readily accept the questions you may want to ask.

[English]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the committee is crowded for time in the discussion of these estimates. No department of government could profit more from a thorough and exhaustive examination of its policies and practices, and from a clear directive by the government and parliament regarding its future activities. In my view, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has suffered from parliamentary neglect with the result that dedicated officers, unable to see in what direction the government and parliament wished the policies of the department to point, have been made to feel like orphans in the storm, not a few of them frustrated and enraged by the persistent shifts, and changes of emphasis in policy.

So, sir, the congratulations I offer to the minister on his maiden presentation of the estimates to parliament must be tempered by the recollection of the manner in which the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has been slighted by the Prime Minister; I may say, even treated with disdain approaching scorn. One need only recall that in a period of only 40 months there have been six Ministers of Citizenship and Immigration, three Deputy Ministers and one long time Acting Deputy Minister, to realize the handicaps under which the department has laboured. No one has had the opportunity to take firm command, to give force and direction to policies and practices.

Since this government took office there have been four ministers, one Acting Deputy Minister and two Deputy Ministers. The hon. member for Papineau held the portfolio for something like nine and a half months. Then the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane was the incumbent for slightly over 16 months, after which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was vouchsafed only about five and a half months.

These changes, sir, were not made in the interests of the department or in the interests of the advancement of immigration policy, but solely for partisan reasons in an attempt to solve internal problems within the Liberal Party. What sort of game of ministerial musical chairs is this to play in such a vitally important portfolio? Not one of the ministers, no matter how talented he might be, has been given the opportunity by the Prime Minister to become more than vaguely acquainted with the fringes of the department. It is even more significant that only the hon. member for Vancouver Centre actually believes in immigration as an instrument of national policy, and only he had the enthusiasm and the zeal to seek to formulate consistent policy for the department.

Then, Mr. Chairman, I have the gravest reservations about the absorption of the old Department of Citizenship and Immigration into a new department of manpower and the appointment of a new deputy minister. Far be it from me to object to the appointment of any individual on the ground of active participation in politics. I have never believed that political types should be eliminated from advancement, but the new deputy minister is a figure so controversial by nature, so prone to attract attack, so lacking in knowledge or understanding of immigration, that I confess to believing his appointment a grave mistake and a genuine blow to the public service of Canada.

However, more important than the personality of any individual is the proposed structure of the new department of manpower. When the establishing legislation is before the house I shall have considerable to say on this subject. I want to say only this now in an attempt at this late date to try to convince the Prime Minister that the submerging of immigration into what is basically a labour portfolio is a grave error in national policy.

From my own experience in the portfolio, I know that it was the Department of Labour which consistently and persistently brought pressures to bear to reduce immigration, to cut back, to hold down, and at a time when, in my view, the economy needed the stimulus of expanded immigration. Last year I had the privilege of visiting both New Zealand and Australia and spending considerable time with the ministers responsible for immigration in those countries, and much more time in detailed discussions with their departmental staffs. I was treated with the most exceptional courtesy in both countries, and therefore I hesitate to make any comparisons, certainly ones which would be invidious.

In New Zealand the immigration portfolio is an adjunct of the labour portfolio, both being held by a dynamic and very able minister, Mr. Tom Shand. But in retrospect I am unable to escape the feeling that immigration is much subdued as an instrument of national policy by comparison with Australia, where it is a separate portfolio. Of this I intend to have considerably more to say when the legislation is before the house.

One of the highly unfortunate by-products of this game of musical chairs with the portfolio of citizenship and immigration has been the delay in a white paper on immigration. I believe it was on December 31, 1964 at a press conference when the Prime Minister promised a white paper. He used these words:

> I have asked the Minister to prepare a white paper on immigration policy, immigration administration and immigration procedures, telling what has been done and what is in process, and to have that available if at all possible—and I believe it is possible—at the beginning of the next session of parliament.

That next session has come and has been dissolved, Mr. Chairman, and we are well launched into the next session of parliament. Fifteen months have passed and still no white paper, though the Prime Minister was convinced that it could be ready before the opening of the last session.

The fault is not with the officials of the department. The fault is with the procession of ministers which we have had since December 31, 1964, and the long range interests of Canada have suffered, in my view, by the delays and the neglect in this regard.

So far as the officials are concerned, Mr. Chairman, their files are bulging so full of material that they could produce a white paper in a fortnight. But no minister, and certainly not the cabinet, has taken the time to decide on policy; and so our immigration policy merely drifts.

A further by-product, of course, is the delay in revision of the Immigration Act itself. The former government enacted the new regulations as long ago as January 1962 and decided to postpone a general revision of the act itself until some experience with the regulations could be gained. There has been ample time to observe the new regulations in operation, and the time has come for the minister to proceed with a full scale revision of this obsolete, antediluvian Immigration Act.

This committee will be indulgent, of course, with the new minister today, but I say to him that it expects from him before the next year's estimates are considered the formulation and enunciation of a dynamic but stable long range immigration policy. Dynamic and forward-looking it must be. The development of this nation has suffered greatly from our timidity and vacillation in both immigration policy and immigration programming. In my view we must establish targets and objectives and refuse to be diverted from those targets and objectives by any or every economic breeze.

It is not enough, Mr. Chairman, for this country simply to pursue passive policies on immigration, and as and when our economy creates vacuums for jobs in the labour market which cannot be met internally to seek immigrant workers for such purposes. In terms of the present supply situation for immigrants, this approach tends to be self-defeating. A passive attraction of immigrants —a negative policy—simply does not enable Department of Citizenship and Immigration to compete for immigrants.

Canada has been built on the strength of immigrant people. Therefore, I say let us not be afraid to adopt a positive approach. I have said before in this house, and I will repeat it many times, that I believe the planning of our immigration policy can no longer be formulated on an annual basis. The "feast or famine" approach to immigration, the "tap on, tap off" approach, has been the curse of the department. These approaches will not produce a satisfactory flow of immigrants to Canada, particularly not from our traditional sources. What we need to do—and I earnestly hope that the white paper will advocate this—is to set long range targets and objectives and to stick with them whatever the temporary domestic economic climate.

I have often stated publicly, and I now reiterate, my personal belief that our immigration policy should be based on an average flow equal to one per cent of the Canadian population per annum, with deviations therefrom in any year of not more than one quarter of 1 per cent. If we are to adopt this as a long range policy, then there is something to fight for in the department of immigration.

There is one further factor I should like to put before the minister as he takes over this portfolio. In my view it is the task of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to bring a warmhearted understanding to the cold print of immigration laws. Humanitarian and moral considerations are basic considerations to be respected and to be applied in the immigration administration. I think the fundamental task of any minister of immigration is to maintain a fair, impartial and non-discriminatory administration, coupled—and I emphasize the word "coupled"—with a warm and sympathetic understanding of the basic human problems which are involved.

I hope that as one of the factors in achieving that objective, the minister will seek to extend greatly the authority and prerogatives of the immigration appeal board. In many ways an appeal to that board is now simply a farce. It should be made a real and genuine appeal with proper discretionary authority vested in the board. Unlike some people, I do not advocate the complete abandonment of ministerial discretion. At least a residuum of discretion should be maintained by the minister, for the simple reason that I have never seen any board, commission or civil servant, no matter how senior, who is prepared to stick its or his neck out as far as a politician frequently must and will do. I say that the total abandonment of ministerial discretion would lead to a more rigid, inflexible administration.

One further matter relating to staff, Mr. Chairman. In my view the "on again, off again, gone again, Finnegan" nature, of our immigration policy has had a highly deleterious effect upon the morale of the department. Just as plans are prepared and ready, they are scrapped. It is a tribute to the dedication generally of the staff that wholesale departures of staff have been avoided.

I think that the overseas staff suffers from a major discrimination when compared with the overseas staff of the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Trade and Commerce. I appeal to the minister to use his moral authority within the government to secure for his staff overseas at least the status and prestige enjoyed by the overseas staff of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

I should say that the overseas staff is a dedicated staff. Since I ceased to be minister, I have visited offices in many countries as an ordinary citizen and I have been universally impressed by the calibre of our officers. I hope it will not be invidious to say, that when I visited the office in Hong Kong in the month of September, due to the very great courtesy of the Minister of Labour, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, I was tremendously impressed by the skill and intelligence under the most difficult circumstances of the staff. I was especially impressed by the fine, understanding leadership of their chief, Mr. Robert Wales. I should say that he and his staff are a credit to Canada.

The minister, sir, will have a more difficult time when his estimates are next before the house unless, in the meantime, he enunciates in a broad, decisive way, a genuine immigration policy for this country. Every day I am impressed by the role which recent immigrants have played in the enrichment of Canadian life and in the advancement of our culture. Each day I have been reminded of how new arrivals, filled with enthusiasm, energy, and the will to succeed have enriched our national life, expanded our Canadian traditions in fields such as science, education, the arts, yes—even in politics. Canada needs more, Mr. Chairman, of these people.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, before you proceed, may I ask the government house leader if he can tell us in what order he expects to bring up the balance of the estimates of the various departments?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I have just had it drawn to my attention by the table that the item for the R.C.M.P. was omitted when the committee was considering estimates for the Department of Justice. Perhaps it might be as well, since that item was inadvertently omitted, to put it through now. We want to proceed in this order, apart from that: finish the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Then deal with the Departments of Health and Welfare, Public Works, the Secretary of State, and Fisheries.

I should like to now call the item that was inadvertently omitted.

Mr. Herridge: No. One or two questions arise under that item.

The Deputy Chairman: In view of the fact that the house is proceeding to consider private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15 it is my duty to leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the following questions will be discussed on the adjournment motion tonight: the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin), finance—inquiry as to assistance to gold mining industry; the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey), Canadian centennial—suggested restoration of grave of D'Arcy McGee.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE OF SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke) moved:

That a Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed as soon as possible to be called the "Joint Committee on Federal-Provincial Relations" to consider all reports dealing with federal-provincial matters in which this Parliament is interested, as for instance the reports of the Bilingualism and Biculturalism Commission, the Carter Commission and other similar commissions, so that the said Committee may make a study of such reports and of the evidence submitted thereto, and that the said Committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses, to report its recommendations from time to time, and to engage the services of counsel, accountants and such other clerical and technical personnel as may be deemed necessary.

Federal-Provincial Relations

Mr. Speaker, among the numerous problems that Canada must face and solve, one is of vital importance. It concerns the future of the Canadian federation.

Since 1867, the two great founding nations of our country and the other groups which came after, have shared an experience which should be analysed today.

Moreover, the federative system itself saw the central and provincial governments change, and that coexistence gave rise to new and controversial aspects in Canadian life.

That is why it is advisable to bring in the open now the grievances and difficulties which exist, so that we may look toward the future with more realism, understanding, efficiency and serenity.

This notice of motion involves Federal-Provincial relations and asks that they be studied, defined and directed. These Federal-Provincial relations are operative in the political, cultural, economic and fiscal fields.

On the political plane, Mr. Speaker, the political system itself is at stake.

The report of the royal commission on the constitutional problems in Quebec, the 1956 Tremblay report, in volume 2, part I, page 98, had this to say about federalism:

> Federalism should consist in a system of association between states where the exercise of state powers is shared between two levels of government, co-ordinated with each other but not subordinated one to the other, with each one enjoying supreme powers in the field of activity assigned to it by the constitution.

The 1867 Constitution did not reflect, in several matters, the principles of true federalism, but gave birth instead to a near federalism.

The principles of a real federalism should contain the ten following characteristics: independent and equal governments; a clearly defined distribution of taxation powers; a balance of power between the different governments; the supremacy of the constitution; the impartiality of the courts; the expression of freedom and security; a pluralist conception of the common good; the bringing closer together of ethnic groups rather than their unification; residual powers left to the provinces; a Senate to which the provinces could also appoint members.

Now, the British North America Acts (1867 to 1965) are wrong on many points: the power given to Ottawa to disallow any provincial legislation; the granting of general legislating powers to Ottawa; letting Ottawa have vaguely defined and almost unlimited powers of taxation; implicitly giving Ottawa the latitude to spend as it wishes; authorizing Ottawa to grant subsidies to the provinces; the overlapping of the parliamentary principle and the federative principle; having senators appointed exclusively by Ottawa; abandoning residual powers to Ottawa.

Those anomalies in the Canadian constitution have allowed the central government, in cases of war or economic depression, to channel into the hands of Ottawa most of the important powers and most fields of taxation, thus going against the spirit and the essence of a true federative system in this country. If we, in the federal Parliament are now asking for the creation of a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, such parliamentary committee would, in a way, become a replica of the parliamentary committee on the constitution at Quebec. The house knows that for more than 18 months the Quebec government, conscious of the changes and of the difficulties which necessarily came about during the century the Canadian Federation has existed, established a parliamentary committee on the constitution and invited individuals, associations and various organizations to appear before that committee in order to explain the nature of their grievances and to suggest in all honesty appropriate remedies. And before this committee on the Constitution in Quebec, the people who appeared precisely emphasized the five political options being considered by one of the outstanding provinces of the Canadian Federation, namely, the province of Quebec, for its political future. While this province is affected by an upsurge of dynamism and restiveness, as far as I am concerned, this will enrich Canada as a whole, and while Quebec is carefully weighing the problems, it should be our duty in Ottawa, in the House of Commons, to take our responsibilities, we legislators of this house and the other place, so that we can enter into an open and free dialogue, in order to define clearly the different positions of federal-provincial relations which will envisage a more efficient and dynamic future for a Canada promised to many prosperous years.

The five following options were submitted to the committee on the constitution in Quebec City: Even though the report has not yet been published, it appears from the discussions that past experience, which I would term a status quo, has not given satisfaction to Quebec, to French Canada. This is the negative aspect. We shall consider the positive aspect later on. It did not give satisfaction because of the anomalies in the wording itself of the B.N.A. Act and also because this whole experience, in all fairness, has made Quebec and French Canada the losers in several fields.

It should be kept in mind in 1966 that Quebec citizens only control 5 per cent of the economic activity of the whole country and that, in their own province, they only control 10 per cent of the activity of the province of Quebec, and in this bulwark of the French Canadian nation, they hold only 20 per cent of key jobs. Those are obvious and clear facts that can be proven as they were most abundantly before the committee on the Constitution in Quebec. As a result, the whole population—unless I am wrong—no longer will accept the maintenance of an unfair system we have known as political quasi-federalism.

Others spoke of the co-operative federalism. We know that in this house, some members became the advocates of this theory. What is, after all, co-operative federalism, which the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys recently called harmonious federalism. In short, it is the continuation of this quasi-federalism which Quebec does not consider for its political future, within the framework of a Canadian whole. Why? Because a revision of the Constitution, a literal and written adaptation of provisions according to the problems of 1966 is refused, and efforts are being made to restrict discussions of the problems and evolution of the country and of Quebec in this national whole and only at interministerial meetings and federal-provincial conferences. In other words, these important and serious problems, these political, constitutional, fiscal and economic problems should be left at the mercy of the succeeding governments in Ottawa, subject to the whims of politicians making up those governments.

Well, Quebec refuses to accept this blindly.

The associate states system was also raised before the committee on the Constitution. According to this system, there would be a state of Quebec and another state composed of the nine provinces and the two other territories; each would have absolute power in certain spheres and they would join only in rather general fields, such as banking and external relations.

Of course, this associate states option seems logical, but it does not seem to be accepted or even discussed with the nine English provinces.

• (6:20 p.m.)

There is the other alternative of independence, where Quebec would withdraw from Confederation. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I am for the time being opposed to this formula, for no one has yet established, neither Mr. Chaput, Mr. Bourgault, Mr. Jutras, Mr. Barbeau nor the others, that it would be to Quebec's advantage to secede from the rest of Canada, either on a short or a long term basis. Why secede when, throughout the whole world, with modern evolution, ties are multiplying within a single state, as also between different states?

There remains then the option for a new Canadian constitution that would give Canada a true federalism, a positive and bicultural federalism, which would imply for Quebec, because it is the stronghold of the French-Canadian people, a special status in certain spheres. Here are, Mr. Speaker, serious problems, current problems, contemporary problems, that should be discussed in this parliament instead of letting commissions outside parliament deal with them and adopt a definite position regarding an important situation.

There is also, in this committee, on the political level, the problem of the amendment of the constitution, the Fulton-Favreau formula, which has been agreed to by nine provinces and postponed indefinitely, after having been seemingly accepted by the Premier of Quebec.

At the meeting of this committee, the Quebec Minister of Justice could be invited to set forth his main grievances, so that we could see on what basis he objects to an amendment of the constitution.

The federal-provincial relations that the committee could consider would also extend to cultural relations. The Laurendeau-Dunton commission on bilingualism and biculturalism has already filed its first report and the conclusions are expressed thus:

> Canada . . . is passing through the greatest crisis in its history. The source of the crisis lies in the province of Quebec.

This is not sham, Mr. Speaker. There is a serious crisis, and why? Because French Canadians in Quebec and outside Quebec feel deprived, they suffer from discrimination, they ask only for equal treatment throughout the whole country. They ask no favours, and, in spite of the recent claim of Miss Charlotte Whitton, former mayor of Ottawa, they are not seeking to dominate Canada, far from it; they only want to be treated on an equal footing, and it is in the province of Quebec that minorities are placed on an equal footing. Since 1867, our compatriots we like, the English Canadians, are treated on an equal footing; they are not made to pay double taxation for their own schools. But, in other provinces, French Canadians do not receive equal treatment. It started in 1871, when New Brunswick prohibited French tuition in the schools; then, Manitoba followed in 1892, and Ontario in 1917, through its Regulation No. 17. But, the province of Quebec never did anything like that.

Consideration should certainly be given to these problems right here in parliament, in order that Canadians sprung from the two main cultures, the two great founding nations, may feel at home everywhere in this vast country of ours and live with the feeling that we are all equal and brothers.

The economic aspect of our federal-provincial relations could also be discussed to advantage there. We received the first report—and there will be others—on economic matters, the report of the Economic Council of Canada. It seems that there will soon be published a report on the economic questions examined by the province of Quebec.

We know that in Canada, there are roughly five great economic areas. Canada is a vast territory. Due to its small population spread over such a vast territory, Canada has been a challenge to intelligent people who are faced with economic and industrial differences as well as varying amounts of natural resources.

That is why we should read those reports, call witnesses, discuss things together and assume our responsibilities in order precisely to find a modus vivendi to establish in our country, in every part of Canada, a stable and happy prosperity.

Finally, the federal-provincial relations could be analysed with regard to taxation. Once the legislators of our country have solved the problems of economic, political, constitutional and cultural relations, it will be necessary to set the basis of assessment with regard to priorities which will be established and understood between the various legislatures.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, such a committee is useful. I am quite aware that some hon. members might oppose it, but I believe that we have come to a crossroad of our life as a nation, and that nobody would have anything to lose by accepting the setting up of such a committee, so that we the representatives, may work together all across Canada toward a clearer definition of our political, cultural, economic and financial thinking, in order to get ready for a constitutional conference, because some provinces are ready for such a discussion while we are not.

[Mr. Allard.]

Mr. Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member as his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Hugh Faulkner (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in the invidious position of agreeing with a lot of what has been said by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) but disagreeing with the resolution. In his far ranging address which offered a number of potential solutions to the problem, but that dealt very briefly with his notice of motion which specifically recommends that a joint committee be established to deal with subject matters already discussed by royal commissions. I think his proposal would simply involve a rehashing of work already done by royal commissions, and in that sense is unnecessary and redundant, even though many of the things which he said in his speech on the more general subject did make a lot of sense. However, I intend to deal with his notice of motion.

The fact that the problem is a serious one is generally agreed by members on both sides of the house. We have had notices of motion presented by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), demanding a white paper on the subject, by my distinguished colleague from St. John's West, dealing with the field of education, which is indirectly involved in the same general question, and by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie). Therefore on both sides there is a consensus that this is a serious problem.

One of the cornerstones of the problem is that within our federal system, jurisdiction is either overlapping or in some measure confused. We really do not know where jurisdiction should lie in such matters as water resources, conservation and education, but we do know that decisive government action is required in these areas. However, there is dispute as to which level of government should take that action. In my view we will never get decisive government action from a meeting of minds of 11 representatives from 11 different governments. However optimistic we might be, I do not see how we can possibly hope that a consensus will be arrived at by dominion-provincial conference on a long term basis with respect to a wide range of subjects.

In the debate on the Speech from the Throne I expressed my misgivings about federal-provincial conferences, these ad hoc arrangements designed to deal with fundamental problems, and I still have those misgivings. I do not see how we can hope to resolve a lot of the problems associated with our federal system by such conferences, and in my view it is necessary that we try to clarify federal and provincial jurisdictions. We need to undertake a total view of the disposition of authority and responsibility, something I also mentioned in the Throne Speech debate.

It seems to me imperative that jurisdiction between the provincial and federal level be both separate and discrete, that is, discernible one from the other, and the concept of co-operative federalism, although it played an important role in a recent stage of our evolution, is one about which I have certain misgivings. I say that conditions of survival for a viable federal system involve certain prerequisites.

In the first instance there must be a certain uniform pattern of distribution of authority between the provincial and federal governments. It is to me inconsistent with a viable federal system that certain authority will exist at the federal level, whereas that same authority in the case of a particular province would be undertaken by a particular province. This introduces an inconsistency in the distribution of power and one which I think in time will undermine the federal system. It is for this reason I have said outside the house, and would like to say inside the house, that I particularly am opposed to the concept of a special status for any province, and I would include of course the province of Quebec.

It seems to me the very concept of a special status will accomplish the very objective that the concept itself is trying to obviate; namely, the two nations theory. It seems to me that eventually two nations will result from applying the concept of special status.

Furthermore, it is heretical, in this sense, that so long as you accept the proposition of a special status for Quebec you are implying or directly saying that Quebec is the instrument, and must be the instrument, of the French-Canadian population of this country. That identification is anathema to me and it is heresy to any legitimate federalist, if I may be presumptious enough to go that far. It is a thing which worries me. I reject the idea that somehow the expression of French Canadians must be in any way exclusively identified with the provincial government of the province of Quebec.

The second need for a viable federal system—and particularly of our own federal system—is of course the need for a re-distribution of authority between the federal and provincial governments to bring our federal system in line with 20th century problems. The distribution we are working under today applies to conditions which existed a long time ago. I have suggested that we should have a constitutional conference. I am not sure this is a sound suggestion,—it may prove to be traumatic—but certainly a constitutional committee of the house would make a great deal of sense to me to deal with this problem of the distribution of authority so that that authority can be placed clearly at one level. I am thinking of such things as the responsibility for water resources, air pollution and things of this nature.

Finally, I would like to deal with another dimension of this problem which I think in this house we have not discussed, because after all it is not a constitutional problem. It is our problem, namely, that in a viable federal system there must be a policy initiative at the federal level. I was interested in the remarks made by the member for Peace River when he discussed his particular notice of motion on February 14 at page 1182 of Hansard:

> Let the government of Canada take the initiative for once. Let them be strong, decisive and resolute.

These are fine sentiments.

> Who knows, they might even seize upon this as an opportunity to test the bold and excite the daring. I am sure if they do so they will secure from many members,—

I am assuming that applies to both sides of the house.

> —certainly from me, such measure of support as they may require.

The fact of the matter is that was said sometime ago, almost a month ago. Since that time this house has been pre-occupied with last year's estimates. It seems to me to be inconsistent that the hon. member for Peace River can encourage the federal government in these terms to take an initiative in that direction which will excite the bold or challenge the daring, whichever way he put it, and at the same time persist in discussion of last year's estimates. This may be the assessment of a new and naïve member, but it seems to me this is totally inconsistent and that it is imperative—and again this may be presumptuous for a new member to suggest —that we progress with the legislative burden we have inherited, as the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) pointed out to this house this afternoon. It is wrong and hypocritical to admonish the government for failure to take initiative in policy matters when on the other side of the house there is a refusal to allow the government to get into that field. We know the legislation is ready.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would suggest to the hon. member that he now is straying away from the resolution which is before the house and which we should be considering at this time. I invite him to return to the subject matter of the motion.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member to define more clearly what he has in mind?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member who has the floor has not indicated his willingness to be asked a question at this time.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I would receive the question.

Mr. Pepin: Thank you. I was very interested in some of the things the hon. member said with regard to pollution, because obviously I am very much involved in that. He said that the jurisdiction of the federal government and of the provincial governments could be defined very clearly in that field. I think he said that. Would he expand on this suggestion.

Mr. Faulkner: That is not exactly what I said. What I intended to say is that it is necessary, for decisive legislative action in this field of pollution, that the jurisdiction be clarified and be precise. The reason I said that is I do not feel the consensus of eleven heads of government so-called is the best way to deal with these immediate problems, and that presently is how we are trying to do it. The brunt of my argument is that the legislative demands upon this house are such that we must have clear authority and clear jurisdiction. This is equally true at the provincial level. It seems to me the present motion does not really help us much in arriving at this goal which would be a sine qua non of a viable federal system.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make one or two comments on this motion. First of all I would like to concur most heartily with the great amount of good sense and intelligent comment made by the previous speaker, except for the comment he made when he seemed to wander away from his sound good judgment. He previously has wandered more than once, because he still is sitting on that side of the house.

I want to speak very feelingly because, coming from the smallest province in this dominion, I know that we have participated in federal-provincial conferences which have tried to place a good deal of responsibility and decision making in the hands of a new institution. Earlier in this parliament it was recorded that we had something like 130 or more federal-provincial conferences last year. A small province such as Prince Edward Island finds it almost impossible—and indeed I would say impossible—to try to institute a new program, either in the field of welfare, community development, or perhaps education; it is difficult to institute these programs so that they will have equal value to a province the size of say, Ontario, and the province of Prince Edward Island.

I say it is impossible because we must realize there obviously must be a different kind of administrative set up for a small province than for a larger one, if both are to be effective. We have seen the kind of situation at federal-provincial conferences where the financial solution is adequately suited to the ability of the larger province but certainly not financially suited to a province like Prince Edward Island. In many cases it causes great harm.

• (6:40 p.m.)

But it was assumed that by the implementation of these programs things would happen which really did not happen. It is therefore of great concern to me that there be appointed at the very earliest possible date some responsible body that would deal with this problem. I think it is most fitting and appropriate that such a body involve the parliamentarians of this country, because I believe there has been a great sense of helplessness on the part of the representatives of the various constituencies throughout this country in their being, shall I say relegated to the minor position of approving faits accomplis on questions that have been grappled with, are on the threshold of implementation, and then as a sort of an afterthought are presented to parliament.

Time and time again we find that decisions which have been arrived at months or even years previously finally come before us in suggested legislation and are presented to this house for approval. In my opinion this is not the basic responsibility of the people's representatives. Surely then, we need to take a long, hard look at how we can restructure our relations and responsibilities both federally and provincially.

I think we should not fear change simply because its new and should not promote it simply because it is novel. Rather we should realize that much of the structures of government that were laid down almost 100 years ago now were laid down for an almost entirely different kind of world. The provinces did not then have nearly the kind of responsibilities which they have today, because in those days we were not able to communicate by word of mouth or be transported from one place to another in the way that is possible today. We are in a new age and we must not be hamstrung by decisions made by legislators in this house almost 100 years ago.

I think we must act, and act soon, or we shall make a mockery of the institution that we call parliament. I believe this very strongly, Mr. Speaker, because coming from a province in which in many ways we are still deprived of the rightful benefits that belong to a Canadian citizen, it is important to me that we face this question.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the house is couched in terms that would lead one to expect a little different type of debate. I shall turn later to the motion before the house, for I think there is much in it that deserves some direct comment. Before doing that I wish to make some remarks in the vein of the debate up to this moment.

There has been a strong tendency of thought in some quarters to commend a unitary system of government while federalism is derided. The confusions and difficulties of federalism are called frequently to our attention.

I was very interested to listen to the concise and succinct remarks of the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald). I could not help thinking as he spoke that he comes from the one province in Canada which above all others should rejoice in our federal system and in the fact that we did not over the years become more and more unitary in our constitution. I suggest to you, sir, that if over the years our constitution had become more and more unitary we would have had an increasing concentration of economic wealth and political power in Quebec and Ontario. It has been federalism which has permitted the extremities of the country to some extent to counteract this pull toward the centre.

When I think of the Premier of Prince Edward Island coming as one of the 11 heads at a federal-provincial conference I can see the advantages to that province of the federal-provincial conference. Despite the small population of Prince Edward Island, the premier of that province is one among eleven. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the same is true of the premier of my own province. Those of us who come from the smaller provinces ought not to be too scornful of the institution of the federal-provincial conference. We ought not to yearn too much for the fleshpots of a unitary system of government.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to turn to the motion before us. It proposes the establishment of a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to consider all reports dealing with federal-provincial matters in which this parliament is interested. In other words, this joint committee is in a sense to prepare a report on reports. We are to be second-guessing the commissions established by the Governor General in Council. We are to prepare a more refined, a more sublime, a more elevated report; a report not to the Governor General in Council but, instead, to the two houses of parliament.

I do not think this would be a desirable undertaking. When a commission is established its membership is selected, presumably, on the basis of expertise and knowledge. The commissioners are supposed to know a great deal about one particular subject, finance, let us say, biculturalism, or some other topic. I do not see how we politicians, amateurs, can undertake to prepare a more refined report on their reports.

The second criticism I have of the motion is that we, by adopting it, would be establishing a kind of parliamentary study group. I assume that all members of the other place and this house read the reports prepared by the experts and examine them diligently. But why should we want to do additional and more recondite research? Under the motion we are to have the power to call for persons, that is witnesses, papers and records and to examine those witnesses. We are to take the matter, in a sense, one more step in the process of refining. This would be very interesting for the members of such a joint committee—and if this motion should pass I want it recorded that I should like to be one of the members of the committee. It would be very edifying. But I do not think the establishment of the committee would be justified merely on the grounds of the edification of certain members of the other place and this house.

My third contention against the motion is that the establishment of such a committee would be contrary to the normal processes. These commissions are established by the government, by the Governor General in Council, and make their reports eventually to the Governor General in Council. The government is charged with the duty of governing; consequently, it has to decide what to do with the recommendations contained in a report from such a commission. It has to decide what action it should take independent of parliament, or, when parliamentary action is necessary, what action to recommend to this house and to the other place. That is the normal process; and I think it is the process that should be followed.

There is a tendency—we all slip into it from time to time—to think of ourselves in this house as being charged with a constitutional duty to govern the country. That is not a valid description of the constitutional position. The government of the day has that duty and responsibility. Our job here is to co-operate with the government in certain legislative activities and to act as a kind of board of auditors on the work of the government. We are not a congress. The government is not our executive to whom we give instructions. The government is not a body that we order to do things.

The government is charged with the job of governing. It comes to this house with certain requests for acts, certain bills, and we either co-operate or we do not co-operate. But we are not charged under our constitutional system with the work of a congress. I think this motion points toward what I would call congressionalism. It contains the assumption that we should set up a committee whose job it would be to take the initiative in these constitutional questions, important as they admittedly may be.

[Mr. Stewart.]

The final point I want to make is that even though this committee would be simply, in terms of the motion, a committee to consider all reports in the area of federal-provincial relations, it would, I think almost inevitably, as time went on, become a kind of constitutional convention developing within the two houses of parliament. I am not one to argue that a constitutional convention is absolutely undesirable, but that is another question. But if we do want a constitutional convention, I suggest we ask for it directly.

If we want a constitutional convention I think we should start by attempting, not in any great detail but with a considerable amount of frankness, to define its terms of reference. I do not think we should undertake to establish a constitutional convention indirectly in the guise of a committee set up to consider all reports dealing with federal-provincial matters.

I promised myself I would stick very closely to the terms of the motion before the house, but there is one obiter dictum that I cannot resist. I think the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys was implying what I have in mind. It is all very nice to imagine that if we were to sit down to carve the constitutional pie anew, we would be able to do it neatly and cleanly and have a tidy division of power. I think that is just not going to happen. No matter whether we go on in our present pattern using the various devices that we now use, no matter whether we do have at some time a constitutional convention, things are not going to be done very much differently in so far as tidiness is concerned. We are going to have overlapping jurisdictions. We are going to have jurisdictions that interlock. The fabric of our national life from ocean to ocean is too closely interwoven for any easy delineation of the separate fibres. I say that, sir, by way of general comment on the debate brought on by this very interesting motion.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I will say only a few words so that I cannot be accused of killing this resolution. But here is what I should like to point out: we heard on both sides of the house arguments for a conference that would study anew the fundamentals of our constitution.

Reference has been made to co-operative federalism. However, as the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), pointed out, it has been rechristened a while ago, since the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin) called it recently in Montreal the federalism of harmony.

It has not been too successful since its creation. Since co-operative federalism was conceived and created by the present government, I think there never have been so many discussions about the constitution as at present with the provinces.

When I heard earlier the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) say that he did not want Quebec to have a special status, I think that he misunderstands the meaning of a special status. I believe all the provinces, at some time or other in the last few years, have enjoyed a special status with regard to the central government. Any province wishing to withdraw from certain taxation fields was free to do so, and the province of Quebec, perhaps more than any other, often preferred to have the fiscal equivalent rather than participate in joint schemes administered by the federal government.

Is it recognition of a special status for Quebec in Education when Quebec claims the Federal government is not to intervene at all, and when, as is well known the provinces have exclusive jurisdiction in education. This means that in exercising its exclusive rights in education, Quebec is respecting the constitution.

Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan could exercise the same option. When our English speaking members claim that under co-operative federalism, Quebec has been granted special status, I think they are mistaken.

Before time allotted to this motion runs out as I do not want to be charged with killing the motion of the hon. member for Sherbrooke, I want to say that it is time the central and provincial governments meet once and for all, to discuss together constitutional differences they are faced with.

The constitution will soon be 100 years old; it has seldom been touched during its existence.

[English]

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he really thinks our constitutional arrangements can be discussed and settled once and for all, or if that really is not just a kind of pious hope in which we all indulge? Does he think it is realistic?

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, naturally a conference alone will not settle all our constitutional problems, but the very suggestion of the member for Sherbrooke for the formation of a joint committee of the House of Commons and of the Senate to study this question and the report on constitutional law is, in my opinion, an excellent way of beginning the study of the problems which concern the provinces and the federal government.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I wholly support the measure introduced by the hon. member for Sherbrooke.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour set aside for the consideration of private members' business has expired. The house will now resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

1. Departmental administration, $1,257,800.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Let the record show that there are no ministers present.

Mr. Churchill: The cabinet has collapsed.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, do you know whether the cabinet knows that private members' hour ends at seven o'clock?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I believe there may have been some slight confusion caused by the fact that today the committee proceeded beyond six o'clock, I believe until about seven minutes after six.

Mr. Starr: Very well.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention tonight to make a lengthy or detailed analysis of the department. After all, we are dealing with last year's estimates which to a large extent have been passed. We have a new minister, and I hope that in the near future this year's estimates will go before the standing committee which will be able to give the minister and the department the kind of searching examination that I think is long overdue.

I must say I was disappointed in the very general statement which the minister made. I had expected and I still expect some very excellent leadership from the minister. But I must tell him that the kind of speech he made has been made by every minister of citizenship and immigration appointed since I came to the house.

Talking of ministers of citizenship and immigration, I could not help but be struck by the speech of the hon. member for Carleton, a former minister. What he said in effect, in his speech was: "Do as I say, but don't do as I did". If there was one thing which was characteristic of immigration policy while the hon. member for Carleton was minister, and also the minister who preceded him, it was the fact that they did not clear up any of the basic problems which the department faced then and still faces now. While I have not the figures here and do not want to precipitate a long and acrimonious debate on this department, the fact is that in the years in which the former government was in power we had some of the lowest rates of immigration that we have had in the last 25 years.

This was because to a large extent, I suppose, we had large scale unemployment. Naturally when you have large scale unemployment the people who have to work for a living are sometimes not too happy about immigration. They look on immigrants as prospective competitors for jobs. The way to get the co-operation of labour is to have full employment. Then the working people do not worry about immigrants who come to Canada and compete for jobs.

The tide has turned. Immigration figures are now up but not up to the level which, I suppose, many members would like to see. I think this is partly due to the fact that in Europe and those countries to which we have traditionally looked for immigrants there has been full employment for about the last ten years. Up until this year Canada had pretty heavy unemployment while Great Britain, Germany, the Scandinavian countries, Holland and Belgium were experiencing prosperity with full employment. Therefore it has not been too easy to encourage people from those countries from which we have traditionally received the bulk of our immigrants. We have had to turn, and we have turned with some success, to countries such as Greece and Portugal for our immigrants.

I am not being critical in this regard. I think we ought to open the gates to immigrants from many countries who in past years we have seemed to discourage. But I am concerned about the fact that morally, and I think even legally, it is the responsibility of the federal government to bring people here. After all, the federal government encourages them to come to Canada. It is the federal government which has immigration offices in most countries in Europe, the Middle East and Asia. It is the federal government which informs these people of the kind of living they can expect here. Yet having brought them here and encouraged them to come, once they arrive to a large extent they are forgotten.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

I have before me an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail for February 18, 1966 entitled "Victims Of Language". It reads in part as follows:

> An informal survey of Toronto secondary schools has uncovered evidence that immigrant children with language difficulties are being encouraged to leave school.

Then the editorial goes on to say a little further on:

> As a consequence, hundreds, perhaps thousands, of boys and girls, many of them of university calibre, are succumbing to pressures to drop out. Whether the pressure originates in the family or in the school, whether it is overt or implicit, is immaterial. The fact remains that they are being denied the opportunities of a full education.

The editorial concludes by stating that the provincial and municipal governments have a responsibility to see that this kind of thing does not happen.

I suggest to the minister and the government that the federal government has a responsibility in this regard. I am not going to minimize the difficulties which are created for the federal government by the fact that education is the responsibility of the provinces and I am not suggesting at this time that this situation should change. But I do suggest to the minister that if in its wisdom, and I think with the agreement of the Economic Council of Canada as well as business, industry and labour, the federal government believes that we need an aggressive and active policy of immigration and that we need to encourage people from countries in which the mother tongue is neither English nor French to come to Canada, then it must somehow find ways to help the young people who accompany their parents and who are not fully conversant with the English language to overcome their language deficiency. If we do not do so then these people will become the future unemployed, the future poverty cases, the people who will inevitably become a charge on the state in generations to come.

I suggest that the minister might well look into this matter now. As one of the ways of combating poverty in the war on poverty, which so far has really been a war of words, the government might consider co-operating with the provincial governments in this respect.

I am bitterly disappointed that the government has not yet seen fit to bring out its white paper on immigration which was promised.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): It is yellow with age.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member for Danforth says it will be yellow with age. That may well be the case if we continue to change ministers. That white paper was promised before some of us came here in 1962.

• (7:10 p.m.)

It is not only our immigration policy which needs to be looked at but the Immigration Act and the regulations also need to be completely revised. There has not been a year in which there has not come to light a glaring example of error, mistake and confusion caused not simply because there may be an official somewhere in the department who does not like a particular immigrant because of his colour or race but by the fact that such difficulties are inherent in the Act as it is today. I am not going to analyse the present Act and the regulations. That has been done many times by many members. The minister needs only to look over old issues of Hansard to find those difficulties listed.

I am not certain whether I agree with the hon. member for Carleton with respect to the minister requiring to have discretionary power. When we talk about cases we are not complaining, I certainly am not complaining and I do not think any other member is because the minister or the deputy minister has not been co-operative. In fact, I can honestly say, coming from a constituency which is largely ethnic, its people being non-English and non-French in origin, that I have handled a large number of cases since I have come here and in all of them I have had the utmost in co-operation from the minister and former ministers, the new deputy minister and former deputies. I cannot think of a single case I brought to their attention where I was certain they were wrong that they did not accede to my suggestions.

When a member of parliament has to intervene I think something has gone wrong. A member of parliament should not have to concern himself with these problems, though I do not mind doing it. But the law and regulations should clearly set out the position of the Canadian government. They should indicate that we want people generally to come to Canada, that we want qualified people to come to Canada, that we want people to come regardless of their race, colour, origin or religion. If the government would make its position clear then most of the difficulties which have arisen and which hon. members have dealt with would disappear.

I know it is said that we do not have the kind of problem we used to have. It is said that we do not keep people out because of the colour of their skin or their ethnic background. Personally I do not think the situation is as bad as it used to be. Discrimination certainly is not as open as it used to be. In this regard may I bring to the attention of the new minister one paragraph from a speech made at the University of New Brunswick on May 20, 1965, by the Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago, Mr. Eric Williams. Here is a prime minister of one of the Commonwealth countries, one of our associates. I want the minister to listen to what the Prime Minister of Trinidad said:

> Today the world has worked out the curious hybrid of juridicial equality of states and racial inequality of peoples. Australia is determined to remain white; Canada eases its conscience by accepting a handful of domestic servants; the contemporary slogan is "keep Britain white", the very Britain which was built up by African and Asian labour in Africa, Asia and the West Indies. Whatever the Commonwealth may be in theory, it is in practice being increasingly tainted with a racial limitation. Viewed in historical perspective the Civil War in the United States is still raging.

That is a sad commentary for the prime minister of one of the Commonwealth countries with whom we are associated to make about Canada. It may be that is not correct, although I think it is. If it is not, then I think it is incumbent on the minister, on the department and on the government to clear up the situation, to issue a white paper and to bring in amendments to the Immigration Act and the regulations so that this kind of thing will not only disappear but so that it will become known to the people concerned that in fact our immigration policy is one which ignores questions of race, colour, and religion. I suggest to the minister that if this world is going to remain free, if this world is going to remain democratic, we must convince those people who are not white, who after all far outnumber those who are white, that we in fact believe them to be the equals of the white peoples.

There is just one more question I wish to raise very briefly. On February 16 the minister answered a series of questions I put on the order paper with regard to the problem being encountered by foreign doctors coming to Canada, particularly non-white doctors from Asia and Africa. In the answers which the minister gave, and I am sure he will remember them, it is indicated very clearly that the federal department is carrying on an aggressive policy, of which I am not critical, of encouraging skilled people which of course includes doctors.

We have a shortage in this country of medical doctors. We are encouraging doctors from Africa, Asia and the Philippines to come to this country, as we should. I know that the problem is not a simple one to solve. I know that the licensing of doctors comes under the jurisdiction of the provincial medical bodies responsible for this matter. For example, in the province of Ontario the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons is responsible. I am satisfied that if the minister will look at the records and at the correspondence between his departmental officials and the Ontario medical authorities, he will find that the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons is carrying on an open and deliberate policy of refusing to permit doctors from Africa and Asia to practise in Ontario. This is the worst kind of discrimination.

These doctors are encouraged to come to Ontario and to work in Ontario hospitals, to staff hospitals, to head departments and to do all kinds of work for which doctors get very little money and which other doctors do not want to do. But when a doctor from Asia or Africa wants to practise privately he is told that because his medical college does not have the qualifications of others he cannot even write the examinations which are set by the medical council.

It is not true that Asiatic and African colleges are not qualified to maintain high teaching standards. Records kept by the Medical Council of Canada indicate very clearly that doctors who have come from India and Pakistan and have written examinations here have constantly done better than many others. I am speaking from memory but I think that in the neighbourhood of 80 per cent or 85 per cent of these doctors who have written examinations have passed them and have been ready to practise and have been able to practise in every other province but Ontario. Doctors from other countries such as Germany and France have scored much lower marks, perhaps because of language difficulties though I do not know. But they have been permitted to write the examinations set by the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons and go into private practice in the province of Ontario if they so wished.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

I have before me a letter I received yesterday from a Dr. Conde. I am not going into details but I will send the minister copies of this correspondence. This doctor came to Canada after graduating from a university in the Philippines. He worked satisfactorily at the Hamilton General Hospital. He then practised in Manitoba, wrote examinations in British Columbia and then practised in British Columbia. He is now practising in the province of Manitoba.

• (7:20 p.m.)

Nevertheless, he has been refused permission by the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons to write their examinations and practise in Ontario. He has been told to go back to medical college, study there and then become an intern before he may be allowed to practice. This is at a time when this province like every other province in this country is crying for doctors, not in the cities, of course, but in the small towns and villages where no doctor can be induced to practise.

I recognize that this is primarily a responsibility of the provincial government. I know that the government of Ontario has set up a committee or commission to look into this question. But as long as the federal immigration department continues its present policy—and the answers I have received to my questions indicate that it will—it is not enough to wash our hands and say this is a provincial responsibility. As long as we are encouraging doctors to come to Canada we have a responsibility to see that every doctor who is qualified, regardless of whether his skin is red, black, yellow or white, will have the same right to practise as any other doctor.

I have tried to raise two or three questions which I think are important and which I hope the minister will examine with the energy and the ability I know he possesses. I hope that by the time the standing committee meets the white paper will be tabled and the amendments to the immigration law which have been so long awaited as well as the amendments to the regulations which are so necessary will be brought down so that a year from now the long and acrimonious, though necessary, discussions which have taken place when the estimates of this department have come before the committee in past years will no longer be needed.

Mr. Cowan: Are we on item 5 or on item 1?

An hon. Member: Item 1.

Mr. Cowan: I have a number of questions I should like to ask the minister. They relate directly to citizenship. I might as well ask them on vote 1.

I happen to be a personal friend of Roy Thomson, best known today as Lord Thomson of Fleet. He is a natural born Canadian having been born in the city of Toronto. I should like to ask the minister how a natural born Canadian loses his Canadian citizenship when the Queen of Canada sees fit to confer a peerage on him. Do we write him a letter telling him he is persona non grata with the Canadian government? Do we ignore him? Or do we refuse to send him $75 a month after he is 70 years of age? How is a native born Canadian deprived of his citizenship? I have one or two other questions on the same lines. Shall I ask the other questions now?

Mr. Marchand: I will take all the questions and answer them together later.

Mr. Cowan: Here is another question for you. The king of a European country of great note in world affairs a little while ago conferred the Order of the Phoenix on a well known native born Canadian, Premier Jean Lesage of the province of Quebec. Will Mr. Lesage be deprived of his Canadian citizenship?

Here is the third question. A very close friend of mine who is a naturalized Canadian has been offered a senior decoration by a foreign government and hesitates to accept it because he does not wish to lose his Canadian citizenship. When we deprive a native born Canadian like my friend Roy Thomson of his citizenship because he accepts a peerage from the Queen of Canada, what hope is there of a naturalized Canadian retaining his citizenship if he accepts a foreign decoration from the head of another government? My friend is fearful on this score because he recognizes he is a naturalized Canadian whereas Roy Thomson and Premier Jean Lesage are native born. Which example would we follow, the one set in the case of Roy Thomson or the one set in the case of Jean Lesage, if my friend accepts a foreign decoration this spring?

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, my intervention will be very brief. I should like to call the minister's attention to an article which appeared in the Toronto Telegram on December 30, 1965 having to do with a doctor, originally from Hungary and latterly from Austria who became a Canadian citizen on the basis of his residence here from 1949 to 1959. Because he had been unable to earn his livelihood in Canada he then went back to Austria where he was gainfully employed. I will read part of this article:

> A short time ago he applied for a new passport at the Canadian Embassy. He got the passport. But he was told he would lose his citizenship if he didn't return to Canada within 10 years.
> Officials here explained that under the Citizenship Act naturalized Canadians had to give up their citizenship if out of the country for more than 10 consecutive years.

The article goes on to quote an authority within the department as saying:

> Certainly it is true that in this regard naturalized Canadians don't have the same rights as people born here.

My contention is that we are making second class citizens of people who have come here and been accepted by the Canadian government. The doctor to whom I have referred, Dr. Devladar, is reported as saying:

> I am proud of my Canadian citizenship and I don't want to lose it.
> Canada is a free country, and very democratic. I can't understand why it is that Ottawa authorities are still clinging to these discriminatory, obsolete regulations.

According to this article the doctor stated that neither the United States nor Australia adheres to similar regulations. The article concludes:

> The government apparently has had its own misgivings about the second class status accorded naturalized Canadians.
> In Throne Speeches in 1963 and 1964 it promised to introduce legislation giving full equality and rights to all Canadian citizens wherever they were born.

I bring this matter up now because the minister might care to clarify the situation when preparing the white paper or be prepared to give it consideration now during the passage of these estimates. I have had a number of letters from constituents on this point. A number of good and honest citizens who have been granted citizenship through naturalization regard this as an important matter. I have one letter before me now which is relevant to this issue. It illustrates the significance of this matter to good and honest citizens who are making a valuable contribution to this country. My constituent says:

> I read tonight with regret in a Toronto newspaper that the government of Canada regards me as a second class citizen. This is because I was born in another country. When I came to Canada in 1928 I came at the direct invitation of a country which was at that time looking for new citizens.

The situation is the same today.

Now, after 37 years and the holder of a certificate of Canadian citizenship for many years I find that I do not enjoy all the privileges of a Canadian who happened to be born here and had little choice, while I chose Canada as my country at its direct invitation.

As my representative at parliament I would respectfully ask that this situation be remedied as soon as possible through promised legislation. You are aware that it is not likely to seriously affect my position as a citizen, but there is a very distinct reluctance in any citizen to find himself referred to as "second class."

Without unseemly boasting I might state that I feel that I have been a useful citizen, sharing in any community effort in any place in which I have lived since coming to Canada. No citizen could be more proud of this great land than I, nor love it more.

For this and many other reasons I feel that complete and unrestricted citizenship is my right, not only for myself but for my sons, and for my dignity as a very happy member of so great a nation.

Because such legislation was promised some time ago, I believe in 1964, because nothing has been done to date, because the situation has been drawn to the attention of the public, I, on behalf of many citizens who find themselves in exactly the same circumstances, ask the new minister to take this matter under consideration and rectify the wrong which these people feel has been done them.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I first want to congratulate the minister on his appointment and say it is very interesting to see on the front benches sitting on his right a gentleman whose life has been spent with management and on his left a gentleman who has been with organized labour most of his life. I think it indicates we have a democratic country.

I too can say that during my nearly 21 years experience in the House of Commons I have dealt with hundreds of people who wanted to bring immigrants to this country and it has never cost anybody, in the 21 years I have represented Kootenay West, a cent to consult their member of parliament for advice because I know what the law is, I know the regulations, and I know the people to whom representations should be made, whether it be the minister, the board or officials of the department.

During the hearings in connection with the Columbia River Treaty in the External Affairs Committee we were promised that it would be the policy of the B.C. Hydro Power Authority not to allow anyone to be employed on any project on the Columbia River who had not been a resident of Canada for at least 60 days. That promise is not being kept and I bring it to the attention of the minister, because organized labour and local residents are quite concerned about it.

What is happening is that citizens of the United States come into Canada as landed immigrants. They fill out the necessary forms and the next thing we know they are employed on the High Arrow, Duncan or Mica dams. The United States foremen in charge of these jobs send to the United States for their pals when they want them and their pals come in and go to work at once. Even though there is good employment in the district there are occasions when local and other residents do not get an opportunity to obtain employment, and this causes concern to them.

We had the same situation during the building of the gas pipe line. Hundreds of people came in from the United States as landed immigrants. They worked on the pipe line and as soon as the work was completed they returned to the United States. Prior to coming to Ottawa for the opening of this session three or four men who are working on these jobs spoke to me and told me, "These Americans are laughing at our regulations which permit them to come in under these circumstances. They tell us frankly they intend to return to the United States, that they are not real landed immigrants."

I bring this to the attention of the minister in order that he may check the situation. During the building of the pipe line project I asked the R.C.M.P. to check these people's car licences. On that occasion they came into Canada for the three, four or six months and practically all their licences were visitors' licences. They did not think enough of Canada to purchase a regular licence.

I think something should be done to make certain that these people who come into Canada as landed immigrants are really landed immigrants and that they intend to settle in Canada. The minister should have another look at whatever form is signed to make certain these people pledge themselves, so far as humanly possible, to come to Canada with the intention of becoming Canadian citizens.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I have been interested in the subject of immigration for quite a long time, indeed for a long time before becoming a member of parliament. We have had a whole series of ministers of immigration and I have been testing my memory to see if I can remember whom they have been during the time I have been interested in this matter. There was Hon.

Walter Harris, then the present Minister of Transport who stayed until the government changed, then the present member for Kamloops, then Hon. Ellen Fairclough, then the hon. member for Carleton, then the present President of the Privy Council, then the present member for Matapédia-Matane, then the present Minister of Labour, and now we have the present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. During the short time I have been in the house the list includes at least five or six ministers.

Every time the new ministers have risen, bright with promise, full of enthusiasm, and announced bold, new plans for a new Immigration Act that would remove all the troubles of the past. They have said they would publish new white papers and all difficulties would be removed. I say to the present minister that hope springs eternal. If he only stays in the job long enough, and I hope he insists on doing so, he finally may be able to produce the necessary changes in the Immigration Act, in the regulations, and in many of the practices carried on under the act.

Since the new minister has occupied his present position but briefly and no doubt thinks problems of manpower are vastly important, it would obviously be unfair to expect him to jump in and deal with all immigration problems, but I would tell him that the root of the troubles which have blackened this department for years has been the failure to adopt the basic principle of granting a proper hearing to would-be immigrants.

We have had the power of ministerial discretion and we have had so-called appeals. The courts have said that our procedures in immigration matters are hugger-mugger and farcical. The Supreme Court of Canada has dealt with these matters and has said that the way in which would-be immigrants have been treated has not been in conformity with the basic standard required by the act, namely, a fair hearing. Yet we are still continuing these farcical procedures.

We still have questions asked of would-be immigrants, such as, "Do you have an immigrant visa from the department", when everyone knows they have not got it because the department has not issued visas to them. In addition, the department will not tell them why. They just say, "You do not meet the regulations under the act". Whatever else is dealt with in the white paper I tell the minister this problem must be dealt with.

If we want to abandon the idea of giving any hearing, let us be honest and say so. Let us say that it is left to the minister's discretion and there is no such thing as a hearing but give the reasons for so saying. So long as we pretend to give consideration to bringing immigrants into the country and to people who are trying to bring their relatives here, if we are going to give them a hearing it must be a proper and fair hearing. The minister will find that there still is a section in the Act which includes the right to pass orders in council to exclude people of different ethnic origins. This is in the Act, but right in the regulations there is a double standard. If you come from Asia or Africa you are in a lower class; you can only bring in restricted relatives. It is not necessary now to go into the details of that. If you come from Europe or some parts of America you can bring in a wider range of relatives.

What possible justification can there be for this discrimination? I know it is not put on the ground of race but we know the people who live in Asia and Africa and we know those who live in the continent of Europe. We do not apply the same standards. This is in the regulations. I think it is regulation 33. To this very day some people do not have the right to bring a relative to this country and I believe this is a continuing discrimination. I wish the minister would take a careful look at this matter and I would hope that he would deal with it in the white paper.

One other thing in respect of immigration on which I hope we can obtain a decision from someone is this: As the minister will have found out, for many months now and perhaps a year or two the government have been saying they were going to make up their mind on what to do in the case of visitors who come into this country as visitors with non-immigrant visas, and apply to stay in this country. As the minister knows, there is a great backlog of cases awaiting decision while the department makes up its mind in respect of what to do with these visitors.

I know this problem contains difficulties. You do not necessarily want to have the same harsh rules in respect of the examination of those who come in as visitors but, on the other hand, once they come in as visitors, become engaged to a Canadian citizen, secure a job or are otherwise admissible there is the question of whether they must be sent back for a long period of waiting in their country of origin.

This is a serious question because if an immigrant enters in an easygoing way he bypasses those who remain in their country and comply with the regulations in the normal manner. I appreciate that this is not fair, but at the present time the Immigration Act gives such visitors the right to stay in this country. There are, however, hundreds of cases, and I have 20 or 30 of my own, where people have been told "We cannot decide on your status; we will not let you in or turn you out; we have not made up our mind". I hope the minister will be able to come up with a policy in respect of these visitors. I tell the minister it is common knowledge among some ethnic groups that would-be immigrants should not try to obtain an immigrant's visa through the normal channels but rather should gain admittance to this country as visitors because they perhaps may be able to stay here. I know this is not a very nice problem.

I will conclude by asking the minister whether he has yet received the second report that was sought from Mr. Joseph Sedgwick of Toronto. Those who were in this house before will recall a time when there was quite a problem concerning people who were kept in detention for long periods awaiting a decision, and at that time Mr. Sedgwick was asked to furnish a report to the government on this matter. At the same time, when the present Minister of Labour was minister of citizenship and immigration he was asked to deal with the question of procedure on appeals and fair hearings and I know he went into that matter very thoroughly. I would ask the minister whether that report has yet been received and, if not, when does he expect it to be received? If it is available, will he make it available, as was the previous report, to the members of the house? I am sure it will be helpful.

I say to the minister that, notwithstanding the important responsibilities which devolve on him as minister of manpower, in dealing with the human and economic problems involved in immigration he will find not only a fascinating task but also a most demanding one. I think this is a field in which the long promised reform is overdue. When we talk about fair hearings and justice to others we must have regard for the principles involved and clear up these difficulties so far as immigration is concerned.

I wish the minister good luck in his task. I hope that when the white paper is prepared it will be thoroughly studied by a committee and that this will be followed by a thorough investigation of the Act and regulations and the many points which need change. There are antiquated phrases like "insane" and such things in the Act which have no application today. The minister has undertaken a big task and I hope he will be able to carry it through.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I have some brief statements to make tonight regarding the mobility program and the manpower program under the new department. I had a rather lengthy speech prepared but I am going to save the minister and myself from that in the interests of getting these estimates through as quickly as possible.

There are a number of things which concern me at this stage and I should like to bring them to the minister's attention. Before going into that, first of all I should like to congratulate the minister on his appointment. I might add that perhaps very few ministers who have ever received such an appointment have been met with such hope and optimism as has this present minister and his department. We know he has a great deal of experience and some of his initial statements in respect of a mobility program and manpower program are very encouraging.

I would particularly like to commend the minister on the statements he has already made in respect of the continuance of the unemployment insurance benefits during the period of retraining. I also would like to indicate our approval of his apparent decision to increase the grants for persons undergoing retraining. I think both of these measures are very important and very necessary and certainly will help to ensure that the retraining program—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. The topic of manpower came up under the Department of Labour. At present we are studying the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. I should like to bring this to the attention of the hon. member.

• (7:50 p.m.)

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I shall adapt my remarks to conform with the rules. I think the congratulations which I extended apply equally to this as to the other department. I should like to raise a number of questions with the minister on the question of immigration. I have in the past raised with the present Minister of Labour the question of Portuguese immigration into Canada. I am very much concerned about this matter and would like to obtain an answer from the minister in regard to whether he has increased the number of his officers overseas in order to help Portuguese immigration.

These people have done a fine job after immigrating to this country. They have proved to be first class citizens. The industries in my riding are most anxious to see that as many Portuguese as would like to come to Canada and are qualified to do so are permitted to come here. We are hopeful that the long delays of the past, sometimes as long as two years, may be over now and that the admission of relatives and new immigrants is expedited.

One of the suggestions I should like to make to the minister, which is in harmony with the suggestions made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, is that more attention be given to the matter of immigrants coming to this country in terms of providing some measure of protection to them as they join the work force. As a member of an immigrant family myself, perhaps it is just as well that my mother got off the boat in time or I would not have been a natural born Canadian. I am very much concerned about the exploitation of immigrants that has taken place. They have come over here and have not been informed about trade unions or about their rights as far as voting is concerned. I think this is a very important matter and the minister has a responsibility in this regard.

The minister has a responsibility to immigrants coming to this country who do not speak English or French to see that brochures and pamphlets are distributed or courses arranged for them informing them of their rights and in particular encouraging them, I hope, to join a trade union that will protect their rights regardless of their origin.

I have had numerous occasions to get in touch with the office in Waterloo and I should like to go on record at this time as indicating how thoughtful and helpful this office has been to immigrants coming into my riding and how considerate they have been in looking into any of the problems that have been brought to their attention. I would also point out that the office in Kitchener is deserving of equal praise. I should like to close, Mr. Chairman, with the hope that the minister will rise to the challenge that some of his predecessors perhaps did not meet, and I wish him well in his new job.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, before the minister begins answering some of the questions put to him, I should also like to ask him two or three questions which he can answer at the same time as the other ones.

At the beginning of his remarks, the minister said that certain difficulties were encountered in having immigrants come to Canada, and more particularly qualified labour. Among other examples, he quoted France, a country which would be reluctant to have its qualified labour emigrate to Canada. Could the minister tell the house whether, in his opinion, our present immigration services in France are adequate and whether he has had any opportunity to discuss, with the Quebec provincial authorities, this matter of immigration from France? Could the minister also tell us whether the government of "La Belle Province" intends to set up immigration offices in France in order to look itself after immigration or still promote the immigration of certain persons considered as skilled workers?

I have a last question to put to the minister. During his discussions with provincial authorities, if he had any, did the minister emphasize the fact that if our services are divided between the federal government and the Quebec government, it might be detrimental to the interests of both governments because they would compete with each other to obtain skilled labour from other countries?

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a word about a matter that concerns people in my area. This problem is the same as that mentioned by the hon. member who just spoke and has to do with provinces, areas and certain industries bringing immigrants into this country for specific purposes. I hope the minister will give some consideration to the hardships worked on people brought into this country under these conditions. I am speaking particularly of the need that is apparent in the mining industry for immigrants of a special category and the persuasion being used by the immigration department and in many cases the province of Ontario—I refer to immigrants from England and Scotland in particular—by means of advertisements that in my opinion do not present a true picture and are not in keeping with the facts that exist in this country. The immigrant does not find this out until he comes to Canada and this creates great disillusionment on his part. It also seems to me that it is not in keeping with good immigration policy.

If the areas that need immigrants cannot appeal to them honestly and place the correct facts before them, then probably immigration to these areas should not take place. The mining industry over the years, the gold mining industry in certain areas and particularly certain mines, have used a pretty unfair method of getting people to work in this country. This method has meant that these immigrant employees have become tied by contracts entered into by reason of their being advanced money for transportation and other considerations with the stipulation that they must stay in the area for a set period of time.

While this is all well and good if the immigrant knows what the conditions will be and what the stipulations are, immigrants have reported to me that the conditions which have been presented in this advertising—I have seen newspaper advertisements that bear out the statements of many immigrants—have not been found to be factual and this has created a great deal of resentment on the part of these people.

This type of advertising also means that in many cases the immigrant will stay for the length of time agreed upon but leave immediately that time has expired. The situation is then made that much worse. This type of policy also produces criticism in the countries from which the immigrants come because this situation is pointed out in correspondence with the people at home.

In the matter of immigration I also hope the minister will give some consideration to a fairly specific problem that has been raised by the Federation of Agriculture. I refer to the problem raised by the Federation of Agriculture whereby there has been no definite arrangement made in the immigration law through which transient employees can come to Canada for the purpose of picking berries, harvesting tobacco and other products, and under which the department can supervise accommodation made available and wages paid to these transient workers. These people enter Canada for a certain period of time specifically to carry out this kind of work. I might point out that on occasion there is a great shortage of this type of labourer. Some of these transient workers come from Mexico, work in the United States and then come to Canada to take advantage of the later season here. However, when they reach the Canadian border they find that the same type of arrangement available to them in the United States is not available to them in Canada.

The Federation of Agriculture is of the opinion that much of the difficulty in finding workers in specific agricultural fields would be alleviated if assistance could be provided these transient workers when they cross the border from the United States to Canada. I believe that if that kind of arrangement could be made it should be undertaken by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

I intended to mention some other specific problems with regard to immigration and offer some suggestions, but I know the minister is not directly responsible for these estimates and I will therefore defer my remarks until the house has an opportunity to look at those estimates for which he is responsible.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay the passage of the estimates of this department but I should like to say that I associate myself with the views expressed by the hon. members for Waterloo South and Greenwood in extending congratulations and best wishes to the new minister of this important portfolio. I should like to bring once again to the minister's attention the grave concern expressed to me by Canadian citizens originating from countries of central Europe, who have found it very difficult to sponsor immigrants or visitors from those countries to Canada. I should like to ask in particular whether the minister or his predecessor have held or intend to hold any discussions with representatives of the governments of central European countries in order to facilitate the processing of applications of immigrants from those countries. I say that this has raised many problems, and in view of the delicacy of the matter and the representations made to me I should like to know whether the minister is in a position at this time to make a statement on this subject.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I was very impressed by one remark made by an hon. member concerning the life expectancy of a minister of immigration and I may say I am a little bit worried.

Mr. Knowles: This time the department is being done away with.

Mr. Marchand: The hon. member for Winnipeg North was disappointed with the few remarks I made at the beginning of the consideration of my estimates. I may say that I am also disappointed, but they were short on purpose. He will admit, however, that I took only a few minutes of his time whereas he took about twenty minutes of mine.

Mr. Winkler: That is not unusual.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: There are a few points, Mr. Chairman, on which I would like to dwell in reply to questions. First of all, there is one that struck me and I should like hon. members to understand that their words touched me. It is the issue of discrimination in immigration. Undoubtedly, discriminatory provisions remain in the act, and I believe there will shortly be means to eliminate such discrimination in a democratic country like ours.

There are historical reasons for that. Doubtless, many historical reasons explain the situation, but I feel the past should be obliterated and we in Canada should be in a position to accept immigrants whatever the colour of their skin, their religion their race and their language. That is basic.

Now, I believe it was the hon. member for Carleton who referred to a general immigration policy, that is that policy which is to be adjusted on a short term basis, as opposed to a long term one that would take into account the normal, gradual and continuous development of Canada.

On this point, I am in complete agreement with the hon. member for Carleton. Our policy cannot be a short term one, because then it easily becomes absurd. Since we do not know about the short term movements and can hardly forecast them, as the hon. member said, we spend our time opening and shutting the tap; but since our forecasts were wrong, the tap is always opened or shut at the wrong time.

Therefore, I think that we will have to disregard those short term movements and try to elaborate a policy—I am not saying that we will not make mistakes—which will at least be a little more in agreement with our ideas and our views about the future of Canada.

The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) talked about immigration. He touched upon a sensitive subject, in view of the ethnic composition of Canada, namely immigration from France or French speaking countries compared to immigration which might come from other countries, such as England.

That is a problem which exists in Canada and it might be better to talk about it since it exists.

There is no doubt that our facilities are much better in England than in France as far as personnel and offices are concerned.

But, in spite of that, it remains that France is still a country which does not favour immigration, and the French people themselves do not emigrate easily, especially at this time because there is full employment in France.

But there is no doubt that there is something to be corrected, and we will try to correct it. However, as I was saying at the beginning of my remarks—I did not say much but at least I said that—we cannot decide alone where we will take our immigrants, because it is necessary that immigrants should want to come and that the countries where they live should also be ready to let them come.

Therefore, we will have to submit and accept the situation as it is.

We have improved our offices in Portugal. I think that last year immigration from Portugal increased considerably; it might increase again during the current year.

I will try to be as brief as possible for reasons that you understand as well as I do.

There was something said also about a policy—I think it was the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) who spoke about the situation of visitors in Canada.

I think that very soon, and I hope that it will be within a few weeks—that depends of course on the house because it might also be in a few months if incidents such as those we witnessed today and last week should happen—we will be able to deal with this situation under which visiting Canada has now become a normal means of coming as an immigrant.

It is a hypocritical situation but what is the reason behind it? Undoubtedly, it is due to a number of difficulties in the countries where those immigrants come from. But, at the present time, there is no doubt that many people who come to Canada to stay come as visitors, because it is easier or because we do not have in their mother countries facilities where they can pass the required examinations before coming to Canada.

It is a hypocritical situation which explains why in Canada there are probably several thousands, possibly tens of thousands of visitors who came to Canada with the intention of staying.

We shall probably advise you, since it can be done according to the rules, on a policy to deal with this situation.

It is utterly unbearable. Mr. Chairman, as long as I am Minister of Immigration, which will probably not be for long, but still while I am, we shall attempt to set up a policy. But once it is drawn up, we shall have to accept it.

At the present time, Canada is in danger of losing control over its immigration policy. We will need a better control than in the past. Whether it is conservative or liberal according to the wishes of the people or the House of Commons, we will have to come to a decision, but once it has been decided, we shall have to stand by it, because, as things are now, we do not know where we are going and have not known for years.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, we shall have to try and make adjustments.

Now, I believe that the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) dealt a little with the criteria that should be used in setting our immigration policy in Canada.

Until now, the main criterion has been professional skill, that is the means to earn a livelihood, an educational background and also what is called sponsorship.

He said that, traditionally, the Department of Labour has been opposed to immigration. What he meant, no doubt—and he may correct me if I am wrong—is that this stems from the influence exerted by labour unions on the Department of Labour which has been rather conservative in the field of immigration.

It is a fact that labour unions are conservative in this respect.

They are conservative to the extent that there is unemployment in Canada, that is to the extent that they feel immigrants will add to the number of unemployed in Canada; well, labour unions will protect their membership first, and I can readily understand that.

But in a normal full-employment situation, I know of no labour unions in Canada that would oppose immigration, provided that there is no increase, through immigration, in the number of unemployed on the Canadian labour market.

Therefore, I believe that so long as we have a normal employment situation, there is nothing to fear from the labour movement; they will agree to immigrants coming to enrich the economic and cultural life of Canada.

[Mr. Marchand.]

Therefore, this is a matter of maintaining a proper balance, but it is obvious that Canada needs qualified labour, and emphasis should be placed on this. But, at the same time, we must realize that by accepting immigrants in Canada, we accept human beings, that is people who may have relatives—wives, sons, mothers, etc.—and that they may be interested, once they are established here, to have their relatives come too, which means that immigration cannot be exclusively selective. It must also be human.

All these factors must then be combined. I think that for the last few years, on the whole, these factors have been taken into account, but perhaps our immigration policy has not yet been properly defined.

There have been complaints that the white paper—

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Complaints have been made that the white paper is not yet ready. I am going to do exactly what former ministers of immigration have done and tell the committee that I am going to try to have it ready as soon as possible.

[Translation]

There is something new.

[English]

I would also do something new. I will be in a position later this week, I hope, to table the Sedgwick report which I trust will help us solve the problem of the appeal board and the discretionary powers of the minister of immigration. I think it will be tabled this week, so this is something new. I think it will also help me to convince hon. members they should wait a little longer for the white paper.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): We will wait ten days.

Mr. Marchand: Ten days is a little short. The hon. member for York-Humber asked some questions about Lord Thomson. I do not know this case personally but I am informed that he voluntarily became a British subject and this is why he lost his Canadian citizenship.

[Translation]

As far as the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) is concerned, it is true that Ontario has immigration offices in England while the province of Quebec has none, neither in France nor elsewhere.

Now, I have yet to meet with the provincial authorities to come to an understanding with them. If the province of Quebec should decide, like Ontario, to set up immigration offices, I think it is up to the Quebec authorities to contact us, because under the Canadian constitution—and let us say that for once that seems rather clear—the federal government's jurisdiction has precedence in matters of immigration. Therefore, that means that if Quebec wants to become interested in the problem of immigration, it is up to that province to contact the federal government. We would be very glad to discuss the matter with the provincial authorities in order to find out what their intentions are and to assist them in achieving their objectives.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[English]

There are a few other questions, Mr. Chairman, but if you will allow me I would prefer to answer them in writing. I know that immigration problems are very inportant. The hon. member for Greenwood said that for many years he has been told by ministers of immigration that everything would be corrected and yet nothing has been done. I can state tonight that it will be the same in a year or two. In the meantime we would hope to try to improve the situation now existing. I think that by proceeding along those lines some day we shall have a sound immigration policy.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, in his reply the hon. minister has been sufficiently provocative that I am tempted to follow him in some of the matters which he has raised. I resist that temptation, however, because I am as anxious as he is to see these estimates put through tonight. I want to refer to one matter only and that, without recapturing any of the atmosphere of this afternoon, is the matter of security.

The minister appreciates that both in immigration and in citizenship the whole subject of security is a very difficult one. Indeed it is probably the most difficult one which the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has to face. There are many times when he must wrestle with his conscience as he reads reports in front him. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister this afternoon has suggested that there will be a commission which will investigate security problems, I wonder if I might put to the minister—I do not ask him to reply or necessarily to commit himself —a request that he will insist with his colleagues that the whole subject of security as it affects immigration to this country and as it affects the grant of citizenship in this country be among the terms of reference of the commission which the Prime Minister proposed.

I believe that this would give some hope to quite a number of people who have been in difficulties in matters of citizenship. There are on the files of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration views which I have expressed in relation to this matter, which views perhaps are unorthodox. I do not think that necessarily questions of security are a reason for depriving persons of citizenship who have been in this country for many years. I should like to see the question of possible membership in organizations which, if persons were coming from abroad, might be considered of a very delicate nature in the security light, considered in a somewhat different light in relation to the question of the application of citizenship.

I spent many hours myself in wrestling with my own conscience in relation to this subject. Speaking for myself, I should be delighted to appear before any commissioner and tell him my experiences in this field as a minister. I think it would be wise and sound for this question to be part of the terms of reference of the commission proposed this afternoon by the Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: I thank the members of the committee and I will be very brief, Mr. Chairman, but that matter troubles my conscience very deeply too.

Like the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), I feel the need to say that I am not any more at ease that he is; I try to see under what standards, at a given moment, citizens or immigrants are turned down and I am a little lost, because there is as much subjectivity in considering those standards. At one time, people can be turned down or accepted in a discretionary manner without knowing exactly what the deeper reasons are, because there are in our laws—and that is true on both sides of the house—sections which are difficult to apply. I must admit that I can say a lot of things because I am new here and people will say: "He did not know, he did not understand the difficulties".

Let us say that I would rather state that there was basic hypocrisy, because we wanted to discourage only one kind of people, without naming them, mentioning them. As a matter of fact, I remember coming across cases where people were accused of doing certain things. I would study them and say to myself very frankly: If I were not already a Canadian citizen, I would not be accepted in Canada, because I did all those things myself in the past.

In any case, I think that is a very important matter which should be cleared up, so that we will no longer be in the dark and we will know exactly why we turn down those people, in short, we will know the true reasons why we turn them down or refuse them their rights.

Let us say that my conscience was deeply troubled about certain things which happened, and the federal officials are not responsible, because I think they try to be as generous as possible; but it seems that there is some confusion in the application of the act and of our traditional policy in that field.

A while ago, I stated categorically that the federal government had priority in the field of immigration. That does not mean that, should a conflict arise between the provincial and federal governments, the latter has the priority. I wanted to make that clear, in order not to create a new problem between Quebec and the federal government.

[English]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister if he can give me some sort of answer to my question dealing with the deprivation of rights of people who are naturalized Canadians. I believe in 1963-64 in the Speech from the Throne it was mentioned that legislation would be brought in to clarify and rectify this situation.

Mr. Marchand: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we are going to bring in amendments dealing with that situation. We agree that it is nonsense at present. Once a citizen is naturalized I think that he should have the same rights as all other Canadian citizens. I think that even if the white paper has been postponed a little, and I do not want to tell you how long I think it will take, we shall do something. In the meantime, I think that we can bring very important amendments before the house.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I am only going to raise two matters at this time relating to questions of citizenship and immigration that are involved when a person becomes a citizen. In the first place, I think we all agree that a person in applying to become a naturalized citizen is really showing an expression of faith in that he wants to become part of this country and become one, with the rest of us. Such an application is an expression of faith because it is voluntary and because it is not a requirement. Because of that I think we are somewhat rigid in maintaining the five year residence requirement. The period of five years may have had some value in the past even though then, as now, it was an arbitrary figure. I know of many people who have come to Canada in recent years who are patiently and sometimes impatiently waiting for the day when the five years of residence will be up so that they can make an application to become Canadian citizens. There would be no difference whatever in their value to themselves, their value to their families or to this nation if they were permitted to make application for citizenship after say two years rather than after five years.

I think we should look closely at the arbitrary five year requirement with a view to reducing it somewhat for persons wishing to make applications to become citizens. Whatever length of time is established it will be an arbitrary figure. There will be some fixed length of time involved. I am rather partial to a two year period or a three year period, which is approximately half that existing at the moment.

I know that in recent years there has been a tremendous influx into Canada from all parts of the world of people who have come here to settle down, raise their families and become an integral part of our nation. They are only waiting for the day when they have fulfilled the requirement of five years residence. I seriously urge the minister, in his easy and frank approach to these questions, to concern himself with this matter along with the others he has to consider. Possibly in one of his weekly or monthly statements he can tell us that the residential requirement will be reduced to something like two years or three years, admittedly an arbitrary period just as any other period would be arbitrary.

With respect to the mechanism by which a person becomes a Canadian I should like to suggest to the minister that there is a marked difference between the approach taken by the various Citizenship Courts, a marked difference in the attitude of the various judges who hear and determine applications for citizenship.

A case comes to mind of a judge we had at home who was considered so rigid and so difficult in his insistence on applicants naming all the great lakes and rivers of Canada, geographical nonsense of that kind about which many native Canadians would be uninformed, that many new Canadians refrained from making application for citizenship because they knew of the difficulties their friends and relatives had experienced when appearing before him. A change was made in the judgeship. This gentleman was moved or promoted to another post within the judicial structure. He was replaced by another judge, one who brought a kindly, gentlemanly and pleasant approach to his consideration of these applications. The approach of this second judge is the one which I think should be followed. His concern is not so much with an applicant's knowledge of the geography of the country or his ability to recite the number of provinces and so on. He is concerned about the expression of opinion and feeling on the part of the applicant. He goes further than what may be memorized; he seeks to look into an applicant's heart and mind, to find out the nature of his expectation and desire to become a Canadian citizen.

I use the example of these two judges, not naming them, to show the minister how there can be such marked, almost extreme differences in the approach taken by Citizenship Courts when considering applications. I admit at the outset that it is impossible to set down a set of rules for such cases as if one were introducing tests to determine an applicant's fitness for a driving licence. Nevertheless I believe an attempt should be made to set down guide lines or general criteria for judges in these courts to follow so that there might be some uniformity in the treatment of individuals who voluntarily make applications to become citizens with the rest of us.

These are general thoughts I pass on to the minister. They have been mentioned to many of his predecessors. I hope the present minister will remain in his post long enough to do something about them or that if he leaves he will be able so to imbue his officials with these concepts that whoever replaces him will have no choice but to carry on the policies which he has developed along these as along other lines.

Mr. Marchand: On that point, the hon. member probably knows that the citizenship branch is supposed to be transferred to another department in due course. I know that my colleague, the Secretary of State, will be happy to be convinced by the hon. member that what he has said is the right thing.

Mr. Winch: In view of the fact that we have in the chamber this evening the present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration as well as the former minister there are one or two remarks I should like to make without keeping the committee too long. I made a statement during the last parliament and I want to repeat it now for the benefit of the new minister. In the 13 years I have been in the House of Commons the present Minister of Labour, formerly the minister responsible for citizenship and immigration, showed more humanity in my opinion than any other minister of citizenship and immigration I know of.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: I hope the humanity and understanding which the former minister showed in relation to the matters I discussed with him—I have many cases from my riding —will be continued by the present minister. The points I should like to bring to the attention of the present minister are similar to those which I drew to the attention of his predecessor. First, I do not like or appreciate in any way the policy which has been followed both by Liberals and Conservatives of permitting applications for citizenship to be denied, even after they have been recommended by the courts, without the person concerned or the member of parliament acting on his behalf being told why.

I represent, as I have said, a riding where there are a great many people of varying ethnic origins. What happens when relatives wish to visit them? What happens when sons and daughters wish to visit their parents in Canada? A visitor's visa is denied them without any explanation being given. If these people wished to become landed immigrants there might be some reason for these refusals. But when they ask only for a six month visitor's visa to see parents or other relatives whom they may not have seen for 30 years I can see no possible reason for denying them a visa and refusing to give any reason.

I am sure the present Minister of Labour, formerly minister of citizenship and immigration, knows what I have in mind. A landed immigrant who has been in Canada for five years may make a successful application for citizenship to a court. Then the authority in Ottawa says no. Surely the person concerned is entitled to know the reason for not granting citizenship in such cases and surely the member of parliament who is asked to look after the case is entitled to know, even in confidence, the reason for refusal.

There are three people in my constituency whose relatives would like to get visitors' permits to see their mothers, sisters or brothers, and when the answer is no surely they are entitled to know the reason or, if necessary, their member of parliament should be given the reason in confidence. This matter has concerned me during the 13 years I have been in this chamber. It is absolutely unfair that a person should be denied citizenship after spending five years in Canada and that his relatives should also be denied the right to visit Canada on visitors' visas.

There was one case I tried to handle for five or six years. I could not get anywhere but the present Minister of Labour, when he was minister of citizenship and immigration, showed his humanity and said the persons involved should be let in and they were. I am asking that this trend be continued by the new minister or at least he should give us the reasons people are denied their rights and found guilty without the opportunity to answer the charge that must have been laid against them.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with Citizenship Courts first. I must echo the words of the hon. member for Skeena and say, speaking from my own experience in the Hamilton-Niagara peninsula area, that I completely agree with them. I have before me a booklet entitled "Guide to Canadian Citizenship," some 90 pages long. At the end of each chapter there is a list of questions, the answers to which an immigrant is supposed to know. In the preface it states:

> When your examination takes place the judge may ask you questions on any of these subjects as a means of testing your knowledge of Canada and Canadian institutions.
> At the end of each section of the booklet you will find a number of questions. The answers to many of these questions will be found in the text of the booklet. Other answers you may discover by reading or asking your friends.

That is very illuminating.

> It is most important for you to understand that the questions in this booklet are not necessarily the ones that will be used by the judge in your court examination. They are simply to test your knowledge of what you have read.

And at the bottom it says "Good luck". I say that many of the people who appear before Citizenship Courts need all the luck they can get to pass the examinations because there are some questions to which not even the Court Presidents know the answers. I tell the minister and the minister-designate that a serious look must be taken to ensure uniformity across the country concerning questions asked by Citizenship Court Presidents.

I submit that some of the qualifications of these Court Presidents are certainly not ones which fit them for the posts to which they have been appointed. If you think I am being overly harsh, Mr. Chairman, let me state that I intend to be in some respects. I have complained for three years about the Citizenship Court in my area and from personal knowledge I say a serious look must be taken at the appointments made to the presidencies of these courts.

From personal experience I know of the very arrogant approach which some Court Presidents have taken to immigrants, so arrogant that the immigrants' friends and relatives refuse to apply for citizenship because of the insults received. I know of a case where only one question was asked of the applicant but he was turned down and abused. I can understand the qualifications so far as language is concerned, but when the county court judges were handling citizenship applications we did not receive the complaints we are receiving today. There is a difference. Many representations have been made on this matter. I am sure the hon. member for Carleton, when he was minister of citizenship and immigration, was aware of the complaints made regarding Presidents of Citizenship Courts. I know personally that such complaints were made to him by a former member. This is a matter which I intend to bring up in a more detailed manner when the estimates of the department next come before us.

Something else which has been bothering me for many years is the question of Chinese immigration from Hong Kong. Not too long ago a statement was made in the House of Commons providing for an amnesty and an extension of time to enable Chinese people to come forward and clarify their status. Many of the Canadian Chinese community did so voluntarily, but an incongruous situation has arisen when these self-same people, having clarified their status and having received their certificates of Canadian citizenship, try to bring their relatives from Hong Kong. They are told they do not meet the requirements of the Act because they made a false statement at the time the sponsoring relative came to Canada. Even though the sponsor's status has been clarified, the proposed immigrants are refused admission. I ask the minister to look into this serious matter. It is a ridiculous situation.

There is another matter I should like to bring to the minister's attention. I believe many hon. members spend more than enough time on immigration questions concerning their constituents and I feel there are cases where this is not necessary because it is due only to the red tape, bureaucracy and arrogance of staff in various offices and branches of the department.

In many cases where people have come to a member's home or office seeking to have representations made on their behalf, not overly representations but with respect to normal applications and procedure and assistance, we have found that some of these people come back to us and say something to this effect, that when they went to the department of immigration they found that the clerk, officer or administrative official dealing with the case, when he discovered an M.P. had been approached, took an altogether different approach. They were told in effect, "Your member of parliament cannot help you. You should not have gone to him. It is too bad."

Mr. Winch: Or, "You should go to a lawyer."

Mr. Herridge: When there is no need.

Mr. Peters: If there was no money they would not help. They are a bunch of gangsters.

Mr. Herridge: Pay $300 to get into Canada.

Mr. Winch: Arrogance is right.

Mr. Herridge: When they are already paid as members of parliament to do the job.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Macaluso: Those are not my remarks, Mr. Chairman. I am only saying many members of parliament only wish constituents did not need to come to them to get action but many of these people come to us because they do not understand what is happening.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Many members of parliament advise these people in good faith to deal with the officials in the immigration department in their own particular communities, and when these persons come back and relate to us that a particular officer or official has been arrogant and abusive to the particular person who had the nerve to see his member of parliament, then I suggest something is wrong and the matter should be looked into very carefully by the minister.

I do not intend to take up the time of the house any longer on these matters but I do intend to deal with them at length when the estimates come forward again. However, I should like to bring this matter to the attention of the minister at this time. I echo the words of the hon. member for Skeena when he said that something must be done about the Citizenship Courts.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just one very brief word. I could not help but listen with great attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena and the member for Hamilton West concerning the procedures in the Citizenship Courts. A long step forward was made in this regard when the courts were placed in areas rather than in counties, because in one county a judge may have been good and in another county not so good. In respect of guide lines and methods in Citizenship Courts I should like to mention to the new Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that the methods and procedures used by His Honour Judge Campbell Calder in the London Citizenship Court in my area could not be carried out in a better or more practical way. They are a credit to the office he holds.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say a few words. I shall not be as long as the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso), because I do not want to be accused of delaying the estimates of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand). I also wish to congratulate him on his appointment to his new position; I hope that he will perform his duties satisfactorily.

In his opening remarks, the hon. minister said that there were 148,000 immigrants to Canada last year. He also pointed out that there were certain difficulties concerning immigrants of French origin.

Could he tell me the percentage of immigrants of French origin who came to Canada last year and to what parts of the country they were directed?

This question may involve statistics and the minister probably cannot answer me today, but I should like him to give me this information in the next few days.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, I could give them in writing tomorrow if the hon. member so wishes.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, I would also like to know why it is so difficult to bring French speaking immigrants. Is it because the officers of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration care very little in having French speaking immigrants? I would ask the minister to give me reasons for such difficulties.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, may I answer something in this regard? It may be at the time the hon. member was at lunch but when I spoke about my estimates, I gave the reasons why this is so.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, I am aware of those reasons, but I feel there may be others for the Minister to discover upon inquiry with his officials. I should be pleased to know of other reasons as I am convinced there are some.

The minister also replied to the question put by the member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) concerning the possibility of concurrent jurisdiction between the provinces and the federal government in the field of immigration. The minister somehow did not think too clearly in this respect; at the outset he said immigration comes under federal jurisdiction, but later on he changed that, saying that there could be concurrent jurisdiction in the case of Quebec where, at the present time, the Minister of Cultural Affairs seems greatly interested in this matter. An act has been adopted in Quebec, as the minister knows. In that case, must the provinces get in touch and co-operate with the federal Department of Citizenship and Immigration with regard to this important question of immigration?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, the province like the federal government has jurisdiction in the field of immigration. But section 94, if my memory serves me correctly, says that in the case where the provincial legislation conflicts with or contradicts the federal legislation, the federal government takes precedence.

I said the same thing twice, but I meant to clear it up.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, can the minister tell me whether the Quebec government got in touch with him about the establishment of an immigration service in Quebec?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, Quebec did not get in touch with us.

[Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix).]

[English]

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, I have just one or two matters for the minister. First of all, I should like to express my agreement with those who have raised various problems in respect of the Citizenship Courts. There should be some unification of approach to the granting of citizenship to immigrants so there will not be discrimination and hardship in respect of the questions asked of these people and their knowledge concerning Canadian citizenship. The former minister of citizenship and immigration knows that last winter I raised this matter with him. I am dissatisfied with the way these courts have been extended. I know the new minister will be interested in this. I know we are catching up gradually but I hope the government will see that these courts are extended as quickly as possible.

A matter has come to my attention concerning a particular case. I will not mention the name but I should like to tell the minister about the facts of this case because I do not believe his departmental officials can cope with the matter. I want to say that there is no recrimination against the officials. Personally I have had very good co-operation from the ministers and any officials with whom I have had to deal either here in Ottawa or in my constituency of Regina. The case concerns two children who were born out of wedlock and a subsequent marriage. The law says that only the mother may apply for citizenship for the children. In this case, regardless of what kind of citizenship court we have, personally I do not think the mother ever will qualify to become a Canadian citizen and yet she is a good mother and it is a good family. In Saskatchewan either the mother or father has authority for these children but I am told that under federal law the mother only can be granted the right to ask for citizenship. The father is a citizen. He wants his children to be Canadian citizens. They are good children and will make good citizens.

Unless some change is made, in my opinion there is no hope of these children ever becoming Canadian citizens. I bring this matter to the attention of the minister because I think that if I have a case like this there must be other cases throughout the country. I see no reason in a particular case like this and under these circumstances why an application by the father on behalf of these children should not be recognized and citizenship arranged. I should like the minister to look into this.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, the matter raised by the hon. member for Hamilton West is a very interesting one which I think warrants some comment because over a period of time we have seen a change in this regard. I should like to congratulate some of the senior officials of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and the former minister of citizenship and immigration on the change which has taken place.

There is no question but that many sections of the Act lend themselves to misinterpretation. For many years there has been—and I think this is a fact—a great predominance of attention to legal arguments that have been used on behalf of certain classes of citizens in certain fields and the department itself has not used any discretion. In many cases this created terrific hardships.

I think the minister is to be congratulated for the changes that have taken place. I have had considerable experience with some of the senior officials of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and have found some of them to be completely unsympathetic. But I have found in recent months that many of the officials are much more sympathetic and willing to pay some attention to many of the wishes of the ministers of this department. I have been in the house since 1957 and I think each and every minister has said that changes would be made in many of the fields that have been discussed this evening and in every case these changes have not come to pass.

I think it is safe and fair to say that some of the senior officials of the department are now paying some attention to the desires and wishes expressed by ministers and supported by most members of parliament. They have given consideration to the fact that the legislation has not been presented and are really paying heed to some of the suggestions that obviously will be included in the legislation when it is introduced. I believe the previous minister is entitled to a considerable degree of credit for the changes that have been made in the department and its personnel. I think it would be unfair to leave the impression that perhaps many hon. members have, namely, that all the officials of this department are not as honest as they should be and have not used discretion in cases where discretion should have been used.

This was true in many cases in the past and over a period of years to my knowledge, but I am of the opinion that the previous minister was a credit to the department and assisted many Canadians and other people wishing to bring their families into this country. I certainly hope the attention that has been paid to the human element involved in immigration cases will be continued. Immigrants have not always told the truth. They have been advised by officials not to tell the truth because if they told the truth they would not be able to do certain things. This is why we got into the terrible mess with regard to the Chinese communities in this country. Over the years a lie was compounded by dozens of people until they reached the stage where they really did not know who they were and what their relationships were. Consequently we found brother marrying sister and other relationships that created an impossible situation. To a large extent I blame the officials of the department who over the years have made this situation possible. If necessary I could give the details of some of the stories in connection with this department with which many hon. members are familiar. These cases occurred a few years ago and are no credit to the department.

To my knowledge most of these abuses have been corrected and I am quite proud of the change that has been made and the human element that has now been introduced into the field of legislation. At all times the human element should be a deciding factor in immigration cases and I hope the new minister and those now responsible in the department will continue to give this type of understanding which I think is very necessary in this particular field.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, a moment ago I asked the minister some questions about two aspects of citizenship policy. He replied in the vein that I should know what his reply was, but he answered that the citizenship branch was being transferred to the Department of the Secretary of State for administration by that department. Could the minister tell the committee when the decision was made to make that transfer and whether it involves only the citizenship branch?

Mr. Marchand: It involves only the citizenship branch, Mr. Chairman. I do not know exactly when the transfer will be made. It will have to be approved by the House of Commons. With regard to the first question put to me, I think we all agree that there should be some uniformity in the Citizenship Courts. I know this is something on which the department has been working, and we shall continue to work in this direction. It has been announced that the citizenship branch will be transferred to the Department of the Secretary of State. This transfer will be effective when the House of Commons approves of it.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What about the citizenship registration branch? Will that branch be transferred also? Will both branches be transferred?

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Howard: I did not ask when the transfer would take effect; I asked when the decision was made to make the transfer. May I follow that question with one other thought before the minister replies. It is my understanding that under the Transfer of Duties Act this sort of transfer could be made by order in council as was the transfer of the Indian affairs branch to northern affairs. The minister shakes his head and says no, that it must be done by statute. I accept the shaking of his head to this effect. When was the decision made to make the transfer?

Mr. Marchand: It was announced when the Prime Minister announced the creation of the department of manpower. He announced at the same time that the citizenship branch was going to be transferred.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, an hour or so ago I asked the minister a three part question regarding foreign decorations. I received a passable answer to the first of the three questions. I was told that Lord Thomson of Fleet, who was decorated by the Queen of Canada, had chosen to become a British subject. I also asked a question as to what happened in the case of Premier Lesage of Quebec who accepted the Order of the Phoenix from the King of Greece. Did Premier Lesage become a citizen of Greece?

Mr. Marchand: No, not that I know of.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Administration—

1. Departmental administration, $2,330,100.

The Chairman: Order. The committee will now proceed to the consideration of the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, Item No. 1, to be found on page 284 of the blue book. Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, is the minister not going to make a statement?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to make an extended statement. I hope to have an opportunity to reply to any questions or points that may be raised by members of the committee following their participation in the debate. All I wish to do is tell the committee that I welcome this opportunity to appear before the committee in my new role of Minister of National Health and Welfare and pay tribute to my predecessors in this portfolio on both sides of the house.

I have learned since going into the department about their leadership and appreciate what they have done as much as I appreciate the excellent work being done in the department by the staff of the Department of National Health and Welfare. If hon. members wish me to direct my attention to any particular points which are raised I shall be glad to do so.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to congratulate the minister on his appointment to the Department of National Health and Welfare. I do not know whether this is a rest from labour or how he got this appointment but I am very glad to see him associated with this department. I was also very pleased to see the hon. lady member for Westmorland appointed as his Parliamentary Secretary and I am sure she will make a very capable assistant. This situation is all the more charming because the hon. gentleman is a bachelor. I am sure the hon. lady will help smooth out the difficult ruffles because ladies usually tend to lend a more sympathetic ear to human problems, with which the Department of National Health and Welfare is very much concerned. In all seriousness, Mr. Chairman—I have now been distracted from my speech, and am slightly embarrassed—I should like to congratulate the minister and his lovely assistant.

At this point I want to deal briefly with medicare and some of the problems inherent in it. Medicare was a plank in the Liberal platform, added very hastily and proclaimed across this country in a promise that we would have an almost universal medicare plan, 95 per cent, by 1967. In this regard I have grave doubts.

I am sure the minister is sincere. I have been following some of the speeches he has made outside of the house but I sometimes wonder about his success in this regard, particularly when I think back to a platform of Mackenzie King in 1919 which has as a Plank free hospitalization for Canadians. I was in the house in 1958, 39 years after that promise was made, when the Conservative government passed an Act now known as the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. This became a fait accompli in 1958, as I say, 39 years after that promise.

I do not believe this government intends to take as long to implement their promise regarding a medicare service but I have some doubt about the 1967 target for several reasons. I do not think the way they went about this would lend itself to success. They held a meeting here in Ottawa and said they would pay the average national per capita cost of medical services across Canada at the rate of $28, but that is also the average cost in the province of Quebec. I do not even hint that Mr. Lesage was consulted in this regard, but that was not the average cost in the province of Ontario nor in many other provinces. The average cost in this province was $42 per capita, and I suggest the reason for this—this would apply to the province of British Columbia and other provinces—is that fees and para-medical services are higher. Ontario is a high cost province and I suggest it was not much wonder why Ontario and some of the other provinces did not accept this idea, particularly the province of Ontario which pays 45 per cent of taxes in Canada.

In view of these facts I am sure it is no wonder that Ontario launched its own medicare program. It is a plan that starts at a base which can be built up. This in my opinion is what is necessary in Canada in the position we find ourselves today with a shortage of doctors, para-medical services, hospital beds, research, medical schools and teachers. In my opinion it is supreme folly to say that we can have a complete medicare service in 1967. It is utterly impossible to expect such an accomplishment when one considers that the work load of general practitioners is greater than they can handle today.

I should like to suggest to the government that it take a look at what the province of Ontario has done. It has adopted a medicare scheme that will cover almost two million people. This is a plan related to Physicians Services Incorporated in the province of Ontario which pays 90 per cent of medical fees and is totally acceptable to the doctors of this province. When the Ontario plan comes into effect on July 1, 80 per cent to 85 per cent of its people will be covered by public carrier or private carrier.

I should like to suggest to the federal government, keeping these facts in mind, that it could go ahead and pay the per capita costs to the province of Ontario and to other provinces such as Alberta and British Columbia. In support of this suggestion I should like to quote from a statement made during the last election campaign, as reported in the Calgary Herald for November 1, 1965:

> Agriculture Minister Harry Hays said today. . . . "If Alberta should decide to stay out of any national (medicare) plan, then I'm sure some way can be negotiated to make sure the people of Alberta don't lose any of their rightful tax benefits.

I suggest that is a pretty clear indication of straight thinking so far as the province of Alberta is concerned, enunciated by a former minister.

I should also like to point out that the former minister of trade and commerce, the present Minister of Finance, is reported in the Ottawa Citizen of November 5 as having said in Toronto on November 4:

> Trade Minister Sharp told an all-party rally Thursday, November 4, a Liberal government may have to delay introduction of a national medical care scheme because of a shortage of doctors and nurses. "I don't know if we'll be able to reach that (1967) target."

The minister goes on to say:

> The doctor-nurse shortage would be given immediate attention by the next government following the federal election Monday.

I should like to hear from the minister as to what he has done regarding the doctor shortage.

The former minister of national health and welfare, as reported in the Canadian Press article of September 24, said:

> —the goal is to have at least 95 per cent of the people of a province covered, but if that cannot be achieved initially, 90 per cent will be acceptable and there may be flexibility in the 90 per cent figure.

I suggest that both those statements contain commonsense facts.

I should now like to refer to the Hall Commission report which pointed out that there was an acute shortage of doctors, and that this plan could not be implemented at once. It pointed out that it should be started although it could not be implemented immediately because of a shortage of doctors, dentists and para-medical services. The report suggests, however, that this plan should be at least started. The people should not be cheated. They have been promised something and the government should go ahead with that promise. The government must start to make an effort to increase the number of doctors—not next year but now.

In this regard the government must take steps to provide four additional medical schools before 1971. We must have 500 new medical students each year in each faculty of medicine across the country. There has been a little diffidence in this regard. Some medical schools have not been able to get their quotas of students in past years. Only 7 per cent of grade 13 students is all we have been able to attract to medical faculties and that is not enough to attain the 500 new students per year which are required. I should also like to say that when we attain this 500 students per year figure it will take seven to eight years before they begin to practise medicine. I might say in this regard that we doubled the per capita grants to universities. I think in 1959.

Above all, when we get these 500 students per year it will be seven or eight years before they can be put to work in the medical field. This is not good enough. Even if the government were going to embark on medicare four years from now, they should now be creating a crash program in our medical schools, and there is no reason this cannot be done.

In 1940 a crash program was started across the land to produce doctors. The doctors were produced and medical schools were open all year round. Why should these expensive buildings and facilities remain idle during the summer months? This is a waste which at the moment we cannot afford either from the standpoint of producing doctors or cost. The minister will say we have not got the teachers to do this but we found a great many teachers between 1940 and 1945 in our forces overseas, so I suggest this would be a pretty lame excuse. In addition, through research we should be able to produce quicker and more modern methods of teaching. We could use closed circuit television in our medical schools to release teachers for research work which would make this country great. We could have special centres for special diagnostic work and information.

There is no question that we must have teachers and in this regard I think we could use some certified general practitioners.

[Mr. Rynard.]

When I went to medical school one of my greatest teachers was a general practitioner. I believe we could use these doctors today to get us out of this crisis, and I do not think any problem would arise. We have to get students, universities and teachers before we can produce any more medical doctors. I would say to the minister, do not deceive the people by saying that you are going to bring in this plan and provide full service because it simply cannot be done.

I should like to say a few words on the question of hospital beds. I am sure the minister is well aware that only this past month Mr. Robarts presented a report to the Ontario house from the Ontario Hospital Services Commission which stated there were not enough beds for the people who need them. This is a very serious problem and may mean that lives are lost.

The minister will probably reply that this is not his responsibility. But let me tell him that when the Conservative party came into power in 1958 it immediately doubled hospital grants for beds. Since that time nothing has been done. Our party provided for interns' quarters, for nurses' residences, for laboratories and for physiotherapy units by way of grants to each service.

I do not want to berate the minister on this subject but I would draw to his attention, because he is new to the job, that I found when I looked up the record that in the last eight years the provincial government of Ontario has increased its grants three times. Therefore I think you will agree, Mr. Chairman, that there is a serious deficiency on the part of the federal government which should be remedied at once. As I say, Ontario's government increased its grants three times, and building costs have risen from $10,000 per bed eight years ago to $20,000 to $25,000 today. During the last year I was told by an architect that hospital building costs in one city have risen 30 per cent. I am sure the minister will recognize that some of this increase is due to taxes imposed by his government.

So I just draw the attention of the minister, Mr. Chairman, to the necessity for action by way of providing beds. I would ask him whether he does not think it fair or right to plug these loopholes before embarking on a full scheme of medicare which he cannot fulfil and for which he is going to charge the people of Canada, leaving doctors overworked and patients frustrated with poor attention.

Another problem is that we have been a long way behind in many things but as we look back over the years we find that in 1951 we graduated from our medical schools 34 doctors more than were graduated in 1961 and this in spite of the fact that, excluding immigrants, there was a natural increase in population of over three million people. This is an astonishing thing. Neither governments nor universities have taken the necessary steps to correct this, and this inaction has left us in a very serious predicament. During that period of time we have had between 500 to 600 immigrant doctors per year, 90 per cent of them from the U.K. These people are well trained and a great asset. Most of them left the United Kingdom because of the introduction of state medicine and they came to this country. I should like to put on the record the fact that these doctors represent a gift of about $3 billion by way of earning power in this country over their natural lifetimes.

This money, Mr. Chairman, would build a lot of universities and schools and would provide for a lot of the research so badly needed in this country. I should also like to point out to the minister that in this country we spent last year on medical research approximately $10 million while the United States spent $1 billion. I say that is just not right. How in the world are we going to get highly qualified teachers and keep them in our universities and schools if that is all we give them for research? I hope the minister does not do this year what he did last year when he spent only 60 per cent of his budget which was approved for research purposes, leaving 40 per cent of it to go by the board. The consequence was that 40 per cent of the people who would have conducted that research were left to go to the United States or elsewhere, which is not good enough. That is why I say to the minister in a spirit of kindness that these are loopholes in his department that must be plugged.

Another loophole in his department is the handling of mental health cases. The federal government does not contribute to the cost of beds in mental hospitals. It is a fact that 50 per cent of the hospital beds occupied in Canada today are filled by patients with mental disease. I would suggest that the government must do something to remedy this situation. The federal government should recognize support for mentally ill patients just as for physically ill patients. Are these people going to be covered under the medicare plan? At the moment the federal government does not contribute to the cost of their hospitalization or provide hospital beds. Are these people going to be ruled out under medicare? These questions must be answered and we must straighten out the position of these people.

There are a lot of other matters on which I could dwell but I will cut my speech a little short and go to the question of research. We are spending only $1 million on research into mental disease. I am sure that the minister knows as well as I do that we are spending, I think, $54 million in defence research and we are only spending $1 million for mentally ill people. The brain is the finest creation of the Creator, and it is not being accepted when a person, a physical being has anything wrong with hin, that money should be spent on him. One million dollars only is being spent on research in this field. When you think of the terrific economic loss that it means to the public and to the families of those people who are sick mentally, you realize that we should be spending $10 million or more on research into mental disease.

I want to say one thing more to the minister and then I shall expect some answers. I realize that this is a new department for the minister. I have always respected him and thought of him as a reasonable man. I will expect when he looks at this question of mental illness that he will come back to his estimates with an altogether different viewpoint than expressed in some of the things I have read. It seems to me that his attitude is to seek full medicare or 90 per cent medicare coverage by 1967. I shall have more to say about this to the minister. I will not say anything more now except that I think we are ten years behind where we ought to have been in starting medicare. I think we have not many potholes or loopholes to clear up, but we may be or going to get into trouble. We may break or do considerable harm to our medical profession. We may harm those who are carrying the load, which is another thing you have to think about, and lower seriously the medical standard that we now enjoy.

I would ask the minister from Nova Scotia if he knows what the president of the Nova Scotian medical society said? He said that the situation is so serious with regard to the shortage of doctors in general practice today that, "We must consider shortening the course to four years." That comes from the minister's own province. I would submit to the minister that he talk to Dr. Gorman, who is very well known, to get some of his viewpoints on this very important subject.

I also want to say that we are spending about one hundredth per capita of the amount spent in the United States in research. We are away down the scale compared with most of the have countries of the world. We are away down the scale compared with Great Britain. Research in universities is the science that brings to light new products, new ideas, new drugs, that finds out new diseases and finds out how to treat and cure chronic diseases.

Research is of inestimable value. I want to point out that we are still benefiting from the research done by Banting and Best at the University of Toronto in 1923 in the discovery of insulin. If we do not want to remain hewers of wood and drawers of water we shall have to put money into research. So long as we are prepared to let the United States do our research, so long, Mr. Chairman, will we remain hewers of wood and drawers of water.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the minister to his new post in the Department of National Health and Welfare and I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Westmorland on her appointment as Parliamentary Secretary to the minister. I should also like to join with the minister in the tribute that he paid to the efficient and hard working staff that he has in his department. I have been around here now for a few years and I have got to know a few civil servants. It happens because of the committees I have been on and particular interests I have had that I have got to know the members of his staff, and the work that they do in a special way. I want to say that in my view his tribute to the work they do was well deserved.

I said at the outset that I welcomed the minister to his new department. I am sure that he will not be surprised if I remind him that in the department he left, he left behind a number of items of unfinished business. I will not recite them now because it would be out of order to do so. I recited them the other night when the estimates of the Department of Labour were before us. However, he is already aware of the fact that, if he left behind some items of unfinished business, he inherited some when he came into the Department of National Health and Welfare. I do not detract for a moment from the good job that his predecessor did, with a little help of course, in getting the Canada Pension Plan onto the statute books. However, there were a few items that even she was not able to accomplish in the last parliament.

Mainly, what I want to do in these few minutes in which I now choose to speak is to remind the minister of these items and to urge him to get cracking on them.

First of all, and I say this briefly because my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway will deal with this as well as other matters in greater detail, he must not ever get the notion that the old age security pension can be left where it is, at $75 a month. The fact that this house made a decision the wrong way on a couple of motions earlier in this session does not settle the issue so far as the Canadian people are concerned. All the arguments that were used last session to the effect that the pension package would have been a better one if we had matched the Canada Pension Plan with $100 a month as the old age security pension not only still stand but are given greater force by the increase in the cost of living which has taken place since that time.

I urge the minister to realize that he simply must cope with this issue. It is just as urgent a matter as were the important matters that he had to deal with when he was Minister of Labour.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a question?

Mr. Knowles: Certainly.

Mr. Churchill: Has not the minister already committed himself in the public speech that he made the other day?

Mr. MacEachen: No.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to talk about that later, but without transgressing on the ground that I know my colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway wants to cover I may say that in our view a pension increase should be an increase. There should not be any tests or strings tied to it. We will develop that later, but we think it would be a mistake if you spoiled the old age pension program that was built on a universal basis by having tests or strings attached to it.

The second item, Mr. Chairman, about which nothing has been done for a long time, although it has frequently been raised in this house, is the question of the amount of the family allowance payments. It is true that the youth allowance was added in the last parliament, but the amounts that are paid under the Family Allowances Act are still those that were set when the legislation was first passed back in 1944. The only change made in all those years is that instead of having four rates there are only two. But those two rates are rates that were set in 1944 and came into effect on July 1, 1945. That is an item of unfinished business on which we will expect action from this minister.

The minister also knows that left over from the last session is the Canada Assistance Plan. I know that this leads us into questions of policy that are close to the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre a moment ago. At any rate, there certainly are some aspects of the Canada Assistance Plan which in my view would represent a forward step in social security, and I regret that no action was taken about this legislation at the last session.

As I recall the legislation it was promised it would be brought down last session. And I believe during the election campaign last fall two or three Liberal speakers referred to the Canada Assistance Plan as though it had actually been passed. Some of their research people had to let them know that it was merely on the list of things yet to be done. That is where it remains. We were told that the target date for this legislation to be in effect was April 1, 1966. Well, today is March 7 and the minister will obviously have to hurry up. I would remind him that this does happen to be a month in which there are 31 days. This gives him an extra day. He will know what I am referring to. Another item on the list was the health resources fund, the target date for which was January 1, 1966. This date has already gone by, so even the fact there are 31 days in March will not help the minister to meet that target.

These are in outline some of the items of unfinished business which this minister has inherited. If he is to earn the bouquets that are coming his way he must see to it that action is taken on all of them.

The other subject, the important one to which the hon. member for Simcoe East devoted the greater part of his remarks, is medicare. Though I have saved it to the last of the items which I am reciting tonight I hope the minister will recognize that it ought to have top priority in his scheme of things. I must say at the outset that I am in disagreement with the hon. member for Simcoe East. He will not be surprised at that. However, whereas he was trying to persuade the minister to depart from the medicare election promise of the last two or three campaigns, I stand here again to urge this Liberal Minister of National Health and Welfare to take steps to implement the promise which his party has made over the years.

Mr. Rynard: I wonder if I could make a correction? I said that we should have started this scheme 10 years ago. I am all in favour of this. But I want to fill up the potholes so that we will be ready to go ahead and not deceive the people. The hon. member could not have been listening to me.

Mr. Knowles: I was listening carefully. That was one of the points the hon. member made, and I made a note of it because I wanted to draw attention to the inconsistency of telling the government it was 10 years behind the times and then urging it to slow down, to wait another 10 years or another 47. I want to say what hardly needs to be said because it is a principle which has been recognized time and time again and it has been documented extremely well in the Hall report—that in this field of medicare there is no room for any kind of means test such as one finds in the plan which has been brought into effect in this province. In the Ontario plan a division is made between those who have one level of income and those who have another, thereby introducing into this important social legislation a basis of discrimination which will before long, I believe, prove just as damaging to the dignity of human beings as the means test was for the many years when it was applied to determine eligibility for old age pensions.

I urge the minister to face the fact that precisely because Ontario and other provinces have come along with inferior plans is no reason for the federal government to go slowly. On the contrary, this is all the more reason for the federal government to move faster. Indeed, the fact that some of the provinces have come in with other plans underlines the mistake which has been made by the federal government in delaying. Had action only been taken in this area a long time ago we should be a lot better off.

Speaking of the hon. member for Simcoe East and inconsistencies on his part to which I wanted to draw attention, I note he complained because Mr. King delayed for so many years with regard to hospitalization as one aspect of national insurance—delayed and delayed until it was left to a Conservative government to implement the first hospital insurance plan. I think that for the record it should be pointed out that the Liberals brought in the legislation just before they were defeated in 1957 but it took the Conservatives to make the necessary amendments so that the legislation could be implemented.

The hon. member complained that Mr. King was so slow. But tonight he employs the very arguments that we used to hear from Mr. King. He used to tell us it was no use having hospital insurance until we had the hospital beds. Now, tonight, the hon. member who condemns Mr. King is saying it is no use having medicare until we have all the doctors and all the facilities necessary for carrying it out. I suggest that one of the things which led to an increase in the number of hospital beds and to the building of hospitals was precisely the growth of hospital insurance and I contend that the same would happen in the field of medicare. I urge the government not to retreat by one iota from the four points the Prime Minister laid down in July, 1965. Personally, and speaking for this party, I would like to see the Hall report implemented in full. But at least those four points which the Prime Minister laid down last July are good and provide a basis for a good medicare scheme in this country. Let me repeat them.

First, it was proposed that the contribution by the present government to provincial schemes would require that coverage in the province be universal; second, that the coverage would take into account the broad range of medical needs required; third, that the plan should be government operated; fourth, that the plan should be portable among the provinces of Canada. I suggest that nothing less than this is good enough and I urge that action on this kind of plan be taken during the present session.

The hon. member for Simcoe East, drawing attention to the change which had to be made in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, reminded us of the fact that the Liberal government of the St. Laurent day stood for a long time on the position that it would not move into hospital insurance until a certain number of the provinces representing a certain portion of the population would enter this field. For some time the present government was taking a similar position with regard to medicare. Recently, however, the government has moved away from that position, and I hope it stays away from it.

What the government should do now, I strongly suggest, is to bring in this legislation, put it on the statute books and make it available to the provinces as they are prepared to come in, even if there are only two or three provinces at first. That is the only way in which hospital insurance got going and I suggest it is the only way in which medicare will get going. I am glad to get the minister's attention at this point. I urge him to take action on these lines. I hope he will not take the position that with the hon. member for Simcoe East urging him to go in one direction and the member for Winnipeg North Centre urging him to go in another, he can try to go down the middle. There is no middle way between a means test and universality; there is no middle way between a partial plan and full coverage. We suggest that if the government is worth its salt this is the area in which it must act during this session. I know that the minister and the former parliamentary secretary to the department, the hon. member for Hamilton East—the present parliamentary secretary has not been there long enough—do not like being reminded of the years, the decades, the eons of time it has taken to get action out of this government. We are talking about things which were started before those three, the see no evil, speak no evil, hear no evil trio over there, were even born. This is a fact we have had to live with, the myth that the Liberals would move in the direction of social progress.

The Canadian people have had to assume that because the Liberals were in power they were getting things that they were not getting at all. We think the time has gone for the Canadian people to be asked to live under that myth and that the time has come for action in this terribly important field of medicare.

The minister does not need to worry about the unfinished business he left behind in the Department of Labour. A new minister can take that on, but he has some pretty important items in this department upon which I hope he will act. I urge him to do so without delay.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, while we are considering the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, I wish for a few minutes to call the minister's attention on the statements we made and reiterated over and over again in the course of every session, in particular since 1962, on the importance of increasing family allowances in accordance with the cost of living index.

We did the same thing or, rather, we took a different stand when the increase of parliamentary idemnities came to a vote.

Mr. Boulanger: This is demagogy.

Mr. Caouette: In spite of assertions that this is demagogy—and the hon. member for Mercier may go and say in his constituency that we are acting as demagogues—it still remains that parliamentary idemnities were raised from $10,000 to $18,000. On the other hand, family allowances have remained at the same level as in 1945, that is 21 years ago.

Today, the Quebec Minister of Health says that the province must get back family allowances, but nothing is being done.

The minister keeps mum about his plans and about a possible linking of family allowances to the cost-of-living index; indeed, the federal members of Parliament asked for an increase in the parliamentary indemnity because they said that the cost of living is not the same today, or was not the same last year, as it was in 1945 or 1950. Everybody knows that.

But, we, as legislators, must recognize that the cost of living, for our Canadian families, is not the same thing in 1966 as it was in 1950 or in 1945 either.

We voted for the motions for an increase for our aged people in Canada. We want family allowances to be related to the cost-of-living index.

In other areas, we frequently have to call on the Department of National Health and Welfare for subsidies to cultural centres in our section of the province. In this connection, the minister is not too much in a hurry. I understand that he has switched to another department. He did a wonderful job in the Department of Labour and I hope he will do the same in his new department.

Cultural centres exist not only in Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg or Vancouver. Other parts of the province and of the country require the same attention from the federal authorities. And the hon. minister is surely conscious of those needs or, at least, we are bringing them to his attention.

Then, he must give us answers or try to do the impossible so that our constituencies may get a fair treatment.

Another point to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) just called the minister's attention is the famous medicare plan that for many years members of the New Democratic Party have been clamouring for and which was set up in Saskatchewan with great difficulty because of the manifold and real obstacles brought about by common sense and then, they had to change their mind.

What we suggest as a Canadian medical plan is called the health dividend. Instead of the government setting up a government insurance company which would employ doctors and tell them how to treat sick and disabled persons in Canada, or persons in need of a medical plan, we suggest that the government should issue a national health voucher to every Canadian family.

It could be $150 per family and from $90 to $100 per bachelor in the country. With this voucher, the Canadian citizen, family head or bachelor, could select his insurance company, the medical plans or plan already in existence. It can already be secured through private industry, from any insurance company, the Artisans canadiens français, The Canada Life, The Crown Life, The Mutual Life, The Sun Life, it doesn't matter which; all these companies are organized to assure people and provide them with medical insurance. It is available in group insurance.

Mr. Lewis: For profit motives.

Mr. Caouette: I hear the hon. member for York South say: "for profit motives". When the hon. member for York South needs a doctor, he is not concerned with the doctors' profits, because when he wants a doctor, it is the doctor he is interested in and not the doctor's profits. He is concerned with the care the doctor can give him.

It is natural for companies to make profits. When enthusiasm and initiative are taken away in a society, we retrogress instead of progressing. That is exactly what the member for York South wants to do; that is exactly what is happening in Russia, which we visited last year.

Mr. Chairman, that is not what we want. I think that the citizen should have freedom of choice with regard to medical insurance. He chooses the plan he wants; he chooses his doctor. That is what is important in a democracy: to give citizens freedom of choice.

The plan which we suggest, the health dividend, would mean insurance jor all citizens. It would cost the government about 35 to 40 per cent less than medicare or a national health insurance plan in Canada.

And that is what the people from the New Democratic Party and the social democratic party, or the socialist parties of Canada, cannot understand. What matters to them is that the government controls the individual in his home, in society, everywhere. This is not what we want. We want the individual to remain independent, people to be respected, and in order to give them that respect and security, they must have the financial means which to choose what they want, because it is the human being himself who has to determine what must be done and what is good for him. It does not rest with the government to do that for him. Let us respect that freedom.

An hon. Member: It is ten o'clock.

Another hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I am told that it is ten o'clock; I want to call your attention to this fact.

The Chairman: Shall item 1 carry?

Carried.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, may I ask you to call it ten o'clock.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, when we finish the estimates tomorrow I should like to call item No. 16, the motion to set up the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to consider penitentiary matters; item No. 18, the motion for the joint committee on consumer credit; item No. 21, the motion for the joint committee on the parliamentary restaurant, and item No. 11, second reading of the bill to extend the Bank Act, not necessarily in that order. This is a short bill which merely extends the time to permit consideration of the amending bank legislation.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader what consideration has been given to the establishment of a joint committee on divorce?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, that matter is under consideration now. The suggestion has come from the other place that, instead of having the private members' bills considered by the standing committee of the House of Commons on Justice and Legal Affairs, we should withdraw them from that committee and have them considered by a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. It is a matter of having the necessary resolution put on the order paper and if there is general agreement in the house, or appears to be, having them withdrawn from the committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to be referred to the new joint committee.

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—INQUIRY CONCERNING NEW DAIRY POLICY

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, last week, in terms which are quite in fashion these days, I put the following question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene):

> As the new dairy year is starting in a few days, is the minister in a position to tell us where we stand in the count-down before the launching or the placing into orbit of the new dairy policy which is intended to guarantee Canadian milk producers a minimum price of $4 per hundredweight for industrial milk?

Mr. Speaker, you know that the dairy industry in eastern Canada is of vital significance to the farm economy of this country, and particularly to our farmers and dairy producers. We also know that dairy producers in the eastern section of this country are most anxious to hear about this new policy which was supposed to be announced very soon.

Tonight, I shall try to give the hon. parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Beer) the dates on which the dairy policies were announced since 1958-59.

During those years the dairy year began on May 1, but we all know that last year, the former Minister of Agriculture anticipated by one month the start of the dairy year 1965-66.

For the year 1958-59, the new dairy policy was announced on April 7. For the year starting May 1, for the period 1959-60, the policy was announced on April 23; for the year 1960-61, which started on May 1, the policy was announced on April 13.

In 1961, the policy was announced on April 20, for the year 1961-62 starting on May 1.

In 1962, the policy was announced on March 22. It was revised on April 9, 1962, and on April 27, the policy for the dairy year 1962-63 was again revised.

In 1963, the policy for the dairy year starting May 1 was announced on April 29, and it will be remembered that, on that occasion, hon. members representing rural counties had received numerous petitions and protests from dairy producers who had been informed of the new dairy policy only a few hours before the new dairy year.

In 1963, we could expect a late date, because a general election had been held on April 8 and the minister had just then been appointed. But in 1964, the policy was announced on April 29, a few hours before the new dairy year, that is on May 1.

Last year the policy was announced on March 26, and this was an improvement, although it was announced a month and a few days before the beginning of the new dairy year. In spite of that, last year protests were raised against the policy and we could read in the Canadian press, more especially in the Terre de Chez Nous, some editorials of this kind:

After enticing but vague promises will there be disappointing and harsh facts?

Mr. Speaker, I am interested tonight, as are all hon. members and especially the dairy producers, in knowing—and I think the Parliamentary Secretary will be in a position to give us an idea—when the dairy policy for the new year will be announced in the house, so that we may discuss it and make our proposals before it is brought into force.

[English]

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. members for directing his question concerning the dairy policy of the government to me at this particular time. He mentioned that he was patiently awaiting the introduction of the new dairy policy of the government. I can readily understand why he would be patiently awaiting the new dairy policy of this government and permit me to review briefly the dairy policy which has been in effect.

The government has had four main objectives for its dairy policy: First, to balance production and consumption; second, to remove the surplus of butter which existed when this government took office, a surplus of some 239 million pounds; third, to increase the production of cheese for which there was a very strong export demand. I know the hon. member will be gratified at having learned in the last year or so that production and consumption have been brought in line and we have been able to increase our production and export of cheese by some 20 per cent. The fourth objective is to improve the price that farmers receive for their milk.

The hon. member will be gratified of course to reflect on the fact that prior to this government taking office the average price farmers received for milk was in the neighbourhood of $3 or a little less and last year farmers in Canada received an average of $3.50. It will be the objective of this government to see that farmers receive a maximum price for their milk at the farm of something about the $3.50 level. This is our aim. I can only tell the hon. member at this particular time that the policy will be announced by the minister in due course. I am sure he awaits it with anticipation and will greet it with great satisfaction.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL—SUGGESTED RESTORATION OF GRAVE OF D'ARCY McGEE

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, the fact that I am grand marshal of the Irishmen's parade this year and that tonight I am speaking about D'Arcy McGee is no coincidence. In this day of communication I think the average youngster is more familiar with the exploits of Davey Crockett than he is with La Verendrye, Radisson, LaSalle and other men whose careers were much more exciting than Davey Crockett's. I think it is safe to say that most high school students are more familiar with the assassination of Abraham Lincoln than they are with the assassination of one of the Fathers of Confederation, Thomas D'Arcy McGee. He was assassinated by a Fenian known as Whelan.

Thomas D'Arcy McGee was first elected to parliament in 1858 as an independent, sponsored at that time by the St. Patrick Society. In a moment of weakness he became a Conservative and it has taken the Irish almost 98 years to forget that blemish on his character.

On the day that Thomas D'Arcy McGee was buried in Montreal one of the largest funerals in Canadian history took place, which is a tribute to the fine relationship that existed between the Irish and French speaking Montrealers. The funeral took place first at St. Patrick's Cathedral and then proceeded to Notre Dame Cathedral to be repeated. Since then his body has rested at the Côte des Neiges cemetery in Montreal. The tombstone that marks his resting place was, to the best of the knowledge of the historians of the Montreal area, paid for by a family named Wilson and has been maintained through the years by the St. Patrick Society of Montreal. That society has informed me that his tombstone, because of the type of stone used almost 100 years ago, has reached the point where it should be replaced in a fitting manner.

I notice the Minister of Trade and Commerce is in the chamber. Although I am a great supporter of Expo '67, I think in the final analysis our centennial celebration will be of more lasting benefit to Canada than Expo '67. I would therefore urge the Secretary of State that as one of our centennial achievements the federal government should absorb the cost of providing a suitable tombstone for the grave of Thomas D'Arcy McGee. I realize that the Parliamentary Secretary will probably tell me that the proper procedure is for the city of Montreal to sponsor this, with the federal government paying a portion of the cost. I immediately must state that the memory of Thomas D'Arcy McGee does not belong to Montreal and does not belong to the St. Patrick Society. That memory is not the exclusive property of the Irish Canadians of this country but belongs to all Canadians. He was a Father of Confederation and as such I think the federal government has a duty and, in many ways, a privilege to provide a tombstone for the grave of Thomas D'Arcy McGee as a part of our centennial celebrations next year.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) certainly deserves our congratulations and our admiration for having recalled, on the eve of the centennial of the Confederation, and carried away by his patriotism, the memory of one of the most brilliant speakers of our Parliamentary history, a polished writer and a fine poet, a great administrator, one of the Fathers of Confederation: Thomas D'Arcy McGee, born in the green Erin. My hon. friend's plea comes very appropriately just in time to support a recent request made by the Saint Patrick's Society of Montreal.

The hon. member may be pleased to learn that under a federal-provincial program of per capita grants sponsored by the centennial commission, funds are available for carrying out the type of project he proposes. However, under this program, all requests must first be approved by the provinces and then obtain the approval of the centennial commission.

In the present case, it is not presumptuous to state that the commission would look with favour upon such a request. In fact, the centennial commission recently received a similar project from the Prince Edward Island authorities and it is about to grant its approval.

In closing, may I remind my hon. colleague that a project exists which was announced in 1964 by the Boy Scouts of Canada, with the financial assistance of the centennial commission. Under this project, the boy scouts are responsible for inspecting the tombs of all the Fathers of Confederation, for reporting in what condition they are and for undertaking to restore them if need be.

Once that work is finished, the boy scouts will lay wreaths during the year 1967 and organize ceremonies to which will be invited all the descendants of the Fathers of Confederation, to whom we owe our constitution.

APPENDIX

COMMUNIQUÉ FOLLOWING JOINT CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING

The Tenth Meeting of the Joint United States-Canadian Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs was held in Washington, D.C., March 4-5, 1966.

As background to the discussions on trade and economic matters, the United States Secretary of State and the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs reviewed. major recent international developments.

The Committee exchanged views on current developments in the closely related economies of the two countries, noting with satisfaction that both had achieved a record of sustained economic expansion unparalleled in their histories and they looked forward to another year of strong growth. They recognized, however, that maintaining price and cost stability will require close and continuing attention.

The Committee discussed the balance of payments of both countries. They recognized that decisive progress had been made toward reducing the United States balance of payments deficit and reviewed the measures being taken to bring the United States external accounts into balance. In this connection, the Committee noted the measures that have been taken to maintain access to the United States capital market for an unlimited amount of new Canadian securities free of the Interest Equalization Tax. The United States members reaffirmed that, in buying such issues, U.S. investors were completely free to be guided by market considerations.

Canadian Ministers expressed their concern over the possible implications for Canada of the United States voluntary program on direct investment and the relation of this program to the position of Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. corporations. The United States members made clear that the U.S. Government was not requesting U.S. corporations to induce their Canadian subsidiaries to act in any ways that differed from their normal business practices as regards the repatriation of earnings, purchasing and sales policies, or their other financial and commercial activities. United States members re-emphasized the view that United States subsidiaries abroad should behave as good citizens of the country where they are located. Where U.S. companies were in doubt as to these views, the U.S. Government would ensure that any misunderstandings would be dispelled.

The Canadian Ministers expressed serious concern that proposed Securities and Exchange Commission regulations would subject to United States law Canadian companies not deliberately seeking to sell securities in the United States if their shares had happened to be purchased by United States residents. These regulations, moreover, would discriminate against Canadian companies by imposing more severe requirements relative to other foreign companies. Canadian Ministers referred to plans under way in Canada to improve the disclosure of information regarding Canadian enterprises and the regulation of the issue of securities. They strongly urged that the United States authorities refrain from applying these SEC regulations to Canadian companies which do not seek to sell their securities in the United States. The United States members appreciated the concern of the Government of Canada and assured the Canadian members that the most careful consideration would be given to Canadian views in an effort to work out at an early date mutually satisfactory arrangements.

The Committee discussed United States foreign assets controls as they may affect the exports of companies in Canada. The United States members reaffirmed their readiness to consult promptly on any transactions of importance to Canada which are affected by United States foreign assets control. They also stated that regulations over exports of technical data are being revised and that, in light of the Committee's discussions, further consideration will be given to the possibilities of additional modifications of the regulations.

The Committee discussed a number of specific bilateral trade and financial matters on both sides, including Canadian cheddar cheese and Canadian oil exports to the United States, and agreed to keep them under review. The Committee agreed that a joint examination should be made of trade in agricultural implements, tractors, and aircraft for which tariff liberalization would be most important.

They agreed that the removal of unnecessary restrictions on the free flow of goods and services across the border would contribute importantly to the continued prosperity of both countries. The Committee recognized that the Automotive Agreement represents a long stride toward free trade in a basic industry of major importance to the two countries and had resulted in a substantial increase in two-way trade to the benefit of production and employment both in Canada and the United States. Greater benefits are to be expected as industry in both countries adjust their operations to take full advantage of the opportunities afforded by the Agreement.

In the area of international economic relations, the Committee agreed that the Kennedy Round negotiations in Geneva provided an unparalleled opportunity for the substantial liberalization of world trade, which would benefit all participating countries —developing as well as developed. The Committee, therefore, concluded that the highest priority must be given to the timely completion of these negotiations which are now entering their critical phase. They agreed that the Canadian and U.S. delegations would continue to work closely together in the interest of a successful conclusion of the Kennedy Round negotiations, including the negotiation of a world cereals agreement in which the two North American exporting countries have a strong common interest.

The Committee reviewed the trade and development problems of the developing countries particularly in food and agriculture. They noted the food needs in India and the steps being taken by the Indian Government to deal with the problem. Although both countries were providing assistance to India and other developing countries, they noted that more would be needed during the period ahead from other countries. The Canadian members informed the Committee of Canada's recent decision to make available to India a substantially larger amount of food aid.

The Committee discussed the consultative arrangements between the two Governments in the light of the Heeney-Merchant report and agreed on the importance of close and effective working relationships between the two Governments.

The Committee took note of the importance of the work on improving the international monetary system being undertaken by the International Monetary Fund and the Deputies of the Group of Ten. They expressed the hope that the Deputies will be able to reach agreement on a constructive report to the Ministers, which would permit further negotiations on a broader basis.

The Ministers noted with concern the serious problem of pollution of Lake Erie, Lake Ontario and the international section of the St. Lawrence River, as described in the recent Interim Report to the Canadian and the United States Governments by the International Joint Commission. They recorded their support for the recommendations in the report and agreed that efforts in both countries should be coordinated to deal with this problem as a matter of urgency.

The Canadian Delegation was led by the Honourable Paul Martin, Secretary of State for External Affairs, and included the Honourable Robert Winters, Minister of Trade and Commerce; the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, Minister of Finance; the Honourable Charles M. Drury, Minister of Industry; the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin, Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys; the Honourable John J. Greene, Minister of Agriculture; Louis Rasminsky, Governor of the Bank of Canada; Sydney D. Pierce, Chief Canadian Trade Negotiator; the Honourable C.S.A. Ritchie, Canadian Ambassador to the United States, and advisers.

The United States Delegation was headed by the Honourable Dean Rusk, Secretary of State, and included the Honourable Henry H. Fowler, Secretary of the Treasury, the Honourable John T. Connor, Secretary of Commerce; the Honourable Orville Freeman, Secretary of Agriculture; John A. Carver, Jr., Under Secretary of the Department of Interior; Thomas C. Mann, Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs; the Honourable Christian A. Herter, the President's Special Representative for Trade Negotiations; the Honourable Gardner Ackley, Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers; the Honourable W. HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

ST. CROIX RIVER BRIDGE

STRUCTURE TO CONNECT NEW BRUNSWICK AND MAINE

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-15 (from the Senate), to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PRESSURE TO INCLUDE HALIFAX, SAINT JOHN AND FREDERICTON IN DESIGNATED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry in connection with designated areas. May I ask him whether he has received any communication or complaint from Mr. John R. O'Dea, president of the Atlantic provinces economic council, wherein he presses strongly for inclusion of the metropolitan areas of Halifax, Saint John and Fredericton in the Atlantic designated areas? Is the government giving any reconsideration to such designation in order to meet the serious situation regarding employment and the lack of it in the three particular metropolitan areas to which I have referred?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have not, to my recollection, received any representations from Mr. O'Dea. I rather imagine that he would be addressing his remarks to the government of Nova Scotia. I think the right hon. gentleman was probably speaking loosely of his knowledge of distressing employment conditions in Halifax, Saint John and Fredericton.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister say once and for all, yes or no, whether these cities are in or out of the area industrial incentive plan, particularly in view of the fact that Nova Scotia has introduced its own legislation to deal with the matter? Unfortunately in New Brunswick—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): —we have a premier who is not interested in this question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister was ready to make an answer, and if he had not answered my question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member had what appeared to be a valid question until he ruled himself out of order by adding comments and making statements.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Then may I rephrase my question. Will the minister state definitely whether these cities have any hope of being included in the incentive plan this season?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not know the three cities in question nearly as well as the hon. gentleman does, and he perhaps is in a better position than I to tell what their hopes may or may not be.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister which is supplementary to questions asked earlier today. In view of the fact that there is a continuing appeal for the inclusion of the whole Atlantic area under the designated area policy, will the Prime Minister give consideration to reconsidering the government's policy in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what the Minister of Industry has said. My hon. friend should be grateful for what has been done for the Atlantic area in this respect.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): As a supplementary question, will the Prime Minister direct the Atlantic Development Board to take this matter under advisement, as was indicated by him to the delegation from maritime cities a short while ago?

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDUSTRY

HAMILTON, ONT.—CESSATION OF OPERATIONS OF STUDEBAKER COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry. I want to ask him, since the matter was raised yesterday, whether he has been in touch with the officials of the Studebaker Company regarding the closing of their auto manufacturing plant in Hamilton, and has he as a result of any discussions with them any proposals as to what can be done to prevent this plant being closed?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think I mentioned yesterday—I am sorry the hon. gentleman did not hear it—that the Department of Industry was canvassing the possibilities with Studebaker and other companies as to possible alternative industrial uses of the property. At the same time the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has sent some of his officials to Hamilton to make a survey of the labour that might be available for alternative employment as a consequence of Studebaker closing its operations.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Do I take it from the minister's remarks that no investigation is being made into the possibility of continuing the Studebaker plant as an auto manufacturing company?

Mr. Drury: There have been discussions with Studebaker as to this possibility but I regret that it does not seem to be a likely one.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister supplementary to one already asked. What action is the government taking to keep in Canada the automotive employees of the Studebaker plant?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This question has already been answered, Mr. Speaker. Everything possible is being done.

Mr. Nasserden: I wonder whether the Prime Minister would tell us one or two things—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROSPECTIVE LAY-OFF OF FORD WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is he in a position to report on the team that was sent to investigate the tool and die situation at the Ford Motor Company in Windsor?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MUNSINGER INVESTIGATION—REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Since the whole Spencer case will be reviewed by the judge appointed by the government, can the right hon. Prime Minister tell us if this judge will also be authorized to look into the Munsinger case, so that the Canadian people and parliament might get definite information on this case?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the order in council which has been tabled indicates the work that the commission is expected to do.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PAKISTAN—POSSIBILITY OF SUPPLYING WHEAT FLOUR IN AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. According to the Globe and Mail this morning, Mr. Speaker, a senior spokesman for the Department of External Affairs claims that when Pakistan authorities approached Canada for aid on February 10, they were advised that no wheat would be available until July, but that there was wheat flour available almost immediately. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the house whether any further steps have been taken to provide Pakistan with wheat flour in response to this request for aid?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, this matter is under review at the moment. I would think that some day this week I will be able to give a more definitive reply.

TRADE

REFUSAL TO MILL WHEAT FOR EXPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I wonder if the minister would advise the House of Commons if flour mills allegedly owned by firms in the United States are milling flour which can be exported overseas, or are the mills I have referred to still refusing to mill wheat for export?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think all mills in Canada are engaged upon the export business to various destinations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh no, no.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked a specific question. Are those mills that are owned by United States firms and operating in Canada milling wheat for export, or are they still refusing to mill it?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, so far as I know, no mills of any kind have refused all business for export, although some of them, I gather, have been reluctant to accept orders for some particular destinations.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What are those particular destinations? Are they Russia or China?

FINANCE

STEPS TO CORRECT CURRENT ACCOUNT DEFICIT WITH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): My question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that Canada's current account deficit with the United States for the first nine months of 1965 was $1.3 billion, and it is estimated that the figure will be between $1.7 and $1.8 billion for the whole year—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to send the hon. member to the penalty box but from the way in which the question is framed I would think it could not be answered at this moment. The hon. member knows that questions should attempt not to convey information but should rather seek information.

Mr. Hees: I will rephrase my question. I might point out that the figure I quoted came from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hees: In view of the information I have just given the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: —will the hon. gentleman advise the United States secretary of the treasury of the guide lines which the Canadian government intends to impose to overcome this most serious situation.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I am still not sure what it is that the hon. member is asking me—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Sharp: —but may I say that the United States was fully informed about Canada's position at the recent meetings, and I think the outcome was eminently successful.

SUGGESTED TRANSFERS OF FUNDS BY SUBSIDIARIES OF U.S. INSURANCE COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp). Could he tell us whether subsidiaries of American insurance companies doing business in Canada have asked for transfers of funds from Canada to the United States recently?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I should like to take that question as notice.

OLD AGE SECURITY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he is prepared to make some announcement to the house now regarding an increase in old age security pensions.

FISHERIES

SEAL HUNT—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASED QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): My question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the many questions which have been asked by members of this house regarding the seal fishery and the interest taken by so many Canadians in this activity, will the minister advise us whether he is in a position to report on his trip to the seal fishery and whether, in view of the large quantity of seals spotted, he is considering increasing the quota from its present level of 50,000?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my understanding that the house in committee will be considering the estimates of the Department of Fisheries this afternoon. The hon. member might ask his question at that time.

DRUGS

POSSIBLE PROHIBITION OF SALE OF ANTIBIOTIC THROAT LOZENGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister be taking action along the lines taken today by the United States food and drug directorate in ordering a sweeping removal of all antibiotic throat lozenges on the ground that they do not serve any useful purpose and are, in fact, dangerous to health?

Mr. Speaker: This is a very general question and it appears to me the matter is not so urgent that it might not be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Monteith: Oh no, this action was taken just this morning by the United States food and drug directorate.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the event to which the hon. member has referred did happen this morning, but the action he is now suggesting the government might take does not appear so urgent that his question should be asked at this moment. That is the suggestion I make to the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—POSSIBILITY OF REFORM AS REQUESTED BY GENERAL DE GAULLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Could the minister tell the house whether he received a message recently from General de Gaulle about NATO reorganization as suggested by France?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet received any letter.

[Mr. Tucker.]

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—POSSIBLE SHORTAGE OF DOCTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, the urgency of my question is based on the fact that the government has plans relating to medicare. I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if recently—and I underline the word recently—the government has received information to the effect that Canada will soon be faced with a grave shortage of doctors?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The question may be very urgent but I bring to the attention of the hon. member that we will also be considering the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare later on this afternoon.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

R.C.A.F. OVERHAUL AND REPAIR CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Is it correct that overhaul and repair contracts for the R.C.A.F. have been grouped into three categories and have been let to three large corporations, two of which are American subsidiaries, with the result that a considerable number of smaller Canadian companies, which are dependent for their existence on this work, are now going to have to close down?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take notice of that question.

THE MINISTRY

POSSIBILITY OF REMOVAL OF UNILINGUAL MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can we expect the Prime Minister to announce cabinet changes to eliminate unilingual ministers, in view of the statement by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys that no civil servant can expect to attain a senior position unless he is bilingual?

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister in a position to advise the house as to the date on which he will be bringing down his budget?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite in that position but I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

[Later:]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I should like to address to the Minister of Finance. Has he yet set a date on which he expects to bring down his budget, and if not can he state whether it is going to be before Easter?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me this question was asked earlier today.

BANKRUPTCY

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL INVESTIGATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Justice and ask whether the government has retained or appointed Mr. Jules Chicoine of Montreal, and Staff Sergeant Frederick Plummer of Ottawa as special investigators into bankruptcy rackets in Ontario and Quebec?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Acting Minister of Justice): I would like to take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED DISCONTINUANCE OF EMBARRASSING PRESS RELEASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he will give an assurance that press releases from the Department of External Affairs will not be devised in the future in such a way as to cause acute embarrassment to his colleagues?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe my hon. friend would think there would be any release from a department over which I would preside that would have that intention.

Mr. Starr: You read it in the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member could perhaps raise his question of privilege when the question period is over.

[English]

CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INCREASED COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a report from the cabinet committee set up to study the continuing, alarming increase in the cost of living?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cumberland.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ORGANIZATION OF MEETING OF TRUCE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I put another question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Could he tell the house if the purpose of Mr. Chester Ronning's trip to Viet Nam is to arrange an early meeting between Canada, India and Poland and whether we can hope that such a meeting may take place soon?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it if the hon. member did not ask that question at this time.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ELECTION EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Earlier this session the Prime Minister told the house that the committee on election expenditures—I think that is the right name—was expected to report this month, in March. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether he has inquired into this lately, and whether that report is likely to be made soon?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I inquired the other day. I understand the report is practically completed but there remains the translation and printing of it.

WATER RESOURCES

CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING—GREAT LAKES POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys whether he is in a position to give an outline to the house of his discussion with members of the U.S. government last week with respect to the urgent problem of pollution on the Great Lakes, which the minister told us he was going to take up with them, and with respect to the effects of a law of the United States Congress authorizing a study of the waters tributary to the Great Lakes?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now asking for a lengthy statement on the part of the minister and this cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I was asking whether the minister was in a position to make a report on the matter. The minister can make his report as short or as long as he wishes, so long as it is factual.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for a report, which report normally would not be expected to be made at this time.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Has the minister as yet had any discussion with either the Ontario of Quebec governments concerning the question of pollution?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, a meeting was held yesterday in my office with the Ontario Minister of Energy and Resources, and his officials. At that time we discussed mostly projects having to do with the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act. At the end of the meeting there was the beginning of a discussion on pollution, and this discussion is to be followed up in two weeks time.

[Mr. Brewin.]

An hon. Member: Were your conversations in English or in French?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege; an hon. member on the other side of the house asked me whether my conversations with the Ontario officials were in English or in French.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. minister is rising on a question of privilege and I would like to hear it.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Northumberland asked me if my conversation—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege; the hon. member for Northumberland said nothing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, we will hear one question of privilege at a time. Would the minister state his question.

Mr. Hees: He did not say anything.

[Later:]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will be glad to know that I have discovered a way of putting my question within the terms of reference you gave me. I should like to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys whether he will make a report to the house at an early date regarding the important matter about which I asked him earlier today?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to do that, and I will do so in English because the question was asked in English. I always try to answer in the language—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINES MINISTER RESPECTING BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister is in a position today to make any statement regarding the question I addressed to him last week concerning bilingualism in the civil service?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have stated in answer to the question that I would be making a report on this matter in the house, I hope this week. Yesterday my hon. friend from Carleton asked whether the cabinet committee considered the matter or whether the cabinet had decided whether it would discuss this question with the civil service organizations. I said I would look into this matter to see whether such a meeting could be arranged. I am hoping to have this meeting as soon as it can be arranged. It will be only after that meeting that I would report to the house.

STORMS

WINNIPEG, MAN.—INQUIRY CONCERNING REQUESTS FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. As a result of conversations I have had today with spokesmen in Winnipeg, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has as yet received any request from the Manitoba government for aid to the storm-stricken southern half of that province?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge, unless it came in just before lunch.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister be able to say whether he would be responsive to such a request when it comes?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

TRADE

CHRYSLER CORPORATION—ANNOUNCEMENT TO RAISE FUNDS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday I asked the Minister of Finance if he could ascertain whether or not the Chrysler Corporation intended to raise any of this $15 million in Canada which they had announced for their capital requirements outside of Canada? Would he answer that today and also inform the house whether this practice will be building up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question might be placed on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

GRANTING OF ASYLUM IN CANADA TO YUGOSLAV SEAMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can he tell the house why the 12 Yugoslav seamen who deserted their ship in Saint John were not granted asylum in Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the question as notice and answer it tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: It is difficult in a case such as this to determine whether there is urgency. If my understanding is correct, that these seamen have already returned to their country, probably the question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, they were deported last night, to the best of my knowledge without reason.

Mr. Speaker: The question might be placed on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

CHEESE—DECREASE IN EXPORTS TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, asking him whether he can advise the house what success he met with during his recent discussions with the secretary of agriculture of the United States regarding the very low quota for Canadian cheese entering the United States, especially in view of the fact that there is no restriction on United States cheese entering Canada?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this was probably the most important topic discussed during our discussions with our United States compatriots. There were some discussions about guide lines and other things, but this was the important subject.

This question involves a tariff matter in the United States, but Mr. Freeman, the secretary for agriculture, is considering the matter. I will be in touch with him and I hope we will have some success in this regard.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BONNYVILLE, ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR ACREAGE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to say that the hon. member for Athabasca asked me a question yesterday which I did not quite hear at the time. He asked whether there had been any request for aid from the province of Alberta respecting the Bonnyville district. I did not catch those words, "the Bonnyville district", and I offer my apology. In this regard there has been no request for aid at any time from the minister of agriculture of Alberta in respect of the Bonnyville district.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. I hold in my hand a brief dated March 1, 1966 of the Farmers' Union of Alberta directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder whether the minister has received a copy of this brief regarding this particular subject?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I receive many briefs and I cannot recall this specific one. I will check and let my hon. friend know whether I have received it.

POWER

NELSON RIVER—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF SALES TAX

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the severe financial penalties imposed on the Nelson river project by the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, and in view of the recent unanimous approval of the Manitoba legislation given to a motion calling for its removal, will the minister indicate that early action will be taken in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, needless to say, I never anticipate any announcement of government policy of that kind.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STATEMENT BY MINES MINISTER—BILINGUALISM AS CRITERION FOR PROMOTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

When he spoke about bilingualism in Montreal last week, did the minister talk about it as a condition for promotion within the civil service commission or as an essential qualification?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is out of order.

TRANSPORT

RICHELIEU PROJECT—REQUEST FOR REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Is it true that the international committee on the Richelieu waterway has completed its studies? Could the minister report to the House of Commons about its findings?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, that matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Allard: Then, Mr. Chairman, I shall repeat my question and ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to answer it.

Is it true that the international committee on the possible project of the Richelieu river waterway has concluded its studies, and is the minister going to report on such studies and findings?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question as put is out of order. The hon. member cannot ask, as a matter of urgency, whether a report has been completed or whether the minister wants to report at this time, without asking the minister whether he intends to report to the house in due course.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I was just going to ask the minister to submit a report to the house in this connection.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, there is a report which will now be considered by the Canada-U.S. joint commission.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—OUTSTANDING SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture and I hope that he will be able to reply tomorrow. Can the minister tell the house how many cheques for last years' supplementary milk payments are still outstanding or unpaid?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not have that information, but I understand we are doing very well in this matter. I will indicate to my hon. friend tomorrow how many are outstanding.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CHIBOUGAMAU-CHAPAIS AREA—EXTENSION OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Is the department considering at present the repeated requests of the people of Chibougamau and Chapais for the extension of free C.B.C. radio and television services to that area?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be put on the order paper.

PENSIONS

POSSIBLE FREEZING OF OLDER WORKERS TO PRIVATE PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, on March 3 I directed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who very kindly stated that it would come under the purview of the Minister of Finance. He said the question would be given to that minister for reply. Is the Minister of Finance in a position to reply to that question with reference to pensions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand that when I was absent last Thursday the hon. member inquired about the government's intention to introduce legislation which might affect the payments of returns of contributions from private pension plans.

There is really not much more I can add to what first I, and later my parliamentary secretary, said as reported on pages 1152 and 1219 of Hansard of February 14, 1966. The details of this proposed legislation on particulars such as those mentioned in the question of the hon. member will be disclosed to the house in due course.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question. Will that be disclosed this session?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly my hope and expectation that parliamentary business will proceed at a sufficiently accelerated rate that that will be possible.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONSIDERATION OF ROYAL COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE ORGANIZED CRIME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has as yet decided upon the question of establishing a royal commission on crime and, if so, whether there has been any communication with the provinces in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No decision has been reached as yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a supplementary question. Has the Prime Minister had any formal request from the province of Quebec in respect of the establishment of such a commission?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge.

CANADIAN ECONOMY

REPORT OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL ON PRICE CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago the Prime Minister informed the house that he would make inquiries regarding the delay in the report by the Economic Council of Canada which made a special study about a year ago regarding prices. Has the Prime Minister made that inquiry and can he tell us when we may expect this report?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did get in touch with the president of the Economic Council of Canada, who informed me that they were doing their best to expedite this matter.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY—TABLING OF REPORT OF PERMANENT ENGINEERING BOARD, 1965

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, would the house agree to reverting to motions in order that I may table a document?

Columbia River Treaty Report Tabled

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): The minister now proposes to table the document that I was anticipating, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pepin: May I have the consent of the house to table this document, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Starr: What document?

Mr. Pepin: The annual report to the governments of Canada and the United States coming from the Columbia River Treaty Permanent Engineering Board, 1965.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the minister proceeds, I understand that the question period has now terminated. There are no further questions and therefore we might revert to motions for this purpose.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement that the house revert to motions to allow the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to table the document to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, may I table the annual report to the governments of the United States and Canada from the Columbia River Treaty Permanent Engineering Board?

Mr. Nielsen: Is it in both languages, English and French?

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I am afraid we did not get the significance of your earlier statement. Was Your Honour assuming that the question period was over—because it is not.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I was assuming that because no other hon. member rose to ask a question. If I had called orders of the day we would then, of course, have been in committee and this document could not have been tabled. Therefore, no further questions being asked, the motion was made and accepted. I should like at this time to ask the hon. member for Trois-Rivières to state his question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on the motion of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, since no mention was made about this, can he tell us whether the report was tabled in English and in French?

[Mr. Pepin.]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): It has been tabled in English only, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, we object.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no discussion at the present time. The minister secured the consent of the house to table the document and has tabled it.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, we are not giving our consent to table this document as long as it is in English only; we want it tabled in both languages.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I can—

Mr. Grégoire: We object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that the document has already been tabled—

Mr. Grégoire: There was no consent—

Mr. Speaker: —if the hon. member will just open his eyes, he will see that the document has indeed been tabled.

Mr. Grégoire: Without the house's permission, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grégoire: The document was certainly tabled without the unanimous consent of the house, because we did not give ours.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raised his objection too late. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) has the floor.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MONGRAIN—LABOUR GAZETTE—DELAY IN TRANSLATION

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, here is my question of privilege.

I received within the last few days the last issue of the Labour Gazette and I find that the French edition represents the October 1965 issue and that the English edition represents the February 1966 issue.

That means a gap of almost six months. I always understood that it was the privilege of the French speaking members to receive the French version at the same time or practically at the same time as the English version. I would like to complain about that situation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. In my opinion, this is more a grievance than a true question of privilege. I suppose that the hon. member does not intend to move a motion to follow up the question he has just raised. I suppose also that having formulated his grievance, he will now let the matter rest.

Administration—

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I am just waiting for the house to quiet down, and then I will continue my remarks.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. May I ask hon. members in all sections of the house to carry on their conversations in an undertone so that the hon. member who has the floor may be heard by the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your kind intervention in order to get at least a little quiet in the house. When the other members have the floor they like to be heard and, on this side of the house, we also want to be heard when we have the floor.

I was saying last night, before the house adjourned, that we are considering a health insurance plan which would be open to all Canadians and under which the government would pay premiums to all families and all unmarried people.

Those people, families and unmarried people, should be left free to choose their group insurance plan, if you wish, or their health insurance plan; they should be left to choose the company they prefer. They should be left free to choose their physician, the kind of medicare program they want. If they prefer a plan which costs more than the premiums paid by the government, then they should pay the difference and get the insurance plan they want.

Last year, the province of Quebec decided, as reported in Le Devoir on March 24, 1965—

> Quebec will have its own health insurance plan within two years.

It means that in March, 1967 a health insurance plan would be submitted in Quebec and, as a matter of fact, there was a lot of talk about it a few weeks ago when the Premier stated that it would cost the province $355 million to set up a medical insurance or medicare plan, as it is commonly called.

It would mean $55 per capita in the province of Quebec. Any insurance company, or all the private insurance companies together, would give the citizens of Quebec a full insurance plan including medical care, drugs, operations, all that for approximately $30 per capita, in the province of Quebec, which would represent savings of $25 per Quebec citizen.

Mr. Chairman, all this shows that private enterprise is still the most logical and the cheapest way to grant services to the Canadian people, as long as they have the means to finance that plan or the plan they choose.

Mr. Chairman, not so long ago, that is on April 20, 1965, the former minister of National Health and Welfare, now the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), said this before the members of the Optimist Club at Niagara Falls. I quote:

> Under the Canada Assistance Plan—

I would change the word "assistance" which smacks too much of poverty, of public difficulties, and say instead "the right to live" of each individual.

> —we are willing to match, dollar for dollar, the present provincial outlays in the field of allowances to mothers, assistance to those mothers who have dependent children.
> We are willing to share the cost of health services given by the provinces to the recipients of assistance.

The minister said this, but what the people did not know, and what we must tell them, is that we have a bureaucracy to pay here in Ottawa, and also another bureaucracy to pay in Quebec. We pay two administrations for exactly the same thing, which means a multiplication of expenses and a division of services or a subtraction in respect of the needy.

The hon. minister added:

> We will take steps to include the costs of medical, nursing, dental, optical and pharmaceutical care.
> However, it will be for the provinces to decide on the scope of such services and they will be responsible for taking measures to provide the health services they consider best adjusted to their particular case.
> This health legislation is interim legislation, which will be in operation only until the coming into force of a medicare scheme, which I hope will be very soon.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the government should get together around a round table with the responsible authorities and officials of the medical associations in Canada, with provincial officials, as well as the executives of existing companies in the country and in our provinces, in order to establish the cost of a medicare plan, under which the government would pay premiums to families, as well as to single persons, so as to insure the whole Canadian population.

Mr. Chairman, no one ever thinks of meeting with the heads of insurance companies, medical bodies and the provinces to discuss the best objective means of providing services and giving results to the Canadian family, to the private individual in Canada. Instead, we think of setting up plans and, when those plans are conceived in the government services, we think of other plans to adjust those that are not always adequate. And it is because of all those plans that we drum in each other's head that we end up in the situation we are now.

Mr. Chairman, the people are not asking for plans, they want results. The worker, the farmer, the miner are not asking the government to draw up plans for them. Workers, farmers, miners, journeymen, people in all classes of society are asking the government to provide the private individual with the financial help that will enable him to choose and set up his own plan in a country that could truly be called democratic.

Mr. Chairman, such plans have been presented at every session. This year there is medicare, called for by the members of the C.C.F party, the Canadian socialists, for 25, 30 and even 35 years. All sorts of plans are demanded by people who want the government to dominate the individual, the human being.

Mr. Chairman, as I said last night, we have asked for higher family allowances in Canada. We have increased the allowances of the members of the house and the senators, and so on, but we cannot increase the revenue of Canadian citizens, and yet it is the taxes paid by farmers and all classes of society that enables us to vote increased allowances for members of parliament and senators.

Mr. Chairman, as I said last night, we are not opposed to larger salaries for members of parliament, because the cost of life has increased; but it has increased not only for members of parliament but also for mothers of Canadian families.

Ask a Canadian mother about it; the hon. ladies who sit in this house are surely aware that it costs more today to clothe, feed and house a child properly than it did 20 or 25 years ago. Conditions should be adjusted according to the times, according to 1966 rather than 1945.

In 1965-66, family allowances cost $599,500,000 to the government and the Canadian people; those are the estimates now under consideration and we hear ministers say it is costing too much, when the administration costs only of that department exceed $500 million and when $1,185 million are paid in interest on the national debt, that is, more than twice the amount paid in family allowances. This is the tribute paid for the financing but nobody is heard protesting against such a situation.

When a claim is being made for Canadian children, the cry of inflation, of demagogy goes up, the masses are being called to rise against lawful authority.

Mr. Chairman, there is no question of rising against anything, but we want to put the facts straight, pass laws according to human rights; and the most elementary justice requires that we give to human beings, to Canadians, so that democracy can survive, if there is any meaning in the word, so that we have a government of the people, by the people and for the people, and no longer a government for finance, of finance and to serve finance.

Let us start to serve the Canadian people and we will thus discharge the duty for which we were sent to the parliament of this country.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise a few points in this afternoon's discussion of the estimates for the Department of National Health and Welfare. First of all, I should like to speak on a problem which is related to physical fitness, a matter which I believe has been given considerable attention by the department, and to raise a problem which has been brought to my attention from within my constituency, but which I am sure is a problem in many other parts of the country too. The problem relates to amateur sport, and this might be the time to reiterate the demand for a study of amateur sport in this country.

There are many facets to this complicated problem. Some of them have been raised earlier in connection with the national sport of hockey, but there are also a great variety of matters which I think the Department of National Health and Welfare probably should investigate.

One particular problem is the question of the increased expense incurred by amateur athletes in attempting to compete in amateur athletic events across the country. These events increasingly are becoming the preserve of the wealthy, or else demand a tremendous local effort in order to send athletes to such competitions.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I had, for example, a letter from Vernon, dated February 11, regarding a rather outstanding athlete in the constituency. The boy, Steven Lattey, referred to in the letter last year was Canadian national junior skiing champion. This week end he has been invited to participate in an international ski meet at Banff. Next week he is to fly east to defend his junior championship and participate in a ski meet at Quebec City. All these trips are at his own or his parents' expense. I suppose he could simply give up and not represent the west in the beautiful province of Quebec. However, we do have these sporting events that are competitive on a national scale. A severe problem exists in getting to the places where these events are held, particularly for the individual athlete whose sport does not have spectator appeal or the resources that more highly organized team activities have.

I have noticed a one-shot effort along this line to be made in the centennial year, as reported in the Ottawa Journal of January 21, under the centennial commission's program for school fitness tests in 1967. A whole variety of events has been lined up. The centennial commission is considering asking corporations to offer awards for outstanding achievement and the suggested award will be a $3,500 expense paid trip for 12 to 18 year old athletes to participate in the Pan-American games. This is the sort of thing that should probably be put on a more continuing basis for the good of amateur athletics in the country. We should not be concerned only about what is going to happen in 1967 but also about what is going to happen throughout the following years. If some policy were worked out on the national level we might benefit and be able to participate in international meets to much greater effect than has been possible in the past.

The question of an investigation into amateur sports has been raised in connection with the game of hockey and the control that seems to be imposed by professional sport on amateur sport and on those taking part in the amateur sport from a very early age. I think this matter deserves serious consideration. I think the Department of National Health and Welfare might concern itself with the field of organized sport which is so constituted as to include children of extremely tender age. There is a warning in the March 5 edition of The Canadian in an article entitled, "The Big Machine That Runs Kids' Hockey". I recommend that article to the minister and his staff. The aspects covered in it could well be considered from the point of view of the health of children of tender age who are involved in what is a highly organized game which demands tremendous physical output and which has a high injury risk and a great deal of nervous strain. I wonder whether the department should not seriously be considering studies of the effects of such highly organized team sports when they involve six year old children and in which the most intense competition is encouraged. The age level is becoming lower and lower. I should think there might be real danger to the health of these children from such a sport not only at the time but also later in life.

It may be worth while looking into the cumulative effects of these sports in relation to the health of very young children who participate in extremely active sports. These sports might even be worth looking at from the viewpoint of the diversion of public funds into the very expensive and complicated facilities that are necessary for the numbers of very small children who participate in them. Frequently expensive facilities are necessary for children of tender age. When there is such a crying need for housing for the aged there may be a danger of too much public money being diverted to what is a more immediately popular use for the money. This too might be a question that could be studied by this department.

I should also like to raise an issue about the construction of homes for the aged. I have in mind particularly a home for the aged in my constituency. I do not think we would deny the need that exists for these homes. The home I refer to was built privately on the initiative of a person who is of very advanced age, an age at which many people have completely given up making any worthwhile contributions and are subsisting on welfare assistance from the government. Through the initiative of this individual a retirement home for 50 senior citizens was constructed. Unfortunately the building was subject to the imposition of the 4 per cent sales tax on construction materials, a tax which has since risen to 11 per cent, which again shows the evil aspects of the tax. It discourages the very type of construction we would most like to encourage.

Some provisions were made for exemption from this tax on certain types of construction. However, on application for the exemption it was discovered that this home for the aged did not qualify because to qualify it would have had to be in receipt of aid annually from the government of Canada or from a province for the maintenance of persons specified in the preceding subparagraph of the provisions. Unfortunately for this institution it is not receiving a regular grant from the province although it is receiving from the municipality in lieu of taxation something in excess of $4,000 each year. There is therefore a grant from one level of government which happens in this case to be the wrong level of government. The Excise Tax Act specifies that there can only be provincial participation in this sort of thing. I think that the federal department in conjunction with the provincial department might well consider allowing participation at the municipal level.

When the Act speaks of aid being received from the government of Canada for this sort of endeavour the words are misleading because apparently there is no aid at that level. The only effective aid which is covered is that given by a province. It would make much more sense to remove the words "government of Canada" from the Act and speak instead of a province or municipality so that one block to the construction of housing for the aged could be removed.

Finally I should like to say a word regarding the issue of medicare about which a great deal has been said. I am afraid I shall have to disagree with my friends to the right who last night urged the government to make sure it stood very firm on the four principles enunciated.

Considering the remarkable retreats we have witnessed in the last few days I am sure it would not be at all difficult for the government to abandon the compulsory features of its medicare proposal or to consider a provincial scheme to be adequate in the absence of compulsory features. Several of the provinces have gone ahead and developed medicare schemes and it seems to me it is now too late for the federal government to insist on one monolithic compulsory scheme if it turns out there is opposition from the provinces and if the schemes which the provinces have instituted seem to be providing the extent of medicare which the people living in those provinces demand at certain times. We have become enraptured by the possibilities of a welfare state to the extent that "universal" and "compulsory" have become words of high praise, words which would seem in the minds of some people absolutely essential in the description of any scheme which might be considered worth while.

We know that the medical profession is not at all pleased about the suggestion that there should be a compulsory scheme. We know that a medicare scheme can succeed only with the co-operation of this most important group. I feel that the government in its negotiations with the provinces should consider carefully the desirability of taking any action in the area of medicare. I notice that in the words chosen to refer to medicare in the Speech from the Throne there seems to be a certain softening in the attitude initially taken by the government and I urge very strongly that the government should not insist on the one feature which would make medicare a source of intense dissension throughout the country rather than an area in which federal-provincial co-operation would provide the people of Canada with the degree of social assistance which they feel they can afford at this time. I believe it is quite possible for the federal government to work out the problem of providing for portable benefits without making the scheme monolithic and without making it compulsory.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief because I know what I am talking about.

May I rise to speak during the review of the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare not to criticize but just to bring forward recommendations which could be implemented if they were deemed useful after consideration. However, I will point out that if the provinces, in the course of their history, have decided to divide health and welfare into two different departments it is because thorough studies on the subject have shown this was required by the increased responsibilities and administrative burden.

The last province to follow suit was Manitoba, in 1961, which, for the reasons already outlined has divided its department in two. If we consider the development of the Department of National Health and Welfare before the merger, in 1944, we see that it was not a department, but a health branch which came successively under the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the Department of Immigration and the Department of Commerce and Industry.

Only in 1919 and at the request of the Canadian Medical Association did the department become the Department of Public Health.

In 1929, the Pensions and Civil Re-establishment Division had become less important and a Pensions and National Health Division was created. Later, following the introduction of social security programs such as old age pensions and family allowances, related in a way to para-medical problems, the Department of National Health and Welfare was set up in 1944.

Since then, Mr. Chairman, other extensive programs were added to those already administered by the department, such as hospital insurance and several national health grants. Very soon the department will also be responsible for drawing up and implementing the national medicare program and the Canada assistance plan, not to mention the Canada pension plan which is already operative.

For those reasons, the Department of National Health and Welfare should be divided into two distinct units, so that we could reorganize the whole administrative framework. When you consider also the tremendous expenditures this department expects to make to carry out its future programs, I do not think there is any other way than the one I have just mentioned. First, this would make it possible to do away with administrative routine which, when it becomes too heavy, tends to bog down and thereby ceases to advance.

Then, this would give the departments more leeway for adequate planning to provide them with greater administrative flexibility and to justify the old saying: to govern is to foresee.

We have long been bogged down in an administrative stagnation where new ideas, lest they result in small mistakes and failures, have been completely set aside, at the expense of normal progress.

Finally, that will be one of the very important recommendations of the royal commission on health.

I pay tribute to the Department of National Health and Welfare which, in 1965, developed the Canada pension plan, one of the most daring undertakings to date of the department.

Those sir, are the few remarks which I wanted to make and which are really a combination of findings and suggestions, in the best interests of Canada.

Let those who criticize when the government advocates a program such as the health insurance plan know that we are aware imperfections can slip in. But if we had to wait for the legislation to be perfect to introduce or pass it—and even then, there would be criticism—we would never have that type of legislation in Canada.

Only to the extent where time has polished them have laws become almost perfect as human standards go, and I ask all doctors throughout the Canadian nation, my colleagues, to try to understand and appreciate our breadth of views on what seemed, a few years ago, an unattainable dream: health insurance.

That is one proof that the government wants the state, here in Canada, to exist for the individual and not the individual for the state.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I have been impressed with the need for having these estimates passed but with the exception of one brief contribution on the transport estimates I have said nothing since the estimates of the Department of External Affairs were before us. I say this because I believe it is absolutely necessary that certain things be said at this stage with regard to one of the most urgent problems facing Canada today. I refer to the question of old age pensions.

I am glad that the new minister and his assistant come from two provinces where this question is never far removed from the public gaze, which is the case also in my province and indeed, the other provinces. The urgency is great. A part of the problem is to provide security for the aged, to provide thousands of our people with the modern standard of comfort or well-being which they so desperately lack. The other part of the problem is the method by which we are going to pay our debt to those people who helped build this country, who helped create the standard of affluence which we know exists but in which they share so little. This is the double problem involved.

The old cannot wait. We must seek to provide food for the living rather than following the practice, as we do so often today, of providing flowers for the dead. Food for the living is something that should be provided in much greater abundance than we are providing it today, and it must be provided now.

I want to point out several milestones in connection with old age pension legislation. Believe it or not, very few hon. members can remember as I do the debates which took place in this chamber and the other place when the first old age pension legislation was introduced in 1927, over 40 years ago. Prior to that time there was only one way by which many hundreds of old people could get assistance or relief. That was by dragging their sons or daughters into court and having the court find to its own satisfaction that their sons or daughters were not able to support them. The old age pension legislation was the first federal social security legislation put on the statute books of Canada.

Those who know anything about my history will know I have a particular reason for being interested in that legislation and its evolution, because today I consider that first social security legislation has become a monument to the memory of one man. Many helped but increasingly it has become well known as his monument.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): The first old age pensions were very meagre indeed, $20 a month at the age of 70 with a means test, but even then it was recognized we were establishing a principle and this was the first milestone with respect to old age pensions. At that time we established the principle that the elderly were persons entitled in their own right to our consideration and not merely as appendages to their sons and daughters. Prior to that they were considered as appendages to their sons and daughters to be looked after on a basis of charity and good will. It was only when the indignities heaped on old people had become so great and the physical and mental suffering so unbearable that we took that first step.

Some improvements were made to the legislation during the 1930's and 1940's but they were minor. Then in 1951 came the second milestone in old age pension legislation in Canada, the passage of the Old Age Security Act which was universal in its application and gave the pension to everyone at age 70. The pension at that time was raised to the amount of $40 a month.

This afternoon in this chamber I heard a member regretfully wishing that universality not be incorporated into our medicare legislation. I reply that the feature of universality in old age pensions which we established in 1951 is one of the finest things we have ever incorporated into Canadian social security legislation because it established a new principle. In 1951 we established the principle that every person at the age of 70 should be entitled to receive a measure of security from the community, regardless of any other consideration.

Let me add further that we did not do that just as nice Nellies or do-gooders. We did it because it was essential to establish that new principle. The earlier principle was that the elderly were entitled in their own right to receive consideration and a measure of security, and that was advanced in 1951 when we said that when people reached the age of 70 they were entitled to receive a measure of security from the community for the rest of their lives not as charity but as of right.

Sociologists in the United States, despite the fact that that country has so much piecemeal social legislation, are now eyeing with tremendous interest the idea of universality which we built into our scheme in 1951. When I hear the idea being mooted that we should place old age pensions in categories and give some of them free and others on the basis of a needs test—this needs test is recognized by all old people as a means test of a more frightful variety—I can only hope the government will not go back on one of the things which a preceding Liberal government enacted when it provided a foundation for old age pensions, medicare and other forms of security.

The principle of which I speak had another reason behind its establishment. Technology had advanced to the point where we were able to establish it and in fact had to establish it. In 1951 we recognized that there were a great number of people who, because they had spent their lives working in a period when wages were low, had not been able to put sufficient money aside for their old age. We also recognized or at least we were getting it through our skulls, which as human beings are pretty thick, that if we were going to have constantly rising incomes, constantly rising revenues and constantly rising production we had to find ways and means of distributing buying power among the population so that production would move out of the factories and could be sold, thus creating a demand for more production. All of us have not yet learned that lesson but we will learn it in a bitter way unless we learn it in a humane and wise way before it is too late.

Let there be no more of the argument that we are going to give the old age pension only to people who really need it, that we are going to scrutinize every case and will not give it to those who do not need it. On the matter of cost, when you have a whole army of social service investigators going around making these inquiries all the time the cost is very great. It is also useless and unnecessary. The social welfare people are getting fed up spending their time doing this instead of doing rehabilitation work and getting people back into a position where they can be self-supporting even if only to a certain extent. We are wrong in trying to do it in this way.

The most fair tax in Canada or anywhere else is the tax on income. I see no reason that we should not take the old age pension, old age security pension or whatever pension we are giving to elderly people, make it available to everybody at age 65 and then use the instrument of the income tax to take back according to the person's ability to pay. That is what the income tax can do and it is the fairest way of seeing that people pay their share of the cost of security across this country. If the government should have other ideas in mind, those of us in this party will want to take a long hard look before we are pushed off the solid rock of the income tax which is the fairest and the universal way of seeing that it is done justly and in a sensible way administratively as well.

I heard the hon. member for Villeneuve this afternoon talk about wasteful expenditures of one sort or another among governments. Let me suggest that one wasteful expenditure is the probing and digging into people's affairs by reasons of a means test and a needs test, quite apart from the indignity which is involved.

I should like to say also that there were increases in the old age security pension in the 1950's and 1960's. In 1957 it went up from $46 to $55. In 1962 an increase again in the old age security pension brought it up to $65. In 1963 it went up to $75. By this time the elderly people of Canada were beginning to think that the only way they could get an increase in the pension was by having elections. Had I been on the old age pension I imagine I would have thought that an annual election was about the only way to try to catch up to the cost of living.

The cost of living has continued to rise. Because of the rising cost of living the older people have been dropping farther and farther behind. Let me point out what has happened since the last increase was given in 1963. The cost of living has gone up 5.4 per cent. With today's prices we would have to increase it to $79 even to make it equal to $75 in 1963. Something else has happened which we must not lose sight of. In this period the standard of living has been rising, wages and salaries have been going up, profits have been going up and income has been going up. When this has been happening the people on low fixed incomes have been falling farther and farther behind. The production of goods and services also has been going up. So merely increasing the pension rate a little bit, even to meet the cost of living, will not bring the old age pensioners up to the modern standard of living which they must have if we are going to do the job we should be doing at this time.

I say, Mr. Chairman, it is now time for a third milestone—1927, 1951, and now 1966. We are waiting to see whether the government proposes to make this year a milestone and the older people across the country are waiting to see what is going to be done to make it a milestone. I am going to say categorically at this time that we should establish a new principle, the principle that every person at age 65 shall have the right to a pension which will provide a modern standard of living with neither a means test nor a needs test. I do not think we can do anything less than that. Certainly we have to fight for that with all the ability we have.

I am going to suggest now the things that we in this party, and I would like to hope members of other parties, feel must be embodied in this legislation when it comes in. First, I should like to say that it should be made a right and not a charity, that it become universal in Canada and that we give it to people from age 65. That is the first point.

Second, I wish to say that it must include neither a means nor a needs test which involves checking into the affairs of people, and an unwarranted interference with the older people. In the past this has been one of the reasons many of these people have tried their best to stay away from it as long as they possibly could. We hope that this pension will be given to everyone and that the surplus will be taken back in income tax according to their ability to pay.

The third principle is that the levels must be high enough to provide a modern standard of living. I know a general stand has been taken in support of the idea of pensions in the amount of $100 a month at age 65. I suggest the authorities have to reach the conclusion that that is not sufficient to provide a modern standard of living in the face of today's cost of living and standard of living. The committee which met in the other place suggested we should make the amount higher than $100 a month. They have suggested $105 a month for a single person and $185 a month for a couple.

As late as last fall the Toronto Metro Social Planning Council came to the conclusion after a careful study that for a minimum standard of living, health and decency the amount would have to be $126.47 for single persons and $213.02 for a couple. Last January, with the cost of living again having risen, the Conference on Aging met in Toronto and set up a sub committee of welfare people, social workers and experts in other fields. This subcommittee came to the conclusion that the amount for a minimum of health and decency should be $138.96 for a single person and $223.82 for a couple. These are figures which are given by competent and responsible people across this country.

I think it will be up to the government to consider these points carefully before it brings in its proposals. As I say, we must remember we live in a society where we can afford these things and where we must afford them if we are going to keep our production rising constantly. We must bring our ideas up to date. It is our ideas which are penurious and backward. I might point out that this is a much better type of national defence than all the bombers, battleships and bastions that we could possibly devise. This is the sort of thing we must do if we are to be strong economically in the modern world.

I now come to the fourth principle I suggest should be embodied in our legislation. I know some will suggest that this is a far-out suggestion, perhaps including some hon. members of the party to which I belong, but I think the time has come, and sociologists agree with me, to take the ceiling off earnings and other incomes of recipients of old age pensions. We talk constantly about creating incentives for people to save and be thrifty, incentives for people to go out and work while they can, rather than just sitting around until they become sitting ducks for doctors' offices and welfare workers. Why in the name of time can we not allow these old people to go out and perform baby sitting or the other part time jobs they can find in order that they may salt away a few dollars without being penalized? I have known of cases, as I am sure others have, where people have had to spend every last cent they had set aside for their funerals, as the welfare people express it, before being able to obtain supplementary assistance. I suggest it is time to do away with this kind of ox cart mentality, this penny-pinching line of thought that does not fit into our society today. This type of thing is economically a detriment rather than a help.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

My fifth point is that pensions must be geared not only to the cost of living and made adjustable to that level but also to the rising standard of living that we enjoy. I am not going to take much more time but I want to refer to two or three people who live in my riding and the circumstances of their situations. I am sure hon. members could do the same in respect of older people living in their ridings.

In Vancouver there lives a couple aged 78 and 77 who are self-respecting people trying to get along on just their pensions. They attempted to obtain more but they were unsuccessful because one had $48 in a bank account and the other had a little more in a credit union. They were told they could not receive supplementary assistance until they had used that money and they decided to attempt to manage on $1,800 per year.

This couple is managing to get along on their pensions alone because they own their own house. They pay taxes of $84 per year which would be $184 were it not for the efforts of the provincial premier.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): You may congratulate him, but let me tell you that he has been successful in this regard only by starving the municipalities.

The couple to whom I have referred pay $40 per year for insurance on the house, which is all they can possibly afford. They pay health insurance premiums of $60 per year. This would be cheaper if we had a universal health insurance plan. The old gentleman bought glasses last year which cost $32. He needs a dental plate very badly but cannot afford one. In January they both had the flu and his wife had to have a prescription filled at a cost of $6.50. I should like to know how any of us could manage to budget for two people with $1,800 per year. This couple manages to pay these fixed costs in a self-respecting way by cutting down to a diet of bread and tea with precious little else.

This kind of treatment is not good enough for people of this quality or calibre, nor is it good enough for another woman to whom I wish to refer who lives not in my constituency but in a small Ontario town. This woman writes in these terms:

> My husband is 70 years old and we have to live on his pension. He is a very sick man with emphasema, a form of asthma. Each month it cost him $25 and sometimes $30 for pills. I am 62 and not old enough for a pension. I can't work, my heart is very weak. We have to pay $35 rent and telephone $3.55—something we have to have in an emergency. Lights too are high.

There is something else that is high. That woman's courage is high. These people have precious little to work on but hope—hope long deferred. I am sure that every member of this house could cite cases exactly similar to the ones I have cited this afternoon.

What are we going to do about this situation? We must find an answer. Are we going to turn a deaf ear to these people or are we going to give them what they need and must have?

I intend to bring my remarks to a close very quickly but I want to suggest that time has almost run out for these people and we cannot afford to let them wait longer. We owe them a great deal for all the work they have done. We are not giving them charity; we are paying a debt.

As a final word I should like to quote from a letter from a Miss "K", and I use her initial rather than her name. This woman lives in my riding and in part she writes:

> I am 68, retired, and thought twenty years ago that I would be able to live comfortably on the pension I had arranged. . . What can I do? It costs 40 cents bus fare to get to town—no tea—no meal. Even window shopping must be avoided as a way of life. Is this living? How does one enjoy one's self?
> People were never meant to be pigeonholed alone, in one room. Even dogs to be healthy must have 'running' room and, I believe, not to be kept alone.
> I wish it were possible, for just one of our top politicians, for one week, to try to live as a lot of our older folk are forced to do. How much fortitude would they have at the end of it?
> Please raise your voice—

Then she ends by saying:

> Let the last ten years of life be a reward, a blessing, not a curse.

That is my appeal and my belief. I do not blame any of us singly for this state of affairs because I believe we are all guilty of having failed to keep abreast of the needs of our senior citizens. Let us make amends this session. Let us provide pensions worthy of a country such as Canada. Let us not forget that the life we save today may be our own tomorrow. Who knows what is going to happen in the interval? I hesitate to make such an appeal, but today I suggest that we are all tied to one community and we cannot neglect today the most miserable, neglected and down-hearted older person in this country without storing up future trouble for ourselves. Let us today have the courage to provide the kind of foundation that will mark 1966 as a milestone along the road to social security for the aged.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on these estimates with great reluctance. I intend to make more extensive remarks during our consideration of the new estimates, at which time I will deal with medical research, medical education and the like. However, after listening to the comments last evening of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I cannot allow some of his remarks to go unchallenged despite my very serious desire to see these estimates approved as quickly as possible. So far as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is concerned, I compliment her on her address but I must say that I may succumb to her charm but never to her blandishments.

It is my understanding that the bill on medicare to be proposed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be enabling legislation making moneys available to plans on a shared cost basis with the provinces. As such the government will be providing the means for some kind of medicare program for these provinces. Surely it is within the jurisdiction of the provinces to decide the type of program that each will or will not undertake.

I know that the present government has proposed four conditions surrounding the grants formula: Universal coverage, comprehensive care, government operation and portability from province to province. Surely it is equally obvious in view of the positions that several provinces are now taking that the formula will have to be amended. I refer specifically to the most recent member of the medicare club, Ontario.

Does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggest because the Ontario plan does not meet the first provision laid down by the federal government that Ontario should not qualify for any federal aid? Is that what he is suggesting? Does he feel that because there are still some provinces which look realistically at what such programs cost and decide on programs within their means, they should be penalized for careful budgeting? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre also takes the hon. member for Simcoe East to task for mentioning how slow the Liberal party has been in implementing a plan for health care. Has the hon. member forgotten that in Saskatchewan in 1944 the C.C.F. party rode to power on a program of universal medicare that did not come into being until 1962 and then only after the party to which he belongs mounted an attack on an honoured profession with such intensity and force that the wounds opened then have still not completely healed?

When I hear such things as how terrible the means test is, I wonder how sincere these comments are. It takes me back to the nightmare years of 1960, 1961 and 1962. What a smokescreen. Whenever someone such as the hon. member for Simcoe East suggests that there are areas of need in medical care such as more doctors, more medical schools, funds for the chronically ill and mentally ill, up go the smokescreens and we are treated to a heartrending story of how evil and debasing is the means test. Every time they speak they attempt to show that the socialists are the only ones in favour of all that is good. If anyone else attempts to raise any objections, however sincere they may be, they are treated to this display of socialistic virtue.

But, Mr. Chairman, let us look at the record very briefly. When the party these hon. members represent was in power in Saskatchewan, did they abolish the means test? If you were an old age pensioner who needed supplementary allowances, did you get them without a rigid and degrading examination of your finances? If you were a widow on mother's allowance and needed more milk for your children, did you get it without this rigid and degrading means test? As a matter of fact, I recall cases—I can give hon. members the details at any time—when mothers did not even get the milk and a widow would have to go to the social aid department of the city to get money in order to buy milk for her children.

An hon. Member: Where?

Mr. Brand: In Saskatchewan. Where else? Here is another point. Could you get a university scholarship or loan from the government of Saskatchewan without a means test? Ask anyone who has tried. Ask me. I did not object to it and I was grateful for what they did. It is this duplicity, Mr. Chairman, that has prompted me to rise in reply today.

I could go on to discuss hospital beds. We have heard laudatory comments concerning the hospitalization plan and features of it that have been a boon to doctors and patients alike. This I do not deny; we have had these things. But what have we on the distaff side? I listened very carefully to the speeches made in this connection and examined Hansard again last night to see whether there was anything more on this subject but there was nothing.

Consider my province of Saskatchewan. There we have a real paradox. Our patient-bed ratio is among the best in the world and yet we are faced with long hospital waiting lists. Even cancer patients have to wait months for a bed and some heart attack and fracture cases have been turned away because there are no beds for them. Imagine the situation at the University Hospital where for months complete wards are closed because of the critical shortage of nursing and other personnel. These situations have all existed; they are a matter of public record. Hospitals are faced with ever-increasing costs of operation but still there are not enough funds to provide some of the modern equipment that is considered to be so essential in running a hospital today. These are facts, Mr. Chairman, not fantasy but grim facts.

I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will not turn out to be another of those who fail to see the situation in its true light and blunder on blinded by the brilliant beam of political opportunism. I sincerely hope he is not one of those. I could go on and discuss medical care and the increasing demands on doctors' services, the over utilization, the ever-increasing costs, the deterioration in quality care, but I do not wish to prolong these estimates at this time more than is necessary. Suffice it to say that we must look very closely at these other areas of need in this country. I ask the government to look again at the Hall Commission report wherein they point out that we need doctors and we need health resource funds immediately to start building in the next few years for the number of doctors and the other personnel that will be necessary at that time.

I favour prepaid medical care. I work now under the scheme in Saskatchewan and have done so since its inception on July 23, 1962. But I would hate to see any more schemes introduced in this country by following the same rough road by which the scheme came into being in Saskatchewan because it caused heartache and disturbance among the profession and the people of that province. I do not wish to see this happen anywhere else.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I favour prepaid medical care but not at the expense of the entire economy or the quality of medical care. Surely in growing up we must first crawl and then walk before we run. Surely it is wise to provide care primarily where it is needed and specifically where it will do the most good. Provide the doctors, provide the nurses, provide modern hospitals with modern equipment, an adequate number of beds and all those other things I have mentioned and you will remove most of my objections to this plan.

Above all—and may I address this request to the minister—do not forget to have adequate consultation with those providing the service. This is something that got lost in the shuffle in the province I represent. Remember that the Canadian Medical Association asked the former prime minister, now Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, to set up the Hall Commission. Give the medical profession ample opportunity to discuss the matter with you, Mr. Minister, and you will find the path ahead a smooth one. Given such consultation, even the smokescreens of socialistic sophistry will dissipate in the cool winds of reason and understanding.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, if the present government often considers its administration with satisfaction, it happens, on the other hand, that millions of Canadians are unhappy about the huge sums of money spent on national defence and the complacency of the government with regard to the interest on the public debt.

Faced with poverty and increasing needs, those Canadians are asking the government to increase family allowances.

The Family Allowances Act was sanctioned on August 15, 1944 and went into effect on July 1, 1945. At the outset, the allowances decreased progressively with the number of children, but the government corrected that situation in 1949.

Apart from a small increase in 1957, the allowances have remained much the same until now.

Here is how the system works today. For each child under 16, the government pays $6 or $8 a month, according to the child's age. Under the terms of another act passed in 1964, that is the Youth Allowances Act, young people between 16 and 18 who are still going to school get $10 a month.

I wish to point out that since 1945, the allowances have hardly increased, whereas the cost of living went up sharply. As a matter of fact, between 1945 and 1965, the cost of living jumped by 87.7 per cent whereas family allowances increased by 9.4 per cent only.

Is it necessary to recall that in 1945, milk cost 8 cents a quart and bread 10 cents a loaf? We know that today, just to give a few examples, the price of milk has tripled and the price of bread has more than doubled. Those are undeniable facts.

Moreover, since 1945, our economic growth and our national production have increased considerably. Production increased not only in value but in volume and quantity.

I realize that each year the central government allocates huge amounts for family allowances. Thus, in 1965, Ottawa spent $550,571,248 for 6,849,095 Canadian children. We also know that since the fiscal year 1957-58 Quebec is no more the province which draws more allowances in this field, but Ontario.

If Ottawa already spends large sums in family allowances, one must not conclude that its contribution is sufficient. On the contrary, this question must be discussed considering not only the high cost of living but the families' limited income and acute needs.

I am thinking, for instance, of the situation of Quebec families. Mr. Jacques Henripin, a demographer and University of Montreal professor, drew the following outline in a lecture he delivered in November 1965 to the Family Social Services Federation congress:

> Out of the 994,000 non-farm families, 18 per cent have an income lower than $2,500; 24 per cent have an income between $2,500 and $4,000; 29 per cent are in the $4,000-$6,000 bracket; and the remaining 29 per cent have an income higher than $6,000.

Therefore, one finds, sir, that family needs, even though I choose only those of Quebec, as an example, become alarmingly greater.

That is why there is only one imperative solution and the initiative is a matter of urgency: the family allowances scheme must be amended without delay if hardship and poverty are to be fought effectively in this country.

At the last federal-provincial conference of Ministers of Health and Welfare in January 1966, the representatives of five provinces at least called for such a revision: those of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, Manitoba and Newfoundland.

If Ottawa delays any longer, the provinces which will take action will not be to blame. Hon. René Lévesque announced at that conference that Quebec would take action shortly in this field if the central government failed to do so.

Besides, it is to be wondered whether the administration of this program should not be entrusted to the provinces. Any province would then be free to set up within its boundaries a better comprehensive scheme including every aspect of social security.

It already seems as if the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) sees no objection to the provinces handling the distribution of family allowances. This attitude became apparent during an interview with parliamentary correspondent Charles Lynch over the English network of the C.B.C. on January 18, 1966.

It would seem, however, that the federal Minister of Health has no desire whatever that Ottawa should abandon the administration of family allowances.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I feel that this problem is under provincial responsibility, because it is an area touching upon social and educational fields. The constitution of 1867, in its spirit and in its wording mainly under chapters 92 and 93, gives the provinces exclusive jurisdiction over social and educational matters.

The fact that Ottawa entered this field of action in 1944 by not giving the provinces their fiscal revenue does not mean that the federal government was constitutionally empowered to do this.

It must be pointed out here that Ottawa passed its legislation on family allowances without first using a constitutional amendment. It proceeded differently with regard to unemployment insurance in 1940 and old age pensions in 1951.

[Mr. Allard.]

In fact, the federal Family Allowances Act of 1944, as that of 1964, which provides for payment of allowances to children, in addition to dealing with social needs, constitutes indirect interference in the field of education, since a child must go to school in order to be eligible for the allowance.

Therefore, it would be to Ottawa's advantage—and it would have plenty of time to do it—to devote itself to the national and international matters specifically mentioned in the constitution and to hand back to the provinces the responsibility for and the administration of family allowances.

While waiting for that development to take place, since it is urgent to amend the system of family allowances, we must ask ourselves what should be the social philosophy behind such a change.

Family allowances are related to the essence of human dignity and social welfare. The state should especially encourage its younger citizens and support the family, which is truly the basic cell of society.

As the taxpayers supply the amounts of money the state distributes, it is fitting that, in this field, the plan should be universal, just as in the case of old age pensions, health insurance and superannuation plans.

However, it is fitting that we should consider various degrees and standards in its application. For instance, with regard to allowances, family needs can be catalogued. The extent of the needs shall be studied without discrimination. The number of children per family, their age, as well as the father's income, should to be taken into consideration. Allowances could be paid according to a realistic and selective scale.

On the basis of these general principles, one can imagine various family allowances schemes.

Whatever the scheme to be adopted by amending the present one, I suggest that the new formula should be comprehensive, in proportion with the number and the age of children, based on needs, not on the simple wish to increase buying power it should take into account the father's income and the increase in the cost of living and it should be accompanied by an adjustment or exemptions concerning income tax legislation.

The new plan, in spite of realistic features, should not eliminate the first child from the benefits. The first child cannot be set aside mathematically. This child does not choose his rank upon his birth and he is a citizen like the others and he has needs; he often grows up in a needy environment and, later, he will pay taxes for thousands of other children. Consequently, any discrimination against the first born should be rejected.

It is understood that an early change to the family allowances program will increase government expenditure under the Department of National Health. But this increase, under National Health, could be compensated by reductions in other areas, by elimination of waste or by permitting the institution of a provincial lottery.

One fact stands out, in conclusion: The government must take measures to increase family allowances considerably and thus effectively fight poverty through a more equitable distribution of national income. Such is the fundamental requirement of a truly democratic government.

[English]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to take part in this debate. However, I noted that the hon. member for Saskatoon seemed to spend most of his time making an attack on the former C.C.F. government in the province of Saskatchewan. He began his speech by saying that he did not want to hold up the estimates. Then he proceeded to make a provocative speech which I think he must have known demanded a reply.

An hon. Member: Resist the temptation.

Mr. Douglas: I do not want to resist the temptation.

Mr. Starr: No willpower.

Mr. Douglas: As a matter of fact, I thought it would be a very good idea if the statements of the hon. member for Saskatoon were drawn to the attention of the people of this country and particularly to the people of the province of Saskatchewan.

The first comment of the hon. member was that the C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan took from 1944 to 1962 to set up medicare. If he was as well qualified as he pretends to be he would have told the committee that the C.C.F. government was elected in Saskatchewan in 1944 on a promise to set up, stage by stage, a comprehensive health insurance program. The medical care program even in 1962 did not constitute the final stage as it does not cover drugs, dental care, glasses or other ancillary services. The hon. member might have pointed out to the committee that one of the first things the C.C.F. government did in 1944, with a total provincial budget of a little over $30 million, was to set up completely free care for the mentally ill, both mental in hospitals and psychiatric clinics, followed by the first completely free cancer program covering treatment, deep X-ray therapy, surgery and post-operational care. The provincial government set up completely free health services for the first time in Canada for all assistance groups such as old age pensioners, those receiving mothers' allowances, wards of the government and blind persons.

The province set up in one health region the first completely universal medicare program for all residents of that region, some 65,000 persons, by way of a pilot project as early as July 1, 1945. That plan is still in operation. It provided the statistical data upon which the provincial plan could be based and also provided a good deal of the data which was of use to the Hall Commission. On January 1, 1947, the provincial government set up the first comprehensive hospital insurance program in Canada and on this continent. We in the provincial government made it very clear to the federal government, first Liberal and later Conservative, that if at any time they were prepared to pay a substantial part of the cost we would be able to proceed with comprehensive medicare.

It was not until 1961 that the province felt it had sufficient revenue to proceed with comprehensive medicare, because the entire burden of this program had to be borne by the provincial government. Therefore, for the hon. member for Saskatoon to suggest that there was any delay in implementing the promises of 1944 is either an attempt to mislead the committee or is a woeful betrayal of ignorance. Knowing the hon. gentleman, I can make my own selection.

The second matter he referred to was the question of means tests. He referred to the speech made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and said that while the members of the New Democratic party decry means tests, nevertheless in the province of Saskatchewan under the C.C.F. government means tests were retained.

Means tests were retained under the Old Age Assistance Act which provides for a pension to be paid jointly, in part by the federal government and in part by the provincial government. The regulations are laid down by the federal government and under them the provincial government is required to impose a means test. We expressed our willingness at federal-provincial conferences, both under the Liberal federal government and under the Conservative federal government, to pay our share of the cost of the government would be prepared to remove the means test. The hon. member for Saskatoon has not pointed out that during the six years the Conservative government was in office the means test was retained and that there was no willingness on their part to remove it in spite of our repeated requests.

It is true that with reference to provincial programs a means test had to be retained, particularly with reference to supplementary pensions for the old age security group. It is also perfectly apparent that with the limited financial resources a provincial government has it is almost impossible to pay a universal pension to everyone at a certain age, because a provincial government does not have the power a federal government has of collecting back in income tax a substantial part of the pension from those who do not really require it.

I want the committee and the people of Saskatoon to notice that the hon. member is arguing for the application of a means test to medicare. Does this mean that the conservative party members have now become the exponents of means tests? Does this mean they propose that the old age security pension now universally paid should be rescinded and a means test applied? If a means test is fair and equitable in medicare, it is equally fair and equitable when applied to a pension. Is the Conservative party now, through its recent more reactionary acquisitions, announcing that it has taken the backward step of supporting means tests in social welfare and health problems?

I hope that Conservative members, particularly from Saskatchewan, who have campaigned a great deal on the question of removing the means tests, will now make it perfectly clear whether the hon. member for Saskatoon was speaking for the Conservative party and particularly for the Conservative members for the province of Saskatchewan.

Another thing to which the hon. member made reference was medicare and his opposition to the four basic principles of the Hall Commission report which the Prime Minister endorsed on July 19 and 20 of last year. The hon. member for Saskatoon took some credit for the fact that the administration of the present Leader of the Opposition set up the Hall Commission. For that they deserve full credit, particularly for choosing such an outstanding person as Mr. Justice Hall. Having taken the credit for appointing the Hall Commission, I wonder why the Conservative party has not come out and endorsed the report and the recommendations of that commission.

The Conservative party has been lying in the bushes so far as the Hall report is concerned. They have carefully avoided coming out into the open and saying where they stand on the recommendations of the commission. In the recent election there was no clearcut forthright statement from the Conservative party saying where they stood on the Hall Commission report. It has been left to the hon. member for Saskatoon to say that the Conservative party is opposed to the first basic principle laid down by the Hall commission, namely, that medicare should be universal and should apply to every citizen of this country irrespective of race, colour or financial circumstances.

Mr. Brand: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he familiar with the meaning of the word "universal" as it is used in the Hall report? If not, I am perfectly willing to acquaint him with it.

Mr. Douglas: I am perfectly familiar with it. I am perfectly familiar with the paragraphs in which Mr. Justice Hall argues against any kind of means test and contends that the indignity and humiliation of any kind of test is totally uncalled for.

Mr. Brand: May I ask—

Mr. Douglas: The hon. member can sit down. I suggest he study the Hall Commission report. If he would do that instead of making the rather asinine statements he was making this afternoon I think he could make a more useful contribution to this committee and to his party.

Mr. Starr: Don't get mad.

Mr. Lambert: Come to Alberta and say that.

Mr. Douglas: As a matter of fact, I can tell the hon. member for Edmonton West that I said exactly the same thing in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Lambert: And where did it get you?

Mr. Douglas: Of course, the hon. member for Edmonton West is very interested in where it gets one. That is why the Tory party had one program in Alberta and another in Saskatchewan. That is why when they were in office they wiggled from one side of the fence to the other and never did anything about medicare. That is why there were no great forward steps in health and welfare legislation while we had a Tory government.

Mr. Lambert: We got the whole Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

An hon. Member: We set up the royal commission.

Mr. Douglas: I am suggesting that the Tory party should now tell this committee and tell the people of Canada whether they agree with the hon. member for Saskatoon that medicare in this country ought not to be on a universal basis, that there ought to be discrimination so that only those who can qualify on a means test basis will be able to get medicare under a government sponsored plan. Do they support the kind of plan that has been set up in Alberta? I think they should tell us. That is what the plan in Alberta amounts to.

It means an arrangement whereby those who are able to pay for private insurance can do so while those who cannot pay the very high premiums demanded may, if they are willing to undergo the indignity, get the government to contribute part or all of the premium provided a means test can be passed.

Mr. Lambert: You have a means test attached to many other programs.

Mr. Douglas: I notice a great many interruptions from the Tory benches but I have not yet heard any person in the Tory party say whether or not they stand for the universal application of medicare to all citizens without any means test. We are very anxious to hear just that.

The hon. member for Saskatoon took my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre to task for urging the minister to press on with medicare by introducing enabling legislation to allow the provinces to come in if they choose to comply with the four conditions laid down by the Prime Minister taken directly from the Hall Commission report. What the hon. member is suggesting is that the federal government should depart from the Hall Commission recommendations and allow each province to establish any kind of medicare program it wishes.

This means that persons moving from province to province would find totally different conditions for qualifying. We would find that the transferability, the portability of medicare would be completely destroyed. The only way in which you can have national medicare is by having uniformity and the only way in which you can have uniformity is by having universal application so that people can move from Quebec to British Columbia or from Ontario to Nova Scotia and find they are capable of qualifying wherever they may go.

The hon. member for Saskatoon warned the minister against having medicare meet what he called the "long, rough road" it had in the province of Saskatchewan. Mr. Chairman, medicare only had a long, rough road in Saskatchewan because there were mossbacks like the member for Saskatoon who fought against its introduction. There have always been antediluvians who live in the past and who fight every kind of progressive measure when it is first introduced. Yet the medical profession in the province of Saskatchewan has since come out and said that the plan has been operating successfully.

Much of the opposition was totally unnecessary. I simply want to say that I hope the medical profession has learned from this experience and that its members are prepared to sit down with representatives of the government in Ottawa and with representatives of the various provincial governments to work out suitable arrangements whereby we can have the universal application of medicare to all Canadian citizens.

Let them make no mistake about this. They can fight rearguard actions. They can make the kind of speeches we heard this afternoon from the hon. member for Saskatoon. But the great bulk of the Canadian people want universal medicare and they are going to have it in spite of all the reactionaries, and I want to say to the minister that the people will give him their wholehearted support if he has the courage to put the legislation on the statute books.

Mr. Skoreyko: If the Minister of National Health and Welfare introduces the kind of program which the hon. member suggests, would he risk his seat in Burnaby-Coquitlam so as to allow the minister to be re-elected?

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam would come over here.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may be allowed to make a few brief remarks in response to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I thank him for having made those observations. I seem to have touched a nerve somewhere. I do not wish to take away any credit from the hon. member or from the government he had the honour to lead when he brought about many useful and progressive measures in the province of Saskatchewan, measures which are working very well at the moment. But I do not wish him to take credit for those he did not bring in and I noted that he mentioned the cancer program. This was started by one of the members of the Hall Commission, Dr. D. M. Baltzan, of Saskatoon, during the Conservative administration. It was first started as a pilot plan and it was made free by the Liberals, admittedly as an election bribe in—

Mr. Douglas: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. Brand: Just sit down. I have not finished. The hospital insurance program which your government brought in did an admirable job. I merely pointed out in my address that nothing has been done to take care of the distaff side, and I would ask the hon. member to listen carefully. As I suspected, the means test was once again used by the hon. member as a smokescreen, and this is exactly what I meant. I said nothing about a means test in any medicare scheme. I made no pronouncement about the policy of our party. I asked some questions which the hon. member did not take time to listen to, and so we have had more sophistry.

The hon. member said I opposed the four main points. If he reads Hansard tomorrow I think he will find that is not the case. He said that I said we had not endorsed the Hall Commission report. I invite him to read the speeches of the Leader of the Opposition, and I think I shall send him some of mine also.

May I just read from the Hall Commission report, paragraph No. 2, under the heading "Health Charter for Canadians":

> "Universal" means that adequate health services shall be available to all Canadians wherever they reside and whatever their financial resources may be, within the limitations imposed by geographic factors.

I understood the hon. member to suggest that he thought the medical profession had learned its lesson. I thought he had learned his in Regina a few years ago. May I point out that the plan at present in operation in Saskatchewan is not the plan originally proposed. Admittedly the idea is there but the plan was changed. The legislation was changed by a special session of the legislature called by Premier Lloyd of Saskatchewan after the meeting of the doctors and the Saskatoon agreement on July 23.

This plan operating in Saskatchewan is not the plan originally proposed by the hon. member's government. That plan outlawed the private practice of medicine in the province of Saskatchewan. Certainly the present plan is working well now. The reason it is working is that the doctors are still dedicated individuals who are working hard to give the best possible care to their patients despite the fact that there is overutilization of their services, despite the fact that they are working much longer and much harder than they ever worked. But I am afraid that by reason of the amount of work they are doing they are working in less depth than they should be in medical practice, and these are things which must be considered by the committee and the government in any proposals for medicare throughout the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: I do not want to delay the committee, Mr. Chairman, but may I just make two points. Reference was made to the free cancer program in Saskatchewan. First of all, I want to point out to the hon. member for Saskatoon that the free cancer program which had been set up by a Conservative government in 1932 or 1934, if I remember correctly, provided only for diagnostic services and not one dollar was ever paid out for cancer treatment or cancer surgery until a C.C.F. government was elected in the province and supplied the necessary funds for that purpose.

The hon. gentleman also made reference to the fact that the hospitalization program was set up with not sufficient attention having been paid to the supplying of what he calls the distaff side. I suppose he means hospital equipment, plant and facilities. I would point out that between the time our government took office and the time the hospital insurance plan was established we doubled the number of hospital beds in the province. I have not looked at the figures for the last two years but for years Saskatchewan had the highest ratio of hospital beds per thousand of the population of any province in Canada and was only equalled by one state of the union, namely, the state of New York.

When the hon. gentleman points out that the medicare plan operating in Saskatchewan is not the same plan as proposed originally he is really playing with words. The plan brought in did not outlaw private practice. That was the interpretation which was given it by certain persons who opposed the plan. It certainly was not concurred in by the law officers, but in order to satisfy any who might have fears in that regard, Premier Lloyd did agree to bring in amendments to the Act. But at the time the Act was introduced in the legislature I made it perfectly clear that our understanding and interpretation of the legislation, on the basis of opinions by the law officers, was that it left the medical profession the right, if they chose, to stay outside the plan.

I contend that the basic principle of having medicare available to each person, without requiring him to prove he is indigent or comes within a special category, has worked successfully, and I am convinced that if it is made applicable to all Canadians it will work equally well and be generally acceptable to the Canadian people.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise one particular matter with the minister relating to an individual case which on the surface at least looks rather unique. It involves an individual who is the recipient of old age security payments and has a deduction from his cheques in order to cover what is claimed to be an overpayment made to him by the Department of Veterans Affairs. So far as I can understand, this is because of a provision in the Financial Administration Act. I should like to read into the record a letter sent to this individual by Mr. Bone, regional director of the federal department in Victoria, B.C. The letter is dated in September of last year. The amount of the overpayment is significant and I draw particular attention to it. The letter begins:

> As you know, an overpayment amounting to $6,926.34 was made to you by the Department of Veterans Affairs which is administered by the federal authorities.

An overpayment of $6,900 is a fantastic amount. I understand the individual in question was receiving war veterans allowance at the rate of $55 a month which, if the overpayment total is correct, would mean it extended over a period of some 10 years or more, an inordinate and unreasonably long period before it came to the attention of the authorities.

The letter continues:

> Since these authorities were not successful in effecting collection of that overpayment the matter was referred to the federal Treasury Board. The board has instructed, under the terms of the Financial Administration Act, that the amount of the overpayment be recovered by monthly deductions from payments of your old age security pension.

In the first place, this is news to me. I thought payments under the Old Age Security Act were inviolate and were not liable to attachment or deduction no matter what the reason, but apparently in this instance this was done.

I read further from the letter:

> Beginning with the month of October, 1965 and continuing up to and including November, 1980, monthly deductions of $38.00 will be made from your cheque. A deduction of $10.34 will be made from your cheque for the month of December, 1980. Beginning with the month of January, 1891—

There must be a typographical error there. I think that should be 1981.

> —payment will resume at the full monthly rate.

The gentleman who wrote to me has enclosed his cheque. He does not know what to do with the balance of $37 left after the deduction was made. There is an interesting point I should like to draw to the attention of the minister. This gentleman obviously is 70 years of age now. Presumably deductions will be made from his old age pension cheque for the next 15 years. If he is 70 now he will be 85 when the repayments are finished. On the surface it just seems wrong. First, I think the Department of Veterans Affairs, if there was an overpayment of almost $7,000, is guilty of not discovering it earlier than they did.

I have inquired among my colleagues in respect of the cases of overpayment they have heard of in their years in parliament and they say that from memory they do not recall anything of this magnitude ever being involved and that an overpayment of an amount up to $1,000 would be the maximum. An amount in the neighbourhood of $7,000, however, is completely unheard of.

In the first instance, I think there is a degree of error on the part of the Veterans Affairs administration which permitted this sort of thing to happen. I do not know what took place. I have no knowledge of the background circumstances. I have no knowledge of whether or not the declaration that there was an overpayment is correct or whether it is based on correct information. I am not going to go into that aspect.

However, from the fact that the Veterans Affairs people have said there is an overpayment of $7,000 it seems to me that they admit their error in not discovering it much sooner than they did. Second, it is the responsibility of the Minister of Justice under the Financial Administration Act to make a determination whether the overpayment is recoverable and the cabinet subsequently adopts an order in council, Treasury Board minute, or whatever the mechanism is, providing that the individual's old age pension will be cut in half even though the overpayment resulted in part from the error of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I do not know what probability there is that the overpayment will be completely cleared up. Who knows how long a person will live? I do not know this gentleman's age at the moment but presumably he is at least a year or two over age 70. Whether the individual himself will continue to receive the old age pension for a sufficient length of time to pay off the indebtedness is problematical, all other things being equal.

I would seriously urge upon the minister that he institute a review of this matter and take into account the probability that the Department of Veterans Affairs made an error in not making this determination sooner than they did and also take into account the good possibility that even if you persist in deducting $38 a month from his $75 you will not recover the full overpayment in any event because of the passing of time. If Treasury Board must insist on balancing its books in so far as this one individual is concerned, I would ask that they be kind and gracious enough to wipe some of the overpayment off the books. If they feel they must make a deduction from his cheques in order to cover some of the overpayment, then let them think in terms of a deduction of $5 or $10. This is the usual amount, the hon. member for Kootenay West tells me, and he has had many years of experience in dealing with the Department of Veterans Affairs. He tells me that usually $5 is considered to be the proper token deduction to make in order to reduce overpayments.

I seriously urge this upon the minister. I have refrained from giving the individual's name but the minister is certainly welcome to the correspondence. I will send the correspondence to him later so that he will have it in his possession. I hope he will do something worth while for this individual and see if he can approach the problem with some fairness.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to say I was both shocked and angered by the reply of the Prime Minister today to the effect that we in the Atlantic provinces should be grateful for what this government has done. I hope that my remarks this afternoon will not be considered in this light by the representative in the cabinet from Nova Scotia. This is an example of the Liberal philosophy about which I complained earlier in regard to presenting estimates in the house and it is a philosophy which must disappear if we are to hope to achieve the mutual and merited consideration of proposals when they come before the federal government.

I should like to recommend to the minister the speech of the hon. member for Simcoe East last evening. He in effect told the minister it is not realistic to try to provide the Canadian people with second rate medicare when they are deserving of the very best. He went on to say that they can receive it only if certain actions are taken by the government to provide the facilities which the doctors must have to work with if they are to be given an opportunity to provide the kind of service that Canadians want.

I recall a difficult situation that developed very recently in the Maritime provinces because we do not have the facilities to provide the kind of medical education desired by those who would like to have it. We do not have adequate facilities at Dalhousie University and there are none in New Brunswick, none in Prince Edward Island and none in Newfoundland. As a result Dalhousie medical school was under very severe criticism because of the number of applications they were willing to consider from areas other than Nova Scotia.

I know there has been a long discussion by the medical association of New Brunswick about the possibility of the establishment of a second medical school. Certainly something must be done in our area if we are to produce the number of doctors we need to service our people. Surely it would be very unfair to inflict upon doctors in our area an even greater load than they already are carrying simply because of the desire to meet a deadline.

No one in the Conservative party wishes to do anything but see to it that people in every part of Canada receive the very best medical attention. No one in the Conservative party wishes any person in Canada to be deprived of medical attention when he or she needs it. But we also appreciate the fact that certain actions which have not been taken must be taken on a priority basis before we can expect to have universal medicare or anything like it.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I do not intend to say anything more on that subject because I believe the hon. member for Simcoe East has put forward these arguments in a very cogent manner. It is my hope that the minister will give very serious consideration to them as he goes ahead with his plans.

There are two other aspects of the minister's department about which I should like to speak. First of all, I want to refer briefly to the special committee of the Senate on aging. I do so for two reasons. We have heard a great deal of criticism of the other place recently. Whether or not it is warranted is not for me to say, but I do suggest that a report of the committee indicates the value of that body to Canadians. If there is some difficulty with regard to the other place, it is one that can be rectified by the government provided it wishes to take appropriate action rather than the kind of reform we noted in certain recent appointments to that chamber.

The highly qualified men of the other place should be given the kind of useful objectives to work toward that would be of benefit to all Canadians. I refer particularly to the deliberations of that body on land use and the fact that our ARDA legislation flowed from their report on that subject. Today the ARDA legislation is very much a part of our agricultural and resource policies.

The Senate report on aging contains many recommendations which if implemented would do much toward eliminating the poverty now evident in our country. Indeed, perhaps the implementation of these recommendations would do more than any other step the government could take.

The minister has a department through which tremendous things could be done. It is a department which deals with individual Canadians in difficult circumstances, a department from which will flow great material benefits to everyone in Canada provided the minister is willing to use the facilities available to him to take the kind of action that is required.

I wish to refer specifically to a recommendation on page 19 of the Senate report on aging. It reads as follows:

> The committee endorses in principle the institution of an income guarantee program for all persons aged 65 and over and recommends to the federal government that this proposal be given immediate study.

I want to draw the minister's attention to the discussion we have had during this debate about the means test and the Senate committee's recommendation to the effect that the means test should be eliminated and should not apply in considering the needs of the older people of this nation. At page 17 of the report the following is stated:

> Any suggestion that these older people, when the $75 pension is not sufficient, should be expected to depend for supplementation on public assistance after a needs test is utterly unacceptable.

It is certainly unacceptable to me and I believe it is unacceptable to this committee. Again on page 17 of the report the following is stated:

> The question is how best to provide such benefits. One possibility would be to increase the Old Age Security Pension by some agreed amount as has been done at intervals in the past.

That is exactly what we proposed during the election campaign and exactly what we have proposed during debates in the house since this session began. This is the logical step to take and I hope the minister will get in touch with the provincial governments in this regard if he finds that necessary. I think funds are available in the federal treasury to provide for the increase if the minister wishes to take that step. If the minister feels it necessary to consult the provincial governments I am sure he will find they will be willing to join in an effort to increase old age pensions to $100 as we have recommended or to $105 as recommended by the Senate committee as the very minimum guaranteed income for Canadians 65 and over.

The other matter I wish to raise and direct to the minister's attention relates to allowances for blind and disabled persons. I have been concerned for some time about the fact that individuals receiving allowances of this type are faced with the greatest difficulty anyone in life can face in being unable to work. These people have medical requirements beyond those of the average individual; yet in many cases they are asked to subsist on $75 per month. What is even worse, the regulations laid down by the Department of National Health and Welfare are interpreted by provincial governments in such a way that many individuals are ineligible for these benefits. This is creating shocking inequities.

I might have taken dozens, even hundreds of cases from my files and read them into the record to show the circumstances of these people who are incapable of working but cannot meet the qualifications for additional allowances set down in the regulations of the Department of National Health and Welfare. In order to meet these qualifications one almost has to have, as the old saying goes, one foot in the grave and the other on a banana peel because of the way the regulations are interpreted today.

I would ask the minister to find out whether or not something can be done about the regulations in order to bring them more in line with the incapability of these people to work. I know of several cases at this time that are shocking, but whenever I write the minister of public health and welfare of my province I always receive a reply to the effect that the medical review board in interpreting the federal regulations issued by the Department of National Health and Welfare finds it is impossible for the individual concerned to qualify.

In this regard I should like to refer again to the Senate committee report on aging wherein at page 26 the following is stated:

> The committee recommends: That the N.E.S. devote greater attention to the field of part time employment with a view to discovering the nature of the demand and offering a more effective placement service.

I suggest that recommendation might apply very well to many of these people now unable to exist on disabled and blind pensions.

• (5:30 p.m.)

During the last election campaign one of the Progressive Conservative party's planks was the elimination of the means test in regard to blind and disabled allowances. Perhaps it was not a significant plank in our platform but it is a plank which indicates the real appreciation this party has for the welfare of the citizens of this nation. It exemplifies the fact that we are willing to produce the kind of program which will meet the needs of the people of this country. It exemplifies our concern for the suffering evident everywhere today in this nation among these people. I hope the minister will give very serious consideration to broadening the regulations so that employability will be a factor as well as disability.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) on his appointment to that post and I regret having to draw to his attention certain steps of doubtful value that were taken under his predecessor.

[Mr. Coates.]

It could be that the former minister was not informed of the unwholesome work performed under his department's authority by certain medical doctors who probably wanted to justify their jobs and enhance their prestige before their friends.

In any case, those wretched individuals took advantage of the cow's product to cowardly bring honest citizens before the courts. Some farmers are now charged with having put poor quality milk on the market. I am convinced that to force someone to stand trial, one must be sure that the accused is morally guilty. Therefore, in this case, the person who can honestly prove that the farmer is guilty, as far as the quality of the milk is concerned, is not yet born, for the very good reason that dairy milk is never bought but taken on consignment by the processors concerned. They go to the farmers to take delivery of the milk, they see to it that it is weighed and they only have the right to accept or return that product, and often, the product processed in several ways will be put on the market before the farmers get a penny.

At the present time, the dairy producers in the riding of Champlain are awaiting the verdict following a trial which took place before the courts in Trois-Rivières.

Other farmers in my riding are awaiting their trial which has been set for March in Quebec City. It is through the R.C.M.P. that they learned that they had put milk of poor quality on the market on May 4, 1965. The farmers, who normally sell their milk $5.50 per cwt. get from their dairy a first, second and third notice when such a thing happens. Sometimes the farmers must stop delivering milf for a week or two, that is long enough to enable them to locate the trouble. But there is never any talk of a trial. However, in the case under consideration, that is dairy milk, for which the farmers get only $3 per cwt. when it costs them $3.50, there was not any first, second or third notice.

And what is most ridiculous about this situation, Mr. Chairman, is that the processor never stopped getting milk from those farmers.

I have here the quantities supplied by a producer for each day in 1965. They total 63,669 pounds. Either his product was good or it was not. If it was, the dairy did well to accept it. But if it was not, it might have been due to the herd which should have been killed. But it might have been due also to the refrigeration method. If the milk was considered unsuitable for making some products, because it had been badly kept, the processor had the right and duty to refuse it; then, thousands of consumers would have been truly protected. The reputation of the farmers would not have suffered; and only a few lawyers would have in their pockets a few dollars less from the Department of National Health and Welfare.

The minister made a serious mistake when he mobilized the R.C.M.P. on Christmas eve to hand out summons to farmers throughout the province of Quebec, because around that time the same police officers might have focused their attention on Quebec City to prevent the distribution of thousands of pounds of meat from the United States which had been declared unfit for human consumption and, in addition, had been previously refused by the city of Montreal.

I ask the minister to look closely into this deplorable situation and to get in touch without delay with the farmers involved who are greatly concerned over what the future holds in store for them, because departmental employees who came to testify at the trial in Trois-Rivières behaved in a manner which would please Fidel Castro very much.

We should not forget that there are in your department some employees who, for these same reasons, they obtained their job, could be somewhere else. The officers of the department use the law to do their job. All laws are good, provided they are not abused. Every citizen can use certain laws. Take my case: this very morning, had I wished, I could have sent to jail the owner of a restaurant where I had breakfast. This afternoon, just with a written charge, I could have any hon. member in this house locked up. I will not do it, because we live in a democratic country and mutual co-operation should rank before felony.

In conclusion, I ask the minister to do whatever is possible not to cause prejudice to the Canadian farmers, and particularly Quebec farmers, since 75 per cent of them are no longer masters in their own house, because they owe their land to federal or provincial agricultural credit, their machinery to the banks, their cattle to the Caisses populaires, as a result of loans granted to them. Actually, they only have their wives left.

And, although the minister is unmarried, I am sure that he will not need the law when, one day, he asks a woman to take his arm.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, we did not intend to speak at length on the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, but since the discussion seems to drag on we thought it our duty to ask certain members of our party to speak in order to remove the obstruction which seems to rise on our extreme left.

We have several comments to make, but we had agreed to make them at another time. However, as we see that it is almost impossible to reach an agreement on that point, we thought we should speak immediately.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to put certain questions to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), to whom I wish much success in his new duties.

I would like him to answer the questions I shall put to him when, a little later, he gives reply to the questions hon. members put to him. If he cannot do it now, he could answer them at a later date.

The first question is this: Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered that in 1963, his party, through the present prime minister, promised to extend student allowances to the age of 21.

It will be remembered that the former Minister of Justice, who now fills a high post in London, said to the house that the right hon. prime minister always kept his promises, and that he was giving himself four years within which to keep his promise to grant students allowances till the age of 21.

We would like the minister to tell us if he has had the opportunity, since he has become Minister of National Health and Welfare, to study the prime minister's promise, and to tell us when the government or himself expect to be able to grant these allowances to students until they are 21.

I ask that on behalf of the numerous Canadian families which see that family allowances have remained almost stationary since 1945.

If one compares the cost of living percentage points for 1945 with those of today, one sees that family allowances no longer meet the purposes for which they were granted in 1945.

I do not have figures here, this afternoon, but if my memory serves me correctly, the cost of living, according to the index set in 1949, was 100. In 1945, the cost of living would have been 75, according to the 1949 index. Today, we know that the cost of living increases very fast, particularly since the last two or three years. It even exceeds 140 points.

This means, Mr. Chairman, that if the government is ready to launch a war against poverty in Canada, the opposition is ready to support it.

We note that large families are apt to be poverty-stricken. This is a fact and it is our duty to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to take immediately the necessary steps to increase family allowances in order that they may be more consistent with the present cost of living.

I state this suggestion in addition to that I made a few moments ago concerning allowances paid to students.

Now, there is another matter about which I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I do not know if, to date, he has had any opportunity to meet his Quebec counterpart, Hon. René Lévesque. But we have been hearing for many months that the hon. provincial minister intends to take over administration of family allowances. He suggests that these allowances would be granted by the government of Quebec and the latter would receive fiscal compensation from the federal government.

Would the hon. minister disclose the present stage of the discussions with Hon. René Lévesque to this effect. I wish to point out that the statement of Hon. René Lévesque to the effect that the first and even the second child of a family will not be covered by family allowances has led to many protests.

In some letters I have received from families with three, four or five children, it is said that it is no use doubling family allowances if nothing is paid for the first and second child. Anyway, they say, it would be the same.

I should like some enlightenment from the minister on the intentions of the federal government as far as allowances paid to students up to age 21 are concerned and on the intentions of the federal government concerning the readjustment of family allowances to the cost of living, and also on its intentions concerning the wish of the Minister of Health of the province of Quebec to have control over family allowances and to get fiscal compensation from the Ottawa government.

Now, sir, I conclude not by placing before the minister all the requests received by me in connection with family allowances, but by telling him once more, and this is my own opinion, that if we are to fight poverty in Canada, we must give thought to large families. I have no doubt that if family allowances were geared to the present cost of living, which is always on the increase, we could render a very great service to our large Canadian families.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Vincent: Certainly.

Mr. Caouette: I appreciate his position with regard to an increase in family allowances. Would the hon. member tell the house why his party, which was in power for five years, forgot during that time, to increase family allowances according to the cost of living index?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, if I were to take the time, this afternoon, to say—

Mr. Caouette: Take the time.

Mr. Vincent: —all that was possible to do—

Mr. Caouette: Physically.

Mr. Vincent: —during that period of five years, well, it would be too long. But I am sure, as the hon. member for Villeneuve very often says it, I cannot recall his expression: "All that is physically possible"—

Mr. Caouette: Must be financially possible.

Mr. Vincent: All that is physically possible must be financially workable.

Mr. Choquette: And really desirable.

Mr. Vincent: One must consider that this is the year 1966 and that this government has been in power for four years already. The hon. member for Villeneuve is exerting pressure so as to raise family allowances; let him keep on joining us in order to ask this government to act in the direction we all want, namely raise family allowances.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to be very brief.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I see that is welcomed on the government side of the house. I want to congratulate the minister on his appointment. He has a formidable task ahead of him in the next few years which will tax all his skill, his tact and his patience. I also want to compliment the parliamentary secretary on her appointment. I know she is keen about her responsibilities and takes them seriously. I want to say in passing that she adds a charming dash of colour to a very drab male landscape.

I pay my tribute to the staff of the department who carry on their work throughout the year as do members of other departments. I think they should receive greater recognition than they do from a very large percentage of the Canadian people. I notice some of them are here. I know they do not mind listening to this debate because it is an annual Roman holiday for the Department of National Health and Welfare. Others from the Department of Public Works are listening carefully behind them.

I support all the proposals made by members of our group with respect to a national health insurance plan, raising old age pensions to $100 a month at age 65, introduction of the Canada Assistance Plan and improved housing for senior citizens. In short, I support all those things that our party has stood for throughout the years.

On this occasion I rise particularly to deal with one item only, physical fitness and amateur sports. I must say we were very pleased with the announcement made by the minister recently that further funds are to be provided for the coaching of amateur athletes in this country, making it possible for them to take part in international competitions. I particularly wish to compliment all those organizations in Canada which are working in this field, including the Royal Canadian Legion.

I think the Legion has done very good work in this respect and has co-operated with the government, with the athletes concerned and with the communities in which Legion branches operate. I might say that the Legion branch in Kootenay West has taken great interest in the development of amateur sports and holds an annual track and field meet to promote interest in this program.

I must mention the excellent success that the University of Notre Dame has had in solving the problem of being able to combine attendance at university and good average marks with the development of sport of international championship calibre. I know that this is a unique development in the combination of educational opportunity and high calibre athletes in this country.

I stress the skiing part of the program because Kootenay West is known everywhere for its development of champions but particularly in the skiing field. In this connection I wish to quote from Sports Scope, volume 1, No. 1, now being published by the Royal Canadian Legion in the interests of the development of amateur sport. It is further evidence of the Legion's willingness to co-operate with the people, with communities and with the government in developing amateur sport. I feel in all fairness I ought to place this on the record:

> Some studied historian may one day be able to pinpoint the week end upon which Canada became a major ski power. An unstudied guess, however, would have to be the first week end of last April.
> One week before the Crystal Mountain meet in Washington, the Americans had done poorly against the relentless racers from France, Switzerland and Austria. So they went on to the National Alpine event hungry for a chance at redemption. Then somebody let the Canadians onto the course, and for the Americans it was a Bay of Pigs on skis.

And wasn't I pleased.

> With stunning suddenness, the Americans faced a new threat. It was almost as if a fifth column had struck secretly from within while American attention was focused on European racers.
> Nancy Greene swept the slalom, the giant slalom and the downhill that week end. Rod Hebron pulled a third in the slalom and coach Dave Jacob's skiers were scattered throughout the top ten positions.
> The men's slalom at the national was only the beginning. In the national, Rod Hebron, Bob Swan and Peter Duncan all placed higher than the nearest American. In the next three slalom races on the circuit, the best Canadian placed higher than the best American.
> Meanwhile, Nancy Greene had hit her stride. She won the two giant slaloms, a qualified first in a downhill, fourth in a slalom and one disqualification in a slalom after a run which was a full second faster than her nearest competitor.
> The Canadian team which had gone to the U.S.A. as country cousins returned to Canada as serious contenders for world skiing honours.
> By fall the racers were back in permanent quarters at Nelson, B.C. Those with an academic standing of grade 12 or less must attend high school. Others are encouraged to attend the local Notre Dame University or the Arts School.
> The Canadians has apparently solved the problem which is confronting the Americans: how to combine school and ski. But on the other hand, the U.S.A. has solved a problem which still confronts Canadian skiers:

And other athletes in this country—the question of funds.

> Whereas the U.S. program has a budget of $450,000, the Canadian Ski Association is having considerable difficulty in raising $150,000. If it can't, Canada's skiing ambassadors or their parents will have to dig down into their pockets to foot the bill.

I just want to mention that the Canadian Legion appreciates the sports training plan and took the opportunity to record this appreciation formally when presenting the Legion's brief to the Prime Minister on November 25 last. Reference to this will be found in The Legionary.

The Legion's national clinic for track and field coaches is recognized as one of the best in the world. The Legion admits that the success of the program has been largely due to financial assistance received from the Department of National Health and Welfare. I think we must give credit where it is due.

An hon. Member: Time.

Mr. Herridge: I have 30 seconds to finish. In view of the success to date of the sports and physical fitness program I urge continued and close co-operation by the government with the universities and other organizations interested in the promotion of amateur sport in Canada through the provision by the government of further financial assistance for the coaching of Canadian athletes who will be participating in international sporting events. I also urge that where further assistance is required it be given.

I also wish to pay tribute to Nancy Greene who lives in Rossland in the riding of Kootenay West and is one of my constituents of whom we are all proud.

Item agreed to.

Medical Services—

20. Administration, operation and maintenance including authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the total of all amounts to be paid by the governments of provinces and territories under agreements to be entered on terms approved by the Governor in Council with such governments in respect of health assistance to persons residing on Indian reserves other than Indians and to residents of the territories other than Indians and Eskimos, $32,002,500.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I hope this is the correct vote under which to raise a question which has to do primarily with medical services to native Indian people. I want to mention two or three points to the minister. In British Columbia we have a means test type of medicare program and native Indian people who make application for coverage under that program are advised that they are not eligible to be covered because their medical coverage falls under the jurisdiction of the government of Canada. I think this matter was raised a few years ago. The policy with respect to coverage for native Indian people in British Columbia was that if it was considered that the individual had sufficient funds to pay his own medical bills they fell on his shoulders but if it was determined that the individual did not have sufficient funds to pay his medical bills then the department paid them.

In other words, there was a means test in application then in the case of native Indian people who cling to what I might call their aboriginal right and feel that the cost of their medical coverage should be borne automatically by the federal government. This feeling is perhaps stronger in British Columbia than elsewhere because in British Columbia the native Indian people have not signed any treaties with respect to their lands. They feel that the Crown, having invaded their territory and exploited resources formerly exploited by the native people, has a concomitant responsibility toward them. They feel rightly or wrongly—rightly, I think—that coverage is the responsibility of the government and should not be dependent upon the application of a means test.

If this is still the policy of the federal government, and from what has been said I believe it is, we find the native Indians in British Columbia facing two means tests. First, there is the means test approach which the federal government has imposed on them for some time. Second, if they want to apply for coverage under the British Columbia medicare plan they find themselves confronted with another means test, a means test which amounts to a prohibition because the attitude of the provincial government is: We want nothing to do with you because you are a federal responsibility. As a result the native Indians find they are covered by no one so far as medical care is concerned.

I wonder whether the minister would care to reply and give an account of the policy of his department in this area. Perhaps he could tell us whether any steps are being taken to overcome the difficulty which native Indians are experiencing in getting medical coverage.

At the same time he might tell us what the situation is with respect to the so-called medicine chest case in Saskatchewan. A year or so ago a court found that the present day application of a provision in one of the old treaties meant that these people should receive medical coverage from the state.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Skeena but I see it is six o'clock.

Mr. McIlraith: When the Speaker resumes the Chair I propose to ask that we waive private members' hour.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), Labour Conditions—Timmins—skilled labour shortage in gold mining industry; the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro), Industry—Hamilton, Ont.—cessation of operations of Studebaker Company; the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates), Broadcasting—Fowler Commission—acceptance of recommendations.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask unanimous consent to forgo the private members' hour today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent at this time to forgo the private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Olson: Only on condition that it is postponed and not abolished.

Mr. McIlraith: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the private members' hour just be postponed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Medical services—

20. Administration, operation and maintenance including authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the total of all amounts to be paid by the governments of provinces and territories under agreements to be entered on terms approved by the Governor in Council with such governments in respect of health assistance to persons residing on Indian reserves other than Indians and to residents of the territories other than Indians and Eskimos, $32,002,500.

Mr. Howard: As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, a year ago or perhaps longer a court in Saskatchewan decided that a clause in a particular Indian treaty meant, in present-day terms, that at least the Indian people covered by the treaty should have their medical coverage provided by the state. The implications of this decision were extremely far reaching and would, I think, lead us in the direction which I for one would like to take, namely that of providing medical care coverage not only to native Indian people but to others.

This court decision brought the matter to a head. I understand that the government of Saskatchewan appealed the decision. Why, I do not know; presumably they did not like it. I should like to know from the minister what is the current status of this case. If it is still pending as an appeal before the courts I think we are perhaps prohibited from saying very much more about its merits. Before I go further, perhaps the minister can tell me the status of this particular case.

Mr. MacEachen: In connection with the first question asked by the hon. member, the one relating to Indian participation in the medical service of British Columbia, the department does of course provide medical services to the Indians. However, at the present time it is attempting to provide a method by which Indians can participate in the British Columbia insurance scheme and secure coverage under the provincial medical aid plan. So far the department has not been fully successful in achieving its objective but it is continuing its efforts.

Mr. Howard: What about the court case?

Mr. MacEachen: I am sorry. I was otherwise engaged when the hon. member mentioned the case in Saskatchewan. Would he be good enough to repeat it briefly? Then I will try to give him the necessary information.

• (6:10 p.m.)

Mr. Howard: This is the so-called medicine chest case. I do not recall the name of the Indian group involved. It related to an early treaty which said that a first aid kit or medical facilities of that kind should be kept at the Indian agent's office. As I recall, this was subsequently determined by the court to mean full medical coverage in present day terminology. The decision was appealed and I should like to know the status of this case now.

Mr. MacEachen: I should like to tell my hon. friend that it has not yet been decided.

Mr. Howard: Then I shall say no more about that aspect. However, what the minister had to say with respect to negotiations with the provincial government of British Columbia to bring native Indian people under the B.C. medical plan was interesting and revealing. It was an amazing statement for him to make because his own Prime Minister has declared on more than one occasion that he is in favour of the four fundamental points set out in the Hall Royal Commission report on health services, one of them being that medical care should be universally applicable and that there should not be a means test. I presume it is still the position of the government that when it comes to the question of medicare the government's policy is to make it universally applicable without a means test.

But in the face of that the minister now tells us he is negotiating with the province of B.C. to bring native Indian people into a plan that has a means test. He and the Prime Minister are running in opposite directions. In recent days it has been shown that there is a divergence between what the Prime Minister thinks and what some of his ministers think, but if the Minister of National Health and Welfare wants to be consistent with the Prime Minister's policy he should be leading the way in medicare with regard to people who are his direct responsibility under the constitution so as to provide medical coverage without a means test for native Indian people not only in B.C. but right across the country. The B.C. plan has a means test as an integral part of it.

I hope the minister is not successful in these negotiations because I know what will occur in that event in B.C. and I know what is occurring now. People have to go to the premier of the province and disclose their bank accounts and how much property they have. They must make full disclosure of all their personal circumstances in order to get medical insurance coverage. This is contrary to our way of thinking and contrary to the thinking of the minister's party. As I say, I hope the minister is not successful in these negotiations and I hope he will seriously reflect on this matter.

Mr. MacEachen: I am not precisely clear as to the point the hon. gentleman is making with respect to the means test. The objective of the department is to have the Indian population treated in precisely the same way as other citizens in British Columbia who are served under the B.C. medical insurance scheme and in that way to secure the kind of integration that is a goal. But this does not in any way detract from our general policy with respect to the universality of medical insurance. As has been stated several times today and yesterday, we will assist provincially administered medicare plans which meet the four principles, one of which is universality.

I was encouraged the other day to read in the press a report made in the provincial legislature of New Brunswick to the effect that it was the intention of the province of British Columbia to enter the general plan. If that report is correct, then it is very encouraging and will remove the difficulty my hon. friend foresees.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, this sounds something like the Bomarc philosophy, that you get something and once you get it you do not want it; you want something else. It also hinges on the prospect of the government bringing in a medicare program and the minister has not shown any indication that it is going to do that yet. I still say he is going in the wrong direction. If he wants to provide full medicare coverage involving the principle of universality, then let him start with the human beings who come within the jurisdiction of the federal government. We have applied a means test philosophy to them for donkey's years which has resulted in the degradation of these people and the development of an inferiority complex on their part. The minister is now attempting to perpetuate the same sort of system by bringing them under the B.C. medical plan, which involves a means test, on the same basis as everybody else.

If the minister wants to negotiate with the B.C. government for coverage of the native Indian people across the board so they will be covered regardless of the means test in the provincial plan, then that is a horse of another colour and I wish him success. But obviously he is not trying to do that. He is trying the approach of integration and integration is a pretty foul word so far as the native Indian people are concerned because the implication is that it is a one-way street.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, there may be a misunderstanding here. I do not see where the fact of a means test enters into the service that we are attempting to provide or that the means test is any way applicable to the Indian population if they can be served under the B.C. medical plan. This is our feeling about it.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the minister realizes my intervention is meant only to be helpful to him. There is a section in the Indian Act which says that the Governor in Council may make regulations for the purpose of providing health services for the Indian people but even though the Indian Act has been in existence for many years apparently the Governor in Council has not yet got around to making regulations in connection with health services for Indian people. Indeed, one might almost argue that the activities of the minister's department in this connection are without any real statutory foundation. I suggest that without waiting for legislative action respecting a national medicare scheme regulations could be enacted under the authority already given to the Governor in Council by which, without application of a means test, the services available under the British Columbia medical plan could be provided for the Indian people of B.C.

I suggest to the minister that this is a course of action he might consider. I think the few of us who know the situation at all, in respect of the approach currently in effect in providing Indians with medical services through the Department of National Health and Welfare can argue that the present situation is a most unsatisfactory and unhappy one. The Indian people themselves do not know where they stand from one day to the next so far as their eligibility for health services is concerned. So far as I have been able to find out, most of the persons who are administering the services, certainly the people in the Indian Affairs branch, do not know where they stand in trying to tell the Indian people what they may or may not be eligible for.

I suggest to the minister that there is open to him an immediate course of action for which there is statutory authority, to bring all the Indian people of British Columbia into the coverage of the British Columbia medical plan without in any way creating the situation which the member for Skeena has been discussing with respect to the proposals which I understood the minister to say are being considered or discussed with the government of British Columbia at the present time. I suggest this might be a very useful interim measure and that the problem of medical care and services for the Indian people could be resolved immediately under the authority of the legislation now in existence. In many ways it would simplify, at any rate, the administrative situation in respect of Indian health services. In fact, if the Governor in Council were to adopt regulations which in effect would prepay the premiums for the Indian people so that they would be eligible for the full benefits of the British Columbia plan, this need not cost the federal government any more for health services in British Columbia than they are spending at the present time.

Mr. MacEachen: My information is that the department is quite ready and eager to do what the hon. member suggests.

Mr. Barnett: The minister says his department is eager and ready to do it. Is the government eager and ready to do it? Are they going to do it and, if so, when?

Mr. MacEachen: The answer is yes, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

25. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment including payments to hospitals and other institutions which care for Indians and Eskimos as contributions toward the construction of hospitals and related facilities, $5,050,000.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, there is one brief comment I should like to make concerning a hospital close to Prince Rupert known as the Miller Bay Indian Hospital. Originally it was a hospital for tubercular patients. With the decline in tuberculosis it has been transformed into a sort of general hospital for native people from the whole northern part of British Columbia and I presume part of the Yukon Territory as well. In fact, I think I met a native person from the Yukon who was a patient in that hospital at one time.

The hospital facilities are second world war army or air force buildings. They were built during the second world war for military purposes and are pretty antiquated by present day standards. About a year ago an attempt was made to close the Miller Bay Hospital. This was forestalled because if it were closed there would not be sufficient hospital facilities available in the area to take up the slack and provide accommodation for the patients who normally might expect to be in the Miller Bay Hospital. So it has been kept in existence.

So far I have heard no thought expressed nor plan ennunciated with regard to what is scheduled so far as the Miller Bay Hospital is concerned. My thought and that of a large number of the native people there is that we would just as soon see the Miller Bay Hospital closed and go out of business because these people would rather have hospital care and attention provided to them in the same type of hospital and with the same facilities as those provided to other people. They do not want to see the perpetuation of the system of establishing separate facilities for people based on their racial origin.

I am wondering whether there are any plans for the government to work in conjunction with the British Columbia government to expand the hospital facilities available under British Columbia law to the extent that they will provide sufficient beds for the expected number of native people who might have to use them if the Miller Bay Hospital were eventually closed. I should like to hear about this and so would the people in this area. Can the minister tell us anything about the plans in respect of Miller Bay?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I can tell my hon. friend it is the wish of the department to do precisely what he wishes, that is, to wind up this hospital. It is a question of getting alternate facilities.

Mr. Howard: How soon will it be proceeded with or how soon will the alternate facilities be available?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I regret I do not have the information on this particular hospital with me at the moment. If it will satisfy my hon. friend, I will assure him that I will obtain full particulars and give them to him by letter as soon as possible.

Mr. Howard: That is quite agreeable, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $14,892,700.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, is the minister going to make a statement on this item?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I did not plan to make a statement because these estimates cover works for the year just ending and which are nearly completed. I think the items which really are of interest to hon. members are those in next year's estimates which I hope will be referred to the Standing Committee on Housing, Urban Development and Public Works in the very near future.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, we do not wish to delay the passing of these estimates unduly but we would like the assurance of the minister that the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967 will be sent to the standing committee as soon as possible after the new fiscal year begins.

Mr. McIlraith: I will gladly give that assurance right now.

Mr. Keays: At this moment it is quite evident that we have to ask ourselves whether there is co-ordination in the work of the department, whether there is a meeting of minds and also whether the different branches of the department are directing their efforts to the same cause when they are studying the feasibility of projects and undertaking studies. It seems that the equilibrium has been upset somewhere along the line and I should like to say more about this a little later.

It seems to me we are not heeding the danger signs of inflation in the nation and if we are we are not applying the solutions all across the country. Some areas of the country have been declared as designated areas because there is high unemployment and a great deal of available labour. It seems to me that the measures we are using in this regard are not being applied elsewhere in the country and I hope that the people in the department are aware that domestic measures must be taken to curtail the dangerous inflationary trends. I hope they also realize that an appraisal of government spending programs must be made so that priorities can be applied to certain projects with others being postponed.

Duff Roblin, the premier of Manitoba, tried to impress upon the government some time ago that we could not afford all the requirements of government at once but that priorities must be set in order to deal with them in turn as we can afford them. Many of the projects included in the estimates now before us have not been started. We have items in the present estimates for projects which are of grave necessity but which have been postponed for a number of years.

A few moments ago I suggested there was not a meeting of minds concerning some of the projects which have been undertaken. Before coming into the house yesterday I read an article which appeared in Le Soleil, edition du Bas St. Laurent, concerning port facilities being built in the area of Gros Cacouna. I understand this project will cost in the neighbourhood of $4 million. We are now endeavouring to find out how we are going to utilize these facilities. In the article there is this statement in French:

[Translation]

The decision to make an operational survey of those harbour improvements should also be announced shortly. The survey would be conducted by a specialized firm.

[English]

This project is practically complete but we are now going to undertake the study of a portion of it. Does that mean that the branches of the department that studied the project before it was started did not consider all the factors or that there have been changes in the plans of certain individuals who wish to establish industries in the area, or does it mean that this project was simply built to answer the wishes of the people of the area?

The hon. member for Rivière du Loup-Témiscouata is not in his seat at the moment but I want to assure him that I have no objection whatsoever to this project. I do object, however, to the fact that many projects of a more pressing nature have not been proceeded with yet. I think of many small repair jobs that have to be done to wharves and small necessary dredging jobs which would cost from $200 to $2,000.

There seems to be some confusion in this regard. When it comes to these small but necessary jobs they are not proceeded with but when it comes to jobs costing millions of dollars they go ahead. This seems to be a pennywise and pound foolish policy. I refer to the inshore fisheries of the lower St. Lawrence and eastern Quebec. The fishermen there cannot carry out their operations because of sand which has moved into the entrances of the harbours. They must wait until high tide before they can get into or out of the harbours. The dredging of these harbour mouths would entail very small expenditures. It seems that the powers that be get around to doing these small jobs in the month of November after the fishing season is over. When spring arrives the same situation exists because the sand has been carried in again and the fishermen cannot get out to the fishing ground. I know of 25 instances of this kind.

In this same regard I cannot help but think of many slipways which have been built. I trust that professional engineers had nothing to do with the planning of these slipways. Some of these slipways have been built with a stone or concrete wall four feet higher than low tide and I should like to know how a fisherman can get his boat up on the slipway at low tide. There are eight or ten such slipways in my area alone.

On the other hand, I can think of areas where wharves are necessary for the deep sea fishing fleet but because of the lack of repair ships are not able to approach these wharves. There is a lack of bumper facilities, rubber or otherwise, for the protection of these ships. In many instances there are large nails protruding and ship owners refuse to use the unloading facilities. These jobs require small expenditures but they are very essential to the fishermen in the area.

Without taking too much more time I want to refer to the Chandler project and the study which was made by the research council in 1959. This project was proceeded with because of the urgent necessity of having a new harbour at Chandler. In that area there is a pulp mill. One paper machine has been installed and I am sure a second one will be installed in the near future. The company in the area cannot operate efficiently or profitably by using the present facilities at Chandler. The government has asked the company to contribute a certain amount of money toward the project. To date the company has refused to make this money available because of certain conditions which have been imposed. Apparently the contribution amounts to $525,000 payable in two instalments, one of $50,000 and one of $475,000 upon completion of the project. What hurts the company concerned is the fact that the $475,000 is an amount of money which the Department of National Revenue says the company will not be able to charge against operating expenditures.

I have never heard, and I doubt that too many people have, of a case where a private company has been asked to contribute a large amount of money to a capital expenditure for a project belonging to another body or person. In this case the new installation will be the property of the government or the public and the company will be asked to contribute a large amount of money which it cannot deduct from its expenses. I think we have a new approach in this regard and I should like to suggest that the company would accept additional wharfage charges or rental charges involving large amounts of money because they would be able to charge these expenses against their operating costs. In this way the amount of money asked from the company by way of a capital expenditure would in the period of a few years be doubled.

I would therefore ask the minister to endeavour to settle this case as soon as possible because the situation is urgent. I hope that necessary repairs to facilities will be carried out as soon as possible next spring so that those people who wish to work may do so. We should encourage people to work and they should be given the opportunity of pursuing their trade without great difficulty.

We wanted to speak about the tendering system employed by the department. We also wanted to speak on the question of awarding contracts on a regional basis up to a limited amount of money. However, we will delay our discussion of these matters until the estimates for the next fiscal year are before the committee.

As a final request of the minister and the government I ask that a little initiative and perhaps imagination be used in building across this country in maritime areas marinas for those who wish to travel by boat on their holidays. Boat travel is a new trend. There are hundreds of thousands of boats in use across this country by people who use them for their holidays.

I am sure it is important to these people to know that when they are at sea they can use these marinas as resting places and to obtain protection from the elements of nature. Marinas are needed in the St. Lawrence and gulf areas; they are needed on the lakes. I am sure that with our centennial year approaching many American tourists will be coming to Montreal by yacht and it would be unfortunate if disasters occurred because of the lack of marinas along the St. Lawrence up to Montreal.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure there is a tendency to wish to discuss on a regional basis the proposals made recently by the Department of Public Works. However, I think we should perhaps wait until the minister's estimates for 1966-67 are before us. I am in agreement with the proposition that even though we have not authorized in a technical sense the payment of money for the operations that have taken place under the Department of Public Works, eleven twelfths of the money has been expended and payments under contracts must be made. I do not think that at this late date we shall renege with regard to the operations that have been undertaken in the last year.

I should like to bring to the attention of the minister a matter that has been drawn to my attention quite forcibly in the last few weeks. It concerns a change in the practice of the department to which I as a member of parliament am opposed. I have looked at the list of staff members of the department to see how many executive secretaries the minister has because every time I write a letter to the minister or the department I receive a reply from an executive secretary saying that what I am inquiring about cannot be done.

I do not know what qualifications are necessary for one to be an executive secretary but some of the problems I have referred to the department are of a highly technical nature. I have been asking the department for advice whether a project is feasible and have received the reply that the project will not be undertaken. In my opinion it is not for executive secretaries to say whether a project is to be undertaken and in most cases I am not asking for this type of advice but for one of the officials of the department to decide whether it is feasible. As a member of parliament I am asking for this information.

I know this system is adopted in other departments when requests are made of an official and I can see some merit in it in that members of parliament are supposed to deal with these matters at a certain level. However, I believe the Department of Public Works is a pretty broad organization and it is also a fairly technical organization in many aspects of its duties. For this reason I suggest strongly that unless the executive secretaries are Solomons they should leave it to the heads of the various departments to decide whether something can be done.

The matter that I raised with the department was a very simple one and referred to a particular type of soil. My inquiry was whether this soil could be used in greenhouses and, if it could, would it be possible to lease a certain portion of land from the government? I received a reply saying that the government had decided they needed this land and were not going to lease it. There is no point in leasing it if the material is of no value. We can negotiate for the land after it is decided whether it is valuable. My request was for technical advice.

No doubt the minister is well aware, after listening to some of the speeches that have been made previously, that in the field of public works there are wide ramifications. There are highly trained and highly skilled people in his department and I believe that members of parliament can benefit from the advice these people are able to give. When it comes to a matter of policy I agree that this should come from the minister but the system of channelling letters from a member of parliament through the minister's executive secretary is one that I believe the minister himself does not agree with and as a member of parliament I disagree violently when my inquiries are subjected to this delaying type of tactic. Under this practice the suggestion is that the answer is given from the top, which is not necessarily the place at which you wish to start. Therefore I suggest that if this is a new policy, and I am informed it is, it should be discontinued.

There is one other matter I should like to mention, Mr. Chairman, and it was mentioned by the hon. member who spoke before me. I refer to changes that have taken place by regulation. One such change has bothered me because it was an issue in the last election campaign. It was a decision of the Prime Minister to make a change in the harbour facilities for pleasure craft. We have always been interested in knowing why the government had not moved into the field of providing services for this changing environment, particularly on inland waters. I live by a body of water that is a boundary between two provinces. This area has had considerable commercial activity in years gone by but that commercial activity has now changed. While the activity is no less commercial and in fact the volume, moneywise, has increased, it has completely changed. We were interested in the change that could be made by regulation at the insistence of the Prime Minister while visiting British Columbia. He had the opportunity then of involving himself with the yachting society in the area, taking a trip and finding the facilities not suitable. We are all well aware of the fact that the facilities are not suitable in many areas.

This is something to which the federal government should give consideration. I am surprised that this was done for political purposes. I hope the minister intends to give the house before long some indication of what is the government's intention in this regard. I believe that in every province in Canada tourism is a growing industry. Some aspects of it in some areas are international and in other areas interprovincial and really not the responsibility of the provinces, but no jurisdiction has yet been established in regard thereto.

The minister will probably have to reconsider the regulation which was passed in response to the generous gesture of the Prime Minister but which I think has not been thought out too well. If that is done, then assistance and technical advice can be given areas which will benefit from it in the provision of the proper type of harbour facilities, thus projecting the trend which has developed over an extended period of time.

These are only two considerations to which I should like the minister to pay attention. I hope that when the estimates of the Department of Public Works are brought before parliament in the next few weeks they will be referred to the committee for detailed study because I believe it is a department which affects every member of parliament and we have got bogged down because of the way we have been handling estimates in the past. If we do what we are doing now and relinquish our opportunity to speak on each of the items in these estimates which concern our ridings then there should be some method, as there is in England, to compensate for this loss of scrutiny and give a member the opportunity to make some recommendations regarding public works in his riding. In my opinion this is not possible under the present system of handling the estimates.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I only wish to say a few words on the estimates of the Department of Public Works. The minister is rightly anxious to have his estimates passed, since they have been spent. I want to point out to the minister that he is more anxious to see his estimates passed than to comply with the suggestions and the requests we submit to him rather often.

I wish to call his attention to the Rouyn post office in the riding of Villeneuve. A few years ago, before I came to this house, this post office was enlarged. Now, this extension gives the impression that, instead of a post office in Rouyn, we have some kind of a henhouse.

It should not be overlooked, Mr. Chairman, that the city of Rouyn is the metropolis of northwestern Quebec. It is the largest city and the nerve centre from the economic, social and every other point of view, of northwestern Quebec.

We have very nice post offices in Val d'Or, Malartic, Noranda, we have small post offices in Cadillac, Duparquet, and Evain in the riding. I sometimes wonder what architect in the Department of Public Works had the idea of building a henhouse to serve the population of Rouyn.

This post office should be completely done over. And if the minister ever went through Rouyn, he must have seen this shameful building there. The most populous city of the county and of all northwestern Quebec.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) asked me to make representations to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), so that changes may be made to give us a post office which not only looks like a post office but which meets the needs of our city of Rouyn.

I know that the estimates which we are studying will not allow him to enlarge or improve post offices, but he could use those for the fiscal year 1966-67 to see that the exterior or appearance of the Rouyn post office is changed. It is a sorry sight as it now stands.

Mr. Chairman, I should also like to point out to the minister the pressing need of two airports in our region, one at Val d'Or, the other at Rouyn. In the case of Val d'Or, the necessary credits have been voted and the Minister of National Defence will probably attend to it. In the case of Rouyn, the Minister of Public Works will have to see to it.

All we have now is a small shack, 20 by 24. Fifties of people go to the airport to catch the plane. We have been asking for an airport for at least four years, but the minister has turned a deaf ear.

Another thing: people from different municipalities, in that part of the province, of the country, have asked the federal government to help with the construction of wharves on certain lakes in our region. They were told every time: "Since it is intended for tourist purposes, we are not really eager to build those wharves."

I remember, for instance—it may have been about 15 years ago—that under the Liberal administration here in Ottawa, and the present Minister of Public Works sat in this house at that time, authorization had been given for the construction of a wharf at Taschereau. The name was not Taschereau then; the area was known as Pontiac county, but, at Taschereau, a wharf had been built in the middle of a field, approximately 300 feet from lake Robertson. The wharf is still there today and people go there to fish in blue hay, where the water is about six inches deep. They fish for small perch.

This wharf, built with public funds under a Liberal government, is useless, except for a few young people who like to go fishing. As a matter of fact, this wharf is so far from the lake that I wonder whether the minister was not asked to build a lake along the wharf in order to justify its existence. I wonder.

At any rate, I sincerely believe the minister should give some thought to the building of wharves along certain lakes in the Duparquet area, for instance, an ideal spot for tourists which attracts thousands of persons every year from the United States and everywhere.

People who arrive at the lakes with their fishing gear and a boat are disappointed by the lack of wharves and ramps in our area, and they cannot enjoy their holiday. The Minister of Public Works should heed those requests and authorize the construction of wharves in our area.

Mr. Chairman, these are a few comments I had in mind. I know the minister is anxious to have his estimates passed, but I would ask him to be slightly more anxious to reply when we ask him something. It is all very well to say yes, yes, yes but something must be done.

We cannot be satisfied for ever with "yes" and promises. It may be more difficult to pass the 1966-67 estimates than those we are studying now. Let the minister ask his officials to accede to the legitimate requests not only of the people of my county but also of other counties.

I wish to insist particularly on the building of an appropriate and nice looking post office in Rouyn, so that the one which we have now can be demolished.

• (7:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, normally this is the time when each member should have the opportunity, and take the opportunity of raising questions of a local character respecting the administration of the Department of Public Works in his constituency. I am not going to do that this afternoon. I am going to confine my remarks, and even those will be brief, to the policies of the government, and in particular to the administration of public works on what I would consider to be the national scale.

First, Mr. Chairman, I should like to impress on the officials, and on the Minister of Public Works, that there are a large number of people across the country who feel that the federal government is not following through with the terms and the intent of the Trans-Canada Highway Act that was passed in this house. I think if you were to examine that piece of legislation, it would be found that it was not the intention that the federal government should give only one payment to the province, as a share of building the highway in the first place. The intention was that Canada should have at least one highway from coast to coast built to sufficient standards to accommodate the requirements of traffic on that highway.

I suggest to the minister as well that the specifications that were called for in 1950, or thereabouts, for a highway across Canada have changed substantially since then. Yet there has been no indication from the government that it intends to continue to assume the responsibility of the federal government to see that there is a modern highway from one end of Canada to the other. The government simply made a payment, I believe in the first place on a shared cost basis of 50-50, and when that highway was completed across any province that was the end of the federal responsibility. Mr. Chairman, we do not accept that as being in keeping with the intention of the Trans-Canada Highway Act.

On looking back you may see many occasions where the federal government has in fact amended the provisions of the Trans-Canada Highway Act by moving forward the completion date, and also changing the federal government's share of the cost of the balance of the unfinished highway, if you like. The result has been that some provinces which were very conscientious and very swift to proceed to build this highway across areas for which they were responsible have in fact been penalized.

We had a debate in the house respecting this matter a few days ago when, I believe, the hon. member for Gaspé introduced a notice of motion respecting some aspects of it. I am not going to talk at any length now, but I believe that there is a need to advance the standards respecting the highway to meet the needs of highway traffic. The federal government should not withdraw from that responsibility. A particular section I have in mind at the moment is a stretch of approximately 70 to 80 miles, from Calgary to the border of the Banff National Park. In view of the Alberta department of highways decision to construct a two-lane highway in the first place, there has been a failure in its capacity to take care of traffic using it.

It has been suggested that when the provincial government proceeds to upgrade the standards of that highway to four lanes, the federal government will refuse to pay a part of the cost of increasing the capacity of the road to meet new traffic conditions.

Mr. Chairman, without taking a great deal of time, I think that the federal government should announce that it intends to participate on a continuing basis in the keeping up to modern standards this highway across the country.

I think, too, that the federal government should change its attitude—if I may use that word—with respect to the disproportionate share that has been paid to some provinces which have been able to delay the completion of the highway.

Participation has moved from 50 per cent to 75 per cent, and in some cases to as high as 90 per cent. We think that this is discriminatory and that it should be changed.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take time to go into some of the other details, although as I said at the outset, I think this is the appropriate time to do that. I will not do so, because we are in the last month of the fiscal year.

I hope that the minister is ready to give some favourable response to the requests which have been made of his department, that the federal government should not withdraw completely from its responsibilities in keeping up to modern day standards this highway from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments along the lines which have been made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat with regard to, first of all, the Trans-Canada Highway, what to me has become an entirely inexcusable, discriminatory treatment of various provinces with regard to the completion of the Trans-Canada Highway. It seems that those provinces which dragged their feet either intentionally, or otherwise, got the better treatment. Those provinces particularly the western prairie provinces, which completed their construction early were discriminated against. It is true that in that part of the country it is a good deal easier to build roads than in other parts. Surely, they are entitled to the same percentage contribution as some of the other provinces, in so far as the Trans-Canada Highway is concerned. I think what has happened is entirely wrong. I think that the prairie provinces should not have been penalized.

I want to underline what has been said by the hon. member for Medicine Hat with regard to the section between Calgary and Banff. On the one hand we have the government support of the application of Canada for the winter olympics of 1972 which will require an expansion of the road facilities between Calgary and Banff. This notwithstanding some of the bureaucratic nonsense which has come out of the department of northern affairs where some of the senior officials seem to think that it is their duty as administrators to determine when the point of saturation has been reached in the usage of our national parks.

This is nothing less than bureaucratic arrogance. Our national parks are for the enjoyment of the people. The trans-Canada route was designed to lead to the majority of the national parks in the Rockies, and it is incumbent on us to develop the roads to them but not to penalize the provinces. I think that with regard to this section of the road, the province of Alberta is entitled to additional contributions, in the same way as the province of Newfoundland receives a higher rate, some 75 per cent in respect to the highway. In the same way as the province of Quebec receives particular contributions toward trans-Canada highway construction because of Expo. In addition to that Quebec receives a lot of fringe benefits, if I may call them that, with regard to highway construction in and about the city of Montreal.

I do not understand why there should be this discrimination—and it is rank discrimination. I think a great deal could be said in this same vein on behalf of the province of British Columbia. I wish to draw the attention of the minister to this matter in no uncertain terms. We shall be back dealing with this question time and time again during consideration of the estimates for 1966-67. This is an injustice which must be redressed.

The other point on which I should like to speak briefly tonight concerns the re-organization of the minister's department. It has now become a service department. We want to hear a great deal more about this reorganization than the minister has told us. I have become aware of certain tendencies which might be disquieting. There may be a logical reason for them, but we should have an explanation. Are we to have a series of little empires with planning sections, tendering sections and so on, with "big Father" in Ottawa still looking over the shoulder?

Is there to be a diminution of function here in Ottawa or is this to be merely a proliferation of administrative layers? We must have a detailed explanation. I do not expect we shall get it tonight but we shall look forward to hearing one at the earliest opportunity.

While the Department of Public Works is engaged in this business of decentralization into the five regions, it is curious to note that some of the other departments seem to be reversing this tendency and are doing away with the co-ordination which is inherent in a regional directorate. I think it is right to allow more authority in the field, but let us consider what other departments are doing in this regard. I have a suspicion that they are missing the boat. As I say, I hope there will be a full and frank disclosure of what has been done in the Department of Public Works, and that an explanation of this new philosphy will be given us at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Howard: I should like to support, briefly, the proposals made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat and the hon. member for Edmonton West in relation to the Trans-Canada Highway. We have long contended that inherent in the concept of building this highway was a concept of discrimination as between one area of the nation and another.

I do not wish to go into this matter further. I am sure the minister knows my views both with regard to this particular subject and with regard to proposals for additional highways, also to be built on the basis of federal-provincial participation, and usually referred to at home as the second Trans-Canada Highway. This is a matter we can deal with subsequently when the opportunity is available and when more time is at our disposal. I just wanted to say we completely support the thoughts of the two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken on this subject.

I should like to refer briefly, perhaps "for home consumption", as the phrase is, to two or three communities which are affected by decisions of the minister. These are the communities of Hartley Bay, Kincolith, Kitkatla and Kitimat.

I have had correspondence with the minister about the needs of these communities in recent days. The need of each one of them is the same, namely, a harbour or breakwater system to protect the fishing boats and the people who live in these communities.

The case of Kitimat is a particularly grievous one because an amount for the construction of a breakwater or harbour system at Kitimat had actually been set aside in the estimates, or, if it was not in the estimates as such it was contained in the advance planning provisions or whatever is used by the department to suggest that a certain project is to be carried out almost immediately.

During the period around election time in 1962, funds were on the point of being set aside for the purpose to which I have referred. A decision has been made to proceed with the construction of a breakwater and boat harbour at Kitimat, but it was wiped out by the austerity program which immediately followed that election. Since then it has not been restored.

It was always my assumption, that these projects were placed on a list which was reviewed at least annually so that the correct priority could be determined. It would seem to me that if a decision was made at least three years ago to slate a project for construction, and if this decision was cancelled because of a national emergency at that time, it should have been reinstated at the first opportunity following the end of the emergency. The emergency has been over for a long time now. For this reason, the absence from both this year's estimates and next year's estimates of any provision in respect to this particular boat harbour is particularly grievous. I understand it has been set down for some time in 1967-68. I ask the minister to have somebody in his department advance this particular project as far as possible. Let us see whether it cannot be carried out during the current calendar year or during the current fiscal year.

The needs of the other communities I mentioned are no less urgent. They are all visited by strong winds in the fall, winter and spring. There is no protection to speak of in any of them from southeast gales. The people who live in these places have made fairly large investments in fishing boats, and these vessels need the protection which harbours and breakwaters would afford.

I would, therefore, ask the minister to look into this question and give it priority so that the necessary work can be done. I do not mean by this that it be done in 1967-68 but that it be done during the coming fiscal year by way of supplementary estimate, which is the only possible way since the main estimates have already been tabled.

I also wish to make a brief reference to the national capital commission item. Hon. members from the Ottawa area may think it is a bit presumptuous for someone from 2,000 or 3,000 miles away to comment about our national capital in the manner which I propose, but quite frankly I think the highway and road system in the capital is a ruddy disgrace. Many people who come to Ottawa express this point of view. They are shocked at the condition of the streets, especially at this time of year. The potholes that develop, seemingly in a matter of minutes are a disgrace to the national capital.

During the daytime I see people out in the streets filling in these potholes with hot asphalt, or running a hot iron over them, but they must be working in two shifts. They must go out again at night and dig them out, because next day no one would notice any change. This goes on year after year after year. Every spring it is the same blessed thing. To put it bluntly, the roads here are a disgrace to Canada and to the national capital.

At this juncture I am not particulary concerned whose responsibility it is, but we do have a National Capital Commission and I presume one of its functions is to beautify the national capital, to make it a pleasant place in which to live, and a pleasant place to visit. But with the potholes and the roads the way they are, it is a deterrent to people enjoying themselves and having a pleasant time driving around the city while they are in Ottawa.

I understand that a few years ago somebody sponsored a pothole contest. I do not know if it is still in existence, but you could win a prize by pointing out the biggest pothole of the week. Somebody once turned in a whole city block but they ruled his entry out because they thought that was going too far.

Somewhere along the line this situation has to be altered. I know there was conflict between the National Capital Commission and the city hall over some of these questions but surely to heavens, if we have any pride in our national capital, we should do everything we can to find ways and means to improve these streets because, in this modern age of motor vehicle transportation, their condition is something which affects everybody.

Mr. Loney: Since the minister has assured us that his estimates for 1966-67 will soon be coming before us I shall not make the extended remarks I ordinarily would. However, I do wish to support the hon. member for Gaspé and, without reiterating his words, would urge the minister to consider the request that slow growth areas, depressed areas, or areas that have not been designated should have priority in an accelerated program of public work projects. I do not mean large scale projects, but those coming within the range of $1,500 to $15,000 for which local contractors and labour would qualify.

Before putting several questions to the minister, I should like to take this opportunity of expressing my gratitude to the officials of his department who, within the confines of their responsibility, have been most receptive to and considerate of requests I have made.

I do not expect the minister to give me a detailed reply tonight, but if he can let me have the information later I will be satisfied. With respect to the sum of $4,600 for exhibits, advertising, films, broadcasting and displays, I should like to know whether tender advertising is included and, if so, would the minister provide me with a breakdown of the moneys spent on such services by district in each province, for public works construction, public buildings accommodation and maintenance, harbour facilities, construction, repair and dredging.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, the item does not include advertising which covers tender notices. It includes the kind of displays the department might put up, for example, at a meeting of the Royal Architectural Institute. However, I shall be happy to provide the hon. member with the detailed information he has requested.

Mr. Loney: Under which item does tender advertising come?

Mr. McIlraith: It comes under the vote for general expenditure for projects, depending on whether it is for harbours and rivers, building construction or other headings. There is no advertising item as such. I have noted the hon. member's question and I shall provide the information in full to him.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, as usual under these circumstances I shall be quite brief. I have always been interested in this department because I have been closely associated with it since the beginning years of this century. I have supervised the building of miles of highways, wharves, other things of that sort, and so I know something about this type of work.

I shall never forget when we had the first wharf on the Arrow Lakes. We did things formally in those days. We had a dinner in a backwoods village, where there were no roads, nothing but black tar. In passing, may I say that sometimes I wish those days would return again.

As a result of the building of the dams on the Columbia River, naturally a number of communities will be flooded out, and wharves will be needed in other locations. I should like to ask the minister what proposals are being made for the relocation of these wharves when this project is completed, and who will bear the cost of relocating them along the lakes and along the river?

I should also like to ask what amount is available this year for the maintenance of the wharves still being used and operated? What plans has the department for the maintenance of a supervisor in Nelson, and of a headquarters office? If the minister cannot supply the answers now, I shall be happy to get them from him later in writing.

Mr. McIlraith: I shall be very glad to give them in writing.

Item agreed to.

• (7:30 p.m.)

25. Construction or acquisition of equipment, $1,161,500.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, would the minister give some consideration to the purchase of more plant and equipment for the dredging operation. As I mentioned some time ago a good deal of our dredging operations can be conducted only during the fall when the fishing season is over. With more plant and equipment, I wonder whether it would be possible to get this work done at the proper time of the year.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to consider that suggestion.

Item agreed to.

40. Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for roads, bridges and other engineering works provided that the amounts within the Vote to be expended on individually listed projects may be increased or decreased subject to the approval of Treasury Board, $6,400,000.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, contained in this item is an amount of $4 million toward Canada's share of the cost of constructing highway No. 6 in the counties of Matane and Gaspe North, Quebec. Would the minister explain this to us, tell us how it arose, and what is involved?

Mr. McIlraith: I will have that information in just a moment. I remember something which occurred in that part of the province last year when I was in another department, but I hesitate to give an answer of which I am not sure at the moment.

Mr. Lambert: You are quite wise.

Mr. McIlraith: Let it stand for the moment.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make reference to the Prince Edward Island causeway. As the years go by we have been delighted to see that we are getting closer to the actuality. Our people were delighted with the call for tender. Naturally, we regret that certain incident which took place at the opening ceremonies, which perhaps is better forgotten. In a moment of panic after a certain event on November 8, one of the minister's colleagues made a comment, which is recorded in the Charlottetown Guardian, to the effect that we spent $100 million in Prince Edward Island and did not get a seat there. The Charlottetown Guardian said it was asinine statements like that which made them lose the two they had.

I will say no more except to commend the minister on the furtherance of this very important project. I hope he will move forward, as have his predecessors, in a venture which is economically feasible and which his department has demonstrated not only is feasible in an engineering sense but is imaginative and challenging. I think we will have a structure there which will be the pride of his department, and we look forward to its actual completion.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, if I might answer the question of the hon. member for Skeena, the explanation in respect of that item is that in 1962 legislation was passed by this parliament to provide for the construction of a railway in that area. When the economic studies were made, it was found that this would not be a use of that amount of money that would bring the best value to the area. Instead an arrangement was made that the necessary funds available under the policy as announced by the Minister of Transport—under whose responsibility it was that the government provide transportation assistance in an equal amount—would be provided for the construction of a highway in that area to give the area some very badly needed transportation.

In respect of the second question, asked by the hon. member for Queens, concerning the causeway, I am very happy to be able to advise him that the first contract has been let, as he knows. The project is proceeding well on schedule. If what he says has some reference to a certain other incident, I would remind him that at that time there well might have been a little confusion in some minds owing to the fact that all the provincial premiers from certain provinces—I think six provinces—across the country appeared in a flattering picture with the national leader of a party and included, at least in the advertisements in the rest of Canada, as the premier of that island, that very fine province, was another man, a very handsome man, whose name I think is MacRae. Perhaps that is how the confusion arose.

In any event, the causeway construction is proceeding, as was indicated it would, when the announcement was made.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I notice the item referred to says "toward Canada's share". Would the minister tell us what percentage of the total cost Canada's share toward this highway at Matane and Gaspe North would be? What is the total cost? What percentage are we paying of that total cost, and what is the length of the highway? Over what period of time is it estimated the construction will be carried on.

Mr. McIlraith: The gross amount to be contributed toward highway construction under this item is $13 million. The arrangement was that they were to accelerate the construction to the greatest extent possible. That $13 million covers 87 miles of highway in the north Gaspe area. The estimate for this year was $4 million. I do not have the estimates for the payments of the balance, because these depend on how rapidly the province proceeds with the construction of the highway. The province does the actual construction. We inspect the work and pay only after it is done and inspected. The decision in respect to the speed with which the work is done is theirs, however, our limit date for the project is November 1, 1968.

Mr. Howard: What percentage do we pay?

Mr. McIlraith: It is not in terms of percentage. We would pay the $13 million that parliament enacted. The $13 million would go toward highway construction in the immediate area where it had been indicated the railway was to go.

Mr. Howard: Would the minister consider, in this current calendar year, introducing a bill in the house to build a railway in northern British Columbia. We do not want the railway; we just want the act passed so that we can get some money for highways.

Supply—Public Works

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. Keays: With all due respect to those who believe it is not economically feasible to build a railway in the designated area, it is my belief that their forecasts within a year or two will be proved wrong. This amount of money provides for the construction of 87 miles of highway at a cost of $125,000 and $25,000 for paving. I should like the minister to inform me at some future date the number of bids which have been received for the different jobs in that area. It is possible that this government is going to pay the whole shot, and I should like some information in this regard.

I want to remind the hon. member for Skeena that had he voted for a railway when that bill was before this house a few years ago, there would be no need for him to ask questions at this time about highways.

Mr. Howard: Nonsense.

Item agreed to.

National Capital Commission—

60. Operation and maintenance, general administration and interest charges on outstanding loans that were made for the purpose of acquiring property in the national capital region, $6,809,000.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, only ten months before the centennial year one would anticipate a major discussion on the National Capital Commission estimates. It is only because of the mood of the committee tonight that I refrain from engaging in such a discussion, but I do point out to the committee that not since 1961 has there been a genuine discussion of the National Capital Commission estimates in this house. In fact, I think there has been only one speech made on the subject since 1961. Since 1955 there has not been an examination of the activities of the commission by a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons. So I am going to ask the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works to reconsider the proposal I made earlier during this session, that the estimates and the activities of the commission be referred at this session to a joint committee for study.

Mr. Chairman, I did not make that proposal for the purpose of seeking an investigation of the commission. Quite to the contrary, I made it to give the commission the opportunity of having its fine story heard and to indoctrinate the members of this house, who must vote the money for this National Capital Commission, with regard to the fine work that is being done. If the minister does not agree to my proposal to send these estimates to a joint committee, I suggest he make a major presentation at this session, before the standing committee on Crown corporations, or the standing committee on housing, urban development and public works. If he will do that, it will be exceedingly useful.

In order to prepare the national capital for the centennial year I believe a crash program is urgently needed. By reason of the lack of co-ordination between municipal and federal authorities, the Department of Public Works and the National Capital Commission, the central part of this national capital last year was an unholy mess.

I think we must make absolutely certain there is co-ordination, and that we have a crash program to prepare the capital for what we hope will be a wonderful celebration only a matter of months from now.

My hon. friend, the member for Skeena, took his usual pot shot at the potholes in the city of Ottawa. I should like to say to him that many of those potholes are the result of the neglect of this parliament during the past 15 or 20 years in depriving the taxpayers of Ottawa of the moneys that were properly due. If there are these potholes today, it is because of that lack in days gone by. I hope this lack will be made up, and that under the fine leadership of the hon. member for Ottawa West we will have a crash program to prepare the capital as it should be prepared for the centennial year.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Department of Public Works. We shall now proceed to a study of the estimates of the department of the Secretary of State.

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE

1. Departmental administration, $481,600.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. lady intend to make some introductory remarks before we deal with these estimates?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of making a lengthy statement about these estimates. I would prefer to deal with specific matters that might be raised by hon. members.

Having regard to the individual votes, I should like to point out to hon. members of the committee that there is at least one separate vote for each of the 12 departments or agencies for which I am responsible, plus a statutory item for the office of the representation commission.

I should ask also that hon. members who wish to speak on any of these matters wait until the appropriate vote, under which an agency or commission is called, before making their remarks.

As to the estimates in general, I think the key point to be noted is that they indicate a continuing transition of functions of the department of the Secretary of State. Some of the departments and associated responsibilities which traditionally came within this portfolio, as hon. members are aware, have now been transferred to the President of the Privy Council in anticipation of the establishment of a new department. At the same time, more and more of the so-called cultural agencies have been collected together under the aegis of the Secretary of State. This is still in the process of transition, however, and that fact is reflected in the estimates now before the committee.

There are still one or two anomalies that remain in this regard. For example, vote 20 which deals with patents and copyrights is listed in the Secretary of State's estimates although this responsibility now lies with the President of the Privy Council. Members will note that vote 40, which covers the Economic Council of Canada, is also listed under my department although that organization now reports through the office of the Prime Minister. On this occasion, however, I will deal with administrative questions which might be raised with respect to this council.

With these few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I should like to recommend to hon. members that the estimates for the current fiscal year, almost now expired, be approved after such discussion as hon. members may see fit.

Mr. Simpson: I should like to thank the hon. lady for her explanation, but I wonder whether she can give us some idea of the order in which these subjects will be dealt with at this time.

Miss LaMarsh: I think it would be the order which appears in the blue book starting at page 420. We might start with the board of broadcast governors at page 48, followed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation at page 52, then the office of the Chief Electoral Officer at page 56, the Civil Service Commission at page 80, the National Film Board at page 276, the National Gallery at page 280, the Public Archives and National Library at page 364, the Public Printing and Stationery at page 370 and the Secretary of State's department at pages 420 and 421.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, as the house anticipates that before too long the hon. minister will have before us a resolution to set up or recommend the setting up of a committee on broadcasting, it is not the disposition of the official opposition to make any comment in depth about the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation or the Board of Broadcast Governors at this stage. Hon. members know that we have been considering the estimates now, to use a legal expression, from time immemorial. We want to give the hon. lady, at a later date, an opportunity to discuss the wider aspects of broadcasting which I am sure interest all hon. members. There will, at that time, be detailed explanations requested and I am sure the hon. lady will be glad to give us answers in this regard. These will be related to various aspects of the corporation's plans for different regions of Canada, but in view of the mood of the house at this time I do not think this is the time to go into a philosophical discourse on our national broadcasting system.

The hon. lady mentioned the co-ordination, if that is the word, of cultural activities under her aegis. I think this is a good step, and because cultural activities suggests to me self-discipline I am going to exercise self-discipline by not going into any further consideration of these estimates at the moment.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I say the same as the hon. member for Royal, that the time is not right for extensive comments on the various matters affected by the minister's department, particularly broadcasting. There is certainly a great deal that needs to be said on this subject. However, we are informed that the committee will be meeting before too long and these matters can be discussed at that time. That is all I will say, Mr. Chairman.

There is one question, Mr. Chairman, that I should like the minister to answer, either during discussion of her estimates or in the house before very long. This is the question of the building plans of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in three major cities of this country, namely, Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. Some plans which were going ahead in Montreal were delayed because of the Fowler Committee investigation into broadcasting. I do not think that all of these plans can be delayed indefinitely until the cabinet committee has finished its discussion of the Fowler report or until the House of Commons committee has finished its discussions. I suggest it is a matter on which some decision has to be made shortly, and I should like to hear from the minister on this point.

Miss LaMarsh: I will be making some reference to the point when we come to the C.B.C. At the moment the item before the committee concerns the Board of Broadcast Governors.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I should like, while we are studying Secretary of State estimates, to draw the attention of the minister to a problem about which she is aware. Ever since 1962, we have repeatedly pointed out to the government and the Secretary of State the problem which exists in my riding, the Chapleau riding, with regard to broadcasting and television in the cities of Chibougamau and Chapais.

At the present time, radio and television networks cover practically the whole country; over 90 per cent of all Canadians have access to these services, but there are still some centres, cities in Canada, where there is no television and radio.

That may not be exactly the case for Chibougamau and Chapais, for the citizens of these two municipalities do have television, thanks to a cable and microwave system.

These people are served, but they must pay a fortune to get television signals, while the organizations of both these municipalities have already, on several occasions, submitted briefs and resolutions to the Department of the Secretary of State and to the government with a view to obtaining the same radio and television service as every other Canadian region.

I have here the last of the resolutions submitted recently to the Department of the Secretary of State asking that these services be provided without charge, as they are in every other part of Canada.

This brief, submitted by the Chamber of Commerce of Chibougamau was endorsed by the local public bodies, namely the municipal corporations of Chibougamau and Chapais, the Chambers of Commerce, the Labour Unions and the Owners' League, in short, the whole population of these two cities.

The brief submitted recently read as follows:

Whereas, on several occasions, requests were made to the C.B.C. and to the Department of Transport to get free television in the region of Chibougamau-Chapais, and that such requests never produced anything;

[Mr. Prittie.]

Whereas the cities of Chibougamau and Chapais are remote cities which pay practically the highest taxes because of their geographic location;

Whereas the cost of living in our region for gas, groceries, etc., is higher than elsewhere;

There is no doubt that, in a region very remote from other centres, the transportation costs increase, thus lowering considerably the purchasing power.

I now resume reading the resolution:

Whereas most salaries in Chibougamau and Chapais come from the mining industry and are therefore higher than in other regions, they bring more money into the public treasury;

Whereas we are not asking for more than the others around us are getting but that we are asking for at least what we are entitled to;

Whereas there are approximately 15,000 people in Chibougamau-Chapais and that we are happy to say that our region does not live off the government. the spectre of unemployment does not exist in our part of the province;

It is quite true; as soon as someone becomes unemployed, the cost of living is so high that he cannot stay long and has to leave.

I continue:

Whereas television in a Canadian home is no longer a luxury but just a means of information, entertainment, culture, etc. and that it becomes a necessity and a right which is ours as it is everywhere else in Canada, and without charge;

Whereas in the larger centres colour television will soon be available to all and that it should at least be given in black and white in our region;

I wish to point out to you, sir, and to the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) that the people of Chibougamau and Chapais are not asking to stop preparations to give colour television to the other regions but at least that television in black and white be given to them. They are not asking for what belongs to others but only for what belongs to them.

• (8:00 p.m.)

I go on:

Whereas, at present, some people can afford black and white television with poorer results than elsewhere and by paying the following prohibitive prices:

First, a television set costs more than elsewhere, secondly, the sizeable sum of $200 must be paid for the connection with the community antenna and then, a fee of $7 a month of $84 a year, plus a 6 per cent provincial tax that other areas do not have to pay;

And they can only get one channel. But if they do not pay that amount, they are without any television at all.

Whereas the only benefit in living in an area such as ours is that we can earn our daily bread, while the handicaps are many such as:

1. Gravel roads that easily wreck a car within the first 30,000 miles.

2. Gasoline at 12 cents a gallon more than elsewhere;

3. Fuel oil 3 cents a gallon more than elsewhere with heating required twelve months a year;

4. Being further away, we have to use the telephone service more often than elsewhere, and this is anything but free;

5. Transportation of all materials increase substantially the cost of living in our area;

6. Electricity costs about twice as much as elsewhere plus 6 per cent additional in taxes.

7. Rents are higher than elsewhere;

8. Building costs are higher because of transportation and the tax on materials;

9. The great distance from large towns is detrimental to the education of our children beyond a certain level.

For all the reasons listed in this brief, which is a positive statement of the plain, definite ideas of the people of Chibougamau and Chapais, we urge the authorities concerned to study this brief seriously and to answer us, not by ambiguous statements, but by immediate action.

The Chamber of Commerce of Chibougamau.

That, as I said earlier, was endorsed by all the public bodies and the people in Chibougamau and Chapais.

On many occasions, Mr. Chairman, I myself asked the previous Secretary of State to correct that situation I was told that we had to wait until the Fowler report on broadcasting was presented. We have now had this report for several weeks, several months even. But the government does not seem too much in a hurry to implement its recommendations.

Mr. Chairman, what I want to point out to the minister is the fact that the people of those two towns are the victims of a serious injustice on the part of the C.B.C.

And here, I submit to the Secretary of State that the Fowler commission put the finger on what is happening to those people. As a matter of fact, on page 68 of the report, it is said:

All Canadians pay for the national broadcasting system—not just for the C.B.C., but for the whole system, including the private radio and television stations. They pay for about a third of the total cost when they pay their taxes. They are paying for the other two thirds every time they run around to the corner store for a can of soup or a loaf of bread. Many of them are thus paying for broadcasting services they cannot enjoy. Clearly, much remains to be done.

Well, Mr. Chairman, that is the case with regard to the people of the cities of Chibougamau and Chapais, they pay for services which they do not enjoy. That is unfair and the government must not tolerate this situation any longer. It must immediately order that the C.B.C. be given the necessary funds to enable it to extend the radio and television services not only to Chibougamau and Chapais but everywhere in Canada where it is physically possible to do so at the present time.

A little further, on page 83 of the English version of the Fowler Commission report, these words struck me:

Therefore, during the next five years, a firm degree of restraint should be applied to the licensing of new stations, public or private, taking the real need for broadcasting service, radio or television, into account.

It cannot be denied that the needs are obvious as far as isolated centres are concerned. They need those services for entertainment, culture and information.

On page 83 of the same report, it is said:

We believe that, for the next five years at least, the formula now being used by the C.B.C. to determine the eligibility of communities for television service (2,000) or radio service (500), either in English or French or both, is sound.

However, we are not satisfied with the planned rate of expansion to meet the needs disclosed by the formula; we think that, given the necessary approval and financial provision, it could and should be accelerated;

It means that the government should put at the disposal of the C.B.C. the sums needed for its expansion to enable it to serve the people who are not yet getting any service.

The recommendations follow:

1. That, during the next five years, no new C.B.C. stations should be opened in centres that now have service as determined by the formula presently used for eligibility.

2. That consideration be given to the feasibility of accelerating the rate of progress now planned by the C.B.C. for extending coverage, both radio and television in English and French, to centres eligible for public service under the formula.

Mr. Chairman, in the light of these recommendations, the government is no longer justified to hesitate and it must accede immediately to the request of the towns of Chibougamau and Chapais with regard to radio and television services.

On page 124 of the Fowler report, I notice another paragraph in which the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation says how it conceives the mandate it has received from parliament:

Whether Canadians live in remote or heavily populated areas, the national system should serve them as adequately and equitably as possible.

This suits very well those areas and I invite the minister to study carefully the resolution that has been submitted to her and to give a very special and immediate consideration to these legitimate requests. I am convinced of this and I am sure the minister is also.

When C.B.C. officials are asked whether it is materially possible to achieve these purposes, they answer yes, but that the government does not make sufficient funds available to the Corporation, suggesting it is too costly at present to serve those areas.

As far as the Chibougamau-Chapais area is concerned, it is served by private enterprise at present, as I said earlier, but at a prohibitive price for these people. Out of the 2,400 or 2,500 families living in this area, at least 1,000 are unable to afford these services which are provided free of charge everywhere else.

So, C.B.C. officials tell us that their policy is to give a perfect signal in any area served. Well, Mr. Chairman, what the citizens are asking for immediately is not so much a perfect signal; as a matter of fact, they would be quite satisfied with what they have at present provided it would be free of charge as anywhere else in Canada.

Consequently, I suggest to the hon. Secretary of State, that she invite the officials of the C.B.C. to meet representatives of private enterprise which actually serve the area, as well as representatives of the two cities to come to an agreement. It would cost less to the C.B.C., expenses would be less than they are now and the service supplied to the two cities could be improved gradually. I am sure this would give the whole population, which has been waiting for a long time, the same service that can be found elsewhere in Canada.

So, Mr. Chairman, I hope the Secretary of State will consider the recommendations I have suggested to her tonight. A delegation of about 15 people from that area came to Ottawa today at their own expenses, which is quite a sum. They have not come here for the fun of it, but to see that justice is done, and I am convinced that the Secretary of State can render this delegation immediate justice.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, it was my understanding that we were going to deal with these subjects separately. Apparently at this time we have launched into a discussion of C.B.C. subject matters. I have a few remarks to make to the committee and to the hon. Secretary of State. It is not my intention this evening to go into a discussion of the inner workings of the C.B.C., mainly because coming from an area that has as little C.B.C. service as we have, I probably do not know a great deal about the inner workings. However, I did want to say that I am not going to discuss programming or anything of that nature. We shall probably be hearing from other hon. members of the committee on this subject.

It has been mentioned by previous speakers that this is probably not an opportune time to go into these matters to any extent. It has been mentioned that a committee of the house has now been set up to study broadcasting. However, I am not quite as optimistic as some of the other hon. members with respect to this subject. I shall be ready to discuss these matters when this committee does meet. Until that time, I think that some questions can be asked this evening.

I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Chapleau, and his remarks have a very familiar ring. In fact, I almost thought that I was listening to one of my own constituents, because so many of the problems which he covered were applicable to the constituency of Churchill.

However, it is not only on behalf of the northern parts of Manitoba that I make my remarks this evening; it is on behalf of all areas that are as yet not served by C.B.C. television. It may be taken for granted that the northern Manitoba area is of particular interest to me.

I have been told by the member for Yukon that in the Yukon there is only one television outlet, and that is a cable service at the capital. All of the areas up there are still waiting for some type of service. As I say, at Whitehorse in the Yukon Territory there is one cable system. There, the residents are obliged to pay $15 a month for the privilege of viewing the station.

I do know from experience that the C.B.C. has very generously supplied programming to the station in Whitehorse, as it has done to a number of stations, some of which are in the area I represent. On the subject of extension of services, I think it is generally accepted, particularly in areas not already serviced, that the C.B.C. does have a duty to go to the unecomomical areas where private enterprise feels it cannot or will not go. I think that although the C.B.C. does provide television service to some 92 per cent of the people of Canada, according to its records, it still has an obligation to go into other areas as quickly as possible. I think that the time is long overdue when these areas should be told just when they are going to get television service.

I know that television service is difficult to provide, but not impossible. The C.B.C. has calculated approximately how much money it is going to take to service these areas, so that it becomes strictly a question of money.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Simpson: Without too much fanfare, and I might say without too much criticism, the present government authorized the C.B.C. to make expenditures on colour television. I can assure the hon. lady and the corporation that there will not be too much criticism from unserviced areas about launching a program of colour television, because the people in those unserviced areas know that we must face up to progress. However, it is difficult for them to understand why—and I think the government now must accept this—if money is available for colour television, it is not available to provide service to other areas now unserviced. I do not intend to be unkind when I say that each year as we have looked over the C.B.C. estimates covering some millions of dollars, we do not see too much of a breakdown of how this money is to be spent.

I realize that the corporation puts out an annual statement, which is widely distributed. In that annual statement there is a breakdown to some extent of the manner in which this money is spent. However, it always amazes me when I see, looking at vote No. 1 under the corporation, the words:

> Grant in respect of the net operating amount required to discharge the responsibilities of the national broadcasting service.

It shows $96,799,000. Mr. Chairman, there are 18 words in that explanation which works out to approximately $5 million a word. I would have hoped the C.B.C. could have added three more words, something like "extension of service" because at $5 million a word we would have enough money to provide service to all of the people who are not as yet receiving this television service.

In the report of the corporation for 1963-64 it was pointed out that according to present planning it would take something over ten years to bring service to those areas which are now unserviced.

The sum of approximately $15 million would be needed. Many years ago I asked officials of the corporation whether the corporation would consider approaching parliament for a special grant of money to enable them to finish the job. It was felt by the corporation at that time that parliament, unfortunately, would not be very receptive to a request for a special grant of this nature. Year after year no request was made. But in the annual report of 1963-64, the corporation did make this suggestion. I noticed with interest and pleasure that in the most recent annual report the corporation makes a similar request. In this instance, however, the corporation recommends that specific grants to the corporation should be made by parliament for this purpose. They say this was the procedure followed in the initial stages when radio was brought to the north under similar economic conditions. The corporation says it believes television to be an amenity which could do much to make life in the north more attractive and help the development of our frontier areas. The point here is that the corporation is recommending that parliament provide this special grant of money sufficient to enable it to finish the job of extending television services.

The corporation, as I understand it, has recommended that parliament provide sufficient funds to enable it to go into colour television. One of the questions which I believe the government should answer tonight is this—How was the decision made as to which of these recommendations was to be carried out? I believe it is important that the people in areas such as I represent get an answer to this particular question. In my constituency, at least, the many thousands of people who are interested in receiving this service are not greatly critical about the advent of colour television. What they say is this: if Canada can have colour television we can also have the extension of service.

I notice that the corporation has recently extended services into the Jasper area of Alberta, or else it is planning to do so. Services were extended recently in the area east of Kenora, Ontario. The people in my area look at these things and ask: how many are being served, and what does it cost? They want to know these things so that they may be in a position to decide whether any discrimination is being shown in determining which areas should be served first.

I have discussed this matter carefully on many occasions with officials of the corporation. Time and time again, we have gone over the formula which the corporation is using to determine which areas should be serviced. They use a cost per household formula. They tell us that in a certain area people can be served for $7, $8 or $10 per household, and these people will naturally be getting service earlier than those where the cost may be as high as $15 per household.

I suggest that the use of this formula leads to discrimination, and I should like the Secretary of State to convey to the officials of the corporation the reason I believe this is so. In the most recent annual statement of the corporation we find the cost of production and distribution of television services in Canada amounted to a total of $91,863,839, almost $92 million. This is the amount which was required to service about 92 per cent of some four and a half million households in Canada. But suppose for the moment that this $92 million is servicing all the four and half million households in Canada. This is the figure which should be used, in all fairness when making these calculations. We would then arrive at the amount it is actually costing the corporation.

I say it amounts to discrimination when the corporation looks at the areas which are still to be served and says: We shall work on a figure of $4 or $5 per household because that is what it costs us to put television into one particular area. The cost should be figured on an all-Canada basis in order to be fair.

These figures can be juggled in a number of ways. When I look at this $92 million for the cost of production and distribution of television services, servicing 92 per cent of four and a half million households in Canada, I find that this works out to an average across the nation of some $20 per household. This is the basis on which I feel the corporation should look on further extensions. It all boils down to the fact that the extensions will take money. We are all agreed on this. I think the government of the day should at least make up its mind to tell the people in these areas whether or not it is prepared to grant a sum of money to the corporation sufficient to do the job.

Many times during the last session of parliament I asked the Secretary of State whether the government was considering providing such a sum. On each occasion I was assured by the Secretary of State that the government did not intend to consider any specific grant of money to the corporation until the Fowler report had been received.

But before the Fowler report was received by the government some $15 million was provided for the corporation to allow it enter the colour television field. I do not see how we can get along quickly with these estimates unless the government can give us a satisfactory explanation for doing that, and tell us when it will provide the money which the corporation says is necessary to service these areas.

The information which the corporation officials give us is helpful on many occasions, and what I have to say is not in criticism of them, but they tell us that within the next five or six years Canadians will have their television service bounced from satellites orbiting the earth. This is certainly feasible from an engineering point of view, but people in areas which are still unserviced are reluctant to sit back and wait for this to happen when they know that within the next 18 months the C.B.C. could acquire sufficient equipment to service their areas. All the C.B.C. needs for that purpose is a grant of money from this parliament. I also believe the corporation has an obligation to tell these people when it plans to service their areas.

Many of the people in these areas would be a lot happier if they knew they could get television reception in two or three years. The corporation should be able to determine the time it will take.

People in the northern Manitoba area who receive fringe reception from private stations carrying C.B.C. programs, or who may have the benefit of a cable system operated by private enterprise, are told by the C.B.C. that it cannot make application to enter the area because it is already serviced. Consequently, there would be duplication of services. The corporation does not say this in quite those words, but it feels the licensing authority would be reluctant to allow it to do so. It is probably quite right. The C.B.C. already has made application to go into the city of Saskatoon, but I understand that its application is being held up; I suppose temporarily, although I do not know.

However, I can recall that a few years ago the C.B.C. application to go into the city of Edmonton was granted. There was a public hearing at which those wishing to complain were able to do so. But the C.B.C. application was granted, and if ever there was duplication of services that situation in Edmonton was it at the time of the application, the city had ample T.V. service from private stations.

I said I was not going to cover the subject of programming, but with the advent of colour television more questions need answering. I noticed that the other day the Maple Leaf Garden Corporation estimated that colour television would provide it with something like $9 million revenue from the program it has on the air within the next three years. I do not know how much profit there is for the C.B.C. from "Hockey Night in Canada" but it is certainly a popular program. Most viewers want to see it continue, but in view of the estimate made by the corporation sponsoring Maple Leaf Gardens I only hope the C.B.C. will get its fair share from that program.

The area in northern Manitoba which is asking for immediate service has a population of some 100,000 people. A considerable portion of the area already receives television service from the Yorkton station which carries C.B.C. programs. But I think I am quite safe in saying that if, in the first place, there had not been a hassle between the C.B.C. and the B.B.G. that area of Manitoba would have been available to the C.B.C. for network programming. However, it is still available, except that we are told there is no use in the corporation making application to service it since it is already serviced. But I repeat, that is exactly what happened in the city of Edmonton.

The part of the area surrounding Flin Flon and The Pas has been serviced with cinescope programming, films being delayed one week, and the picture reception is good. But there are some 20,000 people in that area who feel the time is long past when they should be receiving the network service.

If you take the 100,000 people from Dauphin through to Flin Flon and on to Snow Lake, who are asking for this programming at the present time, they come well within this cost per household which I mentioned. I know the corporation can say there are other areas which they can service at a cheaper cost per household, but I think the figure they should use is the figure of $20 per household which you get when you look at the amount it costs to service the number of households which are being serviced in Canada.

Quite often one hears comments in respect of the advisability of a member of parliament rising to criticize the corporation for what it is or is not doing. I do not think this is the case, but I have been told that when one rises in the House of Commons and starts criticizing the present system of priorities, the area that one represents may find itself a long way down the list.

The Deputy Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Churchill, but the time allotted to him has elapsed.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Deputy Chairman: I understand that hon. members wish to allocate additional time to the hon. member to enable him to conclude.

Mr. Simpson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should like to thank the committee for allowing me to continue. I was about to say I would not like this committee to get the idea that this is any threat which has been passed on to me through anyone connected with the C.B.C. This is not so. However, I hear this in my area. I am informed that if we continue to criticize, we may have to wait a long, long time for this service. I think the government can straighten this matter out in short order, if they will assure this committee they are receptive to the suggestion and are willing to provide this sum of money which the corporation already has recommended in its annual report. Then everyone would be quite happy.

I will be quite surprised if this is not a lengthy discussion, because we are told by the corporation—and I do not doubt their figures—that there are some 50 areas in Canada which remain to be serviced. So, if there are 50 other areas which are as anxious to get this service as is the area which I represent, then I would imagine we are going to have quite a long discussion, unless we receive an answer from the government.

I did not mean that I was speaking for all those other areas; I was merely referring to all the places which were not serviced. I have noticed, Mr. Chairman, on the many, many occasions when I have risen in this house to speak about television, that it always seems to me this is a subject in which perhaps not too many people are interested. I suppose mainly this is because most of the areas which the members represent already are serviced. However, one time during the hearings of the broadcasting committee a few years ago I mentioned that if there was any threat that the Grey Cup, for instance, would not be televised in Canada, every member of this house would be up on his feet howling his head off.

Strangely enough, about a year later, it appeared as though the Grey Cup was not going to be televised. If you think we have had some crises in this house during the past few years, just recall what happened on that occasion. The house was in an uproar for a full day and it continued on spasmodically for the rest of the week, until somebody intervened, I understand, and the matter was resolved. This is the reason I say that the people who already have these services should realize what it means to the people who do not have them. If one of your favourite programs is discontinued, you are ready to howl. However, probably it is not too interesting to hear someone discussing the need for television.

I will listen, Mr. Chairman, with interest to any of the members who have problems similar to ours, in their areas which are not serviced. I think we should have several answers from the government or from the corporation. In relation to the areas which are still without the service, I think we should be told by the corporation what areas these are and where they are.

Also, I think we should be told what the priorities are for each of these areas at the present time in the C.B.C.'s planning. I recognize, as I said before, that it is difficult to expect the corporation to lay down a list of priorities and expect that those priorities will remain the same the next year or the year after; but I think we are entitled to know what priority each of these particular areas has at the present time.

I believe the main question we should have answered by the corporation is, on what date will each of these areas be provided with C.B.C. television service. As I mentioned, the government could eliminate the necessity of these questions being answered if they would assure the committee that they are prepared to see that a sufficient sum of money is provided so that the C.B.C. will be able to do this work immediately. This answer to that question will satisfy the people in all of these areas. I am hoping, as the debate progresses, that we will receive an answer to some of these questions from either the Secretary of State or from the corporation.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak briefly concerning C.B.C., and more particularly on the housing conditions, namely, the building in which the C.B.C. operates while there are prospects of interesting sites offered by the municipal authorities.

The present situation in Montreal is becoming more and more permanent and it requires a rapid solution, because it is so obvious with regard to administration. In fact the C.B.C. operates 17 different offices scattered almost everywhere in the city of Montreal from one end to the other; this, of course, leads to lack of co-ordination and to increased and repeated expenses which the C.B.C. could avoid.

It also puts the artists in a very awkward position. Under the present circumstances, they must, on very close and often crowded schedule, for some of them, run around the city to take part in various broadcasts. Accordingly, they have to turn down certain jobs because of the geographic situation.

It must not be forgotten, on the other hand, that Montreal is the artistic capital of Canada, and that the C.B.C., reflecting as it does a major part of the arts in Canada, should therefore be well served.

How can we solve that administrative breakdown, as far as premises are concerned?

The city of Montreal has offered the C.B.C. a plot of 27 acres. It gave the undertaking that it would clear this land, unfortunately located in a ward with many slums. The city of Montreal fulfilled its obligations; it cleared the land and tore down the slums. But the government delays its decision to have the new C.B.C. building built as soon as possible. The city of Montreal had put the deadline at October, 1965 for the start of construction, but today, we are still waiting for the first shovelful of earth to be taken up.

The grouping together in the same building in Montreal of all the services of the French and English networks of the C.B.C.—and everybody agrees on this, both C.B.C. authorities and the Fowler commission—would be a very good thing, and it is urgent.

From the administrative point of view, when the execution of a project is delayed, someone must take the consequences, and that someone is always the citizen who pays taxes, because of slow administration.

This is a field in which the government has had time to think, plan and act. The government is still taking its time and so risks losing the land placed at its disposal by the city of Montreal. This land was to be used before October 1965; it is now March 1966 and nothing has been done yet. It would be surprising if the city of Montreal were to wait indefinitely. This is why I think it is urgent that the minister and the cabinet make a decision, especially since Expo '67 is drawing near and this land, so rare in Montreal, is situated near the Expo grounds.

It would be unwise to keep unused indefinitely this piece of land located on Dorchester boulevard. If we want to show that Canada is prosperous, we must not leave a hole right in the middle of a city. Besides, it would be interesting to see to what extent, if not the government, at least the owners of old houses surrounding the C.B.C. square, would be willing to improve the district as soon as possible, so that the slums would vanish from the city that we are going to show to the world.

If we really want to live the motto "Man and his world", it is not enough to display it in a window, but to have it at home, to build it at home, in every street, in every district, in short in every city and in every province.

Before closing, I wish to say, simply from the administrative point of view, that, in my opinion, the Fowler commission and C.B.C. are again in complete agreement on this point; in fact, the Fowler commission raised the same problem in the city of Toronto. Therefore, an administrative problem does exist that the Corporation would like to see settled, that the Commission wants to see settled, but that the government, unfortunately, is in no hurry to solve, although it should do so as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, all the agencies for which the hon. lady is parliamentary housekeeper appear to be under discussion on item 1 of her estimates. Therefore, although the committee is desperately crowded for time, I make no apology for insisting upon an opportunity of dealing briefly but explicitly with what has become a very highly sensitive, indeed, an explosive issue in the public service, namely the inept and improper handling by the government and the Civil Service Commission of the problem of bilingualism. Precipitate and ill considered attempts to change the ground rules for promotional and other competitions are leading to discrimination against French speaking and English speaking civil servants alike, and to widespread discord throughout the civil service. Action taken surreptitiously and clandestinely by the Civil Service Commission, only partly revealed in an indiscreet speech made by the chairman of the Civil Service Commission on February 1, has placed the whole merit system in jeopardy and flouted the Civil Service Act.

An unfortunate, indeed, unbelievable statement of future recruitment policy by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys has intensified the problems, and an attempt made by the Minister of Public Works to pour oil on troubled waters has not been effective.

Sir, this is a very delicate problem where one may easily be misinterpreted. I seek only to bring justice to all civil servants, whether of French speaking or English speaking derivation, and I shall try to choose my words carefully and with moderation, although there is no doubt that the time has come to call a spade a spade and to appeal directly to the Prime Minister to stop the erosion of one of the greatest public services in the world.

I welcome the Prime Minister's announcement this afternoon that there will be further consultations with civil service staff associations, and I hope those associations will truly reflect the opinions of their members. For, sir, it is useless to blink at the fact that there is greater anxiety, more uneasiness, unrest and subdued anger in the civil service in Ottawa at this moment than at any time in my memory.

What is happening, sir, and I want to make it clear, is that in my view the civil service commission has confused job requisites, in which bilingualism is a most significant factor, with principles of personnel rating and evaluation, in which it has no place.

Because of that, the merit system is being outrageously flouted. I say that the whole basis upon which Canada has built the finest Civil Service in the world is in grave jeopardy. The Civil Service Act was completely revised by this house as recently as 1961, and it is clear and explicit as to job requisites. Section 47 of the act reads this way:

> The number of employees appointed to serve in any department or in any local office of a department who are qualified in the knowledge and use of the English or French language or both shall, in the opinion of the Commission, be sufficient to enable the department or local office to perform its functions adequately and to give effective service to the public.

Those, sir, are the tests as to whether a job is to be bilingual or whether it is to be unilingual. These tests were agreed upon without complaint in a special committee of this house as recently as 1961, although there was some resistance in the house itself by the hon. member for Hull and the hon. member for Sainte-Marie. But the tests, I suggest, are twofold; first, adequacy of performance of departmental functions and, second, to give effective service to the public.

No one can complain legitimately when the application of these tests results in the specification of a bilingual officer or the specification of a unilingual officer whether that unilingual officer be French or English. But when those tests of job requisites are falsely and improperly imported into the evaluation or rating of the merit of an individual to hold a job, which job does not require a knowledge of two languages, then I say the time has come to expose this fallacious reasoning.

Section 38(1) of the Civil Service Act is the enunciation of the merit system which has stood unbreached since the days of Sir Robert Borden, the father of the merit system. I want to put the words of that section on record, sir. They are:

> The Commission shall examine and consider all applications received within the time prescribed by it for the receipt of applications and, after considering such further material and conducting such examinations, tests, interviews and investigations as it considers necessary or desirable, shall select the candidates who are qualified for the position or positions in relation to which the competition is conducted, and shall place them in order of merit.

We cannot play with words, Mr. Chairman. Merit is merit, not merit plus 10 per cent for some factor extraneous to merit which the Civil Service Commission chooses to import into the plain meaning of the word in violation of that plain and natural meaning. There is in the Civil Service Act one explicit departure from the merit system, the introduction of the veteran's preference. The mere fact that there is a statutory exception to the merit principle is a clear indication that there is no other. Section 33 is equally clear. It reads:

> The Commission may in relation to any position of any class or grade prescribe qualifications as to age, residence or any other matters that in the opinion of the Commission are necessary or desirable having regard to the nature of the duties to be performed, but in so doing the Commission shall not discriminate against any person by reason of race, national origin, colour or religion.

In other words, the Commission has the power, and in proper cases the duty, to prescribe bilingualism as a job requisite, but it has no authority to discriminate when it comes to evaluation and rating of individuals on the basis of merit. Yet, what has it done? The chairman of the Civil Service Commission made a speech on February 1, 1966, in which he made the following statement:

> The Commission has recently recognized proficiency in the two official languages as an element of merit in selection for appointments and promotions to positions in the National Capital area and in other centres where the public being served is sufficiently representative of the two cultures of Canada . . . In these cases, proficiency in the two official languages is considered as an additional asset and is accorded 10 per cent of the total selection rating score.

Well, sir, this speech and this procedure I say first flouts directly the will of parliament and is in contempt of parliament. Why do I say that? On September 19, 1961, as appears in Hansard at page 8573, the hon. member for Hull moved an amendment to add subclause (2) to clause 47 as follows:

> At the time of competitions, those candidates who can establish that they possess a sufficient knowledge of the two official languages of Canada shall benefit by an added 5 per cent over all other candidates—

You find at page 8575, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment was negatived by a vote of 43 to 16. Yet in the face of that vote and without any further consideration by parliament, the Commission expresses its contempt of this house and institutes the very procedure this house rejected—it institutes it two for one. If this is the policy of the government now, there is a clear duty on the government to come back to this house and stake its life upon the adoption of a policy already so clearly rejected by the house.

This speech of the chairman of the Civil Service Commission was the first announcement that, surreptitiously and without the knowledge of any of the staff associations, a 10 per cent advantage had been put into effect in the national capital area and in other centres of Canada for those with proficiency in the two official languages. This 10 per cent, I submit, will be an effective barrier to unilingual candidates in most competitions, whether knowledge of two languages is necessary or not for the performance of their duties. Very rarely indeed in a competition is there such a wide margin between candidates, and the result is that tens of thousands of civil servants who entered the Civil Service under one set of ground rules will find their advancement or promotion blocked and barred. Frustration, dead-end, blind alleys —these will be the lot of thousands.

The introduction of this 10 per cent preference into the merit system is in my view without colour of right. It flouts completely, as I have submitted, the structure of the Civil Service Act. It is within the prerogative of parliament to do this; it is not within the prerogative of the Civil Service Commission. If parliament chooses to do this, it is one thing, but for the Commission to do it I say drives a horse and cart through the whole merit system and discriminates equally against French speaking and English speaking civil servants. I emphasize that it discriminates against French speaking and English speaking civil servants alike. I say, Mr. Chairman, that it will lead to the demoralization of the civil service and will make a farce out of bilingualism.

I tell the committee that if it had been in effect in 1927, it would probably have deprived the Department of External Affairs of the services of one Lester B. Pearson. If it had been in effect later, I doubt whether the civil service would have had the dubious advantages of the services within its ranks of the now hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate or the hon. member for Eglinton. Actually, Mr. Chairman, one of the major problems is to define objectively what is in fact bilingualism. Many people who profess to be such are truly not. Some objective standard, I submit, must be devised. Thirty years ago I was reasonably bilingual, at least to the extent of being able to make numerous speeches in the French language. Lack of opportunity has deprived me of any proficiency in that respect. Yet others scarcely more proficient than I claim to be bilingual.

This 10 per cent rule, I point out, will prevent promotions from other centres of Canada to the national capital.

• (9:10 p.m.)

No longer will it be reasonable for a postal worker, a customs or immigration officer to expect promotion from Regina or Fort William, from Ville Marie or Rimouski, from Halifax or Saint John, to the headquarters of his department in Ottawa. Practically, an officer in these places cannot be bilingual. He cannot practise the other language to keep up his proficiency, and he cannot expect to circumvent the 10 per cent preference. The net result will be that the future civil service of Canada will be drawn from the very tiny group or segment, only 12.23 per cent of the population according to the last census, who speak both French and English. I repeat those figures, there is only 12.23 per cent who speak both French and English.

Eliminated from the civil service of their native country will be the 19.13 per cent who speak only French—almost 20 per cent of the people in the country who speak only French —as well as the 67.35 per cent who speak only English and the 1.27 per cent who speak neither. Within the present civil service, promotions will be confined to a select inner few made up of only a tiny percentage of the total service. The fact is that the members of the Civil Service Commission themselves could not qualify today under the rules that they themselves have laid down.

Let me be clear, Mr. Chairman. Where the job requires a knowledge of the two languages, as many jobs do, of course, in order to provide proper service to the public under section 47, I believe that that must be clearly laid down as a job requisite. But to breach the merit system by an artificial, unrealistic percentage will set back rather than promote the cause of bilingualism. I have it confirmed in writing by the chairman of the Civil Service Commission that this 10 per cent rule is now in effect in all areas of Canada which have an English or French mother tongue minority of at least 10 per cent.

It is not easy to say these things, sir. It is very easy to be interpreted as being anti-French. I have spent a large part of my life trying to bridge the gap which exists in this country. But as an Irishman, sir, I am neither anti-French nor anti-English. I seek tonight to be a Canadian interested in the welfare of the 87 per cent of my fellow Canadians, French, English, and other ethnic groups alike, who do not enjoy the undoubted advantage of bilingualism.

I am sorry that the Minister of Public Works is not in the house at this moment, for between us, the minister and I represent over half the civil service population. I make a direct appeal to the Minister of Public Works as a man of moderation, as a man of tolerant understanding, as a man of firmness and of character, to use his prestige and his moral stature within the government to reverse the unwise policies which have been embarked upon, policies which will do injury to French speaking, English speaking and other Canadians alike.

I say to this committee tonight, let us not completely stultify the best civil service in the world. Let us not permit the public service of Canada to founder upon illusory rocks which can only endanger the unity of the nation. I ask the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works to protect the civil service of Canada. If they fail in their duty we shall have a mass exodus of technical and professional personnel to the United States, to Australia and to New Zealand, which will do permanent injury to Canada. This cannot be permitted to happen, sir.

I ask every member of this house, French, English, or whatever their ethnic background, and I do so with the greatest sincerity at my command, to rise and to protect the greatest public service in the world from that which is being done to it.

Mr. Valade: Would the hon. member permit a question. I heard the hon. member for Carleton make reference to some of my past interventions, but I did not clearly understand if he said that I opposed any revision of the act, or something of that nature. I should like him to make it clear, because it is important to me.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Sainte-Marie was one of those who, in September 1961, joined in the support of the amendment which I read into the record. He, and I think the hon. member for Hull, were the only members who took exception to section 47 in the form in which it is.

Mr. Pelletier: May I put a question to the hon. gentleman. Since he has been defending the principle of unilingualism in the civil service—

Some hon. Members: Oh no.

Mr. Winkler: Discrimination.

Mr. Pelletier: —may I ask him whether he knows many French unilingual civil servants in Ottawa?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, it is a total travesty of what I have attempted to say to suggest that I have been defending unilingualism. I know many unilingual French speaking civil servants in Ottawa, many more than the hon. member knows. The ones I know believe in what I have said in this house tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of attention to the speech just made by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell).

I have never taken him for a fanatic and I still do not want to do so tonight. In my opinion, the comments he made tonight merely reflect a general idea according to which, realizing that the monopoly held by a certain group is flowing away, some people are afraid to lose it to the advantage of all Canadian citizens, both English speaking and French speaking.

The fact that bilingualism is asked for in the civil service does not mean, Mr. Chairman, that competence must first be set aside. Certainly not.

What we believe should be a prime criterion for recruiting a civil servant, whether at higher or lower level, is the competence. Only in various degrees of competence—now I am talking only about competence—meaning the factors which can be used to assess the competence of officers in the Canadian civil service; well, language should be one of these factors.

If the employee speaks English only or French only and is bound to meet either French or English speaking public, then I must say to the hon. member for Carleton that bilingualism is a factor of competence for the civil servant who has to speak to his fellow citizens in one or the other of the two languages. It is a criterion of competence. That is why the civil service commission must take this criterion into account in the field of competence, that is bilingualism, as much as all other criteria. That is one of the fields which concern the competence of a civil servant.

I am convinced that, in this connection, the hon. member for Carleton cannot deny the argument I advance that in the case of a senior official dealing with the public bilingualism is a necessary and unavoidable asset of such official's competence.

This being said, Mr. Chairman, it must not be forgotten that we too often see applications—not only in the civil service, but in crown corporations, as I pointed out to the house recently—for instance, in the case of air hostesses, Air Canada, where it was said: Knowledge of English is required, but knowledge of French is a further asset. Why is one language required and another a further asset? Why are not both languages required, since an air hostess is called upon to serve both French and English-speaking Canadians?

When competitions are held within the civil service for positions requiring the official to deal with the public, such as in the Taxation Division, or here, for instance, in the house of commons where there are telephone operators. Four times out of five, the operator will tell you that she speaks English only, not French. If you want a French-speaking operator, you are told to hang up, that you will be called back. You wait 20 minutes before you get an operator who can understand and speak French.

Will the hon. member for Carleton now tell me that employees such as these should not have an increase of 10 per cent and even more than 10 per cent. I would say that 33 per cent should be awarded bilingual telephone operators. Thirty three per cent of the members in this House of Commons speak French and want French to be recognized here as elsewhere.

How can the hon. member for Carleton deem it acceptable that telephone operators in the House of Commons be unable to answer in French when they are being spoken to in French.

Do you know when bilingualism includes French? When it is time to fill out income tax returns. If you fill out your income tax return and the government owes you money, send it in English. The money comes quickly. Send your income tax return in French and you must wait, perhaps a month, before you get your money. When you owe the government money, fill out your return in French: it will be a month before you have to pay.

Will the member for Carleton tell me that the officials of the Income Tax Division are competent, when one must wait a month, a month and a half longer if one writes in French instead of English?

Then would it not be appropriate to give a percentage of additional points to bilingual civil servants who have to deal with the public? If we want bilingualism to become a fact, civil servants in contact with the public will inevitably have to get a higher percentage for their competence, because they are bilingual and can speak and understand both languages.

Mr. Chairman, I understand the situation of the hon. member for Carleton. There are a great many civil servants in his riding. We cannot demand all civil servants to become bilingual overnight.

Although we ask for integral bilingualism, we do not want to break everything. There must be a period of evolution. When the day comes where our young people, in colleges and universities, know that additional credits are given for bilingualism in the civil service, then, our young people will learn French to be more "competent" when they enter the civil service.

It is an indication of competence when one can speak the two languages in a country like Canada. And this applies just as well to the French Canadians of the province of Quebec. When they know there will be more advantages, more points, if they speak the two languages, they too will realize, as will be realized in the other provinces, that in order to have more chances for promotion in the civil service, they have to speak the two languages.

When we say 10 per cent, let us not disregard it. We complain that French Canadians are not sufficiently numerous in the civil service. Why? When French Canadians from Quebec, Montreal, Rouyn or Trois-Rivières, apply for a job in the civil service, if they want to get to the top, they have to be extremely good in English, although their mother tongue is French. They must be very qualified and able to speak English, just about flawlessly.

If they do not keep this in mind, they know, right from the start, that they will not reach the higher echelons of the civil service. This is evident by the distribution and the cross-section of officials found in the civil service.

Ministers, deputy ministers, directors of crown corporations, all of them practically speak only one language, English. We should like to facilitate the unity of our country, by having more French speaking officials who are asked, right from the start, to be qualified, because otherwise they would have no chance for promotion.

The difference between you and us is that we are not asking for that. We are not asking for officials who speak French only or French reports only. The difference between you and us is that we are asking for both French and English. I do not call that being fanatic.

The University of Ottawa had to declare itself a bilingual university to get grants from the province of Ontario. McGill University gets as much if not more in grants from the Quebec government and it never had to declare itself a bilingual university; in fact, it is an English university in the province of Quebec. The University of Ottawa, which was a French university and which tries to give a French education to the people of Ontario, was obliged to declare itself a bilingual university to get grants from the Ontario government.

We are not that fanatic in the province of Quebec. I am not taking the floor to ask that all high officials be French Canadians. We are asking that they be bilingual, that they speak both languages. Can one be more reasonable, more logical? Is it not showing goodwill to ask that they be bilingual? We are asking it from all those who deal with the public, who work on trains, for the income tax division, Air Canada, from all those who work for crown corporations, in departments, who deal with the public or answer the phone. Is it not normal?

I appreciate that the hon. member for Carleton may be worried. He says that almost 50 per cent of the civil servants live in his riding. It is not because such a situation developed gradually that it must be allowed to linger.

It should be possible to take the necessary steps so that from now on those who join the civil service will know that they have a better chance, qualifications being equal, if they are bilingual.

Some crown corporations have set up language laboratories. Once, in a hotel north of Montreal, I saw some employees of the C.N.R. who spoke English only and who were taking French in a language laboratory sponsored by the C.N.R. Those men wanted to learn French and they did. It did not take them so long and at least today they can deal with the public.

We must start with the young. All sensible, sincere Canadians must accept, must approve the decision taken by the civil service commission and congratulate it for giving an additional percentage of points for bilingualism in the civil service.

In all the departments, whether is it the Secretary of State or the Department of National Defence, language courses can be organized to enable the newcomers to the civil service, those with chances for promotion, to reach the highest positions. If they are French Canadians, they can take English courses; if English Canadians, take French; so that all can benefit from the two languages and thus gain greater competence.

Think about it. There are ministers and senior civil servants who have to do business in other countries of the world. Well, nobody in this house can deny that when a citizen understands and speaks French and English, he can go almost anywhere in the world and make himself understood. In the fields of diplomacy, defence, broadcasting, trade and finance, when you speak both languages you can be welcomed and you can make yourself understood almost everywhere across the world. Therefore, it is a level of culture and competence a good civil servant must try to reach.

It is one of the criteria, even though not the only one, that must be taken into consideration in the case of a civil servant.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Grégoire: Yes.

Mr. Churchill: I thought the hon. member needed a rest. I should like to ask him this: would he impose any restriction on people whose native language is other than English or French, those who speak Polish, Ukrainian, Italian, Greek, and so on. Would the hon. member oblige them to know both English and French before they could enter the Civil Service?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I admit this case is important. I know that in the prairie provinces, there are several people of Polish, Ukrainian or Hungarian origin, who already speak their own language, and it is expecting very much of them to speak two more languages in addition to theirs.

I believe that to become a good civil servant, they must speak one of the two official languages of Canada. It is a good start already and they are even more competent if they speak both official languages of this country.

I do not want to impose that on them, I do not want to ask that of them. On the other hand, between two persons of equal competence—and I really mean of equal competence here—which one should the government choose?

There is in St. Boniface, near Winnipeg where the hon. member comes from, quite a number of French Canadians. In Winnipeg, if two candidates apply for the same job, and they are equally competent though one of them is bilingual, speaking English and French, I believe the latter enjoys an advantage over the one who speaks English only. If the two citizens from St. Boniface speak French and are otherwise equally competent, I would say that, if one of them speaks English, he must have the precedence on the other.

I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) will admit that if two French Canadians apply for postmaster's job in the office where he collects his mail, the one who speaks English has an additional competence over the one who speaks French only.

That is what we claim and nothing else: Competence being equal, the one coming into contact with the public and who can speak both languages is the one who should enjoy priority.

An hon. Member: The two official languages of the country.

Mr. Grégoire: Obviously, let us not talk about other languages now.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: May I ask another question. I take it the hon. member does not agree with the proposition put forward by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys who is reported to have been insisting that people entering the Civil Service must know both French and English. I want to speak on behalf of those whose native language is neither English nor French.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, quite understandably, this is a field where flexibility is required when such a suggestion is implemented. One must be flexible enough to admit that this situation exists and that, at present, most of our civil servants are unilingual.

The suggestion made by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin) to allow a certain number of additional points to a bilingual civil servant seems quite normal to me, since he acknowledges and establishes the following principle, namely that a Canadian civil servant who must deal with the public and who can speak both official languages is necessarily more competent than another who speaks only one of those languages.

This is what such a principle should recognize. We have another solution to offer. Let us give an additional bonus of $200 or $300 to any civil servant who can supply proof that he can speak and understand both languages.

So, upon entering the civil service, everyone would be on the same footing, whether bilingual or not. Once in the civil service, if he wants to be entitled to the bonus, it is up to him to study in a language laboratory to learn French or English according to whether he is a French or English Canadian.

At this time, according to the program we proposed three years ago, to give an additional bonus to everyone who is bilingual upon entering the civil service for any department they would all be on the same footing, but once in the service, the bilingual employee would receive the bonus if he can understand and speak both languages.

That will force civil servants to learn the other language. If they are French, they will learn English and if they are English they will learn French, should they want the bonus. And it would not take too long. I know that the former Secretary of State had conceived a plan for civil servants. Now, all that would be beneficial to those now in the civil service. They could immediately learn the other language that they do not know and then get their bonus. Besides, in six months or a year from now, they could speak French or English and be understood by everyone in his own language.

I think that the member for Winnipeg South Centre should be satisfied with this. He should find such an attitude or such a principle satisfactory.

• (9:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I have another question, even though I think we should get the estimates through tonight and with that in mind I anticipate a short answer. Would the hon. member recommend a bonus for a person whose native language is English but who has learned Eskimo in order to communicate with some of our native people, and a bonus for others along the same line, for those who act as interpreters in Russian, German and so on?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: No, Mr. Chairman, the bonus would be for bilingual people, namely those who speak and understand the two official languages in Canada. It is rather exceptional to speak Russian, and a Russian interpreter gets a much higher salary, because he had enough determination to learn Russian; it is his bonus, because he has an extra qualification, due to the fact that he speaks Russian. I do not know Russian, but nobody would pay me the salary of the Russian interpreter either.

But to be bilingual, that is to speak French and English, that is an additional asset in the civil service, and it deserves a bonus, in order to promote the development of true bilingualism in Canada. This bonus, will be an incentive for the officials actually in service to learn French, if they speak English only, or to learn English if they speak French only. Does this answer satisfy the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre?

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Thank you very much. Do you mind if I leave now?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to see that the member for Winnipeg South Centre has gone to enrol in a French course. I shall be glad to help him if he needs it.

Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State could certainly allow the member for Winnipeg South Centre to use the existing language laboratories.

This is, first of all, a political and social question, for Canada is officially recognized as a bilingual country by virtue of its constitution. That is the first and basic reason.

But for those who seem to object to that, I will recall that there is moreover a question of culture involved. The individual who can command two languages will unavoidably enjoy two cultures. That is obvious, Mr. Chairman. Those who wish to learn more, to know more, should do it for the sake of culture, for their self-improvement. It goes without saying that every human being tries to learn as much as possible, tries to add as much as he can to his personal background. Two cultures are definitely better than only one.

In the light of those facts, Mr. Chairman, I believe we must support the civil service's proposal to allot 10 extra points to those who are bilingual when they apply for a job. It was set at 10 per cent and I accept that percentage.

However, I would ask to consider also a supplementary bonus for those who are already on the job, during the period of transition, so that that period might not be too long. Then, you would see many officials register for French or English courses, as the case might be, with a view to learning the other official language of our country.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few remarks I wanted to make.

I think the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) will have noticed that I was not too fanatical in my ideas today. Those ideas are logical. We are not asking to take anything away from anyone, but merely asking to recognize the merit and competence of those who can speak the two languages, which are recognized by the constitution as the official languages of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Cantelon: Mr. Chairman, I intend to change the subject because I am sure it is impossible to pour oil on these troubled waters. If I did, I am quite certain the head of the hon. member for Lapointe would come bobbling through, spouting words. I should like to say a few words about a matter very close to the hearts of my constituents, a matter which I have mentioned to the minister on another occasion, namely, C.B.C. coverage for Saskatoon—a new C.B.C. station for Saskatoon.

To refresh the minister's memory I wish to tell her my constituency receives only one type of program and we are very anxious to have two. If a C.B.C. station can be put into Saskatoon, then we expect we would be able to have a C.T.V. program, as well as a C.B.C. program.

In this connection there is another matter I should like to mention. We have a satellite station at a place called Pivot, which is served from Medicine Hat, and over the past few months a great deal of technical difficulty has arisen. We hope the minister will use her good offices to see that an improvement is made to the technical efficiency of this station.

While talking on this subject, I think it would be a good time to mention the CBOT radio station in Ottawa. Before coming here, from what I expect might be called a remote area, I was accustomed to having very good radio reception. In common with many hon. members, I enjoyed good music and good commentaries, much of which are to be found on the C.B.C. network. Unfortunately, CBOT is not a good station. It is almost impossible to get good music from it, and clearcut words from the commentators who broadcast over it. I do not know whether the minister can do anything about this but, if she can, I think something should be done to see that the technical competency of this station is improved. It is a disgrace to the capital of our country.

Much of the C.B.C. programming in recent weeks has, in my opinion, improved greatly. We no longer get those far out programs, if we can call them that, produced by the quasi-intellectuals among the programming group in the C.B.C. At least we have not had any in recent weeks. I think in the past they were attempting to follow the ancient Greek tragedies. Unfortunately, all they succeeded in doing was omitting the drama involved in those tragedies and giving the dirt. This is indefensible in a network which comes into the homes of everybody.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word or two about the item which concerns the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. This office was held for a long time by a highly esteemed man, a man who gained the respect of every successful and unsuccessful parliamentry candidate. I think the office should be filled forthwith. It is not good to have this important office vacant, especially in a country that has had such a plethora of elections as we have had in recent years.

• (9:50 p.m.)

I should like to say further, Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: You are too truthful, Judy.

Mr. Peters: You are getting some help with your speech.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes, by this little contretemps between the lovely lady and this gallant gentleman.

I will continue. There is another matter of importance which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister at this time. I believe the elections act requires urgent and most careful scrutiny with a view to some far sweeping changes. We have had the habit in Canada of revising the elections act after an election. We have learned, I am sure, many things from the last few elections. The disenfranchisement of the students, for one thing, is very important and the disenfranchisement of many Canadians abroad, not only those in the Department of External Affairs, who do not have the opportunity to vote. There is the whole question of people who are out of their own area, and perhaps out of the country temporarily.

We could provide, I think, the necessary mechanism, if we moved toward the permanent voters list. I think this is an underpinning for absentee and proxy voting. Many persons believe the voting age should be lowered. I am one of those, but some of my colleagues do not belong to that group.

I should like to say to the minister that I believe the committee on privileges and elections should be activated as soon as possible, because there is a great deal of work to do in scrutinizing the act. I had the honour of presiding over the committee on privileges and elections the last time it held its sittings. We had many long meetings, long discussions and deliberations. I think the time is ripe for action in this regard. We must move toward having our democratic machinery up-dated. I do not think it is a good thing to have a vacancy in the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, and have an act which has been allowed to grow out of date.

Following the precedent set by the member for Royal, I will indulge in brevity and postpone my voluminous remarks until the next time I have an opportunity.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the member for Queens a question. Does the hon. member for Queens think that the time for holding elections should be reduced to 30 days rather than 60 days as it is at the present time?

Mr. Macquarrie: I believe, with a permanent list, it could be done in 30 days.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few remarks to make—I will not be long—about broadcasting in the constituency I represent.

My constituency has very bad service by way of broadcasting. For instance, at five and six o'clock in the afternoon, the frequencies are lowered and the power of private stations is lowered, so that the constituency is deprived of radio or French broadcasts in the evening. By lowering the broadcasting power of the private radio stations, it is impossible to tune in French stations. It is only possible to pick up American stations which are so powerful and take up all the power, so that it is impossible to get a single French word between five o'clock in the afternoon and eight o'clock the next morning.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation owns a small station, a small substation in the town of Mégantic. This small substation is much too weak, it is not powerful enough to serve the population, with the result that American stations overpower it and the small transmission station of the C.B.C. becomes worthless. Not one word can be heard all evening; all through the night the C.B.C. station does not operate because it is too weak to be heard above American stations.

In order to listen to radio programs in my riding, one has to tune in the Sherbrooke station, which serves part of the riding. Afterwards, one has to tune in the Thetford Mines station, serving another part of the riding. Later on, one has to tune in the St. Georges de Beauce station that serves another part of the riding, and a great part of the riding is still not covered, even though we have to tune in three stations to cover the whole riding. Nevertheless, a great part of the riding is left out.

My riding is made up of French Canadians, in a proportion of 97 per cent, while almost 80 per cent of the programs are American, not French. American stations run the show in my riding.

So we speak about French. The riding I represent is a French riding and we cannot even get French radio.

So I ask the C.B.C., and the minister to consider the requests I have made, for the riding I represent, for the Chamber of Commerce by which I am asked to make representations, for the Owners' League, in short for all public bodies of the city and the riding I represent.

We want an improvement in broadcasting. I don't believe the improvement we seek will cost too much to the government. To my mind, it would involve an increase in power of the C.B.C. station or the small C.B.C. relay station in Mégantic, so that it will be strong enough.

It would also involve permission for the private stations to maintain their power high enough to enable us to tune in French stations after ten o'clock at night.

The government, I do not know why, orders private radio stations to reduce their power by half, maybe more. I am not too sure about the percentage. At any rate, we have no French radio programs from five or six o'clock in the evening until eight o'clock the next morning.

I ask the minister to take this request into consideration. I am sure that the municipal and county authorities will make other representations because, for some time, they have been putting a lot of pressure on me to ask the minister and the government to do something in that connection.

That is why I took the opportunity to take part in this debate tonight. Once again, I ask the minister to examine the situation and have an inquiry made in that area, in order to give justice to my constituents.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, a while ago, the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Goyer) raised a very important question for the Canadian metropolis. Unfortunately, the minister did not refer or reply to the comments of his colleague, but I would certainly speak very briefly if the minister would assure us that the proposed C.B.C. complex which the previous government promised to carry out as early as October 1, 1965, and which was delayed by his predecessor to October 1, 1966, will be carried out.

The minister undoubtedly knows that this is a very important project of a rather special nature, since it is one of the most extensive projects to be carried out in the Canadian metropolis and I refer to the C.B.C. complex.

If the minister can assure us to-night that there shall not be any other postponement after the final date of October 1, 1966, my remarks, Mr. Chairman, will be short. So, if the minister can give us an answer, inform the house, in a word, give us a definite answer and not a shifty one as has been given in the past, the house shall obtain a much more immediate co-operation from me.

Does the minister intend to reply to my question, Mr. Chairman? I shall take the liberty of renewing my request if I do not receive an answer to my inquiry.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I also wish to ask a question—

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I directed a question to the minister and I would hope that she would at least be courteous enough to give us an answer. It is a simple clear and important question; it deals with a project of some $35 million. According to my information, it is a revised project, and I would like the minister to assure us, tonight, in short to state that there will be no more delays concerning the execution of that project, the C.B.C. complex in Montreal. It is a matter of administrative responsibility, and I cannot understand how the minister can remain indifferent and refuse to answer this kind of question, unless we are to see in this another sign of indifference toward a metropolis which has sent to parliament 20 Liberal members out of 21 ridings. It would be an insult to the Canadian metropolis to refuse to answer this question and if the minister refuses to do so, I shall ask the support of the 18 other Liberal members from Montreal, who have common interests to defend; as the hon. member for Dollard Mr. Goyer)—and I congratulate him for doing so,—I shall seek their support in order to have an answer in respect of that huge project.

I realize that the hon. Minister has to discuss common interests with her colleague, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) and the new Postmaster General (Mr. Côté), but I think that the Secretary of State should show a little more interest for her responsibilities and give us an answer to-night.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I demand such an answer, for we have been playing and juggling too long with this project, that was decided upon, voted and approved by the city of Montreal, by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and by Parliament. With startling suddenness, and through a political scheme on the part of her predecessor, this project was postponed a few months prior to the federal election, so as to prevent the election of the member for Sainte-Marie as Conservative member of Parliament for the Montreal area. Liberals resort to all tricks, Mr. Chairman, and I am not surprised about that.

But since the electoral campaign is over, I think the Minister owes us such an answer and should tell us to-night whether or not it is her intention to see that this project about the C.B.C. center is effectively carried out, as was announced by her predecessor on October 1, 1965.

I do not intend to resume my seat without having had an answer from the minister. It seems to me that the matter is simple. If the hon. lady is aware of the administration, of the decisions the cabinet has made previously or at present, I believe that she should answer. If the minister is unaware of this, it may be that she is not considered important enough to be kept abreast of the main decisions taken by the present government. This is of consequence to us, and while I bow to your impartiality, Mr. Chairman, you happen to be my left hand neighbour in the city of Montreal, and I know that this question is of interest to you—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. If I may interrupt the hon. member, I would ask him not to refer to the person who is now in the chair since the latter cannot, on account of his office, take part in the debate in progress. I suggest that the hon. member carry on with his remarks without alluding to the member who is presently acting as deputy chairman of committees and who cannot therefore take part in the debate.

Mr. Valade: I must point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that I did not put forward any argument likely to place you in an embarrassing situation. I only said that as a member from Montreal, you were interested in the matter—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I would ask him to proceed with his remarks while making the points he wants to submit to the house. I would also ask him to overlook the fact that I am a member of this house, because being acting chairman of the committees of the house, I cannot take part in the debate.

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I think you are perfectly within your rights. Up to now, you have performed your duty with fairness and honesty. I feel all members should make it possible for you to keep on performing your task as efficiently as in the past.

I think the hon. member for Sainte Marie (Mr. Valade) will agree with me on that point.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member for Lapointe and I would like to see him in the chair to spare us his interventions which are often out of place.

Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to tell the Secretary of State that this C.B.C. centre concerns all the members from Montreal. I do not intend to make it a question of party politics; I am not in a position to do so.

Everyone knows that it is the Conservative party which initiated that project, which conceived it, which endorsed it and which had it approved. Consequently, I am not here to gather political advantages. Let us hear from the government tonight that it will carry out the project approved by the house of commons under the previous administration.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member should not put his question in English to the minister so that she could understand and answer?

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly able to understand, but I fail to see how I am able to answer the hon. member until he sits down and surrenders the floor to me.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I do protest against another intervention by the minister. I asked her earlier to reply and told her that my intervention would be short. Then I sat down and she refused to give an answer. Now she says that if I sit down she will give me an answer. I am just complying with the request of the hon. member for Trois-Rivières. I am saying to the leader of the truth squad that we in this party are truly bilingual, at least we try to be. I have asked her the question in both French and English. Perhaps I should ask her the question in Spanish, Chinese or Eskimo, I don't know; but I have asked if she is ready to answer this question now. I impress upon the minister that I am ready to refrain from speaking on the subject if she will give me an answer, but she has not yet given any indication that she will answer my question. As the minister responsible for this project, will she say whether it will be completed on the date that was decided, namely October 1, 1966?

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I see the minister is surrounded by some other colleagues from Quebec—I ask her to tell us whether this project will materialize. I see the new Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) at her side; he is perfectly bilingual and he is a young man who rose to glory at a clip with Quebec minister Laporte. This project is no longer a joke. Our Liberal opponents once again want to fool the population of Montreal. I am happy to see them smile about this intervention which affects the economy of the East of Montreal. French Canadians complain of having been neglected in the past by the federal government.

Now that the former government has decided on a project of fantastic scope which will give a considerable impulsion to the city of Montreal, particularly to the east—I see the Postmaster General smile and I should like to know whether it is a cynical smile or whether he intends to fulfil the promises made during the election campaign.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Valade: I ask the Secretary of State to answer my question.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. Postmaster General is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): It seems that the member for Sainte-Marie wants to involve me in this matter. He says I have a cynical smile. I only ask him to sit down that I may answer him.

Mr. Valade: Since the Secretary of State is invited to answer by her colleague the Postmaster General, I leave her the floor if she wishes to answer.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, there have been a number of questions asked this evening, and I was waiting, particularly in view of the lateness of the hour, until all questions had been put before I attempt to give some brief answer prior to the termination of our discussion on vote No. 1.

Earlier this evening the hon. members for Chapleau and Churchill, as well as hon. members for Saguenay, Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, Northwest Territories and even the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate privately, and on many occasions, raised the question of the extension of the services provided by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, first of all to parts of Canada not yet reached by any service. I fully agree, as I am sure every hon. member does, that it should be extended to such regions as quickly as is humanly possible, if it is humanly possible.

As is known by these hon. members I have enumerated, though I am sure there are others who have not taken the opportunity to mention to me difficulties in this regard in their ridings, the C.B.C. has been unable over a number of years, because of insufficient money voted by parliament, to reach the complete population of Canada. Indeed, we could never reach 100 per cent of the population of Canada through the radio arm of the corporation as well as the television arm.

As a result of my predecessors' study of the matter—firstly the Minister of Transport who had a troika set up to study the question of broadcasting, and latterly my immediate predecessor who had the Fowler committee set up—one subject of intense interest was the extension of services to the ultimate level throughout the whole of Canada.

I share with all hon. members who have spoken a desire to see as quickly as practicable the extension of service to every Canadian in Canada who can receive it. Unhappily, I am not in a position to say—

Mr. Caouette: Would the hon. lady permit a question, please. She just said service would be extended whenever it is humanly possible. Now, is it a question of being humanly possible or financially impossible?

Miss LaMarsh: I think I know to which slogan my hon. friend has reference. In the first place, I should like to say that it is a question of being humanly possible to some extent, because I am told that we cannot hope under present technological advances to reach 100 per cent of the homes of Canada. So, that is an ideal which we are not going to reach in the foreseeable future, or at least while I am responsible for the C.B.C. We do reach a figure somewhat less than that, though it cannot be too much less than that because we are already able to reach through radio something like 96 per cent of all homes, and through television something like 92 per cent of all homes. So, we do not have far to go.

I have asked the C.B.C.—and the C.B.C., as members of the committee can imagine, is eager to comply—to give the government an estimate of the cost of doing something similar to that suggested by the hon. member for Churchill, namely, to put aside a fund so that the last big step toward the outer limit of practicability can be reached in an orderly way. Then, the C.B.C. can lay out its priorities and make a start toward providing a national service which is received, if possible, in every Canadian home. Unhappily, I cannot tell members of the house at this stage when this will come to pass. Hon. members will realize that I have been responsible for this portfolio for only a little over two months, and that the estimates currently before the committee do not contain money for this capital expansion. Nevertheless, it will not be too many weeks before this committee will have an opportunity to see another set of estimates for this department, and will have an opportunity as well to discuss the affairs of my department before a committee of the house. I should hope at that point we shall be able to give further information to hon. members.

One hon. member was kind enough to say, in passing, on the question of the extension of services with respect to programming that he thought he saw an improvement within the last few weeks. Even though I am patheticaly eager to find any kind of approval, and there was little enough this evening in any remarks of hon. members toward my stewardship in the last couple of months, unhappily I cannot claim responsibility for any improvement in programming. As has been said many times before, programming is the responsibility of the Board and the management. My responsibility is to act as a conduit pipe between the corporation and Members of Parliament.

An hon. Member: Some pipe.

Miss LaMarsh: I hope that there would be a steady improvement of programs. It may be the case, if programs appear to have improved to my hon. friend, that they may appear at the same time to be anything but an improvement to someone else in another part of the chamber. I was asked a number of questions by hon. members, for, I believe, Burnaby-Richmond, Dollard and finally by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie. The first question I was asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond concerned consolidation of services in the three largest cities of Canada, Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver.

As all hon. members know, these questions were specifically referred to the Fowler Committee which has been studying the matter for a considerable period of time. This is part of the general, over-all study. I cannot tell hon. members when they are likely to receive a white paper or an indication of the government's assessment of the Fowler Report on broadcasting in Canada. I, myself, have very recently come to this field; and having soaked myself for about two months in all the lore of broadcasting, and in learning all the information that I have been able to reach in that department, I feel that I have only scratched the surface.

Broadcasting is perhaps one of the most important things in the field of communication. Certainly, the impact of television on Canadians is tremendous.

I hope that within the confines of this calendar year we will be able to pass through the stages of a white paper, a committee study by a parliamentary committee, and perhaps even the formulation of legislation. I would explain to hon. members that I would not want them to feel that I am to be bound by such a timetable, since it takes a long time to discuss and lay out the framework of broadcasting. However, such questions as the consolidation plans I think can be decided on an ad hoc basis. They are being discussed by the cabinet at this time.

I should like to make very clear, however—and this might be of interest to the deputy chairman of committee in whose constituency the premises exist—that the government fully intends to go ahead with construction plans for the C.B.C. Montreal consolidation on the site which has been expropriated by the City of Montreal.

• (10:20 p.m.)

There has never been any suggestion otherwise. That is the site where construction will commence. But I do think it would be foolhardy for me at this point, while the Fowler report is being studied by the committee, to attempt to give hon. members here, or persons in the general public, a date upon which construction will be started or completed.

We are aware of the pressures which have built up in the city of Montreal with regard to this matter. Hon. members from Montreal, particularly the deputy chairman of committees, the hon. member for Saint Jacques, have brought this question to my notice almost daily. I appreciate that a great many people in Montreal have been dispossessed of their homes in this area so that the land might be cleared for this construction. For this reason, I should like to pledge to the committee that there shall be no delay in reaching a decision.

Other matters were raised, in particular the question raised by the hon. member for Carleton and answered by the hon. member for Lapointe. I should like to have the opportunity to make a statement at some length with respect to what was said by the head of the Civil Service Commission and the policy which has been undertaken in the last few years. I am not attempting to be provocative, but I believe the hon. member for Carleton—and I am sure he would not want to do this—has done a disservice to the commission. However, in view of the lateness of the hour and the few minutes left to me before ten o'clock, and since the Prime Minister indicated only today in the house that he would be prepared next week following a meeting with representatives of the Civil Service Federation to make a full statement in this chamber, I feel this is not an opportune time at which to pursue the matter. My poor words, in any case, would do nothing but foreshadow words which are far more responsible and important to all those engaged in the public service in Canada. This being the case, I think I have completed my remarks. I hope I have dealt with all the other questions asked this evening.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. We have refrained from mentioning the time. We did not even quarrel with the statement made by the minister a moment ago as to what time she thought it was. But we think there should be some understanding about what we are doing. My colleagues here are prepared not to notice the clock until the estimates of this department have been dealt with but we hope there may be an agreement after that point to call it ten o'clock.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Mr. McIlraith: On the point of order, I should like to appeal to the committee to complete all the estimates tonight. As outlined in an answer to a question by the hon. member for Medicine Hat on Monday afternoon, there is a situation in which certain casual employees of the department cannot be paid. A good many of the small service contractors cannot be paid and many persons are suffering real hardship since they cannot receive their pay because of the delay in completing the estimates.

I therefore appeal to hon. members to complete consideration of that item in the R.C.M.P. estimates which it was thought by all hon. members had been called yesterday with the estimates of the Department of Justice, but which was inadvertently omitted, as well as the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. If we could do this tonight, it would be very much appreciated.

Mr. Starr: I want to say a word on the point of order. In the continuing spirit of co-operation which we have extended to the government in the consideration of these estimates throughout all the departments, and realizing the hardships which may be encountered by many who have to depend on their pay or salaries, we are prepared to sit until all the estimates have been passed tonight. We do this to help the government out of the predicament in which they find themselves, and in order that no hardship may be felt.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I heard the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) tell us earlier that the Government had no more funds to pay civil servants and contractors, and I intended to suggest that they borrow from Household Finance or some company of that kind in order to pay their employees.

However, I do want to tell the Government Leader that we are prepared to co-operate concerning the estimates.

The house leader of the Conservative Party also tells us that he is prepared to co-operate, but I should like to know what this means.

If that means that several Conservative members will rise and speak until two o'clock tomorrow morning, we object. As for us, we feel that the study of the estimates could be all over in five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we do not know the intentions of the New Democratic party, or those of the Conservative party, for that matter, but we feel that we should at least know what to expect.

For instance, if a definite time is set for ending the discussion of the estimates, say eleven o'clock, we are ready to co-operate. But if the idea is to have the debate drag until three or four in the morning, I suggest this is no longer co-operation but hypocrisy.

[English]

Mr. Starr: I am rising on a point of order in view of what has been said by the hon. member for Lapointe. I have been here for some 14 years. He has been here only a few years. If I had nothing more to contribute than he has contributed over that period of time, I think I would take my seat.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we are all anxious to arrive at an understanding on a basis of mutual agreement. We are not trying to throw invective at each other, but I would point out that a certain place in another part of this building adjourned at 9.30. Therefore, no matter how long we sit tonight, the estimates and the final bill will not be put through tonight. It will take until tomorrow, in any case.

I think the more responsible way to go at things is to finish up the department that is before us, and finish the other two departments tomorrow afternoon. If we get into fisheries and the R.C.M.P. tonight we are likely to be here until quite late. We will be doing a disservice to the staff of the house and it will not speed up payment of salaries because the other place has adjourned.

Mr. McIlraith: I think I should explain the reference to the other place. The fact is that the other place, when it meets tomorrow afternoon, should have before it the bill from this House. It cannot have that bill if we do not start considering it until after the other place has met tomorrow afternoon. It is purely a matter of getting the bill ready before hon. members of the other place meet, so that they can have a short time to consider and pass it before the royal assent, which has been arranged for tomorrow afternoon.

I must acknowledge that the other place has been very co-operative during what has been a difficult situation over the last few days. They arranged to come and deal with these matters on Friday evening and again tonight. If the arrangement for tomorrow could be met, I think it would be a fair treatment of the whole subject. I would again make my appeal to hon. members—forget whatever differences there might be between parties at the moment and try to complete all these estimates tonight.

Mr. Olson: I think we should try to get all the estimates passed, in keeping with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Ontario, but I also believe that we should do it, if possible, within a reasonable length of time. In other words, if we leave matters wide open for the Department of Fisheries and the R.C.M.P. item, without any gentlemen's agreement, we may be here until two or three o'clock in the morning discussing, for instance, the skinning of seals. Therefore, while we agree that it would be beneficial to have the balance of the estimates passed so that the appropriations bill can be sent to the Senate, we urge that it should be done in a reasonable length of time.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member indicate what he regards as a reasonable length of time?

Mr. Olson: I would think some time between now and midnight, if there is just one department to deal with.

Mr. Starr: I would agree with that and we are prepared, and give our word, that by twelve o'clock midnight we will pass all the items in all departments.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, individual members have particular problems that they want to raise, and this is taking advantage of them.

What this suggestion, in effect, would be doing, would be to almost eliminate the discussion of a vitally important department, namely, the Department of Fisheries. This department has been left until the last. If we proceed this evening to restrict ourselves as to time, in order to get the estimates through—and I am not objecting to that in principle because of the financial difficulty in which the government finds itself—we will be thumbing our noses at all the fishermen in British Columbia. Some 22 of them were down here recently trying to gain the support of members of parliament for their particular problems. I think the suggestion to brush this department to one side is unconscionable.

I think a better approach would be to proceed to deal with the estimates of the Secretary of State tonight and start off fresh in the morning on a fishing expedition. There is nothing better than fishing in the morning when you are fresh and alert. Otherwise, we would be treating the fisheries and the problems of the fishermen with complete disdain. We would be asking members to pass the estimates through a process of exhaustion. I think we would be better off—

An hon. Member: In meeting in the morning.

Mr. Howard: You can meet in the morning if you like, but I think the house leader would be in a better position were he to propose that we should sit this evening until we finish the estimates of the Secretary of State and start tomorrow morning with the Department of Fisheries.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, we seem to be very close to an agreement or concensus on this. Would it be satisfactory to the hon. member if we could reach an agreement that we would finish the estimates of the Secretary of State; then give him an opportunity to take the full allocated time for his important speech on fisheries. I agree that this is quite an important department. If we could agree on a time limit in that way, it would permit the two hon. members to have their opportunity to make speeches on this very important subject, and they would be assured of their full time.

Mr. Howard: You can pass the estimates of the Secretary of State right now—

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

The Deputy Chairman: Does the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek wish to speak on a point of order?

Mr. McIntosh: No, Mr. Chairman. I have one short question to ask the minister.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Sainte-Marie on a point of order.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order; I cannot say, if I intervene to correct a statement made by the minister, whether it will take me two minutes, five minutes, or ten minutes. I do not think this is the way in which parliament should be conducted. If there is a point which is of particular importance and interest to a member of parliament, surely it is his duty not to pass this opportunity because of the pressure of time. We did not bring about this pressure of time. It results from the election being held at a bad time. I do not think, when there is a project such as the one of which I spoke a few moments ago which concerns one million people and hundreds of millions of dollars, that I would be carrying out my duty if I went along with this suggestion.

I wish to make it clear that I intend to ask for more information on this point. I will try to make it very short, but I certainly will not yield my right to make this point clear to the minister.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order; we find ourselves in the position of stumbling from one minute to another. I think, in view of the failure to reach an agreement, the only responsibility which falls on your shoulders now, Mr. Chairman, is to say it is ten o'clock. It is unquestionably ten o'clock.

Mr. Starr: Sit until one o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Skeena calling it ten o'clock?

Mr. Howard: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise, report certain resolutions and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO SIT UNTIL 1 A.M.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, I move, pursuant to standing order 6(2):

That this house continue to sit until one o'clock a.m. Wednesday morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It has been moved by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), that pursuant to standing order 6(2), this house continue to sit until 1 a.m. Wednesday morning. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I protest and ask that you seek to find out whether or not there are ten members who object.

Mr. Starr: The Chair does not have to ask. Let the hon. members stand and be counted.

And more than ten members having risen, the question on the said motion was not put.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair sees 11 members objecting. Therefore, the motion to sit until one o'clock will not be put.

Mr. Starr: Is it possible to have the names of those objecting recorded, Mr. Speaker? I ask that they be recorded.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Standing order 6(2) does not require that the names of those objecting be recorded.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader whether he will agree to avail himself of the offer we made earlier this evening to consider and pass the estimates of the Secretary of State tonight?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question put to me I must say that there is a situation developing here in which it is difficult to reconcile the rights of parliament and the consensus of the committee to the rights of individual members. I recognize in the circumstances how important some of these matters are to individual members.

• (10:40 p.m.)

But I must also reconcile that with the fact that parliament has a right to take a decision on public business. We have now had a very lengthy and thorough discussion of estimates in this session, and have in prospect another lengthy and thorough discussion of estimates in this session under a new, and we hope improved, system.

I cannot ignore without comment the remark of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who pretends that because some offer he made was not accepted parliament has somehow not acted correctly. It has acted wholly correctly here and the hon. member must, along with any other hon. members who may feel justified—

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. McIlraith: —in taking the position they have taken, assume his responsibility for what happens as a consequence of not passing these estimates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I will listen to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni because I have allowed the hon. Minister of Public Works to make a statement. But I suggest to the house that our procedure at the moment is quite out of order. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett).

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting myself and, in my view, all hon. members of this house.

Mr. Starr: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Barnett: I would suggest that it ill behooves the government house leader to rise at this time with a self-righteous lecture on the responsibility of members of this house.

Mr. Winkler: It is very reasonable. You know what the rules are.

Mr. Churchill: What is the question of privilege?

Mr. Barnett: I should like to suggest the question of privilege is that for the hon. member for Ottawa West, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), to suggest that the Department of Fisheries is not worthy of a proper allocation of time and consideration by this house—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Barnett: —is indicative of the fact that this government has been sloughing off fisheries as a matter of little consequence for far too long.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fairweather: Send that little speech out to your constituents.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair must be guided by the rules and regulations which have been given to the Chair by the house. The Chair has seen that the provisions of provisional standing order 6(2) have been properly carried out.

It is therefore my duty pursuant to provisional standing order 39A to inform the house that a motion to adjourn the house has been deemed to have been made and seconded at this time. Therefore the question is that this house do now adjourn.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—ENCOURAGEMENT TO UNEMPLOYED TO WORK IN GOLD MINES

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, on March 3 last, I asked—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On March 3 last, I asked the future minister of manpower (Mr. Marchand) since the shortage of skilled labour is one of the main reasons for the closing down of a gold mine in the Timmins area, this month if he could tell the House whether he intended to direct our unemployed toward the mining industry.

It has been announced also that another mine in the Yukon, will be closing down; two others have announced their closing down in a few months, for the same reasons.

And it is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that for some months now we have seen in the newspapers job offers for qualified men in our mines, tradesmen, electricians, plumbers, machinists, drillers, dynamiters, and so on. We need qualified men in our mines.

The Department of Citizenship and Immigration thought it had found a solution to that problem by attracting experienced miners to Canada. But this does not seem to satisfy our mining industries, for mining methods here are different from European methods. So, as the immigrants have no experience in our mines, they do not satisfy the needs of our mining operators.

I should like to ask the future Minister of Manpower to direct to the mining industry the unemployed and the young people who want to become acquainted with mining operations, mining work.

The federal government could help the provinces open mining schools so as to allow people displaced by automation or young Canadians who enter the labour market to gain elementary knowledge of our Canadian mining methods.

In closing, I should like to point out to the minister that gold mines, because their income is lower than others, are the first to suffer from this shortage of skilled workers.

The minister should take into consideration the suggestions I made to him tonight, in order to enable our young and our unemployed to take the necessary courses to meet the manpower demands of the mining industry.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe the suggestion which has been made is a very useful one. It says that we should try to train the men to fill in the available jobs in mines, and in the industries in general as well.

[Mr. Speaker.]

It is one of the projects we hope to be able to put into operation by next July 1, with higher allowances, we can probably better adjust from the professional point of view, the qualifications of our workers to the needs of the market.

There is only one thing that I would like to point out to the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise). Whatever the quality of our vocational training, whatever efforts we make to prepare our people, either for working in mines or at other trades, labour conditions in those mines or trades must be attractive enough so that workers will be interested.

I know that, in some businesses and mining operations, even if we import labour, even skilled labour, the workers will not stay because of the relatively low level of income. It means that when a high level of employment exists, as is the case in some regions of Canada right now, it is absolutely impossible to convince the workers, and I think they are right, to stay in jobs which do not pay enough.

Of course, gold mines are a special case since their operations are subsidized. But it remains that one of the problems in those operations is precisely that either the labour conditions are a little too hard, or the level of income is not enough to attract and hold Canadian workers.

There is one thing I am not ready to do as Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and that is to allow labour to be imported so that it will be forced, directly or indirectly, to accept jobs which do not pay enough. It has happened that some businesses, in order to secure cheap labour, have loaned money to immigrants, paid their trip and told them that they will not have to repay their fare if they work for the business for two, three or four years. In my opinion, this is slavery, and I do not think that such a situation should be accepted in Canada.

The case presented to us by the hon. member for Chapleau is one which we may try to deal with to a certain extent through our rehabilitation and reclassification systems, but at the same time working conditions and wages must be on a level allowing these businesses to compete with others in the labour market.

BROADCASTING—FOWLER COMMISSION—ACCEPTANCE OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I posed the following question to the Prime Minister:

> Can the Prime Minister inform the house when the cabinet committee studying the Fowler report will be in a position to indicate which of the recommendations of that committee will be accepted by the government?

Mr. Speaker found difficulty in determining the urgency of this question, and as a result I wish to enlarge on the reason it was asked.

In 1964 the Fowler Committee was set up by the present government, and it reported on September 9, 1965. On receipt of the report the Prime Minister informed the house that a special cabinet committee, headed by himself, would study the report. The expected result was that legislation would be proposed.

During the period the Fowler Committee sat we were informed that a freeze would be applied to those aspects of broadcasting under consideration by the committee. We were later informed that the freeze in effect during the committee hearings would continue during the period the report was under consideration by the cabinet committee.

I have been personally concerned in this whole matter because the action of this government has prevented my constituents from receiving the alternate television service they desire from the C.T.V. network through CJCH-T.V. Halifax. Many other hon. members have found themselves in a similar position. I point to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. MacEwan), who has questioned the government on the same problem. Now, we hear that the Board of Broadcast Governors has heard and ruled on the application of the 11 member stations of the C.T.V. network to take over this network, a procedure opposed in the recommendation of the Fowler Committee but approved of very recently by the Board of Broadcast Governors. I think the recommendation of the Fowler Committee was to the effect that such approval should not be given.

We are also informed that the Board of Broadcast Governors will hear the application of Ralph Snelgrove Limited regarding the shifting of channel 3 from Barrie to Toronto. Surely, it is the height of stupidity to which only this government can aspire, to have under consideration by a cabinet committee recommendations which the Board of Broadcast Governors is presently ignoring in the broadcasting field. This has led the Globe and Mail to editorialize in the following manner, and rightly so on Monday, March 7, 1966:

> The public is left to wonder. In permitting the B.B.G. to defy this one important Fowler recommendation, is the Government saying that it also rejects the recommendation but is still weighing other recommendations, or that, in fact, it rejects the whole report? And if either or neither is true, surely the people are entitled to be told the Government's reasons for taking (or not taking) a stand.
> But perhaps such public wondering is purposeless. In the accident-strewn history of this Government, perhaps we have just witnessed another accident.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the report of the broadcasting commission, commonly known as the Fowler report, was submitted to the government early last September and, as all members know, certain events took place last fall which affected not only the government but all members, and prevented the government from giving serious consideration to that report in the latter part of 1965.

In addition to the said report, the government also obtained the views of the C.B.C., of the Canadian Broadcasters Association and of several groups of persons concerned.

In early January, a special cabinet committee, headed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) himself, was set up with a view to studying the Fowler report.

I believe that the government has begun serious consideration of the Fowler report. For some time, the government has been doing a vast amount of work, in addition to absorbing a report of this size as well as all the representations made by C.B.C. officials and other groups. Obviously, some time is required.

In addition, it was emphasized in the house several times by the Prime Minister and by the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) that broadcasting was a most complex and most important problem and that decisions could not be taken lightly.

Several problems are involved, as is well known: programming, service expansion to areas not yet supplied with television, consolidation of services in Montreal and Toronto, financing of the C.B.C. and many others still.

These are problems on which we should not decide too quickly, and I believe that past experience shows that we should not jump to decisions.

The government's aim is and will always be to provide a true broadcasting policy which will give a certain amount of stability to this very important field for years to come. In addition, such a policy cannot be set out overnight. It is necessary to think about it very seriously and before finishing my remarks, I shall point out, for example, that if we scrutinize the policy which has been adopted following the presentation of the Fowler report in 1957 to implement the recommendations of that report, we see that the first decision concerning this report was taken at the beginning of 1958, that is one year after.

I should say also that the problems which have been raised in the report submitted in 1965 are not less important than those contained in the 1957 report.

ELECTION ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION TO VOTE ON SUNDAY

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-137, to amend the Canada Elections Act (Elections on a Sunday).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, this bill has two distinct objects, one being of an economic nature and the other, of a political nature.

One of its objects is economic in that employers would no longer have to grant three hours' leave to their employees, since the vote would be held on a Sunday.

The other is political in character, because electors would find it easier to exercise their franchise, since Sunday is not a working day.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION FOR HEARING UNDER INQUIRIES ACT

Mr. David Lewis (York South) moved the first reading of Bill No. C-138, to amend the Civil Service Act (to provide a full and impartial hearing for an employee dismissed under section 50 of the act.)

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this suggestion arises out of a very recent debate and would add a section to section 50 of the Civil Service Act so that any government employee dismissed under that section would be given a full and impartial hearing by a commissioner or commissioners appointed under part 1 of the Inquiries Act, if the employee or his agent requests it in writing.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION TO ALLOW DELAY FOLLOWING LATE FILING

Mr. J. R. Comtois (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-139, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Comtois: Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to grant a 12-month extension to those people who, through ignorance, inadvertence or incapacity, did not file an application for these benefits at the time stipulated by law.

This 12-month extension would spare losses and great inconvenience to people who forget their age (an error of one year is frequent amongst the aged, and more particularly amongst women) or those who, because the law has been changed (the age of eligibility being progressively lowered from 70 to 65 years), might forget to file their application on time.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): 1. Representation on behalf of tobacco growers in central Ontario was received but no crop loss survey data supplied.

2. Where an individual farmer who ordinarily meets his commitments to the Farm Credit Corporation satisfactorily suffers a loss of income through circumstances beyond his control to the extent that he cannot make his payment without hardship, the corporation will consider a request to defer such payment.

Farm improvement loans are administered by the banks and there are provisions for re-arrangement of repayment terms where such action is warranted.

Questions

U.S. SECURITIES COMMISSION REGULATIONS

Question No. 583—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Does the government know if the securities and exchange commission of the United States recently changed its regulations to require Canadian corporations engaged in interstate commerce and which have total assets of $1,000,000 or more than 300 shareholders resident in the U.S.A., to register with the commission and become subject to its regulations unless the corporations' shares are fully listed on the U.S. stock exchange?

2. Does Canada have similar requirements for American firms doing business in Canada and, if so, what are they?

3. Has the government of Canada taken any action to protect Canadian firms doing business in the U.S.A. against these new discriminatory regulations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. No.

3. Yes. As the house was informed on January 27, formal representations have been made to the United States government and consultations have commenced between officials of the two countries. My colleagues and I will also be taking up this matter with representatives of the United States cabinet when we see them at the Canada-United States ministerial committee meeting on March 4 and 5.

TELEVISION SERVICE

Question No. 586—Mr. Korchinski:

1. What percentage of the area in each of the provinces is not being serviced by any television?

2. What is the estimate of the number of people in each of the provinces not receiving television?

3. What percentage of the people in each of the provinces are within reach of (a) only one television station (b) two television stations (c) three television stations (d) four television stations (e) five television stations (f) six or more television stations?

4. What percentage of the people in each of the provinces are within reach of American television stations?

5. What is the estimate of the cost which would be necessary to provide television service to all the people in each of the provinces?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has provided the following information:

1. The C.B.C. does not have data on the percentage of area in each province not serviced by television.

2. Estimated Population (June 1, 1961) Outside A & B Service Area*: Newfoundland, 83,600; Prince Edward Island, 10,300; Nova Scotia, 8,600; New Brunswick, 11,100; Quebec, 82,300; Ontario, 85,000; Manitoba, 71,300; Saskatchewan, 169,300; Alberta, 88,100; British Columbia, 111,800.

NOTE: Statistics based on all Canadian television stations, relays and rebroadcasting stations in operation or recommended for approval by B.B.G., as of November 18, 1965.

*Satisfactory fringe reception is available in many of the areas outside the A & B Service Area.

3. Estimated Percentage of Population (June 1, 1961) Within A & B Service Area of:

	One Station	Two Stations	Three Stations	Four or more Stations
Newfoundland	32%	41%	—	—
Prince Edward Island	59%	31%	—	—
Nova Scotia	34%	52%	8%	2%
New Brunswick	47%	40%	11%	—
Quebec	13%	14%	14%	57%
Ontario	17%	15%	19%	47%
Manitoba	21%	3%	67%	—
Saskatchewan	53%	28%	—	—
Alberta	25%	61%	2%	—
British Columbia	21%	1%	68%	—

NOTE: Statistics based on all Canadian television stations, relay and rebroadcasting stations in operation or recommended for approval by B.B.G. before April 1, 1964.

4. While the C.B.C. does not have data on percentage of population in each province within reach of U.S. television stations, the estimated percentage of households (January 1, 1965) covered by U.S. t.v. stations is: Newfoundland, —; Prince Edward Island, —; Nova Scotia, —; New Brunswick, 12%; Quebec, 50%; Ontario, 77%; Manitoba, 63%; Saskatchewan, 4%; Alberta, —; British Columbia, 84%.

NOTE: A county (or census division) is considered as having U.S. station's coverage if the number of homes viewing a U.S. station, at least once a week, equals 35 per cent or more of all homes where English is spoken.

5. An overall cost estimate of facilities required to provide television service to all Canadians wherever located has not been undertaken because such complete coverage is considered unrealistic at this time from a technical and economic standpoint.

To provide television service to about 50 areas with a population of 2,000 or more which are outside present national service coverage limits would involve an estimated capital cost of between 15 and 16 million dollars, the estimated annual operating cost of which would be between three and four million dollars.

2. In each year since 1949, what was the total value of (a) wheat sold (b) cattle sold (c) hogs sold?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. The following table sets forth the required indexes. They are based on average prices at the farm which take into account all grades marketed. In the case of wheat, participation payments are included in the year to which they apply, i.e.—payments made in 1966 on the 1964 crop are included with the price for 1964. The index for 1965 cannot yet be calculated because final payments have not been made on deliveries in the 1965-66 crop year.

2. The following table sets forth Dominion Bureau of Statistics estimates of farm cash receipts for these three products. In the case of wheat, two sets of data are supplied. The first column sets forth the cash received at the time of delivery. The second column provides information concerning Canadian Wheat Board payments; these payments are included in the year in which they are paid by the board, e.g. payments in 1965 on 1963 are included in the 1965 receipts.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

Question No. 853—Mr. Orange:

1. Is any action being taken to extend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act beyond its proposed expiry date in 1967 and, if not, when will a decision be made on whether or not to extend the Act?

2. If the act is to be extended, is it intended to remove the provisions excluding assistance to gold mines coming into operation in areas outside established gold mine communities as defined by the Act?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. The Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act was extended in December 1963 for a period of four years to the end of 1967. The amendment to the act did not change the formula used in computing the amount of assistance payable to the gold mines. However, the amending legislation did introduce a restriction which affects a new gold mine coming into production after June 30, 1965. After that date a new gold mine is eligible for assistance only if it provides direct support to an existing gold mining community.

Although no direct action is presently being taken to extend the act, we are well aware of the needs of the gold mining industry and the situation is constantly under serious study.

A definite decision for the extension of the benefits of E.G.M.A. beyond the expiry date of December 31, 1967 will not be required during the present year.

2. The restriction of assistance to gold mines giving direct support to already existing gold mining communities was intended to prevent the establishment of new communities, supported by gold mining operations, which would be dependent on government assistance from the outset. Consequently, it is not intended to remove this restriction.

EXPO '67—FAMILY PLANNING EXHIBIT

Question No. 901—Mr. Prittie:

1. What is the theme of Expo '67?

2. Will reference be made to the population problem in exhibits planned for Expo '67?

3. Did the Canadian federation for population planning (now the family planning federation of Canada) or the Montreal family planning association apply to Expo '67 for space to present an exhibit in line with the theme of Expo '67?

4. If so, what oral or written response was made to the federation?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. "Man and His World"—"Terre des Hommes".

2. It is too early to indicate with certainty whether foreign governments or Canadian industries will refer to the population problem in their pavilions. With respect to the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition thematic pavilions, four at least will refer to the matter of population growth in their exhibits: "Man in the Community", "Man the Provider", "Man and His Health" and "Man, His Planet and Space".

3. The Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition was approached by the Family Planning Association in Montreal, on their own behalf and on behalf of the Family Planning Federation of Canada and of the international organization known as Planned Parenthood World Population. One aspect of the approach was in the nature of a request for space in which these organizations could set up a booth. The approach also brought about discussions on references to the population explosion in our theme exhibits, particularly in the sub-theme "Man and His Community".

4. It was explained to the representatives of these organizations that the exhibition, being one registered by the International Bureau of Exhibitions in the first category, does not provide for the rental or the disposition on a free basis of booths for individual organizations. The discussions with the organizations concerned have proven useful in the development of thematic exhibits on the population explosion, and such discussions are continuing.

BAGOTVILLE, QUE.—PERSONNEL AT R.C.A.F. STATION

Question No. 903—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. How many air force personnel are stationed at R.C.A.F. station Bagotville?

2. How many dependent children are living with these personnel?

3. Is there a public school in the Bagotville area which provides college entrance level education for English speaking students?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): 1. As of 31 January 1966, 1137.

2. The latest figures available are for 30 September 1965, 1985.

3. Yes, two in Arvida.

SALARY OF R.C.A.F. FLIGHT LIEUTENANT

Question No. 907—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

What is the salary of an R.C.A.F. flight lieutenant, captain of a Cosmopolitan aircraft, after 10 years in that service?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): The type of aircraft flown has no bearing on rates of pay for pilots in the R.C.A.F. An R.C.A.F. Flight Lieutenant with 10 years in that rank, if married, draws $833 per month, and a single officer of the same rank draws either $668 if quarters and rations are provided, or $763 if quarters and rations are not provided.

AVAILABILITY OF PERITRATE SA

Question No. 919—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Has a drug of the trade name "Peritrate SA" ever been available in Canada and, if so, is it still available?

2. If it is still available, has consideration been given to removing it from the market, in the light of recent United States findings?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

2. No, since the United States action was not based on any question of safety or effectiveness of the drug.

MISSION TO JAPAN—HOLSTEIN-FRIESIAN BREEDERS REPRESENTATION

Question No. 926—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What breeders of Holstein-Friesian cattle in the Atlantic provinces were invited to become members of the trade mission to Japan and Korea sponsored by the Department of Trade and Commerce?

2. By whom were the personnel of the mission selected?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. None.

2. The members of the mission were selected by the Department of Trade and Commerce in consultation with the Holstein-Friesian Association of Canada.

KINCARDINE, ONT.—SEWAGE TREATMENT PROJECT

Question No. 936—Mr. Loney:

1. Has the full amount of $127,600 awarded to the town of Kincardine to assist in a sewage treatment project been paid to the municipality?

2. If not, what amount remains unpaid?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour):

1. Full amount of loan based on final costs was $113,002.80.

2. Final loan disbursement was made to the municipality on June 4th, 1965.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

GROSS AND NET VALUE OF THE NATIONAL DEBT

Question No. 225—Mr. Caouette:

1. What is Canada's debt, gross and net?

2. What is the debt of Crown corporations, gross and net?

3. How much money do Canadians owe to banks and credit unions for personal loans?

4. What is the amount of the gross national product?

5. What is the total money supply in bank notes and coins in circulation?

6. What interest did the federal government pay during the last payment period on the national debt and on its bonds?

7. How many finance companies are there in Canada and what are the names of such companies in each province?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday I raised a question of privilege because of the fact that questions standing in my name, numbers 5, 163 and 210 had not been answered. Since that time there have been two opportunities for the government to provide the answers to these questions.

In view of the fact that there are now 198 questions standing on the order paper, and the question standing fifth from the beginning of the list has not yet been answered, this indicates the government is not providing the kind of co-operation which the opposition would expect if we are to go along with the provisional rules that have been given to the house.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, these repeated allegations have been causing the government a great deal of concern. The number of questions that used to be asked in an entire session was about 600. So far, in less than two months of this session we already have had 998 questions on the order paper. I am not complaining about that; but I do want to draw the attention of the house to a problem that is pressing because of the form in which questions are asked and the resultant difficulty in answering them. I can give no better example than question No. 5 which reads:

> What is the total amount of expenditure of the federal government made as of this date, or undertaken, or planned directly or indirectly, in connection with Expo '67?

I know that the answer to the expenditures was prepared and sent forward some weeks ago by the minister responsible for Expo, but the hon. member's question necessitates the checking of every department and agency of government to find out what expenditures were planned indirectly in connection with Expo '67.

The question is not in a form that is capable of getting a reasonably prompt answer, and I respectfully suggest—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) has raised this matter for a second time as a question of privilege. I believe he will probably agree with the Chair if I say this is not truly a question of privilege.

If the hon. member would refer to citation 181 (3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition he will read:

> A minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for his refusal, and insistence on an answer is out of order, no debate being allowed. A refusal to answer cannot be raised as a question of privilege, nor is it regular to comment upon such refusal.

The hon. member is referring to three specific questions which he says have not been answered. My suggestion to him is that normally this type of objection would be raised as a grievance, when grievances are taken, or during the question period, by asking a minister why a specific question has not been answered, or whether a specific question will be answered.

Mr. Coates: On that point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the ruling you are now making is with regard to oral questions, and not with regard to written questions.

Mr. Speaker: The citation I have been quoting for the benefit of the hon. member refers not only to oral questions but applies equally to written questions.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I feel I must rise on a question of privilege as a result of the point of order raised. The reason that there has been an increase in the number of written questions is because there have been rulings that these questions should be put on the order paper. Now, if the same attitude is applied to written questions as is applied to oral questions, we will never get any answers. Even now—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Starr: —we have some 126 questions unanswered for over a month or more.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member now seems to be entering into a debate with the government house leader, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith). My ruling has to remain that there is no question of privilege in the matter raised by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates).

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 102 is acceptable to the government.

[English]

ADVERTISEMENTS IN U.S. PUBLICATIONS

Motion No. 102—Mr. McIntosh:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all advertisements in the February and March issues inserted in periodicals and newspapers in the United States by the Canadian Government Travel Bureau.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that notice of motion No. 102 be passed?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Béchard: Would Your Honour be kind enough to call notice of motion 89? I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the other notices of motion stand.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK, SUDBURY AND TORONTO

Motion No. 89—Mr. Nielsen:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Prime Minister, or any minister of the crown, and the Industrial Development Bank at Sudbury and Toronto, and the replies thereto, within the last three months.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the traditional position has been that it is not in the public interest to table anything which would reveal the affairs or identity of any individual applying for, or obtaining, a loan from the Industrial Development Bank, as such information is considered to be commercially confidential.

In any event, a search of the records shows no correspondence as described in the hon. member's motion, the terms of which refer to correspondence by the Prime Minister or any minister of the Crown.

I should add, however, that there is one letter to the Industrial Development Bank written by an executive assistant. This letter reveals the name of an applicant, and to produce it would offend against the principle I have just enunciated.

In view of what I have said, I suggest the hon. member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Eric Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, did I understand the minister to say that the letter which was written was by an executive assistant to a minister?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. I stated that the only correspondence between the Industrial Development Bank and any minister's office—and I was taking the interpretation of the motion very broadly so that I would be entirely fair to the hon gentleman—of such a kind is written by an executive assistant, and that letter mentions the name of an applicant. I said it offends against the principle I have enunciated in respect of the confidential nature of such information; but there is no correspondence which I or the bank have been able to find between any minister and the Industrial Development Bank at Sudbury or Toronto during the last three months.

Mr. Nielsen: The question, Mr. Speaker, included the Prime Minister's office as well. I cannot withdraw the motion because I believe the minister's statement, quite unknowingly to him, is inaccurate.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand that the motion is not withdrawn?

Mr. Nielsen: I cannot withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Division

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Nielsen) which was negatived on the following division:

INDUSTRY

STUDEBAKER COMPANY—POSSIBLE EFFECT OF GUIDE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of he Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the Minister of Industry and ask him whether the fact that the Studebaker Corporation joined the automobile producing death list came about in any way because of the fact that the guide lines laid down by Washington to United States corporations may have drained the Studebaker treasury.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think almost exactly the same question was asked—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Drury: —arising probably out of the same newspaper article two days ago, and I replied then.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to ask the minister, is that a fact or not? The minister's reply previously was not definite. Has this been looked into?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman would consult Hansard, I think he would find that my words were that we have been unable to find any evidence that such was the case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have you tried?

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Don't be so arrogant.

[Later:]

POSSIBILITY OF RETAINING EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDEBAKER WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry. Is he planning to meet with the executive of the U.A.W. from the Studebaker Corporation within the next few days and, if so, has he a specific proposal to make for keeping the plant in operation at Hamilton, or a proposal for an alternative use to which it may be put?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to meet with representatives of the labour union at any time. As I explained to the house yesterday and the day before, we are actively, but still, seeking alternative industrial uses for the Studebaker plant in Hamilton.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

HALIFAX DOCKYARD—JOB EVALUATION WITHOUT CONSULTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, of which I have given him notice. Has the minister received a telegram from the Halifax Dockyard Trades and Labour Council, protesting the fact that a job evaluation program is being instituted by the department without any negotiations with the employees concerned? I want to ask the minister, will he consider delaying this action in order to permit negotiation of job evaluation as coming properly within the scope of collective bargaining of government employees?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there must be confusion here. We have this telegram.

An hon. Member: The confusion is on your side.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): You are talking of job evaluation. I am not aware that job evaluation has been instituted in Halifax or anywhere else. What is taking place now is a review of the classification structure in the dockyard, and this is carried out by the bureau of classification revision of the Civil Service Commission. We are acting as an agent of the Civil Service Commission, as many other departments do. What we do is to transmit the information that we have gathered for the Civil Service Commission, to the Civil Service Commission. I am very willing to go deeper into this particular matter to find out about it, but I am quite sure that there is no job evaluation there. Last summer, in an interview with people responsible in the dockyard it was said that we were not considering this subject before the bargaining was instituted. Certainly as I said in my opening remarks, there must be confusion.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the minister if it is true that the employees have received form S.C. 3 (2265) setting forth the new classifications and pay system for service and maintenance personnel which is to come into effect on October 1, 1966. Has the government refused to negotiate this job classification?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I will have to take the second part of the question as notice.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a further supplementary question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cumberland rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to your attention that two days ago the hon. member for Halifax asked this exact question of the Minister of National Defence, and at that time you found it out of order.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MR. CALVIN MacDONALD—REQUEST FOR HEARING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Has the right hon. Prime Minister received a communication or a telegram from a former member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Mr. Calvin MacDonald, asking to be heard before the judicial inquiry on national security, and requesting that his case be looked into on a special basis?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I shall be glad to make inquiries.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—INQUIRY CONCERNING COMMUNICATION FROM PRESIDENT DE GAULLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the exchange between President de Gaulle and President Johnson as it relates to NATO, wherein President Johnson has accused President de Gaulle of seeking to destroy NATO, could the Prime Minister tell the house whether or not he has any communication with President de Gaulle or the French government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have not had, that I know of, any official communication from the French government on this matter. If and when it comes we shall naturally give it consideration and discuss the matter with our NATO allies.

[Mr. Douglas.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as house leader and ask him whether, in view of the fact that during the 1962-63 session up until February 22 there were 1,467 written questions, compared with 900 odd questions on the order paper now, of which only 126 have been answered, he would prevail upon his colleagues to do something, to answer those questions.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the exact figure, but over 600 questions have been answered. Those are answers to written questions. There is, however, a real problem about questions on the order paper that are not in accordance with the rules. Some that are in accordance with the rules are put in such a form that a quick reply is impossible. A great deal of improvement could be made if there were better draftmanship of the questions.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. minister who has just cast aspersions on hon. members would indicate in what manner question 71 is wrong, in which it is asked how many dominion-provincial conferences have been held since a certain date. That question has been standing there since January 18.

Mr. McIlraith: I think if the hon. member will look at that question—I can tell the hon. member what is wrong with it, in a moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I submit to the hon. member and to the minister that this exchange is not entirely according to the rules. The hon. member might ask why the question has not been answered, and whether it will be answered at an early date, but he cannot ask what is wrong with it. Neither can the minister say what is wrong with the question.

Mr. Macquarrie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I was merely seeking guidance as to how I might conduct myself in accordance with the traditions of this house. Now I will ask why the question was not answered.

Mr. McIlraith: I can tell the hon. member why it was not answered. Question 71 on the order paper reads as follows:

1. Since June 15, 1963, how many Dominion-Provincial Conferences have been held?

2. Which of these conferences were held at the (a) ministerial and which at the (b) official level?

When it comes to meetings at the official level, you get into an area where there is a very large number of meetings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: It is extremely difficult to know how many meetings are going on. For instance, today in my own department I do not know how many officials are meeting with officials from the various provinces. This is precisely the difficulty. If the hon. member would draft the question correctly we would produce an answer without delay.

Mr. Macquarrie: On a point of order; may I point out that the hon. gentleman has been very gratuitous with his misplaced comments and suggestions. I was asking about dominion-provincial conferences, a fairly distinct kind of meetings.

Mr. McIlraith: On a question of privilege, I should like to point out that in the Department of Fisheries alone, there have been over 50 such dominion-provincial conferences.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a question of privilege.

FINANCE

ATLANTIC ACCEPTANCE CORPORATION—EFFECT OF GUIDE LINES ON COMPANY COLLAPSE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Has the minister any comment to make concerning evidence given yesterday before Hon. Mr. Justice Hughes in Toronto to the effect that the United States guide lines instituted early last year contributed to the collapse of the Atlantic Acceptance Corporation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Yes. I was hoping somebody would ask me a question about this. I am sure the house would not expect me to comment on the financial affairs of a particular company which is currently under investigation by a royal commission. I might point out, however, that the United States balance of payments measures, qualified as they were by exemptions negotiated on behalf of Canada, did not prevent Canadian borrowers as a group from obtaining substantial inflows of capital in 1965.

THE MINISTRY

POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF RESIGNATION BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in order to clear up a situation which has been going on for a few days.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether it is true the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) has withdrawn at noon the resignation he handed a few days ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is out of order.

[English]

TRADE

INCREASE IN COMMODITY EXPORTS TO OVERCOME TRADE DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would the minister advise the United States secretary of commerce that Canada must be allowed to ship greatly increased quantities of oil and gas, base metals, livestock, lumber and other commodities to that market this year as a positive means of overcoming the commodity trade deficit with that country which increased last year—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hees: —by some $300 million to a total of more than $1 billion.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has been unable to hear the whole question, so perhaps we might give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt and allow the minister to answer it.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. gentleman was good enough to give me notice of his question so I am prepared to answer it. At last week's meeting of the Canada-United States joint committee on trade and economic affairs we emphasized the importance which Canada attaches to improvement in our current account with the United States, including in particular more exports to that market. While last year Canada's total exports increased by 5.6 per cent over 1964, our sales to the United States increased by 13 per cent and surpassed the $5 billion mark for the first time. They were more than $600 million higher than for the previous year. Our December exports to the United States were up by nearly 19 per cent over the previous December.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me we are now witnessing an exchange of statistics between the hon. member for Northumberland and the minister. I think this is not the type of question and answer which should be allowed at this time.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce a supplementary question to the one asked by the hon. member for Northumberland?

Will the minister tell us if the trade increase between Canada and the United States which he mentioned a little earlier is due to the devaluation of the Canadian dollar which the Conservative government put into force in previous years?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. gentleman's question is out of order.

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to say you allowed the minister to reply to a question put by the hon. member for Northumberland, and mine is related to that question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have allowed the hon. member to put his question and, with respect, I think his question is not in order. I felt that the original question placed by the hon. member for Northumberland had some aspects which indicated it was not entirely in order, and the response by the minister went beyond the terms of the type of reply that should be made to questions posed at this time.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—ARRANGEMENTS FOR MEETING RESPECTING SAFETY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): In the absence of the Minister of Transport I would normally direct this question to his parliamentary secretary, but the intervention of that hon. member into the question period the other day made it obvious he does not know any more than the rest of us. I should like, therefore, to direct my question to the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, and ask him whether a telegram has been received today from the representatives of the Canadian Marine Officers Institute and the Seafarers International Union asking specifically for a meeting with the Minister of Transport to talk about safety on the St. Lawrence. If so, what response, if any, has been given? What is to happen with regard to this request?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister without Portfolio): May I point out to the hon. member that the telegram was sent only by the S.I.U. and not by the Dominion Marine Association. In reply to this telegram, I stated that departmental officials and myself would be meeting in Montreal next week, on March 16, with all the interested parties, including the unions and the shipping industry, to begin a series of meetings on marine safety on the lakes and on the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. Churchill: Would those be conferences or meetings?

Mr. Turner: Meetings at the technical and official level with the interested parties.

Mr. Howard: May I be allowed to point out that I did not say the telegram came jointly from the Dominion Marine Association, but rather from the Canadian Marine Officers Institute and the Seafarers International Union? Could I ask the minister whether he is the only minister who will be in attendance at this meeting or whether the Minister of Transport will be there as well?

Mr. Turner: I will be the only minister present at this particular meeting, but of course the Minister of Transport will be fully aware of what is happening.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

REQUEST FOR MANDATORY GOVERNMENT SPECIFICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Last week, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said the government would soon be in a position to reply to my question relating to the imposition of mandatory government specifications for safety features in Canadian motor vehicles unless the industry acted voluntarily in this field. I should like to ask the Minister of Industry if he is yet able to reply to this question, and whether he can inform the house of any conversations he had with the United States secretary concerned, a few days ago, on the subject of automobile safety.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Perhaps the Minister of Industry could answer that question. Before he does so, may I be permitted to express my congratulations to the hon. member on his forthcoming visit to the Congress in Washington?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The hon. member's question was in two parts. With respect to the second part, may I say I did have a brief conversation on this subject with Secretary Connor in Washington indicating to him the interest we in Ottawa have in this question of automobile safety, and offering to co-operate. As to the question of mandatory safety provisions in relation to imported vehicles, it is clear that the federal government has jurisdiction. But the imposition of mandatory safety provisions applying to vehicles made in Canada might raise constitutional problems, and these problems are currently under study by the Department of Justice.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Is the minister aware that the Chrysler company is the one providing the greater security at present?

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR ESCALATOR CLAUSE IN SUPERANNUATION ACT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Could the Prime Minister say whether further representations have been received from the Federal Superannuates National Association for an upward adjustment in civil service retirement pensions with an escalator clause, and is any further consideration being given to this, additional to what the right hon. gentleman said on this matter some weeks ago?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to my best knowledge there have been no representations received since those with which I dealt in answer to a question a couple of weeks ago, when I did receive representations and replied to them. I shall be glad to inquire if any have come in since.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has there been any consideration given by the Prime Minister to them? I did not hear the earlier part of his answer.

Mr. Pearson: Consideration was given to these representations, and in the reply to the civil service superannuates I indicated the view of the government that no change could be made at this time.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Shame.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

LUMBER PRICES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. What action is the government prepared to take to offset the serious effects of increasing lumber prices, which are of concern to those desiring to build homes for their families?

Mr. Speaker: This is a very general question which I would invite the hon. member to place on the order paper.

IMMIGRATION

GRANTING OF ASYLUM IN CANADA TO YUGOSLAV SEAMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration with respect to the Yugoslav seamen at Saint John. Has the minister any information with respect to the status of the seamen not deported?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on January 19, 12 Yugoslav seamen broke ship in St. John, New Brunswick. Ten of them appealed to the immigration court of appeal from the deportation order which was maintained and they were deported. The other two will appear on March 24 before the immigration court and I do not know yet what judgment will be handed down.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

EFFECT OF GUIDE LINES ON U.S. SUBSIDIARIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Notwithstanding the communiqué read in the house on Monday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, would the minister inform the house just where United States subsidiaries operating in Canada stand regarding the United States guide line policy?

Mr. Speaker: This may be a good question, but I wonder whether the hon. member is asking now for a statement of policy which the minister might want to make on motions. This is again the type of question which would normally require a rather lengthy reply. The Chair has to exercise some discretion on this type of question, and I suggest it should not be accepted now.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTHERN RHODESIA—APPLICATION OF SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce which I drew to his attention on March 1 prior to his visit to Washington. Would he look at page 1999 of Hansard and let me have an answer to the question concerning the sanctions applied by Canada against Southern Rhodesia?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall be very glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—POSSIBILITY OF IMPLEMENTATION BY STAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has he read a report on the Quebec medicare plan by Dr. Allan Goldbloom of Montreal, in which he states medicare must be accomplished in stages? Is the minister in agreement with this?

Mr. Speaker: Order; this question is not in order.

[Mr. Marchand.]

SPORTS

CANADIAN SITE FOR 1972 OLYMPICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and it is based on a collective telegram which I received from Edmonton. Can the Parliamentary Secretary inform the house whether a decision has been made in connection with a Canadian site for the 1972 Olympics? If not, would certain professors from the University of Alberta, who are interested in this question, be given an opportunity to present their case to the minister and his officials?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I would invite the hon. member to place his question on the order paper.

CASSIUS CLAY—PERMISSION TO HOLD BOXING EVENT IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of immigration. Can he tell the house whether his department is prepared to allow the entry into this country of one Mohammed Ali, otherwise known as Cassius Clay, to participate in an event that no city in his own country would sponsor?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton South.

AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Oxford asked me a question with respect to supplementary dairy payments, which I undertook to answer today. To date, 132,423 cheques have been issued, whereby the dairy farmers of Canada have received a total of $18,502,118 by reason of the government's supplementary payments policy. An additional 3,437 cheques totalling $412,440 will be issued by the end of this week, and there will then be 3,000 payments outstanding.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): As a supplementary question, when a similar question was asked of the minister, I believe on February 8, did he not say at that time that he expected all these payments would be made by February 14?

Mr. Greene: No, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BANCROFT, ONT.—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION AS DESIGNATED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Because of the closing of the uranium mines in Bancroft, would the minister declare this area a designated area for industrial incentives?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, we have looked at the problem of Bancroft in an endeavour to find some way of alleviating its plight, and I would be glad to look at it again.

FISHERIES

FILLING OF SEAL PELT QUOTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Would the minister advise the house whether the quota of 50,000 seal pelts has been filled?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Yes, it has. Didn't you listen to the news?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the Minister of Fisheries will be facing the committee of supply when presenting his estimates this afternoon, and I think that would be the proper time to ask this question.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I heard a statement made on the other side, that the quota had been reached. This is false news that came over the radio this morning and I would like to be allowed to make a statement to correct this.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Who is giving the false news?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the minister is seeking the permission of the house to revert to motions in order to make a statement, but I suggest he will have an opportunity to make whatever statement he has in mind when we consider the estimates of the Department of Fisheries later this afternoon.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—COMMONWEALTH CONSULTATION ON FIGHTING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having in mind the minister's reports on Canada's efforts to pacify the Viet Nam war, and likewise having in mind the announcement by Australia today that she is going to quadruple her fighting force in Viet Nam, would the minister say what consultation exists between Commonwealth members on this grave situation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the decision of the government of Australia to increase its military assistance to Viet Nam was made known to us in Ottawa yesterday by the Australian High Commission, as part of the continuing exchanges of view which we have both here and in Canberra.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN—CHARGING OF UNREASONABLE PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. R. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister received any reports alleging that farmers in areas of eastern Canada, where there is a shortage of feed, are being charged completely unconscionable prices for feed, screenings and so on, sometimes as high as $6 per cwt.? Further, has he received reports that purchases of feed grain from western Canada are not being taken up because of lack of organization at the receiving end, namely eastern Canada.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have had complaints in this direction from time to time. It is my hope and belief that the government policy in respect of the eastern feed grain agency, which we hope soon will be before this house, if the house proceeds with its business with some expedition, will help to solve the problem.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Yesterday the hon. member for Athabasca asked me a question which I undertook to answer. The answer to the question is that I had not received the report from the Farmers Union of Bonnyville, Alberta, but I am very pleased that the hon. member sent it to me. I might point out that this requests payments supplementary to the P.F.A.A. payments, and I think indicates I trust to the satisfaction of the hon. members for Peace River and Medicine Hat the soundness of the government's policy not to supplement P.F.A.A. payments in the three areas requested by the province of Alberta. This would in fact have been discriminatory, as this request now clearly indicates.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The minister made reference to a government policy in respect of feed grain. Does the government have any policy in respect of the immediate crisis which is being faced?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This appears to be a good time at which to advise the house that the question period now is completed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

1. Departmental administration, $481,600.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Starr: Before vote No. 1 carries, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister has anything further to say with regard to some of the questions which have been asked, or which have been given to her in written form?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I received today questions from each of two hon. members opposite. One is from the hon. member for Churchill, who asks me to agree to provide a special sum of money during this session to allow the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to complete its job of providing extended service, presumably in his own constituency. I thought last evening, in response to his remarks and those of others, I had made it very clear that while I was in sympathy with the request, the matter was being considered now by a cabinet committee, which the Prime Minister announced and which he chairs, and that this is a part of general policy on broadcasting.

I think my hon. friend realizes that, although it is the responsibility of the Secretary of State to be a conduit pipe, it is not my place to tell the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation where they should extend service. As a government it is our responsibility to draw up plans in respect of how much money we will ask parliament to vote, depending on the request put to us by the C.B.C.

[Mr. Greene.]

I think my hon. friend also will realize that I cannot give him the assurance he wishes, particularly in respect of the estimates before this committee, the spending of which will be completed in about two weeks' time. He had some figures, which I now have had an opportunity to check, concerning the per-household cost for provision of service, of something in the order of $4 or $5. I should like to correct him, because I think if he checks he will realize that he made a slip. The $4 or $5 is per capita, and the per household figure on which we presently are working is $20.

I am informed by the corporation that they hope, even under present financing, they will be able to work up to a figure of something like $10 per capita in the next few years. If the government is able to recommend an accelerated policy and parliament agrees, that figure will rise much more sharply.

I also was asked by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek that I give an undertaking to the effect that some money would be forthcoming to provide service by the C.B.C. in his constituency. I think it is quite obvious that constitutionally I cannot provide such an assurance. Last evening, in stating the government's position, I went further than any previous minister responsible for the C.B.C. ever has done before. I indicated, notwithstanding the fact that some of the hon. member's constituents feel aggrieved, as was shown in the return tabled February 7, the cost per capita today for Canadians is only .03 cents for radio and .09 cents for television. However, this still is a service which, when extended in certain areas, becomes extraordinarily expensive.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to assure my hon. friend that he will have service on such and such a date, or the year after, but I cannot do that. Also I am informed I was wrong in my recollection last night when, referring to the Fowler Report, I said our service now extends to 92 per cent of our homes for television and 96 per cent for radio. The figures properly should be 94 and 98. There are some people in Canada to whom we are not going to be able to bring television, partly because they are so scattered, partly because the cost per capita is extremely high, and partly because there is no way under present technology to extend the service there.

However, I should like to draw to the attention of my hon. friends, who I know are anxious to see the estimates of this department and the other two remaining departments pass quickly, that I am sincerely in accord with as rapid as possible extension of service. I know the management and board of the C.B.C. are of the same opinion. Although I cannot say it will be by the time the next set of estimates is before the house, it may very well be that within this calendar year we will be in a position to say when this policy of extension of facilities will be undertaken.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, last night, when the house adjourned, I was endeavouring to find out from the minister if the present government intends to postpone the date agreed upon for the construction of the C.B.C.'s Place des Ondes.

The minister did not give a satisfactory reply to that question.

Although I voted for the adjournment, I wish to say I did not intend to join the members of the N.D.P. in an attempt to delay the adoption of the department's estimates. I merely wanted to find out from the Secretary of State, whether she intends to make an early statement on this project of considerable importance to the city of Montreal.

On September 17, 1965, her predecessor made a statement in Montreal to the effect that this government had allowed an extension of one year, starting on October 1, 1965, for the carrying out of this project which is most important for the city of Montreal and particularly for that part of the city.

Yesterday, during the debate, the minister stated just the opposite, as can be found on page 2419 of Hansard:

> But I do think it would be foolhardy for me at this point, while the Fowler report is being studied by the committee, to attempt to give hon. members here, or persons in the general public, a date upon which construction will be started or completed.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that answer is in disagreement with everything suggested by the former Secretary of State, that is that the work would start on October 1, 1966.

The purpose of this intervention—I would like the minister to help me shorten the time allocated to me to discuss this matter—is to ask the minister to tell us that she will be ready to make a statement in the house of commons within a week, 15 days or three weeks concerning a final date for the start of the construction. I feel that would remove the prevailing anxiety and uncertainty from the people who live in the eastern part of the Canadian metropolis. Surely, the minister is aware that this situation seriously affects businessmen in that part of the city of Montreal.

This indecision on the part of the Secretary of State is detrimental to the implementation and execution of this extensive project. I feel the minister should study the merits and the objectivity of my request. I do not know why she persists in her refusal to tell us whether the project will be started as promised by her predecessor, or whether she intends to make a statement in the house within a few weeks so as to inform the public and Montreal authorities, who have asked for information, when this Place des Ondes project will start.

It seems to me that my question is not difficult, it is simple, perhaps too simple for the minister. She must admit that an answer would surely avoid anxiety and especially complications for businessmen of the eastern part of Montreal.

So, I ask the minister to confirm or deny the statement made by her predecessor, the former Secretary of State, in Montreal before the city authorities, when he said that a period of one year would be granted for the start of construction work, which then was to have started on October 1, 1965.

I ask the minister whether this statement was only a political football in the midst of an election campaign or whether it was a formal and official commitment on the part of the present government.

It seems to me that my request is logical and reasonable. I ask the minister to inform us on this point. I know that the problem concerns not only the voters of my riding but those of every riding in the City of Montreal who hope for the early implementation of this major project.

Therefore, I ask whether the minister is ready to give her answer to the effect that the project will be implemented without further delay, or undertake to make a statement in the house on this matter within a few weeks.

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I thought I had explained this to my hon. friend last night. Let me first say that I did not, initially, pay the honours due my predecessor last night, for the very reason that I thought this committee, being so delayed, would permit me to do so during the study of next year's estimates.

I should like to say, however, that in the time I have been in office I have never found such evidence of a man's devotion to the subject matters of a portfolio of government. The former Secretary of State I think is a shining example throughout the country of the stimulation and cultivation of cultural pursuits in this country. He is held in highest regard by all of those in the various fields of culture, who believe that he is the real hope for the people of Canada with regard to the advancement of these fields. My predecessor was, as a cultivated man, no cheap politician who would make promises which he did not intend to keep, nor is this government attempting in any way to retreat from any promise or undertaking ever made in this regard.

My hon. friend and all hon. members of the committee must realize that the Fowler committee was asked to look into a number of things regarding C.B.C. financing and its arrangements, and one of these was its consolidation plans. I assume that the hon. member for Sainte-Marie understands that it is intended to go ahead with the consolidations in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. Indeed, I have just received a request in respect of the city of Winnipeg regarding consolidation.

All of the facilities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation need to be updated, which will require a great deal of money. But when public money is spent in setting up a committee which studies the problem thoroughly, and recommends certain things very much at variance to what the management of the board of the C.B.C. has recommended, I know my hon. friend will understand why the government believes it would be an arrant disregard of its responsibilities not to restudy these individual matters before committing itself to asking parliament for the necessary money.

The funds to be expended on each of these consolidation plans are very considerable. The buildings to be constructed we hope will last at least 50 years into the future, and will fit the requirements of broadcasting in the public sector. That being the case, the government is reconsidering the two opposed positions. I hope it will in a very short period of time be able to make its decision known with respect to the consolidation plans for these three cities.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

I said last night, and I should like to repeat, that there has never been any suggestion from any responsible source that the C.B.C. was not going to build. In fact, I want to make this very clear; the C.B.C. intends to build and the government intends that it shall build. The government intends that this construction shall take place in Montreal on the site which is known as "Place Radio Canada".

Mr. Favreau: It is Place des Ondes.

Miss LaMarsh: Yes, it is Place des Ondes on Dorchester east, in Montreal. As I said last night, the chairman of the committee, in whose constituency part of the building is to be located with the other part being in Sainte-Marie, has been extremely helpful to me in this regard. We have consulted almost daily on this as to what will happen on the site, and as to the requirements of the people in the area of the municipality, etc.

I want to say to the hon. member, and to all members of the committee, that the government is moving as quickly as it can in the whole field of broadcasting in order to arrive at certain dicisions, such as those in respect of consolidation, which need not await the white paper on broadcasting policy generally. I am very happy to undertake to all hon. members that as quickly as possible these decisions will be made and will be at once made public.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I have but one question to ask the Secretary of State.

Yesterday, we talked about radio and television for the Chibougamau area. Well, this morning, I learned that during last fall's election campaign the Liberal candidate in the riding of Chapleau, Mr. Gaston Labrèche, of Amos, who incidentally lost his deposit, was assuring the people of Chibougamau that the C.B.C. had agreed to provide Chibougamau and Chapais with television and radio service in the weeks following November 8.

And I should point out that Mr. Labrèche, the Liberal candidate, was being accompanied throughout the riding by the present Quebec minister of Lands and Forests, Mr. Lucien Cliche. They were both promising Chibougamau and Chapais that, right after November 8, the services of the C.B.C. would be made available to those two towns, if Mr. Labrèche were elected.

Does the minister know if the C.B.C. did promise a Liberal candidate that its services would be provided to the people of Chibougamau and Chapais?

I should like the Secretary of State to enlighten us on this, because I think there is some political interference within the administration of the C.B.C. and I wonder whether this is a fact.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I hope that my hon. friend will forgive me for answering in what is my mother tongue. I am certain that no such special information was given to any candidate, Liberal or otherwise. It would seem to me that if such a promise were made, it was the kind of promise my hon. friend would make in his constituency or I would make in mine, namely that we would do everything possible to improve or bring service to the constituency if we were elected a member of this house. I am certain that if such a promise were made, that was the extent of it. I point out to my hon. friend that yesterday he brought in delegates from Chibougamau and Chapais, to discuss service there.

Contrary to a suggestion made by the hon. member for Churchill last night, and I checked this carefully again today with the C.B.C. authorities, no attention at all is paid to whether a constituency that is asking for service elects a member who is, politically speaking, blue, orange, red or any other colour. Everyone in this country who pays taxes pays for this service, and the service is extended on a basis that has nothing to do with the political complexion of the people in the area. It may be that had a Liberal member been elected the problem might have been brought to me and laid on my doorstep the day after I assumed this office. None the less, all I could have done with it is what I have done in this instance, that is pass it on to the C.B.C. to consider and list in their priorities. Then, as parliament votes them money to develop and extend their service they can make sure that every city needing and requesting service is included.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I wish to put a supplementary question to the minister.

I do not want to delay the passage of the estimates, but I would like to mention that in our region the company Radio-Nord Incorporée serves all of Abitibi and Témiscamingue. Soon, it will serve as well the areas of Miquelon and Matagami, north of Amos and east of Senneterre, on the road to Chibougamau and Chapais.

Now, if Radio-Nord Incorporée were willing to extend its services to Chapais and Chibougamau, would the C.B.C. be willing to look into the possibility of extending the Radio-Nord Incorporée network, and thus enable the people of Chibougamau and Chapais to receive the C.B.C. television signals as well as those already coming from Rouyn?

Then, there would be a possible agreement between the crown corporation and the Company Radio-Nord Incorporée, so that the people of Chibougamau and Chapais can get the service as soon as possible.

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: I shall be glad to stress that matter with the C.B.C. authorities.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I take it for granted that the Secretary of State does not intend to, or cannot, under the circumstances, confirm that the time limit for the beginning of the work at Place des Ondes, in Montreal, will definitely be October 1, 1966. I have to reach that conclusion since the minister will not tell us if she will make a statement to that effect within a few weeks or will confirm the date set by her predecessor, for whom I have great respect and whose devotion and loyalty I never suspected when he headed that department.

But that is not the question. I understand the difficult situation in which the minister finds herself. I know that there is the report of the Fowler commission and that there were discussions between the authorities of the C.B.C. and the government. I know also that a ministerial committee is trying to find solutions to those various problems, but it remains that the situation is serious for the city of Montreal and that the important projects already elaborated by development companies and organizations in the east end of the city cannot be carried out until the present government has reached a decision.

I must point out to the minister that by including in the discussion all the projects of the C.B.C. throughout the country, she is confusing the issue somewhat, because the construction of the Cité des Ondes, in Montreal, was the first pilot project of that kind which was decided on.

As a matter of fact, as far back as 1958, the city of Montreal proceeded with the confirmation of the land and everything was signed on June 26, 1962, as expected by the former government and the authorities of the city of Montreal, as well as by the senior officials of the C.B.C. and the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation, the latter having cleared the land.

In view of the fact that all parties have fulfilled their obligations up to now, I wonder why the present government keeps the contractors waiting so long, as they would be interested in great development projects in that part of Montreal, thus increasing the economic growth of the whole city.

I wonder if the minister could not help us—

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Valade: Certainly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member say that not knowing exactly the starting date for construction will delay the construction or the development planned in the city of Montreal? On the other hand, if we are certain that Place des Ondes will be erected on the site described by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie, if the C.B.C. authorities assure us of the implementation of this project, I cannot see why the contractors concerned cannot proceed with their project.

The hon. member insists on an exact date. I think this has nothing to do with implementation of the project.

I feel that my hon. friend is right in insisting on the implementation of this project. Besides, he should be aware of all the pressure applied by the members for Montreal Island on the government and on the C.B.C. authorities in this regard, and I know also that the hon. member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Rinfret) is also interested in seeing that project carried out—

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. In my remarks yesterday, I was referring to the hon. member for Saint-Jacques, and the acting chairman of the committee interrupted me to say that I could not do so. So, I do not see why the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) would be allowed to make the same remarks I was not allowed to make myself.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that the remarks of the hon. member for Saint-Denis should be examined. However, I do not think the matter is very important and the hon. member seems to forget that the city of Montreal has presented an ultimatum to the present government, because the municipal budget for the current fiscal year depends on the government's decision in this respect. If the city of Montreal has some plans concerning the site, it must wait if it does not know the final decision of the government.

On the other hand, the contractors who are getting used to delays in official decisions will not commit themselves to undertake these major projects without knowing exactly what the decisions are.

I believe that this project will be carried out, but when? In one year, five years, ten years, 20 years? That is the question, and until the government makes a formal decision, until they tell us that this project will be carried out within a certain reasonable length of time, I believe that investors will hesitate to invest any money in this area of the city of Montreal and will not be able to make a definite decision.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The chairman of the Montreal executive council, in reply to my friend from Saint-Denis, had made the following remark when the then Secretary of State visited Montreal and had just announced that the government had decided to postpone for a year the execution of the contract.

For the information of my good friend and as can be found in La Presse of September 14, 1965, Mr. Saulnier would have said at the press conference of the former Secretary of State, after his statement at city hall, and I quote:

> He reminded Mr. Lamontagne that official statements like the one made today about the projects of the C.B.C. in Montreal are starting to become a fine tradition.

Those are comments of the chairman of the Montreal executive council, who has the responsibility of looking after execution of the project.

I find that, in spite of my requests for information in this house, in an effort to discharge my responsibilities to the riding directly concerned in this endeavour, the minister persists in refusing to give the people any assurance that the project will be implemented within a certain time limit. I fail to see why the Secretary of State could not commit herself to the extent of promising a statement on the matter within the next few weeks, or possibly a month, so that by that time we might at long last know the decision of the government.

Should the project be postponed for a year, I would consider it a great disadvantage but at least the authorities of the city of Montreal, the investors, the businessmen, in short, the whole population could act accordingly and would surely not venture in developments and undertakings the success of which precisely depends on the implementation of that project.

I wonder why the government refuses to give an undertaking. For my part, I think I have accomplished here the duty for which I was elected, that is to see to it that the government respects its obligations. If the minister does not want to give a further undertaking, there will be only one course left open to me, that is to inform the population through all available media, that the government and the Secretary of State would not respect the undertakings of the former Secretary of State and that we will have to await further promises which, apparently, will not be worth more than those of the past.

I wonder whether the minister could not treat with a little more fairness the population of Montreal which has been faithful to the Liberal party, a faithfulness which is deplorable unfortunately, but which was nevertheless given to the Liberal party. If it were only for this reason, the minister should be more grateful and should now tell the people who showed so much loyalty what the present government intends to do in the metropolitan area.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Valade: Then the answer is no.

Item agreed to.

PATENT AND COPYRIGHT

20. Patent division, copyright and industrial designs division and trade marks office including contributions to the International Office for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works and the International Office for the Protection of Industrial Property and authority for the Governor in Council, notwithstanding the Patent Act, to prescribe the fees payable for the registration of assignments and other documents, which fees shall be deemed for the purposes of the Patent Act to be the fees set forth in section 75 thereof, $3,171,900.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say one word before the whole of the estimates are carried. We on the opposition side do want to respond to the plea of the government to pass these estimates as soon as possible. However, I now feel that we have been misled. Before the estimates of the C.B.C. come before us next time, I want to say that I am going to move a motion that they be reduced to one dollar.

Item agreed to.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

5. Acquisition of equipment, $407,700.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word or two before the estimates for the National Film Board are carried; I was called away in a hurry.

I should just like to ask the minister whether she could tell us how that film to which all Canadians are looking forward on the Kootenay and Columbia region is progressing, and when can we expect the preview of the same?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry but I have not heard of the film before. However, if it is anything like the still pictures which my hon. friend has in his office of that very beautiful area, I know that the film could be nothing less than successful in its concept, its design and its reception.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of the Secretary of State.

The committee will now proceed to the consideration of the estimates of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

1. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants as detailed in the estimates and pensions to families of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who have lost their lives while on duty, $64,370,494.

The Chairman: Estimates of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, vote No. 1. Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, on discussion of these estimates I wish to raise the case of an Ottawa businessman who, in my opinion, has suffered a serious injustice. I do not apologize for any criticism of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or of the Department of Justice, because in my view the excellent reputation of the force can be maintained only if we in this house are frank and fearless in our criticism in cases where we believe the high standards of the force have not been maintained.

I want to discuss the case of a Mr. David Maunder, an Ottawa businessman. He is 36 years old, married, three children, a former Canadian army officer who was cleared while in the army to handle top secret information. In 1962 Mr. Maunder, who was in the export business, was approached by the commercial counsellor of the embassy of the U.S.S.R., and this commercial counsellor sought to arrange the export of certain articles to that country. Mr. Maunder at once telephoned the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. A constable contacted him immediately and after discussion told him to go ahead with meetings arranged with the representative of the embassy of the U.S.S.R. As these meetings developed, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Maunder gave to this representative of the R.C.M.P. full accounts of his discussions with the Russian representative and he furnished him copies of all invoices, and other documents.

Initially the shipments were made to Russia directly, but later, difficulties were encountered in getting permits under the Export and Import Permits Act. Mr. Maunder was advised by his own lawyer that there was a loophole about which I will not go into details, which involved shipping goods to Ireland, to be transshipped later to the U.S.S.R. He swore at the trial, which I will come to, that he discussed this proposed loophole with the R.C.M.P. constable, and asked him to check into its legality. The constable returned and told him that the loophole had been found in the act, and that he should proceed in the normal business manner.

At this stage I must say, and I do not want to spin it out, for the sake of completeness that he had had previous dealings with the export of goods to Cuba without the prior knowledge of the R.C.M.P. However, he says that he informed the R.C.M.P. of this, and was told that they were not interested.

On May 28, 1963, all the company's records were seized by officers of the Customs Investigation Branch, in co-operation with the R.C.M.P. The Russian Embassy staff members who had been involved in this matter were sent back to the U.S.S.R., and after more than one year's delay Mr. Maunder was arrested and charged with 12 breaches of the Export and Import Permits Act. Three charges were withdrawn. He was acquitted on one and found guilty on eight counts. He was sentenced to a fine of $41,000 or three years in jail, which was later reduced by the Court of Appeal to $16,000 or 18 months.

Mr. Maunder was unable to pay his fine and he served nine months in jail. He has recently been released on parole. His business, as the committee will well understand, has been completely ruined.

At the trial he gave evidence of his dealings with the R.C.M.P. I have a transcript of the evidence given at the trial. In that, the Crown took the view that the discussions he had with the R.C.M.P. were irrelevant. Nevertheless, he was subjected to cross-examination, and his story in respect to his full disclosure of the Russian transactions, to the R.C.M.P., was neither shaken nor contradicted.

At no stage does it appear that the Crown requested that in considering an appropriate sentence, Mr. Maunder's actions in informing the security branch of the R.C.M.P. of his Russian dealings should be taken into account.

On September 23, 1965, Mr. Maunder wrote to the Prime Minister reminding him of his statement in another case, that the action of a person who gave information relating to a security matter to the R.C.M.P. should be praised and not censured; that there would be no question of prosecution. This is related to another case.

The text of the Prime Minister's remarks will be found in Hansard, May 11, 1965, at page 1139.

In his letter to the Prime Minister Mr. Maunder recounted the fact that his dealings with the U.S.S.R. had been fully disclosed to the R.C.M.P. and all documents placed at their disposal. In his letter he said, and I adopt Mr. Maunder's words, as he wrote them to the Prime Minister:

> I cannot believe that persecution, prosecution, incarceration and financial ruin are just rewards for the service which I have given my country with the full knowledge of the Department of Justice through the R.C.M.P. Should you wish to corroborate any of the statements contained herein the R.C.M.P. records will substantiate what I have pointed out. The transcript of the trial of course bears my own testimony under oath.

No reply, Mr. Chairman, was received from the Prime Minister to this letter, or from anyone on behalf of the Prime Minister.

I have discussed this matter with the Solicitor General, who will no doubt make his own statement in regard thereto. Although I do not believe that there will be any denial that Mr. Maunder did consult the R.C.M.P. about his dealings with the U.S.S.R. It may be denied that the R.C.M.P. were aware of or authorized in any shape or form the illegality of his action under the Export and Import Permits Act.

It is very strange, Mr. Chairman, that if Maunder's version is not correct, this was not raised at the trial or in cross-examination or in some reply to his letter to the Prime Minister. I remind the committee that he swore this in court, that he was under cross-examination, and that he had written to the Prime Minister, setting out this story, and there was absolutely no denial or contradiction of his statements. Without the production of the records of the R.C.M.P. it may be difficult to assess whether his statement is fully correct. I know it is correct in some particulars.

I bring this matter forward because it seems to me that it is a shocking case of lack of sensitivity to the rights of individuals. It is not the duty of the prosecution to hide extenuating factors. Indeed, as I understand it, it is their duty to put them forward. It is not enough to say, as counsel for the crown said at the hearing, that the dealings of Mr. Maunder with the R.C.M.P. were with the branch that deals with security and that the prosecutions were the responsibility of another branch dealing with export and import matters. The excuse that the right hand does not know what the left hand is doing is, under these circumstances, not good enough.

In my view the treatment of Mr. Maunder does not live up to the high standards of justice in this country. I ask, what sort of impression does this story leave on those who may be considering whether they should co-operate with the R.C.M.P. in security matters.

The seizure of his books, which were not returned to him until very recently after I spoke to the Solicitor General and then only in part, seems to me to have been in clear disregard of the provisions of the Criminal Code. The books were only returned recently, and many of the documents were found to be missing.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Maunder has paid a heavy penalty, a very heavy penalty for offences which in the light of his co-operation with the R.C.M.P. might well have been treated as minor, or at least visited with a modest penalty. He is a young man, a former officer in the army, and his reward for co-operation in the field of security has been the ruination of his business, the ruin of his reputation and a substantial term of imprisonment.

An hon. Member: Perhaps the Prime Minister would phone him.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that this case underlines the necessity for the creation of the office of ombudsman. As a member of parliament I do not have access to the documents of the R.C.M.P., but an ombudsman I take it, would have the right to look at this information and determine whether or not a grave injustice had been done.

Mr. Chairman, I urge even at this late date that a full and proper inquiry be undertaken by an impartial authority. If it is found that an injustice has been done, his name can be cleared by a statement that he is a loyal citizen who co-operated with security officers, deserving, in the Prime Minister's words: "praise and not censure." I suggest that some form of assistance might be made available to him to help him recover from the tragic position in which he has been put if not with the encouragement, at least with the connivance, of one branch of the law enforcement officers of the R.C.M.P.

I hope that the minister will look into this matter very seriously, and make sure that an injustice has not been done.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I will certainly take any suggestions coming from the hon. member for Greenwood seriously. I take no exception to his raising this point, because I know that he has a genuine and deepseated feeling for the rights of the individual. However, I must say, with respect, that I cannot accept all the implications that he left during the course of his remarks.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I must say that in the brief time I have had the privilege of being the minister responsible in the house for the R.C.M.P. I have found them fair, efficient and courteous. I hope I do not appear to be taking flight from the question but I think it is clear that a full discussion of this matter might carry us into the sensitive area of security. I can only say this—as I told the hon. member, who was courteous enough to come to me privately—that I have conducted some investigations and the information coming to me does not confirm the submissions he has made today. I cannot give the full undertaking that he has suggested, but I would give an undertaking to look at the files closely again.

Mr. Herridge: I asked the Solicitor General some questions when the estimates were before the house. Is he able to answer them today?

Mr. Pennell: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Herridge: They concerned my beloved S.I.U.

Mr. Pennell: The hon. member for Kootenay West raised questions about the status of certain investigations being conducted by the R.C.M.P. into S.I.U. activities. I can assure him that the measures, which were brought to a halt by certain court actions, have now been reactivated. A large volume of documents has been put back into the possession of the R.C.M.P. Obviously, there will have to be a thorough examination of these documents to determine in which direction further steps are to be taken.

I believe the hon. member also asked whether special counsel had been engaged in this case. Though I speak from memory, I feel quite sure that the special counsel who was originally engaged in these matters is still being retained. All the relevant documents are being placed in his posssesion and the matter is being vigorously pursued.

Mr. Herridge: Has the attorney general of Quebec shown any interest in this case?

Mr. Pennell: I believe there were some consultations between the Department of Justice and the Quebec authorities, but since the conduct of this matter fell upon the federal authorities we are continuing to act.

Mr. Herridge: One other question; I suggested that this Mr. Heakes be given an opportunity to present his case to the officials of the department, in view of developments since the last occasion on which he had an opportunity to discuss the matter with them.

Mr. Pennell: I apologize to the hon. member for Kootenay West. I am not familiar with the point he has just raised. I do not wish to appear to avoid it, and I would be glad to look into the matter if the hon. member would consult with me privately.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the Solicitor General just one question.

This morning I received the following telegram:

[English]

Sir, request judicial inquiry into my case and that I be called to testify in security inquiry
Calvin M. MacDonald Ex R.C.M.P. under cover agent.

[Translation]

Does the minister intend to examine the possibility of granting Mr. MacDonald this judicial inquiry and allowing him to give evidence during the inquiry on national security, so that he may be treated equitably?

[English]

Mr. Pennell: I was not aware that any such telegram had arrived at my office up to the time I entered the house this afternoon. Of course, I cannot give any undertaking until I have had an opportunity to acquaint myself with the facts.

Mr. Brewin: I wish to thank the minister for his statement about the Maunder case. I urge that the inquiry go into the original records of what took place at the time. Here is a clear case of a conflict of view, and without a searching examination it might be impossible to determine the accuracy of Mr. Maunder's allegations on the one hand, and the apparent denial on the other.

Mr. Pennell: So there should be no misunderstanding, the inquiry to which I referred today will be a personal one carried out with legal advisers and the assistance of the Department of Justice. I will look up all the files and I would have to determine at that stage what other action should be taken.

Mr. Gilbert: I wish to ask the Solicitor General one short question. I should like to know whether he is planning to set up a separate branch in the R.C.M.P. to deal with the investigation of fraudulent bankruptcies in much the same way as there is a separate branch dealing with narcotics cases.

Mr. Pennell: I can tell the hon. member with complete sincerity that I have had discussions along this line with officials of the R.C.M.P. and the Department of Justice, but no final conclusion has yet been reached. The Minister of Justice announced the other day, I believe, that there was a development within his department relating to the setting up of a squad for bankruptcy investigations. We are having discussions now to see how the R.C.M.P. can work with the squad which will be set up within the Department of Justice.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Solicitor General this last question. According to the statements made by the Quebec Minister of Justice, Mr. Claude Wagner, who complains that the R.C.M.P. does not co-operate with the Quebec Department of Justice, can the Solicitor General tell the house what action he has taken with regard to those complaints from the province of Quebec?

Is the R.C.M.P. working openly and co-operating wholeheartedly with the various police forces or the Department of Justice of the province of Quebec?

It is very important that there should be some understanding and liaison between the various law enforcement agencies in Canada, for instance between the Quebec Provincial Police, the R.C.M.P. and even the municipal police forces. There must be some co-ordination in the administration of justice, not only in Quebec but throughout the country.

But with regard to the matter which is of particular interest to us—because the complaints came directly from the Quebec Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General and high officials of the R.C.M.P. are aware of them—is the department taking action to ensure greater co-operation and understanding between the R.C.M.P. and the Quebec Department of Justice?

[English]

Mr. Pennell: I made inquiries along these lines following the federal-provincial conference on crime. I was very impressed by the report I received that at the working level there was very good co-operation between the members of the forces. Following that conference, a committee was set up by the representatives of the governments concerned, of the Quebec provincial police, the Ontario provincial police and the R.C.M.P., to see how they could work in close co-operation with regard to a central intelligence bureau. This committee has met at least twice. There was to have been a third meeting last week but it was postponed because certain officers had to be here for the estimates. I understand these meetings will be resumed very shortly.

The Chairman: Shall item 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. When you called vote No. 1, you did not notice that the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) was up and that he had something to say or questions to ask probably on that item.

[English]

The Chairman: I apologize to the hon. member for Trois-Rivières. I call on the hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I cannot blame you because we, independents, are far removed from you and have not learned as yet how to indicate our presence by noisy interventions, but we will.

I should not like to extend the debate, nor make the life of the Solicitor General more difficult because I know that it is not easy, but there is a principle at stake in the question I should like to put to him.

A few weeks ago I wrote to the Minister of Justice, but I am under the impression that my letter was passed to the Solicitor General.

I pointed out the case of a citizen from Trois-Rivières, who was taken to the R.C.M.P.'s office a few weeks ago and kept there for about 12 hours. In the course of the interrogation, even though that citizen was only in custody because no charges had been laid, and he had to be presumed innocent, until further proof to the contrary, he was beaten up to such a degree that he lost consciousness and had to be under the doctor's care.

I know the Solicitor General would not tolerate that treatment known as the third degree, which goes back to the middle ages. I known it is no longer permitted in the R.C.M.P.

If I raise the question, it is not so much to insist upon an immediate answer from the minister, because it is my impression that an inquiry is being made about that. I merely ask the minister to give strict instructions to all members of the R.C.M.P. so that no rough treatment be given to persons suspected of wrong-doing, even if they are found guilty, but above all if they have not been proven guilty. This is quite unacceptable.

I wish to insist on a letter I wrote asking that an inquiry be made and, if the prisoner is found guilty, as I think he will be, that sanctions be applied, and also that strict and clear instructions be given to the whole R.C.M.P. so that rough bodily treatment be prohibited when constables have to question someone who is merely a suspect and could very well be innocent.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I am certainly concerned at a suggestion that a citizen was held by the R.C.M.P., questioned for some time and not charged. The allegation that he was struck adds to my concern, and I shall certainly look into the matter.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Pennell: I thank the committee, Mr. Chairman, and I am sure all members will agree it was not a design on my part that these estimates should be overlooked so that the debate could be prolonged.

The Chairman: The committee will now proceed to the estimates of the Department of Fisheries.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

1. Departmental administration including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $1,387,000.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I thought the Minister of Fisheries would make an introductory statement.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, following a commitment made during the question period I wish to correct a C.B.C. news report this morning which said that the quota of 50,000 seals had been filled last night. This is not true. I immediately asked officials of my department to contact the C.B.C. and ask them to make a correction. At noon I listened to the C.B.C. news again, but unfortunately the correction was not made. At 2 p.m. I contacted the area director in charge of the sealing operations and I was informed the quota of 50,000 seals would be reached before dusk this evening. I immediately issued instructions to close the season on white coat seals at the end of operations on this day.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, according to the rules we have about two and a half minutes to deal with this department. I have no desire to make an examination in detail of its operations, something which could better be done when discussing the estimates for the next fiscal year in the committee to which those estimates will be sent. But there are certain aspects of the department, in relation to the picture which it occupies in the minds of the government as a whole, that require urgent discussion before the current estimates are passed. A rather gratuitous contribution to the discussion in this chamber last night by the government house leader stole a bit of my thunder in this connection. However, since the government took office I have become increasingly concerned that the Department of Fisheries seems to be an orphan among all the government departments. Matters concerning fisheries resources and potential fishery resources apparently receive little attention from the government.

[The Chairman.]

I have before me a copy of the Canada Year Book for 1961, and at page 596, under the heading "Commercial Fishery Resources" I find these words:

> The waters of two mighty oceans—the Atlantic and the Pacific—and the most extensive inland system of rivers and lakes in the world provide Canada's fishermen with valuable harvests. The annual catch of some 2,000,000,000 lb. of fish and shellfish has a marketed value of more than $200,000,000.

In the 1962 Canada Year Book, at page 568, under the same heading I find these words:

> The waters of two mighty oceans—the Atlantic and the Pacific—and the most extensive inland system of rivers and lakes in the world provide Canada's fishermen with valuable harvests. The annual catch of some 2,000,000,000 lb. of fish and shellfish has a marketed value of more than $200,000,000.

At page 606 of the 1963-4 Canada Year Book I find the following words:

> Canadian fishermen reap the harvests of two mighty oceans—the Atlantic and Pacific—and the most extensive inland system of rivers and lakes in the world. The annual catch of some 2,000,000,000 lb. of fish has a marketed value of more than $200,000,000.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Then, in the Canada Year Book for the year 1965 at page 622, under the heading Commercial Fishing and Marketing, I find the following words:

> Canadian fishermen reap large harvests from two mighty oceans—the Atlantic and the Pacific—and from the most extensive system of lakes and rivers in the world. The annual catch amounts to some 2,000,000,000 pounds of fish and shellfish, which has a total marketed value of about $250,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I suppose I should have brought down a somewhat larger number of issues of the Canada Year Book, but they are rather heavy volumes. What I should like to do is send to every member of the present government a copy of the Canada Year Book with the suggestion that they read the section concering commercial fisheries, because it is becoming increasingly evident to me that most of the members of this government do not know we have an Atlantic and a Pacific ocean as well as the largest system of inland rivers and lakes in the world, at least in so far as it is evident in the activities and the policies of the Canadian government. I only wish they would take the trouble to realize that, in addition to having quite a number of acres of land we are a nation, because of our geographic arrangement, which has some pretty important resources potentially available to us. By and large, however, these resources are receiving very little attention from the Canadian government.

Mr. Chairman, not very long ago a delegation visited us here representing some of the fishermen of my own province of British Columbia. They presented, distributed and discussed with many members of this house a brief entitled "Crisis in the British Columbia Fishing Industry". They outlined at considerable length, using a considerable number of statistics, the situation in respect of fishing on the Pacific coast. Fishermen's Union of British Columbia is not the only organization in Canada which takes some interest in where we are heading with regard to our fisheries; there is another organization. I have one or two documents here from this organization, which is called the Fisheries Council of Canada. The views of this council and those of the Fishermen's Union do not always coincide in all respects, but there are some important areas in which there is pretty close agreement and outlook.

I am going to confine myself, so far as my remarks today are concerned, to the context of our fisheries in relation to the dealings of the government particularly with regard to our outside waters and what is being done to protect and conserve Canada's position as a fishing nation in the world. In its bulletin of January 1966, the Fisheries Council of Canada says in part:

> What this industry had hoped to read, somewhere in the Speech from the Throne, which was read on January 18 on the opening of Canada's 27th Parliament, was something of this order: "My government will recommend to parliament further measures calculated to give effect to Bill S-17 "An Act respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada", which parliament passed in 1964. Our object must be, without undue delay, to protect Canada's fisheries for Canadian fishermen.

Then, a little later on in their review of what should be in the Speech from the Throne, they have this to say:

> Among other measures, my government will propose a comprehensive program for the greater development of the salmon resources of our Pacific coast.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the Fishermen's Union brief had quite a lot to say about what is happening to the fisheries resources on the Pacific coast, in particular with reference to the situation arising out of the international North Pacific Fisheries Commission, its operations and the state of the negotiations surrounding that treaty. They point out that this salmon fishery, which is a high seas fishery, did not exist until 1952 and began following the signing of the Norpac Treaty between Canada, Japan and the United States of America. They point out further that from that time this fishery increased from 11.1 million pounds in 1951 to a peak of 438.4 million pounds in 1958. That is the amount taken by the Japanese in the mid-Pacific salmon fishery. Since then, it has tapered off due to a general decline in both Asian and North American salmon resources.

The brief points out that Dr. W. Royce, director of the Fisheries Research Institute of the University of Washington College of Fisheries, speaking in Seattle on March 17, 1964, described this rape of North Pacific salmon resources as "intense, continuing, wasteful fishing by methods which largely prevent any special protection of weak runs".

Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a brief reference to the situation in which we find ourselves at the moment. I am going to quote from the statement that was issued following the twelfth annual meeting of the commission in Seattle last November 12:

> The matter of the high seas salmon fishery in the area of intermingling of Asian and North American stocks west of 175 degrees west longitude was discussed. No agreement was reached concerning this problem.

Mr. Chairman, this is a situation in respect of which there appears to be very little action and very little interest on the part of the Canadian government. We have a Secretary of State for External Affairs in this country. He concerns himself, of course, with a broad variety of questions. He makes fairly lengthy statements from time to time on such questions as Viet Nam and our future relations with the United Nations.

Just before the minister leaves the house for a very important appointment, I am sure, I should like to suggest to him that if he cannot find the time and the energy to deal with some of these other very important national problems involving the economic future of this country and its welfare, perhaps he should suggest to the Prime Minister that he needs an associate minister such as there is in the Department of National Defence. Then, perhaps we can get greater attention paid to some of these problems. There is another aspect of our international relations with which I intend to deal. I wish to point out, in connection with the 12 mile fishing zone and the minister's recent visit to Washington, that the Globe and Mail of February 21, 1966, reports Mr. Martin as saying he made some progress on the problem of Canada's 12 mile fishing limit with adjacent United States waters. I do not know whether or not it is fair to judge the relative importance which the minister attaches to certain subjects in his mind by the length of the statements he makes about them, but if this is an illustration of how important this matter is in the minister's mind, then I would suggest it is a very long way down on the totem pole.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I assure my hon. friend that this question is a matter of great importance, and I share his view of that importance.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I know we can always enjoy the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but I am much more concerned at the moment to have some more tangible evidence of his interest than has been given to this house in response to questions.

However, Mr. Chairman, just to get on with this matter of the 12 mile fishing limit, I should like to draw the committee's attention to a brief which was submitted on January 28, 1963 by the Fisheries Council of Canada in which they set forth their conclusion. It reads in part as follows:

> Action by the Government of Canada is required to:
> 1. declare certain bodies of water as Canadian national waters,—

I should like the minister to note the priority given to that statement. Then, I continue:

> 2. establish a straight base line to enclose the national waters,
> 3. proclaim an exclusive fishing zone to seaward of the base line,—

Then, the Council talks about recognizing and negotiating historic treaty fishing rights. They state:

> 5. make a unilateral declaration with regard to the aforesaid decisions, and
> 6. enforce the above progressive steps.

That was in January of 1963. On June 4, 1963 the Prime Minister made a statement in this house on motions in which he said:

> In the light of the failure of efforts to bring about an agreement on the breadth of the territorial sea and the contiguous fishing zone, the government has decided, after careful deliberation, that the time has come to take firm action to protect Canada's fishing industry. It is well known that foreign fishing operations off Canada's east coast, which have increased enormously over the past five years, are not only depleting our offshore fisheries resources but are posing other problems. There are indications also that Canada's west coast fisheries may soon be threatened.

Some events that have occurred since 1963 confirm the statement made by the Prime Minister at that time.

A little later in his statement, the Prime Minister said:

> With these considerations in mind the Canadian government has decided to establish a 12 mile exclusive fisheries zone along the whole of Canada's coast line as of mid-May, 1964, and to implement the straight base line system at the same time as the basis from which Canada's territorial sea and exclusive fisheries zone shall be measured.

That was on June 4, 1963. The Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act was assented to on July 16, 1964, somewhat over a year later, and was proclaimed on July 23 of that year. I should like to ask why it is that the government, has not fulfilled, either in that bill or up until this day, the statement the Prime Minister made on June 4, 1963, in which he said:

> —and to implement the straight base line system at the same time as the basis from which Canada's territorial sea and exclusive fisheries zone shall be measured.

I responded to the Prime Minister's statement at that time and said:

> —we welcome the announcement made by the Prime Minister.
> We are, of course, concerned even more with the details of the manner in which the government intends to work out this proposal and what its end result will be—

I suggest that my hedging of the commendation at that time was very well founded, in view of events which have taken place since then.

We still have nothing more from the Secretary of State for External Affairs than the statement he made in Washington on February 20 or 21 that some progress had been made on the problem of Canada's 12 mile fishing limit with adjacent United States waters. I understood that to mean some progress on the question of establishing straight base lines.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Barnett: But on June 4, 1963 the Prime Minister informed this house that the government would establish these straight base lines at the same time they established a 12 mile territorial fishing zone. Today is March 9, 1966 and this has not yet been done.

The events that have been transpiring in respect of our negotiations on north Pacific fisheries, the events that have been transpiring in respect of this complete about face, which is all I can call it in light of the Prime Minister's words, in the intentions of the government regarding the establishment of base lines and a territorial sea, can only lead one, after a lapse of this time, to ask why. Is it only because of a complete lack of interest on the part of the government regarding this question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Certainly not.

Mr. Barnett: Is there something more sinister involved than a lack of interest? Is this part of a deliberate deal by the government to sell out Canada's potential fisheries resources?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Certainly not.

Mr. Barnett: Is this part of a deal to sell out the wealth of the two oceans? Is this part of some broader deal? If the Minister of National Defence were here I would ask him if this were part of some deal involving defence commitments.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Certainly not.

Mr Barnett: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether this is mixed up somehow with our negotiations on the Canada-U.S. auto trade package.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Certainly not.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether this refusal on the part of the government as a whole to do something along the lines the Prime Minister suggested in 1963, and again in the election campaign that preceded that time, is part of some kind of deal. If it is, it is not without precedent in the history of this country.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs may recall that when the bill on the territorial sea was before the committee I referred to some of the old treaties between Great Britain and the United States. In many of these treaties this fisheries picture was treated as part of a package deal. The reason the United States now has these lop-sided treaty rights and historic rights is that years ago, in some of these package deals, the interests of Canadian fisheries were ignored. The negotiating authorities did not properly recognize the potential wealth which we might in Canada enjoy as a result of our geographic relationship to the rich producing areas of the oceans. The interests of Canadian fisheries were shoved aside because of some other matters that apparently were considered more important.

This was probably the result of Britain's strategic commitments in those days on the continent of Europe. I hope the fact that we are now a member of the NATO partnership does not mean our government is passing by our real interests in this economic field because of some strategic commitment in Europe.

Mr. Chairman, this is the kind of question this government should answer before we pass those fisheries estimates. Perhaps it is not the kind of question that the Minister of Fisheries alone can answer. As far as I am concerned, I share the admiration of the minister for the kind of Canadians we have manning and operating our fisheries department, and for the kind of scientists we have who are attempting to enlarge the field of knowledge which will enable us to conserve, protect and extend our resources in the salmon spawning streams of British Columbia.

Unless there is some real recognition of the importance of this industry by people like the Minister of Industry and the government as a whole, we shall have to begin asking ourselves whether it is worth while spending even these few paltry millions of dollars a year that are in the fisheries estimates to develop, conserve and expand salmon production so it can disappear in the high seas of the North Pacific.

These are the kind of questions to which we need answers but to which answers have not yet been given. I do not know that there is much more I can add, Mr. Chairman, to what I have said on this point. In conclusion I wish to say, as I said last night, that this business of putting off consideration of the estimates and of the future of the fisheries resources of Canada to the eleventh and the dying hour of our consideration of estimates is just not good enough. There should be ample time, not only for an opposition member who happens to come from an area where fisheries are important to contribute to this discussion, but there should be an opportunity for members from the province of Newfoundland to have their day in court.

These hon. members should not feel constrained by the whip of the government house leader to remain silent when we are discussing important matters of this kind. It is perhaps unfortunate, if this is the way in which the business of the house is going to be managed, that all the members from the province of Newfoundland happen to sit on the government side of the house where they are subject to that kind of throttling. I suggest that we should hear their views about the fisheries problems of the Atlantic coast.

We should hear from members from the maritime provinces and the province of Quebec on the question of fisheries. This strange silence today on the part of representatives of provinces such as Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, where all the members do not sit on the government side of the house, is passing strange. I hope that before these estimates are passed—

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member who is now speaking has referred to the maritime provinces and the fact that members from those provinces have not participated in the study of the fisheries estimates. I point out to him that those of us who represent the province of Nova Scotia, and in fact members from all the maritime provinces, are just as aware of the problems facing the fishing industry as he is, but we are also desirous of assisting the government in the present situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Crouse: It is for this reason, and this reason alone, that we have refrained from participating in this debate. I appreciate the hon. member's position and the fact that he wants to get his points on the record. We are refraining from participation in order to allow the hon. member and his party to make the points they wish to make. We hope to make these points at a later date. But I do hope the hon. member will confine himself to the area and the party that he represents, and will make the points he wishes to make, so that the committee can get on with the business of the house and pass these estimates fairly quickly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that his time has expired. The Chair is also in some doubt—

Mr. Barnett: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, could I—

The Chairman: One moment, please. The Chair is also in doubt as to the method to be used at this time to regularize our proceedings.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether it would be agreeable if we just do not see the clock. I think in the circumstances that would probably be the fairest procedure. I should like to add that if the hon. member wishes to continue, I am sure the committee is agreeable to allowing him to complete his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Order. Does the committee agree that we proceed without seeing the clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Does the committee also give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni continuing his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: The hon. member does not need it, Mr. Chairman. He has been interrupted by two different speakers and has a perfect right to speak.

Mr. Starr: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has not the proper perspective of the way in which we proceed. After all, they were questions of privilege that were raised, not interruptions of the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, if you can see any question of privilege in the last interruption I am sure you have greater sagacity than anybody else.

Mr. Starr: It was much more a question of privilege than your interruption.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, may I assure you that I was on the point of concluding my remarks, in any event, before I was interrupted by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg. I certainly recognize his right of decision about whether he participates in the debate. That is entirely a matter for his own judgment. However, I do not agree with the hon. member's contention that I should confine my remarks merely to the interests of my constituents. I am trying to put this matter in national perspective.

Mr. Monteith: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Barnett: If the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg or any other member of this house does not wish to participate in this discussion, it is entirely their right to so decide. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I do hope it was not implied in the remarks made by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg that he disagrees completely with the arguments I was advancing with regard to the lack of interest being displayed by the government of Canada as a whole in their dealings with fisheries problems.

I hope that he and other members of the house who have some reason to be interested in the future of the fisheries of Canada will perhaps, on a future occasion, display more backbone in discussing these questions and in challenging the government to take decisive action, than they displayed when some of us were trying to introduce an effective bill in respect of the 12-mile fishing zone.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries management and development—
5. Operation and maintenance including Canada's share of the expenses of the international commissions detailed in the estimates and of the costs of programs and projects shared jointly with the provinces and industry, $14,557,000.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I should like to intervene just briefly in this debate. I too, heard the very able presentation made by the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union delegation that came to Ottawa. The matter that concerns me about that brief—and this was alluded to by the previous speaker—is the way in which the causes of the decline in the salmon fishery were categorized therein. The question of Japanese fishing on the high seas was placed at the beginning of the causes. I asked the spokesman for the delegation, Mr. Stevens, whether they had placed it there because it was the most important reason. He said no, he could not say that it was the most important factor in the decline of this fishery.

I also asked him if he did not feel that salmon fishing in the Soviet Union was suffering probably more than the Canadian fishery, and that this might be our best lever in attempting to get the Soviet Union to become a signatory to the salmon fishing treaty in the Pacific. In reply, he said that he thought it would.

I think we need to be extremely careful, when we discuss fisheries, which points we are talking about. We must remember that one is very strategically placed. The province of British Columbia has a very great interest in fisheries. It also has very great interest in trade with Japan over a great variety of areas.

I should like to urge on the Minister of Fisheries three courses of action. I would urge that the budget of the Department of Fisheries for research be raised to a level where we can begin to find some of the answers to our problems. In going back to the fishery people's own newspaper, the "Fisherman", how many times has one read that it is not known what are the factors involved; that there are a multiplicity of factors which result in the decline of salmon fishing. Japanese fishing on the high seas is only one of these factors. Therefore, I urge a much larger budget for research, which will enable the fishermen to know which are their most important problems.

I also urge the Minister of Fisheries to request the government to take every possible step to bring the Soviet Union into this fishing treaty. I do not think we should be satisfied with the reasons given earlier this session by the minister when he was questioned about this. He implied that we did not know whether the Soviet Union would want to participate in this treaty, and we would wait until we did know. I do not think we can afford to wait, Mr. Chairman.

If necessary, we should ask the co-operation of all members of the treaty to invite the Soviet Union to become a signatory. We have various levers which the other members of the treaty can use, and I am sure they would be amenable to issuing this invitation. We could then have an all-inclusive treaty participated in by all countries concerned. Surely, conservation must be of equal value to all; not just to Canada but to the United States, to Japan—a country very conservation-minded—and to the Soviet Union.

Lastly, I would urge as rapid action as possible over the headlands question or the 12-mile fishing limit, so that we can protect our fisheries to a greater extent than we have the fishery inshore. Perhaps the high seas question may take a little longer to resolve, but there are some areas where we can move more rapidly.

It seems to me that one of the reasons we press for further restrictions on Japanese fishing is this is the country which has been amenable to restrictions. In the fisherman's brief you will find a suggestion that the United States has not been amenable to conservation ideas which have been put forward by this country. The government of the Soviet Union has not been particularly amenable to conservation on the high seas or to being drawn into this type of agreement. Outside of North America, the one nation which has been amenable has been Japan.

I think we should also realize that because Japan has acceded to restrictions on their fishing in the North Pacific, they have all also had to accede to restrictions on their fishing in other areas. The justification for drawing arbitrary lines has been that they have accepted restrictions in the North Pacific. For a nation with so large a population and so many problems, the question of fishing is, to them, a very vital one, one in which they have as much interest in conservation as we have.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries research board of Canada—

25. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $2,100,000.

Mr. Howard: Just a few brief words, Mr. Chairman. This is the last vote in the estimates of this departmnet and I think it is rather regrettable that in the whole course of considering, albeit scantily, the estimates of the Department of Fisheries for this fiscal vear we have not heard a single, solitary word from the minister except when he made a correction to an erroneous newscast of this morning concerning seal hunting. In view of the important points put on the record so very ably by my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni, and also the important question just dealt with by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke concerning the relationship of the Soviet Union with the North Pacific treaty, it seems regrettable, shameful, a rather shoddy treatment of parliament and a rather callous disregard for the fishermen of this nation, for the Minister of Fisheries to sit, silent during consideration of these estimates.

In the last few years, we have seen the Department of Fisheries treated as a sort of orphan of government. On one occasion not too long ago the marine and fisheries committee made a recommendation to the house that the fisheries estimates be referred to it for study. Because of the intervention of the government, that committee report was never acted upon. Because of the approach of cabinet to the then chairman of the committee, the matter was sidetracked, indicating at that time a disregard for the desirability of considering fisheries as fully as we might.

During the current session, within the last two or three weeks we have seen on two or three occasions, to my mind, an attempt by government to push through the estimates of the Department of Fisheries without any debate. There has been an attempt to stifle consideration of these departmental estimates by the government at the very time when the delegation from the United Fishermen and Allied Workers of America were buttonholing members in the corridors and presenting their problems to them. This indicates an absolute disinterest on the part of the government, a sort of thumbing of its nose at the delegation.

Incidentally, we have seen this proposal not only emanate from the government side, but supported by the Conservative party. I say it is a shame—

Mr. Vincent: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Howard: I am telling my hon. friend what the attitude of the Conservative party was on two occasions to the estimates of the Department of Fisheries within the last two or three weeks. It was an attitude of: Let us get the fisheries estimates through without any discussion. On two occasions that has been the approach, which is a shameful commentary on both these two old parties. This is their attitude to a department which is vital, and of much concern to the welfare of fishermen on both coasts, as well as in other areas of Canada.

I hope more than anything else that when the next fiscal year starts, and I say this now because we are almost at the end of the consideration of the past year's estimates, that the Department of Fisheries' estimates will be included in the first supply motion. I hope that they will be referred to the fisheries committee for examination. I hope that when the committee looks into these matters that it will give an opportunity to people interested, to private citizens, to appear before it and express their views.

Mr. Crouse: Before the hon. minister answers the hon. member for Skeena, I want to say one or two words to impress upon him that although there are many issues that could be raised by hon. members of the Conservative party with respect to last year's estimates, in keeping with our desires to expedite the passing of these estimates we have refrained from debating them at any length at this time.

I would ask the minister if, when next year's estimates come before the house, he would give them priority and place this department high on the list so that it may be assured of early study. I ask this in view of the fact we have dealt with last years estimates quickly, since time is pressing and they are last on the list. Second, may I ask the minister to give his assurance that next year's estimates will be referred to the committee, so that we may delve into the many problems that are affecting the fishing industry not only on the west coast, but in the Atlantic provinces and in Quebec as well.

Hon. members who represent the maritime provinces or the Atlantic provinces and Quebec, or whereever there are large fishing areas, have just as much interest in fisheries problems as others who have spoken today. We have exercised restraint, so as to expedite the passing of the estimates. However, I hope that the minister will give us an assurance that the matters I have raised will be dealt with when next year's estimates are brought before the house.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the co-operation which I have received from all sides of the house in the passing of these estimates. I am pleased to see that all hon. members understood the situation we are in. I want to assure the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg, who has just spoken, that if his party requests of the house leader that the Department of Fisheries' estimates be included in the first list of departments to be sent to committee, we shall certainly be pleased to do this.

I want to tell the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, that I am just as anxious as he is about obtaining exclusive rights for Canadian fishermen. I hope to be in a position, when the fisheries estimates come before the committee, to be able to answer the questions which he has raised today. I hope to be in a position to answer them in a responsible way, and to answer them with all possible details.

I want to say to the hon. member for Skeena that at no time do I recall the government interfering to prevent estimates coming before the committee. I had agreed that this year's estimates, the ones we are discussing now, would be brought before the committee but this could not be done. However, I am looking forward to the meeting of the fisheries committee in the very near future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to cast any aspersion whatever on the intention of the Minister of Fisheries to have the estimates go before the fisheries committee. However, I should like to point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that the minister said the government had not interfered in any way with that intention, and that is really not in accordance with the facts. We know perfectly well that the action of the Prime Minister, as the head of the government certainly interfered with that.

Before I sit down, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries one question: will the Minister of Fisheries undertake to light a fire today under the tails of some of his colleagues to get them a little more interested in the important fisheries questions that should be of concern to the whole Canadian nation.

The Chairman: Shall vote 25 carry?

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Order, please. This completes the Department of Fisheries and also the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

House in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. McIlraith moved

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending the 31st day of March, 1966, the sum of $398,062,262.60, be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-140, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1966.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 2—

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a question with respect to clause 2, or with respect to the bill in general. When we pass this bill are we taking any final steps that need to be taken to approve the expenditures that were made during the election period by Governor General's warrants?

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: The expenditures made by Governor General's warrants were, I believe, approved in the interim supply motion which was passed previously. This bill brings us up to the end of the fiscal year. The amounts indicated there are sufficient to include all the estimates for the fiscal year.

Mr. Knowles: In any case the passing of this bill is the last act we need to perform as far as this year is concerned.

Mr. Benson: Except for Royal Assent.

Perhaps I should correct that statement. There will be final supplementary estimates for 1965-66. These will be introduced in the very near future.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, before we end this stage of our proceedings there is one comment I should like to make. A good deal has been said about the interest of civil servants in our getting this bill through, so that there might be no delay in their getting their cheques. I agree, but I should like to say to the government that its concern for civil servants could be expressed in another way, and that is by doing something for those who have already retired.

I was sorry to hear the negative answer given today by the Prime Minister when this question was raised once again by the Leader of the Opposition. I hope that during the coming fiscal year something will be done to improve the position of our civil servants who have already retired.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): So say we all on this side.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, about what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said concerning civil servants, we of the Créditistes do not always believe the government house leader when he maintains that civil servants will not get paid until the house votes the estimates.

The government and the departments keep on receiving money from the Canadian taxpayers. So stop telling us that tomorrow civil servants will not be able to get their pay. The government is perfectly able to borrow any amount of money anywhere in Canada or to call upon the Bank of Canada. Let them pay their employees and stop threatening us by saying that civil servants will not be paid. That is not true.

[English]

Mr. Benson: I should indicate that the government has not threatened anyone with respect to the payment of civil servants. But it is a fact that the government cannot expend money, no matter how much it borrows, until it has the authority of this parliament to do so.

Mr. Caouette: Can the minister collect money in the meantime?

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 5 inclusive, agreed to.

Schedules A, B, and C agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time? By unanimous consent, now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. McIlraith moved the third reading of the bill. Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Before indicating the business for tomorrow I would ask the concurrence of the house in an agreement to suspend the sitting at six o'clock until eight o'clock, for the purpose of having Royal Assent to this bill, rather than adjourn it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to suspend today's sitting until eight o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it to be eight o'clock precisely, or until the call of the bell?

Mr. McIlraith: Eight o'clock—with the assurance that the bell will be rung when the suspended sitting is reconvened.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps, then, we can suspend the house until the call of the bell at eight o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to indicate the business we propose to call Thursday and Friday—or beginning tomorrow until we finish the business I shall indicate.

I should like to call, first, item 11 on the order paper, the second reading of the bill to extend the Bank Act. Then, items nos. 16, 18 and 21 which are the three motions to set up joint committees. Then item 7 on the order paper which is a resolution to introduce a measure to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, item 8, which is a resolution to introduce a measure for the development of the commercial fisheries of Canada; item 4, which is a resolution to amend the Research Council Act, and item 15 which is a resolution for leave to introduce legislation to establish a science council of Canada.

Next I should like to call item 3 on the order paper, the resolution concerning the automotive products agreement with the United States, followed by items 23 and 24, the second reading of the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company Bill and the second reading of the bill to authorize the construction of a bridge over the St. Croix River. Depending on the progress we make tomorrow, this order could be changed to meet the wishes of hon. members.

Mr. Starr: Will there be a supply motion on Monday?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, there will be a supply motion on Monday.

An hon. Member: And capital punishment?

Mr. McIlraith: On Wednesday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The sitting is suspended until eight o'clock. I do now leave the chair.

At 6 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 10, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HARKNESS—ALLEGED INSINUATIONS AND ALLEGATIONS BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I rise on a question of privilege, one which affects not only myself personally but a considerable number of other Privy Councillors both in the house and outside the house. It also affects every member of the house. I intend to move a substantive motion based on this question of privilege.

The question concerns the insinuations and allegations made by the Minister of Justice in this house on Friday—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to bring to the attention of the hon. member the provisions of standing order 41-A. I will read the standing order.

Unless notice of motion has been given under standing order 41, any member proposing to raise a question of privilege other than one arising out of proceedings in the Chamber during the course of a sitting shall give to the Speaker a written statement of the question at least one hour prior to raising the question in the House.

I might mention that the hon. member did give me oral notice, which was brought to my attention before I entered the house, but no written notice was given to the Chair as required by the standing order. I suggest to the hon. member that in these circumstances no question of privilege can be raised at this time.

Mr. Nielsen: Has Your Honour not received written notice on this matter from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre?

Mr. Speaker: This is a very embarrassing question. I myself did not receive such a notice. If the Chair could be given two minutes I will have the matter checked. This is the kind of thing which could happen even in the Speaker's office, I suppose; such a notice could have been sent without being brought to the attention of the holder of the office.

I can only say at the moment, so far as the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) is concerned, that he himself has brought to the attention of the Chair that before 2.30 he did not send written notice. Therefore, this applies to his case in any event; but I am having a search made in my office with regard to such written notice.

Mr. Harkness: On the point of order you have raised, Mr. Speaker, while it is quite true I did not send you the written notice an hour beforehand, I did give you verbal notice. Under the circumstances it was virtually impossible for me to send the written notice because the information which I have subsequently secured, in regard to the press conference which the minister held this morning, came to me later than that.

In view of the importance of this matter and the seriousness of the situation, and particularly in view of the seriousness of the motion, which I now intend to read:

That the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In so far as the hon. member's question of privilege is concerned there is no doubt whatever that no written notice was given. The hon. member called the Speaker's secretary, who relayed a verbal message later on. The Speaker has been in his office since at least eleven o'clock this morning, if not before that, and written notice could have been given at any time between then and now.

The rule is clear, and it seems to me it is designed to cover the very type of instance which the hon. member is raising at the present time. But if there were unanimous agreement between all hon. members that we suspend the operation of this rule—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I appreciate that some hon. members will agree to its being suspended, but I suspect others will not.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): There was no opposition to it.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: I hear some nays.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What are they afraid of?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I now have the report from the Speaker's office that there is no written notice, that no written notice has been found. This is the situation facing the Chair now.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, you stated in the course of your remarks—and I do not want to quarrel with Mr. Speaker—that you were in your office from 11.30, on. That was not the case when I had a phone call put through to your office at 1.30, and I think, sir, you will have to hear me on that.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The Speaker was in his office, and this is perhaps a little picayune in the sense that the Speaker took visitors to room 202 for approximately 25 seconds around, I would say, two o'clock. But the Speaker has been in his office, had lunch in his office, and worked in his office since approximately eleven o'clock this morning.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, without questioning your ruling in any way, and I recognize that under the strict application of the rules it is correct, I would make a plea to the house to give unanimous consent to have this matter heard now rather than delaying the hearing of it for 24 hours, or less than that, because I will certainly raise it tomorrow in any event.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair did what could be done in the circumstances. I was quite pleased and prepared to give effect to the suggestion of the hon. member for Calgary North to invite the consensus of the house to waive the provisions of the standing order, but there was no unanimous agreement. The Chair has no alternative whatsoever except to turn down the motion of the hon. member. I assume he will give written notice in the meantime and a new ruling can be given then.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I just made an appeal to the house. I will now make an appeal to the Prime Minister that he agree this matter should be heard at the present time because it was only on the Liberal side of the house that there was any opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. That motion—

Mr. Starr: The Prime Minister sits silent.

Mr. Pearson: Obeying the rules.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Starr: Covering up behind the rules is what you have been doing.

Mr. Speaker: The ruling has been made.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, so far as this is concerned, if this motion should be put tomorrow I trust that it will not be stated that according to the rules it was not raised in time.

Mr. Speaker: I think there is no question about this. I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and I really do not think 24 hours would make that much difference. I myself would not raise that objection.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it makes this difference that some of us have to sit in the House of Commons in the presence of somebody who is not a gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give notice now that I will raise this matter in an hour's time.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to give notice to the hon. member that he has to do it according to the rules.

Mr. Churchill: May I have your guidance, Mr. Speaker. The rule, No. 17, says:

> Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

I received in my office, just at 2.30 p.m., the Ottawa Journal, which contains certain statements made by the Minister of Justice. That, sir, has come to my attention just within that time. Surely this is the proper time to raise a question of privilege based on these statements.

Mr. Speaker: It is subject to the rule, and the rule does not allow the hon. member to raise it at this time. The rule is very simple and clear. I invite the hon. member to give written notice to the Chair according to the rule. Unless the rules are changed, they will not be interpreted in this way. This is the only way the Chair can look at the situation when the rule is clear and simple. I interpret it the way I see it. I would invite members of the house to follow the rule and give written notice such as is suggested by the standing order.

Presenting reports by standing and special committees.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that in so far as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) is concerned, the matter has come during proceedings, and therefore, is not subject to the one hour rule.

Mr. Speaker: This is an ingenious interpretation of the rules, but I suggest to the hon. member that he cannot interpret the rule to the effect that the matter involved is a matter having come out of the proceedings of the house when the house started at 2.40 p.m. and the only proceeding we have had—if that is a proceeding—is the very question of privilege. The hon. member cannot say he raises a question of privilege and therefore the proceeding has started. This would be circumventing the rule.

I again appeal to hon. members to accept the ruling of the chair and to raise the question at the first opportunity tomorrow.

Presenting reports by standing and special committees.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

First report of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Loiselle.

[Editor's note: The text of the said report will be printed as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

SEWAGE TREATMENT PROJECT LOANS

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement concerning sewage treatment project loans under the National Housing Act.

To assist in the elimination or prevention of soil and water pollution—

Mr. Woolliams: Get the Minister of Justice; he knows all about pollution.

Mr. Nicholson: —and to help ease the serious unemployment situation that existed at the time, an amendment to the National Housing Act in December 1960 authorized Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make loans to provinces, municipalities or municipal sewage corporations. These loans were offered for projects consisting of trunk sewage collector systems, central treatment plants, or both, for the collection and treatment of sewage from one or more municipalities.

Under this provision of the National Housing Act, such loans are made in an amount not exceeding two thirds of the cost. They are made at a favourable interest rate, which is currently 5¾ per cent, for a term not exceeding the useful life of the project, or 50 years. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is also authorized by the said Act to forgive 25 per cent of the loan on the completion of a project.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Hon. members will perhaps recall that on August 2, 1965 the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) announced that certain measures would be taken by the government to stretch out the excessive demands being placed on the construction industry in 1965 and 1966. The government believes that one way to help bring about this result is to extend until March 1970, the period within which all such sewage treatment projects may be completed, in order to qualify for forgiveness of 25 per cent of the loan. Consequently proposals to amend the National Housing Act will be brought forward by the government within a few months, and these will include a recommendation to parliament to extend from March 31, 1967 to March 31, 1970 the time during which expenditures on such projects might qualify for forgiveness for part of the loan.

I trust hon. members will co-operate in helping to bring this announcement to the attention of municipal and other interested officials in their respective ridings, so they may know that it will not be necessary to meet the deadline on March 31, 1967.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, we have listened to the announcement with all the concentration we can muster under the circumstances. My first observation has to be that as a result of this stretching out, as I understood the minister's statement, there will be no incentive for our cities which are suffering from water pollution to press forward with their sewage disposal plants. If I am right in that interpretation I would suggest that in part this is a bad decision, and I say that for this reason. If this is merely a stretching out, one of the things it will have the effect of doing is slowing down the speed at which cities assume the necessary task of clearing up the pollution of our waters.

There is another argument in this regard. When we attempt to apply restrictive acts to hold down inflationary pressures by applying this type of restriction across the country indiscriminately, we are actually giving the country what I would call a castor oil treatment.

In those areas and regions where there is no inflationary pressure a policy to stop inflation such as that announced by the minister should be applied according to where the need is greatest. In other words, we should have a regional policy of restrictive acts by the government in respect of fiscal policies to check inflation.

In conclusion, I should like to remind the house, in the event that hon. members do not already know, that this program regarding sewage disposal plants in cities is a program which we started and of which we are very proud. I hope the government continues it.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we listened with attention to the statement made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) to the effect that the application of the act authorizing the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make loans to municipalities, provinces, municipal corporations has been extended until 1970.

I am grateful to the minister for sending me a French copy of his statement.

I would also like to tell him that we are happy that the application of that act has been extended until 1970, because I have been asking the government for several years now to help the municipalities as much as possible. On the other hand, we are not asking that they be helped by taxing them or charging them an interest rate which will increase considerably the debt they will contract with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

As an example, let us assume that the city of Rouyn borrows $100,000 from the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation at 5¾ per cent for a period of 50 years. This means that, in 50 years, the city of Rouyn would have paid, in interest only, the amount of $287,500 all the capital being due, that is $100,000, or a total of $387,500 for a $100,000 loan.

Now, we ask the government to study the possibility of interest-free loans to municipalities and provinces, so that these public bodies would pay once only for the projects to be carried out within the limits of their jurisdiction.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of both the government and the hon. Minister of Labour to that point. I understand that this is just a question of sewage and waterworks, but there are other things to do in the municipalities.

In any case, we are glad that the government has agreed to extend the assistance to municipalities but let us help them without making them sink into unpayable debt.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, we are grateful to the minister for giving us prior notice of this motion. We are also grateful that this further step is being taken to assist municipalities in financing a certain aspect of their capital development. We believe it is only a portion of the assistance which must be given to them but it is certainly a step in the right direction. We are glad the minister has seen fit to recommend it.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

EXTENSION TO HUMAN BEINGS OF PROVISIONS AFFECTING ANIMALS

Mr. M. L. Klein (Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-141, to amend the Criminal Code (Cruelty to animals and to human beings).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the section of the Criminal Code which makes it an offence to stage a fight between animals and between birds by adding the category of human beings so as to extend to human beings the protection now extended to animals.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DIVORCE

MOTION TO ESTABLISH JOINT COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

That a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to inquire into and report upon divorce in Canada and the social and legal problems relating thereto, and such matters as may be referred to it by either house;

That 24 members of the House of Commons, to be designated by the house at a later date, be members of the special joint committee, and that standing order 67 (1) of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the committee have the power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting their honours to unite with this house for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it so advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed special joint committee.

Mr. McIlraith: Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

FISHERIES

SLAUGHTER OF SEALS—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the report that charges will be laid by the Humane Society arising out of, as described, the sadistic and stupid cruelty in the slaughter of baby seals, will the minister assure the house that action will be taken to put an end to this inhumane and senseless killing?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member I wish to say that I understand there have been a few cases of cruelty to animals since the opening of the seal season on Monday last. I am awaiting a report from the S.P.C.A., the Humane Society's representatives, who were present during the whole operation. As soon as this report is received I intend to make a complete statement in the house on motions.

In the meantime I have instructed that action be taken to proceed with charges against those responsible for violations of the sealing regulations. I also wish to inform the hon. member that prior to the amending of the regulations there was no clause therein which prohibited the skinning of seals alive, if I may use that expression. I understand there have been some abuses this year by a few seal hunters and charges will be laid against them.

I repeat that I will make a full and complete statement on motions as soon as I receive the report.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of what has been brought up and factually evidenced on television—the minister himself was a witness—does he not think that the regulations must be tightened now?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, on two different occasions, in 1965 and again in 1966, I did indicate there was an intention to tighten the regulations because there was room for improvement. That is why we had representatives of the S.P.C.A. with us. We provided them with transportation to the sealing areas with a view to finding out what amendments can be made to the existing regulations so that no cruelty would take place in the killing of seals.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Fisheries whether or not he will now give consideration to finding a more humane method of killing these baby seals?

Mr. Robichaud: That is exactly what I have just said I will do, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

HALIFAX DOCKYARD—JOB EVALUATION WITHOUT CONSULTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked the Minister of National Defence a question with regard to the Halifax dockyard and the job evaluation or classification program in progress there. He particularly asked the minister whether the employees there had been provided with certain forms and whether the government had refused to negotiate regarding job classification with the organization concerned. The minister said that he would take the question as notice. Would he now inform us as to his answer?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, so far as the determination of pay rates is concerned, I believe that is the responsibility of Treasury Board. As far as I know, what has been sent to the dockyard is a booklet describing the particular reclassification job which is being done. Now, I am supposed to receive this booklet at any moment, and at that time I will be in a position to give the answer I promised yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question. Would the minister undertake to look into correspondence which passed between the department and the president and secretary of the Halifax Dockyard trades and labour council with respect to the job evaluation program and be prepared to tell us tomorrow whether what is indicated in this correspondence has now been abandoned?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I would be very glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

THE MINISTRY

PRESS COMMENT RESPECTING FUTURE ACTIONS OF PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question.

According to this morning's Le Devoir, the Prime Minister is getting ready to leave his post of party leader and Prime Minister within the next three months. Did he inform Le Devoir's editor of the fact? What is the truth about the report published this morning?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that he cannot ask the Prime Minister whether a news report is true or not.

Mr. Caouette: Is it true that the Prime Minister intends to resign within the next three months?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you would let me say that there is not a word of truth in that statement; it has already been denied.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does this applause mean that the mystical bond has been refurbished?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—INQUIRY CONCERNING COMMUNICATION FROM PRESIDENT DE GAULLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and is a follow-up of the question asked him yesterday regarding NATO. Has the Prime Minister received the message which the minister of information of the French government said he has sent Canada? If so, what are the expected actions of the government with regard thereto?

[Mr. Lewis.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the communication from the French government was delivered to our embassy in Paris this morning and it is being cabled to Ottawa. As soon as it arrives—I expect later today—we will at once begin to give it the consideration that its importance deserves.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MUNSINGER INVESTIGATION—SUGGESTED IMPLICATION OF PRIVY COUNCILLORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question. Did the Minister of Justice state outside this house that he had certain facts and references in regard to a certain case alleged to have occurred during the term of the former government, and did he also suggest certain facts existed which were far worse than those of the Profumo scandal, implicating two members of the Privy Council? Did he make that statement outside the house?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did inform members of the press that I learnt of the Munsinger case while I was minister in another department of government; that I did—

Mr. Churchill: Which department?

Mr. Cardin: I also stated files existed in connection with that particular case and that these files were not referred to the legal officers of the Department of Justice. I can also say that I am seriously considering making a judicial inquiry into the decision and the conduct of the Leader of the Opposition in that particular case. But I have not yet had the opportunity to discuss this with the Prime Minister and with my cabinet colleagues.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: He will pull the rug out again.

Mr. Starr: Make sure the chair is there before you sit down.

Mr. Cardin: However, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. members of this house will refer to the words used by the Leader of the Opposition some time ago, they will find he said that he would welcome such an inquiry; and if that is so, then I think the inquiry should be set up.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HARKNESS—MUNSINGER INVESTIGATION —ALLEGED INSINUATIONS AND ALLEGATIONS BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE—MOTION TO SUBSTANTIATE CHARGES

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the answer just given by the Minister of Justice I must rise on a question of personal privilege. My question of privilege concerns the matter just now under discussion, namely the insinuations and allegations made by the Minister of Justice in this house on Friday last in connection with the alleged Munsinger case, and the subsequent statements which he made at a press conference this morning to which reference has just been made.

The statements he made, as reported in the press this morning, are these, and I will instance only a few of them to indicate that a question of privilege exists. They are along the following lines:

Mr. Cardin said he understands the R.C.M.P. has a file on the case but that Mr. Diefenbaker never referred it to the law officers of the crown.

He himself had not seen the file but had learned a great deal about the case while he was in another department, presumably as Associate Defence Minister.

An hon. Member: Hearsay.

Mr. Harkness: Yes, it is hearsay.

Justice Minister Cardin charged today that two or more former cabinet ministers in the Diefenbaker cabinet were involved with a former east German spy.

In a Southam news report there occurs this statement:

• (3:10 p.m.)

Today, answering a barrage of questions on the Munsinger matter—it quite overshadowed his decision to resign his ministry, since withdrawn—Mr. Cardin asserted that though he had never examined the Munsinger file personally, he had heard of the case when he was associate minister of national defence.

In the front page of the Ottawa Journal which I have just secured, again it is stated, or reported to have been said by the minister:

—"the Munsinger scandal" involving "more than one member of the Diefenbaker Cabinet."

And again he was asked:

—had there been an actual security leak?

"I don't know—but there definitely was a security risk."

He is again making allegations on this line.

The justice minister has yet to see the R.C.M.P. file.

Where then, did he hear of the Munsinger case, the initial word of which he exploded Friday in the Commons?

The answer is:

"At the Defence Department."

At the time it came to his ears he was associate defence minister.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all of these statements, allegations and insinuations made by the Minister of Justice have only and can have had only one effect, and that is to put every person who was a member of the Conservative cabinet of that period, which I understand is supposed to be the 1960 to 1962 period, under suspicion.

This is an extremely unfortunate situation for me and for every other person who was a member of that cabinet to find himself in, and I think there is no question whatever but that the statements the minister has made cannot be allowed to hang in the air and rumours, speculations and stories of all kinds to be circulated against all of the hon. members of the Privy Council who were members of that government. It is an intolerable situation and it is a particularly bad situation, I consider, from my own point of view, because the minister has now inferentially, or pretty directly pointed the finger really at the Department of Defence, because he said that it was from there that he secured the information.

An hon. Member: Well now—

Mr. Harkness: There is nothing to laugh at in this whole situation, Mr. Speaker. It is an extremely serious one, and one which I, and I know every other cabinet minister upon whom suspicion has been cast, feel extremely strongly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the minister having made these statements, as I say, the question cannot remain at that point. I wish to say, and I state very categorically, that until the minister mentioned this matter in the house on Friday last, I had never heard the word "Munsinger" or the name "Munsinger". I had never heard anything whatever in connection with that alleged case, and I am prepared not only to state that here, but to state it under oath in any inquiry of anything else which may be held in connection with the matter.

Now, I do not think that we can have the—we will say the undignified spectacle of every minister who was a member of that cabinet rising and being required, or having, in order to clear his name, to make a statement along this line. And this is part of the intolerable situation which the minister has put the ex-members of that cabinet into by the statements which he has made. In view of this whole situation, Mr. Speaker, and in order that it may be cleared up definitely and that there may be an end put to the many rumours and speculations and what not which have run around the country as a result of this, I move this motion:

That the Minister of Justice be required forthwith to substantiate the charges made inside and outside this chamber which have reflected unfortunately and improperly upon members of Her Majesty's Privy Council, or alternatively that he be asked to submit his resignation and to atone by the forfeiture of his seat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Don't be suspicious.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: It is about time the Prime Minister opened the letter.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): He has not spoken with him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members realize, the first and perhaps most important duty that the Chair has in a situation such as this one, is to determine whether there is actually a prima facie case of privilege. Perhaps hon. members might like to say a few words about this matter, that a decision might be rendered.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I want everyone in the house to know, and I am quite sincere in this, that I feel very badly about the way things are turning out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cardin: And I can also appreciate the fact that the hon. member for Calgary North and other Privy Councillors may have been offended by what I am alleged to have said.

If hon. members in the house will recall what I said on Friday they will see that I made no reference to any hon. member in this house. What I asked was—

Mr. Winkler: That is not right.

Mr. Cardin: —that the Leader of the Opposition express to the committee his actions in this particular case. Period. I said no more than that, and it is the right hon. gentleman himself, the Leader of the Opposition, who at a political party gave more information on the Munsinger case than anybody else.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Churchill: You are attacking him in his absence again.

Mr. Cardin: The press itself amplified that far more than perhaps the Leader of the Opposition did or I did.

An hon. Member: Who spread the rumours?

Mr. Cardin: I did not at any time mention the details of the case, either to the press or to anyone else, except by confirming today what I already have confirmed in the house.

The hon. members in this house I think have a responsibility in this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: I suggested a moment ago that the only question before the committee is the conduct, or the decision of the Leader of the Opposition in this particular case when he was prime minister. That is the point.

Mr. Winkler: Who put the rumours in the press gallery?

Mr. Cardin: In having a judicial inquiry into the conduct of the Leader of the Opposition this problem could be solved. There are members of the Privy Council on this and on the opposite side of the house who in fact, I think, would like to have that conduct looked into.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I have suggested that this perhaps would be the best, the most honest, the most orderly and the most diplomatic way of solving this problem without there being any kind of aspersion cast on any hon. member.

Mr. Starr: You have already done that.

Mr. Cardin: The one thing that is in the minds of the people is to decide upon the conduct of the Leader of the Opposition when he was Prime Minister during the Munsinger case.

Mr. Lambert: What about this morning?

Mr. Harkness: The Minister of Justice has now made some further allegations and suggested a further course of action. But those allegations and that suggested course of action do not excuse him in any way for the slur which he has cast upon me and other former ministers of the Conservative government, and it is this matter which is before the house at the present time. Irrespective of what inquiry may be set up, or anything along that line, I think the minister has placed himself in a position that he must either substantiate the statements he has made or resign, as called for in the motion I have made.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): The minister said a moment ago that on Friday he did not make any allegation against any one of the former cabinet ministers now sitting on this side of the house. That is not in accordance with the facts. At page 2211 of Hansard for last Friday, hon. members will find this recorded:

I repeat he is the very last person in the house who can afford to give advice on the handling of security cases in Canada.

The reference is to the Leader of the Opposition. Later on, in the same column, the Minister of Justice used these words:

I want the right hon. gentleman to tell the house about his participation in the Monseignor case—

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Nielsen: I hear an hon. member saying "That's right". That is precisely the substance of the motion that is being made. I read on:

—to tell the house about his participation in the Monseignor case when he was Prime Minister of this country.

If that is not an accusation of participation involving a member of the former government—

Mr. McIlraith: Give us the page reference.

Mr. Nielsen: Page 2211, the left hand column, two thirds down the page. Here are the words:

I want the right hon. gentleman to tell the house about his participation in the Monseignor case—

Mr. Pearson: In the handling of it.

Mr. Starr: Read Hansard.

Mr. Nielsen: To the press, sir, the minister has charged that former Conservative ministers were involved with a former east German spy. He has said he would ask the cabinet to re-open the case. He has said there was an R.C.M.P. file—that he had not seen it, but was briefed on it. He has said that the Leader of the Opposition, the former prime minister, did not handle the case properly and should explain. He has said that the former prime minister never referred the matter to the law officers of the Crown. He has said that he learned about the case in another department. He has said the Liberals were tired of hearing the Leader of the Opposition insinuate that the government was plunged in scandals, and that the Liberals were going to fight back hard, using the same tactics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: He has said "We know she had been engaged in espionage prior to coming to Canada". He has said that more than one minister was involved. Indeed, some press releases are carrying reports that more than two ministers of the former government were involved. He has said that government action at the time was justified, but it is too late now, the girl being dead.

He has said he was not in a position to comment on whether there was a security leak. Nothwithstanding the fact that he has not seen the file, he has said his objective was to press the Leader of the Opposition to explain his conduct in not turning the case over to the law officers. He has said it was a bona fide security case, again notwithstanding the fact that he has not seen the file.

On the basis of these statements, and in order that we on this side of the house may be able to present arguments, and make the minister account for his irresponsible and despicable statements outside this house—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: —we urge that the motion be allowed, on the basis of the chronology which I have laid before Your Honour, which constitutes certainly one of the most serious and important cases of privilege ever to have come before this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): With regret as to what is being done to this parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: —I want to say that we in this party cannot blame the hon. gentleman on this side of the house who moved the motion which is now before us.

It seems to us to be a clear point of personal privilege affecting every member of the cabinet to which the statement of the Minister of Justice had reference. It would have been to expect more of them than one should expect—that they should sit still and fail to raise this matter which concerns their individual personal integrity and standing in the country as spokesmen for a political party.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Lewis: I do not care how many catcalls are made from the other side or from this side of the house. I say to you, sir, that it is a great and deep matter, and one for great and deep regret, that when certain unpleasantnesses in this house have at last come to a conclusion a member of the government should find it necessary to rake them all up again and start another unpleasantness over again and make this parliament, which has so terrible a responsibility at the present time in the world's history, a matter for laughter and sorrow on the part of the Canadian people.

I am not going to make a lengthy speech, because I want to make a suggestion to Your Honour and to members of this house that this matter is unpleasant and undignified enough without lengthy speeches or any elaboration of the unpleasantness and the indignities. I suggest we vote on this motion and after we have voted—I hope, in its favour—that we take the necessary steps to implement it in the proper way—and I hope this will be before some committee rather than on the floor of this house.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I wish to support what has been said by the two hon. members who have just spoken, particularly by my hon. friend from Yukon, who outlined certain statements which the minister has made. The minister today made certain statements which seemed to contradict quotations which have appeared in the leading newspapers of our country. This is significant and it goes to the heart of this question of personal privilege.

He has seen fit to hold two press conferences and when you analyse the headlines in the Ottawa Journal—no doubt similar headlines will appear in other newspapers—you will see he has made far worse and far more grave statements outside the house than he made inside the house. In addition, the fact that he was speaking outside the house makes the matter far worse than if he had made the statements in the house.

He has, according to the quoted statement in the press, implicated at least two Privy Councillors or more. He has said in the house once or twice—whether he has contradicted it I do not know—that there was no question of security in his mind. Yet outside the house he said, as quoted—and I suggest this is the most cowardly statement of all those he has made:

> In some ways it was worse.

When asked if there had been an actual security leak he replied:

> I don't know—but there definitely was a security risk.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Therefore he has by innuendo, using the former minister of justice's words, offended so far as the Privy Councillors of this house are concerned. He has dragged the House of Commons and parliament into the gutter. The other day he had a letter of resignation placed on the Prime Minister's desk—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: —and the Prime Minister should have opened it because there is a great schism between the minister and the Prime Minister. I think the minister should get up and resign.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, you have asked for comments and advice with regard to a decision on whether or not there is a legitimate question of privilege before the house. I personally regret very much that this matter has been brought up in this way. Certainly it is not going to do anyone any good, let alone this house. Nevertheless the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Calgary North is in my opinion a legitimate question of privilege because it has to do with the integrity, yes, even the morality of men who are members of the Privy Council.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, without entering into any debate I wish to say it is our opinion that there is a question of privilege and that it must be allowed on that basis. I would only hope that this matter can be referred to a committee of the house. In that way we will be able to go on with the work that is before us and avoid taking a further part in dragging this house into the mud and mire, something that obviously is going to be involved in the situation we have before us now.

Mr. Churchill: Settle it right here.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I think the question of privilege is a legitimate one.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I do not write the headlines in the newspapers. The reason for my calling a conference was the numerous telephone calls I had from the press in order to explain the difference there was between my resigning and the decision I took not to resign.

During the course of the interview questions were asked about the Munsinger case and I did not say anything that had not already appeared in the press at that time. I should like to remind hon. members that during the course of the debate on the Spencer case there were insinuations from all parts of the house to the effect that I was trying to hide something, that the government was trying to hide matters that were scandalous, that we did not want to prosecute Spencer because he would perhaps come out with the names of people whose heads would swim.

There were insinuations right and left. No one on this side of the house asked that there be charges made but we did, under the conditions that were asked for by members of the N.D.P., agree to a judicial inquiry into that matter.

In this particular instance I did not make any insinuations of any kind against anyone that had not already been in the newspapers. In the interests of the individuals concerned, in the interests of people who might be involved in this particular case, I suggest that the best, the most honourable and the most equitable way of solving this problem is as we did in the Spencer case, by having a judicial inquiry and having a judge report on the decision and the conduct of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Starr: You tell us now. This is the minister of mud.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have never heard a more remarkable speech than that just made by the Minister of Justice. If I understand his argument correctly, what he says is that all he did was answer questions that the press raised. I think that the complete picture is that he threw out this suggestion on Friday, that the press took the hook and came to him and that he got the sort of headlines he was looking for. If this is not weaseling, I do not know what is.

The minister is getting now in this motion exactly what he wanted when he first raised the matter. The matter is getting nationwide publicity. If he is in charge of the ministry of justice he should have some concept of justice and should know that the reputation of men cannot be put under a shadow in this manner without the person who makes the allegations and raises them being prepared to back up those accusations. The suggestion of the Minister of Justice now is that this was accidental—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the views expressed by the hon. member.

[Translation]

Does the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) wish to add something?

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, for our part we are not ready to add anything to the debate at this moment. We would have liked to know the views of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on the problem which is now being discussed.

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I am as aware as any other member of the house that this is a very serious and grave situation. I can understand the feeling of the hon. member who raised the matter in the way he has done and the motion he has submitted, and I can understand the feeling of the Minister of Justice after what he has been through in recent weeks in connection with a case in which there were many accusations and suspicions levelled at him.

But I should like, Mr. Speaker, if I might deal with the matter as a parliamentary one, and as the leader of the house because of my position as Prime Minister, to suggest to you, sir, in view of the seriousness of the matter I might be permitted to consult, which I would do without delay, with the mover of the motion and yourself to see how best the matter can be resolved immediately so that justice may be done.

Mr. Starr: I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question at this point, and I think it is a serious one. Does he think that the reflections cast on a large group of Privy Councillors in the previous government should remain unanswered for any time at all? Should they not be dealt with at once in order to remove the stigma from these people?

Mr. Pearson: I appreciate the earnestness of the hon. member when he talks about reflections cast upon Privy Councillors because I know something about that myself. I have been told that crime entered into my office, and that kind of thing, and I know how he feels because I felt the same way in reverse.

I do not want to delay this matter. It must be dealt with, and dealt with immediately. I am asking for the privilege as leader of the house to consult with the hon. member who moved the motion and Your Honour, to see how it can be dealt with quickly and effectively.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Then vote for the motion.

Mr. Starr: May I appeal to the Prime Minister again? Will he not prevail upon the Minister of Justice to reveal the facts now at this time in respect of this case? If not, we have no alternative but to ask that the motion be put.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not an enviable position which the Chair is being placed in at the moment. I have been given an opportunity during the last hour or so to reflect on the very serious matter raised by the hon. member for Calgary North. I must point out that I regret very much his original motion could not be accepted because of a technical difficulty, and he gave written notice subsequently, at 2.40 or 2.45, which was about the time the motion would have been discussed in any event.

I am satisfied and pleased with the way the matter has come to a head. As hon. members know, the Chair is guided by citation 104(5) which says:

> As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity.

I expect it might have been argued, inasmuch as the statements were made on Friday last, that the matter was not raised at the first opportunity, but we are dealing now specifically with allegations as reported in a newspaper outside the house and the allegations repeated by the hon. member in the house. I am inclined to believe there is a prima facie case of privilege in this instance but I might point out to hon. members—and I am sorry I have to use the word "but"—that it does not necessarily follow that if there is a question of privilege the motion made necessarily is acceptable according to the rules, practice and procedure of the house.

What we are dealing with now is an accusation made by some hon. members against another hon. member. The subject matter which gave rise to the statements made by the Minister of Justice, which is in the background of what we are dealing with now, is an accusation made against the Minister of Justice—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Speaker: —and there is a suggestion that the Minister of Justice has in some way conducted himself in an improper manner. This is the only interpretation which can be placed on the motion put forward by the hon. member.

There are any number of precedents indicating what has to be done in such instances. I would refer hon. members in particular to the Journals of the House of Commons, Volume 105, 1959, at page 584, where the Speaker, who was faced with a somewhat similar case, was given notice and after lengthy consideration delivered a judgment which covered some four or five pages in the Journals. I might say that that Speaker had a considerable advantage at that time over the present Speaker. However, fortunately I can take advantage of his ruling and quote from it:

> In my view, simple justice requires that no honourable member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the house or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

Then, further on:

> In the case before us no honourable member has taken the responsibility of making a specific charge against the honourable member—

The motion I have before me says:

> That the Minister of Justice be required forthwith to substantiate the charges made inside and outside this Chamber which have reflected unfortunately and improperly upon members of Her Majesty's Privy Council.

It is obvious that what we are doing in this motion is impugning the conduct of the Minister of Justice who himself perhaps impugned the conduct of other members but, as I have said, this is not what we are faced with at present. I am impressed by the suggestion made by the hon. members for York South (Mr. Lewis) and Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) who say that the proper course to take in respect of this type of matter is to refer the subject matter of the motion to a committee.

I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members Bourinot's fourth edition, page 162, where it says:

> A reference to a committee is no doubt the proper procedure in all cases in which there are reasonable doubts as to the facts or the course that should be pursued, especially when it is necessary to examine precedents or witnesses.

I have given the matter very serious thought and have looked at it as objectively as I can. I can come to no other conclusion than that the motion as drafted now cannot be accepted by the Chair because it is too general in terms and, according to precedents, does not specify the charge levelled against the minister. For this reason, while I agree with the hon. member for Calgary North that there is a prima facie case of privilege, the motion in its present form cannot be accepted by the Chair.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, you have allowed the question of privilege and it can be further discussed even though you suggest that the motion was not put in the proper form. Am I right in that conclusion?

Mr. Speaker: No. There is nothing before the house. I know the hon. member realizes this. There was a question of privilege which was not followed by a proper motion. There is nothing before the house and we cannot debate a motion which has not been accepted.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention to the fact that before Your Honour's ruling the Prime Minister asked for permission of the house to discuss the matter with the member for Calgary North and Your Honour. I understood that what he wished to discuss was the question of privilege. Since Your Honour has agreed that there is a question of privilege, is there not some way in which there can be that discussion within the next half hour or so, reserving to the member for Calgary North the right to bring in at that point, if he wishes to do so, a motion worded in some other way?

Mr. Speaker: No. There still is no motion before the house. There may be arrangements made by hon. members to have informal discussion as to how this matter could be proceeded with by way of another motion but certainly there is no motion before this house now. The decision I have reached is justified, I believe, by precedents and procedures followed in previous years.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I have never pretended to be an expert on the rules of the house. Probably what you have said may be correct on the basis of a literal interpretation of former rulings but I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a matter—

Mr. Speaker: Well, the only attitude or position I can take now is that any further discussion is a comment on the ruling of the Chair. There are other avenues open to hon. members. I am sure they can give the matter serious thought. I would suggest that further consideration be given the matter in another light.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to move, seconded by the member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness), that the Minister of Justice do resign.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot accept this motion. I suggest to the hon. member that this is a substantive motion and would require notice. It is not necessarily one which follows logically from the question of privilege, though I have some doubts now.

The Chair is being placed in a very difficult position at this point. If hon. members are going to bring in a series of motions until such time as they may be in a position to find one which will be acceptable under the rules, it is, I suggest, placing the Chair in an impossible position. If the hon. member now makes this motion I will ask, as I have the right, to have the opportunity to consider the motion before ruling on it.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, in the name of reason, for the good of the house and likewise in the national interest I would suggest it is only right at this time, Your Honour having indicated that there are other ways this matter can be dealt with, that the suggestion be followed that Your Honour, the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Calgary North get together to discuss the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a matter which is for the consideration of the Chair.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. We have been considering a matter of personal privilege raised by the hon. member for Calgary North with which you have dealt. I, sir, have a question of privilege which to a certain extent resembles that raised by the hon. member for Calgary North. I base my question of privilege on the statements made by the Minister of Justice in this house on Friday, outside the house yesterday and today and in this house today. If you take all his statements and examine them separately you cannot help but find that they cast a reflection on the members of Her Majesty's Privy Council, and I take objection to that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member says he has a question of privilege which is somewhat like the one raised by the hon.

member for Calgary North. I cannot find any difference at all between the hon. member's question of privilege and the one raised by the hon. member for Calgary North. I can see no point in every member of the Privy Council getting up at this time to raise exactly the same question of privilege. A ruling has been made by the Chair and I would invite the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to take into account that ruling and what has been said by the Chair.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, you are suggesting that members of the Privy Council should not raise this point. You acknowledged that the hon. member for Calgary North had a question of privilege and that question was settled, but I have a question of privilege too. The Minister of Justice implicated all members of the privy council who served in the cabinet of the present Leader of the Opposition. I happen to be one of those members of the Privy Council. You may have settled in your mind the question raised by the hon. member for Calgary North, but I have a case to put forward regarding the statements of the Minister of Justice which affect me as a Privy Councillor and affect every other member of the Privy Council. That is the question of personal privilege I wish to raise at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot agree with the logic of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. The motion which was made did not refer to the hon. member for Calgary North, it referred to the fact that there were allegations made affecting members of Her Majesty's Privy Council. The hon. member for Calgary North in his presentation never suggested that the allegations applied only to him. His motion and the arguments submitted in its favour during its presentation referred to a matter of privilege which affected all Privy Councillors, not just one.

It is obvious in my mind that the ruling which has been made in connection with the question of privilege and the motion of the hon. member for Calgary North applies in the same way to the question of privilege which the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre may have. That earlier privilege and motion have been put to the Chair, considered and ruled upon.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I am not speaking to the motion which you ruled out of order. Unless I did not hear correctly, the hon. member for Calgary North raised a personal question of privilege. In speaking to that question he said it affected all members of the Privy Council who had served under the former Conservative government. He then moved a motion with which you were not in agreement. I am not speaking to that motion, sir. I am raising a question of personal privilege which, as I have stated, is based upon statements made by the Minister of Justice and I demand my right to be heard. Freedom of speech is at stake in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: My suggestion to the hon. member is that there is no question of freedom of speech involved. We have spent over an hour now on a very important question of privilege.

An hon. Member: Is there a limit to the freedom of speech?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North was given every freedom to express his question of privilege and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre had an opportunity to take part in that discussion. He was not denied the right to speak on that question of privilege. Certainly if the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Calgary North meant anything, it was meant to apply to all Privy Councillors. It applies to Privy Councillors on both sides of this house. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that there is a separate and distinct question of privilege in that he would be affected personally and distinctly from the hon. member for Calgary North. For that reason I cannot allow him to re-open the whole question at this time.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that you cannot deny an hon. member the right to raise a personal question of privilege. There is a question of privilege in respect of the statement made by the Minister of Justice to the effect that one or more ministers were involved. He said there were two or more ministers involved, as reported in some press accounts, and he has not denied that he has made that statement. Once he used the word "more" he made it all-inclusive, and there is a question of personal privilege in respect of every member of the Privy Council who wishes to raise it today. It does not matter how many other questions of privilege may have been raised. The fact that the hon. member for Calgary North said that these statements affected every member of the Privy Council does not prevent every member of the Privy Council from raising a question of privilege if he so desires. The purpose of my rising today is to raise such a question of privilege.

You asked me why I did not participate in the earlier discussion. The earlier discussion was on the question whether or not there was a question of personal privilege and some hon. members ranged over a wide field regarding this issue. That is why I did not participate. I knew you would rule that there was a prima facie question of privilege. This was obvious to everyone in the chamber. The matter of the motion is a different question. I suggest I do have a question of personal privilege. It may be very similar to that raised by the hon. member for Calgary North but it is equally important to me and to every member of the Privy Council. I am surprised that the members of the Privy Council sitting on the other side of the house are so disinterested in an issue of this kind they would not disavow the aspersions that have been made about members of the Privy Council in the statements of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Starr: Unless they are part and parcel of the whole situation.

Mr. Churchill: I am astonished that the Prime Minister of this country wants to withdraw this issue from the house and present it to some sort of committee. It might not be debated again in this chamber. Let us settle it right here and now. Let the Minister of Justice name names and cases.

Mr. Nielsen: Put up or stop fooling around.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Put up or stop fooling around.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: The Minister of Justice has pursued his normal course of attacking the Leader of the Official Opposition when he is not in this chamber. He did the same thing several years ago. That is the normal course he follows. The minister has cast aspersions on members of the Privy Council outside of this chamber and in this chamber and it is up to them to settle this matter right away. As was suggested earlier, he should disclose his facts here and now or withdraw the statements he has made.

Mr. Nielsen: Or he should resign.

Mr. Churchill: If this matter is referred to a committee it will go on for weeks and months, and smears, innuendos and McCarthyism will be spread right across this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Mark you, sir, this will be used by various people for political purposes to destroy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: The Liberals are laughing at this.

Mr. Nielsen: That is typical.

Mr. Churchill: That is typical of them; it is typical of their attitude toward parliament.

Mr. Ricard: That is their way of working.

Mr. Churchill: They would like to have this serious matter brushed aside as carelessly as they have suggested, by sending it to a committee. The Prime Minister knows how serious this matter is.

An hon. Member: He will not give any leadership.

Mr. Churchill: I do not agree with the Prime Minister on many things but he has given long service to this country. He is the head of his party and the head of this government.

Mr. Starr: He is a member of the Privy Council.

Mr. Churchill: The Prime Minister was sworn in as a member of the Privy Council in England and he is a right hon. member. He knows that a slur cast on a member of the Privy Council should be resisted by the leaders of the Privy Council. In this House of Commons we have only two members who are right hon. members of the Privy Council, the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. They were both sworn in by the Queen and they have the title of right honourable. They know we look to them for leadership. When the advisers to Her Majesty the Queen are affected by a slur I should think that the Prime Minister would be the first person to resist.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: As the hon. member for Calgary North said, members of the Privy Council sitting on this side of the house are not under any obligation to rise and say "I was not implicated." I am not doing it for that purpose at all. I do not care what these Liberals do or say about me. They have said everything in the past anyway so it does not matter. I do not care what accusations the Minister of Justice may make right at this very moment. But I challenge him to make his statements here in the house, not outside the house. He tried to persuade us that he made his statements on Friday and that he was not challenged. He did not implicate one or two or more of the Privy Council on Friday. He did not say in the house what he said outside or he would have been challenged immediately, and he knows it. That is the value of this debating chamber; this is where people are challenged immediately. How do you catch up with these outside stories? Is he going to rush to another press conference later today and give out a little more information, more innuendo, more scandal, more involvement? This is what he will be up to, this Minister of Justice who is supposed to sustain the law of this land and set an example.

Mr. Nielsen: A fine example.

Mr. Churchill: This is my question of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker. I have been accused along with others by this Minister of Justice of having been involved somehow or other and I ask him—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: The Liberals laugh again. They think this is just nonsense. They will destroy parliament if we give them the opportunity. I hope we are here to prevent them doing so.

An hon. Member: The minister laughs too.

Mr. Churchill: I ask the Minister of Justice to get up in this house as a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council, make his apology to the House of Commons—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: —and withdraw the statements that he made outside this house. Alternatively, let him get up and make his accusations clearly and plainly right here and then let us see what happens.

I present this motion in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, based on my question of privilege. I think it must come to a decision of this house. It must come to a vote and not be shoved aside, shunted into some corner or some committee. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr):

That the Prime Minister immediately call for the resignation of the Minister of Justice on the basis of the improper conduct of the minister in the making of improper accusations against the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and all Privy Councillors in the former government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The motion which has just been submitted to the Chair by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is substantially the same as the one already before the Chair moved by the hon. member for Yukon. At that time I asked hon. members to give the Chair an opportunity to look into the situation further, because certainly I think it is not entirely correct to submit a series of motions to the Chair in such a very important matter, such a very delicate matter, and ask that a ruling be made, except when there is a very clear case.

It is my opinion that the first motion put before the house constituted a very clear case and by reason of precedents it was clear that the motion should not be accepted. May I suggest to hon. members now that I be given an opportunity to look at the motions made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the hon. member for Yukon. This is a request that is very reasonable and which the Chair is entitled to make according to practice. I trust hon. members will agree to give the Chair this opportunity.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, while you are looking at the motion might I be allowed to say a word on the necessity of dealing with this matter today, immediately, now. The charges and allegations that have been made—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has had an opportunity to speak. I wonder whether there is anything he can now say that will add to what he has said on the previous motion. I am not being unreasonable at all or unfair, I think, to hon. members when I ask them to co-operate with the Chair. I believe that hon. members have a responsibility in this matter to co-operate with the Chair and I ask hon. members to co-operate with me in this regard. This is all I am asking at this time.

Mr. Nielsen: With deference, Mr. Speaker, I have not had any opportunity at all to speak on the merits of the motions that have been made. I have only had the opportunity to speak on whether there exists a prima facie case of privilege. In the meantime the urgency of this matter, because these allegations of the Minister of Justice are being spread all over the country, demands immediate discussion in this chamber. It is this matter about which I wish to speak.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that there is urgency in this matter and I can assure the hon. member that I am quite convinced it is a matter of substantial and serious urgency. But, with respect, I do not think it should necessarily be settled within 30 minutes, within an hour, or immediately. As the hon. member says, the matter has been publicly referred to and has gained some prominence. I doubt whether it will gain additional prominence if the motion of the hon. member is allowed to stand for a while. Again I would suggest that this be done.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Your Honour has said that this is a matter of importance and should be dealt with within a reasonable time, I wonder whether Your Honour would indicate to us how long it will be before Your Honour brings in a decision on the merits of the motions?

Mr. Turner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that all hon. members agree on just how important the matter before the house is and how urgent it is, I wonder whether the Chair should be pressed into making an immediate decision—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Turner: —because it is very important for the rules of this house that the right decision is made by the Chair. I would therefore urge hon. members to give the Chair a chance to make the right decision.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, you have asked members of the house to give you some time to consider the two motions before Your Honour. May I respectfully suggest to you, sir, and to the members of this house that the proper thing to do now is to adjourn the house for an hour or so—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: —so that you may give this matter the consideration you think necessary and so this most unpleasant spectacle may come to an end. I would urge you, sir, and all members of the house to agree to an adjournment until six o'clock so that Your Honour may have the time, and everybody else may have the time, to go into this matter and to do it properly.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: If there are problems about moving such a motion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear what the house leader has to say.

Mr. Pearson: Surely it is only reasonable and right that in a matter of this importance, so difficult and complicated for the Speaker, he be given some time to decide what is the right course to follow. The hon. member opposite has said that this must be decided today, immediately, now. I recall the insinuations and the charges of arson, murder and bankruptcy and everything over the years, and the remedy for these charges was to set up a royal commission.

Mr. Nielsen: Absolutely.

Mr. Pearson: This is a matter that should be decided and decided quickly but surely, Mr. Speaker, you ought to be given some opportunity to look into this matter and surely, also, while that is being done the house can go on with the business before it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this house now stand adjourned until 6 p.m. this day.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Churchill: Order. It is not debatable.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McIlraith: May I ask—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member makes his motion may I ask him a question?

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this motion is not debatable.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the motion is not debatable. It is also not receivable at this time. The hon. member is now proposing a motion which is in the form of a superseding motion. There has to be something before the house before a motion to adjourn the house can be moved and at the moment there is nothing before the house.

The hon. member cannot, under the guise of a point of order, rise to ask the adjournment of the house. There has to be business before the house and a motion under consideration, followed by a superseding motion asking for the adjournment of the house. My understanding of the expert advice I have received, advice which is always very useful in such instances, is to the effect that this motion cannot be moved now.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I thought the business before the house was a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I submit that whether or not the motion is in order the question is still there.

Mr. Speaker: It is not. I have to add that not only can it not be done under the guise of a point of order but it cannot be done under a question of privilege.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Surely Your Honour has looked at standing order 25 which reads:

A motion to adjourn (except when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance), shall always be in order—

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, "shall always be in order". The universal custom of this House of Commons is that a motion to adjourn can be received at any time, I submit with the greatest respect.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should have read the rest of the standing order. It continues:

—but no second motion to the same effect shall be made until after some intermediate proceeding has been had.

I really do not want to argue with the hon. member. The Chair should not be placed in the position where it has to argue on a matter such as this. I suggest that whenever there is a substantive motion before the house at a later hour during the day that motion can be moved. My understanding is that it cannot be moved now. I hope I have been well advised on this.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, if the motion to adjourn is not in order, I should like to speak to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and I should like to move a motion in connection therewith.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has heard the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre make a motion. He has moved a motion and the Chair has asked for the assistance and for the concurrence of the house to allow the Chair some time to consider the motion, as well as the motion moved by the hon. member for Yukon. Surely the hon. member does not want to move a third motion on the same question of privilege.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, surely the question whether the motion is proper does not end the debate. The disposition of one motion does not end the question of privilege. I would put that suggestion before the house.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot agree with the hon. member. A question of privilege has been raised. The Chair rendered the decision that there was a prima facie case of privilege before the house, after which a motion was moved consequent upon the question of privilege. The only matter we can discuss now is the motion, if it is accepted by the house. The Chair has asked that the matter be held in abeyance. This is such a reasonable request that I would invite hon. members to grant it.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, my point is that if the motion had been disposed of that would have disposed of the question of privilege. But since the motion was found to be not acceptable it does not dispose of the question of privilege. Therefore the question of privilege is still before the house, as is the action to be taken on it. We have two questions of privilege which in my submission are still before the house, one raised by the hon. member for Calgary North and the other by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. The motion moved by the hon. member for Calgary North was found to be out of order but—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot agree with the hon. member's contention. My contention is that two very logical questions of privilege have been raised followed by motions, one of which is under consideration. We cannot completely forget the fact that these motions exist and are now before the house. They were regular motions. Whether or not they are acceptable or should be ignored is the question which the Chair would like the opportunity to decide. But certainly motions have been moved and seconded in both instances. I do not think we can make an abstraction of them and return to the question of privilege and discuss it further.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, may I repeat that by finding the motion out of order you are killing off debate on the main subject? That practice could happen in the house at any time. A member could make a motion which is out of order so as to kill off debate. Certainly this does not dispose of the substantive question before us, and I wish to speak to that substantive question.

Mr. Knowles: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I would invite Your Honour to reconsider the position which you have taken in respect of Standing Order 25. Standing Order 25 is quite clear when it says that a second motion to adjourn cannot be made until some intermediate proceeding has been had.

Most of us here in this house are aware of the position. In 1956 this sort of thing was tried and we found out what were the rules. I submit that a motion to adjourn is in order at any time provided it follows some intermediate proceeding between the motion and the last time there was a motion to adjourn.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that an intermediate proceeding as defined in the authorities is something that is entered in the Journals. There will be an entry in the Journals for today that the house met at 2.30. Motions which have been made will appear in the Journals. I submit that the motion to adjourn the house till six o'clock comes after intermediate proceedings since the last time there was a motion to adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: I might say I am rather impressed by the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but there is another difficulty. By using the words "that this house stand adjourned till six o'clock this day" the hon. member has placed a condition on the normal motion so it cannot be moved in this way. It becomes a substantive motion and we would require notice of a substantive motion. If the motion were simply that this house do now adjourn I would agree with the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre that probably it could be moved.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in the interests—

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member continuing to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of parliament I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena:

That this house do now adjourn.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member rose on a point of order, and cannot, therefore put a motion. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fairweather: It is not debatable.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has moved a motion while speaking on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member had the floor on a point of order, which was the only way he could get the floor at the time. I am sure he will recognize that. I think the Chair has the right to recognize the Minister of Public Works on the point of order.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I think all hon. members will agree that there is a grave and serious matter concerning members of the house at the moment. That being so, I would point out that the Prime Minister, who has the senior responsibility in the house as leader, did make a suggestion a few minutes ago that was not accepted. In the last few minutes we have been in danger of getting away from the issue into procedural discussions and wranglings that really serve no useful purpose. I have a suggestion that I would ask hon. members to listen to and consider.

The business indicated for the house this afternoon was, I think I can properly say, three rather routine motions to set up committees—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. McIlraith:—and a small bill.

An hon. Member: Order. There is a motion.

Mr. McIlraith: I would suggest that the house give the Speaker an opportunity to consider the grave matter that is before him relating to a motion on a matter of real substance and concern to the house, which I feel is the best way of doing it.

Mr. Churchill: Just a moment, Mr. Speaker. On a point of order—

Mr. McIlraith: In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, we could go along in the usual way—

Mr. Nielsen: No. This is far too important.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is a question of procedure.

Mr. McIlraith:—and consider the matters I have indicated—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McIlraith: —which are not of a very major nature.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McIlraith: I believe that that course of action would permit the house to consider the very important matter before it in a calmer and more careful way, and not prejudice it by means of an immediate consideration of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; order, please. The position of the Chair has now been reinforced by a citation from Bourinot's fourth edition, page 353, which the Chair did not have available before and which I now cite:

> No member who rises to a question of order or privilege will be permitted to move an adjournment of the house or of the debate under the cover of such question.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in the same way as the hon. member for York South, rose on a point of order—

Mr. Knowles: Oh, no.

Mr. Speaker: —rose on a point of order. That was the only way that the hon. member could get the floor.

Mr. Knowles: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: There is no other way that he can be recognized unless it is on a question of privilege. That is the only matter that we have before us now.

This motion would be made or could be made if there was an item of business before the house and it would then become a superseding motion. Whenever the house reaches the normal business of the house and there is an item of business or a motion before the house, a superseding motion can be made by the hon. member who has the floor discussing the substantive motion, but not on a point of order. This, as I said, is the citation which unfortunately I did not have before but it is clearly before us now.

Mr. Churchill: You should have been here in 1956.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I accept your ruling. I will move my motion when we get to the second reading of the Bank Act bill.

BANK ACT AND QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

EXTENSION OF CHARTERS TO DECEMBER 1, 1966

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-3, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Bank Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister like my motion?

Mr. Sharp: I have a very short speech to make.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre be now heard.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): You are not so sharp.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: No, no. Order.

An hon. Member: There is a motion.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I proceed?

Some hon. Members: No, he has not been recognized.

Mr. Starr: Yes, he has. This is just manoeuvring around.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the bill before you—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Sharp: —proposes to extend the charter of the bank—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

An hon. Member: Sit down, C. D. Howe.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. To be legal and to be right I think the Chair would have to rule that, the minister having the floor, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre cannot take the floor away from him for the purpose of moving—

An hon. Member: You did not recognize him.

Mr. Speaker: If the Chair recognized the hon. Minister of Finance he had the floor. I wonder whether hon. members heard me. As I said, if we are going to face this motion after the minister has finished his statement I am quite prepared to put it from the Chair now, that is, if the minister will relinquish the floor in favour of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. That would be my suggestion. We will have the motion, I assume, whenever the minister has completed his statement.

So if the hon. minister agrees I will read the motion.

Mr. Sharp: I agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), moves that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre be now heard. Is it the wish of the house to adopt the said motion? All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Order. The question is as follows. Mr. Churchill, seconded by Mr. Winkler, moves:

That the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre be now heard.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) cannot take his seat once the question is put.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the bill before the house proposes to extend the charters of the Canadian chartered banks and of the Quebec savings banks until December 1, 1966, or 60 days thereafter if parliament does not sit for at least 20 days during the month of November, 1966.

As the house is no doubt aware, there were two extensions during past sessions of parliament to permit study of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, popularly known as the Porter Commission. Under present legislation the charters and powers expire after the sixtieth sitting day of parliament subsequent to January 17, 1966. I have had some calculations made to determine on what date the 60 days would expire and I have been informed that they would probably expire around Easter time. Therefore it is of considerable importance to the business and financial communities of this country that there should be a further extension at the present time, and that is what this bill proposes.

Hon. members will notice that it is intended that the charters of the banks should be extended until December 1, 1966 unless, of course, there is not an opportunity to get the other amendments through, or in the event of parliament not sitting for at least 20 days during the month of November, in which case there would be an automatic extension.

It is my hope and my intention, Mr. Speaker, that the house would pass the present bill forthwith. In due course, and I hope fairly soon, I will be able to bring before the house the substantive amendments to the Bank Act, to the Bank of Canada Act, to the Quebec Savings Banks Act and to some other financial legislation, so that before December 1, when the charters of the banks would expire according to the legislation which I am now proposing, there would be time for ample and careful consideration of the substantive amendments to the Bank Act.

I think the house will want to know about this because I imagine that there will be some questions during the discussion of this short bill and there will be some desire to know what progress the government is making on this very important legislation, namely, the substantive amendments that I hope to bring forward in due course in the next few weeks.

Hon. members will recall that my predecessor in office, the present member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), placed a bill before the house which died on the order paper containing certain substantive amendments to the Bank Act itself. The government is reconsidering the proposals that were put forward last year. May I at this juncture refer to a speech that I made to the Canadian Club of Toronto on January 3 when I was speaking about some of the responsibilities of the Minister of Finance during this present year. I said at that time:

> Quite apart from the budget, there will be a substantial amount of financial legislation this year. The centrepiece, of course, will be the banking legislation, which includes both the revision of the Bank Act and the amendments to the Bank of Canada Act as well as other statutes.

I went on to say:

> I am reviewing now, in the light of events and developments of the past year, what was put before the house last spring.

I said then:

> I do not propose to make any comment on the substance of this legislation before presenting it to the house except to say—

I felt the house would be interested in this if hon. members have not already seen it.

> —that there will be some changes.

Then I added:

> My own opinion is that our legislation should go as far as is practicable to strengthen public confidence in our financial institutions and to promote competition among them for the benefit of the public at large.

I should like to enlarge a bit upon these general comments that I made to the Canadian Club in January of this year and say that it is still my intention to place before the government, and I hope that the government will approve, changes to the Bank Act and to other related legislation that will accomplish the two purposes that I set forth in the speech to which I have referred, which I delivered to the Canadian Club at the beginning of January of this year. The first, and I think an extremely important purpose in the light of recent events in this country is to strengthen public confidence in our financial institutions.

I know that all members of the house are aware of some of the events that have taken place in the last few weeks and months which have shaken public confidence in some of our financial institutions. I need not at this time recall the names. They are so well known as to require nothing but reference to the fact that there have been some institutions that have failed or that have had to be absorbed. Indeed, the governor of the bank has said that because of some of these events he had to take very special measures in the administration of monetary policy to maintain general confidence in the stability of our financial institutions. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that when we do get into the substance of these matters the purpose of the legislation that will be brought forward will be to assure as far as is practicable strengthened public confidence in our financial institutions.

The second purpose that I set forth at the beginning of January this year in my speech to the Canadian Club was that I thought our legislation should promote competition among our financial institutions for the benefit of the public at large. It has seemed to me that this, in general, was one of the main conclusions of the Porter Commission on Banking and Finance that was conducted in order to prepare for these decennial revisions of the banking legislation. I do think that we should, in considering legislation that is to be in effect for the next ten years, do as much as we can to promote competition among those institutions.

The Porter Commission went to some pains to point out that some of our existing legislation does have the effect of limiting this competition to the detriment of the public. Therefore I feel that we should, in our legislation, be striving to put forward legislation that will promote healthy competition for the benefit of the public at large. The financial legislation that will be coming forward, and this bill that is now before us for second reading is the first of a series of bills, will be of the utmost importance not only to the business and to the financial community but also to the little man in this country.

It will be the purpose of this legislation to promote the welfare of everyone. The purpose of this legislation will not be to protect the financial institutions. It will be to see that these financial institutions operate in such a way as to be of benefit to the population at large. I say that, Mr. Speaker, because sometimes I have seen suggestions that certain changes that are being proposed by various people they are sometimes attributed to the government although the government has not yet made up its mind on the substance of these matters—are somehow directed toward benefiting financial institutions. I should like to say as the Minister of Finance that my chief concern is the welfare of the population at large. I should like to see financial institutions operating in such a way as to be of the maximum benefit to the public at large.

Mr. Starr: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Sharp: The financial institutions can look after themselves very well, and I would hope that our legislation will be of such a character as to promote the general welfare of the public. That will certainly be our purpose.

Mr. Lewis: You are spinning it out admirably.

Mr. Starr: You have 20 minutes to go.

Mr. Sharp: I am sure when I say this that I speak for all sides of the house and for all members.

Mr. Churchill: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Sharp: Certainly.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. minister could relate his remarks to the principle of the bill before us?

Mr. Churchill: I withdraw my question because it is the same as the one that has just been asked.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that this is the first of a series of bills that will be coming before the house, and I thought it would be reassuring to the house when it is considering this first measure, which is for the purpose of extending the charters of our banks for a limited period—

Mr. Nielsen: We know that. You have already said that once.

Mr. Starr: Twenty minutes to go.

Mr. Sharp:—to know that we are seriously considering the nature of the amendments that will be coming forward and that will have to be dealt with by December 31.

Mr. Starr: Would you say that over again? I did not get that.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: I know that if I had simply risen and said that this is a bill which is intended to extend the charters of the banks for a period up to December 1st hon. gentleman opposite would have said: He did not tell us anything else, he did not tell us whether it was the purpose of the government to bring forward anything further. Indeed, one of my colleagues told me he did not know whether the house would be prepared to consider the bill unless there were some assurance that we were intending to proceed with substantive amendments to the Bank Act and that these would be before the house in plenty of time to be considered before December 1, 1966. At one time I had the idea that it would be sufficient merely to say what is contained in the explanatory note in the bill. However, I have been persuaded otherwise.

Mr. Starr: You mean you were persuaded at the cabinet meeting half an hour ago.

Mr. Chatterton: Would the minister permit a question? May I ask whether the minister has enough verbiage available to carry him through to six o'clock and take the government off the hook?

Mr. Sharp: I am sure the hon. member knows that this is a subject of importance, and he would expect the Minister of Finance to deal with it thoroughly.

Mr. Chatterton: Would the minister permit another question? While he is dealing with it thoroughly, will he also deal with it well?

An hon. Member: And intelligently.

Mr. Sharp: I am trying to deal with it thoroughly, well and intelligently.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are so many interruptions that it is difficult for the Chair to follow the minister's very interesting remarks.

Mr. Starr: If the minister would speak to the subject they would be better.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair wishes to remind the minister who has the floor that he should refer his remarks to the bill before us.

Mr. Sharp: It is important, I think, that the house should have some idea of what the government is proposing to do by way of substantial amendments to the Bank Act before this extension of the charters is approved. In particular the house should know that we are seriously concerned—

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Starr: Surely, Mr. Speaker, the minister does not think he can get away with this "malarkey" he is giving us now. This bill deals only with an extension of the charters of present banks for a time. It has nothing to do with what amendments may be made in the future. The minister should address his remarks particularly to the point at issue. We are prepared to pass this measure if he would keep his mouth shut and sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might say a word on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Ontario. I assume that in the consideration of this matter the same interpretation of the principles of the bill would be made in relation to every speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the Minister of Transport, I suggest that Bill No. C-3 is quite clear. Let the minister restrict his comments to the principle of the bill and we shall listen to him.

Now, in my opinion, he is out of order when he refers to other bills or when he is dealing with provisions of other bills still to be brought before the house. We shall discuss those bills in due course, when they come before the house.

At the present time, the minister should limit his remarks to the principle of Bill No. C-3, the purpose of which is to extend banking powers until November, 1966, or until December 1, 1966.

Mr. Lachance: Still on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), who has always been particularly interested in the problems created by the Bank Act, should be satisfied with the brief comments made today by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) about this bill.

Personally, since the bill has to do with the Quebec Savings Bank Act, I would be greatly interested to hear the Minister of Finance give us more detailed explanations.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lafontaine is showing that, for a lawyer, he is not too well versed in law.

Mr. Lachance: Surely as well as the hon. member for Villeneuve, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the minister knows the rules and can address his remarks to the principle of the bill before us. However, I might mention to hon. members that I well recall being in the Chair when a similar bill was introduced in a previous session and at that time a number of hon. members who are objecting at this moment to anything beyond discussion of the strict principles of the bill had no qualms about ranging far beyond those principles. At that time I tried, though without very much success, to restrict hon. members' comments to the principles of the bill. I am trying to do the same today.

Mr. Sharp: This bill is before the house, as hon. members know, because last year we were not able to deal with substantial amendments to the act before the session was over. What we have before us now is a bill to extend the existing measure for a further period of time.

As I say, I have been talking to some of my colleagues and one of them suggested to me some time ago that if I did not deal with the general intentions of the government in the field of financial legislation while I was introducing the present measure hon. members would complain that I had not dealt adequately with the subject and was hoping to get the legislation through without any discussion of the principles underlying banking legislation as a whole.

Mr. Chatterton: Which other cabinet minister suggested the hon. gentleman should give so much explanation of this bill?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Would the minister permit a question? As the only principle involved in this bill is the question of time, I wonder whether the minister would be prepared to discuss this principle?

Mr. Sharp: I will be very happy to do so. The purpose of extending the act until December 1, 1966, was very carefully considered in the light of the time available. We considered carefully whether this would give sufficient time for the house and the committees of the house to deal with the financial legislation which is coming subsequently and which will amount to substantial amendments—

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask another question? Does the minister think there will be an election before December 1, 1966?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a question of timing.

Mr. Sharp: While my remarks have been quite relevant, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that remark is relevant. Indeed, it has been found from experience that it is extremely difficult to forecast the dates of elections.

An hon. Member: And the outcome.

Mr. Sharp: At any rate, one of the reasons for suggesting that the charters be extended to December 1—

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Cashin: Would the minister permit a question? First, would he not agree with me that the hon. member for Royal, while otherwise intelligent, is lacking in a sense of humour? The real question I want to ask arises out of the remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe and concerns the date of December 1, 1966. An interesting question has been presented to the house by the hon. member for Lapointe. It is a purely hypothetical question, but in the event that the country was in the midst of an election at that time when the bank—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Will Your Honour intervene to prevent the hon. member and others like him among the government and its supporters from making a mockery of the rules of the house?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is, of course, impugning motives, which he knows he has no right to do under the rules.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: When a legitimate question is put to the minister and an hon. member has the floor it is not for the Chair to find out or guess why the question is being asked, and the hon. member for Yukon cannot suggest a question is being asked for any other motive than to obtain information.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cashin: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order? There is an hon. member rising on a point of order and another on a question of privilege. Perhaps the hon. member for St. John's West might be given the opportunity to put his point first.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of the remarks just made by the hon. member for Yukon who cast reflections upon my judgment and ability and, moreover, on my right. The other two may well be in question but my right to ask a question, which I believe is a serious one even though it may be hypothetical, is very much in order. It is right to the point of the particular legislation before the house. I might say I regret I do not have the experience that the hon. member for Yukon has and therefore I am unable to use the rules as skillfully as he—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest that the point be ignored—perhaps forgotten is a better word—at the moment. The hon. member for Yukon made a statement and the hon. member for St. John's West objects to it. It might be better for the proper conduct of business if we returned to the minister's statement.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I was rising on a point of order when you recognized the hon. member for St. John's West. My point of order is that the hon. member for St. John's West was not asking a question. He was intervening in the debate. Consequently, the minister has lost the floor and since the hon. member for St. John's West has now taken his seat it is your duty to recognize someone else.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot agree with the hon. member. The minister has the floor. He allowed a question, as is very frequently done, and if there were a suggestion that when hon. members allow a question they lose their right to speak I am afraid very few questions would be allowed. It seems to me we have followed the usual practice. I should like hon. members to cooperate with the Chair and allow the minister to continue with his statement.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the question asked by the hon. member for St. John's West is indeed very pertinent to this legislation because the reason the legislation is drawn in this way is to provide that if parliament is not sitting in the month prior to December 1 then these charters are automatically extended. It is important to the house to understand this and recognize the principle that lies behind this bill. As I was saying—

Mr. Ryan: Would the minister permit another question? With regard to the proposed section 6(b)—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take the liberty of bringing to the attention of the hon. member that in the course of debate on second reading no reference should be made to specific clauses of the bill and he cannot ask such questions.

Mr. Ryan: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to put this question. I understand that under the B.N.A. Act parliament must be called within a year less a day. I should like to ask the minister whether under the proposed section 6(b) it could possibly be as late as January or February of 1967 that a bank could carry on the business of banking without anything further being done?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be more appropriate if I were to answer that question when I wind up the debate on second reading because I am not quite certain I have understood the full import of the question. It may be an important question and I would not like to pass over it lightly.

The purpose in extending the period until December 1 is to enable the house and its committees to deal in as much detail as they wish with subsequent legislation when it comes before us. We had thought that perhaps we could make the date earlier than December 1, but because of the press of parliamentary business and the need on the part of the house and the community at large to have an opportunity of discussing the legislation in committee, we felt we should give the maximum amount of time possible by having this date of December 1. We thought about December 31, but it seemed to us it would be difficult under the circumstances to deal with the question raised by the hon. member for St. John's West about some emergency intervening. Therefore we felt the best possible compromise upon a date would be December 1, which is several months from now. I do not think this is any too much time and I do hope that the house will agree with the government that a date of December 1 is the appropriate date. It is as late as we can practically make it.

It gives enough time for the house and its committee to consider fully the financial legislation dealing with the Bank Act, the Bank of Canada Act, the Quebec Savings Banks Act and perhaps other financial legislation, because all of this must be considered as a package for the purpose, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, of strengthening confidence in our financial institutions and second, promoting competition among them for the benefit of the common man. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Starr: A disgraceful performance by the Minister of Finance.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), Health and Welfare—request for increased assistance for medical schools; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), Canadian Economy—steps to meet increase in cost of living; the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne), Administration of Justice—Steven Truscott—request for investigation.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers) and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wahn for the second reading of Bill No. S-10, respecting Interprovincial Pipe Line Company.

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the second reading of Bill No. S-10 for a purpose that will not take the house by surprise. I had thought that the hon. gentleman who had the floor just before six o'clock was making a speech that would end at 5.30 or 5.40 and that I would get the floor at that time. But since he kept going I have to rise on this bill for the purpose that the house expects me to fulfil.

It is our feeling that time, something about which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) was speaking, is needed by the government to consider this day's events, and time is needed by Your Honour to consider the important matters that Your Honour must consider. We think it would be better for parliament to hope for a better day tomorrow than we have had today. We recognize, Mr. Speaker, that a motion such as the one I now wish to make—

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, I am sure, will recognize that he has the floor for the purpose of speaking about this bill and he should speak about it unless he wishes to make another motion. For the moment he has to limit his remarks to the bill before the house.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think, rather than our spending time on this bill, it is more important that we give consideration to the points I just made. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), that the house do now adjourn.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It has been moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood, that the house do now adjourn. According to the terms of Provisional Standing Order 6(3), if any member objects to the taking of a vote at any time between 1.00 o'clock p.m. and 2.30 o'clock p.m. or between 6.00 o'clock p.m. and 8.00 o'clock p.m., Mr. Speaker shall request those members who object to rise in their places and if five or more members rise the taking of the vote shall be postponed.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: The vote is therefore suspended until eight o'clock p.m.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, do we understand that Your Honour will call for the vote automatically at eight o'clock in view of the objection from the government side?

Mr. Speaker: This is my understanding of the rule, that the vote will be called at eight o'clock.

An hon. Member: What are you going to do?

Mr. Hellyer: We are going to vote this down and get on with the country's business.

An hon. Member: You are still in a mess.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You will have to make a lot of telephone calls during supper.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few comments about the bill regarding the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company. My purpose is akin to that achieved by the Minister of Finance who succeeded in preventing a particular motion from coming to a vote. My purpose is that the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company bill likewise will not come to a vote because I do not think parliament should endorse the principle contained in the bill.

One of the contentions of the sponsor of the bill is that the legislation would be of assistance to the investing public, the reason being that if the stock split is permitted to go through the presumed price of the stock on the open market would be approximately one fifth of what it is at the present time and because it would be a lower priced stock it would therefore be more attractive to the investing public. How is this supposed to take place? Some years ago we had another bill which parliament dealt with regarding a stock splitting arrangement involving Trans Mountain Pipe Line Company. The information which we were given at that time by persons knowledgeable in the field of stock market activities was that when a stock split of this nature took place they could expect about a ten per cent increase in the number of shareholders and that after this 10 per cent increase in the number of shareholders took place—the 10 per cent increase, incidentally, would be an increase because of speculation based on an expected rise in the price of the stock itself—the total number of shareholders, following an indeterminate period, would settle back to somewhat the same number as before the stock split took place. The assistance to the investing public is only to approximately 10 per cent of the investing public, which I submit is a relatively insignificant part of the Canadian population.

Mr. Johnston, president of Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, told us a long time ago that from watching the movement of these shares and their sale on the stockmarket he knew that sales were between 700 to 1,000 shares a day. He went on then to say, and I quote from his statement in the proceedings and evidence of the standing committee: "I think that is probably a reasonably good average". So far as Mr. Johnston, the president of the company, was concerned sales of the stock on the market were at a reasonably good average. It seemed all right to him. It seemed that the investing public was exhibiting sufficient interest in the stock at a price of around $90, as it was then, and that sales achieved a reasonably good average.

How is this proposal going to be of help, as the sponsor puts it, to the investigating public?

[Mr. Howard.]

Is it going to be of help to the shareholders now such as Imperial Oil, Shell and B.A. Oil? If what we are told is the usual thing happens and the stock split goes through, the price of the stock on the market will be cut by five and there will be an almost automatic advance in the new price which will add to the advantage of those who are now stockholders and allow them, if they so desire, to divest themselves of the stock they now hold in anticipation of the 10 per cent increase in shareholders that may result from the stock split.

I suppose one can argue that this is a reasonable course to follow, but what prevented those who want to divest themselves of the stock now from selling it in the last two years when it was almost $100 a share? There was a reasonably good profit available for those who had bought it at a lower price. I do not know what it is down to but it is down now. When the hon. member introduced the bill the other day it was about $86. There has been some decline from what the price was a year or two ago when a similar bill was before us. Why is it that parliament at this juncture, as it was, before, should be asked to endorse a principle which will assist to bail out investors who may have bought the stock at a high price? We do not do this in respect of other companies.

The normal course, as I understand it, is that if you buy stock on the market and it goes up and you sell and make a profit that is good for you but if you buy stock at a certain price and it goes down and you lose money then it is too bad. That is the way the ball bounces, as the common expression goes.

The small investor will not be in a different position after the stock split takes place from what he is in now. The whole question is related to investors having a certain amount of money to invest. If with that money they buy ten shares of stock at one price or 100 shares of stock at another price it does not make any difference to them because they still have a certain amount of money involved in an investment.

Mr. Johnston said when he appeared before the committee that at that time average sales ran between 700 and 1,000 shares and he considered that reasonable taking into account the price of the stock and the number of shares on the market. One would assume from that statement that there was reasonable activity in the buying and selling of Interprovincial Pipe Line shares on the open market.

Mr. Johnston said that the investing public was participating reasonably which leads me to believe that perhaps there is something more behind this proposed stock split than a beneficent desire on the part of Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, Imperial Oil, Shell Oil and British American, all of whom are noted for their desire to help the investing public, to do just that. There must be something more behind this particular proposal than just that desire.

When the hon. member who sponsored the bill spoke on the day of its introduction he spoke in terms of the value of the stock on the market and said the present market price of Interprovincial stock at that time was $86. He quoted from a study of stock splits in postwar years published in the Analysts Journal. He also referred to some characteristics of procedures of common stock splits which appeared in the Harvard Business Review.

Mr. Johnston suggested that the New York Stock Exchange was officially committed to a policy of keeping individual common stocks at what it considered desirable price levels, and in this case "desirable" means low or medium priced. The object was to make for better trading and to attract small investors. He suggested that the exchange regards as the most desirable price level a range between $18 and $25. I assume the analogy is that the Toronto Stock Exchange should or does have the same principle and that it is just as desirable to do it there as it is on the New York stock exchange.

On the day Mr. Johnston made that statement I looked at the Ottawa Citizen of February 15 to see how many stocks there were in this desirable price range and how many there were above the $25 level. Apart from penny stocks, which probably do not enter the picture because they are in a different class and of a different sort altogether, there were many stocks on the Toronto exchange at the undesirable level.

The stock of Imperial Oil, one of the owners of the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, was at the undesirable level of $53¾ which I presume is $53.75. That is a most undesirable situation. This company is imbuing one of its subsidiaries, if that is what Interprovincial Pipe Line Company is, with the concept that its shares are at an undesirable level while at the same time its own stock is at an undesirable level, more than twice as much. General Motors Corporation is another undesirable company in so far as its stock is concerned. They were selling their shares on that day at the fantastic price of $113. That is an even more undesirable level than the shares of Interprovincial Pipe Line Company.

I could refer to a number of other companies whose stocks were in the undesirable range on that day but perhaps I should not take time to do so. To mention a few, there were several banks, Bell Telephone, B.C. Sugar, C.P.R. and a variety of other.

An hon. Member: Put them on the record.

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend asks me to put them on the record. If members wish me to do so I will but I do not think there is sufficient time at my disposal. This request comes from a responsible source so perhaps I should comply by referring to a few of them. Some of them I do not recognize but there is one referred to as Alta. G.P.C. with its stock listed at $97½. That is a little bit more undesirable than Interprovincial Pipe Line. The stock of B.C. Sugar was listed at $42, Bell Telephone stock was listed at $58, Bank of Nova Scotia stock was listed at $73 and Bank of Montreal stock was listed at $64. Perhaps that will suffice for the moment.

The point I want to get at is this. It does not seem to be a reasonable argument for the sponsor of this bill to say on the one hand that the price level of its stock, $86 as it was on that day, is an undesirable level when one of the owners of the company, Imperial Oil, also had its stock at an undesirable level. There must be something more behind this proposal than was stated by the then president of the company. I do not know whether Mr. T. S. Johnston is still the president of the company but at that time he made a number of extremely interesting and revealing statements that I feel should give us some concern and cause us to wonder. He talked about philosophy, if there is any such thing in the stock market, in respect of small investors and their preferences as to what they would like to buy, in what lots and at what prices. Mr. Johnston in his laudatory remarks about the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company said that there was still a particular trend on the stock market which would indicate that companies do not wish to sell their stocks at a price too low or too high. He makes that statement as though the company had something to do with the setting of the price. I thought the price was set on the marketplace by the investors or speculators rather than by any desire on the part of the company itself.

• (6:20 p.m.)

He talks about surveys being made on the New York, Toronto and Montreal stock exchanges and others. He talks about popularly priced stock and says its range is $20 to $25. I might say that on the Toronto stock exchange on that day, February 15, there were not too many stocks in the popular price range of $20 to $25 compared with the total number of stocks listed.

Mr. Johnston went on to make a most revealing statement which I think deserves intense examination. In talking about stock in the popular price range he said:

> This encourages wide participation by the Canadian stockholder and the Canadian public which, I think, is a most desirable feature. I think the public should participate to the greatest extent possible in any company which has been successful and has contributed something to the Canadian economy.

I have forgotten how many shares of this stock are on the market. I believe about 5 million shares have been issued out of a total number in the treasury of some 40 million. This leaves in the treasury of the company at the present time 35 million shares. If it is correct, as Mr. Johnston says, that the public should participate to the greatest extent possible in any company which has been successful and has contributed something to the Canadian economy, why does this company not take steps to issue some of the shares out of its treasury and broaden the participation? Why does it not draw many more people into the picture?

The financial survey of oils for 1965 gives the number of issued shares as 5,087,282 as at December 31, 1964. I gather nothing has been taken out of the treasury since then although there may have been. Do the directors of the company, do the boys who control and own it have any options to buy treasury stock at a set price? The usual course with regard to an option given to any official or director is that they have the option to buy the stock at a low price, which means that they put up very little money, become involved in no risk, sell the stock at the inflated price on the stock market and keep the change.

This is what happened with Trans Canada Pipe Lines. This is how a couple of people became millionaires overnight from an investment of $8. We should like to know whether there is any activity of this sort taking place in the company or contemplated by it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for New Westminster.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If it is the wish of the hon. member to continue I am sure he will make a request to the house.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the house has requested that I continue beyond my time and I shall be glad to comply with that request.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. member wishes to continue he will make the request.

Mr. Howard: If I shall have the unanimous consent of the house, which is required, I shall be happy to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member continuing?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member for New Westminster.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Let the record show that it was the Liberals who refused consent.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in relation to the proposition that is before us in Bill No. S-10 respecting the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company. I believe the purpose of the bill is to secure from parliament approval to split the stock of the company five times, or to five shares of the value of $1 each. Those of us in the New Democratic Party object to this and have several grounds for so doing. In the first place, and in direct relation to the application before us, we have looked over the history of the company and its stock and find that the company secured consent by an act of parliament 17 years ago to transport oil in Canada. At this time I believe the company has some 3,500 miles of line in its operations.

The original capitalization of the company in 1949 was on the basis of $50 per share but even by 1952, if my figures are correct, the shareholders had approved a stock split to a par value of $5 a share. This company has a capitalization of 40 million shares and only 5 million of those shares are on the market at the present time. If the new, further split which is now sought is approved it will mean the company will have a capitalization, if my figures are correct, of 200 million shares.

The question that arises in our mind is: Why does the company want this many shares? Its stock, as was pointed out before, has been and continues to be an excellent, well supported investment. As a matter of fact, somebody has worked out that if you had bought one $50 share in this company back in 1949 and had stayed with it through the stock split that took place in 1952, the 10 for 1 split, and had reaped the $3.40 dividend paid per share last year, you would have received in dividends $30 a year up to this time for the original capital investment of $50. The stock is a very good one, so why change it or dilute it, especially when, if what is sought in the way of an additional stock split is granted, the company will have some 175 million undistributed shares in its treasury?

I would want to know a great deal more about the proposition before I would agree to it. That is in the first place, Mr. Speaker. In the second place I very much doubt the claim that is made as a basis for proposing this stock split and the proposition we are faced with in the explanation of the bill. This proposition is that the stock split is being sought in order to encourage Canadian investors to invest in a Canadian corporation. I think nobody would dispute the fact that the companies in Canada which actually own a great number of the shares of this company are in the main non-Canadian companies and are rather, United States controlled or owned companies. My understanding is that Imperial Oil, B.A. Oil and Shell Oil are not truly and completely Canadian concerns. I believe many hon. members would agree that what is owned is controlled. For example, what the Americans own in this country, which according to the latest figures I have is something more than 60 per cent of all Canadian natural resource industries, is certainly controlled and circumscribed by non-Canadian minds and hands.

The situation in this respect is something like the old adage of the iceberg. That part of it which is above the surface seems very massive and people think it is a tremendous size. Of course, Mr. Speaker, so it is; but actually it is only one-seventh of the great bulk of that structure which runs below the surface and actually determines the flow and the course of the iceberg which looks so large above the surface. I think that is the case also in the matter of Canadian industry, particularly in the matter of this application. Therefore, under these circumstances and believing as we do we just cannot be so naive as to take this prospectus at face value, and we in this group insist on continuing to examine the fine print.

I have another reason for objecting to the passage of this bill, at least till my grave misgivings about it are set at rest. The reason is that basically this is a transportation company, a private monopoly concern dealing in a business which affects several provinces and at least several thousands of Canadians. Actually it is not a business, any more than the post office or the streets or sewers are, which can be regarded as a competitive one. You cannot logically have several giant pipe line transportation companies running across the country competing with and duplicating each other. This just does not make sense.

Our feeling, Mr. Speaker, under these circumstances is that this company should be regarded as having something in the nature of a private monopoly function in what should be the public service or public monopoly field. I think that the parliament which originally granted this organization its rights was unwise in doing so. It seems to me, in the first place, that it was wrong for it to do so. Surely it should have been a publicly owned and operated concern serving the public interest, operated by and for consumers at the lowest possible cost to them.

So, Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned I oppose the passage of this legislation and I would invite other hon. members also to take a very hard look at it or at least to ask for further clarification and explanation.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill and for very good reason. I know we may be accused by certain hon. members of taking perhaps an overzealous interest in these pipe line bills but I think I can demonstrate to yourself and to the house that bitter experience is possibly the reason we seem to be so extremely interested. I should like to relate some experiences that make me feel that if closer attention had been paid to previous bills appearing before the house certain difficulties which confront us today would not now exist. Furthermore, if we provide this close scrutiny we may be able to avoid similar action in the future.

I have been receiving recently a tremendous number of complaints by consumers of natural gas. I grant you, Mr. Speaker, they are not in connection with this particular company or this particular pipe line, but I think there is great similarity between the two. What I want to demonstrate today are matters for which we should watch out while we have the responsibility of passing of bills of this sort in the house.

In the region from which I come there has been a tremendous and very unwarranted increase lately in gas bills. Therefore I proceeded to look into the matter to see what was causing it and I found that while everything was perfectly legal and aboveboard a very shady deal was being pulled off.

The information I got was that when this company received their original contract they contracted to supply a certain quality of gas to the consumers. I believe the figure was something like 1,000 b.t.u.'s per cubic foot of gas. During the period they were selling this gas and getting people to convert to gas they were shooting through something like 1,100 b.t.u.'s per cubic foot. After everybody had gone to the expense of converting to gas stoves, gas furnaces and so on the company then cut the gas back to the amount they originally contracted and guaranteed to carry. This may be quite legal so far as the supply of gas is concerned but so far as the sale of it is concerned it has been done under false pretenses. This is something that the members of this house should watch for when we consider such matters.

I am told, for example, that the profits of this particular gas company in the first six months of last year jumped 50 per cent. What is happening, of course, is that while the consumers are still paying the same price they were paying before they are not getting the same quality of gas and it does not perform the same function or serve the same purpose.

What happened after all this conversion had taken place and everybody had gone to the expense of installing gas furnaces, gas stoves, and so on, was that a plant was built to extract butane and propane gas from the natural gas as it came through. This gas was sold at a handsome profit by the company which charged the same price for the gas they had previously charged. I am referring to Northern Ontario Gas which supplies the district from which I come. This is the sort of thing we have to examine very carefully, and it is the sort of thing we should try to prevent occurring in the future. I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, whether we have a quorum at the present time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Under the Standing Orders of this house, if any member brings to the attention of the Speaker that there is not a quorum present the members in the house are to be counted. I shall therefore ask the Second Clerk Assistant to count the house.

And on the count being made, more than 20 members were declared to be present.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I declare the house properly formed. The hon. member for Timmins.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should point out to the house that the remarks just made are out of order. Members of this chamber may leave or enter the chamber when the count is being made.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, my opinion, which I have certainly expressed many times, is that it is a shame to take away the supper hour and to inconvenience the staff. I think that is one matter which should be looked into at the present time.

An hon. Member: Work harder.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I think it is the privilege of any hon. member to call the attention of the house to the fact that if we can muster only 21 hon. members out of 265 we need to take another look at the idea of keeping the staff working during the supper hour.

An hon. Member: It is quality that counts.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I did not hear the interjections. If hon. members have any questions to ask, I will be glad to answer them if I can.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think it might be well for the house to get back to consideration of the business before it, which is the bill.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I have not very much more to say. Possibly these interjections may have made my mind wander from the subject. I do think that we should bring these matters to the attention of hon. members so that they can realize the importance of giving a bill such as this the very closest scrutiny.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on the bill and to introduce a motion which I think will give the house an opportunity to discuss what I think is a matter of great importance involving a very basic principle in matters of this kind. Before doing so I want to say a couple of words about the bill itself. I want to ask the sponsor, when he is winding up the debate and before we vote on the bill, which I presume will not be too long from now, to deal with some of the questions in the minds of some of the members of the house.

I hope that the sponsor of the bill will explain to us the necessity of a stock split when there are 40 million shares in the treasury unissued. The only reason we have heard from him is that the value of the shares is rising dramatically and therefore it is desirable to split them again. However, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), the shares of a great many responsible companies stand at a much higher value than do those of the company now under consideration. The explanation for the split does not seem to be reasonable or not sufficiently reasonable to convince us of the merits of the split.

We do not really want to hold the bill up in any way. We want to pass it and let it go on to the committee so that all the details that are in our minds can be examined and all the questions can be answered. We want to expedite the passage of this measure.

One of the first speakers this afternoon raised what I think is the key issue in the bill, that is, that companies of this nature should not be privately owned. That is our judgment and perhaps we may be wrong. It seems to me, however, that this is a type of company which should be publicly owned and should not be left to ownership by oil companies as at present. We are not in favour of public ownership in all circumstances but certainly any company that is dealing with a natural resource of this type ought to be, in our opinion, under public ownership. We have had good experience of public ownership in Canada with operations such as the Sarnia plant, Canadian National Railways, and particularly with Ontario Hydro, a publicly owned corporation which produces electricity at the lowest cost I believe in North America, the next lowest cost producer being the publicly owned Tennessee Valley Authority.

It seems to me that at some stage in our history we shall have to take a serious look at the whole business of pipe lines. All the experts say that before many years pass pipe lines will be an important method of transporting goods. We shall not only be transporting oil through the pipe lines but we shall be transporting wheat and a great many commodities, even consumer goods. Many things will be transported through pipe lines. It seems to me that pipe lines are of such vital importance to the coming Canadian economy that the interests of the public would be served much better if they were placed under public ownership.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, rather than dealing with the particular bill under consideration I should like to move a motion, with your consent. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer):

> That Bill S-10 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the said Interprovincial Pipe Line Company be brought under public ownership.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I point out to the hon. member for Danforth who has moved this motion that I can immediately see two objections to it. The first objection to it is that the words "in the opinion of this House the said Interprovincial Pipe Line Company be brought under public ownership" are quite outside the principle of the bill now before the house. Again, in the second part I would think there are financial implications. For those two reasons I believe that the motion moved by the hon. member for Danforth is out of order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I believe that there is a provision within the standing orders for a so-called reasoned amendment which permits the placing before the house of a proposition different from that which is contained within a bill itself. I cannot immediately find the provision in Beauchesne that deals with this. I looked for it and I could not find it. I must say that the motion by the hon. member for Danforth came to me as a surprise; otherwise I would have had more time to check. As I say, Mr. Speaker, there is a provision to the effect I have mentioned. I am sure that the Clerks at the table would be able to provide us with the particular reference in Beauchesne. The effect of it is that it permits parliament to enunciate a principle or policy that differs from the one contained within a bill. I submit that the motion of the member for Danforth does precisely that. The motion offers the suggestion that the house should not proceed to pass the bill but should declare a policy or principle by way of a reasoned amendment that the company be put under public ownership. That is the motion. I regret that I am not able to give the reference in Beauchesne. However, I know that procedure similar to that has been followed on other occasions in the house and has been accepted by the house.

My colleague, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, during the last session moved such a reasoned amendment with respect to a bill to establish an Indian claims commission, in which he said the house should not proceed to pass the bill but should develop a policy which differed from that set out in the bill. That particular so-called reasoned amendment was accepted by the Speaker at that time.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I very well recall during the last session of parliament moving an amendment to a motion for second reading. As far as my understanding of the rules goes, that amendment was on all fours with the one now proposed by my hon. friend from Danforth (Mr. Scott). There was some discussion at the time whether my motion was in order. I cannot recall the exact date. I do know that a member on the government side of the house raised the question whether it was in order and after some consideration of the matter it was ruled by the Chair to be in order.

Mr. Scott: I just want to make a representation on one aspect of your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I refer to the inference that this motion would in some way involve the expenditure of public funds. I hope you will reconsider this ruling because it is a common practice for members on this side of the house to move expressions of opinion which may or may not involve the expenditure of public funds.

We have often moved motions which, if carried, would involve a course of action necessitating the expenditure of public moneys, but it has always been my understanding that this is a proper procedure.

[Mr. Howard.]

Before we moved this amendment we carefully considered the question of whether or not it would be in order. It was only after a careful search of precedents and a comparison between this motion and various others which the Chair has found acceptable that we drafted it in its present terms. I believe that if Your Honour would take this motion again under advisement and compare it with others which have been accepted in the past Your Honour would agree that it is a proper one, not one which should be ruled out of order.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Témiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word on this matter. There is no question that if we were recommending that the government purchase this company there would be an expenditure of money involved. However, the amendment is carefully worded so that the government ownership could be established in other ways. This company is an efficient and wealthy company. There are many ways in which the government could assume control without making any financial investment in it.

In the present case this could be done by taking over the undistributed shares which are available at the present time. As my hon. friend from Skeena has pointed out, only some 5 million out of 40 million are outstanding at the present time. The rest are treasury stock. If the government were to decide to take it over by taking over these 35 million shares, it would exercise control and no expenditure would have been incurred.

I suggest there are a number of ways in which the intention of this amendment could be carried out without the government incurring expenditure. The amendment merely says:

> —that in the opinion of this house Interprovincial Pipe Line Company be brought under public ownership.

This could be done if the government were to take control of the undistributed stock which the company holds. The argument that the exercise of control would involve the expenditure of public money is not necessarily sound. Moreover, as a result of action taken following other measures in the past the government has been able to obtain control over a company, or control during its operation of a short range program, without the expenditure of money. I would remind hon. members of the circumstances in which control was obtained in the case of the Canadian National Railway by issuing government stock and bonds to the Grand Trunk Railway at the time of the formation of the C.N.R. No large outlay of money was made, though it is true fairly large contributions were made later over a period of time.

Much of the government's contribution when the Grand Trunk Railway was taken over took the form of an assumption of responsibility for stock. In addition, large grants of land were made. Thus the government of the day was able to take over and finance the Canadian National Railway without spending large sums of money. I suggest that this amendment in its present form does not really call for the spending of money since it does not suggest how money should be spent, if it is to be spent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is the considered opinion of the Chair that if the second part of this amendment were carried out there would be a financial obligation on the Crown. I would point out to the hon. member that in the explanatory notes to the bill the following statement appears in the first sentences:

> The purpose of this bill is to divide each of the 40,000,000 authorized shares of the par value of $5.00 each of the capital stock of the company into five shares of the par value of $1.00 each.

In other words, the principle of the bill is a division of shares. May I quote from citation 203 (1), page 171 of Beauchesne, fourth edition.

> It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed.

I would also draw attention to what is said on page 527 of May, seventeenth edition.

> The principle of relevancy in an amendment governs every such motion. The amendment must "strictly relate to the bill which the House, by its order, has resolved upon considering"—

In the case now before us the house is resolved upon considering the dividing of the shares of this particular company. The second part of the hon. member's amendment is not relevant to that principle. I therefore rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. Scott: May I call it seven o'clock?

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being seven o'clock, the hour for private members' business has expired and the house will resume the business that was interrupted at six o'clock.

BANK ACT AND QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

EXTENSION OF CHARTERS TO DECEMBER 1, 1966

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for the second reading of Bill No. C-3, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am rising again on the question of privilege that was raised before the house went on to consider private members' business, and before discussion began on the Bank Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before the proceedings were interrupted at six o'clock did not the Minister of Finance have the floor?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. I had concluded my remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: I hope someone will inform the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that this matter is being discussed, since neither of them are in their seats at the moment. I am doing this because of the fact that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), was absent from the city and absent from the house when comments were made outside the house reflecting on his conduct as prime minister and because of the comments made this afternoon in the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is in some doubt as to what is the point of privilege being raised by the hon. member for Yukon. Does it deal with the bill before the house at the moment?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am availing myself of the first opportunity to raise a point of privilege which has not been raised specifically this afternoon, or this day, with respect to the Leader of the Opposition. He being absent I intend to raise this question of privilege not only on his behalf but because it affects the privileges of all members of the house. This being the first available opportunity to raise it, I propose to put it to you now, sir.

The Minister of Justice this afternoon made a statement not only—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before the hon. gentleman goes too far perhaps he would state what his point of personal privilege is.

Question of Privilege

Mr. Nielsen: If Your Honour will permit me, that is what I was proceeding to do. Beauchesne, citation 108(3) at page 98 indicates the importance of libels on members of the house. Beauchesne says that they have been "constantly punished," and further he says:

—the libel must be based on matters arising in the actual transaction of the business of the house.

The Minister of Justice made charges, both in and out of parliament, which, if allowed to stand constitute a libel on the former prime minister of this country and every member of his government. He stated that the Leader of the Opposition had acted improperly in a security matter of which, because of his position as Minister of Justice, he is assumed by all members of the house to have particular knowledge.

Now, sir, I believe that this is a grave and serious libel, and that truth is the only defence to it. I say the minister, and this is the nub of the question of privilege, is called upon now to prove the truth of these statements in the house. It cannot be done by a committee. The charges were not made in a committee. They were made by the minister on his own responsibility, both in the house and outside it, in the enjoyment of all of his privilege as a minister of the crown and as a member of the Privy Council. He, and he alone, must accept the responsibility for the insinuations which he has raised and the charges which he has made.

All of these matters, as the minister pointed out, arose out of the consideration of his estimates and thus, "in the actual transaction of the business of the house." Some arose immediately and others were compounded by the minister's statements outside the house as well as by his further statements here today when he said, and he repeated, sir, that the conduct of the Leader of the Opposition should be the subject of a royal commission inquiry.

Having gone that far, and he took it upon his own responsibility to proceed that far, he is now, I submit, under an obligation, under a ministerial duty as a member of the government and as possessor of the portfolio which he holds, to go farther and to say upon what these basest of charges are founded. I say, sir, if he does not do this, which he has an obligation to do, then he must resign.

In further support of the question of privilege I raise, the responsibility of a member for his words is a basic principle of parliament. This principle must be enforced by parliament; and it must be enforced I submit, sir, with or without a motion. The minister must answer for the words which he has used.

I hope, sir, that as a man of honour, as a man of integrity, he would not continue to hide behind the rules of the house, but that he would rise and detail his charges against a former prime minister of this country, charges which he made this afternoon and charges to which I refer this day at the first opportunity.

Now, sir, the despicable charges and the allegations which have been made by the minister outside the house, reflecting on the former Conservative government and upon the former prime minister today, carried by all of the nation's news media, are a matter of such importance, of such urgency that they demand immediate attention by the house.

We have witnessed today the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp)—

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am not an expert on the rules, but on a point of order I would just like to know whether it is in order for the hon. member to interrupt the normal business of the house in this way.

Mr. Nielsen: I submit to Your Honour that a point of privilege always takes precedence over any point of order. This afternoon the Minister of Finance, and others, attempted to use the rules to delay the bringing of this very important and urgent matter before the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; I have already taken the liberty of bringing to the attention of the hon. member for Yukon that he should not impute motives, and again I bring this to his attention. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), during discussion and consideration of an item of business before the house, made a speech and no hon. member, I suggest, can impute that the speech was made for any other purpose than to enlighten the house. The hon. member should not impute motives.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, Mr. Speaker, anyone who was in the house this afternoon can draw his own conclusions on that matter.

That this matter is a matter of urgent public importance, and that it constitutes a dastardly reflection on every member of the former government, on members of the house who are privy councillors, and upon the Leader of the Opposition, there can be no doubt. It cannot be dealt with in any other way because the minister himself carefully waited until his estimates went through before saying at a press conference what he did not dare say in this parliament.

The minister's action constitutes a breach of national security, and as such is a matter of urgent public importance and must be dealt with, I submit, sir, here and now. No other house business, no other matter of debate can take priority over the wholesale slandering, for that is what I submit it is, of a former government and a former prime minister by one holding the responsibility of a minister of justice. The minister has an obligation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; I heard the hon. member this afternoon when he made his first contribution to this debate and, raised the matter which he considered a question of privilege, which was followed by a motion. I find it very difficult to see any difference between the question of privilege he is raising at this time and the one he raised this afternoon.

I know he might argue now that we are dealing with a different privy councillor and that every single privy councillor has a separate question of privilege. This is probably the only argument on which he can justify his entering into a debate a second time; but I should like him to take account of the fact that he has already participated in this question of privilege. I suggest the motion very properly was allowed to stand for a short while. I think the hon. member would want to consider the possibility that the motion the hon. member has already moved should be considered by the Chair. If I may say so, he is trying to duplicate his personality in the house and say that he made a motion before on behalf of one privy councillor and that he could again make a motion on behalf of not this one but another one. I have some doubt whether the hon. member can make six speeches, each time on behalf of a different privy councillor. This is beyond my comprehension; certainly, it does not appear to be very logical. Therefore, unles the hon. member is making a different contribution from that which he made this afternoon, I doubt whether he has a real question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, since you raised the matter, and since Your Honour was not in the chair when I initially raised the matter this evening, I point out to you, with deference, that I am rising this evening on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition, who is not present in the house.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to complicate things for the hon. gentleman, but I realize he is rising on behalf of another member of the house; this is the point I am making. He is rising on behalf of another privy councillor who may feel aggrieved by the remarks which have been made by the Minister of Justice. This was my point. I wonder whether the hon. member, after he has completed his presentation now on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition, then might get up a third time and say that this time he is speaking on behalf of a third privy councillor. I doubt whether this can be done.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not have to rise on behalf of any particular member of the privy council in this house. The only submission I have made to you this evening is on the basis that a prima facie case of privilege exists, and there has been no debate whatsoever in respect of the merits of the fundamental question of privilege raised which has to be decided by the house and, with great deference, sir, only by the house.

I am rising this evening at the first opportunity because the matter has not been placed before Your Honour previously. On this question of privilege, I should like to draw Your Honour's attention to the words used by the Minister of Justice this afternoon when he suggested to you, sir, and this house that the conduct of the former prime minister of this country should be made the subject of a royal commission inquiry.

I submit, sir, that that is an entirely distinct and separate question of privilege which has arisen as a result of the proceedings this afternoon, and not as a result of any proceedings during the minister's estimates or anything he may have said outside the house; indeed, it is additional. The minister has simply dug himself in deeper by his remarks this afternoon. I say, sir, that he cannot hide behind such wholesale smears, slanders, and allegations without fulfilling the obligation he has to make known the full facts. He has that duty and that responsibility. He must make his charges, having gone as far as he was allowed to go this afternoon in this house and outside it. He is assumed, sir, by the public as well as by the members of this house, to be in possession of the facts and to be making charges based on substance. He must, therefore, state to the members of the house what those charges are. If he does not do that, sir, then he is under an obligation by our procedures to resign. That is the position in which he is.

Public life would be impossible, if a minister in full possession of his ministerial authority were able to make this kind of a charge about members of this house past and present, about privy councillors and about a former Prime Minister of this country without being required to substantiate and prove them. He must name names, and he must reveal the full circumstances. No more serious charges have been made by a minister in this country.

According to the press and the radio, the minister has involved, without naming them, members of the previous government, the Leader of the Opposition, privy councillors, and I think a woman whom he says was formerly involved in espionage in East Germany. He has stated there was a report on the matter on the files of the R.C.M.P., although he has not seen that report. He has stated that the case was a bona fide security case, although he has not said it very well. He has made the charge that the former Prime Minister did not deal in a proper manner with that case. How does he know, if he has not seen the file?

He has made these charges after his estimates were passed and at a time when he knew the former Prime Minister was absent from this city. The minister's conduct constitutes a deplorable dereliction of his high office and a dastardly attack on the former Prime Minister, a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council, and every member of the former Conservative government, some of whom are still sitting in this house and who are Privy Councillors.

I submit, to you, sir, and to the house, that this must be dealt with by parliament and must be dealt with by parliament immediately, because the shabby, sordid and underhanded action which it constitutes is one which must not be allowed to be interrupted by any other order of business. The minister now must back up in this house what he said to the press outside this house, and back up in this house the charges he made against the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon.

The Prime Minister of this country is not free from responsibility. A public action of this kind by a member of the cabinet must represent the considered determination of the government. The Prime Minister and the government must accept the minister's action or repudiate it. The minister acted following a meeting of the cabinet.

The whole government is involved in a course which has been reprehensible. It is a course of action which has been cowardly, and it is a course of action which has been lacking in the most elementary sense of justice or responsibility. I hear members over there make remarks concerning past proceedings of this house with regard to myself when I brought certain charges.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Nielsen: This is a question of privilege and surely it supersedes—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may raise his point of order.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, no remarks whatever were being made from this side of the house.

An hon. Member: You just came in.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member is stating something about the proceedings in the house at the moment which is not true. There was no sound of interruption whatever.

An hon. Member: You were only coming in.

Mr. Nielsen: If an ordinary member of parliament had made such charges as were made by the minister this afternoon, and outside of this house, he would be required to substantiate them, and I am one who has particular knowledge. I see the Parliamentary Secretary laughing. He would be required to substantiate them. A minister's responsibility certainly is that much greater, and that responsibility does not cease once he leaves this chamber and holds a press conference. He has been meeting with the press and he has been giving out information in dribs and drabs, even prior to the allegations he made this morning.

The Globe and Mail this morning carries an interview with the minister in which he says "the Munsinger case is worse than the Profumo case". This statement is in the papers this evening in Ottawa.

• (7:20 p.m.)

In what way is it worse? Profumo lied to parliament. Does the minister say that someone here lied to parliament? Does he say the former prime minister lied to parliament or that any Privy Councillor lied to parliament?

According to the press, officials of the minister's department a day or two ago were making available, to certain reporters, information directly from the file on this case. The minister says he has not seen the file. On what basis can he blacken the reputation of a whole government and a former prime minister? This, sir, is outright slander and it ill behooves the minister who holds the portfolio of justice to engage in such tactics.

In so far as the public is concerned, and in so far as parliament is concerned, the presumption is that when a minister of justice speaks he has access to full information. The whole weight of his office is placed behind the charges he has made. He must now substantiate them. It is his obligation as a minister, as a member of the government and as a man of honour and integrity, to substantiate the charges he made outside and inside the house against the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and other Privy Councillors, and remove the cloud that is hanging over the heads of some of the members of the previous government.

Mr. Speaker, if the minister is not prepared to do this he must resign. The minister's action in this case, his leaking of information to the press, his calling a press conference to place in the public domain suggestions, insinuations and allegations which he dare not make in this house, demonstrates his unfitness for the position he holds and his total failure to grasp even a glimmering of the responsibility of that position.

The minister cannot be allowed to get away with this kind of action. This parliament must not allow him to get away with this kind of action. To countenance the method he has used would mean that none in political life would be free from insidious and cowardly attacks, without substantiation, at any time. Parliament cannot, I submit, be reduced to that state.

This is not a question of supporting accusations, with respect to the comments of the Chair this afternoon, against a minister. This is a question of dealing with the fact that the minister both in this House and outside has made charges, insinuations and allegations affecting members of this House, namely, the Leader of the Opposition and the members of the former cabinet, some of whom are sitting here this evening.

The request before us raises an issue as to the responsibility of a member of this House to substantiate charges.

Mr. Duquet: Did you, in respect of bankruptcies?

Mr. Nielsen: My hon. friend is new in this house. The charges which I brought were made the subject of a commission, and I had the distinct honour of being in the presence of Mr. Justice Dorion prior to his findings.

Mr. Duquet: I hope you keep that honour.

Mr. Nielsen: The question before us is one dealing with the fact that a minister, both inside this house and outside, made insinuations and allegations against the Leader of the Opposition and members of his former cabinet. He must substantiate the charges he made, just as those members on the other side obliged me to do with respect to matters raised in 1964. I submit that responsibility falls more heavily upon a minister, and heaviest of all on the Minister of Justice, since this is claimed to be a matter involving national security. Those are my submissions, sir. You have two motions before you and I am prepared to move a third with respect to this specific question of privilege that has been raised by me in the absence of the Leader of the Opposition regarding statements made when he was not in this house, nay even in this city to defend himself against despicable and insidious charges on the part of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must say again that the essence of the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Yukon does not differ greatly from those raised this afternoon, inasmuch as we are dealing again with the same statements made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin).

Mr. Nielsen: It is a new one.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon says it is a new one. There were certain statements made by the Minister of Justice in the house this afternoon. There may have been more made since then, but I have not heard of them. My understanding is that we are dealing with the statements made in the house this afternoon and that those statements were the subject of the discussion in the house this afternoon.

As the hon. member states, there are two motions now before the Chair. According to our procedures there really should be only one. However, as a result of the way things were taking place during the course of the afternoon, the Chair found itself in the position of having two motions. It would be highly irregular to entertain a third.

I think the suggestion was agreed to by hon. members this afternoon that the Chair be given an opportunity, as is always given to a Speaker, to consider this serious matter and to look into the motions to see whether they should be received, whether they are in order and to render a decision to the house.

We must also take into account the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has put a motion to adjourn the house at eight o'clock for the precise purpose of giving the Chair an opportunity to look into these matters.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: In my view we should wait until the motion is put to the house. If the house is adjourned the Chair will then have an opportunity to think about all these things. I might say, to be very candid, that is what I would like to do. That is what I tried to do to the best of my ability during the dinner hour. I thought I would have an opportunity then to study these matters, but it was brought to my attention in the Speaker's chambers that a new question of privilege had been raised and it was suggested that I come back to the chamber. I apologize to the hon. member for Yukon if I was a few minutes late, but I did not expect this turn of events.

I think the situation is clear. There are two motions before the Chair. There was general agreement this afternoon that the Chair should be given an opportunity to look into them. The motion put by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was put for that very purpose. It will be voted on at eight o'clock and if it is carried I will have the opportunity of looking into the matter so that I may render a decision tomorrow. If it is not carried, I hope I will still have a chance to return to my chambers to consider the very serious suggestions that were made this afternoon and this evening by the hon. member for Yukon. I believe hon. members have an obligation to the Speaker to allow him to study matters of this kind. I am not a learned member of this House of Commons. I have been here just a few years and I am guided by the older members and other experienced people who have been here for some time. They assure me that it is normal for hon. members to give their Speaker, the man they have elected to this job, an opportunity to look into this type of matter. If hon. members refuse to give me an opportunity to return to my chambers I will remain here but, as I have suggested, they have an obligation to give me an opportunity to study the matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the questions before Your Honour deal with whether or not the two motions are in order and, as I had the occasion to say this afternoon,—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will just say one thing more. If the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) feels the Chair should not have the opportunity of returning to the Speaker's chambers to consider this matter, I will stay and listen to the hon. member.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I feel that you should have an opportunity, but I wish to say something about that opportunity. It is my view that the question of whether the motion is or is not in order does not dispose of the main question of privilege which was raised this afternoon, or the question of privilege which was raised this evening.

There are several methods by which the house might deal with this question of privilege. Two motions are before Your Honour, either one or both of which may be found to be out of order, or Your Honour may decide that they are in order. With all due respect, sir, that does not solve the problem. That is only part of the problem with which the house is now dealing. I submit that had Your Honour ruled immediately and found one or other motion in order, it would not have finished the debate on the question of privilege; it would just have made sure that we knew exactly the procedure we were following in order to deal with the questions of privilege which have been raised.

I submit, with all due respect, that the decision the house arrived at this afternoon was that there was a prima facie case of privilege. The next step, since there is a question of privilege raised by an hon. member, is this: What is the best way for the house to deal with the question of privilege? I suggest, sir, that it is a transgression of the privileges of members of this house that we are now attempting to solve. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) found it necessary to raise a new one in order to revive the debate. I presume that in accordance with a strict application of the rules, I should speak only on the question of privilege raised by that hon. member. However, since the question involves the privileges of many members it is certainly the most orderly and business-like procedure to discuss the whole question, without undue regard for the niceties of the rules.

Mr. Speaker: I point out to the hon. member that the rules are more than niceties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The rules have to be respected by every hon. member, including the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. There is one question before the house. The hon. member feels that he has a right to discuss it. I am not going to deprive him of this right, but I hope he will discuss this matter within the rules.

Mr. Nugent: I assure Your Honour that I shall try and stick strictly to the rules. I was perhaps a little careless in what I said. What I meant to say was this. Since the various questions of privilege are so intertwined, it is difficult to restrict one's remarks and make sure that they apply only to the question of privilege just raised, rather than including the remarks made this afternoon.

The matter before the house as a question of privilege deals fundamentally, I think, with the responsibility of one member of this house toward another in the sort of remarks he can make and the sort of attacks he can make on another member either in his capacity as a private member, as a member of the cabinet or as the Prime Minister, depending upon the member's status at the particular time.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nugent: Yes, sir.

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member referred to the fact that these statements were made in the house. Great attention has been drawn earlier today to the fact that certain statements were made outside the house today. Is it not a fact that any member who has cause to complain about statements made outside the house can resort to the courts?

Mr. Nielsen: The question I raised involved statements made inside the house.

Mr. Nugent: I thought I said "statements made inside and outside the house" because sometimes a statement made outside the house could only have meaning if it were made inside the house. You have to consider it as a course of conduct followed between members of the house. I submit that the most serious question that we in this house have to consider is the responsibility—

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nugent: I would prefer not to hear another argument from the minister at this time.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member answer the question?

Mr. Nugent: I would prefer not to hear another argument from the minister at this time. I thought that he wished to put a question, but he made an argument. I trust that if he wants to take part in the debate he will grant me the courtesy of finishing my remarks about what I consider to be the responsibility here, and then we may hear from him. The responsibility of the Minister of Justice is, I submit, the business of everyone in this house and statements made by him concern the responsibility of all members.

I know Your Honour had considerable difficulty this afternoon and said that it was possible you might have question of privilege after question of privilege and we would not get very much farther. I submit the matter is so serious that it is the business of this house and is worth the time of this house, if necessary, to consider every question of privilege involved in the minister's action and deal with them one after another until the minister learns his responsibility to this house.

I submit that there are many questions of privilege that have not yet been raised by individual Privy Councillors. In addition, there are questions of privilege that can be raised by every member of this house if we take our duties seriously and take the words "responsible government" seriously. "Responsible government" implies that the government is responsible to this house. It is our duty as members of this house to make sure that the government acts in a responsible manner to this house.

The hon. member for Yukon pointed out very clearly the entire cabinet responsibility for the statements and actions of the Minister of Justice. The government now in power in this country is entitled to run the country only so long as it has the confidence of this house, and we have the right to support them and give them our confidence only so long as the government carries out its duties in a responsible manner. Let us consider just one statement made by the Minister of Justice today. I ask any serious-minded member of this house to try and tell me this is the statement of a responsible minister. The Minister of Justice makes the sort of allegations which leave many former cabinet members under a cloud. He places a serious smear on the reputation of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) by saying that he improperly used his office when Prime Minister. He tells this house that he learned something about this conduct, but has the effrontery while making these grave charges, and making sure that he hits the headlines both inside and outside the house by reason of his statements, to say there is an R.C.M.P. report that he has not even seen.

Would this not offend the sensibilities of any member who wishes to go back to his constituency and say that he has conscientiously carried out his duty as a member of parliament to make sure there is a responsible government in this country? Here is a Minister of Justice who takes that sort of action and blandly tells this house, to the applause of the Liberal backbenchers, that he has not even bothered to read a report which may clear up all those misgivings in his mind or may substantiate them. The Minister of Justice was invited by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to bring this report forward. He mentioned this last Friday. He has called press conferences. He has made these statements again today and tells us there is a report. Then he says he has not even seen it.

I ask all hon. members of this house who believe in responsible government if they are going to abandon their duty to make sure the government acts responsibly. What hon. member on either side of the house would call this a responsible government? What hon. member would suggest there is more serious business for this house to consider right now than the conduct of this government? It is not just the Minister of Justice but also the Prime Minister and his cabinet members who are concerned. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the most serious questions affecting this house are those matters which go to the root of our system of government. Democratic government can only survive if you and I, the elected members of this house, are conscious of and conscientious about our duty to keep the government responsible to this house. We have a responsibility to those who elected us. We have to answer. What did we let the government get away with?

I am submitting that when the government officially allows a minister to act in this manner, it is our duty to make sure that all else ceases till the position is made clear. I would move a motion now that we go into committee of the whole house if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) would like to bring the facts forward and explain them. In committee of the whole, witnesses could be brought before the bar of the house and examined. If the facts are such as alleged by the Minister of Justice—that the former Prime Minister mishandled his office—then obviously the Minister of Justice should take this course, and I want to give him the opportunity of so doing. When he makes such allegations he has a duty to this house to prove them.

Mr. Nielsen: It is an accusation.

Mr. Nugent: I would move the motion now if I thought there was any hope of the Minister of Justice complying.

As I understand the position on the other side of the house, it is that it is perfectly all right for Privy Councillors to live under the suspicion that perhaps they are the ones who behaved so very badly, while all the time the Minister of Justice has a file, which he has not bothered to look at, which would clear the matter up. It is perfectly in agreement with Liberal principles that those Privy Councillors should be stained in that way, shall I say. This is what hon. members opposite are saying.

I could raise a question of privilege of my own very simply. I come to this house as a member with a duty I want to uphold. I do not believe that my position in this house should subject me to the witnessing of the sword of insinuation or accusation being directed toward these Privy Councillors by the Minister of Justice. I could raise a question of personal privilege as to whether I, as an elected member of parliament, must sit in this house at the same time as another member of the house who acts in this way. I believe that would be a very proper question of privilege for the house to consider.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) seems rather amused at my statement. I suppose the question of responsible government is a laughing matter with the Prime Minister because we have certainly seen very little of it under his tenure of office. I hope that the Prime Minister, who speaks for a government which seems to make accusations so easily and withhold the evidence, will tell us whether or not he is proud of that party of his which is going to back up this kind of action.

Individual hon. members on the other side who jeered so loudly this afternoon might rise in their places one by one and tell the house whether they really believe they are doing their duty to their constituents by backing a government which says it will smear people and not even bother to look at the evidence. The Minister of Justice says he has the files, yet he has not looked at them. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, making serious slanders in view of that statement? Can you imagine any responsible person asking a whole group of people to live under that sort of cloud of insinuation, while at the same time the admission is made that there is a file in existence which may clear up the whole matter, a file at which the Minister of Justice has not even bothered to look.

The question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, concerns responsibility to this house. The government is responsible to the house, and we as members are also responsible.

An hon. Member: You mean irresponsible.

Mr. Nugent: I heard someone say "irresponsible". Since the hon. member sits on the other side of the house I gather he is speaking for the Liberals. It is true that when you talk of yourselves you do talk of irresponsibility.

I am not satisfied with the action taken by the minister. I am not satisfied that in this case the action of the government constitutes responsible government. My duty, as I see it, as a member is to insist on responsibility from the government. If we do not get it I am going to do my darndest to get rid of the government. I will continue to fight because this is the No. 1 priority item.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nugent: I realize a bunch of trained seals are not very interested in democracy. They are willing to sit back, take orders, jump up and down, and so on.

An hon. Member: You are one yourself.

Mr. Nugent: I never was, nor will I be. I ask any one of those who have interjected to stand up and say they believe this a proper course of conduct for the minister to follow.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Nugent: The hon. member can have the floor as soon as I have finished.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I believe there is a question of privilege being raised. We have many questions of privilege before us at the moment, but we are dealing at the present time with the one on which the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) is speaking.

[Translation]

The hon. member cannot rise at this time when we are considering a question of privilege. If he is raising a point of order, I could recognize him. But we must try to dispose of questions of privilege seriatim.

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): I raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I am pointing out to hon. members—

Mr. Speaker: Order; the hon. member is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker, the member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent), has been inviting us in the last few minutes, especially those whom he calls the backbenchers, to express our views about the government's conduct.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I presume the invitation of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is mainly rhetorical. For the moment, I would suggest that we allow him to proceed with his remarks.

[English]

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, it is encouraging that at least one of the backbenchers is apparently concerned with the responsibility of government, and we might look forward to his participation in the debate, instead of this wild desk pounding each time a scurrilous remark is made.

I will close with this observation. If this is responsible government I ask any member who can do so to explain to me how the conduct of the Minister of Justice can be called responsible. I would dearly love to hear that explanation. I would especially like to hear him explain how so many members of this house, Privy Council members, can be put under a cloud. The minister tells us he has a file on the matter which he has not even seen. How can that be responsible government? I certainly hope some hon. members will take this opportunity.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a long time ago I learned never to speak at any length when I was full of indignation. Therefore, my words here tonight are going to be very few in speaking to this question of privilege.

There has been an unholy slander against a group of men who have served Her Majesty well in this country. The matter can be settled and it can be settled at once if the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) will act as a Prime Minister. I ask the right hon. gentleman for Algoma East to act as a Prime Minister.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question? What does he mean by "acting"? Does he mean recommending the establishment of a judicial inquiry into this matter?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The right hon. gentleman knows perfectly well what I mean. I want him to bring his Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) into the house and make him prove the charges which he has made against a number of people, or else resign his seat. Let the right hon. gentleman act as a Prime Minister.

Mr. Pearson: Would my hon. friend be satisfied with having the Minister of Justice appear before a judicial inquiry, together with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and all those concerned with this matter? Is that what he means by action?

• (7:50 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: The rules require the minister to make his choice.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pearson: No, no—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have the floor. I say that this has gone beyond a judicial inquiry. This is something the high court of parliament must settle, and I say that right here. Let us go into committee of the whole and let us allow the Minister of Justice to present his evidence now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Nugent.]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Let him present the evidence in this house, and let us be the judges. We are the people who have been elected to be the judges of the situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I would, sir, move such a motion. Mr. Speaker, you have enough motions before you, but I will present to you what I think is the correct motion in this house, a motion that will show the moral indignation in this house, which should be felt by 265 hon. members. My motion is that the house do now resolve itself into committee of the whole in order that hon. members may have an opportunity to examine the Minister of Justice, so that he may advise the committee what evidence he has to substantiate the charges made inside and outside this chamber which have reflected unfortunately and improperly upon members of Her Majesty's Privy Council. In the event he fails to substantiate such charges then the hon. minister should be called upon to submit his resignation and to atone by the forfeiture of his seat.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That, sir, is the motion I am prepared to make in this house. I say to you, and I say to the right hon. gentleman from Algoma East, he has an obligation to do something to settle what has happened today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): He has an obligation. Let him live up to the tradition of his office. He is the fourteenth man to hold that office, and he is about to be the first man to disgrace the office if he does not do anything.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask my hon. friend a question. If there is a recommendation made in this house for the establishment of a judicial committee, to inquire into all these matters which have been talked about, will he support it?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I will support an investigation in this parliament tonight.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Bring the Minister of Justice in here. Bring in the man who has not even reviewed the file. Bring him in, and let him swear to it. Let him tell his story. He has so cowardly fled from the chamber. And what has he been ready to do? He has been ready to smear men of honour, men who have served the crown well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Sir, may I ask the Prime Minister a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will allow the hon. member for Ontario to speak.

Mr. Starr: I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of what he has intimated the government might be prepared to do, and would get support on, which is the establishment of a judicial inquiry, does the Prime Minister intend that the aspersions that have been cast should remain until the judicial inquiry meets, hears witnesses and brings in findings? Is this what he means?

Mr. Churchill: That is what he wants; to postpone everything.

Mr. Pearson: I believe that there have been all sorts of statements made in the house this afternoon, and allegations made inside and outside the house. I ask the hon. member who was so very indignant a few moments ago because we would not do anything about it, if the government moved a motion in this parliament for the establishment of a judicial inquiry, which is what they wanted in the Spencer case and this is a matter which concerns security—would the opposition support it?

Mr. Starr: May I ask this question of the Prime Minister, and I ask the Prime Minister if he would answer it for me? Does he intend then under this procedure to allow this stigma to hang over the heads of all those who were at that time in the government, until the findings are made? Does he agree that that should be the case?

Mr. Pearson: I wonder if my hon. friend would consider some of the stigma that he and his friends have imposed on us in recent months, as a government, and whether he thought at that time there should be a parliamentary inquiry into the statement, for instance, of the Leader of the Opposition who said not very long ago, "A vote for the Liberal government will mean an open season for organized crime in Canada".

Did he ask for a parliamentary inquiry then?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Why does not the right hon. gentleman just act like an ordinary Prime Minister?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I think possibly we have had a clear indication in these last two or three minutes of what the real sickness of this parliament is.

Some hon. Members: You. You.

Mr. Hamilton: You have a man who has the title of Prime Minister treating this house in a smart alec way on a very serious—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that there are institutions which have to be respected in this house, and I ask him to limit his remarks, as I have asked the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent), to the question of privilege which was raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

There is a very special piece of business to be considered at the moment, and the rules of relevance insist that we should limit our comments to the matter now before the house.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I think you are aware that the statement we are objecting to on this question of privilege was made by the Minister of Justice today who said in this house that the conduct of the Leader of the Opposition should be the subject of a royal commission. He stated that when he was minister in another department, which we have to assume was the Department of National Defence, he heard rumours or stories which he repeated today in his press conference outside the house.

My question is why, if the Minister of Justice has held these views for several months now, has kept this knowledge to himself for all this time, did he not do his duty when he was Associate Minister of the Department of National Defence and lay these serious charges then?

How can a man stand up and be credible in this house when he claims he has had this knowledge for many months, but has waited until today to use it.

I now charge this Minister of Justice with taking part—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to section (3) of Standing Order 6 it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings.

At 6.05 p.m. this day, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), moved:

That the house do now adjourn.

And the Chair having proposed to put the question thereon, more than five hon. members rose to object to the taking of a vote.

Division

Accordingly pursuant to Section (3), Standing Order 6, the vote on the said motion was postponed until 8.00 o'clock p.m.

The house is therefore deemed to have reverted to "private members' business" for such time as is necessary for the taking of the vote.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed?

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen.

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Knowles) which was negatived on the following division.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Nicholson: I was paired, Mr. Speaker. Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, before we voted on the motion to adjourn, I was trying to make one or two points. I should like to repeat them in simple form. The first is that we have had a statement by the Minister of Justice that, by its very nature, puts all of us on the front bench of the Conservative party in a situation where we are guilty by association. This is pure, undiluted, plain and simple McCarthyism.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton: The technique of McCarthy was to call for an investigation before his committee and name a whole series of suspects. Until those persons had given their evidence, until the report was received, they were guilty in the minds of many people. This government and the Prime Minister, by condoning the action of the Minister of Justice have laid themselves open to the charge of McCarthyism by every freedom loving person across Canada.

The second point I want to make on this question of privilege is that the minister, by his own confession, has stated that he obtained this information when he was in another department. He has only been in three departments. He was Associate Minister of National Defence, he was Minister of Public Works and now he is Minister of Justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: If he found out anything that in his opinion was close to treason when he was Associate Minister of National Defence, why did he not speak up then? If he had this information for all those months that he was Minister of Public Works and sat along with these others in the cabinet, why did he not speak up then? He has been Minister of Justice now for several months and he has not spoken. Instead he waited until the man he wanted to attack was out of his place in this house and out of the city.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Hamilton: The Minister of Justice is like a sick animal in the forest.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; I would ask the hon. member to keep in mind the proprieties of this house and to consider the expressions that he uses. There are some expressions that are not accepted as good, parliamentary expressions. I urge the hon. member to keep this in mind.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, there is an expression to the effect that when the bulls come into the pasture, the calves and the cows go to the corner. If the Minister of Justice takes offence at any of my remarks, he knows his recourse. This man, it is evident to all of us, feels hurt that he has been attacked in this house.

An hon. Member: Persecuted.

Mr. Hamilton: He feels hurt because things that have been said to him have hurt his sensitivities, and the only thing he can think of is to bite back.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton: He forgets, in the rough and tumble of this house, who the man is who started this.

Some hon. Members: Nielsen.

Mr. Hamilton: The Minister of Justice sat on this side of the house and without provocation made certain statements. Now, when he is in the government and is paying the penalty for his rashness, he cannot stand up like a man and take it; he must bite back like a forest animal that has rabies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton: But if an animal in the forest has rabies—

Mr. Nielsen: You put him out of his misery.

Mr. Hamilton: —and bites everything in sight, that animal, if it comes close to human habitation, is put out of his misery. The man who can put the Minister of Justice out of his misery is the Prime Minister. Just because the sensitivities of one small man in this house—

Some hon. Members: You.

An hon. Member: And Nielsen.

Mr. Hamilton: —are hurt and his ego has been deflated, he does this awful thing. He charges many people with something he knows is not true. The minute the minister says "two or more cabinet members" he knows there must be some in that cabinet who are not guilty of the charge that he lays. All we ask him to do is name names and get us out of this position; suffer the consequences, be a man and resign his seat in the house.

Mr. Nielsen: That is the position in which he is.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Hamilton: When this period of our history is written the Minister of Justice will not suffer; he will just be forgotten for his smallness of mind. But the man who has dragged down his party, his government and his country is the Prime Minister. Rather than face the fact which the country knows to be true, namely that his cabinet is divided, and get rid of those who will not behave as the custom of this house dictates, he will abide anything. From the action of the Prime Minister today, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be denied that he is the one who will pay the price. All he is doing now is trying to extend by a few hours, a week or maybe a few months his tenure of office. He does not dare take the long walk to the Governor General's residence.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I respectfully ask Your Honour whether a motion is before the house; and, if there is not, what are we now discussing?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member was in the house earlier this afternoon or this evening he will remember that the Chair expressed the opinion there were already two motions before the house, that there should not be a third one and that we should not be considering the matter any further. I asked for the assistance and co-operation of hon. members, but that co-operation has not been extended.

At the moment the house is considering a question of privilege which was raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). The hon. member for Yukon made the point—and I respect the point that he made—that this was a separate question of privilege. He has spoken on the question and I had assumed that hon. members who have taken part in the debate since then have been referring themselves to that question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Yukon this afternoon.

Mr. Lewis: May I raise a further point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is there any way in which you or we can avoid spending any more time this evening in personal attack and personal dirt?

Mr. Hamilton: I know how you feel, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. gentleman who has just sat down is not under the charge that some of us here are. Let him go home to his wife and family and endure what we have to endure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ricard: All they are interested in is ruining the reputation of others.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) has the floor.

Mr. Hamilton: I was rising in reply to the statement by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who does not seem to appreciate that there is a matter of more serious portent here than the question of a few minutes of time. This is a matter concerning the rights of the members of this house, and the only place this matter can be settled is here in the House of Commons. It cannot be dragged out over many months in any long investigation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair would appreciate the co-operation of all hon. members to give an opportunity to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle to make his point. The hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, you asked—

Mr. Turner: May I raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) on a point of order.

Mr. Turner: I should like to put a point of order to Your Honour. I thought the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) quite properly asked what question was before the house. It was my understanding that you had reserved consideration of the two motions in order to decide whether or not there was a prima facie case. How is it that hon. members are now addressing the house on these motions at the moment?

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, must we explain to every member who was not present before what has been happening here? Is everyone who comes into the house going to ask what is happening so that they can be put in the picture? I suggest that the minister could have been here had he wanted.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the house is dealing with a question of privilege concerning the events of these past few days.

This afternoon I heard a former minister refer to the situation in which former Conservative ministers find themselves, with all the insinuations and implications made recently.

Perhaps they could be asked if what they have been doing for the last two years was not constant insinuations and implications.

I heard the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) say that he had never heard about the Munsinger case. It proves one thing: that the Leader of the Opposition did not keep his ministers informed when he was Prime Minister.

It also proves that the case was not investigated as it should have been and that it has not been completely cleared up, since the ministers were not even aware of it, except, as pointed out by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), the ministers involved at the time.

In my opinion, this matter should certainly be cleared up and the motion as moved this afternoon will not satisfy anyone. While you are going to consider whether the motion is in order, I should like to move an amendment so that you may consider it at the same time as the motion. You will then have all evening to decide if the amendment is just as regular as the motion. With your permission, I move the following amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member moves an amendment to the motion before the house, but it is clear that until that motion has been accepted, no member will be able to move an amendment.

An amendment to a motion cannot be moved as long as a motion is still before the house.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I shall simply outline the amendment to the Conservative motion I should like to move later, so that we may all be enlightened.

The amendment would be along these lines: That every word after the word "immediately" in the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) be deleted and replaced by the following: That the right hon. Prime Minister take such steps as are necessary to establish a judicial inquiry into the security case referred to by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) and by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) on March 4, 1966 at page 2211 of Hansard, and which was also raised by the Minister of Justice in a press conference on March 10, 1966 and which was also referred to by the hon. member from Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) on orders of the day on March 10, 1966, in a question of privilege.

I submit that only a judicial inquiry into the whole Munsinger affair, can inform public opinion and show whether the Minister of Justice was right or wrong in raising a question of security which had to be in force at the time, and only a judicial inquiry will enlighten us on the role and the conduct of the Leader of the Opposition in the Munsinger case.

If the Minister of Justice is asked only to give all his evidence, everything cannot be aired. On the other hand, if a judicial inquiry is held, we will know precisely what was the role of the Leader of the Opposition at the time, whether he acted properly and whether he conducted himself as befits a Prime Minister.

If we were to ask only for a simple statement in the house, we would never have the whole story.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to have you take under advisement the advisability of the amendment I have moved, so that if this amendment is in order, we will have a judicial inquiry on everything that happened on that subject. I feel that a statement would satisfy no one.

In the last two years, the Conservatives have asked for a royal commission or a judicial inquiry at every turn. If it was a good thing each time they did the asking, so why would it not be as good a thing in this case? Would there be a double standard? If it was good in the Spencer case, why would it be bad in the Munsinger case?

I see that some Conservative members are in favour of holding a judicial inquiry in the Munsinger case.

Well, Mr. Speaker, then it would throw light on everything we want to know.

Mr. Speaker, I think that such an inquiry is needed. In view of the fact that a motion and an amendment thereto are before you, even though the latter is not official yet, I think that we could go on to something else.

Everything that will be said from now on will not be very useful. We might as well wait for the findings of an inquiry to know exactly what to think of all that.

That is why I feel that we should now go on to another item—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: —and really discuss the business before the house, because the people of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: —have had enough of that; they want a legislative program, they want to see some work done.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the hon. member is getting farther and farther away from the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) tonight. If he wants to keep on talking, he should limit his remarks to that motion or to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by inviting all hon. members to behave a little more intelligently and come back to what interests the Canadian people; a legislative program for the people, and put a stop to all that dirty and sickening business.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I think perhaps I should put it before my hon. friend for Bow River takes the floor. I would hate to get into the middle of his speech.

Mr. Speaker, like my colleague from York South I am still concerned with what it is we are debating. Your Honour said a moment ago that at seven o'clock the hon. member for Yukon raised what he described as a new question of privilege.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Knowles: Ever since then, except for the time that was taken on the vote, apparently we have been discussing that question of privilege.

I ask Your Honour this question. Is not our practice with respect to a question of privilege this: that an hon. member raises a question of privilege; he might get a bit of support here and there, but at some point early in the proceedings the Chair decides whether or not there is a prima facie case of privilege. If there is, a motion is put and then debate may take place on the motion. It seems to me, and I think this is what bothered my colleague from York South, that we are now having what sounds like a debate on the motion, but the motion has not been put. Do I take it that Your Honour has, by implication, suggested that there is another prima facie case of privilege? It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we should have some ruling before we go on with the debate, which seems to be a debate on a motion which has not yet been put.

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order raised, I refrained from moving the motion because of the two that are already before Your Honour. The motion that I had in mind moving was that this house call upon the Minister of Justice to substantiate the charges and allegations he has made against the Leader of the Official Opposition and members of the former Conservative government, now hon. members in this house.

It is quite a different motion than proposed by Your Honour.

Mr. Speaker: I think I would perhaps agree that the particular point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is well taken. I have brought it to the attention of hon. members before. From a procedural standpoint, we certainly do not appear to be operating according to the standard practice of the house. We have already had two questions of privilege which have been raised, and two motions which have been placed before the house. The hon. member took the floor on the third question of privilege, and we have had a debate since then on that, or I assume on the same question of privilege.

Now to answer the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, there is not so much difference between this particular question of privilege and others raised earlier today that I can reach a different conclusion than that which I reached before, to the effect that there appears to be a prima facie case of privilege. This having been said, recognized and agreed, I wonder whether we can allow the debate to continue on something which we do not have before us: a motion. If the hon. member submits his motion we are in a position where we have three motions before us, and then perhaps we could discuss that.

This is the embarrassing position in which I think we have placed ourselves in the chamber. And this is why I suggested it would have been so much easier to have delayed the matter for a short while. I am not faulting any hon. member for this. I am saying that is the factual position at present.

I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I should like to suggest to hon. members, in view of the fact that we are in the same position as before, that we have these three potential motions, it would be so much easier to allow the matter to stand, to leave it in abeyance until we have a chance to look at the other two motions. This is what I hoped we would do and what I am proposing still hopefully to hon. members. I am hopeful that hon. members will agree with me that that is the best way to handle the matter.

Mr. Nielsen: On the question of order, I wish to make one point, and it is this: my question of privilege raised this evening was confined to the statement made by the minister this afternoon in this house. It is my understanding, and it certainly was the situation in connection with the motion of 1964, that when a minister or an hon. member makes a charge against another hon. member of the house, he must substantiate that. That was the narrow basis in the privilege question and the narrow basis of my motion. If it will assist, I am prepared to put that motion now. I think Your Honour could also take that one under advisement.

Mr. Speaker: I feel that the situation would not be any worse than it is now if we received a third motion. I would be glad to hear it, but the hon. member cannot expect that I will give him a decision on it right now.

Mr. Nielsen: I have already read it to Your Honour. It is moved by myself and seconded by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell).

Mr. Speaker: As I said a moment ago if hon. members want me to put the motion I would consider it along with the other two motions. I recognize that the motion by the hon. member for Yukon has already been placed on the record. I suggest to hon. members that unless somebody has a completely new question of privilege to raise at this time, that we go on with other business.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask with the calmness which I actually do not feel if it is not possible to persuade the right hon. gentleman from Algoma East to act like a Prime Minister in the settling of this matter.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McIlraith: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Just for the sake of clarification, the hon. member for Yukon has been permitted to place his motion before the house without a decision being taken by yourself as to whether it is acceptable. That being so, what is the status of the proposed amendment that was indicated a few moments ago? Is it also to be placed before the house? I suggest it would have to be.

Mr. Speaker: It is still lower on the totem pole. I would think that we should first consider whether any of these motions can be accepted, and if the motion is accepted, whether any member has the right to move an amendment.

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The point of order raised was not just from the hon. member for Yukon, who had a motion. As I indicated to the Chair, I also have a motion that I shall be prepared to move. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) has a motion. However, I think the nub of the question, sir, lies in the suggestion by the Chair that a motion, if it be not in order would stop the debate.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I suggest to Your Honour that there are many questions of privilege which might be raised and many motions which might be put. It is my contention that though a particular motion by one hon. member has been found out of order, this does not dispose of the main point, that is, the question of privilege which has been raised. The Chair has already ruled that this is a question of privilege. The motion is only one solution, intended to show how we should handle this matter. Since there are so many possible motions it is my contention that even if one, two or even three motions were out of order, the ruling on the question itself does not prevent this discussion of the means by which the house should handle the question of privilege. It is, therefore, my contention that it was not necessary to move any motion. Indeed, it might be improper to add any motion to the order paper.

I did suggest to Your Honour that I really believed I was co-operating. There was no suggestion that Your Honour had to give a ruling on the first question before the debate could continue. But since the motion is a method of disposing of the question at the end of debate, Your Honour has time to rule on various motions and adopt any suggestions, and when the questions or privilege which have been raised are disposed of, I should like to have an opportunity to put my motion as well. I hope Your Honour will not feel that I was not trying to co-operate with the Chair when I spoke on this matter; I had that impression.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, since there are now three motions under consideration, I would like to move another one under standing order 24.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That the orders of the day be now read.

Let us proceed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: We are already on the orders of the day. The hon. gentleman's motion might be a good motion for tomorrow, but not for tonight.

Does the hon. member for Rosthern wish to speak on a point of order?

Mr. Nasserden: No, Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege itself.

Mr. Speaker: I am asking the question because there are two hon. members seeking the floor, and if they wish to speak on a point of order I would recognize them first. However, I will call on the hon. member for Rosthern.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order about the same point of order raised a little earlier by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). The discussion is allowed to go on. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) moved a motion which you took under consideration. You said that tomorrow you would probably give your ruling on it and since then the debate has been going on. If we are allowed to keep on discussing it, I think that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) also had the right to move an amendment. If you allowed the debate to continue on the motion, the hon. member for Lapointe had the right to move his amendment, so that it could be studied at the same time, and you could give your ruling tomorrow.

[Mr. Nugent.]

I think that the hon. member was perfectly right to move his motion, while the others had the right to discuss a point of order which you had taken under consideration.

[English]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): In rising to say a few words on this matter before us today I think we should remember what is before us at this time. The question of the privileges of the House of Commons is not something to be taken lightly, not only because of the rights of hon. members but because of the dignity of the Chair, as well. I wish to refer to Beauchesne citation 105 on page 96 where it is stated:

—if a member should rise to complain of a breach of privileges of the house they have always instantly heard him. It seems that the first duty of parliament is to keep its privileges and no rule or standing order should restrain its conduct when it must vindicate its authority.

This refers not only to members of the House of Commons but to the Chair as well. Then on the following page we find in citation 106(2):

The dignity and independence of the two Houses are in great measure preserved by keeping their privileges indefinite. If all the privileges of Parliament were set down and ascertained, and no privilege to be allowed but what was so defined and determined, it were easy for the executive power to devise some new case, not within the line of privilege, and under pretence thereof, to harass any refractory member and violate the freedom of Parliament.

Today we have witnessed the spectacle of the Prime Minister and other members opposite pointing to the fact that the hon. member for Yukon has made charges in this house. This is one of the reasons they are raising their charges at this time. In other words, this citation is very applicable to what is taking place in the House of Commons today.

If we go on to consider citation 159(2) on page 134, we will find that it states:

A Minister of the Crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a despatch or other state paper not before the House—

An hon. Member: Read on.

Mr. Nasserden:

—unless he be prepared to lay it upon the table. This restraint is similar to the rules of evidence in courts of law, which prevent counsel from citing documents which have not been produced in evidence. The principle is so reasonable that it has not been contested, and when the objection has been made in time, it has been generally acquiesced in.

We have two questions before us. One concerns what is alleged to have taken place four or five years ago. The other relates to what has taken place during the last few hours, the statements made by the Minister of Justice. The most important question before us at this time concerns the statements made by the Minister of Justice during the last few moments and in the last few hours. The minister has made charges against the cabinet of another day en bloc, with no regard at all for those who were innocent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some difficulty in following the hon. member. I gathered, when he got to his feet, that he wanted to refer to a question of privilege. I may say in passing that I am in full agreement with everything he has said and with the citations to which he has referred. I might add that it is in keeping with those citations that the Chair has tried, even gone out of its way, to give every hon. member an opportunity to take part in the debate today.

This having been said, we must recognize that we have to go back to something. Before the hon. member took the floor I believe we had agreed that the hon. member for Yukon would be allowed to present his motion to the Chair although it was not placed before the house. I assume the hon. member will now wish to address himself, perhaps, to a new question of privilege; but not, I suggest, to the one we have already disposed of to some extent.

I should put it this way: really we have nothing at this time before us, the question of privilege raised at seven o'clock by the hon. member for Yukon having been received by the Chair for the purpose of taking it into consideration. The hon. member has raised a question of privilege with which I am in full agreement.

• (9:20 p.m.)

If he wants to raise another question of privilege he is free to do so, but for the guidance of the Chair he should state what it is he wants to speak about.

Mr. Nasserden: I had very little more to say, Mr. Speaker, but I was trying to draw on the statement the Chair made a little while ago, in which you indicated you had not quite made up your mind this matter was of such urgency that the minister should make a statement to the house substantiating the allegations he has made. It is that point which I am trying to draw to Your Honour's attention. I do not think in Your Honour's experience, or in that of any member of the house, we have ever had anything come before us that could be considered more urgent, especially when we think of the implications of the allegations made by the Minister of Justice, unsupported allegations, that touch on the morality and integrity of so many members of the house, and indeed touch on all members of the house.

Mr. Speaker: I have said many things today but one thing I hope I did not say is what the hon. member says I said. May I suggest at this point, since we have another 40 minutes to go this evening that we return to the order of business we had proposed to consider at seven o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams), that the house now adjourn.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Well, there is a motion which has just been moved by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). I am leary about going back to Standing Order 25 which gave me some difficulty this afternoon, but perhaps this time my interpretation will be accepted. I understand the Standing Order requires that there be an intermediate proceeding and, to the best of my knowledge, since the last motion was made there has been no intervening procedure. We have been on the question of privilege, and I would like to hear hon. members on this point.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I see some hon. members looking at me with learned looks, and they might like to advise the Chair on this point. My view, and my interpretation would be that there has not been an intermediate proceeding. In view of this I do not think that the motion moved by the hon. member can be received at this time.

Mr. Howard: May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, because obviously we are not going to get any business done anyway.

Mr. Speaker: We can call it ten o'clock if there is unanimous agreement.

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity.

Mr. Turner: On a point of order, may I suggest to Your Honour that since you have taken under reservation three or four separate motions, and since there is nothing properly before the house at this particular moment, we revert to the ordinary business and that you make such a ruling.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, when I raised this question of privilege this afternoon I thought it was a matter which could be resolved very early and in a straightforward manner. Since that time the whole thing has been completely confused by a large number of questions of order and by procedural matters of various kinds.

I suggest that the only way in which the situation we are in could be resolved at the present time is by the leader of the government, the Prime Minister of Canada, standing up and saying what action he is prepared to take in order to bring this situation to a conclusion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I presume, Mr. Speaker, we are now back on the regular business of the house, second reading of the bill moved by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp)?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, what I am concerned about is just what business are we on? If we are on the Bank Act I would like the Chair to indicate that.

Mr. Speaker: That was the business called at seven o'clock when the question of privilege was raised by the hon. member for Yukon. That is the business before the house, and if we agree that these several questions of privilege might be held in abeyance and reserved, we would return to that particular order of business, namely, the Bank Act.

Mr. Starr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, which is that this matter was brought before the house as a very serious matter to be considered by parliament and by the government. The Prime Minister has not seen fit to resolve this situation. He is letting the aspersions that have been made lie where they are, without any action on his part at all.

A motion was moved earlier by members of the N.D.P. that the house adjourn. It was defeated. Now, because this matter has not been resolved I see no point in continuing for the balance of the half hour that remains before ten o'clock. I suggest that for the sake of the orderly business of the house we call it ten o'clock in order to give Your Honour an opportunity to resolve the motions which you have under reserve, and an opportunity for the government to make some definite decision.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member realizes there was a division in the house just a short while ago on a motion to adjourn the house and the majority of the house decided that we should not adjourn. It certainly is not for the Chair to go against that decision of the house. If there is unanimous agreement by hon. members, we could adjourn.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not. This has already been considered. There is no unanimous agreement, and so we have before us at this moment a particular item of business, the Bank Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

You have ruled that the motion for the adjournment of the house put forward by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) was out of order because we had not gone on to another matter.

Now, if I am not mistaken, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre put his motion for the house to adjourn at six o'clock while we were discussing Bill No. S-10, introduced at the beginning of the private members' hour, that is at six o'clock.

Since then, the private members' hour has expired and at seven we returned to the orders of the day, that is to the motion for second reading of Bill No. C-3, an Act to amend the Bank Act.

A moment ago I asked that we return to the orders of the day and you told me that we already were on the orders of the day, therefore on Bill No. C-3. Since the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre put his motion while the motion for second reading of Bill No. S-10 was before us and since the other motion concerning Bill No. C-3 was introduced, I should like to draw to your attention standing order 25, which says:

A motion to adjourn (except when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance) shall always be in order, but no second motion to the same effect shall be made until after some intermediate proceeding has been had.

Well, we have been having an intermediate proceeding. We were examining Bill No. S-10 when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre introduced his first motion. We are now discussing Bill No. C-3, brought forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). So when the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi moved his motion, it was another proceeding of the house.

Therefore, in the circumstances, inasmuch as everybody wants to end this sitting tonight and as this will lead nowhere, I think I should point out to you that the motion of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi was moved on another proceeding, for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre moved his motion at the time of the motion on Bill No. S-10, and the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi moved his on Bill No. C-3.

Therefore, in the circumstances, I suggest you cannot help but declare the motion of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi in order and proper; it should be put to a vote immediately without debate, pursuant to the Standing Orders of the house that we all have at hand.

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I had understood that Your Honour had made a ruling that these remarks were not debatable. If that is the case, then I will take my seat at once, but if the argument put forward by the hon. member for Lapointe is to be heard, I would like to point out to Your Honour in respect of that argument that we were not permitted at seven o'clock to proceed to another matter. Therefore, there has been no intervening procedure because the time has been taken up with discussion about something that was not before the house at all.

Mr. Grégoire: We were back on the orders of the day at seven o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly to the question of privilege which is before the house tonight or which I understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have a point of order at the moment. As has been indicated to the hon. member, I have considered the circumstances and have considered the Standing Order.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the same one affecting Standing Order 25?

Mr. Nugent: It has to do with the business of the house.

Mr. Speaker: This is not a point of order which is being considered now. We are considering the point of order raised by the hon. member for Lapointe who, I appreciate, wanted to be helpful; but I wonder whether we have achieved this result. The only thing the Chair can say is, viewing the situation at this time and considering what was before the house, the Chair reached the decision that the motion could not be received.

I suggest to the hon. member that I could not change this decision at the moment and, unfortunately for him, according to the new rules, this cannot be appealed. I am sorry if a mistake was made, and I hope no mistake was made; but so many things have been going on that it was not clear to the Chair whether we were on a new order or whether there was an intermediate proceeding. I believe there was not, and this is the basis on which the ruling was made by the chair.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that while I was out of the house for a few moments I was asked by the hon. member who raised this matter first this afternoon whether I would state my position and that of the government in respect of the matter as it has developed, and as it has developed during the day.

The house will recall, Mr. Speaker, that this afternoon I did make a proposal which I thought would enable the house to get on with the business of the house while this matter was discussed outside. This afternoon I suggested that Your Honour, the hon. member and I might discuss, and settle as best we could this very serious—and I believe I called it a very grave—matter while the house went on with the business on the order paper. That suggestion was not acceptable to the house, because the debate continued.

Since that time various suggestions have been made as to how this matter can be dealt with. So far as the government is concerned,

I think the sooner we can agree on a procedure to deal with it, the sooner we will get back to the business before us in the House of Commons.

This evening, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe made a proposal in the form of an amendment to a motion, which amendment I think was not officially before the house, because you had not ruled on it; but it was an amendment to a motion which has been before us. That amendment, the details of which I do not have with me, would provide for the submission of this question to a judicial committee for examination.

Now, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to read the amendment. It is that we should:

—take such steps as are necessary to establish a judicial inquiry into the security case referred to by the Minister of Justice and by the Leader of the Opposition on March 4, 1966, at Hansard page 2211—

At which time, I might interpolate, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition said—and I hope I am paraphrasing correctly—that he would be glad to have a commission of inquiry into this matter.

An hon. Member: That is not what he said.

Mr. Pearson: Then the amendment goes on:

—referred to by the Minister of Justice in a press conference on March 10, 1966—

At this conference the Minister of Justice—and I hope I am correctly paraphrasing his remarks—said he would have no objection to such an inquiry into this matter. Then the amendment goes on:

—and referred to in a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Calgary North at the commencement of proceedings this March 10, 1966.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this amendment covers the situation very well. So far as the government is concerned, not only would we accept an amendment of this nature, if it were properly put before the house, for a judicial inquiry, we would welcome it.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Prime Minister has accepted the proposition I made a little while ago that he should make a statement in respect of what the government was prepared to do in connection with this matter. I should like to point out to him and to the house, however, that in this matter I think time is of the essence. If there is going to be a judicial committee which will take two or three weeks to set up and which will then drag on for several weeks before there is any clearing of the names and reputations of myself and the other members of the government of 1960-62, then I say it is not good enough. I think perhaps this might be the best way to deal with this matter, but I would like to be assured that this inquiry will be started immediately and that a report will be brought forward without a great many delays, so that the present situation will not continue to exist.

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friend has asked me for certain assurances in this matter, and I can understand his anxiety to have these assurances from the government. I can tell him this, that last Friday, I think it was, we agreed in respect of a judicial commission of inquiry which was pressed for strongly by the opposition, and within four hours, Mr. Speaker, we had that commission set up with a judge appointed and with terms of reference. I assure my hon. friend I will try to be equally quick in respect of this commission.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the reference which the Prime Minister had to the recommendation of the Leader of the Opposition in respect of an inquiry is to be found at page 2211 of Hansard of last Friday, where his words are set out in the left hand column:

I am not worried. Have your commission look into it. Put it on the agenda.

We all know what he meant by those words; we were discussing a particular inquiry at that time into security matters involving the Spencer case. The other barrel that was fired by the Prime Minister and his Minister of Justice was into security procedures.

• (9:40 p.m.)

That was the other rug that was whipped out from under him. A judicial inquiry cannot remove from a member of this house, let alone a minister of the Crown, the responsibility of substantiating his charges.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: Only parliament can absolve a member of that responsibility.

An hon. Member: What are you trying to hide?

Mr. Nielsen: When parliament allows that to happen parliament ceases to exist.

Mr. Turner: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? In respect of the charges the hon.

gentleman brought against the former minister of justice, did parliament make a decision or was it made by an independent inquiry under the presidency of Chief Justice Dorion?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: I intended to mention that precedent myself, had the Minister without Portfolio not raised it for me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: Sir, parliament has a precedent in the occurrences of November of 1964 when those opposite demanded that charges be made when I raised the matters of that day. Those charges were made.

Mr. Pickersgill: They were not.

Mr. Nielsen: They were made and as a result an inquiry was set up.

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Nielsen: That, sir, is the case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: Did you put up your seat?

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Agriculture has mentioned the very point at issue here, and the very point which parliament must deal with in regard to the words of the Minister of Justice.

The Minister of Agriculture asks whether I put up my seat. Let me say that I understood all along that my seat was at stake.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: You refused to lay charges.

Mr. Mackasey: Would the hon. member not admit that the minister of immigration was completely innocent of his charges?

Mr. Nielsen: This is another error perpetuated by the deliberate misconstruction by members on the other side of the house. There were no charges made against the Minister of Immigration, at any time, and if the hon. member for Verdun will check the debates of November 23 to November 25 inclusive he will find that on not one, on not two, but on three or four separate occasions I said at that time that I was casting no aspersions on the then Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: You need only check the record.

Mr. Cashin: On the matter of privilege, I suggest you check the record.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Go back to Joey.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: You better go back to fishing, Cashin.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that we are—

An hon. Member: Let's not talk about fishing. We have caught a big one now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me we are getting away from whatever it was we were supposed to be discussing tonight.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I submit that I have defined the issue that parliament must decide on its own accord. When any member, let alone a minister, makes a charge against another member, our practices and the practices followed at Westminster demand that the member substantiate them.

I should like to refer to another question before you, Mr. Speaker. You have ruled that a prima facie question of privilege exists and this places you in a very difficult position in not dealing immediately with the motion founded upon that case. I am not for a moment suggesting that Your Honour should not be given all the time necessary for a decision to be reached, but to accept as a general rule the principle that extensive time be taken, and I am not casting any reflections when I use that term, in order to determine the validity or non-validity of a motion, particularly when the motion or motions relate to a question of privilege as important and as urgent as this one, it seems to me that parliament itself is precluded from proceeding to dispose of the case until such time as a ruling is made.

We are now in the position of having three motions all revolving around an incident which you, sir, have ruled constitutes a prima facie breach of privilege. That being the case, and the prima facie breach of privilege having been adjudicated by you, sir, parliament must not be unduly impeded in dealing with it.

I should think, sir, that of the three motions, Your Honour might be prepared to deal with at least one, particularly the last one that was introduced, namely that a member who makes charges in the house must substantiate them and stake his seat on the outcome. That is a well established principle and should be followed, particularly when the hon. member happens to be a minister of the Crown, and particularly because these charges affect a former prime minister, all of the present members of the Privy Council and those members who were part of the former government's administration.

Regarding the case now under discussion in which a member has made charges, I point out that strictly speaking no motion at all is required since the responsibility of the member making charges is well known and has been supported by Speakers throughout the years. The simple fact is that having made charges a member is obliged to substantiate them or give up his seat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: That is the position in which the minister finds himself and that is precisely the issue which parliament, not an inquiry, must decide.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: There is nothing to prevent the minister at this very moment from stating the details of his charges, the evidence upon which they are based, the names of the people involved, how they are involved and all the circumstances. The minister owes this not only to parliament but, as a man of honour and integrity, he owes it to himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite obvious that the members opposite do not want an inquiry into this matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cardin: I should like to ask the hon. member for Yukon whether he can tell me what charges I made against the Leader of the Opposition or what charges I made against any member.

An hon. Member: All of them.

Mr. Cardin: Which one?

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) will read the Journal of this afternoon he will find on the front page that he is recorded as stating that ministers were involved. He will find that a member of the press gallery then queried "ministers"? The minister is reported as having replied "Yes, ministers." He then is reported as having added the word "Plural". If ever there was a question of privilege and justification for demanding that the minister substantiate his statement, this is it. The hon. member for Yukon has suggested he should do so in justice to himself. I am one who has quite a high opinion of the minister, but that high opinion is rapidly disappearing today as a result of the things he has been guilty of since this morning.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that you should not be splitting hairs about the rules and procedures when the reputations of a large group of people sitting in this house are at stake.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) got to his feet this afternoon and, as I interpreted his remarks, referred to this matter as a little difference of opinion between parties and suggested that a bit of controversy exists.

• (9:50 p.m.)

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we may have our differences but I have never yet, in the time I have been here, known a minister or a member to make statements to the press that reflected on the honour and integrity of other members.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Flemming: The Prime Minister laughs. I say that he is treating this matter as a great big joke. This is no joke.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: Therefore, in my opinion and to the extent that I happen to be personally involved—

An hon. Member: Aha.

Mr. Flemming: This is no joke; this is precisely the point. It becomes the duty of the Prime Minister to say to his Minister of Justice, "Prove what you have said". That is his duty. But the Prime Minister proposes to appoint a commission and the commission will sit for some time and consider this matter. As has been stated this evening, during that whole period of time the reputation of a number of people will be in jeopardy. Therefore I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister has no choice in this matter.

The Prime Minister must of necessity demand that his Minister of Justice prove what he has said. We should also have the answer to this question: Was the Minister of Justice, when he had the interview this morning with the press, speaking for the government or was he speaking for himself?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: Is it usual for ministers of the Crown to call in—

Mr. Fairweather: He is not a usual minister.

Mr. Flemming: —the press; and is it usual to hold press interviews without consulting the Prime Minister?

An hon. Member: Sure.

Mr. Flemming: If it is, I say that the government is in pretty much the same position as the Minister of Justice, if they knew he was holding this interview and had some knowledge of what he was going to say.

Mr. Churchill: They are a party to it.

Mr. Flemming: In my opinion, the Prime Minister is doing a great disservice to this country if he does not demand that the Minister of Justice get to his feet just as soon as it can possibly be arranged and give to this house the basis of the statements he made this morning to the gentlemen of the press.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: Come on, get up.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Pearson, show some leadership, will you?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I endeavoured to rise to speak to the question of privilege and I was denied the opportunity because it was said we were dealing with a point of order. I do not know where we are now, but I trust I can speak to the question of privilege at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are only four minutes left, so I suppose there will be no difficulty in allowing the hon. member to speak for the last few minutes. I have some qualms about whether there is a prima facie case of privilege in the matter raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), but there is so little time left that I am prepared to allow the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) to speak.

Mr. Dinsdale: I rise, Mr. Speaker, because during the course of the day certain gentlemen of the press have been asking whether I was involved in the Munsinger case. I make that point to reinforce the statement already made by my colleague, the hon. member who is my deskmate, and because I believe an accusation has been made against certain hon. members which puts a blanket of suspicion over a good many members of the House of Commons.

I also rise in my place because this is the second time—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dinsdale: There is so much laughter coming from the Liberal side of the house that I can hardly hear myself speak.

Mr. Ricard: They are irresponsible over there.

Mr. Dinsdale: This is the second time that I have been attacked in the house by a Minister of Justice and charges have been made along these same lines. It seems to me that there is some conspiracy going on in the government ranks, and the close cohesion of the Liberal backbenchers in their noisy, vociferous response to everything that comes from the government side tonight substantiates that viewpoint. Before I was attacked in the house I had intimation from an honourable minister of the Crown that they were going to attack me, they were going to get me and other hon. members of the former Diefenbaker government.

The first intimation I had that I was going to be attacked was a question put on the order paper by the hon. member for Hamilton West. I believe a statement must be made, an accusation having been made in the house, that pinpoints the specific charges, otherwise the only conclusion to which I can come is that the grand conspiracy to engage in a wholesale witch-hunt and character assassination on the part of the government is still under way.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I know it would be unusual, but we are the master of our own rules and regulations and if the house desires to give unanimous consent we could pass a resolution at once which would enable the government to set up this committee immediately.

Some hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lambert: The house will determine whether that shall be done.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, that is about the most nonsensical suggestion I have heard from the Prime Minister over a good many years. Let me just draw Your Honour's attention to this fact—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention to the fact that it is ten o'clock.

Mr. Nielsen: Not yet.

Mr. Churchill: I thought there was one minute to go.

Mr. Grégoire: Ten o'clock. Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty to bring to the attention of hon. members that in accordance with the provisions of Provisional Standing Order 39A a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time. Therefore the question is that this house do now adjourn.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Provisional Standing Order 39A deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—MEDICARE—POSSIBLE SHORTAGE OF DOCTORS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the drama and emotion that surrounds the house at the present time, I hope that the plea I have to make will not fall on deaf ears. Last week I asked the government whether any representations had been put before them to the effect that this country of ours, Canada, was faced with an imminent crisis relating to the shortage of doctors. Your Honour very wisely ruled that because the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare were before us, the question was out of order at that particular time.

• (10:00 p.m.)

The hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) subsequently asked the government whether in its opinion Canada was faced with an imminent crisis because of a shortage of doctors. The hon. member asked what the government was going to do about it. He documented his case, but at no time to my knowledge during the discussion of his estimates did the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) deal with this pressing problem that is now facing our nation. While the Minister of Industry has jurisdiction over, and reports to the house in relation to research grants to the medical council, I felt that in this instance, because of medicare plans etc., my question should be directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I believe most sincerely, sir, along with other hon. members such as the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard), that this country is facing an imminent crisis relating to a shortage of doctors. Canada is running out of doctors, and unless immediate action is taken we shall be faced with a real crisis within two years. Already in smaller centres there are no replacements for the old family doctor who passes on. Last year hundreds of qualified applicants were turned down at our medical schools. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that in 1965 these schools turned out approximately the same number of doctors as ten years ago. In 1965 we had 1,000 medical graduates, but 400 of them left the country.

Some time ago, because of dissatisfaction with conditions in their native land as a result of socialized medicine, many doctors were coming to Canada. This situation has now changed. Not only do we lack medical schools but, as the hon. member for Simcoe East so well documented, some of the existing schools recently barely met proper accreditation standards.

Let me point out to you, Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and to the Minister of Industry, that even today Canada ranks only twentieth in the world in its ratio of doctors to the total population. Today we have 1,000 teachers in our medical schools. If we want to maintain present standards until 1970, and excluding all considerations relating to medicare, we need 2,000 teachers and more schools. Yet our teachers as well as our doctors continue to move away and emigrate to the United States of America.

Why is this, Mr. Speaker? I do not intend to provide the whole answer tonight, but one major reason lies in the fact that more research is being done in medical schools in the United States. The federal government of the United States is responsible for 90 per cent of the financial support given to research in these medical schools. Last year United States federal assistance in this regard amounted to $1,300 million, while in the same year Canadian federal assistance to medical school research amounted to approximately $15 million.

I know this is not the only answer, but who can wonder at the fact that our medical teachers continue to emigrate? I say the exodus must be stopped. I have pointed out that four medical schools—the hon. member for Simcoe East also pointed this out—are having a hard time to meet proper standards. Surely this is an urgent question and relates to federal assistance to research.

I finish by saying that while our medical schools should re-evaluate their policies—I am not just blaming the government for this, and blame is not something we want to discuss tonight—the federal government should increase greatly its assistance to medical research in Canada. For example, the province of Ontario has a five year plan amounting to $300 million for the enlargement of existing, and construction of new medical schools. I contend these schools will be mere shells unless we have the teachers to staff them.

Along with the hon. member for Simcoe East, who has led this discussion, I say that excellence of research attracts teachers. The difference between excellence and crisis is realistic federal expenditure. The government at Ottawa must announce a drive—as the hon. member for Simcoe East has often said, a crash program—for medical manpower. I say to this house and to the people of Canada that the crisis is nearer at hand than we think.

It is a sad thing, Mr. Speaker, that when I have put questions like this on the orders of the day they have been ruled out of order just because we were discussing estimates. We were discussing estimates and the Speaker had every right to rule my questions out of order at the time. But because the government did not take up this matter on estimates, I am obliged to bring it up again at this time.

I am sure that many members of parliament in this house feel strongly about this, and have their feelings aroused.

I only hope that questions of this nature are going to occupy this Canadian House of Commons in the days to come. What, Mr. Speaker, could be more serious for this great, young country of ours than a shortage of doctors? I am not saying that there is any blame involved. I should like to say to the government that I believe one, and only one part of the answer is a realistic federal expenditure to our medical institutions for research in order to rectify this grave problem.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the government has been giving careful study to the Gundy Report as well as to a series of earlier reports concerned with increased federal assistance to the development of people involved in providing medical care.

The announcement of the Prime Minister concerning a health resources fund of $500 million, which will be put into effect retroactive to January 1, 1966, as soon as the necessary legislation has passed this house, should constitute an important step in this direction. It is being worked out in close consultation with the provinces and institutions concerned. This fund, together with other types of increased federal assistance to universities, such as medical research, will be an important initial step and one that will undoubtedly be reviewed periodically in the light of the results being achieved.

CANADIAN ECONOMY—STEPS TO MEET INCREASED COST OF LIVING

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, last Monday in this house I asked this question of the Prime Minister to be found on page 2290 of Hansard:

> In view of the fact that this is consumer week and that the Prime Minister has personally endorsed it, is the right hon. gentleman planning any action this week to check the rising cost of living?

I received the brush-off on that question, and I have received the brush-off on a number of occasions when I have sought to bring attention to the way the living costs in this country are going up.

I, along with a great many other people, am concerned deeply over the lack of interest shown by the government every time this question is raised in the house. Other hon. members have brought it up over and over again, and each time they have been brushed off, and nothing has been done. I want to indicate that this is a very serious problem. The cost of living has reached an all time high in Canada.

Economists say that prices should not rise more than 2 per cent a year. Last year prices in Canada went up by 3.1 per cent. Included in the price rise were items such as food and housing. These are not luxuries. These are the bedrock essentials for families in this country. Items which have gone up in price are protein foods such as meat, fish, chicken, which are essential proteins for body building. It is the fresh fruits and fresh vegetables which the Canada food rules list among the most important essentials for good diet in this country which have gone up in price.

Other foods which have gone up in price are butter and shortening. These are foods essential, as every mother knows, for building healthy bodies and strong nerves in their children and in other members of their families.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Each one of these food essentials is a "must" for children and adults alike. Yet already these things are beyond the range of low income families. I have had letters from women across this country in various provinces pointing out in despair that the price of milk has gone up to such an extent they can no longer afford to buy it in reasonable quantities. Bread prices have gone up. The price of oranges and the fresh fruits has risen until these things are completely out of the range of that quarter of our population which is living at the poverty level at the present time.

Yet the government is showing no disposition to do anything about this situation. Its only answer so far would seem to be an agreement to wait for a report of the Economic Council, a report which will not be available before the end of this year. This question of the steady, stealthy rise in the cost of living is becoming one of the foremost problems before this country, but we have been sitting here fighting about everything else under the sun without going anywhere near this issue, though it is vital to the needs of the low income group in this country. Any talk about a war on poverty is meaningless if we allow the cost of living to rise all the time.

What does the government intend to do about rising prices? This is what we want to know. Are hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches opposite going to wait for the Economic Council to report? If so, they are not heeding the warning of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development which issued a special report at the end of January about Canada, telling us we should do well to watch unnecessary price rises in this country and suggesting it might be well for this country to establish guide lines in this regard.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

What we need now is something which the Consumers Association of Canada has been demanding since 1960, a department of consumer affairs which would be able to study this question of rising prices, a department which would be able to bring together organizations such as manufacturers, retailers, producers of household necessities, sales people and others and inquire about price rises and the reasons for them. We need a department to look after the interests of the consumers. It is long overdue.

We find the national president of the Consumers Association of Canada, Mrs. A. F. W. Plumptre, coming out with the following words:

> Consumers today face many problems with the spending of their incomes—rising food prices, uncertainty about the cost of borrowing to buy on instalment plans, misleading advertisements and merchandising devices, inadequate labelling of goods, and in general a lack of information as to how to get the best value for their dollars—

We find the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) endorsing this consumer week which is now almost at an end. He said:

> We in government appreciate and support the work done by the Consumers Association. We support the Association's renewed efforts to bring to the attention of more Canadians the many services and benefits they receive through the Association's efforts, and to increase membership in the Association so that those services and benefits can be broadened.

Then, when an hon. member rises in this house at the very beginning of consumer week and asks what the government intends to do this week, to mark consumer week, in order to check the rising cost of living, we find members of the government sitting there with smiles on their faces, saying no single word in reply.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker: is it not time something was done about one of the really important questions facing this country? Is it not time something was done to check the steady rise in the cost of living which has put the important things of life, the bedrock essentials, beyond the range of a good quarter of our population in a very large measure and which now menaces other sections of the population as well?

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is the policy of the government to ensure that relative stability of costs and prices is maintained in the Canadian economy. Such stability will help sustain the present economic prosperity by keeping Canadian goods competitive in Canadian and foreign markets, and will help provide for a continued increase in employment and growth.

The government keeps close watch on movements in costs and prices. Recent movements in the consumer price index have reflected a number of special circumstances. For example, drought and other adverse weather conditions in many regions of North America have led to price increases in beef and pork, both in Canada and the United States. A substantial rise in automobile insurance rates, attributable to increased accident rates and larger average claims, has affected the index.

Medical insurance premiums were raised during the year, and these are reflected in the index. The prices of consumer services generally have increased more than usual. On the other hand, the price index for consumer durable goods, including automobiles, is actually lower than it was a year ago.

I should also like to draw the attention of hon. members to the recent unemployment situation. We are now happily experiencing the lowest unemployment rate in a decade, and in many areas of the country there is a heavy demand for skilled workers. In circumstances of strong demand, the need for restraint in prices and wage increases becomes greater, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has already urged such restraint upon Canadians.

So far cost and price pressures have not been general but have tended to concentrate in specific areas. In certain parts of Canada heavy demands have been placed on the construction industry. The government has taken steps to stretch out its own construction plans as a means of permitting the industry to accommodate others.

We have also had discussions with the provinces on this matter and we will be proposing legislative changes to allow provinces to continue to benefit from several shared cost programs by stretching out some of their construction programs. In this way, it is hoped that we will be able to maintain a steady and healthy rate of economic growth.

Naturally, the Bank of Canada takes account of the situation in regard to prices and costs in determining monetary policy, and what it has done has had the minister's approval. The government takes account of these factors in forming its economic policy and it can be anticipated that this, as well as other aspects of the economic situation, will be taken into account in determining budget policies.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—STEVEN TRUSCOTT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, the matter which I wish to bring to your attention this evening is based on information I have received from an authoress in Toronto who is preparing a book on the trial of Steven Truscott.

On Tuesday, June 9, 1959, a little 12 year old girl in the town of Clinton, Ontario, was brutally raped and murdered by strangulation. Upon reading the evidence of the trial court and events leading up to the trial, I am convinced this foul deed was the work of a yet unknown, physically mature, sex maniac. However, five months later, in October, a 14 year old male child, Steven Truscott, was tried in an adult court by a jury, and convicted. This child was forthwith sentenced and, I quote, "to be hanged by the neck until you are dead."

I ask hon. members is this not a grotesque display of our much vaunted British justice? Even if the child were guilty as charged, and I have very serious doubts that he is, is this not a terrible sentence to be meted out to a 14 year old, who would have to be mentally deranged to perform such a crime? There are many serious minded persons who have taken the trouble to read the trial evidence, and to read about events leading up to the trial, who share my view. Among them is Hon. George Wardrope, former minister of reform institutions in the Ontario government. Speaking to the Nipigon Board of Trade in his own constituency he expressed grave doubts of Steven Truscott's guilt. He had taken an interest in the boy who had an excellent record at the training school, and he had talked with him at some length.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Everything about the lad revealed a quite normal teenager and a nice boy. From the very outset the cards were stacked against this boy. The entire community had adjudged him guilty because they wanted to believe the murderer had been apprehended. The defence evidence was glossed over in the charge to the jury by the trial judge. The evidence against him was purely circumstantial. In effect, the only evidence was that he had been seen with the little girl on the handlebars of his bicycle while he had been taking her to a destination which she had requested. This information Steven had volunteered before the body was found, and the finger of suspicion pointed at him.

Defence evidence which would have proven conclusively that Steven had left the little girl far from the scene of the murder, and a perfect alibi, was disallowed. Mr. Speaker, I personally am so convinced of this boy's innocence, that I am prepared, if necessary, to stake my seat in the House of Commons on the outcome of an inquiry, or a royal commission, that would examine all the circumstances of the conduct of all the persons involved in:

1. The investigation of the girl's disappearance; 2. The questioning of children at the R.C.A.F. station; 3. The interrogation and taking of statements from Steven; 4. The detention and examination of the boy; 5. All orders given to or by the police; 6. The taking, retaking and redrafting of statements from child witnesses; 7. The disposal of the case by Magistrate Holmes as juvenile court judge; 8. The dismissal of the defence appeal against that decision; 9. The preliminary hearing and committal for trial by Magistrate Holmes; 10. The publicity given the preliminary hearing; 11. The public attitude in Huron county that made the verdict a foregone conclusion in the minds of so many people; 12. The preparation of witnesses and collection of evidence for the trial; and, 13. Finally, and in great detail, the conduct of the trial itself, including the roles of the judge, the prosecutor, the police officers, the three Crown doctors, and all other persons who took part in the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, personally I have almost lost confidence in our jury system, if not in our legal profession and our doctors. I implore the Solicitor General to give consideration to setting up such a commission.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, personally I have not had an opportunity to read the book which I understand has not yet been officially released. I understand, however, that officials of the Department of Justice will be studying its contents very shortly.

Under the circumstances I hope the hon. member will acquit me of any incivility if I say it would be most inappropriate for me to make any comment. However, if he raises the question at a later date, I may be in a position to make a more precise statement.

It being twenty five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 11, 1966

The house met at 11 a.m.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MUNSINGER INVESTIGATION— SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: Order. Yesterday the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) raised a question of privilege affecting the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin).

Yesterday I referred hon. members to citation 104(5) of Beauchesne's fourth edition which determines the Chair's responsibility in such instances.

I also pointed out that even where a prima facie case of privilege exists it does not necessarily follow that a subsequent motion will be accepted by the Chair. I further stated yesterday that the matter of privilege put before the Chair related to the propriety of action or words of the Minister of Justice. The closing words of my ruling were as follows:

> I can come to no other conclusion than that the motion as drafted now cannot be accepted by the Chair because it is too general in terms and, according to precedents, does not specify the charge levelled against the minister.

I also referred hon. members to Bourinot's fourth edition, at page 162, as follows:

> A reference to a committee is no doubt the proper procedure in all cases in which there are reasonable doubts as to the facts of the course that should be pursued, especially when it is necessary to examine precedents or witnesses.

From the earliest days of our parliamentary history, the only motion that has been moved and accepted in such cases is one to refer the matter of the alleged breach of privilege of this house to the Committee of Privileges and Elections. I believe that in 100 years of Canadian parliamentary practice, there has never been an exception to this procedure.

Following my disallowance of the motion made by the hon. member for Calgary North, the following motions were submitted:

Mr. Nielsen, seconded by Mr. Harkness, moved:

> That the Minister of Justice do resign.

Another motion came from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), in the following terms:

> That the Prime Minister immediately call for the resignation of the Minister of Justice on the basis of the improper conduct of the minister in the making of improper accusations against the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker and all privy councillors in the former government.

Later on, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), seconded by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), moved:

> That this house call upon the Minister of Justice to substantiate the charges and allegations he has made against the Leader of the Official Opposition and members of the former Conservative government now members of this house.

In considering all these motions, one must note that they are all couched in language that assumes that the Minister of Justice is in fact guilty of improper conduct, or of the use of improper language, even before the allegations have been established, and it is I submit no answer to this difficulty to argue that the Chair has declared there is a prima facie case of privilege.

Whether there is or is not an actual breach of privilege, beyond the appearance of things, beyond the prima facie aspect of the case, is not, of course, for the Chair to decide. In other words, the motions assume as a conclusion that an actual breach of privilege has been established. With respect, I submit that this type of motion cannot be moved consequent upon a question of privilege. As I said yesterday when I commented on the motion of the hon. member for Yukon, these are substantive motions which cannot be accepted under the guise of a question of privilege.

Hon. members will recall that during the course of my observations yesterday, I drew the attention of the house to a decision of Mr. Speaker Michener on questions of privilege, on June 19, 1959, and it seems to me the proposed motions are invalid also on the basis of the opinion expressed by Mr. Speaker Michener at that time.

At page 583 of volume 105 of the Journals for 1959 Mr. Speaker Michener is recorded as follows:

> Members of the House of Commons, like all other citizens, have the right to be regarded as innocent until they are found guilty, and like other citizens they must be charged before they are obliged to stand trial in the courts. Parliament is a court with respect to its own privileges and dignity and the privileges of its members. The question arises whether the house, in the exercise of its judicial functions with respect to the conduct of any of its members, should deprive such member of any of the safeguards and privileges which every man enjoys in any court of the land.

Further, at page 584, and I repeat what I quoted yesterday:

In my view, simple justice requires that no honourable member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the house or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

In the case before us no hon. member has taken the responsibility of making a specific charge against the minister. I repeat that in my view the responsibility devolving upon the Speaker under our practice in a case of alleged privilege is to ascertain whether there has been a prima facie breach of the privileges of the house, or of any member thereof.

May I refer hon. members to Abraham and Hawtrey's Parliamentary Dictionary, at page 40, where it is stated:

What the Speaker has to decide is whether, assuming that the facts are as stated, the conduct complained of could reasonably be held to be a breach of privilege.

• (11:10 a.m.)

As hon. members know, it is for the Speaker to determine points of order as they arise, and in the situation before the house, even though a prima facie case did obtain, for the reasons I have explained I cannot come to the conclusion that any of the motions moved yesterday are in order.

MUNSINGER INVESTIGATION—MOTION FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, since we are still considering the question of privilege and a motion might still be accepted on the question of privilege, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That the house recommend to the government that the substance of the statements made by the Minister of Justice to the House of Commons on Friday, March 4, 1966, his subsequent statements made on Thursday, March 10, 1966, regarding the Munsinger case and the complaint of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness), made subsequently, be referred to a judicial inquiry for consideration and report.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Who is the author?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I hear the hon. member for Edmonton West ask who is the author. Let him stop making insinuations and if he has any charges to make, let him rise and make them. If he is brave enough, let him rise and make them.

Mr. Lambert: I ask who is the author of the motion.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, if he has a charge to make, let him do so. He is too scared to do that.

[English]

An hon. Member: Seconded by Mr. Pickersgill.

Mr. Starr (Ontario): You mean written by him.

Mr. Speaker, I move an amendment to the motion to the effect that the words, after the word "that" in the first line of the amendment of the member for Lapointe, be deleted.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair would like to have an opportunity to rule on the admissibility of the motion before considering an amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may I make a few remarks about the validity of this motion? Before an amendment is moved or accepted, I should like to deal with my own motion. If you wish to render a decision on the validity of my motion, I shall speak afterwards.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, if I might speak on the question of the admissibility of the motion, I would suggest to Your Honour that it is an acceptable motion. The question of privilege still is before the house, is still before Your Honour, and has not been disposed of.

I might refer Your Honour to page 382 of May's sixteenth edition where it is set forth that a question of privilege is one that can only be decided by the house itself. Your Honour has seen fit to rule out the three previous motions that were raised on the question of privilege. If this motion is not accepted, then of course the situation will resolve itself again into what we had yesterday.

I would suggest, in order to allow the debate that is necessary on this question, because of its urgency, that the motion be accepted and any amendments thereto.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking the Chair to overlook the rules and practice and give the house an opportunity to enter into debate. Obviously the Chair will not do that. The Chair will rule according to the practice and standing orders of the house.

[Translation]

Order. A motion has been moved by the hon. member for Lapointe. I must say regretfully that his motion is just as unacceptable as the one he moved yesterday. It is a substantive motion requiring advance notice, and as I mentioned in the ruling I just rendered, and for the reasons I explained a moment ago, the motion is not acceptable.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that my motion is substantially the same as the amendment and as the one I intended to move yesterday, could not this be construed as a notice I am now giving, and on which I would like a decision within 48 hours which would be according to the usual time limit.

[English]

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether there are copies of this motion available?

Mr. Speaker: I regret that I did not hear the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, are there copies of this motion available? If they have been distributed I should like to point out that I did not get one.

Mr. Speaker: The motion was disposed of when it was ruled out of order, and it is not now before the house.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

> That this house call upon the Minister of Justice to substantiate the charges and allegations which he has made against the Leader of the Opposition and members of the Privy Council of the former government.

Mr. Caron: It is the same as yesterday, the very, very same.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ontario, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris has moved that the house call upon the Minister of Justice to substantiate the charges and allegations he has made against the Leader of the Opposition and members of the Privy Council of the former government. I wonder whether there is any point in asking hon. members to address the Chair as to the admissibility of the motion. I should point out to the hon. member that this motion is substantially the same as the three that were moved yesterday. I think it would be unfair to the house for me to read again the judgment I have delivered, but I will do so if the hon. member wishes. I have given the reasons why I think this type of motion cannot be received. I therefore rule that this motion is also out of order.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be of benefit to the house if you would repeat the reasons and indicate the type of motion that might be acceptable. I recall a case in 1956 when a question of privilege was raised in this house based on statements in newspapers. The newspapers were handed to the Clerk who read out the statements. The Speaker assisted the hon. member who raised the question of privilege in framing his motion. I suggest, sir, that you might give some advice to this house regarding this particular matter. We are doing our best to co-operate with the Speaker in this regard but we think that an unprecedented occurrence has taken place here in the House of Commons, and it may well be that new ground must be broken regarding the type of motion that might be introduced under these circumstances.

An hon. Member: Hire a lawyer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the case to which the hon. member referred was one which affected the Chair and the Speaker, which is why that procedure was followed at that time.

For the benefit of hon. members, perhaps I should read again a part of the ruling which I read a moment ago and which applies to the motion just proposed by the hon. member for Ontario.

I made reference to Mr. Speaker Michener's decision of Friday, June 19, 1959 when I ruled on the first motion yesterday, and it seems to me that this also applies to the motion just proposed by the hon. member. The proposed motions are invalid also on the basis of the opinion expressed by Mr. Speaker Michener on June 19, 1959, as recorded at page 4930 of Hansard where he said:

> Members of the House of Commons, like all other citizens, have the right to be regarded as innocent until they are found guilty, and like other citizens they must be charged before they are obliged to stand trial in the courts. Parliament is a court with respect to its own privileges and dignity and the privileges of its members. The question arises whether the house, in the exercise of its judicial functions with respect to the conduct of any of its members, should deprive such member of any of the safeguards and privileges which every man enjoys in any court of the land.

And then further on page 584 of the Journals of the House of Commons of Friday, June 19, 1959:

In my view, simple justice requires that no hon. member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the House or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

• (11:20 a.m.)

I would repeat what I said yesterday and draw the attention of the house to these words which also appear at page 584:

In my view, simple justice requires that no honourable member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the house or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

In the case before us no hon. member has taken the responsibility of making a specific charge against any hon. member. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) asks for the advice of the Chair as to what kind of motion could be received. This cannot be done; the Chair can only rule on what is actually before it and cannot rule on hypothetical cases or in the abstract.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, you have ruled that the motions that have been made are out of order in that they do not subscribe to the rules governing privilege, and you have quoted Mr. Speaker Michener to support your judgment in this matter. I recall that Mr. Speaker Michener was at that time given a good many days by the opposition to think over his ruling, and not a matter of a few hours. We are all the more grateful to you, Mr. Speaker, for giving your ruling in such a short time on such an important matter.

I think I should point out, however, that while you have ruled these motions out of order, for very good reasons, it is of course within the responsibility of the government to set up a judicial inquiry at once by order in council. The government is perfectly willing to do that at once. The Minister of Justice is most anxious to see it done and to have these allegations gone into at once by a judicial inquiry.

Mr. Pugh: What allegations?

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps my hon. friend would keep quiet until I have finished, just for a change.

[Mr. Speaker.]

An hon. Member: Your Minister of Justice should have kept quiet.

Mr. Pearson: If and when this order in council is passed, and it can be done quickly because we have precedent for this kind of thing now, there will be a supply motion on Monday and the opposition will have a chance to raise the subject as a grievance or as a vote of no confidence in the government for the way it has handled this matter and in connection with any action we have taken over the week end.

Mr. Starr: No, sir, not until the Minister of Justice gets up and names names.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, with reference to that which the Prime Minister has now said, it is my contention that before a matter can be referred to a judicial inquiry it must be a matter certain. We have had so far no indication beyond rumour, beyond scuttlebutt, of any foundation for the statements made by a minister implicating a group, without specification. I would ask how it is possible to refer anything of this kind to a judicial inquiry. Those people involved must know what they face; it is the elementary principle of justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert: Is a body of Privy Councillors, 15 or 20 in number, to suddenly appear before a judicial inquiry and be faced then by an accuser—

Mr. Woolliams: A witch-hunter.

Mr. Starr: McCarthyism.

Mr. Lambert: —without knowledge of what they are to face?

Mr. Pearson: It will be in the order in council.

Mr. Lambert: The Prime Minister says it will be in the order in council. Has the Prime Minister detailed knowledge which he has failed to disclose to the house?

Mr. MacEwan: Tell parliament, tell the House of Commons.

Mr. Lambert: This is the point. All the opposition has been asking is that the minister stand in his place like a man—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert: —and let him name names. On previous occasions names were named.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert: He has not got names. He says he has not seen the file. There is not even a file that the Prime Minister can suggest should be referred to the judicial inquiry, unless he has knowledge which he fails to disclose to the house.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my hon. friend should look into the situation and should read the order in council setting up the Dorion inquiry. Perhaps to clarify this I might read to the house, and I shall be glad to table this, a communication, a letter which I have just received from the Minister of Justice on this matter, and it reads as follows:

My dear Prime Minister:

On Friday, March 4th, as recorded on page 2211 on Hansard I stated that the Leader of the Opposition "was accusing us of hiding the truth, of hiding evidence from the committee."

I added that he was "the very last person in the house who can afford to give advice on the handling of security cases in Canada," and I also said "I want the right honourable gentleman to tell the house about his participation in the Monseignor case when he was Prime Minister of this country."

To this the right honourable gentleman replied "I am not worried. Have your commission look into it. Put it on the agenda."

Mr. Churchill: That is the general one you mentioned.

Mr. Pearson: The letter goes on:

I have subsequently indicated that the Leader of the Opposition had failed to place the file on this case before the law officers of the Department of Justice for their advice, that the information given to the Leader of the Opposition when he was Prime Minister concerned a case in which security risks were involved.

I have alleged that the Leader of the Opposition mishandled this case and that he failed to seek the advice of the law officers of the Department of Justice as to the appropriate method of dealing with the case, and I am willing and anxious to have these allegations considered by a judicial inquiry which will be free to examine all aspects of the case. I will abide by the result of such inquiry, fully conscious of the consequences.

I have made and make no other charges.

Yours sincerely,

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Holy, holy, holy.

Mr. Starr: You cannot get away with that.

An hon. Member: Cardinism.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Ontario.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised and shocked by the Prime Minister's reading a letter of this kind, knowing full well that since those utterances were made, that are set out in this letter, the Minister of Justice has had a press conference in which he has gone beyond what happened—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: —on Friday. I am shocked and surprised now that the Prime Minister is an instrument and an accomplice to the spreading of rumours that are being spread around by the Minister of Justice, who has disgraced his position, which is one of the most respected positions in this country, to do with the meting out of justice.

The Minister of Justice in his press conference stated that there were more than two ministers involved. That means that any number can be involved. It is not enough that the Prime Minister stands in his place now and says, "We are prepared to have a judicial inquiry". It is not enough. Names have to be named now, before that inquiry is made. I specifically ask the Prime Minister, is it his intention, and does he do this intentionally? Does he intend that the cloud of suspicion should rest upon the heads of all those who are innocent?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: And if it is not, if it is not his intention then he should now clear the names of all those upon whom the cloud of suspicion has been cast by the Minister of Justice in his act of Cardinism, as is pointed out in all the newspapers across this country, who are ashamed of the Minister of Justice in the way he has conducted himself in that portfolio. The charges are not only levied against him, but the Prime Minister who is the head of the government is being implicated.

I think all of us in the House of Commons should see to it that the position of the Prime Minister of this country, whoever he may be, cannot be besmirched by anyone who wants to practise the sort of thing that the Minister of Justice is doing at this time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Prime Minister either deliberately or unintentionally is confusing the entire question which is before the house. The question before the house is the question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: Charges have been made by one of the Prime Minister's ministers, charges which have not been substantiated, charges which reflect very seriously upon members of this house, and some who may be outside this house.

Administration of Justice

• (11:30 a.m.)

All the Prime Minister proposes to do is to set up an inquiry of which he will frame the terms of reference on the basis of a letter which was written by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin).

The Minister of Justice was very careful in that letter to refer only to his remarks which were made in the House of Commons. He makes no reference at all to the charges he made that this case would be worse than the Profumo case; that more than one minister was involved in the Munsinger case.

What the Prime Minister seeks to do now is this. Instead of having a proper investigation into the question of privilege, he is picking out carefully selected statements by the Minister of Justice on the terms on which he would like an investigation. I must tell the Prime Minister that he is not going to satisfy the members of this parliament or the people of Canada by having carefully framed terms of reference made in the corner by the government and passed by order in council, and using that as a substitute for a proper investigation.

I say to the Prime Minister that I think parliament is presenting a very unedifying spectacle to the people of this country, and the responsibility for this lies squarely on the Prime Minister's shoulders. One of his ministers has made very serious charges, charges which he says he makes without even having seen the Munsinger file. The minister either has to rise in the house and withdraw the statements he has made at a press conference, or he has to substantiate them.

As the man chiefly responsible for the conduct of this house and as leader of the government, the Prime Minister has a responsibility to see that ministers act with proper maturity and decorum. A minister of the crown, supposedly in possession of confidential information, cannot use his position to make wide accusations which reflect on the honour and integrity of other members. He has a responsibility now to urge his minister to do one of two things—withdraw his remarks or substantiate them. We are not going to be satisfied with an inquiry, the terms of which are drafted by the government.

If I understand Your Honour's ruling correctly, a motion on a question of privilege cannot cover the matter of an inquiry. It may be better to send this matter to the committee on privileges and elections, although I do not think this will satisfy anybody because it will probably just become a donnybrook. If the Prime Minister wants an investigation, I say to the Prime Minister that he will have to have terms of reference which are acceptable to those in all parts of the house. The terms of reference will have to set out the charges made by the minister, not only in this house but outside the house. The minister will then have to appear before such an inquiry and substantiate his charges, and place his seat and his portfolio at the disposition of that inquiry. The terms of reference of the inquiry must be such as to cover the charges which have been made, and the letter read by the Prime Minister from the Minister of Justice certainly does not cover the very serious allegations made by the Minister of Justice the other day.

I hope the Prime Minister will try to settle this matter, and settle it quickly. We spent all day yesterday on this and it would be a terrible thing if parliament becomes another shambles today. I suggest that the Prime Minister agree to an inquiry of which the terms of reference include the charges made by the minister outside the house and the questions of privilege raised by members inside the house; that the terms of reference make it abundantly clear that it is the Minister of Justice who has to accept responsibility for substantiating before the inquiry the charges which he has made.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, my mind goes back to the other day when my hon. friend was in very hearty agreement with the policy of the government when it decided to draft an order in council in regard to a judicial inquiry. At that time there was no talk from him that such judicial inquiry was not what was required.

Mr. Starr: A name was named then.

Mr. Pearson: In previous cases an inquiry was instituted.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is referring to a case in which I was involved—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That was a case of allegedly fraudulent electioneering—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pearson: If I may be permitted to continue, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend became very indignant about charges being made without names being named. He has been in this house the last two or three years when charges have been levelled against Privy Councillors in the government. We have been accused collectively of every crime in the calendar.

Mr. Starr: But names were named.

Mr. Pearson: No names were named.

Mr. Starr: Yes, they were.

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friend from Yukon kept insinuating: "Wait till next week when I get my answers, when I get my files; then heads will fall". No names were mentioned.

Now my hon. friend for Burnaby-Coquitlam, who had never a word to say on the previous occasions, becomes very indignant when I say that we will set up a judicial inquiry which will go into all aspects of this matter and the allegations in question. I stated, and I stated it last night, that we would do that. I have also said that if my hon. friend and hon. members opposite do not like this they can vote no confidence in the government on a supply motion and throw it out. My hon. friend was not in the house last night perhaps when I dealt with this inquiry, as reported at page 2532 of Hansard. I dealt in my statement with all the points which he has mentioned this morning as being suitable for the inquiry. What more do they want? He does not want this matter to be submitted to the committee on privileges and elections, and I would agree with him. He will get the order in council enabling the judicial officers concerned to go into all aspects of this matter. On that inquiry the Minister of Justice will stake his seat in this house. What more do they want, Mr. Speaker?

I have before me a great many clippings of statements made by members opposite about cleaning up the mess, prosecuting wrongdoers and international crime getting into the office of the Prime Minister—all that kind of thing. Were names named then? Of course they were not. We have been subjected to this kind of treatment now, for too long over here. And reputations have been ruined over here.

• (11:40 a.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Because a member of the government did not pay a furniture bill until all the furniture had been delivered he was pilloried and persecuted.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Now those gentlemen on the other side of the house who have been so free with their accusations over the last few years are getting a little of it, and they don't like it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: We have said we will set up a judicial inquiry which will go into all the aspects of this case, all the allegations made—the references made in the press conference as well as the references made in the house. And I hope this will satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: It now becomes apparent why these charges have been made by the Minister of Justice. Apparently this is part of a counter campaign—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: —to relieve the government's feelings after all the attacks to which they have been subjected. I want to say to the Prime Minister that whatever attacks have been made on the government by members on this side of the house, at least the charges were made in the house where they could be replied to, and not outside the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: When a minister of justice tries members in other parts of the house in a trial before a press conference, and then refuses to get up in the house and substantiate what he said, it becomes very apparent that what the government is trying to do is tell the people of Canada that while they may be bad, the people in the Conservative party are no better. This is a queer way to run a country.

The Prime Minister asks: What more do you want? We want the Prime Minister to let us see the terms of reference so that we may be sure they contain something more than the statements which are found in the letter of the Minister of Justice. We want set out in the terms of reference what the charges of the Minister of Justice were before the press conference—

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nielsen: Could I ask a question?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Public Works.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Yukon can ask his question afterwards. I have to recognize one or the other. One at a time; the Minister of Public Works.

Administration of Justice

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): I wanted to ask the hon. member if he did not feel that the undertaking given by the Prime Minister last night is sufficiently wide. I will quote it as it appears at page 2532 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to read the amendment. It is that we should:

"—take such steps as are necessary to establish a judicial inquiry into the security case referred to by the Minister of Justice and by the Leader of the Opposition on March 4, 1966, at Hansard page 2211 . . . . referred to by the Minister of Justice in a press conference on March 10, 1966 . . . . and referred to in a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Calgary North at the commencement of proceedings this March 10, 1966."

This, it will be seen, includes the statements made at the press conference.

Some hon. Members: No, it does not.

Mr. McIlraith: I am asking the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam specifically what is the difference between what he is asking and what was offered in that undertaking. Would he explain that, because it seems that the government has already indicated its willingness to accept what he is requesting?

Mr. Douglas: I would be glad to do that. First, I was pointing out that the letter of the Minister of Justice this morning, which the Prime Minister seemed to indicate would be the basis of an inquiry—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Douglas: —does not contain any reference to the charges. Second, the amendment which the Prime Minister was quoting last night as reported at page 2532 of Hansard, says only—

—into the security case referred to by the Minister of Justice and by the Leader of the Opposition on March 4, 1966, at Hansard page 2211 . . . . referred to by the Minister of Justice in a press conference on March 10, 1966—

A reference to statements made at a press conference is not the same as "containing the charges". It seems to me that if there is to be an investigation, then the charges, specific statements by the minister, must be referred to the committee.

Mr. Favreau: Which ones?

Mr. Douglas: This should be done in clear-cut terms—

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon seeks the floor for the purpose of asking a question.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Douglas: Let me finish the sentence. Merely to ensure that the inquiry shall include a reference to the statements made by the minister at a press conference without anything specifically being in the terms of reference as to what those statements were, and what those charges were, would seem to me much too inept.

Mr. Nielsen: The question I have to ask the hon. member, because of the importance of this matter, is this: Does he not agree that regardless of the terms of reference there cannot be an inquiry outside this house to determine a question of privilege affecting this house? Does he not agree that no inquiry can deal with the privileges of parliament —that no outside body can take away from parliament the right to settle this question of privilege here?

Mr. Douglas: The answer to that question is obvious. If the matter is to be dealt with by this house, then the gentlemen to my right who are aggrieved have it in their power to move that this question be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. If they wish to do that, that is the place to have it settled. But if the Prime Minister is going to have an inquiry set up, all I am anxious about is that the inquiry should be specific and that the charges which the minister made in public be delineated and that the responsibility be upon the minister to substantiate them.

I think there ought to be included in the terms of reference some specific quotations from the statements made by the Minister of Justice at the press conference as they appear at page 2483 of Hansard. All I am saying to the Prime Minister is this—that merely to hold an investigation into the Munsinger case is not enough.

• (11:50 a.m.)

If the Minister of Justice had made no charges, then I would be satisfied to have an investigation into the Munsinger case, but since the Minister of Justice had made specific charges, then the onus is on him to substantiate those charges and they should be set out in the terms of reference.

Mr. Starr: That is right. He has to name names.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I will take up but a few moments of the time of the house. I would like to return to Hansard of Monday, March 7 where, as recorded at page 2297, in the right hand column, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) at that time indicated the institution of a judicial inquiry, and I quote from there:

> —but not into any particular case. This has been done already through the order in council in connection with the case before the committee. The inquiry will be into the operation of our security procedures generally, with a view to ascertaining first, whether they are now adequate in light of present circumstances for the protection of the state against subversive action; second, whether they sufficiently protect the rights of private individuals in any investigations which are made under existing procedures.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the house that the terms were sufficient at that time, and are now, to inquire into the case that is under discussion had not the impropriety and unnecessary intervention of the minister taken place. But that impropriety having been created by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin)—and it is certainly substantiated by everything and everyone who has participated, and who has observed outside the house—we are now beyond this, and the minister must rise in the house and answer for the statements he has made, for the course he has followed. This is all we ask.

A few moments ago the Prime Minister asked the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) "What more does the hon. member want"? I suggest, without putting words into the hon. member's mouth, that this is what we want. We want the minister to rise in his place and answer for the things that have taken place since that time. We want him to substantiate his charges.

That being done, Mr. Speaker, we can return to the ordinary business of the house, but from my very humble position in this party and on this side of the house I must inform the minister, and the supporters of the government, that we will not move until this happens—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winkler: We will not move into any other area of discussion. We will not move into any other area of business because we feel this is important not only to the members of the house, but now to the entire country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just for the sake of the record, to see how some of these things develop, I refer to an article which appeared in the Toronto Telegram on Tuesday, March 8, written by Mr. Douglas Fisher. I do not have to go through the whole terms of this article, but it points out very clearly how this and other matters are handled, presumably by the government, with the press. Here is a man with whom I have not always agreed, and I think all members of the press gallery have not agreed with him from time to time, but he has his finger on the key of things. This is the way this whole matter was projected in the first place. I think the minister had the advantage of the press, so that he proceeded to do what he did this week.

All we are asking from the government of the country for the sake of the members under suspicion, is that the Minister of Justice rise in his place and conclude this argument so that the house can proceed, so that this despicable situation, created by himself, is terminated by himself, not on Monday but today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister without Portfolio, on a point of order.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, since there is no motion or matter of business properly before the house I wonder whether the house could not be persuaded and you, Mr. Speaker, could not be convinced that we should move to a proper item of business in the house, so that the matters can properly be substantiated where they should be substantiated, through a judicial inquiry—

Mr. Winkler: You heard what I said.

Mr. Turner: —to take them out of the heat and passion of this place in order that parliament can get on with the business of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, since yesterday we have been witnessing a spectacle which is not a pretty sight outside parliament, according to the reports we see in the press and the news the whole population is getting.

Insinuations have been made right and left. It seems that both sides of the house are trying to bring out everything ugly and dirty to debase and belittle the dignity of the House of Commons.

Since yesterday, we have been listening to the Conservatives complaining about the fact that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin), on March 4, asked the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) what part he had played in the Munsinger affair, since it is now generally admitted that there is a Munsinger affair.

The Conservatives feel offended. They said the Minister of Justice is making insinuations right and left. Insinuations right and left, Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot of them in the last four years in this house, since we came here, at least from the Conservatives.

A little earlier the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) said, quite rightly, and please note that I am not a Liberal at all, I am not at all interested in protecting the Prime Minister's seat or that of any minister, but I will say that for years the Conservatives have been making treacherous attacks against people who did not deserve that.

Mr. Lambert: Against whom?

Mr. Caouette: They even insinuated that the former Postmaster General, then Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, received in his office criminals, that is what I said, or people connected with organized crime in Canada. When the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) asked the minister in the house: "Where were you when Rivard or his lawyers or his accomplices came to your office?" Insinuations were made.

More were made also a little earlier when the hon. member for Edmonton West asked the hon. member for Lapointe: "Who prepared the motion you have just submitted to the Speaker?" As if the hon. member for Lapointe was not as intelligent as the hon. member for Edmonton West.

The hon. member for Lapointe can eat up one by one fifty members like the hon. member for Edmonton West. We have heard insinuations since 1962, during all the previous sessions, and particularly since yesterday.

When the Minister of Justice asked what part the Leader of the Opposition had played in the Munsinger case, the latter should have answered, but instead he said to the Minister of Justice: "Give us proof". And please note, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Justice had been, for three weeks, the target of all kinds of sarcastic remarks from the official opposition; they were trying to belittle him, to flatten him out with the Spencer case, which was discussed here for approximately three weeks.

When, in a moment of impatience, the Minister of Justice asked the Leader of the Opposition: "Why not tell us about the part you played in the Munsinger case?" the immediate reply was: "Bring us before a judicial commission or a judicial inquiry."

[Mr. Caouette.]

The pure are not all to be found among the Conservatives. Since yesterday, the Prime Minister has been offering to set up a judicial commission or a judicial inquiry where the statements made by the Minister of Justice himself will be dealt with and the actions and participation of the Leader of the Opposition examined by a judge or commissioner. Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the Conservatives are afraid of such a judicial commission.

We of the Créditistes wholeheartedly support the proposal made by the Prime Minister, who is willing to have that commission set up immediately, within the next 48 hours, so that the Munsinger case can be fully examined and cleared up.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the statements or, if you prefer, the insinuations made by the Minister of Justice will be studied. Should he be proven wrong, I would be the first to ask for the minister's resignation, but let us give him the opportunity to go before that judicial inquiry.

• (12:00 noon)

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Will the hon. member permit a question? I am a little mad and I am a little sick. I think it was a sickening spectacle I saw, and I am going to comment on that.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: The question I have is this: If the members of your party had been the subject matter of the press conference held yesterday, would you have been supporting the government as you are suggesting you are going to support it; in other words, would the inquiry, rather than the principle of having the names named, satisfy you?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's press conference can be looked into by the judicial inquiry just like any other question.

If the judicial inquiry's report or decision should indicate that the Minister did not act according to justice and order, we can always convene the committee on privileges and elections, before which any minister or member can be called and judged.

Mr. Speaker, we support the right hon. Prime Minister's suggestion. The Conservatives should quit acting like hypocrites and accept the judicial inquiry now offered. Let us cease giving the Canadian people the shameful spectacle the Conservatives are now inflicting upon the house.

Mr. Lambert: You are not involved yourself.

Mr. Caouette: Fifty Lamberts; I am not afraid of Lambert syrup.

Mr. Lambert: We are not interested in loud-mouths.

[English]

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, being one member in this house who has had some experience with a judicial inquiry such as the Prime Minister has suggested, I would like to say a few words to the front benches on this side, through you Mr. Speaker, and issue a word of warning. Before I do so I also would like to refer the house to an article written by Doug Fisher in December 1963. He was talking about judicial inquiries—you laugh; go ahead. This is what he says in respect of this type of inquiry, and it was in January 1964 he wrote this article:

> It seems the Liberals felt that an inquiry of the right kind, for the right period, might open a can of worms—

I suggest this is the reason the Prime Minister made this suggestion. Then he goes on further to say:

> A strange thing that a committee designed to check into a question of privilege (i.e. into a personal insult) ends up asking for an investigation into a phase of the Department of Agriculture.

I mention this, Mr. Speaker, to point out what can happen with these so-called judicial inquiries. I have said in this house many times that they are not judicial inquiries, that they are political inquiries, and last night as I saw the Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister walking into this house—as I saw the Minister of Transport walking into this house licking his lips—I knew that history was repeating itself; it was the establishment again coming up with some idea of how to get out of this mess and how they could, by suggesting a judicial inquiry, shove it off on to some unbeknown judge who would work on their behalf.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the former Minister of Justice are jumping in their seats—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, a suggestion has been made that a judge would be placed in the position—

Mr. McIntosh: I have the floor—

Mr. Nicholson: On the question of privilege, the hon. member suggested that a member of the judiciary of this country would be made a tool of this government. By doing so he reflects on the government and on our judiciary.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In general terms, the hon. member knows no comment should be made which reflects on the judiciary.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. McIntosh: I will not withdraw it, Mr. Speaker, because I made no accusation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIntosh: I said I believe something, and I still believe it. I would point out that in the composition of this judicial inquiry I was talking about the commissioner at that time was a defeated Liberal candidate, and all his legal counsel were either defeated Liberal candidates or—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot allow the hon. member to continue this line of argument. I want to remind him, and all hon. members, that I have allowed all hon. members from all parties represented in the house on both sides of the chamber to participate in this debate this morning, following upon the ruling which I delivered shortly after eleven o'clock. Now there is still nothing before the house. The only way this debate can continue would be if a new question of privilege were raised, because as hon. members realize, in the course of yesterday, we were discussing a specific question of privilege that was held in abeyance to give the Chair an opportunity to study the motions which were made subsequent thereto. Certainly we must reach a point where an item has to come before the house, since there is nothing now. Unless a new question of privilege is raised, I would suggest to hon. members that we should call orders of the day.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to Your Honour that the question of privilege that was raised yesterday is still before Your Honour and still before the house.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes it is. The motion has been disallowed by Your Honour, but the question of privilege is already before us. There are other motions which could be moved. I think we should allow the government the widest possible opportunity to extract themselves from the situation in which the Minister of Justice has placed them.

Your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and the ruling by Mr. Speaker Michener, upon which you partially based your ruling, and which I thought was correctly cited by Your Honour, applies exactly to the question of privilege that is before this house. The question of the members of the Privy Council, and the Leader of the Opposition who have been slandered and who have been subjected to accusations and insinuations, both inside and outside this house, by the Minister of Justice, must be dealt with on the basis of privilege, which this house and only this house has the jurisdiction to dispose of.

The rulings, as I said to you, sir, make the point that no hon. member should be deprived of the safeguards which apply to everyone in ordinary legal proceedings, and that no member should be subjected to an investigation of his conduct by an inquiry by the committee on privileges and elections, or by any other process, without specific charges being made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: This is exactly what the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, abetted by the hon. members for Lapointe and Villeneuve, are attempting to do in the case of the Leader of the Opposition and members of the Privy Council on this side of the house who have been slandered by the Minister of Justice. Is the Leader of the Opposition not entitled to have those same safeguards as referred to by Your Honour and by Mr. Speaker Michener? Is the Leader of the Opposition not entitled to the same rights and safeguards which Your Honour has claimed for any member of the house?

• (12:10 p.m.)

Charges have been made against the Leader of the Opposition and against members of the Privy Council. Is the minister to be allowed to slander the Leader of the Opposition with impunity?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Nielsen: They laugh; they consider it a joking matter, but it is one of the most important and gravest matters ever brought before this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: They treat it as a joke.

Mr. Greene: Would the hon. member permit a question?

An hon. Member: Even the Prime Minister laughs.

Mr. Greene: I wonder whether the hon. member could help us. He has stated a precedent that there can be no inquiry unless specific charges are made by a member. Could he help us by telling us what member made what specific charges and risked his seat as a precursor to the Dorion inquiry?

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member was here in his seat in November of 1964 and he not only heard me name people, dates and places, but he heard me refer to sections of the Criminal Code of Canada in making those charges.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member now speaking on the original question of privilege? What worries the Chair is that if we are now on the original question of privilege the hon. member has already taken part in the debate and can only speak once to that question. He cannot get up and speak twice, three times or more often on the same question of privilege. He is in a bit of difficulty if he is speaking on the same question of privilege in seeking to address the Chair at this time.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order and with no reflection—I think I must preface my remarks in that way all the time because of the sensitivity of members on the opposite side—on Your Honour's observation, the Prime Minister and several other members of this house have participated more than once during what has been a general discussion on the question of privilege. I am simply availing myself of the same right that other members have availed themselves of during this discussion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair cannot accept the suggestion of the hon. member. There was an exchange this morning following the suggestion made by the right hon. Prime Minister. The Chair was lenient and allowed members to discuss the suggestion. Now that this apparently has been set aside we should return to what is before the house, and the only thing we can have before the house is a question of privilege. If we have a specific question of privilege before us each member is entitled to speak to it once, but not more than once.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

At the start of this sitting, a while ago, I moved a motion which was rejected by Your Honour on the grounds that it was a substantive motion, which therefore required 48 hours notice.

Now, as I gave 48 hours' notice and sent such motion in writing, it is by that very fact accepted. As that was the only reason for its rejection, my motion, therefore, is in order and can be discussed.

That is why I maintain that it is now the matter under discussion, because the motion I had moved had been rejected for the sole reason that it was a substantive motion and required 48 hours notice.

Thus, it is before the house. In fact, it is the only acceptable motion before the house, whether it be discussed now or in 48 hours, but it is accepted, since the 48 hours' notice has been given officially.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour has pointed out that no member can speak twice in the same debate. I submit to Your Honour that you quite properly allowed a discussion on the question of privilege which was raised yesterday and which is still before the house. I submit that members are not confined to speaking once in a debate prior to the house being seized of a proper motion. Your Honour has quite properly allowed several members to speak more than once. I think this is very essential in order that—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. members have spoken more than once because there were three questions of privilege. Hon. members did raise different questions of privilege yesterday, and made a point of saying that these were different questions of privilege, as is recorded in Hansard. The members who moved the new questions insisted that they were different questions of privilege which would give rise to different motions. Of course if we had a new question of privilege the Chair would allow hon. members to speak a second time to the second question, and a third time to the third question. However, there is not now a new question of privilege before us. It may be that the hon. member proposes to move a new motion, and if he wants to do so it should be done very soon.

I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wishes to speak to the point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the point of order because it might be useful at least for this member to indicate where he thinks we are.

Yesterday the member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) raised a question of privilege. There was some considerable debate before Your Honour made a ruling. Your Honour ruled that in your opinion there was a prima facie case of privilege. At the same time you ruled that the particular motion the hon. member for Calgary North moved was not acceptable. Let it be clear that you did rule there was a prima facie case of privilege.

On the basis of your ruling that there was a prima facie case of privilege the debate went on and other members sought to move motions. Some motions were ruled out of order and some you took under advisement. This morning at eleven o'clock you gave your ruling from the Chair on the motions moved yesterday. You ruled them out of order. Immediately the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) rose and his words were to this effect, that Your Honour has ruled the motions out of order, but the question of privilege is still before us. Whereupon he sought to move as a motion what he attempted to move as an amendment yesterday. Your Honour ruled that motion out of order.

Mr. Grégoire: No.

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry; Your Honour did rule that motion out of order, whereupon the debate continued.

In the course of the debate the Prime Minister, by bringing in a letter from the Minister of Justice, managed to get the house discussing the subject matter of the very motion the hon. member for Lapointe had tried to move, and so the discussion has gone on. The ruling that Your Honour is citing to the effect that a member can speak only once is a well known one, but it applies when there is a motion before the house. It applies to a proper debate. I regret that this discussion is still going on and I would support Your Honour in any effort you might make to suggest that we have had sufficient discussion as to whether or not there is a point of privilege. I am sure Your Honour has the understanding of the house, namely that you have tried not to clamp down but to let the matter resolve itself if it could be resolved. Since you have allowed members of all parties to continue to discuss the general question of privilege, and various proposals such as the one made by the Prime Minister, I do not think you can now apply the ruling which applies only when a motion has been made.

I submit that we are procedurally still where we were yesterday when the hon. member for Calgary North raised his question of privilege and when you ruled that although his motion was not in order there was a prima facie complaint of privilege.

I think it should be noted, sir, that the point of privilege raised by the hon. member for Calgary North was not in regard to the Munsinger case, but rather in respect of certain actions on the part of the Minister of Justice. Your Honour ruled that the point raised by the hon. member for Calgary North was a prima facie case of privilege. I submit that Your Honour having allowed the Prime Minister to discuss a proposal for an inquiry, which you say cannot be voted upon, and other matters than the actions of the Minister of Justice in this house, then it is pretty difficult procedurally to stop this discussion.

I therefore rise procedurally to defend the rights, in terms of consistency, of members to continue discussing the point of privilege. At the same time, as a member of parliament who, as my leader has expressed, has the concern of all of us for what this discussion is doing, I hope that we can soon agree that we are getting nowhere by this discussion. I hope we can soon agree that it might be better to let this debate come to a conclusion, and let those who are affected by it make a decision as to what they should do on Monday. The Prime Minister has made it clear that even though the house may not be satisfied with the kind of inquiry he proposes, it is the government's intention to go through with it, and the government can do that because it is an order in council matter and not a house matter.

If I may sum up what I am trying to say, I think Your Honour is in difficulty if you try to tell members they cannot continue the discussion because of the way the debate has gone, but I think you should also have the support of the house in any reasonable effort you make to bring this discussion to an early conclusion.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I was interrupted by a point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister seeks the floor on a point of order.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have been watching the proceedings of the house since yesterday afternoon very carefully and I have been deeply worried about the kind of situation in which the house has got itself. Yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Your Minister of Justice put us in this mess.

Mr. MacEachen: I am speaking from a purely procedural point of view at the moment, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made a very important observation. Those of us who have been in the house for any length of time, and those of us who have made an effort to understand the rules of the house, know that a question of privilege is not an aimless exercise in debate; that it has always been the position of Speakers that if a question of privilege is raised it is the obligation of the Speaker as the first step to determine whether it is a prima facie case of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: The Speaker has done that.

Mr. MacEachen: The Speaker has discharged his responsibility in that respect. Having taken that course, it is up to the house to formulate a remedy and to put a motion before the house. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre took that position yesterday. At various times yesterday afternoon, in the evening and again this morning we have been engaged in a debate with no proceeding whatsoever before the house. It is obvious from the authorities, and one such authority is citation 113 to be found on page

102 of Beauchesne, that "a question of privilege ought rarely to come up in Parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the house power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy."

This has been the traditional course. I have observed on previous occasions that when a question of privilege has been raised and when the house has been unable to formulate a remedy or a motion for the consideration of the house, the Speaker has terminated the debate. That has been the position. There are certain obvious traditional methods that could be applied in this case, if hon. members sought to do so, in the way of a motion. This has not been done and I understand the reasons and agree with them. For example, the traditional course that has been employed is to send a matter of this kind to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. Nielsen: After charges have been made.

Mr. MacEachen: I could quote precedents of cases and subject matters that have been sent to the standing committee on privileges and elections when no charges were asserted. If you look at the celebrated case before Mr. Speaker Michener when the conduct of the hon. member for Peel was brought into question, that is the most definitive statement on privilege that has ever been made by a Speaker in this chamber. Mr. Speaker Michener took several days to formulate his decision. In that case he took the view that he would not send the matter of conduct of the hon. member for Peel to the committee on Privileges and Elections in the absence of specific charges. He also stated that there were precedents in the history of this parliament when cases were sent to the committee without the formulation of specific charges. So that is a course that could be employed. Why is it not being employed? It is not being employed because I believe it would be a futile course. Yesterday I was deeply moved by the speech made by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming), who rarely intervenes in debate, but when he does he does it effectively, and he did so last night.

I appreciated his point of view. He understands that the situation which is facing the house cannot be resolved by sending this matter to a parliamentary committee. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) took that view, and I think hon. members obviously understand that this question cannot be resolved in that way. The course which is the traditional way of solving such a problem, applying a remedy or imposing a reparation, referred to in Beauchesne, has not been employed. We understand the reason.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question? Is it not also traditional that a member of this house who makes charges must substantiate those charges or take the only other alternate course?

Mr. Lambert: Or specify them.

Mr. MacEachen: I understand that it could be moved by any hon. member that this subject matter be sent to the standing committee on privileges and elections. That could be done. It is a motion that would have to be held to be in order. But it is not being done for obvious reasons, and I agree with those reasons, because sending this matter to a standing committee of this house will not resolve the important question raised by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness). For both these hon. gentlemen I have a very great respect and I respect their moral position.

The government is suggesting that a judicial inquiry be established under a judge. We have employed this remedy, imposed this reparation, in previous cases. It has been advocated by hon. members in all parties confronted with a question of personal integrity or civil liberties that the proper way to deal with such matters is through a judicial inquiry. The hon. member who is the Whip of the official opposition has stated that he will not proceed to other business. I suggest to him and to all hon. members that the only way in which this matter can properly be resolved is to refer it to a judicial inquiry.

Mr. Churchill: What matter?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has read a letter from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin)—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: —in which the Minister of Justice stated—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): He did not read the one letter he should have read.

Mr. MacEachen: —that he wanted his allegations—

Mr. Nielsen: Accusations.

Mr. MacEachen: If you want to call them accusations, that is your word, but in the letter he stated that his allegations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to interrupt the minister. My understanding is that the minister took the floor on a point of order while the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) had the floor.

Mr. Starr: May I ask the minister a question at this point? He said the proper way to proceed is to have this matter referred to a commission of inquiry. Without specifically naming persons or laying specific charges, is the minister implying that he wishes the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton and the hon. member for Calgary North to appear before that inquiry? Is that what he means?

Mr. Nielsen: And all the rest of them.

Mr. Starr: These hon. members for whom the minister said he had such great respect.

Mr. MacEachen: I have.

Mr. Starr: Yet you want them to appear before such an inquiry.

Mr. MacEachen: I have not suggested that.

Mr. Starr: Well, what else is going to be done?

Mr. MacEachen: It has been suggested, and hon. members ought to be very clear about this, by the Minister of Justice that the former prime minister mishandled a security case. That is the nub of the matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: On March 4, not on March 10.

Mr. MacEachen: The issue here is a statement, an allegation, a charge if you like, by the Minister of Justice that the former prime minister mishandled a security case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

• (12:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to bring to the attention of the minister that the hon. member for Yukon had the floor. I can only assume that the hon. member for Yukon has no objection to the minister continuing at this point. If he does object, then he has the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacEachen: I was speaking on the point of order that was raised.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that we not complicate things too much. The minister might like to complete his remarks, with the assent of the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: I thought I had the floor.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona perhaps did not notice that the hon. member for Yukon had agreed to allow the minister to raise his question.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, you have heard the minister on a point of order. You have heard several. I have been waiting to speak on the point of order. I would ask Your Honour to bring the minister to order. It is not up to the hon. member for Yukon to grant permission. After completing the point of order the minister started on a question of privilege. I would still like to speak on the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I might suggest to hon. members that the minister should be allowed to complete his remarks. If the hon. member wants to speak after, I shall be pleased to recognize him.

Mr. Nielsen: I should like to hear the minister, and I intend to rise after he has finished.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister had agreed to answer a question which I think I started. My question is: Is the minister proposing that this commission of inquiry is to confine itself to the investigation of the charges made by the Minister of Justice in this house, or is he excluding the charges that he made at the press conference?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: All right, Favreau.

Mr. MacEachen: It is absolutely clear that the judicial inquiry will investigate all aspects of this matter.

An hon. Member: What matter?

Mr. MacEachen: And the letter of the Minister of Justice to the Prime Minister which was read earlier indicated willingness on the part of the Minister of Justice—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: —to have all aspects gone into. His statements in the house, his statements at the press conference in regard to this matter can be gone into and gone into thoroughly. The Prime Minister, speaking in the house today, has undertaken to the house that this course of action will be followed.

I simply say to hon. members opposite that this is the only reasonable way, the only fair way that this matter can be brought to a conclusion. It is the only possible way that will resolve the kind of issue of principle that has properly agitated hon. members opposite.

Mr. Starr: Not only that.

Mr. MacEachen: Especially the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton and the hon. member for Calgary North.

An hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. MacEachen: The Minister of Justice is not shirking his responsibilities.

Mr. Starr: He is so.

Mr. MacEachen: He is not.

Mr. Starr: He has lost his responsibilities.

Mr. MacEachen: He has made allegations and he has stated—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: He has stated—the Prime Minister has stated that if the allegations of the Minister of Justice are proved to be unfounded then he stakes his seat on the outcome of that inquiry.

Mr. Starr: One moment—

Mr. MacEachen: What more courageous act do you want from the Minister of Justice?

Mr. Winkler: Let him stand up. Let him stand up.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice is now ready to stake his political future—

Mr. Winkler: Let him stand up.

Mr. MacEachen: —and his seat on the outcome of this inquiry. All I am asking—

Mr. Starr: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order?

Mr. MacEachen: All I am asking is that hon. members realize what the Minister of Justice is prepared to do and what the government is prepared to do in terms of a comprehensive inquiry into all the allegations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, what I say now will be somewhat inconsistent with the course I have followed because I have talked extensively myself, but there is no motion before the house. There is no action that the house can take on this matter. In the absence of any motion, in the absence of a remedy formulated by the house that can be decided upon, I suggest it is the obligation of the Chair, and I suggest this respectfully, at an early moment to suggest a course of action that would bring the house back to the order of business.

Mr. Starr: I should like to ask the minister a question.

Mr. Flemming: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since the minister has introduced my name into the debate I think I should correct the interpretation he made of my remarks. I am sure he would want me to do this. My remarks are found on page 2535 of yesterday's Hansard, about half way down the left hand column:

> In my opinion, the Prime Minister is doing a great disservice to this country if he does not demand that the Minister of Justice get to his feet just as soon as it can possibly be arranged and give to this house the basis of the statements he made this morning to the gentlemen of the press.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: I am stating that purely for the benefit of the minister so that he will not be under the mistaken impression that my remarks applied to what was said in the house last Friday and did not apply to the press conference which the Minister of Justice had with the gentlemen of the press.

An hon. Member: He knew what was said.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the minister before we go any further? It is a repetition of the former question that the minister did not answer. Does he think, with regard to his usage if the words "fair and just" in what he said, that it would be fair and just that upon the setting up of this inquiry the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton and the hon. member for Calgary North should appear before that commission to justify their innocence in this affair?

Mr. MacEachen: I did not suggest that for a moment.

Mr. Starr: How can you proceed in this matter without the Minister of Justice specifically naming the people involved?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I was dealing with the question of privilege before the house before the point of order intervened. I was dealing with the point that a commission of inquiry or the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections cannot possibly deal with this matter now in the absence of specific details which the minister is obliged to give the house. Otherwise any such inquiry must of necessity have before it all Privy Councillors, past and present, of the former administration, including the Leader of the Opposition, because of the sweeping charges that the minister has made.

An hon. Member: A few over there, too.

Mr. Nielsen: "More than two", he said at his press conference. Contrary to some opinions which have been expressed to Your Honour this afternoon, the Minister of Justice in the debate last Friday, as found on page 2211 of Hansard, used words that directly accused the Leader of the Opposition of participation—"participation" was the word he used—in the Munsinger case.

Sir, these slanderous remarks cannot be allowed to pass with impunity. The proposals of the Prime Minister, of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and of the Minister of Justice in his letter, a letter which I submit should be tabled immediately as our rules require, to the effect that the conduct of the Leader of the Opposition be investigated, cannot be allowed to be accepted by the house. The proposal by the Prime Minister in the house this afternoon, not being required to be substantiated in any way whatsoever by a specific charge by the minister, in lieu of withdrawal or resignation, cannot be allowed to be accepted by the house.

I submit, sir, that the words of Mr. Speaker Michener apply directly to the present situation and to the case of the Leader of the Opposition and make it immediately incumbent upon the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister here and now to make their specific and detailed charges. They must either do that or they must withdraw, or the minister must resign his seat in the house. There can be no departure in my submission from this principle. That is the essential and the only issue that is raised in the question of privilege before the house, and it can only be resolved—

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Would the hon. member permit a question?

[Mr. Starr.]

Mr. Nielsen: —by this house.

Mr. Grégoire: I should like to ask the hon. member for Yukon why he did not resign after false insinuations were made against the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay)?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: Hon. members opposite applaud that question but if the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) had taken the trouble to recheck, as I did last night, he would have found that not on one but on three occasions on November 25 I said that I was not casting any reflection on the then minister of citizenship and immigration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: Hon. members groan but that appears on the record on three separate occasions. The Minister of Transport has his Hansard there and can look it up. In my submission, Mr. Speaker, no inquiry can deal with the privileges of parliament. No outside body can take away from parliament the right to deal with its own privileges regardless of any terms of reference that may be set up.

What, sir, is the position of the Prime Minister? In what position has he placed himself? He has offered to set up a royal commission to investigate the actions of a former prime minister. Does he really expect the house to support that? I suggest not, sir. How many inquiries does the Prime Minister want in this field? When the Minister of Justice raised the matter the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Pickersgill: The Leader of the Opposition said he wanted one.

Mr. Nielsen: When the Minister of Justice very injudiciously and emotionally inserted the words "Monseignor case" into the debate last Friday he drew this remark from the Leader of the Opposition, as reported at page 2211 of Hansard:

> I am not worried. Have your commission look into it. Put it on the agenda.

No other member can suggest any other interpretation of those words uttered at that time than that the Leader of the Opposition meant that that case should be made the subject of the second inquiry which the Prime Minister announced on Monday.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? How could the Leader of the Opposition on Friday have been referring to a royal commission which no one had suggested at that time and which was not even decided upon until Monday? The hon. member should at least get his chronology right.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the record will show that not only were we discussing the desirability of setting up an inquiry to deal specifically with the Spencer case but also one to deal with national security generally. The decision was made on Monday—at least, it was announced on Monday—but the matter certainly entered the discussion during the debate.

Mr. Winkler: No doubt about that.

Mr. Nielsen: The Prime Minister has set up an inquiry to look into the Spencer case. He has announced a further royal commission into the whole field of security.

Mr. Pearson: Security procedures.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, security procedures. That is the charge that the Minister of Justice is making, that when the Leader of the Opposition was prime minister he mishandled the Munsinger case. He accused him last Friday, of participation in the Munsinger case.

The Leader of the Opposition has suggested that the Munsinger case be put on the agenda. The Prime Minister obviously noted that suggestion because he referred to it yesterday. But it was referred to by him in a very curious and twisted form. The Prime Minister is now suggesting a third royal commission into an identical field.

An hon. Member: No, no.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, yes. In announcing the appointment of a commission into security procedures last Monday the Prime Minister made it quite plain that such a commission would cover the whole field of security procedures and the adequacy of measures. The Minister of Justice has now charged that this case—I refer to the Munsinger case—was a bona fide case of security.

The Prime Minister said that the second commission which he announced on Monday was going to look into the whole field of security procedures. If, without having seen the file, the Minister of Justice is right and this is a bona fide case involving security, why not refer it to the second commission announced by the Prime Minister on Monday last? The Minister of Justice has criticized the actions of the Leader of the Opposition when he was prime minister in handling the case vis-à-vis its security aspects. It properly belongs as a subject of the general inquiry announced by the Prime Minister. He has not, so far as I know, dealt with the morality aspects no doubt considering this beyond his purview. In the face of the Prime Minister's announcement on Monday last the statements made by the Minister of Justice are such as would come before the inquiry set up by the government on security measures. The Prime Minister knew this and the Minister of Justice knew it. But the minister could not wait—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like, very respectfully, to rise on a point of order. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman is not now discussing anything which has any relation to any purported question of privilege. He is making an argument that this case should be referred not to the inquiry that my right hon. friend suggested this morning but to some other inquiry. That might be an interesting matter for debate—

Mr. Nielsen: The Prime Minister actually held that out.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to a point of order dealing with procedure. I have listened very respectfully to hon. gentlemen opposite and I think the same standard should apply to both sides of the house.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order is this.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is a point of order before the house.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Then on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Why not allow the minister to complete his point of order and I will recognize the hon. member after?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): My question of privilege arises out of remarks just made by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: I will allow the hon. member to raise his question of privilege after the minister has completed his remarks.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I would call Your Honour's attention to the fact that the rules require that an hon. member should raise a question of privilege immediately and I want to raise a question of privilege as the result of a remark made by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: "Immediately" may mean one or two minutes later. I suggest to the hon. member it would be so much easier to allow the minister to complete his remarks. I agree with the hon. member that if he feels his question of privilege should be raised at this time he should raise it and I will recognize him. I was just asking for his co-operation in allowing one statement to be finished first. There is before the house a statement being made by the hon. member for Yukon, a point of order which has been raised by the Minister of Transport, and now a question of privilege on the point of order. It seems to me this is not a very good way to carry on the debate. I should like to hear the minister and then the question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On my question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Very well. If the hon. member insists on raising his question of privilege now I will hear him.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I raise my question of privilege because I recall that a previous Speaker ruled the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi out of order because seven seconds had elapsed. My question of privilege is that the minister has stated that the Chair should see that both sides have equal opportunity in the matter of raising points of order or questions of privilege, whatever the case may be. I would call to Your Honour's attention that again the Minister of Transport is continuing to abuse the rules by rising without recognition from the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will recognize him now.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, so there will be no misunderstanding, I did not make any admonition to you, sir. I merely said to hon. gentlemen opposite that I had listened politely to them and I hoped they would listen politely to me, as I think most of them want to do. My point is this, sir. The hon. gentleman is embarking upon a debate which seems to me to have wandered very far afield from any possible question of privilege. In the course of his remarks he said there had been no specific charges made. If there have been no specific charges it is hard to see how there can be any question of privilege before the house. If all that exists is a grievance—

Mr. Brand: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: There can only be one point of order raised at a time.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South).]

Mr. Pickersgill: I was speaking to a point of order. There cannot be a point of order on a point of order.

Mr. Brand: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon on a question of privilege.

Mr. Brand: On a question of privilege affecting the Chair, I believe that a ruling once made by the Chair cannot be challenged. This is now being done by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was not seeking to challenge any ruling. I was rising on a point of order with respect to the speech now being made by the hon. member for Yukon. My point of order is a simple one. The hon. member has said there are no specific charges. If he looks at the record he will see he was complaining there were no specific charges. If there were no specific charges, I do not know what question of privilege he was talking about. It seems to me that under the guise of privilege he is seeking to develop a grievance. There is a procedure under our rules for dealing with grievances. That procedure will be in effect on Monday, if the government's plans continue with respect to a motion for supply. At that time the life of the government will be at stake and hon. gentlemen will be able under the rules to challenge the government and defeat it if they can.

An hon. Member: Just you wait.

Mr. Pickersgill: If, as the hon. gentleman himself has said, there are no specific charges to be considered, he cannot be speaking on a question of privilege and therefore, since there is nothing else before the house, there is no justification for his continuing his speech at this time.

Mr. Brand: I should like to bring to the attention of the house that Your Honour has already ruled that there is a prima facie case of privilege here; yet this decision is being argued by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order spuriously made by the Minister of Transport, he has twisted my remarks out of all proportion. As he knows, I detailed a whole list of the charges the Minister of Justice made both in the house and in the press. I put this on record in Hansard yesterday. What I meant when I referred to specific charges, as I believe the minister knows, was that no inquiry, whether a judicial inquiry or an inquiry by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, can hope to cope with the sweeping charges made by the Minister of Justice unless it requires the attendance of all Privy Councillors of the previous administration, past and present, and that specific charges must be brought against those to whom the minister referred when he made his statement to the press.

The Minister of Justice must name names if it is expected we will ever get anywhere with that matter. He must substantiate what he has said or he must resign. This is what I was referring to, as I believe the minister knows.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member mention any citation in any of the authorities which gives the slightest justification for the course which he, in his pontifical fashion, suggests must be followed by the minister? The other day Your Honour recited Mr. Speaker Michener's famous ruling and there is certainly no warrant for such a course there. Mr. Speaker Michener said there must be a specific motion and we do not have such a motion before us today. The hon. member put a question to me and I will reply to it if I am permitted to do so. The only charge which I have seen is the charge by the Minister of Justice that the Leader of the Opposition mishandled a security case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know of no other charge. If the hon. member does, let him state it instead of making these insinuations.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not know where the Minister of Transport was yesterday. I put them on record yesterday.

An hon. Member: Read them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to hon. members that the debate should be carried on without any shouting from one side of the chamber to the other.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister should read them; they are on the record. It was not simply a charge that the previous prime minister mishandled this case. There is a charge, appearing at page 2211 of Hansard, that the Leader of the Opposition, when he was prime minister, participated in the Munsinger case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: There was a charge by the Minister of Justice that more than two Privy Councillors are involved in this case and that it is worse in some respects than the Profumo affair. I listed many more examples in Hansard yesterday. When I made reference to specific charges—the hon. gentleman knows this—what it was intended he should understand was that the minister had an obligation before any proceedings can be taken to name the ministers he thinks are involved, without having had reference to the files, and a further obligation to substantiate the charges he has made both inside and outside this house.

One of the outstanding political commentators in the minister's own province, Mr. Claude Ryan of Le Devoir, said this morning in analysing the minister's conduct, and I quote a translation:

> Instead of following a line of conduct dictated by logic and tradition, Mr. Cardin performed one after the other, (coup sur coup) two acts which showed his real stature, that of a small-time politician (petit politicien) of partisan spirit.

And again:

> Already, the manner in which the minister last week revived the Munsinger affair was disgraceful (disgracieuse) and unworthy of a Minister of the Crown.
> Yesterday, the minister went farther. Making use of information which he did not officially possess, dealing with files not under his authority, he accused "a number" of former Conservative ministers of having been involved in an incident about which he admits he knows neither the details nor the exact significance. Without having consulted his Cabinet colleagues he demands an inquiry into the Munsinger affair, exposing himself once again to a new repulse from a leader acting only through fear and opportunism.

Mr. Ryan refers to the statement that the minister was tired of charges by the Leader of the Opposition that the Liberals were plunged in scandal. Then he goes on:

> Coming from a man to whom this country has confided the administration of justice and who enjoys, on account of his position, extremely powerful instruments of pressure, such proposals are absolutely unacceptable.

This is not just the opinion in the province of Quebec; it is the opinion across this country. The editorial I have just read, written by a noted editorial writer in the minister's own province, sums up precisely the case for the opposition in this affair, that a minister shall not use his high office to blacken with impunity members of this parliament. I point out to hon. gentlemen on my left in the Ralliement Creditiste and in the Social Credit party—

An hon. Member: One o'clock.

Mr. Nielsen: —that if this tactic is allowed to go unpunished by this parliament every member of this house is open to the same treatment.

• (1:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take the liberty to mention to the hon. member for Yukon that the time allotted to him under the rules expired some 12 minutes ago. According to the information I have from the table he started making his speech at 12.10, and the Chair has made allowance for the many interruptions. Allowance of some 10 minutes or so has been made for the points of order and questions of privilege that were raised while the hon. member had the floor. So, with regret, I have to advise him his time has expired.

Mr. Peters: On a point of order, may I ask Your Honour if it is possible to revert to the old standing orders and adjourn for lunch?

Mr. Speaker: It is a very worth-while suggestion but the Chair is in no position to accept it.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I agree with what has been said by members of my own party that this is a debate that should be as short as it possibly can be. However, I want to add a few words, not in the spirit of attack and counter-attack, smear and counter-smear which seems to me to be the root trouble that has caused the morass or mess we are in at the present time. I want to try to make a contribution, if I may, to some sort of resolution of the difficulty we are in.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a question before the hon. member proceeds? What does he mean by smear and counter-smear, particularly counter-smear?

Mr. Brewin: I do not think I want to answer that question in any detail now. Surely all members of the house know there have been attacks and counter-attacks, insinuations and counter-insinuations, and if they do not know that I am afraid—

Mr. Churchill: Substantiate that.

Mr. Brewin: —they do not appreciate what has been going on in the house for some time.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member now entering into the debate is making vague, unsubstantiated charges against members of the house. He is talking about smear and counter-smear, attacks and counter-attacks, but I am particularly interested in this reference to smear and counter-smear.

An hon. Member: Well, you have done a lot.

Mr. Churchill: He is making an unsubstantiated attack on members of the house. Let the hon. member mention any smear or counter-smear in which I have been engaged, because I am one of the members of the house.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Churchill: I remain on the question of privilege. If the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), uncourageously standing behind the curtains, has accused me of smearing, then I ask Your Honour to have him withdraw that remark.

Mr. Grégoire: I told you—all the Conservative party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is the Chair going to permit the hon. member for Lapointe to interject from behind the curtain a remark in reference to smearing and allow it to stand without even asking him to withdraw the remark which was made behind the curtain?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member please sit down. Remarks made outside the curtain are made outside the official confines of the house and I doubt that the Speaker has any right to rule on them.

Mr. Grégoire: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have given the floor to the hon. member for Cape Breton South. If he has finished his remarks I will hear the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Grégoire: It is very easy to substantiate all these things and to prove my case I should like to table Hansard for the last two years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grégoire: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would suggest to the hon. member for Lapointe that this has already been dealt with very effectively.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) thinks I have made any particular reference to him I can assure him I did not. I want to get on with what I hope will be a contribution to the solution of the problems before the house. I want to say that I could not help but regret the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) at the opening of the House of Commons today when he read a letter from the Minister of Justice, because it seemed to me that if that letter and that statement had been somewhat different we might be moving toward some sort of a solution of this matter. What I regret about the letter and the statement is that they seemed to omit from their recital of the facts what is the basic problem facing this house, that is, not the statements made in the house but the statements made in a press conference by the Minister of Justice in which a blanket allegation was made against certain members of the house.

I for one, Mr. Speaker, think that a judicial inquiry, at least as a preliminary, would be far preferable to a reference to a committee of the house where political passions and political feelings are bound to be aroused, and I approve of the proposal for a judicial inquiry. I concede the point that this house cannot abandon its right and duty to consider in the ultimate analysis the questions of privilege that members of the house may raise, but I can see that a judicial inquiry, with all the protection a judicial inquiry has, would at least be a better thing than a reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. But if we are to have a judicial inquiry we must have adequate and proper terms of reference.

Here I am not trying to discuss technicalities of what Mr. Speaker Michener's ruling was at some other time or whether the terms of reference are in order or out of order or are too broad. That would be a technical detail. But what I do say to the house is that these terms of reference must incorporate the specific words, the basic problem that exists here now, the charges made by the Minister of Justice against a group of members of the house.

Mr McIlraith: Would the hon. member permit a question? This very point was dealt with last night, and it was very clear that the remarks made by the Minister of Justice in the press conference on March 10, 1966, would be included. I thought that was made clear by the leader of the government when he spoke.

Mr. Brewin: I heard what the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) said earlier in this debate. So far as I know, the reference made last night was not incorporated in the statement made by the Prime Minister this morning. I say that if the Prime Minister will undertake and make it clear—

Mr. Nicholson: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Brewin: I think I will permit it after I have finished making these few remarks. They will be fairly brief and I do not think I will be able to make my point if I try to answer a whole series of questions. What I want to say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members of the government and to the Prime Minister in particular is that we want it abundantly clear that the terms of reference specifically refer not only to statements made in the house but to the statements made or alleged to have been made in the press conference which reflect on members of the house.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Brewin: And I want to go a stage farther. In this instance I want to support the words of the hon. member for Yukon, because I want to make it perfectly clear that in my view no judicial inquiry would make sense unless the specific persons charged with offences were named in the terms of the inquiry. I know that no judge would want to hear a blanket charge against 15, 20, 30 or 100 people. Who is to appear? Who is to be called? The minister will have the obligation later, if such an inquiry is granted, of stating clearly and specifically whom he is charging.

I say if he has that information now, why should we be kept in suspense over it? Why should the people of Canada be kept in suspense? I say you cannot have the judicial inquiry proposed by the Prime Minister without specific charges being made.

• (1:10 p.m.)

It is a fundamental principle of justice, so far as I know, that these charges should be made clear and not be blanket allegations. If it were true that the Minister of Justice did not have enough knowledge to say who they were, then of course he never should have made the statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: If he does know, then why should the suspicion not be removed from those who are not charged and not affected by this matter so that they do not have to be condemned by the senior law officer of the Crown in Canada by a blanket aspersion against them? We should be sure that there is no attempt to deal with this matter in the Committee on Privileges and Elections where the chaos might exceed even what we have seen in the house. That is not the right way to do it. Let the government choose a judicial officer of the highest calibre and let him deal with this matter. But before that let us have it perfectly clear that the grave matter which this house is now discussing, the matter of the imputations made by the Minister of Justice in his press conference, is incorporated in the terms of reference, and that these imputations must be specific and not under the guise of some generalities.

I have had enough experience with judges and I respect them, most of them in any event, despite what one hon. member said. I know their approach to these things. If they can limit the matter or cut it down they will do so. As I say, right in the terms of the inquiry we should have the charges and they should not be the general charges we have heard so far; they should be specific charges within the minister's knowledge and based on the files he controls. If there are no such charges then he should withdraw and resign.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the last speaker a question? The hon. member made reference to me and my thought in respect of judges. I am not quite sure he knows what my position is so far as judges are concerned. I would ask him, as a result of his remarks this morning, whether he disagrees with the editorial which appeared in the Globe and Mail today and particularly the part which says:

> But an inquiry is no longer sufficient.

This is what the people of Canada are thinking. The editorial goes on to say, and again I repeat this is what the people of Canada are thinking:

> Never in the history of Canada's parliament has a cabinet minister behaved with more irresponsibility than Mr. Cardin. The Munsinger case was to come before a judicial inquiry. He took it away from that inquiry. But he did not take it before the jury of parliament. No. He took it to the jury of rumor and scandal-mongering, on hearsay evidence, and in cold blood after a full night's consideration. Canada's Justice Minister did this.
> Mr. Cardin must resign.
> But his resignation will not, in itself, restore confidence in the government. Mr. Cardin told the Globe reporter—

[Mr. Brewin.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. McIntosh:

—that Mr. Pearson—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member now should proceed to the question he was going to ask.

Mr. Lambert: He asked it.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I will repeat it. I ask the hon. member for Greenwood whether he agrees with what I have already read from this editorial, particularly the last sentence which says:

> Mr. Pearson appeared as little more than a "me-too" accomplice in a smear campaign.

I am suggesting to the member for Greenwood in respect of a judicial inquiry that with his experience in such inquiries he knows—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. McIntosh: My question—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is a very long and extended question.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the question by saying that, however good the editorial is, I am not trying to express opinions or make judgments as an editorial writer. I have nothing but respect for the Minister of Justice and I am sorry he has got himself into the mess he has. I am directing myself to a question of principle. I do not intend to associate myself with an editorial, although it may be just. The aspect I am dealing with is how this house can get out of the mess it is in.

Mr. McIntosh: Does the hon. member for Greenwood not agree that a judicial inquiry such as that proposed by the Prime Minister and instigated by the Minister of Transport would end up in more of a smear?

Mr. Brewin: I really cannot anticipate what a judicial inquiry would end up in. All I can say is that this is the best known procedure we have for investigating facts which have to be investigated.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order before the minister speaks, just a moment before the Minister of Agriculture rose the Minister of Justice wanted to rise and you did not recognize him. I suggest that maybe he should now be heard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture is recognized by the Chair.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I was interested, first, in respect of the question in which we are now involved and in the approach taken, which I respectfully submit was very useful to the house, by the Minister of National Health and Welfare with regard to our procedures. In this regard I hope I may also add some contribution to the debate in respect of the point made by the hon. member for Greenwood concerning the nature of any reference and inquiry.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare did, that the instituting of an inquiry is not a removal of the processes of the house in any way, shape or form. Inasmuch as there is no procedure apparently, as the current debate has indicated, whereby this question may be resolved in any proper and meaningful manner under the rules of the house, I submit that such an inquiry is for the very purpose of determining judicially any facts and conclusions, which will be approached in a judicial manner and on which the house can then take further action.

I point out quite respectfully that any findings made by a judicial inquiry are then for this house to take action on. If in fact a motion of censure against the Minister of Justice is substantiated by reason of the findings of fact of that judicial inquiry, then of course this house has recourse to those findings on which to base such a motion.

I see no other useful way in which we can proceed than in the way which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has pointed out. This is the only logical and, in fact, the only procedure available to us. I did wish to make the point that it is not an extra-territorial procedure in so far as this house is concerned but rather an effective and just method whereby we can determine judicially the facts on which any further action which this house deems necessary should be taken. It does not remove the matter from the ambit of control of this house in any way, and it is the only proper and just way in which this house can proceed further.

I might also respectfully point out, with respect to the point made by the hon. member for Greenwood in respect of the matter of a specific charge, that we have a precedent in this regard. I suggest this precedent was useful in the case in question, and the house gave unanimous consent, if I recollect rightly, at the time to the procedure which was employed in respect of the Dorion inquiry. Again this house was not abandoning its responsibility. This house felt, in view of some of the allegations which had been made, that a judicial finding of fact should be made so that if further action were deemed necessary by the house it could be based upon such a finding and not upon mere allegations, rumours or suspicion. I think that is what we are trying to do here.

• (1:20 p.m.)

With respect to the precedent that we have, in that instance the inquiry was not based on specific charges but rather on an investigation of general incidents that had occurred, general suspicions that had been aroused and general allegations that had been made to see if in fact a judicial conclusion could be drawn by that inquiry on which action by the house could be taken if the house deemed it necessary. If it was a question of having to make charges prior to an inquiry I submit that those charges, according to the rules of the house as I understand them, would have to be backed up by the member making them who would forfeit his seat if they were not fulfilled. I do not think hon. members can have it both ways. Either the inquiry is based, as I have suggested, on the idea of determining judicially the true facts regarding the many allegations that have been made or it is based on charges and conclusions from those charges. If the charges were not substantiated the hon. member who made them would forfeit his seat.

If the latter course was the procedure followed in the Dorion inquiry, then I would respectfully refer the house to page 10534 of Hansard for November 25, 1964, where the hon. member for Yukon is recorded as having made the following statement:

> He should make a clean breast of the whole thing to the Canadian people—

He went on to refer to the then minister of citizenship and immigration. To repeat, he said:

> He should make a clean breast of the whole thing to the Canadian people, all of whom are wondering about the minister and the procedure he has followed in this case. Likewise the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration should rise and tell the committee what he knows. I challenge him to rise now and tell the house where he was when the bribe was offered. I challenge him to rise now and tell us where he was when the bribe was offered.

Later, as reported on page 10535, the hon. member for Yukon is recorded as having said:

> He cannot deny—I do not impute anything to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration—that what I have said is a fact. There is contained in the police report a reference to the fact the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was in his office at the time the bribe was offered.

The then minister of citizenship and immigration denied this fact as recorded at page 10534 of Hansard where he stated:

The hon. member for Yukon, in his question put to me, made an innuendo in trying to know where I was at the time that supposed offer was made to Mr. Lamontagne.

I want to tell the hon. member and the whole house that at no time before the occurrence of those supposed events have I been aware of anything with regard to that matter.

Mr. Churchill: Charges were made in the house and answered in the house.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, this is the submission I want to make in this regard. If in fact this other inquiry, which I submit was a precedent and quite a proper precedent for this house, was the result of the house wanting to determine in a judicial fashion, by a proper inquiry under all the auspices and protections of a judge, whether there were facts on which further action by the house should be taken, and if that inquiry was based on a charge by a member, surely when the then minister of citizenship and immigration was completely vindicated by Mr. Justice Dorion the hon. member for Yukon should no longer be with us. I suggest he is still here as big as life.

Mr. Lambert: What sort of sophistry is that?

Mr. Greene: I respectfully suggest this. I know that the hon. member for Yukon would obey the rules of the house and that he has respect for its rules and traditions. If in fact the Dorion inquiry was based on that premise, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should have resigned.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt the minister unless he wishes to be interrupted but would he permit a question at this time?

Mr. Greene: I would prefer to finish my statement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): What about the press conference yesterday morning?

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I draw your attention to the fact that the minister is now dealing at length with the Rivard case and we on this side of the house claim the right to do the same thing.

[Mr. Greene.]

Mr. Greene: With all respect, I am trying to be helpful as best I can with regard to the procedures that I think we are embarking on here. I am trying to help the Chair and the house generally with respect to the nature of the proceedings as they are now before us.

As has been pointed out earlier, I think we have no specific and proper procedures within parliamentary rules with which to solve this very difficult and serious problem. I merely suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this precedent is a sound one, for the reasons I have stated. The Dorion inquiry was not based on charges and the result that the member who made those charges either had to substantiate them or resign. Rather, it was based on a genuine concern of the whole house and a unanimous desire to wash all the linen that had to be washed with regard to the Rivard case in a judicial way and thus determine whether any further house action should be taken. If it were otherwise in this case, if it were a case of charge and responsibility, as the hon. member for Greenwood alleges it might be, then obviously the hon. member for Yukon would have had to resign.

Mr. Lambert: You are wrong.

Mr. Greene: I suggest it is quite obvious that the precedent is before us and that the purpose of such an inquiry is that the house may determine the facts judicially in respect of a situation such as this. I think that is what an inquiry would be set up to do. I do not suggest for a moment that hon. gentleman opposite, who have been so judicious in trying to finding truth, light and probity everywhere in this land by seeking evidence in respect of bankruptcies, searching files from Vancouver to Montreal, eliciting facts, truth and light, were not most concerned in this regard. I feel very sure they were sincere in their purpose. I do not think for a moment that they have changed their coats or all of a sudden suffered a metamorphosis. What was efficient to bring out the truth last year should be efficient to bring out the truth this year, namely, a judicial inquiry. I do not think that all of a sudden by some magical potion within the past year this has become an undesirable procedure.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): How about the press conference yesterday morning?

Mr. Greene: I do not think for a moment that hon. gentlemen opposite are attempting to prevent the shedding of light on these matters in a judicial fashion by carrying on debate here and by preventing the inquiry from being brought into being. I know they are concerned about the truth and bringing out the truth about the matters involved in this case. I merely suggest to them that the best way we can bring out the facts in a judicial and fair way, under proper rules and procedures where witnesses are protected and where the judge with all his experience will be able to see to it that the process is not used to blacken anyone's name unfairly, is to set up an inquiry. I think we have a precedent for this in the Dorion inquiry which was accepted unanimously by the house at that time. Hon. members thought that was a wonderful procedure and I do not think the procedure has become any worse, any less responsible or effective as a result of the fact that it is now one year older.

I do suggest with respect to the qualms of the hon. gentlemen of the New Democratic party, which are quite proper, that this would not be some kind of a narrow restricted inquiry to prevent enlightenment with regard to the very situations on which we require to be enlightened, that they have the undertaking of the Prime Minister to the effect that the inquiry will be sufficiently broad that a judge may find on all facts pertinent to this matter, including the press conference and including anything that was said in this house.

• (1:30 p.m.)

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, this morning when I rose and stated the case for this side of the house I did not disagree with the terms as stated by the Prime Minister regarding the judicial inquiry. We do not object to them now, but what we want and what must take place in this house today is that the Minister of Justice rise and substantiate his charges, his statements and all the inferences in his press conference. When that is done the situation will be resolved. It is that simple. So far as this minister is concerned, he should talk about dairy policy.

Mr. Greene: I will not speak of specious points of order, Mr. Speaker, because they have been made ad nauseam. But I do in all sincerity believe this is the best and the only way that I know in which this matter can be resolved in a manner that is just and proper and will still leave this house with full authority and responsibility to do whatever is deemed proper, whatever is deemed just and whatever is deemed to be in the best interests of the house after it has all the facts as found by the judicial inquiry.

Mr. Winkler: Are you going to allow this type of press conference to go on?

Mr. Greene: If there is no such finding of fact by the judicial officer who has the authority to do so at the hearing, if in fact any allegations that were made at the press conference are found to have no basis in fact, with the result that a member was traduced contrary to the rules of the house, then the house will have every authority and right to take action.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): What is the Minister of Justice laughing at?

Mr. Greene: But such action by the house should be based on a finding of fact by the judicial authority and not through a procedure which does not exist, which is the position in which we now find ourselves.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Greene: I would be pleased to do so.

Mr. Churchill: Is the minister suggesting a commission of inquiry whose terms of reference would be headed "Prove your innocence"? My question is similar to that asked by the hon. member for Ontario this morning. Before that commission of inquiry would various hon. members from this side of the house be called to prove their innocence?

Mr. Greene: I certainly would not agree to an inquiry of this nature. I quite appreciate the difficult position of some hon. Privy Councillors opposite. The inquiry, as the Prime Minister has indicated, would give some respected judicial person broad authority to inquire into all the facts and certainly would not be for the purpose of putting anyone personally on trial. Any action pursuant to the findings of such an inquiry would be for the house to take and not for the judicial inquiry to take.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question? What is to prevent the Minister of Justice calling another press conference on Monday morning and making similar charges?

Mr. Greene: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I think this would be the very salutary benefit of the appointment of a commission of inquiry as quickly as possible. As the hon. member for Calgary North so properly requested last night, such an inquiry should be set up immediately because the matters with which it would be concerned would be sub judice and it would be most improper from that point on for the minister or anyone else to comment upon them until the judge had made his findings.

I think it would have the very good effect of enabling this matter to be determined calmly by a judicial tribunal while we in this house carried on with the business of the country, which is what the people of this country wish us to do.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Greene: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Has the minister been made aware of the fact that a Toronto newspaper now carries the story that the Munsinger woman, about whom we are talking, has been found alive in Germany and has offered to come back to Canada any time she is invited to do so?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. More: Resign. You have given us false information.

Mr. Greene: I do not have that information, Mr. Speaker, because I do not have my ears attuned to the press gallery as keenly as my hon. friend. But surely this is all the more reason for holding a judicial inquiry with the broadest scope possible and as quickly as possible so that this good lady—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Greene: I use that term in the broadest possible sense, Mr. Speaker—so that this good lady may be permitted to give her evidence to enlighten the house.

Mr. Lewis: Would the minister allow another question? Would the minister undertake—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for York South rising to ask a question?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister permit another question? I am serious. I am not trying to be funny. This is far too serious a matter. Can the minister or the Minister of Justice on behalf of the government undertake that if the story is true that Miss Munsinger, if that is her name, is alive, the government will immediately take steps to bring her back to Canada in order that the truth may be known?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture does not yet have extradiction matters under his authority.

[Mr. Greene.]

Mr. Lewis: That would not be necessary. She has offered to come here.

Mr. Greene: I can only re-echo the words of the Prime Minister. He has given his undertaking that it will be the broadest possible inquiry and I personally feel very certain that every effort would be made, including no doubt making it as easy as possible for the good lady to get here, so we would have all the evidence it is possible to get for this inquiry.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Greene: Yes.

Mr. Lambert: The minister is an experienced lawyer. Does he feel it is elementary justice that all members of the Privy Council at that time who may be involved should have to parade themselves before a commission or be called before a commission to prove their innocence?

Mr. Greene: As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is in the nature of a trial of any individual.

Mr. Lambert: Is it not?

Mr. Greene: I have great confidence in the members of the judiciary and feel sure these matters could be resolved in such a way by a capable and experienced judge that nobody would be personally indicted before that inquiry unless he were shown by the facts to be guilty of an offence against the state.

Mr. Lambert: You would never go yourself.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) and I think it is time we set out our position once again because in my view the Minister of Agriculture has probably misunderstood it. I want to draw an analogy which I am sure will appeal to the Minister of Agriculture because he practised law in an area which has given him an appreciation of a community in the true sense of the word. What the minister is really asking for is not a judicial inquiry but an inquisition. Suppose, for example, there was a robbery in the community of the Minister of Agriculture; would everybody in the community be brought before the bar of justice for trial with regard to the robbery, without anybody being named? That is the situation that exists here. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is not asking for a judicial inquiry at all; he is asking for an inquisition in respect of Privy Councillors who sit on this side of the house.

We have said that we have nothing to hide. I do not know the facts. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) said he has not seen the file but he disclosed many things and made many revelations in a press conference which he would not disclose in this house. I see that the Minister of Justice is not in his seat. He is never in his seat when something important and embarrassing to him is being dealt with.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: What we are asking the Minister of Justice to do is—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad to see the Minister of Justice back in the chamber. We are asking the Minister of Justice, the Prime Minister or somebody else to name these people. Let the Minister of Justice name them. If he is wrong in this regard, then of course he will lose his seat and resign as Minister of Justice. Let us have them named, because what the Minister of Justice has said has resulted in the whole front bench of this party standing charged. Who is to go before this inquiry?

I again draw the analogy of the community of the Minister of Agriculture. If there has been a robbery in his community, does everybody in the community appear at the trial? Does everybody go on trial? The only kind of justice of that nature that I have ever heard of is under a dictator like Hitler who took whole villages and towns and laid them to waste. Is that the kind of Justice the minister refers to?

• (1:40 p.m.)

Mr. Stewart: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Always.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would tell the house what specific persons were mentioned in the order in council that brought on the Dorion inquiry?

Mr. Woolliams: I can certainly answer that, and I am glad you asked that question because I was just coming to it.

Mr. Stewart: Who?

Mr. Woolliams: Will you listen? You have asked a question. Let me answer and give me a hearing. That is all I am asking.

Mr. Stewart: You have it.

Mr. Woolliams: I will name some of them. Some of the people who were mentioned in the debate on that occasion when the charges in question were made were not members of the house. That differentiates this matter entirely from the Dorion inquiry entirely. Some of those people were executive assistants. One was an executive assistant to the Minister of Justice; another was executive assistant to another minister. They were not members of parliament. They were not Privy Councillors. That goes to the very crux of my argument. This is a matter of privilege for this house. That is the situation. It affects hon. members of the house.

An hon. Member: If we—

Mr. Woolliams: Therein lies the difference.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman agree to the establishment of an inquiry on terms comparable with the terms used in establishing the Dorion inquiry?

Mr. Woolliams: I have made my position very clear. It is that if the minister knows the Privy Councillors or the members of parliament or whoever he is charging in this house, if he has the names, let him stand in his place today and name those names.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stewart: Will you read into the record the terms establishing the Dorion inquiry, terms which you are not now willing to accept.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not going to get into an argument. Let the Minister of Justice name those people. Let him deal with this in the way he was asked to in the Spencer case. I think the Minister of Justice would have to agree, because he admitted when I dealt with the Spencer case that I made a moving speech, that something has to be done. When the Minister of Justice mentioned Privy Councillors, does he mean every Privy Councillor in this row here?

An hon. Member: And outside the house?

Mr. Woolliams: And outside the house, and those that may be on the other side of the house?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Whom does he mean? Who stands charged before this kind of bar of justice? That is why I say he does not want an inquiry. He wants an inquisition. That inquisition would be the kind of inquisition that would try to smear the whole Conservative party. This is really what is behind all this. I listened to the Prime Minister this morning and I was ashamed. I have always had respect for every Prime Minister of this country, whether Liberal or Conservative, because he has always been from one party or the other.

The Prime Minister today rose in his place and he was annoyed that the opposition dared to stand up. He pointed out that one executive assistant from the Department of Justice now stands charged before the bar of justice in a court room. Because the Conservatives have dared to stand up he now says, "I am going to punish all Privy Councillors accordingly."

That is the Prime Minister's case. That is why the Globe and Mail and all national newspapers are critical of the Minister of Justice and of the Prime Minister. In fact, the Globe and Mail has gone so far as to demand the Prime Minister's resignation because not only has he lost control of the House of Commons but he has lost the confidence of the people. Therein lies the crux of the whole thing.

What remedies are before the house? The Minister of Justice should do this. What would be wrong in the Minister of Justice naming these people in committee of the whole of the House of Commons? This, Mr. Speaker, is a matter of privilege for members of the House of Commons and for Privy Councillors not connected with the House of Commons or who have not sat in the house. Therein lies the difference. Therein is how we can differentiate this case from the Dorion inquiry.

The Minister of Agriculture must appreciate that difference. I ask him this, and it is a question I wanted to put to him when he was on his feet. I wanted to hear what he had to say because I have always felt he would be fair. Does the Minister of Agriculture believe that every Privy Councillor on this side of the house should appear before that inquiry? Does he believe that, without knowing the people involved, they should come before it as if it were an inquisition and prove their innocence? Is this the kind of justice the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice now recommend? Is this the kind of justice they are recommending, that a judicial inquiry be set up where people are not named and where everybody has to prove his innocence? If that is the new system of justice I say to the Minister of Justice that, although he has tried to resign on at least one occasion, he will not have to resign. He will be fired.

Mr. Nielsen: That is his case.

Mr. Woolliams: Because that is what he is asking Canada and the members of parliament to do. He is asking the Privy Councillors to prove their innocence. He is saying: We will not name you. Bring in the whole community. Charge everybody. Everybody will go through the smear and then we will find out what the facts are. He does not want to find out the facts. He wants an inquisition to be imposed on the Conservative Party as a punishment because we dare to raise our voices in the House of Common and particularly because the hon. member for Yukon dared to raise such serious matters as were dealt with by the Dorion Commission.

That is the punishment and the price the Conservative party must pay for daring to bring before this house a situation so serious as was disclosed in the Dorion report. That is what the Minister of Justice wants. He wants recriminations. He want reproaches.

Is this the kind of thing I mentioned to him with regard to the Spencer case? Is this the kind of tradition I mentioned with reference to his own family? I have read in the newspapers that he wanted to quit and go back to the practice of law in his community. It would be hard for him to practice the kind of law which obliges persons to prove their innocence or countenances the setting up of an inquisition.

An hon. Member: Robespierre.

Mr. Woolliams: The Minister of Justice is guilty of malicious slander, inside and outside the house, never before equalled by any other Minister of Justice or any other member of the House of Commons.

Mr. Nielsen: That is their charge.

Mr. Woolliams: In a situation such as this let him stand up in the House of Commons and let him name these people. If the lady in question is alive that may put a different aspect on the situation.

Mr. Nielsen: That has been looked into

Mr. Woolliams: Let the Minister of Justice say who should appear before that commission, who should appear before that judicial inquiry. If not, then the Minister of Justice should consent to be cross-examined by the house in committee of the whole to enable members to find out the facts with reference to this matter. This to me is the crux of the whole situation.

Several ministers of the government and several hon. members have raised this question. Not as a member of parliament but as a Canadian I want to say that we should not spend two or three days debating such a question unless it is—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: Let me just ask this question. Whose primary responsibility is this? Is this the Prime Minister's responsibility? Is it the government's and particularly, sir, the Minister of Justice? Is he responsible?

Mr. Nielsen: He will not get up.

Mr. Woolliams: In regard to the press conference he was cowardly because he would not say inside the house what he has said to the press.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Now he says, and I charge him with this, "I have not read the file". If he has not read the file how can he tell us what is in it? Has he got someone else to read the file to him? The Minister of Justice should, and I say this not only as a member of parliament but as a Canadian, stand and clear the air. He should make these charges so that we can get back to the business of the House of Commons. I say, and I do not care if it costs me my seat or if I lose the next election, that if we are going to have this sort of inquisition we must consider some of the most important aspects of the law. We have to consider the freedom and liberty of the individual. We have to consider the freedom and liberty of the Privy Councillors. Since when did a different law apply to Privy Councillors in this country than applies to the average citizen?

• (1:50 p.m.)

Mr. McIlraith: You should ask the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. gentleman talks about the hon. member for Yukon. I am proud of the hon. member for Yukon who has dared to stand up in his place in this House of Commons. I know why the Liberal house leader says that. It is because in his own heart he does not condone today what is going on in his own government.

Mr. McIlraith: If the hon. member is interested in having this matter cleared up, that could be done in the proper way very quickly and very easily since it is a security matter, by having a judicial commission of inquiry appointed. The hon. member knows he is making this scene because he is afraid to have this matter investigated.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I would be very surprised if the house leader ever charged me or any member of the House of Commons with being afraid. I may be guilty of many faults but I do not think I have ever been afraid. I say to him that we would be prepared to have an inquiry of any kind, and I would be the first to agree to it, if the Minister of Justice would name names, set out the circumstances and disclose what is in the file. Therein lies the difference.

Mr. Greene: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly.

Mr. Greene: The hon. member had some doubts, as I understood it, as to the difference in procedure between this case and Dorion. I think he invoked some argument that it might not be proper for Privy Councillor after Privy Councillor to be called as witnesses. I would ask the hon. member, what is the difference between this and the Dorion inquiry, where no member of parliament was named—

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, they were.

Mr. Greene: Please let me finish. I have granted that courtesy to hon. members opposite and I would ask them to do the same for me.

Mr. Woolliams: I will answer that question now.

Mr. Greene: May I finish?

Mr. Woolliams: No. Surely I can answer the question.

Mr. Greene: I have not completed my question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Bow River agreed to a question from the Minister of Agriculture. We might hear the end of the question and then he can reply.

Mr. Woolliams: Let him put a question but not make a speech. I know he is getting used to that stuff which he uses in his department.

Mr. Greene: I trust I will have many years to get used to the department. What I wish to ask is this. Within the terms of reference of the Dorion inquiry no cabinet minister or member of parliament was named. I believe I am correct in that.

Mr. Nielsen: We are talking of leading up to the inquiry.

Mr. Greene: I am speaking of the terms of reference. No one was named. Yet members of parliament and Privy Councillors were called before that commission, as could have been any member of parliament or Privy Councillor. I see no difference between the two.

Mr. Woolliams: The Minister of Agriculture has confused two things. One is the terms of reference in the order in council and the other is the charges made by the hon. member for Yukon and perhaps others which led up to the order in council. The hon. member for Yukon named names. He gave the dates, he gave the places and the persons involved. Some may have been in the House of Commons; others were outside the House of Commons. The Minister of Justice has yet to name anyone except that he has implicated a whole slate of Privy Councillors in the Conservative party. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture understands the logic of the situation. He is quite right. Any member of parliament could have been called before the Dorion commission. Any witness might have been called. He himself might have been called as a witness. But they were not called as unnamed accused.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, they were.

Mr. Woolliams: Will the Minister of Agriculture tell me of any precedent either in law or in parliament which allows charges to be made against people who are unnamed? What it is is an inquisition. That is what he wants. This is the punishment that the Minister of Justice and his party seek to impose because we have looked at the dirt and the skeletons in the closets of the Liberal party. This is the punishment. We have the threat of the Prime Minister and the threats made by other ministers.

To you as house leader, sir, I say this. Many of us entered this house in 1957 or 1958 but you are a senior member and have been here a long time. Although we differ in our politics we have learned to respect you. Personally I think you have made a lot better house leader than the former house leader. We have often admired your fairness. But today, sir, you asked me a question, the import of which you yourself do not accept in your own mind, namely, that Privy Councillors may be charged but not named. In view of the kind of lawyer you are and your prestige in the city I cannot believe that you agree with that kind of justice. I am sorry to hit you that hard because I have always thought of you as a gentleman.

Mr. McIlraith: Do you know any more jokes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the kind of remarks the hon. member for Bow River is making now are an indication that it might be a far better practice to direct his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate it does not relieve me of my responsibility to the Chair if I am forced to answer hon. members across the way. Therefore I am remiss if I do not address you on all occasions. Let me summarize, Mr. Speaker. In this situation the house should go into committee of the whole and ask the Minister of Justice who are involved, what files he has seen, what facts he has, what evidence he has, and what is behind all these smear tactics. When we have this information then the situation will be different. There will then be a fair inquiry, not an inquisition.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture—it is unfortunate he has slipped from the chamber—reminded me of someone who would take a pail of water and throw into it a handful of fine sand. All he did was to blur the picture. He was making use of red herrings and going off into the Rivard matter which has no connection with this particular case.

The minister and others should distinguish two matters in their minds. First of all, there is the one to which no exception is taken by the opposition and that is the inquiry which was put forward and referred to on March 4. Although I joined the Privy Council much later than others, I am still a Privy Councillor and by inference implicated—

Mr. Nielsen: By the minister.

Mr. Lambert: —at a press conference outside the house. It has been instructive that the minister has not had the moral courage and intestinal fortitude to stand up in the house and say what he said outside. I find it singularly touching to have all these complaints coming from the government side about smears and what have you when the hon. member has the privilege of standing up and denying all the accusations which he made outside this house.

Let us not talk about furniture scandals. That matter was dug up by an enterprising newspaper man. He first brought up the story and the two ministers in question could not rush quickly enough to make exculpatory or incriminating statements, depending on which way you look at it, to the press. But the press put out the story. Nothing was said about it by the opposition.

• (2:00 p.m.)

The former Minister without Portfolio was chased out by his own administration. Mr. Dupuis was put out by his own side. The former member for Dollard was not mentioned by the hon. member for Yukon until that hon. member, then parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, identified himself in the house. Let us not have this nonsense about things being said outside the house. When we have had anything to say we have said it inside the house face to face. I should like to see the Minister of Justice stand up and accuse any one of these Privy Councillors, colleagues of mine in this house, if he has the guts to do it. That is what I want.

This business of being led on at a press conference does not excuse the minister. If he has made a statement he must stand by it. This is not a picayune thing. This is a wholly serious matter involving by inference morality and security. There was the allegation that it could be even more serious in some respects than the Profumo case. Well, I know some people like great headlines and anything which involves a radius of six inches from the navel is always more attractive to them. I agree entirely with the assertions of the hon. member for Greenwood on the matter of principle.

In order to make this perfectly clear, and taking account of those who would assert that there are no charges against the minister, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr):

That the general and unspecified charges of involvement in the so-called Munsinger case against an unspecified number of members of this house, all Privy Councillors, made by the Minister of Justice, at a press conference on the morning of Thursday, March 10, constitute an unwarranted and unsubstantiated attack on the character, integrity and privileges of the said members, and this house directs that the Minister of Justice must forthwith from his seat specify and substantiate his charges and in default thereof he will withdraw such charges and allegations, apologize to the said members and to this house, and resign from this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I know you are seeing this motion for the first time. Bearing in mind what Your Honour has said about other motions I would submit to you that this motion does in a number of respects—I trust in all respects—meet the requirements in that it prefers a charge against the minister and directs certain action. It is specific. It refers to one particular incident and not to a whole course of conduct. It is a substantive motion in so far as the terms of privilege are concerned. It is entirely within the terms of privilege and therefore it is not subject to standing order 41 in requiring notice to be given. I submit that on all counts this motion meets the requirements.

Mr. Speaker: May I say that the hon. gentleman would perhaps agree with the Chair that if in 100 years of parliamentary history motions of this type have never been accepted before there is a prima facie case against the motion now proposed.

I cannot agree that this motion should be accepted, certainly not for the reasons the hon. member has mentioned. He himself says it is a substantive motion. I am in full agreement with that. It is a substantive motion and because of this, in the same way as the other motions made yesterday, I submit it might have been moved in other circumstances as a private member's motion. The motion requires notice and for this reason it cannot be accepted by the Chair.

Mr. McIlraith: We do not have copies of the motion. Is there a copy available?

Mr. Lambert: I am sorry. It is a manuscript. It was sent to the Speaker only. I myself have no other copy. I apologize to the house but this has been the practice on many occasions.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members have noted, the Chair was seized of this motion at the last moment. I was not in the chair myself when it was moved originally and I took it for granted it had been read into the record. In any case, perhaps hon. members would allow me to read the motion at this time.

That the general and unspecified charges of involvement in the so-called Munsinger case against an unspecified number of members of this house, all Privy Councillors, made by the Minister of Justice, at a press conference on the morning of Thursday, March 10, constitute an unwarranted and unsubstantiated attack on the character, integrity and privileges of the said members, and this house directs that the Minister of Justice must forthwith from his seat specify and substantiate his charges and in default thereof he will withdraw such charges and allegations, apologize to the said members and to this house, and resign from this house.

Administration of Justice

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, when you ruled earlier today on various motions which had been presented Your Honour did not deal with the motion which I outlined and which I indicated my willingness to present, the general text of which appears at page 2520 of Hansard of last evening. I think it is common ground on all sides of the house that a motion might be presented to refer this whole matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections and that this would be in order. It is, equally, common ground that this would probably not be a satisfactory course. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) has described it as futile. I think it was the Prime Minister who suggested it might lead to a donnybrook. In any event, I think it is common ground on all sides of the house that a reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections would not be satisfactory.

• (2:10 p.m.)

But, sir, my submission to you is that if a reference to a standing committee of the house would be in order then inevitably so must a reference to the committee of the whole be in order, and it is such a motion that I want to place before the house now. The motion I propose to move—I regret it is only in my own handwriting—seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) is:

> That the house do now resolve itself into committee of the whole in order that hon. members may have an opportunity to examine the Minister of Justice so that he may advise the committee what evidence he has to substantiate the charges made inside and outside this chamber which have reflected upon members of Her Majesty's Privy Council.

Sir, before you put it to the house may I just add these additional comments. My submission to you is that if this matter of privilege can be referred to a standing committee then obviously it can be referred to the committee of the whole of this high court of parliament itself. I suggest to you, sir, that this is the technique whereby we can reach finality in this matter this day.

I personally am sick at heart at this spectacle in parliament which I believe is the most wonderful democratic institution in the world. I say it is time we returned to dignity, honour and the conduct of gentlemen. The Minister of Justice of this country has become the minister of injustice. He has degraded parliament and the Prime Minister has become an accomplice after the fact. My motion will bring this whole sordid business to an end and bring it to an end this day, and the man who sits over there will stand up, speak up, or shut up.

Mr. McIlraith: On the matter of receiving this motion, Mr. Speaker, and on that only, may I point out that a motion has been presented by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), which has not been disposed of.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It has.

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry; I was mistaken. I intended raising a narrow point and I reserve the right to raise a question as to the propriety of this motion after it is put.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think you have given your ruling on the motion presented by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), even before reading it.

The house leader was probably not here then, but the motion was certainly dealt with exactly like the previous motions.

Mr. Speaker: That is correct. The motion had been judged out of order. We now have before us the motion put forward by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell).

[English]

The house has before it a motion moved by the hon. member for Carleton which I will read as I understand hon. members, and in particular the Minister of Public Works, want to comment on it. It is moved by the hon. member for Carleton, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona:

> That the house do now resolve itself into committee of the whole in order that hon. members may have an opportunity to examine the Minister of Justice so that he may advise the committee what evidence he has to substantiate the charges made inside and outside this chamber which have reflected upon members of Her Majesty's Privy Council.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, it must be obvious that this motion is a reference to the inquisition hon. members were speaking about a few minutes ago. It seems to me that what is being attempted here by hon. members, who were so anxious to protect the rights of hon. members, is to have the authority of a motion to conduct an inquisition on their part. If they propose any action against the Minister of Justice surely they must take the responsibility in the traditional way and make charges against him. When they make charges, then those charges can be investigated.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): What about the minister's charges?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Doesn't that apply to the minister?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, that is my whole point. It does apply to the minister. The minister is alleged to have said certain things in a press conference yesterday—

An hon. Member: Does he deny them?

Mr. McIlraith: —the text of which I do not have before me. Because they involved matters that raised grave concern in the house, and I think quite properly—I am on record as having said they are of grave concern to the house, the Prime Minister is on record as having described them in that way and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) is on record as having described them in that way—it seems obvious it is desirable that the matter be disposed of in an effective and quick way. And in view of that, it is well to consider this motion in perspective. The first suggestion was from the Prime Minister, that because of the gravity of the subject matter—

Mr. Nugent: I thought the minister was rising to speak on whether or not the motion was in order. Would he address himself to that point?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the minister that at this point he should limit his remarks to the legality of the motion moved by the hon. member.

Mr. Starr: It is pretty hard.

Mr. McIlraith: No, it is not hard.

Mr. Starr: Then try again.

Mr. McIlraith: The difficulty here is that hon. members opposite, and they may well be within their rights, have not seen fit to make charges arising out of the conduct of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Starr: He has made the charges, not us.

Mr. McIlraith: And that being the case, they have no right to conduct these proceedings by way of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, in just a moment. That is my point; unless they are prepared to make a charge they have no right to avail themselves of the procedure they are seeking to use at this moment.

Mr. Starr: The minister has made the charges.

Mr. McIlraith: If they wish to make charges against the conduct of the minister outside the house, then they should make them.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the Minister of Public Works permit another question? Does the minister agree with his colleague that at this stage of our proceedings this whole matter might be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections? If it might, then wherein is there any difference of principle in it being referred this afternoon to the committee of the whole so that we can settle it and be done with the whole thing today?

Mr. McIlraith: I understand the hon. member's motion perfectly well. Referring the subject matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, while that may be technically possible, would be a futile exercise.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I agree.

Mr. McIlraith: Because it involves a security matter.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I agree.

Mr. McIlraith: And exactly the same arises where you deal with the matter in committee of the whole. It does not matter which committee. That is the point I wish to make in answer to the hon. member for Carleton. It is precisely the difficulty confronting the house in this case. It is the difficulty that has been running all through the discussion. That being so, the correct method in my view is a judicial inquiry into the whole matter where we can get to the facts as quickly as possible but regrettably not as quickly as hon. members opposite and I should think all members in the house would wish.

That is the only way that this matter can be cleared up. The motion now before the house is defective for the same reason as the other motion, and for the additional reason that it seeks to achieve, without any charge being laid, what cannot be achieved without the laying of a charge—as the judgment in the Pallett case shows.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Nugent: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Public Works acquaint himself with the background of the question? He referred to alleged statements outside the house. Would he confirm with the Minister of Justice whether or not the minister is prepared to deny them? The minister referred to it as a security matter. Would he acquaint himself with the fact that security was not necessarily involved but a security risk? He had better get acquainted with the background.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I was a little confused by what the Minister of Public Works had to say about the necessity of charges being made so that the matter could be dealt with properly. Surely the minister should now realize there have been charges laid and that in fact this house has given formal recognition to that situation by agreeing that there is a question of privilege which has arisen out of the charges made by the minister.

If we follow the logic of the Minister of Public Works, any time a member makes charges another member must charge him with something before this house can deal with the matters. Surely the initial point has been made that the minister has levelled accusations against members of the house and the house has recognized that a question of privilege arises because of those statements by the minister. The problem the house now faces is what do we do with the question of privilege which has arisen? How do we deal with it?

In the interest of the members affected by the charges levelled by the minister it is essential that the matter be cleared up immediately. The Minister of Public Works has admitted that the procedure of an inquiry in fact adds to the difficulties in respect of, shall I say, the burden on the Privy Councillors who are maligned, because this shadow would remain over their heads.

The procedure suggested by the hon. member for Carleton, therefore, is the only one which this house can immediately recognize. It recognizes the right of the Minister of Justice who has made these accusations to stand up and say what he meant by them, to give the information and delineate the accusations he is making against those persons whom he feels should be accused. It also gives all the accused, all the Privy Councillors, the right and the means of determining whether they are in fact suspected by the minister.

I submit that to refuse this suggestion would be for the house to say that it is right and just that the Privy Councillors shall have this suspicion hanging over them. I submit that that in itself is a breach of the privileges of those members brought about by the whole house. I submit it is not within our rights as members of this house to ask other members to bear such accusations if the house is capable of clearing the air on this matter.

The method suggested is the only one suggested so far, Mr. Speaker, which takes care of all the complaints. Many members in the house from all parties have spoken on this matter and not every member has suggested that a motion to refer it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections would be in order. It is recognized that the committee of the whole house has all the powers, rights and privileges of any of its lesser committees. The right to refer the matter to the committee of the whole house must be even stronger than the right to refer it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I would ask Your Honour to remember the words of the Minister of National Health and Welfare this afternoon. I presume he was speaking for the government side of the house and therefore obviously the government has taken the position that the Committee on Privileges and Elections could be seized of this matter.

Mr. Speaker: There are a number of very interesting points which have been raised by hon. members who have taken part in this debate. I cannot agree with all of them. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who has just resumed his seat, based part of his argument on the allegation that there is a question of privilege that has been recognized by the house. I do not agree with him on this point. What the Chair has said is that there is a prima facie case of privilege. Whether there is an actual case of a breach of privilege is not for the Chair to determine and is not determinable until the matter has been studied in a satisfactory way.

The usual way to do this is before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as I said a moment ago when a previous motion was moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West. That has been the procedure followed for 100 years in our Canadian parliament and no argument has been submitted to me that this procedure should be departed from at this time. The hon. member says that the house has all the powers in the committee of the whole that the Committee on Privileges and Elections has, and that is a fact. For that matter the house itself has all the powers of the committee of the whole, and what would be gained by moving from the house itself to the committee of the whole? I suggest nothing at all can be gained in this way. The motion as presented suggests that the committee of the whole consider this matter and that the way to do it is the way in which the hon. member for Carleton would want to do it. I should like to refer to citation 230 (1) of Beauchesne which says:

> The ordinary function of a Committee of the Whole House is deliberation, not enquiry.

For this reason I suggest the committee of the whole house should not be asked to conduct an inquiry or take over the responsibility which normally is assigned to a standing committee of the House of Commons. With respect, I also suggest to the hon. member that the motion to the effect that the house resolve itself into committee of the whole is a substantive motion which requires notice.

Lastly, I point out to hon. members that the issue here is the alleged misconduct of the Minister of Justice and that because of this a specific and detailed charge must be made against the minister himself. It is sometimes a little difficult to reconcile the two aspects of the case. There is the aspect that the minister is alleged to have made accusations relating to Privy Councillors and this is the very thing for which the minister is being reproached. But actually the question of privilege is based on the alleged impropriety of the words used by the Minister of Justice and in that regard a specific charge has to be laid, according to the terms of the judgment of Mr. Speaker Michener which I read into the record this morning.

Perhaps I have used too many reasons, but if I am wrong on one or two I may be right on the other two or three. So for all these reasons and the legal argument I must deny the motion of the hon. member for Carleton.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question for information? It is not intended to be embarrassing. Did you draw to the attention of the house that the practice over 100 years has been the reference of matters of privilege to a select committee? In the course of your investigations have you found instances of privilege similar to the one we have been discussing during the past few days? It seems to me that this is somewhat different from other instances of privilege that have come to my attention as I have endeavoured to study the past history of this institution.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that questions of that type cannot be asked of the Chair and I do not think I should be called upon to reply.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, not being of a disputatious disposition or belligerent nature I will try to do my best to lower the temperature but do nothing to lessen the anxiety which I am sure we all feel about this very important matter. If I may say so, sir, in passing, I have great admiration for the good nature and good judgment you have displayed in these difficult times.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: It seems to me that we have some potential contradictions of interrelationships which obviously we are having difficulty resolving. In the first place, it seems that while we cannot desist from talking we cannot procedurally progress in any particular direction. This a very serious situation and we must as a parliament come to a decision as to how to deal with this very important matter. We cannot go on arguing forever, because damage is being done while we are arguing and while we are waiting.

I believe one fundamental has been nailed down today, and we must never lose sight of it, that questions of member privilege and members' privileges, individual and collective, are matters for this chamber. We do not even have to go to our rule book for that; we can go to the British North America Act upon which this very institution is based and founded. The immunities and privileges are ours to decide and in the final analysis a member of this house has a responsibility, as the old British expression suggests, only to his peers, and that does not mean only to the House of Lords in that connection.

If we are having difficulty in finding proper motions perhaps I may invite the minister to introduce, through his own comment to us, a solution to this problem. I agree with what you say about whether we should reach this decision as a house, as the committee of the whole or as another committee, but I would invite the minister to assist the whole house in this great problem.

One of the problems, as I see it, and I am only speaking for myself, is that we recognize that privilege is ours but for reasons of security and other reasons it may well be that this house should properly translate the question to another body. The body that has been mentioned is a commission of judicial inquiry. Before the house can do that it seems to me it must assure itself that none of those things which are precious to it for the preservation of its own privileges are in any way diminished. One of these comes to mind immediately, and it has been mentioned. We are reluctant to translate the area of scrutiny from ourselves to another judicial body until the privilege of some of our members is protected. I think this is the reason for the continual demand that names be named. What I believe we mean, in the proper sense, is that people be unnamed so that our members are protected before the arena of consideration has shifted from here to some other body.

The other aspect that impresses me is that we are also now faced with the suggestion that an act of the executive of the government, by order in council, empower a body to look into aspects of conduct and utterances which, as I have mentioned before, have reflection upon the house and some or all of its members. I should think that this chamber, before embarking upon such a step involving the relationship between the executive and legislative branches, which is the essence of our parliamentary system of government, would wish to know a great deal more about what are likely to be the terms of reference.

I would invite the person most able to help us in this regard, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) himself, to assist us in this very important matter. Certainly we have to move in some direction and I should like him to assure us that the members sitting in this house are not themselves involved in any of the allegations he is reported to have made in any part of this country. I should like him to let us know the manner in which he is or is not making use of security files in such a course as he has embarked upon, which has brought all this to a head.

The issue relates, of course, to conduct or, most certainly, to the utterances of one of the ministers of the Crown, a member of a government which exists by virtue of the continuing confidence of this chamber, and their relationship to us is of the essence, even if some of the members of our body are not involved. I think it is extremely serious that, as governments change and long after they have changed, security files involving people no longer in office are being ransacked and discussed publicly.

I am not one of those who are fully prepared to condemn the Minister of Justice outright, although he has made great mistakes. If I may say so, I think he has suffered a great deal. Perhaps if his Prime Minister had backed him last Friday and backed him down this Friday we would not be in the situation we are now in.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, just a word or two or rather some questions I should like to ask the Prime Minister.

The Conservatives are now suggesting that the house should go into committee of the whole to study the matter and then refer the whole thing to the committee on privileges and elections, if need be.

Right now, if you happen to be walking anywhere in the corridors of the parliament buildings and to meet newspapermen or radio and television commentators, we are told that, according to confirmed reports, Miss Munsinger is very much alive and living in Munich.

Is the government exercising any control over the news which is reaching us today in parliament? Is Miss Munsinger alive? If newspapermen can state that telephone calls are being exchanged between Canada and Munich and that Miss Munsinger has allegedly revealed names at this time, is the government or the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) controlling such news now? And if it is true that Miss Munsinger is alive and ready to come here and say what she knows about the Munsinger case, I cannot see why the Conservatives are insisting so much today on the whole thing being referred to the committee of the whole or the committee on privileges and elections.

The government should take it upon itself to have her come to Canada and to set up, as proposed this morning by the Prime Minister, a judicial inquiry where everything would come to light, so that the members of the government, Conservatives, Liberals or Créditistes, and all the population might know what this is all about.

I would like the Prime Minister to answer this question. Is it true that Miss Munsinger is alive and living in Munich? Has the government been informed of the telephone calls made today between Canada and Europe to get information? Is it true also, as I was told a while ago, before coming into the house, that Miss Munsinger would have left Canada after being threatened?

I would like more details. The deeper we go into this case, the darker it gets. I would like the Prime Minister to tell us if he knows anything, if he is convinced or has had the confirmation that Miss Munsinger is still alive and can comply with the requests which the Conservatives have been making so vigorously since yesterday afternoon.

• (2:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) permit a question?

Mr. Caouette: Yes.

Mr. Fairweather: Does he not realize that if the usual course is followed we can expect to have Miss Munsinger on "This Hour Has Seven Days" next Sunday?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: The Prime Minister might make a telephone call.

Mr. Fairweather: He has already phoned.

Mr. Lambert: The minister could go on "This Hour Has Seven Days" too.

Mr. Pearson: He has been on.

Mr. Lambert: He could go on again.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, last evening we heard the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming) make a very moving appeal to the government in order to solve this particular situation and bring the facts to light. In so doing the only course open to the government is for the Minister of Justice to name names. In his appeal last night the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton placed his finger on one very important matter, that of the Minister of Justice speaking on behalf of the government.

Today very few of the Privy Councillors on the government benches have stood up in defence of the Minister of Justice. We had a very unacceptable defence from the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) similar to the defence he put up last week which eventually turned out to be unacceptable even to himself. The same will probably apply in this case and the chair will again be pulled from under the Minister of Justice. A defence was put up by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen). I was very sorry he saw fit to take part in the debate today. I thought he could better serve his country in Nova Scotia where he had promised to be.

We also heard the defence put up by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith). I would call your attention, sir, to the fact that he referred to the statements made in the press conference by the Minister of Justice, although he has not even taken it upon himself to acquire complete information from the Minister of Justice and find out whether the minister now wishes to deny the statements carried by the press. He also referred to it as a security matter. Here again he differs with the Minister of Justice who referred to it not as a security matter but possibly a security risk.

These defences which have been put up by the government have continued to weaken their case. We also heard a defence from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene). I might say that his remarks would allow me, if the precedent he set were followed, to go into the Banks and Doyle affairs and suggest that we could probably have an exchange of fugitives with the United States in which we would give them Doyle in exchange for Banks. I say this because the Minister of Agriculture in his wanderings dealt with many, many questions.

The Prime Minister in his defence referred to the character assassination of Privy Councillors and to the furniture deal. I placed the original question in respect of that matter on the order paper at the advice of the house authorities because I was told it was the type of question that could not be asked on the orders of the day. Following their advice the question was put on the order paper. The answer came in a very unusual way. We had the confessions of two ministers and later their resignations. The Prime Minister and members on that side of the house like to point the finger and talk about insinuations. There were no insinuations. There was a simple question on the order paper, and if these members were involved in any way it was because of their confessions and resignations. This backs up the fact that character assassination is not necessarily carried out on this side of the house but is carried out by hon. members opposite.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) has no right to say in the house that admissions were made by the ministers who, at the time, answered the charges laid by a member of the Conservative party.

On the contrary, it will be seen, by referring to Hansard of that day, that I categorically denied there was anything improper in the transactions. In any case, when I handed my resignation to the Prime Minister, I pointed out that I was taking the same stand I had taken at the time, to the effect that there was nothing improper in those transactions and that they had nothing to do with my resignation and I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his words, because there never was any admission and I am still convinced that the transaction was normal.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I am not going to dispute the words of the former—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have no intention of disputing the words of the former minister. I referred to the fact that all this took place after a question appeared on the order paper. The former minister has given his reasons and I accept them. But it does not stand up to the statement made by the Prime Minister this morning when he brought up the question of the furniture deal and referred to us on this side of the house as character assassins. It was not I or any member on this side of the house who ran to the press after that question appeared on the order paper and confessed to the fact that we were involved with bankrupt furniture companies. The minister did not resign for that reason, and I withdraw my statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to suggest to all hon. members who take part in this debate that they should try to limit their comments to the question of privilege which has been submitted to the Chair and is being considered at the moment.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Having arrived in this house in the same way as all hon. members on that side of the chamber, through the procedure of a vote in my riding, I feel I am privileged to make statements in respect of furniture, in respect of Hal Banks, in respect of Doyle, in respect of Rivard, Dorion and everybody else in the same way as the minister was given that privilege earlier today.

The former minister claims he did not resign because of the furniture deals. Why, then, did the Prime Minister bring that question up this morning? Why did he bring out this morning the suggestion that there were character assassins on this side of the house because of the furniture deals? Those were the Prime Minister's own words.

I referred to the defence put up last week by the Prime Minister in respect of the Minister of Justice, which defence was unacceptable to himself in the long run. The defence that has been put up today is a very weak one. There are many members of the Privy Council on the other side of the house and not all of them, because they recognize this situation for what it is, have stood up to defend the Minister of Justice. There is no justice in defending a minister who has made a blanket charge which refers to so many members of the house. I am not a lawyer and am not in a position to deal with what is justice in this country but the action of the Minister of Justice is, according to my understanding, a complete reversal of the principles of justice. It is my understanding that under our system of British justice you are innocent until proven guilty. But the position in which this government has placed former members of the Privy Council is this: You are all guilty until you come forward and prove yourselves innocent. This is exactly what the government is trying to do today in its feeble and unacceptable defence of a minister who should do what he intended to do last week and resign. I suggest that the next time the Prime Minister gets a letter from the Minister of Justice he should open it and take action on it.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak without provocation and without too much passion on this matter. I am not going to preface my remarks by saying I have a great regard for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin). I have had no regard for him since a speech he made in this house back in 1962.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. More: I have lately re-read that speech twice. I will not bandy around such niceties at this time. It seems to me, sir, that we have had a great many lawyers participating in the motions and speeches before the house. I am just an ordinary layman and backbencher. I once remember being told that arguments between lawyers were a layman's delight. I think this might be right. They are entertaining for a while. Whether that holds at all times I am not sure, and I am saying this in a kindly way to my friends who belong to that profession.

I should like to see some light cast on what is going on. Some of us want to know exactly what we are dealing with and what is going on. First of all, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we are confused by questions of privilege before the house and this has of course confused the whole debate. We have the matter of the Munsinger case and the direct charge the minister levelled that the former prime minister mishandled this case and participated in it. Those are two direct charges the minister made. Therefore I do not think there is any great problem in the house in resolving how to proceed on these charges.

We also have the allegations that the Minister of Justice is alleged to have made in a press conference. These have to do with an entirely different matter and no investigation of the Munsinger case can clear this matter up. The situation to which I refer is the alleged statements of the minister making a blanket allegation against the conduct of every Privy Councillor who served in the government of that day. This, I think, is conduct unbecoming to our Minister of Justice.

We have asked him and we are pressing that he use the opportunity given in the house to state his charges in a definitive manner so that those who are not involved in any way whatsoever will have the cloud that they carry removed from them. Surely a man of honour, if such he be, would want to do this at the first opportunity. Why he hides behind the eloquent words of his colleagues and the confusing statements of the Prime Minister and others in this matter is something I do not understand.

What is he charging these Privy Councillors with? First of all, he said, "Well, the lady is dead". We have reason to believe today, because of evidence that has been uncovered, that this statement is false. We shall have to see definitely whether it is or is not. However, if this statement is false the Minister of Justice, having made it public at a press conference, is derelict, neglectful and unfit for the job he holds.

Surely the Minister of Justice should know better than to make a statement at a press conference or any other place if he has not the facts to base it on. It would appear now that the statement that the lady was dead is false. That is one thing. As I read events, the Minister of Justice is unfit to continue in the position he holds.

What is his charge against the Privy Councillors? Is he charging that they were responsible for a security leak? Is the charge one to the effect that they were guilty of improper moral conduct? The minister has already said that this case is worse than the Profumo case. I point out that Profumo did not have to leave the British parliament because of his improper moral conduct outside the house. He had to leave parliament because he lied to parliament. Does the minister think that any former Privy Councillor lied to parliament? If he does, he has the responsibility to get up in the house now and say so.

I do not know much about procedure but I am going to say that the house cannot itself resolve this second matter. The first one I am forgetting about and it should not be confused with the second matter. In the first one the name of a man, the former Prime Minister, has been mentioned. The second matter involves every former Privy Councillor. A blanket allegation of that kind coming from the Minister of Justice is something that he and only he can satisfy this house on by getting up and stating who the former Privy Councillors were and on what he based that allegation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I have sat here for two days and I have heard many things. As a new member who has not participated in some of the battles of the past but as a member who perhaps vicariously is affected by some of the subject matter under discussion, I rise now to say a few words. The few words I will say will be said with somewhat of a heavy heart. I say them with a heavy heart because what is going on in this house illustrates the black hand of political assassination which hit parliament and still holds parliament in its grip. That hand is a hand of the past. Others fought elections in the past and all of us here have fought the past election. But this country wants this parliament to move ahead.

I have not met the Minister of Justice personally but I have heard many high tributes about him previously. Why then, after the Prime Minister resolved the difficulty the house was in one week ago, did the Minister of Justice resurrect the coals and stir up innuendos and insinuations which obviously would be provocative? It must have been obvious that his logic when he did that and his good sense and reason went out the window.

If this parliament illustrates anything and if this debate illustrates anything, they illustrate that the political passions of the past are polluting the problems of the present. I refer to political passions because obviously there must be some other passions which are affecting the present.

I have the highest regard for the Prime Minister as a person but I have been disappointed in him in this debate. I have been disappointed that he has come forward and has again tried to justify the untenable position of the Minister of Justice. As for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I disagree with some of the remarks of my colleague from Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis). I think the Minister was trying to exercise some reason and moderation. Nova Scotia is a land of moderation because there they have a lot of difficulties. The people of Nova Scotia move in moderate ways. I expected the minister to exercise some logic and moderation in this debate. However, in listening to his words with interest I was somewhat disappointed when he did not go one step farther in explaining the alternatives that this house could follow in order to get out of this morass of political name calling. He did not go that one step farther, and I would ask him as a newcomer why it would be wrong for the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister to stand up and name the two or the one who are affected in a vicarious way?

This whole matter is causing concern. Allegations have been made about the conduct of Privy Councillors and it is suggested that some of them come before a royal commission. Well, Mr. Speaker, there are some members of the Privy Council who will never be able to appear before a commission. That is what I am directing the attention of the house and of the Prime Minister to and that is why this matter has to be cleaned up.

In talking in homes, any homes, or in reading the local newspapers it is apparent that this matter should be cleared up. Whether it is this minister or that, it should be cleared up. If there are men, they ought to be named.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: That is why I should like to know from the Minister of National Health and Welfare what would be wrong with that type of situation? As I say, what is happening in parliament is causing great concern across the country. There is sickness at the morass we are in. I should like the minister to answer that because there are many who perhaps can justify themselves who have left the government. We have a Lieutenant Governor in the land today who is a Privy Councillor. Also in defence we have another Lieutenant Governor who unfortunately will never be called before a judicial committee. And there are others who will never march before the judicial committee proposed by the Prime Minister.

This party has made it clear that it is in favour of a judicial committee. The debate which took place between the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister clearly shows that we are in favour of a royal commission on security. But this personal passion, and battles of the past, pervert the thinking and logic of today and it cannot continue. I submit that hon. members opposite should use their basic common sense—and there are many hon. members opposite with basic common sense—and listen to the allegations. They should listen to the names of those involved, and then let us have an inquiry so that this matter can be cleaned up once and for all.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to my colleague from Digby-Annapolis-Kings. Is he aware that my objection to the presence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, (Mr. MacEachen) who has made an unquestionably poor attempt today to defend the Minister of Justice, (Mr. Cardin) is because of the promise of the minister, along with the minister of mines, to go to Nova Scotia to look after the welfare of 6,000 miners, a matter which he has sidestepped in order to attempt to defend a minister here.

Mr. Nowlan: I might point out that there are 20 million people whose welfare is now concerned in this debate and whose problems will remain unresolved because of it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, that prompts a further question.

May I ask the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings whether he thinks the Minister of National Health and Welfare is able to do anything for 20 million people when he cannot do anything for 6,000.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I just want to speak for a moment on a question of personal privilege. It is a fact that I, in company with the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin) had intended to be in Halifax and Sydney today to undertake discussions with the provincial government and representatives of the coal industry on the union and management side. In view of the parliamentary situation and my responsibility as a member of the government, I decided to postpone the trip but not to cancel it. I called the Premier of Nova Scotia last night at 11.30, who understood the situation perfectly and agreed with me that we would have a meeting at a later date.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, on the question of personal privilege which has been raised by the minister, am I to understand from his remarks that the minister was to meet with the interested parties today, including the provincial government in Nova Scotia, the U.M.W. and the Dominion Coal Company?

Mr. MacEachen: That is so.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): In reply to that question of privilege, I raise one myself. I spoke with the interested parties concerned yesterday, including the president of the U.M.W., who informed me by phone that he had not been invited to this particular conference in Halifax today, a matter which was confirmed by the provincial minister of mines for Nova Scotia. So now the minister has lied to the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order; the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) knows that he cannot say that another hon. member has lied to the house; that is elementary. There are many rules which are being disregarded in this house today, and just as many rules were disregarded yesterday, but we must draw the line somewhere. I cannot, and hon. members would not want me to, allow an hon. member to say of another hon. member that he has lied to the house. I would ask the hon. member to withdraw.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I will quite unequivocally and willingly withdraw my remark that the minister lied to the house, but I would substitute the statement that he has certainly misled it.

Mr. Speaker: Order; the hon. member cannot say of another hon. member that he has misled the house. He can say that the remarks made by the hon. member are perhaps incorrect. Well, perhaps I could correct myself. He cannot say that an hon. member has wilfully misled the house.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member did not say that.

Mr. Speaker: Very well, I will accept that.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Because of the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, who is quite concerned with this problem as are all hon. members from Nova Scotia, I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will not forget the question I posed but will be able to answer it. Members of the backbenches spoke with him last night because they are somewhat disillusioned with parliament, and that might be the feeling of backbenchers on both sides.

I can understand that the Minister of Justice wanted to resign because some of the backbenchers in the house are fed up with parliament, but can he educate us by telling us what would be wrong in the minister or in the Prime Minister standing up in the house and naming one or two names?

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, after listening for a day and a half to the debate about Miss Munsinger, I notice that as the discussion wears on, more and more things are stirred up. It has been just found out that Miss Munsinger is alive and today we read in the papers that even the Attorneys General are beginning to stir things up in their respective provinces, adding a little spice.

Here, the more I hear the more I think that holding a full and complete inquiry into this case, as suggested, might contribute more to the security of the country than could have been expected at the beginning. And, in that connection, I am basing myself on an article published on Thursday, March 10, 1966, in a Montreal newspaper. It deals with remarks made by the Quebec Attorney General, or

Minister of Justice, Mr. Claude Wagner. The article reads as follows:

Will Wagner clear up fully the case of the "Polonaise"?

And here I wish to add that it is not Chopin's.

It is current knowledge—

—and I am quoting textually—

—in the capital—

Quebec City.

—that the last remark made by Mr. Claude Wagner about some federal members, particularly Mr. Erik Nielsen, "I——here Mr. Wagner is quoted in brackets:

—"I know what he has; but he does not know all I have—", I easily find his answer. It would seem that the words "all I have", coming from the Minister of Justice, mean that he undoubtedly has a complete list of all the people connected with organized crime in Canada, whose hold over the "belle province" is getting stronger, starting from the higher ups and going down to the lowest member of the gang. That list, which will be made public later, includes the names of influential people in judicial quarters and, in informed circles, it is said openly that some ministers will soon find themselves before the court, although it is not made clear whether they are members of the provincial or the federal cabinet.

More and more, there is talk also about the "Polonaise"—

Not Chopin's.

—who would be involved in fraudulent bankruptcies and arson cases.

And all I can tell you is that things have been stirred up.

Following that article and the comments by Mr. Wagner about that matter, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister or, if he is not here, to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin). Within the limits of the inquiry, within the terms of reference, which the government has in mind, will it be possible to get the documents of the Quebec Minister of Justice, and if all that is linked to the same racket. about which so much pressure was exerted from the official opposition, so that an inquiry would be set up about fraudulent bankruptcies, it might then be appropriate if there is a connection in all this, to get to the bottom of all this and clean up, once and for all, the case of fraudulent bankruptcies as well as the Munsinger affair. I should like to have a reply from the Minister of Justice on all this, that is whether he feels it would be appropriate to include everything Mr. Wagner has in his files, so as to bring to light the whole Munsinger affair and fraudulent bankruptcies if they are connected. I feel that the two matters should be included.

[Mr. Langlois (Megantic).]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Québec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of rising in this discussion, but in view of the position taken by the opposition, it will necessarily keep on at least until six o'clock tonight. I want to endorse the words of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) to the effect that the work of the house is progressing very slowly. When he makes this remark, I think he should understand that, for the last three years, due precisely to lack of seriousness and insinuations which have been made and personal matters which have been raised in this house, particularly by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), I have the feeling the Canadian people could stand one day's delay more or less to put an end to all these personal questions and return to the normal pursuance of the business of the house.

I also have the feeling that much more is being learned through the radio at this time and I respectfully submit, after all the speeches made by the members of the New Democratic Party, that the Munsinger affair would have been brought to light in any case, as is being done now by the press and that, at one time, we would have heard the members of the New Democratic Party and of the Conservative party accuse the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin).

Yet, those members spent 15 days discussing the Spencer case, that is the case of an alleged spy, simply because they would have received from someone a telegram saying he had been badly treated. For fifteen days, they sided with the Conservative party, just to examine that matter. But today they are opposed to the setting up of an inquiry proposed by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) and offered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). That is the stand they take, while for 15 days they maintained that the Spencer case should be dealt with in a non-partisan manner and by means of a judicial inquiry.

Then, why not refer this one to an independent judicial inquiry, a commission made up of non-partisan people, in order to clear it up once and for all and so that we may return to the business of the house?

I hope also that this will be a lesson to the hon. member for Yukon and show him that a member is not here for the sole purpose of making insinuations while hiding behind parliamentary immunity.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): As another new member of this house, and as a back-bencher in the sense in which we still accept the word, I feel I must make one or two comments before I leave this chamber this afternoon. I share with my colleague from Digby-Annapolis-Kings the concern felt by all Nova Scotians and all Canadians about what is happening here in Ottawa today as well as what happened during the last three or four days.

I can no longer feel that high level of respect for this house that I felt when I came here less than two months ago. The events of the last few days are beyond understanding. We have done nothing except try to establish one single point. But the attempt has failed. The minister remains in his seat. I appeal to him for the sake of all that is human and all that is good: stand up and comply with the wishes of the majority of members in this House. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to go home today carrying with me any responsibility for the shame which has been brought upon this house and the members in it.

I have had conversations today with people in Nova Scotia. They are concerned. The press is concerned. All news media are concerned. Even the children in grade seven of the school in the village from which I come are concerned. There was a debate among children in grade seven in a small classroom in Nova Scotia today. They are curious. Why are they curious? Why should some 20 members of the Privy Council be subjected to this continuing and apparently unending doubt which has been cast upon them? These are moral questions, all of them. These men undoubtedly came here with much the same purpose as I did, to try to serve those people who wanted representation in this house and who were prepared to support them and show their faith in them.

I cannot sit here silent, so great is the indignation which swells up in me, first, because we are not doing what I came here to do. But more important than that, I cannot accept the position in which these men have been left; it is repugnant to everything I have always cherished. I know no level of ethical or moral responsibility which would accept the silence of the other side of the house.

Let us end this shadow of accusation which surrounds these honourable men. Let them, and let the Canadian people go home this week end able to rest assured once and for all about the facts of this affair. I believe we should sit here until the Minister of Justice rises to his feet. Nothing is more important than the principle which has been violated in the past few days. If we are not prepared to do it, the Prime Minister must accept the responsibility of demanding—

An hon. Member: He has left the house.

Mr. Forrestall: He usually does that. Part of his nature in the last few days has been to face his responsibilities from outside the house. He always goes behind the curtain.

I say we must go on with the work we were sent here to do. By all means, let us get on with the business of this house. Let us get some legislation before us, and act. But I am not prepared, now, nor will I be six months from today, to act on anything in this house until the aspersions which have been cast have been cleared up.

I am not going to move from this house until we have heard from the minister. I do not think any hon. member can move from this house until this matter has been cleared up. I do not know how they can do so while these charges are hanging over the heads of every member on both sides of the chamber. The principle of the minister going outside this house to make charges is one which I do not cherish. Surely, the minister himself cherishes a higher sense of his responsibility than that. Let him name names. Then let us get on with the job we were sent here to do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Royal.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Everything seems to be at a standstill at the moment and it appears that the discussion will not advance further unless the names are given, at least according to what the two previous speakers have just said. Well, the names have now been revealed on the radio and in the newspapers. It is said—

Mr. Vincent: Who gave them?

Mr. Grégoire: Miss Olga was found and she gave the names. That being the case, does the question of privilege still stand?

[English]

Mr. Fairweather: On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, the Chair is of the opinion that if the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) has a point of order he should state it now.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Precisely, if I rise on a point of order, it is to ask whether there still is a question of privilege before the house. Names have been named. Those named are not here. Is there a question of privilege affecting persons who are not members of the House of Commons? The question of privilege does no longer stand.

Exact information has been asked for and given. Does the question of privilege still exist? I suggest we put an end to these discussions, and proceed to something else. To end all this, Standing Order 24 says:

> A motion for reading the orders of the day shall have preference to any motion before the house.

There is no motion before the house. The orders of the day were not read today and I wish to move that the orders of the day be now read, so that we may carry on with the business of the house. We have heard enough of the same old thing, over and over again. Some action is now called for.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe—

Mr. Grégoire: I have a motion now.

Mr. Churchill: —on a spurious point of order has attempted to introduce a motion, and it should be ruled out of order.

Mr. Grégoire: I have a motion on the table.

Mr. Churchill: It is a smuggling procedure.

Mr. Nugent: An hon. member is not allowed to rise on a point of order and make a motion,—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, my motion is on the table.

Mr. Nugent: —especially when the hon. member for Royal had been recognized.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should like to point out to the hon. member for Lapointe that the motion he has moved is a superseding motion, but as a superseding motion there must—

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please—but as a superseding motion it must supersede something which is already normally before the house. I must admit that at the moment there is no motion before the house. There is no motion which can be superseded by a further motion moved by the hon. member for Lapointe, and therefore I declare his motion out of order.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, since you did not ask for the opinion of the house before, may I respectfully submit that the speaker, last night, ruled that we were still on Bill S-10. It is at that stage that the discussion of the question of privilege was carried on. Since we are now considering Bill S-10, my motion is in order.

[English]

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, you have recognized me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; I should point out to the hon. member for Lapointe that the orders of the day have not been called. While it is quite true that at a certain point in our proceedings yesterday the house was discussing Bill S-10, the house has not reached that stage today. The hon. member for Royal.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: What are we debating?

Mr. Fairweather: Exactly the same thing, I would say to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), as was the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and everybody else who has taken part in this debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I have not spoken in this debate. I only raised a point of order.

Mr. Fairweather: I did not say you had.

Mr. Pickersgill: I only raised a point of order, which I raise again, and that is if the hon. member's motion was out of order then there is nothing before the house. To what is the hon. member for Royal speaking?

Mr. Nugent: A question of privilege.

Mr. Fairweather: I am speaking to the same question of privilege that the Prime Minister of Canada spoke to a little while ago, and to which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) has not the courage to speak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fairweather: I know you know a great deal about other procedures in the house, but you are not going to interrupt me.

Mr. Pickersgill: Don't be too sure.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions I should like to ask and leave on the record. Perhaps they will be answered when some of the members on the government front bench have the courage to speak in this debate. The first is to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau).

I am wondering whether the file, or the alleged file, on the Munsinger case was presented to him during his tenure of office as Minister of Justice and, if it was presented to him, what action did he take upon it?

The second question is to the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell), a man for whom we all have a great deal of admiration and respect. I wonder whether the actual transfer of responsibility for the R.C.M.P., from the ministry of justice to the department of the Solicitor General, has taken place? I know it has not been done by legislation, but I wonder whether it has been done by administrative order. If so, has the Solicitor General seen the Munsinger file? If he has seen it, what action has he proposed?

Now, the interesting thing about this case, if there is any interest left after the vile words of the last couple of days, is the suspicion left that the minister's press conference of yesterday was part of a deliberate plan, of which the minister is chief protagonist. This suspicion is confirmed by the silence of the Minister of Justice. The suspicion is further confirmed by the insinuations, repeated many times by many hon. members, about the similarity of the Dorion inquiry to the matter before us now.

I did not happen to agree with the Minister of Justice in the way he managed, if that is the word, or behaved in connection with the Spencer case. However, I did agree that he exhibited a great deal of courage, personal courage, and loyalty to a party. If these are things to be boasted about, I think he is entitled to that credit for his courage in putting, as the papers have said, his Prime Minister and his party before his own personal inclinations. But this courage of Tuesday and Wednesday melted and slipped away on Thursday when he took part in his really quite extraordinary press interview, and so on. As a matter of fact, I do not suppose a minister has had the distinction lately in this country of being the reason for a new word creeping into the language.

In a book which a philosopher wrote about 20 or 30 years ago when other situations were facing this country, he posed the question, "When our children ask us 20 years from now what did you accomplish in those days we shall perhaps be glad to answer, like the French revolutionists after the terror, 'I survived.' "

The thing that concerns me, and a great many other members, is the survival of this institution. This is what this privilege is about. Many of us who have been part of this institution for the last little while are almost inclined to despair. This is a place apparently where men can be destroyed. Not only can their future usefulness be destroyed, but those of us, the flotsam that are left after such attacks, can be destroyed in spirit, and I think this is bad for the country. I do not boast when I say this. I do not think it matters very much about me as an individual, but I think it matters a great deal about this place as an institution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: —and this place is being fouled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, what I cannot get through my head is that there are some men here who are willing to conspire to do irreparable damage to this institution. They damage its usefulness and they damage themselves as they go about their business outside the house where they are brave men. But inside the house they have no courage. God knows, there are enough people who question this parliament and whether parliament is an institution which can survive. There are inquiries, there are columnists, and there are people dealing with this all over the world. Here we sit, locked in this unseemly mess. It does damage to this place, and yet the minister sits there without any courage to remove a smear which has been done to men of honour, two at least of whom are not even alive to answer the charge.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Fairweather: Some of us, in our way, have tried to study this by research, even by experiment, because that is what we are doing now with the new rules; we are experimenting. Here we have a mockery, a travesty of the experiment. However, we have tried in our simple way, perhaps, to make this place work so that people can regard it and respect it as an institution and so that children do not debate its usefulness.

Some of us care whether or not this is a place of excellence—a funny, old fashioned term, a funny, old fashioned thing—to say, excellence; but there are some of us here who seek it.

Mr. Herridge: Good old Victorian term.

Mr. Fairweather: The hon. member might be permitted to slip in occasionally one of his dangerous philosophies related to a Victorian term. I use that term, whether it is Victorian or what it is. I emphatically deplore our record, and I say "our record", because we have all been smeared by this type of thing. We are all a little lesser people because of it. We all have to go home to our constituencies and try to explain away our strange week here. We have to tell people what we have been about.

What in God's name have we been about here this week? What have we been up to this week? We have been witnessing a conspiracy enjoyed by a frustrated minister who wishes to commit hara-kiri and is willing to take other people down with him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: This man has demeaned and soiled this place, but does not have the courage to stand up in this house, and make the charges he loves to make when the press sit around his office. He will not do it now because he knows there are procedures which he cannot bear to have brought into play against him. That is why he will not get up. This strange man likes to go about in other places and environments making smears and statements; that is what he likes to do and that is why it will be hard to explain in the years that follow what we have been doing in these days.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker stated emphatically that the Minister of Justice is not brave enough to rise and name names. Now, they are not giving any names themselves, but they insist that names be given. If no member is brave enough to name names in the house, some people outside the house have that courage.

In the Toronto Star of this afternoon—

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of order. My question of order is that the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) has indicated his intention to read into the record a story which has appeared in the Toronto Star, and perhaps in other press media in this country, stating facts which, unless they are read into the record of this place whereby immunity is gained, may constitute slander or libel against certain individuals. That is the first point.

Second, if the member for Villeneuve persists in reading into the record the story which he indicated it is his intention to read, from the Toronto Star, he must not only take the full consequences as a member for doing so but he must take the consequences that the minister has assumed in making these charges. I have seen the story, as have other hon. members. If he reads it, he is making precisely the charges, the minister made, but more specifically than he had the courage to do.

I therefore suggest to Your Honour that it is completely out of order for the hon. member to read into the record this Toronto Star story without adopting the views and opinions contained in the story, and taking the full consequences for his actions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) spends his time in the house reading press releases, press reports which may at times incriminate one or several persons.

Under the circumstances, I am not the one who wrote this item in the Toronto Star, but I am reading the report published today in that paper. I am not saying that the report is truthful but that someone outside the house has the courage to name names, that someone outside the house phoned to Munich this afternoon and talked to Miss Gerda Munsinger.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member now is disclosing his purpose. He says he is going to read, from some article in the Toronto Star, the names of certain persons who allegedly are involved in some of these circumstances. There are some questions which immediately come to mind. What truth is there in the article? Are we assured of that by the hon. member? Is this a method of protecting the Minister of Justice who will not make the disclosure in the house? Is this a roundabout method of making further unsubstantiated charges? This all, sir, is a travesty of the proceedings of our house, for the hon. member for Villeneuve to attempt this. I suggest that you rule out of order his attempt to read into the record what he now has disclosed to us he is about to read.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, you know as well as I do, that a member has never been required in the house to state he endorsed a press report. In this connection, I challenge the members for Winnipeg South Centre and for Yukon (Messrs. Churchill and Nielsen) to say that they endorse categorically and unequivocally all the press reports which their leader and themselves have read in the house in the past two years. I challenge them now to endorse them, because they will not do so.

In the past, members have always read press reports to support their arguments; it has always been accepted and allowed. I do not see why, suddenly, the Conservative members object to this procedure.

It is claimed that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) has risen to defend the Minister of Justice. I shall reply that the Minister of Justice can take care of himself and needs no help.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At the moment we are engaged in a debate on a question of privilege in respect of newspaper reports of statements that were made, in part outside this house to newspaper reports, by the Minister of Justice. It is, of course, obvious that the statements made by the Minister of Justice were blanket statements in that they covered several individuals. I suggest to Your Honour that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) now intends to take part in this debate by reading a further story that appeared in a newspaper. By doing so he is actively joining with the Minister of Justice in violating the privileges of the members of this house. The house has already decided there is a prima facie case of privilege. The hon. member, in attempting now to join in the action which has been found by this house to be improper, is flying directly in the face of the rules. The Chair has the right and duty to order him not to do so.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the story to which reference is made, but I assume it names some individuals. If it is allowed to be read into the record we shall have no means of knowing, unless the Minister of Justice summons his courage, whether these names are the ones the Minister of Justice had in his mind when he made his lamentable press report.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We shall merely be adding to the slander, if it is slander, and to the suspicion the minister aroused by making these statements without naming anyone. I suggest to Your Honour that you should prevent this from happening unless you have an undertaking from the Minister of Justice that he will immediately rise and tell the members of this house whether these are the names he had in mind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has no knowledge of the contents of the article which the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) was about to read, but I point out to him that he would not be in order in reading statements of other people which appear in quotation marks which he would not make on his own responsibility in the house.

So far as reading newspaper articles is concerned, I should like to refer hon. members to citation 157 (3) (b) of Beauchesne's fourth edition which states:

> It is out of order to read extracts in a debate if they: (b) reflect upon any proceedings or any determination of the House,—

Let me read further from citation 157 (5) which states:

> It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the House and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the House.

May I go further, and read from paragraph (6) which states:

> On the 17th March, 1933, a member quoting a newspaper in debate was ruled out of order by the Deputy Speaker who said: The rule is quite clear, that the quoting of a newspaper, an author or a book which reflects upon debate before the House, either directly or indirectly is entirely out of order, because members are here to give their own opinion and not to quote the opinion of others . . . Members may quote an article or a book stating facts, but a commentary on any proceeding or any discussion in the House, with the object of swinging an opinion to one side or the other, is out of order.'

The Chair, therefore, declares that the point of order raised by the hon. member is well founded.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, contrary to the claims of the Conservatives a minute ago that I endorsed the statements contained in today's Toronto Star, this does not mean that I endorse them.

Every day in the house, we hear newpaper reports and comments read by hon. members who do not necessarily share the views expressed.

The same thing has happened several times to the hon. member for the Yukon. It did not mean that he endorsed them—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, the hon. member is commenting now on the ruling which the Chair has made. He is criticizing that ruling, and I think he is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I am not in the least questioning your ruling. I am speaking of what is happening in the house, continuously and daily, according to the tradition of the house.

We have known for 25 years the orders Mr. Speaker has just read. Yet, do all members always abide by those rules?

We are never supposed to read in the house articles from the outside, but we use them every day.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. member for Villeneuve is still criticizing the decision of the Chair, and I think he should be restrained from carrying on in this manner.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, it is a very simple matter. The question is whether, in fact, Miss Gerda Munsinger was located in Munich, Germany, this afternoon. In Canada, we called her Olga, as the newspapermen did, and we wonder if it is true that she is actually alive. According to the Toronto Star—

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

[English]

Mr. Churchill: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker; the hon. member is now referring to a woman by the name of Munsinger. The Minister of Justice told us she was dead, so this story must obviously be false. Are we to be subjected to these false stories being read into the record? The Minister of Justice told us that the woman he named during his press conference was dead. She has now been revived or resurrected by the hon. member for Villeneuve. Obviously the story he is relying on cannot be true because we have to accept the statement of the Minister of Justice, speaking as a minister of the Crown and presumably with the approval of his colleagues in cabinet. What kind of nonsense is this we are hearing about some woman who does not exist?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we want to know, and here I quote—

[English]

The Star says it has located the Munsinger—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the Star reports—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have already advised the hon. member for Villeneuve that he would be out of order in quoting from a newspaper article reflecting on a proceeding in the house. I should point out to the hon. member that I have not said he would be out of order if he read from a newspaper or an article, but that reading from an article reflecting on any procedure in the house is out of order. I suggest to the hon. member that he is now doing just that.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) is not allowed to quote from newspaper articles, how come the question of privilege was raised on the basis of newspaper reports?

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), as well as the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), did quote newspaper articles on a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the very fine point which the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) has raised. I should point out to him, though, that when the initial reference was made to newspapers it was not a reference to a proceeding taking place in this house. I suggest to the hon. member for Lapointe that there is a distinct difference.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege—

An hon. Member: Whose privilege?

Mr. Nielsen: The privileges of all members of this house. Your Honour has made a ruling. It is beneath the dignity of the Chair to have hon. members argue the merits of that ruling once made. The ruling has been made and it behooves no hon. member to take issue with that ruling, which is precisely what the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is doing.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We accept the ruling you made a moment ago and the hon. member for Villeneuve will abide by it.

But you certainly have read, in Beauchesne, citation 157, paragraph 5, which says:

(5) It is not in order to read articles in newspapers—

And so on—

—emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member—

We have the right to quote newspaper articles as long as it is not out of order. If you let the hon. member for Villeneuve read this article, you will find that it is not out of order. If it is against the rules, then the Conservatives can rise on a point of order.

It is permissible to read newspaper articles when it is according to the rules. To know if in this it is out of order, let them allow the member for Villeneuve to start reading his article. That is normal.

But they are afraid, Mr. Speaker, that is all.

There can be no harm in reading the article, it will not violate citation 157, paragraph 3, 5 and 6.

But to find out, the hon. member for Villeneuve must first read the article, otherwise you will never know. That is what we want.

We respect your ruling. The hon. member for Villeneuve will comply with it. I have read what he wishes to read. It is going to hurt, but it is not out of order.

[English]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, according to the Canadian Press, and I quote in English:

The Star says it has located Gerda Munsinger, centre of a new sex-and-security debate in the Commons, alive and well in a Munich apartment.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Yukon on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: My point of order is this. Your Honour has ruled that unless the hon. member adopts as his own the opinions in the article which he intends to read—

Mr. Caouette: Oh, no.

Mr. Nielsen: —he cannot read them into the record of this house. The rule is clear. The hon. member for Villeneuve knows what is in that press article, as I and many other members do because we were reading it in the lobbies. What is being attempted here is to read into the record statements which are now libellous but which will receive the cloak of immunity once they are read in this house.

Mr. Caouette: They are in the paper today.

Mr. Nielsen: That is fine, and if they are in the paper today that paper must take the responsibility for them and the possibility of having libel suits brought against it for the publication. But we in this house should not lend ourselves to abetting the creation of what constitutes libel by having the hon. member for Villeneuve read into the record something which has appeared in the press.

If the hon. member for Villeneuve wishes to take the responsibility of adopting those views as his own, let him read them into the record. As far as I am concerned there is nothing I am afraid to have read into the record. The hon. member must accept that responsibility and adopt those views as his own. He is afraid to do that, just as the minister is.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In your ruling a while ago, you did not mention that the hon. member for Villeneuve would have to accept the responsibility for the article. You mentioned citation 157, paragraph 3, subparagraph (b), and paragraphs 5 and 6. None of them stipulates that a member who reads a newspaper article assumes the responsibility for it.

Moreover, when members read to the house statements the press attributed to the Minister of Justice, not one of them took the responsibility for them.

Let the hon. member for Villeneuve read his newspaper article, which will be according to your instructions and rulings of a while ago. You did not mention at any time that the hon. member for Villeneuve had to accept the responsibility for it. I say, at this point, that in his usual fashion, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) distorts the Speaker's statements, and that is a serious matter when one's mind is that crooked.

[English]

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the ruling that Your Honour made was that the hon. member would be out of order in reading this article.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nugent: If I might remind Your Honour of what you said, it was that unless the hon. member adopted the views contained in the article as his own, he would be out of order in reading it. Your Honour said that if he wanted to read it he would have to do so on his own responsibility. I ask you, sir, to ask hon. members to stop arguing against the ruling you have already made. You have ruled that it would be out of order for the hon. member to read the article and I ask you to ask him to stop reading it.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to move that the house do now adjourn, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr).

An hon. Member: Chicken.

Mr. Winkler: Who is chicken around here? Let the minister get up and talk.

Mr. Starr: There hasn't been a backbone on the front benches opposite for two days now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Nielson.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order.

Mr. Starr: The motion is not debatable.

Mr. Pickersgill: A point of order may be raised at any time.

Mr. Churchill: It is not debatable.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order. The point of order is that there does not seem to be any proceeding before the house and the motion is therefore not in order.

Mr. Starr: The minister has risen on a point of order, but that is not a point of order.

Mr. Grégoire: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Starr: There is no point of order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: Are you annoyed, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It might be just as well if hon. members gave the Speaker the chance to make a ruling. He is going to make it anyway.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yesterday during the proceedings of the house pretty much the same situation arose. The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) was making a speech and the floor was taken from him, legitimately of course, by a point of order. When a point of order is put to the house, no member has the right to move that the house adjourn until the hon. member who was making the speech at the time has the floor again. I therefore declare that the motion is out of order at this particular time. The hon. member for Villeneuve.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I go on in English—

[English]

In a copyright story from Munich by staff writer—

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please; I repeat the rule to the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). The rule is quite clear, that the quoting of a newspaper article, or the author of a book, which reflects upon debate before the house either directly or indirectly, is out of order. I am not familiar with the contents of the article which the hon. member for Villeneuve is attempting to read, but it appears to the Chair, that he is about to read from an article which reflects upon the house and in doing so, he would be out of order.

May I also say to him that in the first part of the ruling I made a few minutes ago I suggested to him that he would be out of order if he were to read from statements appearing in quotation marks containing comments which it would be out of order for him to make on his own. I had hoped the hon. member for Villeneuve would co-operate with the Chair in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I am in no way reflecting upon this debate. I am not accepting anybody else's words. I simply want to question the government, or the Minister of Justice, as to what is true in this?

It seems to me that, at this time, there are Conservatives who have an interest in knowing the article, in approving or disapproving it.

When I hear the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) say that I must take the responsibility for what is written in the report, I might ask him when does he take the responsibility for what he says in this house.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I want to say with regard to my participation in any of the debates in this house, that in ratifying the views and comments which I have read from the press, and other sources, throughout the whole eight years or more that I have been here, I have done that on my own responsibility as a member.

I agree with your opinions with respect to any articles that may be read into the record. That is the point of order. If the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) is prepared to take the responsibility for the article he wants to read, then I suggest to you, sir, and to all members who are responsible for the words they utter in this house, that he should go ahead and read the article.

As long as the hon. member takes responsibility, and adopts the views and opinions stated in the article as being his own, he may read it. He is obliged to take responsibility, and so is the Minister of Justice with respect to stories which appear in the Ottawa Citizen this afternoon. What has happened may well take those newspapers off the libel hook on which they may have been. It ill behooves this house to adopt procedure which would have that result.

Mr. Speaker, you have made a ruling. You have asked the hon. member for Villeneuve to desist. I suggest to you, sir, that he should be restrained from reading the article.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, it is not of course the business of the Chair to decide what effect the article referred to will have outside this house. The jurisdiction of the Chair is within the house itself. Again, I say to the hon. member for Villeneuve that if the article he intends to read in any way reflects upon the proceedings of this house, then he is out of order in reading the report.

Mr. Starr: Quite right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I had hoped the hon. member for Villeneuve would help the Chair in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I take full and complete responsibility for the question I put to the government. And I can take it outside the house, by asking the same question, that is: "What is true in this?" That is what we want to know, for the guidance of the Conservatives also; we want to know exactly what took place.

Taking the responsibility for the question I have put to the Minister of Justice, I have a right to quote this report.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Villeneuve is trying to do by the back door what he cannot do by the front door. Your ruling precludes his quoting from that article. If he wishes to state in the house the contents of the article we shall be pleased to have him do so on his own responsibility, by adopting the views of the writer of the article, which, as a responsible member of this house he must do.

I suggest to you, sir, that you have made your ruling. The hon. member for Villeneuve is persisting, and should not be allowed to do so.

Mr. Starr: He should be named.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, the member for Yukon is taking devious ways to prevent the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) from reading a press report.

Let him quote the standing order stating that the hon. member for Villeneuve must assume responsibility for what he reads. Paragraph 1 of citation 157 of Beauchesne reads as follows:

> The practice of reading extracts from newspapers to support an argument in debate has been followed in the British house since 1840, when Speaker Peel—

Whom he never knew.

> —with the acquiescence of the house, allowed a member to proceed to read passages from a newspaper.

Let the member for Yukon tell us where in Beauchesne, May, Bourinot and all the others standing orders in English or in French—

Some hon. Members: Pascal.

Mr. Grégoire: Pascal or any other, it is said he must assume responsibility for that. The only duty of the hon. member for Villeneuve is to see that he does not go against the ruling you made and to comply with the provisions of paragraphs 3 and 7 of Beauchesne, citation 157.

If you want the hon. member to comply with them, allow him to read this press report, and you will see. But the member for Yukon objects even before a line is read. You cannot judge whether it is in order or not, because he is afraid of the article being read. How true it is, Mr. Speaker. Since a few minutes ago, they all look cowed. Just look at them. They even want to adjourn—

[English]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, with all due deference to you, may I point out the standing rules of the house?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Brand: I have the floor. Would you sit down?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winkler: That's the boy. You fellows know how to do it. The same old gang.

[Mr. Starr.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is a little difficult for the Chair to listen to more than one member at the same time. At the moment the Chair proposes to listen to the hon. member for Saskatoon.

Mr. Brand: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With all due deference, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the decision you have recently made, and refer the hon. member for Villeneuve and yourself to Provisional Standing Order 12, subsection (1):

> Mr. Speaker shall preserve order and decorum, and shall decide questions of order. In explaining a point of order or practice, he shall state the Standing Order or authority applicable to the case. No debate shall be permitted on any such decision, nor shall any such decision be subject to an appeal to the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that this article does not involve any member of this house.

[English]

The Star says—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Caouette: September 1,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caouette: The minister says—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, order. The Chair is having some difficulty. I have advised the hon. member for Villeneuve that he is not to read an article which reflects upon the proceedings of the house. The proper citations have been given to the hon. member and to the house. If the hon. member reads the article and it does reflect upon the proceedings of the house, he is out of order.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I rise on a point of order. Without reflecting in any way on your decision, Mr. Speaker, you might find this article does not reflect on this debate but contains a few statements of historical fact which might enlighten the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members : Sit down.

Mr. Nielsen: Hon. members opposite need not shout "Sit down."

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Villeneuve has the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order. I have here a citation which may assist Your Honour. At page 133 of Beauchesne Your Honour will find paragraph (8), which reads:

> A member having made assertions in speeches out of doors, relative to other members, and having repeated them in the House: Decided, that the proper way of proceeding with a view to ulterior measures was for the newspaper containing the expressions in question to be read by the Clerk at the table and for the admission by the member in question that he used them to be taken in a formal manner.

I would suggest that, on the basis of the preceding paragraphs to that citation, the article in question, which is in the possession of the hon. member for Villeneuve and which has been seen by a good many of us—I might say that the specific article has been seen by myself—be placed in the hands of the Clerk at the table. In that manner we may decide whether or not the substance of the point of order which I raised in the first place is indeed valid.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I make this point of order in a spirit of good will and in an effort to pour oil on troubled waters.

In view of the fact that it is now known that Fräulein Gerda is alive in Munich and is prepared to testify—

Mr. Churchill: How do you know that? What is your evidence?

Mr. Herridge: —and in view of the precedent established last week by the Prime Minister, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) undertake to telephone Fräulein Gerda and ask her whether she wants an inquiry, and whether she can give names and later come to Canada to testify? Would he permit the leaders of all opposition parties to listen in on the telephone extension?

Mr. Churchill: I rise on the point of order, sir.

Mr. Herridge: Is the minister going to reply?

Mr. Churchill: I want to speak to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) in which he ridiculed, quite properly, the ministry. The reason I want to speak now is that he mentioned a person who the Minister of Justice told us and informed the press and the public was dead. How can there be any rhyme or reason in discussing this situation when this person is dead? Does the hon. member know that she is alive, or is the minister going to tell us from his own knowledge that the woman is alive? Is somebody posing as a person who used to be here?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member a point of order?

Mr. Churchill: My point of order is that the hon. member for Kootenay West raised a point of order, mentioned the name of some woman living in Germany and was asking questions of the ministry. We have been assured by the ministry that the person so named is dead. What sort of farce is being made of this place?

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Would the hon. gentleman cite the passage in Hansard where the Minister of Justice said this woman was dead?

Mr. Starr: That appears in the press.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said in Hansard, because we cannot quote newspapers.

Mr. Churchill: I suggest that the information as to the death of the woman came from the Minister of Justice by way of one of his notorious press conferences. We have been asked, as has the public, to accept statements made at these press conferences. If the woman is now alive, then what the minister said at a press conference was false. Other things which he said at a press conference are possibly false also. That is the only conclusion that can be drawn. Let the Minister of Justice rise right now and tell us that he knows, on his own authority that this woman is alive, is living in Germany, and is the woman who was reported to have been in Canada. He is afraid to do this.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Apparently Conservative members have the floor although I had caught your eye and you had recognized me.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) says the Minister of Justice stated that Miss Munsinger was dead, always according to press reports, but as late as Thursday last, the Minister of Justice said that according to his information, Miss Munsinger had died of leukemia four years ago. The Minister did not affirm that she was dead. He said that according to available information, she was supposed to have died four years ago.

Today, we learn that she is not dead. We learn from an article by Mr. Robert Reguly that Miss Munsinger is still alive—

[English]

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, would you ask the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to sit down and remain glued to it so that I can finish what I have to say?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Villeneuve was raising a point of order.

Mr. Churchill: He had started to read a press report when I rose on my point of order. He was reading a press report to the effect that this woman is alive.

Mr. Caouette: I raised a point of order, as did the hon. member a moment ago, and I did not interfere with his right to do so. I ask the hon. member, therefore, not to interfere with my right.

Mr. Nielsen: Then do not try and smuggle in the report.

Mr. Caouette: Oh, we know you.

Mr. Ricard: We know you, too.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the point is to get the facts straight.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre claims the Minister of Justice stated that Miss Munsinger was dead. That is not exactly what he said. Apparently, he stated that according to information, she had died four years ago. So today, March 11, 1966, we discover she is very much alive and that she has spoken over the phone with Mr. Reguly of the Toronto Star and the story has it—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; a few moments ago the Chair was going to suggest that it return the floor to the hon. member for Villeneuve. Now, it is not so sure. I again ask the hon. member to refrain from quoting from this newspaper article and to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we have an hon. member who gets up on a point of order and raves away for 15 minutes without reaching it. My point of order is that reference has been made to a woman living in Germany who earlier was reported dead.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I have read the press reports, now, and I point out to you and to all hon. members of this house, that there is a dissimilarity in the names. The names are not even alike.

Mr. Langlois (Megantic): On a point of order; this is the first time in this house I have seen the official opposition in such a pitiful state that they are afraid of the dead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I am not making a statement, I am asking questions. The Conservatives do not understand anything about that. Have I the right to ask questions of the government and the Minister of Justice? I am not doing anything against citations 156, 157, 158 or 398 in Beauchesne. All I want is to ask questions, I am not making any statement myself. I take full responsibility for the questions I ask.

Is it true, for instance—I put the question to the Minister of Justice or to a former Minister of Justice, in case there is one who might wish to answer on the other side—that Miss Munsinger was very well acquainted with Hon. Pierre Sévigny, the former Associate Minister of National Defence, at Ottawa?

Now, the Munsinger case, as it was brought before the house—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think this is quite irrelevant to the proceedings now before the house.

Mr. Churchill: May I have the floor, then, if the hon. member is ruled out of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that I have the right to ask questions.

So, is it true, as mentioned in statements we can read today, that another minister in the former Diefenbaker government knew "Miss Munsinger" perfectly well?

Now, is the Munsinger case, as mentioned in the article, a sexual affair or a matter of security in Canada?

Mr. Ricard: The minister does not know.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, if it is merely a case of sex, it is none of parliament's business. If, on the other hand, it is a security case, then it concerns the government.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a question of privilege. I heard the hon. member for Villeneuve say, or read out "another minister involved in the case". No name was given. Sir, this is a continuation of a campaign of innuendo and smear now being undertaken by the hon. member for Villeneuve. I wish to speak on this question of privilege. This is the type of thing to which we have been raising objections in the last two days. We have been raising questions of privilege because of accusations made against members of the Privy Council by the Minister of Justice at a press conference. Now, the hon. member for Villeneuve, who has told us he is accepting responsibility for statements he was reading from some newspaper article, is making accusations against members of the Privy Council without naming them.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Churchill: The words he used were "another minister". This is on all fours with the type of question of privilege we have been raising with regard to the Minister of Justice at his press conference. This situation has reached the stage where parliament is simply being degraded.

An hon. Member: By whom?

Mr. Churchill: By members like the hon. member for Villeneuve, the Minister of Justice and others who are casting slurs and putting members of the House of Commons under suspicion.

Mr. Ricard: They are working together.

Mr. Churchill: My question of privilege affects me individually, it affects members of the House of Commons and certainly it affects all members of the Privy Council who served in an earlier government. This cannot be allowed to persist. This will bring about the destruction of parliament. That is what is happening. If members, whether on the government side or in any party in this house are to be permitted to make accusations like that without putting the name in front of the house—

An hon. Member: That is what you wanted.

Mr. Churchill: —without making a charge, we have reached the stage where we are living simply on rumour, innuendo, falsehood, smear and gossip, a stage where there is no confidence any more in this institution. This is a serious situation. That is why I am dealing with this particular question of privilege at this time.

It is an unfortunate turn of events that the hon. member for Villeneuve should join with members on the other side of the house, and particularly with the Minister of Justice, in attempting to disparage members of this house. The privileges of the house are of the greatest importance and members have always been greatly concerned when there has been any interference with, their privileges. We have heard today from many able speakers in the Conservative party about what is being done to this institution by this kind of procedure. We have heard from men who came here a few weeks ago, proud, as they should be, of the fact that they had been elected to this institution, and who then found that it had characteristics of which they were not aware. Indeed, until recently we who have been here much longer were not aware of those characteristics which downgrade this institution in the opinions of these members and of the public.

Now the hon. member for Villeneuve has added to our troubles by this accusation he has made on his own responsibility, without naming any person, but covering with a blanket of smear or innuendo the members of the Privy Council of the former administration. I feel this is something which cannot be allowed to go unchallenged. I am sure a number of my hon. friends will wish to speak on this question of privilege because we cannot, by our silence, appear to give consent to this type of attack which strikes at the very root of our system and which, if it is permitted to go on, will destroy this parliament.

Had I been speaking earlier on the other question of privilege which was before the house until a few minutes ago I would have dealt with the responsibility that rests on the Prime Minister. I did not have that opportunity. I have it now in connection with the matter raised by the hon. member for Villeneuve and I am taking advantage of it. I hope the Prime Minister of this country will intervene in an instance where members of this house are placed—

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order.

Administration of Justice

Mr. Churchill: I am speaking to a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is on a question of privilege.

Mr. Grégoire: He is making a speech.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: I am on a question of personal privilege, and I raise this question of privilege because of the attack made on me, and made on members of the Privy Council of the former administration by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). That is why I am talking. I was going to say I wish that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), custodian as he is of the traditions of this institution, would intervene. When members like the hon. member for Villeneuve cast these slurring remarks about hon. members and infringe on their privileges, I wish the Prime Minister would come here and add his voice to mine in condemning that type of action.

I wish that the dean of the House of Commons, the respected Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), who has lived in this institution for 30 years or more—

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: —would raise his voice in condemnation of the action of the hon. member for Villeneuve. That is what I would like to see happen.

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order—

Mr. Churchill: That is why I am speaking on this matter of personal privilege, and I cannot be interrupted on a point of order.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) is already on a question of privilege.

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is on a question of privilege.

Mr. Grégoire: Not any more; that is what I want to point out to you.

Mr. Nielsen: Are you the new Speaker?

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Churchill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grégoire: The hon. member for Villeneuve had the floor.

Mr. Churchill: I have the floor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was given the floor on a question of privilege, and I hope that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) would allow him to continue.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member for Villeneuve had the floor earlier but he raised a matter which brought me to my feet on a point of personal privilege and I am entitled, as Your Honour knows, to speak on this matter of personal privilege. I was showing how his unfounded accusation, for which he must accept responsibility, and for which he certainly should be reprimanded, was derived from some press report or another, referring to a woman whom the Minister of Justice assured us, according to his information, had been dead for over four years.

Is this an impostor who has brought names and accusations into public print to serve somebody's purpose? I say immediately that this matter should be investigated by the Minister of Justice and the R.C.M.P. to see whether or not we are being imposed upon by someone posing as the person whom the minister told us died four years ago. On the basis of this statement, which seems to be the statement of an impostor, the hon. member for Villeneuve accepting that statement as his own, has made an accusation against hon. members of the house.

That, sir, is the type of privilege of which all members should take note. Otherwise, if this goes on, if some other hon. member later today makes some other statement of similar character, then it is a question of one accusation after the other, and it is an infringement of the rights and privileges of this house. It is a shocking state of affairs that we should have reached this stage. I accordingly move, Mr. Speaker, seconded—

Mr. Caron: You cannot. It is impossible.

Mr. Nielsen: It is a question of privilege.

Mr. Churchill: I am making this motion, founded on my question of privilege, and I move, seconded by Mr. Winkler:

That the hon. member for Villeneuve be called upon to substantiate the charges made against a member of the Privy Council, or resign his seat.

While you are looking at my motion, sir, I point out I have had it framed, in this way in order that the hon. member for Villeneuve may be brought to account; that he may stand in his place and make his charges, clearly and distinctly, and prove his accusation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to raise a purely technical point of order. We have been purporting—I never quite understood how—to be debating one question of privilege all day. Now, if another purported question of privilege—and I do not know whether you can raise another one in the midst of debate on the first one—is raised, does this mean that the first question of privilege is now superseded, and we cannot return to the debate on it. Are we dealing only with the second question? It seems to me Your Honour should address yourself to this point before considering whether the motion itself is in order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the minister permit a question? Since the minister is wondering how we could raise a question of privilege during another question of privilege, would he turn around and ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) who raised one himself this afternoon?

Mr. Churchill: That is what he did. Touché.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): That trip to Vancouver was too much for the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish I was still there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; yesterday and again today on a couple of occasions it was the view of the Chair, particularly yesterday as expressed by Mr. Speaker, that a motion to adjourn could not be moved on a point of order.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Earlier today that same ruling was made by the Chair. Now, it would appear that if the statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre could not have been a point of privilege, it might be considered as a question of order. But if that were so, then the Chair would have to rule this motion out of order as has been done in the two previous cases, and the Chair so rules.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, speaking to this point of privilege, it seems to me that what I had to say to the house this morning has now almost come to pass and most surely will. We are seized again with another question of privilege created by a statement from another member of this house.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Winkler: I am on privilege, if you don't mind. I have been recognized, and I am speaking to the matter of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, is the hon. member for Grey-Bruce on this question of privilege or a new one just at the moment?

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, you have not yet ruled on whether or not the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) is a prima facie question. The Chair has not yet made a decision on that.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre did not raise a real prima facie question of privilege, since the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) mentioned an article in the Toronto Star and asked: Is it not true that according to the article in the Toronto Star this person, and that person are involved in the affair?

The member for Villeneuve did not make any charge but took a newspaper article published today and asked whether it was true, as reported in the article, that this person and that person were involved.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) had not really raised a question of privilege since the hon. member for Villeneuve only asked "whether it was true that...", with regard to a newspaper article. This often happens during the question period when the right hon. Prime Minister is asked "Is it not true, as reported in a newspaper article, that a minister made such and such a statement?" The usual question is: "Is it not true that a newspaper quotes a minister as having said such and such a thing?" In such a case the hon. member who asks the question does not assume responsibility for the matter nor does he decide whether or not the newspaper statement is true.

All the hon. member for Villeneuve did, and Hansard will prove it, was to ask a question, namely "Is it not true" or "Is it true that such and such would know Miss Munsinger, as reported in the Toronto Star?"

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, no question of privilege can be raised and I would ask you for a ruling in this connection.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I listened with great interest to the remarks made by the hon. member for Lapointe. I recognize that his point is well taken.

I do not think it is possible to rise on a question of privilege about another question of privilege, as stated a little earlier by the Deputy Speaker of the House (Mr. Batten).

There might have been a point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, but I agree with the hon. member for Lapointe that there is no prima facie case of privilege raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I recognize the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It takes so long at times to make hon. members of the official opposition understand—

Mr. Speaker: On the other hand, before the hon. member resumes his speech, I take it upon myself to give him a word of warning. He cannot do indirectly what he is not allowed to do directly. In other words, if he feels that he cannot make certain statements on his own, he cannot make them indirectly by reading a newspaper article because he knows that he then assumes that those statements are justified and takes responsibility for them personally. I wish to remind him of that and I am sure that he will keep that in mind while he continues his speech.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will heed your advice. I am not making or repeating any statement concerning anyone. I am just asking the government some questions. I have the right to ask questions and I take the responsibility of asking my question or questions.

A few moments ago, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) said: The hon. member should complete his charges.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

I am not accusing anyone, I am asking questions. For the last two days, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and other hon. members have been asking the government to give names, more names.

Well, today we are getting names and I am asking questions to find out if it is true or not that such and such was implicated in the Munsinger case.

I said a while ago, Mr. Speaker, that if the Munsinger case is nothing but a private matter, an intrusion in people's privacy, it has nothing to do with the nation's parliament, with the federal parliament. If it is a matter of national security, then the whole Munsinger case must be brought out in the open, from A to Z.

Now, I asked the government: Is it not true that Miss Munsinger, or Mrs. Munsinger, had—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would remind the hon. member for Villeneuve of my recommendations of a while ago, and ask him not to forget the rather serious responsibility he is taking at the present time.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of my responsibility in asking those questions. Anyway, we will see the answers to these questions, probably all over the Canadian press tonight or tomorrow. All I want to ask, without mentioning anyone, or pointing to anyone, is this:

Is it true Miss Munsinger attended a banquet of the Conservative Party, in Montreal, at which the Leader of the Opposition and most of the cabinet members were present?

Is it true, according to what we hear, that Miss Munsinger is willing to come to Canada as a witness, that she is still living, and living in Munich?

Is it true she is willing to come to Canada to say all she knows about the case which concerns her?

Is it true she has said:

[English]

—"if they keep pushing my name around in Canada" but if so wanted protection, expressing fears for her life from a Montreal businessman-racketeer.

[Translation]

Is it true that Miss Munsinger said that?

Is it true that this is why the government offers the Conservatives the immediate creation of a judicial inquiry to discover the short and long of this Munsinger story, because we still hear about it, day after day.

We have now lost two days discussing this case and, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that if the security of the state is, or was, in danger, with this Munsinger affair, we have said all that can be said about the matter in this house, and I suggest that a judicial inquiry should be established.

If this matter concerns only personalities, I do not see what the interest in the private lives of people may have to do with this case, in this house, because a man's private life belongs to him, not to the Canadian Parliament.

I want to be very clear. What we seek here is not to accuse anybody, but rather to get the truth, to know where we are going.

If the Conservatives are so sincere and so eager to get names, why do they object to a judicial inquiry? Why do they not agree to what the Prime Minister of Canada has been suggesting since yesterday? Why do they not want to co-operate, so that we can go back to the orders of the day and get to work—

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for Villeneuve has asked a question I wonder whether he would allow me to answer it for him. He just asked why we did not want an inquiry at this time. Does he wish to have an answer?

Mr. Caron: No, not now.

Mr. Caouette: Not just now, in a minute.

Mr. Starr: Well, do not ask questions then.

Mr. Caouette: You take note of all my questions and then you can answer. You will have plenty to answer.

[Translation]

On the orders of the day, Mr. Speaker.

We have been discussing this case since yesterday. Why are the Conservatives turning down the offer of the Prime Minister which seems to me quite reasonable, coming from him? The Prime Minister granted them what they were asking for in the Spencer case and now the Conservatives are not interested in granting the same privilege to the Prime Minister, that is, to set up a judicial inquiry in the Munsinger case.

Mr. Speaker, all the time we are discussing any matter or matters which might reflect on someone's reputation or might have something to do with a person and the security of the state, 20 million Canadians are watching the members of parliament and witnessing the spectacle that has been going on in the House of Commons for the past two days, when we should be dealing with legislation, while allowing the setting up of a judicial inquiry which would settle the Munsinger case and enable us to clear up the matter.

Why are the Conservatives not more concerned about the legislation which we should be passing in the house in order to help the Canadian people?

There are poor and destitute people in Canada. There are legislative measures to fight against poverty in Canada, but we forget those who are hankering after justice while we linger over the discussion of a case that goes back four or five years.

The Conservatives refuse the judicial inquiry suggested or advocated by the Prime Minister of Canada. I said this morning, and I say again this afternoon, that we support the suggestion to set up this judicial inquiry in order to settle the Munsinger case once and for all.

Afterwards, if some people made any blunders, whether it be the Minister of Justice or anyone else, we could always refer the matter to the committee on privileges and elections and discuss the matter or the findings of the inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of saying any more today. However, I will say that it is a shame to keep every one here in parliament, to discuss a matter that should have been settled yesterday by adopting the suggestion made by the Prime Minister.

The Minister of Justice is told: Name people, lay your charges, name people.

The Prime Minister says: A judicial inquiry will provide all the names. It is no longer wanted. When truth is offered, it is refused. Someone must stick his neck out.

It is said: The Minister of Justice has exposed all the former ministers of the Diefenbaker government.

Mr. Speaker, things are not seen in this light outside parliament. To save a few small specimens of their breed, the Conservatives call on any prejudice. And at this time, every prejudice is good, according to them.

Mr. Speaker, let us stop all these insinuations and, as I said this morning, we have heard plenty of them in the last four years.

In fact, what is to be said about the insinuations made against the former Secretary of State, the former Justice Minister and the former Postmaster General?

It does not mean that I am in agreement with everything these people have done, but much has been made of these rumours and insinuations were spread throughout Canada, indicating that we had five or six French Canadians who were bandits and racketeers in Canada. The Conservatives did this, Mr. Speaker.

Let us stop wasting time around the Munsinger affair, and let us accept the Prime Minister's suggestion that a judicial inquiry be instituted to throw light on the question so that we, the legislators, can go ahead and start working for the benefit of 20 million Canadian citizens who are expecting results from our legislation.

[English]

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, is the minister going to reply to the questions asked by his new found friend?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Churchill: His friend wanted answers.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the house has been at an impasse now for two days and it is apparent that we are getting nowhere. It seems to me we have to find some way of resolving this matter, and resolving it as quickly as possible, so that the business of the house may continue in a normal way on Monday. There is no value at this time in placing the blame on one side or the other for these two days which we have wasted. I think the question now is, can we find some answer to the problem.

The hon. member for Villeneuve has said the answer lies in accepting the Prime Minister's offer of a judicial inquiry. I want to say that as far as we are concerned we have already indicated our willingness to have a judicial inquiry, providing the terms of reference are clear and specific. This was not true of the motion which was moved yesterday by the hon. member for Lapointe, which was used as the basis for the Prime Minister's offer.

I want to make it clear that merely referring the Munsinger case to a judicial inquiry, placing the onus on all the parties involved to prove their innocence, is wrong.

Mr. Nielsen: That is the principle.

Mr. Douglas: The reason this inquiry is being precipitated is that the Minister of Justice made certain charges outside the house. If there is going to be a proper inquiry, those charges must be contained in the terms of reference and the onus must be on the Minister of Justice to prove those charges, not on the other parties involved to prove their innocence.

Mr. Nielsen: That is right.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, our objection has been that there has been no specific reference to the minister's charges. He has never made those charges in the House. I was somewhat concerned when a few minutes ago the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) asked the member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) whether he could quote from Hansard to show that the Minister of Justice had ever said that Olga Munsinger was dead. Of course, the statement about Olga Munsinger being dead was made by the Minister of Justice outside the house.

Mr. McIlraith: He never said it.

Mr. Douglas: It seems to me that the investigation is going to confine itself largely to the charges the minister has made in the house, and the only charge he has made in the house is that the Leader of the Opposition did not handle this security case properly.

Mr. Nielsen: He said he participated in the Munsinger case.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read yesterday's Hansard.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask a factual question? Has the hon. gentleman read yesterday's Hansard and the answer of the Minister of Justice which occasioned all this debate. I think he will find that he has circumscribed his point more than he intended to.

Mr. Douglas: I am saying that the important thing in the terms of reference is whether or not there will be specific charges made by the minister, either by taking a transcript of his interview with the press and attaching it to the terms of reference contained in the order in council, or by having the minister rise in this house and repeat the statements he made at the press conference.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Precisely.

Mr. Douglas: I do not know who is speaking for the government at the moment, it may be the house leader, but I ask whether they will undertake, so that we can get on with the business of the house, to have the terms of reference of this judicial inquiry ready by Monday. Could we see copies of the order in council and the terms of reference at that time? If there could be general agreement as to those terms of reference, this matter could be dropped and we could go on with other business. I fear that if we do not resolve this matter over the week end it could result in a protracted and endless debate throughout the whole of next week.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may clarify one point arising out of the hon. member's remarks. I thought the Prime Minister made this very clear last night, in a house with a very thin attendance, when the question arose shortly after seven o'clock that what was to be included in the terms of reference of the judicial inquiry in addition to the other things that have been mentioned—

Mr. Churchill: Give us the page reference.

Mr. McIlraith: It is spelled out at page 2532 of Hansard. To be included in those terms of reference was all the remarks made by the Minister of Justice during the entire press conference, and the press conference is identified. When the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party was speaking earlier today I interrupted him because I sensed that he did not get the significance of what was said yesterday. I tried to clarify it for him in the form of a question. I thought I had done that.

I want to make it very clear that this has been the position since last night when this proposition was accepted by the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Calgary North was concerned with the need for speed in getting the matter forward, and he went on, after raising a question about timing, because he was concerned about any possible delay he said this:

> I think perhaps this might be the best way to deal with this matter—

Then, he went on to say that he wanted to be assured about the speed in setting up the commission. He immediately received that assurance from the Prime Minister. As to the undertaking with regard to the necessary order in council, the order in council could be ready very soon. There is one point that troubles me a little in this connection, and that is the naming of the judge or judges concerned and obtaining the necessary consent. There is usually a requirement that the judge receive the consent or permission of the Chief Justice to act. That kind of arrangement usually applies.

I think the Prime Minister's statement as it appears in Hansard is very, very clear about the willingness of the government.

Mr. Korchinski: But not his statement of this morning.

Mr. McIlraith: I think the willingness of the government to proceed in this way and immediately is very clear. I believe the Prime Minister made plain in the house yesterday and today how he regarded this matter, the need for dealing with it quickly and why there was that need. I dealt with this matter yesterday; and I was very specific on that point. I hope I have clarified the points that were concerning the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. If I have not, I will do my best to clarify them further.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of clarifying anything. I was fully aware of the discussion which had taken place. The point I wanted to make was that the press conference held by the minister is not a matter of official record. As my colleague for Greenwood pointed out, when a judge sits down to look at the terms of reference, he wants to deal with the record.

It seems to me that there ought to be in the order in council the specific things which the minister charged, first of all saying that there was a security risk, saying that two or more Privy Councillors were involved, saying that—

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, so that I may understand the hon. member better, because I am a little confused at this point, if the whole press release is before the judge, how can that situation be improved upon by picking out excerpts from it?

Mr. Lambert: It is not a press release.

Mr. Douglas: To the best of my knowledge, there was no press release.

Mr. McIlraith: The press conference.

Mr. Douglas: Which was spread over an entire hour.

Mr. McIlraith: There is a transcript of the whole thing.

Mr. Douglas: If there is a complete transcript which can be included, and if the onus as set out in the order in council is placed on the minister to substantiate before the judicial inquiry the statements he made at that press conference, we would be satisfied with the terms of that order in council.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to clarify that point. I wanted to make it quite clear that the Prime Minister stated what the consequences would be if the things that were said in the press conference were not substantiated. That was made clear earlier today.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Let the minister get up and deny them.

Mr. McIlraith: The position taken by the Prime Minister today was very, very clear on that point.

Mr. Lambert: What about names?

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member says, "What about names?" The hon. member knows perfectly well that the correct way to deal with this matter is not to give names. He certainly should not try to go on with this bluff, which he has been pulling all day,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: —trying to prevent the proper resolution of this very grave matter.

Mr. Churchill: Is the minister prepared to name me?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Come on.

Mr. McIlraith: I will not be sucked into that trap. That is bluff of the poorest sort by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Peters: Five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the hon. member that, much as I personally would like to move into private members' business, this cannot be done because we are still on the item of business that has precedence. If we returned to anything, it would not be private members' business; it would be government business. The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a question for the house leader.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The house leader has resumed his seat and the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, could we have unanimous consent to call it five o'clock? Surely, we have had enough.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If there is unanimous consent we could, of course, call it five o'clock. If there is unanimous agreement we could go on with private members' business at five o'clock. But it can only be done on that basis because, normally, if we suspended consideration of the question of privilege now before the house we would go on to government business. We would call routine proceedings.

Mr. Nielsen: As long as it does not prejudice the matter of privilege before the house, we would agree. The first matter of business, of course, on Monday would be the question of privilege before the house. Is this agreed?

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Of course; I am sure there is no difficulty about this. While I am on my feet I wish to make a further appeal to hon. members to consider the rulings that were made by the Chair yesterday and today. These rulings indicate to hon. members who have taken part in this debate how the matter can be resolved in the house from a strict procedural standpoint and in accordance with the rules. I had hoped that hon. members would see the situation in the light of the ruling that had been made by the Chair. I hoped that by six o'clock today some way might have been found to resolve the difficulty in which we are at the present time. Obviously, this will not come to pass this afternoon. However, I invite hon. members to give consideration to the rulings I have made, and to the suggestions I have made, as to what should be done by hon. members if they want to present a motion that will be acceptable to the Chair and that will be satisfactory according to precedent. If this were to be done at some time we might resolve the difficulty in which we are.

By agreement we have called it five o'clock?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear that on Monday the first item before this house will be the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot assure the hon. member what will be the first item of business on Monday.

Mr. Nielsen: Then I cannot go along with it.

Mr. Speaker: There is no agreement.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong the debate at this time if it is the consensus that we should adjourn. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be tragic if we should cut off the debate at this time and come back again on Monday to start at the same point we are now.

An hon. Member: Maybe not.

Mr. Thompson: We have not accomplished very much in these two days, except to lower further the image this house should enjoy, and to bring disrepute upon all of us who are part of it.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments in support of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) that some basis for negotiation or for agreement might be reached that might continue over the week end. Then, when we return on Monday we will have an alternative to what we have before us at the present time. There must be some answer to the problem which would avoid having to come back and continue with the same question of privilege. Unless something is done, we might continue in the same direction we are now going for another week.

I urge, in the name of reason and common sense, that all those here this afternoon realize that what is now happening is just further dividing us, and keeping us from the work that we should be doing. It is increasing further the differences of opinion and the bitterness which has developed out of this debate.

It seems to me that what we have seen happening here these last two days has provided a sorry spectacle, the consequences of which will be tragic if there is not a complete change of direction.

Mr. Lambert: Who started it?

Mr. Thompson: In recent years, this parliament has been dominated by some men who have used it as their private toy, as an arena for private vendettas. We have seen men fearful of the truth hiding behind bluster and innuendo. We have seen men playing to the gallery for publicity. We have seen the even more sinister fact of alliances growing up based on differences of race and language, as well as those on party lines.

It is difficult to say where the bulk of the blame should be placed; whether on the lack of leadership of the government, or the obstructionist tactics of the official opposition. Allocating the blame is not our desire at this time.

Mr. Kindt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish the hon. member for Red Deer would name the people who are causing the roadblocks that he mentioned just now.

Mr. Thompson: The allocating of blame is not the major concern at this moment.

Mr. Kindt: You said the official opposition. I say, withdraw that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Thompson: It does not have to be withdrawn, Mr. Speaker, because the record of Hansard and the press for the last couple of years is evidence of all this.

How long do we think we can continue to wrangle in this house while the direction of the country shifts? If we do not give leadership and administration, someone else will. It is only by dint of good provincial governments providing leadership in their own areas that we have been allowed to bicker away the years that we already have.

Look at the situation we have here. We have banks trying to operate under an act that is technically no longer in force—

Mr. Lambert: Yes it is.

Mr. Thompson: —and is due for drastic revision. We have put off and put off this revision, and we are about to put it off again. Why has this happened, Mr. Speaker? It has happened because of what goes on in this house.

We have farmers trying to survive under agricultural legislation that is so far behind the times it is laughable. We have educational institutions trying to compete in an age of advanced technology, supported by an uncertain and haphazard grant structure.

We embark on unwieldy state welfare procedures, such as the ill conceived Canada Pension Plan foisted on us without any real study of priorities and needs.

Miss LaMarsh: You had better check that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that the hon. member is not applying himself to the question of privilege that is before the house at this time. I appreciate the fact that hon. members who have taken part in the debate have not always limited themselves to the subject at hand. However, the hon. member's remarks seem to be quite some distance from the question of privilege, and I ask him to return to the consideration of that.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I respect your advice, and I compliment you on the way you have handled yourself and this house during the last several trying days. I point out, Mr. Speaker, that a lot has been said by people in these last couple of days which has not been relevant to the question before the house. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, not one member of our party has spoken. This is the first time I have spoken. Beyond that, what I am saying is directly relevant to the particular situation in which we are now.

If we do not solve the problem which faces us at this time, when we come back on Monday we shall go on in exactly the same way as we have today. What I hope to say is very much part of the argument that, I think, relates directly to the question that you have before you, and that all of us are endeavouring to consider.

We have talked about the question of the free vote on capital punishment, Mr. Speaker. In the meantime we have a mounting list of convicted murderers with commuted death penalties and no clear policy about that, so far as this house is concerned. We have a growing crime rate and increasing evidence of international crime syndicates, as well as subversive groups strengthening their position in the country.

We have small businessmen forced out of business by discriminatory taxation policies that have grown up with no clear direction. Why has this happened, Mr. Speaker? Because we have spent the last four years calling each other names, and because we have had filibusters.

An hon. Member: That is an election speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; the hon. member for Red Deer said a moment ago that what he has to say relates to the situation of the house. We should not discuss the situation of the house at the present time. We should discuss the matter before the house, which is the question of privilege.

Mr. Thompson: I am only following something which I thought Mr. Speaker said—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt) seeks permission to ask a question of the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Kindt: I wonder if the hon. member for Red Deer would let the house know who shot the cow and the pigs?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Who had the gun?

Mr. Thompson: That kind of question, Mr. Speaker, indicates the type of man asking it. If he wants to know he might ask the R.C.M.P.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are actually filibustering the business before the house instead of proceeding with some of the matters about which we have been talking. Our collective responsibility to 20 million people demands that we do something else. All I have tried to say is that the discussion before us should be terminated. It was brought on by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness). We shared the concern he expressed in his original presentation because we know him and respect him. We can understand the position in which he was placed as a result of the remarks which were made at the press conference and carried in the press. I sympathize with him, but I know he is a reasonable gentleman. He knows that some agreement must be arrived at.

When the Prime Minister suggested there should be a judicial inquiry with certain provisions, the hon. member said it seemed to be the only way to resolve the question. So, in principle, he agreed to it, provided certain items were included in the terms of reference.

Therefore, it seems to me that before we leave here tonight there should be some basis for negotiation over the week end to resolve this matter. As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) said, it would seem that the only basis on which to arrive at agreement is to accept the suggestion of the Prime Minister that a judicial inquiry be set up. The hon. member for Calgary North specified the need for urgent action. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said there must be satisfactory terms of reference. We agree with this, and I think it is the only logical answer. I can see no other answer.

Certainly an answer will not be found by coming back here on Monday and wrangling all day. My suggestion would be this: Could not the hon. member for Calgary North and, if he wishes, somebody else as well, meet with the Prime Minister with a view to coming together and working out terms of reference satisfactory to both sides? This would enable the government, through an order in council, to bring about this inquiry. This would seem to be the only possible way of doing it.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Thompson: You may ask questions afterwards. We have listened to the hon. gentleman talking hour after hour for the last two days, and my remarks are short and to the point.

I plead with the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General, who is directly involved by virtue of his responsibilities, and with the hon. member for Calgary North and others on the Conservative benches who are Privy Councillors and directly involved in the implications and innuendos now before the house, to consider this suggestion.

I cannot help but recall the remarks made last night by the Minister of Forestry in the previous government, who was speaking right from his heart on the matter before us. Can we not somehow come together and agree on terms of reference in order that the inquiry can go forward and dispose of this question? If we do not, the only other way to dispose of the matter is to forget about it and go on with our work. However, it seems that is asking too much in view of what has appeared in the press and been put on the record during today and yesterday.

My only reason for bringing this suggestion to your attention, Mr. Speaker, is to emphasize that nothing constructive will be gained if we continue on Monday as we have today. The only way we can resolve the matter now is to agree on a certain course. Surely, as men we can find some area of agreement so that we can move forward and let the matter be taken care of, in a satisfactory way. Actually, I do not think any way would be entirely satisfactory because the matter is too dirty and messy, but let us at least resolve the problem so that we can turn to other matters before us.

I plead with you, Mr. Speaker, to use your influence in this regard. You have let the debate go on and on and on today. At times I have wondered whether there is any basis for our carrying on in this way. I also plead with the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and members of the official opposition to get together and work out a basis on which we can move forward.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question before he resumes his seat. Would he inform the members of the house how parliament can set up an inquiry based on unsupported allegations about unnamed people mentioned in an unseen report?

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I do not claim to be an authority as far as the law is concerned. As I have listened to some of the arguments made today I have been rather happy that I do not belong to that particular profession. But I would say to the hon. member for Yukon there is no other way to resolve this matter, so let us get on with it. If the Minister of Justice is wrong in what he has said to the press or the house, then he has put his own political life at stake. If certain Privy Councillors, who are rightfully indignant and concerned about the matter, have been wronged, then the matter must be righted. We cannot keep a cloud hanging over them.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question in that connection. Is each member of the Privy Council to appear before this commission to prove his innocence? That would be a distortion of justice in this country.

Mr. Thompson: I do not profess to know the technical answer to that question, but my opinion would be no. This would not be necessary, providing the matter is being handled in the right way and in the right place.

Mr. Churchill: Then who appears before the commission?

Mr. Thompson: We can get together and work that out.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to say anything provocative to any section of the house. I do not intend to move any motion at this time, but I am wondering whether we have not had enough for today. If we cannot hope that over the week end this matter will be resolved, would the house agree to letting Your Honour call it six o'clock?

[Translation]

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I am addressing myself to you at this time, not filled with high-strung emotions but with all the timidity that is in me.

I ask the Minister of Justice to please settle once and for all the matter that has been before us for two days.

The members of the Ralliement Créditiste and of the Social Credit party are asking the house to concern itself with the nation's business. Well, I want them to know that we think exactly the same thing. They have but one thing to do and that is to ask the Minister of Justice to make charges here in the house.

We do not want the charges to be levelled by proxy, through the press, but right here in the house because, for my part, I do not wish to sit in this house with anybody who might be a security risk. If there is such a person in the house, let the minister name him. After that, the other members and himself will be able to continue sitting here.

For years, the hon. members opposite and especially those from the province of Quebec have been accusing the Conservative party of scandal-mongering. Well, I ask them now, who is looking for scandal? We are trying by every possible means to find out if a scandal exists, and you do not even have the courage to rise and make charges.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Liberal party thinks this is the way to enhance the prestige of the province of Quebec in this country, they are mistaken. We, from the province of Quebec, have been accused throughout the nation for too long. Today we see before us a minister from our province who lacks the courage to stand up and make charges.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is high time that we put an end to this business. I beg the Minister of Justice to deal with this question once and for all by rising in this house and making direct charges instead of making allegations or other statements through the medium of the press.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: Six o'clock; Come, come.

Mr. Speaker: Order; I should like to submit again to the consideration of hon. members that we might call it six o'clock if there is unanimous agreement.

Mr. Nielsen: We are quite prepared to call it six o'clock provided the question of privilege will not be prejudiced in its place on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that the Chair can give no such assurance. It would be normal that this would be the procedure. But I do not think I should be required to give an assurance of any kind to the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's): For two days, I and a number of other members have sat here quietly with mounting confusion and indignation about what has been going on here. For two days, attacks have been launched on the Minister of Justice for remarks he made outside the house at a press conference as well as inside the house. I should like to remind hon. members opposite that remarks made by the Minister of Justice outside the house are not privileged, and those who feel themselves damaged or injured by them have a perfect right to take the appropriate action in the courts. This course is open to them if they feel they have been slandered.

I appreciate that this is a serious matter and that in addition to this right in the courts they have the right to take appropriate action in this house. The fact remains that they do not want to take appropriate action.

Yesterday, three motions were presented, all obviously bad, and held to be bad by the Chair. I have a great respect for the knowledge of the rules possessed by some hon. members on the other side of the house. I am confident that some of them know full well what is the appropriate motion to put if they feel they have been libelled by the Minister of Justice. If hon. members opposite feel they have been libelled, let them put that motion and vote on it. If not, let them keep quiet.

An hon. Member: What motion?

Mr. Wahn: Turning for a moment to the remarks made by the minister in the house with regard to the Leader of the Opposition, let me say they were most specific. There can be no criticism of his remarks on that score. They were very much to the point. If they offend the privileges of this house, let a motion be made. All day we have sat here. The Chair has invited members of the opposition on a number of occasions to bring forward the appropriate motion. Not one of them has sought to do so. Yet, they cannot say they do not know what the proper motion would be.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. member of the opinion that there has been no breach of the rights and privileges of members of this house? What is his answer to that?

Mr. Wahn: I say: Put the motion which you know to be the appropriate motion and let the house decide. I am only one member of this house. This question will be decided by the house itself if members opposite have the courage to put the appropriate motion.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The hon. member referred to what he calls the appropriate motion. Is this an admission on his part that there is a breach of privilege?

Mr. Wahn: I cannot make any sense out of that question. If the hon. member wants to put it again when I have finished, I will be glad to listen to him.

Despite your request, Mr. Speaker, members opposite have not put the motion they ought to have put if they felt they had been libelled. Instead, they have prolonged this debate until we are all completely tired. Let them put the motion. They have had reasonable time. They cannot be permitted to prolong the debate indefinitely.

Mr. Peters: Who will stop them?

Mr. Wahn: Your Honour has cited the relevant extract from May. I should like to refer again to May's 17th edition at page 396 where it is stated:

> Certain matters cannot be debated save upon a substantive motion which admits of a distinct vote of the House.

Because we have not had such a motion we have been wasting hours of our time. The citation continues:

> Among these are the conduct of the sovereign, the heir to the throne or other members of the Royal Family, the Governors-General of the Independent Territories, the Lord Chancellor, the Speaker, the Chairman of Ways and Means, members of either house of Parliament and judges of the superior courts of the United Kingdom—

Attacks have been made on the Minister of Justice for two days, but no proper motion has been put. This is in violation of the citation I have just quoted. It goes on:

> These matters cannot, therefore, be questioned by way of amendment, or upon any motion for adjournment. For the same reason, no charge of a personal character can be raised, save upon a direct and substantive motion to that effect.

This ruling has been violated and I think it has been violated for far too long. May, at page 454, states to the same effect:

> Unless the discussion is based upon a substantive motion, drawn in proper terms, reflections must not be cast in debate upon the conduct of the sovereign, the heir to the throne, or other members of the royal family, the Lord Chancellor, the Governor-General of an independent territory, the Speaker, the Chairman of Ways and Means, Members of either House of Parliament—

The Minister of Justice is a member of this house. For two days he has been attacked and the opposition has not put forward a valid motion, despite repeated requests by the Chair. This cannot be permitted to go on indefinitely. This is a breach of privilege as far as the Minister of Justice is concerned, and it is also a breach of my privileges. We are sick and tired of continuous vindictive attacks by members of the opposition. The rules are not being respected. Will you not call on members of the opposition, Mr. Speaker, to put the appropriate motion? If they do not have the courage to do so, let them keep quiet.

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad to see the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam in his seat as well as the Prime Minister who has suggested a separate judicial inquiry into the matters we are discussing. I should like the Prime Minister to answer this question: how can you base such an inquiry on allegations made by a Minister of the Crown about persons whom he will not name? How can you base such an inquiry on a report which the minister who has made these accusations has never seen?

It is in my submission utterly ridiculous that parliament should lend itself to such a procedure. There is no matter for an inquiry such as that suggested by the Prime Minister. There is a matter for an inquiry such as the Leader of the Opposition suggested when he took part in the debate—the second inquiry announced by the minister on Monday.

This question before the house is a question of privilege because of the unsupported slanders which the minister has made, and only the house can decide this matter. If the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam want an inquiry, then the minister must rise in his place and make a specific charge, naming names. Upon that basis an inquiry might be possible, but not upon the basis of those allegations and accusations which have been made by the minister on information he has not even seen and on a file of whose existence, if it exists, we have no knowledge.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The minister nods his head that it does exist. We do not know this. The minister has not seen it. Parliament surely cannot set up an inquiry based on unsupported allegations, based on unnamed people, based on an unseen report. In any case, we have before us a question of privilege which can only be dealt with by the minister getting on his feet.

I ask the minister, I ask him now, did he make the statements which appeared in the press? I ask him did he say that two or more former Conservative ministers were involved with a former East German spy? I ask him did he say—

Miss LaMarsh: Are you reading from a newspaper?

Mr. Nielsen: I am taking responsibility for the remarks I am making, which I always do in this house.

Did the minister say that he would ask the cabinet to reopen the case? Did he say there was an R.C.M.P. file? Did he say he had not seen it? Did he say he was briefed on it? Did he say that the opposition leader did not handle the case properly, and should explain? Did he say that the Opposition Leader never referred the matter to the law officers of the crown? Did he say that he learned about the case in another department?

These are the questions, the answers to which we must have before we can set up any kind of inquiry. Did he say that it was worse than the Profumo case?

I ask him now to rise in his place and answer. If he had done so at the outset, perhaps we could have come to grips and set up terms of reference, or enlarged the terms of reference of the second inquiry which the Prime Minister announced last Monday. But the minister has remained silent throughout and ignored the obligation which he has to substantiate the charges he made, the key to the whole issue.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Can the hon. member for Yukon tell us whether the questions he is now asking the Minister of Justice are based on newspaper articles? Futhermore, does he take full responsibility for the questions which he is asking at this time?

A while ago, you told me that I should assume responsibility for my questions. Does the member for Yukon assume the same responsibility? Are the questions he is asking now derived from newspaper articles?

Should the member for Yukon be treated differently from another member?

Let the member for Yukon begin by practicing what he so vehemently preaches.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Well, the hon. member obviously was not listening, because I said I was taking full responsibility for what I was saying, as I always do in the house. Did the Minister of Justice say that the Liberals were tired of hearing of—to use the phrase I saw in the press—

Mr. Caouette: Which press?

Mr. Nielsen: —of "Diefenbaker's" insinuating that the government was plunged in scandals? Did he say that the Liberals were going to fight back hard, using the same tactics? Did he say "We know she had been engaged in espionage prior to coming to Canada"? Did he say two or more ministers were involved? Did he say government action at the time was justified but it was too late now? Did he say that the girl was dead? Did he say he was not in a position to comment whether there was a security leak? That is an extremely important question, which he should answer in the house.

Did he say that his objective was to press the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) to explain his conduct in not turning the case over to the law officers of the Crown? Did he say these things?

He can cut all of this debate short by rising in his place and making the accusations here and now. It is for this reason, sir, that the proposal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) does not and cannot meet the breach of privilege which has been established here.

The Prime Minister can set up an inquiry. He can set up as many inquiries as he pleases but this, sir, cannot remove from parliament parliament's right to deal with its own privileges and the breach of those privileges which has taken place. There is only one way in which this matter can be resolved. It must be resolved by the acceptance, by the Minister of Justice and by the government, of the time honoured, of the traditional, of the mandatory obligation upon any member of the house to back up in the house the charges which he makes. That is what the minister must do now. He has no option, sir.

He must rise in his place and make his charges, or withdraw them. If he does not do this, sir, he must resign. There is no other way in which parliament can be satisfied. To continue on the course adopted by the Minister of Justice and by the Prime Minister, is simply to set the Minister of Justice against parliament. It is to set this government against parliament. To such a confrontation I suggest there can be only one end. Parliament must and will remain supreme in the adjudication of its own privileges. The minister has the obligation now to end the matter by rising in his place, specifying his charges, substantiating those charges, or he has an obligation under our time honoured practices to resign his seat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Speaker, I feel as a new member of the house that I must make a few comments on the events of the last few days on this point of privilege. I must say that I have been amazed and shocked at what I have seen. The spectacle of a minister of the Crown, heading one of the most important portfolios in the government, making wild and unsubstantiated charges and refusing to stand up in his place and substantiate them, and as a result leaving every Privy Councillor of the former government and, indeed, every member of the house under a cloud is shocking.

I am sure, although I am not a member of the legal profession, that it would be very difficult indeed to lay any information in a court without specifying against whom you are laying the information. Yet here, in what is supposed the highest court in our land, we are faced with this incredible spectacle.

Mr. McIlraith: Lay a charge.

Mr. Brand: I wonder if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) realizes what he is doing to our country, to the house, and to the honour that this house has had over these many years in our history. I submit that the responsibility for what is happening falls on his shoulders.

This man, in a moment of petulance, brought the business of government and the affairs of a nation to a halt. Then, I hear some members to my left blaming it on the party which I represent. It is inconceivable to me that this sort of thing can happen in this country. I am sorry indeed to have to say that the minister has sowed the wind and not only this parliament but the people of Canada will reap the whirlwind. I say it is up to him now to stand up in his place like a man and make the specific accusations; make them now before the nation, before this parliament.

The idea of having a judicial inquiry which may drag on for a long time and leave a cloud of sexual involvement with this alleged spy over the Privy Councillors, is something which is incomprehensible to me. I think there is a very serious charge here that has to be abrogated by the minister. I think it is up to him now, not next week or next month, to stand up like a man, face his peers, and make his accusations.

Mr. Knowles: Six o'clock.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the hon. members for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) today, I do feel that members in this house perhaps were not listening very well when we had what I thought was a very good contribution to the debate from the hon. member for Regina City. Certainly, he gave us a complete rebuttal to the suggestion of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works when they tried to tell the house that the inquiry is the answer.

I point out also to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that he would not be so eager to hear about an inquiry if he had listened to the hon. member for Regina City. I believe there is more than one point of privilege in this case. I can well understand the minister wanting to investigate his own charge that the Leader of the Opposition, when Prime Minister, was guilty of improperly handling a case. Certainly, that is an allegation against one man, and the sort of thing, I suppose, which, if taken seriously, would be a proper subject for a board of inquiry. However, we also have the allegations that members of this house were involved. This is the question of privilege with which we have been dealing.

I have thought, Mr. Speaker, throughout the debate that perhaps the question of an inquiry was out of order really. What this house must deal with, and what we have been trying to deal with, is a question of privilege. It is true that two or three motions which we have presented have been ruled out of order. I had one more ready, but my colleagues advised me it was much the same as the others, and likely would be out of order too.

Merely because we are having a little procedural difficulty in finding the right motion to deal with the matter does not make it any less necessary for the house to deal with the question of privilege. I submit that the house now, if it wished to vote for the inquiry which the Prime Minister is talking about, would still be left with this question of privilege on its hands. There is not one member in this house who can stand up and say it is not important. Certainly, the type of allegation made against these Privy Councillors is most serious. It is most improper, I submit, for the minister to make this charge.

The action and the attitude of the Liberal party in connection with these charges is most unjust. I am certain, if I were to make a suggestion that adultery had been committed by members of the Liberal party, and there was some outcry about it, some of the members opposite would not think an inquiry before which all the members would have to appear would be the right way to solve the problem.

However, apparently they have gone along with the Minister of Justice and his method of handling this matter. The Minister makes charges against hon. members here. When there is a legitimate complaint about those charges and we say substantiate them, the attitude of hon. members opposite is, let us inquire and find out. I would suggest to hon. members that they honestly and sincerely think about that. I suggest there are two separate questions. This inquiry into the handling of the matter is one thing, but the allegations and imputations against the persons and reputations of members in this house is a separate and distinct matter.

I invite the Prime Minister to get up and suggest to the house, since he appears to be so willing to have an inquiry, how he would handle the privilege part of this question. I really am a little amazed that this government is now so willing, anxious, and in such a hurry to investigate. I suppose they are anxious because of the security risk involved. The Minister of Justice sits there saying nothing. The indication is that he heard about the case two or three years ago, perhaps somewhat vaguely involving security risks, and he now brings it forward in this nebulous manner.

Mr. Speaker, obviously there is a question of privilege for the whole house involved in the manner in which the Minister of Justice carries out his duty in connection with questions of security in this country. If there is a security risk involved, and if the minister has had this information for two or three years, I suggest he should resign for being so delinquent in his duty that he did not bring it forward before this time. There has not been one reason put forward by the Prime Minister or by the Minister of Justice in respect of why the minister brings it forward now, and only now. If it was so serious, why let it lie quiet all this time? Could we have an answer to that?

It appears that this minister and the party over there are taking the attitude which I thought I had illustrated so well when I mentioned that were I or someone to make an allegation that someone over there was an adulterer, the best way to investigate this allegation would be to bring in every one in the party before a board of inquiry to ascertain the facts.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 14, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MUNSINGER CASE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF JUDICIAL INQUIRY AND STATEMENTS BY MEMBERS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday and Friday last, during the discussion on certain aspects of what has come to be known as the Munsinger case, I announced the willingness, indeed the desire of the government to set up a judicial inquiry which would go into this case, into the statements that had been made concerning it, into the allegations that had been made.

I did so believing this would be the best way to deal with this matter, and the house will recall that there was a good deal of support for this idea in principle. There was also strong opposition advanced to it in certain quarters. Those, Mr. Speaker, who supported this procedure as the best way to deal with this matter made as a qualification or a reservation to their support that the terms of reference of any order in council setting up a judicial inquiry should be wide enough to deal with all relevant aspects of the situation.

• (2:40 p.m.)

It also was urged that we should proceed as quickly as possible to deal with this matter, if the commission was to be set up. I can say, Mr. Speaker, that we have dealt with this matter as quickly as possible, that an order in council has been agreed on and I hope it can be tabled during the afternoon. We shall institute a judicial inquiry into the statements that have been made, and they are given in considerable detail in the order in council. I think they cover all the relevant facts, and I believe they meet the points which have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite, that the inquiry must be comprehensive. The inquiry, Mr. Speaker, will be conducted by Mr. Justice Spence of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if I may say one word more, that we are in an unhappy and distressing situation was made apparent by some of the very moving speeches made last Thursday and Friday. Indeed I think it is accurate to say we are in a frightening position so far as parliament is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, this is no sudden development; it is the culmination, I believe, of a long period of sessions of this house carried on in an atmosphere of extreme partisanship, and at times of bitterness and tension or suspicion. This has been all the more difficult to change for the better because of a parliamentary situation where no party has had majority after three elections in four years—

An hon. Member: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Pearson: —and because of a national situation where forces of regionalism, nationalism and division, which were bound to make more difficult the position of any central government, have been strong in this country. Mr. Speaker, I make no attempt to assess the blame for this situation; but I state as solemnly as I can that if we cannot in this house do something effective, and do it well, to change an atmosphere and attitude which disgraces parliament and demeans democracy, we all will have betrayed the trust and hopes of those who sent us here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: This parliamentary deterioration over the years has taken place at a time when our country, as it approaches the centennial anniversary which should be a time for pride and thanksgiving, is faced with less of confidence than anxiety, with social, constitutional, racial and economic problems of a difficulty and complexity unequalled in our history.

Mr. Speaker, I can only plead that we show our awareness of this by a new resolve to face up to our duties as parliamentarians and as Canadians, constructively and generously, by dealing now with the important matters that must be decided in this session of parliament, so we can serve the people of our country who have sent us here for that purpose, and for that purpose alone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. On several occasions in the last ten days I have publicly stated that I did not know a person by the name of Olga Munsinger. A person by that name is now reported to have said that she lunched with me twice, seven or eight years ago. She may well be right. Although I still do not recall knowing any person by that name, I have examined the pictures of that person in the Saturday newspapers and I believe I recognize the woman pictured there. I make this statement, Mr. Speaker, to prevent anyone from being misled by my previous statements, made without the benefit of information now available.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a further point abundantly clear. The real and only issue which arises from the charges made last week by the Minister of Justice both inside and outside this house, is the security of the nation. That is the overriding consideration, and I hasten to assure the house that at no time has my personal conduct jeopardized security. I defy the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice to say that I ever did anything to jeopardize or affect the security of my country. I challenge them now to stand up and say that I did.

Subject always to the nation's security and welfare, who my acquaintances are or may have been, or who the acquaintances of any hon. member of this house are or may have been is not a public issue. Mr. Speaker, Canadians everywhere have viewed the recent debate in this house with grave concern. I hope this statement will assist in restoring public respect for and confidence in this house and its members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, as has just been said, this parliament is at a crisis, a crisis which calls upon all its members to think first of the institution and not of their personal or partisan position. This I intend to be the guiding principle in what I have to say this afternoon. But I have some things to say which I think the house is entitled to hear and which may cast some light upon the situation, light which will help us to sort our way out of the situation on the one hand and avoid falling into such situations again on the other.

With the principles as stated by the Prime Minister a moment ago as to the position of parliament, I fully agree. With the approach stated a moment ago by my colleague the hon. member for Northumberland, we all agree. But it must be said, sir—I shall return to that theme at the close of my remarks—that one could have wished the Prime Minister had not given such belated recognition to that principle.

It must be said also that the situation in which we find ourselves today is clearly and entirely the result of its having been brought on deliberately, and by the deliberate policy and course of this government over the past week or 10 days. In some of the remarks I have to make I find myself in a distasteful position because they reflect upon the office of the Minister of Justice; but it is inevitable that the matter be put in its proper context. They reflect also upon the Prime Minister and his conduct; because not only, I assure you, do I realize that the government have placed themselves on trial but they have placed parliament on trial, and they have brought us close to the ruin of this institution.

What is happening? What are we seeing in the attempt that has been made and the attempt that it appears is still being made? I suggest to you, sir, that we are seeing something attempted which we have never seen before in the history of any major, successful democracy; a witch hunt against former governments and their leaders, a witch hunt which might be acceptable on the basis of some form of tribal rite but which one would have hoped was below and behind the stage to which this country of Canada has progressed; a witch hunt carried out on the basis of security matters.

Challenges have been hurled across the floor of this house: "If you don't be quiet about the matter you are speaking of now, I will expose the files." Sir, who can this help? It can help only the enemies of the state. It can only do damage to parliament and to the parties involved, who should be here on the basis of their desire to serve the state.

We see a witch hunt on the basis of evidence slim and shoddy. What is being asked but the trial of a former Prime Minister; "open up the files. Expose everything you can find and we will put him on trial and we will get him." That is what they said over there, and said deliberately and not accidentally; "Put him on trial, not in parliament. Put on trial all those who were members of the former government. Not in parliament, no. We will not answer in parliament, where charges should be substantiated. We will not even make the charges in parliament. We make them outside and then we put them on trial in another forum even while parliament is sitting. We will not allow them to know what the charges are here. We will not allow them to see the files and the records upon which, if there is any basis, these charges must be based."

Sir, I find it difficult to find words to describe what has been attempted. This invitation for the next government elected, when we are that government, to hunt through the files to see whether we can find anything embarrassing to members of the former government, will be rejected by us. Who of us would be so conceited as to say that there could never be found anything to embarrass us? But democratic government will not work on that basis. As I say, if this course is persisted in we are facing the ruination of our system and of this institution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the allegations that have been made? They involve the privileges especially of members of the former government, though of all members of the house. Are they allegations which are being made in the heat of the moment? Or are they being made as the result of a deliberate decision backed up by the whole government, and backed up with the authority of the Prime Minister? They are in that second category. The practice which is now being followed constitutes an invitation to reply to the threat, now being implemented, by saying that we will tell all we know. Sir, we will not. We will not follow this tactic. However, let me remind the Prime Minister that when we assumed office there were plenty of security files. Let me remind the Prime Minister that never once did we mention them, and we do not intend to do so now.

Mention of the Munsinger case by name was first made in this house on March 4 by the present Minister of Justice. Even then he used the wrong name. That mention, sir, was not accidental. It was not done in the heat of the moment as the result of a sudden provocation. All along a deliberate course has been followed, the background to which was revealed by the Prime Minister on Friday when he clearly proved that the government had long ago decided they were going, to paraphrase his words, "to teach the opposition a lesson no matter how disastrous the consequences".

Mr. Pearson: When did I say that? Would the hon. gentleman quote my words in that respect?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The words about provocation are to be found at page 2547 of Hansard for March 11. I have them before me. The Prime Minister said:

> I have before me a great many clippings of statements made by members opposite about cleaning up the mess, prosecuting wrongdoers and international crime getting into the office of the Prime Minister—all that kind of thing. Were names named then? Of course they were not. We have been subjected to this kind of treatment now, for too long over here. And reputations have been ruined over here.

Then he went on:

> Now those gentlemen on the other side of the house who have been so free with their accusations over the last few years are getting a little of it, and they don't like it.

Now, sir, I would ask whether words could more clearly establish that this course was deliberately embarked upon and that it had the approbation and support of the Prime Minister. Nothing, sir, could more clearly prove that accusation than the words he uttered on that occasion. Of course it has been deliberate.

It has been mentioned outside, and I will mention it here, that some eight days before, when the case was first mentioned on Friday, March 4 by the Minister of Justice, I was asked to go to the office of the President of the Privy Council to discuss the matter of the Spencer case. In the course of the conversation that ensued I was told in effect that if we persisted in discussing the Spencer case, and persisted in the course of asking for a judicial inquiry, members on that side of the house—on the government side would feel impelled to name the Munsinger case.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Fulton: I said to him at that time that members of the government must accept responsibility for their own actions, and we would accept responsibility for our present and previous actions. I said at that time, "Surely this sort of thing must and should be ended by your following the proper course, the course of appointing a judicial inquiry to remove the cloud that hangs over the head of your own Minister of Justice, of whom it has been said by Mr. Spencer that the Minister of Justice, did not dare to prosecute because if he did, heads would roll."

I invited the President of the Privy Council to end the kind of discussion that had been going on—to end it and to end the possibility of this name-calling process by appointing a judicial inquiry that would end the discussion and remove the cloud. That, sir, was not done. The debate continued, and was followed up with the naming of the case in this house by the Minister of Justice some eight days later.

I was invited to convey this information to my leader, the Leader of the Opposition. I did not do so for eight days, and I did not do so as a result of a deliberate decision, a decision that I would not be a purveyor of threats of that kind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: I did not mention the matter to the Leader of the Opposition, until the morning of Friday, March 4. I told him then that because of the course the debate on the Spencer case was taking, and because of the mention of myself, in the position I had formerly occupied, I felt that I, too, must enter into the debate, that there were certain things that should be said. I told him then that I felt if the debate was to continue there was a possibility that the Munsinger case would be mentioned. But I also said that I felt the Spencer debate should continue; and if it did, we had nothing to be ashamed of.

The Leader of the Opposition agreed with me. The debate continued. The case was mentioned. After the case had been mentioned I then identified to the Leader of the Opposition personally the cabinet minister who had uttered the threat.

Now, sir, on that basis and on the basis of the fact that even after that, when the Spencer case was disposed of on the basis that it would be referred to a judicial commission of inquiry as we had been asking, one would have thought that matters would resume an even keel. We all thought and we all hoped that the atmosphere would be such that this parliament could carry out the business which it has met here to accomplish.

Instead of that, on Thursday or Wednesday of last week—

An hon. Member: Thursday.

Mr. Fulton: —the Minister of Justice resurrected the whole matter and went far beyond that situation by giving a press conference. The press conference was on Thursday of last week. Sir, press conferences do not take place by accident. They are arranged. There is some suggestion that the Prime Minister did not know about it and was astounded and appalled, but he has adopted it. He has adopted it and is backing up the tactics of his Minister of Justice, tactics which are bringing this parliament to the verge of ruin. And what is more important, sir, the Prime Minister in fact brought the matter to the level of partisan politics and issued a challenge to the opposition, as reported in Hansard, page 2547, to make the matter of the Munsinger case and the government's handling of this situation the subject matter of a vote of non-confidence on the supply motion that was to have come in today. The Prime Minister therefore has so far adopted and approved of everything that has been done in this connection on that side that he has invited us to make it the subject of a motion of non-confidence.

Sir, I am not going to attempt any prediction of what will be the outcome of that challenge, or of the supply motion when it comes. I think, however, I can properly say, as the Leader of the Opposition said and as I have said also in connection with the threat of exposure, the so-called threat of exposure, that this party does not succumb to threats of blackmail of that kind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: We are not going to be trapped or forced or pushed in any way into any improper course by the threat the Prime Minister held out when he spoke of making this the subject matter of a vote of non-confidence. We are going to follow a course, a responsible course, of declining the temptation to reply in the same tactics. We are going to follow the responsible course of doing everything we can, faced though we are with a government whose tactics have deprived it of the respect of the members of the house, to make parliament work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: Now, sir, what are the allegations that have been made. I have not seen the proposed terms of reference for the judicial inquiry into the Munsinger case. I do not know whether they will be satisfactory or not, if a judicial inquiry is to be set up at all. However, the fact of the matter is that allegations have been made and discussed in this house. In my view it is doubtful if the damage can be repaired simply by referring the matter to a judicial inquiry.

The Minister of Justice has alleged a breach of security in connection with the Munsinger case, a case in which I was involved, a case handled by the government of which I had the honour to be a member, and he has alleged breach of security in such a way as to place all former members of that government under suspicion, and to place myself as former minister of justice in a position where, by inference, I have been careless and have been party to carelessness and mishandling of a security case.

I have read carefully the press reports of the press conference, and what the Minister of Justice has said since, mostly outside this house. I do not think anyone would disagree with me when I say that a careful examination of these reports establishes what his allegations are, what his insinuations are, and therefore establishes clearly and precisely what it is that he must prove in order to substantiate these charges.

I want to summarize the proof that he is called upon to give in order to substantiate these charges, and then deal with the file and the facts in order to show that he is completely incapable of substantiating any of them. Here is what he has to prove, sir. First, that "two or more ministers" were improperly involved with Mrs. Munsinger and that their actions in that involvement had been such as to be "definitely" a security risk to Canada.

Second, he must prove that the file turned over to the Minister of Justice by the R.C.M. Police in 1961 was "a bona fide security case".

Third, he must prove that a breach of the national security or some other offence was indicated in the file, thereby imposing a duty on the Minister of Justice to refer the file to the legal advisers in the Department of Justice.

Fourth, he must prove that Mrs. Munsinger was known to have been employed and to have been active in espionage work before coming to Canada.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Those are the things he has to prove with respect to the general allegations. I shall deal a little later with the proof he must bring with respect to his allegation against the Leader of the Opposition.

I shall deal now with the file and the facts as established by the file. I have asked to see the file—to see the file as it was when I dealt with it. This has been refused.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Fulton: I would think, sir, the house is entitled to know the contents and the terms of the telegram which I sent to the Prime Minister on March 11 of this year. I was out in Kamloops at the time. The telegram is from Kamloops, addressed to Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, Prime Minister of Canada, Ottawa, Ontario. The text is as follows:

> In the course of his comments on the Munsinger case your Justice Minister made certain statements and raised inferences which do not accord with my recollection of the facts. He admitted he has not seen the file. In the light of what he has said and what has developed I will necessarily be discussing the matter in the House of Commons on my return to Ottawa. I intend to keep my remarks within the confines both of the facts and of what it is proper to say in connection with such a matter. In order that what I say will be based upon an immediate review and not upon recollection of events and documents last seen some years ago I make formal demand that the R.C.M.P. file in the Munsinger case be made available to me. In making this demand let me remind you, first, that I am asking only for the opportunity to review documents which were before me when I was minister of justice; second, that I do not ask to see anything that may have been recorded between your advisers and the present government and, third, that as a Privy Councillor and subject to the oath taken in that office I am entitled to see documents and reports with which I was dealing when minister of justice. I shall be in touch with you immediately upon my return to arrange the details of time and place where I may review the file. I am sending an information copy of this telegram to your colleagues, the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General, and in view of the publicity resulting from Mr. Cardin's press conference am also releasing a copy immediately to the press.

Now, sir, it will be appreciated that in making that demand I made it clear that I did not want to see anything on the file beyond what was there when I was dealing with it. I do not want to see anything that may have been placed on it by way of either advice or comment to the present government. Second, I was not asking for the file to be produced in public. I was merely asking for the right to review it myself. Third, I made it clear that in so doing and in my subsequent discussion thereof I would, of course, be bound by my oath as a Privy Councillor.

That request, sir, was refused in terms of a letter which I received at 1.50 p.m. today from the Prime Minister, dated Ottawa, March 14, 1966 and reading:

> Dear Mr. Fulton:
> Your telegram of March 11th concerning the Munsinger case was received in my office on Saturday morning and I have since given it most careful consideration.
> The files on the Munsinger case will, of course, be placed before the judicial commission that it is proposed to establish. It will be the responsibility of the commission to determine what measures should be taken to ensure fair treatment for all parties concerned, while at the same time protecting information that is classified and of a sensitive nature.

So, sir, this reasonable request that I be allowed access to the file so that I might speak from a recent, immediate review instead of a recollection of five years ago, is refused with no adequate reason assigned.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Fulton: Of course if there is a judicial commission the file must go to it, but allowing me to inspect it for the matter of an hour is not going to interfere with that. The only inference to be drawn from the facts is that it is all right for the Minister of Justice to make charges and accusations and innuendos without ever looking at the file, but it is not all right for the member of the opposition most immediately involved in this aspect of the case to look at the file before he replies. We are not to see it. The only inference to be drawn, and I do draw it, sir, is the inference that the file, the facts contained on the file and the facts surrounding the file refute the charges made by the Minister of Justice, and the government opposite know it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: I suggest, sir, that the course followed by the Prime Minister in that refusal is the course of a man deficient in courtesy and courage.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question. Would he think it would be proper for me to use information gained from this file in support of any statements I might wish to make in the house concerning this matter?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would expect, but apparently it is too much to expect, that the Prime Minister or any one undertaking to make statements about the Munsinger case would look at the file before he did so, so he would know whether his statements are accurate or not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: I am not, of course, suggesting that facts which it is improper to reveal and information it is improper to give be given, but we are entitled to discuss this file and see what it establishes within the realm of protection of police procedures. This I am denied. I hope the Prime Minister has seen the file. Obviously the Minister of Justice has not although he, as Minister of Justice, had the full right and authority to call for that file at any time, and should have done so before he made these statements.

[Mr. Fulton.]

It is a sorry situation, sir, when we have it now revealed by the attitude and the words of the Prime Minister that they prefer to make charges based on ignorance, and to smear reputations without examining documents rather than take the normal precaution of seeing whether there is any foundation in fact for what they are saying.

I am, then, in the position, sir, where I have not been able to review the file as I would like to, but nevertheless I am clear in my recollection of certain salient points and, within the limits of what it is proper for me to disclose, I intend to state what I recall of the report and the circumstances under which it came before me.

My recollection establishes that the Minister of Justice cannot substantiate his charges and cannot prove things that he is called upon to prove. My statements are made on the basis of my recollection of a report which I have seen. The minister made his statements without ever having seen the file.

The report before me in 1961, on the basis of my recollection, contained no suggestion that there had been any breach of security. It did not suggest that any security information had been sought by Mrs. Munsinger or conveyed to her. It did not allege or suggest that any offence had been committed in connection with security or any other field within federal responsibility. It did not allege or suggest any offence by any member of the federal government.

It did not state that Mrs. Munsinger was or had been engaged in espionage activities. It did not allege or suggest that she had cultivated the acquaintance of anyone with a view to obtaining security information. It did not state that she was employed by any embassy, nor was she so employed.

The activities which led to the compiling of the report which came to me had not originated as the result of any concern with security. The police had not been investigating Mrs. Munsinger with respect to security. They knew of her in other connections and checked on her from time to time in that respect. It was as a result of one of those checks that the report in question arose. It did not suggest that any person in the federal government was involved in those other areas or connections. I repeat, it did not suggest that any offence had been committed by any member of the federal government.

• (3:20 p.m.)

With respect to the question of whether Mrs. Munsinger was ever engaged in espionage activities, I have said that my recollection of the file is that there was no such allegation. Certainly she never spied in Canada. I, of course, cannot prove of my own knowledge that she never spied before, but I can refer to press reports of investigations made since the Munsinger case came before the public. I refer to the Toronto Telegram of March 12 this year, page 19, which reads as follows:

Justice Minister Lucien Cardin said Thursday that Gerda Munsinger "had at one time been employed and worked in espionage work."

However official sources in Germany, the United States and Canada do not confirm this.

From Washington, Gordon Donaldson reports:

"Neither the CIA nor FBI would say they had any record of espionage involving Mrs. Munsinger."

From Bonn Alfred Schroeder cabled:

"German Central Counter Intelligence Agency does not have Munsinger record. They are emphatic that if Munsinger was engaged in espionage and later left Canada the German agency would have received advice from Canadian authorities if she returned to West Germany."

And this, to the consternation of the Minister of Justice who said she had died, is where she turned up.

From Ottawa, Ron Collister reports:

"The R.C.M.P. refuse to confirm that Mrs. Munsinger was a security risk nor will they even discuss the case—

Quite proper under the circumstances.

"However, Mrs. Munsinger was not considered a security case when she arrived in Canada in 1955 or she would not have been allowed to enter the country."

Now, sir, that is the statement of the facts based upon my recollection of the file, and it refutes absolutely the charges and innuendos with regard to security and the existence of any evidence of any offence so carelessly thrown out by the Minister of Justice. It is clear, then, that there being no breach of security or other offence reported upon or suggested, there was no obligation, occasion or common sense in my referring the report to the legal advisers in the Department of Justice for an opinion.

I may say, sir, that in any other case where it was proper to do so, whether or not the report included names of those near the government, I invariably did refer them for an official legal opinion and advice. But these were cases where offences existed or were alleged. That was not the case here.

Having concluded, as he obviously did, that he was and is unable to substantiate the slanderous security aspects of his charges, the Minister of Justice then sought to reduce the count. By his letter to the Prime Minister, read into Hansard by that gentleman, by the Prime Minister, on Friday last, he tries to confine the poison to an allegation that the Leader of the Opposition was guilty of improper conduct when Prime Minister in that he failed to lay the file on the case before the legal advisers in the Department of Justice for their advice and that this constituted mishandling of the case. He concluded his letter by saying:

"I have made and make no other charges."

Sir, that last sentence is just not true. His other charges stand, they have not been withdrawn nor has an apology been tendered for them, and he is convicted by his inability to prove them. But what are the charges now levelled against the Leader of the Opposition? I have given the reasons why it was not necessary, indeed was not appropriate, for me to refer the matter to the department. What possible reason was there for the then Prime Minister to do so? No offence was charged or suggested in the report. Was the Prime Minister under any possible obligation to ask the legal advisers to comment upon a report not involving any legal issue? I should think that responsible civil servants—this is the only kind we have in the Department of Justice, and I should think they are sick at heart right now as a result of the conduct of this minister and this government—would properly resent being asked to pry gratuitously into private lives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: We can leave that sort of thing to the present Minister of Justice, who prefers to do it publicly and invites parliament —well, I say no more there.

Sir, that is the factual statement I wished to make to this house so far as my recollection of the file and the circumstances surrounding it are concerned. What is the situation with which we are left? Well, unless the minister withdraws and apologizes, then of course we are left with his allegations on the one hand and mine on the other. I have no hesitancy or fear with regard to what any examination of the file will establish in respect of the fairness or accuracy of my recollection.

There is one other thing I think I should say with regard to the file which I believe I omitted, and that is in respect of photographs. I have said that the aspects about the file which I have placed on the record I recall clearly. I do not recall any mention of photographs. If there were any I did not see them, nor was it suggested I should see them. I did not show any photographs to nor discuss photographs with any other person.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are left in the position where the government has decided to set up a judicial inquiry. The judicial inquiry, I suggest, will be left—unless the minister apologizes—to examine the truth or otherwise about the minister's allegation with regard to two or more privy councillors and Mrs. Munsinger. It will also examine the truth or otherwise of the minister's accusation that the case was mishandled by the then Prime Minister, and will establish the accuracy of all the other specifications in the charges made by the minister.

But no judicial inquiry can do anything to repair the damage that has been done to parliament this past week. An anxious and worried country wants to see, and is entitled to demand, that parliament get on with the pressing business of the country. To do so, we have to restore to this house an atmosphere of reason.

I dislike quoting myself, but two years ago when I spoke on the subject of "Getting Things Done In Parliament" I said this:

> If parliament is to get things done, there is required, I believe, an atmosphere, a certain mental disposition on the part of parliamentarians and their leaders. This mental disposition will recognize that the institution will work only if there is mutual respect, and hardly at all if there is mutual contempt. The Canadian parliament has on occasion risen to great heights. Most of the time, despite the temptations and the frailties to which all humans and therefore all human institutions are subject, it has carried on the business of the country in a way that has done real credit to it and to Canada.

There will always be controversy in this house, sometimes heated controversy, and this is as it should be; but the ugly atmosphere which was created in this parliament last week must be purged if the effectiveness of the institution is to be restored. How is this to be done? The Minister of Justice has a great opportunity to act as the catalyst to restore such an atmosphere and to perform a service to the institution and the country. He can do so by resigning his office now.

In dealing with this question I am reminded of a statement by Walter Lippmann which I take the liberty of quoting:

> "—though public officials are selected by the voters, or are appointed by men who are elected, they owe their primary allegiance not to the opinions of the voters but to the law, to the criteria of their professions, to the integrity of the arts and sciences in which they work, to their own conscientious and responsible convictions of their duty within the rules and the frame of reference they have sworn to respect."

• (3:30 p.m.)

In other words the primary duty of an office holder is to the office he holds. I cannot see how the Minister of Justice can claim to have any respect for the office he holds in view of what he has done to it.

So far, he has made a blanket accusation of immorality and of a possible breach of security against two or more former ministers whom he refuses to identify, thereby placing a whole group of hon. men and hon. members under the shadow of suspicion. He steadfastly refuses to identify the men he has in mind, or to substantiate his charges. In such an atmosphere parliament cannot work effectively, no matter how many judicial inquiries may be appointed.

For the good of parliament, and to enable this institution to get on with its work in an atmosphere that is cleansed of the bitterness of the past week, the minister should now prove his willingness to put his personal feelings aside and resign his office.

In resigning he can add to his own stature and restore some of the stature that parliament has lost as a result of his conduct; and at the same time—and I say this because I feel very deeply indeed about the position of responsibility of the Minister of Justice—the Prime Minister should dissociate himself and the government from the conduct that has taken place during the past week.

I suggest that if the minister will not resign the Prime Minister should dismiss him from the cabinet. If the Prime Minister cannot bring himself to do this then I suggest—Mr. Speaker, I think the inference of what I have to say is obvious, and in order not to do anything further to exacerbate opinions here I will leave it to the Prime Minister to get the message I am implying.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances and in view of the days I spent in the house, in a certain atmosphere, I would have preferred not to be called upon to take part in this debate. Unfortunately, a short while ago, the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), former Minister of Justice, dragged my name into the debate in a way which compels me to set the record straight and clear up any doubt with regard to the circumstances under which the Munsinger file was mentioned in the house by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin).

I must say right away that, when the Minister of Justice challenged the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) to put on the record in detail the way he handled the Munsinger affair, the atmosphere in the house then was such that the minister did so under such provocation that, under the circumstances, it was not humanly possible for him to hold back.

And the Minister of Justice cannot be blamed for having done so in the circumstances.

I was surprised this morning, and shocked also, in view of the past relationship which existed between the former Minister of Justice and myself, in view of the memories I still have about the years I had the pleasure of working with him; I must say that I was shocked to read in a newspaper this morning that he had allegedly stated, in Vancouver I think, that in the course of a conversation I had with him, I had tried to blackmail him and members of the official opposition.

I must say at this point that this is not true and that I never threatened the former Minister of Justice to drop the name Munsinger in Parliament if the manoeuvring and discussions surrounding the Spencer case did not stop.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, and I am not afraid to say it—I think that it is all to my credit to have done so—it is true that I suggested to the hon. member for Kamloops that we should have a conversation about the Spencer case. It is true and it took place about two weeks ago, as he said in his statement.

On the other hand, the circumstances which led me to do that are not those he indicated and it is the first time, I think, that I hear the hon. member for Kamloops speak in a manner that is reminiscent of the one sometimes used by an hon. member opposite.

I said at the beginning of our conversation—and that is one of the reasons why I was shocked and surprised—that, excluding the Leader of the Opposition, whom I did not want to see, he probably was the only member of the house with whom I could, as a member of the Privy Council—and I told him so very clearly, speak frankly.

He did not refuse to see me. In the circumstances, at no time did he ask that the discussion we were having be held any other way than under the seal of secrecy of the Privy Council.

This morning, I learned that he decided to betray the secret and make public, not the substance of our conversation, but the fact that we had had one. Substantially, my only comments were as follows, and here I shall say it in English:

[English]

"I want to see you to appeal to your sense of fairness and of justice."

[Translation]

I told him that himself, as former Minister of Justice, and the Leader of the Opposition, when he was Prime Minister of Canada, must have realized how difficult at times and fraught with responsibilities and consequences were the decisions a Minister of Justice and a Prime Minister had often to make about records involving the security of the state.

I reminded him that in the Spencer case, as in others, the good faith and the judgment of the Minister of Justice and the government had to be relied on with regard to the decisions called for.

I told him, it is true, to keep in mind that the Spencer case, in which the Leader of the Opposition seemed bent on destroying the Minister of Justice, was insignificant compared to other records with which himself and the former Prime Minister had to deal, among others, the Munsinger case. It is actually true. But there never was any question of revealing the record.

It is being suggested this afternoon that there was some kind of a plot or agreement between the present Minister of Justice and myself so that I should threaten the former Minister of Justice. I say once again that this is untrue.

I said that the opposition can attack the Minister of Justice by creating confusion as has often been done when we were held responsible for the St. Gilles murders, as it was almost done at a given time against the government.

But I said that to use a security case in an attempt to destroy a Minister of Justice was extremely unfair and I reminded him that I was appealing to his sense of fairness to try and convince the Leader of the Opposition, if he deemed advisable not to resort to this type of tactics. But never, never was there any question of making public the Munsinger file. And then, I suggested an appeal also to the sense of justice of the Leader of the Opposition.

His last words—I remember that the door of my office was already ajar—were these:

• (3:40 p.m.)

[English]

"I'll talk to him if it can help."

[Translation]

He apparently did not feel the Leader of the Opposition could be convinced by an appeal to his sense and spirit of justice.

Mr. Speaker, when two contradictory versions of certain facts are given, other facts outside the conversations must be checked in order to determine which of the two accounts of such a conversation is in accordance with the facts.

The first thing I wish to say is that there was so little agreement, understanding or consultation between the present Minister of Justice and myself to bring about the conversation I had with the member for Kamloops, that the Minister of Justice was not informed that I wanted to have this conversation and I state before this house that he was still unaware of it on the very day the present Minister of Justice, under pressure from the Leader of the Opposition, said in the house—it was eight or ten days later, I think—that he called on the Leader of the Opposition to put on record his own handling of the Munsinger affair.

On that day, the Minister of Justice was not aware of the conversation I had had with the member for Kamloops. If that amounts to an attempt at blackmail, say there must be a lot of it, but not in this case.

Now, I have no wish to rehash the past, but I think that had I wished to use for blackmail the Munsinger affair, which seems to frighten so much the official opposition, I would have done so in other circumstances, a year and four months ago, when for a month I was crucified by the Leader of the Opposition and the member from the Yukon. It would have been easy, then, had I wished to use blackmail. And when would I have used it? Possibly before, possibly during and after the Dorion inquiry, had it been in my character either to seek vengeance or to blackmail the opponents, on the basis of facts I was aware of, for I was aware of them at the time.

Well, that is when I would have done it and I think, Mr. Speaker, it will be recognized that, in the first place, there were no discussions between the present Minister of Justice and myself concerning the conversation I intended to have with the hon. member for Kamloops and that, before this day, I never mentioned it. And I dare any member of the opposition to say that I might have mentioned it. Never did I refer to the Munsinger case and the truth is that when I saw the hon. member for Kamloops, it was, as I said before, to appeal to his sense of justice, in which I always believed until this afternoon, when he publicly distorted our conversation.

My intention was to speak to him as a member of the Privy Council. That was, in my opinion, another proof of the confidence which, as he knows, I never stopped having in him.

It was another proof of that feeling of loyalty which I had always kept for him, since I had left the Department of Justice, a loyalty which as a matter of fact brought upon me certain remarks from politicians who felt that I was making too many favourable comments about my old boss, the former Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Kamloops.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I shall not let myself be dragged into a discussion on the merits of the case. The government's conscience in that regard is clear. I belong to a government which decided that a judicial inquiry would be held. The Prime Minister had just announced the institution of such an inquiry.

In fact, he has just announced the appointment of a prominent judge of the Supreme Court of Canada as chairman of this commission. In the circumstances, I am duty bound not to refer to the merits of the file, but, I repeat, I wished to correct the impression which may have been given, and I wish to tell the house again that I have never, but never, threatened the member for Kamloops. I repeat, I merely appealed to his sense of fairness.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of going into detail in connection with this matter. This afternoon we have seen parliament at its best in the speech delivered by the former Minister of Justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In careful, measured tones the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) placed the facts before this house and the country. It is not for me, after almost 26 years in this chamber, to apologize for any action taken during the period I was Prime Minister or at any other time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I love this institution and every thing it stands for. In the course of debate we often say things that in the light of subsequent events we might not have said. Those are the spontaneous ejaculations of strong men having strong opinions and I have never objected to that at any time. I, however, have had the experience that was had by Arthur Meighen and R. B. Bennett, who made it possible for the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to be what he is today, and George Drew—

• (3:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, the Prime Minister was one of those who stood about the Bennett throne and received appointments. I have had their experience in campaigns of malice and destruction. Does, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) say to me that when a Prime Minister finds any shortcomings amongst his ministers which are not offences against the state, he should turn the file over to the Department of Justice? This is not the way parliament works. We have had the answer today. The file has not been made available to the hon. member for Kamloops. Why did the Prime Minister not deliver it to a Privy Councillor, a Privy Councillor who had the responsibility for the Department of Justice and who says security was not violated?

However, these facts have been bandied about. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau) says that he knew about this a year and a half ago. If there was any offence against security, why was not something done? The other day, when the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) was speaking, he received from the President of the Privy Council a suggestion about the Munsinger case. I saw him turn and heard him say, tell him about that. Oh, yes, I did.

Mr. Favreau: That is not true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I saw him and I heard him. On several occasions this sword of Damocles was held over my head. Then, I should like to contrast the attitude of the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), the former Minister of Justice with the attitude of the President of the Privy Council. You cannot build parliament that way. There has been a continuous course of attempting to expose and discredit me in a personal capacity, and when I say that I speak with the authority of the Prime Minister. I recall a speech he made on my birthday in 1962. After all, one does not forget these anniversaries as one gets older.

On that occasion, he said: We do not need to spend much time in the coming campaign in exposing and discrediting Mr. Diefenbaker and his government; that has been done. They have attempted to discredit, undermine and destroy. Finally, as a last resort, the President of the Privy Council came to the conclusion that they did not want this Spencer case dealt with because they knew that heads would roll, according to Mr. Spencer's statement as reported in the press. They thought there was only one way to do it, and that was to hold over my head the threat that I would be destroyed by something they had.

I was not here last week. I announced that I would be away on Thursday following the passage of the estimates. Thursday and Friday were going to be devoted to such noncontroversial subjects as the setting up of committees. I let everybody know I was going. Finally, when I arrived at a point on the north end of Vancouver Island from which there was no possibility of getting back—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They laugh. Last evening we heard one of the proponents of Liberalism, Mr. Fraser, say that I could have returned. He always turns up on the C.B.C. for the purpose of explaining, in a nice way, the government's position whenever the government is in difficulties. He did so again last night. As soon as I received this word, I did everything to get back. I was told I could not get back to Ottawa before Friday afternoon, and I thought that was too late. The parliamentary proceedings were under way. I did not know parliamentary life, and I did not know this sort of thing could continue for two days. It never had before.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The voices indicate the guilt. They know. During the two days I was away parliament almost fell to pieces. I have an unfortunate failing, being unable to hear about 75 interjections at one time. The fact is, I have made myself perfectly clear. I unequivocally repeat now that there never was a question of security in connection with this matter. What did they do? They smeared. Today my colleagues look at one another and they say, is it you? Is it you? This is fascism, Mr. Speaker, at its worst.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In other words, they knew that they had something; for what reason were they keeping it? Was it something to use on a future occasion? This is the only possible explanation. If there had been any interference with the security of our country, they would have revealed it. However, they kept it in cold storage, in their hearts. Mind you, this statement does not cover all the Prime Minister's colleagues. The fact that a great diplomat is supporting this kind of thing surprises me beyond anything. Throughout all the years we have crossed one another, I would not have expected to see the time when he would stand up in the house and accept this kind of thing.

• (4:00 p.m.)

What was the explanation today when he opened his remarks? He said that we have difficulties in our country in connection with national unity. What has national unity got to do with this question of charging various members of the Privy Council indiscriminately with wrong-doing approaching treason? One of our colleagues has passed on. Today he has been mentioned as one of those two or more. He is referred to as one of them; and his son, an hon. member of this house, has no right of action. There is no action that a son, however honourable be his father, can take to preserve the reputation of his father. That was the situation in the Gladstone case.

What is the measure of the smear and innuendo? I am not going to talk about lack of courage in what they do. Instead of standing up in the house and saying "These are the people"—and I would admire him if he were to do that, though I have no reason to expect him to do so—the minister remains silent.

Then the government had to work out a way whereby they could get the matter before parliament, and they chose the letter way. As long as the Prime Minister has been in office he has followed the course of writing letters to people or having people write letters to him. He has these penpals, and there have been several of them. I can just imagine him, Mr. Speaker, sitting around the table with his cabinet, and saying: "Now, how about a letter? You tell me about it, and I will tell them in the house". I can imagine the Minister of Justice saying: "I cannot tell them myself because I would lose my hide, so I can write you and you can tell them".

The Minister of Justice gave a press conference. That must have been arranged beforehand; nobody ever produced a press conference like this one without some activation. Did the Prime Minister know of this press conference in advance? I was informed that the Minister of Justice left the cabinet meeting that morning before he called the press conference. I go away to the hinterland to enjoy the salubrious atmosphere of northern British Columbia, and suddenly I get a telegram.

Mr. Winch: Do not call that the hinterland.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the Prime Minister knew about this—and there has been no denial—then it is one of the most terrible things in public life. If he did not know, then he should have fired the minister within 24 minutes of his finding out about it.

When this case was first mentioned I told him to go ahead and threaten. I said let us go into the whole field of security—and I will be dealing with that in a moment too. But the government did not institute an inquiry; they held off. According to Richard Jackson, they "dropped a bombshell".

The Ottawa Journal for March 10 outlines how serious the situation is, and indicates that the minister said that the Munsinger case was worse than the Profumo scandal. Possibly the Minister of Justice knows about that. Then the Journal goes on to report that the justice minister then said:

> In some ways it was worse.

The report asked whether there had been an actual security leak, to which the minister replied:

> I don't know—but there definitely was a security—
> —leak.

Mr. Favreau: You mean security risk.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes—a security risk. Then he said she was dead and buried. What a resurrection, Mr. Speaker? Within a matter of minutes she had turned up. Does this not indicate that there is something wrong in the Department of Justice if this person was in any way considered a risk? In West Germany, where they are naturally fearful of this kind of thing, she was able to continue working for several years without being identified until one of the stellar newspapers was able to locate her.

Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, smear, slime and insinuation against two or more former ministers. I believe that according to those in official circles they now number four. Did the minister dare stand up in the House of Commons to say this? Not he. He wrote a letter to the Prime Minister, in which he said:

My dear Prime Minister:

On Friday, March 4th, as recorded on page 2211 on Hansard I stated that the Leader of the Opposition "was accusing us of hiding the truth, of hiding evidence from the committee."

I added that he was "the very last person in the house"— —and so on. The letter continued:

To this the right honourable gentleman replied "I am not worried. Have your commission look into it. Put it on the agenda".

I have subsequently indicated that the Leader of the Opposition had failed to place the file on this case before the law officers of the Department of Justice for their advice—

I would ask the Prime Minister whether he finds shortcomings in his ministers. Does he ever have any complaints about them? To those that write in slanderous terms, does he say "I think this is a slanderous suggestion and I will turn it over to the law officers of the crown"? If we are going to start this, Mr. Speaker, we will destroy democracy; because all of us know, human nature being what it is, that we have to meet face to face from day to day, and these things are never brought out.

Then the minister went on to say in the letter:

I have alleged that the Leader of the Opposition mishandled this case and that he failed to seek the advice of the law officers of the Department of Justice.

The hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) has answered that once and for all. Then the letter concludes—is it a postscript?—in this way:

I have made and make no other charges.

What of his statement, Mr. Speaker? What of his two press conferences? What of his allegations, his smear, scuttlebutt, slander and smut?

Instead of coming before the house the minister writes a letter to the Prime Minister and says: "You are of age; tell them about me". This, Mr. Speaker, is the most unusual thing that has ever taken place in this house in all my years in public life. They have made their examinations under a microscope. I do not say that everything I did was right, but what I do say, Mr. Speaker, is that what I did was honest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When we came into office, Mr. Speaker, it was immediately suggested that we might look over the records of the cabinet. After all, they had had their divisions in 1955 and 1956. But I said, not one look or one peek; not one file and not one examination. That is the British tradition, and I followed it 100 per cent. I do not say that I would not have liked to know some of the observations made by some hon. gentlemen sitting opposite when they were on the treasury benches in regard to some matters, but that is not the British tradition. We do not snoop.

Mr. Byrne: Except Nielsen.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We do not slither. Not one examination was made of one line, either indirectly or at all, by me or by anyone on my behalf. Nor was any report thereof given to me. To do otherwise is to undermine the very essence of our democracy.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Now, Mr. Speaker, had there been any evidence that the security of the state was undermined, what would be the proper course to follow? I go back to 1957. I am not going to refer to the case, because I do not want to resurrect the name, a tragic name which will affect the wife and family of the individual in question and exacerbate their natural feelings. However, I am going to read what the present Prime Minister said on page 3493 of Hansard, for April 12, 1957:

It has always been a principle and I think, a correct principle, of our security investigation that we would not deal publicly in connection with a security inquiry with the details of any allegations made, for the reason that the details of a man's private life should not be the subject of accusation and rebuttal in public. The reasons behind this principle are I think obvious; it might well do far more harm than good, to the man in question, and it might cause results which would be unfortunate to all concerned without being of any assistance whatever to security.

There was no security involved in this matter; that has been made clear and made abundantly clear by the hon. member for Kamloops. If there had been, the Prime Minister of Canada, a diplomat, Her Majesty's minister, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for External Affairs at the time in question, enunciated the proper course to be followed.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say more at this time. I do not know what the terms are, but I do point out this: This is a matter that cannot be shelved by the executive to the judicial, to get rid of a matter that affects the rights, the privileges and the prerogatives of members of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all. What a court or what a judge might look at is not the criterion. The criterion is, so far as members of parliament are concerned, that we in the discharge of our responsibilities do these things; we bring about, in a continuity of discussion the preservation of freedom and the assurance of the preservation of the state. That is our responsibility.

The judicial inquiry is set up to do what? To try me on the basis of a letter written to the Prime Minister that the Minister of Justice did not have—well, I do not want to use the word that might be used to describe that. As a matter of fact, when I think of some of the statements made here I begin to think that we are living in a new age of palaeontology—political palaeontology—the invertebrate age, which is government without a backbone.

Instead of standing up and saying, "This is it" he writes the Prime Minister and says, "This is what I want you to look into. I do not want you to look into what I said, the allegations that I made, or the infamous suggestions I have spread about. I do not want you to look into that. I just want you to look after him. That is all."

Mr. Speaker, I shall have more to say when we have available to us this order in council.

Now I come to one concluding reference, and it has to do with parliament. I started off by saying that I love this institution. Our debates are not acrid. Eggshell sentimentalities in the House of Commons are foreign to the British house. I could give quotation after quotation to illustrate the power of invective. As a matter of fact, Lord Hailsham who gave up his title, who is now Mr. Quinton Hogg, said that invective was of the essence; it is the tool of debate.

Mr. Speaker, think of the great debates in the British House in the last 15 years between Aneurin Bevan and Sir Winston Churchill. They did not regard things said in the course of debate, things which were strong, powerful, and sometimes overwhelmingly unjust, as personal things. Those things did not interfere with their friendships. They had that sentiment for parliament; that creation of the English and the French, and for the first leader of our Mother of Parliaments, Simon de Montfort. What about that concept, Mr. Speaker? Think of the occasion, Mr. Speaker, when Sir Winston Churchill made his speech in the House of Commons, I think in the year 1951, when he was followed by Mr. Aneurin Bevan, when Mr. Bevan said, "Mr. Speaker, I shall puncture that bladder of falsehood with the poignard of truth." There were none of these eggshell sensitivities that we are starting to display.

Mr. Speaker, I think of an occasion that I have never forgotten. It was at a dinner at 10 Downing Street. A lady, Mrs. Chamberlain, was sitting beside me. My wife and I were the guests. My wife sat to the right of Prime Minister Macmillan and to her right sat Sir Winston Churchill. He was very happy that evening and I finally forgot myself to say to Mrs. Chamberlain, "He is very happy tonight. He does not usually come out any more." She said, "I am so glad. If it had not been for him we would not be here."

Of all the expressions of viewpoint, Mr. Speaker, after he had been driven from his position of Prime Minister, the one that sums it up best is a short speech by one of the most famous of British parliamentarians, Cromwell, who said, "In the name of God, go." Sir Winston Churchill had been driven out. He took his place in the opposition front benches and there were bitter words.

I visited that British House over and over again. I saw it in 1916, in the month of December, when Churchill got up to speak and the house emptied. They would not listen. I saw it again in 1936. It was an adverse house. Those were the times of the clashes between Baldwin and Churchill. But they maintained the one thing that is essential to the preservation of parliament and everything it stands for. What they maintained is that while one may disagree and strongly disagree, and while we have a responsibility as members of the opposition to bring out that which is wrong and have it cleared away, at the same time it is not in a personal sense and it must not be. I think of the way in which Sir Winston Churchill behaved after the war, when he was driven from public life. That is what everybody thought. He was voted out. The crowds turned out in 1945 to see, but not to hear. They turned him out.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Attlee took his place, the man who had been deputy prime minister, and as leader of the opposition he said harsh things of Attlee.

I saw something of the grandeur of parliamentary life just a year ago when the Prime Minister and I were representatives for Canada at Sir Winston's funeral, outside St. Paul's cathedral. The Prime Minister indicates he saw it too. The little man Attlee, the man of courage, the pacifist who joined in 1914 and refused to carry a revolver, who used nothing but a cane and won the D.S.O. doing it, after all the bitterness, there he was sitting on the steps leading up to St. Paul's honouring his great political adversary in death. We have got to catch something of that in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I rue the future of our country if this kind of thing goes on. This parliament is dead unless we resuscitate it—dead. I remember the great debates when I first came here. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) and I are among the few still here who came in at that time, and may I say we are looking forward to years of further service. We came in at that time and there were tremendous debates, strong, powerful, often violent, but we did not lose a sense of proportion. We dared not do this.

Mr. Speaker, this institution must not fail. Without it there is no freedom. We are here today not only as the custodians of the present and the inheritors of the past but, Mr. Speaker, we are as well the hope of this institution's future. Let us get to work on the many issues facing Canada today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Freedom comes first before economic welfare, and we fought the battle of freedom on the Spencer case, however much we disagreed. We have the terrible issue facing Canada today of the highest cost of living in our history. We have got to do something about it. We have an ever increasing adverse balance of payments situation. We have a Bank Act that has to be placed in effective shape if the economy of this nation is to be assured. We have to tackle redistribution. We don't want another election under the old system. We don't want the Prime Minister rushing out into the night saying, "I want a majority." We want none of that.

We want action and leadership from the Prime Minister of Canada. That is what we ask for, and that is the reason I point this fact out to him that, with all the respect I have for him and his contribution, it will always be a matter of wonder to me that, when mention was made of the Munsinger case, a large measure of applause came from him, not once but twice. I say to the Prime Minister that that to me was a revelation which from this moment on I will eradicate from my mind, but it is something that is indicative of a state of mind that is not in keeping with the traditional greatness of this chamber.

Mr. Speaker, let's go to work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will neither be as long nor as entertaining as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), but I think I shall be much more to the point.

I would like to tell hon. members of this house that I, and all the members on this side of the house as well as members on the other side of the house, are concerned, and very much concerned, about what is happening to parliament. However, what has occurred is that the hon. members opposite only today are beginning to wonder what has happened to parliament.

For the past several years there has been introduced into this House of Commons a procedure, a strategy which, in fact, is destroying parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: The hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) a little while ago spoke of trials by witch-hunt, accusations and insinuations. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what we have been fighting against. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition speaks of the resurrection of parliament. Before parliament can be resurrected we must rid ourselves of this type of insinuation and accusation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: This type of thing was particularly evident, I think, in the debate on the Spencer case. At that time there were provocations of all types which, in fact, brought out the word Monseignor, and it was not planned because, if I had planned it, I would have said Munsinger, not Monseignor. And, Mr. Speaker, I can give the house my word that this had not been a planned method of bringing out this case. I am not saying that I had not thought of it before or that I did not know of it before, but I had not intended to use it at that time.

There is also this point, Mr. Speaker. I have been accused of being a coward, afraid to get up, and of having chosen a moment when the Leader of the Opposition had gone out fishing, in order to make my statement. This is what the Leader of the Opposition stated I did. Well, Mr. Speaker, I had mentioned the Munsinger affair while the right hon. gentleman was sitting right in front of me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: And how am I to know—I am not that much interested in the activities of the right hon. gentleman—how am I to know he is going fishing? How was I to know where he was that Thursday morning? I had what is called a press conference to explain my withdrawal and my resumption with the government, in connection with the Spencer case. The press asked many questions of me—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the Prime Minister know you were going to do this?

Mr. Cardin: No, Mr. Speaker, the real point at issue is this: I have charged the Leader of the Opposition with having mishandled this case, and he has stated today that there were no aspects of security in this case. I want that to be remembered. I actually charged him with this, and I also had the courage to put my seat on those allegations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: And if the right hon. gentleman wishes to put his seat on the results of the judicial inquiry, then we will know who has courage, and who has not, in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: I have also been accused of being afraid to name members of the house. Believe me, I was not afraid and, as a matter of fact, one of the members has already been mentioned. But I do not believe that is the right thing to do. I do not believe it is right to bring out in public the names of people such as this, and if there are other names involved in the file—and believe me, I can tell the hon. member for Kamloops there is such a file—if there are other names then let these names be given to the judges in a judicial inquiry. That is the best, the proper and the fairest way in order to deal with this matter.

The Leader of the Opposition, in a great gesture—and it was quite funny—was asking, "Is it you—is it you"? The right hon. gentleman knows who it was.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Cardin: He has seen the file.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, and ask the hon. minister to mention the two or more cabinet ministers here and let us have no more of these innuendos.

Mr. Cardin: The right hon. gentleman has seen the file; he knows the Privy Councillors. All he has to do is tell us which ones of these Privy Councillors had nothing to do with it. This is what he should have done in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, had the Leader of the Opposition acted properly in the first place, then the Privy Councillors would not have been put in the predicament in which they are. The Leader of the Opposition is the one who is solely responsible for that position of the Privy Councillors.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Justice repeat the rest of the charges he gave to the press, and we will find out how honest he is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am just wondering whether hon. members would expect the Speaker, at this time, after the speeches which have been made and the very crucial or difficult moments we have lived through the last few days, and today, to remind hon. members that a number of motions were made on questions of privilege.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, before you rule, something was said a moment ago which I simply do not think can go by. I am astounded, dismayed and sickened to hear a person who occupies the position of Minister of Justice assert the proposition that all he has to do—and still suggest that his conduct is perfectly right—is to issue a general smear affecting some 26 people, and that then the way to clear it up is for the Leader of the Opposition to say who is not affected by that smear.

I never have heard such an appalling proposition, and I want to make clear my resentment and heartsickness in hearing a so-called Minister of Justice suggest such a thing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cardin: The hon. member for Kamloops says he is sick of it all. Is he saying now he is sick of having a judicial inquiry into something?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to hon. members that this is the type of exchange which led us to such serious difficulties last week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Last week I had before me a number of questions of privilege that were raised one after the other, all of them followed by motions which, after very serious consideration, were ruled out of order by the Chair. This afternoon hon. members raised questions of privilege which I consider very serious and on which I was not asked to rule because no motions were made.

The situation with which I think we are faced now is that there are these questions of privilege not followed by motions which were acceptable to the chair, and I think we should return to the normal business of the house.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, since the matter of privilege before the house is one I raised, and since the suggestion of the government is one which we already have said we would go along with—dispose of the matter by a judicial inquiry, provided the terms of reference are acceptable—and since the government has indicated such an order in council is in existence, I think, with the unanimous consent of the house, we should have that order in council before us now, so that we can determine whether or not the terms of reference are indeed acceptable on the basis of the question of privilege that was raised.

Mr. Speaker: There is no difficulty about this. If there is unanimous agreement of the house that this order in council be tabled, it will be tabled. However, I am wondering whether we are going in the right direction if we ask the house to suspend its consideration of business while the order in council is being studied. May I suggest to all hon. members, after what has been said this afternoon and after the concern, so genuine I am sure, which has been expressed about the importance of resuming the normal business of the nation, that we should, not having given the right hon. Prime Minister an opportunity to table this order in council, resume the consideration of the normal business of this house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would be the last to disagree with suggestions on your part, but on this matter the privileges of this parliament are at stake. The government, by executive order in council, has seen fit to prevent a discussion in the House of Commons of a privilege, which must be the privilege of parliament.

If we are going to give away some of these privileges for an order in council in respect of which we have no information, then we would be doing to parliament something which is retrograde and detrimental to the privileges and rights of members for this and future generations. I do not know whether it would be possible to go on with private members hour at five o'clock—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —but I do wish to say—and I do not want to do anything to hold up the house—that I do not intend to rely on an order in council which I have not seen and in respect of which I have no idea concerning its contents, the only information being that with regard to the judge who will preside thereover. This is an order in council that is designed to destroy individuals who have held the prerogative rights of parliament. This matter is far more serious now than it was, in view of the last remarks made by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can help in this respect. I am extremely sorry I did not have the order in council to read when I made my first statement. I can appreciate the desire of hon. members to have an opportunity to study it. It could be tabled on motions, and then perhaps we could go on with the ordinary business and resume, if desired, at eight o'clock, a discussion of this matter after members have had a chance to study the order in council.

Mr. Nielsen: Your Honour, since I made the suggestion, you might permit me to make an observation. When Your Honour ruled, when I raised the matter of privilege a few days ago affecting a certain member of this house, Your Honour in your ruling observed that the house and the house alone is master of its own privilege and must dispose of it. That suggested to me, sir, that neither the executive, Your Honour, nor any other individual could do this, but only the house. Therefore, I believe that until the question of privilege is disposed of by the house, it does not lie within the prerogative of the executive to do so.

I suggest, to clarify the matter at once, that the house could give unanimous consent; and then I am sure the hon. member for Kamloops and the Leader of the Opposition, and others, knowing what they expect should appear in the terms of reference, would not take but a moment to examine them. I would suggest that perhaps we should have these terms of reference before the house now and dispose of the matter.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an observation with regard to the procedural position before the house. As suggested by the hon. member for Yukon, it is correct that the house is master of its own privileges, and the traditional way in which privilege has been disposed of in this chamber is through a motion.

• (4:40 p.m.)

For various reasons it has been impossible for hon. members to formulate a motion which would dispose of this matter to the satisfaction of the house. We understand the reasons, and I agree that the traditional method is not appropriate here. The only point I am making is that while we admit the difficulty, it seems that at some point it will be necessary for the house to admit that we must go back to the ordinary business of the house, unless a motion is before us by which we can dispose of this matter.

I think the suggestion made by the Prime Minister, is a good one, that he table the order in council giving the house an opportunity to consider it while we are dealing with the ordinary business and, if necessary, resume the debate at eight o'clock this evening, at the point at which we now are. I agree to that suggestion, but I want to reserve my rights to point out, when we resume, that unless a motion is formulated by which the house can deal with this matter the Chair will be expected to direct us again to the business of the house.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, on this point I should like to state that I gathered from the remarks of the Prime Minister, whenever he has risen to discuss this question of privilege and the motions, which were found to be out of order, that we were trying to find a solution to deal with the problem. The Prime Minister has referred to the setting up of an inquiry, but it is my thought that when the Prime Minister spoke this afternoon it was his contention that the proper method of dealing with this was by his putting forward a motion to set up an inquiry, which would be debated in the same way as any motion the house might find acceptable on this question of privilege. It is my understanding that the Prime Minister is suggesting that we are all interested in the terms of this inquiry and the terms of reference as suggested by the leader of the N.D.P. and other parties. I have heard nothing so far from the Prime Minister which would indicate that he has changed his feelings, as indicated by his remarks during the last couple of days. The suggestion is that he put forward a motion which the house will debate so that we can settle the question of privilege, as well as the motion, in a way satisfactory to the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, perhaps to bring this to a conclusion let me say that all we want to do is preserve our rights on the question of privilege. I suggest that the government proceed with orders of the day and then, without actually moving to go into supply, we adjourn until eight o'clock, and then return to this matter of the privileges of parliament at exactly the point we have now reached. It was very clearly stated by the leader of the N.D.P. that he insisted, as I insist with some right, on the fullest examination of the terms of reference, because in accepting them we want to protect our most precious and priceless right, the ancient prerogatives and privileges of parliament.

Mr. McIlraith: For the sake of clarity, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Leader of the Opposition whether he envisages that when we come back to this matter of privilege at eight o'clock, if there is any further question of privilege then, after a study of the order in council, the matter of privilege would be regularized by some motion?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have not given consideration to that matter. The hon. member is an expert on the rules, but I personally do not know what the implications are, and the matter will have to be considered.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, would the house leader answer my question? Is it the intention of the government that the motion now envisaged will be moved in respect of the question of privilege, so that we can discuss it at once when we return at eight o'clock? If the house leader would answer this question it would make this matter much more simple so far as we are concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed by all hon. members that we will proceed with orders of the day, and that having completed the routine business the proceedings will be suspended until eight o'clock, with the understanding that we will proceed with private members business at six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: At eight o'clock we will resume this debate at the point we have now reached. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my understanding, of course, that there is agreement that the order in council has been tabled by the Prime Minister in order that hon. members may have an opportunity to study it?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENT TO ENSURE PASSAGE IN CANADIAN SHIPS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-142, to amend the Canada Shipping Act (Canadian ships in coasting trade).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, very briefly let me say that the purpose of the bill is to provide that no passengers or goods will be transported by ship from one place in Canada to another place in Canada except by a Canadian ship. The secondary effect of this will be an incentive for our own shipbuilding industry.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEE TO FORMULATE NEW MAPS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-143, to amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, since 158 members of all parties in the house have filed objections to the passage of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, the purpose of this bill is to suggest that the matter be referred to a special committee of the House of Commons which will lay out new electoral boundaries and submit to Your Honour a report on the readjustment of boundaries of every constituency included in each of the provinces.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It is the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SPORTS

PRIVILEGE—MR. ALKENBRACK—CONGRATULATIONS TO "BOBBY" HULL ON NEW SCORING RECORD

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege to point out—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am aware of the very important question of privilege the hon. member wishes to bring to the attention of the house, but I think he should first ask for leave to revert to motions. Knowing what the question is, I am sure hon. members will agree.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you, Your Honour. I should like to ask for unanimous consent to revert to motions, sir.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you, sir. I rise on a question of privilege regarding a matter of national interest.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Saturday night in Chicago that great Canadian "Bobby" Hull of the Chicago Black Hawks scored his 51st goal of the current hockey season. In doing so he has established a new all-time record for total goals scored by any player in the playing season of the National Hockey League and has set other records supplementary thereto.

Questions

Mr. Speaker, I know that you and all hon. members of this house congratulate Mr. Hull, who is a resident of Sophiasburgh township in Prince Edward County and a constituent of mine in Prince Edward-Lennox, and we join with Mrs. Hull and their family in recognition of this great occasion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member propose to introduce a motion?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that his question of privilege has been noted by the house and we all appreciate the interest that he takes in this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Now that we have reverted to motions we might hear from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand).

IMMIGRATION

REPORT ON CHANGES IN ACT AND REGULATIONS

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table two copies, one in English and one in French, of the second report of Mr. Joseph Sedgwick on immigration. This report deals particularly with appeal courts, ministerial discretion and with a few other subjects of general interest concerning immigration.

This report had been requested by the Prime Minister last year, I believe, and has just been published.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. minister have the leave of the house to table the said document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PENSIONS OF RETIRED C.N.R. EMPLOYEES

Question No. 11—Mr. Knowles:

1. How many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways are in receipt of pensions of less than $25.00 per month?

2. How many are in receipt of a pension of $25.00 per month?

3. How many are in receipt of pensions of (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month (b) $30.00 to $39.99 per month (c) $40.00 to $49.99 per month (d) $50.00 to $59.99 per month (e) $60.00 to $69.99 per month (f) $70.00 to $79.99 per month (g) $80.00 to $89.99 per month (h) $90.00 to $99.99 per month (i) $100.00 to $124.99 per month (j) $125.00 to $149.99 per month (k) $150.00 to $199.99 per month (l) $200.00 per month and over?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. 392.

2. 2,283.

3.

Amount of Pension	Number
$ 25.01 to $ 29.99	764
30.00 to 39.99	1,530
40.00 to 49.99	1,195
50.00 to 59.99	942
60.00 to 69.99	875
70.00 to 79.99	913
80.00 to 89.99	938
90.00 to 99.99	967
100.00 to 124.99	2,555
125.00 to 149.99	2,344
150.00 to 199.99	3,627
200.00 and over	4,808

In a number of cases the amounts of pensions paid by Canadian National Railways do not represent the total pensions payable to employees for railway service. Pensions payable by the C.N.R. to international employees (service in both Canada and the United States) relate to their service in Canada only. Such employees also receive annuities payable under the U.S. Railroad Retirement Act or the Social Security Act for service performed in the United States. For example, in the group receiving pensions of under $25 from the C.N.R., there are sixty-eight former international employees who also receive U.S. Railroad Retirement or Social Security annuities in respect of C.N.R. service rendered in the United States. The balance of this group consists of employees who elected early retirement (before age 65) with reduced basic ($25) pensions, and employees who had very short service and small contributions.

USE OF DIRECT TELEPHONE LINES FROM OTTAWA

Question No. 149—Mr. McCleave:

1. Does the government of Canada maintain a direct telephone line from Ottawa to Toronto and, if so, are members of Parliament permitted to use this telephone line free of charge?

2. Does the government of Canada maintain a direct telephone line from Ottawa to Montreal and, if so, are members of Parliament permitted to use this telephone line free of charge?

3. Does the government of Canada maintain direct telephone lines to other cities of Canada and, if so, which cities, and are members of Parliament permitted to use such lines free of charge?

4. If not, are there plans to give comparable advantages to members of Parliament enjoyed by Toronto area members of Parliament?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1, 2 & 3. The government of Canada has arrangements entered into last year between the Department of Transport on behalf of the government as a whole and the Trans-Canada Telephone System, under which, in return for an over-all monthly payment apportioned among departments, special long distance telephone service is provided to all departments and agencies to all points in Canada available on the direct distance dialing system through leased circuits, without individual call charges being assessed.

The Speaker read and laid before the House on January 31st extracts from the minutes of a meeting of the Commissioners of Internal Economy held on January 25, 1966, as follows: (a) That this direct long distance telephone service will be available to all members of the House of Commons on a 24 hour basis for outgoing calls originating in Ottawa to points which are served by the direct distance dialing system, when such calls are made through the special operator over the leased circuits; (b) That, with a view to treating all members equitably, the members of the House of Commons will hereafter be reimbursed for charges in connection with their telephone calls originating in Ottawa to places in their own constituencies which are not available on the direct distance dialing system.

4. Members of Parliament from all constituencies are placed at the same advantage as regards expenses of telephone calls to their constituencies. As regards the convenience of placing calls, this depends on the extent of automation of the telephone networks involved in the connection.

*STAFF INCREASES FOLLOWING DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION

Question No. 387—Mr. Fulton:

With respect to the program envisaged in the reorganization of the cabinet, the transfers of duties between ministers and departments, and the creation of new departments, all as effected and/or contemplated by the order in council in that regard passed on December 22, 1965 (a) was any estimate made of the increased numbers of positions in the public service of Canada which would be created to implement the said program and, if so, what was the total number (b) what was the estimate of the total annual cost of filling such positions (c) what is the number of such additional positions for each new or reorganized department (d) what is the estimate of the cost of such new positions for each such new or reorganized department?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question 387 is as follows:

The transfers and rearrangement of duties and functions made by orders in council passed on December 22, 1965, involved only existing duties and existing staff. As a result of the transfers, there are likely to be rearrangements of functions among personnel in the departments affected but the net effect of these adjustments cannot yet be foreseen. The same is true of future adjustments of establishments which may result from the future development of policies as a consequence of the reorganization. The answer to part (a) of the question is therefore no, and (b) is not applicable. The answers to (c) and (d) will not be available until new establishments have been devised and approved for the departments concerned.

CATEGORIES OF POOR PERSONS

Question No. 437—Mr. Caouette:

1. What distinction does the government make between a poor person, a destitute person, and an indigent person?

2. In what income categories does the government place a poor person, a destitute person, an indigent person, and a well to do person, respectively?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. The government does not make any official definitions distinguishing between persons who are poor, destitute or indigent.

2. The government does not assign income categories to degrees of poverty since many factors, in addition to income, determine whether a person is considered to be poor.

TRANSFER OF TELEVISION CHANNEL 3, BARRIE TO TORONTO

Question No. 467—Mr. Rynard:

Does the application made for moving channel 3 from Barrie to the Toronto area include an application for an increase in output power for the station if moved?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The application by Ralph Snelgrove Television Limited for authority to establish a television broadcasting station at Toronto on Channel 3 is predicated on an effective radiated power of 78,600 watts (video), 39,300 watts (audio). The present effective radiated power of Station CKVR-TV, Barrie is 100,000 watts (video), 50,000 watts (audio).

APPLICATION FOR TELEVISION CHANNEL 5

Question No. 469—Mr. Rynard:

RESTORATION OF LOUISBURG FORTRESS

Question No. 571—Mr. Prittie:

1. Was the chief architect of historical monuments from France invited to Ottawa recently to discuss the restoration of the fortress of Louisburg?

2. If so, did the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources issue a press release on the occasion of the visit of the French architect?

3. What were the names of all archaeologists employed during 1965 in connection with the restoration of Louisburg?

4. Which of these archaeologists are no longer employed by the department?

5. In each case why was the employment terminated?

6. Of those archaeologists employed at Louisburg in 1965, and still on the staff of the department, which ones have been transferred to other duties?

7. Were the ovens in the basement of the chateau at Louisburg destroyed and, if so, on whose orders?

8. Have the UNESCO recommendations concerning the safeguarding of the beauty and characteristics of historical landscapes and sites been drawn to the attention of the persons carrying out the restoration?

9. What precautions are now being taken to ensure that no parts of the original structure will be destroyed in the course of restoration?

10. Are there description placards in both French and English on all artifacts displaced in the museum?

Questions

11. How many historians capable of writing brochures and historical reports in French will be employed at the Louisburg site during 1966?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Mr. Maurice Berry, Architect en chef des monuments historiques from Paris is retained under contract as the general architectural consultant of the Louisburg Restoration Project. In this capacity he was in Ottawa recently to discuss problems relating to the reconstruction of the Chateau St. Louis.

2. No.

3. E. McM. Larrabee, J. D. Swannack, Jr., B. W. Fry, I. C. Walker, J. O. Vogel, J. P. Marwitt, R. B. Lane.

4. E. McM. Larrabee.

5. The initial phase of the project's archaeological investigations called for an overall excavation of the Citadel complex. To coordinate the efforts of the professionals employed at this task, a senior archaeologist was attached to the project. The second phase of the archaeological work (which has now begun), entails excavations of specific areas best handled by small groups each under the direction of an archaeologist whose responsibility will include the elaboration of a final report relating to the specific area excavated. Since the present nature of archaeological effort does not require a co-ordinating senior archaeologist, the co-ordination now exercised is through the park superintendent, the need for the services covered by the contract with Mr. Larrabee no longer exists. His contract was therefore not renewed.

6. Mr. J. D. Swannack Jr. and Mr. I. C. Walker recently won promotional competitions and will be employed by the Canadian Historic Sites Division in Ottawa.

7. Research indicates that the so-called ovens were never fully functional and were abandoned by the French prior to the period to which the Chateau is being restored. While a comprehensive record was made of those remains of the structures deemed original, officers responsible for the management of the project decided that retaining them in the restored Chateau would not contribute to the interpretation of the site and would lead to substantial unnecessary expense.

8. The Natural and Historic Resources Branch is very much aware of these UNESCO recommendations and subscribes to them in the context of Canadian requirements.

[Mr. Prittie.]

9. The restoration is predicated on the principle that original parts of the structure will be retained and integrated into the reconstruction wherever such is consistent with public safety and long term conservation. This principle has been basic to the project since its inception and as a result precautionary measures, such as mortar stability tests and controlled exploration of key areas, are an integral part of the reconstruction procedure. The poor quality of the original mortar, centuries of frost action, and the British demolition in 1760 by gun powder, are factors which prevent retention in several instances.

10. A large number of the description placards are in both official languages but a shortage of competent staff to ensure translations has slowed down the process.

11. While the total complement of historians to be employed at the Louisburg site is dependent on recruitment now underway, the goal is to have a 50 per cent French language capability.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. No. Air Canada provides a daily service between Ottawa and Rouyn, using Viscount Aircraft. Service between Ottawa and North Bay is via Toronto.

2. N/A.

FREE COPIES OF "HANSARD"

Question No. 614—Mr. Caouette:

Does the government intend to grant the request of every citizen who wishes to receive regularly a free copy (one per family) of the official report of the House of Commons Hansard, and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, when will the government do so?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Under existing government regulations, authorized by TB 477983, dated April 6, 1955, and amended by TB 477983-1, dated May 6, 1955, no provision is made for the free distribution of government publications, including Hansard, to every Canadian family. These regulations do specify, however, that such material is provided free to a variety of institutions across the country, including all public libraries at which they are available to the general public.

Furthermore, pursuant to an Order of the House of Commons, dated May 28, 1948, each Member of Parliament may have as many as 16 copies of Hansard sent free of charge to residents of his constituency.

Above this free distribution, any citizen who so desires may subscribe to Hansard at an annual cost of $3.

The government is not at the present time giving consideration to possible changes in these regulations. Amendments such as suggested by the hon. member for Villeneuve could involve an additional cost to the public treasury of as much as $10 million per year.

AIR CANADA—MEMBERSHIP IN INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION

Question No. 730—Mr. Caouette:

Is Air Canada a member of the International Air Transport Association and, if so, (a) what is the amount of the membership paid to this organization (b) how is that amount arrived at (c) how many representatives does Air Canada have in this organization and how many of them are French-speaking Canadians and how many are English-speaking Canadians (d) what are their respective functions and remuneration on the various committees or boards of this organization (e) what is the role played by Air Canada in this organization (f) what is the total cost to Air Canada of its participation in this organization (g) has Air Canada exerted any pressure with a view to giving a French name to this organization (h) what steps does Air Canada intend to take with a view to giving a French name to this organization?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Yes, Air Canada is a member of the International Air Transport Association. (a) For the year 1965 Air Canada paid $70,370 in dues; (b) Membership dues are calculated on the basis of a formula whereby the total budget of the International Air Transport Association is prorated among its members in proportion to their international operations, measured in terms of tonne-kilometres.

(c) No permanent representation is involved but special meetings are held from time to time. IATA has a number of specialized committees such as legal, technical, etc., the make up of which is reviewed annually. Serving on these committees, Air Canada has at this moment six people, all of whom speak English and one of whom speaks French. In addition designated personnel of Air Canada represent the company's interests at traffic conferences, and on various ad hoc committees.

(d) The function of personnel of Air Canada designated to one of the committees is to serve, as a committee-man, at the meetings of that committee, usually one per year; no remuneration is paid to these personnel with respect to their service on an IATA committee.

(e) The same as that of any other of the 99 member air carriers, i.e. to serve on functional committees, and convey its views to traffic conferences.

(f) The total cost to the company with respect to participation in IATA is $70,370 in membership dues, plus the travelling expenses of its personnel attending committee meetings and traffic conferences.

(g) and (h) The organization represents many countries and many languages and not just English or French although it has official names in French and Spanish as well as English.

C.M.H.C. LOANS FOR N.H.A. MORTGAGE BLOCKS

Question No. 731—Mr. Coates:

1. Has C.M.H.C. within the last year made any change in the regulations so as to provide funds for financing blocks of N.H.A. mortgages and, if so, when?

2. Have any loans been made on the basis of such regulations and to whom?

3. Were any of such funds loaned to the York Trust Company and, if so, how much and when?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): 1, 2, and 3. No changes in the regulations were made by CMHC within the last year so as to provide funds for financing blocks of NHA mortgages. However, Section 11 of the National Housing Act permits CMHC to make loans to the holders of insured NHA mortgages taken in respect of loans made for housing. The purpose of this section of the Act is to encourage the banks, insurance companies, trust companies and other financial institutions to make NHA mortgage loans and to invest in existing mortgages, and to promote the development of a secondary market for NHA mortgages. To this end, those lending institutions and other dealers in mortgages which have made or purchased NHA mortgage loans are able to pledge them at any time with CMHC as security for short-term loans.

It would seriously inhibit the achievement of these purposes if any financial institution making use of the borrowing facilities provided in the Act had to expect that such information would be made public. Consequently, it is considered not to be in the public interest to provide information concerning any institution which may have borrowed under this legislation.

There can be no objection, of course, to making available information concerning the total amount of loans made under Section 11. During the year 1965 and up to the end of February, 1966, loans totalling $29.95 million have been made; repayments amount to $11.5 million, so that the total loan amount outstanding at February 28, 1966, was $18.45 million.

CHURCHILL, MAN.—DIVERSIONARY CHARGE ON GRAIN

Question No. 835—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Is a diversionary charge made on all grain shipped through the port of Churchill?

2. If so (a) what is the reason for and amount of the charge (b) what has been the total amount of this charge each year since 1950?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. Under the terms of a handling agreement negotiated annually with all elevator companies a diversion charge is paid by the Canadian Wheat Board on wheat shipped by elevator companies from their country elevators directly to the Port of Churchill for export.

2. (a) The diversion charge paid by the Canadian Wheat Board since 1950 has been 1½ cents per bushel. A diversion charge is a charge assessed by an elevator company when grain shipped from one of its country elevators is diverted from that company's terminal elevator to another destination. Elevator companies consider that their country and terminal elevators operate as an entity, and terminal revenues are an important factor in determining the basis upon which country elevators can be operated. Therefore, it has been a long-established trade practice that when a company loses terminal handling on grain as a result of the diversion of a country elevator shipment to a destination other than the company's terminal, a diversion charge is assessed to compensate for the loss of terminal earnings. (b) The total amount of diversion charges paidby the Canadian Wheat Board in respect of grain shipped in each navigation season through Churchill is as follows:

Churchill Shipping Seasons	Diversion Charge on Country Shipments Direct to Churchill
1950	$101,615.48
1951	132,312.53
1952	129,560.76

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare as minister for Nova Scotia. I would ask him whether an alternative date has been set for a future meeting with the parties concerned in respect of the Nova Scotia coal industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have ruled before, and I should like to reaffirm the ruling, that ministers must be asked questions in their capacity as ministers of the Crown. They cannot be asked questions as ministers for a province or an area. I should like to reiterate that ruling at this time, which is based on precedent.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the precedent has already been established on any number of occasions, and most recently during the consideration of the estimates of the department of mines, when the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot hear an argument on this point. I have ruled on this matter and I can assure the hon. gentleman that there is no doubt in my mind that there is no way the business of the house can be conducted during the question period if questions can be asked of a minister because he is the minister representing Prince Edward Island, northern Ontario or eastern Ontario. It would lead to a very difficult situation. I can understand the position of the hon. gentleman, but during the question period at this time we cannot ask questions on this basis. The question the hon. member now has in mind should be asked of the minister who is responsible for the administration of that department.

AIR TRANSPORT

SYDNEY, N.S., CONTRACT FOR AIR TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Then, Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I ask whether he is responsible for this press release:

Cambrian Construction Limited, Montreal, has been awarded the contract to build a Department of Transport air terminal at Sydney, Nova Scotia, at a cost of $1,270,000—

I would ask, what has that to do with his department—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister has issued a press release—oh, I see it is a press release of the Department of Transport, so it is better directed to the Minister of Transport.

An hon. Member: That is the whole point.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would put the Minister of Transport in the same position because I thought the Department of Public Works was responsible for these projects.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS FOR RETIRED EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that an answer has been given today to question No. 11 on the order paper concerning pensions of C.N.R. employees, can the minister say whether the government is taking any steps to find ways and means to increase the pensions of retired C.N.R. employees?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. gentleman knows that is a matter which is within the scope of the management of the Canadian National Railways. It is the kind of question which, I feel, should be directed to the management when the committee undertakes the annual review of railway affairs.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question? I wonder if the minister is aware of the fact that the Prime Minister has been answering letters from retired C.N.R. employees indicating that this matter would be referred to the Minister of Transport for further consideration? Does he not give the consideration that the Prime Minister requests him to give?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am well aware of that and the Minister of Transport, in turn, refers them to the Canadian National.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE VISIT OF CARDINAL WYSZYNSKI OF POLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it his intention to make representations to the Polish government so that they permit Cardinal Wyszynski to visit Canada next May?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member should put his question on the order paper.

[English]

NATO—REFERENCE TO POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF FRANCE—REQUEST FOR BILATERAL MILITARY AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, although it directly concerns the Secretary of State for External Affairs as well. It is a follow-up question and relates to NATO. Since press releases continue to appear indicating that France may withdraw from NATO, does the Prime Minister have some word for this house with regard to just what is happening to NATO in so far as the relationship with France is concerned?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We have received a communication from the French government on this matter. This communication is being studied by the Canadian government as well as by the other members of NATO who have received similar communications. We are concerting our consultations with the other members of NATO before we consider any further action. The matter is being considered by the NATO council as well. Perhaps there will be something more to say about it in a day or two.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a related question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and a statement which he is reported to have made on Friday or Saturday night to the effect that Canada is seeking closer commercial and cultural relations with France. Does this statement presage a closer bilateral military alliance with France?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There is no connection, Mr. Speaker, between our desire to pursue a policy of closer cultural relations with France and other countries and any particular problem that we may have as a result of the position taken by the government of France regarding NATO arrangements.

Mr. Lambert: Is it not a fact that the French government has indicated to Canada, either formally or informally, its desire for bilateral military agreement to replace the present general NATO arrangement?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no doubt about the position of Canada. We believe in collective security. We believe in the purposes and the objectives of the integrated structure of NATO. We have received a communication, as the Prime Minister has said, from the President of the French Republic. This communication has been addressed, either in the form of a letter or in the form of a note, to Canada and the other 13 NATO countries. We are in the process now of examining the note addressed to Canada. We are also consulting with the other countries on the NATO Council on this situation as it affects both them and us. We are studying the matter here, in Ottawa. When we are in a position to give a further report, it will of course be given to the house as early as possible.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to address a supplementary question either to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or to the Minister of National Defence, but it arises out of the same subject. Will the government use the opportunity provided by the French announcement of its decision to make a radical change in France's role in NATO, to reconsider and renegotiate the Canadian military contribution to NATO?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): As I indicated during the debate on the estimates, the whole question of commitments for the next period is under consideration, and it will have to be considered in the light of developments now taking place.

Mr. Thompson: I have a further supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of reports that the 14 members of NATO other than France are planning to declare their own faith in NATO, what, if anything, is Canada doing about that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Consideration is being given by the other member countries in NATO to confirming our faith in the collective security aspects of NATO.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Surely, the minister is in a position to say whether Canada is giving any consideration to a bilateral agreement with France in connection with military affairs? I would think the answer would be an unequivocal no. I am surprised the minister is not more definite.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend had before him the information I have before me, I am sure his reply would be the same as mine.

GRAIN

OATS AND BARLEY—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is he now in a position to announce the final payments for oats and barley?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I was informed, just before coming into the house, that the submissions to council approving the final payments have now arrived from Winnipeg. I expect they will be acted upon immediately and the Wheat Board will be making its announcement in the ordinary way.

Mr. Nasserden: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance? May I take it he will be making a complementary statement here in the house with regard to these final payments?

Mr. Sharp: I intend to follow the same practice as I followed in connection with wheat. I shall ask permission to table the order in council and the Wheat Board announcement the day the announcement is made, so that members will know what the Wheat Board has announced.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

REQUEST FOR NOTICE TO AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY RESPECTING INVESTIGATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Before I put my question to the Minister of Industry, I hope the house will allow me briefly to thank the Prime Minister for the kind words he directed to me in the house last week relating to automobile safety. I can only say that if we have made a little bit of progress in this regard it results from the fact the government has a real appreciation of the problem, and I have received at all times nothing less than sincere co-operation from the Minister of Industry, who is treating this subject in a bipartisan way. I should like to thank the Prime Minister for his kind remarks.

My question for the Minister of Industry is the following: In view of the fact senior spokesmen for General Motors a few days ago in the United States admitted putting investigators on the trail of one Ralph Nader, an outstanding spokesman for automobile safety, and in view of Mr. Nader's allegations that these investigators named by the industry harassed his private life, will the minister serve notice on the industry in Canada of an expression of the view of the government and this house, that such behaviour on the part of the industry in this nation will not be tolerated?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I think the house would agree that it would be highly inappropriate for this house, or indeed Canada, to comment on matters which are now I understand the subject of investigation by the United States Congress.

TELEVISION

PICTOU COUNTY, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ALTERNATIVE CHANNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has he received two telegrams containing 3,500 names of the residents of the County of Pictou, requesting that the regulations for alternative television be reviewed so that they can obtain C.T.V. coverage from Halifax? If so, can he give us any idea when the government will announce policy in this regard, after studying the Fowler Commission report?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not any doubt that I have received the telegram. I am not sure I have seen it, but, as the hon. gentleman knows, I do know about this situation. Perhaps it would be more appropriate for the hon. lady, the Secretary of State, to answer the question; but since the question was hypothetical, in perspective, I think the only answer I can give is that the government will make its announcement as soon as it has the opportunity to give the fullest consideration to the Fowler report, which we are seeking to do when we are not in this place.

Mr. MacEwan: A supplementary question. I think the minister said that he was not sure whether he had received the telegram. I understand that the C.P.R. telegram was 50 feet in length, so it must be somewhere in his office.

Mr. Pickersgill: It may be in the anteroom, because I am short of space.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—SAFETY OF HIGH ARROW DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in addressing a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs were assured that the High Arrow dam was a completely safe structure, would the minister inform the house why, in the report of the Columbia treaty permanent engineering board, which includes representatives of Canada and the United States, it is stated that the board does not accept direct or implied responsibility for the safety of the structures being built according to the Columbia River Treaty?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister is anxious to answer it; it is quite an important question.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SECOND PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. My question is based on the fact that the 90-day survey period agreed on between Atomic Energy of Canada and General Electric with a view to establishing a second heavy water plant has now elapsed. Can the minister inform the house where this plant will be located and when construction will commence?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the last time I inquired negotiations were still going on. I will inquire again today and will give an answer tomorrow.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PAY INCREASES FOR AIR FORCE PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I direct this question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the rather numerous reports which are current about a special pay increase for pilots in the air sector of the defence forces, is the minister in a position to advise the house whether this is a fact and, if so, when he expects to make the announcement? I can assure the minister that this matter is causing a great deal of controversy and unrest in the forces.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this question has been under study for some time. It is a matter of government policy and will be announced in the usual way.

Mr. Lambert: A supplementary question. In that case, will the minister explain to the house why certain commanding officers have held "O" groups and announced this to the personnel of their squadrons?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot explain that.

FINANCE

GUIDE LINES INSTRUCTIONS TO U.S. SUBSIDIARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Finance?

Did the minister or the government issue counter-guide lines to Canadian subsidiaries of American firms, and does the minister plan to make them known to the house soon?

[Mr. Southam.]

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I fully understand what the hon. member is asking. The whole question of policy with respect to the United States guide lines and their effects upon Canada and upon the sort of policies that Canadian subsidiaries ought to follow in these circumstances is being studied quite urgently by the government today. As the house knows, the United States made it quite clear that they do not expect Canadian subsidiaries to act as other than good citizens of Canada, and that will be the purpose of any instructions or guide lines which we ourselves would issue.

AIR TRANSPORT

REPORTED REDUCTION IN INTERCITY SERVICE IN WEST

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I ask this question because of the interest in it of people in Prince Albert, Saskatoon, Regina and so on. It is a question to which reference has already been made and is in connection with the termination of the air service between these various points in Saskatchewan and others.

Is consideration being given to having Air Canada provide this service? This area has had private air service and passenger air service over the years, so I am wondering what the minister has to say in this connection. The situation will be very serious if this service is removed.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I quite agree that this is a very serious problem. The right hon. gentleman probably knows that one route from Yorkton to Saskatoon has I think, ceased to operate, because there was virtually no traffic on it.

With regard to all the other routes now being flown by TransAir, until there has been a public hearing the Air Transport Board has declined to accept their view that they should terminate the service. As a result of that public hearing the board might or might not approve their application. I may say that the government is also giving the most urgent consideration possible to the problem, not only of the regional carrier on the prairies but of the regional carriers in Canada, because all of them have problems that are not dissimilar from that of TransAir. The suggestion of the right hon. gentleman will certainly be taken into account in that consideration.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the house where and when this public hearing will take place?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would have to inquire of the Air Transport Board before I can do that. I will be glad to do that unless the hon. gentleman would prefer to do it himself.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. I directed a question to him on February 18 which he said he would like to take as notice. My question asked the Prime Minister whether the government had given any further consideration to the possibility of extending or re-establishing the roads to resources program. I am wondering whether he could now answer the question.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I myself have become very interested in this. A few days ago I received a report on the present state of the roads to resources program, and I will be submitting recommendations to cabinet very soon.

SHIPPING

DELAY IN ISSUING PERMITS TO U.S.S.R. VESSELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister seen press reports alleging that permits for U.S.S.R. vessels passing through the St. Lawrence Seaway have been subjected to unnecessary delay? I am wondering whether Canada has authorized the movement of these ships through this international waterway in the usual manner?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there has been any unnecessary delay. The applications are being considered and I hope there will be a decision made very soon.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON BILINGUALISM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a two-part question to the Prime Minister on the subject of bilingualism in the public service. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could let the house know approximately when he will be making his statement on the subject.

The second part of my question is: Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether the interdepartmental committee studying this subject has received a report from the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism on the subject of bilingualism in the public service?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had expected to meet last Friday with my colleagues and representatives of the civil service organizations, at which meeting we were going to discuss some points arising out of the interdepartmental report, as well as our own views on this matter. Unfortunately, because of developments in the house we had to postpone that meeting, but we expect to have it very shortly. After that meeting I expect to be in a position to make a fairly complete statement to the house on this very important matter.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RE-ENLISTMENT BONUS FOR FORMER PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence or the Associate Minister. Would either minister, or both, consider requests by former servicemen who are now thinking of returning to the services that the re-enlistment bonus should apply to them, having in mind that they have already undergone considerable basic training and the taxpayers would have the advantage of such a saving?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): This question was raised at the time the bonus was announced, Mr. Speaker. These things were not included in the proposal. The question is being reconsidered and studied. I am afraid I cannot at this time give my hon. friend any indication of what the outcome would be.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, if he could possibly give the house any date as to when he is going to present his budget to the house?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, I regret I cannot give that date today, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

HALIFAX DOCKYARD—JOB EVALUATION WITHOUT CONSULTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on two occasions I have asked the Associate Minister of National Defence certain questions with regard to Halifax dock workers. May I ask him whether he now has the answers or, if he has not, whether perhaps the Minister of National Revenue has the answers.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago a number of questions were directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence as a result of telegrams received from the Halifax Dockyard Trades and Labour Council, telegrams expressing concern about a job evaluation program that was being instituted without consultation with representatives of the employees concerned.

In May, 1964, the preparatory committee on collective bargaining made recommendations to cabinet calling for major reforms in the systems of classification and pay applying to civil servants and prevailing rate employees. The recommendations urged that steps be taken to develop and introduce a new and improved system based on a relatively simple structure of occupational categories and groups, a system that might be expected to provide a suitable framework for the negotiation of pay rates in the contemplated collective bargaining regime.

The recommendations were approved in principle and referred to the Civil Service Commission, which was asked to undertake the very large and important task of implementation. In October, 1964, the Commission established for this purpose a new unit known as the bureau of classification revision.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Since that time, the bureau, with the cooperation and assistance of all departments, has made a good deal of progress. Most of the required work on the administrative and administrative support categories has been completed. Planning work on the remaining categories, including the operational category to which dockyard employees will be assigned, is under way. It is expected that the whole program will be completed during 1967.

The major employee organizations in the Public Service have been consulted at every step in the development of this program. I am informed that, as soon as its tentative plans for the operational category have been formulated, the bureau intends to consult as well with organizations whose interests are limited to specific occupational groups in this category. These organizations will include the Dockyard Trades and Labour Councils in both Halifax and Esquimalt.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the house, and through us the workers involved, that the plans will not be implemented until the bodies concerned have been consulted, as well as informed of the result?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that the bodies concerned would be consulted at the appropriate stage.

[Later:]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence and ask him if he would consider, upon request from the Dockyard Trades and Labour Council, the facility of a meeting with him on the very urgent and important question being considered in Halifax.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): That I shall, sir.

TRADE

INCREASE IN COMMODITY EXPORTS TO OVERCOME TRADE DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On March 9, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) the minister indicated that in his discussions with the United States authorities, he was aware of Canada's payments deficit vis-à-vis the United States. The minister stated that Canada's sales last year increased by 13 per cent, to a point over the $5 billion mark. In view of Canada's imports reaching 17.1—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has been very lenient this afternoon, but my leniency cannot extend to the point of allowing this question.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, might I finish the question and ask the minister what positive steps he had suggested at that meeting.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED ACTION TO CONTROL ORGANIZED CRIME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice, which would also perhaps concern the Solicitor General.

Has the attention of the minister been called to what has been described as a three stage national crack-down on organized crime in the United States, in which the President of that country outlined detailed proposals for a national strategy against organized crime, welding together the efforts of local, state and federal governments—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. gentleman is making a statement. He is not asking a question.

Mr. Brewin: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I will come to the question, by putting the basis for the question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that questions should not be preceded by speeches, however short.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I will come to the question. Will the Minister of Justice study the President's proposals and adapt what is relevant to a similar war on organized crime and its causes in Canada?

LABOUR RELATIONS

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TRUCKING STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask the minister if he can furnish the house with any information in relation to the truckers strike in the province of Ontario and the participation of this department, because I have learned of a very serious situation which may develop later on this fall in regard to rail users.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, that is a double barreled question. Perhaps it would be easier to deal with the second part first. The hon. member and the house will be glad to know that I have issued an order directing that a board of conciliation be set up to deal with the requests of the railway unions. A communication to that effect went off several days ago to the companies and to the unions concerned.

With regard to the first part of the question, I am happy to say that the reports that I received recently are a little more optimistic, and that the parties have again resumed negotiations in the truckers strike.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON DEBATING PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the government house leader. Has the government yet reached a decision as to the manner in which the issue of capital punishment will be placed before the House of Commons, so as to ensure that a decision will be reached? If so, what is the decision, and when does the government intend to start the debate?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to the first part of the question must be no, in its final form. In view of the breakdown of the business in the house for some days, I should like to withhold answering the second part of the question until tomorrow.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INQUIRY CONCERNING ISSUE OF GOLD MINT SETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Because of a number of requests, would the Minister of Finance please advise the house and the country when and where one can obtain the $20 gold mint sets as proposed by the former minister of finance in honour of our one hundredth birthday.

Television Transmission Facilities

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to make inquiries and to inform the house or the hon. member.

BROADCASTING

SPONSORSHIP OF PROGRAMS BY FRENCH GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I shall try the second time. I wish to ask the Secretary of State a question of which I gave her verbal notice five minutes ago. Would the minister inform the house if she considers it proper that the Government of France through its ownership of Air France should sponsor broadcasts to privately owned radio stations concerning the happenings in parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the question itself is not proper. It is not properly put or asked of the minister at this time.

May I suggest to hon. members as most questions have been answered this afternoon, we might move to private members business.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being 5.30 p.m. the house will now proceed with the consideration of private members business listed on the order paper, namely notices of motions. It is my understanding of course that this will be an hour period, and that the house would adjourn, or suspend its sitting at 6.30 after private members business has been discussed for one hour.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: To resume sitting at eight o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: To resume at eight o'clock.

• (5:30 p.m.)

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR TRANSMISSION IN NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should take steps to carry out its duty to provide television coverage by immediately establishing transmission facilities in northwestern Saskatchewan, including Buffalo Narrows, Uranium City and on to Fort Smith, Hay River and Yellowknife.

[Mr. Webb.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This motion was called for the first time on March 7, 1966.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I present this motion to the house at this time. The vast areas of northern Saskatchewan and the whole of the Northwest Territories have been neglected for years, so far as television service has been concerned, and no doubt the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) will also wish to speak on this motion.

It is well known that the C.B.C. was established to provide a national service, but it has not done so. We are taking far too long to obtain that national service, and a large proportion of our population has no television service whatsoever.

All Canadians, and the companies they work for, pay taxes which help finance the C.B.C. When one looks at the wealth that comes out of our northern mining areas, including the wealth from the fishing and farming sectors, he can certainly see a great injustice. Some Canadians have no T.V. service at all. The C.B.C. cannot claim to be national; it can only claim to be regional, until the majority of Canadians are given T.V. service.

Some 60 per cent of the Canadian people have access to at least two T.V. signals, and the government is giving the C.B.C. additional funds to provide colour service for areas which already have a choice of T.V. signals. Many people who live all along our southern border receive additional T.V. service from the United States. Yet, as I say, many Canadians have no service. The priority must be changed.

The recent Fowler Commission report gave top priority to the extension of C.B.C. television service in northern and remote regions of the country. Also recently, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) said he feels T.V. service to northern Canada is crucial if we are to attract people and investment into our northern regions. Television service is also necessary to help keep families in northern Canada as it relieves social isolation and puts them in touch with the rest of the country.

Although these northern regions are remote and sparsely settled, they have old established communities and have contributed much to the settlement and development of Canada. I might mention many of these areas were settled long before the turn of the century, and I think it is high time we gave consideration to that part of the Fowler report which says people in the north should have television service.

At page 189, under the heading "The Northern Service" the Fowler Commission report states:

Reference is often made to "the frozen north" or "the silent north" but, from our experience in relation to broadcasting, it would be equally apt to speak of "the forgotten north." Out of fifty-five briefs submitted to the committee, not one made any mention of the northern regions of Canada and their broadcasting needs. Broadcasting can do much to compensate for the sense of isolation that besets Canadians who serve their country in these vast and remote regions, and can contribute substantially to the development of the north in this way, as well as by fostering wider knowledge and interest among audiences at large. The C.B.C. officials in charge of the northern service are acutely aware of the importance of broadcasting for those who live in the north, and their views are supported by several directors of the corporation who made personal inspection tours in 1963 and 1964.

Until 1958, the only service available in the north was provided by the armed forces and the Department of Transport, with program assistance from the C.B.C. In fact, the oldest continuous program on C.B.C. radio is "Northern Messenger," which began in 1932 and broadcasts, each week throughout the winter, personal messages from family and friends to men and women isolated in the Arctic regions. A C.B.C. plan for radio service to the north, which was commended by the Royal Commission on Broadcasting in 1957, was put into effect in 1958.

At page 194, under the heading "Financial Provision" it is stated:

It is obviously more expensive, per capita, to provide broadcast service to the sparsely settled north than to the much more densely populated areas of southern Canada. The same applies to all other northern services: for example, the annual expenditure for each pupil educated in the Northwest Territories is now about $700, and Eskimo health services cost almost $300 a head each year. The annual cost of broadcasting to the north amounts to only $16 a head for an audience to whom the importance of this service is pervasive. For a total operating cost of $1.2 million in 1964-65, the northern service is making an excellent contribution to the development of the Canadian north and the well-being of its residents, which should be strengthened and fortified in the future.

The additional operating cost arising from our recommendations is estimated at $500,000 a year, and the annual budget for the northern service should therefore be increased to at least $1.7 million as soon as possible.

I should now like to refer to a question that was placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Ormiston) and was answered recently by the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh). The question read:

What is the estimated cost to the C.B.C. of putting colour production and transmission facilities in place to provide for limited network programming and for full network programming (English network), assuming the 1965 proportions of network programs originating from Toronto and from regional centres are maintained?

I should like to read the answer in order to give some idea of what we are spending on this, though leaving people in the north without any service whatsoever. The answer reads:

A. The estimated capital cost of C.B.C. colour production and transmission facilities to provide limited network colour programming in both languages is expected to be $15,000,000 by the beginning of 1967.

• (5:40 p.m.)

B. The estimated share of capital cost for full colour programming (English network only) is of the order of $30 million. This is a planning figure only extended to 1971-72. It is necessarily a somewhat arbitrary estimate because most capital colour facilities will be shared by C.B.C.'s national, regional and local program services and by English and French services at some locations. The C.B.C. has not been authorized to enter colour to the foregoing extent but colour requirements have necessarily been estimated in all plans for consolidation and replacement of equipment. The English network's share of these proposals and of the $15 million in A is included in the estimate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not have anything particularly against colour television, but I do think we would be greatly amiss were we to provide colour television to the 60 per cent of the population in that part of Canada which already has one to two or, as I said, more signals already available at the turn of a switch, when we think of this vast area which is fairly well populated, which has produced great wealth and where to a large extent these people are left without any effort being made whatever to bring television into these areas.

If we were to take a good hard look at the wealth which has been produced from the uranium mines in the Athabasca region alone and if we were to take a look at the amount of revenue that the Dominion of Canada has received in the form of corporation taxes, I think we would make a greater effort to make a start at least to bring television service to these people who are doing a great deal for Canada.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Saint-Denis.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I fully share the views just expressed by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu). However, having studied his notice of motion:

> That in the opinion of this house, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should take steps to provide television coverage by immediately establishing transmission facilities in northwestern Saskatchewan, etc.

and the localities mentioned, I would say that numerous representations have been made in this regard by the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson), the hon. member for Saguenay (Mr. Blouin), the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Granger), the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) as well as by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

I do hope that the hon. member for Meadow Lake will not hold it against me if I extend his resolution, which covers only part of the northern region of his province, to the whole northern region of the country. I listened very closely to the comments he made about his notice of motion and I fully agree with him, except for one thing—and I will undoubtedly have the occasion to talk about it at length following this debate—he said that before offering colour television to serve, as he said himself, 60 per cent of the population, we should begin by providing full radio and television coverage, particularly television coverage, to all the areas which are not getting it yet. Here is one of the main objections that come to my mind. If the C.B.C. does not take immediate steps, not to do any pioneering, but just to keep up to date, and spend a great proportion of its budget on research so that we might start today to have colour television, there is no doubt that, at that time, the majority of the Canadian people will become more and more Americanized, because if the C.B.C.—and these are his own words—does not keep abreast of new developments, the American television stations will surely outpace the C.B.C.

It is unfortunate that the C.B.C. is unable to extend its service to the farthest corners of our country, because I fully agree with the hon. member for Meadow Lake that the economic contribution that those remote areas make to Canada as a whole is to the advantage of Canada as a whole which should ask the C.B.C. to allocate a greater part of its budget, of its research, of its finance to give the regions he mentioned the television coverage they are requesting.

I should like to point out to him that Uranium City, Fort Smith, Hay River, Yellowknife, Buffalo Narrows are not the only centres not served by television. The hon. members for Chapleau and Saguenay, who are now in their seats, pointed out to me that in their regions the only television available was cable television and this was at an astronomical cost, as high as $200 payable in advance, for a community antenna and up to $7 per month, also payable in advance.

I think that here also the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should extend its service. On the other hand, the Fowler commission is abundantly clear in this connection, for it says that the C.B.C. must tend inasmuch as possible to extension of radio and television services to regions not yet served. I do imagine that this part of the Fowler commission report meets the wish of the hon. member for Meadow Lake.

However, and I believe this is one of the government's responsibilities, in its recommendations concerning the financing of such a proposal, the committee does not provide for the steps necessary for achieving such a wish. It makes the wish—I believe it is a general wish—that the Canadian population as a whole must be served by television. However, in its conclusions unfortunately, it remains completely silent and does not say how the financing should be envisaged.

Besides, the C.B.C. has clearly reduced from 4,000 to 2,000 its requirement with regard to the population to be served. It is already a beginning toward implementing the wish of the hon. member for Meadow Lake and of other members I mentioned earlier, whether it be the members for Chapleau, Churchill, Saguenay, and whatever their political affiliation may be.

I found encouraging the statement made in the house by the minister responsible for the C.B.C., when she said, as reported on page 2418 of Hansard for March 8 last:

> I fully agree, as I am sure every hon. member does, that it should be extended to such regions as quickly as is humanly possible, if it is humanly possible.

And she refers in particular to the many pressures brought to bear on the minister by the hon. members for Chapleau, Churchill, Saguenay, etc. I believe it is the first time she referred to those representations. I say this, without reflecting, of course, on her immediate predecessor, the hon. member for Outremont-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lamontagne), who devoted all his energies to the extension of cultural television broadcasts to every area of our country.

I should also like to point out to the hon. member that if the C.B.C. has not actually covered more of our country, it is often due —vulgar as it may seem—to the question of dollars and cents and not, I am deeply convinced, a question of ill-will as under previous administrations. It is purely and simply a financial matter. It is not the general policy of the C.B.C. to deprive certain areas of our country of the benefits of television. I am also sure it has not entered the mind of the hon. member from Meadow Lake that the C.B.C. is wilfully refusing to extend its services throughout Canada. It is purely a question of money.

I believe that C.B.C., in its efforts to extend its services, faces three main problems. First, there are the areas not currently served, then the improvements required to current services, and the replacement over a period of many years of current services now totally obsolete.

These three problems, my hon. friend will admit, are almost on the same level. It is a question of priority: Which is the most important? Is it to serve immediately 100 per cent of the population and to hold back on the development, for instance, of colour T.V.? Should the C.B.C. spend a fortune, considering the unfortunate sparsity of our population, and be left far behind by private industry?

As far as its financial means allow, is the C.B.C. not supposed to try at once to extend its services to areas which do not have them at present, to be always at the fore, never to let itself be outstripped with regard to the improvement of its present services, and never to let itself be outstripped by letting its facilities become obsolete?

I attach a great deal of importance to this problem. Being French speaking myself, and my friend English speaking, which in no way reflects upon our sound Canadianism, I believe that C.B.C. should extend from coast to coast, right across the country, and thus fulfill the wish made when it was founded.

I believe that the C.B.C., while admitting the grounds for the suggestion made by the member for Meadow Lake, should also—and the hon. member mentioned it in his remarks—assign part of its revenue to the development of bilingual television across the whole of Canada. I believe that, at the moment, this is as important as providing C.B.C. services to the remote regions at an exhorbitant price.

Thus, to summarize somewhat my observations, in answer to the hon. member for Meadow Lake who says that the C.B.C., rather than extending its network in areas not serviced at present, intends to assign part of this money to colour television, that the C.B.C. must compete immediately with those who are offering colour television if we want to promote our Canadian identity from coast to coast, be it French-speaking or English speaking. If we want to keep our Canadian identity, it is essential that the important field of television, the one which probably exerts the strongest influence on our young people, those young people who, as could easily be pointed out—

[English]

Are not born prejudiced, but could easily be made prejudiced.

[Translation]

Well, those young people, when watching television, be it in Vancouver, New Brunswick or in Quebec, will realize that a language different from their own is being spoken and they will immediately understand the bilingual character of their country. That should strike our young people.

That is why the C.B.C. should extend its bilingual service throughout Canada as much as possible. Now, that requires huge sums of money. The corporation must enter immediately into the field of colour television. I am repeating myself, but I feel this is important. The C.B.C. should not be criticized for spending tremendous sums on the development of colour television. My hon. friend knows very well what happened in Toronto recently. That is a striking example of what could take place elsewhere. Indeed, it is claimed that if the Toronto area had been provided with a new television station, people in Toronto and the surrounding area would be prevented from watching their favourite American programs as they are doing now.

If our people start watching American colour television, you can well imagine what might happen. I know that my hon. friend is as worried as I am about that. The C.B.C. must undertake research in the field of television and radio in Canada. If the C.B.C. does not start competing right now with private American television, the situation will be deplorable. Therefore, it must spend the money it is planning to allocate for the development of colour television.

I do not think it can be blamed for that.

There is no doubt that if you examine the range of the C.B.C.—and it is a summary of the observations of the C.B.C.—it can be seen that it subscribes to the recommendations of the Fowler Committee, namely to extend as much as possible the television network throughout Canada.

But there again you must admit that it has become more and more impossible to reach some regions without spending a lot of money.

Each year, however, the C.B.C. spends larger sums of money—and I think that is what the hon. member for Meadow Lake wants—to serve those regions.

If you refer now to the remarks made by the minister responsible on Thursday night, March 8, as reported at page 2419 of Hansard, you will read this:

> I have asked the C.B.C.—and the C.B.C., as members of the committee can imagine, is eager to comply—to give the government and estimate of the cost of doing something similar to that suggested by the hon. member for Churchill, namely, to put aside a fund so that the last big step toward the outer limit of practicability can be reached in an orderly way.

And I would say that applies to the hon. members for Churchill and Meadow Lake and to all hon. members representing regions in the North.

> Then, the C.B.C. can lay out its priorities and make a start toward providing a national service which is received, if possible, in every Canadian home.

Of course, the minister said that unfortunately she could not tell hon. members when that will happen. The Cabinet is studying that matter which, of course, comes under general government policy and the conclusions of the Fowler report.

Personally, I succeeded in obtaining a seat on the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts. I do not know whether my hon. friend is a member of that committee. If not, like all other members of the house, he can appear before it, once it is set up, and voice his recommendations. I am sure he will find sympathetic people among its members. Naturally, I cannot speak for the other members of the committee, but he may rest assured that I myself shall be most interested in hearing his views and recommendations, that is, I shall try to find with him, under present circumstances, what would be the ideal solution and the recommendations to bring before both the C.B.C. and the government.

Of course, those recommendations will always take into account questions which people most often refuse to mention, that is to say practical matters, realistic questions, in short, those having to do with financial possibilities.

Naturally, one could perhaps adopt the theory of a certain political party in this house and say that it is humanly possible to serve, as I am sure it is, all the northern regions of this country and all others which are not served. But that is a financial question and it would seem that, at the present time, that is the big problem. As soon as we find the solution to it, I am convinced that it will be more logical to put the said resolution on the order paper.

Then, the hon. member and other members who are interested in the matter will no longer have any reason to be dissatisfied.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the debate on this topic but it is my duty to do so at this time.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTION TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the question to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight is as follows: The hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer), Agriculture—feed grain —charging of unreasonable prices.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR TRANSMISSION IN NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake):

> That, in the opinion of this house, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should take steps to carry out its duty to provide television coverage by immediately establishing transmission facilities in northwestern Saskatchewan, including Buffalo Narrows, Uranium City and on to Fort Smith, Hay River and Yellowknife.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. gentleman that I would be very happy to be a member of the broadcasting committee. I should like to ask him a couple of questions if I may. Does the hon. gentleman not think we are neglecting the population of the north and northern development in hesitating to bring television into the north?

Mr. Prud'homme: If I may answer, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) but at this moment the time limit of 20 minutes has been exceeded in his case. It is not possible to recognize the hon. member unless there is unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I would ask whether the house gives unanimous consent to the hon. member for Saint-Denis replying to this question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to be an expert on these matters as is the hon. gentleman. I try to find the best solution to a difficult problem and the answer is that this is exactly the difficulty of the C.B.C. I am sure the C.B.C. is faced with three difficult problems that appear to be of equal gravity, if I may say so. These problems are: Areas not yet served, improvements to existing services, the replacement of obsolete or inadequate facilities.

These are the problems of the C.B.C. and I think they serve as an answer to the question. It is a difficult situation. We need more money to extend services. It is just a question of money and it is not a question of desirability. We all agree it is desirable. We all agree that these services should be extended. However, if we go as far as to say that we should not have colour television in Canada but rather should use all the money for the development and extension of television to northern regions not yet served, I think we are not helping our country.

[Translation]

We do not help our country to remain in a competitive position with the country to the south which invades us more and more in every field, radio broadcasting, television, culture, and even the newspapers.

[English]

I have tried to give an honest answer to an honest question.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, has the hon. gentleman any idea of the wealth that has come out of the Athabasca region alone?

Mr. Prud'homme: I spoke about that a few minutes ago after listening very carefully to the hon. member. I said I agree that we do receive a great deal in the way of natural resources from this area and the C.B.C. should take this into consideration. I agree completely that the country as a whole receives much more than the country as a whole sometimes is giving back to the northern region.

[Translation]

The fact remains that it is a financial matter, that there are three main problems C.B.C. must face.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes and add a few words to what I already said on this subject a few days ago, during consideration of the estimates of the Secretary of State.

I fully agree with the motion of the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu), to the effect that any area which does not yet receive C.B.C. television coverage, should get it as soon as possible.

The motion of the hon. member for Meadow Lake reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should take steps to carry out its duty to provide television coverage by immediately establishing transmission facilities in northwestern Saskatchewan, including Buffalo Narrows, Uranium City and on to Fort Smith, Hay River and Yellowknife.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced—and we have seen again tonight—that no member in the house objects or would object to the passing of this motion. I assume that the member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) spoke on behalf of the Liberal party, and according to the answers given last Tuesday by the hon. Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), on that subject, I believe that the government would also agree to make this radio and television service available in every place where it is possible in Canada.

Television Transmission Facilities

I am a little surprised to hear the member for Saint-Denis tell us that the main difficulties at the moment are especially financial.

Well, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to sending funds anywhere in the world, for the development of underdeveloped areas, the question of whether or not we have the money is never asked. It can always be had.

I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. member for Meadow Lake when he says that all northern areas of all the Canadian provinces are underdeveloped regions.

What culture television can give them will be of great help, and will even contribute to developments right across Canada.

Southernmost regions have benefited far more from television. They have access to the C.B.C. network as well as to several private radio and television stations; they also have access to television from the United States.

Northern regions have no television whatsoever and C.B.C. reception is very poor.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if the present government wanted to go to the trouble of doing so, it would find a way of financing the expansion into the north of the C.B.C. network to enable it to serve all the regions which are inhabited to a certain extent.

We are told it is going to be very costly. Still, the citizens of northern areas, such as the people of Chibougamau-Chapais in my area, have contributed through their income tax and other taxes to the financing of television network developments in southerly regions. It would be proper, now, for the other citizens of the country to help finance that C.B.C. development.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that no member would object if the government were to propose the allocation of the necessary funds for this development.

High-ranking officials of the C.B.C. tell us that it is physically possible to provide service in all areas of the north. Thus, the government need only make financially possible what is already physically possible and everyone will be satisfied.

• (6:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take too much of the time of the house in debating this matter since the debate appears to be rapidly coming to a conclusion. I would be happy if the house would accept this resolution. I should like to add by wholehearted support to the motion of the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu). On numerous occasions I have spoken in the house of the need for extending C.B.C. television services into the northern parts of our provinces and indeed into the Northwest Territories.

I was interested and a little surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I really do feel he is interested in this problem. He said it was a matter of financing and in a way he is quite right. He appeared to be wondering if the financing of this project was justified at this time and mentioned that these things would be discussed during the meetings of the Committee on Broadcasting. I am not a member of that committee at this time. I am interested in becoming a member of the committee, and I hope that by the time the committee meets I will have succeeded in becoming a member of it.

I should like to say to all hon. members of the house, particularly those on the government side, that this is an extremely important matter. As I mentioned the other night, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has finally recommended to the government that parliament provide the money necessary to extend this service just as they recommended the expenditure on coloured television. This expenditure would allow the corporation to complete the extension of service into areas now unserviced. I feel that this is the crux of the matter and that parliament at this session should provide sufficient money to allow the corporation to do this job. Every member should impress upon the government the necessity for parliament providing this money.

The Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) has said she has asked the C.B.C. to provide the government with an estimate of the approximate cost of extending C.B.C. television service to these areas. In its annual statement last year the C.B.C. stated the cost would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $15 million. This may seem like quite a sum of money but recently we passed estimates containing a subsidy of some $96 million or $97 million to the C.B.C. The estimates with which we are going to deal later this session contain an appropriation of $110 million for the C.B.C. or almost $15 million more than the amount we just voted. Although $15 million may seem like a large sum of money we should stop and think of the hundreds of millions of dollars which have been spent in providing television to people who already enjoy it. I do not feel we should consider $15 million as an exorbitant sum to provide this service to the rest of the taxpayers of Canada.

I returned this week from a visit to my constituency. One of the purposes of my visit was to attend a meeting called by the chambers of commerce of northern Manitoba. The purpose of the meeting was to present further briefs to the government, the corporation and the B.B.G. requesting the extension of C.B.C. television services into these areas. At the meeting there were representatives of chambers of commerce in one constituency who live 500 to 600 miles apart. The meeting was well attended. These representatives met three weeks ago at another point in the constituency and in about two weeks they will be meeting again. A delegation will come to Ottawa—I do not know the size of the delegation but it will be about a dozen people—to try to impress upon the corporation, the government and the B.B.G. the necessity for this type of action.

In conclusion I should like to compliment the hon. member for Meadow Lake for bringing this resolution before the house. He has my full support. I hope all members on the government side will impress upon their colleagues the necessity for providing this money to the corporation to enable the corporation to do this job.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) upon the introduction of this measure. I believe he is attempting, through public address, to do what I have been working earnestly to do more or less privately. I find there is not a large number of members of the House of Commons who are concerning themselves with this problem. During the past three years I have undertaken to communicate with the C.B.C., the Board of Broadcast Governors, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the members of his cabinet in an endeavour to have a decision made to undertake immediately full television coverage for all taxpayers in Canada. I believe that I have met with some measure of success.

• (6:20 p.m.)

I should like also to compliment the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) since he has been consistently bringing this matter before the house. As I said, I believe I have been somewhat successful in my representations. I must say that, knowing the members of the Fowler Committee, I made a practice of communicating rather frequently and asking them to make a recommendation to the government with regard to this matter. I believe my representations were somewhat successful because the Fowler Committee has made a recommendation that such coverage be undertaken by the C.B.C.

The hon. member's resolution requests that this parliament ask the C.B.C. to undertake this very expensive project. There is no question of course, that this means that over the next five years something like $15 million to $20 million will be required in order to provide television coverage only to communities of 2,000 people or more. This again falls far short of providing television coverage to all taxpayers of Canada but it is a step in the right direction.

This parliament and the government must make provision for the $15 million to $20 million that will be required. Much as we would like to, neither members of parliament nor the government can insist that the C.B.C. undertake this project. After all, it is an autonomous body which decides in its wisdom whether it will or will not provide the services demanded by the Canadian public. It seems to me it will require a special vote of the house to set aside a fund for this specific purpose, one not for the general use of the C.B.C.

I, too, felt some consternation when the C.B.C. said—I have not heard any announcement by the government—that there would be colour television in Canada by October this year. When I was pressing the former secretary of state some time ago for a statement on the part of the government as to the intentions in this regard, he said that colour television would not have priority over extension of television service to the outlying districts of Canada. Undoubtedly because of pressure of other matters we have not had a decision either on the part of the government or on the part of the C.B.C. whether they intend to process these areas before embarking upon colour television.

I suppose most hon. members who have concerned themselves with this matter know that the C.B.C. has a formula under which it operates with regard to providing television coverage to outlying communities. It determines the cost per capita and from there it determines which area will have priority. It may be that an area of 3,000 population will have priority over an area with 15,000 to 20,000 people simply by virtue of the fact that the cost per capita to bring in television service is lower.

It is not entirely a question of money even if we do embark upon this undertaking over the next year or two. Technical difficulties have to be overcome. Apparently procurement is one serious problem. Even if at this session of parliament we do, and I hope we will provide the money required by the C.B.C. to undertake this coverage in its entirety, this does not mean that this operation will be completed within a year or two. It also does not mean that people in the far-flung areas are going to be provided with television even if we do spend up to $30 million.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that what is required at this moment is a determination on the part of the C.B.C., perhaps with the authority of the government, to undertake some research. Technical developments are taking place at a rapid rate, yet not rapidly enough to provide television service across Canada. It seems to me that at a time when it is possible to send satellites into space which can relay television from Europe to Canada, and knowing that satellites can be kept stationary in the sky, it should also be possible to orbit a space satellite which could be suspended in space over the central part of Canada to provide C.B.C. coverage to all parts of the country, into the mountainous valleys of British Columbia and even to the north pole. If we can send satellites into space to reflect television from Europe or from any other part of the world, then it is not an insurmountable undertaking to reflect television broadcasts in Canada. This would not be nearly so costly as providing a microwave system, land lines and so on to give television coverage across the nation.

I believe we have been moving too slowly. We have been thinking in terms of microwave systems alone. It may be there would be some serious objection from microwave companies who are already in the business of providing services from central telecasting areas right across the nation. Perhaps they would find themselves with a great deal of unusable equipment, but such are the circumstances of modern technology. I believe we should investigate the situation and provide the sum of money required for immediate and serious research into this matter in order that we may provide television throughout the entire nation.

Mr. Knowles: Six thirty.

[Mr. Byrne.]

Mr. Byrne: In the meantime we should not stall any projects now being carried on to provide television coverage to smaller communities. I do not wish to talk out this measure, Mr. Speaker, so that is all I have to say at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to—

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Six thirty.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The time allotted to private members' hour is one hour and that time has not yet expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, first I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) for having introduced such a motion to give citizens in distant parts of the country who do not have television the advantages of this most important means of communication.

This motion reflects not only the wish of the hon. member and his fellow citizens in northwest Saskatchewan and others, but also that of several other hon. members and their constituents.

• (6:30 p.m.)

The hon. member sitting beside the hon. member for Meadow Lake would also have many things to say on this subject because, like myself, he comes from the Gaspé peninsula. The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays) could put on the order paper a motion written in exactly the same terms, except for the name of the place, since a large part of Gaspé riding is virtually deprived of television services.

A moment ago, the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) mentioned—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. As it is now six thirty, it is my duty to leave the chair pursuant to an order passed by the house this afternoon.

Accordingly, the house will adjourn until eight o'clock tonight.

Mr. Knowles: Fine.

Mr. Grafftey: Have a good lunch.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MUNSINGER CASE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF JUDICIAL INQUIRY AND STATEMENTS BY MEMBERS

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the position, we are at this moment back on the question of privilege and have before us what I call draft terms of reference, although the order in council has been passed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is the understanding of the Chair that we are on a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Kamloops and more particularly on the terms of reference mentioned by the right hon. Prime Minister this afternoon.

Mr. Fulton: That is my understanding, Mr. Speaker. I call them draft terms of reference because I do hope that the government will be prepared to consider some amendments to these terms of reference, although I appreciate that the order in council has been passed.

Therefore, what we have to discuss are two things, as I see it: First, whether there should be a judicial committee of inquiry and, if so, whether and to what extent the terms of reference proposed are satisfactory. It is our position, Mr. Speaker, that we are agreed to there being a judicial inquiry into the Munsinger case but we are not prepared to forgo any of the rights and privileges of this house and its members, nor are we prepared to forgo the rights of members to discuss these privileges here in so far as they have been brought into question by the course which has been followed so far.

We have said, and I repeat, that we have nothing to be ashamed of or to hide in our handling of this particular case. I want to make it perfectly clear that we are not opposing or seeking to delay the constitution of the judicial committee of inquiry. I merely wish to make it abundantly clear that we reserve the right to express our opinion on the terms of reference and we do not admit that any judicial inquiry or any body can determine in any way the rights and privileges of this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: This house is the only body that can do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: Subject to that understanding we are prepared to co-operate in expediting a satisfactory judicial inquiry. We are, however, very much concerned with the terms of reference embodied in this order in council.

Wishing also to expedite the day, the hour, the minute when this house will be restored to a position where it can deal with the business of the country, we suggest, subject to reservations I shall mention in a moment, that there be an all party committee to discuss the terms of reference which have been laid before us today to see if it is possible to arrive more closely, at any rate, to agreement than I regret to say is the case so far. I shall be outlining to the house this evening the reservations that we have with respect to the terms of reference and some of the things we think should be incorporated therein. Others in our party will wish to follow up in detail with respect to some of the matters I mention.

I wish to make it clear that we have decided that if the government is prepared to agree that there should be an all-party committee we will co-operate in that committee. I do not mean it to be implied that at the moment I sit down we shall have exhausted the matters that we at this stage wish to bring before this house as to the things that should be considered by that committee.

I want, next, to indicate some of the objections to the present terms of reference and the suggestions we have to make as to how they should be amended. First, Mr. Speaker, in our view the terms of reference proposed in the order in council are far too vague and do not reproduce in the least fully or accurately the full effects of the charges made and the innuendos raised by the Minister of Justice. It is our view that these charges and their accuracy should form the major portion of the investigation which the commission is asked to undertake, and with that in mind I want to refer to some of the specific terms which we think should be altered.

In the first place, we think that the reference to the letter from the Minister of Justice to the Prime Minister which was read into the record of the House of Commons on Friday last should be deleted from the terms of reference of the royal commission. We are of that view because the letter of the Minister of Justice was an exculpatory document, or an attempt at exculpation, and an attempt to deny that he had made far reaching and improper charges publicly into which this commission should inquire. We therefore object very much to the letter, and certainly the initial portion, being made part of the terms of reference—especially being the initial or main portion. After all, Mr. Speaker, the letter seeks to narrow down the accusations of the Minister of Justice to an accusation that the former prime minister, the Leader of the Opposition, was derelict in his duty in not referring the matter to the legal advisers in the Department of Justice.

This is not really the issue before this house, nor should it be the issue before the commission at all. I have already dealt with the reasons the letter was not referred and I am not going to go into this again in detail tonight. I simply want to make clear one thing, that the former prime minister and I stand together in this matter. I received a report from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The same day I referred it to the then prime minister. I did not wait until I met him some weeks later on a plane trip and then refer to it casually.

• (8:10 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Smear.

Mr. Fulton: I told the then prime minister I wanted to see him. I said I had to see him on a serious matter. He said I was welcome to come to his office to discuss it, and to come right away. I went down with the file. We discussed the file and the surrounding circumstances. Those were the relationships that then characterized the administration of justice and the relationship between the minister and the prime minister. We did not operate in watertight compartments.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What about February, 1963?

Mr. Fulton: And that having been done—

Mr. Pearson: Why did you quit?

Mr. Fulton: I say that with respect to this matter we stand together, and it is not the former prime minister who is on trial here—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Oh, it is.

Mr. Fulton: "Oh, it is" I hear from over there. Now we have it. Now we know.

An hon. Member: That is the little boy from Rosedale.

Mr. Fulton: I am afraid I did not personally observe the source of the interruption but I am told it was the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald). Well, sir, that may be the intention of hon. members opposite but we do not intend to allow this parliament to be prostituted by that kind of conduct

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Fulton: So I say that we object to the inclusion as the first portion, if indeed as any portion of the terms of reference, of the letter of the Minister of Justice.

Then, something that should be added to the terms of reference is a reference to the statements made in the House of Commons by the Prime Minister, as reported at pages 2521 and 2532 of Hansard for March 10, where the Prime Minister made it clear that in his view what was important in the inquiry was whether or not this was a bona fide security case. At page 2521 the Prime Minister said:

> I believe that there have been all sorts of statements made in the house this afternoon, and allegations made inside and outside the house. I ask the hon. member who was so very indignant a few moments ago because we would not do anything about it, if the government moved a motion in this parliament for the establishment of a judicial inquiry, which is what they wanted in the Spencer case and this is a matter which concerns security—would the opposition support it?

That statement, I submit, makes it clear that in the Prime Minister's view the important thing to be inquired into was whether the Munsinger case concerned security.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit me to ask a question? Would the hon. gentleman tell us if the file to which he has made repeated reference was a security file in the usual acceptance of that term?

Mr. Fulton: It was a confidential file, so marked, and it dealt with matters which were secret and confidential as between myself and the R.C.M.P. reporting.

Mr. Pearson: Exactly.

Mr. Fulton: And I said this afternoon that there was no charge or suggestion therein that there had been a breach of security. If my hon. friend, who has been a minister long enough to know better, does not know there are a number of things that come from the R.C.M.P. to the minister of justice which are so categorized and under that cover, which do not deal with security in the sense hon. members opposite have been trying to represent it, then he does not know what goes on in the administration of justice in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman will permit me, I should like to repeat my question. I ask the hon. gentleman whether this file was what is normally referred to as a security file or did it refer to some other kind of thing that the R.C.M.P. was investigating?

Mr. Fulton: I have made my statement this afternoon. I would have liked very much to be able to see the file before speaking here today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Evasion.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think my hon. friend has seen it, and I have made my statement. I am not going to go back on my statement, nor am I going to retreat from it, that the investigation which gave rise to the report I received was not initiated as the result of any security checkup in the proper sense of the word security.

Mr. Hellyer: What is the proper sense of the word?

Mr. Matheson: May I ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Kamloops has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the hon. member a question? I am not concerned with the politicking going on between the Minister of Transport and himself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said about the questions that were asked of the hon. member for Kamloops but I want to ask him a question relating to his suggestion. Does his suggestion for the inclusion of the statement made by the Prime Minister add anything in his view to the statement now in the terms of reference about the circumstances that may have constituted a risk to security? I am seeking information. I am not trying to do anything else.

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate the terms of the hon. member's question and I assure him I will deal with that as I outline my suggestion with respect to the changes that should be made in the terms of reference.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question? Did the file come from the security and intelligence branch?

Mr. Fulton: I think, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious we are getting to the root of what has been going on here. It appears to me it becomes important for the Prime Minister to say what he means by security, in the context in which he used that word in relation to this case.

Mr. Pearson: That will be easy.

Mr. Fulton: All I want is the Prime Minister's statement of March 10, to which I have referred at page 2521, made part of the terms of reference, because that was an allegation made by the Prime Minister that this was a security case.

We would also wish to have the statement made by the Prime Minister, reported at page 2532 of Hansard, made a part of the terms of reference and subject to the commissioner's inquiry. At that stage the Prime Minister was indicating he was prepared to adopt the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) and he said, referring to the amendment:

It is that we should:

—take such steps as are necessary to establish a judicial injuiry into the security case referred to by the Minister of Justice and by the Leader of the Opposition on March 4, 1966, at Hansard page 2211—

The Prime Minister was prepared to adopt that as part of the terms of reference for the inquiry. In other words, in his view this was a security case and this is a matter we think the commissioner should be instructed and required to look into.

Then we think the terms of reference should be further amended by deleting the whole clause beginning about the middle of the Order in Council with the words:

—and into all the statements of the Minister of Justice in a press conference on March 10, 1966—

And ending with the words:

—and that the case was not properly handled;

We think that sentence should be deleted—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: —and that there should be substituted therefor some words which I will outline in a moment. The reason we think that deletion should be made and a substitution inserted is that in our view the words included in the Order in Council do not in the least accurately reflect the charges made by the Minister of Justice, and what we have here are words which contain refinements and important omissions and inclusions which would prevent the commissioner from getting to the root of the matter.

After all, this thing arose out of the charges made by the Minister of Justice. He said, and I have the press clippings here to substantiate it, that the case concerned not just involvement. What was implicit in the minister's statement was improper involvement, something entirely improper—

Mr. Cardin: Quote it accurately.

Mr. Pearson: Quote it.

Mr. Fulton: —and also that included in the involvement were two or more ministers, not just involvement with the said Gerda Munsinger but involvement which, in the very direct implication of everything the minister said, was improper.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Cardin: Quote that.

Mr. Pearson: Quote that. Talk about smearing.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, yes, the minister said it was worse than the Profumo scandal. That is what he said, and there is no reference to that in the terms of the inquiry.

Mr. Cardin: Just quote what I said. That will be sufficient.

Mr. Fulton: I will come to that. I have the press clippings here. He implied there was a security risk involving former ministers. Is that not improper involvement? Is all that he was saying that somebody knew Gerda Munsinger? Is that what he was saying? Of course it is not and he knows it. The inquiry should examine whether that improper involvement he was alleging was an involvement such that the actions of those concerned were definitely a security risk to Canada. "Definitely" is the word he used, but we find in the terms of reference the words "may have constituted a risk to the security of Canada". That is not what he said. I have the clipping before me:

"I don't know—but there definitely was a security risk."

He tells me to quote him. He nods now. He said it definitely involved a security risk. So that sentence should be deleted, because that is not the charge the minister made.

There should be substituted words to the effect: "and into all statements by the Minister of Justice in a press conference on March 10, 1966, and the implications thereof, and to ascertain whether there was evidence in the R.C.M.P. file laid before the government in 1961 to support the following findings:

1. That 'two or more ministers' were improperly involved with Mrs. Munsinger and that their actions in that involvement had been such as to be 'definitely' a security risk to Canada."

That is what we want the commissioner to look into.

[Mr. Pearson.]

"2. That the file turned over to the minister of justice by the R.C.M.P. in 1961 was a 'bona fide security case'.

3. That a breach of the national security or some other offence was indicated in the file, thereby imposing a duty on the then minister of justice or prime minister to refer the file to the legal advisers in the Department of Justice.

4. That Mrs. Munsinger was known to have been employed and to have been active in espionage work before coming to Canada."

An hon. Member: Now we are getting to it.

Mr. Fulton: That is what we want the commissioner to look into, because that is what the Minister of Justice alleged outside the house. He apparently is nodding his head that these were the allegations he made.

Then, as I say, the word "may" is not acceptable. The word "may" must come out. His allegation was that the case was a definite security risk. The commissioner also should be asked to inquire into the question of whether the Munsinger case was worse than the Profumo scandal, another charge made by the Minister of Justice. He went down behind the desk for a moment but he has come up again.

Then there is another matter in respect of which it is essential that the commissioner inquire and which must be incorporated into the terms of reference if it is to be a fair and impartial inquiry and not a loaded one. That is the question—the Prime Minister laughs. Let him explain why this is omitted from the terms of reference. The terms of reference should also include a finding and report upon the conduct of the present Minister of Justice and his immediate predecessor who, although now asserting that the case involved a definite security risk, took no action in the case until it became a subject of political controversy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman another question? Would the hon. gentleman tell us why he took this file to the Prime Minister so precipitately if there was no security risk involved?

Mr. Fulton: The minister who asked the question obviously does not appreciate the proper relationship between the Minister of Justice and his Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fulton: And in the light of the attitude revealed there I am not surprised that the administration of justice has been degraded to the lowest level in the history of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fulton: I have seen too much of the results arising from the fact that the Minister of Justice and his Prime Minister operate in watertight compartments and wait until there is a casual reference made in the back seat of a plane in respect of something involving people next to government. I did not regard it as fulfilling my duty to my prime minister to leave him in the dark concerning things that were said.

An hon. Member: About what?

Mr. Fulton: I am waiting to hear the Minister of Justice tell us.

Mr. Pearson: You were the minister.

Mr. Fulton: There we have the same old implications.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggested when the hon. member took the floor that the purpose of the discussion was to consider the terms of reference of the proposed inquiry. I would ask the hon. member who has the floor to limit his statements to that.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, sir; but I regret that I see the same implication as that raised by the Minister of Justice earlier this evening—"we make the smear; you do the explaining". What an appalling suggestion to come from the front bench of those opposite.

Then I think there should be included in the terms of reference of this commission the question of the circumstances surrounding the administration of Mrs.—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: The admission of Mrs. Munsinger.

Mr. Starr: She was a security risk and you let her in and paid her way over.

Mr. Churchill: Who was the minister of citizenship and immigration in 1955—the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill).

Mr. Fulton: Let me fill in the ellipsis surrounding my words. The administration of the government of Canada at the time of the admission of Mrs. Munsinger was a Liberal administration and Mrs. Munsinger was admitted under the aegis of my hon. friends opposite; yet, we are now told by them that Mrs. Munsinger was a security risk before she came.

An hon. Member: In what year?

Mr. Fulton: In 1955, I understand. Who was the minister?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: We are now told—and it is one of the implications in the charge—that she was a spy engaged in espionage activities and there were security reports about her long before she came. Who let her in?

An hon. Member: Let there be no mystery about that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fulton: Whom the cap fits, let him wear it.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of personal privilege—

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My understanding is that we are on the question of privilege. I have heard, during the last two or three days, members get up on questions of privilege. On Friday afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre raised a question of personal privilege when we already had a question of privilege before the house.

Mr. Churchill: Am I being singled out for admonition?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest there is one question of privilege at the moment and that we should limit ourselves to that particular question. When we have settled that one perhaps we will go on to another, such as the one the Minister of Transport wishes to raise at this time.

I have given some thought to this and I suggest there is no basic difference between a question of privilege affecting hon. members of the house and a question of personal privilege. When the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre raised his point the other day I asked whether there was any distinction which would allow the hon. member to interrupt the question of privilege then before the house. In this regard I suggested to him at that time that we should limit our discussion to the question then before us, and I suggest again that we now limit ourselves for the moment to the question raised by the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I welcome your public admonition regarding something that happened the other day, but I hope you will add the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to this salutory admonition which you have uttered tonight.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did not admonish the hon. gentleman in any way. I made an admission of ignorance on the part of your Speaker in that I wondered at the time whether the procedure followed should have been allowed. During the intervening days I have had an opportunity to look into the matter and I have satisfied myself that we should discuss and consider one question of privilege at a time.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I will conclude in just a moment. I have raised certain matters which obviously are not welcomed by hon. gentlemen opposite. But I raise them in all seriousness as matters which we think should be included in the terms of reference or as alterations that should be made to those terms in order that we may have a thorough and impartial inquiry into this whole situation. We are anxious to have such an important and thorough inquiry made on a proper basis. We are prepared to join with members of other parties of this house in an attempt to work out such a set of terms of reference in order that an inquiry may proceed with all possible speed so that parliament may be allowed to get on with its business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am rising merely to give a personal explanation in respect of certain of the hon. member's statements.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can, of course, speak on the question of privilege which has been raised and I recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will take only a few moments, sir. If this woman was admitted in 1955, as I am informed by the hon. gentleman she was, then I was the minister. I admit that at once as being a matter of record.

Mr. Fulton: I made no accusation against you in that regard. You are the one who is making the accusation.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member thought I was embarrassed. I was not in the least embarrassed. What I really rose to do was to ask if the hon. gentleman when he was considering this file, discovered whether or not this woman, who if she was admitted in 1955, by 1960 would in the normal course have been eligible for citizenship, ever applied for citizenship, whether she got citizenship and, if she did not get citizenship, why she did not?

Mr. Fulton: I do not recall, Mr. Speaker. The answers to those questions are all available to the hon. gentleman at this stage. I am only appalled that he did not ask the questions and get the answers before hon. members on his side of the house unleashed this appalling campaign in this country.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wanted to know whether the hon. gentleman knew the answers to my questions.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I did know. I satisfied myself as to the background of this matter before I dealt with the file, unlike hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the hon. member for Kamloops whether the Munsinger file in his hands—

An hon. Member: Who wrote your question out for you?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I am not completely clear about the question of privilege we are discussing at this moment. I say that because there is now some kind of attempt being made to set up a judicial inquiry to settle a question of privilege affecting members, which is a new departure from the ordinary method of handling such a situation. There is no precedent for this action in this house or in the British house so far as I could ascertain by my research.

I am particularly concerned about the terms of reference contained in the Order in Council. Until and unless the house agrees to refer this question of privilege to a royal commission or judicial body outside the house or the extensions of this house, which has never occurred in a case of this type in the past, there is only one place where it can be settled. A question of personal privilege must be settled by this house or by an extension of this house, such as the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I know the difficult position you are in regarding this matter in deciding what is the correct action to take. As I understand the debate which has taken place during the last three days, and I have read those portions which I missed during the last part of last week, we have now reached a situation where by reason of events and the lapse of time there has been an acceptance of the fact that a prima facie case of privilege exists. If that were not so, surely we would not have spent three days on this subject.

It should not be necessary for any member to quote chapter and verse to other members of the house, but the burden falls squarely on the member or members who wish to raise a question of privilege to move a substantive motion if a prima facie case of privilege has been ruled to exist by the Chair. I should like to quote from page 134 of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, 17th edition, which states in part:

> It is irregular to make a complaint unless the member intends to follow it up with a substantive motion referring to the matter—

Mr. Speaker, the ministers of the former Conservative government have been complaining that they have a question of privilege; yet during the course of this entire debate respecting the question of privilege they have continued to prod—use whatever word you like—the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) into naming names. The Minister of Justice did not raise the question of privilege. Whether he wants to name these names or chooses not to name them is his prerogative. The members of the former government are those who feel aggrieved or abused by something that was said outside this house and they in fact have a recourse. They do have a remedy. They can raise a question of privilege in this house and ask Your Honour whether or not there appears to be a prima facie case of privilege. If you decide there is a case of privilege, then those members so aggrieved or abused are bound to move a substantive motion. In doing so they have the right to name the Minister of Justice and to refer specifically to the charges he made outside this house.

At the stage we have now reached it is essential for any member, including the former prime minister, who feels he has been aggrieved or abused by the Minister of Justice in what he has said outside this house to get on his feet and move a substantive motion. In that motion they can, as I said, name the Minister of Justice as the person who has in fact abused their privileges. But it is not sufficient to suggest that the only way this can be done is by the Minister of Justice getting on his feet and naming names. What is more, we do not accept this completely new departure in dealing with a question of privilege, namely, to refer it to a judicial inquiry.

I suggest that it may be right and proper for the Governor in Council to pass a motion setting up a judicial inquiry to inquire into the matter of Canada's security, and if they wish they can confine it even more than that and set up this kind of an inquiry to inquire specifically into the matter of national security respecting the so-called Munsinger case. But I think we would be doing parliament a great disservice if we were to accept that this judicial inquiry is going to settle a question of privilege affecting one or more members of this house.

I am sure Your Honour has examined all the precedents and authorities, and I do not believe you can find any case where this has been done in the past. It must be settled in this house. Citation 107 of Beauchesne's fourth edition makes this fairly clear and there are also a number of other citations dealing with this point. Citation 107 says:

> "Whatever matter arises concerning either House of Parliament, ought to be discussed and adjudged in that House to which it relates, and not elsewhere. Judge ought not to give any opinion of a matter of Parliament, because it is not to be decided by the common law"—

And so on. I simply want to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that we are deeply concerned whether the result of this action is going to transfer to a commission outside this house the business of hearing the evidence and making recommendations respecting a matter of personal privilege. We do not believe this should be done. There is no precedent for it and I think it would be transferring from this house a great deal of the authority, rights and privileges that most of us are very jealous to guard and protect.

I shall say no more except that perhaps there could be an inquiry into security and the Munsinger case. But if it is a question of personal privilege affecting one or more members of the house it should be settled by the house and the proper way is for those who feel aggrieved to make a motion now and for this house to consider it and to refer it to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to deal with it in the proper and correct way.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Yes.

Mr. Greene: Inasmuch as this involves a security matter, or allegedly so, does the hon. member not feel it would be useful to have a finding of fact by a judicial inquiry, which would be one of the nature that hears security matters, and that the findings of fact by that judicial inquiry would then be the basis on which any action in respect of privilege is then taken by this house?

Mr. Olson: I agree that this is a possible subsequent action but I believe that the question of privilege should be referred to a committee of this house in the first instance. If that committee, in attempting to gather all the evidence and to assess it, finds it is unable to come to a conclusion without going into security files, it would then be right and proper for the committee to suggest that some evidence required to be given in camera before a judge who could look into the matter. But I do not believe that transferring it right from the floor of this house at this time to a judicial inquiry and asking the judge to decide on the matter laid out in the terms of reference is the correct procedure.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the understanding which was indicated by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) as to what is hoped for from the inquiry would be precisely my understanding and, I think, the understanding of most other hon. members. It seemed to me that the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) said that he reserved the right, and other members of his party reserved the right, to deal with the question of privilege. That was one of the things he was reserving, namely, the right to raise the question of privilege again if the finding of fact by the commissioner supported the contention that such a question of privilege existed.

I rise to say a very few words on behalf of those of us in this party. Like all other hon. members of this house we had hoped, by the tone that was set this afternoon by all those who spoke, that the matter which had occupied our attention for two days last week was going to come to an end and we would be able to proceed with the business of parliament.

I am distressed, as I am sure all other hon. members are, that we now appear to be again on the brink of another scrap of very much the same sort as we went through on Thursday and Friday, only in a different framework, dealing with slightly different words but essentially the same scrapping across the floor that we had last week. Surely every hon. member here will have found last week end, as I found, by the numerous phone calls I received and which all those who went home must have received, that our constituents, the people who sent us here, cannot quite understand what much of the fuss is about. What they are wondering about is when we are going to get down to work on the legislation and on the issues which face this country and this parliament.

I ask all of us, Mr. Speaker, to avoid getting into the scramble and the mess that we were in last week. It will not take much to get us into this sort of mess once again. Suggestions that certain words are intended to hide things, counter-suggestions that somebody is afraid of something, and away we go once again into exactly the same morass in which we found ourselves for two solid days last week and in which we are still.

I think the hon. member for Kamloops made a good suggestion. I believe the suggestion would be more valuable if he and others had not proceeded to deal with the subject matter of his suggestion on the floor of this house. That is precisely the way to invite the sort of exchange that may have no end this evening and may go on, because we are still on the question of privilege. It seems to me that the suggestion the hon. member for Kamloops dealt with has obvious good sense and fairness. It seems to me that what he suggested ought to be accepted by representatives of the government as being fair and sensible. Other things that he suggested, if he will forgive my saying so, obviously do not have very much sense.

• (8:50 p.m.)

For example, it does not make much sense to me to have a statement in the terms of reference to the effect that this was worse than the Profumo case. I should like to know by what criteria you decide the degree of the case between Profumo and somebody else—I was going to say the degree of odorousness of a certain situation. I do not know what the criteria are.

Similarly, it seems to me it is nonsense to talk about not very important words, if I may say so with respect. They say they want to take out certain words and replace them by a statement the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) made. In fact, the words in the proposed Order in Council say exactly the same thing, except I suppose you have the satisfaction of placing them in the mouth of the Prime Minister. You are not really asking for anything more.

It seems to me, therefore, that if we could re-establish some mutual trust—I was going to say if we could re-establish civilized behaviour between civilized people, Mr. Speaker—it ought to be possible for a small committee representing at least the government side and the official opposition, as well as other parties if they desire to take part, to arrive at terms of reference.

What I am pleading for, Mr. Speaker, is that we not take the rest of this evening, with the danger of it going into tomorrow, in arguing about why something was left out and something should be put in or making accusations as to why something was left out and counter-accusations as to why things were put in. As I have said before, if that happens we will be back in the same undignified, unproductive, negative battle in which we found ourselves last week.

Mr. Churchill: That does not follow at all.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) says that does not follow at all. I have sat here so far this evening and I can say that has been the result. I have heard accusations hurled across the floor, and they will continue. I am in your hands, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the big parties here control the situation. I am asking whether we cannot be civilized enough to appoint a committee or to agree on a committee, if the Prime Minister will agree to have one. If he does not agree, if he rejects the idea, then hon. members on this side will be fully justified in criticizing anything they do not like in the terms of reference.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Lewis: That is right. If the Prime Minister says these are the terms and I will not meet with anyone to discuss them, then obviously the people who disagree with those terms must have an opportunity to say so. If the right hon. gentleman does agree to a committee, surely that is the sensible thing. Let us reserve any further discussion on the floor of this house for the time when we have either an agreement or something upon which the parties definitely cannot agree.

I cannot sit down, Mr. Speaker, without saying something which I am sure all hon. members have felt and which I have felt as I watched these proceedings as a relatively new member. Some of us may have said things that we may regret at some later time, but there is one person, it seems to me, who stands out for the patience and leadership he has shown. I refer to Your Honour and the way you have carried through these very difficult days of debate.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, it should be remembered that the suggestion for the establishment of a committee to work out these terms of reference came from the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). I rather hoped the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) would rise after the last hon. gentleman spoke. However, I should like to remind the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), in the event he may have forgotten, of the words of his colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), and of the words of his leader during the debate last Friday in this chamber. The hon. member for Greenwood said, as reported on page 2563 of Hansard:

> I want to make it perfectly clear that in my view no judicial inquiry would make sense unless the specific persons charged with offences were named in the terms of the inquiry. I know that no judge would want to hear a blanket charge against 15, 20, 30 or 100 people. Who is to appear? Who is to be called? The minister will have the obligation later, if such an inquiry is granted, of stating clearly and specifically whom he is charging.

The hon. member's own leader, who was just as disturbed as the rest of us in this house at the trend this debate had taken as a result of the injudicious statements of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) and the lack of judgment shown by the Prime Minister in dealing with this matter, said, as reported at page 2602 of Hansard:

> The reason this inquiry is being precipitated is that the Minister of Justice made certain charges outside the house. If there is going to be a proper inquiry, those charges must be contained in the terms of reference and the onus must be on the Minister of Justice to prove those charges—

For the benefit of the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), who seems to have a warped sense of what is proper in connection with judicial procedure and matters affecting the fundamental rights of individuals called before judicial hearings, I emphasize these words:

> —the onus must be on the Minister of Justice to prove those charges, not on the other parties involved to prove their innocence.

The leader of the party, of which the hon. member for York South has the doubtful privilege of being deputy leader, went on to say:

> I am saying that the important thing in the terms of reference is whether or not there will be specific charges made by the minister, either by taking a transcript of his interview with the press and attaching it to the terms of reference contained in the Order in Council, or by having the minister rise in this house and repeat the statements he made at the press conference.

This is the hon. member's leader speaking. The leader of the hon. member's party is reported at page 2546 of Hansard as also saying:

> The terms of reference will have to set out the charges made by the minister, not only in this house but outside the house.

This is a proper stand to take.

Mr. Lewis: We still take that stand.

Mr. Nielsen: It is a proper stand to take. I continue quoting:

> The minister will then have to appear before such an inquiry and substantiate his charges, and place his seat and his portfolio at the disposition of that inquiry. The terms of reference of the inquiry must be such as to cover the charges which have been made, and the letter read by the Prime Minister from the Minister of Justice certainly does not cover the very serious allegations made by the Minister of Justice the other day—

Nor do these terms of reference cover those allegations. The leader of that party went on to say:

> I suggest that the Prime Minister agree to an inquiry of which the terms of reference include the charges made by the minister outside the house—

An hon. Member: They do.

Mr. Nielsen: They do not, and I will point out to hon. members opposite who say they do that they do not, if they will be patient. The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) shouts across to the hon. member for Kamloops, "what about the time you quit"? These interjections do not throw any light on the debate at all. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman), interjected in the debate,—he is laughing now —"what about February, 1963", during the time the hon. member for Kamloops was speaking. Those were his words.

Mr. Deachman: I never said any such thing. You have nine other fellows in mind.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: The leader of the New Democratic Party, after referring to the fact that the charges made outside the house by the Minister of Justice should be included in the terms of reference as well as the question of privilege raised by members inside the house, went on to say, as reported at page 2546 of Hansard:

> —that the terms of reference make it abundantly clear that it is the minister who has to accept responsibility for substantiating before the inquiry the charges which he has made.

There is what the terms of reference should include, Mr. Speaker. The terms of reference of a royal commission, for the benefit of the hon. member for Medicine Hat, must be subjected to the same tests as any other legal document dealing with the rights and liberties of any subject. One of the prime principles in the administration of justice in this country is that it is up to the accuser to prove the guilt of the accused, that a man remains innocent until he is proven guilty.

There are over 20 ex-ministers of the former administration who have been asked, by the policy adopted by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the government, to prove their innocence. What kind of twist to the administration of justice in this country is that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Olson: May I ask the hon. member a question? I would ask him whether or not the Minister of Justice has now named anyone or charged them with anything. Second, I wonder if he would tell the house whether or not he thinks that the Committee on Privileges and Elections could call the minister to ask him what he has to say about these press releases.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Justice has named no names. So far as the committee on privileges and elections is concerned, I think it is the consensus of this house, including the feeling of one who seldom has a consensus, the Prime Minister, that the matter should not go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and for very good reasons.

In this case we are dealing with the terms of reference of a document purporting to set up an investigation into the conduct of various members of this house who are Privy Councillors, including the former prime minister of this country, as well as Privy Councillors no longer in the house, some of whom are alive and some of whom are dead. How in the world these latter can prove their innocence I know not. That is precisely the effect of this document, and I would ask the hon. member for Medicine Hat how he would like to appear before the criminal courts of this country with the only allegation against him that he was charged, with nothing more being said.

An hon. Member: How would you?

Mr. Nielsen: I hear an hon. gentleman across the way asking how I would like to appear. I should not like to appear before any judicial inquiry on that kind of basis. I would want to know what it is the right of any subject to know, let alone a member sitting in this house who has had to suffer the blackening of his name in this kind of way, namely, what I am charged with. Otherwise how am I to answer?

I would submit, sir, that the tests dealing with the investigation of the conduct of a member are set down, as your Honour so rightly pointed out, by Speaker Michener in the ruling which was quoted by you both on Thursday and on Friday. What Your Honour and Speaker Michener said was this:

> In my view, simple justice requires that no hon. member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the house or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

That is the situation. This is the principle which protects not only the rights of the members of this house but the rights of every subject of this country, indeed of any democratic country. It applies equally as well, sir, to the kind of device which has now been set up, as is set out, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. This Order in Council constituting what the government purports to call the terms of reference of a judicial inquiry is a most incredible hodge-podge of vague generalization, disconnected and unattributed charges, unspecified allegations of deeds committed by unnamed persons and based upon hearsay, information which the minister says he has been briefed on and which came out of a file he has never seen.

Mr. Cardin: I have staked my seat on my allegations.

Mr. Nielsen: Surely the Minister of Justice cannot overlook the fact that in this country justice is not administered on the principle that any person can be charged on the basis of hearsay evidence.

Mr. Cardin: Just have the judicial inquiry and you will see what happens.

Mr. Nielsen: Are we establishing the principle that anyone can be called before the courts of this country on the basis of "Did you hear that so and so did such and such?"

Mr. Cardin: Just have the judicial inquiry and see what happens.

Mr. Nielsen: Or is it the basic fundamental requirement of justice in this country that before any accused person stands to answer for his conduct he must know exactly with what he is charged and by whom? I ask, is that not the principle? On these terms of reference one may as well ask a judge to inquire into the content of the wisps of cloud floating over the Peace Tower. The only name mentioned in this document which sets up the inquiry is Gerda Munsinger. Does the Minister of Justice want to try her? This was, no doubt, the only name which the government thought safe to mention. The word "minister" or "ministers" does not appear in the Order in Council at all.

There is reference in it to a statement made by the Minister of Justice in a letter dated March 11, 1966 to the Prime Minister with reference to a case involving one Gerda Munsinger. This letter was read to the House of Commons on March 11, 1966. The first paragraph of the letter has no bearing on the subject matter of this inquiry and is already in Hansard. The first half of the second paragraph of the letter has no bearing for the same reason. The last sentence is an exculpatory sentence and surely should be deleted from any terms of reference setting up an inquiry because it interferes with the very thing which the judge has to decide for himself.

That is the first head upon which this inquiry is to be set up. Yet nowhere in the letter referred to does the name "Gerda Munsinger" appear. It appears nowhere. There is a reference to a press conference which, as the terms of reference set out, included statements about involvement with the said Gerda Munsinger. It does not say whose involvement or what involvement or what was wrong in that involvement, assuming that any involvement took place. We do not even know that from the Minister of Justice.

The Minister of Justice starts out by saying, "among other things." What other things are those? What other things are going to be charged by the minister? The terms of reference contain the words "statements about involvement". I think that we as members of this house, before we pass judgment on an Order in Council setting up such an inquiry, must expect answers to these questions.

Who was involved? Was it other women? Was it other men? What persons were involved? What were their names? What members of the house were there? What Privy Councillors? What Privy Councillors here? What Privy Councillors elsewhere? What ministers? Does it refer to ministers here or to ministers there? What Montreal underworld figures are meant, because they have been mentioned? What sports figures are meant, because they have been mentioned? Who else is there? What is the inquiry about? Whose conduct is the inquiry going to investigate? The Order in Council does not say. It contains a statement about failure to seek the advice of the law officers of the Department of Justice. It does not say who failed or why that advice should have been sought in the first place. It does not say why it was wrong not to seek advice because, of course, they cannot say that.

How were those unnamed persons involved? Everyone has the right to know with what he is charged. What about the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees)? He said he had lunch with Gerda Munsinger.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, yes indeed. Do the minister and the government want to know what was on the menu?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: Do the minister or the Prime Minister and the government want to call the bell captain to find out how large a tip was paid? What are we inquiring into?

An hon. Member: Gerda.

Mr. Nielsen: Any accused person has the right to know with what he is charged.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: That is where the government is prostituting the basic concept of justice in its terms of inquiry. The terms of inquiry go on to say that there were circumstances that may have constituted a security risk to Canada and that the case was not properly handled. The minister said, "I think there was a security risk." The minister said that it is a bona fide security case. Why is not that same positiveness expressed in the terms of reference in the Order in Council? Why is there the use of the words "may have involved a security risk"?

The minister has made charges that there was a security risk involved. That is what he must answer to. The hon. member for Kamloops has said that there was no breach of security involved. It is upon that narrow issue that the minister must substantiate, as the leader of the New Democratic party and as we have said before, his charges before that inquiry. If the Minister of Justice fails to do so, then in keeping with his Prime Minister's own statement his seat is on the line.

Nothing could have been more categorical than those statements of the minister. Now they have been watered down to something which is hypothetical, to words such as "may"—"may have been a security risk."

How can a judicial inquiry investigate what might have been? How can any judicial body investigate a hypothetical situation? The inquiry has now invited us all to enter the never-never land of conjecture, hypothesis and imagination. How in the name of commonsense, I ask you, let alone in the name of justice, can an inquiry be set up on such a basis? There is not one hard, solid, factual proposition in the whole sorry mess which they like to call terms of reference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: Before I go on to discuss one or two terms in the terms of reference with which I take issue, I think it would be useful to read the terms of reference into the record:

March 14, 1966.

The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, advise that The Honourable Wishart Flett Spence, Ottawa, Ontario, be appointed a Commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries Act to inquire fully into a statement by the Minister of Justice in a letter dated March 11, 1966, to the Prime Minister, with reference to a case involving one Gerda Munsinger, which was read in the House of Commons on March 11, 1966; into all statements concerning the case in the House of Commons on March 4 and March 7, 1966—

What about the statements that were made on March 10?

An hon. Member: Read the next part.

Mr. Nielsen: It also contained matters—

An hon. Member: Read on.

Mr. Nielsen: I will continue reading:

—and into all statements by the Minister of Justice in a press conference on March 10, 1966,—

That does not cover the statements made by the minister on May 10.

An hon. Member: It does.

Mr. Nielsen: Does somebody over there to my left say it does?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: Is that someone in the house?

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would the hon. member draw attention to any passage in Hansard on May 10 where the Minister of Justice is quoted.

Mr. Nielsen: I beg your pardon. I meant March 10. I apologize. I shall be referring the hon. member to those pages in the hope that those statements will be included in the amended terms of reference. I continue reading:

—which, among other things, included statements about involvement—

There is nothing about improper involvement; it is simply involvement.

—with the said Gerda Munsinger, about failure to seek the advice of the law officers of the Department of Justice—

There is no allegation that it was the right thing to do, that it was the right thing to seek the advice of the law officers of the Crown on the part of anyone.

Mr. Favreau: Ah, ah.

Mr. Nielsen: On the part of anyone at all. I hear the President of the Privy Council saying "ah, ah," This has no parallel whatsoever in connection with the matter which brought about his sorry downfall.

An hon. Member: Read.

Mr. Nielsen: It has no parallel whatsoever. I continue reading :

—that there were circumstances that may have constituted a risk to the security of Canada and that the case was not properly handled; and to enquire whether the case was handled in accordance with the rules and principles normally applicable to persons having access to classified information—

What rules, Mr. Speaker? What principles and where are they? Where do we find them?

He who accuses must prove what he alleges. Let us have an accusation. I continue reading:

—and into all the relevant circumstances connected therewith, and in particular but without limiting the generality of the foregoing to consider fully all reports submitted to the government or any member of the government of the day and any evidence laid before them in connection therewith and any further evidence elicited by or laid before the Commissioner and to consider such other matters as may appear to the Commissioner to be relevant and to report thereon.

There is a reference to the rules and principles normally applicable to persons having access to classified information, and whether the case was handled in accordance with those rules and principles. By whom, Mr. Speaker? By whom? By the Minister of Justice. By the existing Minister of Justice? There is some doubt about that. Or does it means by the former minister of justice or by some clerk in his office? The minister shakes his head as much as to say "no".

• (9:20 p.m.)

Let him say so in the terms of reference. Let him name the people who improperly handled this matter without having regard to the rules and principles applicable in this kind of case. Was it perhaps one or another of the deputy ministers of justice? Was it one of those individuals?

What about the rules and principles that are normally applicable? Where are they laid down? By whom are they set out. There is a further requirement in the terms of reference:

—to consider fully all reports submitted to the government or any member of the government of the day and any evidence laid before them in connection therewith—

Presumably "therewith" means any evidence in connection with the reports, but what reports? What reports are specified in the terms of reference? They say, "all reports submitted to the government or any member of the government". What reports about what? Reports by whom? Reports about whom?

Mr. Churchill: Reports on immigration in 1955 maybe.

Mr. Nielsen: There is also a requirement in the terms of reference to inquire into "all statements concerning the case in the House of Commons on March 4 and March 7, 1966." What about March 10? What about March 11? What about today? The minister made some very damaging statements in the house today.

Are the statements of the former minister of justice, the hon. member for Kamloops, not to be considered by the inquiry and only the statements of the Minister of Justice on March 4 and March 7? What of the statements about Privy Councillors made in the house and some outside it? Do they now appear before this inquiry? On what grounds? Does their appearance before this inquiry mean a confession or, to use the term in the terms of reference, an involvement?

That is precisely what it will be taken to mean.

Sir, I appeal to hon. members to accede to the suggestion of the hon. member for Kamloops because there is no one in this party, indeed in any quarter in the house according to my observation, who is opposed to an inquiry into this case. But is there to be no protection accorded to members of the house? Are they not to have the protection afforded under the ordinary law to the ordinary citizens of this country, because that is what is being denied by these terms of reference?

Are they to be summoned to prove their innocence of involvement, whatever that means, when there has been no specific statement that there was a security risk and when the Order in Council itself talks about a security risk that "may have been"? Is this a ground on which people can be summoned to appear and to defend themselves? This is merely a device by which members of the house, innocent or guilty, can be dragged down on unspecified charges, undefined allegations, and spurious and unfounded assertions. This is an action by the government to remove from parliament the disposal of the privileges of parliament and to use the machinery of justice to destroy the opposition.

This order is without parallel, sir, in the annals of any civilized country, in the annals of any democracy since the days of the star chamber, with no offences, not one single offence, being charged.

An hon. Member: Oh, quit.

Mr. Nielsen: An hon. member says "quit". That is his concept of justice.

Mr. Tremblay: What is yours?

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member asks what is mine. I will tell hon. members opposite what my concept of justice is. It is that no subject of this country, member of this house or otherwise, shall be dragged before any judicial body in this country and required to prove his innocence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Munro: May I ask the hon. member a question? At any time during his past behaviour in this house prior to the last election and during the conduct of the election has he ever dragged down the reputation of hon. members on unspecified and unfounded charges?

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Nielsen: Here we go again—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: —with the deliberate misconstruction of hon. members opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: And they laugh. I say they can take part in this discussion and read what I said into the record. On page 4 of the report of the commission which was set up for the purpose of inquiring into the charges that I made in the house there is set forth what I said in the house at that time, something which the Minister of Justice in this case did not have the courage to do. I said on that occasion:

> The executive assistant to the minister at that time, Mr. Raymond Denis, offered a bribe in the amount of $20,000 to counsel who was acting for the United States government on the bail application with the request that he would not oppose the bail proceedings—

That was a specific charge.

Mr. Munro: Now read page 10534 of the same Hansard.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member will have an opportunity to engage in this discussion. It was on the basis of the charges I made, the names I named, the dates and places I specified, and the sections of the Criminal Code I specified during those days of debate that that commission was struck, and also because of the questions of the leader of the N.D.P. There is no parallel between that case, where a member of the opposition was discharging his responsibility to expose what he had an obligation to expose, and this case where the Minister of Justice, a member of the treasury benches, makes unfounded charges against all Privy Councillors past and present, dead and alive. The terms of reference of this Order in Council do not specify. It does not say who is guilty or what they are guilty of or even whether there has been an offence of any kind or description.

It sets out in its own language the statements made by the minister at his press conference and alters the substance of those statements in order to remove responsibility from the minister. That is precisely what this Order in Council does. In its vagueness, its lack of specification, its failure to name names, to state any offence, and its deliberately vague and suggestive generalities, it represents the ultimate betrayal of every principle of human rights, the right of the subject to know with what he is being charged, and it represents the perversion of justice to political ends. That is precisely what it does.

The hon. member for Kamloops has suggested an all-party committee to meet with representatives on the government side to consider these terms of reference, but one thing which we must not lose sight of, apart from all the other facets involved in this matter, is that it is a fundamental right of every individual in this country, of every individual in any democratic country, to have specified for him the charges which he must meet. Otherwise there can be no defence.

He must know. This group of Privy Councillors here and those absent, those with us in life and those not, must know by the accusations of those opposite who have made these charges, who it is that must stand trial. This is where the perversion of justice has taken place.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? I have been a little confused between his statements about respecting British justice in the conduct of a trial, with which we all agree, and his reference to other people having a relationship with Mrs. Munsinger, but surely he must distinguish between an inquiry and a trial. I do not think anyone is suggesting that a trial is being held here. Surely this is an inquiry to establish the facts to the satisfaction of all. I would be very glad if the hon. member could make this distinction between a judicial inquiry to ascertain facts and a trial, the nature of which he appears to have been describing.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: The applause the minister has received and the basis of his question indicates to me—

Mr. Tardif: Answer the question.

Mr. Nielsen: I will answer the question, and the hon. member for Ottawa or whatever district he comes from—Russell—should stand up and participate in the debate instead of interrupting.

An hon. Member: He has not said a word in five years.

Mr. Nielsen: I will answer the minister—

Mr. Tardif: Do not call me the member for Ottawa. I am the member for Russell.

An hon. Member: Nobody knows you.

Mr. Nielsen: I say in all seriousness to the minister that the terms of reference contained in this Order in Council, which sets up what purports to be a judicial inquiry, in effect set up an inquisition, because the minister surely must agree that before anyone is required to appear before any judicial tribunal—and there can be no argument about this being a judicial tribunal—rather than being required to appear on the basis of vague charges first of all the person has to know with what he is being charged.

An hon. Member: Who is being charged?

Mr. Nielsen: He is being charged, if you look at the terms of reference, in a very vague sort of way. Certainly he must know precisely with what he is being charged. That is fundamental. The President of the Privy Council adopts an expression as though to say it is here but it is not here. If he will recall the events leading up to other commissions and other orders in council which were drawn to inquire into specifics, into the conduct of specific ministers—

Mr. Pearson: No, it was not.

Mr. Nielsen: Into the conduct of a specific minister—

Mr. Pearson: No.

Mr. Nielsen: If you look at the order in council you will see it is there. That is the distinction.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, may I ask another question? I do not think the hon. member has quite met my point. Is the hon. member suggesting that no one can be called before Mr. Justice Spence to give information which would lead Mr. Justice Spence to ascertain what the facts are unless a formal charge is made against that man, that is, that no person can be called as a witness to give information unless there is a formal charge? Is that what he is saying?

Mr. Nielsen: Let us just refer to one other commission to draw an analogy to what I mean. I am suggesting to the minister and to the government which he represents that what must occur in these terms of reference is that persons against whom allegations are made must be named and that the allegations must be specific. The New Democratic party says the same thing.

If I might refer to the Order in Council setting up the Dorion inquiry, the minister will find that the conduct of a specific minister—and I will not name him for fear of offending sensitivities—was the subject of the inquiry.

Mr. Pearson: Read the Order in Council.

Mr. Nielsen: That was part of the subject matter of that inquiry.

Mr. Pearson: Read the Order in Council.

Mr. Nielsen: There were two Orders in Council. It is there. The minister knows it is there.

An hon. Member: Try to sweep it under the rug.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired. The hon. member for Lapointe.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the master this afternoon, we have just heard the pupil tonight. The master still has some imagination, while the pupil has just repeated the speech he already made twice on Thursday and once on Friday.

Some hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grégoire: However, it is by repeating that we learn Mr. Speaker. Boileau said.

A hundred times consider what you've said;
Polish, repolish, every colour lay.

This only makes four times but through practice, I am not suggesting that the pupil will become as great as his master—that is difficult, because the master is a champion—but with time, he will learn.

I heard this afternoon the Leader of the Opposition state: There is no security case as far as we are concerned today, because the member for Kamloops has just proved it.

He posed as a judge, as the jury, then as the executioner, and he became the prosecutor, exactly what he always took exception to when the government refused to have an investigation made.

He decided that there was no security risk, but that is what we want to know.

A question was put a few minutes ago to the former Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), but he left it unanswered. What type of file was involved?

Why did we not get an answer? Was it a security case, a theft, a murder, indecent acts, or what? The member for Kamloops did not provide an answer.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

• (9:40 p.m.)

Here is another question which has not been answered, Mr. Speaker. Why did the former Minister of Justice hasten to call the Prime Minister? The Prime Minister replied: immediately, in my office. I visualize the Justice Minister rushing down to the Prime Minister's office.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to call your attention to the fact that if the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is not here, he will not be able to say that he has gone fishing.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): He has gone to the R.C.M.P. to pay for your parking tickets.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, he blames the hon. Minister of Justice for his absence. He has gone fishing; but now he is not here, he has left of his own accord regardless of Standing Order No. 5.

Mr. Ricard: He has gone to the R.C.M.P. to pay for your parking tickets.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I can just see the Minister of Justice arriving at the Prime Minister's office. Everything is held up. The visitors will just have to wait. The door opens wide: come in, Mr. Minister of Justice. Really urgent, eh? Why all the rush?

Mr. Ricard: So you will not lose any time getting in the R.C.M.P.'s office.

Mr. Grégoire: What was the hurry, Mr. Speaker? A routine matter, we are told. Nothing urgent about it. We do not even know what was written in the file. We do not know the purpose of the file. They do not want to tell us. No inquiry was necessary.

Here, Mr. Speaker, are three thick volumes in which the Leader of the Opposition often asks: what are they trying to conceal? What are they hiding from us, Mr. Speaker?

And whoever analyses the gestures—and I noticed it this afternoon and that is why I say to the pupil that he has far to go before reaching the level of his master—whoever analyses the gestures of the Leader of the Opposition when he is speaking: he points out something with one finger only, not two, that is very good, and he says: We want an inquiry.

What is it hiding? What is hidden underneath all that? And notice the manner of speaking—I noticed it, and the pupil should also notice it—when there is a question, it is short and to the point; when there is an insinuation, it is long.

It goes this way and that way, Mr. Speaker, it never follows a straight line; it sails the dark waters of insinuation. It is masterful. The pupil should take note of that.

I think that for all of us, including the Liberals, the oratory of the Leader of the Opposition can be a lesson. I am sorry that we did not ask our students of "rhetoric" to come and hear a great orator.

Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) ask: But, who is mentioned? There is Mrs. Munsinger. But who else? Men? Women? Ministers? Former ministers? Members of parliament? Former members of parliament? Who?

There is one, Mr. Speaker, and there is no doubt in my mind, it is the former Prime Minister who acted improperly in a case concerning the security of the state. That is the heart of the matter. And in spite of efforts to hide and cover up the truth, it will always remain so for the one who blamed the government for acting improperly in other security cases. That will be the question. A man stands accused, the former Prime Minister, who would have acted improperly in a case concerning the security of the state. Nothing else is before Parliament at this time.

All devious means will be resorted to. Attempts will be made to divert our attention, as the member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) tried to do this afternoon by mentioning an incident no one knew about, namely the interview he claims to have had with the president of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau).

My attention will not be diverted, Mr. Speaker, for a serious charge has been made. There has already been a case where the security of the State was not dealt with as it should have, and the accused, in this instance, is the former prime minister.

Some claim this is hypothetical. Well, if it is, I know someone's chair, that of the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin), will be pulled out from under him. But, if it is true, then the seat of the present leader of the opposition will be thrown out into the river. It is as plain as that, Mr. Speaker.

Attempts were made to divert our attention. Was Mrs. Munsinger involved in spying activities before coming to Canada? That is not the question. Here is the question: is it a fact that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition mishandled a case where the security of the state was endangered?

Mr. Speaker, there are so many things that we are bound to get confused. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition said on February 28, 1966, as can be found on page 1878 of Hansard—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member for Lapointe, but may I point out to him that in the course of the speeches we just heard, hon. members tried to limit their remarks to the terms of reference of the Order in Council that has been proposed by the Prime Minister this afternoon. I, therefore, invite the hon. member, to limit, if possible, his comments to that particular subject.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, a while ago, the chair was occupied by someone else when the hon. member for Yukon spoke. I think that he did not dwell very long on the subject to which you would like me to limit my remarks. But what I would like to quote from Hansard is connected with the said matter.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition, as recorded on page 1878, left hand column of Hansard of February 28, 1966 speaking about the Spencer case:

> I immediately add that when the government says security procedures might be revealed I accept that explanation, but—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Can the hon. member connect his comments with the terms of reference. As he knows, we have had some difficulties these last days, precisely because it was very difficult to connect the members' comments to a specific question.

Quite happily, in my opinion, we have at this time something or a subject to which the hon. members may refer, that is the terms of reference contained in the order in council. I would, therefore, invite the hon. member to co-operate with his colleagues in the house, as well as with the Chair, to limit the discussions, at this time, to the main subject.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, very well. Now, the quotation I wanted to bring forward was a reference to a sentence of the former leader—the Leader of the Opposition who will be the former leader a little later—with reference to a judicial enquiry or terms of reference. However, I will be able to quote it later within the framework of the terms of reference under discussion at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I heard some people say that the terms of reference were not broad enough. I have here a certified copy, a true copy of the proceedings of a privy council committee meeting, approved by His Excellency the Governor General, on March 14, 1966, which gives the terms of reference.

On reading it over again, I wonder how anyone could think that the terms are not broad enough.

It is mentioned among other things:

—into all statements by the Minister of Justice—

"into all—", it is not said into a part of them but "into all". If there is something broader than the word "all", meaning comprehensive, well I would like to know what it is.

Further on, the press conference is mentioned in the following words:

—all statements by the Minister of Justice in a press conference on March 10, 1966, which among other things included—

There is reference to what was included, but with no intention of limiting, it is said "among other things". "Among other things" is thus included in the terms of reference.

And further on, it says:

—statements about involvement—

This term of reference is not restricted, Mr. Speaker. On the contrary, it is made as general as possible: "concerning persons involved in this case". This wording is very general.

Further on it says:

—as well as circumstances that may have constituted—

As one can see, dates, persons, circumstances are mentioned—

—and into all the relevant circumstances connected therewith—

• (9:50 p.m.)

There again, it is said:

—and into all the relevant circumstances connected therewith, and in particular but without limiting the generality of the foregoing to consider fully all reports submitted to the government or any member of the government of the day and any evidence laid before them in connection therewith and any further evidence elicited by or laid before the Commissioner and to consider such other matters as may appear to the Commissioner to be relevant—

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if there are not enough words in all this to satisfy the official opposition, nothing would satisfy them.

Then, I should say: the order is perhaps too general or too broad for them. The terms of reference are formulated in such general terms that they are afraid.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

On the second page, the following is to be found:

The committee recommends further
1. That the commissioner avail himself of his absolute powers of appreciation—

This is not a relative power, Mr. Speaker, but an absolute power.

And, continuing:

—as to the procedure—

Mr. Speaker, is there a more general, a wider term than absolute? To my mind, there is none. Even absolute cannot exist on this earth, as is well known.

The order in council continues:

That the commissioner be authorized to exert all powers provided under section 11 of the Inquiries Act;

Once again the words "all powers" are used. This is a general, a wide term, and efforts are being made to restrict it, although it is provided for in an order in council passed March 14, 1966, today. And they refuse to accept those terms of reference.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to read a quotation which illustrates my thought and shows also that arguments such as mine have already been used. As is shown on page 1878 of the official report of the Debates dated February 28, 1966, the Leader of the Opposition said:

I immediately add that when the government says security procedures might be revealed I accept that explanation, but that does not justify the refusal to call together an inquiry presided over by a judge or judges sitting in camera.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we of the Ralliement créditiste have been asking for since the first day when this question of privilege was studied: a judicial inquiry.

On the same page, in the opposite column, the Leader of the Opposition said:

Who is hiding the facts here?

Today we can ask him the same question: Who is trying to conceal the facts? And that, when a judicial inquiry can determine the true facts and whether we are faced with an assumption or simply facts indicating that someone acted improperly in connection with the security of the state.

Earlier, Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. member for Yukon ask the Minister of Justice to set down his charges clearly and substantiate his allegations.

The inquiry will prove that; charges will have to be made at the time of the inquiry. We have always understood that when there is a judicial inquiry, complete charges must be made. That will be done then; the house is not the place for doing so. We were told there was no danger, there was nothing to fuss about, that it was looking for a needle in a haystack. Yet, Mr. Speaker, it becomes more and more obvious that an inquiry is a must.

We note that the R.C.M.P. have a file on Mrs. Munsinger, a file deemed important enough by the then Minister of Justice that he felt inpelled to make an urgent call on the then prime minister. It is to be noted also that the Montreal Police have a file on the same person. Also, that the same person—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member now discussing the terms of reference?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, like several members who thought well to speak on the judicial inquiry itself, I take the liberty of speaking on the inquiry and on the terms of reference and the question of privilege which are being discussed today.

Not only has she a record with the R.C.M.P. and the Montreal police department, but she is reported in the newspapers as having been refused entry into the United States many years ago already.

Mr. Speaker, surely there must be reasons for that. If there are any reasons, then why seek to hide them? If all this was hidden for a long time, why continue to hide it, when the person in question has just stated that high-ranking underworld figures would want to kill her. She has a record in the underworld, she has a record with the R.C.M.P., she has a record with the Montreal police department, she was refused entry into the United States and in spite of this, she had access to the highest governmental authorities of the country. She was even seated at the head table during a fund raising dinner given by the Conservative party, at which the Prime Minister was the guest speaker. Mr. Speaker, I admit—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member not feel that he is outside the scope of the terms of reference?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, you will agree with me just the same that I am trying to prove that an investigation is essential. If, after all this, an investigation is not essential and when I see some members trying, by camouflage and devious means, to prevent this investigation, I feel duty bound to prove that such an investigation is necessary.

Mr. Speaker, it was mentioned on many occasions that the respect of democratic traditions must be restored in this house. We agree with this. But first of all, some light will have to be thrown not only on some events outside this house, but also on certain events which took place in this house in the past two or three years.

I think that the inquiry which has been set up will allow to throw this light. Charges have been made. The main one deals with the part played by the former Prime Minister in a matter of security of the state. We must know the facts, and in full. This being done, about all the inquiries which have been requested—here I want to join the members for York South (Mr. Lewis) and for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), who mentioned it—we shall have to go back to the business of the house, to apply ourselves to legislate for the good of the Canadian people. Numerous pieces of legislation have to be passed, which have not yet been considered. This will have to be done and I believe that all the members must make it their duty to put an end to this as soon as possible, in order to go back to the business of the house. Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might have the indulgence of the house for one minute to make an appeal that we get back to our normal course of work tomorrow and deal with some of the business on the order paper. This order in council which has been passed and which has set up the commission, which is comprehensive in its terms, which is meant to be reasonable and not provocative or offensive in its language, will, we believe, because this not a trial but an inquiry, make it possible by its terms of reference for the commission to get to the root of the matter, and we believe that the commissioner should be given an opportunity to get to work as quickly as possible and complete his work as quickly as possible. I have not time to make the statement I would like to have made and to explain what I had in mind in drafting the Order in Council in the terms and in a way which we hoped would have met the points raised by hon. gentlemen opposite as well as other members of this house—

Some hon. Members: Yes, you have the time.

Mr. Pearson: —but I would hope that we would abandon this particular question of privilege, go ahead with the inquiry and above all get back to the work of this House of Commons.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Who disrupted it?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister whether he would accept the suggestion for an all-party committee to see if we can arrive at agreement.

Mr. Pearson: The Order in Council has been passed. We think it is a good and reasonable Order in Council and we think it should be carried out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: A fixed position.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I think the remarks the Prime Minister has just made point out the arrogance of this government in trying to force down the throats of members of the house the government's will. I think we should have an opportunity of discussing this matter. We want to hear what objections he has to the suggestions that have been made.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps we could take a supply motion tomorrow. Then we would be getting on with the business before us and my hon. friend would be allowed to discuss the matter on a supply motion to his heart's content and within the rules.

Mr. Starr: So far as I am concerned, the Prime Minister has lost the confidence of this house and any suggestion of his—

An hon. Member: Move that tomorrow.

Mr. Starr: —has no merit whatever.

Mr. Speaker: Order. According to the provisions of provisional standing order 39A, a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been moved at this time.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—FEED GRAIN—CHARGING OF UNREASONABLE PRICES

Mr. E. R. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, when I asked my question of the Minister of Agriculture last Wednesday I was not satisfied with the reply. I gave notice of my intention to raise the subject after ten o'clock. Of course, between that day and today we have come through a very strange, esoteric kind of debate about the privileges of members of parliament. It seems a strange contrast now that we should be discussing as the first item of business after that debate the subject of feed grain supplies and feed grain prices in eastern Canada.

On Wednesday last the Minister of Agriculture, in reply to my question, stated he was aware of the fact certain areas in eastern Canada were suffering from a shortage of feed grain supplies. He seemed to indicate, although he did not say so directly, that he was aware of complaints about high prices being charged farmers of eastern Canada for their feed grain supplies. I have received information to the effect that in some instances farmers are being charged as high as $6 per hundredweight for screenings. Unless my information is incorrect, this seems to be an almost incredible price to charge for this commodity.

Without going into all the details, Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear from the minister just what information his department has on feed grain supplies in eastern Canada. Is the situation as bad as the price of $6 per hundredweight would seem to indicate? If it is, what immediate plans does the minister have in view for alleviating the situation? I know the minister said on Wednesday that the government had certain proposals under study and legislation to establish a feed agency for eastern Canada would be introduced.

This might be very effective in the long run, but what about the immediate situation? The minister's reply was not very satisfactory on that point. There is one other aspect of the matter of which the minister should be apprised. There have been offers from certain parts of western Canada to ship feed grain direct to the areas which are so short but apparently because of legal obstacles and laws and regulations having to do with the Canadian Wheat Board and the grain trade it is not possible for direct shipment to be made. Yet in some ways this would perhaps be the most expeditious way of dealing with the problem.

I would ask the minister whether it is so difficult to look into this matter with a view to waiving the legal and regulatory requirements. Surely a case can be made from time to time for waiving the requirements of the law in order to take care of unusual and emergency circumstances. On that last point I hope the minister will have something specific to offer.

It is a fact that in the 1930's when western Canada, was going through the worst drought and grasshopper damage known, shipments of vegetables and other foodstuffs were made directly from the rural people in eastern Canada to the rural people in western Canada. This was greatly appreciated at the time, and I know that some people in western Canada have after all these years tried to reciprocate and have shown their concern and their willingness to help out. However, they have been prevented from doing so by red tape and the requirements of the law. They have asked why it is not possible for the government to waive these legal requirements to help farmers in eastern Canada to get out of the blind they are in so far as feed grain is concerned.

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are grateful to the hon. member for bringing forward this question at this time because it does provide the government with an opportunity to enunciate some of the programs which have been put into effect to alleviate the feed situation in eastern Canada.

The matter of feed grain prices is one which is regularly raised. As indicated by the minister and as stated in the Speech from the Throne, legislation is to be brought before the house for the purpose of establishing a feed grain agency which will be charged with the responsibility of acting in this area of federal interest.

Answers have been given to questions on feed grain prices. They are to be found on page 2278 of Hansard of March 7, 1966. These are the only official statistics available on the retail prices of feeds. They are reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and illustrate the provincial average prices in Ontario and Quebec before the drought assistance program became operational, and the prices at January 1, 1966.

The question is asked, "Has the crop loss assistance program led to the increase in prices?" We know that there were crop losses in eastern Ontario, for example. The two governments are providing assistance in feed purchases. The rate of assistance is $30 per ton for grain and the expenditure could reach $12 million in Ontario. This would mean the purchase of 400,000 tons of grain in that area. Since there is this program there is a greater demand for feed, and to this extent there could be an upward pressure on prices.

However, if there had been no program it is likely that many cattle would have been sold and there would have been less demand for feed and less pressure on feed prices. One can readily judge which is preferable from the standpoint of maintaining herds and farmers' means of income.

The provinces administer this program and request the co-operation of feed dealers in the redeeming of coupons. They register those dealers who wish to co-operate and thus have control over them. Indeed, quite apart from this factor price control is in the hands of the provinces except in situations such as wartime.

The question has been asked: what is being done to meet the problem of feed grain prices? First, $21 million has been provided to pay freight and storage assistance. Second, $16 million is being provided to match $16 million from the provinces as assistance in the purchase of feed by eastern farmers. Third, action has been taken by officials in the feed grain administration in the Forestry Department which has resulted in reduced rail rates to large areas of the Maritimes and negotiations are continuing on other areas. Fourth, in addition we know that the supply of grain is quite good in the east and is about 11 per cent greater than a year ago, and last spring there were significant quantities left in the east after the opening of navigation.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MUNSINGER CASE—CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should bring to the attention of hon. members that I have received from the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) a notice, as required by the standing orders, that he proposes to raise a question of privilege. I have also received notice that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) wants to speak to the question of privilege, and I have received notice also from the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

However, before calling first on the right hon. Leader of the Opposition I hope hon. members will allow me to restate very simply and very briefly what I have already said on a number of occasions since the debate now before the house began on Thursday last.

Hon. members know that according to long standing practice, as explained in citations 104, 105 and 113 of Beauchesne's fourth edition and in May's seventeenth edition at page 134, a motion has to follow a question of privilege. The house cannot carry on a debate unless there is question before it and, in the case of a question of privilege, the subject matter of the discussion has to be a motion of privilege.

I might also be allowed to mention that there can be only one question of privilege before the house at any time. On this point I might refer hon. members to a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Michener as recorded in Hansard for March 19, 1962 at page 1915. This position was reinforced by a similar ruling rendered by Mr. Speaker Lambert, as reported in Hansard of January 21, 1963 at page 2935, where Mr. Speaker Lambert declared:

> A matter of privilege cannot be raised when another one is already before the house.

• (2:40 p.m.)

The Chair would therefore at this time call on the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when speaking in the house, as reported at page 2624 of Hansard I used these words:

> What has national unity got to do with this question of charging various members of the Privy Council indiscriminately with wrongdoing approaching treason? One of our colleagues has passed on. Today he has been mentioned as one of those two or more. He is referred to as one of them; and his son, an hon. member of this house, has no right of action. There is no action that a son, however honourable be his father, can take to preserve the reputation of his father. That was the situation in the Gladstone case.

What I was dealing with at the time was the danger of smear and innuendo through failing to name alleged wrongdoers and making wrongdoing have general application to a class; in other words, branding by inference all in a class by failing to name the alleged wrongdoers. Today after looking at the press I rise to say how deeply shocked I am to learn that this statement of mine has been misinterpreted.

Before I came into the house yesterday afternoon I was informed that two different parties had called up and stated that it had been broadcast that a distinguished former colleague, now deceased, was among those believed to have been among the two or more. Desirous of doing good, I am sorry to say that what I said, not having been as clear as it should have been, has been misinterpreted. Instead of saying "Today he has been mentioned as one of those two or more. He is referred to as one of them", I should have said "He was mentioned outside of this house in a broadcast."

There was no intention, and it was furthest from my mind, to say anything that could cause any misunderstanding that in any way there was any foundation for what was being bruited around. That is one of the great dangers of witch hunting, that the brand of inference is placed on men and women without reason or justification.

I hope this explanation will be accepted. I have deep regret that the widow and family have suffered because of misrepresentations of a statement that I made with the best of intentions.

Administration of Justice

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, on this question of privilege I would say that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has perhaps explained and amplified his remarks of yesterday. He identified me and my family by referring to a former member of parliament whose son now sits in this house. That description fits no other person than my father. The right hon. gentleman's remarks were made in an attempt to show how insidious this blanket accusation of wrongdoing has become. But I do not think, and did not think at that time, that his statement was complete. He has made a complete and fuller statement today.

However, I thought I appreciated the context in which the remarks of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition were made until I saw the national television news last night, when the commentator said, amongst other things:

> As for today's debate, one big development was Mr. Diefenbaker's hint about the identity of one of the other former ministers mentioned in connection with the Munsinger case. He referred to one who is now dead, whose son is now an M.P., who cannot speak out because the government has not named names. Around here they know who he is talking about, but he did not elaborate for the record.

My fears in this respect were heightened when I received a distraught phone call from home early this morning advising me of the banner story in this morning's Halifax Chronicle-Herald which stated, amongst other things:

> Disclosure indirectly by Opposition Leader Diefenbaker that former Finance Minister George Nowlan was being "mentioned as one of those two or more" in the rumours linking former members of his cabinet with Mrs. Munsinger—

Without being political or partisan, Mr. Speaker, I make a personal appeal to the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister to stand up in this house and at least clear the dead, even though they refuse to charge the living. There are three ministers so exposed, Mr. Speaker; the late Sidney Smith, the late Paul Comtois and my father. Surely this parliament is not going to delegate its responsibilities in this regard and be dependent upon a serialized story 4,000 miles away. Unless the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister can show the good grace and compassion they have, I shall have to consider whether I care to sit in this house while my father's name is under such a cloud.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, George Nowlan was my friend, and a man for whom I had admiration and respect. Nothing I have read or seen in any report on anything has changed that admiration or respect, or modified in any way the high regard I have had and always will have for him.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I think in the context of the remarks which have now been addressed to this house, I must rise in order to deal with a situation arising out of yesterday's debate. It is not my intention to flog the Minister of Justice. I rise simply as a member of this house, as one who has occupied your position, as one who is conscious of the fundamental rights of this house and its members, as well as of the rules of this house and your responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, based upon those same rules and authorities that you, and your predecessors, have relied upon.

Today the situation is somewhat different. We have amended our rules from the day when I sat in your chair. There is no longer an appeal from your ruling. In this I heartily concur. However, in so doing I realize, having occupied that position, there is an even greater responsibility placed upon the Chair as the last repository of the rights of members, singly and collectively, against any undue action by a member, a group of members or the executive. In this regard we are all equal.

It is not my purpose to expound upon the policies of that new theory of justice that was propounded last night by the Minister of Justice, as reported at page 2628 of Hansard, in which he said that having made his charge it is then upon the Leader of the Opposition, who has seen the file, to indicate those persons who are not implicated in the charge. As a fellow lawyer, Mr. Speaker, I find that a strange theory indeed.

With these words, Mr. Speaker, I will close my remarks on this particular phase of the matter. The events of yesterday and the passage into today of this discussion have given us the opportunity of reviewing what the executive has proposed. The executive had Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday and Monday morning to consider this question, and they disclosed their proposals to the opposition some time in mid-afternoon on Monday. Since the rights of the opposition were so seriously affected, is it strange, Mr. Speaker, that I and my colleagues should want more time to put forward our views? It is not only the rights of hon. gentlemen on this side who are privy councillors which are in question in this case; it is also the rights of every member of the executive, who are our co-equals as members of the privy council.

These are the issues, Mr. Speaker. I make no apology to anyone, as I am sure neither do my colleagues, for exercising the right to consider just what is at issue and what is proposed by the executive in regard to this matter.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat last night raised a serious and important point in connection with the action being proposed by the executive. This point had been adverted to; but on mature reflection, and with the emphasis placed upon it by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, it has given me, Mr. Speaker, as a former Speaker, even greater pause, even though I too belonged for a brief period to the executive.

The question is simply this. Parliament was seized of a question which was deemed by Your Honour to be a prima facie question of privilege affecting the privacies of a certain number of members of this house. However, as I have indicated, in essence every member of this house, and equally the members of the executive, are also affected.

I say to the hon. member for Medicine Hat that it was a supreme contempt for the rights of this house for the executive to arrogate unto itself the authority to refer to another body not subject to the determination and control of this house a question involving the privileges of the members of this house.

What a precedent, Mr. Speaker. This is the beginning of the end of the privileges of this house; because if this is permitted with impunity or by default by hon. members in this house, any executive in the future faced with an abuse or an infringement of the privileges of this house will have a precedent. If any of us have any admiration and love for the institution of parliament, then we must subscribe to the principles that I am now advancing: that no executive, no executive may arrogate unto itself the right to deal with a question of privilege of this house without the full consent and reservation of this house.

I thank the hon. member for Medicine Hat for bringing forward the citations in support of my colleagues, when he advanced the same point. I thank him for drawing that to the attention of this house. I trust it will be brought to the attention of those people who sit in judgment upon us in a gallery a little higher, and that they will bring to the attention of the country that parliament is not a second rate institution to be trampled under foot by every long distance commentator whose knowledge of the traditions and the workings and the people and the issues in this house is but second hand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert: These are my words of sincere protest to this unseemly spectacle, this unholy situation that has been created from the outside, where the events, the pressures and the love of the libido seem to crowd out all else. I refer to sensation mongering and this is a sincere cry of protest on my part.

To return to the point made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, it is a serious one, and he could get all sorts of citations from May and Beauchesne to support him. There is no question whatsoever, Mr. Speaker, about the validity of the assertion that only parliament can dispose of a question affecting the privileges of parliament. No outside body can usurp this function, and this includes the executive. I was a member of the executive.

Miss LaMarsh: Make your motion.

Mr. Lambert: The hon. lady is rather impatient. Perhaps she is not as conscious of the rights of this house as she should be, as a member of my profession; and if I repeated her exact language for this house I think she would not be very happy.

Miss LaMarsh: What is your motion?

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: I say this. Nobody can usurp these rights. Yet this is precisely what has been proposed for us. The Prime Minister, in a conciliatory mood—I will concede this —introduced the motion yesterday afternoon. My hon. colleague from Kamloops surely had the right to make every point of criticism in regard to it. Did he at any point; did any one of us; did the hon. member for Yukon, ever say these were irreducible terms for consensus? Not one bit. Yet at ten o'clock, why, in all fairness and justice, did we find the Prime Minister saying to us "This is it. This is the word of the executive, and this is what will be done"? I trust those are not the right hon. gentleman's final words, because I will respect him all the more if they are not. The Prime Minister need not humpf and laugh when I say this; I say it in all sincerity, indeed in the greatest sincerity. What I intend to say in the motion I propose to place before this house is advanced with the same sincerity.

I am hoping that as a result of what I can do we shall be able to get out of the impasse in which this house now finds itself. I make no apology to anybody for taking this course—and I trust I can have a little more silence on the benches opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert: Well, I find the continual mumbling and bumbling that is going on opposite me is not conducive to debate.

What I propose, in all sincerity, is to express a valid objection that cannot be passed over without serious damage to the right of parliament to deal with its own privileges. After all parliament is not the executive, and the executive is not parliament. This issue is of such importance that it should appeal especially to those who may feel they should not behave as rubber stamps, and their number includes many of those opposite who have been here long enough to have sat on the opposition benches. I am merely making myself an echo of the sentiments they expressed on many occasions, and I think they are more honourable men for having expressed such views. I also, having sat on the government side and then with the opposition, assert that self-same right.

It is an issue which concerns hon. members to my immediate left. When I consider the remarks made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis); when I consider the remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas); and when, in particular, one recalls how a legislator of very respected memory in this house fought with force and courage along with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to protect the rights of parliament during the pipe line debate, I am just wondering what Mr. Coldwell would say now in the face of this executive order.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat dealing with this question yesterday pointed to the remedy open to the house, that is, the privilege of moving a motion once a prima facie case had been established. And he objected because no motion had been made. Well, Mr. Speaker, you and I know we had a long discussion over the nature of a motion which I put forward. You know there is an honest difference of opinion, a difference which is not all that broad. But efforts were made to put forward an acceptable amendment.

I would invite the hon. member for Medicine Hat to consult the record; he was not here during a large part of this debate. I will say this. Within the terms of the rules of this house governing questions of privilege; also within our amended rules, my hon. friend from Calgary North and others have done what they could to get a motion before the house so that we might make progress with this matter. If the hon. member would consider these efforts I think he would agree that every attempt was made to put forward a motion. I do not think anyone can be faulted because the motion he put forward was ruled out of order on procedural grounds. Now I intend to move a motion which I trust, Mr. Speaker, will be in order. I do not make any charge in my motion. It is a motion designed to deal with the objection raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, an objection which is in the minds of many members both on this side and on the other side of the house at the present time.

I think the hon. member for York South gave his approval to the course which will be the substance of my motion, one which is based on a suggestion made by my hon. friend from Kamloops. It is a motion designed to bring about a consensus between the course decided upon by the executive and that which this house may wish to take. As the hon. member for Medicine Hat pointed out, the terms of the order in council constitute a challenge to the rights of parliament and an invasion of its privileges. I say that we, individually and collectively, must always stand fast against such an infringement. We must always preserve our privileges.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Queens:

That the terms of reference of order in council P.C. 1966—482 dated March 14, 1966 and tabled in this house on March 14, 1966 be referred to a special committee to be composed of seven members of this house and that such special committee be empowered to sit at such times it deems necessary to examine the said terms of reference and to report what revisions and amendments it may recommend to this house for decision by 2:30 p.m. on Thursday, March 17th, 1966.

Mr. Speaker: Have hon. members any comments to make in connection with this proposed motion; principally on the point of order rather than on the admissibility of the proposal?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I should like to confine my remarks exclusively to the regularity of the motion which has been put before the house by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, limiting my observations to the point of order. I reserve the right to deal later with the arguments of substance which have been advanced by the hon. gentleman with respect to the alleged usurpation of the rights of parliament by the executive.

• (3:10 p.m.)

May I remind hon. gentlemen of the situation which exists. On Thursday last a question of privilege was raised against the Minister of Justice. It was raised initially by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness). Consideration was given to that matter by Your Honour, who had the responsibility to determine whether a prima facie question of privilege did exist. That decision was made; Your Honour declared that in your view there appeared to be a possible question of privilege. Then after your decision was made, Mr. Speaker, it was up to the house to take the next necessary step; that is, to propose a motion directed against the Minister of Justice, because the complaint had been lodged that he had breached the privileges of this house That is the situation which is confronting us today.

The Minister of Justice still is alleged to have committed a breach of the privileges of the house, and there is a traditional way by which his conduct can be subjected to question. You have declared, Mr. Speaker, supported by judgments made by previous Speakers, that any motion in order to meet the specifications at this time must first of all declare a special charge against the Minister of Justice. You have quoted a judgment by Mr. Speaker Michener to the effect that it is simple justice, prior to putting the conduct of an hon. member of this house under scrutiny, that a charge be preferred against him. That is the essential ingredient. It is open to hon. members to charge the Minister of Justice, to take the responsibility for making the charge, and to take the responsibility if the charge is proven to be unfounded.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: Hon. gentlemen have made several unsuccessful attempts to formulate a motion. Each motion has been declared defective by the Chair because it lacked this essential ingredient.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. MacEachen: Otherwise this motion makes no sense; it has no place within the house if it does not relate to the conduct of the Minister of Justice, because it is not open to the house at this particular time to make a motion referring an order in council to a committee. That is unheard of; it is a grotesque parliamentary device at this particular stage, but it would be completely proper and could be made later in the day in the ordinary way on a supply motion. It could be entertained then, and it would be perfectly proper; it would be a perfectly proper procedural effort on the part of the hon. member.

I suggest, however, Mr. Speaker, that when the conduct of the Minister of Justice is called into question a specific charge is necessary in the motion; but it is quite impossible under this particular guise to send an order in council to a committee for study. I respectfully suggest on this particular procedural point that the motion cannot be entertained by the Chair.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I think we should bear in mind that we are dealing with at least two and probably three separate matters at the same time. One of the things which disturbs me, and I think you will agree, is that this discussion at this stage, except during the last few minutes, has been completely out of order because we have not even had a motion. We are dealing now, at least to some extent, with the order in council P.C. 1966/482. We are dealing with the whole matter of whether there should be a judicial inquiry, and the order in council; but I think, Mr. Speaker, we would be wise to consider the overriding matter that is before this house, and that is this matter of privilege. It is a question of privilege affecting certain members of the former Conservative government.

Whether or not this motion which has been moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West is in order, it may be a way in which we in fact can initiate some kind of action to deal with this question of privilege; because, Mr. Speaker, as I said last night, I think we would be making a serious mistake for a long time into the future if we were to accept the proposition that by an order in council a judicial inquiry can in fact deal with a question of privilege affecting members of this house.

I do not withdraw from that position. I am pleased to hear the opinion of the member for Edmonton West, and I know this is the opinion of the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister, that this house is supreme and deals with its own questions of privilege. When I made this plea last night I think I was misunderstood by some of the members of the house; because the Minister of Agriculture, for example, got up and asked me a question respecting the function of this judicial inquiry. He said—and I think I am quoting him correctly although I do not have his words before me—that this judicial inquiry should gather the information, get the facts, and that the question of privilege would be decided by this house, using this inquiry as a basis for getting the information; that the matter of separating that part of the file—or wherever the information is to be taken from—must not be made public because of the security nature.

I agree; but, Mr. Speaker, the reason I made the appeal last night is that all the changes and amendments laid down by the hon. member for Kamloops in respect of the terms of reference in the order in council to me appeared impossible to make; that is, it appeared to me impossible to make all those adjustments.

I am not saying that the argument of the hon. member for Kamloops is impossible. When I use the word "impossible" I mean that it seems to me there is no possibility of agreement on all sides of the house that the terms of reference in the order in council could be accepted. Well, Mr. Speaker, if we have reached the stage where there is a complete impasse as of today in respect of the situation in which the house finds itself, then I think we must go back to the authorities, the precedents and the traditions which we have. It is easy to quote chapter and verse, citation after citation with regard to what is necessary, if we have reached that stage. The rules which we use are spelled out in the standing orders, and we have the precedents and so on to give us guidance in respect of what to do when we cannot reach agreement on all sides of the house.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that we cannot reach agreement. Therefore the next step that is clearly laid down in the rules is what I was asking should be done. It is easy to quote dozens of citations from Erskine May, Beauchesne and Bourinot as to what has to be done when a question of privilege is raised and once the Speaker has accepted that there is a prima facie case. But the most succinct one is that which you quoted this afternoon from page 134 of Erskine May's 17th edition where it says, with complete clarity, that a motion must be moved by the person making the complaint. That, Mr. Speaker, is open to any member who feels abused or aggrieved by the statements of the Minister of Justice.

[Mr. Olson.]

• (3:20 p.m.)

The Minister of Justice has not raised a question of privilege in the house. If he chooses not to name the names I cannot see any way, according to the rules or precedents, by which we can force him, or any other member, to say more than he wants to say. If he chooses not to name the names, then the only step that is open to those who feel they have been done wrong by his statements is to make a substantive motion outlining the charge.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Olson: Further, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that there can be more than the charge because, at page 102 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 113 says:

> Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the house.

Then it says this, Mr. Speaker:

> A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament.

We agree, but in our opinion this is a situation that is serious enough to justify a bona fide question of personal privilege. The citation also says this:

> It should be dealt with by a motion giving the house power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy.

Therefore within this motion they could lay out the charge as well as include the remedy.

Each of the motions that were made last Friday, and on Thursday when I was not here, although I have since read them, called for the resignation of the Minister of Justice. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that that could be included in the motion I am speaking about. In other words that is the remedy that would satisfy this question of privilege, but that by itself is not sufficient. The charge against the Minister of Justice must also be in the motion, as well as the remedy.

I can quite understand Your Honour ruling the previous motions out of order. One moved by the hon. member for Yukon, for example, just simply said that the minister should resign. There was no charge there. All that was there was the remedy.

Mr. Starr: A good remedy.

Mr. Olson: So, Mr. Speaker, the reason I raise this matter about the propriety of anyone outside this house dealing with a question of privilege affecting the members of the house, is that it seemed to me we had reached the stage yesterday, after hearing the speech made by the hon. member for Kamloops, where it was not possible to get agreement from all corners of the house on the terms of reference, or perhaps on anything else.

Let me make it abundantly clear that I think this judicial inquiry can serve a useful purpose in supplying the information that the committee on privileges and elections may need to deal with the question of privilege; but let us also be perfectly clear that no judicial inquiry, no matter how eminent, shall have the right to deal with a question of the privileges of the house. I also say there is a possibility something should be done with the motion moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

I am not going to repeat those things that the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and other hon. members said so well yesterday. We need to get this whole matter out of the house by having it investigated by the committee on privileges and elections, with whatever assistance that committee needs, so the house can get on with the job that its members were elected to do.

I think perhaps this motion could be accepted although it refers only to the terms of reference in the order in council; but I think it fails to recognize that the inquiry set up by this order in council is not going to deal with the question of privilege. So far as we are concerned the terms of reference set out in the order in council for the inquiry are broad enough, and they are not offensive; because they say the inquiry may look into all statements concerning the case in the House of Commons, all statements made by the Minister of Justice in press conferences, and into almost anything else.

If this judicial inquiry is to be but an inquiry to supply some information to the committee on privileges and elections I cannot see why there need to be any amendments moved to the terms of reference. Let us be clear, Mr. Speaker, that the judicial inquiry is not going to settle or even consider the question of privilege.

I would like to suggest to the hon. member for Edmonton West that we set up this committee of seven to deal with this matter that is before the house, no matter how difficult it may be to define that matter, but leaving out the terms of reference given in the order in council. I suggest that a committee of seven members be set up so we can have some discussions to see if we can find some kind of agreement on how we can deal with this whole matter and take it out of what the hon. member for Edmonton West suggested is this morass.

I agree with the Minister of National Health and Welfare that it would be difficult to accept the motion as it is because it does specifically set out that the terms of the order in council be referred to this committee. I think the executive has the authority to go ahead with the order in council and set up the inquiry, with or without the approval of this house, but that again does not satisfy the question of privilege that has been raised, I think quite properly.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if we can have this committee of seven consider this matter for the next two or three days—the date is acceptable; I think the hon. member said 2.30 on Thursday, March 17—if we can have this committee try to find some way out of the impasse, I believe we should go ahead with it. If not, Mr. Speaker, then I suggest the burden is transferred back to your shoulders, and what you have to do now is to insist that any member who feels he has a question of privilege must get up and move the substantive motion that is required according to all the authorities. But, Mr. Speaker, I personally, and I think my party, would rather refer the whole matter to a committee of seven which would come back with some suggestions about what can be done about this question of privilege.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the motion proposed by the hon. member from Edmonton West is a most unusual motion. However, we in this house are in a most unusual situation. I think we all agree that it is our responsibility to do something to resolve the situation in which we find ourselves.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I want to say at the outset that I do not find it possible to agree with all the things the hon. member for Edmonton West said. I do not wish to argue with him at this point but I think the record should be clear. I do not believe that the order in council that has been referred to transfers the question of privilege to the commissioner. There is no word anywhere in the order in council that does this. What is referred to the commissioner is the statement made by the Minister of Justice. The question of privilege remains with this house—indeed, it apparently remains on the floor of this house—until we do something about it. Even though I find that flaw in the argument advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton West, I agree with him that we should do something about this situation, and do it quickly.

You have ruled, Mr. Speaker, and I agree with you completely, that the only kind of motion that is in order at the present time is a motion based on the question of privilege that is before us. I thought, until I saw yesterday's Votes and Proceedings, that we were still on the question of privilege raised last Thursday by the hon. member for Calgary North, but I take it that officially we are now on the question of privilege raised yesterday by the hon. member for Kamloops. In any event, it is the same general question.

I read again two sentences read just now by the hon. member for Medicine Hat from citation 113 of Beauchesne, fourth edition:

> A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the house power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy.

This confirms what you have said many times, Mr. Speaker, that we should not still be debating this matter unless there is placed before us a motion based on the question of privilege that has been raised. I submit, if I may quote just part of that sentence from Beauchesne, that what the hon. member for Edmonton West has proposed is a motion to "apply a remedy" to the question of privilege that has paralysed the business of this house. It is a proposal that it go off the floor to a special committee of seven to see whether that committee cannot agree on something that might be acceptable to all sections of the house.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Knowles: Yes.

Mr. MacEachen: Is the hon. member suggesting that the matter of the order in council and the consideration of its terms of reference be sent to a committee or that the procedural impasse with which the house is gripped be sent to a committee for advice and recommendation? I should like his clarification on this particular aspect.

Mr. Knowles: I do not know whether the hon. member for Edmonton West intended to make this distinction, but I think he did when he used the phrase "terms of reference of the order in council" and not the phrase "the order in council" itself. It is something like the distinction that we make on second reading of a bill between the bill and the subject matter of the bill.

I submit that there is no challenge in this motion to the unquestioned authority of the executive to pass an order in council. The executive had the authority, it passed it and at the moment it is part of the law of this land. It is also possible, of course, for parliament to try to persuade the executive to change that order in council. I remind the government that this was done in the Rivard case. After certain appeals from this side of the house the government passed an order in council setting up the Dorion commission, but as a result of negotiations, the letter from my friend, the hon. member for Greenwood, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, questions and debate on the floor of the house, the original order in council was amended by the passing of another order in council.

I would say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that this is the course I see this matter taking. I do not think the house by a motion and decision, say on Thursday afternoon, can amend the order in council or tell the government what it must do. But this is a means by which we can make known to the government our general desire for a change as we did in the Rivard case, and the result of this could be an awareness on the part of the government that it would be a good idea to amend the order in council along the lines proposed by the seven-man committee.

I recognize that there are deficiencies in this amendment. I think the requirement that a recommendation be made back to this house for decision raises a very interesting point, especially the words "for decision". But surely the overriding fact is that for the fourth day in a row parliament is paralysed by an unusual situation, and if we are presented with a motion based on the question of privilege which seeks to apply a remedy to this situation I think Your Honour should allow the house to vote on the motion and say whether or not we accept this remedy.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I want to say something along the lines of the concluding remarks of the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I think we have reached one good point in this sorry mess in that we are now discussing a precise motion. Whatever happens from now on, I hope the house will support Your Honour in insisting that there be no more discussion of this matter unless there is an actual motion before us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I hope Your Honour will allow this motion. I think the discussion on it can be very brief. Perhaps it might be voted on without any discussion at all. If it is passed, this matter will be off the floor of the house and Canada will rejoice. If it is defeated, I urge the house to support you, sir, in insisting that there be no further discussion of this question of privilege unless there is another motion based on it which is properly moved and accepted by Your Honour.

In the meantime I repeat what I said at the beginning. I think in this unusual situation we should realize we have a right to pass a motion that applies a remedy and should do our best to cope with this matter by accepting the motion and applying this remedy to this unusual situation so that we can get this whole matter off the floor of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Knowles: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is making an appeal to the Chair to accept a motion which he considers, in the circumstances, defective? Is that the correct interpretation?

Mr. Knowles: I am saying that it is an unusual motion. Mr. Speaker himself has pointed out that in the 99 years of this house there has been only one kind of motion based on privilege which has been accepted. But I do not know why we should not break some new ground. We have certainly broken some new ground in the last four days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I also say to the Minister of Transport that if I had been drafting the motion I would not have put in it the phrase "recommend to this house for decision", but I do not think that because there is something in it I do not like or do not approve of this throws the whole motion out. I think the general idea of the motion, based on the whole question of privilege, that we seek to apply a remedy is one that merits consideration.

The only motion that Your Honour has said up to this point would be in order is a motion to refer this matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It is not a very far cry from referring the matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to referring it to a special committee that the house sets up for this particular purpose.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak only very briefly on the point of order and then I shall make a plea to the house and especially to the government with respect to the point of order. With respect to the point of order the two branches of my remarks will be related. It is true that we have here an unusual motion, but the house is, of course, the master of its own procedure and, subject to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, the house can say that it will accept the motion even though it is not usual and would not apply in ordinary circumstances. I hope, therefore, that the house will bear with me if I suggest that this motion is very close to what could be described as a motion dealing with the business of the house, which as I understand it can be moved at any time without notice and taken under discussion at that time.

The terms of reference setting up a commission of inquiry were tabled in the house yesterday. Those terms of reference were discussed last evening. They were, therefore, dealt with in the process of the dispatch of business, if I may use that term, with respect to what was before us; they formed, in effect, the business of the house at that time. We have now introduced a motion suggesting that the matter be disposed of by reference to a select committee to be set up for that special purpose.

I am not going to press this point any further. I say, however, that there is a basis upon which the house may quite properly find that, although somewhat unusual, this is a proper motion and should be allowed to be put, by unanimous consent if necessary.

Having said that, sir, I should like to urge upon the house the reasons I trust the house will follow that course. I am not asking anyone in any part of the house to commit himself as to how he will vote on the motion, if hon. members agree to allow it to be put. I want to make that clear. All I am asking is that the house be allowed to deal with this motion. Naturally I hope it will be accepted because I think this would be the best way of dealing with the impasse in which we are now. I want to say that very strenuous efforts have been made, by way of informal negotiations, to find what I would describe as an honourable means of disengagement from this really very damaging situation in which we are now.

Mr. Lewis: Of disinvolvment.

Mr. Fulton: I am not going to deal with those discussions. The discussions were informal and no one was committed. This, I understand, is the position. I am therefore not going to go into detail. I am simply pointing out to the house that there have been strenuous efforts made to devise means by which we could resolve our difficulty, at least for the time being, and get back to the Order Paper. Then our discussions would be at least within the ordinary routine of business.

As I said, I am not asking anyone to commit himself on how he will vote on the motion. What we have attempted to do, so far as the Conservative opposition is concerned, has been to find some means of expressing our desire for some modification of the terms of reference. We made certain proposals last evening but they were not accepted. We urge now that the matter be referred to a committee so that there can be some discussion. A 48 hour delay alone would be involved. It is possible there may be agreement. If there is not, then the government at least has the authority to go ahead.

I trust that the Prime Minister and hon. members opposite will appreciate, even although they may not agree with what we are requesting—I am not going to revive the debate so I want to choose my words carefully—that in a matter so unusual and so unprecedented, which nevertheless involves the process of making a report and passing judgment on the conduct of members of this house, surely those affected should be given the right to discuss the terms of reference under which that inquiry is going to take place and ascertain if they can be agreed upon. It is this for which we are asking.

We are asking also that we be given an opportunity now to vote on this proposal. We know—and I make no commitment, utter no threat or attach no conditions—as everyone does that this procedure cannot continue. However, we feel we must exhaust every proper means within our power of finding an acceptable method of getting out of the situation in which we now find ourselves. We think this is a proper and sensible proposal by which that can be accomplished.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, at least the opinion of the house or the sense of the house on the question should be ascertained by allowing the motion to come to a vote. I trust, therefore, that members opposite will withdraw their objections which require you to make a ruling. I have suggested a basis upon which you may rule the motion in order. Let us see if we can at least deal with this matter in an attempt to find some way of getting back to the Order Paper and getting on with our business.

Mr. Grégoire: I should like to ask the hon. member for Kamloops a question. Suppose the house gives unanimous consent to accepting this motion, will the hon. member undertake that after the vote has been taken and the motion approved or defeated the members of his party will not pursue the debate? Will he give that undertaking?

Mr. Starr: We cannot speak for you.

Mr. Fulton: I am not in a position to give that undertaking in those words. I have said that strenuous discussions have been carried on in an effort to find an honourable means of disengagement by which we might withdraw from this process. This statement was made in all sincerity. I think that assurance should be accepted for what it is. I am not the house leader and I am not in a position to commit this party. I am confident I have expressed the sense of this party and the desire of this party if we could be allowed to deal with this motion.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask a supplementary question? I have confidence in the word of the hon. member for Kamloops. Could he ask his house leader to give an undertaking that immediately after the vote we will be through with the discussion and not have any more speeches?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that after the vote is taken we wish to get on with the Order Paper. I can go no further than that.

Mr. Turner: I rise on a point of order. I should like to address a few remarks to Your Honour. I want to suggest to you that if you find the motion moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West defective you will have achieved the same result by that decision. If the motion is defective and not admissible, then on the basis of the remarks made from various quarters of the house, including those made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, there is no question or business before the house. It would be within the discretion of the Chair to ask the house to return to the ordinary business. The undertaking suggested by the hon. member for Kamloops, even were he able to achieve it, could be as easily achieved by the Chair itself if the Chair were to decide that this motion was out of order.

Mr. Lambert: Oh, boy, what rationalization that is.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Turner: I am going to suggest to Your Honour that the motion is clearly out of order. I align myself with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who seemed to imply the motion was defective and yet invited Your Honour to accept it none the less. I believe it is defective for the reasons he suggested as well as other reasons. The argument advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton West was as follows: In approving the order in council the executive arrogated to itself a decision on privilege which properly lay within the confines of this house alone, that the right to deal with questions of privilege rests with parliament, and that the order in council was thereby a challenge to the rights of parliament. I hope I have not done the hon. member an injustice by that summary of his argument.

I want to say to Your Honour that I do not think the order in council is a derogation from the privileges and rights of parliament at all, and I will suggest why. The order in council merely sets up an inquiry. An inquiry is not a trial. It is not a criminal tribunal, as certain hon. members suggested last night. It is merely a fact-finding body.

Until the facts are established there can be no question of privilege at all. It will be on the basis of facts judicially weighed and determined by a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, who is free from the pressures of this place, that the rights and privileges which apply to those facts will be determined—

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Turner: —but not until the facts are determined.

Mr. Churchill: I do not want to interrupt unnecessarily, but is not the hon. member now rather enlarging the debate? I thought we were keeping strictly to the point of order. The hon. member is now bringing out arguments which some of us would like to answer, but we are trying to restrain ourselves.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, an earlier inquiry, the Dorion inquiry, did not decide whether anyone was guilty or not guilty; it merely established facts. Following the ordinary criminal process charges might later be laid. Therefore under this fact-finding inquiry the rights and privileges of the house would not be affected. It would still be open to the House of Commons, on the basis of facts judicially determined by an impartial arbiter, to determine upon its rights and privileges.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question now to the Minister without Portfolio?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, when I have finished my statement, I shall accept the hon. member's question.

[English]

After those facts are established the rights and privileges of the house will remain intact. Therefore, since there is no question of privilege abrogated by the order in council, the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton West, not going to a question of privilege, should not properly be entertained by Your Honour.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George not feel that the statements made by the Minister of Justice, both outside and inside the house, are matters about which members may raise the question of privilege?

The statements made by the Minister of Justice, I repeat, both outside and inside the house, constitute a revelation of facts which, in my opinion, entitles any hon. member to rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

[English]

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio, if I may. I was interested in his argument but I am wondering whether he really believes that the result of the findings of a judicial inquiry or commission would not in fact have the same effect, as if a trial were held in a court of law. In other words, the result of the findings for certain members of this house—I do not now ask where they sit—will be just as inexorable as if a judge had found them guilty or innocent.

Mr. Turner: In answer to that, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the inquiry will not determine rights. The inquiry will determine facts. In the same way the Dorion inquiry did not determine rights or declare people guilty or innocent but just determined facts.

Mr. Fairweather: But after the Dorion inquiry it was surely inexorable that action would be taken and in this case hon. members would be affected just as if a trial had been held.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I refrained last evening from participating in the debate because I have no more than a passing interest in what is taking place in this Chamber. However, we are now endeavouring to bring about a measure of rapprochement, if you will, within this chamber so as to restore something of the loss of prestige and the grandeur of parliament within our country. We are trying to do something to get parliament back once more to the discharge of its responsibilities.

It has been said that there is no precedent for this motion. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, with his vast knowledge of the subject, agreed that the motion before you could be accepted. The hon. member for Medicine Hat made a plea last evening which I must say had a tremendous appeal to me.

I speak as one who, as all of us do, loves this institution. We do not want to continue ad infinitum the arguments, the disputations, the invective of the last few days. We want to get on with the responsibility of parliament. May I say to you, sir, that in the occupancy of your office in the last few days you have added adornment to the greatness of your office by the way in which you conducted yourself.

Som hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will say nothing in the course of my remarks that will in any way be provocative. Two of us in this house have a higher responsibility. All other members have an equal one but two of us have a higher responsibility, namely, the Prime Minister of Canada and the Leader of the Opposition.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

I want to see parliament back on the rails. If there is no precedent, then this is the supreme court of parliament and it makes its own rules. That was the way in which the common law was achieved. If today there is no statutory regulation about a certain matter, then the ordinary principles of equity apply. The whole basis of our parliamentary system is that we accept the traditions of the past and that from precedent to precedent we build for the future.

There is nothing in this motion of a nature to cause harm or hurt to any member of the house. Surely we are not going to be bound by the past and mummify the operations of parliament because never before has a situation such as the present one developed.

I make an appeal to the Prime Minister who I am sure, in his person and the power of the position he occupies, will join with me to forget the acrimonies and difficulties of the past and give support to this motion which has been placed before the house so that we will be doing something for Canada, something for parliament and something for freedom.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I recall someone on the other side of the house, I think it was the right hon. gentleman who has just sat down, being reported as saying the other day, "If we in the opposition stand steady, they will always give way."

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no.

Mr. Pearson: "They will capitulate."

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no. This is not capitulation.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind giving way in a good cause. I do not mind trying to find a compromise when compromise is desirable and necessary. But what have we here, Mr. Speaker? I do not want to go over old ground but I repeat that we have been out of order for three days. You have relaxed the rules, quite rightly, to permit a discussion in a situation which was unusual and which could not be brought under the rules because the opposition did not submit the kind of motion which would have been within the rules and could have been discussed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: That is the situation we have been in. Now it is suggested, Mr. Speaker, that to get back into order and get ahead with our business we should accept a motion which the greatest rules authority in this house has suggested is defective but which embodies a good idea.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, would the right hon. Prime Minister permit a question? I wish to direct a question to him because I gather he was referring to me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I was referring to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Knowles: I know how ridiculous my statement just sounded, because it seemed to refer to something that the Prime Minister said. However, he did refer to someone who had stated, in his words, that the motion was defective but that it contained a good idea. I do not think the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that.

I wonder whether the Prime Minister is aware of the provisions of citation 199 in Beauchesne, fourth edition, which give Mr. Speaker the authority to suggest any corrections that are necessary to make a motion conform with the usages of the house. I wonder therefore if it would not be possible for one to argue that the general purport of this motion is in order, that there may be a defect in it, and I think there is one defect in it, but that Mr. Speaker himself could suggest to the mover that it might be corrected.

Mr. Pearson: I realize I made a great mistake in making a reference that could be even interpreted by the hon. gentleman as referring to him because I knew that if I did that I should have Beauchesne thrown at me at once. I yield to his superior knowledge of Beauchesne but I do not think that that particular reference covers the point we are dealing with.

The precedent that we should be establishing if this motion were accepted would mean that if an order in council passed by a government in the future in the discharge of its responsibilities—and it alone has the responsibility of passing orders in council—if an order in council were passed and the terms of reference were considered not suitable by the opposition, then under the guise of a discussion on privilege a motion could be made submitting the terms of reference of that order in council to a committee for reconsideration. This would be the precedent we should be establishing and, Mr. Speaker, in this case to a committee of seven on which no doubt all five parties in this house would be represented.

That is the kind of proposal that is being made to the house. If, Mr. Speaker, you rule the motion out of order, then I hope, and I repeat the hope expressed a moment ago by the Leader of the Opposition, that we can get on with the business before us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: If, Mr. Speaker, you take another decision which results in a vote, then at least we shall have decided the matter at once and can get on with the business before us. Naturally we will abide by whatever decision you make.

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister without Portfolio and the Prime Minister made certain remarks on the point of order with which I should like to deal. First, I was a little puzzled by the remark made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that there were no charges against the Minister of Justice. Certainly the essence of the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Calgary North is a charge against the Minister of Justice that he has violated the privileges of this house.

Sir, there is nothing further that needs to be mentioned; there is nothing further that needs to be said. That is the specific charge with which the minister is charged and which the hon. member for Calgary North has brought before the house. The minister has been supplied with the particulars of the charge in that it is alleged that the statements he made inside the house and also outside the house on the Munsinger affair cast a shadow on his honour and on the integrity of members of this house. There is therefore a specific charge and I do not see why the Minister of National Health and Welfare is puzzled about a charge against the Minister of Justice.

Next, referring to a statement by the hon. Minister without Portfolio on a ruling by Your Honour respecting the question of privilege, I say that what he said does not follow. A motion based on a question of privilege is one method suggested by the hon. member who moves the motion of dealing with the question of privilege. In the present case the privilege of many members of the house is affected by the question of privilege brought up by the hon. member for Calgary North. I submit, sir, that it is clear there is nothing in the rules suggesting that only one type of motion may be moved or that only one method of dealing with such a situation should be adopted.

I submit that if the motion based on the question of privilege were found in order and that motion or the substance of that motion were dealt with by the house, the question of privilege would be finished with. But if the motion itself is found out of order you cannot just by finding a particular motion out of order kill the substantive question. I only have to refer the minister to any piece of business dealt with by the house. If a motion were made to proceed with any substantive motion dealing with government business and the motion was then ruled out of order, on the minister's argument the government's business would be finished. I submit, sir, that in that context the argument of the minister does not stand up.

Next I wish to refer to the contention of the Prime Minister that for three days this house has been out of order. It is my contention, sir, that we have been in order throughout this time. On all occasions that members have been talking about the question of privilege they have been in order in that they have the right to talk on a matter of privilege. They have the right to raise it and to suggest methods of dealing with it. There is nothing out of order in our proceedings at this time except, as has been pointed out on several occasions, that the Chair has been lenient in that three or four different matters of privilege have been talked about at the same time.

Mr. Lambert: There is one point, Mr. Speaker, that I should like to mention. If it will assist the house to get out of the impasse it is in, which was the motivation of my motion, I am quite prepared, although I reserve my rights as to the correctness of my motion, to remove the words that might be offensive, "for decision," and I can speak as well for my seconder. If this is the matter that provides the stumbling block at this time, in the spirit of co-operation I am quite agreeable to removing those words. I am sure Your Honour would agree that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was quite correct in setting forth the authority of the Chair with regard to correcting a motion in this way.

[Mr. Nugent.]

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise merely for a moment to say that those of us who discussed the possibility of getting this matter off the floor of this house and getting down to business expressed the hope that any procedural debate which might take place would be a relatively short one. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the debate on whether or not this motion is in order has already gone on for well over an hour and, with the greatest of respect, I wonder whether Your Honour is now prepared to make a ruling instead of this debate continuing any longer and the whole purpose of the discussion being destroyed.

Mr. Olson: Could I be permitted to make a suggestion?

Mr. Speaker: It is certainly true that with the consent of the house a number of speakers have been speaking more than once on the point of order. Again, I have been lenient, possibly too lenient. But the house might wish to allow the hon. member an opportunity to add a word or two to what he has already said on this point of order.

Mr. Olson: It is not on the point of order. I wish to make a suggestion. I have a wording prepared as a substitute motion. Perhaps the hon. member for Edmonton West would be prepared to listen to it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: There was a suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West that if he were allowed to do so by unanimous consent he would amend his motion. I wonder whether this should be considered by the Chair at the present time. It would, of course, require unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: You can do it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon says I can do it. Perhaps I am starting my comments at the wrong end, but if that is the suggestion made to the Chair—order, please. I suggest to hon. members that they allow me to put my views before the house. With a great deal of patience during the last few days I have listened to hon. members, every one of them, including those who have spoken more than once when perhaps they should have spoken only once on a question of privilege. But we all agree that things got somewhat complicated. One of our difficulties last week was that we had three questions of privilege before the house at the same time.

The reason was that each was followed by a motion, each of them unusual to the extent that the Chair thought there might be something so unusual about these motions that they might be in order. But they were not. We eventually came back to one question of privilege which was raised subsequently, that is, yesterday afternoon, by the hon. member for Kamloops, and I suggest this is the question which was before us until today although, as the hon. member knows, no motion was made as required by the rules. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings also brought up a question of privilege this afternoon on which no motion was moved.

So we are left with the motion moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West of which he has kindly given me notice and which we have now discussed together at length. As he says, there is a degree of disagreement whether or not it should be accepted.

Perhaps I may restate the views I have expressed on Thursday, Friday, yesterday and again today as to the general rules on a question of privilege. I do not think it should be necessary for me to repeat the citations, Nos. 104, 105 and 113 of Beauchesne, except for the one which has been quoted by a number of hon. members and which says:

> A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in Parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the House power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy.

That is citation No. 113. Now I am doing what I said I would not do. I am quoting from both Beauchesne and May.

> It is irregular to make a complaint unless the hon. member intends to follow it up with a substantive motion referring to the matter which he has introduced to the notice of the House—

That is from May's 17th edition, page 134. I would also remind hon. members that the house cannot carry on a debate unless there is a motion before it, and in the case of a question of privilege the subject matter of discussion has to be a question of privilege; in other words, not another substantive motion but a motion of privilege.

Here I express a view which is shared by many hon. members who have had considerably more experience than I have had in this matter. I may say, as an aside, that when I try to go back in Hansard to look for precedents I am always impressed to see that so many hon. members who are still in the house today have contributed the precedents upon which the Chair must rely at this time. This includes the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I may say, if it will make him feel better, that when the Prime Minister referred to the "authority on the rules", I found he was referring to the Chair.

Mr. Knowles: Touché.

Mr. Speaker: It has been said, of course, that the house is master of its own rules. That is obvious. The house can at any time change the rules and decide that it will accept a motion or not accept it. It can decide to change the Standing Orders under which the Chair has to operate. But this is not the task of the Chair.

For instance, Standing Order 41 says that the setting up of a committee is something which must be done by a substantive motion with notice. This Standing Order is before the Chair. The Chair cannot change it unless hon. members tell the Speaker that they do not want him to respect it, or any number of other Standing Orders. This is a rule I am faced with. I am faced with this practice and unless hon. members can give me a list of the Standing Orders which I should disregard I am bound by it. If they give me such a list, I will be guided by it because I am the servant of the house. But as long as I am not told there are specific Standing Orders which I have to disregard I am afraid the Chair is bound to rule according to the standing Orders which are given to me to respect and obey and which I ask hon. members to respect and obey along with me.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre quoted citation 199 and said I have the power in the Chair to suggest changes to a motion. My answer to this is that certainly the Chair can do so when there is only a question of form to be considered. But the Chair cannot take it upon its own initiative to alter the substance of a motion moved by an hon. member and suggest in what way it could be made acceptable to the Chair and to the house.

I am sure I am forgetting many of the things on which I wanted to comment, because there were such excellent contributions made by all hon. members. I know that these comments were made not so as to be obstructive in any way but so as to be helpful to the Chair, and if there was ever a Chair which needed help it is this one.

With all due respect, I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Kamloops, as, indeed, most of the hon. members who have taken part in this debate on the question of procedure, would have to agree with the Chair that this is not a motion which could be accepted at this time. It is irregular for reasons which I gave in detail when I ruled out three previous motions. I can assure hon. members that it is with a sad heart that the Chair must come to this conclusion because nothing would please me more than to be able to accept a motion which would take this matter away from the responsibility of the Chair, upon whose shoulders, it has been suggested, it now rests. But I am prepared to accept my responsibility and my responsibility is to decide that this motion should not be accepted, and I so rule.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, if I may say so, I agree with your judgment in this regard. But I had hoped that hon. members opposite would have borne in mind Standing Order 42 which says:

> A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the House without notice having been given under Standing Order 41.

It was with this sentiment in mind that I advanced my motion.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Olson: Under standing order 42 I should like to move the following motion—

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. member for Medicine Hat has a proposition or another motion to make and I am prepared to hear him.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, before that I wish to be helpful to Your Honour. I have a suggestion to make.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could hear the hon. member for Medicine Hat and before proceeding any further after I have heard him I will hear the hon. member for Yukon. I do not wish to be unfair to the hon. member for Yukon but two members rose at the same time and I recognized the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I suggest that perhaps I can hear him without prejudice to the hon. member's suggestion.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Medicine Hat on a point of order.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, under standing order 42 I would ask the unanimous consent of the house to accept the following motion:

> That a special committee be set up, composed of seven members of this house; and that the special committee be empowered to consider the "procedural impasse" respecting the alleged questions of privilege and report its recommendations to this house by 2.30 p.m. on March 17, 1966.

There may be some difficulty in respect of the language. I think you will realize, Mr. Speaker, that this motion was written here at my desk within the last few minutes. I hope it will be accepted by the house as a means of finding some way around this procedural impasse. In this committee there could be cool and thoughtful consideration given to some way to deal with the matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At the beginning of the sitting this afternoon—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before hearing the hon. member for Sherbrooke, who has risen on a point of order—

[English]

I should like to refer to the motion made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat who moved, seconded by Mr. Thompson, that a special committee, composed of seven members of this house, be empowered to consider the procedural impasse respecting the alleged questions of privilege and report its recommendation to the house by 2.30 p.m., March 17, 1966. This is the same type of a motion as one submitted to the Chair previously. I advised the hon. member for Yukon that I would do nothing to prejudice his position. I understood from what he said that he had a helpful suggestion for the Chair. The hon. member for the Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: Your Honour has a motion before you now. I was going to suggest that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out a Standing Order of which Your Honour might avail himself in order to regularize the first motion by striking out the words which appeared to be offensive to the other side, and Your Honour did not exercise that prerogative.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is there was a reference made by one member that it was within the competence of the Chair to make alterations, but in answer to this I say that my interpretation of citation 99 of Beauchesne is that these changes are only in respect of form and that this is done frequently by the Chair, particularly in committee where, because of a suggestion of the Chair, certain changes are made in a motion which has been proposed. This can even be done in the house. However, this has to do with form and not substance. Therefore I could not accept the interpretation of the hon. member for Edmonton West. I appreciate the helpful suggestion of the hon. member for Yukon.

We now have a motion and a request by the hon. member for Medicine Hat for unanimous consent for the Chair to propose this motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: It is with regret that I cannot accept the motion because there is not unanimous consent to the dispensation of the requirements of the rules in respect of putting the motion to the house.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Sherbrooke rises on a point of order?

Mr. Allard: I may be a little late in doing so, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to be enlightened on something of which I cannot make head or tail.

Last night, at ten o'clock, we were discussing the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). I am of the opinion that we should now resume discussion of the matter, by virtue of standing order 7.

Your Honour pointed out to the house, at the outset, that three members had questions of privilege to raise.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to find out whether we are always considering the question of privilege, now that three questions of privilege have been raised, one by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and two by two hon. members, or whether the business of the house has been adjourned.

Standing order No. 7 of the rules of the house provides that:

> At the ordinary time of adjournment of the house, unless otherwise provided, tthe proceedings shall be interrupted and the business under consideration at the termination of the sitting shall stand over until the next sitting day, when it will be taken up at the same stage where its progress was interrupted.

When the house adjourned last night, we were listening to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). Well, I am of the opinion that we should resume the discussion on that matter this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

The point raised by the hon. member is interesting, but obviously the ruling of the Chair was to the effect that this motion should follow the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Kamloops. No motion having been moved, the Chair allowed this morning the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) to move another motion, followed subsequently by another motion moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West, which has been rejected.

[English]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I think we have come to a position now where we in the opposition have endeavoured to do everything possible to bring about a just situation for those who are affected by this affair. We have pleaded with the Prime Minister and have pleaded with the government as a whole that justice be done, that a travesty upon the rights of individuals in this country should not be carried out and that justice should not be reversed. All of these arguments have been made effectively, I feel, and with passion. But the government is immovable in this regard. They have decided to go ahead with this plot that they have woven in order to bring about the conclusion they have in mind. There is nothing further we in the opposition can do.

I would suggest Mr. Speaker, that we proceed with Orders of the Day. Because of the fact that this would have been the second day of a supply motion and because of the lateness of the hour at which we will reach Orders of the Day and the question period, I would ask the government house leader to shelve the supply motion for today and I suggest that when we reach Orders of the Day we proceed immediately with government business as outlined by the government house leader last week.

Statement on Seal Slaughter

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I doubt very much that we can proceed with a supply motion in any event as the rule states that it must be commenced on a Monday. We would be very glad to proceed with the business outlined at page 2472 of Hansard for Wednesday, March 9.

THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West) presented, in French and English, the third report of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

IMMIGRATION

RESTRICTION ON CANADIAN WORKERS ENTERING U.S.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on February 24 last, I was asked and I agreed to table the regulations of the American government governing immigration.

I am now prepared to table them if there is no objection.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the documents to which he has just referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES

SLAUGHTER OF SEALS—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement concerning sealing operations off Canada's east coast. I am prompted to make it now in view of the numerous letters and telegrams which have and are being received by hon. members on both sides of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order in the house.

Mr. Robichaud: I hope this statement will privide hon. members with information on which they can reply to representations which they are receiving on this matter. First, let me say that adequate measures are being taken for the conservation of the seal herds by my department. These measures are based on conclusive scientific evidence resulting from about 20 years' work by the Fisheries Research Board and there is no possibility that the Atlantic seal herds will be exterminated.

Indeed, our regulations in the gulf of St. Lawrence, where the fishery in 1965 and 1966 was exclusively Canadian, are designed to increase the herds. Following Canada's initiative, taken at the 1964 meeting of the International Commission on the North Atlantic Fisheries, we expect international conservation measures in other areas very shortly.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are too many conversations going on in the house at the moment.

Mr. Robichaud: Sealing last year put an additional $1,640,254 into the pockets of fishermen in three Atlantic coast provinces and is, therefore, an important source of income to those who have access to this fishery. While we do not have the value of seals to Prince Edward Island fishermen, we do know that last year sealing to Newfoundland fishermen was worth $901,663; to Nova Scotia fishermen $549,986, and to Quebec fishermen $188,605. In addition, of course, plant workers who process the skins on shore also benefit from this operation.

Following consultation with the industry and with humane society representatives, regulations governing sealing off the Atlantic coast were revised and made much more restrictive for the 1965 season. Open and closed seasons for operations from ships and aircraft were retained as before, and a number of new control measures were introduced.

For conservation purposes in 1965 a quota was applied for the first time to a large area of the gulf of St. Lawrence limiting the kill by sealers operating from ships and aircraft to 50,000 harp seals of less than a year in age. The killing of adult seals in breeding patches was prohibited. There was a new prohibition against the killing of hood seals in this part of the gulf. Steps were taken to limit the use of aircraft in the actual taking of seals to that area of the gulf of St. Lawrence where they had already established an operation by 1964. To avoid waste, new regulations limiting the time that seal skins could be left on the ice before removal to a base of operations were also brought into effect.

I realize, however, Mr. Speaker, that the great concern expressed in the house, and by the general public in hundreds of letters, is with the elimination of inhumane methods of harvesting this resource. There has been a great deal of publicity, both in this country and abroad, which has raised a storm of protest. Much of this publicity is exaggerated and some of it completely untrue. It has been said, for example, that seals are deliberately skinned alive in order to improve the quality of the pelts. There is not the slightest basis for this assertion. The quality of the pelts would, in fact, be damaged by such an inhumane practice.

Furthermore, part of that film which was shown in Canada and abroad, and which created such adverse publicity for Canada, was taken two or three days before the opening of the seal season in 1964 and some of the scenes shown were put-up affairs which grossly exaggerated the operation which normally takes place by regular operators.

I have already expressed my belief that, in general, the methods used by sealers, are humane in that the seals are killed instantly although some inhumanity can result from careless, unscrupulous or unskilful operations.

This was clearly evident from the report just submitted to me of the visit to the sealing grounds of the official team of observers who, at my invitation, were in a position to consider on the site the methods used in the slaughter of seals in area 2 of the gulf of St. Lawrence.

We are all equally concerned over the problem of preventing cruelty. After consultation with representatives of the humane societies and the industry, measures bearing on this problem were incorporated in the regulations for the 1965 season and further restrictions were brought into effect this year.

As this house knows, I made a personal visit to the ice in the gulf of St. Lawrence at the opening of the sealing season on March 7. As a result of this visit and seeing things at first hand, I am now in a much better position to make further improvements in the regulations to ensure that seals are killed in the most humane way possible.

As I have just stated, this year several representatives of humane societies were also present in the gulf at my invitation, and arrangements were made by officers of my department for them to see the sealing operations. I have received a report from the Ontario Humane Society which was jointly prepared by representatives of provincial and international humane societies. This report, which suggests certain improvements, will be discussed by the department, following the conclusion of the sealing season, with representatives of industry and humane societies with a view to further improvement of the regulations.

Commencing in 1965, the department has greatly increased its enforcement activities. Every sealing ship has aboard a fishery officer to see that the regulations are enforced. In addition, fishery officers patrol the ice where operations are being carried out by sealers both from ships and aircraft. Officers also check on quotas at landing points. I must stress that these officers are working long hours and are dedicated to their task.

I have been assigned the responsibility to introduce and apply regulations which will prevent such abuses as we have witnessed in the past in an operation which has proven most difficult to control. I have approached this problem with a sense of responsibility, fully aware that better and proper methods of killing had to be introduced and enforced if the whole sealing operation was to be conducted in full accordance with humane practices.

I should like, in closing, to assure those who have expressed concern about the sealing operations that additional steps are to be taken to improve the enforcement procedures and even more fishery officers will be at the scene of operations during next season to ensure that regulations are obeyed. It is my intention to arrange further visits to the ice in 1967 of representatives of humane societies and associated agencies, and also to have more consultation with them in a continuing effort to see that the most humane methods possible are used.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I begin by saying that I know the minister is tremendously interested in this problem and the voyage that he took to ascertain the facts was in keeping with his desire to do everything possible. The minister speaks of the pictures that were shown in various parts of the world which gave Canada a very black eye. He stated that these pictures were certainly not true representations of the slaughter of seals. Those pictures, however, were taken last year. The minister was present during the opening day of the sealing season this year and various television organizations took pictures, which were shown across Canada. While not seen by me personally, they have been described by correspondents in various parts of this country as revolting, nauseating and shocking.

We want to do everything we can to remove the possibility of there being inhumanity in this slaughter. I have before me a Canadian Press article which says in part:

> Fisheries Minister H. J. Robichaud cuddled a baby seal and watched one being slaughtered yesterday as the annual hunt opened—> —demonstrated the killing and skinning. The minister borrowed a gaff and poked the carcass.

It goes on to say:

> One of the swilers—

A swiler is one of those engaged in this work.

> "I don't think there's any doubt that the little thing was dead when it was skinned," he said—
> T. I. Hughes of Toronto, general manager of the Ontario Humane Society, agreed that the swiler had probably done a good job of killing the pup. "He wouldn't want to do a bad job with the minister there."

Mr. Hughes suggested that some other weapon should be used. He took along a pistol and a .22 calibre rifle equipped with special plastic bullets, which indicates that he felt vast improvements ought to take place in the killing operation. The article then says:

> At the same time, Dr. N. D. Scollard, director of Toronto's Riverdale Zoo, will examine hundreds of skulls scattered over the blood-splotched ice to determine how efficient the clubbing method is.

When we were in office we brought about legislation to assure in the slaughterhouses humane killing of cattle, hogs and sheep. It is not a responsibility resting solely on the minister; I am not placing it there. We as a nation must assure that cruelty shall be banned. The pictures shown over national television this year were not of the nature to lead people to believe that everything has been done that ought to be done.

The minister has indicated that not everything has been done that ought to be done because he said that further changes will be made after an examination of the recommendations that are before him. I hope that we in this nation will not allow anything to be done that will permit the continuation of a blot on our country. To prevent the situation depicted in other parts of the world requires the strictest and sternest action so that these poor little animals shall not for private gain or decoration be subject to unnecessary cruelty.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. gentleman a question? He has referred to pictures which were shown by the C.B.C. this year. Is he aware that those pictures were extracts of the film that was taken last year? I refer to the pictures shown on "This Hour Has Seven Days".

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am told the hon. gentleman was in the pictures.

Mr. Robichaud: No, not in those pictures.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief in speaking on this topic. In the first place I would say that we appreciate the information which the minister has given us on this matter. Second, I want to say that his leadership has apparently resulted in some action being taken to reduce the cruelty which has been for so long involved in the slaughter of seals. Third, I believe, and I think other hon. members agree, this is an indication of what aroused public opinion can do to bring pressure to bear on officials to take action along humane lines. We think something has been done to reduce the cruelty involved in the killing of seals but we also believe, as I think the humane societies do, that more has to be done. We shall be watching in the future to see what continued progress is made to reduce the cruelty in sealing.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we wish to express our appreciation for the fact that something definite is being done to meet this situation. I am sure that none of us appreciates the publicity that has been given during the past two or three years to the slaughter of baby seals. It has pointed up the fact that there are still those who for personal gain will bypass even the rudimentary principles of kindness to animals. I am sure we all recognize the fact that unless these people are willing to co-operate, some concrete action will have to be taken to insist that they recognize these fundamental principles.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Just a few words, Mr. Speaker, to express to the minister our group's gratitude for his intention of handling, precisely, this problem which for many years already has caused great concern to the Canadian public because of the means used in seal hunting every season, or every year this operation is allowed.

Mr. Speaker, naturally we hear arguments that it is not worse than hunting and wounding other animals which cover many miles in a sad condition before dying.

Many such examples could be given. But a distinction must be made clearly and definitely, and that is the excuses or the methods, in short, the inhuman practices used in some areas.

Very often, when hunting, for instance, certain methods are used involuntarily, but this is no excuse for resorting to a practice or another method in some other field, like during this season when the skins of baby seals are mostly obtained. In addition, it is a hunt organized on the spot. Therefore, the practices used at present should not be tolerated.

I am sure the minister intends to introduce legislation to amend sealing regulations and, for our part, we can assure the minister of our full co-operation with a view to using efficient sealing practices in the general interest.

What methods does the minister intend to suggest? What legislation does he intend to introduce in order to indicate the methods to be used? It is up to him, but in any case, before deciding on a method care must be taken to choose the surest, the most efficient, the most humane one, so that present practices will no longer be tolerated.

We are anxiously awaiting the measures that the government intends to take and I hope it will be to the satisfaction of all, in order to put an end to this inhuman situation which occurs every year at this time during the seal hunt.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT

PAYMENT OF CHEQUES ON NON-JURIDICAL DAYS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-14 (from the Senate), to amend the Bills of Exchange Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REFERENCE TO POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Yesterday, I inquired of the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding President de Gaulle's message to the various NATO countries. The minister stated he could not give any information on this question, yet yesterday in Britain information was given. I ask the minister this: Is Canada prepared to accept the idea of President de Gaulle that Canadian troops on French soil should be under French command? Is Canada going to accept such a proposition, whether or not there has been consultation with other countries?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have read what was said in Britain yesterday, and I think they have not been more forthcoming, and understandably so, than we have.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They have been much more.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not believe so, on the basis of the information that was given in Britain yesterday. With regard to the specific question, the Prime Minister has already said the answer would be no, Canada would not.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MUNSINGER CASE—REFERRING OF PRESS CONFERENCE TRANSCRIPT TO JUDICIAL INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice arising out of the discussion to which reference was made earlier today. I should like to ask the minister if he would inform the house whether he has a transcript of his press conference of March 10? If so, is he prepared to attach a copy of such transcript to the order in council establishing the commission of inquiry? Would the minister also inform the house whether he is prepared to offer himself as the first witness before the commissioner?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt whether this question should be accepted. There is perhaps a point in the subject matter the hon. member is raising now. I think we are certainly embarking on a wrong course if we allow the hon. member to ask this question at this time.

Mr. Lewis: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, may I inform you that I know the minister is prepared to answer? I suggest, with the greatest respect, that it may serve a very useful purpose to this parliament if the answer were on the record.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: If there is agreement between hon. members that the question may be asked, I have no objection.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I think this is a very important matter. The minister may have an answer and I think at this point particularly it may be helpful.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is a transcript of the press conference I made on March 10. In order to allay the concern of the hon. member for York South and the concern in the minds of many hon. members, I would be prepared to have a transcript of my press conference of March 10, which is referred to in the order in council, transmitted along with the order in council. In so far as the second question is concerned, I am prepared to make myself available as the first witness before the commissioner in support of the statements that I have made on this matter.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question? Can the minister advise us if this is the exact transcript of the tape, without changes?

Mr. Cardin: I can assure the hon. gentleman that it is an exact transcript. If he does not think so, then I will hand him the tape.

Mr. Starr: Don't be so touchy; I only asked, I did not say.

FINANCE

CONSULTATION RESPECTING INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE BY BANK OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). Would he tell us whether there was an agreement between himself and the governor of the Bank of Canada before it decided to increase the interest rate?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, as is customary in such circumstances, consulted with me and I considered the change that was made in the bank rate appropriate in the circumstances.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Finance tell us what motivated such increase in the interest rate? Is it due to an increase in the value of Canadian currency? If so, what was the percentage of such increase?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not acceptable.

Mr. Grégoire: I wish to put an acceptable question on this matter which is very important to Canadians. Will the minister tell us if the increase in the interest rate is due to the increase in the cost of the paper and ink used to print Canadian dollars?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Later:]
[English]

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I think he remarked in an answer given a few moments ago that under the present circumstances he agreed with the recent action taken by the Bank of Canada in raising the interest rates. I am wondering whether the government is planning any other moves because of these present circumstances.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman will have to wait for my budget, which I hope will be coming down reasonably soon.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Finance?

Could he tell the house what reasons prompted the Bank of Canada to increase its rates of interest?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe this question was put earlier.

[Later:]
[English]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I have a question for the Minister of Finance, or possibly for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, does the government agree with the Governor of the Bank of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): This is not the same question as I asked—

Mr. Speaker: Whatever the hon. member wished to ask, it could not be in order after the words he had used up to this point in his question. Whether the minister agrees or does not agree with the Governor of the Bank of Canada is not a question which can be asked at this time.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I will put it this way, then. Does the government intend to react to the statement which the Governor of the Bank of Canada has made to the effect that Canada faces serious danger because of the high cost of living?

Mr. Sharp: I can answer that question very directly. The Governor of the Bank of Canada did not say that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RWANDA—REFERENCE TO POSSIBLE INVASION BY WATUSI

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the present threat of the Watusi invasion of Rwanda, poised on the Burundi-Rwanda border. I ask my question because it involves the safety of Canadian nationals in Rwanda, including some 100 on the teaching staff of the Rwanda National University.

My second question is, as a result of the fact this threat of warfare has been hanging on now for more than a month, has anything been done by the United Nations to try to relieve the situation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker; at this stage this is clearly an internal matter. There has been trouble there since January. The situation varies in intensity, and amounts almost to insurrection. There are about 100 Canadians, most of whom are at the university which is directed by the Rev. Father Lévesque.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF INTERVIEW WITH GERDA MUNSINGER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I suppose my question should properly be addressed to the Secretary of State but in her absence I will address it to the Prime Minister. It arises out of a news story in the paper which appeared on my desk a few minutes ago and announces that tonight the C.B.C. is going to give the first television interview of Gerda Munsinger to be shown in North America. The interview will form part of a one-hour broadcast known as "C.B.C. News Magazine" and also includes comments from Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa on the Munsinger affair.

My question to the Prime Minister is this. Will he take some action to prevent this performance going on the air, because it seems to me that this matter may fall within the bound of being sub judice. In any event, it is certainly a grave impropriety that such a show should be put on now, in view of the appointment of the commission.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad indeed to bring the hon. member's remarks and my reply to the immediate attention of the C.B.C.

AGRICULTURE

CROP INSURANCE—POSSIBILITY OF MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene). Has the minister met with his Quebec counterpart or any Quebec government official concerning the amendments to the Crop Insurance Act and has the minister taken cognizance of the suggestions of the Massicotte report on this matter.

[English]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINDSOR—PROSPECTIVE LAY-OFF OF FORD WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is he in a position to give us a report on the investigation into the part carried out by the department in relation to possible lay-offs of tool and die workers at the Ford plant in Windsor?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, following a meeting held on February 25 with the U.A.W. at Windsor, we sent two officials to Windsor, one from the Department of Industry and the other from the department of immigration, to inquire into this very serious problem.

Last week I received a very extensive report on the situation. At the time of the meeting the union suggested to us that the company intended to close down its tool and die room at Windsor. The result of the inquiry shows that that actually was the intention of the company. It is regrettable that the company did not co-operate more in this matter with the union, but I think we have to face these lay-offs and see how we can help the workers involved. We have asked our national employment service office to take the matter into immediate consideration.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): A supplementary question. In view of the answer the minister has given, can he tell the house whether he has any intention of seeing that the evil effects of lay-offs as a result of the automobile agreement are mitigated by making representations to the automobile companies regarding future lay-offs, so as to ensure that consultation will take place with their employees prior to a lay-off taking place in the manner in which this one did.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to do this.

IMMIGRATION

HONG KONG—SHORTAGE OF EXAMINING OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): May I direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. The day before yesterday the minister announced the opening of an immigration office in Tokyo, among other changes in the immigration set-up. Can he advise the house what he proposes to do at this time with respect to the office in Hong Kong, with a view to correcting the grave shortage of examining officers at that bureau?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Does the hon. gentleman mean the shortage of personnel in Hong Kong?

Mr. Lambert: I refer to the shortage of examining personnel in Hong Kong, which was admitted by the minister's predecessors and which I personally verified some months ago.

Mr. Marchand: This is the first time I have heard of this, Mr. Speaker. I will inquire and make a report later on.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION INTO GASPÉ-MATAPÉDIA SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. This is the third time I have asked this question and I hope he has now had time to get a reply from the C.N.R. It concerns an inquiry which I requested into passenger service in the Bay of Chaleur.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret I have not yet had a reply.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—INTERNATIONAL SUPERVISORY COMMISSION—DEATH OF MEMBER OF DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs having to do with the international commission in Viet Nam. I want to ask the minister whether recently a member of the Canadian delegation was killed in the performance of his duties. If he was, was he buried in Viet Nam; and with what flag was the casket draped at the burial?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Fane) asked me a question a few moments ago, which I took as notice. I had not fully understood whether his question had to do with an airplane accident in which one of our very able foreign service officers, Mr. Turner, was killed. Of course, that airplane in which he lost his life has not been found. With regard to deaths previous to that, the bodies of personnel serving Canada have been brought back to Canada.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Later:]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is supplementary to the question before the last one. How many Canadians were killed along with Mr. Turner in this carrying out of duties that Canada has as a member of the international control commission?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think that before giving this information I should like to check the details.

[Later:]

Mr. Fane: I should like to address a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in order to obtain a further explanation. According to my understanding of his answer to the question I was asking him, the death was not that of a Mr. Turner but of another man who was killed by his jeep passing over a land mine two weeks ago. I was informed that the casket—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked his question. We have spent a fair amount of time on this particular question. If the minister has a further answer he may ask it, quickly.

Mr. Fane: I would ask my question, now. Was the casket at this funeral draped with the flag of the United States or with the Canadian flag and, if not by the Canadian flag, why not?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question might be placed on the order paper.

VIET NAM—DELEGATION FROM VOICE OF WOMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Did the minister receive a delegation this morning from the Voice of Women to discuss Canada's role in the war in Viet Nam? If so, what progress was he able to report to them in regard to Canada's efforts to reconvene the Geneva conference?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have not seen such a delegation. I understand that they will come, I think it is, next week.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): The news reported that it was today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, I have not seen them.

FISHERIES

SLAUGHTER OF SEALS—DISPOSAL OF CARCASSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of all the interest expressed about this matter today, I should like to know whether the carcasses, after they are skinned, are used commercially?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): No, Mr. Speaker; in most cases they are not used commercially.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): A supplementary question. I listened carefully to the statement of the minister today and I know of the great interest in this matter; but in an effort to control the sealing industry would the minister give consideration to issuing licences to cover the quota in the gulf of 50,000 only to licensed inshore and deep sea fishermen? With this action he would, I believe, curtail the indiscriminate hunting of seals by people using aircraft and other means.

Mr. Robichaud: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to do this. I believe it would be pure discrimination and I do not think we could allow this in this country. I believe we have other ways of keeping full control without having to take such measures as suggested by the hon. member.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Postmaster General concerning a matter which could affect quite a large section of the civil service. Has the minister since taking office issued any regulations with respect to the length of hair male members of his staff are permitted to maintain while on duty, and particularly when in uniform?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STEVEN TRUSCOTT—RESPONSIBILITY FOR REVIEW

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and I think it is in order as it deals with the question of personal liberty, and is therefore urgent. Is the minister aware that the Attorney General of Ontario has indicated that any review of the conviction and trial of Steven Truscott is, in his opinion, the responsibility of this the federal government, and can the minister undertake to expedite his study of the facts revealed in the trial of Steven Truscott, which have greatly disturbed a number of members of the house?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the remarks of the Attorney General only through a radio report. However, I can assure the hon. member for Greenwood that this matter is under active study at this moment and that I hope to be able to make a statement very shortly.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON DEBATING PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I come back to a subject which I have raised on previous occasions. Quite a number of men are awaiting execution in various parts of Canada, and naturally the subject of the abolition of capital punishment is of very great importance not only to them but to all Canadians. Will the Prime Minister say now when it is expected to bring on this debate, because I think there should be as little delay as possible?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree that there should be as little delay as possible. I hope we will be able to get on with the consideration of this vitally important matter immediately after we complete the business before us; or, if not, then within the next day or two. There may be one or two small measures which have to be dealt with very quickly because of certain time limitations, but it is our intention to proceed with the matter mentioned by my right hon. friend immediately after them, and, of course, after the supply debate has been dealt with.

WINTER WORKS

RIVIÈRE-AU-TONNERRE—PAYMENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Labour?

[Mr. Brewin.]

I would ask the Minister of Labour whether he has received a telegram from the United Steelworkers of America, local 6797, Sept-Iles, asking him to make representations to the officials of the unemployment insurance commission, so that the workers engaged in the winter works of the municipality of Rivière-au-Tonnerre may get their unemployment insurance benefits without delay?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. member can put such a question under the circumstances.

Mr. Blouin: Mr. Speaker, this is very important and very urgent.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member does not admit the correctness of the ruling of the Chair, he can always report the matter for further debate upon adjournment of the house.

Mr. Blouin: Ten o'clock tonight.

EXTENSION OF OPERATIVE PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in his capacity as future minister of manpower?

Following the telegrams sent to the minister by various municipalities throughout the country with respect to winter works this year, and since those works have been greatly delayed due to the weather, does the minister intend to announce shortly in the house his decision to extend the period for winter works?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember having stated that we would extend the period for winter works. We received a few telegrams, but the extension of this period is not being considered this year.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

MEETING WITH WESTERN MAYORS RESPECTING REDUCTION IN SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Some time ago in this house the Prime Minister agreed to a cabinet meeting with specific representatives from Calgary to Winnipeg regarding adequate passenger rail service on the Canadian Pacific. My question is, has a definite date for this promised meeting been set?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): A definite date has not been set, because it was understood, as I think the hon. gentleman knows, or perhaps I should say that it was our understanding that the representatives of the municipalities, of the cities out west also wanted to appear before the parliamentary committee. I think there would be no difficulty about agreeing on a day or two days in succession when they could see a committee of the cabinet, and appear before the other committee as well. We want to make it as convenient as we possibly can for them.

Mr. Pascoe: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has a request been received from these specific representatives to have the cabinet set the meeting date first, so that they could make arrangements for a meeting on that date?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am afraid I should have to inquire into that. I have been rather preoccupied for the last day or two.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I want to ask the Minister of Transport a question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister suggesting or recommending that all of those who have petitioned and appealed the judgment handed down by the Board of Transport Commissioners should appear before the standing committee to argue, or present their viewpoint.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir, but I did understand from an inquiry made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Pascoe) that the group, whose spokesman was the mayor of Moose Jaw, wanted to do both. I think it would be a convenience to them if we could arrange things so that that could be done on one single trip, particularly in view of the shortage of passenger service.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

R.C.A.F.—CURTAILMENT IN FLIGHTS OVER FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister advise the house whether there have been any curtailments of R.C.A.F. overflight privileges over France, utilizing Marville in its United Nations operations to North Africa or the Middle East?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Is my hon. friend suggesting recent curtailment?

Mr. Lambert: Yes.

Mr. Hellyer: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. I will have to take that question as notice. If there are any curtailments I will advise my hon. friend.

Mr. Lambert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister ascertain whether there have been some rather odd delays of one day, which have thrown schedules out?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, I will be glad to ascertain that, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SECOND PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I would ask him if he is ready to comment on the negotiations between Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Canadian Westinghouse.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to have a chance—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that it is not in order to ask whether a minister of the Crown is prepared to comment on a certain situation. Certainly that is not a proper question.

Mr. Reid: May I rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday as reported in Hansard the minister said that he would have to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) concerning the state of negotiations between Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Canadian Westinghouse. I would ask the minister if he could give us the information now.

Mr. Pepin: I think it would be fair for me to answer the hon. member for Moose Mountain, who asked me yesterday where the heavy water plant project of the Canadian General Electric Company would be located. Mr. Speaker, the 90 day survey period agreed upon between C.G.E. and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited will end on Friday next, March 18. We shall have to wait until that date to get a decision.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Due to the continuing rise in the cost of living, will the government not act and legislate forthwith, to allay the burden of these high costs upon Canadians of meagre and limited means?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): My hon. friend should wait for the budget and the financial legislation which will be embodied in it.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INCREASED PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Prime Minister if there are any further statements he might make in regard to the possibility of the increase in the old age security payments.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON BILINGUALISM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Prime Minister a question about the forthcoming announcement concerning bilingualism in the Civil Service. I do not think he fully understood my question. One part of my question was this: Has the government's committee on this subject received a report from the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, because I know that they have been making a considerable study of that subject.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): When the interdepartmental committee was considering the matter, I understood they had talks with employees representatives of the Bilingualism and Biculturalism Commission, who were concerned also with this matter. They had an exchange of views at this time, and that was of assistance to the interdepartmental committee, and the report.

[Mr. Pepin.]

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRODUCTION OBJECTIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder if he would some time in the very near future, prior to the beginning of seeding, make a statement that would indicate objectives for grain producers in western Canada.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to take this question as notice. I am not sure whether it comes under my department, or under that of the Minister of Finance in his capacity of being in charge of the Wheat Board. I shall be glad to take it into consideration, and to give the hon. member an answer shortly.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COWAN—OBSERVATIONS IN DEBATE BY HON. MEMBER FOR KOOTENAY EAST—TRUSCOTT CASE

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): I rise on a question of privilege in which I know I am associated with a number of hon. members of this house—and as the facts are outlined I am sure I will be associated with the majority of hon. members of this house. This is the first appropriate opportunity which has presented itself since last Thursday night for me to rise on this question of privilege.

Last Friday afternoon during a day-long discussion of a certain matter, one of the members of this house made a reference to the judiciary and spoke in these terms:

> —it was the establishment again coming up with some idea of how to get out of this mess and how they could, by suggesting a judicial inquiry, shove it off on to some unbeknown judge who would work on their behalf.

At this point the Minister of Labour rose in his place, quite properly, to state:

> On a question of privilege, the hon. member suggested that a member of the judiciary of this country would be made a tool of this government. By doing so he reflects on the government and on our judiciary.

I am not supposed to refer to the action of the Speaker, but Your Honour then stated:

> Order, please. In general terms, the hon. member knows no comment should be made which reflects on the judiciary.

I rise at this time to state publicly that I dissociate myself 100 per cent—and I believe I am speaking for many members of this house—from the remarks made in this chamber last Thursday night during what is known as the late show by the hon. member for Kootenay East.

There were only seven members of parliament in the house at the time, one of whom was in the Chair. In discussing this Truscott case the hon. member for Kootenay East went so far as to say this about the conduct of the case:

> I ask hon. members is this not a grotesque display of our much vaunted British justice? Even if the child were guilty as charged, and I have very serious doubts that he is,.. There are many serious minded persons... who share my view. Among them is Hon. George Wardrop...he expressed grave doubts of Steven Truscott's guilt... the cards were stacked against this boy... The defence evidence was glossed over in the charge to the jury by the trial judge.
> Defence evidence which would have proven conclusively that Steven had left the little girl far from the scene of the murder, and a perfect alibi, was disallowed. Mr. Speaker, I personally am so convinced of this boy's innocence that I am prepared, if necessary, to stake my seat in the House of Commons—

Brave words.

The hon. member had been listening to a previous discussion here:

> —on the outcome of an inquiry, or a royal commission, that would examine all the circumstances of the conduct of all the persons involved—including the roles of the judge, the prosecutor, the police officers, the three Crown doctors, and all other persons who took part in the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, this case was tried before Mr. Justice R. I. Ferguson, a member of the Trial Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario. The conviction was appealed and the appeal was heard by five members of the Supreme Court of Ontario—Hon. Dana Porter, Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal; Hon. Mr. Justice Gibson, Hon. Mr. Justice Schroeder, Hon. Mr. Justice Lebel and Hon. Mr. Justice Morden, now deceased.

I wish to dissociate myself publicly from such remarks against the judiciary and, if I may be allowed to do so, I wish to compliment Your Honour on your ruling on Friday afternoon.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can understand the desire of the hon. member for Kootenay East to reply to the comment made by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. But before he can do so, a ruling has to be made by the Chair on the question of privilege. As hon. members know, the Chair has to decide whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. I rule there is no prima facie case of privilege and therefore there can be no further discussion of the matter.

Mr. Byrne: On a point of order, the hon. member has raised a question of privilege which he says affects all members of the house. Then he read the statement which I made. I said I was prepared to stake my seat on the outcome of an inquiry. If the hon. member wishes to lay a charge against me, let him do the same.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: The usual Liberal defence.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? In view of the announced intention of the Canadian Pacific to discontinue a few more of its railway passenger runs, will the government make a statement to the house at an early date as to its intentions regarding further air routes that are being competed for in this country?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This is a matter which we are considering, and if a statement can be made we shall be glad to make one.

BANK ACT AND QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

EXTENSION OF CHARTERS TO DECEMBER 1, 1966

The house resumed from Thursday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for the second reading of Bill No. C-3, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

Mr. Lambert: Has the Minister of Finance finished?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member for Edmonton West begins perhaps we might wait a few moments for order to be restored. Order. We are trying to restore order in the chamber so that the hon. member can make his speech.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Just before you called for order, Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister whether he had finished his remarks. I had forgotten that somewhat strenuous exercise in extension of comments in which the minister indulged last Thursday when he proceeded to talk out his own bill until six o'clock. Be that as it may, the minister did make reference to certain studies which the government was making of this legislation at the present time. I intend to refer to this a little later. First, I should like to hark back briefly to some remarks made by the minister's predecessor in office on June 14 last when we were considering a similar bill at the resolution stage.

The minister at that time could not follow a suggestion I had made that the bill should be extended to June 30, 1966 rather than December 31, because he did not feel that following the announced summer recess we would have time to hear the public representations, make the appropriate deliberations and guarantee that the bill would be through this house and the other place. There was a procedural difficulty. However, I wondered how sanguine the Minister of Finance was really being at the time and whether he was not speaking with his tongue in his cheek. Obviously he had made up his mind he wanted an election in the fall and he knew then that if there were to be an election in the fall there would be no question of the house considering the bill which was before us then in time for the expiry date of December 31. However, I think events have been fortuitous in that in the interval there has occurred an event which has given the government an opportunity to review the amendments it had proposed to the Bank Act.

Criticism had been made to the original version of Bill C-102 that there was insufficient control over certain trust companies and near banks which are involved in our financial system and, of course, the Atlantic Acceptance Corporation debacle with all its consequences certainly demonstrated that. Certainly in the end result Canada and its financial organization will be the better for the fact that the Bank Act had not been considered and passed prior to these events.

The minister did indicate the other day and also at the Canadian Club on January 23 that the government was considering many changes with regard to the Bank Act. The minister was a member of the ministry which last year put forward a certain Bank Act bill. Presumably he agreed with the amendments at that time, but now he has had an opportunity for further thought and has made other proposals. May I hope, in all earnestness, that these will be in those areas which will be of the greatest benefit and that we will not have some of the difficulties that were pointed out in the last version of the bill. In any event I do not anticipate that we will receive the new Bank Act before the budget; I do not think one can expect it. Therefore we are waiting with anticipation not only for the budget, but for the changes in the Bank Act. Frankly I am a little dubious about the date of December 1, 1966. A great deal of water has to flow under the bridge before the amendments will receive the appropriate consideration in this place and in the other place, taking into account the public representations which have to be made. However, I can assure the minister, on behalf of myself and my colleagues who are members of the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee, that we intend to give the bill the most careful scrutiny in the committee, and the earlier the government can bring it forward the better off I think the whole business community will be. I urge upon hon. members of this house the early passage of this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, March 10, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) in his brief speech mentioned the amendments and reforms which the government will soon bring to the Bank Act.

As reported at page 2498 of Hansard, the Minister stated:

> —there will be some desire to know what progress the government is making on this very important legislation namely, the substantive amendments that I hope to bring forward in due course in the next few weeks.

And several comments followed.

Since the Chair allowed the minister to open the way to eventual reforms, I take the liberty today to suggest some reforms that might be contemplated in the present economic situation.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Bank of Canada increased its discount rate to 5¼ per cent, it is more necessary than ever to remove the 6 per cent interest rate ceiling imposed on chartered banks.

Besides, that suggestion is based on comments and serious studies made in that regard. I would like to quote, among others, the comments made in the Porter report. Here they are:

> The 6 per cent interest rate ceiling introduces undesirable rigidity in the financial system and hampers and distorts the working of markets. It also has arbitrary effects on the institutions' competition for business and on their ability to serve the community well which were not contemplated when the ceiling was originally introduced and subsequently amended.
> We recommend that it be removed regardless of other changes in the legislation. The ceiling stands in the way of flexible lending by the banks in that it frequently prevents them from making loans on which higher rates must be charged to cover administrative costs and risks. Obviously, this is to the banks disadvantage; more importantly, however, it discriminates against borrowers such as small businesses which, if they are to obtain funds at all, must turn to other lenders which charge rates well above those the banks would ask if free to do so.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, that suggestion to abolish the 6 per cent ceiling imposed on chartered banks was also made in another report, that is the second annual report of the Economic Council of Canada, whose conclusions and recommendations should be taken into account because those studies were made by experts in those various fields with regard to the development of our country and its economic growth.

I feel that those serious and detailed studies must not be disregarded.

As a matter of fact, the second annual report of the Economic Council of Canada made the same recommendation to enable the individual who needs money to borrow it as cheaply as possible from his bank, something which will not be possible in a number of cases unless the 6 per cent ceiling is abolished.

We know that chartered banks get a lower revenue than that on the short and medium term capital market. That market is slightly over 6½ per cent. That ceiling must be abolished also, as pointed out in the reports I mentioned a little earlier, to allow more competition between the banks and the loan companies.

Everyone knows how the personal loans companies operate and what rate they can charge the consumer.

If the 6 per cent ceiling were abolished, it would enable the banks to get a better rate, since the rate of the Bank of Canada was increased to 5¼ per cent. As a matter of fact, it would enable the chartered banks to put up a better fight and, in the end, it would benefit the consumer, the middle class and middle income Canadian.

One knows that when the worker, the farmer, the white collar worker, the store clerk is in financial difficulties, he is forced most of the time to borrow from finance companies at rates which are excessive and even abusive as far as he is concerned. If our chartered banks could loan money at an interest rate of 6½ to 7 per cent, it would be to the advantage of the consumers.

I feel that, in addition to contemplating a reform, the government should, in its new bill, consider also the possibility of amending the Small Loans Act and the Interest Act, precisely to prevent abuse. The interest rate should be set at a maximum of 12 per cent, in order to allow for a better balanced competition between the banks and the small loans companies and also to allow the small loans companies to lend money up to $5,000 at a very reasonable rate.

In fact, I put two bills in the order paper for the benefit of the average-income Canadian.

There is no doubt that the removal of the 6 per cent ceiling will contribute to the development of our economy and lessen the effects of the American decision.

For some weeks, we have directed many questions to the Minister of Finance concerning the implications of the American decision on our economy and our financial situation. Again yesterday, the minister told us that the question was under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, many Canadians are concerned about the implications of this American decision which will necessarily take away from Canada some of the capital it needs to develop its economy and its natural resources.

The province of Quebec is especially alarmed at the implications of this American decision.

Consequently, if we allowed our Canadian banks to lend more and use the money we have in Canada, this would help to lessen the prejudicial effects of the American decision to reduce American investments in Canada.

I also ask the minister to take into consideration in his plans of reform, the possibility to enable provincial governments to hold a number of shares in chartered banks.

Mr. Speaker, it is understood that banking operations are under the jurisdiction of Ottawa but the monetary and financial policies are not foreign to the economic policies of the provinces which would like to have their say in the direction of financial policies with consequential effects on economic policies coming under their jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, we should not be afraid of the provinces, even if such a concern has already been expressed in statements made here and elsewhere. I feel we should not be afraid of the Canadian provinces.

In fact, if we look back, if we refer to past relations between the central government and the provinces, we notice that the provinces of Quebec and British Columbia have expressed themselves openly through their prime ministers.

But I want to speak more especially about the wishes of the province of Quebec where I live. Quebec wants to invest in chartered banks for two reasons: to be able to purchase a number of shares which would enable it to have representatives in the boards of directors where the financial policies of the country are developed, and this precisely because Quebec is experiencing an upsurge of its economy.

Quebec is also conscious of the fact that, in order to be able to do any long term planning, to guide the development of its economy, it must have a say in the institutions which determine our financial policy and control our monetary policy.

Another reason for Quebec to want to buy a number of shares in the chartered banks is because French Canadians would be allowed more openly and obviously to sit on the boards of the chartered banks, so they may be provided with the opportunity to play a part in this sector which is just as important and prominent as our Canadian economy, in Quebec as well as in the whole country.

I should like also to point out to the minister that it might be appropriate to let it decide on the approach, either by invitation or some amendment, to the Bank Act.

However, if my memory serves me right, there is nothing in the constitution of the Bank of Canada which prohibits loans to provinces, municipalities and school boards.

In fact, I believe that, at the beginning, the Bank of Canada did that on several occasions, until 1936, but since then it has not granted any loan to a provincial government, a school board or a municipal corporation.

[Mr. Allard.]

Our provincial and municipal governments and our school boards have been forced sometimes to go and borrow from other sources, and often from foreign markets. And we know that by doing so, they are subjected to the often unilateral variations and decisions of other countries, which interferes with the long-term planning of our provincial governments.
