The Romance OF A Marriage.

CHAPTER IX.

"A most historic spot," says Mr. Palmer, with his mouth full. "Sir Wolfert—"

"Try a piece of galantine," says Bob, gravely, to Alice. "It is first-rate—"

"Sir Wolfert, to whom we are distantly related," continues Mr. Palmer, pompously.

"Always take mustard with galantine; it is nearly all ham," Bob cuts in, all unconscious.

Mr. Palmer clears his throat.

"To whom we are distantly related, was of the first—bless my soul, what was that?" he breaks off, as a huge May-fly, attracted by the fare, buzzes past his nose.

"Only a May-bug," says Bob, calmly. "This place is always full of them—and ants."

Alice springs up with a cry of alarm.

"Don't be afraid," murmurs Stacey. "Miss Paula, you are not afraid?" and he smiles at Paula in his best and most languid manner.

"But I am very much afraid," says Paula, rising and shaking her skirts.

"There are no ants here to hurt," says Sir Herrick, and she sinks down again.

Stacey de Palmer gets up and stands beside her, looking at her with his eye-glass well fixed, with an expression of interest which is quite novel, so far as she is concerned.

"Won't you take some more champagne, Miss Paula?" he says; and he reaches for a bottle.

Paula looks up, almost with an air of surprise. Never, until now, has she been troubled with the attention of Mr. Stacey de Palmer.

"No, thanks," she says.

"Do," he says, hovering over her with the bottle, and smiling impressively. "You have had a long ride, and have a long journey back. Pray do."

With the object of getting rid of him, Paula holds her glass; but Mr. Stacey seems suddenly smitten with her manifold charms, and sinks down beside her on the grass, his eyes brightened with a novel interest. He has suddenly discovered that Paula is somebody in the social scale, since Sir Herrick has paid so much attention to her. Hitherto she has been simply the beautiful Miss Estcourt's sister; but now—now that Sir Herrick Powis has bestowed his countenance upon her, she has risen in Stacey de Palmer's estimation.

"Hang it!" he thinks. "This young baronet shall not have it all his own way. I'll show him that a man of property can put a finger in the pie."

And for the first time he realises the fact that Paula is worthy of attention. The dog in the manger and Stacey de Palmer must have been very nearly related.

Mr. Palmer produces a cigar-case, and the gentlemen, having received permission, begin to smoke at a respectful distance. The grooms can be heard clattering their knives and forks, and a gentle drowse seems to be settling upon all, especially upon Mr. Palmer.

"Perhaps," he says, with an unctuous smile, "Sir Herrick would like to see Sir Wolfert's tomb, Stacey? You will find it an exceedingly interesting relic, Sir Herrick."

Sir Herrick does not seem particularly eager; but Stacey turns to Paula with a smile.

"Shall we go and see the tomb, Miss Paula?" he says condescendingly.

Paula compresses her lips.

"I've seen it so many times," she says, rather reluctantly.

He colours over his stiff collar.

"Perhaps you will come, Miss Alice?" he says, humbly.

Alice, who regards ruins and tombs with the strongest abhorrence, rises at once, and smiles as if he had offered to conduct her to the shores of bliss.

"Thanks!" she murmurs, sweetly; and she trips off with him, her pink-lined sunshade throwing a warm glow on her fair face.

"Let's have a stroll," says Bob to May in his blunt fashion, "but no tombs."

May gets up obediently, and they, too, have the ruins of the past, and Pauls and Sir Herrick are left with Mr. Palmer.

"Dear me!" he says, with a yawn. "It's a very drowsy afternoon;" and, doubtless, wishing himself back in his arm chair at the Court, he attempts an assiduous attitude on the turf.

Sir Herrick leans back and smokes his cigarette, and silence reigns, broken only by the clattering of the knives and forks of the grooms.

Presently, very soon, an uneasy snore from Mr. Palmer clearly indicates that he has sunk into the arms of Morpheus, or, rather, on to an empty champagne bottle which has rolled underneath him.

"Sure you wouldn't like to see the tomb?" says Sir Herrick.

"Certain," says Paula; and she laughs.

"I'm afraid you have mortally offended our friend Mr. Stacey," he says, indolently.

"By refusing," says Paula. "Oh, he will soon console himself," then she laughs again. "Poor Alice! If there is anything she hates it is moving about directly after meals; and ruins and grave-stones, however ancient, are her particular aversion."

"What an amiable girl she must be," says Sir Herrick.

"Oh, very," says Paula, drily.

Here a prolonged and painful groan is heard from the sleeper, and Sir Herrick sits up.

"Don't you think he'll do himself an injury," he says. "It must be a dreadful thing to slumber on a champagne bottle. Oughtn't I to pull him off it?"

"I don't think it matters," said Paula, gravely; "he seems very happy."

"And one can't be more than that," he says, looking at her. "If life could be all picnics!"

"Are you so very happy?" she says, glancing up at him.

"Very," he says. "This place must be a charmed land? I have had two of the happiest days since—since I can remember. They are nothing to you, of course?"

Pauls looks down, smitten with the sudden consciousness that they have been particularly happy ones for her.

"It's a pity such days should come to an end," he goes on, flinging his cigarette away with a sigh, and stretching his arms above his head; "they should last forever."

"It would be rather a hard fate to be doomed to slumber on forever upon a champagne bottle," says Paula, with a low laugh.

He raises his head and gives himself a shake, as if her tone of light raillery had recalled him, and the next instant Stacey de Palmer's drawing voice is heard approaching them.

"Here they come," says Paula; "Alice with a decided chill, I know. Well, Alice, how have you enjoyed the tomb?"

"So much," murmurs Alice, lightly, "so intensely interesting! Have you been idling there all the time?"

"That describes our condition to a nicety, Miss Estcourt," says Herrick. Stacey looks at the recumbent figure of his father with sullen displeasure.

"We had better be going," he says in a loud voice, which causes his father to start and sit up with a jerk.

"Eh! dear me, I was nearly asleep. Going? Yes, perhaps we had. Sir Herrick, persuade the ladies to take another glass of champagne."

But the ladies and Sir Herrick declining, Stacey and Mr. Palmer are compelled to nearly finish the bottle between them.

Then Paula call "Bob!" at the top of her voice, and presently Bob and May come from the ruins, and the party saunter to the inn. Poor Mr. Stacey de Palmer has not the strongest of heads, and has taken quite enough of the sparkling wine of sunny France to make him, not jovial and pleasant but touchy and obstinate; and by the time they have reached the inn he is in that sort of humour in which a foolish man is quite prepared to do foolish things.

He commences to assert himself at once by ordering the grooms about, and, much to their wonder, amusement, and Sir Herrick's surprise, insists upon changing the position of the horses.

This, as the horses are already in a shake, as if her tone of light raillery had recalled him, and the next instant Stacey de Palmer's drawing voice is heard approaching them.

"Here they come," says Paula; "Alice with a decided chill, I know. Well, Alice, how have you enjoyed the tomb?"

"So much," murmurs Alice, lightly, "so intensely interesting! Have you been idling there all the time?"

"Oh, we place the fullest confidence in your Jehuship," murmurs Alice, pale to the lips.

"Oh, yes, you are all right," says Stacey, conceitedly; and he flicks his whip with a confident smack.

"Look out, Stacey!" says Bob, bluntly, as the coach swerves round a corner.

"Don't be nervous," retorts Stacey, with a sneer; and his face, already a little flushed with the champagne, grows redder.

Paula laughs softly.

"I seem to see Crawfield Hospital in my mind's eye," she says; but Sir Herrick doesn't smile, and there is rather an angry look in his dark eyes.

"Take care, my dear fellow!" he says, leaning forward. "Those leaders are having it all their own way."

"I wish you wouldn't interfere," says Stacey, with an offensive sneer. "If you think you can drive them better than I can, you had better try."

"I shall be very pleased," say Sir Herrick, as calm as a mill-pond.

"Er—perhaps Sir Herrick would like to have a turn with the reins," says Mr. Palmer, with barely concealed eagerness, as he clutches his seat with greater tenacity even than he displayed coming.

"Better," says Bob, curtly.

Sir Herrick rises; but Stacey scowls angrily.

"Oh, we can't stop to change," he says, peevishly. "For goodness' sake, sit down! Anyone would think we were in danger of our lives, and I don't know how to drive."

Sir Herrick repeats himself.

Paula sees the scampering horses, sees the landsau just in front of them, and leans forward, breathless.

As she does so, she sees a thin, aristocratic-looking gentleman, half-wrapped in a fur cloak, rise from the landsau, hear him exclaim:

"The fool is running into us! Take care, Jarvis!"

NORTHCLIFFE ON NEW HOME RULE BILL.

NEW YORK, Jan. 1. The New York World has received the following message from Lord Northcliffe in reply to a request for his opinion on the British Government's plan for Ireland as recently set forth by the Premier: "I believe that the scheme of the Irish Government which the Premier has outlined is based on sound principles. A temporary division of Ireland, such as I dislike the idea, is probably the shortest path to eventual union. The commonwealth of Australia grew from separate colonies, so did the Dominion of Canada and the Union of South Africa. But the Government scheme is far from perfect. If Ireland is to be divided, the historic province of Ulster should be a unit. The link of the proposed Irish Council might with advantage be made stronger. Why should it not be an Irish Congress or House of representatives. The right of Irish people to full autonomy should be decidedly recognized. The scheme is, however, a beginning, and I hope the Government will have the courage to go on."

When Crossing the Equator.

Every sailor who crosses the Equator for the first time, in the British Navy, has to go through a certain "initiation ceremony," wherein he is christened by Neptune. The "Gob" who receives the initiation is brought before the court, undergoes certain rites, and is then tipped over backwards into a large tank of water. This equator is the geographical equator—shown on maps and globes—and is quite different from the magnetic equator, which is not a straight line, but fluctuates and curves. As soon as one is across the magnetic equator the compass needle does a rightabout face and points to the South Pole, instead of to the North. There are two magnetic poles, the north and south, located at different spots on the earth's surface from the geographical poles. At the magnetic equator the compass needle lies horizontally, registering 0 degrees. The magnetic equator is irregular, and crosses the geographical equator in at least four places. Lima and Bahia (in South America), the mouth of the River Niger (in Africa), Aden (in Arabia) and Madras (India), may be named as places in the vicinity of the earth's magnetic equator.

Unusual New Year's Day.

New Year's Day for 1920 will pass into local history as the most unusual one for many, many years. Whereas, in past years, bells and whistles heralded the coming of the New Year, and the shipping in the harbor and along the waterfront gave expression of the good feeling which epitomized the season, there was no such demonstration yesterday. The presence of so much snow, however, somewhat made up for the omission.

15 Persons Marooned On Bell Isle.

Only Meagre Supply of Provisions at Light Station.

Quebec, Dec. 27.—Marooned, with only a meagre supply of provisions, isolated from the outside world and staring into the sombre face of privation, such is the fate of fourteen or sixteen persons at Belle Isle, the famous sentinel of Canada, on the Atlantic at the entrance of the Straits of the same name.

Two lighthouse keepers, with their wives and children, their assistants and three Marconi wireless operators, totalling nine adults and six or seven children, are the victims. The news of their plight came here last night in the form of a message from a lever gulf village.

The Canadian Government steamer Montcalm, which was expected to call at Belle Isle some time ago, but was prevented by adverse weather and ice conditions, left Bonne Bay, Newfoundland, at 7.10 yesterday morning bound for Belle Isle, and she should get there at sunset to-night. But there is much ice in the Straits and in the lower gulf, and, should a storm break the Montcalm's trip to Belle Isle may be delayed.

A wireless message has been sent to the operators at Belle Isle asking for particulars and news of the marooned people's present condition, but up to a late hour last night no answer had come.

Halifax, Dec. 27.—No word has been received here up to a late hour this morning regarding the plight of the government employees at Belle Isle, who are reported in a Quebec despatch as facing a dire situation as a result of the non-arrival of their winter supplies. Shipping men here do not disguise their anxiety over the situation. They recall that it was reported that the original intention of the Marine and Fisheries Department was to send the supplies up by the ice-breaker Montcalm, and that this decision was subsequently rescinded, ostensibly for the purpose of maintaining the Montcalm in the work of keeping the channel in the St. Lawrence open as late as possible. They further recall that when the thirty-years old Aranmore was finally selected for the job, her officers and men pointed out the extreme danger of the enterprise in view of the condition of their ship.

Then the more with the supplies went on, and the Montcalm was forced to make the trip after all. But the delay involved in transferring the cargo of supplies from the ice-breaker and subsequently, "reached Aranmore has served to make the task of reaching Belle Isle a formidable one even for an ice-breaker of the known prowess of the Montcalm.

To-day's Messages.

MYSTERY OF THE SEA.
HALIFAX, N.S., Jan. 1.
The stern of what was evidently a large sailing vessel came ashore at Harborville on the Fundy Shore near Berwick, during last night. The wreckage bore the inscription A. W. Allan, Providence, R. I. and along with the stern came several casks of oil, a number of chairs and a trunk. The trunk contained a quantity of ladies wearing apparel, which however gave no clue to owner. A sum of money in American gold was found, sewn up in one of the garments. Available shipping records do not list any A. W. Allan.

IT WAS EVER THUS.
LONDON, Jan. 1.
While press opinion is mostly silent about New Year's honors, such as is offered lacks unanimity, for while the Daily Graphic says the list is one of unusual excellence, the Daily Express declares that without exception it smacks far too distinctly of proffering, inasmuch as it places the seal of approval on too much of that kind of amassing a fortune out of the necessities of war.

UNRESTRICTED TRADE.
WASHINGTON, D.C., Jan. 1.
Exchange of the ratifications of the Versailles Treaty will have practically no immediate effect upon American trade with Germany, and will not alter the present commercial regulations, it was said to-day in official circles, and so far as the United States Government is concerned anything from matches to six inch guns may be shipped to Germany provided that purchasers can be found. The present rate of exchange is the principal obstacle to trade the officials said.

SUSPENSION CONTINUES.
DUBLIN, Jan. 1.
The suspension of the Freeman's Journal, which was ordered suspended for the publication of an article, adjudged contrary to police discipline, is still maintained, having lasted more than a fortnight.

Bodies Recovered.

The deputy Minister of Customs received the following message from the sub-collector at Trepassay, Wednesday afternoon:
"Eleven bodies recovered at St. Shott's yesterday. Six others seen. Thirteen in all recovered."
This makes twenty-two of the crew of the ill-fated steamer Anton Van Driel accounted for, and is evidence that all who left the ship in the boats met with a watery grave.

Steamer Loses Anchor.

S.S. Edmund Donald, which arrived at Bell Island on Tuesday, with a load of coal for the Nova Scotia Co., had to leave there without discharging all her cargo. She arrived in port last evening, and it is likely will discharge the balance of her cargo here.

These words, or expressions having the same meaning, are contained in hundreds of the letters I have received during the past year. Many were from women who had suffered agonies from falling of womb; others from women who had escaped dangerous surgical operations, as the tumors

It is applied direct to the suffering organs, and its operation is certain and beneficial. As a trial actually proves its merit, I hereby offer to send, absolutely free, a box worth 40c. sufficient for ten days' treatment to every suffering woman who will write for it. Enclose 3 stamps. # Comparative Values in Footwear!

With the majority of people, price is the chief consideration in purchasing footwear. That's why there are so many uncomfortable feet in Newfoundland to-day and so many dissatisfied shoe purchasers.

A FEW WORDS ON CHRISTMAS CARDS.

I love to get Christmas cards. I love the aristocrats of the Christmas card world, the wonderful illuminated cards with their exquisite coloring and chaste sentiments. And I love bright catchy sayings, and I love even the cheapest pen-and-ink cards with their just Merry Christmas and a scrap of brightly colored holly.

I think that the sending of Christmas cards to those for whom there is a kindly feeling in our hearts expresses the Christmas spirit better than our formal gift giving.

Only Kind of Christmas Card I Don't Like.

But there's just one kind of Christmas card I don't like to get. And that's the card on which the sender has not taken the trouble to write a single word of personal greeting.

I would rather have a few words of Christmas greeting written on one of Uncle Sam's post-cards than the handsomest Christmas-card ever sent out, without any personal message.

And on the other hand, although it is something of a task, I would not feel satisfied if I did not write a few words on each card I send.

Hold a Mental Re-union With My Scattered Friends.

Not only for the sake of the recipient, but for my own sake. For it seems to me as if, in writing those cards I hold a sort of mental reunion with that big circle of friends whom I meet, enjoy and then, through forces of inevitable circumstance, loses touch with as one is swept along through the various phases of one's life.

As I write each card or letter (for I write Christmas letters to my most treasured friends) I find myself falling into the mood into which my correspondent would throw me if she or he were present. With one I am grave, with another I am gay, with another I am whimsical, with another sympathetic, with another serious.

Of course, I do not mean that I consciously take on a different tone with each. The process is entirely unconscious. It does not represent any effort on my part but simply the effect of thinking about each person as I make ready to write to him or her.

I Find What They Each Mean to Me.

Indeed, so very subconscious is it that when I read the cards and letters over I am interested to note what a different "I" comes forth to greet these different people. It is a revelation to me of just what each one stands for to me and of what I probably stand for to them.

If you have written your cards and have not sent them, read them over and see if you do not find that this is so and that it is an interesting sidelight on your friendships—and yourself.

Monsieur—

For 15 days in the month of January I was suffering with pains of rheumatism in the foot. I tried all kinds of remedies but nothing did me any good. One person told me about MINARD'S LINIMENT, as soon as I tried it the Saturday night, the next morning I was feeling very good; I tell you this remedy is very good; I could give you a good certificate any time that you would like to have one. If any time I come to hear about any person sick of rheumatism, I could tell them about this remedy.

Yours truly,

THE RESTING PLACE.

Oh, I have known the noisy town, and tramped its pavements up and down.

The winds of trade have stung my face and blown me here and there; I've stood and talked with men who seek their golden idols week by week.

And trampled on the gentler things and never stopped to care.

Oh, I have played the dreary game of fighting for a bit of fame, I've heard the cheering multitude and I have heard its jeers; I know how tired those great men are, of leaving home and traveling far,

I know how much they miss the joys which come with humbler years.

I've thumbed and worn the book of life, I've learned the pages hot with strife,

I've played the lad, and played the youth, I've laughed and loved and wept,

I've turned from joys that I possessed to journey East or journey West, And in the end I've always wished that what I'd lost I'd kept.

The Lord above has shielded me from much that might have come to be, Has let me wander far away and brought me safely back;

But where so ever I've chanced to roam my soul has always yearned for home.

The flowers I sought have never bloomed along a railroad track.

For neither fame nor yellow gold the fancy of a man can hold, They lure him for a while, but soon he must return

Unto the peace and calm and play abiding where his loved ones stay—
The glory of the world is found where happy candles burn.

ANTI-RED.

W. M. MARCH

The banks are full of savings, the people's hard-earned dust, and so we hear the ravings of Reds with deep disgust. No program anarchistic can get a foothold here; no wild-eyed Russian mystic can throw things out of gear. In vain the red flag wavings, the threats by tongue or pen; the banks are full of savings, put there by working men. When all of us are stony, dead broke and on the bum, perhaps Red speeches poney with greater force will come; perhaps they will convert us, we'll join the unwashed dubs, until the peelers hurt us with lignum vitae clubs. But while we have our savings in yonder moral bank, you'll note that our behavings won't be so brash and rank. With vines and cottages growing, beside our cottage doors, we do not heed the blowing of freaks from other shores. With happy children playing about our modest homes, we do not heed the praying that comes from batty domes. In vain the elocution of frayed, imported seer; no priest of revolution can get a foothold here.

Color's Influence on the Nerves.

A New York physician who gives more credit to nature than he takes for himself in the cures he has wrought is a great believer in the effect of colors on the human race. Nature is the best teacher in these things, he says. You will find in your surroundings in the country no black and very little red. Blue and yellow are combined in the restful, reviving green. There is no doubt, the doctor contends, that the wearing of black has an evil effect on both health and spirits. It is the color of Saturn, the planet of gloom, misfortune, fatality and other evil things. If one wishes to be happy and brilliant blue is the color to wear. The doctor says that the spirit of evil hates blue intensely and flies at the sight of it. Blue also calms the nerves and therefore it is a good color for room decorations.

Enter 1920.

Standing on the threshold of a New Year, gazing through the opened portals at the twelve months' vista before us, who can foretell with prescience upon what we are about to adventure during the next three hundred and sixty-five days, for the year of grace one thousand nine hundred and twenty is a bissextile, or leap year. Not that fate has any greater or lesser things in store for us because of this: we merely mentioned the fact in passing. None of us may prophesy just what the womb of the future contains for the world, or what the coming year will bring us, yet none but the most doleful pessimist would enter upon the New Year with forebodings of disaster and misfortune. On the contrary every heart beats cheerfully because it anticipates better things to come, and even should these not be realised, it is better to meet troubles smilingly, and when they do arrive, take measures to obviate them.

The spirit of progress is ever strong, ever persistent, and all should be imbued with steady and determined zeal to make the year upon which our feet are now set, a better one than ever. True, there will be our proportion of illfortune to meet, and our share of responsibility to shoulder, but when hearts beat high with hope the perspective of good broadens out before us, and our aim is to make the goal. No person needs to complain of being the victim of circumstances, for these are only what we make ourselves. A higher, loftier motive should stamp our endeavours, and the popular motto should be "the greatest good to the greatest number." Each of us, no matter how humble our sphere of living, has a duty to perform, a talent to increase, an object to pursue, and we shall be indeed cowardly if we shrink that duty, bury that talent or set aside that object. The word for all is—Advance!

And as we set our hands to plough the furrows in the various fields of life from to-day until the end of the year now opened, let no person look behind. Onward and ever onward, higher and ever higher let us carry the banner upon which is inscribed in golden letters that encouraging word, advance. Past experience will materially help all to escape the errors made of yore. The mistakes of 1919 can be rectified by the knowledge of having made them, and the correction if applied on the proper angle, will have the effect of offsetting a repetition of similar blunders, whether of state or church or commerce, for in all three there is ample room for improvement in present methods of policy. Nineteen hundred and nineteen taught us many lessons, a proper conception of the value of which will materially aid our plans for the future, and animate us with a more determined spirit to prevent a recurrence of mistakes which make for retrogression in all phases of life. The challenge of the new era is to Newfoundland as well as to other dominions of the New World, and Newfoundland has as much of a bright future before her as any state embraced in the Western Hemisphere.

Our destiny is interwoven with that of the English speaking peoples on this side the Atlantic: a people far more numerous than on the other side. Old world problems no longer appeal to us as heretofore. Westward the Star of Empire takes its way, and Newfoundland stands directly in the track of that imperial course. The quotation then might be accepted as prophetic, and that imperial star shining upon us should light us to greater deeds, illuminate our course along broader avenues than any we have hitherto travelled. With hope renewed and confidence inspired let us enter upon the New Year, nothing doubting but that at the beginning of the next one all our efforts in the path toward progress will have proven successful and we shall all the more heartily and enthusiastically and sincerely greet each other in the words which it gives us the greatest of pleasure to utter to-day, and which we ask all to accept in the spirit in which they are offered:

A RIGHT HAPPY, PROSPEROUS AND PROGRESSIVE NEW YEAR!

At the Palace.

His Grace Archbishop E. P. Roche, was "At Home" at the Palace, on yesterday, from 12 noon to 1 p.m., and from 3 to 5 p.m., and received many callers. His Grace was attended by Rt. Rev. J. J. McDermott, Administrator, and Rev. Dr. J. Greene, with Major J. J. O'Grady and Major L. C. Murphy as aides-de-camp, and Capt. G. Byrne, M.C., and Clara as Ushers. A list of the callers will be published to-morrow.

Brokers Organize.

Wednesday afternoon a number of brokers and commission merchants, who are directly interested in the now notorious fishery regulations, met in a down-town office, and discussed in detail all matters relating to the export of codfish and the effect which the regulations would have upon the markets of the world.

The meeting resulted in the formation of the "Newfoundland Fishers' Association and Chamber of Commerce," its principal object being co-operation and protection.

The meeting unanimously resolved: (1) That the Fish Export Regulations are, in the opinion of this Association, contrary to the British Constitution, inasmuch as they are unsound in principle, unfair in application, and encourage profiteering.

(2) That class legislation in any form is wrong and repugnant to the ideas of this Association, and we place ourselves on record as being opposed to any measure that gives any class privileges.

(3) That we strenuously oppose the giving the selling control of our codfish to any one individual or firm in any of the fish markets of the world, creating thereby a monopoly of trade.

(4) That believing in co-operation and that "competition is the life of trade," we, as brokers and exporters, having sound business connections in all the fish markets of the world, demand the right to deal in the selling of fish directly or indirectly, according to the recognized rules of trade and the law of supply and demand.

(5) That steps be taken immediately to notify the principal fish buyers of Spain, Italy, Portugal and Greece, and also fish-brokers in London, Liverpool and New York, that we are opposed to these regulations and we are endeavouring to have them rescinded, so that by these means we may hope to undo some of the harm which these regulations have caused to the fish Export Trade of this Dominion.

(6) That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to His Excellency the Governor of Newfoundland and a copy published in each of the daily newspapers.

It was also resolved that all bona-fide fish brokers and small exporters in Newfoundland are eligible for membership in this Association and are hereby invited to communicate with its President or Secretary, care of Room 6, Board of Trade Building, St. John's.

Another meeting will be held on Monday next, January 5th, at 3 p.m., at the above-named place, for the purpose of electing officers.

C. L. B. Band Concert.

Last night the annual grand concert of the C.L.B. Band was held in the Methodist College Hall, under the distinguished patronage of His Excellency the Governor, and Lady Harris. The hall was filled to capacity and among those present were His Excellency the Governor, and Capt. Hamilton, P.S., and His Lordship Bishop White.

The Programme was as follows: March—Celebrated March Lorraine—C.L.B. Band.

Song—Mr. Arthur Williams. Overture—Poet and Peasant—C.L.B. Band.

Song—Mrs. Harvey Small. Military March—Promp and Circumstance—(No. 1 and No. 2)—C. L. B. Band.—By special request from His Excellency Sir C. Alexander Harris, K.C.M.G., C.B., C.V.O., Governor of Newfoundland.

Song—Mr. C. Trappell. Patriotic Selection—Jack and Tommy's Tunes—C.L.B. Band.

Song—Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind—Miss Elsie Herder. Descriptive Fantasia—An Air Raid—C.L.B. Band.

Quartet—The Comrades Song of Hope—C. Trappell, G. Somerville, M. Martin, T. Seymour.

Song—Miss F. Curtis. Overture—Zampa—C.L.B. Band. C.L.B. Regimental March.

God Save The King. The military march, Pomp and circumstance, presented to the Band by His Excellency the Governor evoked unstinted applause. The fantasia—An Air Raid—was faultlessly rendered and gave the audience an idea of the various sounds incidental to a raid.

From the start of the pieces to the return and dismissal of the troops amid cheering. His Excellency the Governor personally congratulated Bandmaster Morris and his associates on the interpretation of the piece. The various other items of the programme were particularly good and the Band is to be congratulated on the excellence of the performance.

Personal.

Dr. Chester Harris, accompanied by his sister, Miss Nellie Harris, and Miss Maria Buffett, all of Grand Bank, have gone to Europe. They will spend the winter in London, going to Paris for the Spring months, and intend visiting the battlefields of France and Flanders, where Dr. Harris did good service during the war.

On the incoming express is Lieut. Pierson V. Curtis, son of Rev. Dr. Curtis, who is on his way home from the war. Lieutenant Curtis was at Oxford University as a Rhodes Scholar at the declaration of war, and forthwith volunteered as a Private in the 4th Border Regiment, subsequently being promoted to Lieutenant. In the autumn of 1914 he was sent to India where he has served continuously—serving five years in that great Dependency of the Crown. The troops serving in India anticipated demobilization soon after the signing of the Armistice, but the outbreak of the Afghan war rendered that impossible, and kept them on duty all through another broiling summer. Lieut. Curtis is visiting his home for rest and recuperation before resuming his studies at Oxford.

Constable F. Kelly, who met with an accident a few days ago is improving at the Hospital, and will be able to leave the institution in a few days.

R. J. Randall, Esq., of Catalina, is at present on the city on his regular business visit. He is staying at the Crosbie.

Milk Team "Borrowed."

Charged with stealing a milk outfit from Mr. Dick Walsh, vendor, of Kilbride, a young man was arrested yesterday morning and taken to the station. Mr. Walsh was in St. Patrick's Church, attending service, and the horse was left standing in a nearby street. Upon coming out of church, the owner saw that the horse and sleigh were gone. Eventually the missing team was located, though a quantity of milk had been taken. The police, acquainted of the affair, made investigations and captured the young man mentioned.

FURTHER DETAILS OF ETHIE'S LOSS.

(Western Star.)

Further details of the loss of the S.S. Ethie come to hand. As stated in our last issue, the ship went ashore about noon on Thursday, 11th inst., at Martin Point, about 13 miles north of Bonne Bay. All of her 60 passengers and 22 of a crew and officers were rescued. After leaving Cow Head Wednesday night, 10th inst., she met with a hurricane from the southwest, which later veered to north-west, with blinding snow. Full steam ahead was kept up all through the night, but when daylight broke it was found that the ship had not made one mile progress off shore. Her boats had been smashed by the seas and were frozen in the chocks; her decks were swept of everything movable; her bridge weather-shields and much of the permanent structure of the bridge torn away; her masts and decks were a mass of ice, and the ship was still making leeway. Captain English, who had stood the bridge all night, went below and made a personal appeal to the engineers and firemen to make a life-and-death struggle to force the ship a few miles along the coast in hope that the bluff, rugged headland to leeward be passed. From the engine-room the captain passed through the saloon and second cabins issuing words of comfort and cheer to the terrified passengers, and proceeded again to the bridge. The firemen and engineers, assisted by seamen, stripped to their task and labored as only such men can labor when face to face with disaster at sea. Hour after hour passed as the little craft staggered inch by inch along the rugged coast, all the while drifting nearer and nearer to the shore. Having, however, at last rounded the headland, the captain put the ship before the gale and dashed into the little cove named Martin Point. The ship struck with terrific force, and over her the seas made clean breaches from stem to stern, carrying her further shoreward. Settlers on the coast were soon on the scene. Lines tied to kegs were sent ashore. These fouled as they neared the shore; but the people on land sent off their dogs to bring the lines up to where they could be reached. Cables were hauled from the ship and made fast to the cliff, by which the ship's inmates—92 in all, including Capt. Spracklin, the company's shiphusband—were conveyed to safety, Capt. English being the last to leave the ship. Work of rescue was carried out in a most commendable and orderly manner. All were taken to the homes of residents nearby, and later to Bonne Bay, where they await the arrival of a steamer to bring them here. The Sagona has been ordered from Port aux Basques to proceed to Bonne Bay for the shipwrecked passengers and mariners, and left for the latter port on Monday afternoon. We hope to have further details for our next issue.

 And take this opportunity to thank the public generally for the splendid patronage extended to us during the year that is just passed.

The tremendous volume of business done by us is most gratifying and is an assurance in itself that the public find our values attractive and our prices right. But great as it has been we are determined to do better in 1920. To accomplish this we realize that our ambition can only be attained by continually striving to give you the best merchandise at the lowest possible prices.

We call your attention to the splendid money-saving opportunities below, mostly repeats of last week's sale, to give our customers who could not be here on account of the storm, the same privilege as their more fortunate neighbors.

Don't let snow, storm, rain or anything else keep you away this week, for we have many added attractions, mostly oddments, which we do not advertise because of small quantities.

L. O. A. Parade.

A joint parade of Royal Oak and Learning Lodges was held yesterday morning to St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, where an eloquent and inspiring sermon was delivered by the Rev. Gordon Dickie, M.A. During the service a duet was beautifully rendered by Mrs. G. Dickie and Miss Margaret Mitchell. Owing to the adversity of the weather the usual parade through the city had to be cancelled. The society parading directly from the hall to the church and return. At the conclusion of the service a vote of thanks was passed by the officers of the Order to Rev. Dickie, the choir, and the church officials. On the return to the hall a deputation of the officers of the Grand Lodge and the Masters of the Primary Lodges was formed; and proceeded to the Government House where it was received by His Excellency the Governor, Lady Harris and Miss Harris. In a few well chosen words the Prov. Grand Master, W. H. Cave introduced the members and conveyed to his Excellency and family an expression of loyalty of the members of the Loyal Orange Association to His Majesty the King and the Royal Family through his accredited representative in this Dominion. His Excellency in his reply announced his intention of conveying the expression of loyalty to His Majesty the King and members of the Royal Family, and commended the patriotism for braving the elements to pay him and his family a visit on a day such as this. On return to the hall a vote of thanks was passed to Mrs. A. W. Harvey, who had kindly provided as in former years the pair of horses in the procession. The proceedings closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Wesley Class Reunion.

Last night the members of the Victory Class of Wesley Methodist Church, held their annual re-union, in the main school-room of the church. Including the guests, nearly two hundred people attended, and partook of a beautiful repast provided by the Ladies Aid Society. An excellent programme was gone through, the following contributing items:—Misses Soper and Pike, and Messrs. Colton, Butler and S. J. Tucker. The M. G. Band was also present and rendered some excellent selections. Addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Fenwick, E. W. Forbes, and W. B. Bugden, and Mr. R. A. Tompkins, of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church. Mr. J. C. Pudester was chairman.

During the evening the class made a presentation to their leader, Mr. Mark Pike, in recognition of his faithful service. Mr. A. W. Martin who made the presentation, eulogized the work of Mr. Pike. The recipient was taken by surprise, but was equal to the occasion and made a very neat reply. The affair closed at 11 o'clock with singing of the National anthem.

Masked Ball.

About 80 couples were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Barr at a masked ball held in the C.C.C. Hall on Wednesday night. The ball-room was decorated with evergreens, and illuminated with myriads of coloured lights, presented a very pleasing scene. The dancers representing the nobility the military, the navy, the arts, the graces, etc., made a sight worth witnessing, as they glided over the polished floor to the music of the C.C.C. Orchestra. Dancing concluded at 1.30 on New Year's morning, all present voting the affair one of the most enjoyable of the old year.

Oil Carrying Tug Destroyed.

The gasoline-engined oil-carrying barge of the Imperial Oil Co., which is used for carrying oil across the harbor, was destroyed yesterday forenoon when she caught fire and had to be towed outside the Narrows. Taking fire in the engine-room, where sparks from the carburetor ignited woodwork, the boat burned rapidly, and as some 20 casks of kerosene oil were aboard it was decided to get the tug away from the wharf and outside the heads. The tug John Green was called and towed the boat outside, where the tow line was cut and the burning lighter allowed to go adrift. As she passed through the Narrows some of the casks of kerosene oil exploded, sending flames 100 feet into the air. Eventually the oil carrier sank in deep water.

The Legend of the Mine.

Every afternoon, when all in the ranch were resting, Techina, the daughter of Senor Don Andres, mounted the hillside and went and seated herself in the shadow of a rock the rugged head of which was reflected in the waters of the Sangre de Dios. Juan awaited her, and both forgot, in dream of happiness, themselves and all else in the world. Juan and Techina loved; but alas! with a hopeless love; for he was poor—had nothing but his youth, his manly beauty, and the strength of his love.

Juan and Techina loved, and, absorbed in their love, had never thought that Don Andres could refuse to unite the riches of his daughter to the poverty of Juan. But one day the old ranchero warned Techina that he had promised her hand to Don Fabio, whose fortune equalled hers.

The young girl prayed, supplicated; prayers and supplications alike were unavailing. The old man replied to them: "It is my will."

Kneeling by her, while she was telling him of her trouble, Juan said nothing; but when she arose to return to the ranch, he stayed her.

"Tell me that you love me," he then said; "swear to wait for me, and I, too, will be rich."

"I love you, Juan; I will never have any other but you for husband. I swear it before God who hears and sees us!"

One evening, near the ranch Juan appeared before her, his large black eyes sparkling with pleasure.

"Be of good cheer, my Techina," he cried, taking her hand; "dry your tears, dearest; to-morrow, I, too, shall be happy; for to-morrow, I, too, shall be rich!—shall have so much gold that the earth and all the world will bow to my feet and call me Senor. I will lay at your feet the dowry of a queen, my Techina, and, for our wedding, I will dress you in a robe more brilliant, more beautiful than that of the Madonna."

Techina thought Juan had gone mad. "Yes; we shall be happy, for I have found the secret of the mine, of the old mine, where for ages have slept heaps of gold bigger than your father's ranch, bigger than this hill!"

"Oh, be silent, Juan—be silent!" cried the young girl. "Do you not know that the secret of the mine is fatal?"

"The Indians say so, Techina, but I do not believe it. The secret of the gold kills only those who would bear it away from mere lust of riches; but it cannot kill him who seeks it to win the woman he loves."

— There was a legend at Los Angeles:—
In the times past, said the Indians, strangers came to the country. They dug the soil and discovered gold. They forced the inhabitants to extract the precious metal; but, as if the earth had wished to defend the riches she had hidden in her bosom, all those who worked in the mine were stricken with a strange death. Then the Indians fled, and the strangers quitted the country. When they were gone, the inhabitants returned, and, heaping stones before the entrance to the mine, closed it up. That done, they spread the report that the secret of the gold was fatal.

Juan knew the legend, and for a long time had shared the popular belief. But what would he not have attempted to gain his beloved Techina? Braving the dangers, he had searched for and found the long-hidden entrance to the mine.

Once master of the secret, he attacked the wall of piled-up rock, where, for ages, the seeds carried by the winds had germinated and grown into trees, the powerful roots of which now bound the stones together as with mighty cords.

Next day, at dawn, Juan returned to his labour; and every day, armed with a pickaxe, he attacked the rock. Sometimes, on stopping to take a moment's rest, he fell into doubt, and asked himself whether he should ever be able to separate these stones, cemented by ages. But he thought of Techina, and with an arm which seemed as if nothing could tire it, renewed his work. At night, on returning to his dwelling-place, he said to himself: "It will be to-morrow."

About that time men from the North came into the country. They reached Los Angeles, armed with strange instruments with which they measured the ground, surveyed the valley through which the Sangre de Dios flows, and calculated the height of the mountains. Then in places, they drove in pegs ornamented with little red flags.

They were American engineers, tracing the course of the Southern Pacific Railroad, the gigantic iron-way which traverses the United States from East to West, and joins the Atlantic to the Pacific, New York to San Francisco.

Among these men there was one who appeared to take no part in the work of his companions. All day he wandered about the mountains, striking the rocks with a small steel hammer, carefully gathering up the fragments which he detached from the mass. His name was Atkins, and the inhabitants regarded him as a madman.

He also, was in search of the mine; he, also, knew the legend. The threats of death held out against whomsoever should violate the secret of the gold made him laugh.

Meanwhile, the work of Juan was advancing. When his pickaxe struck the wall of rock a hollow sound was returned, the significance of which was unmistakable: he was reaching the end. With the certainty of success joy returned to his heart, and that joy was shared by Techina, but not wholly free from remembrance of the legend? Dark presentiments continually weighed upon her mind.

One evening, in the little chapel, Techina prayed to the Madonna to bless Juan, to bless their love; and, in her beautiful robe of azure embroidered with jewels, the Virgin, all white, smiled upon her.

Her name, pronounced close to her, made her start. It was Juan calling her. She rose from her kneeling posture and followed her lover.

"Techina! darling Techina!" said Juan, as they passed into the shadow of the tall trees, "to-morrow will see my triumph and my joy; to-morrow I shall have made my way into the mine. I have hewn a path through the rocks piled up by the Indians, but I wish you to be the first to gaze upon the treasures I give you. To-morrow we will enter the mine together, then we will take your father there, so that he may judge whether the dowry is rich enough."

"Ah, Juan, how I love you!"
"I have no fear of anything, Techina. The legend has lied! No, my Techina, I fear nothing. You love me, and I am rich!"

The next day, at the hour of rest, while all in the ranch were asleep, Techina mounted the hill-side, and went to the foot of the old rock. Resting on his pickaxe in front of the wide dark opening, made at the cost of so much labour, Juan awaited her, happier than a king, prouder than a conqueror.

Trembling, Techina approached, but she dare not stoop—it seemed to her that from this yawning mouth of the mine Death was ready to come forth.

"The legend has lied, Techina!" cried Juan; "the secret of the mine has no fatal power!"

He had barely uttered the last word when a shot, sharp sound was heard, a puff of white smoke rose from a neighbouring bush, and Juan fell lifeless at the feet of Techina.

Motionless, clutching the rock to save herself from falling, Techina gazed at Juan in mad terror.

Again a short, sharp report resounded, a puff of white smoke rose from the bush, and Techina fell upon the body of her lover. They were forever united.

A man appeared—Atkins. He looked at his victims for a moment, and then, slipping two fresh cartridges into his revolver, left the spot muttering to himself:

"The secret of the mine kills those who discovered it. I can now work in safety."

But he did not; for as he spoke another shot rang out, and the legend was once more perpetuated. Don Andres, who had followed his daughter, thus avenged her murder.—London Journal.

Why Do People Shake Hands With the Right Hand?

In the days of very long ago when all men were prepared to fight at any and all times because one could not know whether another approaching was a friend or an enemy, all men went armed. This was before the day of guns when the sword was the great weapon of defense.

Upon occasion when one man approached another, each had to decide whether the other came on a peaceful mission or not.

People in those days were mostly right-handed as they are now, and when fighting carried their swords in their right hands.

If, then, a man wished to speak with a stranger, or, as might easily be necessary, to one who may even be known to be unfriendly, he put out his right hand upon approaching to show that he had no deadly or dangerous weapon in it. The other man could see this and knew from the extended open hand that no harm was intended and that the approach was peaceful. If, then, he was willing to meet the other, he also extended his right arm with the hand open to show him who was approaching that his

Severe Storm.

Wednesday night the worst storm of the season prevailed, and between midnight and one o'clock it was very severe. The drift was fine and blinding, and many who were out to watch night service had difficulty in reaching their homes. Two young ladies who live in the suburbs had a particularly hard time and would have probably smothered but for the assistance of an escort. Along the railway line the storm raged with great fury and the cuts have filled putting the train service out of order again.

Prices That Outstrip Wild Fancy.

(New York Sun.)

Like an airplane the cost of existence whizzes into the empyrean with the purchased tied to the tail. After the eggs at 12 cents for each shining sphere and the butter at 83 cents a pound have been put away in the family safe, the "lady of the house," as the book agent calls her, may let her fancy wander to the fascinating realm of things to wear. Behold the expectant purchaser wending her way among the glittering booths of the Fifth Avenue shops. The first encounter is with a saleswoman in the coat department. "A coat? What price?" Mrs. Purchase bravely puts what she considers a high limit—"About a hundred." The sales person loudly inquires of a friend—"Say, Sadie, where are the cheap coats?" The shopper weakly turns away.

But where there are prices there must be someone to pay them, or what would be the use of having any? The managers of the Fifth Avenue shops confirm this thought and say that they have no difficulty in disposing of the most highly priced articles. Take a sable coat for example—a wrap of beautifully matched Russian sable costs $80,000. Perhaps you don't care for fur coats—they are so warm and heavy—but how about something in a scarf for the neck? One little dark brown animal of the aristocratic sable family will require a cheque for $2,000.

Stockings which used to be just something to wear inside your shoes, are something else again when they cost $250. The manager of one shop rather apologized for not being able to show something better. "But next week there will come from Paris a pair of black lace stockings which can be bought for $500."

A handsome sleeping garment, a very inadequate and beautiful affair, will make a nice Christmas present for your wife if you care to sell your Ford and send in $600. Other varieties of wearables delicately grouped under lingerie may also be bought in three figures. Slippers for evening wear are usually purchased by many customers every day for $50 a pair, and one can acquire a fine, solidly built handkerchief for $150.

Long gloves are coming into style again now that they may be purchased for $10. Dress materials are considered a bit flimsy if the price is less than $5 a yard. But it may comfort some suffering soul to know that gum can still be purchased at 5 cents a package.

Why Bread Gets Stale.

The reason bread becomes stale has been investigated recently by Professor J. R. Katz, of Amsterdam, who has discovered that the staleness is due to low temperatures, and not merely to loss of moisture. The experiments of Professor Katz were based upon the keeping of bread for forty-eight hours after it was taken out of the oven. He found that if the temperature was maintained at 140 degrees Fahrenheit the bread was quite fresh at the end of the period, but if the temperature was reduced to 122 degrees Fahrenheit a certain amount of staleness was discernible, the process becoming more rapid until a temperature of about three degrees below freezing point was reached. Curiously enough, at lower temperature than this the degree of staleness is reduced, until at a temperature of liquid air the bread is again perfectly fresh. On the strength of these experiments it has been suggested that bread could be kept fresh till required for use by placing it in a fireless cooker immediately after removal from the oven.

Obituary.

ALICE DUBORDIEU.

ever morning wore to evening but some heart did break.

Death comes to all—to the middle-aged and the old, not unexpectedly, only when he strikes the youngest, the fairest, the happiest of the old that we pause and wonder, and we with broken hearts at the beautiful, empty casket, the cold casket clay, that once held all our treasure.

All I have thought that is fair" says Death. We thought but the bearded grain" Alice DuBordieu went across the street of St. Lawrence about the end of September to have a minor operation performed. No fears were entertained of the result. The operation was performed on the 1st of October; and the 8th she was dead. The father and mother, awaiting the expected news of a successful operation and speedy recovery, were stupefied by the news. The father went to North Sydney on a sad journey, and in a fortnight after she had left her home—in gentle and pleasant way, filled with hope—Alice was brought back to her casket.

and so the home of Mr. and Mrs. DuBordieu, of Port au Port: it is sad this Christmas. Not sadder than other years in our Island.—Alas! But that is common is poor comfort for the afflicted. "That loss is common" I not make up my own less bitter," says Tennyson, and then he breaks in the mournful words which head this obituary—"Never more, worse to me than some heart did break."

Alice DuBordieu was educated at the convent, St. George's, where she was a special favorite, especially of that special and warm-hearted teacher, Mrs. Corliss, who, only a few days before she died, said to her, "I hope you will be able to rest in the Nuns' cemetery at St. George's." From St. George's Alice went to her home at Port au Port, and after a time, became teacher in the parish of her brother, Reverend Thomas DuBordieu. It is inspiring to imagine her, with her flock tenderly and skillfully leading their minds out into the garden of wisdom—the garden of delight, and in Sunday school, of that free will with which the Great Master, had led them free. A first grade teacher, a skillful musician, organist of the church, it would seem that one talented, so richly endowed to lift and elevate others, so cheerful disposition, so full of joy and ardently of life, would have a long useful career before her, but in beginning, Death came, and she passed.

No sleep so calm, so tranquil, so beautiful.....The old fashion, the old fashion—death. "Oh thank God, says Dickens, "for that older fashion of immortality!"

and now what comfort can be offered to the father and mother whose hearts are still quivering from the news.—The comfort expressed in the fellow's words to DuMaurier, "with trembling fingers did we weave affection, but gone unto that school where she no longer needs thy poor protection, and Christ, Himself, doth rule."

and as you weave the garlands of green for Christmas, missing her help, her loving smile, her merry voice, remember, dear friends, many have passed and are resting along the same sorrowful path. Comfort them; sympathize with them, share your sorrow with them, so, perhaps, find solace for your great grief.

with trembling fingers did we weave affection, but gone unto that school where she no longer needs thy poor protection, and Christ, Himself, doth rule."

Miss Minnie at Grand Falls; also seventeen grand-children and one great grand-child. The body, accompanied by her relatives, left by last night's express to be interred at their former home, Rantem, Trinity Bay, where Mr. Hollett, for many years worked with the Anglo Co. The writer extends his sincere sympathy. Sydney papers please copy.

Train Troubles.

The train for Carbonear, which left here Wednesday morning, had to return to the city again, getting only as far as Brigus Junction. On the way back the engine left the rails near Kelligrewa, and it was several hours before it was again replaced. The train reached town at 3.45 p.m. yesterday. Wednesday afternoon's train for Carbonear, got as far as Tilton, where she got stalled, and a rotary plough had to be despatched to her relief. The train reached Carbonear at 9 o'clock last night. The Troop-train is still blocked, and the Glenora express which left Port aux Basques on Wednesday, was held at Humbermouth up to 10 o'clock last night.
