LOVE'S REPLY. BY FRANCES S. OSGOOD. I'll tell you something chanced to me, (A quaint and simple story;) Before I crossed, with beating heart, Old ocean's gloom and glory .

Around me came three graceful girls Their farewell whisper breathing,--June,--with light and lovely curls, Her snowy shoulders wreathing ; ,

And proud Georgine, -with stately mien, And glance of calm hauteur, Who moves-a Grace,-and looks-a Queen

All passionless and pure; And Kate whose low melodious tone Is tuned by Truth and Feeling,

Whose shy yet wistful eyes talk on, When Fear her lips is sealing. "From what far country, shall I write "

I asked, with pride elated, " From what rare monument of art Shall be my letters dated I'

Julie tossed back her locks of light, With girlish grace and glee,-To me from glorious Venice write,

Queen-city of the Sea !"

"And thou, Georgine ?" Her dark eyes flashed " Ah ! date to me your lines From some proud palace, where the pomp

Of olden Honour shines !" But Kate,-the darling of my soul, My bright, yet bashful flower,

In whose dear heart some new, pure leaf, Seems to unfold each hour.-

Kate turned her shy, sweet looks from mine, Lest I her blush should see, And said-20 only Love could hear,

Write from your heart to me !"

PATHOS. When one comes across a charming little bit of pathos, says the Picayune, srought up in smooth flowing rhymg, it pleasantly excites all the better feelings of the heart. We find in the Boston "Beans be it, then !" said the victim.

Post the following touching little affair : SHE NEVER SMILES. She never smiles-no happy thought Lights up her pensive eye The merry laugh, from lip to lip,

The sparkling fount of gladness ;

Aud o'er it pours in sapid flood,

With his stern magic boand her ! Has cale her long, lean finger raised,

"You ought to have provided before hand" said the sententious host. " So I did," said the agonized actor
