These things were mere harmless jokes, easy of explanation, and of little consequence—so Miss Kinrade told Mr. Blackstock. Her love episode with Baum was another of her jokes. In fact, all such evidence was a

SUMMARY OF INQUEST

Some very interesting evidence was brought out in the Kinrade tragedy by yesterday's prolonged inquest. Miss Florence Kinrade once more went through the ordeal of the witness box. For two hours and a half in the afternoon and for nearly four hours more in the evening Mr. Blackstock plied her with questions. The girl was composed throughout. She admitted repeatedly that she had been telling and writing things that were not so. She persisted in treating her entering the contraction of the gagement with James Baum as a joke, although she admitted that he might have thought from her conduct that she was serious. She was unable to give the slightest clue that would aid in locating Miss Marion Elliott, her brother, Claude Elliott, a woman named Goldsmith whom she said she had travelled with at different times, or Mr. Warburton, an admirer of Miss Elliott's. Mr. Blackstock repeatedly tried to find out about these people, but every time had to give up. Miss Kinrade was repeatedly tripped up in regard to her stories about places she had been in the south, and people she had met, and admitted that she had written deceptive reports home to her parents. New features that were brought out were that at some time recently Miss Elliott had visited Florence Kinrade at her home when no one else was there. Miss Kinrade could give no details regarding when, although she admitted it was somewhat of a secret affair. She admitted also that when she found her mother and Ethel had intercepted her letters from James Baum there was a family row. She could not tell the name of the person from whom she had received roses while on the stage at Portsmouth. She admitted writing letters to Baum to within two weeks of the tragedy, and in one she said she feared she would go crazy with her trouble.

Palpitation of the Heart.

One of the first danger signals that announce something wrong with the heart is the irregular beat or violent throb. Often there is only a fluttering sensation, or an "all gone" sinking feeling; or again, there may be a most violent beating, with flushings of the skin and visable pulsations of the arteries. The person may experience a smothering sensation, gasp for breath and feel as though about to die. In such cases the action of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills in quieting the heart, restoring its normal beat and imparting tone to the nerve centres, is, beyond all question, marvellous. They give such prompt relief that no one need suffer.

Mr. Sylvester Smith, Hampton, N.B., writes:-"I was troubled with palpitation of the heart and tried doctor's medicines, but they only gave me temporary relief. I heard of your Heart and Nerve Pills and bought two boxes and before I had used them I was completely cured and would recommend them to all similarly affected."

As the recognized "business man of the Methodist Church" in England, Sir Robert has been trying to induce English Methodists to take a practical view of emigration. He proposes a plan by which every English emigrant sent out by the church in the old country would go direct to people of his denomination here, and by this means adjust himself to Canadian conditions more always boxing me. rapidly than if left to shift for himself. Sir Robert says that emigrants leaving English villages and towns may or may not go to Canada, and may or may not be kept, when in Canada, with cigarette and languid air. in touch with their church. His scheme is thus outlined by the Canadian Gazette of London:

"Let each church community say, the Canadian West, report at the opening of the year to headquarters in, say, Winnipeg what openings there are likely to be during the season in its village or town for E gith men and women, exactly what kinds are needed, and so on. Winnipeg would report to the headquarters in London, and from London the needs of the west would be made known through the church ministers in English villages. In this way emigration of an excellent class would be quietly stimulated; the emigrant would go straight to friends and immediate work; there would be no loitering | And frightened vermin out of chinks that ! about Canadian cities to swell the Canadian unemployed, and there would be a minimum of danger of failures, because the burden of failure would, in this case fall upon communities sending and receiving the emigrant."

From a Canadian standpoint, apart from the interests of a particular would be a process of selection in England, and the emigrants would be re- placed on the land in Canada.

A RETURN RACE

The Pirates have made the Cubs look very bad so far, and are shoving them down the line in good style. There is no denying that Kling must come in or the Cubs will have a hard time getting away. The Pittsburg outfit made them look bad on the paths, and stole enough bases to make the Chicagoes look like sand lot amateurs. Here's hoping the Pirates keep it up. We want to see Mooney Gibson right on the World's Championship team.
