The gentiemen were out riding, Mrs. Hardinge had gone to see a friend and had not returned, and Bether herself drove the pony carriage to the station for Ducke. The Elims stood back from the road; it was a long, rambling, many-windowed house, but with nothing very pretty about it unless one admired the inge-nuity of the architect, who had crowd-ed in windows where one never thought of looking for them. There were two entrances, one at the gad of an alley of limes, which led away, by a curve, to the paddock; and the front or grand Esther smiled at this covert warning, Esther smiled at this covert warming, and looked across at Percy, a very proud and happy light in ther eyes. Far in the distance rose green hills, and all between lay an open verdant country. The station was fully three miles away. Esther whipped up her ponies smartly, as she saw the smoke of the coming train curling faint and blue in the distance. She was just in time. The carringe-doors were being opened as he sprang up the steps onto the plat-form. In another moment she had seen Dulcie. Such contests were common to the age, but the challenge, coming from a boy of 15, aroused deep interest. An immense crowd was present on the day appointed. A dozen eminent phi-losophers and divines presented them-selves. Crichton, without the semblance of effort, defeated ull who attempted to cope with him. the people with his accomplishments in every direction. Crichton went next to Rome and Venice. In the latter city his friends were sperone Speroni, one of the most learned names in Italian literature, John Donati, and Lorenzo Massa, secretary to the re-public of Venice. Several of the Latin poems Crichton composed in this circle have descended. He was introduced to the doge and the senate and in their pres-ence delivered an oration so graceful and eloquent that, according to Imperalis, "he was esteemed a prodigy of nature." The Venctians were earnaptured over his eler-ence to manners his learning and accomwas esteemed a prodigy of nature." The Venctians were europtured over his ele-gant manners, his learning and accom-plishments. Crichton went to Padus and posted an invitation to mest him in de-bate on the philosophy of Aristotle-then a subject absorbing the educated minds of all Europe. The argument lasted three drys, and the handsome young Scotch-man was as usual an easy victor over the learned men who took the opposite to bim.

Dulcie came to The Eins on the Sat-urday. On the Sunday morning the lity, the party walked to church together. Mrs. Hardings did not go; she very rare-ly went, but her husband, who had come home by the last train the night be-fore, made one of the number. Esther and Percy walked first, as privileged lovers. Then came Mr. Hard-inge and Mr. Fleming, and Dulcie wolk-ed between them. She was looking very well that morning, even better, Hugh Fleming thought, glancing sidewars, dewn at her, than she had looked in her evening dgess the night before. The morning fir, keen and piercing, deepened the color in her checks to livid carmine. The wind threw all her wonderful shin-ing curls into confusion. The Duke of Mantua engaged him as tutor for his son Vincenzo di Gon-zaza. The court of Mantua was celebrat-ed for its patronage of the Italian drama. The finest troupe of actors in Europe, de-nominated I Gelosi, was attached to it. Crichton composed a species, of comedy for the company, satirizing the weakness-es of the various occupations in life, then undertook to sustain himself the most prominent and difficult characters in the piece. Even the actors were carried away with enthusiasm, so marvelous was Crichton's acting. The young Duke Vincenzo, his pupil, was jealous of Crichton, who found favor in the eyes of a beautiful young noble woman whom Vincenzo had wooed in vain. One night Crichton, walking home through the streets, playing as he went slong on his guitar, was suddenly attack-ed by six masked men. He flung away the guitar, drew his sword and quickly killed two of his antagonist, put two more to flight and disarmed the leader. The latter's mask fell off. It was the young Duke Vincenzo. Crichton dropped on his knee and presented his own sword to his pupil. The duke took it and thrust it through Crichton's body. He fell on his back, his eyes staring up at the stars, dead. The church ws about a mile away. It could be reached by the high road or by a short cut across the fields. It was a tiny Gothic building, plain to meanness almost. Once upon a time it had been the private chapel of the Harveys. At, present it stood outside the boundary of their estate, the land on which it was built having been sold by one of the dead and gone Harveys, whose effigy might yet be seen in the tiny church-yard, together with that of his dame, in uncomfortable-looking high ruffles. Beyond the church, and all about it, sleped wide fields; and beyond the fields there flowed a stream, neikher broad nor deep, but rapid enough and noisy enough to make itself heard. even inside the old stone walls of the sanctuary when ever the rains had been heavy. Now Dulcie, who had never been much in the country, thought that this homely rustle scene was very pretty. At least, she said that she did. "I do not wonder that Eather likes to live here," she said, lifting child-bright eyes to Hugh Fleming's face. "Every-thing is so fresh and quiet. One might fancy oneself out of the world here." "So we are, Miss Levesque." Jasper LYNDHURST - FAIR will lay 20,000,000 eggs per annum. A good hen will lay in her lifetime, av-ernging 8% years, from 600 to 700 eggs. The moa, the extinct wingless bird of New Zoaland, was 15 feet high and used to lay eggs ten inches long. An Atlantie liner on each trip from Liverpool to New York carries over 20,-000 eggs, which are consumed by its pas-sengers.

October 2 & 3, 1899.

The managers of Lyndhurst fair have now every assurance that their coming exhibition will be the best in the history of the society. In addi-tion to the liberal premiums included in the regular prize list, they offer special prizes to the value of $336.00 and have arranged for the append-ed list of sports for second day. The grounds are pleasantly located on the bank of the river and contain a nice grove for pienic purposes. Lynd-harst Citizen's Band will furnish music. The whole programme is such as should secure a record-breaking attendance.

HUMAN NATURE.

Combine beekeeping with fruit grow-ing, and you can get two crops from the same land. Bees have been known to swarm in a box hive when the hive was only three-fourths full. While honey is much improved in flavor by remaining in the hive a few weeks after it is finished, it will be darker in color and less attractive. To prevent a hive from swarming a second time, it is needful to take out all frames in less thran 24 hours after swarming and destroy all queen cells but one. The following incident is told of Austin Bidwell, the notorious forger, who many years ago attempted to break the bank of England: When he was arrested, he remembered the belie about of money at the time, he You can always please a woman by guessing under her age. If you do not need sympathy, some people can be of assistance to you. People begin to "watch" a widow with-in three months after her husband's death. When he was arrested, he remembered that, being short of money at the time, he had procured lunch on credit at a London restaurant, and wrote to an acquaintance whom he had befriended to settle the score. This was duly done, and Bidwell was apprised of the fact. Then the forger recollected that he had forgotten to tip the waiter threeponce, as usual, and he forwarded three postage stamps to the restaurant keeper for Robert's benefit. A plague of American files would be a luxury com-pared to the visit of one fly from Egypt. For untoid centuries they have been in the habit of crawing over thick skinned faces and bodies and not being dislodg-ed. They can stay all day if they like. Consequently, if thoy see an American eye, they light on it and, not content with that, try to crawl in. You at-tempt to brush them off, but they only move around to the other side, until you are mad with nervousness from their sticky feet. If they find out your ear, they crawl in and walk around.
