ci-dessous.

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.

Coloured covers/	Coloured pages/
Couverture de couleur	Pages de couleur
Covers damaged/	Pages damaged/
Couveriure endommagée	Pages endommagées
Covers restored and/or laminated/	Pages restored and/or laminated/
Couvers restored and/or raininated/	Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
Couverture restauree et/ou penicuree	i ages restaurees et/ou peniculees
Cover title missing/	Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/
Le titre de couverture manque	Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
Coloured maps/	Pages detached/
Cartes géographiques en couleur	Pages détachées
Coloured into (i.e. other share blue on black)/	C Showthrough (
Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/	Showthrough/
Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)	Transparence
Coloured plates and/or illustrations/	Quality of print varies/
Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur	Qualité inégale de l'impression
Bound with other material/	Continuous pagination/
Relié avec d'autres documents	Pagination continue
Tube binding may save shadows on detertion	I Includes index/cs//
Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion	Includes index(es)/ Comprend un (des) index along interior margin/ La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la	Comprend Un (des) index distorsion le long de la marge intérieure	Title on header taken from: /
	Le titre de l'en-tête provient:
Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have	Title page of issue/
been omitted from filming/	Page de titre de la livraison
Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées	-
lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte,	Caption of issue/
mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont	Titre de départ de la livraison
pas été filmées.	-
	Masthead/
	Générique (périodiques) de la livraisor
Additional comments:/
Commentaires supplémentaires:

Ce document est filmé au taux de réduction indiqué ci-dessous.

THE

AMARANTH;

· A

MONTHLY MAGAZINE

OF

,

• A second se Second s Second se

VOLUME III.

SAINT JOHN, N. B.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY ROBERT SHIVES.

INDEX TO VOLUME III.

.

F	AGE		Page
	1	The Last Days of Princes,	. 161
Romance on the Death of General Wolfe	7	Rhapsodial Stanzas, Tangiers, The Laird's Leap,	, 165
stanzas for Music,	ib	Tangiers,	. 166
Analysis of Life,	8	The Laird's Leap,	. 167
To Geneviene.	ıb	Lady Jane Grev.	. 170
The Haunted Mine.		Summer Excursions from London.	. ib
The Old Year.	16	The Unrequited.	. 175
The live of Life, To Geneviene, The Haunted Mine, The Old Year, Stazzas to a Lady Dying of Consumption, Woman's Pride, The Bride's Remembrance of Home, Lady Alice Liste, The Covenanter's Burial, A Canine Incident, Arting lines to Rosa, Sadi; or the True Death, The Changing of the Moon, The Changing of Prices.	17	The Carrier Dove.	. 177
Woman's Pride.	ib	Agnes Beaufort.	. ib
The Bride's Remembrance of Home.	29	To My Wife.	. 184
Lady Alice Liste, The Covenanter's Burial, A Canine Incident, This ines to Rosa, Badi; or the True Death, The Changing of the Moon, The Last Days of Princes, The Baby's Grave,	วิวั	The Fired Stars	. ib
The Covenanter's Burnel	25	The Almond Branch	195
A Capine Incident	20	A Soothing Address	186
Patting uper to Pore	20	The Demun of The Valley	197
Red. or the True Durth	20	The theory Owe	107
The Change of the Moon	20	The Absent Onis, The Way to Rise, Oh, When Wilt Thou be Mine,	102
The Changing of the Moon,	32	OF WAY IN A THEN IN MINE	. 198
The Last Days of Princes,	33	A With the Contract the Index Open	. 120
The Last Days of Princes, The Baby's Grave. The Last Days of Life, To "Clara," Adrian Haranguer, Hsckney Coachine of Russia, Lecture on Common Errors, The Old Family Mansion, Rise and Fall of the Moors in Spain, Indian's Snered Song,	39	A whating Scene in the Indian Ocean,
The Last Days of Life,	15	The First Swallow,	. 200
10 "Clara, '	41	Planting Trees,	. 19
Acrian Haranguer,	10	Sonnets on the Lord's Prayer,
Hackney Coachmen of Russia,	46	The Daughter's of La Roche,	. 203
Lecture on Common Errors,	48	Random Thoughts,	. 207
The Old Family Mansion,	61	The First Rose of Summer.	. 215
Editor's Notices.	64	An Incident in the Life of a Naval Officer	216
Rise and Fall of the Moots in Spain, .	65	Fare Thee Well,	. 217
Indian's Shered Song,	79	The Visit of Fortune,	. 218
Thick of Me,	79	The Poctic Impulse,	. ıb
Bendom Thoughts,	ıb	A Queen for a Day,	. ıb
Tihanside,	82	The True and False.	. 223
Black-Chief's Daughter.	53	Song of the Winds.	. 224
The Elessing of a Plous Mother.	S4	Desire of Change,	. ıb
The Spin: Bridal	¢-	Editor's Notice	. 1b
Anecdate of Love	96	The First and Last Grief.	225
El toria Nutico	115	Henling of Sunset	231
The First and Lost From	07	I not on the Following Incident
To Mary	101	Pendam Thoughts	233
No. 12 Inc.	102	The Old Bachelor	·
W Wa na Daca ng Ampr "	101	The Old Michaeles	230
The Cultur W fe	101	The Dame of Account Found	- 233
The lash Suda of Deputy Lingara	10.5	The Russel Hackbard Shiph,	011
Ristor's Nonces, Rise and Fall of the Moots in Spain, Indian's Stered Song, Thick of Me, Rendom Thoughts, Y thanside, Black-Chief's Deughter, The Blessing of a Plous Mother, The Blessing of a Plous Mother, The Blistic Chief's Deughter, The Blistic Chief's Deughter, The Blistic Chief's Deughter, The Blistic Chief's Deughter, The Spinit Bridal, Anecdote of Love, Elitor's Notice, The First and Last Error, To Mary, Waitzing, Weate Passing Away," The Guilty Wife. While the Smile of Beauty Lingers, Rummer, The Orange Back	100	The Spectral Hand, Summer Excursions from London,	247
Bummer, The Orange Rock,	109	Summer F. Coursions from Longon,	251
The Orange Rock,	110	Flatterers Bit, The Consequence of Driving Things off	201
ninuoo Cruelty,	111	The Corsidance of Driving Tunga on	, i D
the Nobleman and the mechanic,	115	Stabres I ser bid to Mrs,	. 254
andian Stories,	1:0	The Goranium Plantic Colored C	· . : •
The Bank Note,	121	The Buston the Live and a second	- 256
Lae Pensant Priest	125	A Tras Tale of the Crusades,	. 257
Serenade.	153 .	To Despriven.	. 264
Literary Ladies of America,	129	An Escape from the Executioner,	. i5
Autumn,	136 -	The Missing Suppliant and a second se	267
The Avenger.	137	Some Vind.	:b
The Last Days of Princes,	139	To Mee MAN.	272
The Willow's Son,	117	Less.	ıb
pathe Denth Bang tet.	151	Common P op'r	. 273
Song of the Shring Breeze	156	The Const of Plensure and Sorrow.	278
The Orange Rock, Findoo Cruchy, The Nobleman and the Mechanic, Indian Storks, The Bank Note, The Pensant Priest, Serenade, Literary Ladies of America, Autumn, The Avenger, The Wilow's Son, The Death Bang let. ISong of the Soring Brezze, Mouera of Terret.	157	Sate	:b

INDEX.

			PAGE		PAG
Valley of Jehosaphat	t, .		. 379		3:
Fraternal Love,			280	The Land of Burns,
Stanzas, Story of Captain Bir			. 281	Why Don't He Come, Summer Excursions from London,	. 3:
Story of Captain Bir	d		. ıb	Summer Excursions from London.
My Country,			. 285	The Dream,	. 343
The Saibath,			, ıb	Scenes Abroad.	. 350
The Neighbours,	• •		. 286	Sketches from Nova-Scotia	. 357
A Railroad Adventur	e, .		. 289	The Crusader's Triumph,	. 353
The Misanthrope.			. 292		. 36*
The Page,			. 293	To A E R	35'
On the Grave of Do-	Hum-M	ee	. 294	Translated from the Italian,	- 10.
The Maid of Saragos	158		ıh	The Heir of Wilton Place,	387
To Adeiaide.			. 309	Address to a Rat.	. 35-
The Gipsy Girl's Por	trait.		. 310	The Prison Van; or, the Black Maria,	. 365.
The Covenanter's Pr			le 317	Stanzas.	. 374
The Dream, .			. ıb	Stanzas, Reflections in my Study,	161
Donald Fay, .			. 318	The Lake-Lily-An Emblem,	. 275
To Celia,				The Curse of Want,	. iš
The Herring Fisher				The Envious Artist,	. 375
Fundy,			. 324	Echoes from Other Lands,	. 38 ^x
The Mignonette,			. 325	Night.	. 10
Amusement of an Idi	e Hour.		. 326	Night, Helen Macartney, Lincs, to the Memory . a Young Frien who Died Abroad,	385
"L'Ennui."			. 327	Lines, to the Memory . a Young Frien	d. I
Lines on Parting,			, ib	who Died Abroad.	395
Stanzas, .			. 328	To the Stormy Petrel,	. 105
Vanity,			ib	A Mother's Love for a Maniac.	. 19
The Ideal and the Re	al.				3920
Come, Dearest, Sing			341	Charity, Editor's Address to his Patrone,	333
		0 - 200

.

THE AMARANTH.

CONDUCTED BY ROBERT SHIVES. -----

SAINT JOHN, N. B., JANUARY, 1843.

Ś	No.	1.

THE FIRST MANUSCRIPT.

6.3.

he broad Lay slept in beauty-and the ht opened her thousand starry eyes, which and came like the lainns in an eastern val, and twinkled with their strange miracis lustre, as they drank in the perfumed nce which lay panting, full of its own unrable beauty, beneath the moon. Who I wonder that the dark tides in their mighty erns love the moon, and sink or swell in bbing tumult at her gentle bidding ! for is her beaming ray a smile from the Source Beauty, drawing all things-ave, even the born, blackened and weary heat ' of manwards it? The bland breeze came singing old tune of mouraful gladness among the ists and sails, and then leaping madly down in the sea's untrampled floor, and breaking vast mirror into myriads of flashing and ivering fragments-cach still holding heaven its bosom. The ship, like a mis-shapen inster, crept clumsily along, and alle sails pped like great cars on either side-for a ship aimed, or crawling reluctantly through the ter, dragged by a breeze might whisper from dy's fan, is dull end unromantic en jugh. t when the spirit of the winds arises, and hers her under its mighty wings, and sweeps tacking with her across the parting seas, then ecd she becomes a sublime and fearful thing. But the sea slept-and the murmur of the Bing breeze but served to rock her into under slumber; and, although whe cied hills d flowering orchards sent their perfume m the shore, and you could even hear an casional burst of music, exquisitely temperby the symmetrical way, over which it ated, and which spoke to the weary heart joyful faces, laughing amid broad terraces of cathing flowers-yet it would be many hours the ship could reach the anchorage, and tev Mered.th. with his beautiful wife, walked the quarter-deck, in converse sweet, waiting for the sluggish tile t, throb them on their way.

Meredah was an intellectual man-you felt sure of that at the first glance; but that was not all. In his large, dark and melancholy eves there dwelt a latent fire, which sometimes blazed startlingly upon you, and then shrunk back into darkness, as if the brain had no control upon its flashings. That glance spoke of madness-not present, but past or to come, when some dreadful whirly ind swept over the garden of his heart. Few would have detected aught strange or unusual in his aspect- but to those who did, the conclusion was certain, irresist ble-one of those intuitions at which the soul haps by an intellectual instinct, which it cannot define or describe, but the truth of which has become on the instant a part of its own being. The instincts of the intellect are far more unerring than the classical culations of logic. Do you understand this, reader ? If so, well; if not, pass on to the story-for I cannot explain it to you.

"How grand," said Percy, "is this vast army of waters, tramping onward in such perfect unison, wave with wave, drawn by an irresistible yet invisible unpulse! Thus is it, sweet love, with human hearts. Their tides gash wildly to and fro, beyond the thought's control, and lore is the moon that bids them s nk or swell. Mark you now," he continued, drawing his wife towards him, with a slight vet graceful motion-" mark how tenderly the bosom of the wave swells and pants beneath Diana's chaste embrace. You smile-and why ? I am one who believes there is reality and truth in all these unutterable sympathies and similitudes between animate and inanimate nature, and that poetry is the only pure and ever-living philosophy which has discovered and proclaimed these things. Bury a chain under the carth, and short-sighted man, with his boasted knowledge and skill, digs and burrows slowly and painfully to follow its winding clue, and sometimes at last loses the trace and gives up in despair : but let the lightning drop from heaven, and how cagerly and delicately does it in an instant trace out and flash along each hidden link ! Poetry is the lightning-the instinct of our souls-which, true to its nature, leaps with unerring certainty along the path where education and talent and science grope and grovel-always in doubt, often in despair. Heaven is all truth; and shall not the poetry infused into the soul of man find ou! its life, scattered throughout the wide universe-in mountains, seas and deserts, in the soft and breathing flowers and stars that mingle at dewy eve-and, above all, in the soul of woman-such as these!" and the impassioned speaker pressed her rosy lips as if they had been some rare and precious flower of a strange and mysterious fragrance.

"Oh, Percy-how beautiful is all this! and yet it is so strange! It makes me tremble to hear you talk in this will way. Forgive me, love; but I am a foolish, fearful thing, and cannot follow thy bright spirit in all its wanderings. Thou soares! when thou wilt amongst the fiery stars, and leavest thy gentle Grace alone on earth. But, dearest Percy, you forget our almost hopeless situation. Without friends or money, and nothing to which we can look for even the accessaries of life, I shudder to think what may become of us."

"Do you never, Grace," said the husband, withdrawing his arm from her waist, and placing one foot suddenly forward, on the very edge of the vessel's deck--" when standing thus over the flashing sea, or looking from some high tower or precipice, feel an almost irresistible impulse to spring like a bird into the air-until, with a shudder, you recoil backwards, and, shutting your teeth hard, fall upon your knees and pray inwardly to be 'delivered from temptation ?' I do; and often-nay, even now,-I hear the demon whispering, 'plunge !' " and he drew back, as if about to leap, from an uncontrollable impulse, and that strange uncarthly glare flashed in his eve.

"Percy! Percy! what would you?" exclauned his wate, as she threw herself upon him, and, twining her arms about his neck, dragged him with an unnatural strength away from the vessel's side. Then, bursting into teats she drooped upon his breast, mainuring, "cruel, cruel-thus to wring my heart in idle sport !"

sweet love. But 'us past now. Nav. be : sured-there is no danger for me; for, although I feel the impulse strong upon me, yet hav nover of soul to drive back the fiend, and ch him in his cell. Fear not, frail flower-to love and beauty have sanctified me to thee, a make me bear a charmed life. But th spokest but now of poverty and want and d gradation. Idle dreams, all, sweet lady w. In the great metropolis, whither we go, in: lect and genius meet a quick reward, and m are not cold and blind to all the bright a beautiful dreams of poetry and thought, as the rude prairies of the West. The web wov by the imagination is a golden fabric, and m buy it and bow down before its possessor-Lay aside thy fears, sweetest. I am not a da and worthless clod, to sink down and star here in this capital of genius, wit and intelled I'll play my part with the best of them.--B the breeze freshens, love, and kisses thy chee too rudely. Leave me here to commune awh with the burning stars, and pray for pleasa dreams to cluster round thy pillow."

"I will not leave thee, Percy ! Oh, how shudder to recall the wild words thou utiedst but now ! No. dear Percy-I am ! guardian angel, and must never leave thee, I some ill befall thee-and then, what would have be to me ?"

And thus, chidaag, caressing, and twin: their arms together, walked these husband a wife lovers on the lonely deck, amid the bea tiful and flashing sca; and, as the cold gra light of morning swallowed up the stars, as the perfume from the land forgot in sleep breathe, they heard the startling ery, "let ; the anchor!" and stealing down the cost panion way, were lost amid the sounds of a confined cabin, ere the vessel felt her anchi and swung lazily round with the now turn: ti le.

For two long days must the vessel bequarantine, in full view of the romantic h., and gardens of Staten Island; and, while : else on board were overwhelmed in the lads rous bustle and turmoil of a debarkation, Graand her husband sought the quarter-deck, an dwelt with rapture upon the magnificent seen as the morning burst from behind the hills at came pouring in a golden flood down to the sea. They had no friends awaiting the coming-no cheerful home and happy faces welcome the wanderers back. But they well still, most exquisitely happy. They were a in all to each other, and what cared they for "Ab, would to God it acre an idle sport, those lesser and common-place ties, which dordinary humanity in one vast and uninguishable bundle of low hopes and groing fears?

t was settled at length, that Grace should nain on board the vessel until it went up to city, in order to save the expense of quarine regulations, which Percy's pocket could well meet; and, taking a few shillings-all y had on carth-he kissed his wife, and bing gaily on board the steamer, which had ne along-side to take off the passengers, as soon on shore, and treading the delightful iks of the Battery.

ercy Meredah was a man of the most ded genius-crithusiastic, original, chaste and ment in his style, he felt certain that the nuscripts he bore with him were far superior he endless periodical trash of the day, and t he should meet with no difficulty in finda purchasor. As it is an universal truth a noisy pretenders and quacks attract more ention, and are better known in the literary Id, than men of real genius and discernnt, it will not be wondered at that Meredith de his first application to one of the greatof our metropolitan humbigs, whose fero-, ignorance, cuvy and malice are on a par h his lack of all the decencies and coures of life; and whose only principle of acion is a most insufferable vanity, joined to the mrt and soul of a miser, who gloats on gold a cares not how it is obtained - who is ready hany moment to sacrifice honour, faith and ititude to procure the gratification of his mased passions. The individual to whom redith had coucluded to apply, on the prent occasion, was the very beau ideal of this ecies of literary highwaymen, and universalhated and despised by the honorable amongst profession, while the timid and weak-mindhad learned to fear him. Weak-minded d common-place homseif, he passed his orthless and poisonous life in abusing every ing above him, and grinning and spitting his nom upon all who journeyed along the high ad to literature. Meredith knew nothing of this; nor would be have believed for a moont that the noble cause of literature possesd such unworthy followers.

It was not without a throbbing at the heari. hich, for the moment, almost unmanned our oung aspirant after literary honours, that Mcdith stood in the presence of the 'great man,' nd modestly made known his wishes. The nue, seated in a large stuffed chair, with his gs drawn up ander him like a couple of Bowith an air of supercilious condescension, glanced over the manuscript, which Meredith put into his hand.

What a situation for a high-spirited young man, whose heart was keenly alive to every appearance of neglect, and took fire at the possibility of an insult ! He was on the point of snatching his manuscript from the fellow's hand, and overwhelming him with a torrent of cloanent rebuke : but he thought of his destitute and penniless situation-of his beautiful wife-and, smothering his rage, he cooly drew up a chair and scated himself in front of the critic.

By this time, Mr. Grub, who was quick enough to detect mean in others, if only to feed his envious and malignant disposition, had discovered that he was dealing with no common man, and that, in all probability he could turn an honest penny, in the way of his profession Assuming, therefore, a cheerful and almost boisterous manner, he said :

"Ah, excuse me, sir-I am forgetful! Glad you have helped yourself to a chair. I have so many things on my mind that really-you have plenty of this sort of stuff, sir, I suppose ?"

"Stuff, sir! What do you mean ?"

"Tut, tut, man-that's a more phrase of endearment amongst us authors. I even allow my friends to call some of my best things stuff. All in the way of trade, you know. But you can throw off these things readily, can you not ?"

"Yes-tolerably so?"

"Well-you see the literary market is terribly glutted, just now, and even I, myself, have to resort to all sorts of expedients to sell my own productions. 'Tis a villanous shame, I know, my dear sir : genius ought to be better paid. But, soit is-the world is full of humbug and trash, as I take care to convince the world every week, in my paper; and real solid talent is obliged to humbug as well as the rest, if it would succeed."

"Can you buy my manuscripts, sir ?" in cuired Meredith, abruptly, immeasurably disgusted with the frothy being before him.

"Why, I don't know about that-I'll sec .--As I said before, the market is entirely overstocked, and nothing but a great name will sellany thing. Let me see-"The Lost Genius of the Ancient Greeks,'-a good subject, but rather too learned for this market. 'Donna Inez, of Seville,'-that's better. I'll tell you what I think can be done. I will change the name of this,-say, to "The Orange-flower of ona sausages, left his vieum standing, and. Scyille.'-so as to tickle the fancy of the rubIt was an extremely fortunate thing for Mr. Grub, that Nature had made Mereditn master of his anger; for, during the delivery of his last speech, Meredith had risen to his feet; and, with a scora, which he could not repress flashing from his eyes, he stretched out his hand and took up his unlucky manuscriptsand, whispering almost inaudibly, for he was near choking with rage, "I did not expect to make my first acquaintance in literature with meanness and rascality," strode out of the apartment. Upon reaching the pave, he cast a hurried glance up and down the narrow precincts of our American Grub-street, and, as if stifled with the closeness of the place, hurried into Broadway, and was in a moment lost in the mighty tide of humanity which there hourly ebbs and flows.

For that day, at least, his resolution was broken - he could make no more efforts; and, with a sad and heavy brow, he returned down the bay, and sought the ship.

Grace was leaning over the side, watching; and, as he approached, she leaned over so far to greet him, that Percy involuntarily stretched out his arms, as if to catch her in her fall. She smiled playfully; and pulling him roughly by the arm, led him into the cabin. The forward deck was crowded with dirty and ragged emigrants, pushing their great wooden chests about, and swearing in Dutch at the sailors for not assisting them to hoist their luggage over the side. No one would help his neighbour, and all stood quarrelling and chattering, in inexplicable confusion, until the mate ordered water to be thrown over the deck, and the men to commence scouring and scraping. The captain still remained on board, making out his bills and preparing his manifest. He strove to be polite, but Percy could see that he wished his passengers away.

"How can you endure the idea, Mr Mereduth," said he "of staying a moment on hoard after a ship is in port ?"

"If we incommode you, sir," said Percy, stiffly, "we will remove to-night."

"Oh. not all, I assure you. Only it seemed so singular to me. You are entirely welcome to stay."

"Thank you, s.r.

Again the night, beautiful as an ana dream, fell slowly over the water, and lovers walked the deck of the now almost seried vessel. How calm and screne was around!

"Nay, look not so sad, dear lave," said fond wife, wreathing her arms caressa about her husband, "we shall still be har To-morrow you shall have better luck. Mwhile, talk to me, and tell me of the myster of the stars. I am sure you can if you with "Better study the mysteries of earth, In plied her husband, almost bitterly. "We shall we do now? I have no moneyfriends. My hopes of realizing someth from my hterary labours all blasted—we absolute privation, starcs us in the face. my own Grace! bitterly, I fear me, will repent your imprudent love for one who now naught but love to feed and cherish withal."

"Fie, Percy! rail not against the omnitence of love. I am not a mawkish made lady, who is shocked at the realities of his Poverty is neither vulgar nor humiliating; are the lowest offices menial or degrads when performed for those we love. As a absolute starvation, here in this happy land laugh at the idea; and I know you have exectics and energies, which, in a little wi will make themselves felt, and will comma attention and respect. Come, clear that glood brow. I had rather live for an age in povel and want, than see these thus moved, c Percy!?

"Was it an angel who spoke thus to his a ter nature, and roused within him those deer energies which lie beneath the surface of soul 1 No, not an angel—and yet a far it worthy and admirable being than any is angel poet ever painted. An affectionate, since god. Hearing this frail and deheate create speak thus confidently and cheeringly, Pe-Meredith became a new man, and began of templating the difficulties of his position w coolness and deheation.

"It was for you alone I feared, my sw wife," said he, as he drew her upon his ka and kissed her pale and thoughtful brow; "a now I find you giving me lessons in fortun and forbearance. Indeed, you are an augu-"Not quite—for if I were, I would come colden wurse and here for drachums as Shai golden wings and harp for drachmas, as Sha peare has it, to line thy shrunken purse wa al, ' she exclaimed, laughing, and putting her hp to be kissed. "B"t come-the ng zes here, pleasant as they are, bear not [a innoxious freshness upon their wings as dreamy winds that slumber in the southern , or come laden with the breath of orange res. I declare," she continued, blushing to temples at her own cloquence-"I believe gods-or thy burning thoughts-make me heal. Good night, sir star-gazer! It is 1 b that sober ladies, like myself, sought their ws. Pleasant dreams!"

Imprinter! I'll punish thee for thy raillery. fore-lead me thy strong arm, to help me town this narrow stair. Good night, indeed !" The next morning was glorious; and Percy, e stepped on shore, remarked that every g wore a bright and cheerful aspect-for, hin his bosom he carried a lamp which shed glad rays over all objects around. Ah, how e is it that man is the creature of circumlices! He makes circumstances either joyor melancholy, as the mirror of his soul is pht or clouded. Like the rushing stream. n's life receives a transe ent colour from the vers or woods or beetling rocks by which weeps; but its character and qualities take ir impress alone from the deep fountain in earth whence it sprung,

To-day, Percy was determined to be sucsful--he felt that he should be so. Up Broadway he trod, with a free and gallant step, and thought that every face he met wore a meerful and happy smile. He had never died the tricks of literature, as it exists in every great metropolis, and knew nothing of the paltry cliques and factions which, by comning together, contrive to put down modest erit, and keep themselves and their own paly performances constantly before the pube eye. Bethinking him, however, of a name sociated with all that was generous and oble, and which he had seen connected with periodical of high standing, he determined to nake application there at once.

He was received with the urbanity and poteness which characterize all gentlemen, of Latever circumstances. He was asked to e scated-and, as he represented, in as few vords as he could select, that his necessities vere immediate, Mr. Alton begged he would excuse him for a moment, while he looked over the manuscripts. As he read, Percy's heart began to throb, and he thought his article more faulty than it had ever appeared to him before. With eager eye, he followed the reader, and dt, as sentence after sentence was scanned, how this expression might have been amended, and that sentence completed. So tame ap- respondence gradually less and less frequent; peared then, the recollection of what he had written, that he was prepared, almost, to receive with chcerfulness a polite declination from the critic.

The trial was not long. Mr. Alton soon laid down the manuscript, and observing that the great competition and low prices at which periodicals were now necessarily published, served almost to banish the idea of adequate recompense for literary labour, proposed that Percy should receive fifty dollars for the manuscripts he had bought, and the same sum every month, whenever he chose to write.

Fifty dollars ! it was quite a little fortune ! and Percy could scarcely believe his senses, as his imagination immediately began busying itself with plans for its economical expenditure. It was, too, his first attempt at literary bargaining, and he felt that he had discovered within himself a mine of wealth.

"My dear sir," said he, rising," you know not what a load of distress and almost despair. your unexpected kindness has taken from my heart. I cannot thank you as I ought-but she, for whose sweet sake life alone is sweet, shall pray for blessings on you."

' Tut, tut, my good friend, never be sentimental, except on paper. 'Tis altogether out of fashion ; and besides, I don't know whether I have not made the best of the bargain, after all. The articles, I do not hesitate to assure you, possess uncommon merit; and, were our native literature protected by wise laws against the monstrous sea of trash from abroad, which is literary overwhelming our young writers, I might venture to encourage you with brilliant hopes. As it is, however, literature is a thorny and rugged road. At every step, the young aspirant for fame finds his unknown and unpractised pen placed in competition with all the brazen and polished writers of Europegood, bad and indifferent-so that they have a name, obtained either by their own merit or from shameless and unmitigated puffery .- By the way, what name shall I affix to these?" added Alton, laying his hand upon the happy Percy's first effusions.

"Tis an humble one, bit the which, when my father lived, was at least respected. Percy Mcredith, sir."

"Meredith-I had, in early years, ... wellbeloved friend who bore that name. Long since, he emigrated to the West, and, as I heard, became eminent in his profession-the But the accumulating duties and lalaw. bours of our several professions rendered corand for many years he has been as one dead to me. Pray, what was his Christian name?"

"Walter Meredith; and, when he died, he was Judge Meredith, of-----."

"The same! Young man, your hand .---Your father was my class-mate, and the dearest friend of my youth; and thus do I delight to renew our broken intimacy through his son. How stupid I was, not to see that you have your father's lofty brow, and that your voice speaks to me in tones once dear and familiar to my heart! Come-never mind the manuscript, now; we will arrange that another time-but tell me who is that 'she,' you but now so delicately spoke of? and how came you to be guilty of this dreadful crime called poverty? I heard your father had acquired vast wealth."

"Alas, sir-and so he did, as he and all believed; but, shortly after his death, the stocks in which he had invested his funds, became worthless, and even his house and all it contained, were swept away by the sheriff. Not even poor Grace's piano-my father's last gift to his daughter-in-law-was left. Harassed almost to madness by the suddenness of this double grief, and knowing nothing of the world or its selfishness, I stood by in silent despair. until I found myself and my poor wife beggars. Driven from our home-my father's homewe felt that we could stay no longer in the neighbourhood; and, scarce knowing or caring whither we went, we embarked down the Mississippi, and found ourselves at sea, with just money enough to pay our passage here, and with nothing else in the wide earth that was our own but two foolish hearts overflowing with love and hone."

"Well, well-we shall see! But where is this charming Grace ? I feel a sudden fit of gallantry coming over me-and, were it not that this sober brown hair of mine is nothing but a wig, and that I have a very promising son in the University, you might-but no matter! Let us go and see this dear delightful charace. Here, though, about these manuscripts. The people will be here presently for copy, and I will send them up at once. Let us see-two articles, at fifty dollars-here's just the money," and the gay and kind-heart ed old centleman sloped a back note for a hundred dollars into Percy's hand.

"Nay, sir, I cannot allow this. It was fifty dollars for both articles; and I begin to think even that a great deal more than they are worth."

that as soon as we have seen Grace. is she?"

Percy explained, and begged that his be factor would postpone his visit until he got his family on shore. "The ship," he unued, "must be at the wharf by this the and by to-morrow morning I doubt not shall be comfortably situated."

"In some pestiferous boarding-house tax or some such abominable place, I suppose added Alton-" where they dine at one c'cld and put fried pork gravey in every dish on table, from the roast chicken to the descri, (cuse the pun-we editors are witty fello you know!) composed of a baker's pudd and a rind of Worchester white-oak cheese. think we can manage things better than th So-here's a cab. Jump in, and let us cat off this charming Grace, and you can leave: rest of the 'baggage' to come after at its b leisure. Nay, zir, I'll take no denial. W: this is better than cutting up a new book !"

That day there was a merry gather around the table of the good and happy I Alton; and, while the Champagne modest sparkled, in the pauses o he more brill: conversation v tich flew from lip to lip, i the least amusing source of wit and huma was Percy's grave description of his recept by the great Mr. Grub, and the unwonit honour which our young author had escare, by declining to see his poor literary first-be ushered into the world under the paternal co of so great a name.

Mr. Alton had been many years a widowd and when Percy's "baggage," (including i sparkling Grace) was all comfortably arrange in a quict room on the second floor, near M Alton's study, it was found to be so entire convenient, that Percy was prevailed upon take formal possession, and to undertake to t pay his worthy host in amateur scribblings f the ---- Magazine.

Thus ends my simple story; and, geni reader, although it is by no more as my first yet, should you so decide, it i all at least s my last manuscript.

-839----

A GOOD JUDGMENT.

The most necessary talent in a man of cenversation, is a good judgment. He that ha this in perfection is master of his companies without letting him see it; and has the same advantage over men of any other qualification whatsoever, as one that can see would have "Never mind-never mind. We'll settle all over a blind man of ten times his strength.

pring, wasting, and lamenting with care r silent and gloomy retreat, sat Britannia, re she exclaimed against fate, mourned the of her gallant son, General Wolfe, and herself up to gloomy despondency and less despair. The sacred dust that lay in usion on her fertile and lovely plains was aved with the many gallant achievements ad performed; and the stately walls of her ntic cot were sculptured around with his ic and noble triumphs. Jupiter, looking in from his lofty, crystaline throne in the ren, beheld with anxiety and sorrow, the of the disconsolate dame, and being moved her tears, immediately sent Mercury to plains below to soothe her aching heart, assuage her useless grief; and these were tidings that with him came : August Britancease to weep any longer; your gallant is not dead, but is only removed from the es which he loved so well, to command the ies that are above. For, the sons of the h, the powerful and proud giants of old, cared from their dark habitations, and the s which they communicated, was, that were marching, or preparing to march, to with the gods; upon which a council was d, wherein it was decreed that Wolfe should removed, and the charge, together with ny others, was entrusted for immediate cution to me. With this rigorous order I nediately hied to the plains of Quebec, fully ermined to execute it with the least possible y. I encompassed his eyes with a dark, k film; his spirit I bore away in an urn, hout one moment's respite, which he beg-. in order that the joyous sound of victory ght break on his car.

left the friendship he always bore towards native plains, his own skies, and you, his ch loved country, which he has by the itary triumphs his valour has achieved, rened the envy of surrounding nations, to wish n a speedy and safe return. I am now ing to bid you adicu, perhaps for ever. It s your tears, your sighs and lamentation at brought me down from yon clear, unaded regions to this cold world below. See at the achievements of General Wolfe be aded with exultation by you, to your chilcn, so that when the will of heaven, and the mmon destinics of nature shall have swept to oblivion and repose succeeding generans, his great name will be left an imperishle monument, exciting others to like deeds conic Romance on the Death of of glory and renown, and serving at once to General Wolfe. defend, adorn, and perpetuate your existence among the ruling nations of the carth; and in the height of that splendour to which you, by the superior skill of your future commanders over those of other nations, are destined to rise, do not forget to remember with gratitude, the patriotism of him you now so reasonably lament and bewail. But dry up your tears, and lament him no longer. Rouse from the torpor his death has occasioned you, and he prepared to follow with success, the successors of him who can return to you no more, and is now satisfied of your fidelity to him, and will behold with joy, your endeavours to preserve inviolate, those rights which he has so nobly put you in possession of. Farewell." He ceased, and the next instant saw him winging his lofty flight to the court of his master, Jupiter. He has never since had occasion to return to assuage the woe of Britannia, who has continued advancing in the field of fame and glory, 'till she has attained that dazzling height predicted by Mercury; whilst in every stage of her rising glory and magnificence, she has honoured the memory and cherished a grateful remembrance of her much loved, brave, gallant, and patriotic son, GENERAL WOLFE. S. G. F.

King's County, 1842.

STANZAS FOR MUSIC.

- I THINK of thee when winter binds The stream with frost :
- I think of thee when stormy winds Are raging most ;

And when the summer sun looks bright O'er land and sea,

- And by the moon's tender light I think of thee.
- There is no place, sweet lady, where Thou art forgot :
- I mingle in my daily prayer Thy dearer lot;
- And when the voice of beauty blends With melody,
- I turn away from present friends To think of thee.
- Then, lady, sometimes let thme eye With tears be wet,
- For happy days, alas gone by, In which we met;
- And though the fount of sorrow flow No more in me.
- This heart at least where'er I go, Shall think of thee !

And the aged wanderer lingers in

ANALYSIS OF LIFE.

The gloom of his life's wreck, turning his d " WHAT is life ?" To that calm heaven he scorned, perchang I ask'd a child whose fair, unshadow'd brow While earth had ought to yield; and as Laughed as his golden curls floated wild cloud In the warm summer wind ; and as he turn'd Catches the sun's bright ray at eventide, His cherub face, radiant with the light E'en as the fair reflection of the dawn; Of his young heart, and garlanded with flowers, So in the pathless twilight of his years I found a gladsome answer-" Life is joy !" Doth hope impart a glory from her throne I asked a youth whose sword was dripping And the child and the sage are one. gore St. John, January, 1843. Erger From the red strife, soil'd like his childhood's dream ----Of holiness and love; whose guerdon was TO GENEVIENE. The price of human tears, and the vain hope That time would sound his name when he was I loved thee when an infant ; I remember gone; Seeing thee cradled in thy mother's arms, And, verily, he chose the wisest path And smiling like the cherub that I ween To deify such tyranny on earth ! Hovered for Raphael's pencil. Though a c His death-wing'd banner glared beneath the I loved thee; for the first delightful glance star Even then I knew to be an angel's look, That fools proclaimed the emblem of his fate, And angel's and my Geneviene's. Since t And as its ray seem'd brighter, to the field I've wandered wearily ; yet thoughts of the He led his living off Ying for the mead Have flashed upon the darkness of my pail Of heaven's wrath, and while his fell arm Gilding life's blackest midnight. We s quench'd SOOT Some spirit's flame, his war-cry madly bore Wander together where the turbulent thro This burthen-" Life is fame!" Of cities and societies and friends-An old man Friends :-- where false looks and false he Bent him o'er a grave-a tale of former years; are not : His wan hand rested on the heary stone, And in seclusion sweet, freed from the wo And while he traced the name, half washed Live for it, but not in it ; having hearts away, Nerved for high uses to our fellow men. Of his young love, a tear slow glistened For we can love them though they love no: On his furrowed check-the last his dim eye Guide them and help them though they krist Ever-ever shed : and was it all for this it not, He had endur'd the cold world's breath, the And pity them for follies. Would they kn blight The happiness they hate !- Dear Genevien Of his youth's hope and his heart's dearest When we are laid in dust-not we, but that dream, Which holds us-when our bodies are in cat That time might bring some recompence for all; And our free spirits join in those fair fields. To weep when his hair was grey, o'er the love Where love is all in all,-some gentle hear Of his carly years ? Tenderness and truth !-Congenial with our own will read these line It stood a beacon on the ocean of his life, Penned with the running reed, and understa To which the thought of his lone age returned, More than they now reveal ;- for the t While the false pyres sank beneath the dreary stotes * Of Love, unfabled in the Golden Age, Of mem'ry; alas! I could not ask . Are overhanging Earth, like the big clouds The bitter proof experience sadly gave; Of harvest rain, ready to fall on man, Was not that tear a silent pledge of all So, he will but receive it; and the years The soul had ever suffer'd, rnswering-Freighted with peace to man, to man g "Life is grief !" will. And is it not even thus ? In their tenth joyous decade bring again Astreea back to carth. Oh, happy morn, A thing of sunshine, tempest and regret ; To those who from the mountain-top is In infancy all flowers and rainbow hues : In manhood, strife and wild ambition, round. 'Till the fierce passions wear the heart away, And hall its harbingers!

THE HAUNTED MINE.

HE neighbourhood of Presburg in Hungary lebrated for its iron mines. As far as the can survey, the country exhibits a prosof yawning caverns and ponderous maery; and if the traveller dares to venture person on one of the platforms constructed the chasms, or mighty mouths of the s, he will shudder on viewing the workpeasants ascending and descending, red by their distance to pigmies in size, 'till e below are lost in gloom.

he Hungarian miners are great observers heir saints' days; mingled with religious s are their songs, dances, and merriment; e days are generally selected for weddings christenings. It was on one of these lays that our story commences.

han Varasok was a master miner. He about fifty, with a wife, and one son only ining from a family of six. This son, tin Varasok, was a fine athletic young felof generous qualities and quick passions, like most young men, he had the misforto fall in love.

a small but neat stone cottage, situated in butlet of the mining village, dwelt Marie conborn, the daughter of a widow who had better days. Marie was a girl of strong ad, of affectionate, ardent, and independent ings; and, by dint of great industry, she succeeded in a branch of embreidery work sold and silver thread on Saxony cloth. ich met with a sure market at the estabment of a marchand du mode in Presburg, thus was she enabled to support both her her and herself. Marie Schonborn was fair haired, and handsome. To be sure, constant attention to her invalid mother, the many hours she had to bend over her rk, had blanched her check; but whenever went abroad, she formed an extraordinary trast to most of the other females of the age. It is no wonder, therefore, that Marie honborn was the object of attraction to all likely young fellows of the district, and ong others Martin Varasok was deeply itten by her beauty.

His father, Johan Varasok, had got into a pute about certain mining rights with a st respectable person of the same calling as nself, named Karl Bereny, who had been y successful in discovering huge masses of , and become rich. The dispute having of Bereny; consequently Johan Varasok and Karl Bereny, (both captains.) were no longer friends, and their differences were not a little increased by the knowledge of the fact, by both the Varasoks, that Bereny had paid great attentions to Marie Schonborn, and had been most favourably received by her mother, who was looking out for a wealthy husband for her daughter.

It was the holiday of St. Jasper, and the miners and their wives and children, all dressed in their best attire, had been to church, and were commencing their sports, the younger men throwing the bar, leaping, &c., and the girls preparing their national dance, when a cart, drawn by a duninutive but hardy little horse, gaily decked about the head and collar with flowers and bells, was driven by a boy into the centre of the throng. In the cart was a cask ornamented with garlands and coloured worsteds, and by the side of it walked, with a triumphant air, Karl Bereny, accompanied by his kinsman, a fat little countryman, well known to all the miners by the name of Peter Patak. When the cart stopped, the crowd assembled around it, and Bereny said, "harangus them, Peter." Peter Patak thereupon stepped on the cart, and waving his pollid of a hat to obtain silence, screamed out, "Neighbours, do you know what is in this cask? No! then I do. It is choke-full of wine of the Banat .--Karl Bereny has gained his cause in the court. and he brings you this barrel to drink his health, and success to all true miners."

This was answered by a joyous shout. A gimlet was instantly bored in the cask and a peg inserted in the orifice, every man produced his drinking cup, (many of them of silver,) and Karl Bereny's health was pledged as fast and as long as the generous wine would or _ could run, Peter Patak, who was tapster, ever and anon tasting a cup, to see that it was in proper order, until he found it in such excellent condition that he saw double; and a mighty clattering of drinking vessels and clattering of tongues ensued.

In the meantime Karl Bereny had proceeded to the spot where the young fellows were hurling the bar, and arrived at the moment when Martin Varasok was preparing to throw it; but Martin, suddenly perceiving Bereny, and irritated by the loss of the cause, and the presence of his rival, lost his customary nerve, and threw inefficiently. His rough companions raised a laugh of derision; when Bereny, a carried into the court appointed to try taking up a weighty bar, pitched it beyond the th causes, a judgment was given in favour usual bounds, amidst the shouts and harras of the assembled miners. Martin Varasok again essayed, threw, but once more threw short .---Bereny then triumphantly grasped the bar, and strengthened by the excitement of several cups of his sparking wine, hurled it in first-rate style beyond the mark, and was proclaimed winner of the prize, a small silver goblet .--Overnowered with vexation, his rival walked away. His father, who had watched the whole affair with some chagrin, followed Martin with hasty strides, and thus endeavoured to console him : "Come, cheer up, my boy. I don't care for the loss of my cause, nor mind you the defeat in your game. These are the ups and downs in life, the buckets that go to the bottom of the shaft come up again filled. But something else is on your mind, Martin."

9

"I will not complain," replied young Varasok, "though my heart is ready to burst!"

"What is it, boy?" said Johan.----Martin sighed, and uttered "Marie !"

"Well," rejoined his father, "Marie Schonborn is a good girl, and I always wished that, if you were rich enough to mary—"

"Marie," exclaimed Martin, "will never be my wife."

"Why, I should like to know?" inquired Varasok.

"Karl Bereny !" replied Martin.

"Karl Bereny again! What! has he insinuated himself there, too?"

"Yes," said Martin. "Her mother told me last night that Marie was to be Karl's wedded wife."

"Her mother is an old woman; what does the girl say herself, Martin ?"

"Ah! father," sighed young Varasok, "I had hoped—I had fancied that I had perceived a tender joy sparkling in her eye when I have addressed her. My want of confidence, the infimity of my temper, is the cause of my miserv."

Johan paused, and muttered, "Marie Schonborn a jilt! I am an old miner, and have lived half my life under ground—but woman is woman. Compare Karl Bereny with my Martin Varasok ¹⁹

At this moment the shouts and laughter were borne across the plain on the gale.--"Hark!" said Johan, " the wine has got into their heads, and I am just in the humour to break a pate or two, and if I once begin, Fll--But as I am sober, and they are not, poor beasts! I'll prudently put myself out of mischief."

Hercupon the father and son walked toward their own home.

Although the young men and women w dancing and frisking about merrily, and the up to concert pitch with Karl Bereny's lib supply, a knot of elderly persons were gathered round the cart, and several had he ed their pipes, listening to Peter Patak's 16 and stories. Among them, with her ears w open, was the wife of Varasok, a com healthy looking dame, but pre-eminently p sessed with a foible of her sex, curiosity Peter Patak had been informing his auditor a rumour that one of the shafts of the miner haunted; and, on being asked what busin a ghost had in an iron mine, Peter said that was not the person to meddle with a spece business, he hoped that he might be picked pieces with pick-axes if he hadn't seen ghost himself.

"Tush, Peter!" remarked the dame, " saw your own light figure reflected in one the pools !"

"Light figure !" replied Patak, placing hands on his protuberant stomach. "Oh, i I never reflect."

"Have any of the other miners seen i goblin?" inquired the dame.

"Johan Varasok, your lawful !. "sband, seen it; but he isn't a bit afraid of it."

"My husband, bless his heart! does fear the devil himself, though I say it." Pa gave a gulp, and muttered, "he was abold n when he matried you, old lady."

The group now separ. ed; the highly of plimented wife of Johan Varasok wended i way home to prepare her husband's food fore he started for his customary occupation the mine. When she entered their well dered little cottage, she saw her good Joi sitting by the light of a flickering lamp, we danced the shadow of his sober head agan the whitened wall.

"Well, Theresa," said Johan, glancing ki ly at her, "I must be stirring; it is my tun relieve the other gang of workmen. My b ket—I hope there is plenty in it. Put th loaves of millet bread in."

"Why, Johan," said the dame, tartly, " can't cat all the victuals I put in your bask

"How do you know I don't," replied Vs sok. "I am in pretty good condition roz about; I work hard, and require food and dn in proportion."

"That may be, Johan," responded his wi "but why do you require a double portion candles in your basket when you go to d mine? You don't cat them, I suppose?" "No," said Jehan, "they consume the

10

	es. One day, my old wife, I will explain-	short wandering career, had attempted half-a-
ĺ	ill astonish you with a strange story."	dozen professions and trades, without settling
Ì	arasok kissed his better half with affection,	or prospering in any. Baffled in his commer-
İ	started off to his employ, and as he walk-	cial enterprises, Issachar turned his attention on he muttered, "she is an admirable wife, toward operations on dogs, cats, and other
	a thousand excellent qualities, and only	animals; and this occupation leading him na-natural drawback, she has a tongue !"	turally and gradually to the noble science of Ieanwhile Karl Bereny, exulting in his suc-	anatomy, he branched off, without a diploma, s, made his way to the door of the cottage	into the whole duties of a medical professor,
	he Schonborns. The mother was seated	and from cat-skinning took to the obstetric
Ì	high backed wicker chair, her counten-	art, tooth drawing, and phlebotomizing. Doc-
Ì	e pale and emaciated.	tor Issachar had come to the cottage of Marie's
	Ah! my dear, dear Marie !" exclaimed	mother, with some cabbage leaf nostrum for
	l, "I regard you better than anything in	her rheumatism.
	world !"
		"Well, what brought you hither ?" inquired
	farie replied, "But you must not regard me	Marie, who detested him.
	ter than anything in the world."	Issachar muttered to himself, " she wants to Pshaw! Marie," continued Bereny. "I'll	get rid of me; but I'll stir up some mischief, you a secret. Your mother consented las.	throw in a double dose of bitters. Why, I deht to all my wishes. She said, Maric, that	clare, what a swearing noise Martin Varasok
ĺ	had been kind to her, I might come and	made at the window just now !"
Ì	rt you. In short, she said that I might	"Martin Varasok ?" exclaimed the old woi	rry you."	man and Karl.
	Indeed !" remarked the girl. "But there	"Yes, he peeped through the casement, look-nother consent to be obtained."	ing as yellow as saffron.
	Whose, I should like to know?" eagerly	"Martin is a gloomy tempered youth," said
	uired Karl.	the dame. "I like him not."
Į	That of Marie herself."	"No more do I," interrupted Issachar
	The mother raised herself up, and in an ex-	Then assuming a knowing look, he whispered ssive tone, said-
	ssive tone, said—	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife.
	ssive tone, said— Marie, before your parent sinks in endless	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame;
ļ	ssive tone, said— * Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the
ļ	ssive tone, said— "Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny."	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the
	Marie, before your parent sinks in endless more, promise that you will become the fe of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment.	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong! Soon after his departure, Karl Be-
	ssive tone, said— "Marie, before your parent sinks in endless imber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, r mother."	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong! Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the
	ssive tone, said— "Marie, before your parent sinks in endless imber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, r mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter-	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va-
	ssive tone, said— "Marie, before your parent sinks in endless imber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, r mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem,	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong! Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex-
	ssive tone, said— * Marie, before your parent sinks in endless imber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ar mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, ric. See the prize I have won to-day.—	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va-
	ssive tone, said— "Marie, before your parent sinks in endless imber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, r mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem,	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong! Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex-
	ssive tone, said— * Marie, before your parent sinks in endless imber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ar mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, ric. See the prize I have won to-day.—	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong! Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where oid Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of
	ssive tone, said- " Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, r mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, rie. See the prize I have won to-day is little cup will grace your chimney piece."	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong! Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he
	ssive tone, said- "Maric, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ar mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, tie. See the prize I have won to-day	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong! Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, ssive tone, said- "Maric, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ar mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, tric. See the prize I have won to-day is little cup will grace your chimney piece." Id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles,	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong! Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealousy of Bereny went.
	ssive tone, said— "Maric, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ar mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, tic. See the prize I have won to-day.— is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles, t now—"	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealousy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private
	ssive tone, said— * Marie, before your parent sinks in endless imber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ar mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, tric. See the prize I have won to-day.— is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles, i now—" At this moment a face gleamed through the	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong! Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealonsy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting
	ssive tone, said— * Marie, before your parent sinks in endless imber, promise that you will become the fe of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ir mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, ric. See the prize I have won to-day.— is little cup will grace your chimney piece." Id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles, t now—" At thus moment a face gleamed through the ndow at the back, apparently watching	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong! Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealonsy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and
	ssive tone, said- " Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, r mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, rie. See the prize I have won to-day is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles, t now" At this moment a face gleamed through the ndow at the back, apparently watching xiously. Marie's mother took her daugh-	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealousy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone
	ssive tone, said- " Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ir mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, rie. See the prize I have won to-day is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now" At this moment a face gleamed through the ndow at the back, apparently watching xionsly. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im-	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as starlling the jealonsy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "flesh" he could not add, for
	ssive tone, said— * Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ir mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but ho utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, trie. See the prize I have won to-day.— is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old ly, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now—" At this moment a face gleamed through the indow at the back, apparently watching kiously. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im- oring smile, placed it in that of Bereny. A	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealoasy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "flesh" he could not add, for there was not a sufficient quantity on his car-
	ssive tone, said— * Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ar mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but ho utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, trie. See the prize I have won to-day.— is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old ly, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now—" At this moment a face gleamed through the mdow at the back, apparently watching xionsiy. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im- oring smile, placed it in that of Bereny. A ud curse was heard outside the window at	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as starlling the jealonsy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "flesh" he could not add, for
	ssive tone, said— * Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ir mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but ho utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, trie. See the prize I have won to-day.— is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old ly, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now—" At this moment a face gleamed through the indow at the back, apparently watching kiously. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im- oring smile, placed it in that of Bereny. A	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealoasy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "flesh" he could not add, for there was not a sufficient quantity on his car-
	ssive tone, said— * Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ar mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but ho utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, trie. See the prize I have won to-day.— is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old ly, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now—" At this moment a face gleamed through the mdow at the back, apparently watching xionsiy. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im- oring smile, placed it in that of Bereny. A ud curse was heard outside the window at	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealousy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting ther ivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "fiesh" he could not add, for there was not a sufficient quantity on his car- case. But Issachar wanted a wife to scrawf
	ssive tone, said— * Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ar mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, trie. See the prize I have won to-day.— is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old ly, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now—" At this moment a face gleamed through the indow at the back, apparently watching xionsly. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im- oring smile, placed it in that of Bereny. A ud curse was heard outside the window at te same moment. Marie turned more pale	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealonsy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "flesh" he could not add, for there was not a sufficient quantity on his car- case. But Issachar wanted a wife to scrawf his pharmacy bills, and cut out his new shirts, whenever he had any.
	Sive tone, said- Maric, before your parent sinks in endless imber, promise that you will become the fe of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ir mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, iric. See the prize I have won to-day is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now-" At thus moment a face gleamed through the indow at the back, apparently watching xiously. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im- oring smile, placed it in that of Bereny. A ud curse was heard outside the window at e same moment. Marie turned more pale an ever, and Karl ran and opened the door see who was the intruder; but the only per-	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealousy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "flesh" he could not add, for there was not a sufficient quantity on his car- case. But Issachar wanted a wife to scrawl his pharmacy bills, and cut out his new shirts, whenever he had any. Martin Varasok through the window had
	Sive tone, said— Maric, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the fe of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ir mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, rie. See the prize I have won to-day.— is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now—" At this moment a face gleamed through the ndow at the back, apparently watching xiously. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im- oring smile placed it in that of Bereny. A ud curse was heard outside the window at an ever, and Karl ran and opened the door see who was the intruder; but the only per- n that appeared was one Issachar, a nonde-	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealonsy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "flesh" he could not add, for there was not a sufficient quantity on his car- case. But Issachar wanted a wife to scrawl his pharmacy bills, and cut out his new shirts, whenever he had any. Martin Varasok through the window had seen the prize cup given by Bereny, and the
	Sive tone, said- Maric, before your parent sinks in endless imber, promise that you will become the fe of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ir mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, iric. See the prize I have won to-day is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now-" At thus moment a face gleamed through the indow at the back, apparently watching xiously. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im- oring smile, placed it in that of Bereny. A ud curse was heard outside the window at e same moment. Marie turned more pale an ever, and Karl ran and opened the door see who was the intruder; but the only per-	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where oid Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as startling the jealonsy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "flesh" he could not add, for there was not a sufficient quantity on his car- case. But Issachar wanted a wife to scrawf his pharmacy bills, and cut out his new shirts, whenever he had any. Martin Varasok through the window had seen the prize cup given by Bereny, and the hand of Marie placed by her mother in the
	ssive tone, said- Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ir mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, rie. See the prize I have won to-day is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now" At this moment a face gleamed through the indow at the back, apparently watching xiously. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im- oring smile, placed it in that of Bereny. A ud curse was heard outside the window at e same moment. Marie turned more pale an ever, and Karl ran and opened the doly per- in that appeared was one Issachar, a nonde- tipt. "Why, doctor, is it you ?" said Bere- y.	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as starlling the jealonsy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "flesh" he could not add, for there was not a sufficient quantity on his car- case. But Issachar wanted a wife to scrawf his pharmacy bills, and cut out his new shirts, whenever he had any. Martin Varasok through the window had seen the prize cup given by Bereny, and the hand of Marie placed by her mother in the hand of his rival. He was overcome with
	ssive tone, said— Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ir mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, trie. See the prize I have won to-day,— is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now—" At this moment a face gleamed through the indow at the back, apparently watching uiously. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im- oring smile, placed it in that of Bereny. A ud curse was heard outside the window at e same moment. Marie turned more pale an ever, and Karl ran and opened the door see who was the intruder; but the only per- n that appeared was one Issachar, a nonde- tipt. "Why, doctor, is it you ?" said Bere- y. The being thus addressed was a shabby	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as starlling the jealousy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "flesh" he could not add, for there was not a sufficient quantity on his car- case. But Issachar wanted a wife to scrawf his pharmacy bills, and cut out his new shirts, whenever he had any. Martin Varasok through the window had seen the prize cup given by Bereny, and the hand of Marie placed by her mother in the hand of his rival. He was overcome with vexation and jealousy; and he bit his lips 'till
	ssive tone, said— Marie, before your parent sinks in endless mber, promise that you will become the te of Karl Bereny." Exact not the promise at this moment, ir mother." Karl was somewhat abashed, but he utter- "I will endeavour to deserve your esteem, trie. See the prize I have won to-day,— is little cup will grace your chimney piece." id he placed it in the mother's hands. "Ah me!" tremulously articulated the old by, "once I had good store of silver baubles, it now—" At this moment a face gleamed through the indow at the back, apparently watching uiously. Marie's mother took her daugh- 's hand, and with gentle force and an im- oring smile, placed it in that of Bereny. A ud curse was heard outside the window at e same moment. Marie turned more pale an ever, and Karl ran and opened the door see who was the intruder; but the only per- n that appeared was one Issachar, a nonde- tipt. "Why, doctor, is it you ?" said Bere- y. The being thus addressed was a shabby	to Bereny, "Martin is in sad want of a wife. Take care of your Marie. Good-bye, dame; I'll call and leave your cough drops, and the poison for the rats. Mind, don't take the wrong!' Soon after his departure, Karl Be- reny took his leave. He was going to the same branch of the mine where old Johan Va- rasok superintended his workmen, and he ex- pected Johan to be very sore about the loss of the law-suit. As the cow doctor proceeded on his way, he reflected that part of his business was effected, so far as starlling the jealonsy of Bereny went. He now sought an opportunity to get a private talk with Martin Varasok, and thus, by setting the rivals by the cars, get rid of them both, and then make the "bone of contention," "bone of his bone," "flesh" he could not add, for there was not a sufficient quantity on his car- case. But Issachar wanted a wife to scrawf his pharmacy bills, and cut out his new shirts, whenever he had any. Martin Varasok through the window had seen the prize cup given by Bereny, and the hand of Marie placed by her mother in the hand of his rival. He was overcome with more! Yet I fancied I perceived that Marie appeared grateful, and worked with the stree wept. If I could only hope !'' of a lion. We contrived that he should ma

While musing in this manner, some one brushed at his eloow; it was Issachar.

"Bless my heart!" cried he, "I don't wonder at your being in such a rage, considering what you must have with essed at old Mother Schonborn's cottage. Karl Bereny to be sure is a good looking fellow; rich too; but he should take care, with a handsome girl right before the window, and no window blind; and unless one was blind one's self-but I say nothing." Issachar saw the effect he had produced, so he thought he would make Martin a little more comfortable. "Do you intend to be at Karl Bereny's wedding ?" said he carelessly. " Ha! ha! old women will talk. T heard Marie's mother abusing you charmingly! She said you were the most untoward, ill tempered, fidgety, cross grained animal that ever walked on two legs."

Martin merely asked—" And did her daughter assent to this?"

"Why, I say nothing; but this I will say, she did—if silence gives consent. Marie might have said a little more; but I, of courz;, never rip up old grievances; it is my business to heal wounds, not to inflame them—so I say nothing. Good night!" and Issachar walked away chuckling with the notion that he had made Martin as happy as a bird with both his feet in bird lime ?"

The distant bell of Preshurg cathedral tolled the hour; and the clocks of the other steeples kept up a striking chorus, as Martin hastened to join his father in his duties at the iron mine. As they walked together, Johan Varasok guessed what was uppermost in Martin's thoughts, so he sought to divert them to another channel. "Has your mother been talking to you again about the spectre of the mine, Martin 7" said he. "Shepants to discover the mystery."

"I could tell her no more," replied the son, " than the others miners have told her, and that I was startle? one day last week by the tall unearthly, hag, and form which flitted by me with a lantern."

"Oh! my boy," said Johan, " you must not believe in such things! Did you ever hear of a miner called Michael of Filleck ?"

"I recollect hearing of such a person before I left Presburg," answered Martin.

"This Michael," continued Johan Varasok, " was a wild fellow, and had been banished from Filleck for some offence; but when he came among us he appeared patient and reformed. I held a helping hand to him; he appeared grateful, and worked with the stream of a lion. We contrived that he should may and he wedded a good girl, taught her to him tenderly, and a little smiling, curly-he ed urchin blessed him with the name of fan For a time Michael appeared happy, 'till a tal disorder sent his poor wife to her last he Deprived of her bland influence, his wild dissolute habits again broke out. Providordained a heavy calamity to the poor wre One day, by the carelessness of the wor who undertook to nurse Michael's child, little fellow wandered to the mouth of on the j.its. He was playing about unconserly, when his foot slipped, and he fell headle I need not describe its fate."

"Where was the father ?" asked Martin

"Below, at work in the mine, and the person that discovered the hieless and man form of his beloved child. From that ment his reason fled, and he never returned the world. I watched him gloomily seize spade and mattock, and in a remote corner the mine he buried his poor infant."

"But how has he contrived to exist?" quired Martin.

"I have supplied him with food and h ever since. I have made many efforts to duce l.im to return above ground; once I a force, but the powerful strength of the maniac repelled me."

"Father," said Martin, "I have always' a strong suspicion that the tall fellow whom I struggled on the night that Di Schonborn's cottage was broken open, that same Michael of Filleck."

"Ah! well, if it should prove so," rep Johan, "it would be of no use breaking an curable madman on the wheel! But I Martin, you are still brooding on that ginl Come, come; I have a better opinion of Ma she has not the want of feeling which you tribute to her! Hark ye! your rival, K Bereny, has gone to the mine. Go you b to Mark's cottage: pop the question at or Cerberus's cat's-meat! you can't be in a wa plight should she decisively reject you. Po you should have seen how I carried off yr respectable mother—triumphantly, in a wh barrow, in sight of her hostile relations—a two, three and away. Go, boy, go !"

Here the hearty old miner pushed his s from him, Johan descending the ladders of shaft with practised vigor, while Martin, w a beating heart, took the direction toward cottage.

Let us now accompany old Johan down pwels of the earth, and look around us at I urious scene. It was here lighted with and pine torches stuck in clefts of the , and columns of iron ore, and brown and w clay ironstone, purposely left as supto the roofs. These branched off into bers and galleries in every direction.workmen were dispersed about at their alsituations, in short frocks, and trowsers arse flannel, and woollen caps. In some corves or baskets filled with the ore, placed on trucks with four iron wheels, rawn by a man with a rope across his it, assisted by a boy, who guided the mabehind. Where the floor was more pracle, three or four of these trucks and corves attached together, and a small dingy ng horse dragged them on a level to the , where the baskets were wound up by h machinery to the mouth of the pit. A tant hammering and reverboration of the d of pick-axes were going on; and ever non a roar of awful thunder rushed along lery where they had been firing a train of owder to blast through the iron-rock.

one of the chambers, remote from the that led to the entrance of the mine. Karl ny, Peter Patak, and other miners, were ork. Presently Johan Varasok came along allery with his basket of provisions and a tern; he placed the basket on a ledge of intone, and took out a millet loaf of a size would surprise any one not conversant the sharpness of a miner's appetite; and a guitted the chamber with his lantern. As other miners were talking together, they fenly stopped on hearing a wild shrick of hter echo from a chasm at the lower end he gallery, a yell resembling that of the ed hyæna when its keeper throws its food Peter Patak tremblingly uttered, "there's spectre."

A terrible noise, sure enough," said Karl eny; and the miners were all agog listent happened that over a certain portion of mine was an extensive bed of fine red sand, this sand being extensively used in theiron nderies, many thousand loads were carried any for that purpose. About this critical mont, owing, it was supposed, to the perpenular bearings that are usually left, being too , or being too much weakened to support mass above, a falling in of the superincumt strata took place; and the disrupture ecting about midway between the shaft of the and the situation where Karl Bereny, Johan Varasok, and the others were placed, the driftways were instantly filled with the falling mass, consequently all escape for them was in a moment cut off. The concussion of air extinguished all the lights but the lantern of Johan Varasok. 'The men were in despair, but hardy old Johan did not lose his presence of mind; "Be firm, my friends," he exclaimed; "one and all must work or perish now. Karl Bereny, don't hang back, man! your hand.— We must forgive all animosity now. We are no longer disunited comrades."

Another heavy fall was heard, and then the loud gush of a torrent of water. Peter stumbled and fell against Varasok's lantern, which he crushed, and extinguished the light. Utter darkness now ensued.

Johan Varasok solemnly exclaimed, "God's will be done !" which was responded by "Amen !" from the buried men.

Suddenly Bereny called out, "here-here is a light from below."

All eyes were eagerly turned in the direction, when a tall pale figure scrambled up the platform, with streaming rags, matted hair, and beard perfectly white.

In agony Patak screamed out, "The spectre! the spectre !"

It was Michael of Filleck, haggard and insane!

"Ho! Michaèl, your light!" shouted Johan, and attempted to approach him; but the maniachowling and shrieking with unearthly laughter, rushed across a narrow plank which covered a chasm of water, fathoms in depth, and disappeared, leaving the unfortunate men in a state of frightful anxiety. The only sound then distinguishable was an exclamation in discordant tones, "Which of you threw my child headlong down the shaft?" and the wild yelling echoed through the caverns.

At this frightful moment Martin Varasok, who had proceeded to the cottage of Marie, stopped anxiously at the door. Marie was up, for her mother, afflicted with infirmities, had passed a sleepless night; and when the morning dawned she had fallen into a heavy slumber. As Marie approached the window, she perceived Martin.

"Marie," said he, falteringly, "dare I speak to you ?"

"This is an unusual hour to visit the cottage, Martin."

Martin replied in a low, but impassioned tone, "Marie, I must and will ascertain my fate; my happiness or misery is in your hands; one word from you, Marie, one little word will decide which is to be my lot; speak that | word."

Marie sobbed. Martin, in a more subdued voice, said, " Marie, my heart and soul are yours; say you will love me, and for your sake I will conquer this impetuous temper !" He drew Marie toward him ; her head sank on his shoulder, and her warm tears fell on his hands. Suddenly the alarm bell tolled violently. They both started; hasty footsteps passed the cottage; an engineer was passing. Martin anxiously inquired what had happened. The engineer replied, with a look of horror-"The mine has fallen in, and all the workmen are buried."

"Distraction !" cried Martin. "My father is down there !"

"And poor Bereny !" added Marie.

"Ha! Bereny !" wildly exclaimed Martin; "her Bereny ! fiends and furies! have ye been mocking me? Away-away! my father, my dear, brave old father ! I will seek you to the centre of the earth, or die!" and he rushed out.

The bell continued tolling fearfully, and the alarm spread like wildfire; hundreds were seen rushing to the fatal spot ; fathers, mothers, wives, sisters and children, by their cries adding misery to the scene. Martin Varasok soon arrived at the mouth of the mine, and, after a rapid consultation with the engineer on the spot, parties of the workmen, headed by Martin, went down the pit in the hope of clearing away the rubbish below, so as to get at the unfortunate men; but after many hours of hard labour, this was found to be impracticable, as not only the sand, but water continued pouring down as fast as it could be removed from the bottom. The different masters then formed their gangs, and, people coming in from other villages, working parties were formed sufficiently numerous to relieve each other day and night. Martin was the first man to descend the old shaft; he was followed by several adventurous young fellows, and the work began in carnest.

Incredible efforts were made, and, by dint of perseverance for several days and nights of continued labour, a way was made into what they ascertained to be a portion of the iron mine. Martin Varasok, notwithstanding the great fatigue he had undergone, insisted on being lowered down to a platform he beheld by the light of the torch below. His comrades remonstrated with him, but ineffectually; so he was let down the chasm with a rope fastened around his body. He had a lantern also tied to his girdle, a torch and his mattock in | and the men severally placed themselves is his hands; but, alas! the rope, swiftly tr ling against the sharp edge of a slab of stone, was severed, and Martin fell when a twelve feet from the platform. He fortun ly dropped on his feet, and was only seve shaken. He hallooed, with all his might assure his comrades of his safety, when h heard, or thought he heard, a distant cr shout to the right, but still beneath him. again exerted his voice to the utmost. effort was answered by a horrid yell, an peal of such laughter as could only have ceeded from a demoniac.

This served, however, only to encourage brave spirit; for, although he was nearly tain that the first sounds he heard were distinct quarter from the latter, it proved him that there was life below, and while 6 was life there was hope. In the meantime intelligence was conveyed to the surface Martin Varasok had fallen, but that they heard his shouts far beneath the platform This intelligence immediately spread, and course made its way to Marie Schonborn whom it was most maliciously conveyed Issachar. But Marie had too much energ character to give confidence to all the ! unprincipled Jew reported. She was a gi determined principle; she could not rest a at home, even with her infirm mother, she was convinced of the fact that Martin living. She went into the cottage of a nd bouring friend, whose brother was a min she implored her to come to sit by her mot who very probably might not awake, and suaded her friend to lend her the dress of brother. She then succeeded in complet disguising her rather tall figure in the min habiliments, covering her fair forehead with broad brimmed hat. After offering up a ha but fervent prayer for the success of her ject, she ran to the mouth of the old st which was discernible by the motley crd and glaring of many torches.

The machinery and chain windlasses v iron tubs had been properly fixed at both elevations above and below; and the men selected who were to descend. As Marie gled with the throng, she perceived a yes woman, with an infant at her breast, grasp energetically the hands of her husband, as ner, and entreating him not to leave her. I piteous tones and tears appeared evidently impress him; and he wavered. Marie set on this minute of indecision; and when captain called out numbers one, two, the es to be lowered by the machinery, at the in's order for number four, Marie, with a k muffled around her, presented herself, ly stepped into the iron bucket, and was ntly descending link by link as the windturned. It may be easily imagined that heart quailed in being placed in so novel a tion. The iron bucket was up to her lders, and the lantern which had been plan her hand threw its dim rays around. hought of her aged mother, and trembled; she recollected the first impression and t vow to save Martin, if he was to be res-; so, putting her trust in God she reached econd level, from whence her lover had so dously ordered himself to be lowered.n she arrived there, she perceived on the faces of the miners manifest marks of dis-. The chain windlass was there, and man-but a hesitation was evident as to the on who was first to descend : it even came doubt whether any of them would venture. ie made a desperate effort. excla ning.

14

Make way there; I will volunteer to go n."

way, with the creaking of the rusty windonly to be heard, descended the corve with devoted Marie, fathom after fathom. At th the iron tub rested on a level surface. rie looked around wistfully with her light, bserve whether she might only have been ed on the summit of a subterranean preci-; but, to the extent she could discern, the appeared flat and even. She therefore ricated herself from the corve, and gave the al (by pulling a small line which had been round her arm before she descended,) that landing had been effected.

he grating of the receding chain sounded shly and painfully on the car of Marie. She ed around ; at a distance, at intervals, apred a flickering, pailed blue light, which exled itself considerably, but never in one ce for a moment. The illumination, altho' could not then account for it, was a slight tion of fire-damp. The mind of Marie had n too well regulated for her to have any ad of supernatural agency ; yet this sudden hing gave her alarm. While painfully poning, a figure stood at some distance from -an extraordinary figure—perfectly visible, h its dark and ragged outline standing forth m the sulphuric, capricious blazing. Whatt the being was, it evidently was attracted the light which Marie carried : she now felt fortitude sinking! The creature approach--tall, enveloped in rags, white hair, and a a huge white beard, the eves sunken, and hollow cheeks. Starvation appeared to have nearly effected its utmost on the human frame-for it was a man !- As he came closer to Marie. and glanced a flashing eve at her, he uttered ia a faint and plaintive tone, "Bread ! bread !"-Marie looked at the miserable wretch with a woman's pity, and took from her wallet a half loaf, which she held out to him. He cagerly snatched, devoured it like a famished wolf, and appeared to wait for more. Marie, summoning up all the courage of which she was mistress, asked him if he knew of the accident that had occurred in the mine? but the only reply was. "Bread ! bread !" She gave him another piece, which was disposed of as the former .---The mysterious being then beckoned her to fol. low him. As Marle had observed the path by which he had found his way to her was level, she assented, and this wretched, ragged, and white haired object led the way.

Several passages were traversed by the maniac, followed by the undaunted Marie. At last her corductor brought her to a small cavern, in a corner of which were heaped some rags, and a piece of coarse canvass ; cvidently the sleeping place of this isolated being. It was very cold and very damp; here the white haired recluse scated himself on the bare earth, and endeavored to call the attention of Marie to something in the corner ; instantly turning the light in that direction, she beheld a rude heap of stones arranged in the shape of a tomb. but of such dimensions that it could only have been intended as the sepulchre of a child. The strange being looked at Marie piteously, and large tears flowed from his eyes, and he articulated, "Ludolph, my child, here is bread for you."

In agony, on his knees, he seemed to pray; he then turned to Marie, and showed her a small leather cap, such as was worn at the period by boys, which he kiss 1 frequently .--On a sudden, however, the fiend raged within him, and scowling horribly at Marie, he screamcd out---

"Ha! It was you that threw my poor child down the shaft !" and he sprang on the affrighted girl like a tiger.

It was in vain that she resisted. The maniac seemed to be possessed of supernatural strength. She struggled and shrieked. "Rotribution!" cried Michael of Filleck. "The death thou inflictedest on my boy is reserved for thee," and he laughed wildly. "Comecome! here is a chasm deep and dark enough."

The maniac dragged Marie toward the edge of a precipice. Her shricks were awful, when suddenly the insane ruffian was felled to the ground by a blow on the head, which proceeded from the mattock of Martin Varasok, and in the next moment Marie swooned in his arms. He supported her back to the cavern, and with difficulty restored her to her senses. As soon as they had somewhat recovered from exhaustion, Martin examined the rude sepulchre by the light of his lantern, when something glistening attracted his eye. He stretched his hand toward it; it was an antique silver flagon. On Marie perceiving the vessel, she recognized it to have been her mother's. Martin made a farther search ; various other articles of plate, and a bundle of papers tied up, and covered with mildew, were found. These proved to be the title deeds of the estate of the Schonboin family, for the want of which they had been deprived of it.

But to return to the poor men. Johan Varasok, Karl Bereny, Peter Patak, and four others, were entombed alive.

"Alas! alas!" said Bereny, "to what purpose is it for us to prolong a dreadful existence, to perish by famine ?"

"Who desponds ?" exclaimed the brave old Johan Varasok. "Here, Bereny, friend in misfortune, here is a biscuit I had secreted, eat!"

Bereny wept in utter weakness. "And you, Johan ?"

"Want nothing," replied Varasok, although he was, in fact, starving."

"Is there a hope of escape?" delefully asked boor Peter Patak.

"Escape!" replied Johan; "I pledge my word we shall all cat our dinners above ground to-morrow. Depend upon it, our more fortunate comrades are probing the earth for us now. Is not my bold boy, Martin, safe? Do you think that he will suffer his old father and friends to be buried alive? Hark! hark! hark! I hear them now. Hark! an explosion ! they are boring the rock !-- shout-all-halloo !--Strike against the ironstone walls with your hammers. They hear us! Listen to their cheering !"

All was now increased activity. The miners were no longer labouring without strong hopes of saving some of their fellow creatures; and this feeling gave an additional stimulus to to their exertions. The iron-bound walls were at length driven through, and the first man that dashed into the aperture was Martin Varasok.

THE OLD YEAR.

Or ruddy hue

With a kind, constant smile upon his che And in his eye a tear as soft and meek As twilight dew;

For sadness ever mingled with the calm That filled his heart-a pure and holy bal

His brow was bound

With withered leaves, through which wild ries' red

Were peeping bright-the living with the And like the sound

Of cold ghosts creeping o'er the moonlit m Those sear things rustled as the wind sa low.

And yet he seem'd

To joy with all that join'd him on his way Rejoicing in the glad unsullied ray

Which on them beam'd :

The cotter bless'd him as his arm grew still And children laugh'd when that old man pa on:

With silver hairs

He strew'd the aged head, and pour'd with The cordial of a sweet oblivion

O'er all their cares :

The mourner rais'd and pluck'd the gnan dart

That fester'd in the mem'ry of his heart. He wept to see

So many fair things fading from the eatth? Rich, bird-like voices-hearts of truest with Each flower and tree

Sprang forth and cloth'd the world in f array;

The beautiful-the lov'd, ah, where are to Yet angel forms

Re-peopling the solitudes appear.

Weaving their web of love, and hope, and While the rude storms

That mow the unshorn verdure of the br Still scare the sleeper from his dream of re And now his eye

Was oftumes turn'd to one star in the night He knew when burn'd its torch at zenith he That he must die.

Wide yawns the cavern where his brou sleep,

To add a mummy to the untold heap.

Why doth he start?

An infant boy, that day had never seen,

Lies cradled low on boughs of evergreen, With lips apart

And eyes fast clos'd, yet through the lids worn

A soft ray stole like light of unveil'd morn

The old man bent weary head, and you might faintly trace mblance in each strange contracted face, Each lineament offspring both of one untiring mother ;when will Time e'er cease to bear another? The hour was come. star it cast no shade-he kiss'd the brow he awakening babe, upspringing now And bounding on, e pillow'd on the wind a fitful knell d mournfully, like voice of passing bell. Without a sigh old man sunk upon the vacant bed, spirits came, when calmly life had fled, To close his eye; the bright child was welcom'd every where gifts, and smiles, and songs that fill the air. Remembrance came, allow'd stream rose clear, and gushing fast, flowed the sealed-up fountain of the past; Then breathed his name pledge of every heart, for it did seem wined with precious thought of some dear dream t vanished with the good Old Year, I ween. t. John, January, 1843. EUGENE. ----STANZAS TO A LADY DVING OF CONSUMPTION. very early hath the victor won thee to share the slumbers of the rayless tomb ! Chilling shadows as a pall have bound thee. bough Heaven's own light hath pierced the gathered gloom ! know that thou must die, yet hopes are clinging

Vith added fervor to thy wasting form ! ough in our hearts despair thy knell is ringing, h! how we struggle to avert the storm !

th what strange brilliancy thy eyes are beaming,

Lit with a splendor that is not of earth ! ch day thy gentle smile is fainter gleaming, Ind thy low whispershave forgot their mirth, r us, without thee, what a dark to-morrow, Is the dim future that before us lies! ou in the grave, and we the heirs of sorrow, With sad and lonely hearts that much die

With sad and lonely hearts that mock disguise!

d grant his presence in the sunless valley, Which thou must tread ere Paradise be won ! ound its portals clouds and tempests rally, But boldly enter, for thy toil is done !

WOMAN'S PRIDE

"You are very impudent, George," said a laughing, blue-eyed girl, of nineteen, to a very handsome and fashionable young man, apparently about twenty-five, whose arm encircled her waist, and who had just imprinted on her rosy lips a kiss.

"Impudent! and for what, my sister-that I dare to love you ?"

"No, not for that—but, George," said the young lady, looking up into his face with a sweet smile, while a faint blush tinged her cheeks, " do you love me as well as a sister ?"

For a moment the young man was embarrassed, but it was only for a moment, and he replied, carelessly, "certainly, dear Maria, do you not love me as a brother?"

Maria's lip quivered—a tear trembled in her eyc, and her bosom seemed heaving with concealed emotion as she answered, firmly—" I will love you as a brother, George, but it is late—good night," and she left him somewhat puzzled at her abrupt departure.

Maria Fenton had been left an orphan at the age of fifteen, both her parents having been carried off by a sudden epidemic, and with a sister eight years younger than herself, had been left to the care of a wealthy uncle. The bereaved orphans were treated well by their relations, and being young and sprightly, soon forgot their sorrow in the many amusements of their uncle's house. Mr. Fenton having died insolvent, his daughters were left portionless; but their young and cheerful hearts regarded this as no misfortune.

Maria was not a beauty, but there was that about her which could not fail to inspire the beholder with respect and esteem. Her person wa-full and exquisitely formed-her complexion of dazzling white, but it wanted the blooming tints of the rose; and her deep full blue eye, who could withstand its softness, its winning gentleness; it spoke in silent and eloquent language; but ill spoke the feelings of the soul's purity and innocence. By many she was esteemed proud and haughty; but it was owing to a diffidence and reserve which ever characterised her movements, especially tewards strangers. Maria was proud, but her's was a pride seldom known, seldom appreciated. Her feelings were acute and sensitive in the extreme: but when wounded she possessed that singular self-possession as to hide the wound from all observers.

George Clayville was the youngest son of a very old, and very respectable family; was well educated, handsome, pleasing in his manners, and naturally warm-hearted--conscquently he was a great favorite with the ladies, and envied by the gentlemen. But George possessed some very bad qualities-he was selfish, thoughtless, and regardless of the feelings of others. Fully aware of his engaging propensities, he indulged himself in winning the affections of the innocent and unsuspecting; but in a manner so very guarded, as never to commit himself. He saw Maria-saw that she was something above the common class of young ladies, and resolved to win her affections.

3

This was no difficult task; she was young and affectionate-and in a few short weeks they were indeed like brother and sister. For four long years their intimacy continued the same-their friendship unbroken. Mana loved him truely and devotedly: she never once questioned his motives-the thought never en tered her head that he might be a heartless deceiver. She trusted in him implicitly-faithfully.

George Clavville's feelings were not so easily defined-he hardly knew them himself, but this much he did know, she should never be his wife. His principles forbade it-it ever had been, and still was his firm determination to marry a fortune. This, poor Maria, unfortunately did not possess. But he trifled with her generous and confiding nature; saw her undisguised, devoted attachment, and even exulted in the glorious conquest he had achieved. Alas for human nature! alas for the princiciples of man! George Clayville, thy conquest was glorious-but beware, ah! beware, the ensnarer is himself often ensnared, and thou mayest yet reap the bitter fruits of thy folly-of thy wickedness.

Maria, as we said before, never doubted the truth of George, but of late she had heard it confidently reported, that he was playing the agreeable to a young and beautiful heiress, and the truth, the painful truth, instantly presented itself to her mind. She resolved to know, and for that reason addressed to him the apparently simple question at the commencement of our story, "Do you love me as well a 1 a sister ?"

His carelessness in answering, together with his evident embarrassment, convinced her that report spoke truely- that had he been for four long years triffing with her heart's best feelings. The struggle between love and pride was long and bitter; the latter at last prevailed, and a noble pride triumphed over a slighted love. "Yes," exclaimed Maria, the evening after our hero's departure; "yes, he shall tiful ring! just what Julia said," for Maria, see that I can forget him. He knows my who would not, that has seen us, and he s yet feel my pride. George Clayville, fa heartless as you are, you shall not crush n

The first passion of her wounded heart quelled; the bursting sigh was hushed, flowing tears wiped away; and again it met-the injurer and the injured-as they ever met, apparently loving and affection She suffered him still to play with her aut ringlets—still received his warm caressesplayed, and sung, and danced with him, few would ever have fancied that Maria's an aching heart. But at last business ca George away-Maria's first thoughts w sad-her second, "it was better so."

The evening before the intended depart George and Maria for the last time set out an evening walk. The evening was calm beautiful, the balmy zephyrs floated light midst the green foliage of the trees; the flies danced merrily through the scented i the nightingales were pouring forth their swi est, softest notes; and all-all breathed i mony and love. But the heart of George C ville-did that speak love? oh, no, it was still selfish. After a protracted silence, w cach seemed busy with their own though George stole a glance at the sweet calm 2 of his companion, and said, gaily, "of w are you thinking, Maria? is it how very lo ly you will be after I am gone ?"

"Yes," said Maria, cheerfully, "I shall 🕯 you very much !--but," she added, lau ingly, "you know I am not of a despond nature, so doubtless, I shall soon forget yo

George seemed greatly displeased, and swered, sadly, "I hope not-perhaps you be married before my return, if so, will not promise me an invitation to the wedd I shall only be three hundred miles away, would travel twice as far to see you marned

Maria readily gave the promise, deeply a pained her; and claiming a similar one, t returned to the hcuse. A few short hours a George Clayville was gone-Maria could help feeling desolate.

"See here, Maria," said her sister Ame a bright, blooming child of eleven; "see w a beautiful watch I have got-I met d George this morning as I was going to scho He was going to see you, he said, but was: great hurry, so he gave me this watch for self, and this little box for you. I do not kn what is in it, for George said I must not lo but cousin Julia peeped in-oh ! what a ba lpitating heart, and blushing face, had ed the box, and displayed a beautiful bond.

Dear, dear Maria," said the happy child, it not pretty?—and George told me that must wear it when you was married—and after he was gone, Julia said that you to marry him;—are you, Maria? I hope for I love George very much."

Hush, hush, Amelia–Julia is a naughty to tell you so, and I must scold her."

No, no," said the affectionate child, "you t not scold dear Julia—but you may Frank, said that George was not to marry you, that proud Miss Netherton."

There, there, Amelia, that will do; now me a kiss, and go and play with your sins," and away frolicked the laughing child onscious of the pain she had inflicted in the om of her sister.

he gift of George was kept, but never worn. cousins often rallied her upon the subject she alweys laughed them off.

year had nearly clapsed since the depare of George Ciayville. There was great paration making in the house of Maria's le, for some coming event. Splendid furnce purchased—the richest dresses making, for happen, perhaps this letter may inform our readers, written by Maria herself:—

"My DEAR GEORGE,

Do you remember the promise I gave you the evening before you left us: I did not think to be required so soon to fulfill it; but strange greats do sometimes happen. This day week shall become the bride of Captain H---. member I will expect you.

"Yours &c.,

"MARIA."

What were the feelings of George on the reption of this letter, we will leave our readers judge. He was at the time seated between ro reigning belles—at his old employment rting; breathing "soft nothings" into the r of one, and looking "unutterable things" the other. The letter was given him by a rvant—he glanced his eyes over its contents; irned extremely pale, and the letter dropped om his grasp. It was instantly taken up by ne of his fair companions, and who, with the esurance generally attendant on coquettes, cliberately read it through, and then throwng it from her and tossing her head with an ir of affected contempt, she exclaimed to her condering companion-

"A very pretty epistle, indeed, from some norant country girl, I suppose. Mr. Clay-ville, since it seems to affect you so seriously, you will depart instantly, I presume, and forbid the happy union."

George listened to this speech in silent indignation, then bowing coldly, said in suppressed accents, "Yes, madam, if I can, I certainly shall. Good evening, ladies," and with a haughty bow, left the mortified belles alone.

The long dreaded, and the long expected day came at last. Nature had seemingly done her best, to paint with beauty every scene. The sun shone brightly-gloriouslythe silvery clouds with the azure blue, sported playfully in the radiant heavens-the feathered songsters warbled forth their sweetest notes, and the faces of all were beaming with love and happiness. All, shall I say all, oh, no, where is Maria? Does her heart thrill with joy and exstacy. Look upon that pale face. and judge. How singularly calm and dignified for one so young, and the expression that beams from that deep blue eye-surely it cannot be joy-it is too cold-too passionless .---Oh. no, hapless Maria, thou art making a sacrifice to pride. Well, be it so-we would not reproach thee. Hark! the clock strikes six. How brilliantly that gay saloon is lighted, and how mirthful and joyous every one appears .--See, yonder stands the bride-groom, holding by the hand the laughing blue-eyed Amelia; a noble looking gentleman, certainly, and well deserving his approaching happiness. But Maria, where is she? In yonder little sitting room, which is now descried by the merry throng. Oh, looks she not like an inhabitant from yon heavenly sphere, descended for a few moments to view the happiness of mortals ?-Her face almost rivals the dazzling whiteness of the bridal robes. No pearly gems glitter in her soft brown hair, no golden chain hangs carelessly over that "snowy neck"-she wears no ornaments-yet stay-there is a ring-one brilliant gem rests on that thin white finger. Behold, she kneels by yonder sofa-that sofa which has witnessed to so many of her happicst, brightest hours. Listen !- with clasped hands and tearful eyes she murmurs-"Father forgive him, may be never know—never feel the agony that now rends my heart." And now she rises, the tears are wiped away-she must rejoin the expecting group; but staythere has been an intruder. George Clayville has witnessed this last scene-he has heard thy prayer, my sweet Maria. "George," she exclaimed, "dear George, I thank you for coming-one hour longer and you had been-" "Thank heaven! I am not too late," he passionately exclaimed; "but," he added, resuming his self-possession, and noticing her surprise. "But dear Maria, are you really going to be married?"

"Most certainly," she answered gaily, "come go with me to the saloon. Harwick will be rejoiced to see you, and Amelia has not ceased to talk of you for a week-come, why are you waiting ?"

He scrutinized her narrowly, as if to read her inmost soul. "Maria, do you love Captain Harwick ?"

"Love my affianced husband ! what a strange question! You certainly would not doubt it, George ?"

"Yes," he exclaimed, quickly, "I do doubt I heard your last prayer, Maria; answer it. me truely, do you not love the faithless, the apparently heartless George Clayville ?"

Maria drew herself proudly up-there was a struggle in her heart, but it passed away, and she answered with calmaces and dignity-"I did love George Clayville; but he trilled with my heart's dearest, holiest feelings, and wouned my pride-farewell !" and she was gone.

Poor George, but you deserve to suffer ; we can hardly pity you. But Maria, the injured Maria forgives, so must we.

The last soleinn words are pronounced "man and wife," and the hitherto calm and dignified Maria has fainted, and George Ciayville, where is he ?-gone-gone-none knows whither.

Oh! man! man! how often dost thou doom the hearts of the young and innocent to misery and despair! How often dost thou change the brightest day into the darkest night; but remember, oh, remember thy day is coming!

Maria Fenton was not doomed to misery .-The husband she had taken was one whom all respected and honoured. He loved her as devotedly as she had loved George Clayville, and was it wonderful that his unceasing attentions, his love, his goodness, could be long withstood by such a gentle and affectionate being as Maria? Oh, no, he first won her gratitude, and love quickly followed, not a passionate, but the deep lasting love which was so well deserved, so well mented.

For six long years George Clayville was unheard; of at length he returned; but ch ! how good actions, as they have been established altered. None would have recognized in the punish crimes, the number of the virtagrave, care-worn being before them, the once | would surely have been more increased by a gay and brilliant George Clayville. Maria | attraction of promised benefit, than the na could not meet him without emotion; but she ber of the wicked are diminished by the right had loarned to love him "as a brother," and of the punishments with which they are part perhaps it may please our readers to know that I menaced.

in time he gave her a right to do so. made the young and beautiful Amelia hist who still remembered him as in days of and loved him still as well.

His punishment had been long and t but it eventually worked his salvation.

Portland, January, 1843.

HAE

The Bride's Remembrance of Hou

Thou hast no voice so soothing to mine a Land of the Healing Spring-no sound soc As the bland spirit of the mountain sigh, When with the scent of forests floating by It steals upon me in the dreamy night With a sweet thrill of rapturous delight; For it hath power in its wild melody To waken thoughts, beloved Home, of the I seem to stand beneath my own blue sky Where 'bove the clouds the lofty Catskills: Once more I ramble o'er the fragrant heav Where the young zephyr woos the vie breath,

And in imagination hear the swell Of torrents rushing down the rocky dell ; Then my own Hudson, noble, pure, and is Its waters sweeping onward to the sea, Steals in soft visions to my memory, As when I lungered on its verdant side, Listening the murinur of its rippling tide. Neath the cool shadows of the clustering My fav'rite summer bower in days 'lang sr Watching these sails its bosom whitening Which Commerce wafts to many a for: shore,

As when meandering in joyous play, From the lov'd mansion on my bridal day I look'd upon its waves' deep sunny biur. And breathed a fond, a passionate adicu.

Flow on, flow on as when, majestic stream Thine echo blent with youth's romantic dre Though far away, thou'rt not forgotten her The faintest mountain echoes which mine d Hath ever caught of this land's melody, Waken remembrances of Home and thee!

> ----VIETUE AND VICE.

If laws had been promulgated to recompa-

LADY ALICE LISLE; A TALE OF THE OLDEN TIME.

EN we look upon the great picture of in events, as portrayed by the pencil of , we see little else than the colossal outof those who occupied prominent places e pageantry of courts, or acted distined parts on the theatre of puble life.— Muse of History disdains to tread the path of daily life: her buskined foot es only the tagestried floor of kingly ings,—her sweeping garments rustle only halls of regal splendor. She calls up is of the past, but ne flit by us,—dim and shadowy things; the people—they who have borne the and burden of the day,"—the humble rers of wood and drawers of water," are ten, or only remembered as he broken tools that tyrants cast away ;"

_____ Kings

ow much of tragic interest may be found e simple annals of those, "of whom fame ts not with her clarion voice;" and, as ore over the chronicle of the gentle and minded student of olden time, how often e pause upon some name which has been limed by virtuous deeds, and hallowed by arrited sorrows !

The Lady Alice Lisle was wedded, at an ig age, to one whom she regarded with reand reverence, rather than carnest and sonate love; yet her life had been one of at happiness, unbroken by a single real soruntil the hour when evel descord in the n extended its bateful influence within the ed circle of comestic life. Lady Alice had educated in the strictest principles of duty allegiance, at a time when loyally was but her word for blind and bigoted submission h anointed minarch. "Fear Gad-honor king."-were the two great precepts which b . n impressed on her youthful mind, and erryly had they been inculcated, that she eved both duties to i equally sacred. Her band, on the contrary, became one of the iest advocates for freedom, in the struggle ch was then commencing between Charles nd his people. His strong mind and firm riples were enlisted on the side of the opised, and in resisting the tyranny of a king ras only obeying that instinct of nature, ch has led him even in boyhood to defend sentiments. Every fresh act of injustice on the part of the misguided monarch, only served to exasperate the storn temper of the severe republican, and the people numbered no sturdier champion of their rights than the rigid and inflexible John Lisle.

Lady Alice wept in secret over what she considered her husband's defection from duty. and, when the discontent of the nation had broken forth with open rebellion, she retired with her children to her paternal inheritance at Moyles Court, where her daily prayers were offered up, alike for the success of the royal cause, and the safety of her rebel husband, who then had a command in the parliamentary army. In modern days, when "the peoples are warring with the kings," until loyalty has become little more than an empty name for a forgotten principle,-it would be quite impossible to estimate the full amount of Lady Alice's serrow, when she thus 'cheld her husband in arms against his sovereign. But her heaviest affliction was yet to come. King Charles was dethroned, betraved, imprisoned ; and the ambition of Cromwell led him to be satisfied with nothing less than the death of the unfortunate monarch. Blinded by excess of zeal, and duped by the semblance of stern republ.can virtue in their leader, men of strong minds and pure hearts, unwittingly lent themselves to the usurper's designs. It was decided that the king should be brought to trial, and while some of his self-created judges only sought to render justice, and others hoped to secure mercy, the many were predetermined that their verdict should be scaled in blood.-Foremost among the horiest and well-intentioned of that strange assemblage, appeared John Lisle; but his rigid sense of duty, and his almost vindicuve hatred of tyranny, left no room in his heart for the impulses of pity .--With the details and result of that unprecedented trial, every one is familiar. Charles Stuart was condemned to an ignominous death, and the errors of the monarch were explated by the safferings of the man.

and, on the contrary, became one of the isst advocates for freedom, in the stringgle isst advocates for freedom, in the stringgle th was then commencing between Charles in his people. His strong mind and firm triples were enlisted on the side of the optriples were enlisted on the side of the side of the triples were enlisted on the side of the side of the triple endities of the side of the side of the side of the triples were enlisted on the side of the triples were enlisted of the side o and, when she again emerged from her self-1 imposed seclusion, she had donned the sable robe of mourning, which she never laid aside during the whole of her long life.

The sorrow which preyed on the heart of the unhappy wife during the years which succeeded this horrible tragedy, may be butter imagined than described. She saw her husband sharing the counsels of the usurper, and winning high honours from the Commonwealth. Riches were bestowed on hun, but they seemed to her only the wages of sin, and the rank which he held among the satellites of Cromwell she regarded as a badge of shame and guilt. In vain was she tempted by the pageantries of the Protector's court; in vain were all the blandishments of favour exerted to overcome her prejudices. She refused to leave Moyles court to mingle with the myrmidons of the artful and ambitious man who now possessed all of royalty but the fille and the right. Her sense of duty led her to avoid the recurrence of domestic differences; there was no semblance of discord within the circle of her household duties, but she well knew that heartfelt, homebred happiness was gone from her for ever. Occupied in the education of her children, and sedulously attentive to the welfare of her dependants, she sought for solace in the strict performance of her manifold duties; but not all the censure of her neighbours, the expostulations of her husband nor the threatened displeasure of the court, could induce her to lay aside her mourning garb or omit keeping a solemn fast on every returning annuersary of the king's martyrdom.

Time passed on, and the revolutions of the seasons were then, as now, but types of the revolutions in men's opinions. The yoke of republican tyranny began to press as heavily as that of royal power, and the people began to question whether the golden sceptre of a legitimate monarch would not be lighter than the iron rod of za usurper. But the matter was decided by an arbiter from whom is no Death came to conquer the untaine" appeal. able spirit of Cromwell, and the tempest which raged so fiercely throughout England on the night when he expired, was but a symbol of the conflict which was soon to be raised in the minds of the nation. Had the Protector's son possessed a spark of his father's energy or jof reckoming with him. The fugitive ambition, such conflict might have been quel | that his steps were dogged, and every led by the strong hand of power, but the quiet | ment watched by men who thirsteri gentleness of his good mother was the prevail- | blood. For awhile he succeeded in a ing characteristic of Richard Cromwell, and their vigilance; the love of life was the usarper, like most other great men, left no within him, and by many a subterfuge heir to his genius and his ambition. Charles H, peaceably ascended the ; from which his father had been hurke ignominy, and the nation who had me one monarch for errors of judgmen. than acts of evil, now bowed themselves fuotstool of a selfish and heartless sou whose name has come down to us with one virtue and a thousand crimes. restoration, which brought back to their so many expatriated cavaliers, banish most prominent of the republicans. C and good humoured as was the "merry arch," he yet could not, in common de refuse to punish his father's murderen the regicides were compelled to seek sag flight. A branded, and disappointed man Lisle went out from his quiet home, and a refuge from retributive justice amid the tains of Switzerland. Willingly wou Lady Alice have borne him compas though she had scorned to share the re of his treason, she would faithfully have him in the endurance of its punishment the welfare of her children, and a welled foar lest the sequestration of their s would be the consequence of such fidels proscribed husband, compelled her to : England. She continued to dwell at 1 Court, watching over the developing of ters of her children, insuling loyal and principles in the mind of her only son, : far happy in her seclusion that it present from contact with a court which was # coming the most licentious and depre-Europe.

But the sorrows of the Lady Alice we yet at an end. "here were those in the who could not forget past injuries w same facility as the indolent and volking. Men were found who remembers vate wrongs long after the fate of the = ed Charles had ceased to excite the fierra of the re-established royalists, and to sa sons loyalty became only a cloak for re John Lisle had been a stern and inflex publican. He had never stayed his hand it was in his power to scotch the vipe which the atmosphere of court favor e genders, and many a despoiled caval treasured up a heavy account against # heir search. But the stcalth-hounds of e were not always to be baffied. He sassinated in open day, near the place etreat in Switzerland, and the unhappy ho had so long wept over his dereliction uty, now felt her early tenderness rethen thus compelled to lamont his unand cruel death.

n time had applied the balm of healing heart of the bereaved widow, it might een hoped that the sorrows of the Lady vere now at end, and that her future life be one of peace if not of happiness. She her children growing up in beauty and around her, and in their welfare she and her sources of enjoyment in old age. her loyalty could not blind her to the at the torrent of vice which was fast reading the land, had its fountain head regal palace, and she therefore kept her within the limits of her own fair domain, ly avoiding all intercourse with courtly She watched the progress of events with endered keen by maternal affection, and t endowed with almost prophetic powers, st affliction. She dreaded the encroachof that wickedness which was already mining the bulwarks of virtue and rethroughout the land, and she resolved and her precious treasures from the wide tion which she foresaw would soon away all the landmarks of principle.

death of the second Charles occasioned phase in political affairs. The reckless "I issolute king died as he had lived. ev 'r forget,'' says the oxcellent Evelyn, dy, "the inexpressible luxury and pronesse, gaming and all dissolutenesse, is it were, total forgetfulnesse of God. (it Sunday evening,) which this day se'v-I was witness of, the king setting and g with the ladies of Portsmouth, Cleaveind Mazarin, a French boy singing love in that glorious gallery, whilst about ty of the greate courtiers and other dissoersons were at basset round a large table, k of at least 2000 in gold before them. which two gentlemen who were with me. reflexions in astonishment. Six days all was in dust." What a picture is here nted of the rulers of a Christian nation!

on the feeble hand of the weak Charles. ceptre passed into the grasp of his brother s, whose licentiousness, though little less hous than that of his predecessor, was less five to the people than his bigotry. They natured Charles, but the Jesuitcal policy of James struck at the root of their religious and national liberty. Murmurs arose to various quarters, and the young and gifted Duke of Monmouth, son of the deceased king, and nephew of the reigning monarch, was induced by ambition, to become the leader of a rebel party. But the beauty of person and brilliancy of character which made him the idol of a courtly throng, were not sufficient to ensure him success in the new part he was called to fill. The foresight, energy and decision which are so requisite in one who would command the multitude, the firmness of purpose which can alone lead him in the path of safety, formed no part of the character of Monmouth. The result of his ill-arranged scheme is well known. He was defeated and fell into the hands of his ruthless uncle, who, notwithstanding the solicitations of friends, the abject supplications of the unhappy criminal and the claims of consanguinity, condemned him to the scaffold .--He perished in the prime of life, and in the sympathy which his fate awakened may be found the first germ of that national hatred, which, when cherished into full growth by years of cruchty and wrong, forced the king to resign his sceptre to a daughter's hand.

Ever distinguished for devoted lovalty, Lady Alice had sent forth her only son to do battle for the king in the recent rebellion, and the unhappy Duke of Monmouth had numbered among his most successful opponents the heir of the Lisle family. Yet to this very rebellion, which her child had aided to subdue, may be attributed the last and most tragic scene in the life of the long suffering lady. Recent events had furnished the bigoted and cruel king with sufficient pretext for gratifying his natural propensity to bloodshed and intolerance. Hc found a worthy instrument in the vile and degraded Judge Jeffreys, who was justly said to have "possessed the spirit of a Caligula, with the morals of an alchouse." This man, whose fatious temper and constant inchricty added to his ruthless cruchty, made him little else than the coadjutor of the hangman, was sent down to try the prisoners, and a record of the executions which took place under his orders, was daily sent to the king. His majesty jestingly styled this "Jeffreys' campaigns," and took great pleasure in reading its frightful details to the foreign ambassadors. Two hundred and fifty persons suffered death, and nearly a thousand were sentenced to transportation during that season of blood and horror; while the orne patiently with the vices of the good- I wretch who committed these judicial crimes, was afterwards rewarded by the chancellorship and clevated to the peerage!

It was while these dreadful scenes were enacting at Winchester, that a non-conformist minister named Hickes, together with his friend Nelthorpe, sought refuge at Moyles Court. Of their participation in Monmouth's rebellion, Lady Alice Lisle was utterly ignor-The persecutions, which all the too scruant. pulous clergy had undergone from the myrmidons of the bigoted monarch, were well known to her, and it was in their ecclesiastic character that she had received the jaded and wayworn men, without entertaining the slightest suspicion that they had been numbered in the list of traitors. With the frank hospitality of her generous nature, she supplied their wants, and gave them an asylum in her house, using no attempt at concealment, except such as the safety of her guests required. But the unfortunate fugitives had been watched, and a military party was soon upon their track. They were traced to Moyles Court, and the Lady Alice not only saw her guests borne off to certain death, but also found herself a prisoner in the hands of the soldiers. The infamous Jeffreys was still holding what has been aptly termed, "The bloody Assize," and before him she was brought on a charge of having aided and abetted traitors.

Ou the 27th of August, 1685, the loval and virtuous Lady Alice was confronted with her accusers, and never was there a more outrageous mockery of justice. Cloaking his violence and scurrility under a pretended zeal for truth, and mingling his vituperations with the most solemn appeals to Heaven, Jeffreys heaped every species of indignity on the grey head of the noble and excellent woman. Lady Lisle employed no counsel : she trusted to her own truthfulness and innocence, and her only defence was a simple, artless statement of facts. She calmly repelled the charge of treason, by pointing to the example of her son, whose loyalty, instilled in him from infancy, had led him to take up arms for the king in the recent revolt; while the dignified manner in which she proved the improbability of her risking the life of all most dear to her by harboring known traitors, won the admiration of all who listened to her defence. "I am not pleading for my life," said the noble woman ; "I am not seeking to ward off the blow, which, even if now withheld, must soon fall upon my head, and lay me in the dust. Think you, that she who has counted three-score and ten years-years.

record has been traced upon my heart in acters far deeper than those upon my bi think you, she can find sufficient joy in make its continuance worth the words have now been wasted upon it? No, my the day when I shall be called to lay as. burden of existence will be one of joyful not of fearful anticipation. But let me to the traitor's death. Let not her, whose life has been a sacrifice to loyalty, go do the grave with a branded and a blighted a

But Jeffreys was drunk with blood and He charged the jury in so partial a ma that no one could doubt his wishes, yet si vinced were all of the lady's innocence, a unanimous verdict of acquittal was reni Enraged at this opposition to his will, Jd compelled them to reconsider the mature at length, intimidated by his ferocity, the turned a verdict of guilty. Then did the w riot in his legalized cruelty. On the folly morning, he condemned the Lady Alice burned alive; allowing only six hours be: the sentence and its execution.

The aged lady listened with calmness frightful doom, and however nature must shrunk from the fiery trial, she gave a dence of weakness in her placid deports But the clergy of Winchester interceder remonstrated until the tiger-hearted judg compelled to grant a few days' reprieve :: the royalists, who had so long found in : firm friend, seized the opportunity to from the king her pardon. The Earl of F sham knelt to the obdurate monarch, and plored him, with tears, to spare the life d venerable and excellent woman. He rea ed the events of her blameless life, the s ings which her husband's principles ha. her, her devotion to the cause of the S: her solemn commemoration of the anniva of the martyr's death, and the loyal educ she had bestowed upon her children. H tured in moving terms the disgrace v would fall upon the court, if the grey ha so aged and noble a person were brough unmerited dishonour ; but the bigoted and monarch coldly replied that " he had ple his word to Jeffreys not to pardon her. only mercy extended in return for the en solicitations of her many friends, was the mutation of her sentence from burning a heading.

On the 2d of September, the Lady l who had then just attained her screntician was brought to the scaffold. Before At marked by lonchness and sorrow; years, whose I her head upon the fatal block, she hand heriff a paper which contained the expresof her sentiments. She therein avowed elf a Protestant—deprecated the restoraof Popery as a judgment for national sins, icated herself from the charge for which was about to die, and offered her hearty veness to all her enemies: her resigning as she said, "in the expectation of pardon acceptance with God, through the imputed cousness of Jesus Christ."

hus perished, in her old age, one of the tvirtuous and blameless of women. Surce excess of loyalty which estranged her the husband of her youth, and condemner to a life of melancholy seclusion, was warded by the doom which sentenced her traitor's death.

ader, I might have drawn upon my imagion for many an adornment of this plain. rnished tale. I might have sketched many ssories to the picture which has now been ented to you; but I could do nothing of all without detracting from its perfect truthess. The Lady Alice Lisle is no creature incy. In the church yard of Ellingham, ampshire, is still to be seen a head-stone ribed with her name and the date of her h; while, until within the last twenty s, Moyles Court, the spot so long hallow-By her noble presence, was still standing in ats early quaintness. The Lisle family is extinct,-the estate has passed into other es, and of the stately pile of buildings ch once echoed to the sounds of busy life England's troublous times, nothing now rens save an humble farm house. The hand an has anticipated the ravages of time, and t of the edifice has been pulled down, but awing of the fine old mansion as it existed he days of the last lineal descendant, now before me, and, as I look upon it, the image he Lady Alice rises before my fancy with ality of outline, which no mere "wordnting," can convey to the mind of another.

BAD MORALISTS.

ad moralists produce no better effects than preachers; who admonish Christians of r duty in general, and exhort them to pracit; but neglect to inculeate the principal s of life—so that the hearers hence become wiser, nor live after a better manner than y did. Admonition, indeed, should be used; instruction is more essential. Admonitions of use, but to be always repeating the same gs, cannot be necessary.

THE COVENANTER'S BURIAL.

A LEGEND OF THE SCOTTISH PERSECUTIONS.

DEEPLY embosomed in the wild gorges of the Pentland Hills, seven Scottish miles, at least, from any human habitation, there stands a small, old moss-grown chapel, partly dilapidated, although it is still in use, built in the very earliest style of Norman architecture. It has no tower, nor aisles, nor transept, and could not readily contain a hundred worshippers, consisting merely of one oblong apartment, with a short, massive column at each angle whence spring the groinings grotesquely carved in dark grey freestone, which support the steep slated roof. It is lighted by one large pointed window at the cast end, and a small loop-hole, more resembling a crenelle for arrow-shooting, than an aperture designed to admit air and light on either side. The entrance is by a low-browed arch facing the window, and immediately beneath the little open belfry, which is perched like a dove-cot on the point of the gable. The whole exterior of the chapel has, evidently, at some former day, been decorated by full many a sculptured effigy of virgin, saint and angel, as may be still seen from the empty niches wherein they stood enshrined until the rude hand of the puritans in the days of Scottish reformation hurled them down, and ground, in the wild zeal of their new faith, the very stones of which they were composed, into dust, which they scattered to the four winds of heaven. In the interior, likewise, two or three vacant niches still remained, with a large font of stone, made to hold holy water, now consecrated to baptismal uses; besides this, a few oaken benches of the most rude and antique form, and a huge reading desk of the same material, composed the furniture of this most primitive place of worship. Around the wall lay a small burial-ground, with many a green half-sunken headstone peering up from out the rank growth of dark coarse herbage, nettles and thistles, and yet viler weeds, which betrayed, by their rank luxuriance, the fatness of the soil, enriched from the decay of mortal bodies. A few of them had been, as was still evident, the last homes of personages not void of dignity and rank-there was one, in particular, a vast uncouthly sculptured block of freestone, where might be distinguished the form of human figure, with a small hood upon his head, a heater-shaped shield suspended from his neck, his folded hands resting upon the hilt of a huge cross-handled sword, and his legs crossed in that peculiar manner, which indicates that he who sleeps beneath, was a

THE AMARANTH.

Knight Templar. Upon the shield were some faint relics of armorial bearings, but it would now have puzzled the keenest antiquary that ever pored over mouldering ruins, to detect the obliterated blazonry which would have told the name of him who slumbered there, as still as though he never had pealed through his furious lips the war cry, Ha! Beauseant, or battled for the cross of Christ, knee deep in Paynim gore. Another heavy stone displayed the mitre and the pastoral crook of some proud abbot, and some two or three more of the number bore marks of decoration which, though now much decayed and broken, showed that they had been in old-time dedicated to the long since forgotten memories of the pure, the beautiful, the noble or the wise. The rest were low grass-covered mounds, without a stone to bear the name, or record the destinies of their inhabitants, and the most of them, from their sunken ridges, and half obliterated outlines, were evidently of no recent origin. Nothing could possibly be wilder or more gloomily romantic than the spot chosen for the site of this place of rural sepulture. It was a small deep hollow, scooped, as it were, out of the bosom of the huge moorland hills that raised their bare, round-headed summits treeless and bleak and desolate, on every side around it. On the right hand side, the little burial-ground abutted on a steep precipice of rifted sand-stone rock, which rose straight as a wall for sixty yards above it, and then sloped still farther upward, 'till it was merged in the heather of the loftier fell-behind the chapel was a thick grove of matted yews, filling up the whole width of the gorge between the hills, through which a little brooklet rushed murmuring and sparkling in a thread of liquid silver, girdling the church-yard round on the left side, and in the front, where it was crossed by a small onearched bridge of free-stone. The margin of this stream was bordered by a long line of ash trees, probably chance-sown there by emigratory birds, for not another of the species was to be found for several miles' distance from the spot, and above these, the hill sloped boldly to the westward, showing beyond its rolling summit the crests of loftier mountains looming up blue and indistinct in the far distance. It was a dark and gloomy afternoon, although in the fairest time of summer, but the air was surcharged with electricity, and damp withal, and very sultry and oppressive. There was not a breeze to fan the lightest leaves of the ash by the stream, nor to wave even the slight stalk of the blue have bells on the rock, but the clouds mustered heavily, sweeping up, seemed, before some higher current that not felt below, mass above mass, 'till the w sky was crowded with their huge towe volumes-the sun, when he shone out, at up from the interstices of the dense thunderch shot a hot brassy glare, that seemed as came from the mouth of some vast furna no bird was heard to warble or even cha from the bushes, the throstle and the bla bird, those never silent songsters of a Scot summer, were hushed in sad anticipation the coming storm-only the plaintive cr the lapwing from the upland, and the s scream of a kite wheeling in airy circles a the solitary belfry, disturbed the death stillness of the valley. Death-like inde was-and not unfittingly, for, in the chu yard, hard by the bank of the little stra and under the dark shadows of the yews, i was an open grave-the pile of earth, read fill its yawning mouth upheaped upon the beside, mattock and spade planted in the g by its brink-an open grave waiting its s tenant. At some short distance from the g there sat upon a fallen head-stone, as mo less as though he had been himself a part an old grey-headed wrinkled man, in attitu melancholy thought, with a small, long-ba terrier, wire-haired, and with a face as i and wrinkled as his master's, dozing amon weeds beside him. For nearly an hour, h there without stirring, unless when at the he raised his head for a moment, and appa to listen, but then not hearing what he see to be expecting, relapsed into his grim gloomy meditations. At last the sounds w he awaited made themselves heard at a tance, the well known death-hymn of the tans swelling up awfully among the i bare hills, a volume of wild, doleful mus The old man rose up at the signal, and to ing to the porch, opened theiron-studded and in a few moments the dissonant class clang of the old cracked chapel bell f harshly out over the lonely valley. It was long before the melancholy train came sk into sight, winding along the narrow r which, following the mazes of the brook, access to that lonely place of worship from more cultivated glen of the lower count The first of the procession was the old, co anting pastor, a tall thin man, bent all double with the infirmities of age, with a bead, and stern, harsh features, but a flashing eye, full of enthusiastic life and : ous energy. Immediately behind him a offin, of rude plain boards, undecked by blate or ornament, with neither pall nor es, upborne upon the stalwart shoulders ht stout peasants, dressed in their wontarb of shepherds' plaid, and broad blue and bonnets-following the body-hapand helpless mourners—an old woman, ged that her frail limbs had scarcely gh of life left to support them, and a fair, eved, flaxen-haired girl, crept along-the bathed in the fast flowing tears which so readily, and seem to sweep away in flow the sorrows of the young-the forstern, cold and tearless, as if the grief h penetrated to her heart's inmost core, mustered there, and checked her very h, and froze up the fountains that gush so ly at any transient grievance in the young of sentiment and sympathy-the mother he niece of the deceased-for it was he vidow's son, who was borne thus to his home—the widow's son, who yesterday Il of stirring spirit and quick life, had been uelly cut off-cut off before his prime, and d a mere cied of the valley at the foot of vretched parent, by the fell mandate of Figer Laird.

velve aged farmers, the patriarchs of the , the grandsires or great grandsires of all followed them, tottered along, staff in ad, behind the mourners, lifting their tremuvoices to swell the deep wild hymn that ed up the valley, and then, for the rest like their pastor, were all unarmed, and bless. Yet even of these, two or three had kled their old broadswords on their thigl -, they could have done then aught of scrin case of an armed ons'aught on their ic train; but in the rear of these, there a party of widely different character in In front of them stood one well known fter days as Hackstoun, of Raithillet, a , dark featured man of middle age, hawk d, thin flanked and tall-the very picture ne of those martial saints of Cromwell, whom the sword was second only, if nd, to the Bible. Armed to the teeth, with dsword on his hip, and dirk and pistols in irdle, and a short musquetoon slung over proad shoulders—fury and vengeance flashfrom his grey eye—the gloomy martialist ic onward, and at his heels, all armed like leader, six or eight men, whose stubborn t and erect bearing showed that they had service, clad in hodden grey, but heavy kets, or long barrelled fowling pieces on waists, followed with the deep air of dogged resolution, that seems disposed to court rather than shun encounter with aught of man or fiend that should oppose them. The rear of this wild and ill-assorted train was brought up by a body of young men, variously weaponed with scythes set each on poles, and fishing spears, and clubs and axes; and all alike mourners and aged men and boys and stubborn warriors, were pealing forth one of those wild denunciatory hymns in which their souls delighted. On they filed, and they entered now the precincts of the lone church yard, and clustered round the grave. No prayers were read over the senseless, such ritual being held in the eyes of those stern puri ans as an abomination of abominations. The wild hymn sunk into dead silence-the coffin was lowered into the pit prepared for it-the heavy clods rattled upon the lid-the earth was trampled down with a deep hollow sound-the grave was heaped, the sods were levelled and beat smooth by the old sexton's spade-and not a sound was heard except the childish sobbings of the infant niece, until the last blow had been struck, and then the voice of the frail aged woman arose among the hushed and awe struck throng, clear as a silver trumpet : "The Lord giveth," -she exclaimed.-" the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord!" A deep hum followed her submissive exclamationsthe solemn acclamation of the puritans, and then at once the gathered concourse burst into a loud hymn. It ended, and, as it did, before the echoes of the old hills had ceased to reverberate to the strange melody, Hackstoun, of Rathillet, drew his long broadsword from the scabbard, and stepped at once to the head of the grave. "Countrymen-Bretheren," he exclaimed, "the blood"----but as he spoke, the tramp of hoofs was heard, the click of steel along the winding road, and another instant the Laird of Livingstone and eight of his fierce troopers might be seen winding up the road .--"It is enough," cried Hackstoun. "It is enough! The Lord hath given them into our hands-we have them in a net-smite, killslay utterly !-- suffer not one of them to go hence scatheless!" Then, in a calmer tone, he added : "Keep peace until they be upon us, down with your arms upon the turf-and raise them not 'till I cry 'Havoc!'-then on and leave none living." His orders were obeyed upon the instant. Meanwhile, the troopers, with the young laird leading, rode into the enclosure; taking a proclamation from his holster shoulders, and knives and pistols at their with that same fiendish smile upon his hp which played there when he had bidden them to slay the widow's son, he had begun to read it, when Hackstoun, stooping suddenly snatched up his carbine from the ground, and shouting his word "Havoe !"-took a quick aim and fired. Upon the instant his men followed his example! A quick, sharp, straggling volley rattled above the grave of the murdered peasant, and four of his slavers leaved up in their saddles, and fell lifeless; surprised, but daunted nothing, the soldiers fired an answering volley, and charged, sword in hand-but Hackstoun met the foremost-he struck two blowstwo only ! the first fell on the charger's neck where the spine joins the skull, and hurled him lifeless-the second clove through the casque, the skull-the teeth of the trooper-musketbutt, scythe, and pitch-fork, were plied fiercely, and ere ten minutes, not a man lived of all their foes, save Livingstone. He, when he saw all hope lost,-he had fought foremost 'till he did so-turned his horse at the brook with a fierce shout, leaped it, and galloped over the wild hill. Hackstoun and hisstern band rushed after him in wild pursuit. Ten minutes more, and the lone yard was utterly descried, save by the corpses of his slayers-the slaughter of his murderers finished the obsequies of the poor widow's son.

Amaranth

----. A CANINE INCIDENT.

THE march of intellect is a inighty capricious sort of movement, and, withal, rather troublesome to wait upon. Sometimes it creeps at such a "snail's gallop," that it may be supposed altogether at a stand-still. Sometimes it doubles on itself like a hare, and brings us back to some point, which we had hoped to have placed for ever at an immeasurable distance behind us, and sometimes it hurries forward with such gigantic strides, that individual industry "pants after it in vain." The last has for some years been the case with respect to the science of medicine, which, within the life time of the present generation, has, (as parents say of their lubberly children,) "grown out of all knowledge." Not only have the valious objects included within the study maltiplied almost beyond the power of record to indentify them, but the subjective elements of the science, have assumed new forms and dimensions, under the piercing examinations of successive physiologists; and are daily acguiring greater importance with relation not only to medical science itself, but to many other branches of enlarged and philosophical | fered to remain at large, and even slept 2

It is a melancholy fact, how inouiry. that notwithstanding the gigantic strik science, and the myriads of new-fangled tions with which its possessors are entage innumerable diseases still continue to affect human frame, for which no remedy has yet been devised, because they have neve been understood. Among these, the mos ritle in its consequences, is the Hydroph The same ignorance of the subject, w characterized the darker ages still proand its victims continue to be consigned untimely grave, without the least effort b made to save them. The following is h sample of the hundreds of cases which e yearly.

A few years ago, a large French dog, be ing to one of the officers of the 8th Hus then stationed at Portobello Barracks in lin, was observed to grow uncommonly s and attempted to bite at every dog he mi the streets : this change of temper in the mal was attributed by his master to his ha eaten a quantity of meat which had been to him highly seasoned with pepper. ever, towards the evening of the day on w the change in the animal was perceived, if came at intervals outrageous, and bit his ter and two more officers, who happened in the room : notwithstanding, his maste inclined to think it was done more in rude than any thing else; consequently, no me was taken to secure him. That same eve the dog was uncommonly ruffled : and ever attempted to caress him, although he them well, he turned upon them and gre most savagely. The next day he was violent, and furiously bit several dogs crossed his way; still, unfortunately, not sure was taken to secure him, his master posing nothing serious was the mader him. On the evening of the second day dog was lying in his master's toom, per tranquil, when this unfortunate young: (who has fallen the victim,) entered : maned in it some time before the dog tool notice of him : when, suddenly he made as at him, seized him by the shoulder, and him to the ground, and tore the arm dow the shoulder, and was with difficulty take A sergeant of the regiment happen han. enter the room on duty, about this time dog immediately seized him by the legtore away a considerable portion of flesh bit also two soldiers, one by the nose, and other on the hand. Still the animal was epeatedly.

following morning, the master of the egan to feel some alarm, and as I had ropped in to pay a casual visit, he asked go with him to examine the beast. I adhim to have him shot instantly, to which reed. As we were advancing towards the where he lay apparently at case, he trotn snapping at every thing which came in nv. As he passed close by me, I hailed n a friendly tone, hut he did not notice He then ran through the streets of Dubbit a number of dogs and children, and n the point of seizing a man, who fortuhad a hammer in his hand, with which uck him on the head, and killed him. ongue of the dog was immediately cut h the spot by a physician, who, on extion, pronounced the animal to be in an ced state of hydrophobia.

he of the officers and soldiers who had bitten knew the decision of the physician, hd they know of any ill effect having to those who had been bitten. Howthree dogs which had been Litten died in six weeks, exhibiting strong symptoms drophobia; the first child who had been ted in the streets, subsequently met with me fate. All this was kept secret, thereo cause of alarm from report could have ed hydrophobic feelings in the unfortunate g man who has fallen a sacrifice; on the fary, he was in high spirits, and applied Seave of absence to go and see his friends forcestershire, as he had some intentions ing married. He obtained leave; the nel thinking it might divert his attention, he left us with the same flow of spirits ring his absence all was forgotten; and remaining who had suffered, (though not so severely,) recovered their cheerful s. The period of leave granted to my friend having expired, he set out from his r's house, in perfect health, to rejoin his n.nt. When he reached Birmingham, he told me a few hours before he died,) he he had a curious taste in his mouth, which ented him from relishing his breakfast as However, it gave him no alarm, nor e again think of it 'till he got to Shrewswhen he found himself suddenly seized a most unacconntable aversion for food drink when put before him, although he felt both hungry and thirsty previous to heals being served. He could not account r's room by his bed-side, and licked his i no means alarmed, until he happened to call for a bottle of porter. When it was brought, he put it to his mouth, but the moment he had tasted this liquid, he dashed the glass from his lips, and spit the porter over the table, when the passengers all rose up and exclaimed he was mad.

> This extraordinary feeling, of not being able to cat and drink, though he v ished to do so, caused him some uncasiness, though he was willing to attribute the circumstance to the effect of a sore throat, and comforted himself under this idea. He proceeded by the coach to Holyhead, ruminating what could be the cause of this sensation, when the coach passed a small pond of water, the surface of which being ruffled by the wind, he immed ately shuddered at the sight, and with a kind of horror he could not describe, hid his face with his hands : and for the first time, the dreadful idea of hydrophobia struck him.

> When he arrived at Holyhead, he wished to wash before dinner, and called for water ; when it was brought to him, and while in the act of putting it to his face, he screamed violently, threw the water about the room, and was convulsed for some time : the servant left the room alarmed. He then tried to clean his teeth, but could not get the brush into his mouth, on account of the water remaining upon it. The packet by this time was ready to sail, and he embarked. Poor fellow! while he was relating his sad tale to me, we were sitting together by the fire-side, he having just landed from Holyhead, which place he had sailed from the night before; consequently this was the third day only since his attack at Shrewsbury.

Before he began to tell me, on his arrival, of the symptoms he had experienced on his journey, he greeted me on our first meeting, with "How are you, my dear fellow ? Here I am at last returned, but I fear with hydrophobia!" I affected to laugh at it, but was much shocked, and replied, it could only be imaginary; he said, it could not be so, for he thought he should have died coming on shore in the boat; he was so much affected at the sight of the water, that they were obliged to cover him, in order that he might not see it. He also observed, that if he had remained on board one day longer, he felt convinced that he should have died mad. I was still inclined to think there might be a great deal of imagination in my friend, and endeavoured to persuade him to believe it : although I cannot describe the poignancy of my feelings at hearing him relate his in any way, but observed he was by what he suffered at intervals since he had left Shrewsbury. In the course of our conversation, some dogs began to bark in the barrackyard : he sprang up suddenly from his chair, looking over my shoulder, and said in a tremulous and hurried manner-"dogs!" If I were to live a thousand years, I should never forget that moment,-something struck me so forcibly that the poor sufferer would die, that I was afraid to meet his eyes, fearing he might discern signs of alarm in me!

Soon after this little incident, he was in the act of peeling an orange which we had persuaded him to try to eat, as he had taken nothing since he rejected the porter at Shrewsbury. He had hardly taken off the rind, and applied a small piece to his hos, when he became greatly convulsed, spit out the orange, and gave an inward scream that filled me with terror and dismay. When he recovered himself, he burst into a fit of laughter, and said-"There ! was not that like the bark of a dog ?"

A physician of some eminence in Dublin, soon after made his appearance. As soon as he entered the room, the poor fellow apologized to him for having given him the trouble to come, as he thought he had symptoms of hydrophobia, but believed it was only the effect of a sore throat, therefore would give him no further trouble. He appeared to catch at any thing which might give hopes of life. We were very anxious to learn the decision of the physician on his leaving the room; upon inquiry, he pronounced his death to be inevitable. It is unnecessary to describe the stat. of our minds on receiving this melancholy news-to know that our ill-fated friend, with whom we were then conversing-to all external appearance, in perfect health and apparent spirits, was to be númbered with the dead in a few hours, was deeply-terribly distressing.

The doctor added that he was in an advanced stage of hydrophobia, and that bleeding him copiously, in order that he might diceasy, was the only thing that could now be done for him. I remained with him some time, conversing about various things that appeared to please him, and his spirits retained all their buoyancy and cheerfulness. On leaving him, I asked him when he intended to dine at the mess : he replied he could not make his appearance at the table that day, but he thought he should be able to do so in a day or two, when his throat was better. After he was bled, he felt relieved, and expressed a hope that he might be able to drink water by the next morning. Some time after, in the course of the evening, he appeared at intervals rather wild ply them by the sentiments of superstition and confused, and told an officer to get his way, or he would bite him. Aften he became more tranguil, and sent his co ments to one of the married ladies of the ment for a prayer-book; but begged (might not be mentioned, or he should be ed at.

At midnight he became very violent, s three men could scarcely hold him; he wards recovered a little, and fell into a k slumber, which was distarbed by his spra up now and then, and crying out, "D hear the dogs?" he also imagined, at i that he barked like a dog. He request might be left alone about one o'clock morning-his servant, only, remaining room, when, in about ten minutes, he h up at the man quite calm and collected said, "he regretted that his mother and were not with him." He then prayed a time, turned himself round, burying his h the pillow, and expired without a groanwas the melancholy end of one of the young men in the British service.

----PARTING LINES TO ROSA

ADIEU-I ne'er may see thee more, But treasured in this faithful breast,

Although I roam a distant shore, Thy lovely image still will rest;

And like yon star's celestial beam,

That gilds the cloud-wreathed brow of Shed o'er life's dark and troubled stream

A ray of pure and holy light. 'Mid Beauty's daughters should I sit

At evc, beneath Italia's skies-

From ruby lips should sparkling wit Flash forth, or beam dark loving eyes

Each whispered word-each look of this That sanctifies this parting hour,

A holy spell will then entwine,

And shield me with its magic power.

When rosy twilight's lingering ray,

From off the ocean's heaving breast, Softly and sweetly melts away,

And all puts on a look of rest,

Then, Rosa, I'll live o'e- again,

Those bright-winged moments spent thee,

For though divided by the main,

Our souls may still commingled bc. ----

As it is the chief concern of wise men # trench the evils of life by the reasonings of losophy, it is the employment of fools toz

DI; OR THE TRUE DEATH.

storm suddenly went murmuring, like ffled spirit, to his resting-place, and a -rainbow started up on the plain of batnd the evening sun shone mildly over sperides : and the universe was mantled garment of glory-bright and meffable. ne this for the death of the Good, the ful and the Great ! fit time for the leaprth of the imprisoned flame, to join its Fire. He leaned against a cypress drooping boughs threw a melancholy in the garden where flowers and casnd gentle hills lay in a circle of mejesuntains, whose brows were bathed in p crimson of sunset. That garden was n: his hand had created the Paradise: his glorious thought expressed by other than language : it was the God-like Imal expressed in the lower, but not worthaterial.

had come forth to die—the Good, the ful and the Great! His faint hands held , dark with centuries—a harp swept by ndred bards whom Sadi was about to their star-lit abodes. Its tones wild and v and wonderful, as the shout of many , had startled the souls of generations ince passed away—roused the bondman this slumbers—enchanted a world, and d new vistas into the weird future. And was the last one who might sweep its wed chords. Mournful and yet glad were motions which shook the sou' of the aty bard.

denly a sweet, low music stole through r : and the flowers and the cascades and ills, seemed to thrill in unison. Sadi d up, and saw the garden tenanted by s of light and loveliness, who were bendeir mild but radiant eyes upon his own. wore long flowing robes of intense whitetheir lofty brows were crowned with rs, unlike those of earth, and behind each inferior but still lovely creatures, bearing that flashed as though they were enamwith diamonds more lustrous than the anal stars. And Sadi knew his visitants. w the originals of those venerated porwhich were suspended in the great tem-Ildee. These were the hundred bards. nultaneously the harp-bearers handed the uments to the minstrels. Simultaneousrst forth the entrancing music of Heaven their lyres. It was first loud and deep nassive as the march of a midnight storm ly sunk into a brecze-like whisper; then, slowly gaining greater volume, it rolled out in clear, triumphant tones, ascending higher and higher, until the heavens received the final vibration. The music ceased as the sun sank behind the west.

"Sadi !" exclaimed the hundred, in accents sweet and low as the rustling of an angel's wing around the couches of the young, when dying. "Sadi ! are you ready?" And the poet bowed his head. A quick murmur went through the bright host, like a word of joy.— Again they struck their happs, and, as evening threw his last ray upon the altar of night, the spirits vanished from the eyes of Sadi.

And night came out into the blue infinitude-night, with her star-plumes as brilliant, her wings as far-stretching, and her countenance wearing a look as quiet and grand as when she first bent her coal black eyes on our orb, four thousand years before: and in her shadow lay the carth like a wearied goddess slumbering.

Sadi sang his last hymn, for he felt the dews of death clustering upon his brow. Then did he grasp his old friend, the harp, still closer to his bosom; and casting his eves over that Paradise and up to the embattled orbs on high. his companions for years one-score-and-tenthe poet heaved a deep sigh. He thought of his fame; he thought of the laurels that he had won; he thought of life; was Sadi ready now! Was the vision of the hundred bards already forgotten? Was the music of the cascade sweeter than theirs? Did his laurel glow brighter than the uncarthly garlands which circled their lofty brows? "Oh, earth, thouthou art very beautiful !" whispered the dying bard. He heard a rustling by his side, and, turning, beheld a form more resplendent than imagination had ever shaped in his most holy dreams.

"Who art thou?" asked Sadi.

"Thy guardian angel !" exclaimed the form, in a melancholy voice. "Dost thon still wish to linger on this earth ?" Sadi was silent; but a blush of shame rested for an instant on his pallid cheek. "Answer me !" cried the spirit, in a stern voice.

"Memory opens the tomb of the past; and from the marble portals I see issuing many forms with whom I fain would dwell," replied the bard.

aments to the minstrels. Simultaneousrst forth the entrancing music of Heaven their lyres. It was first loud and deep nassive as the march of a midnight storm the mountains of Idora: then it gradualblest, upon the face of a penitent.

THE AMARANTH.

"Thou-the poet of the world," confinued the spirit, "thou-who hast echoed the pulsations of the infinite; thou-who hast uttered thy womp-it is well for thee to die!"

"Yes! yes! It is well!" exclaimed the bard. He laid himself gently down upon his mother earth. The spirit pressed his hand—it was icy cold. The mortal was dead. But from the body leaped up the glorious Life— Essence—clothed in a form such as that worn by the hundred. And another ministrel was added that night to the "NOVING ONES; and a new song went up that night from the bowers of the blest, to the Most High.

A nation—the nation of Ildee, wept over the tomb of their 'ord; and his songs are still chant. I in the temples; but his greatest poem is unknown; and that poem was the Tave DEATH, his last and sublimest composition.— Oh! destroyer of the grand and lovely, thou won'st no laure! that mght in the garden of the august poet!

THE CHANGING OF THE MOON.

SHE comes with a feeble silvery ray, Traced faintly 'midst the blue; She hangs above the dving day, A thing of air and dew. The stars flash brightly o'er her path, With wilder light than her's, No power or majesty she hath, No glory she confers-She seems so frail a child of space, That the zephyr, rising now, Might almost shake her from her place, Like a dew-drop from the bough. She comes again, and clear, and strong, Her lustre floweth wide, And its golden track is borne along Upon the rippling tide, The smaller stars have hid their heads, The larger seem to fade, A glorious radiance now she sheds On the forest's solemn shade A lovely crescent now she gleams. No longer pale and weak, And scarcely of a kindred seems, With that first silvery streak ; But, lo, her regal hour hath come! She reigns triumphant now, And all the light of Heaven's wide dome. Seems from her fount to flow. Thro' the thick wood her searching eye, Sendeth its glances bright; There's not a cloud upon the sky, She cannot turn to light;

It is her hour of pomp and pride, In this fair night of June, What starry orb unveiled may ride

Beside the queenly moon ? Again she comes, but late and drear Is her red rising now.

No more with face of similing cheer, She climbs the mountain's brow;

Seems despoiled of half ber state, And comes as one might come

Whose widowed heart is desolate, To watch beside a tomb.

She tarrieth still altho' array Hath past the starry hort,

And in the early light of day She lingers like a ghost;

Oh, learn a lesson. Vanity !

Thou canst not learn too soon,

How beauty's charms wax, wane, and d Like the changing of the moon.

LET us consider how great a commo doctrine exists in books; how easily, ho cretly, how safely they expose the naka ofhuman ignorance without putting it tos These are the masters who instruct us w rods and ferrules, without hard words an get, without clothes or money. If yo proach them, they are not asleep; if invuting you interrogate them, they conce thing: if you mistake them, they cannot lan you.—Philobiblion, by Richard de Bury

The Amaranth,

Is issued on the first week in every M by ROBERT SHIVES, Proprietor and Pu er-and delivered to City subscriberst very low price of 7s. 6d. per annu Persons in the Country, receiving the 1 ranth by Mail. will be charged is 3d. tional, to cover the cost of postage.

Agents for The Amaranth.

HENRY S. BEEK, Bookseller, & c. Frederi OLIVER HALLETT, ESQ. P. M. Hampton, (N. ARNOLD, ESQ. Sussex Vale. JACOB BARKER, ESQUITO, M. D., N^k (field, W. J. COLEMAN, Halifax, N. S. JAMES W. DELANEY, Anherst. (N. S.) AVERY B. PIPER. Bridgetown, (N. S.) AVERY B. PIPER. Bridgetown, (N. S.) JOHN HEA, Jr. Miramichi H. W. BALDWIN, ESQ., Bathurst. W. Y. THEAL, ESQ., P. M. Shediac.