

FROM ALL OVER THE MARITIME PROVINCES

MONCTON.

Moncton, N. B., Oct. 29.—(Special)—While two constables fought on last evening's train, en route to Dorchester, a prisoner in charge of one of them, being taken to the county jail, escaped.

The annual police court returns for the city of Moncton show that there was a total in the year recently closed of 554 cases before the local court, thirty-four less than in the preceding year.

The appointment of Hon. H. A. McKee as attorney-general, commissioner of the provincial hospital and member of the executive council is gazetted.

The will of the late Bishop Kingston was admitted to probate here this morning before Judge Barry, in the York probate court.

The bride of one of Moncton's most popular and best known families, the bride of a host of friends follow her to her future home in St. John.

The residence of Owen Cameron, L. C. O. freight claims agent, Wesley street, was the scene of a quiet and pretty wedding at 8.30 this evening.

After the ceremony luncheon was served and Mr. and Mrs. Lockhart, on a trip to the upper provinces.

SOAPY SMITH A REAL BAD-MAN. Skagway, His Last Refuge, Rose Against Him.

With His Rifle He Went Down Alone to Stop an Indignation Meeting; Two Graves Promptly Added to the Little Cemetery Outside the Town.

Calgary, Alb., Oct. 25.—Many versions of the dramatic end of "Soapy" Smith and the subsequent clean-up of his gang in Skagway have been written, but it is probable that the facts have never been brought to light in all their details.

From all over America criminals looked to him as their savior. He was the originator of selling soap wrapped in a $5 or $10 bill for one dollar, when the purchaser received the goods.

But that night he was "up against" a man whose gun play was so sure that given the least bit of luck, that Soapy's fate would be sealed.

Two shots, one from Smith's rifle, the other from Reid's revolver, rang out, and horrified men in the "door" saw Soapy's career of crime was ended.

GOLDWIN SMITH TODAY

The Evening of His Life in Toronto

His Mode of Expression Just as Gentle and His Thought Just as Radical as Ever—A Glance at His Career in England and America—How He Reformulated Oxford and Why He Left It—His 36 Years in Toronto and What He Has to Show for Them—His Mistaken Idea That Canada Should Join United States Has Not Made Him Unpopular in the Dominion.

A scholar who not merely by his writing but by residence and personal influence has been a considerable factor in the life of three States during the past thirty years is certainly noteworthy, and such is Professor Goldwin Smith. Now a man of eighty-four, he is spending the evening of his life in scholarly leisure at his beautiful home in Toronto. His interest in public affairs and in letters remains unabated. Hardly a week passes but a communication from Goldwin Smith appears in some leading periodical of either the United States or Great Britain, and invariably there is the grace of style which gives distinction to all he writes. Never was there a better illustration of the deep truth that "the style is the man" than in his case. Vehement, ironical, one-sided, mercurial, as he has sometimes been, always he has carried himself with easy grace; if he must thrust his paper through his opponent he has done so like a polished courtier; never for a moment has he forgotten the dignity and pose of an English gentleman. On the political hunting-ground he has been a private intercomer, he has at no time let himself be hurried as to be slipped. It may be doubted if Goldwin Smith ever committed the fault that besets so many men in speaking of beginning a sentence and leaving it unfinished. The smooth yet incisive phrases come to his lips as if you had asked him to make one wonder whether this readiness and polish are the native gifts of genius or only the result of a habit of mind. It is the highest art, because it conceals art.

It is now almost forty years since, in 1868, Goldwin Smith came to live in the United States. He was forty-five and already played a great part in English intellectual life. Born in 1823, he graduated at Oxford in 1845, and was called to the English bar in 1847. But the life of the English barrister was not for such a mind as his, though the legal training has without doubt benefited the lawyer. "The English bar is a life of the most uninteresting kind," said Goldwin Smith in 1868. "The life of the barrister was not for such a mind as his, though the legal training has without doubt benefited the lawyer. 'The English bar is a life of the most uninteresting kind,' said Goldwin Smith in 1868. 'The life of the barrister was not for such a mind as his, though the legal training has without doubt benefited the lawyer.'"

At twenty-seven he had become already conspicuous at Oxford as the assistant secretary of the Royal Society. (Dean Stanley, as secretary of the Royal Society, Goldwin Smith's name was prominent in the list of those who were invited to the annual meeting of the society in 1854. It was at this time that he met the young American, James Freeman, who was then a student at the University of Oxford. Freeman was a young man of twenty-seven, and had just returned from his studies in the United States. He was a member of the Phi Kappa Phi society, and had been elected to the Phi Kappa Phi society at the University of Oxford. Freeman was a young man of twenty-seven, and had just returned from his studies in the United States. He was a member of the Phi Kappa Phi society, and had been elected to the Phi Kappa Phi society at the University of Oxford.

But when to do so was unpopular he said freely what he thought. Today he is doing the same thing and old as he is his utterances are a purifying force in the Canadian public life. He has made The Globe a centre of generous and large-hearted liberalism. He has been an ambassador or a labor leader in his table. He has an active interest in charitable work, and until the infirmities of age overtook him, visited among the poor. No good cause appeals to him in vain; and for him when it is a question of relieving suffering no barrier of race or creed exists. If he has any prejudices it is, as his books show, against Roman Catholics and Jews, but his name will be found among the helpers of the needy of both creeds in Toronto. As his recent writings show, his mind is keenly interested in religious topics, especially as to what may be behind the veil which screens from us the future life. Like Charles Kingsley he has a keen curiosity to know what may be in store for the soul which passes into that other world. His keenly critical intellect has brought its own qualities to the study of the Bible. There was a time when Goldwin Smith wrote on the topic "Does the Bible Sanction American Slavery?" This hardly seems now in his line. His criticisms are turned not on the Southern planter but on the Bible itself. Perhaps this restless critical faculty is the Nemesis of a life too purely intellectual. But behind it all is to be seen the old patriotic phrase, the heart "naturally Christian." Pure in life, loving his fellowmen, Goldwin Smith is surely among those for whom is reserved the blessing of the Sermon on the Mount.

He likes to talk of past days and surely his range of acquaintance has been unequalled. For a quarter of a century hardly a biography of an eminent Englishman has appeared without a reference to Goldwin Smith. He was history tutor at Oxford to King Edward, whose "charming manners," as he has said, were already noticeable in undergraduate days. He knew the Duke of Wellington, Lord Robert Peel and Lord Palmerston. He was almost intimate with Carlyle. Goldstone was a close friend, albeit the friendship was interrupted in later years. In the United States he has met nearly all the national figures of the last half century. One might go through an immense list of distinguished names and each of them would be proud to be called the friend of Goldwin Smith. If he has made no great book he has made a great reputation. At Toronto his public appearances have become rare. But he is still a member of the governing body of the University of Toronto, and occasionally he can be induced to say a few words to the students. Most of them have been taught to believe and do believe that his views on the political destiny of Canada are mischievous. His views they hate, but they love. When he rises to speak he is always greeted with prolonged cheers and he never sits down without having said in polished phrase some words fitted to make them clearer thinking and gentler, purer, nobler men.

THE OPPOSITION TICKET
The local opposition nominated a strong ticket for the city Monday evening, and St. John is now added to a long list of constituencies in which opponents of the Robinson government have selected candidates and are prepared for battle.

THE CAUSES OF PANIC
Thousands of worried people in line all night long in the streets of New York, waiting for the banks to open, only to find that they could not get their money—much as they wanted it, but since has been the blood debt by financial institutions, an effort is made to hold President Roosevelt responsible for the panic.

WHAT WILL THEY DO?
There are some members of the Council and the board of works who will not be content to allow the Union Street incident to be closed by Recorder Skinner's opinion. The city, in the nature of things, must have many dealings with the street railway.

THE PORTS IN WINTER
Ex-Senator William B. Lawrence, of Massachusetts is disturbed by the assertion recently made in Kansas City by Robert F. Sutherland, speaker of the Canadian House of Commons, that Canada will some day have the busiest ports in North America.

MR. BORDEN TO DR. PUGSLEY
Hon. Mr. Pugsley will no doubt be delighted to read the speech made in Winnipeg by Mr. E. L. Borden, in which reference is made to two famous New Brunswick communities—Fairville and Rothesay. Rothesay will be recalled by many as the scene of a famous endeavor to lift elections from the low level to which they had fallen.

THANKSGIVING
Canadians, in this the seventh year of the reign of Edward the Peacemaker, have much reason for being thankful, and thoughtful. To set apart a day for the giving of thanks is a wise custom, and a reverent, albeit the observation of the day takes on a thousand forms, fortunately for the most part, devout and cheerful, though by no means all thoughtful.

NOTE AND COMMENT
Sir Frederick Borden is suing a London journal for libel. Mr. Emmerson once engaged in an enterprise of that sort. The bye-elections in Ontario Tuesday evening London to the Conservatives, but in Wellington North and Northumberland East each side kept the seat it held.

disturbance. It is well that this doctrine has not prevailed. It is better to know the worst and to combat it than to permit it to be hidden from sight and work its ultimate consequences. Now we know where the real responsibility lies and how far the disease has gone. It is a time not for indulging in exaggerated alarm, but for recovering composure and dealing with the actual situation with calm assurance that we are equal to its demands.

ly questioned. The Council can scarcely overlook the resolution by which the board decided that it would not in future seek to act without the Council's sanction in such matters. This resolution, following the reading of the Recorder's opinion, undoubtedly voiced the belief of legal members of the board that the Recorder was mistaken, however honestly, in his reading of the authorities.

to analyze, or, at least, his analysis is not always welcomed or weighed. This man—he was merely a poet—seemed to think we had much to be thankful for—in which all agreed with him—but that it would be well if we gave, as a nation, more of what we are doing. He seemed to think—poets are an impatient folk—that we would be the better for some nearer approach to a high and common purpose.

CHEAP LIGHT
In Montreal, as in St. John, the people permit one company to supply them with both gas and electric light. The desired competition between the two kinds of light is lacking. Montreal has what we would call comparatively cheap gas, but it knows that the price is high considering the population served, and it is aware, too, that the company so manages its gas business as to cause more and more consumers to use electricity.

OTHER REPORTS

Rev. C. W. Hamilton, as grand scribe and grand lecturer, submitted his report. Owing to the fact that Mrs. Hamilton has recently been very sick, these were brief. An grand scribe he was able to report a very encouraging net gain of 80 in membership for the year. He spoke of the need of appointing some one who could devote his whole time to the work of propagation...

OVERBOARD IN THE HARBOR

Wm. Lord and Arthur Cobham, Carleton Fishermen, Rescued by Tug Waring

CAPSIZED IN SQUALL

One Kept Himself Afloat by Swimming, the Other Clung to the Boat—Tug Put Out to Rescue, and Capsized Boat Was Towed to Slip and Righted.

While crossing the harbor in a small fishing smack Wednesday afternoon, William Lord and Arthur Cobham, two Carleton fishermen, were suddenly thrown into the chilly waters of the harbor by the capsizing of their craft, and had it not been for the prompt action of the crew of the tug Waring, their sail might have had a tragic ending.
