EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the third time and passed.

She said: Mr. Speaker, it is with genuine pleasure and, indeed, pride that I stand to move third and final reading of Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity. The phrase "employment equity" is new. It has only entered our common vocabulary in the last 18 months with the presentation of the Royal Commission report by Judge Rosalie Abella. However, the issue with which that report and this piece of legislation deals is not new. The barriers to equality in the workplace for too long have hindered women, native people, disabled persons and visible minorities. Indeed, during the 14 years I have been in this House the issue has not been new. It has been raised in questions and in committees throughout the whole of that time. I can say quite frankly that in the years before this Government came to power I heard a lot of talk about fairness and equality but I saw no action. What we are seeing here today is a Government committed to action in this field.

The House is being asked not simply to talk about an issue. The House is being asked to take action. Employment equity is more than just a problem to be solved. It is an essential part of the fabric of our nation. Like bilingualism, multiculturalism and regional diversity, employment equity is part of our heritage, a heritage in which all Canadians must be able to share equal opportunities.

[Translation]

The tabling of this Bill in the House today represents the outcome of a useful process whereby facts and information were examined and collected. First of all, we held exhaustive consultations with over 120 groups and agencies across the country; second, all aspects of the Bill were considered in the Legislative Committee, and third, the Bill was debated in the House. The time for talk is over. It is now time to act.

• (1110)

[English]

Bill C-62 is the key step in a multi-step operation by the Government to ensure a fully representative workplace. This Bill, as we know, requires federally-regulated businesses to implement and report on employment equity. But it is an overall operation that also includes a federal contractors' policy that ensures that companies doing business with the Government implement employment equity; the inclusion of employment equity measures in the six programs of the Canadian Jobs Strategy; and the Mandatory Employment Equity Program which has been instituted by the Public Service of Canada. Together, these initiatives, including the Bill before us today, are a concrete demonstration of the Government's strong commitment to creating a better and, indeed, more equitable future for all Canadians.

We are not content just to talk. We are committed to action. Bill C-62 is designed to remove discrimination from the workplace, to eliminate obvious cases of discrimination and to root out less obvious cases—systemtic discrimination which has unconsciously become all too frequently part of traditional employment practices.

Under Bill C-62, employers must identify barriers to target groups and they must remove them. They must adopt special measures that will involve senior level commitment and management authority. They must begin immediately hiring and training target group members in all levels of the organization, for example, by moving women into occupations from which they had previously been excluded. They must show the progress that they are making.

This legislation will cover federally-regulated companies in such fields as banking, communications and transportation. Because of the intiatives that we are taking with this Bill I am very pleased to report that a number of companies, including those which are beyond the jurisdiction of this Bill, have already come forward with employment equity plans—before this Bill is even passed. I refer to companies such as IBM Canada, Xerox Canada and Ontario Hydro, which have expressed their support and are already implementing employment equity. Many other companies are now working with officials in my Department to implement employment equity. This shows that the idea behind employmnt equity is taking hold and that people are realizing that employment equity makes good social sense, as well as making good economic and business sense.

What about the effect of this Bill on members of the target groups? Bill C-62 is a major step forward in creating equal opportunity for women, native people, disabled persons and visible minorities. In fact, the key word that could be used in conjunction with Bill C-62 is "opportunity". This Bill provides an instrument for groups to use in the pursuit of equality. We are not pretending that by merely passing a Bill we have solved the problem. What we are saying is that we have created a new set of conditions—a new environment in which equality will become a reality.

Bill C-62 presents a challenge to women, to native people, to disabled persons and to visible minorities—a challenge which was, perhaps, best expressed by Judge Rosalie Abella in her report when she used these words:

> Equality is a process of constant and flexible examination, of vigilant introspection, and of agressive open-mindedness.

Bill C-62 is enabling legislation, a catalyst for change and progress, not a set of rigid limitations and guidelines. It does not dictate the exact steps that each and every Canadian should take. Instead, it sets forth a framework within which interest groups, employers and Governments can work together to achieve solid social and economic equality. In order to do this, as Judge Abella has said, we must be agressive, vigilant and open-minded if we are to remove the barriers which currently exist in our society. This is why data and information is so critical to the success of Bill C-62—data and information which will be open to public scrutiny, data and information which we presently do not have. It is impossible to be vigilant, as Judge Abella admonishes us, when employment practices are hidden under layers of legal procedure and bureaucratic building.

We have heard a great deal during the debate on this Bill in committee and in the House from individuals and groups about systemic discrimination, discrimination that is caused not just by individual decisions but discrimination which results from barriers and from blockages that the systems themselves have thrown up—systemic discrimination. In the past, this form of discrimination has been more difficult to deal with, largely because it is hidden. Our goal in this Bill is to remove these obstructions, to open up the processes so that we can all see the exact nature of business practices and so that we can take action where these practices are not satisfactory.

Public disclosure, on which I lay such emphasis, is but one-half of a two-tiered system for enforcing employment equity. Beginning in January of 1987, about eight months from now, employers will be required to establish explicit goals and timetables for accomplishing employment equity. At the end of that year they will be required to report on the progress that they have made toward achieving these goals. These reports will be made public, open to media and public scrutiny—and this is the second half of the two-tiered system for enforcing employment equity. The data will also be made available to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. For the first time the Canadian Human Rights Commission will have the data that it needs to initiate an investigation under the Canadian Human Rights Act.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: That data has not been available to the Commission in the past. This is a key area in which we are moving. It is a major change. As for the Government's willingness to provide this data, and as for the Commission's willingness to act, let me just quote what Gordon Fairweather, the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, said recently to a group of senior executives in Ottawa. He said:

I hope it's well understood that we intend to use this power.

These reports will provide a profile of where target-group members stand in individual companies. Data from other sources, notably the census, will give us a clear picture of how many target-group members live in a particular area. Once we have this information, we will be able to see how well a company is doing in a particular labour market and we will be able to compare the reports of similar companies in the same geographic area as they implement employment equity. We will be able to hold a company's record in employment equity up against the availability of individuals in the local labour market to see whether or not the companies are drawing on the total human resources available to them. As I say, these reports will be made public. They will be open to the media and to public scrutiny.

The Government is committed to ensuring that employment equity becomes a reality. We intend to knock on the doors of employers who do not meet their responsibilities. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we will be knocking with a firm fist.

Bill C-62 is based on results, not on procedures or processes. It is based on results in the way Judge Abella admonished us to put the emphasis on results. It is results that count. For that reason, we rejected the notion of instituting an artificial system of quotas. We looked at the system in the United States in which quotas are used and concluded that quotas tend to easily become ceilings that employers find very comfortable. Once a ceiling is reached, they feel that they can stop and do not need to go any further.

The value and benefit of our system is its flexibilities. We are telling employers that that is not all they have to do, that they have to look further. We are saying that employment equity requires constant vigilance. Employers must think about employment equity in all their staffing actions.

We also rejected quotas for another reason. Bill C-62 is designed to work in a Canadian context. It recognizes the reality of this country which is that it is a country of regional diversity with widely varying resources and needs. By relying on goals rather than on quotas, we provide a degree of flexibility that suits the Canadian economic picture. To quote Gordon Fairweather again, when he was speaking in committee on this Bill he said the following:

It is one of the strengths of the employment equity Act that it lets managers manage. Each corporation can take the steps that make sense in its own unique circumstances.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, employment equity is more than just a matter of social justice: it is a viable concept. Employment equity is a part of our present social and economic reality. Women and members of minority groups are entering the labour market in increasing numbers. These people need employment. They need an income.

[English]

We live in a world of very rapid and complex change, change that is driven by new technologies, by shifting trade arrangements and by increasing interdependence among nations. With this change comes increased competition and the need to draw on all of our human resources. In the words of the President of Xerox Canada, Mr. David McCamus:

If we discriminate against women, we are limiting our options, which is something we can't do in today's competitive environment. To compete, we have to draw on the best pool of people available.

Bill C-62 is designed to convince all employers of the wisdom of Mr. McCamus' words. It is designed to show them that it is in their own best interests as well as the interests of society to implement employment equity.

In closing, I would just like to reiterate the essence, the purpose and the goal of this Bill. Bill C-62 provides target groups with an opportunity they have never had before in this country. Bill C-62 is a springboard for public action, and for aggressive, vigilant, open-minded action by the groups themselves. It is an opportunity for employers as well to re-examine their business practices, to eliminate systemic discrimination where it exists and to begin drawing on the full range of talent that is available across Canada. It is an opportunity for Government to work with target groups and employers to achieve employment equity. In this endeavour, the Government is fully committed. We will use the vigilance and authority of the Canadian Human Rights Commission to ensure employment equity. We will back the commission with the full weight of Government.

As I said at the outset, the time for talk is over. It is now time to act. I urge all Members of the House to ensure speedy passage of this Bill so that we can begin the important work of ensuring fair opportunities for target-group members throughout the country in all aspects of the workforce. Canadians need this Bill. It is already long overdue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear hear!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, despite the Minister's rhetoric, Bill C-62 will not enforce employment equity and it will not implement employment equity. It is merely a sham that is being perpetrated on the four target groups it is supposed to help.

If the Minister does not want to believe what we in the Opposition have been saying, let me read to her part of the press release that was issued this morning by the Coalition on Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities. The Co-chairman, Beryl Potter, in a statement released this morning, said the following:

"This Bill will do nothing more than provide the Government with employment information. It will in no way implement employment equity as there are no penalties for failing to comply with employment equity plans,"—

She goes on to say:

"We have tried everything. We have consulted with CEIC staff, appeared as witnesses before the parliamentary committee on the Bill, made pleas to the Prime Minister directly and rallied on Parliament Hill. We have demanded that the Bill be amended to include the Government's own departments and agencies and to include a penalty for failing to comply with employment equity plans. The Government has not responded to any of our demands," adds Potter. When the Prime Minister's letter was finally received on Thursday, April 17, it in no way answered the Coalition's concerns.

That is what one of the target groups that is supposed to be helped by this legislation says about the legislation. The other target groups, the visible minorities, the women's groups and the native peoples' groups, are saying the same thing as well.

Because there is much confusion, not only out there in the public but also here in the Parliament, we must be clear on what is employment equity. As the Minister said, it is a new expression. Employment equity is not the absence of discrimination. Employment equity is a new term developed by Judge Abella to include affirmative action. We all understood affirmative action, that terminology. It goes much further than simply forbidding discrimination. In fact, affirmative action says that we must discriminate in favour of certain groups to ensure that they are fairly represented in workplaces where they were not represented before. Affirmative action requires a new type of discrimination, a discrimination of which we approve, because we feel it is necessary to make certain workplaces more representative of women, of visible minorities, of native people, and of disabled people. That is what we are talking about.

I should like to refer to Clause 4 of the Bill. It is a good clause; it sets out certain obligations for employers in respect to affirmative action and employment equity. The only problem is that if employers do not live up to their obligations under Clause 4, no penalty will be imposed against them. Penalties could be imposed against them for discriminating against employees under the Canadian Human Rights Act, that is, discrimination against people trying to find employment. However, under Clause 4 of the Bill we are supposed to go beyond that and introduce affirmative action programs. There is no penalty in the Bill or anywhere else if employers do not proceed with those types of programs.

I will summarize Clause 4 where it indicates that an employer shall implement employment equity by instituting such positive policies and practices as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation, and so on. We could support that; that is very good legislation. However, if employers do not do what the clause indicates they must do, there is no penalty in the Bill. That is one area about which most of the target groups are concerned.

Let me indicate some other reasons for the Bill not being adequate. In addition to the fact that there is no enforcement or penalty clause dealing with the key parts of the Bill, it only applies to employers under federal jurisdiction. Of course that is essential because we cannot legislate for employers under provincial jurisdiction. By the way, employers under federal jurisdiction are only a small percentage of the total of employers in the Canadian labour market. In any case, the Bill only applies to employers with 100 or more employees. In the Canada Labour Code employers are defined as those with five or more employees.

In the affirmative action legislation in the United States employers are defined as those with 15 or more employees. We felt that 100 was too high. We listened to the evidence and introduced an amendment which indicated that in Canada it should be applicable to employers with a workforce of 25 or more employees. We wanted to reduce the qualifying clause from 100 or more to 25 or more, which is more than the 15 in the United States and more than the 5 in our other labour legislation. Some of the witnesses had recommended 25 or more, and we thought that was reasonable. The Bill is not adequate on that ground. It eliminates many employers from the purview of the Bill by making the floor too high, by setting it at 100 rather than 15 or 25.

Also, the Bill is wanting to the extent that it does not cover federal Government Departments and agencies. The Parliamentary Secretary said during the debate that it was not necessary for the legislation to cover federal Departments because they were already covered by guidelines introduced under the Treasury Board. Those regulations were introduced by the previous Liberal Government. However, we never said at that time that it would be the last word. As a matter of fact, they were introduced at a time when we were still dealing with the implementation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and we had not yet received the advice of Judge Abella in respect to these matters. The former Liberal Government appointed the Abella Commission to seek out information and advice on how best to introduce affirmative action programs. Nevertheless, we introduced for the federal Public Service affirmative action programs which are still in effect. However, they are not adequate now that we are in receipt of the Abella Report which recommends that all employers, both those within and those outside the Government, be covered by legislation with mandatory enforceable rules.

The problem with simply relying upon regulations under the Treasury Board for the Public Service is that regulations can be changed at any time by Order in Council or by a small group of Ministers meeting together in private. They will announce it later, but they do not have to go to Parliament to seek changes, to withdraw those rules, or to strengthen those rules. Those rules can be changed simply by Order in Council in the back room of the cabinet process. That is not good enough.

An even more important argument is that if we are to say to the private sector that it must have legislation passed by the Parliament of Canada which can only be changed within the Parliament of Canada, why is the same thing not at least done for the public sector? Why should a heavier burden or a more entrenched version of employment equity be placed upon the private sector but not upon the public sector? In many respects we are making the process much tougher in the fact that the legislation will be entrenched. We are making it more firmly entrenched and more difficult to change for the private sector than for the public sector. As Judge Abella pointed out in her report, the legislation should apply to federal Government Departments and agencies as well as to private sector firms.

It is also important if we are to give a good example to the provinces. As I mentioned a few minutes ago, the federal Government has only limited jurisdiction in respect to labour matters in Canada. Most firms and their employment equity programs will come under provincial jurisdiction. If we pass an inadequate Bill at the federal level, a Bill which is not properly enforceable and does not apply to the public sector as it applies to the private sector, a poor example is given to the provinces which we hope will follow our example in Ottawa. Over the years, going back to the thirties, the federal Government has set the trend in advanced labour legislation to protect employees. Sooner or later the provinces came onside and did more or less the same thing.

I have mentioned certain items where this Bill falls short. There are no adequate penalties for federal employers, or for employers in private sector companies with less than 100 employees. Second, the definition in Clause 4, to which I referred for affirmative action, is also inadequate. Not only is it inadequate, it will not do the job. It starts off being a very good definition. I read part of it a second ago, but let me refer to it again. It says that an employer shall implement employment equity by instituting such positive policies and practices as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation in the various positions of employment with the employer that is at least proportionate to their representation in the workforce.

The problem is that many of these groups are not in the workforce. The number of disabled people in the workforce is very small because they cannot get jobs. The number of visible minorities is small because they cannot get jobs. If you look at the representation in the workforce and use it as a standard, as this Bill does, it will be very poor. The Bill will amount to nothing. To introduce an affirmative action program and to look for a standard, you cannot look at the representation, especially for disabled and visible minorities and native people in the workforce.

Certain Members read out the rate of unemployment for blacks in Canada. It is extremely high. In some parts of Montreal 60 per cent to 70 per cent of young blacks are unemployed. We have the same situation in many parts of the country. The situation is the same for natives. We all know that. In Regina, Winnipeg and places where there are many native people, both on the reserves and near the reserves, there are very high rates of unemployment. The definition of being in the workplace is that you must have been for an interview for a job within the last four weeks of being interviewed. Many people have given up hope. They have tried and tried again and again without success. That definition is wanting. We tried to amend that definition both in the committee and in the House. The proposed amendments were turned down.

We were successful, and I give credit to the Minister and to the Parliamentary Secretary, in having an amendment accepted in committee that the employer in introducing employment equity must consult with bargaining agents and with employee representatives. That was a step forward. I congratulate the Minister. It is a good move. We also tried to get an amendment which would oblige the employer to consult with the representatives of the target groups. Very often the target groups are not very well represented in the employees' associations or unions. It is unfortunate.

I met a young woman working in Kingston in the correctional service. She told me, for example, that if I went to speak to the unions in the correctional services I would not get a very sound opinion of what women think in the correctional service because they are such a small group. The unions do not represent their point of view. I think it is good that we consult with the unions and with the employee associations, but if we want to know how employment equity should be implemented we should also have consultations with the designated groups or their representatives, such as women, native people, visible minorities and so on. We introduced an amendment in the House and in committee to do that but it was turned down. It seems strange to me because the same logic applied there as with the other amendment. In one case the Government accepted it and in the other case it turned it down. In any case, there is still an inadequacy in the Bill in that respect.

Again I give credit to the Government, to the Minister and to the Parliamentary Secretary for agreeing that there had to be action plans. When the Bill was first presented to the House there was no requirement on the employer to prepare action plans setting out goals and timetables. Many witnesses argued that that must be done. In response to those representations, the Minister agreed. We now have Clause 5 in the Bill which reads:

> An employer shall, in respect of each year, prepare a plan setting out
> (a) the goals that the employer intends to achieve in implementing employment equity in the year or years to which the plan relates; and
> (b) the timetable for the implementation of those goals.

Very good, Mr. Speaker. But when we get to Subsection (2) of Clause 5 it reads:

> A copy of a plan—

meaning the action plan.

—prepared under subsection (1) shall be retained by the employer at the employer's principal place of business in Canada for a period of at least three years—

What good is there in having an action plan with goals and timetables if it is kept at the head office of the company and is not made known to the employees, to the target groups or to the Canadian Human Rights Commission?

In the committee and in the House, the Parliamentary Secretary said: "well, the Canadian Human Rights Commission may be able to get the action plan if there is some sort of complaint and it is following up on the complaint." That, however, is too late, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of the action plan is to make public what employers intend to do about employment equity, about affirmative action. The action plan, which is a good thing, should be made available to the target groups, to the employers and to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. While Subsection (1) of Clause 5 is very good, Subsection (2) is extremely wanting and is not good. As a matter of fact, it is ridiculous that after requiring these action plans to be made they are kept secret at the employer's principal place of business in Canada.

These are the principal grounds on which we are opposing this Bill and why we are saying the Bill is not adequate, but there are other specific reasons. We tried to put in the Bill the principle of equal pay for work of equal value as one of the standards for employment equity. That amendment was turned down. We tried to introduce a definition for reasonable accommodation, a definition that was very strongly supported and wanted by the associations of disabled people, women and others, but that also was turned down. We wanted a definition of disabled in the Bill. That proposal was turned down.

We have heard it over and over again in the House, the Minister, the Parliamentary Secretary and other Conservative Members have said that this is the first time that any Bill has been implemented with respect to employment equity. That is correct. This is the first time there has been a Bill dealing with what might be called affirmative action, but to suggest that this question has not been touched on before is completely false and misleading.

The Canadian Human Rights Act was passed by this House in 1977. It was introduced by a Liberal Government. The Canadian Human Rights Act applies to discrimination in many areas, not just employment. It applies to discrimination in accommodation, in service at public facilities and so on. Section 7 reads that it is a discriminatory practice directly or indirectly (a) to refuse to employ or continue to employ any individual or (b) in the course of employment to differentiate adversely in relation to an employee on a prohibited ground of discrimination. The prohibited grounds of discrimination are national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, marital status, family status, disability and conviction for which a pardon has been granted.

Since 1977 we have had a law which outlaws discrimination in employment in accordance with the section to which I have just referred on a wide, wide basis. The problem is that the section deals with discrimination in employment. It does not deal with affirmative action. We all know of the Bakke case in the United States. Under the American affirmative action programs and legislation, the Supreme Court ruled those out of order because they were a sort of reverse discrimination. The Supreme Court says that if the law says you cannot discriminate, you cannot even discriminate when you want to help people. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms in Section 15(1) states:

Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

We then said in Subsection (2):

Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

It was necessary to entrench in the Constitution the capacity of the federal and provincial Governments to pass laws on affirmative action so they would not be ruled out of order on the basis that they were discriminating. As soon as the Charter was enacted, the Minister of Employment and Immigration at the time, who I believe was the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), set up the Abella Commission to recommend how affirmative action could be introduced. For the Minister and members of the Conservative Party to say that for years and years they requested action on employment equity and nothing was done is, at the best, misleading, and a lot of rhetoric. In fact, in 1977 the Canadian Human Rights Act was passed. In 1981 the Charter of Rights was passed with Section 15, against much opposition from certain Conservative Members. The Hon. Minister supported it, but certain members of her Party did not.

A process has been ongoing for several years which should have led, by this time, to enforceable affirmative action as was recommended by Judge Abella, but that unfortunately is not being done. The Abella Commission was set up in June, 1983, as soon as possible after the passage of the Charter. The Commission reported to a Conservative Government in October, 1984, after being set up by a liberal Government. After a study of more than one year Judge Abella said very clearly that mandatory employment equity was necessary and essential. She said that voluntary affirmative action did not work in the United States, is not working elsewhere, and will not work here. She said that we need an enforcement agency with penalties and sanctions. This Bill does not provide those. It would be the simplest thing in the world for the Minister to put forward an enforceable Bill. Clause 7 now says:

An employer who fails to comply with section 6 is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding fifty thousand dollars.

Clause 6 simply requires employers to produce information with respect to their workplace. Clause 7, which applies the penalty, does not apply to Clause 4, which lays out the obligation to implement employment equity, and it does not cover Clause 5 which obliges employers to prepare action plans setting out goals and timetables. Everyone is asking why the penalty clause only applies to Clause 6, the reporting clause, and not to Clauses 4 and 5 which are the real guts of the Bill. If the Government and the Minister really believed in enforceable affimative action and employment equity, they would need only amend Clause 7 to read: "An employer who fails to comply with Sections 4, 5, and 6, is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding fifty thousand dollars".

We tried to increase the $50,000 to $500,000 because to many of the large companies under federal jurisdiction $50,000 is like a price to steal. It would be cheaper for large companies like Bell telephone or the Royal Bank of Canada to pay the $50,000 every year than to implement employment equity. In committee we supported an amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) which would subject employers to a fine if they did not comply with Sections 4, 5, and 6. That would have made this a very good Bill. I also moved an amendment to increase the fine to a maximum of $500,000, but that was rejected by the Government as well.

I have referred briefly to what other groups have said about this Bill. I referred to the press release issued today by the disabled people. I also have a press release with respect to this legislation which was issued by the Canadian Ethnocultural Council. It says in part:

> The legislation to cover visible minorities, as well as women, natives and the disabled, does not require federally regulated employers to have employment equity programs, nor does it provide them with any sort of guidelines which they ought to follow. In addition, the absence of any employment mechanism or agency means that voluntary organizations with minimal budgets will have to do the real monitoring."

That has been taken care of to a certain extent, and I will talk about that in a moment. The press release goes on to say that this Bill is not acceptable.

The Urban Alliance on Race Relations did a survey in the Toronto area and found, as reported in an article in The Globe and Mail, that bigotry, prejudice, and discrimination against visible minorities are widespread and entrenched in policies and practices of small and large employers in the metropolitan Toronto labour market. They said that slightly more than half of management participants in the study had negative things to say about racial minorities. Only 9 per cent of the 199 large employers, all with more than 50 employees, stated a firm belief in racial equality. For example, 28 per cent of the employers said they believed that non-whites in general do not have the ability to meet job performance criteria compared with whites. That is part of the problem.

If you look at the evidence presented to the legislative committee which studied this Bill you will see that not one of the witnesses or groups appearing before the committee representing those who are supposed to be helped by this Bill approved of it. If the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary do not want to believe members of the Opposition because they think we might be partisan, although we are trying not to be, we ask them to please listen to the disabled people, the native people, and the visible minorities. Listen to them, rather than us. We are simply voicing their views because there are not enough of them in this House. If the Government will listen to them, it may produce a worth-while piece of legislation.

This Bill simply requires that information on employment equity be reported to the Minister and the Canadian Human Rights Commission. There will be a penalty if that information is not reported, but no penalty whatsoever if they do not move ahead with the implementation of employment equity as set out in Clause 4 of the Bill. For example, an employer with 100 employees might report in year one that he has 100 employees including one woman, five from the visible minorities, and no natives. The company does not want to be fined $50,000 under Clause 7, so it makes that report. The next year it reports again that it has 100 employees, including one woman, five from the visible minorities, and no disabled people or natives. It makes the same report year after year and is never penalized because it is reporting as required. However, it is, unfortunately, making no progress on employment equity. It is not introducing affirmative action plans, nor are there any penalties.

The information that is gathered pursuant to this Bill is referred to the Canadian Human Rights Commission which will be able to enforce the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act against those firms in which it believes there is discrimination. However, the Commission will not be able to enforce Clause 4 of the Bill which requires affirmative action programs and action to redress the imbalance in a particular labour force.

Last December, the Federal Court of Canada ruled that the Canadian Human Rights Act authorizes prevention but not cures, like the 25 per cent female hiring quota imposed on CN Rail the year before. The Federal Court was saying that the Canadian Human Rights Act can be enforced where there is discrimination but cannot be used to enforce cures to discrimination, such as affirmative action plans. This Bill was supposed to deal with that very issue but does not because the enforcement provisions are not there.

The legal officers for the Canadian Human Rights Commission argued before the committee that he and she thought they could enforce this Bill through certain sections in the Canadian Human Rights Act. They referred me to various sections. I am a lawyer and I attempted to follow their argument but was not convinced that they had any way of enforcing the Employment Equity Bill through their legislation. It seems that the Federal Court of Canada agrees with that suggestion.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has rejected the amendments that both opposition Parties put forward. If she really believes in an enforceable Employment Equity Bill that is understood by Canadians and the target groups, why did she not agree to an amendment in Clause 7 which would stipulate that an employer who fails to comply with Clauses 4, 5 and 6 is guilty of an offence? She can use all the rhetoric in the world and make the best speeches to say how good this legislation is, but she is not convincing the employees in the target groups.

This legislation could have been a great achievement for the Government. Unfortunately, it is not. As the disabled people pointed out when they were here last week, this is a black day for Canada and employment equity.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, we have now reached third reading stage of a Bill that deals with employment equity, a very important issue in this country. This whole discussion began about a year ago last March or February with the report of Judge Rosalie Abella. Legislation was tabled before the House, followed by second reading debate and lengthy legislative committee hearings at which many witnesses appeared. We have had report stage debate and we are now at third and final reading.

There is still a major difference between the Government on one side and the Opposition and four target groups on the other about the purpose of this Bill. I want to talk about those differences today, because I for one am disappointed that the Minister and the Government did not accept more amendments from the four target groups for whom this Bill was drafted, the women of Canada, Indian people, visible minorities and the disabled. All four of those groups appeared before our legislative committee to suggest many amendments because they believe this Bill is not strong enough and will not reflect what is needed to solve their problems.

The Minister and the Government have been very obtuse and have refused to accept major amendments, despite the fact that they were elected on a promise that they would listen to the Canadian people and reflect their wishes. However, this Bill does not do that.

The difference is that the government's Bill calls for voluntary employment equity with mandatory reporting while the four groups want mandatory employment equity in this country. The enforcement of that equity is not being provided with this legislation.

I believe it is worth while to remind the House of the election promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in August, 1984, when many people thought there would be much tougher legislation. He said at that time:

> Our Party will ensure that companies providing services to the federal Government hire increasing numbers of women to perform such services. When seeking government business, these companies will be required to detail their action plans, timetables, and programs for attracting, training and advancing women within their operations . . . We support the need for human resources planning within the federal bureaucracy, which includes goals and objectives to achieve parity for women, at all levels of Government operations, commensurate with their skills and expectations. Numerical goals are one of several goals required: training and retaining are others.

That is what the Prime Minister said during the election campaign in 1984.

I believe you were in the House last Monday, Mr. Speaker, when over 100 disabled Canadians gathered on the Hill to protest that the Prime Minister has not kept his word. Beryl Potter is one of the leaders of the disabled groups in Canada. She stated on the CBC national news last Monday night:

> Like the Bill—it's not even worth the paper it's written on . . . I've never been so disillusioned in my life as I am with Prime Minister Mulroney. I was a supporter of him. I worked for him in his campaign and I am totally, totally disillusioned.

Beryl Potter of the Coalition on Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities is a leader of the disabled in our country. She campaigned actively for the Prime Minister and the Conservative Party of Canada because she believed in the Prime Minister and that Party. She believed that that Party would do something useful for her as a disabled person and the people she represented. Yet, she said: "I am totally, totally disillusioned". She was so disillusioned that we all saw her in the gallery shouting things about the Government and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) that I cannot repeat here because they are unparliamentary. When will they begin to listen to the people of this country?

One of the great tragedies of a Government with an overwhelming majority is that it becomes insensitive to public opinion. I recall talking to a veteran Conservative Member of Parliament about a week after the federal election in September, 1984. I will not repeat his name because he would not want it stated publicly, but I suggested that he must be happy with the result of the election, with 211 seats for his Party. He said: "Not really. We won 50 seats too many."

When we look at parliamentary tradition in this country and around the world where there have been large majorities, we see that those majority governments became insensitive to the will of the people and were often defeated after one term in office. We saw the problems with the Diefenbaker Government from 1958 to 1964 and what happened to the Trudeau Government from 1968 to 1972. Time and time again, governments with large majorities—

An Hon. Member: Like the present Government.

Mr. Nystrom: —have become insensitive. Like the present Government, as one of the Conservative Members is saying.

One only need ask Beryl Potter to see that the same problem is happening again. Beryl Potter and some disabled people came to this Parliament on March 26 and met the Prime Minister just before he walked into the Conservative caucus. She told the Prime Minister that the Bill should be strengthened in two or three areas, including the definition of reasonable accommodation to disabled people and a stronger penalty clause to make employment equity more enforceable and mandatory. The Prime Minister talked to Beryl Potter for five or six minutes and suggested that she accompany his Policy Advisor, Geoff Norquay, to his office to discuss her suggestions in detail. The Prime Minister said that he would give a reply as to what could be done. They went to the Prime Minister's Office and had a meeting with Mr. Norquay in the PMO. They came back and were quite ecstatic about this because they had a promise from Mr. Norquay and the Prime Minister's Office that they would get back to them before this Bill comes again before the House for report stage. They were happy about that. You know what happened? There was no reply at all from the Prime Minister, and no reply at all from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) before this Bill came back from the House ten days ago for report stage. What happened was that the Prime Minister broke a commitment that he would, once again, get back to the disabled Canadians before report stage.

I ask now why a simple courtesy like that was not extended to Beryl Potter and disabled Canadians? That is why they were so angry in the gallery of the House of Commons last Monday. You know what they did in the Prime Minister's Office? They sent a reply the day disabled Canadians came before Parliament to demonstrate, the day disabled Canadians in the gallery spoke out against this Bill, and the very day they were here in Ottawa. They did not do it seven or eight days sooner, as they promised, before this Bill came back for report stage. When the Government treats Canadians in that way it does not deserve to be around very long. That is why you have people like Beryl Potter—a Conservative Party supporter for, I assume, many years, certainly in support of this Prime Minister—saying in public that she was never, never so disillusioned in her life.

This Bill has a noble purpose, and the Minister of Employment has stated many times that it is to promote equity in the workplace so we have a chance to correct the discrimination made against the four target groups in this country; the four target groups being the women, native people, visible minorities, and of course the handicapped in our country. That is the purpose of the Bill. There is nothing in the Bill that is going to make it mandatory. The Minister of Employment quoted Judge Rosalie Abella a couple of times earlier this morning. She did not quote some of the important passages that Judge Rosalie Abella referred to when it came to mandatory affirmative action. I quote from page 195 of her report where she talks about mandatory measures versus voluntary measures that the Government has introduced in this Bill. This is what Rosalie Abella is saying:

> A voluntary program with a mandatory reporting requirement is nonetheless voluntary in the absence of a requirement to remedy the discriminatory practices disclosed by the information reported.

In other words, we need mandatory action.

Second, she says, and I quote:

> A requirement of public reporting may result in public pressure on a company to revise its systems, but is unrealistic to rely on public opinion as an effective monitoring agency. It results in a speculative and scattered approach and creates the perception, in the absence of enforcement, that the issue is deserving of only casual attention.

In other words, she is saying we need mandatory affirmative action. One last quote from her report on page 197:

> Given the seriousness and apparent intractability of employment discrimination, it is unrealistic and somewhat ingenious to rely on there being sufficient public goodwill to fuel a voluntary program.

We have a Minister and a Government saying that the court of public opinion will prevail. Public opinion will force the Bank of Montreal, the Royal Bank, Bell Telephone and all others to make sure there is employment equity in this country. I do not believe that, and the four target groups do not believe that, and that is why they want changes.

I referred to Beryl Potter on disabled Canadians, and my friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grace referred to a statement made this morning once again saying that this Bill is not going to help them very much at all in this country. I also want to refer to other groups.

We have here a statement from the Inuit people of Canada saying that Bill C-62 is of limited value. We have a quotation here from the National Association of Women in Law, Suzanne Boivin, who says:

> Nothing will change, unfortunately it is simply wishful thinking.

We have example after example of target groups before the committee that have said exactly the same thing, that this Bill is not good enough and it does not go far enough. What we called for in the committee were five different principles to be enshrined in this particular piece of legislation. One is, in the absence of real enforcement, adequate penalties under mandatory equity schemes where necessary. Second, we want to have some reference in the Bill to the whole principle of equal pay for work of equal value. We want reference in the Bill to contract compliance, and we want an obligation in the Bill to negotiate employment equity with a bargaining agent when there is a union present in the workforce. Finally, we want federal Departments included in this legislation.

Those points of view were also supported by the vast majority of witnesses that came before our committee, and in particular all the witnesses who came from the four different target groups covered by this legislation.

In summary, this legislation is voluntary equity with a mandatory reporting process. It is not going to enforce anything unless there is rank and blatant discrimination that can be picked up by the Canadian Human Rights Commission under the Human Rights Act. The only part of this Bill that is mandatory is the failure to report, which is Clause 6, Then all we have is a $50,000 fine. I ask you what is a $50,000 fine for Bell Canada? What is a $50,000 fine for the Royal Bank? What is a $50,000 fine for the Bank of Montreal? It is peanuts. Now there may not be many big companies like that, as a Member for Ontario said.

But it is important, as the four target groups said to have adequate penalties so we do have some kind of punishment if the law is broken. What we suggest in our Party is that you make the penalty clause apply also to employment equity so it is enforced. But, of course, that is not part of the Bill.

The other aspect of this Bill is that when there are reports the reports are not made public. But if there is a report, that is the only part of the Bill where there can be a penalty or a sanction. The only penalty, as I said before, is through the Human Rights Act. The Human Rights Commission does not enforce employment equity. The Human Rights Act cannot enforce the employment equity Bill; it is not part of the mandate. The Human Rights Commission will be enforcing provisions of the Human Rights Act as they may apply to the workplace based upon the data contained in the annual report. They cannot force the Bank of Montreal or the Royal Bank to hire more women in the middle management or senior management positions. What we are hearing from women across the country is that this Bill should have within it a clause which will make sure it is enforced.

Another part of the Bill you would find interesting is the provision for what is called an action plan. When this Bill was first presented to the House there was no provision for an action plan at all. We had group after group coming before us saying that there has to be an action plan. The Minister, to her credit, introduced an amendment which will provide for an action plan. Ultimately, as the Government responded, they introduced an amendment for an action plan which included, of course, goals and timetables. Ultimately, they made sure that this action plan remain confidential. We have an action plan now which is confidential. The employees of the Bank of Montreal, or the employees of Bell Canada cannot have access to the action plan. The Human Rights Commission does not automatically have access to the action plan.

It is worth repeating that Gordon Fairweather, the Chief Commissioner of the Human Rights Commission of Canada, said in a February speech, and he repeatedly urged management that, though not required by Bill C-62, it would be in their interests to make, upon request, a copy of the action plan available to the Human Rights Commission. Here is Gordon Fairweather saying, "You do not have to give us that action plan, but I think it would be in your interests if you do so." If the Human Rights Commission is going to have any way of interpreting whether there is employment equity or discrimination in this country, surely its job would be a lot easier if it had access to action plans whenever it wanted. If we are going to have any kind of industrial or economic democracy, surely the employees should also have access to action plans.

I am not sure what the Conservative Party is afraid of. The Conservatives campaigned with very prestigious people like Jed Baldwin for freedom of information for many years. I have a great deal of admiration for Jed Baldwin. I remember his Private Members' Bills in this House. I also remember the former Prime Minister; I forget his riding but his first name is "Joe". I remember that he also took considerable action during his short nine months as Prime Minister in 1979 with respect to better freedom of information law. But we now have a Prime Minister who seems to ignore the root beliefs of his Party. Perhaps it is because he was not here all those years with the former Prime Minister, Jed Baldwin and Walter Baker, who was such a distinguished man, when they talked about the need for freedom of information, because we now have an Employment Equity Bill which says there must be an action plan but the action plan must be confidential even from the employees. I wonder once again why the Minister did not make the appropriate amendment on behalf of the people of Canada.

Another part of the Bill about which we heard a lot of criticism is its failure to include equal pay for work of equal value. We put a number of amendments in committee which would have made that a part of the Bill. They would have made equal pay for work of equal value a reality in terms of this legislation.

The National Action Committee on the Status of Women urged that Bill C-62 contain a reference to Section 11 of the Human Rights Act so that equal pay matters would be addressed by employees. I believe that is very important. We moved that amendment without success in committee. Judge Rosalie Abella said that equal pay is an integral element in the implementation of employment equity and that it must be included in any undertaking by employers to make the practices in the workplace more equitable. This was something which was called for by the women of this country, but which is not in the Bill.

Something else which is missing in the Bill is contract compliance. Back in August, 1984 the Prime Minister talked about the need to have contract compliance, to have some kind of equity laws which would make it impossible for companies which do business with the federal Government to discriminate against women and other minorities. Rosalie Abella said the same thing. Recommendation No. 27 states: "Contract compliance should be imposed by legislation". We might ask, is that not a radical thing to do? Is that not too radical for Canadian Conservatives? It is not.

In the United States where Ronald Reagan is President, and I consider Ronald Reagan, to a fair degree more Conservative than many Conservatives in the House, has contract compliance, and Ronald Reagan's United States finds that contract compliance has been an effective tool in changing discriminatory practices by some employers in firms which deal with the U.S. Government. If it can be done in the U.S. why can it not be done in Canada? I believe it is reflective of the fact that we have a majority Government which is too large and insensitive to the opinions of the people of Canada.

In 1980 the Canadian Government had contracts with some 25,000 to 30,000 firms with $6.5 billion worth of contracts going to the private sector and some $5.5 billion going to Crown corporations. Supply and Services alone in 1982-1983 signed 333,928 contracts worth $5 billion on behalf of the federal Government. So I believe we must have contract compliance. I believe this is exactly what the people of Canada want.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry. I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. However, he does have a period for questions and comments. I am sure, being such a very popular Hon. Member, he will have a question or comment.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to my colleague's speech. I wonder if he could elaborate a little further on the last point he made with regard to the inadequacies of the legislation before the House. I wanted to hear more fully what he had to say on that point.

Mr. Nystrom: A very wise question from a very thoughtful Hon. Member. It reminds me of some of the questions Members of the Conservative Party ask during Question Period from time to time. In any event, I want to make one last point. It was a point made by disabled Canadians and several other groups. What they ask is that we include federal Government Departments in this legislation because federal Government Departments are not included. I ask why not? We should practice what we preach. If we are making a law for the private sector which deals with the federal Government, a law which is going to pertain to federal Crown corporations, then why should we not include federal Government Departments within the purview and scope of this particular Bill?

I make one argument as to why it is important. Beryl Potter on behalf of disabled Canadians came here last week and told us that some 75 per cent of disabled Canadians who work for our federal Government work on contract. They are term employees. I am sure the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) would agree that when we have restrictions of funds and cut-backs in Government Departments it is often the people on term contracts who are the first to be laid off. It is the 75 per cent of disabled Canadians who work for the federal Government on contract who are laid off. So I think it is very important to include federal Goverment Departments in this legislation.

The Minister can say that the Government has its own affirmative action program, but that is accepting the old Liberal argument which this Government often does. The policies of the federal Public Service are totally management controlled. I think the Conservative Party should be interested in making sure there is some participation by the Public Service itself. Second, many basics of an equity program are not subject to a bargaining process under the Public Service Staff Relations Act. I think they should be. Third, in the past, priorities have been placed on promoting women to higher management levels while ignoring the vast majority of women workers in the Public Service and we received that information from the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and others. Fourth, there have been no initiatives taken to identify and eliminate systemic discrimination in all aspects of Public Service employment practices. Fifth, and most important, in my opinion, these policies which are called "Treasury Board Guidelines" lack the force and commitment of law. In other words, we may have Treasury Board guidelines that we should have more women, more visible minorities or more disabled people in the Public Service, but these are Treasury Board guidelines. Treasury Boards and their Ministers come and go and the guidelines can change from one Government to the next. Our Party is urging that this be made law now. We should have the force of law behind employment equity.

In conclusion, I want to say that this Bill is not good enough. It was drafted for four target groups. All four target groups are saying to the Conservative Government that the Bill is not good enough. All this Bill will do is call for employment equity in a voluntary sense. That is not good enough.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in a democratic society it is very important to have a democratic process. And in this case, the women of Canada, who are in the majority in this country, are opposed to this Bill. The other groups are opposed as well: native people, visible minorities and the disabled, all are against this Bill.

Mr. Speaker, these four groups are disappointed, because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a political commitment during the last election campaign eighteen months ago, and it is now time to act on that commitment.

[English]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has described Bill C-62 as a springboard—a springboard for miniorities across the country. I prefer to liken it to a gangplank, a gangplank which will allow all of the minorities cited, by both the spokesman for the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), as well as by the spokesman for the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), to sink again into the abyss of despair instead of the hope which was rendered by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

It is fair to say that a great many people felt that when the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands was appointed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to the position of Minister of Employment and Immigration we would see action on this important issue. Such action was promised by the Prime Minister in his speech during the women's debate and throughout the course of his campaign. Unfortunately, instead of seeing the Minister pull forward the Conservative caucus, dragging them kicking and screaming into the 20th century, we see that the Minister has been pulled back. She has replaced action with rhetoric. She has replaced promises made by the Prime Minister, as well as by the Conservative Party, with mere words. As we have seen in this Bill, words have fallen on deaf ears and I refer to the words of women's groups which have decried the Bill as a sham and a phoney. I refer to the minorities who feel that this legislation does not respond to the employment hopes and aspirations which they have developed over the last number of years. It does not reply to the concerns of the visible minorities or to native groups.

To whom does this legislation reply? It replies to the real bosses of the Conservative Party—the large corporations which have now been called upon by the federal government to report. Once they make their reports they can devise their action plans. However, they can keep these action plans private and secret in the confines of their own corporate boardrooms. They can deny, even to the target groups cited by the Minister, an opportunity to examine these plans to determine whether, in fact, they are delivering on their promises of employment equity.

[Translation]

The Minister (Ms. MacDonald) and the Prime Minister (Mr.Mulroney) said they preferred to use the voluntary approach when dealing with equality matters and employment equity. However, Mr. Speaker, we all know that the voluntary approach does not work with companies, especially the big companies which see making a profit as their primary responsibility. We know that in a period of economic recession such as we have known between 1981 and 1983, all these companies got rid of those identified as belonging to minority groups such as women and visible minorities. All the jobs held by these people were cut during this period, and now the same companies are being asked to change the rules of the game on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think we can seriously believe that this is what these big companies are going to do, especially when we see that even the Government is not willing to play according to the rules.

[English]

The Equality for All Report put forward some fairly significant recommendations. It was an all-Party unanimous report which specifically cited Bill C-62, the legislation which we are discussing today, as being discriminatory. The report stated that the Bill goes against the spirit of the Charter. It was cited as being discriminatory because of the fact it exempts the federal Government. Here we have the federal Government reaching out to companies which employ 100 or more people and saying: "We are asking you to launch an action plan on a voluntary basis and to table it. We are also asking you to launch affirmative action programs within your companies. However, we are not prepared, in a substantive way, through law as opposed to legislation, to submit ourselves to the same type of public scrutiny". On the one hand the Government is saying: "Yes, we are calling upon private sector companies on the federal scene to come across with affirmative action plans; but we are not prepared to make the same requirement of ourselves in legislation".

The Minister will say that the Treasury Board is handling this matter through regulation. However, as has already been pointed out, any regulation can be abolished as quickly as it can be written. If the federal Government is really serious about showing the lead in this particular area, then it is extremely important, as was cited by the committee on equality rights, that at the very least the federal Government be covered by all aspects of Bill C-62.

The second point—

Mr. Speaker, the major drawback of this Bill is that it applies only to companies with at least 100 employees. We know that most companies will not be affected by this legislation because the majority of Canadian companies are small businesses with fewer than 100 employees.

What happens to those companies with only 25, 30 or 40 employees? As the Hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has suggested, we might at least follow the example of the United States where all companies with more than 15 employees are included.

All such companies in the United States are governed by federal employment equity regulations. Very reasonable and dedicated as he is, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East recommended that the Bill might be made applicable only to companies with more than 25 employees. He did not suggest that all small businesses should be affected. There is nothing extraordinary about that, Mr. Speaker, considering that the Canada Labour Code applies to all companies with at least five employees. We are being quite reasonable when we urge the Government to amend that part of the Bill under which all companies with fewer than 100 employees are exempted.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East put forth a number of extremely reasonable amendments—in fact, almost three dozen amendments —which dealt with the sum and substance of the Bill. They attempted to redress some of the inequitities which had already been outlined by the all-Party committee studying equality rights. Unfortunately, notwithstanding the rhetoric of the Minister and the Government, and notwithstanding the support for these amendments by every single group which the Bill claims to represent, the Minister and the Government refused to endorse most of them. In fact, only two or three amendments, which were certainly not the meat of the matter, were accepted by the Government.

It is disappointing, particularly when one considers that one of the major promises made by the Prime Minister—oh, how I remember his words—was that he would apply contract compliance immediately upon being elected to Government. He said that not only would the Government come in line with employment equity where it deals with all federal Government employees, but any company which wanted to do business with the federal Government must, of necessity, develop a plan of affirmative action so that the contract compliance principle which has been well-tested in the United States could be applied here in Canada. That is what the Prime Minister said when he was the Leader of the Opposition when he was going head-to-head with the then Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), during the debate on women's issues. All of us from every political Party were thrilled to hear that promise made to the women of Canada.

Unfortunately, as with so many of the other promises of the Government, and as with so many other promises of the Prime Minister, he says one thing to the women of Canada and another to the companies of Canada. When it comes time to see which interest group wins out in the struggle for rights and equality it is quite clear that the companies, the multinationals—the Imasco's of this world—have won out. The little people, the women of Canada, do not have a chance.

A report released today states that poverty is increasing in Canada. The major groups hurt by poverty include groups of women and children. If we are to address in real terms the question of poverty and the feminization of poverty, the only real way to do it is to implement specific recommendations to deal with the wage gap. For every dollar earned by a man, a woman earns 58 cents, 60 cents or 62 cents depending upon the province. Employment equity legislation with real teeth would not solve that problem today but would send out a message, not only to companies—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Louder.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) has told me to speak louder. I will speak louder because I am speaking on behalf of the women of Canada, women who are sick and tired of hearing promises from the Government and sick and tired of hearing the Government say how it is going to do its best to improve the economic lot of women. The statistics which came out today show that women and children are sinking deeper an deeper into poverty. The Government cannot even come to grips with the simple questions of early childhood education and daycare.

A report came across the Table to the Government calling for massive structural changes in the way we deal with early childhood education. The response of the Government was to set up another study group and to name as the chairman of that study group the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin). When the Hon. Member for Lincoln was first elected, her office was quoted as saying that she was not interested in women's issues because women only made up 1.5 per cent of her riding in any event. This is the person the Government has appointed to chair a new task force on early childhood education.

The Government does not believe in daycare. The Government does not believe that there is a consensus among young men and women that if we are to allow women the opportunity to compete equally, we have to give them the social infrastructure that will permit them to get out into the market-place. Employment equity is just one tool to be used in trying to achieve equality.

No one on either side of the House has ever suggested that a good, strong employment equity Bill would close the wage gap between men and women immediately. That is simply not so. There are many other factors involved, including the education and socialization process and the question of the availability of daycare and support systems for men and women.

It is also fair to say that a strong employment equity Bill which called upon companies to implement mandatory affirmative action and contract compliance would, using the most conservative estimates, close the wage gap by 10 per cent to 15 per cent. This would not mean that the days of equal salaries for work of equal value across the board would be here. But if I were a woman working for a minimum wage in the Province of Ontario and trying to support a child and I were presented with a possibility of having my wages increased by 10 per cent to 15 per cent, I would hail the Government that had the guts to introduce such legislation. I would hail the Government that had the guts to tell companies not only that they will have to prepare plans but that they will not be able to keep those plans a secret in the vaults of their inner sanctums, that they are going to have to expose their plans to public scrutiny and to the scrutiny of the very target groups the Government is trying to address.

Unfortunately, the situation is that the Government showered promises upon the women of Canada during the election campaign. Now when the time comes to deliver on those promises, the Government is unprepared to do anything as simple as having this legislation cover the Government's own Departments. It is hard to imagine saying to private-sector employers that they have an obligation to report and that if they do not report they are subject to a fine of $50,000, but the Government is exempted and federal Departments are not covered by the same legislation. If you were in business, Mr. Speaker, would you be able to market that concept? Would you be able to tell your customers that you want certain laws to apply to your customers but you want to make sure that you are not covered by them?

What does the federal Government have to hide? What do Conservative Members have to hide? Is it simply that with the Nielsen cut-backs, those who are being moved out of the Public Service are primarily the women who have been the last hired and the first fired? The federal Government's plan to cut back includes the abolition of person-years, but most of the people who are going to be hurt by the Nielsen cut-backs and the so-called attrition or reduction in person-years in the federal civil service are in fact women. Therefore, Conservative Members are not prepared to subject themselves to the same scrutiny that they are prepared to impose upon companies with over 100 employees.

Those people who do not spend their days examining all federal legislation, and I suspect most Canadians fall into that category, have heard the Minister expound on what a wonderful thing this will be for the women of Canada, and they think that the Minister might be honest in her attempt to try to redress the imbalance that exists. However, there are four elements to this Bill at which we need to take a closer look. First, the Bill does not apply to federal Government employees. Second, it applies to companies on the federal scene with only 100 or more employees. Third, there is absolutely no enforcement mechanism for the action plans, and fourth, the action plans are on a voluntary basis, kept secret within the confines of the companies involved. Do we really believe that a secret action plan which is not subject to public scrutiny will mean a change in the employment situation for visible minorities, natives, the handicapped and women? I do not think so.

As was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East, the actual wording of the legislation is faulty. In a sense, current discriminatory practices with respect to employment will be institutionalized. I am referring to Clause 4(b) which calls upon companies to institute such positive practices that are at least proportionate to representation in the workforce. However, the practices these companies are required to activate as set out in the secret plans that will be kept in company vaults should be targeted not to the workforce but to the population.

For example, let us say that the visible minority portion of the workforce of Toronto is 10 per cent. It may be that 60 per cent or 70 per cent of visible minorities have totally dropped out and are no longer attached to the workforce. Those people will be ignored. The Bill calls upon the companies to set targets based upon the number of people currently in the workforce instead of setting targets based on the number of people in the population at large.

The native community is a good example of a group for which targets must be set, not based on the population that is currently attached to the labour force but on the population of the community at large. If we ignore those who have dropped out because they have lost hope and have gotten fed up with the system, then we are in a sense institutionalizing through targets the very discriminatory practices which have led thousands and indeed hundreds of thousands of peole to leave the workforce and find themselves on family benefits. All disabled persons in the country who currently receive benefits are not included in this program because they are not a part of the workforce. At the very least, the Government should include a clause which sets targets based on the number of people in the population at large and not specifically restricted to the number of people attached to the labour force.

[Translation]

In my opinion, the Government has decided not to proceed with the very good amendments introduced by my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) because it does not really believe in them. Mr. Speaker, if we really have independent Members in the House, in keeping with the new Government style advocated by the Government House Leader, I would like to give them an opportunity to vote independently and reject the Bill as it stands now, so I propose—

[English]

I would like to give private Members on all sides of the House an opportunity to vote on this issue. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi):

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and substituting the following:

"Bill C-62, An Act respecting employment equity, be not now read a third time, but that the Bill be referred back to a legislative committee for reconsideration of Clauses 3, 5 and 7 thereof."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I see no problem with the proposed motion moved by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and seconded by the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I was about to put questions to the Hon. Member as part of the 10-minute question period. Is that in order now?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow questions and comments.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the amendment which the Hon. Member put before the House would send the Bill back to committee for reconsideration of Clauses Nos. 3, 5 and 7.

Clause No. 3 is the interpretation clause which deals with, for example, whether or not federal Government Departments should be included in the Bill. I presume the reason she included Clause 3 is that she wants to proceed with an attempt to include federal Government Departments and, as she pointed out in her speech, to lower the floor for companies covered from 100 employees to 25 employees.

Clause 5 deals with action plans. Is it the Hon. Member's intention, in sending the Bill back to committee, to strike out that clause which indicates that the action plans should be kept secret in the vaults of the head offices of the companies?

Clause 7 deals with the sanction. In my remarks I argued that Clause 7 could be strengthened if the $50,000 fine for not moving ahead was applied to Clauses Nos. 4, 5 and 6. Would she elucidate, since she made her amendment near the end of her remarks, on whether that is what she hopes to do in committee?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take those questions in reverse order. Quite clearly Clause 7 refers to a fine only if the employer does not comply with Clause 6, that is, the obligation to report to the federal Government. It is the only obligation which is subject to a fine. Therefore, in a sense an employer could report as follows: "I have not done anything and 1986 has passed. I have reported and therefore I am not subject to a fine". We feel that that is wrong. By extending the sanction or the offence to Clauses Nos. 4, 5 and 6, we would place an obligation upon an employer, not only to report but also to develop an affirmative action plan within the context of the company which would hopefully be an open and accessible plan and, if not implemented, would be subject to some kind of enforcement. At the moment there is no enforcement except wherein it deals with the obligation to report.

Likewise, my concerns about Clause 5 deal not only with the fact that no fines are levied against companies which fail to comply with the clause, but also with the fact that the clause itself calls for an action plan which is to be kept secret. An action plan which is to be kept secret is in fact no action plan at all. Obviously we want it to be open and accessible so that it can be examined by committees of the House of Commons and examined by the involved target groups to see whether it is being carried out.

In respect to Clause 4, the employment practices at the moment are such that the Government is asking employers to set up plans in companies with only 100 or more employees and the federal Government is exempted. Obviously we feel that is wrong. My particular motion would permit the committee to re-examine the issue of the exemption of the federal Government to ensure that it is involved and to ensure that companies with fewer employees, for example 25 or more, might be covered by the legislation.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, First of all I have a question of clarification. Do I understand correctly that the amendment would apply to Clauses Nos. 3, 5 and 7 only?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, one could make it broader, but the amendment before the House at the moment would call for a re-examination of Clauses Nos. 4, 5 and 7 by the committee. Clause 4 restricts application to companies with 100 or more employees and exempts the federal Government. If the committee decided in its wisdom that it wanted to examine other issues, that would possibly be within the mandate of the committee. However, we specified those three areas because they were cited as the most heinous areas in the Bill.

Mr. McCurdy: I have a supplementary question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) on a point of order, and then the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. Baker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the motion before the House now will direct debate, would Your Honour rule on whether or not the motion applies to the entire Bill? I know certain people wish to restrict it to Clauses Nos. 3, 5 and 7, but I would argue that we are now examining the entire Bill—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I appreciate the Hon. Member's point of order. It is a very strict motion which deals with particular clauses only. I believe that clears up the matter.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the motion is that indeed it applies to Clauses Nos. 3, 5 and 7. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) indicated her concern in respect to Clause 5, which does not relate to an action plan in its totality but only to goals, and that it was objectionable because the plan was secret. If she is concerned about the fact that the report on Clause 5 is secret, that the goals will be secret except in so far as they will be retained and under certain circumstances made available to the Minister, why does her amendment not also apply to Clause 4? If the secrecy of Clause 5 is objectionable, clearly the fact that the action plan set out in Clause 4 is available to no one is just as important, if not more important than the secrecy attached to the report on Clause 5.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, at some point in the future I would be most happy to introduce another amendment dealing specifically with Clause 4. We discussed which clauses should be included with our procedural expert. We were advised that if we included a straight, blanket hoist motion, it might be ruled not in order. It is our intention to proceed at this moment with those particular clauses because they were cited by most of the involved groups as the areas within the Bill which were most despised. We would certainly be prepared to proceed with Clauses Nos. 4 and/or 2 and/or other clauses at another time. Obviously we want to give the Government every opportunity to change the thrust of the Bill.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I sat on the legislative committee. We sat for many hours and I believe we heard all the witnesses who wanted to testify before us. I guess what is bothering me here is the knowledge that the Hon. Member who moved the amendment was not present during those committee hearings and may not be aware of the reality that every idea she is placing on the table at this point was very carefully examined by the committee and was clearly rejected. When it reported to the House, the committee said that it had looked at those ideas. The testimony which is now before the House would indicate that the committee gave very thorough consideration to every one of those ideas and found them wanting. The committee was chaired by a member of the Hon. Member's Party. Is she saying that the chairmanship was not in order or was not good chairmanship? Is she saying that the composition of the committee was not good? Is she saying that the witnesses were inappropriate? What complaint does she have in terms of how the committee functioned?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) to reply, if she will do so quickly.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, obviously I have some concerns about the composition of the committee. It was made up of a majority of Tories who chose to ignore the representations of every single target group cited: women, visible minorities, native Canadians as well as the handicapped. They have all been ignored in this Bill. They are the ones who came forth with these recommendations. Had the membership of the committee been made up of a majority of Liberals and New Democrats, no doubt the amendments would have passed. Yes, I would like to throw most of the Tories off the committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.01 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ENERGY

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Government's energy policy is on the rocks. We have the worst of all worlds—low crude oil prices for producers, and high retail prices for consumers. Last year the Government promised hundreds of thousands of jobs and that energy would be the engine of growth for the Canadian economy. Today we see low oil prices for exploration and development in western Canada. Cut-backs of $3 billion to $4 billion are expected this year in exploration and development, a loss of 100,000 jobs to the Canadian economy. The loss is not only in western Canada but in communities like Sault Ste. Marie at Algoma Steel where 1,500 jobs will be lost due to the Government's policy on energy.

At the same time retail prices have dropped slowly, and much less than in the U.S.A. The ultimate insult to Canadians is that Petro-Canada is selling its gasoline to distributors in the U.S. for 7.5 cents per litre less than in Canada. Tory energy policy is the worst of all worlds.

MINES AND MINING

COMINCO LAY-OFFS IN TRAIL, B.C.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the West Kootenay region of British Columbia, especially the community of Trail, is staggering under an unemployment rate of more than 20 per cent. The major regional employer, Cominco, has laid off 500 employees this year alone in Trail and at its lead mine in Kimberley. The future of the area has been thrown into jeopardy by slumping would metal prices and by the inaction of both the provincial and federal Governments over the years. So great is the uncertainty surrounding the future of the Cominco operation and the future of the Trail region that home mortgages are unavailable in some instances.

While the federal Government has indicated a willingness to assist in modernizing Cominco's antiquated smelter, it has been unable to work out a co-operative arrangement with the provincial Government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised better federal-provincial co-operation. However, on this critical issue there has been very little co-operation in developing a strategy and rescue package. The people of the West Kootenays are calling for action by senior levels of Government, not simply promises of action.

WORLD COMMODITY SITUATION—FARMERS' NEED FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian farmer makes a tremendous contribution to Canada's balance of trade and its economic well-being. There are approximately 500,000 Canadians employed directly in agriculture, and approximately 2 million employed directly or indirectly in agriculture and food. Including the processing, wholesale, and retail sectors, food and agriculture account for more than a quarter of all the economic activity in Canada, and Canadian farmers are among the most efficient in the world.

This high productivity of our agri-food system means that Canadians, on average, spend less than 16 per cent of their income on food, the second lowest percentage in the world. However, Canadian farmers face an uncertain future because of the world agricultural commodity situation. The federal Government has done a great deal for agriculture, but there is still much to be done in light of the current crisis. For the sake of Canada, our farmers need and deserve the immediate attention and assistance of Government at all levels and, indeed, the support of all Canadians, rural and urban.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

BENEFITS DERIVED FROM INVESTMENT

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Larkin Kerwin, President of the National Research Council, recently highlighted the neglect of two generations on the status of science and technology in Canada. The result is that revenue and jobs that could have been available have gone to countries more technologically oriented than Canada. In 1985 Canada imported $12 billion more worth of high technology goods than we exported. We import 80 per cent of our machinery, 70 per cent of our transport equipment, 80 per cent of our scientific equipment, 80 per cent of our health equipment, and almost all our mining equipment. In the U.S. there are 19 technical persons per 1,000 manufacturing employees, in Japan there are 12, and in Canada there are only 4.

Investment in research and development will pay tremendous dividends. Last year's $70 million IRAP program will result in $1.5 billion in new sales, of which $420 million will be paid in federal and provincial taxes, and will result in 12,000 full-time jobs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

POULTRY INDUSTRY

KENTVILLE, N.S.—REBUILDING OF RESEARCH FACILITY ADVOCATED

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House the request for Government assistance from the Chicken Producers' Association of Nova Scotia. In June, 1985, a research building used to house a facility that developed better strains of poultry was destroyed by fire.

The $350,000 cost of reconstruction of a broiler breeder research facility at Kentville, Nova Scotia, is a minuscule amount when one considers that the wholesale value of the Canadian poultry meat sector is over $1 billion. Furthermore, the advances in feed efficiency, embryo survival rates, and increases in egg size have all led to annual revenue increases of many tens of millions of dollars for the Canadian poultry industry.

Quite simply, reconstruction of this particular facility would pay for itself many times over through increased efficiency and by assuring that Nova Scotia will continue to make its contribution to the billion dollar Canadian poultry industry.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, while there are continuing signs of the successful impact of our Government's policies, such as lower interest rates, less unemployment and increasing economic activity, our Government is pursuing its efforts to smooth the way for the private sector so that manufacturing and business can expand. A review has started of the excessive, obsolete, omnipresent, crushing and demoralizing body of regulations that business has to cope with.

On the basis of the Nielsen Report, the Standing Committees of the House will soon be making recommendations to the Parliament of Canada to rid business of the burden imposed by a Liberal bureaucracy.

Implementing the recommendations of the Nielsen Report will have a salutary effect on the $110 billion federal Budget, and our proposals for amendments to legislation will help business be more competitive on world markets.

TRADE

CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, a crucial vote may be taken in the U.S. Senate Finance Committee tomorrow on fast track free trade negotiations with Canada.

The forces of protectionism in the U.S. Congress have produced some 300 Bills in the past year, and there is a widely held view that the Reagan administration has dropped the ball on trade matters.

Canada's forestry industry contributed $26 billion to our economy last year, employed directly over 300,000 workers, and generated a net trade surplus in excess of $11 billion. We hold 35 per cent of the U.S. market in softwood lumber which is 72 per cent of our export, with a further 12 per cent to Europe and 6 per cent to Japan.

In the British Columbia Northwest we have a unique opportunity to retool our mills for markets outside the United States.

Spruce pine fir from British Columbia is recognized as the price-setting carburetor for North America. With respect to our largest freely traded commodity we hear screams from Congress for quotas, tariffs, about cartels, orderly marketing procedures, and so on.

We should do all we can to diversify into the Pacific Rim, European, and other markets, due to our vulnerability to growing U.S. protectionism.

THE MONARCHY

SIXTIETH BIRTHDAY OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special homage to a truly vibrant and magnificent lady on her sixtieth birthday. She has always had a reputation for congeniality and fairness toward all mankind.

This charming and forthright individual has set foot on Canadian soil 15 times in the past 35 years. She knows more about Canada than many of our own inhabitants, having been the special guest at a myriad of events from coast to coast.

This mother of four famous children, and grandmother of four, drives her own Land Rover, and can fire a gun with skill and precision. She is Commander-in-Chief of Britain's armed forces and Head of the Church of England.

As the ruler of 49 Commonwealth countries, she attends 400 engagements a year before the eyes of many thousands of grateful admirers.

She is the world's greatest and most beloved diplomat. On this, her sixtieth birthday, we send best wishes for a long and fruitful life.

God save the Queen! Long may she reign!

REDUCTION IN BANK RATE

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the U.S. Federal Reserve announced a one-half point drop in the bank rate, from 7 to 6.5 per cent, its lowest level since May 1978.

This development will bring about further reductions in Canada, where the bank rate has been declining in the last few weeks.

The reduction in the bank rate in the U.S. will certainly have an impact, since last Friday, the Bank of Canada already announced a further reduction in the bank rate, from 9.33 per cent to 9.23 per cent.

Furthermore, the Bank of Montreal has announced a one-quarter point reduction in all mortgage rates.

We have good reason to be optimistic, Mr. Speaker, and to believe that confidence is growing again in Canada after so many years of confrontation and provocation under the previous Liberal Government.

BIG RIDEAU LAKE—OPPOSITION TO HOUSEBOAT FLEET PROPOSAL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) should reject the application by Three Buoys Limited to put a fleet of 57 houseboats on Big Rideau Lake. At a time when development along the shore of Big Rideau Lake is carefully regulated because of a growing pollution problem, it is not acceptable to approve such an operation.

Residents and users of Big Rideau Lake do not want this development. Canadians in general reject overdevelopment in national parks. Whether mountains or waterways the same principles apply: overcrowding means less enjoyment of the amenities, and the likelihood that irreversible damage will be done to the environment. The Minister of the Environment has the authority in this case. He should listen to the people affected by this proposal and put an end to the uncertainty by rejecting the proposal itself.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, today is the first day of National Volunteer Week. Across Canada, special events and announcements will reflect the economic and social impact the volunteer sector has on our daily lives.

Mr. Speaker, hundreds of volunteers are working in various fields of social, cultural, economic and sports activity, helping the needy and supporting local groups.

Mr. Speaker, the volunteer concept is so important and so widespread that our society could not function normally were it to disappear.

I fervently hope that our Government will set up a special committee, to determine how to provide effective assistance and support for our volunteer organizations and to identify their special needs.

Finally, I want to offer my sincere thanks to all volunteers, and especially to those in my riding of Argenteuil—Papineau for their tireless dedication in our 53 municipalities.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, in February the regular price of gas in Montreal was 58.9 cents a litre, which represents an increase of one-half cent since January. In Boston, however, the price of gas over the same period was 40.2 cents a litre, representing a drop of 1.2 cents a litre since January.

Mr. Speaker, this means there is a 50 per cent difference between Boston and Montreal. In Boston, 40 cents a litre and in Montreal nearly 60 cents a litre.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATE INCREASES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, when consumers who use MasterCards issued by Royal Trust receive their April 28 bills, it is reported they will find their interest charges increased a full three-quarters of a percentage point. It is reported on May 1 the charges on Visa cards issued by the Royal Bank of Canada will rise to 18.6 per cent—this at a time when not only Canada, but the United States, France, and Japan have cut their interest rates.

If these companies have a good explanation for raising interest charges now when bank and prime rates are falling, let them tell Parliament and the people the reason for that. When the cost of institutional money is coming down why is the cost of consumer credit going up? When inflation has stabilized, why do credit costs have to soar?

INSURANCE

LIABILITY COVERAGE—INCREASED PREMIUMS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, liability insurance is not a luxury, it is a necessity, and yet municipalities, businesses, and individuals, after carrying liability insurance for years, are now "taking a chance" because of the ridiculously exorbitant premiums.

One reason is the trend in Canada toward the high court judgments in the U.S.A., like the one awarded a thief for several thousand dollars when he broke his back committing a felony. Another is the greed of the overseas reinsurers who have made plenty through the years and are now insisting on sky-high premiums. The Canadian insurance industry, including the local agents, is caught in the squeeze.

I know the law of Tort places this matter under provincial jurisdiction, but it is so essential that I believe the federal Government can show leadership by co-ordinating the provincial efforts to provide liability insurance at sensible prices and to endeavour to secure more Canadian owned reinsurers.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FORTHCOMING U.S. SENATE COMMITTEE VOTE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. It arises out of the U.S. Senate vote tomorrow on the free trade issue.

An Hon. Member: Here he is.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will then direct my question to the Prime Minister. It seems quite clear that the American administration is negotiating feverishly with key Members of the U.S. Senate prior to the vote tomorrow, if it takes place, on the free trade issue between Canada and the United States. Has the Prime Minister been on the telephone recently with the President of the United States about this issue? What concessions is the U.S. administration planning in order to entice those Senators to vote in favour of the fast track? And would the Prime Minister be good enough to inform the House what those concessions might be?

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I will change the subject. There have been no conversations between the President of the United States and our Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister be having conversations with his provincial counterparts to establish their position in the talks? Last week, he attacked the provincial premiers on the subject of trade barriers. Does he intend to meet his provincial counterparts personally, and fairly soon, to clarify their situation in the trade talks with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not attack the provincial premiers last week. I invited them to eliminate trade barriers at the national and interprovincial levels.

In fact, I was more or less going back to what Premier Peterson said at the First Ministers' Conference in Halifax, where he stated, and rightly so, that the provinces had an obligation to take the initiative in eliminating trade barriers between the provinces and between individuals here in Canada.

I therefore insisted on this phrase when I asked the provinces to make this unilateral gesture before trade talks with the Americans or at the GATT level. And I think it would be a good thing for the Canadian people.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, because these negotiations are going on behind closed doors between our Government and the United States and the federal Government vis-à-vis the provinces, would the Prime Minister consult with his colleague, the Government House Leader, so that we could have an early full parliamentary debate on the whole state of play with respect to these negotiations with the United States?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I will wait for the applause to die down.

An Hon. Member: The scattered applause.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will talk to the Government House Leader as soon as I see him and put in a word for an Opposition Day on this important subject.

IMMIGRATION

RUSSIAN ARMY DEFECTORS IN AFGHANISTAN

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I will direct my question to the Minister of State for External Affairs. It concerns the fate of six Soviets who defected and who are now prisoners of war in Afghanistan. In October, 1984, the Conservative Government agreed to and authorized a rescue mission which was shamefully bungled and then subsequently cancelled, thus placing their lives in greater jeopardy. Why was this mission allowed to be so mismanaged? And who in the Government, after granting the approval, called the shot to abort the mission?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me thank the Hon. Member for his welcome back to the House of Commons. I have seen the news reports in the Montreal Gazette. I will not comment on all of them. I will just talk about the facts. The facts are that the Government of Canada has been working very vigorously, using every national and international instrument at our disposal, to try to come to the aid of those individuals.

If the people cited in the article in the Montreal Gazette have a line of contact we do not have, I would be most pleased to meet with them and see if, in collaboration, we can help those individuals whom they have met to come to freedom.

REQUEST FOR ADMISSION TO CANADA

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is amazing that in the delay of almost two years in this life and death situation humanitarian concerns have not predominated.

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs give us an assurance today, without further delay, that he will send his officials to Afghanistan armed with ministerial permits, and lift these six courageous men out of that country immediately? A team of reporters has established contact with them; they seek political refugee status in Canada.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like most Members of the House—and I am sure like the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition—I wish the world were that simple. It is not. In light of the fact that there appears to have been a contact made by some Canadians, something we were not able to make following all national and international channels, I have said that I would be most pleased, as would my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, to meet with those Canadians to see if there is some practical way in which we can act together in the humanitarian cause of bringing them to freedom.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FORTHCOMING U.S. SENATE COMMITTEE VOTE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are deeply concerned about reports from Washington that President Reagan may promise concessions to the U.S. Senate committee to win his free trade vote tomorrow. My question is for the Prime Minister. In these circumstances of concern why has the Prime Minister not communicated directly with the President to discuss this urgent issue? Why has he not been prepared to put very clearly to the President a message that no concessions must be given that will harm our country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take the last part of the Hon. Member's question first. That view was put forward many times and accepted by the President of the United States which is why, as my hon. friend will no doubt acknowledge, the President of the United States said in late March that, as far as his administration was concerned, any talks with Canada would begin without conditions precedent and as a free and clear launch.

With regard to the other question raised by the Hon. Member, for the moment this is an internal American matter. Our position has been made abundantly clear. We will not trade lumber, potatoes or fish against any advantage to secure a vote tomorrow. We are a sovereign nation, and not a bunch of mendicants as the NDP would suggest.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we have never made a suggestion of that kind. We have suggested the contrary.

My supplementary question is the following. If we face such a crucial potential vote in the Senate, as we clearly do, why has the Prime Minister not seen fit to get in touch with his American friend, President Reagan, to discuss this issue and to try to reach some conclusion which will satisfy Canadians and avoid concessions which the President himself seems to be talking about, according to reports?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has this thing backwards. Our responsibility is to deal with the administration of the United States which was elected by the people of the United States. That is the one that is in place. We have dealt with it. Beginning on September 26, in this House, we received a response on behalf of the administration by the President of the United States in which he enthusiastically endorsed the notion of negotiations between our two peoples without preconditions, without conditions precedent of any kind—a clean launch. That is clear. That is our responsibility.

It now falls into the domain of the United States and its internal parliamentary system for the President of the United States to secure the appropriate approvals of congressional committees. He is charged, under the Constitution and by custom, with doing that, and that is his responsibility. The administration has responded. We have responded. Now we will see if the United States Senate or members thereof view this trade matter with the same degree of importance as we do.

COMMUNICATIONS WITH U.S. ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, surely the Prime Minister cannot simply sit back and let this process go on as if it were some kind of merry-go-round that is unimportant to him, given his commitment to this policy in the past. Why has he not communicated directly with the American administration and made it very clear that concessions that will harm this country cannot be given? Why has there been no direct communication at such a crucial time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a shadow must have a very difficult time in a fight with my hon. friend. The fact of the matter is that we are not sitting back. We have not done anything that we view as unimportant. We have already made the case. That case was accepted by the President of the United States and the Secretary—

Mr. Orlikow: But not by the Congress.

Mr. Mulroney: If my hon. friend from Winnipeg would allow me to finish, I would be happy to try. Our obligation is not to form a queue in Senators' offices. Members of the NDP are used to that but we will not do that. We are a sovereign nation. We made a deal with the President of the United States and we expect the United States to live up to it.

CANADIAN EMBASSY ACTIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister who has just given his own interesting version of the way the U.S. Constitution works. Does the Prime Minister now say that no Canadian officials representing our Government at the Embassy in Washington are to make contact with U.S. Senators or Congressmen? Has he given explicit orders that should be no contact whatsoever between embassy officials and officials of the Congress? Is that what the Prime Minister is now saying?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I doubt if you would see a more blatant illustration of distortion and dishonesty than that which has been put forward. I said no such thing. I said that I had not spoken to the President of the United States, but I did not in any way utter any of the distortions mentioned by my hon. friend.

DIPLOMATIC CONTACTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister has just added a second distortion to his first one. In response to previous questions he said that he did not see any interference by this Government in the affairs of the United States Government. Does that statement that he made in answer to the Leader of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party spokesman mean that there has been no contact whatsoever by Canadian officials or embassy representatives with Members of Congress, or has he once again contradicted himself like he does on a daily basis?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this gets progressively more pathetic. The Hon. Member was in Washington last week with his senior colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount, in regard to this matter. He knows full well that there is an ongoing operation, occurring every day—

Mr. Axworthy: So you're interefering in their affairs then? You said you weren't.

Mr. Mulroney: If my hon. friend believes that the ongoing operations of the Canadian Embassy in Washington are an interference in the affairs of the United States or the Congress, then he has placed a brand new interpretation on constitutional developments in the United States.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I think he is aware that 72 per cent of Canada's exported softwood lumber goes to the United States where we now hold 35 per cent of the market, and that we have had unhindered free trade in softwood lumber with the United States for the past 40 years. I would like to learn from the Prime Minister whether or not the Government of the United States has requested any specific concessions from Canada on softwood lumber exports in the past two weeks.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Will he give the House his word that no concessions have been given, or will be given on the issue of softwood lumber, to the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the gentleman speaks for a Party which is opposed to freer trade with the United States. He is now trying to wrest NDP assurances. They cannot have it both ways. I know the NDP try it every day. They cannot have it both ways; they are opposed to freer trade with the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I have indicated in Washington, and in other circumstances, that we will not allow the softwood lumber issue to be made a bargaining chip in these discussions, and that has been made clear.

Oral Questions

RUSSIAN ARMY DEFECTORS IN AFGHANISTAN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He has just finished telling the House that he did everything in his power to expedite the arrival in Canada of the six Russian refugees from Afghanistan. If he has done everything in his power, why is it that last year Canada only accepted as immigrants forty of the four million refugees who have been victimized by the Soviet invasian of Afghanistan?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member with a developing adeptness is changing the subject. The question asked by her colleague earlier had to do with six individuals who are special cases. I think the special nature of those cases is known to the Hon. Member. We have been trying, using literally every instrument available to us, to get in contact with them. If a new way has been found to get in contact with them, certainly I would welcome, as would my colleague Ministers, the co-operation of those Canadians who claim that contact, to see if there is some way in which we can bring those people to freedom.

IMMIGRATION FROM SOVIET BLOC COUNTRIES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to believe that two reporters from the Kingston Whig-Standard succeeded in making contact last week when the Canadian Government could not. The Government of Pakistan is prepared to co-operate. The Afghan rebels are prepared to co-operate. The only people who are not co-operating are the Canadian Government and the Department of External Affairs. Since the Government has taken power, there has been a reduction in immigration to Canada from every Soviet dominated and East Bloc country. Why has there been this reduction, when he talks about his Government's co-operation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Minister responsible for immigration that the Hon. Member is wrong as usual and that the levels of immigration are up. With regard to her earlier preamble, she has created facts on the floor of the House of Commons which are not the case. What is germane here is whether or not there has now been discovered by some Canadians an instrument which will allow us to bring those six individuals to freedom. We have not found one yet. If they have found one, we are anxious to work with them, and I invite them to join in consultation with us.

Oral Questions

STEEL EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Would he inform us what action the Government is proposing to take to protect Canadian steel companies, specifically Ipsco, from countervail duties which the U.S. Commerce Department recommended against certain Canadian steel products? As well, will he assure us that the Canadian Government will assist Canadian steel companies in the fight against pending anti-dumping measures in the United States?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Member that I am well aware of the problems which the steel industry is suffering these days, particularly since I have a steel industry in my own riding. We worked very closely with the industry in respect of the recent ruling in the United States. There has yet to be an injury ruling, and it is expected by the end of May. Again we are working closely with the industry in respect of that finding. I can also tell the Hon. Member that, this afternoon, officials of Ipsco are meeting with my officials to discuss these various problems and the upcoming hearings.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. Could he assure us that the Canadian Government will in no way cave in to the U.S. interests seeking to tie this issue to any free trade discussion as a precondition?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can repeat what the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I have already said, that there are no preconditions to these talks which we hope to initiate with the United States. That just is not there. We are doing everything we can to assist the steel industry with the difficult problems which it is presently facing.

AIRPORTS

FIREFIGHTERS' IMMINENT STRIKE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. At midnight, 1,400 firefighters at airports across the country will go on strike. What emergency measures have been taken by the Minister to ensure that the safety of the travelling public will not be jeopardized by this strike?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, these positions are designated and it is illegal for them to strike. In the event that there are any disruptions, adequate contingency plans will be in place.

INQUIRY WHY FIREFIGHTERS HAVE NOT HAD WORK CONTRACT FOR LENGTHY PERIOD OF TIME

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. What justification does the Minister have for the fact that these firefighters have not had a contract since November 1984, and that apparently, they are being paid about $10,000 less than their counterparts working at municipalities near our airports?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, this is a matter for negotiation between the firefighters' union and the Treasury Board. Those negotiations have been going on, and I would hope they would be able to reach a satisfactory conclusion soon.

THREATENED USE OF SUBSIDIES TO SELL UNITED STATES WHEAT TO SYRIA

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns an important western issue. Late last week the American Government announced that it was prepared to use the huge subsidies in the American Farm Bill to try to promote the sale of 700,000 tonnes of wheat to Syria. Is the Prime Minister aware that, by using the massive subsidies in the U.S. Farm Bill, the Americans are poised to capture a very important traditional wheat market that was enjoyed by Canadian farmers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will comment on this particular issue because it came up at the OECD meetings last week in Paris. At that time I raised the matter of a potential trade war in the grains markets as a result of actions being taken by the United States and by eastern and western Europe. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and I had an opportunity to discuss it with a number of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Trade, and Finance who were at the meetings. It is a matter which we expressed with a good deal of vigour because we are very concerned about the outcome. It is still early days to see how it might develop in the international discussions, but they are certainly aware of the point of view taken by Canada.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. Since the sale would represent the entire Syrian wheat market for one year, I should like to ask the Minister whether he received a commitment from the United States and, if not, what he plans to do about it.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not raise it in the context of a specific deal but in the context of the broader issue which has arisen as a result of the actions taken by the Americans and by members of the European Community. It was in that context that we raised it at the broad meetings as well as in individual meetings with Ministers.

EFFECT OF LOWER OIL PRICES ON SMALL COMPANIES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. With lower interest rates and falling commodity prices, there is a real risk that two-thirds of our smaller oil companies could be gobbled up by stronger multinational companies which control the other third. Does the Minister share this concern, and will our target of 50 per cent Canadian ownership be in jeopardy?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, yes, I have indicated before that we share the concern noted by the Hon. Member. We have increased our levels of Canadianization in the oil and gas industry. We have not moved away from our target. Our policies on acquisitions do not allow the acquisition of Canadian companies unless they are in financial distress. I am encouraged by the fact that smaller Canadian companies are going through merger processes and amalgamations themselves to build a stronger base from which to work in the future.

PROSECUTION OF JOURNALIST FOR AIRPORT ACTIVITIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Does the Minister feel that it is in the public interest for Bertrand de la Grange, a journalist, to be prosecuted for showing the inadequacy of the security systems at the airports at Mirabel and Dorval? Doesn't the Minister think that Mr. de la Grange should be given the Order of Canada for finally getting the Minister of Transport to get serious about security?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the allegation is that the person in question violated the law. For whatever reason hardly matters, that would only go to the matter of sentencing. Having allegedly violated the law, surely some action should be taken.

REQUEST FOR STAY OF PROSECUTION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): May I draw the Minister's attention, Mr. Speaker, to Section 508 of the Criminal Code which gives him the authority to stay prosecutions in proper cases. Let me ask the Minister of Justice whether he won't exercise the power he has to stay the prosecution, especially bearing in mind that this investigation was started by the RCMP and turned over afterwards to local police.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has some quite unusual suggestions today. I will consider the Order of Canada recommendation first.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POTENTIAL UNITED STATES WHEAT SALE TO SYRIA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In his response to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, the Minister of Finance mentioned that the Government had not specificially raised the potential U.S. wheat sale to Syria. I ask again what is the Government going to do to protect the traditional Canadian market for Canadian wheat going to Syria?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know the matter was raised, but I will be happy to raise it with all of the precision that is required and report to my hon. friend as soon as I can.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be confusion between the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister as to whether the issue was raised with regard to the specific deal. The American program was instigated to regain traditional American markets—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a preamble. Just a question.

Mr. Murphy: What is the Canadian Government going to do when the Americans are not regaining their traditional markets but are taking our traditional markets?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Minister of Finance made clear he had registered the disapproval of the Government of Canada with regard to the general issue. I have just undertaken to raise the specific problem within those parameters and will report to the House and my hon. friend.

MARKETING OF ALFALFA PELLETS

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Farmers Alfalfa Products Limited of Dauphin, Manitoba, a farmers' co-operative that has taken over management of the alfalfa processing plant, has applied for an agreement under the Co-operative Marketing Act to market alfalfa pellets. Can the Minister assure the farmers involved in this new venture that the application is being processed as quickly as possible?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest and his continuing representation on behalf of the producers in his province. I am sure the Member can take some satisfaction from the fact that the ongoing meetings between the particular association and the appropriate officials in my Department are going well.

There are four fairly straightforward criteria that have to be met. The information I have should not create a problem for the association to meet the criteria, and hopefully we will be in a position to give a positive response in the very near future.

INCREASE IN JAPANESE STEEL IMPORTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister knows that the Government's industrial and energy policy is causing the lay-off of 1,500 people at Algoma Steel in Sault Ste. Marie and threatens to shut down the mining operations at Wawa.

Why has the Government, in view of this difficulty, allowed the Japanese steel producers to increase their exports of steel tubing to Canada by 300 per cent since last August, and to dump 67,000 tonnes of steel onto the Canadian market? When is the Government going to protect the jobs of Canadian steelworkers?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that the Government is well aware of that problem—

Mr. Deans: You are aware of everything.

Mr. Kelleher: —and we have taken action.

Mr. Deans: That is better.

Mr. Kelleher: And we are continuing to take action.

Mr. Deans: Did they take their steel back?

Mr. Fulton: What did you do, write a memorandum?

Mr. Kelleher: When Hon. Members are prepared to listen, I am prepared to continue, Mr. Speaker.

We have been meeting on a regular basis with the chief executive officers of the steel industry. Indeed our last meeting was two weeks ago. We just received from them this past Friday an indication of the action they would like us to take. We are presently preparing the necessary recommendations. I will be discussing those with my colleagues and I hope action will be forthcoming very shortly.

FAST TRACK MONITORING SYSTEM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Last July I wrote to the Minister and asked him when he would put in place a fast track monitoring system for steel imports so that Canadian steel producers could take action under the anti-dumping provisions of our law.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Foster: When is he going to put that fast track system in place?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that is the very thing we are looking at now. We hope to make recommendations in that regard very shortly, which will accomplish what the Hon. Member is requesting.

CALCULATION OF PENSION AS INCOME—EFFECT ON EARLY RETIREES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am sure the Minister is well aware of the great hardship being created for early retirees, particularly ex-Armed Services personnel, in light of the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. Will the Minister now accept her responsibility under that Act and rescind that iniquitous change in the Unemployment Insurance Act which came into effect in January, 1986?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have said to the Hon. Member on a number of occasions and to the House, this change in regulations was first announced in November, 1984.

There was a year's lead time given for its implementation. It came into effect on January 5, 1986, as the Hon. Member will know. As he also knows, the whole issue has been referred to the Forget Commission to make recommendations to the Government—

Mr. Orlikow: Why was that necessary?

Miss MacDonald: —to look at the question of premiums, who pays them and under what conditions, and we are waiting for those recommendations.

Mr. Fulton: The Forget Commission is not worth a damn.

REFERRAL TO FORGET COMMISSION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell the House why the matter was referred to the Forget Commission after the decision was made to make the change?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the change was announced on November 8, 1984, long before the Forget Commission was set up.

UNITED STATES-EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The U.S. Agriculture Secretary, Richard Lyng, stated yesterday, according to The New York Times, that he will be meeting shortly to discuss the current agricultural trade war with European Common Market officials. Will Canadian Ministers be involved in these talks, and will they be asking for changes in the U.S. Farm Bill and the European subsidy program which are so damaging to the Canadian agricultural sector?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to earlier exchanges in the Question Period, and really I do not see much difference in the information contained in the Hon. Member's question from information contained in previous questions either from his own Party or from the New Democratic Party. I think the Member has had the answers from the Minister of Finance. In addition to that, the Prime Minister is very knowledgeable of the situation that exists.

All appropriate means will be taken in the interest of Canadian agriculture. That has been the case with this Government and will continue to be in the future.

POSSIBLE CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, this meeting is going to be held in Canada. Will Canadian representatives be there, and if so will they be acting to protect our markets, such as the Portuguese market and the Spanish market, particularly in view of the fact they are joining the EEC and there are half a million tonnes of feed grain involved? Will you be there or won't you?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to take the time to examine the record, he will see that Ministers of the Government are always in the appropriate and proper places in the interests of Canadian agriculture—

Mr. Boudria: Who is Charlie Mayer?

Mr. Wise: —not only here in Canada but, as has been demonstrated very clearly by the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and, indeed, the Minister for International Trade, in the international market-place.

REQUEST FOR COVERAGE EXTENSION TO PART-TIME WORKERS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment. Recent studies confirm the growing trend of employers to replace full-time jobs with low-paying part-time jobs, and most of these part-time jobs are held by women. Will the Minister personally support extending unemployment insurance to all part-time workers since 44 per cent of these workers are now ineligible and many have families to support?

• (1450)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I know that members of the Press Gallery are aware of the number of new jobs which have been created in Canada since we took office.

Mr. Deans: What has that to do with it?

Miss MacDonald: I want to assure Members of the House and others that, of the jobs which have been created in Canada, 79 per cent are full-time jobs. That is what is critical, that 79 per cent of the new jobs in Canada are full-time.

The figures not only show that a tremendous number of full-time jobs are being created, but also that the trend is improving. In 1980, 29 per cent of the jobs were part-time.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Miss MacDonald: In 1981, 32 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I trust that the Press Gallery also realizes that the Minister did not answer the question.

WOMEN WORKERS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, will the 21 per cent of workers who are part-time, many of whom are women, be covered by unemployment insurance? What is the Minister going to do about complete unemployment insurance benefits for part-time workers?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member would be standing to say what a benefit she thought it was that, for the first time, training allowances under the programs of CEIC have been extended to part-time workers. This is a tremendous benefit, particularly to women who are the heads of single parent families.

Mr. Deans: Will they get unemployment insurance?

Miss MacDonald: That certainly is a very good step in the right direction.

POSSIBLE IMPOSITION OF UNITED STATES CUSTOMS USER FEES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is with regard to proposals before the United States Houses for the possible implementation of customs user fees for entrance into the United States. Has the Minister discussed this possibility with American officials? These fees could have a serious adverse impact on trade relations between our nations.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, those matters have been discussed extensively with U.S. officials, most recently by my colleague, the Minister of International Trade. We have made the case that the implementation of the fees proposed would have a disproportionate negative effect upon Canadians. Our ministerial consultations will continue. In addition to that, we have instructed the Embassy in Washington to be in touch with U.S. officials, both to seek a more reasonable fee regime if the law is to be passed, and to seek some guarantees that procedures will be followed which will minimize delays at the border.

EFFECT OF BUDGET MEASURES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and is with regard to last week's Conference Board report which confirmed our prediction that the budget tax increases would hurt the economy by reducing consumer spending. Why is the Minister still satisfied with his strategy of taxing away income which would otherwise contribute to economic growth?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is well aware that the broad strategy of the recent Budget, as well as that of the previous Budget and the economic statement, is to rely to the extent of 70 per cent on expenditure reductions, while tax increases amount to only 30 per cent of the deficit reduction measures. That is the broad strategy which we have followed, and I think it is the proper strategy to be following.

PERSONAL TAX INCREASES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, sales tax and other tax increases will amount to a 27 per cent personal tax increase over the next two years. Will the Minister assure Canadians that he is not going to pile on further personal taxes to deal with the expected shortfall as a result of lost oil revenues?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have addressed this question in the House before. The Member is correct that there will be a reduction in direct revenues in the energy industry. However, there is also an offset with the reduction of interest rates which is taking place which will reduce our interest costs. There is a balance between these two items and I, therefore, do not see that there is any reason for us to address this question.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

OWNERSHIP CONCENTRATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Due to the takeover of Hiram Walker by Gulf, Canadians will once again be watching as more and more control of the Canadian economy falls into the hands of seven families. Does the Minister think it is right for a country like Canada to have so much of its economic power concentrated in the hands of seven families?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the question.

Mr. Blaikie: It was for the Minister of Finance. He was listening. Why doesn't he answer?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my colleague was obviously having a private conversation with his seatmate. The specific question put to me by the Hon. Member is not within my realm of responsibility. I think the Hon. Member realizes that.

EFFECT OF OWNERSHIP CONCENTRATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs explain to the House the benefit which accrues to Canadians when so much of the Canadian economy is held by seven families in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, last December we tabled a number of amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, providing mechanisms that will enable the Director to examine the kind of transactions mentioned by my hon. colleague.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT INQUIRY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for International Trade. Last Friday it was revealed that a study on the Auto Pact prepared for the Government by a firm of consultants concluded that any alterations in the pact through comprehensive trade negotiations with the United States would threaten Canadian jobs and undermine the pact. Will the Minister say right here and now, clearly and unequivocally, that he accepts the findings of that study, and that, under no circumstances, will the Auto Pact be on the table in comprehensive trade discussions with the United States?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, in order to prepare for these discussions we have commissioned a number of reports. As a matter of fact, we made public the fact that the report has been obtained. It contains the opinion of the writer. The Government has not acted on that report. When our negotiating position has been confirmed, we will act in a manner which is consistent with, and in the best interests of, all Canadians.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, did American special trade representative Yeutter not tell the Minister in Ottawa last December: "I do not preclude alterations in the Auto Pact as a result of comprehensive negotiations"? Why will the Minister not say clearly and unequivocally today that he does preclude such alterations, and that the Auto Pact will not be on the table in any comprehensive trade negotiations with the United States? Does he not realize that by his equivocation and silence he is telling the country he intends that the pact be on the table?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please!

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has a selective memory. When Mr. Yeutter was here he went on to say that, in his opinion, the Auto Pact was working very well for both countries and he did not have any intention of putting it on the table. People should remember that. I replied at the time that the Auto Pact was indeed working very well for both countries. If something is working well, you do not try to fix it.

SALE OF HIRAM WALKER TO OLYMPIA & YORK—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Two days from now, it seems Olympia & York will buy Hiram Walker. Since these two big corporations have enormous investments in the energy sector, could the Minister give the House the assurance that either he or his senior officials have already examined the takeover plan and concluded that the transaction will not have an undesirable impact on the energy sector?

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is too long.

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes, the Director is aware of the proposed takeover, and it is his responsibility to examine the impact on competition such a transaction will have. That is what he intends to do, and if he has any reason to believe that the law has been infringed, he will of course start an investigation.

POINTS OF ORDER

IMASCO STATUS—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) gave me notice that she wished to raise a point of order.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On Friday, April 18, in response to a question from the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), I may have unintentionally mislead the House. I thank him for bringing it to my attention privately.

At that time I stated that Imasco was classified as a Canadian company under FIRA and Investment Canada. I would like to say for the record that Imasco is deemed to have Canadian status under Investment Canada but no similar status had been granted by FIRA.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On Friday last, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) raised the question of the application of Standing Order 99(2) and alleged that the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean) had not met the requirements of the Standing Orders in not providing a comprehensive response to the fifth and sixth reports of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

The Chair has had the opportunity to review the responses of the Minister which were filed with the Clerk of the House on March 7, 1986 and April 18, 1986. The Hon. Member for Spadina and other Hon. Members will understand that the Chair would be in a very difficult position were it to be called upon to rule on the quality of Government responses, as it is in similar difficulty ruling on the quality of questions or answers during Question Period. The Hon. Member for Spadina is certainly entitled to disagree with the responses, if that is his view, and he has other options and procedures available to him if he chooses.

As far as the Chair is concerned, the terms of Standing Order 99(2) have been met in this case and the Chair ought not to intervene, except on the strictest procedural grounds.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration), that Bill C-62, An Act respecting employment equity, be read the third time and passed; and on the amendment (Ms. Copps) (p. 12465).

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is as follows—

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is now in some difficulty.

Mr. Allmand: There was a lot of noise and I thought the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) still had the floor. I know there were other people who wanted to speak on this amendment, and if they won't, I will.

Mr. Speaker: I think the House knows that the Chair is always in difficulty right after Question Period because there is a lot of noise. This would be a good time to remind the House that the whole procedure would be simplified if the House came to order as quickly as possible after Question Period. Under the circumstances, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) on debate.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to have the floor again so quickly but I will be glad to speak.

Since I spoke this morning on the principal motion for third reading, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) made an amendment to send the Bill back to a legislative committee for reconsideration of Clause 3, Clause 5 and Clause 7 of the Bill. While most clauses of the Bill are important, those three are the key to the enforcement of affirmative action and employment equity. Furthermore, among those three clauses I suggest that Clause 7 is the most important.

As it now stands, Clause 7 provides for a penalty of $50,000 to employers who fail to report pursuant to Clause 6 of the Bill. That, in effect, amounts to no penalty whatsoever for those who do not make progress on the implementation of employment equity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I am trying to hear the Hon. Member's speech. Thank you.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, Clause 7 of the Bill applies a penalty only to those who fail to report to the Minister. They are simply required to report on the composition of their labour force with respect to the designated groups.

That Clause does not apply any penalty to those who do not comply with Clause 4 or Clause 5 of the Bill. Those two clauses are of more importance to the advancement of employment equity.

Clause 4 is an integral part of the Bill because it requires employers to implement employment equity through several proposed means. While it obliges employers to do something about employment equity, it provides for no penalty if no action is taken.

Clause 5 was included in the Bill since the committee stage. It requires employers to prepare action plans with goals and timetables for employment equity. However, if action plans are not prepared as required by Clause 5, there is no penalty.

During the committee stage, and the report stage in the House, we attempted to amend Clause 7 so that the sanction in that clause would not only apply to those employers who failed to comply with Clause 6, but also to those who failed to comply with Clause 4 and Clause 5. If that penalty clause applied to employers who failed to comply with Clauses 4, 5 and 6, then I believe this would be a Bill of substance that would be enforceable and meaningful to the target groups. Therefore, my colleague from Hamilton East moved that the Bill be sent back to committee for reconsideration of Clause 7 so that witnesses would again have a chance to convince the Government that this clause should apply to Clauses 4 and 5 as well as Clause 6. One continues to hope that such steps will be taken.

The Hon. Member also moved that the Bill be returned to committee for reconsideration of Clause 3 and Clause 5.

Clause 3 is a definition section of the Bill. It defines an employer as one who has 100 or more employees. We have argued time and again that that floor level of 100 employees is too high because it excludes many federally regulated Canadian firms with less than 100 employees.

I pointed out this morning that affirmative action legislation in the United States includes all firms with 15 or more employees. I tried to amend this Bill in committee so as to reduce the level of 100 employees to 25 employees, thereby not even going as far as the American legislation. Witnesses before the committee suggested that 25 employees was a reasonable number on which to make a judgment on affirmative action or employment equity. However, the Government and the Parliamentary Secretary would not listen to any arguments and insisted on keeping the level at 100 employees.

As a matter of fact, that stipulation is not even consistent with our Canadian labour legislation because the Canada Labour Code defines an employer as one with five or more employees. We believe it is unacceptable that the definition would suddenly jump to 100 employees according to this Bill. If the Bill is sent back to committee, we hope that witnesses representing the target groups and others will convince the Government that 100 is too high. The other part of Clause 3 which requires amendment, and which we have been trying to amend, is that part of Clause 3 which exempts federal Government employees from coverage under the legislation. Again, we have argued that Treasury Board guidelines are not enough. If we are to have legislation covering the business sector with respect to affirmative action employment equity, then we should at least have that same legislation cover federal government employees. It is inconsistent and illogical to lay legislation on the private sector, but to exempt the Government sector and allow it to be covered by guidelines and orders-in-council which can be changed at any time without notice and without reference to the House of Commons.

The reason for referring back to Clause 5 of the legislation is that Clause 5 is a new clause which was agreed to in committee, and it shows that the Government from time to time will listen to argument and will accept amendments that are proposed. I suppose on that occasion they were intently listening and saw the good sense in the arguments that were put forward. They accepted an amendment to require employers to prepare action plans with goals and targets for employment equity. That was good, but then they added a second subsection to that new Clause 5 which said that those new action plans should be kept at the head office of the employer, wherever that may be in Canada, and should be kept there for three years. In other words, there was no obligation to communicate those action plans on targets and goals to the employees of the firms, to the target groups; the disabled, the native people, the women's groups and the visible minorities. There was no obligation to inform these employees of the action plans, and there was no obligation to forward the action plan to the Canadian Human Rights Commission, which is supposed to have some responsibility in enforcing this legislation.

We have already tried to knock out that subsection which says that the action plan should be kept at the head office of the employer, wherever that may be in Canada, and to replace it with a section which would say that the action plan should be communicated to the employees of the firms in question, to the Canadian Human Rights Commission, and to the representatives of the designated groups which are to be assisted by this legislation.

I spent a good deal of time this morning explaining why not only I and members of my Party thought this legislation was inadequate, but why it was felt to be inadequate by a large number of associations which appeared before the parliamentary committee. They all said this legislation was unacceptable unless there were some substantial amendments made to it. Those amendments have not been made. The legislation is still more rhetoric than action oriented. It will not effectively put into place mandatory employment equity programs. It will not do the job. Every independent group that has looked at it says the same thing.

The Minister this morning said that what she wanted was action and that this legislation represented action. Nobody believes her when she says that. If she would do a few simple things with the legislation then she might gain some credibility, but not by simply saying that this legislation will do this, and will do that, because when you look at the provisions of the Bill you see that that is not the case. Maybe she believes that nobody reads the Bill, that they are simply going to listen to her speeches and those of her colleagues, that they will believe her when she says this Bill brings about enforceable employment equity. It does not do that. It requires further amendment.

I wish the Government would, for once, listen, not only to the Members of this House, but to the members of the public who represent those designated groups, and allow the Bill to be sent back to committee for further examination of those clauses. I am sure if the Government allowed the Bill to be sent back where the committee could hear further witnesses on this subject, the committee would have the opportunity to make some very key amendments to those sections to which I referred, and we would then end up with a much better Bill, one of which we in this House could all be proud.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. McCurdy: May I ask the previous speaker, in consideration of the amendment that was introduced by the Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), to indicate why Clause 4 is excluded from the amendment for reference to committee. Surely it is clear that both Clauses 4 and 5 together constitute the action plan, because one consists of the process, that is Clause 4, and Clause 5 describes the definition of goals that are necessary in order for the process to be successful. Let me repeat the question. May we have an explanation of why Clause 4 was not included in the reference?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member at the end of his remarks meant to ask why Clause 4 is not included in the reference. He makes a good point. Clause 4 is an extremely important clause in the Bill, but we were advised that if we were to put a reasoned amendment before the House we could not refer the entire Bill back to committee, so we picked out what we believed to be three important clauses. I would have no objection to including Clause 4, as it is also an important clause.

I wanted to concentrate attention on several issues at this time. It is possible that if the Government rejects this amendment to refer Clauses 3, 5 and 7, we might then try with Clause 4. If somebody else in the House wants to amend my amendment to include Clause 4 I have no objection.

I agree with the Hon. Member that Clause 4 is a key clause of this Bill. It would be the guts of the Bill if there was a penalty that applied if you did not do what is covered in Clause 4. Unfortunately Clause 4 lays places a number of obligations on employers to implement employment equity. It states that they should do certain things, but if they do not do one of those things there is no penalty. The Hon. Member is correct in what he said. He makes good sense. We picked out three clauses at this time to refer back to the committee, but one could pick others as well, in particular, Clause 4.

Mr. McCurdy: May I further ask the Hon. Member, in reference to the exclusion of the federal Departments from the Bill, if he would reflect on the need for the inclusion of the federal public service in view of his knowledge of the record of the public service with respect to affirmative action for women, visible minorities, the disabled and the native people. Does he believe that the record of the federal Government so far justifies omitting them from the legislation on the basis that they will continue, if they ever had done so, to implement affirmative action within the public service?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons that the Member for Hamilton East included Clause 3 in the amendment to refer the Bill back to committee was that Clause 3 deals with definitions including who or what is an employer. Since that clause now exempts federal public servants we would like to see it amended to include them, not exempt them. We tried to put through an amendment in committee to do that. We tried to put through an amendment in this House at report stage. On both occasions Members of the Government voted down those amendments so that the Bill still exempts federal public servants.

We started a few years ago on employment equity with guidelines or directives under the Treasury Board. That was a good start, but it was before we had entrenched provisions in the Constitution with respect to equality rights and affirmative action. It was before the Abella report which says we should have legislation for both the public sector and the private sector. We agree with that. We feel it was good to start the way we did, but it is not enough. Now is the time for legislation and it should apply to the public sector as well as to the private sector.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I was very happy to hear the comments by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). I listened with interest this morning to the Minister as she told us what the process of reporting would be. If I understood her clearly, she is going to wait until the profile of a company in question is established by census, instead of in the regions where the profile should be made in order to ensure that the company's program or plan will remove the barriers to employment equity. Of course, that kind of employment equity will be assured and promoted by the company in question.

I want to ask the Hon. Member about the reference made this morning by the Minister to the census. In his opinion, is that sufficient to justify the Government calling this Bill the "Employment Equity" Bill? Is that not a confirmation that it is indeed a smoke and mirror game the Government is playing, by telling us that it would like to see an employment equity reporting act, but when it comes to encouraging or making sure within the next year that there is equity in employment, we will have to wait an awfully long time, for the next census, when the profiles will be available in order to compare what the companies are proposing to do, and what they are reporting to be able to do, with what they should be doing according to census figures?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is a smoke and mirrors Bill for many reasons, not just the reason suggested by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). If the Minister thinks that she will be able to do something about employment equity on the basis of the census which is done every 10 years, she will not be able to do very much. On that basis, it is my hope that the information requested under Clause 6 will be of more help and will supplement information gathered by the census. Clause 6 states:

On or before June 1, 1988 and on or before June 1 of each year thereafter, every employer shall file with the Minister a report in respect of—

And then it refers to the Subclauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) under which information is requested from the employers.

That is all very well and good, but even if they do that the Bill is still a phony Bill as far as enforceable affirmative action is concerned because there is no penalty to be levied against employers if they do not comply with Clause 4 and Clause 5. Clause 4 is the clause which requires employers to implement employment equity and Clause 5 requires employers to set out an action plan with goals, targets and timetables. If the employers do not comply with Clause 4 and Clause 5, nothing happens to them. On the other hand, if they do not send in their reports under Clause 6 they are subject to a penalty, but that does not do anything but provide information to the public.

The reason this legislation is not a mandatory Employment Equity Bill but a voluntary one, I suppose, is because the Minister hopes that by collecting this information and making it public the great court of public opinion will put pressure on these companies to move ahead with employment equity. However, Judge Abella pointed out very clearly that voluntary affirmative action does not work, nor does voluntary employment equity. We need a Bill with teeth. We need legislation with sanctions for those who do not go ahead with employment equity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions or comments has now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, we have heard again this morning the high flying rhetoric that this Bill will achieve equality in the workplace, as indicated in its stated purpose. There has already been an amendment which would have made the Bill somewhat more honest, but it was defeated. It would have described the legislation as one which has as its purpose the promotion of equality in the workplace. I do not know why it is necessary in the waning hours of the debate for the Minister to insist that the Bill does what it makes no attempt to do, and that it will bring forth results. Women, the disabled, the minorities and native people were promised an employment equity Bill. What they have received is a Bill of goods. It might just as well have been written in invisible ink or in the sand for all the good it will do in response to the needs of the people this legislation is suppose to serve.

I speculated previously as to whether this Bill is a result of stupidity or trickery. Perhaps it is as a result of a rather elaborate oversight. Let us hope it is the result of an oversight because the Government then has a chance to reconsider.

The purpose of the amendment under debate is to refer the Bill back to committee for a specific examination of Clauses 3, 5 and 7. Of course, these are the Clauses which go to the very heart of the issue, whether we are going to have a voluntary employment equity act with mandatory reporting, or a true mandatory employment equity act with sanctions if employment equity is not implemented through processes aimed at achieving specified goals with specified timetables.

Clause 7 of the Bill requires only that the Government count the minorities, and count them twice, to find out which corporations are naughty or nice. That is not good enough. What we would ask is that Clause 7 be made to apply not only to Clause 6, but to Clauses 4 and 5 as well, and that the penalty apply. In other words, that it be mandatory and there be a penalty for failure to report on the demands set out in Clauses 4, 5 and 6. Let us examine those clauses.

Clause 4 requires that an employer shall, in consultation with employee representatives, develop a process for correcting employment inequities. It requires that a significant part of affirmative action be implemented. That is to say it requires that processes, structures and systems be developed by which the imbalances of employment will be corrected. There are two interesting things about Clause 4. The first is that there is no reference in it to any requirement in any context for consultation with members of the designated groups who, obviously, have a significant interest in the processes which are to be used. Their interest is not only with respect to correcting imbalances in the distribution of minority employee groups within the corporation or company, but also with respect to hiring patterns. If that were not enough of an omission to constitute a serious flaw, there is also a process which the employer is supposed to develop in this consultative process which just disappears. No one is required to know anything about it—not the designated groups, not those who were consulted and not those who are responsible for hiring and promotion practices. I do not know what is thought will come from Clause 4 if a process is developed and no one knows anything about it.

Matters become worse if one looks to Clause 5. It is reasonable that there should be goals and timetables. This has been repeated over and over again. I have already alluded to the peculiar nature of the Bill in respect to the separation of the process from the goal. Be that as it may, we have here a provision which, for all intents and purposes, ensures that the goals and timetables to which the processes are supposed to be directed will themselves be kept secret. They will be kept from those who have the greatest concern about them. Surely, Clause 7 should apply to Clauses 4 and 5 if we are to have a piece of legislation which can be truly described as an employment equity Bill. I see the Parliamentary Secretary fighting off an affirmative nod simply because I am sure that in the face of Party discipline, however misguided that may be, common sense prevails and has a tendency to make the muscles react even against one's will power.

Let us now look at Clause 3. Clause 3 is at the beginning of the Bill and shows where the Government began to run into difficulty. First, there is the fact that this legislation will apply only to employers who employ more than 100 employees. Others have already spoken in strong affirmation of the necessity to lower this number. They have referred to the pattern in the United States. They have referred to other sorts of legislation, not specifically dealing with the subject of employment equity, but other labour legislation which provides that employers with far fewer employees be subject to certain types of regulations and legislation.

There may be disagreement about what specific number should be chosen. However, it should be clear that in choosing the number 100 there is a deliberate effort to exclude the vast majority of employers who have any prospect of hiring significant numbers of employees these days. It really is not enough to say to women, members of visible minorities, the disabled and native people: "We will do the best we can, but we are not going to do that with very many employers in so far as benefiting you is concerned". Surely, if the Bill were to go back to committee, common sense would prevail and the number would be lowered to a reasonable one, perhaps to around 15 or 20, which constitutes the number of employees involving the vast majority of employers about whom we should now be concerned.

Perhaps the most unacceptable omission from Clause 3 is the omission with respect to the federal Public Service. Others have spoken about the discrimination involved in which this employer is excluded from the legislation because, of course, it has the power to exclude itsself from it. At the same time it demands that other employers adhere to the requirement of the legislation, however inadequate those provisions may be.

If one believes that the federal Public Service has become nirvana for visible minorities, women, native people and the disabled, then one should consider the record. We have already alluded to the sorry record with respect to women when now even more women as compared to a decade ago are in the lower income groups, and even more women are in clerical positions. We have heard about the fact that however few disabled are employed by the federal Government, some 75 per cent of them are on contract and can be dismissed with ease. We are very familiar with the sorry record of the federal Government with respect to the employment of native people, except under circumstances in which the demands are clear and unequivocal. However, we have not heard a great deal about the federal Government's record with respect to visible minorities. I would remind Hon. Members that until a few years ago visible minorities were not even mentioned by the federal Government in any context with respect to affirmative action. The Government is cutting back on the civil service. It is retrenching and getting rid of its employees. What is going on?

The record of the federal Public Service with respect to the visible minorities is well documented in correspondence to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) from the Caucus for the Recognition and Improvement of Blacks. This is a group of federal civil servants whose members are from the visible minorities. I remind Hon. Members that on February 27 the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) corresponded with Members of this House, and others, with respect to the record of the federal Government concerning affirmative action. Even then the situation with respect to visible minorities was somehow ignored. Somehow they were forgotten. However, there are ways in which they are not being forgotten, as is documented by the Caucus for the Recognition and Improvement of Blacks. They are now being laid off in far greater numbers and proportion than other employees of the Public Service. We now have a trend which has been noticed in the latest exercise where people have been suddenly dropped in the ratings. This is being disproportionately applied to members of the visible minorities. The author of this correspondence states:

> —there is a perception that there has also been a concentrated effort to weed out members of this Black and visible minority group who have been outspoken and articulate in fighting cases of discrimination against them.

I have in my hand page after page of documentation which sets out complaints about the record of the federal Government with respect to the treatment of visible minorities. And yet the Government would exclude the federal Public Service from this legislation.

• (1540)

This Bill should go back to committee so that it can be made into a Bill rather than a bill of goods. This Bill should go back to committee so that it will provide for mandatory affirmative action. Let us stop playing this game in which the Minister smirks, because it is a smirk that can be misunderstood. One may think the Minister is smirking in pride over what has been accomplished through this legislation, but the contrary is true. That smirk indicates the feeling any salesman has when he sells a bill of goods to someone who does not know what he is getting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Since there are no questions or comments, we shall resume debate.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, this could have been an historic day for the House of Commons. It could have been a day on which we would finally deal with a major piece of legislation dealing with the problems of equality for all those who have suffered disadvantage and discrimination. However, it is not. It is a side-track, a slipstream and an evasion of responsibility.

I do not use those words lightly. Like many Members of Parliament, I have seen over the years a series of efforts designed to make progress in the workplace of Canada, the fundamental basis for economic and social equality. The opportunity for an equal chance in the market-place is the fundamental premise of any efforts to achieve a broader system of equity and fairness.

Unfortunately, this Bill speaks of a broad pattern of retreat on the part of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). During the time I held her portfolio, I recall that she would rise to her feet while in opposition to make strong and sometimes eloquent claims on behalf of women, visible minorities and all those who were facing disadvantage or discrimination. She spoke of what she and her colleagues would do if and when they formed a Government. Well, they have formed a Government. Let us look at the record of the Government over the past two years.

We are all aware of the incredibly harsh and severe decision that was made regarding unemployment insurance benefits as they affect pension privileges. We are aware of the distortion that this has caused in the market-place. It is offsetting any opportunities for early retirement. We have seen what happened with the so-called Jobs Strategy. All of the special programs designed to help women receive training opportunities and to help the handicapped receive special access to the workplace have now been eliminated and cancelled. Under the Summer Jobs Program and the Canada Works Program, it used to be a requirement that every person proposing a project table an affirmative action plan. That has now been cancelled. In the past, the federal Government's own job-creation activities required the private, community and voluntary sectors to recognize inequities. Those requirements have all been wiped away.

Perhaps the greatest retreat we have seen is on the question of employment equity. That is mainly because the Minister has broken the momentum. Even earlier than 1980, the Bird Commission first identified these problems. During that period of time, there was a growing consciousness and awareness that the problems of inequality in the workplace were not necessarily a matter of overt bigotry or discrimination but were part of an entrenched system that had been around for hundreds of years. It was part of a whole set of precedents, an evolutionary process that allowed over the years certain practices in the workplace. Foremen would hire their nephews and not their nieces, there was apprehension at seeing someone in a wheelchair. There was no recognition of the need for remedial training for those with certain cultural backgrounds. By the end of the 1970s and the early 1980s, those things were recognized. The question was what to do about them.

I can recall very vividly taking over a Department in which there was a voluntary affirmative action program. We were providing resources and assistance to the private sector to work out affirmative action plans. It became quite clear that that did not work. At one point in 1980, only 35 or 40 contracts were signed. We had to ask ourselves why this was so.

At the time, I met with a number of private-sector organizations and asked what it was that prevented them from carrying on with voluntary affirmative action. They recognized the problem but I wondered what it was that was stopping them from doing anything about it. It came down to a fundamentally human problem. They said that they did not practise affirmative action because it was too costly, and unless their competitors were also required to practise it, they would be at a disadvantage. Many employers told me that even though they would like to do it and were prepared to do it, unless they were required to do it they would not do it. This goes back to some pretty basic matters of political philosophy. There are times when the Government, representing the public interest of all of Canada, must take action because we cannot expect the individual business person to provide solutions to basic fundamental social problems. It is not their responsibility.

The answer came to us and it was very clear. The only way the system would work is if all employers were required to begin following affirmative action plans. The private sector asked how this should be done. Businessmen wondered what would be the best way of applying affirmative action. They said very clearly that the federal Government must take the lead by showing them the best system. We began to do it.

In 1980, we introduced a trial program in three Departments of the federal Public Service. We tested out a complete and comprehensive affirmative action requirement on three key Departments. Once we began to see the success of that program, we then issued an Order in Council which required that it be undertaken in the entire Public Service of Canada. Those steps were an important prelude to what I think was the next most important step taken, and that was the establishment of the Abella Commission.

The terms of reference of the Abella Commission were crucial. It was not just another study or inquiry. The mandate of the Abella Commission was that it was to come up with a working formula that would apply to all activities under federal jurisdiction. I consider that to be one of the most important decisions made by the Cabinet while I was the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We were fortunate in getting someone of the calibre of Judge Abella to preside, and the mandate was set to provide an opening for a major extension based upon the previous activities that had been undertaken. Momentum had been created step by step.

Private employers could no longer use the excuse that affirmative action did not work, because we showed that it could work in the Public Service. They asked us for an example, and we gave it to them. Then we took the next major step by appointing the Abella Commission and we asked Judge Abella to talk to those in the corporate sector and return to us with a working formula.

We know that her report was a major milestone and it indicated very clearly what had been developing up to that point in time. It said that if we wanted to eradicate systemic discrimination in the workplace, we would have to apply a program that was comprehensive and non-discriminatory and all employers would be required to put it in place. That was the clear logic and compelling message of Judge Abella.

The Government which assumed office in 1984 had that momentum upon which to build. It had the series of successive steps which had been taken. We know that on occasion exchanges of a somewhat bipartisan nature are made across the floor of the House, but that is not an excuse for distorting the truth, which is what the Minister of Employment and Immigration did three days ago in the House. In response to a question by my colleague from Toronto, she said that the previous Government had done nothing at all. That is not the way to approach a matter as crucial as this one. She should have properly recognized the past history and development which had occurred, as well as the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. She should have indicated that very important steps have been taken. This Bill could have been a capstone to pull together all those elements. Instead, it is a retreat, a withdrawal, or a side-step. She is directly responsible for having broken the momentum. When will we get a chance again? Some people will say that the legislation is now in place, but I believe that the forward movement or the sense of forward progress has been rechannelled. We are really reverting back to what we had in the 1970s and 1980s. In effect, it is voluntary and up to the good intentions of individual employers to make it work. How can they revert to something that has already been proven not to work? Why do they ignore history?

Ms. Mitchell: They make the same mistakes as the Liberals.

Mr. Axworthy: That indicates the stupidity of the NDP on matters such as this one; we both believe in the same thing and yet they make silly remarks.

Ms. Mitchell: Why only three Departments?

Mr. Axworthy: I just explained that. It is too bad the Hon. Member does not listen; it is unfortunate that she does not listen.

I am making a speech in the House because I believe deeply in what we are trying to accomplish. We were making progress. We knew what we had to face. There was strong opposition in the private sector. We had to show that they could work. We had to give the private sector a demonstration, and we have succeeded in doing that. We had to build up a consensus and show that progress was being made.

Ms. Mitchell: And back away from mandatory.

Mr. Axworthy: I realize that members of the NDP and the Conservative Party do not believe in developing that kind of practical common sense. I point out to the Hon. Member that some of her colleagues in the provinces have been less than progressive. I recall attending a meeting of provincial Premiers, including Mr. Blakeney and Mr. Pawley, and saying that we wanted to talk about how to put affirmative action across the board in provincial sectors. Guess who opposed it at that time, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Mitchell: Not the NDP.

Mr. Axworthy: Members of the provincial Government which she supports, because they were not interested in making that kind of progress.

Ms. Mitchell: Not the NDP—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There will be time for questions and comments after the Hon. Member finishes his speech. I should like to hear what he has to say. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has the floor.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your willingness to listen to this important debate. I am glad someone is prepared to listen. Certain members of the NDP have forgotten long ago how important listening is.

At this point in time there is a willingness in the country to accept a change. I believe the business community has been sufficiently softened up.

Mr. Kilgour: Tell us about it.

Mr. Axworthy: I will tell the Hon. Member about it. I have spent a lot of time working with that community on it. The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) is allowing the editorials in the Edmonton Journal to go to his head. The fact is that we had acquired and obtained a recognition or an agreement on what choices and decisions should be made. When the Bill was ready to be brought forward, a consensus was in place. However, the Government stepped away from that consensus and fragmented that agreement.

I should like to return to the debate of the Minister of Employment and Immigration on second reading. She said that it was just a start and that we should come to committee with amendments. She said that she was open, prepared to make changes, and wanted to listen to the groups. We have heard what the groups indicated before the committee. They repeated what was indicated by the Abella Commission, that we required a comprehensive, univerally applied program at least within the federal jurisdiction. However, that was ignored. Therefore, any pretext that this will somehow further eliminate or reduce systemic discrimination in the country is a falsehood. It will not work.

Aside from the individual cases of frustration and sense of alienation which many people in the workplace now feel, we will also lose an incredible amount of talent. We will be losing the abilities which people could have put in place had they been given the opportunities that a real affirmative action program would have provided.

In my region of western Canada 30 per cent of all new workers coming into the labour market will be people of native Canadian origin, yet they face the most serious detriments by far to obtaining equal opportunities in the workplace. The talents and abilities which they could bring in terms of new jobs and occupations will be lost. As was the case in the past, they will be pushed to the margin. There will be speeches by various Conservative Members of Parliament, such as the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann), saying that it was their own fault, as he was wont to say in publications a few weeks ago, for which I gather he is now in front of the courts. He put the responsibility on them, not on the fact that there was systemic discrimination in the system which did not provide education or eliminate discriminatory practices in the workplace. We will lose those talents. Similarly, within the federal Public Service the incredible experience built up by many people in the clerical ranks, which could have been applied to management and supervision if the doors were open and support had been given, will also be lost.

In other words, we are guilty of considering today at final reading stage a Bill which does nothing to open the door to the full talents and abilities of Canadians. We are still saying to over a third of Canadians that we really do not need them or want them in the workplace. If we want them, it is only in a marginal way. The real message in the Bill is that we will maintain a closed system and only allow them into the cracks and crevices, not into the mainstream. That is the problem in relation to the Bill on employment equity. It does not really meet the problem or target the real requirements so that the country will make use of every Canadian regardless of sex, handicap, or which cultural minority they come from. We need those people and their talents and abilities. We also need to ensure that we have a piece of legislation which keeps open the door and provides the incentive and support to make it happen. Instead, we are reverting, retreating or withdrawing back to a previous age and a previous set of concepts and notions. The Canadian Human Rights Commission will tackle the problems one on one. Some companies will put information in front of everybody, and many will say that we must rely upon the court of public opinion, which has a fat chance of working.

I can only rise and say that this debate has been an incredibly frustrating and disappointing process. I only hope that a lesson has been learned, and that lesson is that if we are to do a job, let us do it properly and effectively. In particular, I wish the Minister of Employment and Immigration would read what she was saying four years ago so that when she is in opposition a few years from now she will support a brand new employment equity Bill that we will bring in that will really work.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I was rather surprised to hear the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) indicate that New Democrats and Liberals believe the same thing. I am sure that is true from odd week to odd week. I am sure that on this issue what he says does represent in substance the true state of affairs and that it is a fact, in the present context, that only the Conservatives are dissenting from the point of view that an employment equity Bill ought to be mandatory with respect to the achievement of certain goals after the implementation of certain processes and that this should be included in the Bill.

The Member said that a momentum was developed during the course of previous Governments which has been somehow interrupted as a result of Bill C-62 which really fails to provide very much progress over the past. There are few in the House who would not recognize that in general with respect to women, the disabled and native people, such a momentum was developed.

Having taken credit for the development of that kind of momentum with respect to those three designated groups, surely the Member is aware that from 1968 onward the visible minority group representatives of this country asked the previous Government to implement affirmative action programs for minority groups in the federal Public Service. With the exception of Nova Scotia, no such program was implemented. There was a consistent denial of the concerns and needs of visible minority groups with respect to employment in the federal Public Service. Certainly they were not given the kind of attention that was needed in fostering employment equity. It was directed toward women and others among the designated groups.

Will the Member admit, at least in this respect, that the new Government has taken a step forward, even if it is only to mention a group that at times many of us thought were not sufficiently mentioned in the past? Perhaps he can explain and accord us some understanding of that policy and why that was the case. Why were the visible minorities excluded from a deliberate program of affirmative action in the Public Service by the previous Government?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, that is a fair question. When we were introducing the changes through the Treasury Board in 1980, first on the trial program and then when we applied it to the entire Public Service, as I recall the discussions with the Public Service Commission and the Treasury Board, certain questions were related to the way in which the Public Service Act itself read. Because of the merit system principle that was put in the legislation, the question of visible minority status was not recorded. Matters of sex, male and female, were, but it was not a requirement when someone made application or that they be designated on their file as a "visible minority". That was the rationale at the time.

It seemed to me after looking at the rationale for a period of about 18 months or two years that it was not acceptable. I would remind the Hon. Member that when we established the Abella Commission, visible minorities were part of the terms of reference. It was the first major recognition of the importance of affirmative action for that group.

I can recall having discussions with a gentleman, whom the Hon. Member probably knows, Tom Sosa, who at that time was Chairperson of the Advisory Committee for the Department of Employment and Immigration. He made recommendations to me about the establishment of this commission, which clearly emphasized the importance of having visible minorities as part of it, and they were included in the terms of reference of the Abella Commission.

The Abella Commission itself was not another royal commission or a study or an inquiry, its mandate was different.

Its mandate was to arrive at a working formula for the application. The Abella Commission, which was established by our Government, clearly had within it the requirements that visible minorities be incorporated as part of any affirmative action program that would be introduced.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member inform the House whether, at the time he stepped down from his ministerial duties, there were statistics on each of the four groups mentioned in the Bill, that is, on the labour force participation rate of each group?

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, as you know, under the kind of program we introduced into the Public Service and elsewhere, each Department was required to do a measurement of the employment levels within its own Department relating to women, the handicapped, and visible minorities. Departments said they could not take those particular figures at the time and relate them back to the availability of employees or workers in a category in the general workforce on a city-by-city, region-by-region basis, so in this case there was a wide variety of figures. To use an example, if someone pointed out that the Department of National Revenue was going to hire 100 accountants in the City of Ottawa, and it was clear that in the workforce available at that time 20 per cent were women and they were hiring only 5 per cent, clearly there was a fundamental problem in hiring practices that had to be recorded and eliminated and brought to the attention of Ministers. I do not have offhand the exact figures Department by Department or sector by sector, but it was the responsibility under those affirmative action mandates for each Department to develop those figures and to produce them on an annual basis, at which time one could judge the effectiveness or efficiency to which they were actually measuring up to the availability of the designated target groups in the workforce in the region in which they were working.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, just before the Conservative Government came into office the Liberal Party had been in office a good number of years. Yet we find today that there are very few women in senior positions in the Public Service. There is a failure to use contract compliance as it affects the private sector and women are seeking equality in the workplace in the private sector, so how can the Member criticize the Conservatives, who deserve to be criticized on the basis of the legislation, for their lack of action with any real credibility? How does he expect us to believe the protestations of his party when his own Party lived for so many years with the inequality that exists in the workplace today?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) was here during my remarks but I went through the steps that we have taken.

Mr. Keeper: With what results?

Mr. Allmand: The Human Rights Act in 1977.

Mr. Axworthy: We established a Commission of Human Rights, we had the Charter, we had the development of affirmative action programs in the Public Service, and we put the Abella Commission in place. Each year and each time a series of steps were being taken to correct the problems when and if they did not work. I explained the initial attempt, which was to develop a voluntary affirmative action program, but it did not work. The Hon. Member may be perfect and all-seeing and all-knowledgeable, but we as Liberals do not pretend to have that omniscience. As Minister of Employment and Immigration—I became responsible for that Department in 1980—I saw that the voluntary program was not working and initiated steps to make it work. We had asked the private sector why it was not working, and I explained the reasons given. We then took the necessary action. We started the clear demonstration programs within our own Departments to show them it could work. We then established the Abella Commission to work out a formula which would ensure that it was applied to all companies within the federal jurisdiction. That committee reported on the ways in which to bring back contract compliance. A series of progressive steps have been taken to improve the condition substantially. This opportunity, resulting from the Abella Commission, could have been a capstone to that. It could have brought all those strands together into one very important initiative, and that is what has been lost.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration) that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the third time and passed; and on the amendment (Ms. Copps) (p. 12465).

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this is the fourth time I have risen to speak on this very important Bill, Bill C-62, with regard to employment equity. As the critic responsible for the status of women, I have a very particular concern about how it will or will not affect opportunities for Canadian women. My riding of Vancouver East has one of the largest representations of urban native people, second only to Winnipeg. There are also a very large number of people who represent other visible minorities, not to mention many low-income people and many handicapped persons. I have, indeed, a great deal of concern about this Bill. We had all hoped that it would have true meaning for these groups and would present opportunities as never before, at least for employment in jobs which fall under federal jurisdiction. I regret to say that speaker after speaker and witness after witness has pointed out that this is not the case. It is very unfortunate that, as a precedent setting Bill, it falls so short of what minority groups need and want.

I would like to take some time to refer to some of the comments made by the Minister this morning. I was working in my office and could not help but want to respond to some of the comments she made. She said: "is enabling legislation, not a set of rigid guidelines". We certainly know that it is not a set of rigid guidelines. She went on to say: "The aim is to encourage employers and Governments. The Government's aim is to encourage employers". She quoted Judge Abella who said that the Government must be aggressive, vigilant, and open-minded. Unfortunately, she did not continue quoting the Judge's comments. In Equality in Employment at page 195, Judge Abella said:

> A voluntary program with a mandatory reporting requirement is nonetheless voluntary in the absence of a requirement to remedy the discriminatory practices disclosed by the information reported.

She goes on to say:

> —it is unrealistic to rely on public opinion as an effective monitoring agent.

She also says:

> Voluntary programs in the federal government have had little impact on the composition of the public sector workforce.

I wish the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) were here because I think that is a direct response to what the Liberal Government did not do. Its record was far from positive in this area.

We agree with the Minister that data and information are important, but they are only important if the process does not start here. It must lead to action and to results for the target groups which I have mentioned. It must lead to systemic changes in the institutions, corporations, or businesses which are employing people. This Bill does not provide for that. For example, what difference does it make if a company meets the deadline for reporting and shows how many or how few women it has in middle-management positions or non-traditional jobs? It is very little use to know this unless the company is going to make some changes, unless it is going to be required to adopt a policy of employment equity which will open up more jobs and a fairer promotion system for women in a planned way as a part of company policy.

Employment equity must be legislated and there must be appropriate penalties, not only for failing to report, but for failing to do something about it once they have the information. Otherwise, I am sure no employer will take employment equity very seriously. Companies will probably hire a few token women in order to avoid embarrassment. This is not systemic change, and is not an adoption of employment equity policy. This is like the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) approach to employment equity of appointing one or two more women to a board in order to keep them quiet. Yet there is not really a major systemic change. We do not even have a woman Minister responsible for the Status of Women.

This morning the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) also talked about systemic discrimination, a point which has been raised repeatedly by our Party and by many witnesses who appeared before the committee. The Minister talked about how difficult it is to deal with this because it is, in effect, hidden. I agree with her. However, systemic change will not be brought about in a large company or bureaucracy by requiring them to report on what proportion of their staff is women, native people, disabled people, or visible minorities. Even if there is provision to use the Canadian Human Rights Commission, the role of that organization has been to deal with individual complaints on a case by case basis. That is not systemic change. It is not a change in the system or the company policy.

The Minister also suggested that public disclosure would make the discrimination public, and that the target groups or the Canadian Human Rights Commission could then take action. Why should they have to do this? If a mandatory employment equity agreement is made with the federal Government for every company and Crown corporation in its jurisdiction, there should be no need for this. We know that target groups do not have resources. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has not even given them any money for their test cases on equality under the Charter of Rights. How will they get money to appeal the complaints with regard to employment equity? Believe me, there will be many, many complaints. Even though there have been some increases in the resources of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, it has never had enough resources to deal with this. We need systemic change, and this Bill is far from even considering that.

Surely it makes much better sense for any company which operates in the federal jurisdiction, or any company which is doing business with the Government, to sign some kind of employment equity contract which requires them to agree that they will adopt employment equity as a company policy, and that they will take practical steps to implement it in all parts of their operation with targets, goals, and timetables. In that way women and minorities will be assured access to jobs whenever there is an opening, and to promotions whenever they should be eligible for them. It is surely naive to expect that companies with long traditions and built-in attitudes, such as we all have, will change their hiring and promotion practices and their entrenched attitudes, many of which are patriarchal, without enforceable legislative requirements. There must be penalties for lack of compliance by companies such as banks, railways, telephone companies, airlines and all those companies that come under federal jurisdiction. Yet this Bill only requires that a report must be filed at the proposed time. Many changes are needed.

The Minister says that she will knock with a big fist on the doors of employers that show progress. I wish her good luck because she will have to do a lot of heavy door knocking two or three years from now, just at the time when she will be knocking on doors in her constituency.

I am not convinced that gentle persuasion will bring any results. The Liberals have proven that there will be absolutely no results because we saw under the Liberal administration that voluntary affirmative action does not work.

I believe that most managers in large and small companies would probably prefer to have mandatory employment equity so that they can have the necesary clout with their boards of directors and staff to insist that the law obliges them to hire more women, native people, disabled people and visible minorities whenever there is a vacancy.

My colleague, the Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) spoke eloquently about the appeals from target groups who unanimously agree that this Bill will not be effective in achieving employment equity. They put forward many recommendations to improve the Bill, yet many of the amendments were turned down by the Government. They spoke repeatedly about the need for more enforcement of employment equity.

The Urban Alliance on Race Relations outlined five initiatives that are missing from the Bill. First, there should be one central enforcement standard setting agency for all four sectors—Departments, Crown corporations, contractors and federally regulated businesses—with powers to define program requirements, set standards for goals and timetables, analyse the workforce data, and initiate complaints or court actions.

Second, there should be mandatory programs for all four sectors rather than voluntary programs with mandatory reporting.

Third, the Bill should include contract compliance as a condition of tendering, not undefined commitments, as the Bill implies, for all Government contractors with over 50 employees and $200,000 worth of Government contracts per year.

Fourth, equal pay for work of equal value should be a condition for contracting.

Fifth, affirmative action programs should be a condition of all loans, grants and receipt of cost-sharing moneys. This should be expanded to many more employers on which the federal Government has some influence.

Many labour groups, including the CLC, spoke very strongly about the need to negotiate employment equity as part of collective bargaining.

In my previous remarks I spoke about the strong recommendation of Judge Abella that women must have adequate day care and training programs if they are ever to achieve employment equity in the workplace. This has also been completely disregarded by the Government.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry seemed to be a little hostile when I interjected during his remarks. However, I was quite sure that he neglected to explain convincingly why he and his Liberal Government did not introduce legislation to achieve employment equity in a real sense. When he was the Minister of Employment and Immigration he talked about mandatory affirmative action. However, after he went back to Cabinet and spoke to his boss, the Prime Minister, and probably received considerable pressure from the business sector, he changed his tune and opted for voluntary persuasion of companies. There was no contract compliance.

Furthermore, affirmative action was implemented in only three Departments of the federal Government. That does not make sense because there are many people in the target groups who wanted jobs in other Departments.

Why is employment equity taking so long? I have found it difficult to understand why it was possible for the Liberal Government to do such an effective job in achieving mandatory bilingual policies in the federal Public Service. They have been successfully implemented in all Departments of the federal Government. Yet it was unable to achieve employment equity for women, native people, visible minorities and the disabled.

Before I finish my remarks, I want to move the following amendment on behalf of my Party:

That the amendment be amended by inserting after the number 3, the number 4.

In the time I have left—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Once the Hon. Member proposes an amendment, she must stop her debate.

Ms. Mitchell: If you would agree, Mr. Speaker, I could leave the amendment until the end of my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You will leave it until the end of your speech?

Ms. Mitchell: I did not understand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is fine.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I want to pay particular attention to the question of equal pay for work of equal value. I am my Party's critic for the status of women. I believe very strongly that women will never achieve equality until they have the same pay as men who are in jobs of equal value. I think it is disgraceful that women still earn 60 cent dollars in Canada today and, as my colleague pointed out a few minutes ago, the situation is even getting worse.

The Minister responsible for the Status of Women, (Mr. McLean) has spoken out strongly for equal pay for work of equal value, saying that this is necessary and just. Only last week he said:

> Equality and social justice require that all Canadians be given a fair chance to make their own way in society. My government is committed to eliminating the barriers that have confined women to unequal roles and opportunities, and to creating the conditions that will enable all Canadians, women and men, to pursue their ambitions and realize their potential in all spheres of society.

He is in favour of equal pay for work of equal value but has never advocated that this be part of the Bill. One can only assume that the Minister is one who stresses platitudes and states what he believes the women of Canada want to hear, but is not willing to go to the Cabinet and the Minister of Employment and Immigration to press for this to be an integral part of Bill C-62.

During committee hearings the Canadian Labour Congress said that affirmative action legislation and programs are important at the federal and provincial levels and must include the requirement for equal pay for work of equal value as well as contract compliance. They state that adequate resources must be allocated to ensure compliance.

The Abella Report stressed the same points and went on to advocate strongly that this should be part of employment equity programs. Yet the Minister repeatedly ignored these recommendations and refused to implement them.

It has been proven repeatedly that enforcing these provisions under the Canadian Human Rights Act is ineffective. That Act would not cover all employees that should be covered under this Bill.

We very much regret the lack of enforcement provided by this Bill. I have attempted to point out those items of particular concern from a woman's point of view. In closing, I move:

> That the amendment be amended by inserting after number 3, the number 4.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I find a difficulty with the subamendment to the subamendment. I know that the Hon. Members will try to convince me that what they are doing is the right thing. The Chair is always ready for arguments as to whether the amendment to the amendment is in order. Could I have arguments on this point?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) is trying to do is to have Clause 4 looked at again by the House. The Liberal amendment originally had Clauses 3, 5 and 7 being reviewed by the committee. What the Member for Vancouver East is saying is to add Clause 4. I think there is a possibility that some people may advise you that this adds something different and something new to the amendment. There might be previous rulings to this effect. My argument would be that Clause 4 is not really new. It is very much a part of the package. You cannot review Clauses 3, 5 and 7 without reviewing Clause 4. It is part of the whole process. Clauses 4 and 5 are together in terms of this legislation. I think it was an oversight by the Liberal Party in the first place when it did not include Clause 4 as part of its review. I think it is all interrelated. The only thing that might be different is that there is Caluse 4, and Clause 4 was not included, but it is only a numbers game, and substantially you are looking at the same kind of thing. All you are doing is making a rather imperfect amendment more perfect.

Mr. Baker: I would disagree with the Hon. Member who just spoke as far as the present amendment is concerned, the amendment to the amendment, in that you could deal with Clause 4 quite separately from the other clauses in the Bill, simply because Clause 4 actually sets out the formula by which the Bill is enacted through the intent of the legislation.

However, in saying that the New Democratic Party is incorrect on that point, let me say that I cannot see anything wrong with the amendment from the point of view that it does not negate in any way, shape or form the substance in the present amendment. It simply adds another clause to that particular amendment. I would submit, Mr. Speaker, for your consideration that perhaps the subamendment may be in order, but it would perhaps have come at a better time if it were put following a complete round of speakers on the first amendment.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to support as strongly as I can the arguments in support of accepting the subamendment from my colleague, and I differ as sharply as I can, from the intervention made by the Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). He says that Clause 4 can stand alone. The subamendment has to be looked at in context. First of all, the motion of the Official Opposition would have Clause 7 re-examined. It is its intention to have Clauses 5 to 7 referred for re-examination to the committee. If the motion should lose and Clause 7 is not referred for further consideration, then you would end up with a situation in which the penalties that the Opposition would seek to have would not apply to Clause 4.

Further, let us give greater emphasis to what was said before; Clauses 4 and 5 constitute part of the same process. What we have in Clause 4 is the requirement that the employer develop a process for achieving employment equity. It certainly is clear to you, Mr. Speaker, from all of the arguments heard from all sides of the House that part and parcel of a process must be the goal of that process, and that is what is set out in Clause 5. If the opposition amendment should lose, it would throw into limbo any prospect for serious consideration of Clause 4, which is the subject of the subamendment. Therefore, it must be clear that we could end up with a silly situation were we to introduce an amendment to have Clause 4 referred to committee, when, in fact, Clauses 4, 5 and 7 are so intimately connected with one another.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate all of the Hon. Members helping me out in reaching a decision on this ruling. I would like to reserve my ruling for later on today. In the meantime we will carry on with debate.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it was certainly quite an exercise in parliamentary debate on the amendment to the subamendment of the amendment to the subamendment. I think the essence of the debate this afternoon should perhaps not be on Clauses 4 or 7 of this particular Bill C-62, but, rather what this legislation will do, and perhaps, more importantly and more specifically, what this piece of legislation will not do.

I feel obligated to participate in this third reading of Bill C-62 because I had the opportunity of being involved in the second reading debate and in the work of the legislative committee. I listened and received representations from the four target groups that the legislation addresses. I was involved as well in the report stage.

I must say at the beginning of my remarks that the process has been a frustrating one. The process, in fact, has almost been a futile one simply because witness after witness from the four target groups—women, the disabled, the visible minorities and the natives—came before this House, and, more importantly, came before the committee, because that is where they have the appropriate time and forum to articulate their concerns, as it is their concerns that this legislation is supposed to address, but the Government Party and Government Members on that committee were not listening. Witness after witness came forward and suggested ways for this Parliament to strengthen this particular piece of legislation. Each of those target groups said that it is fine to talk about equality in the workplace, it is fine to say that this should be a goal of a modern society such as we have in Canada, but that it is not sufficient only to talk of equality, because this piece of legislation, while purporting to deliver equality, will not do so. That is why it was frustrating, and perhaps futile, because the message came back again and again, but the Members were not listening.

Not only did it come during this process, but we have had various reports such as that of the Abella Commission, which I think articulated a progressive solution to what we speak of today. It was bold and courageous and the expectations that were created were very great. That is why we find today a great deal of disappointment among the Canadian community because this piece of legislation does not even come close to adopting some of the recommendations of the Abella Commission.

These witnesses and these community groups that came before us in this process also came before us during the preparation of the Equality Now Report, the Equality For All Report, and also the Obstacles Report in past Parliaments. These groups and these individuals are asking themselves, and are asking their representatives in this Chamber: How many times do we have to come to Ottawa to explain our case? How many times must we tell you what the problems are? How many times and how forceful can we be in terms of suggesting a solution to our problems in this country? They have come time and time again and at great expense. They have used their energies and the efforts of their organizations, which are not the more wealthy or well financed organizations in this country. They used the resources they had in a very genuine, straightforward and frank manner, and we let them down profoundly.

If we try to commission a further report or study, whether it be next year or in three years, those individuals in Toronto or in Vancouver have to ask themselves what was the use of going to Ottawa to say the same thing they have been saying at various stages during the last five to ten years. As opposition critic for multiculturalism, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, what they said. Two major organizations came before the committee. One oganization was the Urban Alliance on Race Relations. It said that the focus of the legislation is on data collection rather than hiring and training in a workplace free of discrimination. The Canadian Ethnocultural Council said that it is difficult to envisage how a voluntary approach will substantially improve employment opportunities for the visible minorities. The Chairman of the Coalition of Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities said last Monday, and I quote:

> This Bill will do nothing more than provide the Government with employment information. It will in no way implement employment equity as there are no penalties for failing to comply with employment equity plans.
> We have tried everything. We have consulted with CEIC staff, appeared as witnesses before the Parliamentary Committee on the Bill, made pleas to the Prime Minister directly and rallied on Parliament Hill.
> We have demanded that the Bill be amended to include the Government's own Departments and agencies and to include a penalty for failing to comply with employment equity plans. The Government has not responded to any of our demands.
> If we can't get them to put any teeth in the Bill, they should at least be honest and retitle it "The Employment Information Bill". If the Bill is not renamed, the Coalition demands that it be withdrawn.

No one in this House can say it any better than that. We can imagine the frustration of sitting through that process and seeing absolutely no movement at all. We cannot blame these people for asking why this piece of legislation was introduced. Why Bill C-62? Why name the four target groups? Why does the Government say it is championing the rights of these Canadians in these four target groups? Why say that after these four target groups have said that this legislation will not help? They are saying that this legislation will not improve the lots of these individuals, and they are right. Why have a piece of legislation for the sake of having legislation which is used as window dressing? It is just used in a public relations type of way so that the Government can say: "Look at what we have done for these groups".

These four target groups and other Canadians who have participated in the process are not that gullible or naive. They know when they have effective legislation and when they do not. They have told Parliament and the Government that this legislation is not adequate. Therefore, it must be incumbent upon Members of this House to listen to those concerns and perhaps put ourselves in their place. We must realize what their day-to-day struggles are and ask ourselves how we would react if we were one of those individuals who came before the committee. If we did that, I think we would have a greater degree of appreciation for and sensitivity to the representations made before the committee, rather than simply listening and not moving on the recommendations.

We must also examine our own hearts as individual Members of Parliament. We all know that one of the major concerns we face in our responsibility as Members of Parliament is the whole question of employment. We face a number of individuals each and every week in our constituency offices. Individuals write, phone and visit us and all ask if we can give any assistance to them, their relatives or friends who are seeking gainful employment. We know their frustration. We know their loss of hope. We know that, to a certain degree, the measure of one's self worth and dignity is in part related to the whole question of employment. A working life is a fruitful and fulfilling life. When there is no gainful employment, it is not just a question of not being able to find work but it is the feeling, rightly or wrongly, that one is less than a participating member in Canadian society. We all realize that that is the biggest problem facing us as Members of Parliament individually and collectively.

I believe most of us accept that responsibility. The problems of those four target groups must be staggering when those individuals are unemployed because the colour of their skin is different from that of the majority or because they have a disability or because of their cultural background. That is a defeating type of blow which is difficult to overcome. We must understand that. We must act more boldly and courageously so that we can be satisfied as Members of Parliament and as the House of Commons that we have acted with a sensitivity and appreciation for the problems of these four different groups. We should be able to point to this legislation in a proud manner which transcends partisan politics. We should be able to have a good deal of pride in the legislation. But we cannot have pride in Bill C-62 in its present form. It is not a question of myself as a member of the Opposition slamming the Government by saying: "Look at this legislation. Are you not ashamed". I feel part of that shame as well because I know we could have done much better.

It does not help the debate when individuals talk about what the Liberal Government did five years ago or what the Conservative Government did 40 years ago. It does not further the lot of these four target groups. What we should realize is that here is the window of opportunity. For the first time before the House of Commons we have a piece of legislation which is intended to deliver employment equity regardless of colour, handicap, sex or background. We should work together to ensure that the legislation will meet the expectations created by the Abella Commission. But when it does not, no one in the House can rise and beat his or her chest saying: "I am proud to stand up today because we have Bill C-62". We cannot do that when the four target groups have come to us at second reading, at committee and at report stage of the legislation to tell us that we are not going far enough and are only paying lip service to their real problems. They are saying to us: "Maybe these problems are not for you, but they are for me and for the other people who find themselves in my circumstances". They are Canadians. We have a fairly progressive country known as Canada. But not all is well, certainly when there are complaints by those individuals who say that they cannot find employment because of the items we have listed. It is simply not good enough to look the other way and give them Bill C-62 and say: "We have dealt with your problems. Let's move on to other ones".

In addressing these concerns, and in trying to articulate those which were made as representations to the committee, we moved amendments to the Bill. We were not attempting to oppose for the sake of opposing. In the process we moved 36 amendments which were intended to strengthen the Bill. They were intended to take what we received from the community and turn it into reality. If they had been accepted by the Government, then the four target groups would be satisfied today, as would the opposition Party, the Liberal Party. Then we would have no problem voting in favour of the legislation and dealing with something else. We would know that we had dealt with the subject in a comprehensive and, most important, fair way. But we have not.

A number of the amendments were crucial to the whole direction and thrust of employment equity. One was to include a provision with respect to an enforcement agency since in the Bill there is no such provision. It was Judge Abella who said that if we cannot enforce rights, then they are just as good as unavailable rights. Those words capture the spirit of what is lacking in this Bill. They crystalize the opposition that we have seen to this piece of legislation and the malaise which is written into every page of it.

The governing Party said: "We have the Human Rights Commission to deal with it somehow". However, at the moment the commission does not have the resources. At the moment, it deals on a reactive mode, on a one-to-one basis, not as an agency which has the ability to oversee this type of legislation on a national basis. Even if members of the Government were convinced that that was the answer, then the very least they could have done was to have the courage to include a provision with respect to the Human Rights Commission in the legislation. In this way we would have been convinced that some mechanism would be put in place to oversee the legislation. However, the amendment in this respect was not accepted. Individual people in the four target groups and members of my Party are asking why. If one believes that the Human Rights Commission is the answer, then let us be frank and put a provision with respect to it in the legislation.

Another of our amendments suggested that the Bill apply to all federal government Departments which are presently exempted from the Bill. If we have a federal Government which says: "This is our vision. This is what we want the private sector and the Crown corporations to do", then what is wrong with not pursuing that and having the force of those measures obligate the federal Government to act accordingly? After all, we have to show leadership and we can only do that by example.

Another amendment we suggested based on representations we received at committee stage was to apply the Bill to all businesses under federal jurisdiction with 25 or more employees. The present Bill applies to businesses with 100 or more employees. That very regulation does away with most of the companies doing business with the Government since a great number of them—the majority I am told—have less than 100 employees. Therefore, we suggested that the threshold be placed at 25. Even the Americans, whom we sometimes hit over the head when we talk about human rights, have contract compliance legislation which ensures that businesses doing business with the Government follow its criteria. Its criterion is for only 50 employees, and we are stuck at 100.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that you are motioning to me that I have but one minute left in which to wrap up. There were other amendments I wanted to go over, but I will not have the time to do that.

So what is the choice? What are we trying to suggest at third reading? To put it very simply, as an eleventh hour pitch, it is to reconsider the inaction of this legislation and to consider the inequities in it. It is ironic that we should be pushing employment equity while at the same time we know that the legislation has tremendous shortcomings. This message does not come from members of the New Democratic Party or from members of the Liberal Party. It comes from Canadians who are saying that the Bill will not deliver equity. It is only window-dressing. We encourage the Government and the Parliamentary Secretary, who is here on behalf of the Minister, to heed the recommendations and make the Bill what we all want it to be—strong, effective and fair. I hope the Government sees the light.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it should be obvious to any Member of Parliament, and certainly to anyone who represents an urban constituency, that there still exists a great deal of discrimination against members of minority groups in employment. By minority groups I include the handicapped, native people, women, and members of racial minority groups, particularly those who come from visible minorities, that is, non-whites. Governments, both federal and provincial, recognize that such prejudice and discrimination have existed for many years. So Governments have, over the years, enacted fair employment and fair accommodation practices legislation. This legislation has somewhat lessened the discrimination in employment felt by members of these groups. However, a great deal of discrimination still exists. Thus a broad coalition of organizations including natives, women, the handicapped and minority groups, as well as church groups, labour, consumer and farm groups have understood that more has to be done. The former Liberal Government appointed Judge Abella to look into the matter. She conducted an investigation and made a report to which all of us should have paid some attention.

Before the election the groups I have mentioned, and others, called upon the political Parties to find out what their stand would be in regard to passing the type of legislation which Judge Abella, and others, had recommended. I have in front of me part of a statement made by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in August of 1984. He said:

> Our Party will ensure that companies providing services to the federal Government hire increasing numbers of women to perform such services. When seeking government business, these companies will be required to detail their action plans, timetables and programmes for attracting, training and advancing women within their operations ... We support the need for human resources planning within the federal bureaucracy, which includes goals and objectives to achieve parity for women, at all levels of government operation, commensurate with their skills and expectations.

Let me put on the record the last sentence. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary is listening carefully because this is the crux of our fundamental disagreement with the Government and the Bill. The Prime Minister, then Leader of the Official Opposition, concluded the paragraph which I just read by saying the following:

> Numerical goals are one of several goals required: training and retraining are others.

That was a promise made by the Prime Minister when he was Leader of the Official Opposition at a time when we were heading into an election which he hoped his Party would win so that he could become the Prime Minister. His Party did win the election. He is the Prime Minister. What has happened to the commitment he made?

If there is one thing that is conspicuously missing from this Bill, it is the promise made by the Prime Minister that the legislation his Government would bring forward would include numerical goals. The experience of other jurisdictions, including the United States, is that without numerical goals, the objective of employment equity will not be reached.

Without numerical goals and targets which are monitored by the Government, employers, both public and private, simply will not do what we want them to do.

It is not surprising that this Bill has been criticized and rejected by all the interested groups. Let me put on the record a few of the assessments they have made of this Bill. Beryl Potter of the Coalition on Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities had this to say about the Bill:

—it's not even worth the paper it's written on . . . I've never been so disillusioned in my life as I am with Prime Minister Mulroney. I was a supporter of him. I worked for him in his campaign and I am totally, totally disillusioned.

The Inuit Tapirisat of Canada which represents the Inuit people of Canada had this to say:

Bill C-62 is of limited value.

Suzanne Boivin of the National Association of Women and the Law said:

Nothing will change. Unfortunately, it is simply wishful thinking.

Since this Bill was first tabled almost a year ago, the New Democratic Party has taken the position that it is rife with flaws. To reiterate, we stated that it failed to embrace five principles which we promoted at every opportunity. First, there is an absence of real enforcement and adequate penalties under a mandatory equity scheme. Second, there is no reference made to equal pay for work of equal value. Third, contract compliance is not included. Fourth, there is no obligation to negotiate equity where there is a bargaining unit. In other words, we leave the matter to the good intentions of employers, although some of us who have watched employer-employee relationships know how frequently good intentions simply do not exist on the part of employers. Fifth, the coverage of the Bill is inadequate. It does not include federal Departments.

How can the Government have the gall and audacity to require private employers and Crown corporations to implement policies established by a law when the Government itself does not apply that requirement to Government Departments? I challenge Government Members and cabinet Ministers to look at Government Departments, Department by Department, including those which were targeted for affirmative action by the former Liberal Government. They will see how little we have accomplished. They will see how few women work in areas other than clerical. They will see how few handicapped people work at any level. They will see how few native people work for Government Departments. I would urge Hon. Members to look particularly at the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to see how woefully neglectful we have been. They will see how few members of visible minorities work for the federal Government at any level in any city. If they had the courage to look at what has taken place up until now, they would see how ludicrous it is to bring in a Bill without any requirement for action.

The Bill is now at third reading stage, and this gives me an opportunity to review the flaws in the Bill which centre around the absence of these requirements. In our view and in the view of the spokespeople for the target groups, this Bill will not move us much closer to employment equity. The Bill does have a lofty purpose. No witness found fault with the Bill's intention which, according to Clause 2, is the following:

The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to correct the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

That is a noble goal. Unfortunately, having stated the principle and outlined the goal, the Bill then goes on to do everything possible to see that that goal is not achieved.

This Bill must be viewed as a Bill for voluntary equity with mandatory reporting of workforce data. It is that and no more.

There are three clauses in the Bill which make certain demands on the employers that are intended to move them toward equity in the workplace. However, only Clause 5 is subject to a maximum penalty of $50,000 on summary conviction. We attempted to increase this penalty to $500,000 because many of the firms covered by Bill C-62 are very large. I am thinking in particular of the major banks, the CNR, the CPR, Air Canada and CP Air. For many of them, a potential $50,000 fine would simply be part of the cost of doing business. That occurred for many years with the anti-combines legislation. On the very few occasions when a company was charged, prosecuted and found guilty, it paid a relatively small fine. It was like a licence giving these companies the right to continue to break the law, and this is the same thing.

Clause 6 requires the employer to gather data annually. Critics have indicated that the required data is a bare minimum. Furthermore, the requirement is only to take a snapshot of the workforce. It does not amount to making progress toward implementing employment equity. As was pointed out, an employer could report year after year, yet the data could show no significant change for target groups in the workplace. There is no penalty for no progress. If there is no penalty for no progress, an employer could report that every year. In that event he would be obeying the law and following the instructions contained in the law. He could simply report that he has continued the practice but had not moved toward employment equity. What happens then? Nothing, because there is no penalty for not moving toward employment equity.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission will receive the data reports and determine whether or not there appears to be discriminatory activity in the workplace and, if warranted, could find discrimination under the Canadian Human Rights Act. However, I emphasize that the Human Rights Commission does not enforce the employment equity Bill. The commission will be enforcing the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act as they may apply to the workplace based upon data contained in the annual reports. What if the data is wrong? Well, it would be too bad.

Let us look at the type of data required in the reports. First, there would be the industrial sector locale, the number of employees, and the number in the target group. Second, there would be a description of the occupational groups in the workplace and the number of target groups in each occupation. Third, there would be the salary ranges and the number of target group persons in each salary range. Fourth, there would be the number of employees hired, promoted and terminated, and the number of target group persons who fit into each circumstance. The target groups made clear to anyone who wanted to listen, certainly to anyone who wanted to see real action, and to the legislative committee on Bill C-62 that a firm must be obliged to develop an action plan with goals and timetables, addressing how it would go about removing discriminatory practices and taking positive steps needed to bring about employment equity.

Action plans were not in the original Bill. Indeed, the Minister claimed before the committee that an action plan for producing equity was inherent in a company. Ultimately the Government responded by presenting the committee with an amendment forcing companies to prepare action plans which contained goals and timetables. However, these action plans will be strictly confidential. As various Hon. Members have said, the plans can remain locked up in firms' personnel offices, shielded from all prying eyes.

Why should action plans be kept secret?? What about dissatisfied employees or members of a target group who think that a company is not following the intent of the Bill? Without giving an opinion on the merits of my example, the Government must know that a group of women charged that the CNR was not ready to hire women except in clerical positions. They charged that the CNR was certainly not prepared to hire women in non-traditional jobs such as those in the maintenance shops in Montreal, Moncton, Winnipeg or wherever. I am speaking from memory when I say that the Canadian Human Rights Commission found that their claim was valid. If the action plan is kept secret, how will employees or prospective employees who want to work for the company know what is happening?

I was pleasantly surprised some weeks ago when I visited the branch of the bank with which I deal in Winnipeg to see a black person working as a teller, the only one I have seen. In the City of Winnipeg, with its large native population, I have yet to see a single native person working in any branch of any bank in Winnipeg. If there are any, they are certainly very few in number. How will the Government of Canada or members of the native community in Winnipeg know that banks have action plans and whether they will work if the banks are permitted to keep them secret?

There is no penalty for failing to develop an action plan, even a poor and inadequate one. The NDP has attempted to have penalty provisions included in Clause 7, but it has been to no avail. The suggestion was rejected by the Government. We have also moved motions to cause employers to file their action plans with the Canadian Human Rights Commission and to post them in the workplace. They were not accepted. We are not suggesting that there should be Canadian Human Rights Commission approval of action plans. We are simply saying that it would be useful, in trying to meet the objectives of the Bill, if companies were required to make the plans public.

It is worth repeating that Gordon Fairweather, Chairman of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, in a speech in February of this year, repeatedly urged management that although not required by Bill C-62 it would be in their interest to make, upon request, copies of action plans available to the commission.

I note that my time is coming to an end, but I should like to compare the Bill with the legislation in the United States. The Americans began to put legislation into effect years ago. The legislation in its final form was brought in during the administration of President Johnson. The plan requires employers to set targets and goals, and to have target dates for the hiring of people from various minority groups. The legislation has made tremendous difference and has led to tremendous improvement in the employment of people from minority groups in the United States. That country now has the most ideological President which it has had in 50 years. Some of his advisers have indicated that they want business to be free and that they do not need that kind of legislation, those numbers or goals. It is interesting and significant that U.S. Secretary of Labour Bill Brock has carried on a campaign within the U.S. administration to retain those numbers and goals, that piece of legislation. He is being supported publicly by the National Association of Manufacturers, the same kind of organization which in Canada is the main opponent of doing that here. Why is that organization opposing it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have given the Hon. Member an extra couple of minutes to wind up. I will now ask for questions and comments from the House, and I am sure the Hon. Member will be able to carry on with some of his remarks.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member has had a good deal of experience with the American legislation because he worked for the Canadian Labour Congress on the matter. From my observation of the American legislation, it has been quite successful for visible minorities and, in particular, black Hispanics in areas like the American post office and so on. As the Member pointed out the other day, when you visit an American post office in Chicago, Los Angeles or New York, an overwhelming number of employees are black or Hispanics. It seems to me from my meetings in Washington that with women, especially at higher levels, the program has not been as successful. I may be mistaken.

In continuing his remarks on the success of the American legislation, could the Hon. Member tell us whether he thinks it has been of greater success with the blacks and other visible minorities than with women because of the impetus behind the racial equal rights movements and people like Martin Luther King? Women may not have had the same success as these groups have. I would appreciate the Hon. Member's further comment.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have no actual figures, but the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) is correct. I do not think that women have been as successful as have the black and Hispanic organizations in attaining the goals which all these minority groups have set for themselves. I suppose the reason for that is simple. The people in the groups with the political clout get the most.

In any area you look, you will see the Americans are far ahead of Canadians. The Americans are ahead because they accepted the fundamental principle, which is missing in this Bill, that pious resolutions and prayers will not accomplish the task and that educational programs and appealing to goodwill will not achieve the goal.

If I could just complete the sentence from the end of my speech, Mr. Speaker, the reason that the National Association of Manufacturers in the United States wants to continue its present system with the goals, the objectives and the target dates is not that they are nicer people than our employers but that, as they say very clearly: "We like the system because it tells us precisely what we are required to do. If the Government tells us what we are required to do, we will do it. If the numbers are not there and the goals are not there, if the target dates are not there, no matter what we do, we will be accused by some people that we have not done enough".

If the Conservative Government of Canada will not listen to representatives of minority groups or to representatives of labour unions or to spokespersons for church groups, all of whom have made clear their rejection of this Bill as it is presently written, I wish it would take the time to make inquiries from its friends. The Conservatives seem to be so friendly and ready to meet the needs, the requirements and the objectives of the business community, I wish they would take the time, make some effort—they could get our ambassador in Washington, who seems to have a little time—to contact the National Association of Manufacturers and find out why they are satisfied with the legislation as it is in the United States, and why they support the legislation as it is in the United States. If they did that, I am sure they would come back and be prepared to agree to amending the Bill along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) was mentioning the American program of mandatory affirmative action, employment equity. If I remember correctly, during the Second World War or thereabouts the American program was not mandatory. It was a voluntary program and the Americans found out that it did not work. They decided to change it in the 1960s. I am not sure of all the reasons they did so, but I know the Member for Winnipeg North is very well read and versed in this area. Perhaps he can elaborate on why this change was made.

I also understand there are some members of the American Cabinet who are talking about ending the affirmative action program in the United States, some of the more reactionary members of Mr. Reagan's own Cabinet. How widespread is that mood and why are they trying to do this if there is a feeling in the United States that this is a good program? Perhaps the Member could shed some light on those questions.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated, the Secretary of Labour in the United States, Bill Brock, has made very clear his support for the existing law and the existing system in the United States. The reasons are obvious. It works.

Let me make one thing clear. When we talk about employment equity and affirmative action, we are not saying to employers that we want them to hire unqualified members of minority groups for the job. That would be wrong and it would be stupid. We are saying that we want employers to hire qualified members of the minority groups.

Let me put on the record a few paragraphs from a letter which Joseph Rauh, a famous civil rights advocate in the United States, wrote to Congressman James Scheuer, himself a supporter of affirmative action and civil rights. There are, of course, differences about how laws can be interpreted and how they will work. Mr. Rauh was talking about whether medical colleges should be required to accept black applicants. He says, and it is a very good illustration:

> But in the light of 300 years of discrimination against Blacks, is it too much to ask that some preference be given to Blacks among qualified candidates for admission?

I stress "qualified candidates". Then in another letter he says:

> —where a Black applicant to medical school is fully qualified under the school's own standards of admission, may the school give him preference in admission as part of its affirmative action program even though a rival white male applicant has higher qualifications.
> The problem is not a qualified white against an unqualified Black—

What we are talking about is applications of qualified members of minority groups, that they must be given some assistance, a step up. That is what we are talking about in employment equity. That is what the Government refuses to address.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words concerning this particular Bill, perhaps in a different area than has been mentioned during second reading debate and during the committee stage of the Bill, perhaps something completely different as it relates to this Bill but something which I was thinking a moment ago applies to this Bill given the clauses that are under consideration.

The Official Opposition is saying that in Clause 3 the Government of Canada should include Departments of the Government of Canada and Crown corporations of the Government of Canada. Then Clauses 5 to 7 talk about an employer who has to file a report, a report on what, Mr. Speaker? A report not only on the occupational groups, but also on the salary ranges of employees. Why are salary ranges of employees there? Suppose for a moment that the salary ranges of employees of the federal Government had to be reported. What happens? A copy is therefore sent to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. Obviously the salary ranges would be submitted to determine whether there is discrimination within that particular group of employees.

Suppose there was a group of people hired in Canada who did the same job but received different wages in every town and city throughout the country. Suppose they were working for the same employer in the same job classification and performing the same work, but all received different salaries. I can list several occupations in Canada which earn different salaries from the same employer. According to this Bill, the employer has to report the salaries he pays. The Official Opposition is saying that the Government of Canada and Crown corporations should be included in that reporting. Suppose that the wage paid in Edmonton was below that paid in Calgary. Suppose the wage paid in Saskatchewan was lower still, but the wage paid in Manitoba was higher. We are doing a lot of supposing, Mr. Speaker, but the punch line is going to come very shortly.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): We suppose.

Mr. Baker: Suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the salary paid by the same employer in the Yukon and Northwest Territories was substantially higher for the same job in the same classification. Suppose that the wage paid by the same employer for the same job classification and absolutely the same work was $2 higher an hour in Halifax and Moncton than in Newfoundland. Suppose, again, that three separate wage rates were paid in British Columbia and that six different wage rates were paid in Ontario.

I am reading to you, Mr. Speaker, from a negotiated settlement agreed to by the unions which was announced on Friday by the Government of Canada, this is after the Charter came into effect last year, after the Human Rights Act came into effect, and after this Bill, which I believe is incorrectly called the employment equity Bill, came into existence.

I am bringing this up because it is what came to my attention when I looked at this particular Bill and saw that government Departments and Crown corporations were excluded, as defined under the Financial Administration Act. The Financial Administration Act lists dozens and dozens of Crown corporations. If the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) were to appoint a commission, it would be excluded as well because it is defined under the Financial Administration Act as a corporation.

Someone looking at this impartially would ask why a person in Newfoundland is paid $2 less per hour for doing the same job as a fellow in the next province is doing. In the Province of Ontario a person in Ottawa is paid a different wage from that of a person in Toronto. This is the case after the Charter of Rights was proclaimed and after royal commission reports. That only covers 16,800 federal employees.

I will give you another example, which is even worse. In another branch of the federal Government the one hundredth and second line of longitude separates a high salary from a low salary. Picture two icebreakers tied up at Victoria Island in Cambridge Bay as there will be next month. One icebreaker is from British Columbia and the other is from Newfoundland, Quebec, or one of the Atlantic provinces. Both ships are tied up at longitude 105o. One ship's crew is getting $200 more per month than is the other ship's crew for doing the same job in the same job classification for the same employer.

These people look at the Charter, at the employment equity Bill which is before the House, at all of the other legislation and at the Human Rights Act. Section 11 of the Human Rights Act says: "It is a discriminatory practice for an employer to establish or maintain differences in wages between male and female employees employed in the same establishment who are performing work of equal value in assessing the value of work".

Mr. Orlikow: Those are all men.

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman says that these are all men, but that is not exactly true, because some members of the ships' crews are women. However, he has a point that most of them are men. We get into a problem when we talk about equal pay for work of equal value. The law says that there must be equal pay for work of equal value, but there is no law in Canada with regard to equal pay for equal work. I do not know how the Canadian Human Rights Commission or the courts could not interpret equal pay for work of equal value to mean equal pay for equal work, but that is the interpretation. I cannot find anything that says "equal pay for equal work", but I can find "equal pay for work of equal value".

My point is that the 16,800 employees who fall under the Public Service Alliance of Canada and the general labour and trade group, the over 20,000 employees in the services sector, and the 3,000 employees in the ships crews sector look at the concepts of employment equity and equal pay for equal work or equal pay for work of equal value, and say that the Government, after the enactment of the Charter and all of the legislation, is not making much sense.

Let me conclude my point by explaining what the problem is and how it evolved. We must be honest when we consider this in the historical context.

This problem emerged several years ago when the unions and the Government suggested that employees should receive approximately the same monetary return as that given in the private sector. This began with a five cent an hour difference, to which the percentages were added. I suppose the unions and the present Government had no choice but to maintain some difference in their negotiations. However, I and I believe a member of the general public would consider it to be illegal and absolutely against the spirit of the law of Canada to sign agreements such as those agreed to on Friday and today by the federal Government. I believe it is even against the spirit of this Bill. It is against the spirit of the Charter and the spirit of the Canadian Human Rights Act.

It would be very interesting if the Government allowed the Official Opposition to change Clause 3 to allow corporations and Departments of the Government to be covered by this Bill so that they would have to report the salary ranges of employees to see if there was any discrimination.

The Human Rights Commission has responded to the point I am making by saying that this involves a negotiated settlement. While there is nothing in black and white that requires equal pay for equal work, it is written in black and white that there should be equal pay for work of equal value. I cannot imagine accepting the fact that you have equal pay for work of equal value but there is not equal pay for equal work.

I say to the Government of Canada and its unions that since the enforcement of the Charter and the Government's commitment to employment equity and equal pay for work of equal value, the Treasury Board should provide the money to bring the wages of those people who are performing the same job for the Government of Canada, in the same job classification, up to those of the person who is earning the highest wage in the same field.

Let us look at the occupations on the list. There is a $3 difference in precision working. There is a difference of at least $4 an hour in vehicle and heavy equipment maintenance. There is a difference of at least $4 in electrical installing and maintenance. There is a difference of over $2 an hour for different groups in machine driving operating. There is a difference of at least $3 an hour with respect to the manipulating subgroup working for the same employer and in the same job classification, depending on where one works in Canada. There is a $4 an hour difference for the woodworking subgroup, depending on where one is working. With respect to the pipe fitting subgroup, there is a $2 an hour difference. In Kingston, an area which the Minister of Employment and Immigration represents, it is substantially less than the wage settlements for the same group in Toronto.

I realize that the Government of Canada and the unions have a problem in negotiating a change to the system. However, the law of Canada is the law of Canada; the spirit of the law is the spirit of the law; the Canadian Human Rights Act is the Canadian Human Rights Act; the Charter is the Charter, and employment equity is employment equity. We cannot make a distinction between people because of where they live or where they happen to travel during their work.

The Government attempts to appear lily-white with respect to the question of employment equity and equal pay for equal work. That is simply not the case. The Treasury Board would certainly need much more money from the Government in order to bring the lowest paid workers to the level of the highest paid workers.

Today, Members of Parliament are receiving letters from their constituents who are pointing out that they are making less money than someone performing the same job in the next constituency. What should a Member of Parliament do? First, we phone the Human Rights Commission, which states that it does not have jurisdiction in this area because it only deals with equal pay for work of equal value. The union says that while the problem is serious, it cannot negotiate for enough money to bring every one up to the same standard. We are told by Treasury Board that this is an historical settlement which was negotiated with the union. There is nothing in the Charter or the employment equity Bill dealing with this situation. However, we know that the employee of the federal Government and anyone else who has looked into this situation is absolutely correct that it is total discrimination against certain workers because of where they live.

Newfoundland is the lowest on the scale in every negotiated salary as far as zone rates of pay are concerned. Under their negotiated contract, Newfoundland workers are paid $2, $3 and sometimes $4 an hour less for performing the same job for the federal Government. The Government of Canada says that it cannot cure the problem because of the Charter of Rights, the Bill of Rights or anything else.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. We still have a question and comment period.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made some valid points with respect to employment equity as it affects workers from different regions of Canada.

As he knows, this Bill asks that employers carry out employment equity only for those in designated groups. Those designated groups are women, visible minorities, native people and the disabled. It does not say anything about other groups or individuals who might be discriminated against on the basis of national or ethnic origin, religion, age or the region from which they come.

It is interesting to note that Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms bans discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability. That is nine different bases for outlawing discrimination. This Bill on employment equity deals with only four groups. I think that it is very important that we deal with those four groups, but I guess what the Hon. Member is saying to us is that there are other types of employment equity in the country that are not being dealt with.

The other Act he referred to is the Canadian Human Rights Act. In that Act discrimination is banned based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, marital status, family status, disability or conviction for an offence for which a pardon has been granted. The Canadian Human Rights Act is even broader than the Charter of Rights. Here we have a law that provides for employment equity for only four groups. The Abella Commission recommended that we legislate in that area, but that has not happened. Why does he think that there is this difference between some statutes in not allowing discrimination and this Bill, which only deals with four groups? Could he give us the reasons that he believes are the basis of that sort of discrimination between statutes?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) earlier today proposed to move a subamendment to the amendment now before the House. After hearing argument on the procedural acceptability of the subamendment I reserved my decision.

I am now ready to rule, and it is with regret that I must inform the Hon. Member that I cannot put her subamendment to the House. I listened carefully to the arguments, which point to the extent to which Clause 4 is related to the clauses included in the amendment presently before the House. However, the Chair must be guided by the practices of the House.

On December 15, 1971, the Hon. Russell Honey, then the Deputy Speaker stated:

> The difficulty is that when an Hon. Member proposes a sub-amendment he is under the constraint that he must not enlarge on, or differ in substance from, the amendment he is purporting to further amend.

There are further references to this effect in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition in Citation 438. Thus, it is with respect that I have to refuse to allow the subamendment of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Mr. Deans: I just want to be clear that that will not, however, rule out the possibility of our moving, if we wished, this subamendment as a new amendment after the amendment has been dealt with. It may necessitate, of course, carrying the debate over for another day, but that being the case I can understand the difficulty that you are faced with. We may have to do just that in order to have the amendment put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will check the procedureal acceptability of out what the Hon. Member has just said, and in the meantime we will carry on with the debate.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, perhaps, to put the thing into perspective and to give my answer to the hon. gentleman's question, let me say this. Let us take a look at giving credit here where it is due. As far as the Human Rights Act is concerned, as far as the Charter is concerned and as far as the Abella Commission is concerned, this is the present Government's only action toward what it calls employment equity. That is probably the problem right there, that this is really the only thing that the present Government has done or has any plans for doing during its one term in office. However, even looking at that, and to get even closer to the answer to the hon. gentleman's question, let me point out to him that even within the Bill itself, the commitment of the Government of Canada to what is the intent of the legislation is rather suspect. The reason it is suspect is that, first and foremost, as has been pointed out, a corporation that is a Department as defined in the Financial Admnistration Act is not included under the Bill. I might note that under the original legislation they had to include the words "at least proportionate to their representation" in Clause 4, which was a suggestion of the Hon. Member from Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). That was his suggestion at the first committee meeting that was held. That was the subject of a speech which he gave in the House the first day that the Bill was introduced, and the Government took that advice.

What I am referring to is the section that says "the Minister may"; everybody else "shall", but in this Bill the Minister may issue guidelines, the Minister may do this, the Minister may do that. You are telling the employers that they have to do something very hazy, and you are saying that the Minister may provide you with some direction. "You shall do this", and the employer does not know what he has to do, and the Minister is saying "Well, I may give you some guidelines."

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Member regarding Clause 7, which deals with the imposition of a fine of $50,000 if an employer failed to comply with Clause 6 and is guilty of an offence on summary conviction. The reason I want to ask the question is that he knows, as I do, that we tried to increase the fine to $500,000 to make it half a million bucks— something really meaningful. Fifty thousand dollars to some employers, which he knows very well, will not make a damn bit of difference. Why should I, as an employer, who has over the years failed to supply adequate entrance to my building by installing ramps, or failed to supply adequate safety in the building by providing elevators which can be worked by people who may be handicapped, deaf or, for that matter, blind, spend $50,000 when I can get away with all that? If I am caught, I will pay the $50,000 because it is cheaper to pay $50,000 than to put half a million dollars into repairing the building, making it accessible for egress and ingress. What does the Hon. Member think about that?

Mr. Baker: In Clause 7 under discussion, it is an employer who fails to comply with Clause 6. If you look at Clause 6 and then you go back to Clause 4, most employers will not know what they are being asked to do. I just noticed again it says, "the occupational groups of the employer". It should have read, "the occupational groups of the employees". However, I do not fault the drafters of the legislation. We have some very impressive drafters in this country, an expert group of people. The problem is the material you give to a draftsman; that is what determines the accuracy of the legislation. We should not blame these errors on the drafters of the legislation. They are very expert people. It is the Government of Canada that does not know what it is doing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has a very short question or comment?

Mr. Nystrom: The Member has talked very eloquently about employment equity. All I want to know is why the Liberal Party did not introduce the concept of employment equity when it forward the Government?

Mr. Baker: We were responsible for the Human Rights Act, the Charter, and what is called human rights equity in employment throughout the Public Service, and it has been decimated by this Government. The Bill before the House is totally deficient. It should have been the logical conclusion to what was set before and done by the previous Government. The Hon. Member knows that the Liberal Party has stood by people as far as employment equity is concerned. It is this Government which has not fulfilled its mandate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—FUNDING OF COLOURED DAIRY CATTLE RESEARCH. (B) APPROVAL OF PRODUCT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on April 7, I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) why the federal Government was providing some $10 million to a group of rich American investors called Dreamstreet Limited to do some phoney research on dairy cattle. It was in relation to whether Holstein cattle were black and white or red and white. The Minister, in responding to my question, essentially said that he did not know too much about it, that in fact he had received representation on both sides of the issue and had asked for advice from the Holstein-Friesian Association of Canada.

I pointed out in my supplementary question that Dr. Réjean Bouchard, the Co-ordinator of Animal Research, said in a statement to the press: "Everyone who was consulted on the project walked away from it". I asked why the Minister was trying to put these Dreamstreet people, the rich investors from Wall Street, on easy street with $10 million of Canadian taxpayers' money. The Minister then completely welched on the matter and said that he had not approved it, that it was approved by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay). He was obviously trying to put the responsibility on Holstein Canada, but it seems to me that it is not its responsibility. It is the responsibility of the Government to decide whether the project goes forward and $10 million of the taxpayers' money is used for essentially a laundering process to recycle Canadian taxpayers' money to the United States.

If the Minister reads the response of the Holstein-Friesian Association of Canada, which put out a press release on April 7, he will find that the secrecy of the project is inappropriate, that a comparison of red and white Holsteins with black and white Holsteins is not in itself worth undertaking, that the current project description is not adequate nor relevant to the current and future business of dairy farming in Canada and that the project must provide substantial direct benefit to Canadian Holstein breeders.

I talked with David Clemens a few days after putting the question and he said as the project had been approved, it was really garbage and had no research benefits. I understand that the Holstein-Friesian Association would like to see the project reconstituted to be of some value, but at the same time we do have $10 million of taxpayers' money committed to Dreamstreet to do some research. Farmers are very upset and concerned about this. They say that if the Government has this kind of money to do unnecessary research, why does it not have adequate research funds to do worth-while projects for agriculture.

We ask ourselves why the Minister put pressure on the Department of National Revenue to approve this project. We heard it was turned down three or four times. Or was it the Prime Minister's Office which put the pressure on the Department of National Revenue? Who is Dreamstreet? There have been a lot of reports. We received one report from a farmer who said he had heard that in 1984, it was a company which was some $11 million in debt in the United States and it had to reorganize. There is a story in the March edition of the Holstein-Friesian World of a sale at Hyperian Farms in New York State where some 37 lots of cattle were sold for $9 million. One animal actually sold for $1.5 million. However, when it was checked a month later, it was found no money had ever changed hands. No pedigrees were ever exchanged.

What kind of a scam was going on there as reported in the Holstein-Fresian World? What kind of scam is going on in Canada today? What farmers are concerned about is that dozens and dozens, perhaps even hundreds, of farmers will be left holding the bag, having sold animals, having them left on their farms and not receiving payment for them. We must really ask ourselves: Is it appropriate that the Government of Canada is spending $10 million to set up the largest dairy herd in Canada, owned by an American investment group from New York State?

In the end, I think we will find out that this is the largest hoax which has even been perpetrated on the dairy industry in Canada, and on the Holstein-Friesian Association. It seems that the Minister is sitting on his hands and making no decisions. He is doing nothing to stop this scam. He should either stop it immediately or, if he does not have the courage, then he should set up a commission of inquiry to look into the matter. The whole idea of it really smells. Canadian dairymen are upset. They want the Government to take action. They do not want the Minister of Agriculture sitting on his hands and letting this thing continue on in the way it has been going.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I take great delight in being able to respond to this particular question of the Hon. Member. I do so because of the nature of the question in the first place. I wish to set the record straight on two particular points.

First, in looking for the perpetrator of the hoax, I can tell the Hon. Member that he is now practising law in Montreal. He is the former Minister of Finance. His name is Marc Lalonde. I say this because the scientific tax credit was brought in under the previous Liberal Government, of which the Hon. Member was a member. So if we are looking for the perpetrator, we now know where to find him.

The Hon. Member opposite suggests that the Minister overruled his departmental officials by approving funds for Dreamstreet Holsteins Incorporated, funds to be used in developing a dairy herd research project in Ontario. There is no question about it. The facts are very clear. Neither the Minister nor any official in the Department of Agriculture recommended or approved any such project. A tax credit for this project was approved under a Revenue Canada program introduced by the previous Liberal Government, namely, the scientific research tax credit. That was a boondoggle of magnificent proportions perpetrated by the former Government.

When we took office, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) took immediate measures to curtail this program and develop new technical guidelines for tightening up the system of scientific tax credits. The Dreamstreet project met the old program criteria. Since laws cannot be passed retroactively, Revenue Canada ruled that it qualified for tax benefits.

Mr. Foster: It was approved in December of 1985 and you know it.

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) says that the research project is "phoney". We are used to hearing better language from the Hon. Member. I suppose in his embarrassment with respect to how this program was initiated, he has had to resort to that type of language.

Due to the efforts of the present Minister of Agriculture, the company has indicated a willingness to be flexible with its plans. As a matter of fact, officials from Agriculture Canada attended a meeting on April 17 involving the company, representatives of the Holstein association and the University of Guelph. Progress is being made along these lines to bring this research in line with the over-all research of Agriculture Canada. I might add that Agriculture Canada conducts research to the tune of about $240 million per year, including more than $7 million annually for the dairy industry, an industry which is very important to many parts of the country. I point out that it is especially important to my riding of Simcoe North.

Almost half of dairy research expenditures have been paid for by the Government of Canada. This is why we are looking to expand this research by involving the private sector to a greater extent. We are presently co-operating with the Holstein association, Semex Canada and the Canadian Association of Animal Breeders, which are all heavily involved in this very important dairy research.

PENITENTIARIES—PROJECTED CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN MANICOUAGAN CONSTITUENCY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I raised the question of whether or not it was proper for the Government of Canada to be building a penitentiary in the Prime Minister's riding. That is the subject I wish to raise this evening.

I have actually raised this subject in the House of Commons twice, and I wish to refer to both times. I raised it once with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and once with the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty). I asked the Minister of Justice to try to explain why the penitentiary was going ahead while the Nielsen task force had put the question up in the air and the Government had asked the committees to study the various matters that were recommended by the Nielsen task force. I also asked the Solicitor General what was the justification for building that penitentiary at the same time as the committee was being asked in good faith to look at a variety of options, including that of not proceeding with the penitentiary.

I find it disturbing that the Government has the money to build the penitentiary in the Prime Minister's riding at a time when the Parole Service is deteriorating to the point where parole officers themselves have taken the unprecedented step of going public and saying that with the caseload building up the way it is, the public is at risk. They are saying they are not able to provide adequate street supervision for offenders.

The Solicitor General wants us to take him as an enlightened correctional authority. He recognizes that street supervision in a proper case is a lot beter than incarceration. Street supervision is more rehabilitative. It gives the offender the opportunity to deal with the shortcomings that caused him to go to prison, whether it is drinking, associating with the wrong people, living in the wrong part of town or not having proper ways of dealing with his own feelings of aggression and hostility. All these problems are dealt with much more effectively under street supervision than behind bars. Of course, there is a residue of offenders from whom street supervision does not provide the public with enough protection who should be behind bars. There is no doubt, however, that the Solicitor General wants Canadians to believe that he thinks effective street supervision is a good alternative. Not only is it more effective from the point of view of rehabilitation, but it is a lot cheaper.

We would have expected a rational Government to make sure that the parole system works well and that it is the alternative that is being presented to the Canadian people. However, we are seeing perhaps the most expensive prison in the history of Canada being built right in the middle of the Prime Minister's riding. I do not think that is a defensible position, particularly when the Government is inviting us to take seriously the things the Nielsen task force has recommended to us and, in particular, the option of not building the penitentiary. The Solicitor General went so far as to say that the question of the penitentiary was not open. He felt that the show had to go on and that they had to go on making the decisions. I do not think this is the correct decision.

I would like to add that I had a chance to discuss this matter further with the Solicitor General at the Justice and Solicitor General Committee. In that committee, he said that this penitentiary was one that I had in effect approved while I was Solicitor General. He proved that by showing that I had in the past endorsed an extension to Drummond Penitentiary. He asked me how I felt about that. I would like to confess that I thought that that extension to Drummond had actually been built. I thought that we were talking about a further addition of cells in the Quebec region. Now I have to react and ask the Government to react to that challenge. I do so just by looking at the bottom line.

This penitentiary is over four times as expensive as the addition that might have been built to Drummond, and would have been built if the instructions that I had given and the decision taken by the former Government had been followed. However one looks at it, the penitentiary in the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has to be looked at as nothing but politics and something very unnecessary.

Mr. Speaker, you will be interested in the prediction which I am about to make in my remaining minute. If more prison cells have to be built, they should be built in western Canada. Let us look at the offender population, from where offenders come, and the fairness of building extra cell capacity in Quebec when the crying need is for extra cell capacity in western Canada. People in every part of the country like to believe that there are no criminals from their part of the country. However, I am afraid that the only way these cells in Quebec will be properly used will be by moving inmates from western Canada for incarceration in the Province of Quebec. There will be language problems and the unfairness of inmates not being close to their families or the communities to which they will return upon release. It is a mistake and it is a misallocation of resources.

I put it to the Minister's mouthpiece tonight, whoever it will be, to reverse this terrible decision and to countermand the decision made by the Prime Minister. He should announce that more money will be put into parole, that less money will be put into this penitentiary, and that if more cells are built, they will be built in western Canada so that offenders convicted there will be able to serve their time there, not be required to go to the Prime Minister's riding to serve their sentences.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, neither you nor I can accept the fact that there are worse criminals in western Canada than there are in any other part of the country. We just cannot accept the Hon. Member's challenge. Further, I encourage him to request his colleagues in the Opposition and in the Senate to pass Bill C-67 and Bill C-68, and a lot of his wishes will be accomplished. He would certainly be working in a positive manner if he worked in that direction.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond further to the issue raised by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) during the Oral Question Period of March 25, 1986, with regard to the construction of a 240-inmate protective custody unit at Port Cartier, Quebec.

As the Hon. Member will recall, the construction of a protective custody facility in Quebec was originally announced on his behalf, as the then Solicitor General, in April, 1984. The need for protective custody accommodation still exists, but the location for the new institution has been changed in the interests of socio-economic development, to alleviate severely distressed conditions in the Port Cartier area.

The institution at Port Cartier will meet the accommodation needs for protective custody inmates in the Province of Quebec. It is projected that 230 cells will be required by 1993-94. It will replace the outdated protective facilities at Laval Institution. This institution, formerly called St. Vincent de Paul, was opened in 1873 and has been identified for phase-out since the late 1970s. Because of its age and structure, it cannot be renovated or operated economically for a higher security population at current standards. This new institution also conforms to the recommendations of the parliamentary subcommittee report on the penitentiary system, that the Correctional Service of Canada have dedicated protective custody institutions to house this special population and provide sufficient programming.

Historically speaking, penitentiaries have traditionally been built to serve geographical areas or the needs of newly created provinces. In more recent years, advancements in technology and service delivery have meant that the interests of regional development, particularly in areas under distress, can be taken into great consideration in site selection. Springhill Institution in Springhill, Nova Scotia, is an example in point, as is the area in the Miramichi region of New Brunswick where the Atlantic Institution is nearing completion.

Although the location of the new institution may be considered as relatively remote from Montreal, Port Cartier has the necessary infrastructure in place to support the needs of a penitentiary, and program delivery to inmates will not suffer because of its location. However, because of its location, the Correctional Service of Canada will endeavour to facilitate the maintenance of family ties where possible. It has, for example, in the past organized additional transportation for visitors from Newfoundland to visit inmates housed on the mainland of Atlantic Canada and has modified procedures to enable extended family visits for inmates.

The new institution will have significant and continuing beneficial economic impact on the community. Of an estimated capital cost of $68.2 million, a substantial portion will be spent on local construction materials, goods and services. It is projected that 700 job years will be created over the 1985-88 period.

REGULATIONS—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF TASK FORCE CREATED TO STUDY CERTAIN ASPECTS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on April 16, 1986, I asked the Minister responsible for regulations (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to inform the House on the latest developments in this area.

As you know, in the summer of 1984 our Government proposed three very important themes to the Canadian people.

Reconciliation and harmonious relations with the provinces were some of our priorities. To date, we have concluded both the Eastern and Western Accords, and, Mr. Speaker, as a Quebecer I can state that relations between Quebec and Ottawa have never been better than today, compared with what they were during the last twenty years when the Liberals governed this country and allowed a climate of hostility to develop between Quebec and Ottawa.

We also spoke of liberalizing trade relations with our main trading partner, the United States of America.

In this area we have made tremendous progress, so much so that the Americans sent signals that they were becoming wary of this process of liberalizing our trade relations because they understood that the Government of Canada was determined to negotiate in earnest, while clearly respecting the interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, we also said that our Government would respect and get closer to the private sector, the only valid partner for a progressive government. We wanted to rid it of the bureaucratic burden of obsolete regulations and red tape.

As early as September 18, 1984, only two weeks after Canadians approved our election program, we announced that a departmental task force had been created to examine Government programs. On November 16, 1984, a group of responsible Canadians, under the chairmanship of Mr. Philip Aspinal, formed the private sector advisory group. This group, which itself was to be sub-divided into nineteen sub-task forces, examined over 1,000 government programs representing nearly $100 billion in expenditures.

On March 11, 1986, the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Nielsen) tabled the Nielsen Report in the House, a report drafted by the task force responsible for examining programs. The House referred the various parts of the report to various standing committees of the House, for assessment, so that the committees could make their own recommendations as soon as possible to the House, with the co-operation of Members from all three political parties.

Mr. Speaker, we know that a sound and fair assessment of current programs and legislation by the various parliamentary committees will make it possible to recommend, to legislators and Government officials, ways of achieving substantial savings.

Committee members will also have to consider the additional and very substantial economic impact that will surely result from the Nielsen report, and I am thinking of lower production costs for goods and services offered by Canadian companies.

Hon. Members will have to realize that pressure groups and municipal and provincial governments can no longer afford to think and regulate within a local, mini-regional or regional framework. Today, legislators must expand their thinking to fit the national and often even the global context. The chair on which we sit in our home may come from Sweden, while we are watching the news on an American network and our TV is imported from North Korea.

Hon. Members will have to assess the various legal irritants between provinces, construction codes, parity committees and employment permits that apply only province-wide. We will have to review our labour laws, transport legislation, and the regulations of various departments such as Fisheries, Agriculture and Environment, including areas such as food. When talking about the Province of Quebec we will have to consider the fact those taxpayers have to file two returns, one with Quebec City and one with Ottawa.

We will have to take a second look at duplication in legislation and policies concerning the development of our natural resources and matters related to northern regions. We will have to put an end to overlapping foreign programs and duplication in regional industry assistance.

Mr. Speaker, we will have to urge all Canadian men and women to realize that we can no longer live as if we were not part of the whole world. Manufacturers had to face this fact, federal and provincial legislators must now follow suit, and unions will no longer be able to ignore this timely, universal and urgent truth.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) for the interest he has demonstrated in this very important Government initiative. It is characteristic of his ongoing involvement in, and dedication to, the administrative and economic issues of Quebec and Canada and how they work together.

On February 13, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) rose in the House and announced the first ever federal regulatory policy. That statement of policy is one part of our eight-point regulatory strategy that will, by improving the management of Government, by removing obstacles to growth, and by encouraging private initiative, play a major role in the Government's agenda for economic renewal.

Our regulatory policy was developed from the work done in this area by the task force on program review. In its report, the study team provided a three-part diagnosis of Canada's regulatory situation. It pointed out that the cumulative effect of regulation at the three levels of Government constitutes an enormous impediment to economic growth, initiatives, enterprise, and personal freedom in Canada. It went on to say that elected representatives do not have adequate control over regulation and the regulatory system. Finally, it concluded this indictment by indicating that the public has too little access to and involvement in the development and review of regulation.

Our strategy is designed to respond to the problems identified by the task force. The Government House Leader has assumed the additional role of Minister responsible for Regulatory Affairs. In March of this year he provided details of 43 separate regulatory program initiatives currently being undertaken by the Government. Work is already underway on these reforms and will lead to far-ranging practical improvements in a broad cross-section of federal regulatory programs. At the same time, the Minister announced a new citizens code of regulatory fairness. This code will provide a yardstick against which the administrative performance of the Government can be measured.

The Member for Levis has expressed particular interest in the area of federal-provincial co-operation. In response to his earlier question, the Government House Leader pointed out that preliminary meetings have already taken place on this subject between Mr. Reed Scowen, chairman of the Quebec task force, and federal officials. In this context, I want to assure the Hon. member that the Government will place priority on increased regulatory co-operation with the provinces with a view to addressing the over-all regulatory burden on Canadians and eliminating wasteful duplication.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move that the sixth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments presented to the House on Wednesday, April 16, 1986, be concurred in. As Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, I am pleased to ask for the concurrence of this report of the committee.

The purpose of the report is to draw to the attention of the House certain amendments to the regulations governing the Canadian Home Insulation Program, amendments which, in the view of the joint committee, were not authorized by the enabling legislation and which resulted in considerable unfairness to Canadians.

Before I deal with the report at greater length, I would like to comment briefly on a reply of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) given last Friday to a question by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). In her reply the Minister stated that the report of the joint committee was:

—based on misleading and inaccurate analyses of the situation.

The Minister went on to state that criticisms by the committee were directed at measures which she said were announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8 on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). Finally, the Minister questioned the correctness of the committee's conclusion that some homeowners were unfairly treated. As to the last point, I believe that the House will be the judge of the correctness of the report.

Concerning the other two matters, I point out to the Minister that the only announcement made on November 8 was that the Canadian Home Insulation Program would gradually be phased out. This was a budgetary decision of the Government with which the report does not take issue. It is the process that was followed in implementing this decision with which the joint committee takes issue. I believe the Minister must accept responsibility for this aspect of the situation.

I have in hand the press release issued by the Minister announcing that starting on January 1, 1985, until termination:

> The CHIP contribution to eligible costs will be reduced from 60 per cent to 33-1/3 per cent.

The press release, which is the one mentioned in our sixth report, goes on to state:

> Miss Carney stated that the 60 per cent contribution by CHIP will apply to all commitments to purchase eligible conservation materials and services signed by applicants before January 1, 1985, if the related conservation work is completed by March 31, 1985.

As for the report being based on inaccurate or misleading information, I think this is an assertion upon which the Minister should reflect. It is a rather serious matter to charge a committee of the House with misleading Members of Parliament. In any event, the factual information contained in the committee's report comes from the Minister's own officials and press releases. If our committee has been misled by these, it is up to the Minister to explain.

I would now like to turn to the Sixth Report of the Joint Committee. I want to emphasize that this is a unanimous report of a committee on which members of all Parties and both Houses are represented. It is not a partisan report.

I would like to explain the factual situations in terms of the report. Until January 18, 1985, applicants under the Canadian Home Insulation Program were entitled to a payment representing 60 per cent of the cost of insulating a family housing unit or residential building. As part of the phasing out of the program, which was a policy of the new Government, it was decided to reduce the level of contributions from 60 per cent to 33-1/3 per cent of insulating costs. Applicants could maintain their entitlement to the higher rate of contribution if they met two conditions: first, they had to register a purchase commitment by December 31, 1984; and second, they had to complete the insulation work on their residences by the end of March 1985.

Lest the Minister misunderstand the purpose of our report, permit me to emphasize that these policy decisions are not objected to as such by the committee. The committee recognizes that these are decisions which are for the Government and its Ministers to make. However, the decisions that were announced on November 16, 1984, were not reflected in the regulations governing the payment of CHIP grants until some three months later; that is, on January 17, 1985. On that date, two amendments were made to the regulations and were later registered as SOR/85-85 and SOR/85-86. It is to these amendments that the joint committee objects.

Although the amendments were adopted some 17 days after December 31, 1984, they nevertheless required applicants to meet the two conditions I outlined earlier in order to obtain a grant representing the full 60 per cent of insulating costs. The joint committee had before it two regulatory amendments which were made on January 17, 1985, but which required CHIP applicants to have registered their purchase commitments 17 days before the date of the regulations as a legal condition of obtaining the higher contribution. In effect, these amendments imposed a retroactive requirement on home owners.

Members of the House will agree that retroactive regulations are undesirable. Not only are they undesirable and offensive but by clear precedent they are also illegal unless they are sanctioned clearly by Parliament. The relevant legislation did not give any authority to make retroactive regulations. It is an established principle of law that subordinate laws made by the executive may not have a retroactive application unless this is expressly authorized by the Statutes pursuant to which they are made. If the condition according to which an applicant had to register a purchase commitment was illegal, it follows then that applicants who met the second condition, the completion of the insulation work by the end of March 1985, were entitled to the higher rate of contribution after January 17 irrespective of whether or not they had registered a purchase commitment.

The Department took the position in defence of what it had done that most applicants were aware before December 31 that they should register a commitment. The only place where such a requirement was expressed, however, was in the Minister's press release. A press release is not a legal instrument. As the committee said in its report:

> Citizens have a right to rely exclusively on the laws adopted by Parliament and its delegates and should not be made to govern their conduct and affairs in accordance with press releases and other public announcements. The right of all to the equal protection and benefit of the law must always come ahead of administrative convenience or expediency and in no circumstances should citizens be expected or compelled to obey anything but the published laws of Canada.

This, Mr. Speaker, is what the report of the joint committee is all about. When our committee sought an explanation from the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, it was assured in a letter received from the Deputy Minister the following:

> The 83,950 signed commitments which were registered with CHIP by December 31st, 1984, are evidence that the Minister's announcement was effectively communicated to the public.

I want to reiterate that citizens cannot, in a society founded on the rule of law, be expected to obey announcements that have no legal force whatsoever.

In committee, when we asked the representative of the Department how many applicants had missed the deadline of December 31, 1984, we were informed of the following:

Unfortunately, statistics were not kept on the number of registrations that were rejected.

This is indeed unfortunate. You will agree, Mr. Speaker, that an injustice done to a few is just as serious as an injustice done to the many. As we put it in our report, that many applicants knew of the Minister's intention to modify the law will not mask the failure in fairness to those who did not. These applicants were never even given the chance to preserve their entitlement to the higher rate of contribution. By the time the regulations were amended, it was too late.

This problem is entirely the result of the executive's failure to amend the regulations in good time. If the Minister's officials had time to draft a series of press releases as early as November, 1984, surely they had enough time to draft the appropriate amendments to the regulations. These amendments could then have been adopted before December 31 so as to give the applicants adequate notice of the new requirements. Because they were not, a distinction was made between two groups of applicants: those who chose to register their purchase commitment on the basis of the Minister's announcement and thereby preserved their entitlement to a 60 per cent contribution and those who did not hear of that requirement until it was too late and thereby lost their entitlement to the higher contribution.

In itself, the imposition of a registration requirement retroactively was illegal and a further group of applicants were deprived of the higher contribution notwithstanding the fact that they had met all of the legal requirements imposed by the regulations governing the payment of CHIP grants. In light of this, Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree that members of the joint committee were justified to conclude that the amendments reported upon were not authorized by the enabling legislation, amounted to an unusual use of the powers granted by Parliament and infringed on the rule of law and the principles of fairness and equity.

Lest there be some sense that this is an abstract or theoretical problem, I would venture to say that every Member of the Chamber had direct personal experience, as a Member of Parliament, with individuals who missed the deadline. I know that I did in my office and I know that other members of the committee did. I suggest that all Members of Parliament did. We are talking about something that is very concrete and real to our constituents.

This is not the first occasion on which the committee has dealt with a situation of this kind. In drawing these particular amendments to the attention of the House, we wish to underscore the general principle that regulatory initiatives which impose new burdens on citizens or which detrimentally affect their rights should be announced and enacted as a part of a law a reasonable time before they are to come into effect. I express the hope that this is a principle every parliamentarian, of whichever Party, can agree to and support. It is a principle which is afforded by the Government in its regulatory reform policy. It is a principle that must be maintained by all of us as legislators and representatives of the people.

My purpose in asking the House to concur in the sixth report of the joint committee is for the House to send a clear message to all regulation-making authorities that it supports that general principle and that it intends to be vigilant in ensuring that it is respected in practice. Regulations generally impact on the daily lives of Canadians to a far greater degree than the statutes pursuant to which they are made. It is the responsibility of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, a committee which I have the honour to chair, together with Senator Nurgitz and the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), to make certain that these subordinate laws are fair, non-discriminatory, and conform to the authority granted by Parliament. Respect for these values requires each of us to ensure that no legal obligations are imposed upon Canadians except those which Parliament itself has approved or authorized the executive to enact. For the making of laws, we must account to the people. When we delegate our legislative authority to the executive, we have a duty to hold it accountable for its exercise of authority.

The principles outlined in the sixth report of the joint committee deserve the support of all Members of the House. As I mentioned earlier, they have the support of all members of the committee, of all Parties and of both Houses, and I pray the House will add its support today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party to take part in this debate. I consider it to be a non-partisan debate, as far as that is possible in the House, because the issues are non-partisan issues. I congratulate the Hon. Member for York Cente (Mr. Kaplan). He is a former Minister, a senior Member of the House, and a co-chairman of the committee. I think he gave a very fine, very fair, and very important speech as we embark upon an era of parliamentary reform in which Parliament will try to keep the bureaucracy and executive accountable to the people of Canada.

I am a new member of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. I confess that when I first attended one of its meetings a few months ago, I was confused and a little leery about dealing with what I considered to be picky, little things at that time. However, over the months I began to realize that it was a very important committee in that it dealt with the laws affecting the day-to-day lives of individuals, the general enabling laws passed by Parliament.

I will try to explain in a more simple way to Canadians how the committee works. The committee considers all regulations and statutory instruments. For example, let us say that Parliament passes a law dealing with wharfs in the Province of British Columbia or in Atlantic Canada and, as a result, there are wharfage fees for those people who tie up their boats and regulations affecting how long their boats can be tied up, when the wharfs are closed, and so on. Parliament could not include all that in one Act of Parliament. It would be a huge Act of Parliament, and we could not anticipate what would happen in different situations. Therefore, Parliament passes a general law making provisions for wharfs, for moneys, for ways in which they will be controlled, for personnel and so on.

Following that, Parliament says the authority, the bureaucracy, the Governor in Council, or Cabinet can pass a number of regulations dealing with wharfs. Cabinet has to sign all the regulations and so on. Since there are thousands and thousands of them, I suspect that they cannot look at every one of them, even as good intentioned as cabinet Ministers may be. Sometimes unjust regulations go by. Sometimes people are charged fees when there is no authority for it. Sometimes people cannot tie up their boats when there is no authority for it. Perhaps I am over-simplifying the matter, but that is the way it works.

When the committee looks at the wharfs, it may see that there has been a wrong exercise of power on the part of some Department, such as the Department of Transport or the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Perhaps the Department has issued a regulation which does not really fit in with the power in the Act. The committee has many standards when it looks at Orders in Council, but I will not go through all of them. There are two lawyers who work with the committee and go through all the statutory regulations. It will write, for example, to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans—and I see the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) present in the Chamber this morning—and say that something does not fit in with the power in the Act. When the committee writes under the joint signature of a Conservative Senator, a Liberal MP, and a Conservative MP, we start seeing changes in the Department. This is all "behind the scenes" work in Parliament, but it is very important work because it ensures that the rule of law and citizens' rights are respected. I think everyone in the House would agree with that.

In my experience with the committee, we have dealt with transportation fees and rates and agricultural matters. The committee has been involved in a host of things. As the Hon. Member for York Centre and as the committee indicated, citizens have the right to rely exclusively upon the laws adopted by the Parliament of Canada.

The particular issue before the House now is a very interesting one. The Government brought in the program known as CHIP. Many Canadians know about it. I believe the Government has spent over $700 million under this program since 1977. It was a very successful program. The price of oil was rising and it was deemed appropriate that Canadians, who are the biggest energy users per capita in the world, should start conserving. The Government indicated that it would help those persons who insulated their homes, because Canadian houses were notoriously poorly insulated, by giving them a grant of up to 60 per cent. In my own case, I think it was before 1979 that I took advantage of the program. I fixed up my house, as did many other Canadians. It was a good deal.

Mr. Friesen: Where is your home?

Mr. Waddell: In Vancouver. It was a good deal. I think I got $500 from the Government, and I paid the rest, to have my house insulated so that I would use less energy.

The Government decided—and some of us in the House disagreed—to phase out some conservation programs such as CHIP and the off-oil program. The off-oil program gave grants to people to go from oil, which is a dramatically depleting resource in Canada, to natural gas of which Canada has a lot. That program and CHIP were to be ended; they were to be phased out. The Government indicated that after December 31, 1984, it would reduce the 60 per cent grant to 33-1/3 per cent. That is what the Government intended to do, but it turned around and did it by press release. It simply made an announcement. By law it is required to publish it in The Canada Gazette. I know a few lawyers who spend their evenings reading The Canada Gazette, but few Canadians do so. Perhaps you do, Mr. Speaker, because you are always on the ball. Nevertheless, that is the rule of law in Canada. Orders in Council must be gazetted before they come into force.

The Government only wanted applicants to be reimbursed for 60 per cent of their insulation costs until December 31, 1984, and then for 33-1/3 per cent thereafter. However, the regulation was not gazetted until January 18, 1985. In my view those applicants were legally entitled to the 60 per cent. I think the case was set out beyond any shadow of a doubt by the Hon. Member who last spoke. We will hear from the Government and the committee.

The committee was told that applications dated after December 31, 1985 received by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources claiming a 60 per cent rebate were thrown in the wastepaper basket and the Department sent out new applications saying you could get a 33 per cent grant. The Department says there was no record kept of those rejected registrations, and we do not know how many were wrongly dealt with. I want to give the Government notice that I will be filing an application under the Freedom of Information Act to try to find out whether the Department has been altogether truthful with us. Quite frankly, I do not believe the Department. I think there are records, and I think we should a look into the matter.

"Unfortunately, statistics were not kept on the number of registrations that were rejected."

That is what the Department told the committee. I think we have to look at that further and I will ask that question of the Government spokesperson today in the debate.

There is a general presumption in law that legislation is not retroactive, except in budgetary cases. In the Budget you can announce what you are going to do and then you enact the legislation. It is legal for Parliament to enact legislation that is retroactive, although there is some problem in criminal matters. Generally, we do not like enacting retroactive law in criminal matters because someone could do something which did not seem illegal when he or she did it.

The Government can clearly enact retroactive legislation, but that is not what happened in this case. People should not be misled by the Government if it tries to say otherwise and I hope the Government will not try to say that. It is clear from common law that regulations may not be made retroactively unless the enabling legislation specifically permits this. In other words, if we pass the law and say the regulations under the law can be made retroactive, that is fine. I do not think in this case there was any legislation passed that enabled regulations to be passed retroactively. If there was, I challenge the Government to show us. There is no mention in the Canadian Home Insulation Act and the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act, the two enabling pieces of legislation pertaining to CHIP, and I have looked at them, that regulations can be made retroactively. Therefore, the regulations are ultra vires because there was no authority for them to be made retroactively.

I do not want to say that the regulations made on January 18 were illegal in that the program was to be cut to a grant of only 33-1/3 per cent from a grant of 60 per cent, because in my view that is legal. After regulations are gazetted they are legal. But in the period between December 31 to January 18 there was no law on the books to allow the Government to send back those applications. The Government has to act according to the law. It should have taken the applications for the full 60 per cent. In order for the Government to have proceeded legally, the regulation would have had to be gazetted on Decemebr 31, 1984.

Mr. Speaker, in Parliament it is very important to be fair to all Canadians. The law must apply to the Government of Canada as it does to the average Canadian. And I feel that these regulations were neither legal nor fair in covering the period from December 31, 1984 to January 18, 1985.

[English]

Despite the fact that the press release was issued, the public is deemed aware of a regulation only after the time it is published in The Canada Gazette. As I said, Mr. Speaker, we do not stay up all night reading the Gazette but this is the legal jurisprudence of Canada, the law of Canada. It is not fair not to give the public proper notice that their rights are being affected. December 31 was not early enough. There should have been earlier notice, that is, publication in The Canada Gazette. That should have been done one month in advance.

There are two other points. One deals with conservation. Conservation is a very important area for Canadians. While oil prices are going down, let us not forget that we should continue with conservation. That is why this particular statute is very important. Second, the jurisdiction, the scope of this Committee, has been expanded. The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Statutory Instruments will now be able to bring one regulation to this Parliament under the new rules and this Parliament will have the power to throw out the regulation. That is an important power. It is indicative of a non-partisan attitude in all parts of the House from the Conservative benches right through.

Let us look at what is happening with regulations outside of the statutes that are running people's lives. I expressed the opinion that I would like to see even the scope of the statutory and regulations committee expanded to include Government agencies as well as the Cabinet. Direct cabinet regulations, the ones that Cabinet just approve and do not make are not subject to the scrutiny of our committee. If you think about it, Mr. Speaker, TV and cable, regulation of your fees, telephone, transportation, airlines, what you watch on TV and what you hear on the radio are all covered. There are a lot of orders and regulations not covered.

It is not ironic that the Department of Energy was caught in this matter. The Department has become a touch arrogant. It might be because it has had so much legislation in the past six years with the National Energy Program, then its dismantling. The Department has been used to doing things very quickly. In this case it did something illegally and was caught by this committee. I do not want to give the impression that I am really berating the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, because this is a lesson of which all Government Departments should take heed. This could happen to any Government Department. They must be more responsible in passing regulations. They will be scrutinized more by Parliament. The feeling throughout the House is that we want accountability and control over regulations which are affecting people's lives. I think that is healthy.

I ask the Government to welcome this report from an all-Party committee in the spirit in which it was offered; that is, that the Government should accept that there is a regulatory problem. It should announce that in the future it will act differently. It should also consider the matter of those people who applied between December 31, 1984, and January 18, 1985. By law those people should have received the full grant of 60 per cent rather than the half grant of 33 per cent. This is a very important case and I ask the Government to accept it in the spirit in which the committee brings it to its attention.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, in my own remarks I expressed the hope that the House would support the committee rather than the Minister in the up-coming vote on this matter. What would my colleague's view be if the House failed to support the committee? How would that affect his own attitude and that of the NDP toward the future work of the committee?

Mr. Waddell: Of course, Mr. Speaker, we will continue to work on the committee. In this Parliament we are trying to make Members independent to a degree. This is not the congressional system, but it is a new beginning in Parliament. I consider Ged Baldwin, a former Conservative Member, to be one of the initiators of this trend which was taken up by many other Conservative Members. We, in the House, are striving for freedom of information and freedom for MPs to have some say rather than always being bound by government discipline.

This is the report of an all-Party committee and what we are bringing to the attention of the Government is fairly unanswerable in law. This is an occasion upon which the members of the committee need the support of the House. There are Conservative Members of the committee and this is a unanimous report. I do not say that this is a non-partisan issue, but it does involve the freedom of individual MPs. Let us continue to move forward rather than taking a step backward with this particular vote. I ask Conservative MPs to vote with the committee to accept the report. If they do not do that, it will put the Conservative Members who are on the committee in a very difficult position.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments and ask the Hon. Member a question. I agree that if the Conservative Members are sensible and, as parliamentarians, are truly interested in parliamentary reform, they will support their parliamentary committee which has tabled a unanimous report in the House.

Mr. Speaker, last Friday I asked the Minister during Question Period what she intended to do about this unanimous report of the committee. I asked the question mainly because of my concern that the Minister would make the same mistake twice. I don't want this to go on. I don't want her to go on thinking she was misinformed and that a parliamentary committee could, and these are her own words as reported at page 12416 of Hansard:

> It is my view—

She was referring to the Committee's report.

> —that it has been based on misleading and inaccurate analyses of the situation.

Mr. Speaker, it is insulting and even offensive when a committee is told by a Minister of the Crown that it has made a misleading and inaccurate analysis of the situation.

[English]

In the first session of the last Parliament, which lasted three years, we adopted 173 statutes, but there were 4,000 instruments made pursuant to those statutory powers. What assurance do we have as parliamentarians that this or other Ministers will not take this high-handed approach to regulations and operate by press release? Is the central point of this debate this morning not to ensure that this Minister or others do not repeat the action taken with regard to the insulation program?

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: Yes, I agree with the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I think the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has a strong case. However, I would rather wait and hear what the Parliamentary Secretary has to say, since he is supposed to speak on behalf of the Minister and the Government.

[English]

As I tried to say in my speech, Mr. Speaker, this is just one example of many cases. The ability for deterrence which this committee has is that it is not known which Department it will choose. If we can get support from the House on this matter, in the future Departments will be very careful to ensure that these regulations are carried out under the law.

In summary, these regulations are very important in our lives, perhaps even more so than the statutes. Second, they are hard to scrutinize. Third, the committee has been expanded in its mandate and jurisdiction to scrutinize these instruments. Fourth, this was accomplished through the support of the House which has built up over many years and was started, quite frankly, by many Conservatives. Although I have not yet heard the Government's reply, I think this is a case in which the Government could accept some chastisement and indicate that its conduct will change. Finally, this is a very good test for the new parliamentary procedures which we have embarked upon.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid).

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate in this debate today. I appreciate the high level of debate, for the most part, which we have heard from the Opposition side. There are two questions to be debated. The first is that of regulations coming in after an intended deadline for a program. The criticism that the regulations came in late is fair. The Government accepts that. We accept the recommendation that regulations should be made and enacted before a deadline is set. However, with regard to this being illegal in this particular case, I think I will be able to present the facts as to what happened in that period of time which will perhaps somewhat change the opinion of the House about the chastisement of the Department.

Before I get into that, I want to reaffirm that the Government supports the proposition that if regulation making is to be based on the principles of openness, fairness, efficiency and accountability, as called for in the Citizen's Code of Regulatory Fairness, it is essential that regulatory initiatives which impose new burdens on citizens or, as in the present case, which detrimentally affect their rights, be announced and enacted as part of the law a reasonable time before they are to come into effect. I think that is a very worthy recommendation.

I agree with my good friend, the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who says that this committee has been expanded by the Conservative Government to ensure fairness to the citizens of Canada by the Government. Governments are going to make mistakes, and I think they can learn from their mistakes. That is very important. My friend, the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has pointed out that this was done in a nonpartisan manner. However, I think the CHIP phase-out was done with fairness to the applicants and in accordance with the rules and procedures of Government and Parliament. I am going to, I think and hope, convince the House that in fact all the deadlines were announced by the Minister, the public was communicated with, and the grants were made according to law.

The report suggests that Canadian homeowners were denied grants at the level of 60 per cent of eligible costs because they were unaware of the Government's intention to reduce that level to 33-1/3 per cent. It also suggests that if the Government had acted in accordance with proper procedures, that would not have happened.

My hon. friend from Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) made it very clear that the public do not sit down and read the Gazette, which can be voluminous and very complicated at times. The Minister mentioned the other day that the facts were not well presented to the committee. I would like to lay them out for the House today. We feel the Government acted fairly and generously. It phased out CHIP in an orderly manner. It announced its intentions clearly and provided Canadians with enough time to adjust to the lower level of funding. Moreover, the phase-out process provided Canadians with additional benefits which would not have been available if another approach had been used.

Before I explain why the phase-out process was entirely appropriate, let me review the facts. They are easily misinterpreted and I believe that is why the committee was critical of the Government. These are the facts.

On November 8, 1984, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) announced that CHIP would be phased out by March 31, 1986. That announcement was one aspect of a broader Government program to restrain expenditures and reduce the crippling debt left us and all Canadians by the previous Government. On November 9 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) announced that CHIP grants would be reduced from 60 per cent to 33-1/3 per cent beginning January 1, 1985, as part of the phase-out program.

Following this announcement the Government, in consultation with the insultation industry, realized there was a shortage of both materials and insulators to do the work before the December 31 deadline. It was clear that some flexibility was needed to avoid applicants missing out on the 60 per cent grants through no fault of their own. Therefore, the Minister announced on November 16 that applicants had until December 31 to register their commitment to have insulation work done. If they completed the work by March 31, 1985, they would receive the 60 per cent funding. This generous provision ensured that applicants were not denied grants at the 60 per cent level because of a shortage of material and contractors.

On January 17, 1985—and these dates are very important—the Order in Council was passed enacting the change to the regulations. I think everyone is in agreement so far. The Order in Council was delayed for a very simple reason. The generous phase-out process required the rewriting of regulations. If the Government had simply announced the grant reduction to take effect on January 1, 1985 with no special provisions, the regulations would have been approved earlier. However, the Government was more concerned with being fair to Canadians than writing regulations quickly. It took care that those regulations were drafted properly to the benefit of CHIP applicants. It is important to understand that at no time was it ever intended that the reduction in the level of grants would be retroactive.

The Government could have decided to reduce the grants to 33-1/3 per cent of eligible costs beginning January 17, the date of the Order in Council, regardless of any commitment by homeowners to complete the work by March 31 of that year. Yet what of those homeowners who, through no fault of their own, were not able to get work done in time to receive the 60 per cent grants? The Government would have been acting in accordance with proper procedure if it had taken this approach but Canadians would have been the losers. Instead, we decided to act in a way that was both proper and fair. The Government allowed applicants to receive the 60 per cent grants until March 31, 1985. It allowed them to apply for this level of funding until January 17, 1985. This provision actually gave homeowners a longer period in which to qualify for the higher grants than they would have been allowed under other, less generous phase-out approaches. This was an extraordinary measure in the history of CHIP. Homeowners had never been entitled to guarantees of payment at a certain level for a certain length of time. Under previous regulations a home owner received a grant in accordance with the regulation at the time his or her application was received. The regulations dealing with the grant levels, as everyone in this House knows, changed many times during the life of the program.

It has been said that some unspecified number of home owners were denied grants at the 60 per cent level because of the phase-out process. The facts show the exact opposite to be true. Every homeowner who qualified for the grants and who applied between November 8, 1984 and January 17—I want that date, the day that the regulations came into force, impressed upon the House, January 17, 1985—received grants at the 60 per cent level. So the comment that my friend from Vancouver—Kingsway made regarding all the applications which came in after December 31, 1984, for 60 per cent were thrown in the garbage, is just untrue. It is just untrue. The only people who did not receive a 60 per cent grant up to January 17, 1985, were those who did not qualify for any level of grant. They just did not qualify and would not have qualified no matter what the level of grant was. They were the only ones.

Approximately 84,000 homeowners took advantage of the flexibility built into the phase-out process to apply for grants at the 60 per cent level up until December 31, 1984. An additional 25,000 applied for grants at this level between January 1 and January 17, an extra 25,000 in that period of time, up until the regulations were passed. Some 96 per cent of all applicants qualified for grants and received the full 60 per cent funding. Four per cent just did not qualify.

It has been suggested that the Minister acted improperly by announcing changes to CHIP before Order in Council approval was obtained. This is untrue. Such announcements are made routinely by Ministers. They were made routinely by Ministers of the previous Government and they are made routinely by Ministers of this Government. They are part of a commitment to inform Canadians of the Government's plans as soon as it is reasonably possile. The Minister was well within her competence as a Minister of the Crown in establishing the registration system within CHIP without Cabinet approval. What the Minister did was clear and proper. She announced a policy intention to reduce the grant level. She put in place a generous transition process and she did not act on that policy intention—and I think the committee missed this important point—until Privy Council approval was obtained. She did not act on it until then. That is not mentioned in the report handed down by the committee. The committee said they were not satisfied with the evidence and I hope that today, after they hear the evidence, they will in fact be satisfied. The important point, I think, is that this was a fair way to proceed. It showed respect for the procedures of Government and Parliament. Most important, it was done with concern for the needs of Canadians who were taking part in the socially important task of using energy more efficiently.

The figures show that the phase-out process was effective in allowing Canadians to qualify for 60 per cent funding. Between November 8, 1984, and the end of the program on March 31, 1986, 62 per cent of CHIP grants were at the 60 per cent level, another 38 per cent were at the 33-1/3 per cent level. Clearly, Canadians knew about the planned changes to the program and took advantage of the generous phase-out process to get the higher level of funding. Just as clearly, most of those receiving grants at 33-1/3 per cent took advantage of the program after the transitional funding provisions had ended, and for a variety of reasons unrelated to the phase-out process.

If there are any Canadians who did not know of the Government's intention to reduce the level of grants, it is not because proper procedures were not followed. The usual method of making these matters known; statements, news releases, asking the insulation industry to inform clients, were used. I note that the committee pointed out in its report that the decision was widely publicized both by Energy, Mines and Resources and the media. Teleposts were sent to all listed contractors, industry associations and building supply stores. As well, the "Heatline Office" and CHIP regional offices informed all telephone callers of this announcement. We went one step further when we extended the period for 60 per cent funding to give people time to make arrangements and get the higher funding.

When one looks at the history of CHIP, it is clear that the program has provided a generous level of funding throughout its history. Since its inception in September, 1977, it has provided 2.8 million applicants with $900 million in assistance. Ninety-five per cent of this has been at the 60 per cent level. This has enabled Canadians to improve the levels of insulation in their homes, to use less energy and to use it more efficiently. CHIP has made an important contribution to taking Canada down the road to energy security.

When our Government took office, it was clear that the program had gone a long way to achieve its goals and that providing government funding indefinitely would be too costly. This was particularly true because of the deficit. We decided to end the program one year earlier than the previous Government had intended. This did not indicate any flagging of our commitment to energy conservation in Canada. It was a prudent decision. Deficit reduction was one of the important reasons for phasing out CHIP but it was not the only reason. We recognized that conditions in the market-place had changed and that the Government's role had to change with them.

CHIP, and its companion program, the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, provided a high level of funding for consumers for several years. More important, they helped to change the way Canadians think about energy and its use. It became clear to us that it was time for the Government to lessen its direct financial involvement. The point had been made with consumers that it is a good investment to use less energy and to use it more efficiently.

Reducing oil use remains an important long term goal of the Government. Despite declining oil prices, energy conservation is still a very good investment. We do not know when prices will rise again but we know that they will rise because oil supplies will eventually decline. We saw all too clearly in the 1970s how supply can be manipulated to suddenly and drastically increase prices.

We cannot and should not continue to expect the public treasury to borrow funds to provide consumer grants. Programs such as CHIP have started the energy conservation process going and they maintained it for a significant period of time. The Government will now concentrate its efforts on ensuring that home owners are fully aware of the options available to them. We are continuing to help find solutions to technical problems, to refine and expand work standards, and to assist the industry to improve insulation techniques and marketing.

The concern for energy conservation and the needs of Canadian homeowners was at the heart of our decision on how to phase out CHIP. Our greatest concern was to be as fair to Canadians as humanly possible. We proceeded carefully. We consulted with the industry and then acted in such a way that Canadians were not denied an appropriate level of funding because of circumstances beyond their control. We acted fairly, we acted properly and we acted generously.

Now that the evidence has been presented to the House, I think the committee must admit that those who did apply during the period January 1 to January 17 and received 60 per cent funding were in fact covered under the old program. We accept and understand that the regulations were brought in after the announced closing of the program. That is fair enough. There were reasons for that and we appreciate the committee drawing this matter to the attention of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, to the House and to the country.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary has put forward some information that is new, at least as far as I am concerned. However, I want to react to it in terms of the mandate of the committee and then hear the Hon. Member's comments. I must say, looking at the revelations that he has just made from the perspective of the committee's mandate, I think he has made the situation worse.

I want to point out two problems to him that arise from what he said. First, he told us that the Government did not stick to its own press release. The press release advised consumers to get their applications in by December 31. However, those who relied on the press release and did not submit an application because they could not make the deadline of December 31, never would have learned that it would have been accepted if they had submitted the application up to two and a half weeks later. This was a great unfairness to people who took the Government seriously when it put out its press release. How many people came in between December 31 and January 17? What information was given to Members who were relying on the press release and advising their constituents who had missed the deadline? How did the information get out that an application submitted during that critical two and one half week period would still be accepted?

That is the first problem which concerns me. I hope there was no preference because people with access to Ministers would have found out about this while those who do not would not have discovered that the Minister had changed her mind about the deadline.

The second problem concerns the contents of the regulation. This is a regulation that we have challenged and which I assume the Government was defending. The regulation stated December 31 as the cut-off date but in fact it took effect on January 17. If December 31 was not the cut-off date and the Government was prepared to give grants for applications that were received between December 31 and January 17, what authority does the Government have to honour those applications? It is certainly not the regulation because the regulation imposes a cut-off two and a half weeks earlier.

I support the CHIP program and would have been happy if the Government continued it. I am not talking about it from the point of view of policy, and I am pleased that others were able to receive the money. However, from the point of view of the mandate of the committee, I must ask the Parliamentary Secretary about the meaning of the regulation. What authority does the Government believe it has for ignoring the terms of the regulation and validating applications that were received in that two and one half week period? Those applications that came in between December 31 and January 17 should be honoured, but perhaps they should be honoured out of the salary of the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister rather than the general revenues of the Government of Canada.

Finally, it seems to me that the initial mistake that was made, for which the Minister surely must be accountable, is that she gave her officials an assignment that they could not handle. The Parliamentary Secretary told us himself that there was no way that the regulations could be drafted on time, even though they knew they needed regulations. He has indicated that they needed them to validate what it was they wanted to do. They should have picked a realistic date for their officials in order that the law could have been obeyed. In this way the rule of law could have been complied with and we would not have had the necessity of making the report which is before us. I feel even more strongly than I did before that the Government stands condemned by the terms of our report and by the way it behaved in trying to extricate itself from this very unsatisfactory situation.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member expects recipients of CHIP to survive on the salary of a Parliamentary Secretary, then it will be an awfully thin program. I can guarantee him that.

Mr. Waddell: It will be a thin Parliamentary Secretary, too!

Mr. McDermid: That is right.

I say to the Hon. Member that the committee cannot have it both ways; it cannot suck and blow at the same time. It is saying that we cut people off on December 31, that that was illegal and that we should not have done it. He then says that we did not honour them until the regulations were passed, and he asked for a number. There were some 25,000. There were no special favours given. Obviously, people who applied for CHIP grants after the deadline were expecting to receive a 33-1/3 per cent grant. There was no discrimination with respect to the matter whatsoever. It was done absolutely honestly, above board, and with the greatest of fairness and concern for all Canadians who applied for CHIP grants. For the Hon. Member to try to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear is very unfortunate.

The Government has accepted chastisement with respect to the fact that regulations were brought in at a date later than the announcement made by the Minister. However, at the same time, we did not penalize Canadians in any way, shape or form. They were well informed and properly advised. For the Hon. Member to say that they were not properly advised because it was not in the The Canada Gazette at the time is completely wrong.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have two short questions for the Parliamentary Secretary. If what he is saying is true, then why would the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources tell the committee that there were no statistics available with respect to the number of people who had applied between December 31, 1984 and January 17, 1985?

Would the Hon. Member not agree with me that there is a difference between what he considers as the Government acting fairly, generously and properly and the Government acting according to law? Will he admit that in fact it did not act according to law? I will repeat my question. Representatives of the Department told the committee that when they received applications dated after December 31, 1984 claiming the 60 per cent rebate, there were no statistics available with respect to that matter. Why did they tell the committee that, if what the Hon. Member is saying is correct?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the question they were asked was with respect to how many were rejected on the grounds that a purchase commitment ought to have been registered before that date. The response was that, unfortunately, there is no record of those rejected on that basis. We do know how many came in and how many were approved. The question was: How many were rejected? If he had been asked how many were approved he would have told them that it was 25,000.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask one other question of the Parliamentary Secretary, and it has to do with individuals who applied after January 17 and received only the 33-1/3 per cent. What the Member has virtually conceded is that the regulation was invalid and that steps considered appropriate were taken to compensate for its invalidity. If the regulation is invalid, then people who applied after January 17 should not be receiving 33-1/3 per cent but, rather, 60 per cent. I say this because the regulation cutting the applicants down from 60 per cent to 33-1/3 per cent is invalid. The Government has admitted that. Is the Parliamentary Secretary prepared to follow the logical consequences of the argument he has just made, look up the people who received the 33-1/3 per cent and top up their contributions to the 60 per cent to which they are legally entitled?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, that is convoluted Liberal thinking.

Mr. Gauthier: Because it is logical?

Mr. McDermid: Those who applied after January 17 knew full well what they would be receiving. They knew for what they were applying. The regulation was in place. For the Hon. Member to make a suggestion such as the one he has made, with a silly grin on his face at the same time—

Mr. Kaplan: I don't have a silly grin on my face.

Mr. McDermid: I love it. You are using up the time of the House. I think it is marvellous.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. It is a very significant report which brings forward very important points. There are two matters in the report which are of utmost importance. The first matter is with respect to the way that consumers who applied for grants under the Canadian Home Insulation Program after December 31, 1984 were treated. The second matter, and perhaps the most important, is with respect to the way the Government is treating the legality of this whole situation.

I appreciate that the Government made a decision that it did not want to continue with CHIP. I do not agree with its decision but it is the right of the Government to make such decisions. It initially made an announcement concerning this matter on November 8, 1984, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) delivered his economic statement. This was followed up by a press release by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) on November 16. These statements indicated that certain undertakings had to be obtained by applicants prior to December 31, 1984, and that anyone who could not apply prior to January 1, 1985 would not be eligible for the 60 per cent. After that date they would be eligible for only 33-1/3 per cent. Unfortunately, the regulations were not passed until January 17, 1985, making the action of the Government illegal, as has been stated by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). The Government had no legal right to prohibit consumers who applied for CHIP prior to Janaury 18, 1985 from receiving the 60 per cent to which they were entitled.

The Parliamentary Secretary has said that the Government gave the 60 per cent to those who applied prior to January 18. We do not know that. We do not know how many applied. The committee was told by a representative of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that, unfortunately, statistics were not kept with respect to the number of registrations which were rejected. Thus we really do not know.

More important, if someone called the Department after January 1, but perhaps before January 18, 1985, they would have been told that the time to obtain the 60 per cent which they were seeking had expired. Yet the Parliamentary Secretary would have us believe that the 60 per cent was granted to those who applied prior to January 17. Obviously the decision to grant the 60 per cent to those who applied prior to January 17 was a decision taken after that date when the Department realized that the regulation was only passed on that date.

A great many people had been told by the Department that they were not eligible. Had they put in their applications against the advice of the Department they would have been eligible. It is highly unlikely that anyone would put in an application after having been told by the Department that he would not be eligible. There was quite a problem there.

The Parliamentary Secretary would have us believe that there was no time to put a regulation in place prior to January 17. He would have us believe that the fact that an announcement was made on January 8 without a regulation being put in place until January 17 was no one's fault and that it just could not be done before that. The Government did not open Parliament until November 5 or 6, two or three days prior to the Minister's Economic and Fiscal Statement. The Government was elected on September 4 and the House did not sit until the week of November 5, yet the regulation could not be put in place until January 17. That is highly incredible. There is no reason the regulation could not have been prepared at the same time the Government was drafting its Economic and Fiscal Statement. That is irresponsible.

The Government is putting things into law retroactively. That will not sit well with the Canadian people. That is not legal. It is not as though the Government only did that on this occasion. The Government is planning to do the same thing with respect to the grandfathering clause in the Bill that eliminates the Petroleum Incentives Program, as we heard when we were debating Bill C-85. The Government is applying regulations retroactively.

The Parliamentary Secretary indicated that the Government is more concerned with the welfare of Canadians than with passing regulations quickly, but that is just hogwash. The Government never gave any consideration to the concerns of Canadians because first it did not give them adequate time to apply for the 60 per cent, and second, it forced them to accept 33-1/3 per cent instead of 60 per cent without any legal justification. The Government cannot be concerned with the welfare of Canadians if it is going to break the law to reduce the benefits that flow to Canadians.

This is a very important question. I would ask all Hon. Members to concur in the report of the committee. The report of the committee is on the side of law. The stance of the Government is that it is trying to justify the breach of a law, but that is contrary to the laws of Canada. I would ask all Hon. Members to vote with the committee and not with the Government.

First and foremost, this question is a point which all Canadians must consider. If we are going to continue to pass regulations and apply them retroactively, Canadians cannot possibly have any confidence in or respect for the laws of Canada. It was stated that in the last Parliament, 4,000 regulations were passed. Regulations are out of control. They are passed but are never reviewed. They are costing Canadians millions of dollars. Regulations under one Act contradict regulations under another Act. Federal regulations contradict provincial regulations. The whole thing is out of control. What is most out of control is the attitude of this Government which is taking away the rights of Canadians without passing the proper laws. The Government is deciding arbitrarily that Canadians are not going to have these benefits, not only without compassion but without the legal capacity to do so.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment to make on this issue. I see that the Parliamentary Secretary is now here. Perhaps he would reply to this.

Say there are two people who did not complete the program by January 17 but both made commitments to complete by the end of March. We should ask ourselves if they would both receive 60 per cent of the cost, and the answer is, not necessarily.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Is the Hon. Member asking the Hon. Member a question? I wish he would direct the question to—

Mr. Waddell: I am sorry. I do wish to make a comment and I hope that the Hon. Member does return.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Please direct the question to the Hon. Member who just spoke.

Mr. Waddell: Here he is now. Let me repeat the question. I wonder if the Hon. Member who just spoke might consider the situation of two people who did not complete by January 17 but had both made commitments to complete by the end of March and they did complete by the end of March. I wonder if the Hon. Member would agree that it is possible that they may not both have received 60 per cent of the costs. If one of them registered his commitment between January 1 and January 17 and the other registered his commitment before December 31, is it not possible that one of them would receive 60 per cent of the costs and one of them would only receive 33-1/3 per cent of the costs?

Let me put it another way. Suppose someone comes to the Government on January 22 with a contract made on January 2 committing him to complete by the end of March. Is it not possible that the Deparment would tell that person that he did not register before December 31 and would therefore receive only 33-1/3 per cent of the costs? This is surely where the Government's position is flawed. Since it did not have the proper Order in Council, the Government is trying to finesse the point of the so-called fairness of the procedure. Is it not possible and indeed probable that one would receive 60 per cent of the costs and one would receive only 33-1/3 per cent of the costs?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to agree with the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). That certainly is possible. In fact, we do not really know what happened between January 1 and January 17. We do not know how many people applied. We do not know what treatment they were given. We do not know how many applications were rejected as the Department has indicated that it does not have that information, something which is rather surprising.

No statement was made by the Minister prior to December 31, 1984, indicating that the time would be extended. In fact, during the time between January 1 and January 17, 1985, the Minister made no statement indicating that the time was to be extended. We do not know whether or not those in the Department took it upon themselves to treat applications that came in between January 1 and January 17 in their own fashion without passing them along, because we do not have any records.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment to make. I disagree with my hon. friend. I say yes, the two people would receive the same amount. I might say that anyone who signed a contract after January 1 was well informed all the way along as to what was happening with the program.

Mr. Waddell: Not by Order in Council, not by Gazette and not by law.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I appreciate that Hon. Members are having a little question and comment period between themselves. If they would like to do that behind the curtains that would be fine, but questions at this point should be directed to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan).

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I thought I was doing pretty well in that I was being interrupted by my friend from Vancouver. I am making a comment at this point; I am not asking a question. As I was saying, the Canadian public was very well informed. Obviously they were well informed because of the huge number of applications which came into the Department before December 31. Those who made application after December 31 knew full well that they were applying under the 33-1/3 per cent grant. However, because the regulations were not passed, the Department honoured the 60 per cent grant for those people who applied in that time period. It was a very fair way to treat the Canadian public, and that is the way it happened.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, one of the benefits of having been here a while is that the Speaker learns the name of one's riding.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have no difficulty with "Surrey—White Rock—North Delta". I would hope, after the next election, that it would have one or two names like Surrey—White Rock.

Mr. Friesen: I would not want you, Sir, to leave out one of the areas of my good constituency. Another benefit of having been here a while is that one develops a memory for past events. I am now taking some pleasure in an ironic sense of justice, the wheels having turned full circle. We are not dealing with only the matter of CHIP. We are really dealing with the whole subject of delegated legislation and the procedures followed by the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments.

When I was sitting in the Opposition, an Order in Council passed by the previous Government consumed much of my attention and quite a bit of my energy. It was known as the emergency planning orders. The Hon. Member who tabled this report should not walk out because my remarks will be of interest to him. I see that I have peaked his attention, at least.

Mr. Kaplan: Yes.

Mr. Friesen: The particular emergency planning order never enjoyed the benefit of news releases, as did this particular Order in Council. This one had at least two, three or four news releases which anticipated the new regulations that would be adopted later by the Government. The emergency planning order did not enjoy any flare of publicity. It was just gazetted, and some very sharp Canadian somewhere noticed it and gave some prominence to it.

Mr. Robinson: It is still on the books today.

Mr. Friesen: I hear the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I think he has become sloppy in his attention to House business. He knows very well that the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre) is revamping that entire matter, including the War Measures Act. He should not get too anxious.

I remember asking the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) when he was Solicitor General about the particular Order in Council which empowered the Government to empty penitentiaries in order to fill them with political prisoners, or at least make room for political prisoners, and he said: "Obviously there are a few problems with this particular Order in Council".

Now it so happens—and this is where the justice comes in—that the Hon. Member for York Centre is a co-chairman of the committee which is examining delegated legislation, Orders in Council. I think it is perfect that the Hon. Member for York Centre, who ran a little roughshod over some Government procedures in that process, would now have to chair the committee which examines delegated legislation. I agree with the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who said a few minutes ago that the committee was not only very important but essential if we want to preserve democracy and freedom in our land.

When I sat on the parliamentary reform committee I had two main concerns. One of them was my concern for delegated legislation or Orders in Council which do not enjoy parliamentary scrutiny unless they are elevated to the point of attention by this particular committee. I was very concerned about the workability of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. There is a sense in which I want to commend the committee for bringing forward this matter. At the same time, I am concerned about the fact that the committee did it. I really think that committee members have overblown the case here. They are taking a subject, which may even be of some legitimate concern, and are overblowing it to the point of making it look frivolous in the context of what they ought to be doing.

Let us assume there was a 17-day gap between January 1 and January 17 when the Order in Council might have been printed. I would also assume that had the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought down his economic statement in November and published the Orders in Council at the same time, the Hon. Member for York Centre would have complained about the Government bulldozing its way through Parliament. He would have indicated that surely an economic statement deserved some attention and debate in Parliament, and that Orders in Council should flow from that debate and be registered thereafter. He cannot have it both ways. On the one hand he cannot allow for full parliamentary debate and examination of that statement and for Parliament to ventilate its concerns and, on the other hand, expect the regulations to be printed at the same time.

In his opening statement—and I think I am quoting the co-chairman accurately—he said that it was an unusual use of the powers of Government. Previous speakers have pointed out that plenty of notice was given to the public. A news release was sent out on November 8 defining for the Canadian public the terms under which the new programs would work. There was another one on November 9 in which the Minister announced that the lower rate of contributions would be implemented effective January 1, 1985. I can tell the Hon. Member, from the responses I received from the industry, that it was well informed about the Government's procedures and intentions. It was not?that the public was being ignored or taken by surprise. There was another announcement on November 16 elaborating on the program. It is really overstating the case when the Hon. Member says that it was an unusual use of the powers of Government.

Also, as a member of the parliamentary reform committee, I caution the members of this committee to use wisely these powers which are long overdue and which many of us wanted. Again I say that this is somewhat a frivolous motion because they could have tabled this particular report under the provisions of Standing Order 44. It would then have forced the Government into a change of the regulations. The Committee chose not to do that. It chose to critize the procedure, tabled a report and asked for a two-hour debate to talk about the report. But as a result, nothing happens. Time and the effects of the program are already past. Why take up two hours of House time debating a report which will change nothing because the program has already lapsed, and there is plenty of evidence to indicate that there was no injury to the public as a result. The public was properly informed. Probably all of the applicants or intended applicants had a choice whether or not they wanted to take part in the program.

I would caution the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments in respect of its use of the powers which are the committee's which happily now allow the committee to bring about changes in Government regulations in order to correct an injustice. This could not be done before the reform was accepted by the House. Up until February any time this committee sat, all it could do was ventilate an issue but nothing happened. Under the reform of the House of Commons, the committee now tables a report under S. O. 44, which I will read into the record:

—if the report is concurred in, would be An Order of this House to the Ministry to rescind one specified regulation or other statutory instrument, which the Ministry has the authority to rescind.

That puts muscle to a report, Mr. Speaker. What the committee has chosen to do is to table a report which has absolutely no muscle to it and has consumed two hours of debating time, time which could have been spent much more wisely on something else. I would caution the committee to continue its work investigating all of these regulations and other statutory instruments, but to make sure that when it does report to the House that the committee does it with some purpose rather than with the present frivolity.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member with respect to his earlier remarks on PC-1305, the emergency planning order. He will recall that when he was an opposition Member on this side of the House he called upon the then Liberal Government to repeal that order immediately. He suggested that it was a serious threat to the civil liberties of all Canadians. Now that the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) is a Government Member, it seems that he is singing a different tune. Instead of calling upon his own Government to repeal this same order immediately, which remains on the books in the identical form in which the Liberals passed, he is now saying: "These things take time. The Minister is studying it. It takes a couple of years. The Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre) has to study it very carefully". What hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker.

How can the Hon. Member possibly justify the total inaction of his own Government with respect to the emergency planning order? Why is he now saying that it is all right for his Government to study the matter and to take another 15 months or two years to look into it in depth? When the Hon. Member was in opposition he was suggesting that this was one of the greatest threats to civil liberties in the country. Why, all of a sudden, is the Hon. Member saying now that the Government needs more time to study? How can he justify the reversal of his policy?

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is a master of hyperbole. He talks about hypocrisy. As he sits in his social subsidized housing in Vancouver, as reported on television last night, he ought to use the facilities of the taxpayers of Canada who have given to him—

Mr. McDermid: At $54,000 a year he is in subsidized housing?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know what that has to do with the reply—

Mr. Mayer: What has the question got to do with the motion?

Mr. Gauthier: The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is in social housing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: We are waiting for the answer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) was trying to complete an answer on regulations and statutory instruments. We are getting into some high level debate which has nothing to do with today's debate. I will allow the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta to terminate whatever he was going to say so that we can get to further questions and comments.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I was simply responding to part of the statement made by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) accusing the Government of hypocrisy.

Mr. Robinson: Accusing the Member.

Mr. Friesen: Since the Member is so interested in social housing and meeting the needs of those people who have such dire needs while he himself is living in subsidized housing, according to the news report last night, unless that was wrong, I thought maybe we should draw that analogy.

More specifically, in answer to the Member's question which was more in the nature of a tirade rather than a question, I would suggest, as I did earlier in my remarks, that it was our Party which highlighted that issue when we were in opposition.

Mr. Robinson: What are you doing in Government?

Mr. Friesen: We have no less commitment to doing away with that provision. We are not satisfied with simply withdrawing that emergency planning order without dealing with the whole nature of the War Measures Act at the same time, which was the root of that problem. The Hon. Member might want to scotch-tape policies together and cut and paste, but we are not satisfied with that. Unless we want to have a recurrence of 1970 all over again, we have to deal not only with the emergency planning order but also with the War Measures Act. The Hon. Member can rest assured that the Government will do that.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North-Delta (Mr. Friesen), in connection with the language the Hon. Member used in referring to his colleagues in the House, when he said that the Committee had passed judgment or reported on a frivolous question.

Mr. Speaker, I can see nothing frivolous in asking the Government to follow recognized procedure, that is, to govern openly, by Order in Council, and to make regulations after adopting the Order in Council.

The question before the House today is as follows: Was the Government acting responsibly and fairly when it gazetted, on January 17, an Order in Council setting regulations to implement the Government's policy to eliminate the Canadian Home Insulation Program?

[English]

I fail to understand the Member's point, Mr. Speaker. He, like us in this House, was advised on January 18. I happen to have some dossiers here. Let me read part of a letter dated January 17.

Dear Member of Parliament:

This package is designed to provide you and your staff with details on the recent changes to the Canada Oil Substitution Program (COSP) and the Canadian Home Insulation Program (CHIP).

That officially gave us information on January 18 about what the Government's intentions were with regard to the implementation of the program.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Gauthier: It is not nonsense. The letter is dated and it is signed by Dennis Orchard, Director, Home Energy Programs.

• (1250)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. This is a question and comment period and the questions and comments are to be directed to the Hon. Member who just finished speaking. The Hon. Member has been here a long time and realizes that.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I was just informing the Member that I have a document dated January 17, 1985, indicating that the program would be terminated on December 31, 1984. How can the Member say that it is frivolous for a committee of the House, which has to review regulations, to come before the House and report that there has been an irregularity? In the language of the committee: "The joint committee criticizes the Minister of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for the manner in which grants to home owners were reduced during the phasing out of the Canadian Home Insulation Program". That has nothing to do with a November 9 statement in which the Government said it would phase it out. This has to do with an announcement made by the Government through press releases. In other words, the Government operates by press releases rather than Order in Council and regulations duly adopted by the Government. I fail to understand what is so frivolous about that. I think it is a serious point. The point of the debate this morning was to ensure that the Government did not repeat the procedure of passing regulations after the fact. What does the Member think is frivolous about that? What is so frivolous about asking a Government to operate in a good and legal manner?

Mr. Friesen: There is nothing frivolous about trying to keep the Government on its toes. That is the job of that committee and it ought to do it with vigour and it ought to report its findings to the House. However, I seriously question the need to debate, for two hours, a report on a program which is no longer in force. There is no way to turn the calendar back.

I agree totally with the Member that it is the job of that committee to keep the Government on its toes and to ensure that its procedures follow the books and are in order. We ought not to have government by press release. However, this was not; it was simply forewarning. The Government did file the necessary Orders in Council. If Members were really serious about this report they would have had concurrence in the committee to file this report, including Standing Order 44, which would have called upon the Government to rescind. The very fact that they did not implement the provisions which have muscle indicates that they were not very serious about the report in that sense. I think it is unfortunate that we have spent two hours debating something which cannot be changed.

Mr. Waddell: Did the Hon. Member receive any applications for this grant between January 1 and January 17 in his office in Surrey? If he did, what did he tell the people? Were they eligible for 60 per cent or 33 per cent?

Mr. Friesen: I thank the Member for thinking that I have an encyclopedic and photographic memory, but I cannot answer that question.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that in the phasing out of the Canadian Home Insulation Program some householders were treated unfairly. Nothing can be further from the truth. The fact is that the Minister and her officials made special provisions in the phasing out process to ensure complete fairness for homeowners. The plain and simple reality is that the actions taken by the Hon. Minister were well within her mandate and 84,000 additional households qualified for the CHIP grants because of the Minister's concern for fairness. The concern of the Minister for the additional householders during this transition period should be significantly noted.

The phasing out of the Canadian Home Insulation Program was undertaken with fairness and market responsiveness as top priorities after consultation with the insulation industry. The facts are these. On November 8, 1984, in the spirit of restraint in government spending, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) announced the phase-out of the CHIP program by March 31, 1986, and a reduction in the rate of contributions from 60 per cent to 33-1/3 per cent of eligible insulation costs. On November 9, 1984, the Minister announced that the lower rate of contribution would be implemented effective January 1, 1985.

On November 16, 1984, in recognition of the need for flexibility to allow both consumers and insulation contractors to meet the phase-out deadlines, the Minister announced that potential applicants would register their intention to have insulation work done. This registration process was available until December 31, 1984, and the work had to be completed by March 31, 1985. This ability to register was a special provision not contained in the standard rules of the program and was evidence of the Government's willingness to be fair and flexible. On January 17, 1985, the Order in Council was passed enacting the change to the regulations. Until January 17, 1985, all applications received, accompanied by proof of work done, were eligible for the 60 per cent level of contribution.

The Minister's objective was to devise an orderly, fair, and flexible phase-out of the CHIP program. The Minister extended the program for a full 17 months beyond the initial notice of its termination, providing a generous and responsive transition to the lower contribution rate, and responding to the realities of the market-place by consulting with and receiving the support of the National Insulation Contractor's Association.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Not only is the Hon. Member reading his speech, which is against the rules, but he is reading the same speech which the Parliamentary Secretary gave. That is not debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is out of order.

Mr. Gauthier: It's the same speech. He reads better than the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, the situation in the House is that the Opposition is wasting time after the Minister acted in the best interests of the people of the country. If you will allow me, I will continue.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member refers to the Opposition wasting time. The Conservative members of the committee unanimously supported this report and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will correct that reference.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: No, but it is a good point to keep in mind.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope Hon. Members will allow the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to continue. He only has a minute remaining. I would like to hear what he has to say.

Mr. Gauthier: If he wants to call it one o'clock, we will agree.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, the policies and the Minister's methods for implementing the phase-out process are both fair and just. Those are the facts. The Minister and her officials were sensitive to the realities in the market-place during the phasing-out period. The fact is that the industry would not have been able to meet the increased demand for insulation work. Therefore, a special provision was made. The industry benefited and so did the consumers of Canada.

I would like to point out a misunderstanding in the second paragraph of section 3 of the committee's report. It says that no statistics were kept concerning the number of applications for a 60 per cent contribution which were rejected on the ground that a purchase commitment ought to have been registered before that date. This information was provided in response to a completely different question concerning the number of applicants who had attempted to register after December 31, 1984.

I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker, and I would just like to say that the Minister acted in the best interests of the consumers of Canada and we are proud of that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's time has expired. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

INCOME TAX

TAX RETURNS—INFORMATION NEEDED BY TAXPAYERS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, today, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) has announced measures that will help employees responsible for answering inquiries. The Minister indicated that taxpayers must be able to count on Revenue Canada providing accurate information to help them complete their income tax returns. The Minister announced a number of measures that will help his employees achieve this goal. Measures that will be implemented next year! Who is going to help taxpayers who have yet to file their returns, now that they only have eight days left, Mr. Speaker? Who is going to pay the interest on the mistakes Canadians are going to make in filing their returns because Revenue Canada doesn't know the answers and gives the wrong information? Not a word about that from the Minister, Mr. Speaker. I trust he will come back with another press release to deal with this particular point.

HEALTH

PELVIC INFLAMMATORY DISEASE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is well known that pelvic inflammatory disease is a silent epidemic which has swept across Canada. In 1982 over 140,000 Canadian women were treated for this disease and the number increases each year. Despite these terrifying figures, there exists a deep silence regarding this disease and its consequences of infertility and disability. This has resulted in no major research on the disease being conducted in Canada.

Despite the fact that from 3 per cent to 9 per cent of IUD users contract PID, the copper IUD continues to be marketed in Canada while being banned in the U.S.A. The Kamloops Womens Resource Centre urges the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to ban the copper IUD immediately from the Canadian market, initiate research on pelvic inflammatory disease, and bring an end to this silent epidemic.

PENSIONS

FEDERAL PENITENTIARY EMPLOYEES—EARLY RETIREMENT AFTER TWENTY-FIVE YEARS OF SERVICE

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I tabled a petition for early retirement after twenty-five years continuous service, a petition signed by a large number of employees at Correctional Service Canada, and more specifically, by a group from the riding of Duvernay.

The House will understand that this is a matter of particular concern to me, since I have five federal penitentiaries in my riding as well as the only training centre for Francophone prison guards in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, early retirement is of vital importance to people who have been exposed to high-stress working conditions for so many years. This request does not come out of the blue, since a report recommending such measures was presented about ten years ago to the Solicitor General of Canada, and, more recently, in 1984 in the Carson Report.

Federal penitentiary employees, in Duvernay and across Canada, have done more than their share, and I want to give them the assurance they can count on the support of the Member for Duvernay.

STATUS OF WOMEN

IMPROVEMENTS ACHIEVED THROUGH GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, economic and social equality for women is a priority of the Government. Measures have been introduced which will improve the financial position of low-income women, improve job training opportunities, reform divorce law, improve the enforcement of maintenance orders, permit the Government to deal more effectively with abusive programming and pornography, remove discrimination from the Indian Act, and address other equality issues.

Between September, 1984, and March, 1986, some 293,000 jobs for women were created. Unemployment among women has fallen by 1.9 per cent since September, 1984. Contrast that with the last term of our predecessors wherein it rose by 3.4 per cent. Most promising of all, this Government will continue to build on these accomplishments and not rest until complete equality for women is a reality in our country.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REPORTED CLOSING OF COMPANY FOR FAILURE TO PAY TAXES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Government talks about consultation concerning Revenue Canada. We heard the former critic of the Minister being very hard on the Government. Yet the same Government is prepared to slam the doors shut on a company in Peterborough, Friedrich Industries, with 175 employees. This is being done because of taxes owing.

Even though the bank is prepared to refinance, the Ontario Development Corporation says the company is a good and viable deal, even though the company has made arrangements regarding repayment, and even though the Progressive Conservative Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has been urging the Minister to reconsider this case, he has closed his ears and is going to shut this company down leaving 175 people in the city of Peterborough without jobs—all this because he is not prepared to listen to a refinancing package which would include a payment of $25,000 per week over a period of 10 weeks.

ASSISTANCE URGED FOR OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the collapse of oil prices has created a crisis in Calgary. For example, the unemployment insurance claims centres are working 68 hours a week to process the avalanche of claims. If one compares the past seven weeks with last year's figures, the claims are up 57.5 per cent—yes, Mr. Speaker, up 57.5 per cent—to a total of 16,400 claims.

These are 16,400 stories of despair, of broken dreams, of hardship and being forced to move.

The Government must act, and act now to aid this industry.

IMMIGRATION

RUSSIAN ARMY DEFECTORS IN AFGHANISTAN—SPONSORSHIP OFFER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of an action group formed by the Ukrainian Canadian community in Winnipeg, headed by Professor Roman Yereniuk, which wishes that all six of the defecting Soviet soldiers now in Afghanistan be encouraged and permitted to come to Canada.

The action group is prepared to support one of the six, Egon Kovalchuk, and to take full responsibility for his well-being in Canada. It is actively looking for other ethno-cultural groups to sponsor the other five. The group believes that a major injustice has been done in raising the expectations of these defectors that they would be able to come to Canada. Unfortunately, the Government's mishandling of their case has left them marooned in rebel held territory.

This sincere offer made by concerned Canadians demonstrates public support for the rescue of these six men. As the representative of a constituency that is as ethnically diverse as Winnipeg North, I can assure the House that the offer of assistance represents the views of many immigrant Canadians, and that the action group's words will be matched by further actions to ensure that these prisoners of war will have the opportunity to find a new life in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

EMPLOYMENT

SMALL BUSINESSES—YOUTH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a concrete example and prove to the House that money invested by our Government in the riding of Champlain is benefitting the entire population. Two hundred and twenty million dollars were given to the CLE company in Champlain to be used as loans for small businesses. This amount has generated investments that are vital to the economy of our region. In fact, over $1 million has been generated by our businesses and financial institutions to provide permanent and durable jobs for our people.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the people of Champlain that our Government is on the right track, and that with dynamic people who get involved we will be in a position to create permanent jobs and a strong Canada for the next generation.

ASSISTANCE REQUIRED BY VICTIMS OF CRIME

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, often within our criminal justice system it is the victim of crime who is neglected. It is the criminal who is accorded the rights and privileges of the law and the victim who is forgotten.

Both the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) are aware of this and are to be congratulated on their recent initiatives.

Similar congratulations are due to those police forces which have established units to aid victims of crime.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONCTON SHOPS—EFFECTS OF POSSIBLE CLOSURE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my outrage at the way the Government has been treating the workers at the CN shops in Moncton. For almost a year now it has been apparent that the federal Government is going to abandon 1,200 workers employed there. The Government has steadfastly refused to guarantee that the shops would be kept open and that the jobs would be maintained.

According to the findings of a socio-economic study, commissioned by the Government of New Brunswick, the impact of the CN shops' closure on the economy of New Brunswick would be substantial: lost disposable income over two years, $13.5 million; increase in federal social benefits costs, $9.4 million; increase in UIC costs not funded federally, $8.8 million; loss of 680 additional jobs in the greater Moncton area; further lost incomes of $10 million to $12 million; lost retail sales over two years, $16 million; and a drop in real estate values of 5 per cent.

It is time for the Government to take some positive action for the people of Moncton, and for the workers at the CN shops in particular.

ORGAN DONOR AWARENESS WEEK

TRIBUTE TO MEDICAL PROFESSION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, this morning a well-attended breakfast on Parliament Hill was hosted by Transplant International (Canada) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). This is Organ Donor Awareness Week.

It is our prayer that all Canadians will be made more aware of the magnificent progress achieved by the medical profession in the success rate of organ recipients. People receiving a vital organ such as a heart, a kidney, or a liver, now have an 80 per cent to 85 per cent chance of living a full and complete life thanks to cyclosporin, which has won the battle over the problem of rejection.

Our praise and thanks go to Bill Brady, President and co-founder of Transplant International, his outstanding board of directors from across Canada, and the hundreds of volunteers whose mandate it is to increase public awareness and commitment. The battle will be won and our prayers will be answered when the waiting list for organ transplants is reduced to zero.

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we heard two earnest pleas from Conservative backbenchers. One was with regard to the need for early retirement benefits which, of course, would deny recipients unemployment insurance benefits, if they were able to retire; and the other was with respect to the collapse of oil prices, with the resultant hardship for many families in the Calgary area.

I wonder if these Hon. Members do not recognize that the very things about which they complain are a part of the Conservative free enterprise policy of the Government of which they are supporters. Perhaps they would do well to realize that the very things about which they are most concerned are brought about by the policies introduced by the Government. TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PRESIDENT'S LETTER TO U.S. SENATORS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the situation before the United States Senate remains a cliff-hanger whose uncertainty casts some doubt on the special relationship which the Prime Minister has with the American administration. My question for the Prime Minister relates to a letter from the President to American Senators calling for the support of U.S.-Canada trade negotiations in which he noted that Canada "has been very supportive of United States international initiatives, particularly in combating terrorism and maintaining a solid unity on major East-West and arms control issues". I ask the Prime Minister what those words of the President mean. Have we, in effect, sacrificed the independence of our foreign policy in order to buy an affirmative vote on this issue?

• (1415)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is really quite unbecoming of one who was a Prime Minister of Canada to make such a scurrilous suggestion in regard to the conduct and foreign policy of this country. The statement of the President of the United States was quite forthcoming. He views Canada as a reliable ally, and that is the way we want it to be. We do give our friends the benefit of the doubt. We do view ourselves as a reliable ally. As long as this Government is here, that is exactly what we will be.

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, our Prime Minister is deliberately trying to avoid revealing the substance of conversations and talks between him and the President of the United States.

Has he perhaps agreed to remain silent on world affairs until he gets an affirmative vote before the U.S. Senate?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion is unworthy and odious.

CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister refused to participate in a recent debate. We wonder about the reason for his silence. In the same letter addressed to American Senators, the President also said that he was committed to the resolution of the lumber issue, obviously on the American side, and the U.S. trade representative wrote Arkansas Senator Pryor the following:

Dave, we'll get timber fixed.

Has the Canadian Government conveyed to the President or the U.S. trade representative the intention that lumber will be fixed? Have we got ourselves into a position in which the Prime Minister is really in the President's back pocket?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition goes from one elegant point to another. The fact of the matter is that, as with all Canadian Governments, we have conducted the affairs of this country in the national interest at all times and in all circumstances.

This initiative is under way in the United States. We do not know how it will end. It is designed to benefit Canada, to create new jobs, to lower the unemployment rate, and to bring new prosperity and opportunities to Canadians. We have always said that a good deal for Canada is a fair deal for our partners, and if it is good for us it has to be good for them. That is the way we view life, and we think that is the way to view it.

RUSSIAN ARMY DEFECTORS IN AFGHANISTAN

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the six Soviet army defectors who are presently in Afghanistan. Today I received confirmation that the publisher of the Kingston Whig-Standard, as a result of yesterday's exchange in the House, has been in touch with the Minister to release confidential and important details on this very sensitive matter. Can the Minister confirm that discussion with the publisher? When will he meet with Mr. Davies? Can he assure the House that, with that information, he will immediately instruct his officials to travel to Afghanistan in order to give freedom to those six courageous young men?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, over the last several months the Government of Canada has taken a number of steps to secure the release of those six, including relaxing all of the health and security criteria that we normally require. In answer to questions in the House yesterday, I indicated that we would be prepared to discuss with journalists involved any co-operation which might bring those six Soviets to Canada.

I can confirm that, at my initiative, I have spoken today with the editor, not the publisher, of the Kingston Whig-Standard, and that we are examining some actions which might bring these six prisoners of war to freedom in Canada. I am prepared to brief privately a member of each of the opposition Parties on the nature of those arrangements, but I believe that further public discussion of this issue might jeopardize the success of the initiative we are pursuing.

OPPRESSED PRISONERS' PERMIT PROGRAM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his projected consultations. However, yesterday he said that there was no instrument that could be used to bring those individuals here. Why did the Government not choose to exercise the Oppressed Prisoners' Permit Program esablished in 1982, a program that would allow those individuals speedy passage to Canada and would see that processing would be done on this side of the border? Canadian officials from the Minister's Department still wish to give urine tests to these six individuals in Pakistan. That is unfair. Will the Minister bring them here and process them from here?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the problem is not on this side of the border. That is the difficulty. What I have just indicated to the House is that I had discussions which I think might yield the release to freedom in Canada of those six Soviet prisoners of war. Certainly that is what I want. Certainly that is what the Government wants. Certainly it is clear that that is what the editor and the journalists of the Kingston Whig-Standard want. We are prepared to work together. I trust we will have the co-operation of the House of Commons in trying to bring those six Soviet prisoners of war to freedom in Canada.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the wheeling and dealing in Washington continue to go on. My question for the Prime Minister follows up on that of the Leader of the Opposition, but I ask for a more direct and precise answer this time. What secret arrangements have been made which led U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter to handwrite to Senator Pryor of Arkansas: "Dave, we'll get timber fixed"? What secret assurance is going to cost our lumber producers? Come out with some answers which give us an indication, please.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, none was given, as my hon. friend knows, nor would any be given.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER TO U.S. SENATORS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister feels that those kinds of assurances can be ignored, will he tell the House what President Reagan himself meant in his letter to those same Senators when he said: "I remain committed to obtaining resolutions of the lumber and other issues so that American industries will have fair opportunities to compete"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose he would have to ask President Reagan inasmuch as he wrote the letter. However, I know it will astonish the NDP that we, the Government of Canada, seek to obtain a good deal for Canada in any trading arrangement we enter into. We are satisfied that the longer term interests of the country require that a good deal for Canada also produces benefits for our trading partners. Clearly what President Reagan was trying to say in a civilized manner was that, if lumber is a problem for us, it is also a problem for him, and that within a liberalized trading arrangement he hopes it will be resolved, as do we.

POSSIBLE LUMBER PRODUCTION LOSSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Could the Prime Minister at least show that he is worried and concerned about all these indications of potential losses for our lumber production?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would be more successful as a writer for the soaps.

I may point out to him that we have expressed every possible objection and made every possible representation with respect to the lumber problem. This question is progressing quite normally, and we hope that everything will be settled in accordance with reasonable criteria and existing mechanisms. That is as difficult and as controversial as it will get.

IMMIGRATION

RUSSIAN ARMY DEFECTORS IN AFGHANISTAN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the handling by his Government of the whole issue of the Soviets who we all hope will come to Canada. I should like to ask the Minister very directly why the mission, which had originally been given the green light by his Department, was aborted.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all the Hon. Member should not believe all that she reads, or all that she says.

• (1425)

Mr. Crosbie: Absolutely.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Even the Whig-Standard?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Second, just to make it absolutely clear, there has been no relaxation at all of the will of the Government of Canada to bring those six Soviet POWs to freedom and to Canada. There are some very practical problems on the ground that have to do with jurisdictions of other countries, and that have to do with the attitude of the people who are now presumably in control of those six prisoners of war. We believe we may have a way to resolve the problem. I would hope that it will not be jeopardized by irresponsible behaviour in this House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA-U.S.S.R. RELATIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I don't think it behooves the Secretary of State to be so smug about the fact that it took three journalists—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Ms. Copps: —if it hadn't been for three journalists from the Kingston Whig-Standard, these people would be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: My question is for the Secretary of State. I want a direct answer. There was a statement made on public television last night that the reason—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. The Hon. Member has a question, I think, now.

Ms. Copps: Does the Minister deny the reason the mission was scotched was because he wanted to improve relationships before his trip to the Soviet Union in April, 1985?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I deny that categorically. Let me also say that I have had some experience before with Canadian actions that might bring people from captivity to freedom.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRADE

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, a week ago before the U.S. Senate Finance Committee, Clayton Yeutter had the following to say about softwood lumber:

A senior-level U.S. delegation is today meeting in Ottawa on this problem. It is imperative that we resolve this issue quickly, and this administration will spare no effort to accomplish that.

Is the Prime Minister today telling this House that there were no proposals made to Canada at that meeting a week ago here in Ottawa?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there may very well have been discussions back and forth. I assume that is what it was all about. If my hon. friend is asking whether there was a proposal or a suggestion that impacted on any decision in regard to the vote before the U.S. Senate, the answer is no.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Earlier in the Question Period the Prime Minister alluded that there might be free trade in lumber. There has been free trade between Canada and the United States for the last 40 years. Would the Prime Minister tell this House and tell Canadians just exactly what further discussions on free trade in lumber will bring about? Freer free trade?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I don't know how funny the people in British Columbia will find that. Unlike the NDP, people know there are Members of the United States Senate determined to cripple British Columbia's forest resource industries and we are opposed to that. That is why we are taking the position that we are on behalf of the British Columbia forest producers.

Mr. Deans: What position?

LAY-OFFS AT MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Last August the Minister assured the Member of Parliament for Moncton that he could not "support any massive reduction in the CN workforce in Moncton". In view of the seriousness of this particular issue to the people of Moncton, is the Minister prepared to live up to that commitment, to order CN to stop all lay-offs at Moncton and to rehire the 250 who are presently on lay-off?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the last information that I have would indicate that some 4,136 people are employed by CN in the Moncton area out of a total of 6,500 people in the whole Atlantic region. That is a pretty good proportion of the workforce of CN to be allocated to one region.

I think the Hon. Member is referring to the shop situation. As he knows, there are three main shops in Canada. There is excess capacity. CN is undertaking to review the excess capacity and to try to make the adjustments commensurate with the workload and the type of work which has to be carried out across the country.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ISSUE INSTRUCTIONS TO CN BOARD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister of the seriousness of this issue, not only to the people of Moncton but to the whole economy of Atlantic Canada. Will he not use the provisions of Section 99 of the Financial Administration Act to order the board members of CN to prevent all lay-offs at the CN shops in Moncton and to rehire the 250 on lay-off? Is the Minister going to live up to his commitment, or is he going to abdicate his responsibilities as Minister of Transport?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that there are over 4,000 people employed by CN in the greater Moncton area. I do take this matter very seriously, and that is why there are no precipitous decisions being made. We are trying to work the problem through to provide a long-term future for the people there commensurate with the realities of railroading in our country.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FISHERMEN'S UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Is he aware that two American businessmen who appeared on Canada AM this morning said that unemployment insurance benefits for fishermen would be on the table if we entered free trade negotiations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am the Minister responsible for monitoring Canada AM.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: You finally found a job for your talents, Joe.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Is that before you go to bed or after you get up?

Mr. Axworthy: You are under-qualified.

Mr. Deans: So that's what you do.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Deans, that's what I do. What do you do?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: We try to get answers to questions.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has such heavy responsibilities, he will also be aware that the businessmen stated the reason they believe all these items, including UIC benefits for fishermen, would be on the table, is that that is what they were told by Simon Reisman. Is he aware of that?

Mr. Crosbie: That's called hearsay.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, would you please identify for me the question posed by the questioner so that my answer might be fully communicated on Canada AM tomorrow morning?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it arises out of the prosecution of journalist Bertrand de la Grange for mischief in connection with a service he performed in showing the inadequacy of the security system at our airports. Does the Prime Minister consider it proper for the Minister of Justice, outside this House and before the trial of Mr. de la Grange, to declare him to be guilty of a criminal act?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knew when he asked his question yesterday, or if he did not know he should have known, that this proscution has nothing at all to do with the Attorney General of Canada. It is a municipal prosecution undertaken by the municipality in that area. Only the Attorney General of Quebec can intervene in the matter, if he so wishes.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You'll call him guilty then.

Mr. Crosbie: I haven't found anybody guilty or not guilty. I find the hon. gentleman guilty of lamentable ignorance in bringing the matter up as he did.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking questions about the actual prosecution. As usual, the Minister is wrong. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act gives him the authority and responsibility for cases like this, if he wants to take it.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Does the Prime Minister not feel he has any responsibility at all for the behaviour of his Ministers and for statements that they make which, in this case, can lead to a serious deterioration of the integrity of our system of justice?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the case at hand I find in favour of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Waddell: You're not on the bench yet, Brian.

Mr. Crosbie: That's a relief.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: It's also a surprise.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In his response to my colleague, the Member for Skeena, he indicated that the Government has a very clear position regarding softwood lumber exports to the United States to protect the Canadian forest industry. Would the Prime Minister simply explain what position the Canadian Government holds regarding softwood lumber?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government of Canada is very clear on this matter. A free market presently exists between our countries. We wish to see that maintained. We do not, in any way, accept the contention of the Americans that we are in any way subsidizing our industry, either through stumpage fees or other methods.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also with regard to the free trade issue. In response to the pharmaceutical industry lobby in the United States the National Association of Manufacturers said the following in their testimony: "The United States Government has received repeated assurances—"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Riis: My question is to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Is it true that assurances have been given?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, no assurances have been given.

CROP INSURANCE—RECREATIONAL SEEDING INQUIRY

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. There is a very real concern that this spring some prairie farmers will indulge in what they call "recreational seeding". Will the Minister confer with various farm groups and his provincial counterparts in order to examine federal-provincial crop insurance programs to find ways to deter those who would mine rather than farm their land?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, some of us may find the term "recreational seeding", which the Hon. Member used, to be somewhat interesting. I share his concern and appreciate the representations he is making. The federal-provincial crop insurance program has worked extremely well. We want to ensure that that program is widely used, but we must take all steps possible to ensure that the program is not misused. I can assure the Hon. Member that I will communicate his concerns to my provincial counterparts.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LIBYA—ADVICE TO CANADIANS TO LEAVE COUNTRY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week he advised Canadians in Libya to use their own judgment on whether they should leave Libya. The Deputy Prime Minister said in the House: "There is no immediate threat to Canadians". With no apparent change in circumstances, the Government is now telling Canadians to leave. Why has there been this reversal? Why did he not advise Canadians to leave last week?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there has been no reversal in the advice given by the Government of Canada. There has been no reversal on this question at all on this side of the House. We have consistently been making clear to Canadians our judgment about the instability of the situation in Libya. As I indicated to journalists who asked this question outside the House yesterday, while there is a period of relative calm now, there is no guarantee that that calm will continue. Even with all of our contingency plans, we cannot guarantee that we will be able to come to the aid of each Canadian in that very large country. For that reason I extended the advice of the Government of Canada that Canadians now in Libya should leave.

PRESENCE OF CANADIAN COMPANIES IN LIBYA

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, if the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Government believe that Canadians should now leave, would it not follow that the companies they work for in Libya should also leave as part of a meaningful economic boycott of Libya?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know there are limits in law to the authority of the Government of Canada regarding the activities in another country of Canadian companies or citizens. We have done what we can do. We have taken one action regarding the export of certain kinds of Canadian oil drilling equipment with particular western technology. The Prime Minister has made it very clear that we are prepared to consider other actions in concert with other countries.

I think it is important for the House of Commons to recognize that the American action the other day was taken because they saw no alternative. What is essential now for Canada and other countries interested in stability is that we work together to find alternative ways to deal with states which encourage terrorism.

REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT FOR WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. In Regina yesterday my leader, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre, and myself met with senior officials of some western farm organizations to discuss the crisis facing Canadian farmers. There was a strong consensus among those organizations that a deficiency payment is needed to offset the losses caused by low prices. Will the Minister accept the advice of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the United Grain Growers and the National Farmers Union, and introduce a farm support program so that farmers will know where they stand?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, since as far back as the beginning of February we have been meeting with farm leaders on this topic. The Minister of Agriculture and myself had a chance last week to sit down with CFA officials in three meetings to talk about this very issue. We are monitoring the situation in line with what the Prime Minister has said, that we would like to do more, and in line with our fiscal restraints.

Let me say again that it is refreshing to have a Prime Minister who recognizes the problem and is prepared to deal with it on a first-hand basis, as opposed to a previous Prime Minister who went to western Canada and essentially gave us the finger and told us to sell our own wheat.

INTERNATIONAL GRAIN MARKETS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister agree that a deficiency program would be a clear signal to the rest of the world that Canada cannot be pushed out of her traditional markets, and that Canada stands firmly behind her farmers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we sent out a very clear signal in the form of the Canadian Wheat Board which has been doing an excellent job of marketing our grain. I have said many times, and say it again, that we do not believe what the Europeans and Americans are doing is useful with respect to prices. The Canadian Wheat Board has an excellent reputation as a reliable supplier of high quality grain. We believe that will assist us in maintaining our markets. The larger question of depressed prices remains. We are doing what we can and will continue to monitor the situation and stay abreast of developments.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. SENATE COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As he knows, the U.S. Senate Finance Committee has now gone into overtime on the trade question, with the score tied. Senator Dole has now presented a new alternative to try to break the impasse. He said there could be approval for tree trade fast-track negotiations subject to certain conditions, one being that Canada would recognize there should not be subsidies for exports. If that is the basis for Senate approval of fast-track negotiations, will the Government of Canada accept that particular notion as proposed by Senator Dole?

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to allow the answer, but the Hon. Member knows it is very hypothetical.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He has introduced the resolution.

Mr. Speaker: Can the Hon. Member find a way to phrase it which is not hypothetical?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, with deference, there is nothing hypothetical about what is happening in the Senate or about the resolution. It is important for us to know the position of the Government of Canada.

Is the position of the Government of Canada simply that there must be no conditions attached, as opposed to the question of the resolution put forward by Senator Dole?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The position of the Government of Canada, Mr. Speaker, is that indeed the trade negotiations should be launched on a clean, no-condition precedent basis between two states. Therefore the resolution, which was brought forward in good faith no doubt, and is a draft resolution as I understand it which if it attaches preconditions of various kinds, would be unacceptable to the Government of Canada.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

GULF TAKEOVER OF HIRAM WALKER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, nine families control 53 per cent of Canadian business. Tomorrow a deal will be completed which will give the Reichmanns control of a substantial portion of the energy sector and open the door to the probability of ultimate control of much of the distillery industry by the Bronfmans. My question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is this. What benefit can I tell my constituents the Government sees in this increasing concentration of ownership which they know will threaten hundreds of jobs and a venerable community conscious employer like Hiram Walker?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I would simply remind my colleague that some of Bill C-91 provisions will enable the Competition Tribunal to prohibit certain mergers. Therefore I urge Hon. Members and particularly my colleague on the other side of the House to make sure that the Bill will be passed as quickly as possible.

REQUEST THAT TAKEOVER BE BLOCKED

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister block the Gulf-Hiram Walker merger deal now through a directive to the Director of Research and Investigation to obtain an interim injunction so that he can ascertain the implications for the economy, jobs, and cost to the taxpayers of this merger?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Like any other proposed deal, Mr. Speaker, this one is now being examined by the Director who will intervene immediately should he uncover a breach of the existing legislation.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

EFFECT OF PROLONGED INSPECTIONS ON TOURISM

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Recent reports claim that prolonged Customs inspections at the Peace Bridge have discouraged large numbers of American tourists from visiting Ontario. What assurance can the Minister give that there will not be unreasonable delays at the bridge during the coming tourist season?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I remind my colleague that Customs inspectors have a special responsibility in this regard. However, I have already initiated some inquiries into the matter and, to the extent we can properly make some accommodations, we will make every attempt to carry that out.

HEALTH

REPORTED PCB LEAKAGE FROM HYDRO-QUEBEC INSTALLATION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On April 7 it was reported that for two years PCBs have been leaking from a Hydro-Quebec installation into the Sabrevois River which in turn flows into the St. Lawrence. What plan does the Minister have to protect public health from contamination of drinking water by toxic chemicals?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my Department, along with the Department of the Environment, is well aware of the issue the Hon. Member has raised. The situation is being monitored carefully. The information I have is that there is no immediate health hazard or danger. However, the Department and officials will continue to monitor the situation.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF SAFE DRINKING WATER LEGISLATION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in light of these frequent developments will the Minister introduce a federal safe drinking water Act or, as a minimum, a set of stringent standards for toxic chemicals not covered by existing guidelines?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is a valid suggestion. My colleague, the Minister of the Environment, and I both carry responsibility in this area, he for the cleanup of the environment and I from the point of view of health safety. We are examining the question of whether, if we go that route, what should be the provisions to cover some of the issues which, under present regulations and legislation, have not been covered.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN PATENT LAW

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. He knows that the National Association of Manufacturers, in testimony before the U.S. Senate Committee on Finance, indicated that the U.S. Government has received repeated assurances that Canada's present compulsory licensing law, Section 41 of the Canadian patent law, would be amended. We have been told that is not true. Therefore will the Prime Minister undertake to contact all of the members of that committee who are about to vote on a very crucial question and inform them that Canada has no such intention?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any need for us to supplement the extensive reading of Hansard which is undertaken by members of that committee, particularly those portions which reflect the comments of the House Leader of the NDP.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am not exactly sure why the Minister feels that this is a humorous matter. I will direct my supplementary question to whomever wants to answer. It makes no difference to me, as long as someone gets up and says something. Is the Government prepared to inform the members of the Senate Finance Committee in Washington that not only are we not prepared to rescind Section 41 of the licencing Act of Canada as it affects pharmaceuticals, we are also not prepared to negotiate away UIC benefits for fishermen, and we are not prepared to see an agreement on lumber that satisfies only the interests of the United States of America?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing that is abundantly clear about the approach that this Government has taken to trade negotiations with the United States it is that we have insisted that, if they begin, they begin without preconditions. That has been our position consistently. It is our position today.

The Minister will know that the enhancement program on fishing lakes in northeastern Alberta that was launched by the Alberta Government conflicts directly with the treaty rights of Indians in northeastern Alberta. What is the Minister doing about it?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is a matter that has been brought to my attention. Since it involves treaty rights, I am sure the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members are aware that it is a complicated matter. The Department has it under review.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INFORMATION GIVEN BY OFFICIALS TO TAXPAYERS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Today the Minister outlined the measures that will assist staff in giving the right answers to Canadian taxpayers in the future. What measures has he taken to assist taxpayers in the eight days remaining to file income tax returns, since we learned a few weeks ago that 40 per cent of the answers to the questions addressed to Revenue Canada were wrong?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows that this matter has been dealt with by commentators and that I have answered questions in the House and outside the House.

We regret the situation where performance appears to be lacking somewhat. However, upon analysis it may well be that the performance is not as bad as was first indicated. In any event, as the Hon. Member knows, I have outlined some measures that we are taking to correct the situation. I can assure him that the staff has been interviewed and during these last few days we will attempt to be more diligent and more forthcoming with the answers we are giving to the public.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AFGHANISTAN—UNITED NATIONS INITIATIVE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who gave an encouraging answer to the question posed by the Hon. Member for York West regarding certain Soviet defectors and the improved readiness of Canada to accept them. My question is essentially a supplementary, with a view to addressing the underlying problem of the conflict in Afghanistan. Does the Canadian Government support the United Nations initiative and proposal that were presented last week to Afghanistan and Pakistan regarding the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have supported those talks and those United Nations efforts throughout. We intend to continue to support them. Naturally, we intend to look for any other ways, if any can be found, whereby Canada might supplement the excellent initiatives taken by the Secretary General.

MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS OF PROSPECTIVE IMMIGRANTS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Government of Canada is conducting a cost justification study of doctors whose job it is to "ensure that prospective immigrants to Canada pose neither a medical threat to present citizens nor a financial burden to Canadian health services". Will the Minister confirm that the doctors who deal with immigration matters have already received their lay-off notices in London, Bonn, and Paris, and that further lay-offs are contemplated in other countries?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): First, Mr. Speaker, I must indicate to the Hon. Member what these medical officers have done abroad. It is not a matter in which the health of Canadians would be in any way jeopardized or that health checks will not be carried out.

The Hon. Member's information that there will not be medical doctors of Canadian citizenship in those locations is correct. As we have done for many years, we will have medical checks performed by doctors who are native citizens of a particular country. Those medical examinations will still take place and be checked here in Canada, as is done in many other countries where we do not have medical doctors.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is long.

EXTENSION OF VISITORS' VISAS WITHOUT MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Government has also extended the medical examination-free period for visitors to Canada from three months to six months. In view of these drastic changes, why have the provincial Governments not been consulted or notified of these changes since it is their health systems that would bear the brunt of the cost of lowering health standards?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that also is not the correct interpretation of the situation. We have the Immigration Medical Review Board on which a number of provincial representatives sit as these questions are discussed and decisions are taken. For example, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, and New Brunswick are on that board at this time.

The Hon. Member should be careful when he assesses this. We receive many requests from Members to ease visitors' entry into Canada because of regulations in other countries. That is one side. On the other hand we have a responsibility to ensure that health is not jeopardized. When we see what has been done with the Department of Employment and Immigration, External Affairs, and my Department, we see that those principles remain. They have not been jeopardized in any way—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

TAX CREDIT REQUESTED FOR VOLUNTEER WORKERS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians are involved in volunteer work with hospitals, charities, and many other worthy causes. Since this volunteer work often involves out-of-pocket costs for seniors and others with limited disposable income, will the Minister consider some form of tax assistance, such as a tax credit, for these worthy individuals?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Government values very much the work of the volunteer sector and has taken certain steps to encourage the volunteer sector. I suggest that the Hon. Member's proposal involves some complexities. It does lead to an increased administrative burden for a volunteer organization itself. However, it is certainly a worth-while proposal to consider, and I will do that.

PRICE OF DIESEL FUEL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. One of my constituents runs 35 diesel trucks from Richmond, British Columbia, through the interior of B.C. to the Kootenays. My question is one that he would put to the Minister if he were here. Why has the price of diesel fuel not gone down like gasoline? As a trucker he must pay this increased cost and he wants to know why the price has not gone down?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked that question in committee last week and I can only supply him with the same answer. The price of diesel fuel has gone down 7 cents a litre on average. However, the marketing circumstances are different from gasoline, generally, and it responds to the market depending on competitive pressure.

Mr. Waddell: One supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Algoma.

PRICE OF FARM FUEL IN MANITOBA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Last Thursday 600 farmers rallied at Carman, Manitoba, to protest grain prices and the high input costs.

Petro-Canada and other oil companies have eliminated their volume discount. World prices for crude oil have dropped by 60 per cent since last fall. The actual price for farm fuel in Carman, Manitoba, has dropped from 34.7 cents a litre to 32.6 cents a litre. Why is the Government not taking action to reduce farm fuel input costs, especially in view of the fact that the Minister has reduced the grain prices?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The premise of your question is wrong.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I farm in that area. My recollection is that the prices of diesel fuel have come down by something in the order of 10 cents a litre since they reached their peak. What the Hon. Member says is true, we have lost some of the discounts. I understand that some of those discounts are being looked at again. Since world oil prices started to come down, that 10-cent reduction equals something in the neighbourhood of 45 cents a gallon.

Mr. Foster: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is three o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ACCEPTABILITY OF PETITIONS PURSUANT TO FORMER S.O. 73

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations among House Leaders and I think Your Honour will find a disposition to receive, by unanimous consent, and pass without debate, the following orders. The first is as follows:

That notwithstanding Standing Order 106, petitions signed before the implementation of the new Standing Orders on February 24, 1986, and clearly identified as such, may be filed with the Clerk of the House, provided:

That the said petitions be examined pursuant to practices and procedures and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 73 in effect on September 9, 1985;

That the petitions found in order by the Clerk of Petitions be recorded in the Votes and Proceedings and those petitions found out of order be returned to the Member filing the petitions;

That petitions be received pursuant to this Order no later than the last sitting day of June, 1986; and

That the Government not be required to table a response to any petition filed pursuant to this Order.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—CHANGE TO CONFORM WITH PROVISIONAL STANDING ORDERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): The second order reads as follows:

That the entries of all orders and items on the Order Paper and Notices under "Private Members' Business" be changed to conform with the terms of the provisional Standing Orders in effect on February 24, 1986, and that the Clerk of the House be authorized to make such changes.

Mr. Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce his motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motions. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions agreed to.

The House resumed from Monday, April 21, consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration), that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the third time and passed; and on the amendment (Ms. Copps) (p. 12465).

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in this important debate at the third reading stage of the employment equity legislation known as Bill C-62. In effect, this Bill represents yet another broken promise of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). Canadians will recall that throughout the 1984 election campaign the Prime Minister set out an ambitious program to implement full employment equity for all Canadians. I remind those Canadians who are watching the debate, and those who have been following it, of the words of the Prime Minister who said in August of 1984:

Our party will ensure that companies providing services to the federal Government hire increasing numbers of women to perform such services. When seeking Government business, these companies will be required to detail their action plans, timetables, and programs for attracting, training and advancing women within their operations—

The Prime Minister went on to say this:

We support the need for human resources planning within the federal bureaucracy, which includes goals and objectives to achieve parity for women, at all levels of Government operations, commensurate with their skills and expectations. Numerical goals are one of several goals required: training and retraining are others.

Canadians remember the promises made by the Prime Minister during the federal election campaign. Today, as we examine this legislation on employment equity, it is clear that those promises have been broken. In particular, the flaws in Bill C-62 are the promises which have been broken at the expense of groups in our society which have been historically disadvantaged when it comes to achieving equal access to labour market opportunities. In particular I speak of the disabled, of women, native people and visible minorities, all of whom had high hopes that the Tory Government would back up the rhetoric of the Prime Minister with concrete action.

That was not to be. Why is it that legislation such as effective employment equity legislation is so important? Time and time again we have had statistical studies, many of them referred to in the report of the Royal Commission on Equality and Employment, chaired so ably by Judge Rosalie Abella, that provide a very bleak picture indeed of the employment opportunities and benefits for designated groups. There is an imbalance in both statistical and monetary terms. Women have lower than average incomes. They are employed predominantly in sectors and in jobs which are the lowest paid. Women do not earn the same amount as their male counterparts for performing the same or similar jobs. Disabled people suffer from extraordinarily high unemployment rates. When they are employed they tend to be concentrated in the low-paying, marginal sectors of the labour market. They have additional expenses which those workers who are not disabled do not face, such as medication, special aids and devices, and special transportation services. Native people have incredibly high levels of unemployment, something in the order of five times higher than the non-native population. Recent immigrants to Canada face particular difficulties in advancing in the workforce. They are frequently found in job ghettos or in the lowest paid, lowest skilled and most vulnerable sectors of the employment market. So there is a problem which should have been addressed by the Government in its employment euqity legislation.

I spent some three months touring the country with the Subcommittee on Equality Rights. We travelled from coast to coast to hold public hearings. We heard representations from Canadians representing women's organizations, native people, the disabled and visible minorities. They expressed their very serious concerns about the provisions of Bill C-62.

I wish to take this opportunity to remind the House and, through the House, Canadians, of some of the concerns which have been raised regarding the legislation we are debating today. One of the key spokespersons for the disabled, Beryl Potter, of the Coalition on Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities, said this:

> Like the bill—it's not even worth the paper it's written on—I've never been so disillusioned in my life as I am with Prime Minister Mulroney. I was a supporter of him. I worked for him in his campaign and I am totally, totally disillusioned.

That from a former active Conservative and one of the heads of the Coalition on Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities. The spokesperson for the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada said: "Bill C-62 is of limited value". The spokesperson of the National Association of Women and the Law, Suzanne Boivin, said:

> Nothing will change. Unfortunately, it is simply wishful thinking.

The groups which are affected by this legislation are unanimous in their condemnation of it. At the end of the day it is clear that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Ms. MacDonald) and her Government have not effectively consulted with the groups affected by this legislation. In fact, they have ignored the major concerns raised by these groups and by their spokespeople.

I would like to take this opportunity to elaborate on why Bill C-62 is such a disappointment to the millions of Canadians who, in fact, were looking for concrete action, for decisive action, from the Government to ensure employment equity. First, I wish to recognize the excellent work done by Judge Rosalie Abella in this area. We in the New Democratic Party have drawn upon her report in outlining what we believe to be the correct approach, the philosophical underpinnings of strong employment equity legislation. As well, I wish to underline the outstanding contribution made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), who in his work both in committee and in the House has reflected with eloquence the concerns of the groups which appeared before the committee seeking changes to the legislation.

When we examine Bill C-62 we see that the purpose of the Bill as spelled out is certainly commendable. The purpose of the Bill, as stated, is as follows:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the workplace so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to correct the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

That is the guiding principle of this legislation. However, when we go on to read the Bill itself, we find that it falls far short of that.

Once again, I would note that consultation with the groups affected by this legislation was sorely lacking. Beryl Potter, a former active supporter of the Conservative Party who now says that she has been betrayed by the Prime Minister of this country has said the following:

> We have tried everything. We have consulted with the CEIC staff, appeared as witnesses before the Parliamentary Committee on the Bill, made pleas to the Prime Minister directly and rallied on Parliament Hill.
> We have demanded that the Bill be amended to include the Government's own Departments and agencies and to include a penalty for failing to comply with employment equity plans. The Government has not responded to any of our demands.

All Hon. Members will recall that a week ago yesterday the members of the Coalition on Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities came to Parliament Hill and sat in the gallery. In many cases, these people were lifted into the gallery. They were bitterly disappointed with the response of the Government.

We have five underlying concerns with respect to the weaknesses in this legislation and I would like to deal with each of them in turn. The first and perhaps most fundamental concern is with respect to the lack of any effective enforcement mechanism or penalties large enough to act as a deterrent to the corporate sector. Shari Stein, the legal counsel for the Coalition on Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities, has said the following about Bill C-62:

> How can anyone, the people, the provinces, the municipal Governments, take this legislation seriously when it has no teeth, it only requires voluntary compliance and the federal Government has exempted itself.

Furthermore, the Bill does not require that the so-called action plans with goals and timetables established by the firms be made available to the Human Rights Commission or the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission. In effect, there is no mechanism whatsoever to guard against plans which may be poorly devised and wholly inadequate to meet the needs of target groups. We have examined the response of the Government to the unanimous recommendations of the equality committee.

I see that the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) is present in the House. I know how strongly he supported the recommendations of the committee on equality and I know that he will want to have a chance to speak on that at the appropriate time. The committee recommended far more effective legislation. It recommended that the Government give teeth to Bill C-62 and ensure that there are adequate employment equity enforcement mechanisms. Those mechanisms are not there and I deeply regret that. Certainly the groups affected by this Bill regret that very much.

The Bill makes no reference whatsoever to equal pay for work of equal value. Here both Judge Abella and the National Action Committee on the Status of Women recommended that concrete and specific reference should be made to the important principle of equal pay for work of equal value and that it should be included in the legislation itself.

As well, there are no provisions for mandatory contract compliance for firms which may be doing business with the Government. Clearly the experience in the United States has shown that contract compliance can be a very effective tool in changing discriminatory practices which may be followed by firms selling goods and services to the Government. This was a major recommendation of the Equality for All report and the Government has chosen to ignore it.

The Abella Commission's recommendation No. 27 states that contract compliance should be imposed by legislation. The Government has ignored that important recommendation. In Bill C-62, we see that contract compliance only applies to firms with 100 or more employees and only if the value of the contracts exceed $200,000. Moreover, failure to comply with the equity proposals of the Government does not result in loss of a contract but only means that in the future, such a firm may be removed from competition. That is not much of an incentive to comply with employment equity. I know that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has fought a vigorous battle within Cabinet to strengthen this Bill but unfortunately was beaten back by the right wing of the Tory Cabinet and caucus.

The provisions with respect to employment equity and in particular contract compliance are set out in the report entitled Equality for All. The unanimous recommendation of the committee composed of five Conservative Members, one Liberal Member and myself was that contract compliance be a part of the employment equity legislation. We noted that in the United States, a similar executive order enforced by the office of federal contract compliance programs applies to contracts worth $50,000 or more granted to firms with 50 or more employees. The unanimous recommendation of our committee was that the ceiling of $200,000 and 100 employees is too high. That was a recommendation made unanimously by the committee with respect to this legislation that is now before the House. I know that some Hon. Members from the other side of the House fought for this but obviously lost out.

There were recommendations in other areas about which the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta felt particularly strongly. I know that he fought hard in those areas. However, the reality is that that particular voice was not heard, and in some instances, perhaps we might breathe a sigh of relief that that was the case. However, I know that the Hon. Member himself may wish to comment with respect to his views on this important report.

Much of the wording of Bill C-62, particularly that of Clause 4 which deals with the duty of employers, is very loose and ill defined. What, for example, is the effect of not defining reasonable accommodation or positive policies and practices? This crucial question should surely be the subject of negotiation between employers and employees. Instead, there has been some vague process of consultation and even that was only included as an amendment later in the day.

Finally, the fifth major concern we have with respect to this Bill is that federal Government departments including the RCMP and the Canadian armed forces must be included within the scope of the legislation. Once again, this was a recommendation made very clearly by the special committee on equality rights. We said that the legislation on employment equity should apply to all federal public-sector employers and to employers under federal jurisdiction. Despite that unanimous recommendation, the Government once again told us to forget it, that it is not prepared to implement that important recommendation.

I think we can understand why the Government did that if we read an extract from the Government's response. The Government has said that it attempts to balance the needs of the designated groups against the Government's desire not to interfere unduly in the operations of employers. It is a pretty skewed balance and one which has left the groups which should be assisted by employment equity legislation, women, native people, the disabled and visible minorities, very critical indeed of the legislation.

The Government argued that federal Departments and agencies are covered by the 1983 Public Service policy on affirmative action. I would remind the Government that that policy does not apply to members of the RCMP or the armed forces. We know that those employers are some of the most reactionary and sexist employers in the country. We hoped that they would have been included under this legislation, weak though it may be.

I would like to conclude by reminding the House once again that during the 1984 federal election campaign, Conservative Members raised the expectations of groups which had historically been disadvantaged, groups which had hoped that the Government's promises would be kept. Rather than that, we see a legacy of broken promises in so many other areas as well as in this fundamental area of social justice.

These groups had hoped that corrective action would be taken to deal with past abuses and ongoing barriers to workplace equity. They also recognized that the previous Government took no action whatsoever, and certainly they were critical of the former Government for its failure to act. It is interesting to see the spokesperson for that Party now standing up in opposition and railing at the Government in respect of action which should have been taken many years ago. Certainly many of us who were here when Liberal Governments were in power were critical of their inaction. We hoped that the Tories would keep their promises.

Instead of providing mechanisms in the Bill to ensure compliance through effective enforcement, Bill C-62 relies on voluntarism and invitations. Surely the past has shown us clearly that it is not good enough to leave it to employers to establish and pursue their own goals and targets. The Minister somehow believes that if the failure of employers to live up to these goals and timetables is published, employers will be shamed into action. The record of employers across the land is well known and has been clearly documented. Certainly they have not been shamed into taking steps which would involve the full participation of all Canadians in the workforce.

As the New Democratic Party understands it—and this is understood by millions of women, native people, disabled persons, and visible minorities—employment equity requires a solid commitment to using the instruments of Government to ensure that ideals become reality. We need enforcement mechanisms with teeth. We need provisions for contract compliance, negotiation between management and workers, and a clearly stated commitment to the overriding principle of equal pay for work of equal value. Those essential principles are lacking in this important piece of legislation.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the Opposition, both in committee and at report stage in the House, tried to amend Clause 7 of the Bill, that is the clause dealing with penalties. We tried to amend it so that the penalty would apply not only to employers who failed to comply with section 6 but also to employers who failed to comply with Clauses 4 and 5. While Clause 4 obliges employers to implement employment equity, the Hon. Member knows that there is no penalty in the Bill if they do not comply with it. Also, Clause 5 obliges employers to prepare an action plan with goals and timetables, but there is no penalty for non-compliance. Both his Party and my Party proposed an amendment to Clause 7 which read that if an employer failed to comply with Clauses Nos. 4, 5, and 6 they would be guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $500,000, and it was turned down by the Government.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is a learned attorney, and I should like his views on the argument given by the Government. The Government said that it was not necessary to make Clause 7 apply to Clauses 4 and 5 because by referring the reports under section 6 to the Canadian Human Rights Commission, Clauses 4 and 5 could be enforced under the Canadian Human Rights Act. I am a lawyer as well. I have read that Act from beginning to end and from end to beginning. In any case, I cannot follow the argumentation of the Government. If it were really in favour of enforcement, why would it not accept that simple amendment to Clause 7? I ask the Hon. Member, who is known to be a competent attorney, whether he has examined those arguments of the Government, which I failed to grasp, indicating that the Bill did not require an enforcement clause because the Canadian Human Rights Act would take care of that.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague and learned legal associate for his important question. I am not at all surprised that the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has failed to comprehend the Government's reasoning. Indeed, all reasonable Canadians and all groups affected by the legislation do not understand the Government's reasoning.

The Bill is very specific. Only Clause 7 is specifically an offence section. It reads:

> An employer who fails to comply with section 6 is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $50,000.

Certainly an employer who fails to comply with Clause 5, the one dealing with so-called action plans or the amendment which was added in committee, or with Clause 4, the one dealing with the employer's general duty to promote employment equity, would be able to say that there was no provision in the law for mandatory compliance with those clauses. Clause 7 only deals with the failure to comply with Section 6. It is quite clear that by singling out one section for the purposes of enforcement and deliberately not making references to the two clauses which are at the heart of the Bill in real terms, the Government is saying to the corporate sector: "Please comply. This is what we would like you to do, but if you are not prepared to do it, we are not prepared to enforce it". It is certainly a betrayal of the hopes and expectations of the groups affected.

In response to the suggestion that the Canadian Human Rights Act would somehow give the Canadian Human Rights Commission the opportunity to enforce these clauses, I searched that Act, as did my colleague, and there was absolutely no provision for that. We could obtain a learned legal opinion from the Chief Law Officer of the Crown who is present in the Chamber today, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada. He might want to point to a section in the Canadian Human Rights Act which would give the Commission the power in fact to enforce these clauses or to put teeth into them. I do not want to take up any more time because I want to give the Minister of Justice an opportunity to clarify for all Canadians just how the Canadian Human Rights Commission will have the opportunity to enforce these clauses.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the position taken by the Hon. Member with regard to the enforcement policies and provisions in Bill C-62. As reported at page 12454 of Hansard for yesterday, the Minister made the following statement:

> The Government is committed to ensuring that employment equity becomes a reality. We intend to knock on the doors of employers who do not meet their responsibilities. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we will be knocking with a firm fist.

That confirms exactly what we have been saying. The Government only has pious hopes but no way of enforcing them, because there is no obligation on any employer to report progress. Would the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) tell us how he thinks the Minister will be able to knock on the doors of employers with a firm fist? What kind of a result does he think the Minister will get? What about an employer who says: "I will not tell you the progress I am making on employment equity because it is none of your business; the law does not force me to do that"? How does he foresee the reaction of a medium sized employer with 100 or more employees? Of course employers will be required to fulfil a couple of obligations. They will have to plan for eliminating systemic discrimination and presenting a plan of action. However, I do not see anything in the Bill that forces them to report on progress made. Can the Hon. Member find anything in the Bill requiring progress made being reported to the Canadian Human Rights Commission?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) quite correctly pointed out one of the very serious weaknesses in the legislation. There is no real clout in the hands of the Minister to enforce the legislation. All she can do is get down on bended knee and beg, plead, cajole, request, and urge. All she can do is knock on the door and say: "Please, Mr. Employer, hire more disabled persons and more women". That approach has been tried in the past for decades, and it has not worked.

When we in the New Democratic Party looked at the legislation, we worked hard to strengthen the Bill. Hon. Members of the Official Opposition also proposed amendments which would put some teeth into it. When the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier talks about the Minister knocking on the doors of employers and insisting upon action, what we will find instead is the Minister standing outside corporate boardrooms and whimpering: "Please, please, please, we want you to obey this law, and if you do not obey it, we might amend it". In the law itself there are no sanctions or teeth whatsoever.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I will quote further from the Minister's speech of yesterday. It is quite interesting how a Minister of the Crown could make such statements. I will come back to this later on in my speech about this because I noticed some interesting comments of hers yesterday. At page 12453 of Hansard, the Minister said:

> At the end of that year they will be required to report on the progress that they have made toward achieving these goals. These reports will be made public, open to media and public scrutiny—and this is the second half of the two-tiered system—

This is exactly what Judge Abella rejected, voluntary reporting on progress. She said that you cannot believe that public opinion will change an employer who has in his practices or has in his systemic employment practices actions discriminatory to the four groups we are talking about, namely, women, the handicapped, native peoples and visible minorities. If an employer has in his books or in his practices things that discriminate against these groups, how does the Member square what the Minister told us yesterday with the Abella Report which says: "Don't rely on voluntary reporting because it won't happen"? It has not happened yet and it will not start happening after Bill C-62 is passed.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has joined me today in this important debate. I would be quite prepared to seek unanimous consent to ask the Minister to answer that very important question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: In the short time available, I would note that the Hon. Member is raising a very important question. Under this legislation and, in particular, Clause 5 of the legislation it states that while an employer has to prepare a plan which sets out various goals and timetables, this plan remains a secret document. The employer has to keep it locked in his or her principal place of business for a period of at least three years, but the employer does not even have to give it to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. In committee, the opposition Party suggested that if we are going to be able to monitor effectively the progress of employers in achieving employment equity, we should at least make sure that we have access to the statement of the achievement of goals and timetables as recommended by Judge Abella. That amendment was rejected. For that, as well as the many other reasons that we have been enunciating during the course of this debate, we are opposed to the third reading of this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille).

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-62, an Act respecting, as it says, employment equity, is a Bill which has been the subject of debate in the House now for some period of time. We have to ask ourselves, does this Bill in third reading, after we have tried to work on amendments and ways to improve it, fulfil its declared purposes? The purpose as outlined in the Bill in the second clause, in about the third sentence, sets forth what the alleged purpose of this Bill is. It is to achieve equality in the workplace. It says: "In the workplace".

First, Mr. Speaker, it is only in some workplaces, it is not in "the workplace". In fact, we have to say that "the workplace" only applies to those workplaces where there are more than 100 people employed, otherwise this Bill does not apply. Next, it does not apply to the entire private sector, only to a number of companies doing federal work. Further, it does not really apply to any federal Departments. It does not even apply to this House of Commons or to the other place, the Senate.

When we look at what it does apply to, we find that the Bill applies to some federal Crown corporations and about 800 federally regulated firms with more than 100 employees. Otherwise this Bill applies to no one else. It certainly does not apply in any way to "the workplace". It applies to only a very few workplaces in Canada. Therefore, from the beginning, the Bill is a sham in terms of its alleged purposes.

The Bill says that no person shall be denied employment. Clause 2 states:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the workplace so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfillment of that goal, to correct the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities—

These are the people in the groups to which the Bill is supposed to apply and whom it is supposed to help. It says it is "to achieve equality". This Bill does not change a single solitary thing, Mr. Speaker. It does not change anything. It is supposed to attack systemic discrimination against certain groups. By systemic discrimination we mean the way the system works, the network, the basic underlying system as we know it, the ingrained system. Women know what this ingrained system is because they know that they have not achieved in any sense the positions of leadership and of power in any way equally to men.

The handicapped certainly know what the system is. They know in very many ways that they are regarded as useless instead of being regarded as excellent resources. Various minority groups, especially our native peoples, understand how the system works, but it does not work for them.

This Bill is suppose to change systemic discrimination. It is supposed to affect the system. It is a sham. The Bill is an absolute sham. Who says it is a sham, Mr. Speaker? I say it is a sham. The opposition Parties agree it is a sham.

In my work in the field of human rights, I have had some occasion over these months to talk to people in that field. There is not one single person who works in the field of human rights who does not regard the Bill as a sham.

If we look also at groups who are affected, at umbrella groups, because I would not want to read off the whole list of the names of the organizations that regard this Bill as a sham, let me just say briefly that the umbrella groups include the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped, the Urban Alliance on Race Relations, the National Ethnocultural Council, the Canadian Association for Community Living, formerly the Canadian Association of the Mentally Retarded, the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women, and the Coalition on Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities. That is not the complete list. That is only a list of some of the umbrella groups. Hundreds and hundreds of leaders of groups across the country have spoken up and have written, and although they declare the Bill a sham, the Government persists in putting this Bill through unamended.

There have been certain comments that I think are worth putting on the record. For example, Carol Tator, President of the Urban Alliance on Race Relations, says:

> What the government has done has given us an empty, symbolic gesture toward the whole problem of achieving employment equity.

Shari Stein, a lawyer for the Advocacy Resource Centre for the Handicapped, adds that Bill C-62 is so weak it is potentially harmful. That is why the Opposition is so determined. If this legislation moved a small step in the right direction, one would not feel that one had to fight this to get it changed drastically. However, when groups like this call this Bill harmful, one must listen, take notice, and realize that a lot is at stake.

The purpose of this Bill is allegedly to ensure that no person is denied employment opportunities or benefits. Those are high sounding ideals, but what does this Bill do for our minority groups? My colleagues, who have analysed this Bill as I have, have pointed out that, in effect, this Bill only asks employers to file a report. The terminology of the report is not laid out. We moved amendments to clarify some of the terms, but they were not supported by the Government. Only employers who have more than 100 employees and fall into limited categories are affected by this Bill. They have to file some reports. We asked how the Government would ensure that employers would have a plan for the future to change their employment practices. After fighting against it as hard as possible, the Government finally saw fit to require employers to prepare a plan setting out their goals and timetables. The Government said employers should fill their drawers with their plans and keep them for at least three years. They are not to send these plans to the Government or the Canadian Human Rights Commission, but only to fill their drawers with them.

It is ludicrous that the Government, in all sincerity, could present such a Bill as this which is mocked by the people whom it is supposed to serve. The Government persists in refusing all of the recommendations which have been made to it by the minority groups and in ignoring the very reports which were presumably the cause for bringing forth this legislation. The Government consulted with these groups, commissioned the Abella Report, and appointed a committee on equality, which included Conservative members and unanimously called for the inclusion of various rigorous provisions, none of which are to be found in this Bill.

The women of Canada comprise 51 per cent of our population. As a group, they earn lower salaries than men and perform a higher proportion of part-time work. Very often they are the last hired and the first fired. Due to their frequent part-time employment, they are in a situation of great vulnerability. Over the decades the system has not corrected itself. We cannot accept the views of the Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) that, because she is an eternal optimist and has faith in the Canadian people, things will work out.

It is not a question of the Canadian people, in whom we all have faith. It is a question of the employers who have to make a profit. Some of these employers are good citizens. However, it is not the good citizens toward whom we direct legislation, but the bad ones. There is no guarantee in this Bill that the bad citizens, or let us say the more self-centred citizens, in the corporate field are going to understand that we mean business. The Parliament of Canada is not a place to play games, and we resent that the Government is playing games with an issue as serious as equality for such a large proportion of our population.

Surely no injustice can be tolerated simply on the grounds that its correction will cost money. The complaint that the extra work of filling out these forms might be a bit expensive will not be accepted by Canadians any more than we will accept the view that we should not bother to keep the environment clean, because it will cost companies money. Let us keep the environment clean and let us keep the workplace clean and free of inequality and discrimination. Today women are supporting themselves and their dependants. They are working for a living and for survival. They have the right to equal pay for work of equal value. They have the right to take their rightful role as equal human beings. That is what Canadians want from the Government.

We sometimes hear from the less progressive elements of the business community that women must be moved from low-paying jobs into higher paying jobs through affirmative action. That is a laudable thought, but who will then fill the low-paying jobs which are left vacant? The problem is that those jobs are undervalued. If they continue to be undervalued because women fill them, we will not have solved the problem.

The lot of women has not been corrected by time and the so-called goodwill which exists. Despite educational campaigns and efforts by women's groups, the situation still has not changed. The claim that when the public sees what corporations and companies are doing they will make them change their ways is a vain and silly proposal of the Tories. It is not enough to simply rely on so-called public opinion and pressure. There must be legal requirements backed up by penalties for violation. There must be penalties for lack of compliance. There must be an enforcement mechanism. We all know this is the case, yet the Government persists in ignoring these obvious requirements to make this Bill meaningful.

Women's groups condemn this legislation as a sham. They constitute 51 per cent of the population. They were promised action but received a Bill with no compliance or penalties. I would like to deal with each of the minority groups, but time does not permit it. Time does not permit me to explore the loss of dignity which results from inequality. These people want the right to work. They do not want to be on the dole.

The reason a law with enforcement provisions is required is that very often, as Martin Luther King said, the law is a teacher. It helps to make all of us understand our role. I remember many, many years ago, about the time I was ordained, that a black priest came to Toronto from New York City. I tried to find him quarters in a motel or hotel near Toronto. I was told by the proprietors that they had nothing against him because they liked black people, but the trouble was that the people who came up from the States did not like black people. If there were a law, of course, they could point to it and say, "We have to do this". However, since there was no law, they could not comply and they felt it was best for their business that they did not provide this man with accommodations. I am not talking about the United States deep south; I am talking about an area in Ontario in the 1950s. Why am I telling this story? To point out that if people have something to point to and say, "I have to do this", it helps them to justify what they know they should do. This is what the law requires and this is what they will do.

We are talking about something which deals with making us all equal as brothers and sisters together. I think Archibald MacLeish summed that up when he was writing a poem about the astronauts when they were looking down from the moon upon the earth. He said: "To see ourselves as riders on the earth together, brothers on that bright loveliness in the eternal cold, brothers who now know they are truly brothersé", and one might say, sisters who now know they are truly sisters.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to a good presentation by the Hon. Member. He presents himself as an advocate for the end of discrimination against women. However, am I not correct in thinking that he is a member and supporter of a church which refuses to ordain women as bishops? Would he tell us why that is the case? Would he take this opportunity to stand in his place and tell us, if he is a man of conviction, that he thinks the church of which he is a member is wrong? Would he tell us, if he is a man of conviction, that the law he would have applied to Governments and businesses should also apply to churches, and end once and for all discrimination against women in the church of which he is a member, and also other churches who engage in the same discriminatory practices?

Mr. Friesen: Repent!

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is advocating support for the churches in such a stand or whether he is criticizing it. Perhaps he wants to know what my particular stand is. I could point out to him that the position which has historically existed in the Anglican Church, to which I belong, has forbidden the idea of the ordination of women as priests or as bishops. That position has been modified, at least in the church in Canada, so that we ordain women as priests. I have certainly supported that move.

However, the argument put forward by those who are, if I may say, less progressive and more conservative, against ordaining women as bishops is that it will be a problem for us ecumenically in our relationships with other churches who do not ordain women as bishops. I think that argument is specious and reactionary. Therefore, I have to say to my hon. friend that I believe that the Anglican Church to which I belong should hastily reform its position and join the 20th century. I invite Conservative Members of Parliament to join the 20th century as well and see to it that women are given equality in all areas. There is no room for inequality in this day and age and certainly not in this country.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) is a member of a Party which formed the Government of this country for a good number of years. It lead us to the present circumstances in which, for example, there are very few women in senior management positions in the federal Public Service. His Government tolerated this situation while it was in office. It promulgated policies which did not change that situation. There was no contract compliance policy which worked. The Liberals did not force companies to take action on employment equity. I am wondering how he can stand up in this House and criticize the Conservatives for doing just what his Government did over a number of years.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, first I would disagree with my friend on his statement that the Liberal Government did not do anything.

Mr. Keeper: Nothing effective.

Mr. de Corneille: I think he has to realize that a very large number of steps were taken, step by step, starting with the federal Human Rights Commission. Guidelines in this area were brought into existence, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was brought forward. It provides the legal basis on which all of these equality approaches are based and to which they are tied. Then of course we brought forward guidelines in the Treasury Board and we took other steps in the Public Service.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), was trying to bring into legislation amendments which would make sure that government Departments fall under the requirements of this Bill. I certainly agree that more needs to be done. Following upon the establishment of Human Rights Commissions and the Charter, and Section 15 of the Charter, as well as following upon the guidelines, the Liberal Government appointed the Abella Commission in order to receive recommendations as to how the Charter and the law should be applied. The Charter was passed four years ago and there was plenty of time for this Government to know what was coming up. It has finally decided to turn to the Council on Social Development to deal with providing money to people for court challenges. That organization sent a list of these people to my friend, the Secretary of State, but he has not acted on it. Seven months have gone by and these people, who have genuine problems to take to court, are still waiting for the Government to act.

It is problems such as that which make me so concerned that this Bill is a sham. We will see more reports like this, with greater bureaucracy, but no action.

Mr. Allmand: Before I direct a question to my hon. friend, I want to suggest that no political Party, including the New Democratic Party, has much to be proud of in its past with respect to employment equity. After listening to some remarks yesterday, I looked at the record and found that in Saskatchewan where the NDP was in power for some time, there is no legislated mandatory affirmative action program. In Manitoba, they only passed a pay equity Act in June, 1985. That is the only measure of any consequence in the area of affirmative action. In British Columbia, where the New Democratic Party was in power for some time, there is no legislation at all dealing with this subject. I suggest that all of us have come to it a bit late and I would expect there would be some humility with respect to this subject.

The fact is that we did pass the Canadian Human Rights Act in 1977 and the Charter of Rights in the last Parliament.

Clause 4 of the Bill says that an employer shall implement employment equity by instituting such positive policies and practices and making such reasonable accommodation as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation in the workplace. There is no definition of reasonable accommodation in the Bill. All of the groups representing the disabled told us that there must be a definition or the Bill will be ineffective. As a Member who deals with disabled people very often, will he elaborate on this, because the Government has refused to accept our proposals for a definition of reasonable accommodation? Does he believe that this Bill can be effective for disabled people when it does not include a definition of reasonable accommodation?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, obviously the disabled and their organizations felt that this was a very essential and important definition to put in the Bill. Otherwise, the danger is that a disabled person could be defined as someone who has a sprained thumb. That is an exaggeration, but unless there is a definition of "disabled" and of "reasonable accommodation", the Bill will not provide any teeth at all as far as the handicapped are concerned. There are no terms of reference on which the the Government or the Human Rights Commission can act. The absence of this definition makes the Bill even more faulty than it is.

The disabled who came here last week were disappointed that they could not find a place in the gallery for their wheelchairs. This very place is limited in its facilities for the disabled, yet we are supposed to be setting an example for the rest of the country. They came here and tried to cry out in protest in front of the House. They tried, through the media, to ask for these small amendments in order to give them reassurance that the Bill dealt with this issue seriously. Yet they were refused.

Some of the disabled who came here were blind. They may have been blind but they can see better than the Tories. They can look through the Tories and see the cynicism and hypocrisy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration), that Bill C-62, An Act respecting employment equity, be read the third time and passed; and on the amendment (Ms. Copps) (p. 12465).

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, although Bill C-62 is supposed to achieve employment equity, it fails to contain many of the necessary provisions to achieve that goal. In fact, it has so many shortcomings in its structure that we have fairly said that it should be called at best a Bill to promote and encourage employment equity.

I am taking part in a debate on a motion which would give the Government an opportunity to reconsider seriously the representations that have been made in the House as well as in many other places about the flaws in the Bill.

First, I want to respond to the comment by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) about how slowly we have come to understand these matters. That observation does have some fairness to it. The proclamation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms has demonstrated a growing sensitivity to these matters. The Hon. Member commented on the western provinces that have been governed by the New Democratic Party. Saskatchewan does not have a New Democratic Government at this time and British Columbia, of course, has not had a New Democratic Government for more than a dozen years. In Manitoba, I am pleased to say that the New Democratic Government was recently re-elected and that Government has been very concerned about making progress in this area, particularly as far as its own employment is concerned.

Members should be aware that in its negotiations with the union of Government employees, the Government of Manitoba took action in areas which the federal Government has refused to include in this Bill.

The Manitoba New Democratic Government negotiated an arrangement with the union of Government employees by which the proportion of women, native people, disabled and visible minorities in Manitoban society will be reflected in the composition of Government employees over a period of time. This is not a statement of what is desirable or a declaration that sets a goal. It is an agreement that was made with the union of Government employees by which workers will join with the Government in achieving these changes. Provisions have been made so that over a period of some 20 years the Manitoban Public Service will take up the characteristics we would expect if we are really going to practise the employment equity that we want. Of course, Judge Rosalee Abella, in her royal commission report over a year ago, set this forth as the basis for affirmative action and social justice in our country.

I have been handed a note stating that the study conducted for the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) shows that the Saskatchewan New Democratic Government expected real affirmative action progress from the Crown corporations which it established in the province. I want to note one paragraph in particular. It states:

> Another strategy that was adopted in Saskatchewan that has, in the first instance, produced some results, was the approach taken in relation to the provincial crown corporations. Under the former Government—

Presumably, this is a document from the present Saskatchewan Conservative Government which states:

> Under the former Government, affirmative action encompassed special measures to eliminate systemic discrimination and to open up employment opportunities to the key target groups (native, women, disabled).
> The crown corporations were given a specific directive from the provincial government to develop affirmative action plans. Native people were designated the priority, although both women and the disabled were included as target groups.

• (1610)

The paragraph concludes:

The crown corporations were to demonstrate leadership and to provide an example to the private sector of effective affirmative action programs.

I am sure that some of my colleagues from Saskatchewan will be aware of these matters, even if the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) was not. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary is keenly aware of what the New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan is doing to ensure that northern development and mining development will provide opportunities for native peoople and, through those actions, ensure that affirmative action is being practised.

Having said that about two of the western provinces in which New Democrats have governed, I would like to return to the subject before us. More particularly, I return to the proposal that Clauses 3, 5 and 7 of Bill C-62 be referred back to committee for further consideration. It seems to me that it is important to give this opportunity to the Government so that it can take another look at the matter. After all, initially, there were fine statements of intention. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is nothing if not a most impressive speaker when it comes to stating fine intentions and putting them forward with a lovely smile on her face, making one think that all will be sunny in these particular areas.

That was not the case, however, when she was faced with the type of particulars seen in the City of Toronto. These were made obvious by a couple of reports last winter and spring which asked: "No discrimination here?" "Who gets the jobs?" It was clear that in the employment patterns of employers in the City of Toronto there was a pattern of discrimination in place against those who were regarded as alien in one way or another. Whether this came about because of race and colour, or whether it was a matter of accents or the names people bore, these persons had great difficulty in obtaining employment. They obtained far fewer job offers even though they had similar qualifications to persons who were white, who looked familiar and who spoke English as the mainstream of Canadians have learned to speak English. These demonstrations of discrimination and racist practices were certainly known to the Minister.

I made a point of writing to the Minister after each of these reports to say to her: "Here is the evidence. We require strong action. Are we going to get it?" Of course, she would reassure us. When she tabled Bill C-62 we were all concerned to see what was in it. Even on first reading of it we found it did not contain very much. We found that, primarily, it was a basis for determining what the composition of workforces in large companies would be. It was primarily large companies with which it dealt. Government Departments were not included. We were told that other action was supposedly being taken—again, government by press release. But the Government was not making itself subject to this reporting provision. Only large employers with 100 or more employees would be required to report on the composition of their workforces. That is all the Bill provides. Certainly, there is a penalty for not complying, but who will tell me that $50,000 is a large penalty for the type of corporations with which we are dealing here? It is not much of a penalty and not much will result in the way of action by employers.

We can be pleased that the argument which took place in the House, the debate here and in committee, produced the inclusion of one clause which actually opened the door to some real expectations, not demands on employers. At least with the addition of Clause 5 we have the following statement:

An employer shall, in respect of each year, prepare a plan setting out

(a) the goals that the employer intends to achieve in implementing employment equity—

(b) the timetable for the implementation of those goals.

However, there are weaknesses in this clause, as I will suggest in a few moments, following others which still do not go very far. Employers were not just expected to report on the results of their employment practices, they were to set goals. Nowhere in the addition to the legislation, in this limited improvement in the Bill, was there a statement with respect to the type of goals that Government and the Parliament of Canada would expect lawyers to follow. There was no demand, no setting of a timetable for real progress to be made. Again, this demonstrates that if the Government was responding to the barrage of criticism it was receiving with respect to this promotion of employment equity by the use of legislation, the response was still a very limited one.

Given the protests of group after group, there has been a real formation of coalitions to press the Government to give more. I underscore that point as it comes from the various groups across the country. If the Government does not do something now, then I am convinced that it will not do it in the life of its mandate which the electorate gave it in 1984. We will have to wait until the year 1990 before seeing anything in the way of stronger legislation. That makes it all the more imperative for the Government to take seriously its own statement of conviction and principle, the statements which have been uttered from one quarter after another to the effect that the Bill is inadequate. It must open up the possibility of looking at Clauses—and I will take them up in this order—7, 5 and 3 in order to strengthen the Bill so that the people of Canada have what they really want in the way of legislation which will achieve employment equity.

Clause 7 contains a provision for the levy of a fine. As I have already stated, the sanction here for employers who do not act on the provisions of the Bill apply only to the reporting provision. Surely, if Clause 5 means anything, if the formulation of plans with goals really amounts to something, then it makes sense that if employers are doing that then their action should be subject to a fine much larger than $50,000. Surely, sending the Bill back to committee in order to open up the possibility of adding to Clause 5 in such a way that employers will be under the onus of law to do something about it makes sense. It is surely necessary to open up the possibility of doing this for diverse employers. This will ensure that it is not only large employers employing more than 100 people who can so easily pay $50,000. The payment of a $50,000 fine could become a mere business expense if an employer did not want to go to the other trouble. As a matter of fact, if we consider the money which might have to be spent in formulating plans, then surely $50,000 might end up being less than the cost of establishing an office of employment equity in a company. In fact, $50,000 would not buy that much time, if an employer has to have some skilled people working in the area. A fine less than the cost of following through with these measures is certainly tantamount to inviting a violation of the law.

These are some reasons for having the Government send this Bill back to committee and, in particular, to consider some significant additions to Clause 7 by way of an increase in the fine and an assurance that it would apply to more than simply the filing of reports.

Clause 5, the clause to which I was just alluding, ensures that employers do not simply report on their employment practices but actually implement plans. Surely if the Government is serious about achieving employment equity as it declares on the face of the Bill, then we need more strength in this area.

When thinking of the target groups, I think particularly of the visible minorities and people who belong to ethnocultural communities. This is not necessarily always a matter of visibility in terms of colour or race. Visibility can be a matter of accents or features that strike an employer or personnel officer as being alien. Then, of course, there are the native people of Canada who are entering the cities in large numbers seeking employment. For that matter, they are seeking employment outside cities. The needs and concerns of the disabled and women have been addressed eloquently by other Members of the House. Surely a Government that states all the good intentions the Minister and her Parliamentary Secretary have declared should do something more with Clause 5 if it believes in those principles.

The flaws in Clause 5 are overwhelming. Where will the plans be kept? Will they be kept at the head offices of the companies? There is no obligation to tell anyone about the plans. In another clause, there is a provision for consultation with unions. How can there be consultation if the unions or whatever representatives the workers put forward do not have a right to see the plans?

Surely Conservative Members are not so naive that they think that leaving employment equity up to the good intentions of employers will work when we have had so much evidence of discriminatory practices in Toronto. The most shocking thing that those surveys of Toronto employment practices demonstrated was that there was widespread discrimination and that employers did not think that there was anything wrong with that. In that kind of a context, surely we need to lay the provisions on the employer. Surely there must be a requirement that the plans be public documents and be freely available to anyone who wants to look at them. Surely the community groups and those who have been frozen out by employers have the right of access to these plans if there is to be any kind of action taken on them.

I realize that I am drawing near the end of my time. In conclusion, I wish to say that I hope devoutly, with the entire depth of my being, that the Government will take this seriously and will take the Bill back to committee. Last Thursday I had a terribly depressing experience when, in one vote, we took care of 19 amendments to the Bill. The Government voted every one of them down.

It seems to me that the words which the then Opposition Leader and now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in June, 1984 ring very hollow now. He said then that there is no obligation more compelling, no duty more irresistible, than to ensure that minorities live at all times in conditions of fairness and justice. Bill C-62 does not do that. It flouts the principles the Prime Minister stated before the last election.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask of my colleague. Can my colleague possibly have any confidence that this legislation will bring about real change in the workplace and a greater equality between men and women in the workplace both in terms of the amount of money they earn and the positions they occupy given that there is presently great inequality and that companies have many other bases upon which to make their hiring decisions besides equity? Does my colleague have any confidence that this legislation will be a big enough stick to bring about the results that are so greatly needed today?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question asked by my colleague. The answer is certainly that I have no such confidence. I think of the situation in which would-be workers find themselves across the country. I have been focusing on Toronto because the Urban Alliance on Race Relations along with the Metropolitan Social Planning Council carried out the kinds of studies that were required there. These were quite imaginative studies which demonstrated the depth of racist and discriminatory practices in that city. I am sure Toronto is not unusual.

People want to work and they seek the reality of employment equity. My colleague alluded particularly to the matter of equal pay for work of equal value and the insurance that people who are hired are not discriminated against once they have been hired. Those other concerns do face us. This Bill does not provide any kind of sanction for that kind of action. It provides that a fine ought to be paid if reports are not made, but there is no provision for action on any of these matters. For a broken reed to be offered the people of Canada as a big stick is surely for us to be left with the gravest disappointment in what the Government claims to be doing.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, this Bill provides for a penalty of $50,000 if employers do not report on the level of employment equity in the workplace, yet many of the employers are very large firms and multinational corporations. I wonder if a fine of $50,000 would be effective if a very large firm simply decided to ignore the law and not collect the information necessary to comply with the minimal provisions of this legislation. I wonder if the legislation should not provide for a larger fine in order that it be enforceable.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the matter of a $50,000 fine is worth some careful consideration. The cost of establishing an office to work toward employment equity in a company would, I suspect, on an annual basis, easily run to $100,000. The companies must employ officers with the kinds of skills required. I would expect that such a person would easily cost $35,000 or $40,000 per year. If one thinks of secretarial and other costs, I am sure it would exceed $50,000 in the way of costs. Surely to have a fine which is less than the cost of conforming to legislation is an open invitation to have it violated. If an employer saves money by paying a fine and being subjected to an employment inequity tax for a year as an alternative to employing people and establishing an office, I could imagine many cold-blooded employers saying: "Let's go ahead and pay the fine". It seems to me that that is a final declaration on the part of a Government which is not really serious about the matter.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the point just made by the Hon. Member regarding the $50,000 fine for non-compliance. Both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party attempted to get the Government to understand that $50,000 was not enough. We wanted $500,000 to be the fine for non-compliance. Does the Hon. Member not agree—and I think he alluded to it at the end of his remarks—that some employers will find it cheaper to pay the fine than to proceed with some important physical changes to their establishments to make them accessible to handicapped people? For example, I am referring to changes to their buildings so that handicapped people will have better access or so their establishments will be more secure and safe for those who may be blind, deaf, or whatever. I do not see any measure in the Bill for us to follow up on this with employers except to agree voluntarily that they will report on their plans after three years. Does he not agree that some companies will find it much easier to pay the $50,000 fine than to comply with sometimes expensive but needed changes to the systemic discrimination which is inherent in many workplaces today? For example, access to buildings can be difficult and there can be problems in terms of security and safety. Does he agree that perhaps it is merely symbolic to have a $50,000 fine for larger companies?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is absolutely right. At best the Bill will be a symbol. We have had a number of such symbols since the early 1980s with the establishment of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the work of several committees of the last Parliament. Given my particular responsibilities for multiculturalism in our caucus, I am keenly aware of the work of the special committee on the participation of visible minorities which made recommendations in these various areas. In early 1984, two years ago, it declared the following in the title of its report Equality Now.

There were also reports dealing with the situation faced by disabled people, as another example. Whether or not the last Government was buying time in appointing Judge Rosalie Abella as a royal commissioner to investigate this area, I would not want to say just now. We are very grateful to her for having clarified for Canada what affirmative action could involve and the way in which we could make progress.

Given several advances over the last three years or so, there is a terrible responsibility on the shoulders of the Government to ensure that these beginnings continue. The Government should press for action so that these initiatives do not die as a result of half-hearted actions, whatever the protestations, which end up making people cynical about the stated principles. There is a terrible danger in that regard, and I see no readiness on the part of the Government to face up to that. If the Government accepts the motion and takes the matter back to committee, hopes would spring up somewhat.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being given the floor at this time of day because I have several remarks to make on the motion before us.

And I would like to speak in support of the motion before the House, Mr. Speaker, namely, that:

"Bill C-62, An Act respecting employment equity, be not now read a third time, but that the Bill be referred back to a legislative committee for reconsideration of Clauses 3, 5 and 7 thereof".

Mr. Speaker, I think that today we have heard some very positive comments on the measures proposed to achieve employment equity. I have never claimed, and neither has my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine-East (Mr. Allmand) that everything has been done and all problems have been dealt with. Of course not. And I must say that the Bill before the House is a step, maybe not the giant step we would have liked, but at least a step. Not a particularly energetic one, because we are convinced that this Bill is a bit weak and that it would be a good idea for the Government to take it back and give it more teeth, more backbone, and it could then come back to the House with an amended Bill that would be much stronger, not just a Bill proposing something the House can agree with but that will never materialize.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the House that the three clauses in question—

[English]

Clause 3 of Bill C-62 deals with interpretation. I should like to remind Hon. Members that the Opposition wanted to include federal Departments and agencies under the Act to ensure that the main employer in the Government, the Treasury Board, complied with the principles of employment equity and indeed provided an example for the private sector. We also proposed that persons who employ 25 people or more should be subject to the provisions of the Act rather than employers of 100 or more as defined in the present state of the Bill. I will return to my point about federal Departments and agencies being included in the Bill, but first I want to make sure that I deal with these clauses in order.

Clause 5 refers to the action plans of companies setting out their goals and timetables. We think, in all honesty, that they should be made public. Why should they be hidden in the vaults of the head offices of national organizations? It could be difficult for someone in Vancouver to know exactly what is the action plan of a company which has its head office in Toronto. It may be hidden in a vault and may not be accessible to anyone who wanted to see it. We consider Clause 5 to be weak and would like to see it strengthened by making the action plans of employers public and by setting out goals and timetables so that all of us can see them.

Clause 7 refers to the famous fine of $50,000, which I think is a concession to non-action in the sense that it will not be enough to force companies to comply with the Bill. They will prefer to pay the $50,000 fine than to become involved in capital expenditures or capital works which may be required to eliminate systemic discrimination. We are talking about two very different things here. We are talking about discrimination as a matter of fact toward four target groups—women, native people, visible minorities, and the handicapped.

Also there is systemic discrimination which is inherent in the system, in the workplace, in our habits, and sometimes even in our thinking. We do not accept easily—by tradition, by lack of understanding and sometimes by ignorance—that some people with the capacity, the competence and the quality to serve the Canadian community cannot do so because of their status. As far as I am concerned, they are discriminated against by a system which is unresponsive and irresponsible with regard to their employment.

I want to come back to the first point.

[Translation]

I may say I have done a bit of research on the matter of the Government's obligation as an employer to be subject to the letter of the law and thus to Bill C-62. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to recall, before making my specific comments on the Public Service and before saying why it should be included in the Bill, that yesterday in the House, that when I was listening to the Minister making the usual preliminary remarks at the third reading stage, and I quote,

At page 12452 of Hansard, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Ms. MacDonald) said:

> I can say quite frankly that in the years before this Government came to power I heard a lot of talk about fairness and equality but I saw no action. What we are seeing here today is a Government committed to action in this field.

Here we have a responsible Minister telling us such things as that she has been here for 12 or 13 years and has heard a lot about fairness and equality but has seen no action. Where was the Minister in 1982 when the Charter of Rights was adopted? She saw action there. As a matter of fact I will remind her of what was said either by me or by somebody else in this House recently because it is worth repeating. Although I am not very proud of our record, I am not ashamed of it. There have been efforts. I must remind the House that measures were taken.

I would like to remind the House of the following facts, Mr. Speaker: In 1971, Canada was the first western country to recognize the role of women at the highest level of decision-making by creating a Cabinet position on the status of women, and I may add that I came to this House in 1972; in 1975, we had an omnibus Bill to ensure an equal status for women; in 1976, we passed the Canadian Human Rights Act which forbids discrimination based on sex; in 1978, we proposed changes to the Canada Pension Plan to provide for the equal sharing of retirement credits, as well as amendments to the Canada Labour Code to remove pregnancy as a motive for lay-off or firing, and in 1982, we passed the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and I could continue.

We did take action, Mr. Speaker. We did not do enough to satisfy many people including your humble servant, but I still say that efforts were made and that we have to recognize this. However, it would be an exaggeration to say that nothing had been done before the Minister of Employment and Immigration was appointed, and I think that the Minister is too serious to suggest such a thing. The Hon. Members opposite should not always try to say that the Conservative Government has reinvented the wheel since the last election and they should stop bragging that nothing had been done before they came to power.

Things were done, Mr. Speaker, but it was not enough. As I have already said, Bill C-62 goes part of the way, but it is not strong enough; it lacks teeth. I would like to remind the House that the Abella Commission was created in 1983, only one year after the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms had been adopted. The Commission was created on June 24, 1983, under the chairmanship of Judge Rosalie Abella, and its report was tabled in this House on November 20, 1984.

If I may read the terms of reference of the Commission, it was asked to inquire "into the opportunities for employment of women, native people, disabled persons and visible minorities in certain Crown corporations and corporations wholly owned by the Government of Canada".

Mr. Speaker, employment equity means that no one should be refused a job for reasons which have nothing to do with his competence. It also means access to employment without any arbitrary obstacle, that is without discriminatory practices or attitudes which could hamper or even prevent access by individuals or groups to employment opportunities because of their particular characteristics, whether they be handicapped, women, native people or members of a visible minority. Indeed, for us, Frenchspeaking Canadians, Mr. Speaker, the native people are a visible minority. Thus we feel that three groups might have been enough. At any rate, my view is that there was no need to add that. Visible minorities in our minds are people who, like myself perhaps, have a face like mine with the nose in the wrong place, and, well, when one is born with this kind of face one has to live with it!

Mr. Speaker, the quest for employment equity must cut through all practices that discriminate against certain groups which have long been subject to such a discrimination. There must first be an effort towards identifying and eliminating discrimatory barriers. And when I speak of discrimatory barriers, it may be relevant to mention that where practices or systems are concerned, discrimatory barriers to employment do now exist. And our goal in the Official Opposition is to try and have the Government understand that Clauses 3, 5 and 7 must be redrawn to put teeth into the legislation.

As we know, Mr. Speaker, people are discriminated against for a number of reasons and in a number of ways. Some are discriminated against because of their economic or social conditions. Well, what do you expect? Others, for political reasons or because they lack education or vocational training. God knows that in her report, Judge Abella, if we care to read it, mentions this question of education, even referring to our landed immigrants who come here and speak neither English nor French, neither of our official languages, and who have difficulty in entering the labour market because they face discrimination for the very reason that they did not have a chance to learn one of this country's official languages. In the Abella Report, it is suggested that our whole language training system would need reviewing and I support Judge Abella's recommendations in that area—in order to eliminate one of the situations causing discrimination against new Canadians. It is subtle, sometimes persistent and it is pervasive. The fact is, it is systemic.

I would like to quote from page 10 of the report, concerning what Judge Abella views as systemic discrimination.

> Systemic discrimination requires systemic remedies. Rather than approaching discrimination from the perspective of the single perpetrator and the single victim, the systemic approach acknowledges that by and large the systems and practices we customarily and often unwittingly adopt may have an unjustifiably negative effect on certain groups in society.
> The effect of the system on the individual or group, rather than its attitudinal sources, governs whether or not a remedy is justified.
> Remedial measures of a systemic and systematic kind are the object of employment equity and affirmative action. They are meant to improve the situation for individuals who, by virtue of belonging to and being identified with a particular group, find themselves unfairly and adversely affected by certain systems or practices.

Mr. Speaker, it could not be said any better. Judge Abella has described this quite well, and I agree with her.

During the remaining minutes, I should like to deal briefly with a problem which concerns a great many people in the Ottawa-Vanier and Ottawa-Carleton regions. I refer—to the issue of applying this Bill to the main employer and the Federal departments.

I want to do this because in a press release dated March 8, 1985, dealing with employment equity in the Federal Public Service, I read: "The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) announced today the various steps which the Government intends to take within the Federal Public Service and Crown Corporations to achieve employment equity for women, the natives, the handicapped and the members of visible minorities".

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, this is quite relevant to Bill C-62.

The measures announced are as follows: to reinforce the federal Government's Affirmative Action Program announced in June 1983, to which I referred earlier, and will include an immediate review by Treasury Board to detect any systemic barriers that may exist in the classification system for senior positions. I repeat: any systemic barriers that may exist in the classification system.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the classification of a position depends on the number of points it is given, and the salary in turn depends on the classification. A definition of the word "classification" is given in the Treasury Board and Public Service Glossary: "Classification of Positions—Method for defining a job by category and occupational group and for evaluating the job and assigning it to a level within the group."

Mr. Speaker, this is a way to identify the relative value of jobs. Heaven knows we urgently need a thorough study of the situation and an answer to the classification problem!

In the 1984 election campaign, members of the Progressive Conservative Party told public servants: We will put job classification on the bargaining table. Everybody said it was a good idea. And then they said: We are going to do a study. And they did. And not long ago, when I asked how the classification study was progressing, the answer was: The study made by Treasury Board was finished today, but a second study Treasury Board had done by Thorne, Stevenson and Kellogg and which I am told has been completed, has been submitted to the Ministers responsible for Treasury Board, for study and consideration.

Mr. Speaker, it is now April 22, 1986. This Government was elected a year and one-half or more ago, and we are still at the study stage, trying to find out what systemic classification is and what the possible barriers are.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the Government to tell us what is going to happen with position classification, so public servants will know exactly what is being done about this problem. In the classification process, the person who does the classifying decides how the position is rated and what the employee is going to earn. And these are very important points for public servants. They want to negotiate the classification of a position. They want to know the classification criteria and want to sit down at the bargaining table and say: We think the system should be improved. We think there are obstacles in this system which sometimes discriminate against certain people, and we want to correct that. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, ours is a reasonable position. Since the Government made that an election promise, it should at least keep its word on this and give public servants the advantage of being able to negotiate job classifications in the near future.

In the same March 8, 1985 statement, Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board talked about the immediate establishment of a Treasury Board review process to uncover any systemic obstacles, and about greater emphasis on strategies aimed at implementing specific affirmative action plans related to results in the various departments.

Mr. Speaker, I asked the question: Where are these plans? I was told today that 41 strategy plans are available directly from the departments. Three departments have failed to produce their plans. We will see. I asked whether they were available to the public, and I was told it would take a truck to transport them. Can somebody on the Government side tell us why the affirmative action plans in the departments... Perhaps somebody might tell us what this is all about. Are they satisfactory? Have they been assessed? Has anything been done as a result of this important affirmative action initiative?

Then, Mr. Speaker, in the same press release the President of the Treasury Board states: "The unions will be invited to sit on a committee dealing with the equal pay for equal work issue."

Mr. Speaker, I am all for it. And I think every Member of this House will agree. That is why we should go back to the Committee and listen to what the President of Treasury Board has to say about this action plan to implement equal pay for equal work or work of equal value policy. I know that thirteen unions are having meetings with the Treasury Board representative every two months, and that a report is to be submitted by March 1987.

Mr. Speaker, I will therefore have to wait another year to find out what is happening, and they want us to adopt a Bill that has no teeth, and which I find is totally unsuited to meeting this challenge, a Bill that systematically excludes Government departments. The latter are hesitant and have yet to explain to me, as a politician, what has been done about job classification affirmative action and in the departments and how the committees that are supposed to work out a plan for equal pay for equal work or work of equal value are progressing.

Mr. Speaker, it all boils down to the fact that I think referring all this to committee for study and consideration is a reasonable suggestion, and I hope the House will decide this is the right thing to do. I hope I can come back at a subsequent stage to continue my remarks.

[English]

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a comment on some of the statements the Member made, and I have a question for him as well. There was debate earlier this afternoon dealing with the strength or weakness of provisions for affirmative action in the Province of Saskatchewan. I note that under the previous New Democratic Government in Saskatchewan affirmative action provisions were implemented for Crown corporations, particularly in northern Saskatchewan. Progress had been made.

I have a report of a human rights consultant to the Department of the Secretary of State. The report notes that when the Conservative Government came into power in Saskatchewan it made the policy voluntary for Crown corporations. The consultant notes that the respondents are discovering that these affirmative action plans are in no way entrenched within the employment systems of all the Crown corporations. With the change in Government, the political commitment has waned. Each Crown corporation now decides its own policy, with the result that the program has become fragmented and dependent upon the particular commitment of the individual corporation. The report indicates that the respondents have concluded that the weakness of their strategy lies in its voluntary nature.

To what extent does the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) feel that Bill C-62 reflects a similar turn by the federal Conservative Government to a voluntary approach? How dramatically does he think the Bill will fail in achieving employment equity?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in order to do justice to that rather important question, I invite the Member to read some of the speeches that I have made in the last while on this Bill. In the last election campaign in Manitoba all Parties paid homage to employment equity and said that they would commit themselves to that program. I take it that Manitoba was moving in that direction. I am told by my colleague, the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), that in Saskatchewan only five Crown corporations have an affirmative action program. According to press reports, the Government is cutting funds to these companies and there is also a hiring freeze. The present Government is not, therefore, as enthusiastic as the previous Government was. Let us hope that it comes to its senses. We are told not to believe everything we read, but from press releases I understand that some actions were being taken in Saskatchewan with regard to employment equity.

British Columbia has yet to come up with employment equity legislation. My research does not show the existence of any such legislation in B.C. at all. We are hoping that a more sensitive and sensible Government will come into power there some day and bring some equity to employment practices.

I call this the smoke and mirrors Bill. That is the title I put on my copy. It reflects what we all like but it does not do much in the way of action. Despite the fact that the Minister spent quite some time yesterday telling us how she was committed to action on employment equity, I fail to see in this Bill any real action. I invite the Hon. Member to read some of the comments we have made regarding the improvements to the Bill through the 20-odd amendments we tried to get through. They were all turned down by the Government because Members opposite do not like constructive and worth-while amendments to their legislation. They feel it is sacred and therefore untouchable. I disagree. This House should have more understanding of the issues and should debate them a little longer. That is why I want the Bill to go back to committee.

Mr. Speaker: Any further questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be recognized in order to say a few words at this stage of the deliberations on Bill C-62, dealing with employment equity. As my friend just indicated, it should be called a smoke and mirrors Bill, or a fluff and puff Bill, or a magician's Bill. Now you see it, now you don't.

In my deliberations with friends and colleagues across the country there seemed to be the impression that the Government is acting on employment equity to some extent. The important words there are "to some extent". It is a minute step in the right direction on a very long and difficult road. In one sense it does more damage than good in that it gives the impression that employment equity is finally being recognized. Finally we are going to do something to help the disabled, native people, women and visible minorities to experience equality and equity in the workplace.

Unfortunately, those who are knowledgeable about this subject, those who possess expertise, those who have studied the issue, or those who are representative of the various groups this Bill is directed towards, have a certain uniform reaction to the Bill. That reaction is that it is not adequate. It fails to meet the purpose of the Bill. It is not surprising that people have been misled a little when you read the purpose of the Bill. It says:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to correct the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

We have no concern regarding that purpose as stated. The point is that the Bill does not do any of that. It fails to meet this purpose, this goal, this objective. It falls far short. I am sure you would take my word for it but you do not have to. You can take the word of Suzanne Boivin of the National Association of Women and the Law. She says:

> Nothing will change. Unfortunately, it is simply wishful thinking.

The Inuit of Canada say that, for aboriginal peoples:

> Bill C-62 is of limited value.

Beryl Potter of the Coalition on Employment Equity for Disabled Persons had this to say:

> Like the Bill—it's not even worth the paper it's written on—I've never been so disillusioned in my life as I am with Prime Minister Mulroney.
> I was a supporter of him. I worked for him in his campaign and I am totally, totally disillusioned.

Here are perhaps the most knowledgeable people in Canada on this issue commenting on Bill C-62 and they say it is inadequate, incomplete, inappropriate, wishful thinking, and will simply not do the job it sets out to do.

I will not read the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on this issue in the election campaign of 1984. I do not think it does him justice to point out what he said in that campaign regarding bringing in all sorts of employment equity initiatives to ensure there would be no discrimination in the workplace, to ensure there would be encouragement and support of strategies for native people, visible minorities, the disabled, and women. He has failed to deliver. I would not want to spend too much time pointing that out because I suspect everyone is well aware of it anyway.

The purpose of the Bill is primarily to prevent employment practices which act as barriers to employment for some very specific groups such as women, the disabled, native people and visible minorities. In a previous career I had an opportunity to work with the disabled, young native people, and those who would be classified as visible minorities in an attempt to find employment opportunities for them. I suppose I should include women in that as well, but my main experience was with those groups I mentioned. Of course they all included women. That was not many years ago. When I identified a workplace for someone among these groups, my job was to send that person down to the place concerned for employment experience of one kind or another, on-the-job training in a sense. I am afraid I have to say that when the employer found that the individual was not a white Anglo-Saxon, but rather someone from a visible minority, he or she inevitably found a reason to cancel the job training opportunity. I could present literally hundreds of names of individuals for whom I found a job opportunity, without mentioning the fact that they were, let us say, a native youngster, and when that individual showed up they were inevitably turned away. Then we went through that process the next day and the same people would be turned away again. Yet, when they phoned me they would inevitably say, "Mr. Riis, I am not prejudiced. I don't discriminate against people but I really cannot afford to hire a native person", or someone who was disabled, or a member of a certain ethnic group. Quite frankly, that is a racist attitude. It is discrimination. It indicates prejudice. Therefore, when I look at the provisions in this Bill and see what it is attempting to accomplish, it hits very close to my heart. It reminds me of a very close personal experience that occurred to me for a number of years. It was an embarrassment to me as a Canadian citizen that in spite of all the glorious comments about being tolerant, open minded, non-discriminatory, liberal and progressive in our thinking, when push came to shove almost inevitably that discrimination existed in the workplace.

I was encouraged when I heard in the post-election period that the Government would introduce a Bill that would finally bring about employment equity in Canada through a program to encourage employers to hire native people, the disabled, visual minorities and women. However, once one had an opportunity to examine this Bill and hear the witnesses who came to speak to the committee about this Bill, it became obvious that it was rife with flaws and filled with inconsistencies. It was simply an inappropriate piece of legislation.

One might ask why it is inappropriate. One of the shortcomings is that there is no mandatory equity, no enforcement and no real penalties. This legislation must be viewed as voluntary equity with mandatory reporting of workforce data. Those businesses over a certain size that carry out transactions with the federal Government over a certain amount must submit an action program. So what? Big deal. Although the employer must draft an action plan, there is no requirement that the employer must fulfil that plan or necessarily introduce it. However, there is a penalty pursuant to Clause 6, with a maximum summary conviction of $50,000, if the employer fails to act.

We in the New Democratic Party attempted to make this penalty realistic. Heather Reisman, who works with the Nesbitt Consulting Group which provides advice to these firms which are interested or essentially forced to introduce a program of equity in the workplace on paper, said about the penalty: "It's squat". The effectiveness of the maximum $50,000 fine for failing to report workforce data annually is something that she says a large company will simply write off as a cost of doing business. Fifty thousand dollars is irrelevant to a corporation of the size essentially contemplated by this Bill. She says that it is "squat". There really is no effective penalty for making no progress. It is somewhat Pollyannish and naive to believe that employers throughout Canada will implement equity programs for their employers that will require them to hire people whom obviously they are not interested in hiring. Nevertheless, that is the purpose of this Bill.

The target groups who appeared before the committee made it clear that a firm must be obliged to develop an action plan with goals and timetables, including how it will remove discriminatory practices, and take the positive steps needed to bring about employment equity.

These action plans were not included in the original Bill. Indeed, the Minister claimed before the committee that an action plan was inherent for the company introducing equity. In a sense, the Government itself did not consider that an action plan ought to be part of the Bill. It is an example of how this Bill has not been clearly thought through and needs to go back to committee for reconsideration. After all, we are theoretically launching a major new initiative for Canada. We are giving the impression that employment equity will become a reality in our country, but the fact is that it will not happen.

When one considers the importance of this Bill and the success of a similar Bill in the United States, we should be taking much more time to ensure that this is a good Bill that employers and employees from all parts of Canada will support. While some enforcement is needed, in order for these legislative requirements to work it is necessary to have the general support of the people. The fact is that the initiatives in Bill C-62 simply will not accomplish that.

I want to comment on equal pay for work of equal value. On many occasions members of the Government turned aside attempts to include in the Bill a reference to equal pay for work of equal value. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women urged that this Bill contain a reference to Section 11 of the Canadian Human Rights Act so that the equal pay matter could be addressed by employers. We attempted to introduce that equal pay provision without success. The Government argued time and again that the presence of equal pay in the Canadian Human Rights Act as it stands is good enough. However, that is not the case.

Judge Rosalie Abella is perhaps one of the most knowledgeable people in this area. She stated in her landmark study that equal pay is an integral element in the implementation of employment equity and that it must be included in any undertaking by employers to make the practices in the workplace more equitable. I suggest that the most knowledgeable person in the land sums it up very well when she says that we must include these provisions in the Act if we are serious about equal pay for work of equal value.

The clause on contract compliance is a major weakness in the Bill. I would remind the House that in 1980, the Canadian Government had contracts with some 25,000 firms in Canada; $6.5 billion worth of private sector business and some $5.5 billion of business to Crown corporations.

In 1982-83, the Department of Supply and Services alone signed with federal firms literally over 333,000 contracts worth $5 billion. Such a major undertaking in terms of Government business begs the question: What is the nature of the Government's contract compliance policy? It applies only to firms with 100 or more employees and only if the value of the contract exceeds $200,000. The only obligation on the contractor is simply to implement equity in the workplace. Failure to do so does not mean a loss of a contract, although such firm may be removed from the competition for future contracts. The firm "may" be removed.

There is either a commitment in law or there is not. The fact that a company may not do further business with the Government if it does not comply indicates that this is a rather limp wristed, milque-toast approach to the whole matter.

The Government's compliance policy does not require a contractor to file a report on workforce data as is required by those firms that come under Bill C-62.

These are hardly owners' requirements and certainly are far inferior to the demands made upon firms contracting in the United States. The approach in the United States is quite different and much more serious than the one reflected in Bill C-62.

In conclusion let me say that our Party has five concerns. First, there is the absence of real enforcement and adequate penalties under mandatory equity schemes. Second, there is no reference in the Bill to equal pay for work of equal value. Third, no contract compliance is included. Fourth, there is no obligation to negotiate equity where there is a bargaining unit. Perhaps, most important, the coverage of the Bill is inadequate in that it does not include federal Departments. If we are serious about asking people to take this Bill seriously, then surely its provisions should be extended to include those people, including federal Departments.

Mr. Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the Hon. Member's remarks about his own experience with designated groups, I presume in British Columbia, and his attempts to find work for them. He mentioned the fact that sometimes they ran up against this systemic discrimination. Based on the Hon. Member's experience, what does he think about the attempt to deal with this matter through voluntary enforcement? We have said all along that the Bill is not an enforceable employment equity Bill. It is a Bill which provides information about different workplaces. That information is to be made public in the hope that the public will comment on what is happening and, through public opinion, force employment equity. The Government does not seem to give us an answer to the question. However, when the Minister spoke on Monday, she said:

> The Government is committed to ensuring that employment equity becomes a reality. We intend to knock on the doors of employers who do not meet their responsibilities. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we will be knocking with a firm fist.

It seems to me that if this were an enforceable Bill for employment equity then the poor Minister, or members of her caucus, would not have to go around knocking on doors. What they should be able to do is lay a charge. The charge would go to a court and the court would say whether or not employment equity was being implemented.

So she admits in her speech that this is not really an enforceable employment equity Bill. It is one in which, through the publication of information, the Government hopes that there will be voluntary compliance. Can the Hon. Member tell us from his experience with what he was trying to do in British Columbia whether that really worked? Or do we need Bills with teeth in them under which charges can be laid and offenders prosecuted when there is not the employment equity which we all seek?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his thoughtful question. No, I do not think for a moment that voluntary compliance will work. I think that a Bill without teeth is simply not worth the paper upon which it is written. Quite frankly, I do not want to be part of any Bill which requires the poor Minister responsible to go out across Canada banging on doors. I hope she has something better to do with her time. If she is serious about providing employment opportunities for disadvantaged groups, then she should do it through this Bill. From her comments it seems as if she really does not believe that this will be an effective Bill. She is already looking forward to going out door-knocking, although it is probably not the type of door-knocking she was anticipating.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment. Ms. Copps, seconded by Mr. Rossi, moved:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-62, An Act respecting employment equity, be not now read a third time, but that the Bill be referred back to a Legislative Committee for reconsideration of Clauses 3, 5 and 7 thereof."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Ms. Copps), which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the amendment lost. Is the House ready for the next question? I will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND—EXTENT OF EXPENDITURES. (B) REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN ESTIMATES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, would you call the House to order, please?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would Hon. Members either sit down and listen to the great speech which the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) is going to make, or leave the Chamber.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of the House that under the previous administration, a $345 million native economic development program was established. That amount was to be expended over a four-year period, beginning in April of 1984. The purpose of the program was to enable native people to break free of their dependency on social assistance. It was to create among native people an entrepreneurial group who would be economically self-sufficient in time and then become employers of other native people. The program was directed at the development of native-owned businesses, including individual entrepreneurs, corporations, and community-based businesses.

I would like to remind the House that in their struggle to have aboriginal rights recognized and implemented, native people have had to focus an inordinate amount of time on the political process. As a result, there are a large number of very competent, articulate and successful political leaders in the native community. As a matter of fact, we in this House of Commons could learn a lot about political leadership by looking at the very able political leaders in the native community and recognizing their talents and skills. They have begun to see that the judicial route is a promising avenue for some degree of redress of grievances over long-standing historical injustices.

An increasing number of native people are turning to the study of law as a result. Their accomplishments in that field are many. However, it is in the field of economic development where bold new action is required. Hence the reason for the native economic development program. It was designed to help native people break through the poverty barrier and open the way for full participation in the business life of this nation.

My concern is that I detect a distinct lack of commitment by this Government to that avenue of endeavour. My evidence is no less a source than that despised Nielsen task force report on natives and Indians, the so-called Buffalo Jump Report. On page 68 it says that although halfway through its mandate the native economic development program has approved only 34 projects at a total cost of $11.7 million, 21 additional projects have been recommended for approval. In the year 1985-86, $122.1 million was approved by Parliament with a strong Conservative majority. Nevertheless, in the last fiscal year the Minister allowed $90 million of that to lapse. It seems to me the Government wants to bury the native economic development program. I find it difficult to blame the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) because I know that his orders come from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). Having been associated with that Minister for a long time, we know his ultra-conservative and archaic philosophy could never support such a program. We also know that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) is no friend and ally of the native economic development program. In fact, he was instrumental in having turned down the very promising Yukon Indian Development Corporation project.

I conclude very simply and quickly by asking why the Government does not admit that it wants to kill this program just as it did Katimavik? Why not be forthright and say so? Do not let the native people of this country go on believing there is such a program when it does not exist. So far there have been 900 proposals under this program. The applicants have been disappointed and frustrated by delays, postponements and, finally, turn-downs in most cases. Economic development is not a priority with the Department of Indian Affairs. Only 4 per cent of its budget is directed to that avenue, and most of that money is diverted elsewhere. Therefore, we need the native economic development program. The Government has failed to recognize that, failed to respond to it, and I argue that in doing so it has made a gross error.

• (1810)

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the question raised by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) concerning the Native Economic Development Program.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the Hon. Member just said, I was given responsibility for this program by the Prime Minister, and never have the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) interfered with the way the program was managed. First of all, I can give the House the assurance that the Conservative Government is working very hard to safeguard the economic and social interests of Canada's native peoples. The native community is aware of the Native Economic Development Program and it uses it. This is borne out by the fact that more than 900 project applications were submitted, and out of that number, unlike the erroneous figures you had, 145 were approved, representing a value of $59.3 million. The program is very popular with our native people, no doubt about that.

Mr. Speaker, the NEDP which is aimed at helping native people achieve economic independence is administered by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion but directed by the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette), and has a budget of $345 million spread out over a period of four years, starting in 1984-85. This funding has not been affected by budgetary cutbacks. The NEDP plays a very important role in native economic development. It is the only program that is specifically aimed at developing the economic independence of native people.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member would feel better if he met with representatives of the following organizations: the Central Interior Trust Company in Kamloops, British Columbia, which received a contribution of $6.9 million; the Saskatchewan Indian Loan Company, which received a contribution of $2.6 million, and so forth. It has been estimated that this $2.6 billion federal contribution to the Saskatchewan Indian Loan Company would generate more than $46 million of new investments in the provincial agricultural economy. The same might be said about the Association of Reserves for Improving Social Economics which was given $1.3 million. Thanks to this contribution, it is expected that 100 new businesses and 400 new permanent jobs will be created in the next few years.

Mr. Speaker, these propositions are perfect examples of the dynamic and creative force of native people. They also emphasize the importance of the program's effective assistance to the native people of Canada.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Liberal Member that he is quite misinformed, and that the native people are pleased to work with the department and the Minister of State for Small Businesses to improve the program.

MULTICULTURALISM—WHITE PAPER INQUIRY. (B) REQUEST FOR CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, on November 18, I addressed several questions to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek). These questions reflected my understanding that the multiculturalism sector was working on a White Paper on multicultural policy but that this work had been given up under the instructions of the Minister. The answers that I received did not really clarify that question, and that is why I asked to have a further opportunity to debate the matter.

Now, more than five months later, it is even more appropriate to ask what the Government's multiculturalism policy is. On March 7, less than four months after the Minister's statement that there would be full consultation, particularly with the new Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, it was reported in The Globe and Mail that he was in fact involved in creating a totally new multiculturalism policy.

Those are the words of the Minister aimed at bringing ethnic minorities out of, as he said, "ethno-cultural corners" and into the economic mainstream of Canada. He declared that the policy was in the final stages of preparation for Cabinet. He then went on to suggest, without any doubt about what the result would be, that he was not going to Cabinet for additional funds. Given that he was talking about re-orienting spending, he said that it would be a redirection of existing funds. There is no doubt that some organizations will be cut out. He went on to say that the organizations might be involved in the retention of culture and that henceforth there was no question that their grants would have to be an investment in Canada. He concluded by stating:

"We're not going to be spoon-feeding these people, giving them grants or financial assistance or any form of assistance—What we have to do is open the doors and give them an opportunity to get involved instead of having a multiculturalism conference and talking about various cultures".

That statement has been taken by ethno-cultural, multicultural, race relations, immigrant settlement and other organizations as just short of a declaration of war by the Minister of State for Multiculturalism against their intentions. Across the country there is the most intense unease about what the Minister has in mind. Thus I address this question.

Surely what was needed was a White Paper on multiculturalism in the terms suggested in my question of November 18. Surely it was necessary for the intentions of the Minister to be laid out. It is necessary for him to turn back to the ethnocultural communities, since he clarified a need for redirection, in order to publish a paper to which they can react.

Some of the strongest reactions to this move have come from groups in the Province of Manitoba. They feel left out of the process. They feel neglected and rejected by the Minister. Two days before I asked this question in the House he met with executive members of the Manitoba Intercultural Council. He promised them there would be no change in multicultural policy without full consultation. People who recently had the pleasure of having a Manitoba Member of Parliament as Minister of State for Multiculturalism had been promised that regional priorities and regional concerns would be reflected upon by the Government as it dealt with these matters. They were promised that there would be full consultation.

It is not surprising that in Manitoba and in Alberta there is unease with what is happening. I spoke to a leader of the Urkrainian-Canadian community in Alberta late last week and he expressed his unease. He was convinced that this was a play to the City of Toronto and groups in Toronto, particularly to business groups. The most reassuring thing I could tell him was that when I was in attendance at the Multiculturalism Means Business Conference in Toronto, it was patently obvious that the policy shift suggested by the Minister on March 7 is not acceptable to large numbers of people. We might think that the first concern would be with respect to those organizations involved with multicultural retention. In many cases, those might be groups of European origin.

I was impressed that the questions asked of the Minister and of the panelists came as much from those we would think of as visible minority groups, groups which are surely concerned about race relation matters, employment equity, and matters as diverse as immigrant settlement and the establishment of credentials for those who have been trained outside Canada. These people are convinced that the Minister may forget their needs and not fund them adequately. They deeply resent the suggestion that he has been spoon-feeding them when, in fact, they have received precious little money. They now see the limited funds upon which they have depended in the past to stimulate their efforts being lost to them as the Government turns to other business-oriented efforts.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to respond to my colleague from Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), with whom I took part in several meetings of our Committee on Multiculturalism and enjoyed working.

Today it is my duty and pleasure to respond for the first time in my new capacity as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism.

First I want to reassure my colleague by telling him that, even though I had an opportunity to talk very briefly to the Minister, I wanted to be sure that what I was going to say would reflect the views of the Minister, and we agree on one point: our colleague should stop worrying so much, for the department and the Minister have been holding ongoing consultations with all ethnic communities throughout Canada.

The Minister has no intention of making a policy shift, as the Hon. Member has suggested. Quite the opposite, we want to make an improvement and an up-date as this paper and the proceedures of the Department go back to 1971.

There have been many changes since 1971, Mr. Speaker. The only thing that is still the same is that the grass is still green.

There is certainly room for improvement, but always in consultation. From what I have seen, that is what my Minister is now doing and he has travelled throughout Canada. However, there will probably be some change.

There will not be a complete reversal, but as far as the changes are concerned, the Minister will tell us about them in committee. The Hon. Member will probably be the first to ask questions of the Minister since he is always present at the sittings of this committee. The Minister has assured us that he would certainly consult the Hon. Member when he goes before the committee as he did about the question asked by the Hon. Member on November 18, 1985. I remember this quite well, Mr. Speaker, as it was my birthday. The week after the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon asked this question, the Minister appeared before our committee and discussed the White Paper in detail. Many questions were asked and if we refer to the Minutes of the Proceedings, we see that he made the same promise that he would speak to the multicultural and ethnic groups of all Canada. This is what he has done, perhaps not completely, but it has been done. I do not have all the data yet as I was appointed Parliamentary Secretary only around 11 o'clock this morning, but I can tell the Hon. Member that this subject will be discussed at our first meeting, and the second time that I have the opportunity to speak in this House, I may be able to provide him with additional information. However, I trust that our Minister will continue to consult, and what we all want him to do is to consult and improve this proposal.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—INCORRECT REPORTING OF GAS PRICES ALLEGED

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I recently asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Edwards) a question concerning the need to ensure that the CBC reports to Canadians in an unbiased and balanced manner. The particular example I cited was from The Journal of March 7, 1986, in which a reporter doing a story about gas prices in Canada and the United States neglected to convert American dollars to Canadian dollars and American gallons to litres. Of course, this resulted in a very inaccurate statement of the comparison between Canadian and American gas prices. This is but one example of inaccurate and biased reporting by the CBC.

I have had some correspondence with Mr. David Spanjer of Elliotwood Court in my riding of Don Valley East. Mr. Spanjer has devoted much time to analysing the content of CBC Radio programming, and he feels that the coverage provided is not balanced. In a letter to me, he describes travelling by car through northern Ontario and how the reception from the CBC comes through loud and clear when all other stations have faded. He wrote:

I have no quarrel with this if the reporting of the news, the choice of the discussion subjects and the selection of the persons interviewed was objective. Unfortunately, exactly the opposite is the case—

Mr. Spanjer has written to the CBC on several occasions and has been very frustrated by the response he has received. Also he wrote:

As a taxpayer I believe I have the right to response to any reasonable request for information and a reply to any complaint that is properly documented. What in fact has happened is that the CBC has stalled for almost a year. They have refused to provide all the information requested . . . and now, rather than reply to my analysis of the program information that I received, they have arbitrarily declared the matter closed.

This is no way for a publicly owned corporation to treat one of its consumers and in effect one of its shareholders.

The Parliamentary Secretary in his response to my question pointed out that programming and content were the direct responsibility of CBC management and its Board of Directors. I appreciate the independence of the CBC and the need for its independence. However, it is no justification for inaccurate and biased reporting. This is clearly unacceptable to most Canadians.

On April 3, the President of the CBC, Pierre Juneau, announced the following:

Although the CBC received an increase in its parliamentary appropriations and although the corporation anticipates an increase in advertising revenue, this still leaves the CBC with a $48 million shortfall in 1986-87.

He went on to say that the shortfall resulted from the financial impacts of government cost-cutting measures and general economic factors, such as inflation and the devalued Canadian dollar, increasing the cost of goods and programming from outside Canada. He continued:

This year the corporation has not been able to avoid cuts in programming. Even the reductions in administrative and support expenditures will have an impact on programming and distribution services.

The CBC will eliminate 122 hours of network TV programming—77 hours of English language TV and 45 hours of French language TV. Several programs, such as This Land and CBLT Morning in Toronto, have been dropped. Others have had their schedules curtailed.

In the April 14 issue of Maclean's magazine, an article dealing with CBC cut-backs indicated that officials at both the Treasury Board and the Department of Communications had calculated that in fact the CBC would have a deficit of less than $10 million in 1986-87 rather than the $48 million shortfall reported by Mr. Juneau. The article in Maclean's also indicated that the CBC earned more than $33 million in unexpected advertising revenue in 1985-86 which the corporation was permitted to keep. The article also pointed out that the Government was giving the corporation an increase of $22 million or 2.1 per cent for 1986-87 operations and capital expenditures. The Main Estimates of the Government predict a $55 million increase in CBC advertising revenue.

In terms of advertising revenue, the CBC expects an increase of only $8 million over the 1984-85 actual revenue and only marginal increases for 1986-87 due to increased competition in several Canadian markets. Perhaps that sends out a message about the quality of programming. In addition, interesting and important questions were raised in the Maclean's article and in the CBC's own response about the corporation's budget, accounting practices, and ability to live within its means.

In the same week that the programming cuts and elimination of jobs were announced, Mr. Juneau and three senior Vice-Presidents departed on a 10-day trip to China to explore the potential for an export market for Canadian programming. This effort to sell Canadian programming abroad is hardly consistent with the cut-backs in Canadian programming. Not only are examples cited of biased and inaccurate reporting, but of biased and inappropriate spending practices as well.

Cut-backs of any sort are difficult. I have had that experience in my own business career. However, it appears that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation needs to re-examine its priorities in terms of its mandate. It needs to get at the structure, the number of senior vice-presidents, the number of vice-presidents and perhaps even to merge departments. The provision of balanced and accurate news and original Canadian programming is a vital duty of the CBC. It should also be managed according to sound business principles and practices.

I would ask my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Edwards), to share these real concerns with the management and directors of the CBC on behalf of myself, my constituents and, I am sure, I am speaking for hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the issue of balanced coverage in our broadcast media is important to all Canadians. The free flow of information is vital to the functioning of democracy. I can well appreciate, therefore, the Hon. Member's concern about the item on gas prices broadcast by the CBC which was aired on The National on March 7.

As I stated on March 21, broadcasters themselves are responsible for program selection and content, subject to the general rules and regulations of the CRTC. Thus responsibility for CBC programming matters lies entirely with the CBC's management and board of directors. I assured the House when the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) brought this matter to our attention that the CBC would be informed of his concern, and the corporation has since issued a response. I will be forwarding to the Hon. Member a copy of the full text of that response, but I would like at this time, with your permission, Sir, to provide a brief summary of it.

According to the CBC, the report in question was reviewed by senior TV news personnel and they found it to be fair and balanced over all. However, the CBC acknowledges a factual error in the comparison the Canadian pump price of gasoline with the American pump price in that the news item erroneously compared 95 cents per gallon U.S. with 20 cents Canadian per litre without adjustment for the U.S. exchange rate on the U.S. gallon. The CBC expresses its regret for these two errors.

The CBC has an internationally recognized reputation for the quality of its news and public affairs reporting. I can say with some knowledge, Sir, as a former broadcaster that omissions can occur in the reporting of information, particularly in the television medium where deadlines are often tight and a strict economy of time must be observed.

Parliament recognized when the Broadcasting Act was passed in 1968 that while programming autonomy must be assured, broadcasters must also assume certain responsibilities in conveying the information they broadcast. That is why Section 3(g) of the Act, which sets out CBC's mandate, begins by stating that the CBC should:

—be a balanced service of information, enlightenment and entertainment for people of different ages, interests and tastes covering the whole range of programming in fair proportion.

I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that these provisions of the Broadcasting Act have proven generally very useful and that the broadcasters have faithfully lived up to their responsibilities.

The Corporation has examined this report and prepared a detailed answer in which it recognizes the mistake and expresses its regret. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the reply of the CBC in this case shows how conscienciously the Corporation takes its responsibilities as a public broadcaster.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

DISTRIBUTION OF TICKETS TO POLITICIANS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put on the record the fact that a CP story has confirmed what we in British Columbia already knew, namely, Progressive Conservative MPs from British Columbia have been given 4,100 tickets to give to the public for the opening ceremonies of Expo 86. The New Democrats and the Liberals are splitting four tickets between them.

Expo is going to be a great national festival. Not only will it celebrate the future of British Columbia and Vancouver as the host city, but it will also be a great credit, as Expo 67 was, to the country as a whole. For the Government to convert this into a political extravaganza rather than a national and provincial festival is directly contrary to the unanimity with which people from all three political Parties are approaching this particular event.

I call upon the Government to take politics out of Expo, give it back to the people, and give it back to Members of Parliament across the board.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, multicultural organizations across Canada are outraged by recent actions of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek). These organizations have provided input to the Government more than once recently on the direction they would like multicultural policy to take. They have indicated shortcomings in Government action on the policy and have asked for more support for their own community acitivities.

While these groups waited for the opportunity to discuss these policy matters, they were suddenly told that the Minister was developing a totally new multiculturalism policy which was in the final stages of preparation for cabinet consideration. The Minister did not ask for advice on this determination. He did not invite reaction to a draft statement. Instead, he said he was already acting on the new policy and was reviewing the whole funding and granting procedures in line with the development of the new policy. The members of our ethnocultural organizations and communities deserve a better lesson in parliamentary Government than the Minister has provided.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

ABORTION

THERAPEUTIC ABORTION COMMITTEES' APPROVAL PROCEDURES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, the death of a young Ottawa woman on January 23, 1986, while undergoing a therapeutic abortion, has confirmed what everyone suspected. In many cases therapeutic abortion committees are no more than a rubber stamp.

Erin Shannon's abortion was listed as approved at 8 a.m. even though the committee did not meet until 10 a.m. Her abortion was initiated by 10.05 a.m. Apparently this is not unusual. The committee routinely approves 40 abortion applications at its weekly meetings which last only 20 minutes. That gives about 30 seconds to the consideration of each case.

Under our laws a therapeutic abortion committee should guarantee that a woman contemplating a pregnancy termination has received reliable information about her own and her baby's health, as well as information about the more positive alternatives to an abortion. These factors should also influence the decision of a committee on an application for abortion. This does not happen now, and the entire committee process is a meaningless farce.

I urge Hon. Members of the House seriously to consider changing our laws—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF ARMENIAN MASSACRE

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, 1986 will mark the seventy-first anniversary of the massacre of over 1.5 million Armenians—men, women, and children. The latest text of the United Nations' committee report on genocide lists the massacre of the Armenians alongside such horrors as what the Nazis did to the Jews. In 1982 the Government of Canada, the champion of human rights, passed a resolution condemning the Armenian massacre. On April 24 Armenians all over the world will be holding a silent vigil to commemorate the martyrs of the genocide. Let us all pause and reflect upon the Armenian experience.

The commemoration of this day will serve as a warning signal against other similar atrocities. No act of human destruction of such great magnitude can be prevented if we permit one to be forgotten. Tomorrow, and every April 24 hence, should be remembered as Armenian Memorial Day, for nothing threatens our future more than a refusal—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

GOVERNMENT'S DECISION TO CUT BENEFITS—CITIZENS' OPPOSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Last week, Mr. Speaker, I was in the ridings of Trois-Rivières and Champlain. Yesterday I went to the riding of Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot and visited Montreal's Salon de la femme.

Mr. Speaker, the people are increasingly angry with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He was booed in his own riding. The representatives of the Members for Trois-Rivières and Champlain were booed in these ridings. The absent Member for Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot (Mrs. Champagne) was booed in her riding.

Mr. Speaker, all those people are against the Government's decision to cut off unemployment insurance benefits and, sure enough, they rallied the support of the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) who has voiced his opposition to his Government's decision to deny unemployment insurance benefits to people who have worked and are entitled to them, people who have been misled by the Prime Minister of Canada.

IMPORTANCE OF ETHNIC AND CULTURAL MINORITIES

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, today I pay homage to distinguished guests and to businessmen of my riding's Italian community.

Mr. Speaker, we are growing ever more aware of the leading role played by cultural and ethnic minorities in Canada's economic growth. Our Government provides the ideal climate for them to contribute to our country's economic expansion.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism to which I belong has been established to foster and monitor the Canada-wide implementation of federal multiculturalism policies.

HOUSING

RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—APPLICATION REFUSALS IN WINNIPEG

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, residents of Winnipeg are angry at the way in which the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program has been unilaterally altered by the Minister responsible for housing. This program has been responsible for regenerating entire neighbourhoods in Winnipeg. Without it and the Core Intiatives Program, parts of downtown Winnipeg could have gone the way of central cities in the United States.

Last year 1,200 homes were rehabilitated under these programs. This year no money has been released as yet. A quarter of the year is thus gone. Winnipegers have warmly endorsed the program and have co-operated fully with it, but now they find their RRAP applications have been cut off because of changes in the income requirements set by the Minister. People with applications dating back as long as two years have been cut off. Forty completed and processed applications, just awaiting CMHC signature, have been turned down. A full 600 of 900 applicants have been disqualified although they acted entirely in good faith, yet the Government will not see fit to judge their applications under the criteria under which these people applied—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

SHIPBUILDING

NEEDS OF INDUSTRY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, Canadians were pleased by the decision of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to award the contract for the building of the new CN ferry to a Canadian shipyard. Now, however, is the time to focus our attention on the urgent needs of the shipbuilding industry in British Columbia. Now is the time to proceed with construction of the promised Class 8 Arctic icebreaker.

The icebreaker will provide important logistic support, and protection of Canadian sovereignty in Arctic waters. It must incorporate the most up to date technology, be efficient, and be built at reasonable cost. All these elements can be delivered by the shipyards in North Vancouver, British Columbia, which are renowned for their expertise in icebreaking technology and utilize the most advanced and productive techniques of design and construction. I hope the Ministers involved in making the decision on the icebreaker will move quickly so that our West Coast shipbuilding industries will have this opportunity to contribute to Arctic development which they so justly deserve.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF DR. VLADIMIR BRODSKY

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Vladimir Brodsky is a Russian physician who has been sentenced to three years in a labour camp for malicious hooliganism. The KGB has offered Dr. Brodsky his freedom if he renounces an independent peace group he helped establish in 1982.

This doctor is guilty of working for peace through association with "The Group to Establish Trust Between the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R.". This case symbolizes the concern Canadians have for efforts physicians in Canada and other places have made to remove the threat of nuclear war.

Dr. Brodsky's internment relegates the status of Dr. Chazov and his Soviet Physicians for Peace Group to that of a Russian progaganda tool. It ridicules Mr. Gorbachev's peace overtures as being only gestures.

I respectfully request this House and its Members to regard the treatment of Dr. Brodsky as representative of Soviet regard for non-governmental peace groups in Canada, and I hope all Members will join me in requesting the Soviet leadership to restore his basic freedoms to Dr. Brodsky.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—ELECTION OF LIBERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, on Monday night Joe Ghiz and the Liberals captured 21 of the 32 seats in the provincial Legislative Assembly. They will form the next Government, and a strong Government at that. The winds of change were so strong that even a Premier could not hang on to his own seat.

There is a clear message in this resounding victory for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—Canadians are fed up with Conservative policies. As I travelled door-to-door with the provincial candidates, the response was the same—the Mulroney Government's policies are hurting all Canadians.

Islanders were outraged by this Government giving less and taking more. It is also quite obvious to Islanders that the Prime Minister is not delivering on his promise to create jobs, jobs, jobs.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Mulroney Government has failed Prince Edward Islanders. We now have a strong Premier who will stand up and fight for a fair deal for all Prince Edward Island.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, as we all know, Canada is on the road to prosperity. More Canadians have jobs, more people are buying homes, and more people are seeing an improvement in their standard of living thanks to the implementation of Conservative policies. However, this new prosperity is not always equally distributed, and that is why our Government has introduced an unprecedented range of employment programs. Under the direction of the Minister responsible, these programs are aimed at increasing participation by Canadians in the labour market and will enable greater numbers of Canadian men and women to take advantage of our economic renewal.

And I agree with all those people who have gone back to work since the September 1984 election: "What a relief to have a job again and to get your pay at the end of the week."

We in the Progressive Conservative Party realize that the best social program is a job, and that is why we are working so hard to create new jobs for Canadians each month.

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT BACK-BENCHERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as occurs every day, today the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) tells us about the need for shipbuilding on the West Coast. It was not long ago that a Member on that same side was speaking about the need for shipbuilding on the East Coast. This is another example of Conservative double-speak because the Conservative Cabinet refuses to recognize the need on either coast.

I suggest it is about time that Conservative back-benchers understood that the public know that Conservative back-benchers do not represent them adequately, otherwise action would have been taken by the Cabinet.

AVIATION

INTERNATIONAL AIR SHOW—STUDENTS' PARTICIPATION

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to a special event that will start tomorrow at Saint-Hubert in the riding of Chambly, when the Sixth International Aeronautics Show is officially opened by our astronaut, Commander Marc Garneau. This impressive show is a concrete example of the vitality of Canadian youth.

In fact, this show, one of the biggest in Canada, is organized by students of the National Aerotechnical School, who, with the co-operation of industry and our Government, have succeeded in giving us a remarkable presentation of what they can do. In addition, this show is a unique opportunity for the Quebec and Canadian aeronautics industry to make itself known.

Mr. Speaker, I invite all Canadians to come and see for themselves what the energy and entrepreneurship of the students of this institution have been able to achieve, and I would like to take this opportunity to wish them every success.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Trade negotiations with the United States are not yet under way, yet the matter is bogged down in the United States Senate by conflict, confusion, and capitulation. Democratic Senator Max Baucus of Montana said: "It is the backroom closed-door, arm-twisting stage—the stage where politics is at its most foul. We're at the foul stage period". I know that you may find those words unacceptable, Mr. Speaker, but they were uttered in the United States Senate.

What backroom deals are being made by the Prime Minister and his Government to try to keep these negotiations on track? Will he tell the Canadian people what is behind these discussions? What is going on?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition clearly does not believe that kind of question himself. He makes little effort to disguise his amusement with his own questions. What is going on in the United States Senate is germane to their own democratic process. The administration is following the prescribed formalities.

I assume that what is taking place in the United States is their own special brand of democracy, in much the same way as Question Period is ours. When the response is forthcoming, the Government of Canada will respond. Meanwhile we think it is the normal functioning of a democracy, and we will have to wait to see what comes out of the United States Senate.

INQUIRY IF GOVERNMENT MADE CONCESSIONS IN NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. It would be amusing if there were not so much at stake for Canada. If the talks start from scratch, are we going to put everything on the bargaining table? The Prime Minister has made a commitment to remove our cultural industries, the auto pact, marketing boards and other economic sectors from the bargaining table. Has the Prime Minister made any concessions with respect to these restrictions, with a view to the results of the U.S. Senate vote?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as Canada is concerned, we submitted a program that responded to existing demands. We have conducted thorough consultations with all sectors in this country. We followed the proper procedure in expressing to the United States the interest of the Government of Canada in pursuing trade talks with the United States—as I had the pleasure of announcing here in the House on September 26—and everything was done according to the rules.

That being said, I may point out to the Hon. Member that we are waiting for the results from the Senate Committee, and I am sorry to hear how negative the Leader of the Opposition is about this vote, because today, Mr. Bourassa, speaking on behalf of all Quebecers, expressed the hope that the Senate Committee would approve trade talks with Canada.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Bourassa will be interested, as will other Premiers, in what backroom deals are made to secure that consent. If there are backroom deals in the United States between the administration and the Senate, there are backroom deals between this administration in Canada and the provinces.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Question.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people will not have confidence in what is going on unless the Prime Minister consents to a full parliamentary debate at an early opportunity in order that we can understand what concessions were given in Washington, and what is being done with our provinces on this side of the border.

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if indeed there are negotiations I think a debate of some kind would be appropriate. First and foremost it would finally flush out where the Liberals stand on this issue. No one knows where they are on any issue. They are either on both sides, or none.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister as well. Yesterday in the House he said categorically that he would never accept the U.S. Senate proposals which outlined guidelines and conditions. Canadian officials in Washington are quoted in a CP wire story today as saying that the Prime Minister would not automatically refuse to negotiate under the Senate proposals. What kind of two-faced game is going on? Why are Canadian officials saying one thing in Washington and he is saying another thing in this Parliament? When are we going to find out what the real Canadian stand is, and when is he going to control his officials in Washington so that they represent this Government properly?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the only two-faced game going on here is that this is one face of Liberal trade policy, and over there is the other face. They are both opposite.

I have indicated many times that we are looking for a clean launch without preconditions. We expect that will be the case. We hope there will be a positive—I do not want to interrupt the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Hon. Member from Winnipeg.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No, keep going.

Mr. Mulroney: Is the conversation over?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Keep going.

Mr. Mulroney: All right. I thought he might want to hear the answer.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Go ahead.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps just a supplementary question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The clean launch is going under water.

Mr. Axworthy: I always say that every time the Prime Minister looks in the mirror he is getting two points of view.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO CANADIAN OFFICIALS IN WASHINGTON

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not answered the question. Are Canadian officials in Washington saying to their American counterparts that he would be prepared to accept conditions as outlined by the Senate which would involve complete agreement by the provinces and acceptance of the fact that Canadian subsidies on resources would be wiped off the table? We want to know what Canadian officials in Washington are promising or committing to on behalf of the Government.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the Hon. Member's question is of course not. The Prime Minister of Canada spoke for Canada in the House of Commons yesterday on this question. That position stands. It is consistent with the position this Government has been taking throughout the long debate, a claim which cannot be made by the Liberal Party of Canada.

CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a very simple and straightforward question for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: That's a change.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Langdon: It is possible—

Mr. Crosbie: First one this session.

An Hon. Member: A simple question for a simple-minded Cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has the right to put his question.

Mr. Langdon: Clearly the difficult questions have become too much for him so I will ask a very straightforward question.

If the policy of the Canadian Government is to have a clean launch, why are Canadian officials in Washington saying the contrary? Did he authorize it? Will he stop it if it is taking place?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to answer that very simple question very simply, they are not.

CONDITIONS SUGGESTED BY U.S. SENATE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, having left our officials in Washington to play their game while the politicians here appear to play their game, let me pose this question. Will the Prime Minister here and now reject the conditions suggested by the Senate, including equal treatment for U.S. investors here, more government purchase of U.S. goods, and full protection of U.S. intellectual property, as totally unacceptable, damaging to jobs here, and against our economic sovereignty?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making a false accusation.

FINANCE

INTRODUCTION OF SALES TAX CREDIT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The report from the National Council of Welfare now confirms what the Opposition has been saying all along; Conservative budgets are Robin Hood in reverse, the rich get richer and the poor will get poorer.

How can the Minister of Finance justify gloating over the introduction of a sales tax credit when the Minister knows that a Canadian family of two children, earning $20,000 a year, will not qualify for the sales tax credit?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member has looked carefully at the facts. What is very clear is that real disposable income for all Canadians is up this year and will be up again next year. Taxes for those who are in the lowest income brackets are going to be down this year, and he has commented on one of the reasons for that. The third comment that I would make is that the reason for this policy is to improve the economic situation of the country, to get interest rates down, to improve the position of middle income Canadians and to provide them with the ability to get a lower cost mortgage on their homes. I point out to him that mortgage rates today are at the lowest level they have been since 1978.

FAMILIES' DISPOSABLE INCOME

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree that through his own measures introduced in two consecutive Budgets the Government is pushing down the disposable income of the people who struggle the hardest in this country, the working poor, and he is asking those who earn between $20,000 and $30,000 a year to lose over 2 per cent of disposable income over the next four years?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, for those most in need, taxes are lower. That is a fact. The other point I make is that one of the results of the lower interest rates and the lowest mortgage rates since 1978 is that housing starts are up, more jobs are being created—

An Hon. Member: They are nowhere.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member opposite says they are nowhere. Well, I will tell you jobs are being created in many parts of the country. Five hundred and eighty thousand jobs have been created, and that is because of the policies of this Government.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister rise and state categorically, unequivocally, that if there are any conditions of any kind attached to the American negotiating position in free trade, we will not take part in the negotiations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that is a hypothetical question.

Mr. Deans: It is not; it is not.

Mr. Speaker: It is.

Mr. Deans: It is not hypothetical.

Mr. Speaker: The Government Members will come to order now, and that includes the front bench.

The Hon. Member knows that is a hypothetical question. Order, please. If he has a question on Government policy I am prepared to hear it.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, it has been reported repeatedly that Canadian representatives and U. S. representatives in Washington are speaking about a deal being worked out that has conditions attached to it in advance of the negotiations. I ask the Prime Minister, that being the case will he say categorically that Canada will not negotiate at all unless such conditions are absolutely out of the picture?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for the third time today, that allegation about activities of Canadian public officials in Washington is false. The Prime Minister stated the position of the Government of Canada with regard to preconditions in this House of Commons yesterday.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY WHETHER FAMILY EARNING $21,000 CAN HAVE SAME REVENUE LOSS AS FAMILY EARNING $100,000

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Mr. Prime Minister, this morning, the National Welfare Council revealed the disastrous consequences of your Government's policies and demonstrated clearly that the poor are getting poorer and the rich are getting richer. Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether he was aware, when the two Budgets were brought down, that a two-salary family with an income of $21,000 would lose $2,000 in income, while a family with an income of $100,000 would also be losing no more than $2,000? Is that his kind of social justice?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe we all know that the members of the National Council of Welfare are responsible people who want to look at these areas objectively. However, I suggest that the Hon. Member also look at the assumptions underlying the projections of the council. For example, the council made the assumption, on the conclusions drawn by the Hon. Member, that no measure will be brought in by the Government between 1986 and the end of the decade to improve the financial condition of those in lower- income groups. It also makes the assumption that there will be no increase in real earnings between 1986 and 1990. I think most Members of the House would be realistic and say that that is an assumption that cannot be substantiated.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It should also be noted that they are making the assumption that no one—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I could give more examples.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION CONCERNING $10,850 SALARY EARNERS AND $100,000 SALARY EARNERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I hope the Prime Minister will have the courage to answer these people himself.

Could the Prime Minister inform the House why—and these are his own Government's figures—an employee with an income of only $10,850 will get only $905, while a family with an income of $100,000 will get $517?

Does the Minister have the courage to rise in the House and say—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister had the courage to start getting the economy back on its feet so that the very poor whom the Member pretends to represent, but is not representing, will begin getting some benefits.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I can go on, Mr. Speaker. For example, there is the assumption that the surtax will remain until 1990. It also makes the assumption that the Ontario taxes raised by Mr. Nixon and Mr. Peterson, are an example for all of Canada and that those are reflected across the country. Furthermore, no provincial surtaxes or credits are taken into account. Lastly—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): In September, 1984, five year mortgage rates were 14.25 per cent; this year, in April, they are 10.75 per cent. Those are the facts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECTS OF BUDGET

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will he comment on the report of his advisory council which states that a single parent family earning $14,000 will lose $1,000 in disposable income, but with the present legislation a single parent family with an income of $80,000 will actually gain $777 in disposable income? In other words, certain people will gain while others will lose disposable income. Is that his concept of fairness? How can he live with that kind of Budget that has been introduced by his Minister of Finance?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can live with a Budget and an economic plan that have brought confidence back into the economy. I can live with a Budget and an economic plan that have been the backbone for 580,000 new jobs, almost all of them permanent jobs. I can live with a Budget and economic plan that have shown the mortgage decrease that I just reiterated. I am sure the Hon. Member, as finance critic, might even have the objectivity to know what some of the savings would be on a typical mortgage for an average income family. That is what I can live with.

PERSONAL AND CORPORATE TAX PROJECTIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Hon. Minister once again if he can live with something the Minister of Finance tells us is going to happen, and that is that 50 per cent of the tax revenue for Canada four years from now will come from the people of Canada and only 15 per cent from the corporations of Canada? Does he think that is fair and equitable?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in terms of tax fairness I think the Member should also know, as finance critic for the New Democratic Party, that it has been this Minister of Finance who has said there will be fairness in the tax system. It is this Minister of Finance who came in with the minimum tax. Those Members are not very enthusiastic now, after they were touting it throughout the country in the last election. It is also this Minister of Finance who said that he wants to bring tax reform and greater fairness to the system. Those are the facts, and I wish he would start being honest about some of those issues.

MONCTON RAIL SHOPS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that the Government of New Brunswick has commissioned an economic impact study on the possible closure of the CN shops in Moncton. The loss of jobs and the social costs would be horrendous. Will the Minister explain to the House why he is refusing to take any positive action to protect those 1,200 jobs in the CN shops in Moncton?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not refusing to take positive action. We are working very closely with CN and others to ensure that the excess capacity within the main shop system of the CNR can be alleviated and handled in a fair and equitable manner.

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF JOBS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister give an undertaking to live up to the commitment he gave to the Member of Parliament for Moncton, as well as to the Senator in the other Chamber, with regard to protecting those jobs in Moncton? Will he categorically agree that those 1,200 jobs will be protected and the 250 people on lay-off will be rehired?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday and I repeat today that the excess capacity situation in the CN main shops is being closely examined. We hope this will be completed by mid-1986. At that time any action that may be contemplated with respect to rationalization or adjustment will be announced, and any action will be taken in a fair and equitable manner.

CHALLENGE '86

CREATION OF JOBS FOR STUDENTS BY PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister challenged the private sector to create career related summer jobs for students in 1985. According to her Department's own program evaluation, the private sector failed to deliver. Will the Minister explain why she has placed yet more emphasis on the private sector under Challenge '86 when her own evaluation says that the non-private sector is at least three times more effective at creating jobs for students?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, in 1984, 10 per cent of jobs created for students in the summer came from the private sector. In 1985, 32 per cent came from the private sector.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot): In 1984 effectively 12 per cent of the jobs were related to the careers for which young people were studying. In 1985 the figure is 67 per cent. In 1986 it will be even better.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Ask another one, Howard.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister—whatever her portfolio is—will beat the air a few more times to explain why her report says that many of the jobs in the private sector would have existed anyway. Career related jobs were more frequent in the non-private sector. Why is she playing this game with the taxpayers and the students in respect to job creation rather than putting money into the hands of the non-private sector to create jobs for those who need them?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, last year 80 per cent of the private sector employers said that those jobs would not have been created if it had not been for Challenge '85. In 1986 greater emphasis is being put on the private sector for career related jobs and many young people will gain the experience they need to obtain permanent jobs once they graduate. That is what this Government is working to achieve.

NON-PROFIT PROJECTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and it concerns the same matter that was just raised. The quota on non-profit projects is still too inflexible under Challenge '86. Many excellent volunteer community projects are not being funded. Will the Minister change the quota on non-profit applications under Challenge '86, while she still has time, so that the best projects in each area can be selected and implemented?

• (1440)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when the proposals for this year were drawn up, I have to assure the Hon. Member that, yes, indeed, emphasis was placed on the private sector. I can say now that the program Challenge '86 is a runaway success.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Absolutely.

Mr. Orlikow: The money isn't used up.

Miss MacDonald: The fact is that we have received 58,000 proposals, the largest number of proposals which have ever come in. Many of them are from the private sector and they bring with them $150 million more for jobs for young people this summer.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how she knows Challenge '86 is already a great success when it has not even started yet.

An Hon. Member: More applications than ever.

Mr. Darling: Wake up.

Mr. Allmand: But her evaluation program for Challenge '85—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Supplementary question.

VANCOUVER FOOD BANK PROPOSAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Why is it that many excellent non-profit projects such as the Vancouver Food Bank are being turned down by the Challenge '86 Program while many questionable business projects are being accepted? Will the Minister explain that? Will she not change the rules while she still has time?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Once again, Mr. Speaker, I have to advise the Hon. Member that he is wrong. That proposal was approved.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as Members of the House of Commons will know, we are at the present time briefing all Members on the Community Futures Program. EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—VIEWS OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does the Canadian Government share President Reagan's view that Nicaragua is part of "the international terrorism network" with Libya and should also be dealt with by force of arms?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have made clear on a number of occasions that in our judgment the problems in Central America are problems which are economic and social in their root and nature. That is why the policy of Canada has been directed along two channels. One has been the encouragement of development assistance, and the second has been the encouragement of the Contadora process. That remains our policy.

U.S. SPONSORSHIP OF CONTRAS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I direct my second question to the Prime Minister and I hope he will reply. Will the Prime Minister tell President Reagan at the upcoming Summit that the United States might get more help in fighting

State-sponsored terrorism if the American Government were not sponsoring a group which is trying violently to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are some people in this House who want to use the threat of terrorism as a means of expressing their political point of view.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What?

Mr. Riis: Name one.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There are others here who want to use the influence that Canada has to mount an effective world response to the causes of terrorism. The problem, as was evidenced in Libya, is that the Americans found themselves in a position where there was no alternative—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Oh, yes, there was.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —but a military alternative. Our challenge must be to work with our allies and friends to build alternative responses to international terrorism.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): There is an alternative and you know what it is.

PETRO-CANADA

ENDING OF VOLUME DISCOUNTS TO WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the genial Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the Minister explain why Petro-Canada and other principal oil companies have stopped giving volume discounts to prairie farmers so that the prices in farm communities like Carmen, Manitoba, are only two cents less now than they were last fall even though the world price for fuel oil has dropped by some 60 per cent? What is the Minister going to do about this unfair and inequitable arrangement, especially when our western farmers are facing such difficult times?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have said many times in this House that I do not as Minister interfere in the day-to-day operations of Petro-Canada. I suggest the Hon. Member take this issue up with the company concerned.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the problem is that all companies, including Petro-Canada, operate in the same way. Since that is the case, Petro-Canada can give some leadership. Would the Minister contact the President of Petro-Canada and ask that company to reinstate the volume discount it had given in previous years, which amounted to about eight cents per litre?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will take that as representation and get back to the Hon. Member.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

KOREAN STEEL IMPORTS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On March 13, the Minister in response to my question concerning the preferential tariff for South Korean steel, said that the import tribunal was the route that Ipsco and other steel companies would have to go. Now apparently the tribunal has found that the import of cheap Korean steel is hurting Ipsco and other steel operations in Canada. I ask again why Canada is the only country still giving the Koreans preferential treatment? And will it be terminated soon?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have indicated to the Hon. Member that this matter is something which should best be dealt with by the Tariff Board. That is the normal process which should be followed. Once that process has been completed we can then consider our options.

Mr. Rodriguez: Supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary question, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING VISIT TO SOUTH KOREA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister think it appropriate for him to visit South Korea next month at a time when there is great concern about the undue influence which seems to be exerted within its Government which puts its Opposition Leader under house arrest and violates human rights?

Mr. Darling: That's supplementary to what?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is about as supplementary as—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is very difficult to find that a supplementary question to the first question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, that is a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt—

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Not in my view. The Hon. Member for Gatineau.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a supplementary. No, that is a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt will resume his seat.

Mr. Rodriguez: My colleague has referred to what seems to be preferential treatment for South Korean steel and I am asking the Prime Minister about—

Mr. Speaker: I give the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt my last warning.

Mr. Rodriguez: —his visit to South Korea and the support of this Government for South Korean steel. That is what I am asking.

Some Hon. Members: Out. Out.

Mr. Speaker: I am forced to name the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. He is required to leave.

Some Hon. Members: Out, out.

Mr. Rodriguez: He knows I am right.

Mr. Speaker: I am required to name the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. I must ask him to leave.

Mr. Rodriguez: He knows I am right.

Some Hon. Members: Out.

Mr. Rodriguez: He knows I am right.

Mr. de Jong: The great Korean connection.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): "The Manchurian Candidate".

And Mr. Rodriguez having withdrawn:

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West.

IMMIGRATION

RUSSIAN ARMY DEFECTORS IN AFGHANISTAN

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. A Globe and Mail report today indicated that his Department had issued ministerial permits waiving all medical and security clearances for the six Soviet defectors in Afghanistan, thus ensuring speedy passage to Canada.

Can the Minister confirm that his Department issued or was in the process of issuing ministerial permits? And if so, why are those six individuals not here now? Who vetoed his order?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I tried to indicate to the House yesterday that there is an initiative under way designed to try to bring those six Soviet prisoners of war to freedom. Certainly we on this side of the House want to do everything we can to bring those POWs from captivity to freedom. I would hope there would be some understanding this time within the Liberal Party of the sensitivity of this kind of operation, and that we would have co-operation on the floor of this House.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, there is growing evidence that there is clear political interference by the Minister of State for External Affairs.

ALLEGED MINISTERIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): I will direct my second question to the Minister of State for Immigration. If he is not prepared to answer my previous question will he confirm or deny that he wrote to his colleague, the Minister of State for External Affairs, complaining bitterly about the obstructive role of the Department of External Affairs? And will he table that letter so we can find out the truth?

• (1450)

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm to the Hon. Member that the officials of my Department have indicated clearly that they are working in close collaboration with officials of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and we are seeking in every way to expedite the matter, as the Minister has just indicated in his response.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

FINANCING OF CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance. This being National Volunteer Week, can the Minister tell us the status of discussions with the National Volunteer Organization concerning the funding of charitable organizations?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my Budget Speech, we have had a number of discussions with members of the National Volunteer Organization to try to arrive at a fair and more effective means of encouraging support of charitable organizations. These discussions will continue. That is a matter that is best dealt with in a Budget. I would expect that there will be something that we could discuss at the time of the next Budget.

SYRIAN GRAIN MARKET—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN FARMERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will recall that on Monday I asked him a question and he promised to look into the matter of what the Government was doing to protect our traditional grain market in Syria in the face of the Americans, through the subsidized BICEP Program, going after our traditional market there.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of the pressure brought upon Canadian grain producers by the trade war between the United States and the European Community is one that was addressed very strongly by the Minister of Finance at the OECD. The Prime Minister has indicated that he and the Government are going to make representations to the Government of the United States to protect the interests of Canadian grain growers with regard to markets that are traditionally ours in Syria.

I should add that we do not intend to limit our action to the protection of Canadian grain markets in Syria. We are going to protect traditional Canadian grain markets anywhere in the world where they are threatened.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the BICEP Program is being used now to take away our traditional market. What action has the Government taken to protect that very important Canadian market?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that the reason that has happened is because of the large-scale agricultural war—no other word can describe it—between the United States and the European Community. Canada has begun at the OECD to raise strong warnings about the dangers that provides for Canadian producers, and indeed for producers in the Third World. We will also be using all of our diplomatic instruments to bring to the attention of the United States authorities that we regard it not only unfair but inappropriate action on the part of France for their subsidy programs to be depriving Canadian grain producers of traditional markets.

VIEWS OF PROVINCIAL HEALTH MINISTERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the provincial Minister of Health for Newfoundland, Dr. Twoney, said this morning that Ministers of Health across the nation are opposed to the federal Government's proposed legislation banning generic drugs and that they will be coming to Ottawa next week to lobby against the legislation. My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the Minister aware of this opposition by provincial Health Ministers, or is this just another example of the Government's lack of consultation?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that there is not a lack of consultation. Not many months ago the argument was that we should quit consulting and start taking decisions. Now it is the other way. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that I will be meeting with the Health Ministers on April 28.

CONTENT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Ministers have written to the Minister of National Health and Welfare opposing this legislation and the provincial Health Minister released details of that this morning. Since the Health Ministers of the provinces are opposed to this legislation, will the Minister now admit that the legislation just will not wash?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member keeps acting this way, he might need the pharmaceutical industry a lot sooner than he thinks. I think my relations with provincial Health Ministers are pretty good. On April 28 I will discuss this or any other issues they wish to raise with me.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

ACCIDENTS ON U.S. NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A recent United States freedom of information lawsuit revealed that since 1965 there have been 630 accidents involving nuclear weapons held aboard U.S. naval vessels visiting the ports of Hawaii. Will the Minister today advise us that he is prepared to release to Canadians information on accidents involving nuclear weapons held aboard any vessels visiting ports such as Vancouver, Victoria, or Halifax, or is he not aware that such information exists?

An Hon. Member: Ask your seatmate, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared, of course, on this matter to defer to my temporary seatmate.

Mr. Mulroney: Welcome aboard!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The practice of the Canadian Government will conform with Canadian law respecting access to information. If the Hon. Member wishes to make an application under that law, I can assure him I will facilitate a response to it.

VISITS TO VANCOUVER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, of course I have already applied under the freedom of information legislation. My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister is probably aware, Vancouver has voted itself a nuclear weapons free zone. I wonder if the Prime Minister would make clear that vessels carrying nuclear weapons are not to be tied up in downtown Vancouver, because Canada's policy is clear that we do not allow nuclear weapons in our country, or is downtown Vancouver not in our country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Skeena has been away from his province for too long. I can confirm that not only is downtown Vancouver in this country but it is in the heart of the preoccupation of the Government.

The Hon. Member will also know that the Government of Canada has followed for some time, and intends to continue to follow the practice followed by various Governments of not publicizing information regarding the possible transit of nuclear materials on the vessels of our allies. That is one of the policies to which we are committed as an ally.

TOURISM

CANADIAN PAVILION AT EPCOT CENTRE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Tourism. He and I have received many complaints about the Canadian Pavilion at the Epcot Centre at Disney World in Florida. It certainly does not reflect accurately our country or our people. What action is the Minister prepared to take to get Disney World to make some changes so that we can have a Canadian Pavilion which truly exhibits the beauty and grandeur which await potential tourists to our country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. It is difficult for me to find that any Minister of the Crown has any responsibility for Epcot Centre.

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, it just so happens that we do have jurisdiction for that particular part of the country. My officials and the officials of Disney Productions met on April 10. The objective of that meeting was to see whether or not we could get official government participation at Epcot Centre for three basic reasons: one, of course, to improve our image; two, to relieve an irritant; and three, to make sure that we can project the best possible image for tourists visiting this country.

CONSEQUENCES OF CHANGE IN REGULATIONS—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION CONCERNING ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On several occasions the Minister stated in this House that she had given ample notice of the consequences of regulations on unemployment insurance and pension income. Could she explain why unemployment insurance offices were so advised by telex on December 30, 1985 and not before?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have mentioned many times and as the Hon. Member has said, the decision to make changes to the unemployment insurance regulations was announced on November 8, 1984, and indeed, Sir, on December 21, 1984, that announcement was noted particularly in the House of Commons. That day a press release which received wide publicity was also issued and that press release said: "The treatment of pension income as earnings will come into effect starting in January 1986. Claimants then receiving pension income from previous employment will have this pension income taken into account for UI purposes only after that date."

MINISTER'S ATTITUDE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister admit that her November 26, 1985 letter to the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières and the telex to the unemployment insurance office prove that thousands of Canadians have lost thousands of dollars as a result of her incompetence?

• (1500)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the number of times this matter has been raised in the House, it was discussed with individual corporations and with individual Members of Parliament. Also it was discussed widely across the country. I can assure—

Mr. Deans: How many Members accepted it?

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain asks me how many Members accepted it. The question was whether or not it was known. I can assure him that he and many others in the House raised the issue on a number of occasions so that it was widely know. I cannot say that everyone accepted it, no.

PRIVILEGE

CHALLENGE '86—FUNDING OF VANCOUVER FOOD BANK

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) told the House that the Vancouver Food Bank had been funded under the Challenge '86 Program. We have just received a telephone call from Vancouver during which those responsible said that they had no knowledge whatsoever of being funded under that program. Is the Minister now announcing approval for the program in the House of Commons when we ask questions?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to comment on this. Approvals come from my office, and I want to make sure the Hon. Member knows that I indeed approved that project.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order or question of privilege.

TERRORISM—STATEMENT OF MINISTER

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from Question Period and a question which I directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in respect of state-sponsored terrorism in Latin America. In answer to my second question, the Minister stood up and said: "There are people here who are using terrorism".

I should like to know the implication of that answer. Was he referring to me as using terrorism? Was he referring to any members of my caucus as involved in or using terrorism? Was he referring to members of the other opposition Party? To whom was he referring? It was a very serious statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows full well that that is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, it impinges upon privileges.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There conceivably could be an arguable point of order, but it is certainly not a question of privilege.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I will do it on a point of order, then.

Mr. Speaker: I let the Hon. Member finish because I took it that he was raising what in fact was a point of order. No reference was made to any Member to my knowledge. I listened.

Mr. Blaikie: Check the "blues".

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): With due respect, Mr. Speaker, when a Minister of the Crown—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the Hon. Member asking me to check the "blues" to determine whether in fact there was unparliamentary use of language?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Yes, please.

Mr. Speaker: I would be happy to do so.

QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 116.

[Text]

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

Question No. 116—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Does the National Arts Centre plan to close its doors during the peak tourist season in order to compensate for the $1 million budgetary cuts?

2. Was the Minister of Communications advised that the NAC was unable to assume such cuts?

3. Was the Minister advised that in order to compensate for such cuts, the NAC would have to close its doors and lose prime tourist input?

4. Did the Minister request a report and seek the advice of NAC management prior to the cuts?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Arts Centre as follows:

1. The National Arts Centre Corporation will implement such cost-saving and revenue-increasing programs as may be required to operate within the financial resources at its disposal, including the recent reduction to its parliamentary appropriation of one million effective April 1, 1985. In doing so, every attempt will be made to preserve both the quality and quantity of onstage programming; so far as may be feasible, therefore, reductions in net expenditures will be effected from "support" services. It is not likely, however, that onstage programming will be totally unaffected.

Programming which falls within the "regular" season (September through May) is less exposed, principally because it is sold on a subscription basis with a probable higher net return and a lower box office risk than single event selling. Programming during the "summer" season (June, July and August) is more likely to be affected: it presently appears the NAC will continue to be able to present some summer programming, but nothing like the quality, nor the quantity, it has offered in the past. Moreover, past summer seasons have included a high level of "subsidized" programming: in the present circumstances, a strong move to "commercial" entertainment will be unavoidable.

It is during the "summer" season that foreign tourists and Canadians normally resident elsewhere visit the National Capital Region; nevertheless, the quantity, quality and timing of NAC programming will suffer unavoidable alterations in order for the Centre to live within its significantly reduced means and to fulfil its primary responsibility of using its resources to the best advantage of Canadian artists.

Media coverage of the effect of the government reductions in funding to the NAC left the impression that the Centre has decided to "close its doors during the peak tourist season"; as explained, this impression is inaccurate.

In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

2. The Minister of Communications was not advised that the National Arts Centre was unable to sustain a budget reduction.

3. No.

4. The Minister of Communications expressed his interest, at the time, to conduct a review of the role and mandate of the National Arts Centre. The Minister announced, on January 28, 1986, a task force to examine the role and mandate of the NAC as well as focussing on the current managerial and administrative structure of the Centre.

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 22, consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate today in third reading of Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity which, as has been indicated in previous debate, could be titled the smoke and mirror Bill. Of course the Bill deals with employment equity. It results from the recommendations of Judge Abella in her report released in November, 1984.

Indeed we have come some distance since 1870 when the first two women were employed by the Public Service of Canada and 1882 when the Toronto Labour Council first supported equal pay for equal work. It has been a difficult struggle for many groups. It has been a tiring and long fight for the target groups about whom we are talking, to gain their rights. Of course I am talking about native people, visible minorities, handicapped, and women.

In our view there is no question that the Bill must be strengthened. Bill C-62 requires teeth and some real action. We are disappointed that the Government has not seen fit to accept the many amendments which we proposed to strengthen the Bill. There is no way we can expect movement toward full employment equity unless the federal Government and Parliament set an example. I remind Hon. Members that Parliament is excluded from Bill C-62, which means the House of Commons, the Library of Parliament, and the Senate. The Bill also excludes all Departments and Ministries which fall under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Board as the employer. In our opinion we need a much more comprehensive Bill. It should affect a greater number of employers and employees. It should have real teeth, and real enforcement of employment should be in the Bill. The Bill falls short of the expectations of the target groups for whom it was meant. What seems obvious to us is that it is an advance, but a timid advance.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this less than forward-looking approach with respect to the affirmative action legislation is tantamount to an outright betrayal of the hopes of about 60 per cent of Canadians who expected this Government to come up with a mandatory program to guarantee equity in a society which barely a year ago proclaimed Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, thereby entrenching equality in this country.

• (1510)

Bill C-62 demonstrates again that the Tories talk a good line on fairness but a type of fairness only they can see. Companies, I remind Members, are not required to submit operational plans for approval or to report specifically about their initiatives to the Minister, or to the agencies responsible for administering this Act. The Minister, of course, can issue guidelines. We all know that, but that is somewhat of a weak position. Nothing in the Bill says that she can apply them, except that she may, if she wants. "We will knock on the door", she said a couple of days ago, and knock again and again and say: "Please put into effect the principle of employment equity".

Mr. Speaker, I would like to re-emphasize something, because we are now at third reading of this Bill which is bound to be passed by the Conservative majority in the House, and we must clearly explain why our position differs from theirs.

The Bill does not contain a clear definition of employment equity. There is no definition, no commitment pertaining to equal pay for equal work, no specific statement on the establishment of the necessary standards or criteria to define obstacles to employment, no guidelines on the removal of discriminatory practices, no methodology, and no date for the implementation of the directives.

Mr. Speaker, Crown corporations and companies engaged in federal work must submit reports within three years. That is what it says in the Bill. Analyzing and consolidating this information can be done by the Minister.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to what I was saying yesterday, about our conviction that the principal employer, namely Treasury Board, the departments for which it is responsible, and Parliament, should be subject to Bill C-62. We feel that in this way, we could set an example to which perhaps the private sector could look for guidance, an example set in good faith. I did a little research last night to find out whether progress had been made with respect to the Affirmative Action Program—step by step or, even better, by leaps and bounds—being implemented in the Canadian Public Service today. As I said before, and I have said it several times, since 1971 Parliament has adopted a number of measures. In 1983, the Liberal Government announced a comprehensive affirmative action plan for the Public Service, for which the President of the Treasury Board would be responsible. Interestingly, things have changed, and a real effort has been made within the Public Service to be fair and to restore a measure of equity to hiring procedures.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention a few statistics. In 1983, the number of women working for the federal Government, that is, in the federal Public Service of Canada for which Treasury Board is responsible, was 90,816 or 40.6 per cent. In 1984, 92,093 or 41.1 per cent were employed by the Public Service of Canada. In 1985, 92,800 or 41.6 per cent. Mr. Speaker, these increases are not exactly breathtaking—1 per cent, .5 per cent—but they are more encouraging for women and also show that a measure of equity has been established.

However, if we look at a breakdown of the jobs held by women, and I am getting back to this subject because it is interesting, we see that in 1983, Mr. Speaker, out of 90,816 women or 40.6 per cent, only 5.4 per cent were in management positions. In 1984, this figure rose to 7 per cent, and in 1985 a little higher, to 7.8 per cent.

We can therefore say that roughly 8 per cent of employees in management positions are women.

Now if we look at the other end, in the administrative support category, we find out that, in 1983, 82 per cent of employees working as clerks, typists or in other administrative support jobs were women. The percentage rose slightly to 82.6 in 1984 and 82.7 in 1985. So the rising trend is unmistakable.

Therefore, despite public service reductions and Government cut-backs, there have been increases of 0.8 per cent in the number of women in the management group, and 0.5 per cent in over-all employment in the Public Service of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say that because it is important to have indicators or signs showing where we are headed with respect to employment equity.

Mr. Speaker, I referred to this program to promote hiring and employment, particularly the one concerning women, because I had said in an earlier speech that as far as the handicapped are concerned, for example, everybody knows that Mrs. Suzanne Azziz has been doing a tremendous job under the federal Government program for the handicapped. If my information is correct, close to 400 physically handicapped people have been hired recently by the Public Service Commission and integrated into the system.

But yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I alluded to the systemic resistance which exists even in this Parliament, a resistance which perhaps is not sought or even planned that way, but which is there nonetheless. Excuse me if I get a bit personal, but I would like to talk about the problems the physically disabled have in coming to the House and even working on Parliament Hill, Mr. Speaker. We all know this. We had a demonstration recently when disabled people wanted to come in their wheelchairs. We had trouble getting them into the visitors' gallery. We all know that our elevators are difficult to operate for people with physical handicaps, for instance, people in a wheelchair. Just try and press the button to call the elevator, just try not getting stuck while the doors are closing, when you are in a wheelchair. It is well-nigh impossible, Mr. Speaker.

We even have one interpreter in the House who is blind, and he has been taking our elevators for years without knowing where he is going because no one thought of providing braille or sound in the elevator. These are things we could reasonably expect to be provided by an organization, by a system that claims to have all the latest technology. Mr. Speaker, these things do exist right here in Ottawa.

Last night, I went to see one of my friends, Roger Thibault. His apartment building has an elevator that calls out "up" and "down" and the floor number, and also has braille, for the benefit of people with a hearing or sight disability. However, here in the Parliament of Canada, a public place, a place where we should make it possible for everyone to come and listen and meet the Members, we have yet to install a sensible system or to ask someone to modernize our system. I think this is shocking!

It is quite unacceptable that we should go on like this, that we should not be included in Bill C-62; we are an employer, we have employees here, and I know some of them who find it difficult to work here. We are not fully aware of this because we have not made any special effort to improve the situation. I hope there will now be a movement for us in Parliament to show leadership. The situation is the same in all Government buildings—physical access difficulties, mobility obstacles, and safety problems for the handicapped.

Mr. Speaker, I would rather not spend too much time on this point because I think I have made myself very clear. We must admit there are systemic arrangements, systemic problems which are not necessarily planned that way but which we will have to solve. We will have to find solutions with serenity.

• (1520)

Various statistical studies, some of which were referred to in the report of the Royal Commission on Equality in Employment, provide a bleak picture of employment for women, disabled persons, native people, and visible minorities. They demonstrate, without a doubt, that there is an imbalance, both in statistical and monetary terms. Everyone knows that women earn lower average incomes. It is a fact of life. If one looked at the statistics of the public service one would see that women do not earn the same amounts as their male counterparts for performing, in most cases, similar jobs. There is nothing in Bill C-62 which touches upon that important problem.

Disabled persons suffer from extraordinarily high unemployment rates. When they are employed, they tend to be concentrated in low paying, marginal sectors of the labour market. Added to an already difficult position are expenses which non-disabled workers do not face but are part of the everyday life of disabled people. These include expenses for medication, special aids, and special devices for transportation.

I do not like to say this, but it should be noted that most of the people in the Public Service of Canada who were hired under the program to assist disabled people and to encourage the hiring of disabled people were hired in term positions. When the Government lets people go, the first to be let go are usually term employees who, in many cases, are disabled people. I thought they had acquired a right to work in the Public Service of Canada and were doing a competent job for us.

Native people experience a level of unemployment about five times higher than that of the nonnative population. When they are employed, it is usually in the unskilled sectors of the labour market and they have disproportionately low incomes.

Yesterday I referred to the difficulties which landed immigrants have in adapting to the two official languages of the country. We must review our programs of language training and we must ask the provinces to co-operate. Judge Abella reported on this extensively. She said that we must do something to modernize the methods and to make those courses more acceptable so that new Canadians will have less difficulty advancing in the workforce. In my riding landed immigrants frequently fill the lowest paid jobs in the lowest skilled sectors. They are usually the most vulnerable because their jobs are the first to be abolished in tough times.

From a purely economic point, employment equity is needed to ensure that human resources are not wasted because of discriminatory practices. A healthy economy needs the contributions of all qualified people who are willing to work and are competent. That is the only judgment we should make—not whether they are native, handicapped, disabled, or women. If they are competent they should be allowed to compete and to obtain jobs. The exclusion of women, visible minorities, disabled people, and native people from job opportunities and benefits can only contribute to the high cost of social service programs.

In conclusion, we are disappointed with the Government's refusal to amend this Bill. We would like to have had included in the Bill a higher penalty, and have it relate to the action plan as well as the reporting clause. We would like to have seen the penalty at $500,000. We would like to have had the designated groups which speak strongly for the disabled, the native people, and women's groups included in this Bill so they would be consulted when things need to be improved.

We would have liked to have had a better definition of "reasonable accommodation". The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised the handicapped people that he would study this issue personally. He did not study it very long or hard and he did not do a darn thing about it. We would have liked a requirement that the action plans be sent to the Minister for review and be available to the Canadian Human Rights Commission, upon request, for examination.

We would have liked those things to have been included in the Bill but, unfortunately, they are not. The Bill will be accepted as it is, but it is a smoke and mirrors Bill. Everyone in the House accepts the principle of the Bill, but its lack of teeth frustrates us. We would like to have had a Bill with more power and equity. We would like to have had a stronger Bill.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has made a good speech. He is a good Member of Parliament and a very progressive one. However, I wonder why the Liberal Party did not do this during its 20 years in power. His party formed the Government in 1963 under Mr. Lester Pearson with 168 seats in the House. It then came to power once again under Mr. Pierre Trudeau. My question, therefore, is this: Why did the Liberal Party do nothing in 20 years to ensure employment equity in Canada?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am happy that the Hon. Member has asked this question because it gives me a chance to point out that it is quite untrue to suggest, as do the Parliamentary Secretary and the Conservative Party, that we did nothing. It is completely untrue, and I would like to remind the House that, in 1971, Canada was the first country in the Western world to recognize the role of women at the highest level of Government by creating a Cabinet position for the advancement and promotion of women.

A non-governmental advisory council on the status of women was established in 1973. In 1972, the Federal Government endorsed the convention of the World Labour Organization on equal pay for work of equal value. The Liberal Government also introduced an omnibus Bill to ensure equal status for women in 1975. In 1976, we gave passage to the Canadian Human Rights Act, which forbids discrimination based on sex. In 1978, we amended the Canada Pension Plan to provide for the equal sharing of retirement credits, as well as the Canada Labour Code to eliminate pregnancy as a motive for lay-off or firing. Then, in 1982, we had in this very House a debate of nearly one year on the famous Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which was finally passed by Parliament after being introduced by the Liberal Government and in which Section 15 guarantees equality for all Canadians. Afterwards, we also created the Abella Commission because this issue had to be examined. The Abella Commission was therefore established in 1983 and it presented its report in 1984.

Unfortunately, the Canadian public decided to throw us out, and I am not blaming anyone. However, the Government in power certainly had lots of advice. Now I have been in the House for at least fourteen years now, and we have been discussing the subject for at least that long. That is my answer, and that is what I said three or four times in this House, and if I am asked the same question again, I will repeat my answer once more.

Since 1971, Mr. Speaker, a lot has happened here. We took care of native people, we took care of housing, we took care of the disabled, we took care of women. Projects and programs were set up. I am certainly not ashamed to say it. I am not saying that I am satisfied with what was done. I didn't say that. I didn't say I was satisfied. I merely said, Mr. Speaker, that I am one of those people who believe that by doing a lot more we will get a lot further in this area and get there faster.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my friend. I have heard a number of Liberals criticize this legislation as being unenforceable. We, too, have made that criticism and it is valid. However, is this just criticism the Liberals are able to make now that they are in Opposition, or is their policy one of enforceable affirmative action? Can the Member tell me the Liberal Party policy or are they just criticizing and sitting on the fence?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member to be a serious Member and I know why he puts that question. I know exactly what he is trying to get at. I refer him to the speeches and amendments we have moved over the last little while concerning how this Bill should be enforced. NDP Members are good at asking questions like that, but it was very interesting to read some of the research material concerning the NDP in Manitoba.

In June, 1985, the Hon. Member's Province of Manitoba passed Bill 53, the Pay Equity Act. That is as far as Manitoba has gone on employment equity although all three parties in the last election promised very strongly to be much more aggressive on employment equity.

Mr. Keeper: They also announced that since the election.

Mr. Gauthier: That was the only initiative in many, many years. I can point to affirmative action groups starting with the handicapped. I can talk about women's groups and Francophone groups in my riding. I can talk to you about that for maybe an hour and a half or two hours.

Mr. de Cotret: No, no!

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister says: "No!" If you want to talk about affirmative action programs—

Mr. Blaikie: Don't threaten us then.

Mr. Gauthier: —the best affirmative action program we ever had was the encouragement of minority groups. One of them I can talk about is the Francophones. I think I will because it is an important question.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is here. I am getting a lot of correspondence these days from such people as the Société francophone Manitobaine and the Société Franco-Ontarienne, all the Francophones outside Quebec, who are very worried about the Government's budget cut-backs and how the Treasury Board is going to deal with the programs these people need. This morning I had a letter from the Collège St. Boniface saying that the Treasury Board decision to cut their funds for education will have a direct impact on their capacity to operate in Manitoba. I could talk about TV Ontario. That is affirmative action. The Government is hesitant about giving it the $50 million it has been asking for.

Mr. Keeper: Where does the Liberal Party stand on employment equity?

Mr. Gauthier: Then there is the question of Newfoundland and access to the courts. Is there a better affirmative action program than letting individuals go to the courts and ask that their rights be respected? Is there a better Court Challenges Program? Yes, there is, one that works like the one we had before. This Government has taken the Court Challenges Program, under the Minister of Justice and the Secretary of State, and has put it——on the back burner, as they say. We don't know what is going on, no decisions have been made, and we have people who want to go to court to have their rights recognized under Sections 15, 23 and 27 of the Canadian Constitution, these are all programs—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) on a point of order.

Mr. Keeper: I wonder if the Hon. Member would allow a supplementary question rather than talking it out?

Mr. Gauthier: I am answering your question.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I want to go on because this is so important. Bill C-62 deals with employment equity and is connected chiefly with Section 15, because it is all in line with the Canadian Constitution that was adopted by this Parliament. Through Section 15, with the help of Judge Abella, we wanted to achieve employment equity. It is Section 15 that will be tested in the courts, so that we will know what it means. Section 23 will be tested in the courts. We must help these people, because if we tell minorities and the disabled, if we tell native people and women: Do it on your own, without the help of the federal Government, without the help of the majority, they will certainly have a lot more trouble and it is going to take a lot more time to achieve the equity they are seeking.

The Hon. Member's question is a good question, Mr. Speaker, because it goes to the heart of the matter. How can the majority help the minority to better defend itself? And that is why we have a problem with access to the courts financed by the majority. And I hope this damned program is going to work, because someday, our minorities are going to be fed up with all this begging for funds to defend what are basically their fundamental rights.

[English]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, that was a great oration by my friend and I appreciate every word of it. However, he failed to say concretely and specifically where the Liberal Party stands today regarding enforceable affirmative action. I would like to hear him speak to that. I know he is capable of criticizing the Government but is he capable of enunciating the Liberal Party position, or does it have a position on affirmative action?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, Sir, we have a full policy. How much time have I got? We are fully in accord with a positive approach to affirmative action. We have proven that over the years.

Mr. Keeper: Define "positive"?

Mr. Gauthier: It is our policy to support those who are least able to defend themselves. If the Hon. Member wants to know exactly what the Liberal Party thinks about a specific program I am willing to talk to him about that. Is he talking about women? I think our record shows we have acted in a positive manner on affirmative action for women. Is he talking about the handicapped? I can repeat what I said a few minutes ago. We had several programs. In my riding the co-op movement, which is a good movement, put up housing for the handicapped under a pilot project. That was 10 or 15 years ago.

Mr. Keeper: What about today?

Mr. Gauthier: Is he asking about native people? I was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs in 1976-77. I went around this country looking at native housing and saw how badly housed the native people were. I could see how hard we should try to give them what they wanted, affordable and decent housing. We did that with several programs. I can refer the Hon. Member to the RRAP program, a sweat equity program which got an awful lot of people doing for themselves what should be done. Sweat equity is what you contribute to the construction of your own house. We calculated that amount as part of the mortgage. That program, plus the Neighbourhood Improvement Program, along with all kinds of other programs—

Mr. de Corneille: CHIP.

Mr. Gauthier: The CHIP program is dead. The Conservatives killed a good program. I am speaking about affordable accommodation for those with low incomes, for example. In my riding we built more social housing in 15 years than anybody else did in the Ottawa area. I am very proud of that. I have got a good housing stock which we worked very hard at, and it was mainly directed at Ottawa-Vanier.

• (1540)

An Hon. Member: What about the rest of Ottawa?

Mr. Gauthier: The rest of Ottawa does not need it because they are so rich. I represent the poorest part of Ottawa, and the oldest too, but I am very proud of that. In lower town, Overbrook, Vanier, and all those areas, that part that was the original Ottawa, was poor. It needed assistance and we went out there and gave it to them, and we did support them in their housing. Thank you.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald, that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should begin by suggesting, with all due respect, that you have the time mechanism, which I know you keep in front of you, checked for any faults it might have, because that was certainly the longest 10-minute comment period that I have experienced since it came into being.

I want to say that the now standard tactic of pointing out, and quite rightly, the inconsistencies between what Liberal members of the House now say about employment equity—and for that matter about a great many other subjects—and what was actually done while the Liberals were in power, is fair ball.

It is also fair, I suppose, to note that many of these issues are issues which evolve over time, and that Governments respond to the degree of social consensus that develops around issues. I say this, not in defence of past Liberal Governments, but to point out that I think the social and political consensus for affirmative action developed long before the Liberals had the opportunity to be defeated, an opportunity they so richly deserved and took advantage of in 1984.

Long before 1984 the consensus had been created that it was time for real employment equity in this country, and real affirmative action. We went so far not so long ago as to enshrine in our constitution a reference to affirmative action, which highlighted that as a mechanism for bringing about greater equality in this country. I do not think, with all due respect to the individual and local initiatives that the Member from Ottawa-Vanier pointed out, the Liberal Party can be let off the hook for the lack of action which it demonstrated with respect to this particular issue while it was in Government.

I want to say also that I think it is a good time to reflect on what I suppose is tragically common in the political life of this country, and perhaps others as well, and that is the gap, sometimes a horrendous gap, between promise, expectation and reality. In August, 1984 the then Leader of the Opposition and now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, and I quote:

> Our party will ensure that companies providing services to the federal government hire increasing numbers of women to perform such services. When seeking government business, these companies will be required to detail their action plans, timetables, and programs for attracting, training and advancing women within their operations . . . We support the need for human resources planning within the federal bureaucracy, which includes goals and objectives to achieve parity for women, at all levels of Government operations, commensurate with their skills and expectations.

That was offered to the Canadian public by our current Prime Minister when he was running for office in 1984. The result of that rhetoric, which was part of an over-all and considerably transparent election strategy, was to promise everything to everybody. The Conservatives in 1984 were going for broke. They were not going to offend anybody. Whatever you wanted, they were on your side. If you did not want to test the Cruise missile, neither did they. If you wanted to test the Cruise missile, so did they. It did not matter what your position was you could find a Tory who would respond positively to your feelings and to your concerns.

This Bill has become an example of the disappointment and the cynicism which that kind of election strategy, however successful—and certainly no one would argue about the success of it—eventually results in. There was an expectation with respect to this issue that the Government would live up to its promises in this regard, an expectation that has been sorely violated by the reality of the legislation that we have before us. We can quote now from Beryl Potter of the Coalition on Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities the following statement:

> Like the bill—it's not even worth the paper it's written on—I've never been so disillusioned in my life as I am with Prime Minister Mulroney. I was a supporter of him. I worked for him in his campaign and I am totally, totally disillusioned.

A good example of the gap between promise, expectation created and promoted by the Conservative Party, and now the disappointment that comes with legislative reality, is the fact that the Progressive Conservative Government has not been willing to respond to a social consensus that is already there. It is not as if the Conservative Party was being asked to do something terribly radical. I feel, as I think others feel, that for some time we have been at a point in our social and political thinking where governments could afford to move on this without any great danger to themselves. We have to ask ourselves the question, why does the Progressive Conservative Government, having taken the trouble to devise legislation and to cause the House of Commons to debate this for many, many hours, not take the trouble to do the job right while it was taking the trouble to do the job at all?

I think the reason for that is that when the Conservatives got into the business of promising everything to everybody as an electoral strategy they were involved in contradicting themselves at a great many turns, particularly when they made the kinds of promises they made with respect to employment equity, as well as in some other areas. I say that because I do not think any member of the Conservative caucus would deny that they have a fundamental commitment to the market-place as the arena where certain kinds of decisions are made, indeed, where a great many important decisions are made as far as Progressive Conservatives are concerned, and where those kinds of decisions ought to be made according to Progressive Conservatives. The Progressive Conservatives believe that the market-place is the final arbiter of who will get what job, how they will be paid and organized, et cetera.

When the Progessive Conservative Party promised employment equity, it was either unconsciously engaged in a form of intellectual self-contradiction or it was consciously misleading Canadians about what was intended. In the final analysis, I believe the Progressive Conservative Party was true to its own principles.

While that is understandable, it should have been honest enough to say long ago that the ideal of enforced employment equity in the market-place, which these groups have called for, was against its fundamental principles about how the economy should run. A proper democratic debate could then have occurred.

There could have been a real debate in this country about how our economy should be organized and what should be properly left to the market-place and what should be properly accomplished through the enforcement mechanisms that these groups and the New Democratic Party have been calling for. However, that debate has not taken place because the Progressive Conservative Party decided in 1984 that it would not have any real debate. The Conservatives were going to keep their cards close to their chests and would indicate to the public only that which it wanted it to know.

We have discovered that the Conservatives did not mean what they were saying, that our criticisms of the Conservatives over the years have been correct. The fact is that the Conservative Party is not capable of acting against the wishes of the business community in this country. Clearly, that is the rationale behind the weakness of the legislation before us today.

That unwillingness is evident in other areas as well. Recently, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who I see listening intently, I hope, talked about the insurance industry and complained that many groups were putting themselves in risky situations because they could not afford to renew their insurance. That is a clear example of how the market-place is not serving ordinary Canadians and their community organizations, particularly those smaller local organizations.

This has not happened as a result of an international Communist conspiracy. It might appropriately be called an international capitalist conspiracy because Lloyds of London and other very powerful institutions have made a decision to use a few court judgments as an excuse to hike insurance premiums for many individuals and groups in Canada beyond all reasonableness. While those Hon. Members quite correctly point out that something should be done, they do not point out that it is the fault of a particular system.

I will tell the Hon. Member that nothing will be done in this and other areas of concern unless the Government musters the political courage to take on some of the institutions that it is in the habit of defending. This Bill is a good example of a general philosophy not to interfere in the market-place. I will give the Government the benefit of the doubt that it believes what it is saying, but its naive trust that the actors in the market-place will somehow do the right thing is incredible.

For example, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) had an incredible trust in the oil industry which I do not believe has been matched by action. She assumed that as world oil prices decreased there would be a corresponding, complementary and timely reduction in energy prices at the pumps.

Miss Carney: That is occurring.

Mr. Blaikie: This did not happen as quickly in Canada as it did elsewhere and Canadians have fared much worse at the pumps as a result of the decline in world oil prices than people in the United States.

Another example concerns the recent decision of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) about the Imasco takeover. Rather than interfering in the market-place and respecting the unanimous judgment of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, thereby respecting the spirit of parliamentary reform which made that judgment by the Finance Committee possible, the Government went ahead and allowed this takeover. Despite many of the ramifications of this takeover, the Government believes that by asking the company not to take certain action there will be no problem. Similarly, it believes that by asking employers to do certain things through this Bill there will be no problems. However, if the companies do not meet certain requirements of this Employment Equity Bill there is a $50,000 fine in some cases. Big deal! It is quite clear that many of the companies we are concerned with are wealthy enough to regard $50,000 as simply the cost of doing business.

Employment equity is being dealt with in much the same way as the financial institutions, the oil industry and the insurance industry. Furthermore, the Liberals have had much the same philosophy. We were told for years not to worry about the environment. We would be told that the Minister of the Environment had talked to the industries involved, who volunteered to monitor themselves to ensure that they would not do anything wrong. We have seen this incredible naivety over and over again about how these institutions will behave when it comes to their own self-interest. It is time that we realized that we will have to take steps to enforce those things we want to see happen, whether it concerns the protection of the environment or affirmative action for employment equity. The Government has not been willing to do that. That is why this Bill has been so ridiculed by the very people who had such high expectations for it.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to continue debate on third reading of Bill C-62. We have been trying as hard as we can to make this a meaningful Bill that would fulfil the hopes and aspirations and needs of the people it is supposed to serve. This Bill is suppose to meet the needs and concerns of women, native people, the disabled and handicapped and visible minorities.

There are certain Tory partisans who have recently lamented the determined stand taken by the Opposition to get Bill C-62 amended so we can achieve its alleged purposes. These partisan Tories complain because Members of the Opposition care about the plight of their fellow man. They lament the fact that we are making an effort here in the House to convince the Government to do something to improve Bill C-62. I am proud to rise as often as I can to plead the case of those groups. I am proud that in this House of Commons we can call to the attention of the Government the plight of those groups to whom it made promises. Over half of our population are women. We have a large number of native people. The handicapped and disabled represent approximately one eighth of the population. Estimates from Statistics Canada tell us that one in every eight Canadians is disabled. All of those who belong to minority groups, especially the visible minorities, are worth talking about. A very large part of our population seeks protection. Therefore, the time we spend on this Bill is not wasted if we can somehow persuade the Government that there is much it can do to improve the Bill.

The alleged purpose of Bill C-62 is to achieve equality in the workplace so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability, and to correct the conditions of disadvantage in unemployment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada. Those are the alleged objectives of this Bill. Those partisan Members of Parliament who criticize our efforts to try to have the Bill achieve its purpose betray their lack of genuine human compassion for those groups who wait for some move forward. I suggest that these critics should perhaps ponder the words of the great British poet, John Donne who many centuries ago wrote words which ought to remind us of the importance of compassion. John Donne was also the Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral in England. He said, and I quote:

> No man is an island, entire of itself; every man is a piece of the continent, a part of the main; if a clod be washed away by the sea, Europe is the less, as well as if a promontory were, as well as if a manor of thy friends or of thine own were; any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind; and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls: it tolls for thee.

It is a basic premise of our culture and underlying civilization that we are concerned about the plight of our fellow man. There is not one person in the House of Commons who can be sure that he or she will not tomorrow be part of one of those groups, if they are not already. Certainly not one single Hon. Member, male or female, can negate the possibility that he or she may be struck down in such a way that there would be limitations, handicaps or disabilities. No one is exempt. Everyone in this country can be protected and must be protected by law but this law does not protect them. Everyone is a potential victim and needs this kind of protection. No one is an island unto himself and no one should feel exempt from the strictures of this concern.

Let us look at one important group, the disabled and handicapped. Let us look at those people who have skills, who can work and who want to work but who cannot work because they cannot get work because their disabilities are viewed as being too grave. And who makes that arbitrary decision? It is the arbitrary opinion of those who interview these disabled and those who do not even give them the opportunity to be interviewed. The employer may feel in his or her arbitrary opinion a particular disabled person cannot function well in the office or plant because the necessary accommodation for that disabled person is not available, and the employer feels there is no requirement to solve that "problem". At the present time those people who are disabled have to live with the arbitrary opinion of an employer as to whether or not they can fit into the company's plans.

We look in vain in Clause 2 for any definition of what constitutes a disabled or handicapped person. This Bill is faulted. Does this Clause mean that the employer has only to make sure that a certain percentage of disabled persons—which is set by the employer himself—must be hired? The employer can decide what constitutes disability. Is that a sprained arm, a disability which is mild or is it a serious disability? The disabled came here to find the answer. They came to the committee which discussed this Bill and tried to explain that it was important for some kind of idea to be given of what is intended. More importantly, they wanted to know what is meant by the words "reasonable accommodation".

Clause 4 of Bill C-62 states that an employer shall implement employment equity by instituting such positive policies and practices and making such reasonable accommodations as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation in the various positions of employment. The Bill says that designated groups will be able to have reasonable accommodation. That is the goal. But representations of one eighth of our population came to the committee and asked that some kind of idea be given as to what the Government meant in its legislation by "reasonable accommodation" so that employers when they read this law would have some idea of what the Government had in mind. We agree that one cannot set forth everything of what might be meant by "reasonable accommodation" as interpreted by various companies which might be involved. Pathetically, of course, there are not very many companies which might be involved in this legislation in any case. This Bill is a sham.

The handicapped groups have asked for some kind of definition of reasonable accommodation in the legislation. Amendments were put forward proposing that definition. The Opposition proposed these amendments in complete good faith, feeling that the Government would be very pleased to see a way to meet the concerns of those groups that came to represent the one-eighth of the population who are disabled and handicapped. An amendment was proposed with a definition so that employers would understand what the Government meant by this legislation.

We proposed to define reasonable accommodation as including, without restriction so that it could cover other situations as well, the reasonable adaptation of the workplace, hiring practices or the job description to accommodate the needs of designated groups including the special needs of a qualified disabled person through a provision for physical accessibility, assistive devices, flexible job design and modification and human support services. We asked the Government to include this proposal in the legislation at the request of all the groups representing handicapped people. We proposed it in committee and we again proposed it here in the House. Both times the Government rejected such a simple definition or guideline that would give employers the understanding of what this legislation is supposed to be trying to achieve.

The failure of the Bill to give any examples, never mind guidelines, of what is meant by reasonable accommodation is a grave flaw in the Bill. One must therefore conclude that there is a lack of seriousness and sincerity in the Government's attempt to come up with legislation that will be effective. Not only can the disabled not refer an employer to a guideline for what is meant by persons with disabilities or reasonable accommodations, but they can see that nothing will actually happen as a result of the passage of this Bill.

What will happen if this Bill is passed? Look at it from the point of view of someone who is handicapped. We should put ourselves in the place of a person who has seen progress through the decades toward the hope that through the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Human Rights Commission, and now an attempt to bring about employment equity, he will have a chance to get a job. The handicapped no longer want to wait. This tempting carrot has been put in front of them. They hope that we will at last bring about legislation that cares about them and responds to their needs. However, they ask how they will know that they will be able at last to get jobs.

What do the handicapped find that this legislation will do for them? Clause 4 indicates that the employer is supposed to eliminate barriers to employment or promotion for the handicapped. As well, the employers are supposed to institute policies and practices to ensure that persons in the various categories will be able to have something done for them. That employers are now supposed to do that according to law does not change a thing because they are already supposed to do that. We do not need to pass a law to say that there shall be equality for all in this country because, according to our human rights legislation, that is how it stands now.

What does this Bill add? Does it bring anything new to employment equity? It tells companies that they are supposed to treat people equally. My heavens, that is what the Charter of Rights and Freedoms already tells employers. It already tells every employer in the country, never mind the few to which this Bill refers, that they are supposed to treat people equally. This Bill again tells them the same thing. How does that help the people who are disabled and handicapped? The Bill is telling employers what they already know.

The proof that this Bill does not work is that nothing is happening to change systemic discrimination against handicapped people. That is what Judge Abella said in her report and that is why she said that something must be done to eliminate systemic discrimination against, for example, the one-eighth of the population who are handicapped or disabled.

If it were the case that all the Government need do is pass a Bill with no teeth in it and everything would be all right, then why does the Government not behave that way itself? What kind of trust can the disabled and handicapped have in the Government when they know, as I said in the House of Commons on March 17, that the vast majority of disabled persons employed by the Public Service Commission in 1984-85 were employed in limited or term positions? Now with the Tory Government cut-backs, the Government will be even more prone to put the handicapped in limited and term positions. What hope is there that the Government will make this law any more effective than the Government's present policies for the handicapped? If its present policies do not serve the handicapped and the disabled, then how can they count on this law which has no teeth in it to serve them any better?

I wish I could proceed with this discussion because there are other points about Clauses 5 and 6 which also indicate that this legislation lacks teeth. Before I close, I wish to mention that the only provision for which a penalty is attached under this Bill is the provision that an employer file a report. An employer can report anything, as long as he files a report he is okay. He will be subject to a penalty only if he does not file a report. What is the leverage of this fine? The employer is liable to a fine not exceeding $50,000. The fine could be no dollars, it could be $5 or it could be $100 but it is not necessarily $50,000.

Why has the Government brought this legislation forward? It has brought it forward in order to make people think that it is doing something about employment equity. It has brought it forward to fulfil a symbolic gesture, all the while knowing that the corporate sector will know that it is a toothless and absolutely meaningless exercise. It is nothing but an exercise on the part of the Tories in political cynicism and hypocrisy.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my friend in the Liberal Party. I have before me a copy of the study of the Economic Council of Canada entitled "Women Reentering the Labour Force and Training Programs, Evidence from Canada". The Hon. Member made a very progressive speech; it called for various changes. However, this report indicates that our employment policies over the years have not done enough to promote women into non-traditional occupationa areas and that there has been discrimination for years in Government policies for women.

I should like to quote from the report wherein the following is indicated at page 43:

> Moreover, in 1983-84, the federal Government spent over $200 million on apprenticeships and industrial training—Women are almost entirely absent from apprenticeships. They are under-represented in the industrial training program (in proportion to their presence in the labour force), and they train in predominantly female occupations.

Further on the same page, the following is indicated:

> EIC should designate target occupations for training women and should develop training programs for women in these occupations jointly with employers. The target occupations should be occupations where there is a strong demand for qualified workers; these occupations might be drawn from the CTST and the ONI.

The report really condemns many of the programs of the past in terms of them not really being fair to women, discriminating against women and not steering women into non-traditional occupations. Why was the Liberal Party, which was in power over 20 years, so lax at trying to open up new job opportunities for women? Why did this discrimination continue for so many years despite the fact that the Liberal Party was in power? Why was the Liberal Party so late in realizing that women were discriminated against? Why did the Liberal Party not do something about it when it was in power?

I think the report is a good one in that it condemns the lack of Liberal action over 20 years in terms of being fair to women. What does the Hon. Member have to say about that?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to appear in any way as simply trying to be defensive by saying that everything the Liberals have done in this regard was perfect or rosy. I ask the Hon. Member not to assume that that is what I am trying to say. On the other hand, it would behove my hon. friend to listen to the comments about and the examples of the impressive Liberal record over the years which were made earlier. If he had listened to that review, he would have learned that it was impressive. However, I am trying to point out that we have made a logical progression in terms of the steps we have taken.

An attempt to bring forth a Bill at this point which is purely symbolic is heartbreaking for those, of whatever Party or sympathy, who await the decision of the House of Commons on Bill C-62. It would be better if the Hon. Member, with only 30 members in his caucus, would concentrate on what the Conservative Government is doing and on its responsibilities. It would be a good idea for him to attempt to get the Government to improve the legislation. However, if he wants to spend his time taking shots at the Liberal Party, he can do so, if that is spending his time in the best way. From my point of view he would be better advised to try to persuade the Government to improve this particular piece of legislation for the sake of the people who need this help. I do not know whether he has done that in his question or comment.

In any case, I am pleased that his Party agrees with the Official Opposition that the legislation is not adequate and does not meet the alleged goals which it seeks to achieve. I am deeply disappointed that the Tory Government is in effect trying to give the impression that it is doing something by passing this piece of legislation when I know that it has almost no impact upon the parties or groups affected.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a general question because I have a lot of respect for the Hon. Member. He is an ordained minister of the church as well. Could he comment upon whether or not other organizations are doing enough to promote equity among different groups? For example, I have often said that farm organizations should involve more women in their operations. Of course, we cannot pass legislation to that effect, and I am not suggesting it, but I have often suggested that there should be more women in the leadership of farm organizations and trade unions. Personally I am very happy, for example, that the next President of the Canadian Labour Congress will almost certainly be Shirley Carr. These are steps in the right direction. Would the Hon. Member agree that the same should apply in some of our churches and that they, being tremendous institutions and great moral leaders, could set a better example by having more women in their hierarchies?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) directed a similar question to me yesterday.

Mr. Nystrom: I was not here.

Mr. de Corneille: I think the Hon. Member's question is a justified one. All groups, particularly the churches, have a moral responsibility to provide leadership in this area, not only in terms of their own employment policies but in terms of teaching and preaching the fact that all men are equal before God. I think that can be said by anyone of any faith and should be continually emphasized.

The Hon. Member is right in indicating that it is not enough to say: "Do as I say but not as I do". If the Hon. Member is suggesting that there is hypocrisy involved in every group, I agree with him. We in the Liberal Party are proud of the fact that our President is the Hon. Iona Campagnolo. However, when we look at the number of Members of Parliament sitting in the House, we are unhappy that we do not have more women who are Members of Parliament. Everyone has a responsibility. In terms of our own home life, we should re-examine our attitudes toward women, native people, and the handicapped. Certainly it is a responsibility of the church.

I believe the Hon. Member's question concerned the Anglican Church. The Anglican Church should forthwith approve the consecration of women as bishops. It has decided to ordain women as priests, which is a logical step. The Government should move as quickly as possible to make meaningful the policy of eliminating systemic discrimination as the Bill is supposed to do. However, I fear—and I am sure the Hon. Member would agree—that this is not happening.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I was glad to hear the Hon. Member say what he said, and I should like to ask him a question which might be quite radical for this institution dominated by males. He mentioned that there were very few women in the House of Commons. All three political Parties at the federal level, and certainly at the provincial level in different sections, have parity clauses in their constitutions vis-à-vis gender. Often half the delegates must be female. For example, half the delegates to national or provincial council meetings must be female. We have seen that practice internally within our Parties. Would it be too radical to suggest that perhaps we should have legislation wherein half the Members of the House must be women? In other words, there could be dual ridings, approximately 180 such ridings. Each riding would elect two Members, one of whom must be a woman. Would the Hon. Member agree with that proposal? After all, all three political Parties are moving in that direction internally. Is it too radical a suggestion in terms of this very staid and conservative institution?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, it is a proposal which I have heard proferred by other people. Having given thought to the matter, it seems that the principles involved in this piece of legislation would indicate that finally we are dealing with the fact that people must have merit to be given jobs. I think the same applies to the electorate. If the electorate deems there are certain people it wants to elect, then whether they are male or female is not the issue. The issue is the quota. I think we can discuss this further perhaps privately.

I would like to conclude on this note, Mr. Speaker. The need, if you will, for an effort to recruit women is something which is very much in the minds of political Parties, at least it should be. Rather than put down quotas which might limit the number of women later on because then there would have to be a certain number of men, and when you figure women constitute 51 per cent of the population, that gets a little too much into the numbers game, perhaps we can discuss it at a further time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is as follows: Miss MacDonald, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn—

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well. The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on debate.

Mr. Blaikie: The question has been put.

An Hon. Member: You can't.

Mr. Marchi: Is there some problem with Members on the Government benches? Does someone want to speak ahead of me?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we have no wish to cut off this debate. This matter has been before the House and committee for some time. All those who wanted to be here were here ready to debate. I believe, Sir, that you called the question. If the Opposition wishes to filibuster this debate, it may. I believe that you called the question. I would like to know whether that was the position of the Chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think that the question has not been put, nor has it been completely read, and as long as the question has not been read, if my interpretation of the Standing Orders is correct, a Member can still seek the floor, which is what happened in the case of the Hon. Member for York-West (Mr. Marchi).

An Hon. Member: Who was recognized.

Mr. Gauthier: Indeed, he was given the floor.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Both Member are correct. The Parliamentary Secretary is correct when he said that the question was called. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) says that the question was not put. The question was not put. Therefore, the Hon. Member has the floor for debate.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised that government Members would have such an objection to listen to further debate.

Mr. Lewis: You were surprised in the lobby.

Mr. Marchi: Yes, I was in the lobby. Yes, I had an interest and that interest is genuine, and that is why I am on my feet right now. If there is genuine interest on the other side to debate and improve this piece of legislation, I would think that, following my intervention, we will see the Parliamentary Secretary and the quasi-Minister of National Defence get up on their feet to defend the position in Bill C-62, and I challenge the Minister to do that.

I would like to participate in this debate once again. I have been involved from the beginning, commencing with second reading, then in committee, at report stage, and several days ago when the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), my colleague, moved an amendment, I spoke then. Several days ago I said that the debate and the process were frustrating. If you were a Member of Parliament and a participant throughout the entire process you would have to ask yourself about this Bill, as we are and as community individuals from the four target groups, for whom the legislation is intended, Mr. Speaker. We have seen, particularly at committee stage, group after group after group of women, the disabled, native people and people representing the visible minorities. They came before the committee and stressed the need to improve and strengthen Bill C-62. We saw participation at second reading once it was known across the country what Bill C-62 contained and, more important, what Bill C-62 did not contain.

The four target groups, the four community-based action groups, did not come before us simply as a one-time wonder. Very many of these same organizations came before this Parliament and this House of Commons during the constitutional debate when we were discussing the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. They came before the Abella Commission, which set out very courageously and progressively, I might add, a vision for Canadians in terms of equal opportunity in the workplace. They came before the Equality Now hearing, they came before the Equality for All hearing, and they also came before the committee that looked into the handicapped which published the Obstacles Report. In each and every single case they came at great expense, great energy and effort to articulate to their leadership at the federal level, to you and me, Mr. Speaker. They told us what it meant for them to be discriminated against either on the basis of sex, handicap or the colour of their skin. They tried to articulate in a very sensitive and effective manner what it was they needed from this House in terms of legislation and leadership for them to be freed from this type of bondage.

As Members of Parliament we have dealt and continue to deal in this House with these frustrations. We do so in our constituencies when we meet them. One of the basic elements of frustration we encounter is the question of employment.

People continuously seek the advice and assistance of Members of Parliament to help them find employment. These are people who have been in the unemployment lines for days, months and, in some cases, years. We should be cognizant of the fact that it is a great frustration, and it is that because in Canada and throughout the world people measure their self-worth and self-dignity in relation to a job. Somehow having a job fulfils one's goals and aspirations, keeps families intact and families on the go.

If we can admit to the fact that not having a job is very serious, then who are we to say to those individuals who are denied a job, not because an opportunity does not exist but because of a handicap, their colour or sex, or because of native cultural backgrounds? These people are Canadians. They are not some foreigners, they are not some new Canadians or some immigrants—and I am not suggesting we discriminate only against those classes—but they are Canadians like you and I, Mr. Speaker. They deserve an equal opportunity. They deserve an equal slice of the Canadian pie. In their estimation, they are not getting it. That is why they came before this House during debate on Bill C-62 to inform the Government that the Bill will not deliver equality but will merely speak to equality. That is not good enough. They came before this House and told the Government, "We don't want to be carted out on some kind of platform as one of the four target groups come election time and hear said: 'Look what we did for the natives. Look what we have done for the visible minority Canadians in this country'". They are not gullible. They are not naive. They do not want to be hoodwinked and, more important, they do not want other Canadians to be hoodwinked into believing that the lot of these Canadians is being improved, because it is not.

Member organizations within these four target groups have said very clearly to Parliament that they would rather have no Bill than have Bill C-62 in its present form. They are frustrated after having stated their position to the Government year after year, through report after report, and seeing no action. If Bill C-62 contained some decency and some movement on their complaints, recommendations, and representations to the committee, they would have been pleased. They would have accepted that as a first step. However, there has been no movement. There has only been talk and rhetoric. That is why they are displeased. Everyone in the House believes in equal opportunity. We should not accept a piece of legislation which does not do that which it purports to do. Rather than do that, we should transcend Party politics and work hard to deliver a piece of legislation which will do what it is intended to do.

My colleagues and I do not stand in our places to oppose simply for the sake of opposing, and not simply to debate until six o'clock. We are taking a position of principle. For years members of these four target groups have been telling the Government what they want. At the eleventh hour we at least wish to take the opportunity to articulate those concerns. Bill C-62 is simply not good enough, and the four target groups do not wish to accept it.

We have done more than simply talk. Through our critic we moved 36 amendments which would have given Bill C-62 strength and effectiveness. We recommended that the committee and the Government accept these amendments in order to demonstrate decency and moral integrity. One would have expected that one, two, or three of those amendments would have been accepted in good parliamentary faith. However, none of them were accepted. The amendments which we proposed came from the four target groups.

For whose benefit is this legislation being put forward? Is it for Members of the House or for the viewing audience? Of course not. If our purpose is to create equality in the country for the four target groups and those groups are not satisfied with this legislation, why is the Government prepared to proceed with it? Why is the Government so anxious to have this legislation passed? Why has the Government censured every member of this Party who has spoken on Bill C-62? We are not out of order. We make no apologies for debating this issue in the House. We do not apologize because we are trying to be the lightning rod between the four target groups and the federal Government. We will not apologize today or tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. We will proceed with Royal Assent after which the Hon. Member may complete his speech.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Deputy Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bill:

Bill C-99, An Act to provide borrowing authority—Chapter No. 19.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the third time and passed.

Employment Equity

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, just before we went to the other place for Royal Assent I was indicating the attempts we have made to improve and strengthen this legislation through some 36 amendments. We thought the Government should include an enforcement mechanism in this legislation. We feel that the Human Rights Commission, as it stands, does not have the resources or mandate to be the enforcement agency. The commission is a reactive rather than proactive mechanism. It also operates on a one-to-one basis rather than in the comprehensive fashion in which we will need to operate if we are serious about implementing national legislation. Notwithstanding our differences, we urged the Government to ensure at least that this legislation was enforceable. The Government refused, and we ask why. If the Government believes that the Human Rights Commission is the right vehicle, then for goodness' sake let us not skirt around the issue, let us put it clearly in the legislation.

We also recommended that all federal Government Departments be covered by this legislation. This was a key point for every single witness who appeared before the committee. Why? They looked to Ottawa to provide leadership by example. If the federal Government is subjecting Crown corporations and private corporations doing business with it to this legislation, then surely logic dictates that the Government itself should be subject to the legislation. Yet that, too, was refused.

Another key recommendation we made on behalf of a number of concerned groups was that this legislation should cover companies with less than 100 employees. This legislation applies only to companies with more than 100 employees. We have documentation which shows that if that provision is allowed to stand, then most of the companies doing business with the federal Government will not be covered by the legislation. That is to say, most of the firms who provide goods and services to this Government from coast to coast have less than 100 employees. We made the practical and reasonable suggestion that the number should be dropped from 100 to 25. That figure was accepted by, for example, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council when it appeared before the hearings. In fact, if we stop and think for a moment, we are talking about equality, so why should we base equality on the number of employees a business has? If company A has 200,000 employees and company B has six, what difference does that make when it comes to equal opportunity for all Canadians, including the four target groups? Basically, there should be none. If equality is not allowed to prevail within a firm of six employees then we have no equality. That is why, at least, we had a threshold at 25 employees. It should also be noted that when we talk about human rights, or equality in the workplace, people have been quick to criticize our neighbours to the south, the Americans, for their record. The Americans, in their contract compliance record, have firms of employees under 50 who also have to subscribe to their policies.

Therefore, if there are those critics who suggest that the Americans somehow lag behind our system, then let them speak up now because we are lagging behind the Americans on this very essential point. We should eliminate this hang-up and this charade with putting most of the companies outside the parameters of equality simply based on the number of employees. That will not go down well with regard to having any respect for the legislation that we have before us.

Another recommendation we made was to enforce some kind of penalty for individual companies or Crown corporations that somehow would not meet employment equity. That is difficult because this Government has not clearly come up with a grid, a target, a suggested plan for achieving employment equity. If we follow the concept, what this Government is prepared to do is to penalize company A, or Crown corporation B if they do not report, but they are not prepared to accept that they should penalize those companies if they do not meet employment equity.

If we have company A submit a report, but that company has not really done anything for women, the handicapped, natives or visible minorities, that company, under this legislation, will not be slapped on the hand, will not be told that its efforts are not good enough. This Government simply prefers to say, well, if company A or Crown corporation B submitted a report then that is good enough for us. That simply runs counter to the entire thrust of why Bill C-62 is here in the first place.

It was Judge Rosalie Abella who concluded very concisely in her commission's report that unenforceable rights are simply rights that are not available, and unenforceable rights are no better than non-available rights. That, in a nutshell, conceptualizes what is wrong with this legislation. That, very briefly, categorizes the malaise that permeates Bill C-62, that there is no guts, there is no enforcement, there is no sincerity, there is no political will and political courage to combat unequality in the workplace in this country.

I notice you are motioning to me in terms of my dwindling time, and so I will simply summarize in the following manner. Perhaps the greatest inability on the part of Members on the Government benches with respect to Bill C-62—and I don't mean to be disrespectful in any way, perhaps it is so with other Members as well—is their inability to see themselves in one of those four target groups. It is an inability to appreciate—and I do not profess to have a monopoly on that appreciation—what it means to be in those categories. Most of us do not have a disability, most of us are white, and most of us are not native. Therein lies the inability of this Parliament and this Government to deal with the subject in a proper and effective way. It is not only a shame for the Government. As many times as we have said this, I feel ashamed as a Member of this Parliament that we were unable to seize that golden window of opportunity when we were debating this issue and come out of the debate in committee and in the House holding our heads high and saying, "Today we have improved the lot of four different Canadian communities". We have not done this, and I would hope to God that this Government can see the shortcoming of its attitude in this legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions and comments?

Mr. de Corneille: I would like to ask a question of my colleague from York West, who is the official critic for the Official Opposition in the field of multiculturalism. He is, as I know, constantly in touch with various cultural groups in this country. In Toronto, as well as in his own riding, he is in constant touch with minority groups, particularly visible minorities. I would like to ask him if he has found the same things that I have in my contacts with these organizations, that they have been deeply concerned about the lack of sincerity on the part of the Government to provide legislation at this time that will make them feel there is going to be a change in the near future in their lives. Is it also not true that a very high proportion of people who are in the visible minorities are not employed, especially among youth?

Mr. Marchi: I would like to thank my colleague from Eglington-Lawrence for raising what is a very fundamental question for me as the official critic, and similarly for him as among other things, the critic for the handicapped community. He has liaised with that community in conjunction with myself and other members of my Party. The visible minorities community and the ethnocultural communities as expressed in this process by the CEC, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, which is the national umbrella group for all ethnocultural organizations in Canada, had expressed some degree of enthusiasm and hope for this particular piece of legislation. That hope and that enthusiasm evolved from the struggles and from the work that we have done with the Equality Now Report and the Equality for All Report, and basically supported the findings of those two reports. They thought that a piece of legislation, such as this Bill on employment equity, would tie the various elements together and that they would find it the underpinnings of each of those different studies. They came to the employment equity table in debate with the high hopes that those recommendations would transcend into legislation. They did not find it, but they did not go home and they did not give up. They came to committee and there was a meeting in Toronto at which the visible minorities community took part. They tried to stress both inside and outside the official structure of this House of Commons how much they had hoped that this piece of legislation would bring them finally the equality that somehow they are not given as a special gift, but that is rightfully theirs as Canadians who had signed, like you and I have signed, a social economic contract with this country. The Urban Alliance on Race Relations, which was a leading component of the struggle on behalf of the visible minorities, concluded in the following way: —that the focus of the legislation is on data collection rather than hiring and training in a workplace free of discrimination.

The Canadian Ethnocultural Council on the question of visible minorities said that it cannot see how a voluntary approach, which is in Bill C-62, will substantially improve employment opportunities for visible minorities. Those are not my words, those are words of Canadians who have come before us, and who come again and ask this Government to move on Bill C-62, but to move fairly, without boasting about championing rights that they do not have.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I agree with what my colleague has said. One of our other concerns is that young people constitute a very large and undue proportion of those who are unemployed in our country. The Senate report on youth says that while the statistics show that there are approximately one-half million unemployed young people, the reality is that some 750,000 are unemployed because the statistics do not include those who have given up trying to get a job.

Furthermore, among those unemployed youth, a much higher proportion of those who are visible minorities are unable to get work in Toronto and every other city in the country. The percentage of unemployment among visible minority groups is even higher than the level of unemployment among young people. Does this not also impact badly on the youth in this country?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, during my speech I said that perhaps the most sensitive problem we deal with when speaking to our constituents is the question of unemployment. Furthermore, the unemployment problem among young people becomes paramount when those individuals complain that they cannot find employment because of who they are, their age or the colour of their skin. Young people who have just graduated from school or university are hungry for their first opportunity in the workplace but are being denied that opportunity.

My colleague, the hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), is correct that the problem is even more acute for the visible minority within the youth element of this country. They face an awesome, if not almost impossible task, given some of those conditions. In some parts of Halifax, Nova Scotia, I believe the unemployment rate for young black Canadians is upwards of 50 per cent compared to the rate for other individuals in the same bracket. That should be testimony to the type of legislation we ought to introduce in the Parliament.

Last year, studies were conducted with the support of the Urban Alliance on Race Relations, together with York University. Individuals from visible minorities tested firms and companies and found that employers were not prepared to hire them. After the two studies were completed, the report showed an alarming attitude among those selected employers. I am not suggesting for one moment that all Canadian employers or all Canadians share that attitude, but surely there are some very deep-rooted problems that we simply must eradicate.

If countless studies tell Members of Parliament that there is a very severe problem to which there are good solutions, why should we accept legislation that does not even come close to solving those problems? Why should we accept amateurism in place of professionalism? Why should we accept charades instead of sincerity? It is time that we called a spade a spade in this country. We should take the bull by the horns and show Canadians that we are providing leadership in attaining equality for all, from one coast to the other, so that no Canadian will say that we have erred but have championed motherhood and apple pie. Yet, the Government is not prepared to do so. It is a shame.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, when I confess that it is my intention to vote against this Bill, I do not suppose that it would be a significant surprise. This is a mean little Bill that will be a source of disappointment to the groups that are supposed to benefit from it. This Bill is a poor reflection of the character of this country, its people, and what they want it to be.

The Bill is rather typical of the steps that have so often characterized the approach taken in the past to meet the needs of the minorities. Its very notion is that we dare not go too far too fast. It is a reflection of the view that we cannot legislate morality or fair treatment and that somehow we must wait for evolution, education and other factors to play a role before we can accord the equality that women, visible minorities and the disabled seek so much.

The fact of the matter is that the Canadian people have learned that when legislation acts to bring about fair treatment, whether it be in employment, education or housing, it has the effect of changing attitudes and changing the character of people.

It was argued in the south that legislating away segregation would surely mean perpetual conflict. Clearly, the evidence has established that strong legislative and judicial action resulted in a very substantial change in the character of a society that was far worse than Canada ever dared to be with respect to the treatment of blacks and other members of visible minorities.

The Canadian people understand that. This country has changed immensely since I was a child. The fact that I am here in the House, a black person, representing a constituency that would not have sent me here if I had depended solely on the votes of visible minorities, reflects the results of the legislative changes of the past with respect to the treatment of minorities and the changing attitude that has occurred in this country.

This Bill does not reflect the attitude of Canadian people. It is a poor reflection of the attitudes of our country. It has been defended in an extremely lukewarm fashion.

Retreat is never aggressive and never produces memorable rhetoric.

The organizations who represent women, minorities, the disabled and native people in this country have presented their case over and over again. Their position has been articulated on this side of the House with, I think, dramatic effect. We have demonstrated that the Party in power constitutes a minority holding the viewpoint that we must continue to go slowly.

I would like to take this opportunity to congrulate my colleagues and Hon. Members of the Official Opposition for so effectively representing the views of those persons this Bill is supposed to benefit and whom this Bill will fail to benefit in the manner they seek. It is a tragedy that the march to progress has not been continued by the present Government. The marchers have been waylaid, the march has been sabotaged. What is going to happen today does not represent the culmination of the efforts of so many to secure equality. It is an interruption. It will not be a fatal interruption but it is one which will cause only concern and unhappiness with some measure of misery and alienation. This Government will be discredited among a significant portion of the population. Let me remind those Hon. Members of the population which will be affected by this Bill. Women represent half the population. About 600,000 people are members of visible minorities, and at least one tenth of the population are native people. They will be remember the Government's weak response.

Federal Government Departments are excluded from this legislation. It will be remembered that what is not contained in this Bill is any reference to equal pay for work of equal value, and it will be noted that there is nothing in this Bill to address the issue of contract compliance. Only those corporations under federal jurisdiction which employ more than 100 employees will be affected. This legislation is a mere shadow of the kind of stringent requirements of the United States which have the number set at 15. It will be argued that if there is to be contract compliance, that is that those who have contracts with the Government should not practise discrimination, it should apply to any company however many employees are involved. It should state clearly and unambiguously that those who discriminate against minorities, women, native people or the disabled, will not receive Government contracts.

It will be noted that this Bill does not provide, as it claims to do, mandatory affirmative action or employment equity. It provides only one requirement subject to any kind of sanction, and that is, that companies report the numbers of designated groups which are employed, how and where they are employed and how much they are paid. Having done that, there is no real requirement subject to any kind of penality that they develop a process for correcting inequalities based on structural changes, consultations, targets and timetables.

This Bill will not address the problem of the deprivation of so many adequate employment opportunities. For those who would claim that this Bill is aimed at achieving equalty let us dispense with that right now. All this Bill refers to is employment. It will not redress the many wrongs experienced by minorities in education, housing and opportunities for participation in our communities. What it does in an indirect way is address the tremendous advantages which white males have through their social clubs and contacts at the golf course and elsewhere. This is something, I think, which bears emphasis. There is no negation in this Bill of the practice of the past, which continues today, of shutting out so many people from opportunities through the "old boy" network.

I share with that part of the population of which I am a member, and those others who are identifiable by colour, sex or disability, the feeling that we are experiencing today a day of tragedy which I would attribute, as my colleague did previously, to the inability of Hon. Members opposite to put themselves in the shoes of those who have suffered from discrimination in the past and who will suffer from the Government's failure to attack systemic discrimination today.

I sit down in grave disappointment and that disappointment is not only my disappointment but the disappointment of hundreds of thousands of persons, indeed, millions, whom the Government has failed.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make a couple of remarks.

You know that I represent a riding where this Bill will have a strong impact and, as a parliamentarian who must be elected and who also has to be accountable to his constituents for his work, I must tell the House why I did not join the debate on this Bill which I consider very important. The fact is that we now have—tell them, no provocation—the reason is that with the new Standing Orders of the House, Mr. Speaker honoured me by appointing me chairman of the legislative committee to which the Bill was referred, and I thank the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) for saying that I was an outstanding chairman.

As a matter of fact, my interpretation of the new Standing Orders is that a chairman must not only be objective, but also appear to be objective.

Since we are establishing new precedents, I suggest it is fitting that a legislative committee chairman should not take part in the second reading debate, nor should he vote—as I did the last time on second reading—so as to show to his colleagues who will sit with him on the legislative committee to which the House may refer legislation—

So I think I did the work the House asked me to do as an impartial chairman. I have always said that when I act as chairman I have no political opinion.

A good chairman or chairperson of a parliamentary committee must protect that committee's integrity. He must protect and defend witnesses and give them the assurance that they will be well received. He must also protect the minority parties debating the Bill, whether it is the Official Opposition or the third party in the House. They have a right to be protected by the chairman, and the majority—and I repeat, for the benefit of my hon. colleague from Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly)—the majority must also feel it is in good hands, even if the chairman of a committee is a Member of the Official Opposition, because if the minority abuses its rights, if the Opposition parties attempt to sabotage the wishes of the majority, I think the chairman of a parliamentary committee has a duty to call his own colleagues to order on the same grounds as he would the majority members.

That being said, I did not take part in the debate on this Bill, a Bill I consider extremely important. I may add that since we are now getting used to a new system, and I am referring to the system of legislative committees, I preferred to abstain from voting on second reading. I informed the Whip who with his usual swift intelligence understood that I wanted to follow the same principle on third reading—not to vote—in order to show that from the outset, when the Chair conferred on me the honour of being the Chairman of this Committee, I had wanted to protect our witnesses and the Members of all three parties.

However, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the precedent I am trying to establish is one that made you think and which has made us all think. In fact, I would not want it to be seen as a new rule to be imposed on my fellow Members. In fact, who knows? We might have a minority government some time and whether a given piece of legislation is adopted or not might depend on this Member's vote. So we will all have to put our heads together, and that is why, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, in a way, that I accepted the Speaker's kind invitation to chair the committee on this Bill which I consider very important. I would not even want to say it is a step in the right direction, because it would be more or less taking sides with the Government. Nor would I want to say that the Bill is a very poor piece of legislation, because I would be siding with the Opposition. I prefer to abstain. I am not sorry I did. It was a very interesting experience.

My hope, Mr. Speaker, is that prospective legislative committee chairmen who will enjoy the same privilege I and others have had will begin to establish this new precedent whereby the Member selected by the Chair will refrain from taking part in the debate—on that it is clear and agreed in advance that the Member must not rise on second reading—and thus show publicly that he or she is quite impartial about the Bill and will not seek the floor.

Mr. Speaker, such is my explanation to those who wrote to me and others who called me to ask why I did not vote on such an important Bill which will have a direct impact on the people in my own riding who have been putting their faith in me for nearly 23 years now. However, Mr. Speaker, since there was no public explanation about the new Standing Orders, with your permission and without unduly trying the Government's patience, I had to explain why I did not vote on second reading—I had been appointed chairman—and why I will not vote. I will explain when you call in the Members for the vote.

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

The House resumed from Friday, April 18, consideration of Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian

Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee;

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Cassidy)(p.12436); and the amendment (Mr. Robinson)(p. 12444).

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we understand that some progress has been made as far as negotiations are concerned. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will rise in his place and give us some indication of whether or not government employees who have grievances in the established process are satisfied, so that we will be in a position to pass the Bill with some assurance that the employees have reached a satisfactory agreement.

The particular motion before the House has been adequately discussed, so I will not go into the need for the extension of time. If the Parliamentary Secretary can give us those assurances there will be no need at all for this kind of a motion. The procedures followed in this Bill have been very bad, and before we have any other divestitures or privatizations we should be discussing procedures.

I would like to put before the Government, and possibly I will during third reading, the kinds of concerns the people of Canada, the employees affected and the business community have about the procedures used by the Government, procedures which are not necessarily for the good of the employees or for the good of Canada, but are based on an ideology the Government has accepted and is pushing through without any particular concern for the people involved. If the Government insists on doing that, it would be necessary to have a procedure which would allow the people involved to know that all of the information is before them and that they have had an opportunity to protect themselves and Canadians as a whole.

In every case that we have had of a formation of a Crown corporation the reason for the formation was well established. Public interest required it and in most of them we passed a Bill in this House to make sure the public interest was served by the formation of such a Crown corporation.

It is incredible, after a long and basic discussion to establish a corporation, to find that suddenly the Government can sell it and ask Parliament to rubber stamp the procedure after the sale is finalized. The Government has made the sale with such little information available to the public, to the employees and to Parliament that nobody really knows what is going on. We have had three cases of Crown corporation divestitures. In each case the amount of information available to Parliament, to the people and to the employees has been inadequate, and concern for the employees has been inadequate.

Even as we now discuss report stage and this amendment which asks to defer the process, the real concern is whether the Government is ready to establish the kind of procedures which would avoid the anguish these employees felt when they found themselves being pawned off. They felt some concern was their due as long-standing and loyal employees of a government corporation and members of the Public Service Alliance.

If the Parliamentary Secretary is willing to stand in his place and give us some assurance that negotiations have progressed to a point where the employees are satisfied, that would be the main concern of Parliament now.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I had not anticipated speaking until third reading, but at the request of my colleague in the New Democratic Party I will do so. In relation to assurances that everything is fine—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary but if he is going to be speaking to the amendment before us, then he should be pertinent to the amendment. I do not think he wants to speak to the amendment particularly, he wants to give us further details, at third reading, in his speech telling us the progress the Government has made with this dossier.

I do not want to call for relevancy here, but I would ask the Hon. Member to wait for third reading. We have an agreement to put this Bill through this morning. It may be more advantageous to all of us not to get involved in a debate that is not relevant to the motion at hand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Bradley) will speak on the amendment, which is a matter of dates.

Mr. Bradley: No, Mr. Speaker. If the recommendation by my colleague in the Liberal Party is acceptable to my colleague in the NDP, I will speak on third reading.

Mr. Hovdebo: That is fine, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the kind of commitment he has now given, that he will give us that information, and that is acceptable to me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion of Mr. Cassidy.

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 12 by striking out lines 35 to 37 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"12. This Act shall come into force after December 31, 1987, on a date to be fixed by proclamation."

And the amendment of Mr. Robinson.

That motion No. 4 be amended by deleting "1987" and inserting "1989".

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

The next question is on Motion No. 4. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at report stage of the Bill now before the House.

Call in the Members.

And the bells having rung:

• (1150)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The first question is on Motion No. 1. Mr. McInnes moves:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-87, be amended by adding immediately after line 34 at page 5 the following:

"12. (1) To the extent provided by the regulations made under subsection (3), the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act and the regulations made under those Acts continue to apply to a person who meets all the following criteria:

(2) An election referrred to in paragraph (1)(e) is irrevocable.

(3) The Governor in Council may, in relation to persons who make the election referred to in paragraph (1)(e), make regulations

(a) specifying which provisions of the Acts and regulations mentioned in subsection (1) apply, and to what extent they apply;

(b) adapting provisions of those Acts and regulations for the purposes of this section; and

(c) generally for carrying out the purposes of this section.

(4) Regulations made under subsection (3) may be made applicable on and after a day before their publication if they so provide."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. McInnes), which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Pursuant to the order made at the beginning of this matter, that vote disposes of Motion No. 2 and applies to Motion No. 3.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. McInnes) agreed to.

Canadian Arsenals Limited

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a third time, at the next sitting of the House or by unanimous consent now?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Mr. McInnes moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to be part of the wrapping up of this legislation, Bill C-87, which has taken quite a long time to get to this stage. It appears that during our deliberations the major concern has been that of the employees' pensions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gauthier: We are in debate. Come on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank Hon. Members.

Mr. Bradley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for controlling this unruly crowd.

Before I was interrupted by the mass exodus of those who were here to help us get through report stage of the Bill, I was about to delineate the agreement and to discuss its main points, as requested by my colleague from the New Democratic Party.

Our main concern in the second reading debate and committee stage was that of the employees' pension. I am pleased to say that through input from the committee and Hon. Members from all Parties, the employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited and the Government of Canada, through Treasury Board, have reached an agreement. Treasury Board has confirmed this agreement by letter. SNC has agreed and has accepted the agreement. Perhaps I could be offered the opportunity of informing my colleagues in the House of what the decision was, if they have not already been so advised. It involves a transfer to each member who so elects the actuarial value, with a minimum equal to twice the members' contributions with interest, of the pension accrued at the date of privatization. That is on an ongoing basis.

Under the Public Service Superannuation Act and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, in a defined contribution plan, a money purchase plan, the actuarial value being based on the actuarial assumptions used by the chief actuary in his report on the valuation of the plan as of December 31, 1980, SNC should treat these contributions as vested in the name of each member, and those members who are presently buying past services will be given the option to carry on.

I feel this is a tremendous move. I would like to personally thank my colleagues in the Liberal, New Democratic and Conservative Parties who spent those hours in committee and in the deliberations behind the committee. It is very difficult for the Government to dictate to private sector employers how they will treat their new employees, but we are very pleased that through the recommendations by all three Parties and Members thereof a behind-the-scenes agreement was reached with the Government of Canada and Crown employees, and that SNC has ratified that agreement, all parties are now satisfied. Again, I would like to thank all Hon. Members for their participation in this very worthwhile debate.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I think the debate on Bill C-87 has gone on far too long, for the simple reason that from the outset the Government should have proceeded differently. We were not satisfied with the way the Government decided to sell the corporation while providing very little protection for its employees. We have spoken at length about this Bill, not because we object to the principle of privatization or because we object to the sale of Canadian Arsenals Ltd. in particular. On the contrary, we think that manufacturing munitions is not an area in which the State should be involved. Nor do we have any difficulty with the prospective buyer, SNC, which is entirely responsible and which we hope will be able to run this company so that it makes a profit and also in a manner that is considerate of its employees.

However, as we said in the House last week, and more specifically last Friday, we realized that employees at Canadian Arsenals Ltd. were getting very little protection under this Bill. Earlier in the debate, there was a reference to a study made at the Government's request by a number of consultants, a study the Government refused to release, and that is why our party was for some time very much against giving Bill C-87 speedy passage through the House, and that is also why my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) spoke several times in the House and, in fact, spearheaded an attack to have the Bill amended. And we are surprised that Conservative Members from Quebec did not rise in the House to defend Canadian Arsenals employees.

Mr. Speaker, the first draft introduced by the Government was more or less a package deal to sell the captive employees along with the corporation — 450 or close to 450 employees at the Le Gardeur plant and about 50 more at Saint-Augustin in the riding of Portneuf. However, some amendments were made and we are now prepared to support the Bill. We would have been quite concerned had the sale been concluded without guaranteeing more employee protection, for it might have created a dangerous precedent now that the Government is intent on selling other Crown corporations to private interests. We wanted to avoid such a precedent. As a matter of fact we are somewhat surprised that the Government's first version of this Bill should have been an attempt to take CAL employees for a ride.

Be that as it may, I want to say that our victory does not leave a bitter taste. As Liberals we feel that we have played a leading role in changing this Bill. As I mentioned earlier, we took this initiative under the guidance of my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and we are pleased with the outcome of this matter.

I want to commend the Public Service Alliance for leading the fight on behalf of its membership, particularly Mr. Jean Bergeron. I also extend congratulations to the buyer, the SNC firm, for being so patient during the many weeks it took to get the Bill through the Commons. In all honesty, the Government deserves praise for finally seeing the light and introducing amendments which CAL employees and Opposition Parties can live with. The ultimate result is that all Members of the House are now prepared to pass this measure. It goes to prove that constructive debate can indeed make Members of different political persuasions see eye to eye. Again I applaud Government Members for showing flexibility in this instance. Hopefully this will be a precedent, in the sense that if ever the Governent wants to sell other Crown corporations to the private sector the sale terms will provide adequate protection for the transferred employees.

That is all I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the Bill will get swift third reading passage today.

• (1210)

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this debate is on third reading of Bill C-87 which deals with the privatization of Canadians Arsenals Limited and its sale to SNC Group of Quebec. A number of points have been raised during the course of the debate with respect to the general questions of privatization.

In opening my remarks I would like to say that it has taken a long time to carry out this sale. One of the major reasons being that the Government did not think through exactly what it intended to do. Because of the program of privatization it is a sale which has been driven by ideology as opposed to common sense. I say this because the figures we have indicate that Canadian Arsenals is an extremely profitable company and its profitability was rapidly rising. Of course, it is in a managed market, in the sense that most of its sales have to be to the Government of Canada for defence purposes. Therefore, its profitability has to do with the prices paid by the Department of National Defence for munitions and other goods it buys from this firm. Nonetheless, it had to have a substantial amount of efficiency. It was being run effectively since it achieved such a profit turn-around and has shown dramatic improvements in profits over the last few years. If it was so good, and if it was making a contribution to the people of Canada in terms of money coming back, then why sell it? Why not look at other alternatives?

Canadian Arsenals has indicated that it has a fairly major re-equipment and investment program to carry out. Under those circumstances the rigidity of the Government has been in not understanding that Crown corporations should have commercial freedom to do such things as raising money privately, if it is not available through the Treasury. That is stupid. It seems to me that it is an ideological decision. The Government, in being conservative, wants to prove that public enterprise does not work. Therefore, it hamstrings public enterprises in various ways. It makes it difficult for public enterprises to work effectively by such measures as denying them access to capital in the market if they cannot obtain it through the Department of Finance or through the Treasury.

I am suggesting that what the SNC Group intends to do in terms of future development of Canadian Arsenals could just as easily have been done in public hands. I know that SNC is looking at the possibility of exploring export markets for Canadian Arsenals. It has said that CAL was not very vigorous in this area.

I believe there is a moral question here in terms of what export markets we will see. I for one do not want to see Canadian Arsenals in private hands selling to racist regimes such as South Africa, or selling into the hot spots around the world where there are shooting wars going on, or selling to dictators such as General Pinochet of Chile. I do not care whether the company is in public or private hands. As Canadians we share the view that there ought to be some fairly substantial regulation of where munitions being produced in Canada are sold. What is the restraint on Canadian Arsenals from selling to the Americans or to our NATO allies? I think the restraint, if it existed, has been largely a self-imposed restraint. After all, the Royal Canadian Mint sells its services in terms of coinage to many countries in and outside the Commonwealth. I believe it sells to some 20 or 30 countries. It has developed a thriving export market. Therefore, there is no reason, in principle, why CAL could not have done the same thing while it was under public ownership.

We will not resolve all the questions concerning privatization now. However, the Government seems to have the view of "heads you lose and tails we win". If a Crown corporation is having difficulties, or losing money, the Government says: "Look, it's a loser. Let's get rid of it". If a Crown corporation, such as this one, is making money, it says: "Look, it's making money. Let's get rid of it". There do not seem to be any circumstances under which the Government is prepared to understand that Crown corporations have been established for public purposes. They have been established with a public job to perform. That should have a substantial influence on the way Crown corporations are operated and run. I think Crown corporations can and should be models of the way corporate activity can and should be carried out in the private sector as well. Unfortunately, the Government does not seem to share that vision.

In terms of Crown corporations, one of the problems which has to be addressed—and I hope it will be addressed by some of the committees under the new system—is the question of accountability and direction. Amendments to the Financial Administration Act passed in 1984 have changed the situation somewhat. But, in many cases, there is no effective accountability to committees of Parliament. There is no effective means of reminding a Crown corporation of what its original mandate was when it was set up and of how it should interpret it. Crown corporations tend to be left on their own to interpret their mandates. In a case such as Canadian Arsenals, a company which has existed in public hands for many years, that can mean it can go off into limbo and no one—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cassidy: The ex-Minister of Science and Technology seems to be busy elsewhere. He will soon be an ex-Minister of everything; but that is another question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the mandate for a company such as Canadian Arsenals could tend to become lost because it has been a Crown corporation for so long. I do not think the former or the present Governments have understood that these mandates have to be reviewed. It is not understood that there has to be some real accountability and thinking in terms of who sits on the boards of Crown corporations and what kind of responsibilities they will fulfil. It is not just an ordinary private corporation. Nor is it an instrument of Government. It is something in between. Canadians have not done too badly in terms of development in that intermediate area. However, we tend to lose the thread from time to time. The Government's practice of saying that it does not understand what it is all about and, therefore, it will get rid of it, is not the best solution.

During the course of debate we raised a number of specific issues concerning job security, pensions and the recognition of union rights under various labour codes. I suggest that before any other privatizations take place involving a change in labour jurisdiction the Government should ensure that the question of successor rights is hammered out before hand and not after, as was the case in this particular circumstance. In this circumstance, technically, the workers could wind up with no union, or another union after the switch is made to Quebec labour jurisdiction. I am sure that the Public Service Alliance has been doing some work to try to ensure that it can continue to represent the workers, something which it has done for many years.

In the private sector under Ontario legislation, for example, there is the concept of successor rights. When selling a company, new management cannot evade the responsibility of adhering to the contract which the employees had with the previous mangement. The concept of successor rights does not mean that the union which happens to be there has the right to be there forever, because there are processes of decertification. This being a free society, I am sure the Alliance would accept, as would any other union, that that should continue to be a potential recourse for employees who decide they do not want to have a union or want to change the union which they have. Sometimes it is necessary because the union loses the track itself and is no longer effective in defending its members, or it becomes like certain unions which no longer really work in the true interests of its members.

However, it seems to me that at least there should have been an agreement between the Canada authorities and the Quebec provincial authorities which would have provided de facto successor rights in this particular case and, therefore, bridged the transition from federal labour code jurisdiction to provincial. I call upon the Government to ensure that that occurs in the future. I should now like to turn to the issue of pensions.

I gather the Government has learned a few lessons concerning the pension entitlement of Canadian Arsenals Ltd. employees who were participants in the Canada Government Pension Plan and who will now have the option either of transferring their pension contributions into SNC's plan or keeping their entitlement until the date of sale in the Government of Canada Pension Plan.

That is not the best of solutions, but it is much better than the situation that was provided for before the amendment we just supported was introduced.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest the reason why our Party supported Amendment No. 3 moved by the Minister, and which we just voted on, was specifically that we are now satisfied, after contacting our friends in the Public Service Alliance, that the pension problem of those employees is now adequately solved.

It is not an ideal solution, but it seems the union representing the employees is satisfied that it is the best available to protect those 800 employees' vested interest with respect to their pensions.

Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased that the work done by my friend the Hon. Member for Price Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), the Members of the New Democratic Party and of the Liberal Party and our representations and our insisting on the matter of the pension entitlement of those 800 employees have finally led to an acceptable solution for the employees concerned.

It seems that employees who elect to retain their pension entitlement in the Public Service pension system, will not only qualify for their pensions, but that their years of service with the new owners, SNC Corporation, will be taken into account when determining their pension entitlement. It seems that the existing indexation that covers the Public Service Pension Plan will carry over for those employees.

Unfortunately, this will not apply to that portion of their employment that will continue with the new owners. However, indexation on 20, 25 or 30 years of service, according to the situation of a number of employees, will apply.

I am therefore quite pleased that Parliament, through its efforts, has succeded in convincing the Minister, and perhaps the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes), the actual owner of the Canadian Arsenals Ltd. Corporation, of what the problem was. Perhaps it was Treasury Board, or perhaps even Government officials who did not realize how important it was to be flexible on such an issue.

[English]

I will say in English as well that I am pleased a solution of the pension issue which is satisfactory to the employees has been finally reached. We understand and they understand that it is not ideal but, nonetheless, it goes a long way toward achieving the goals they set out at the beginning. Certainly it goes an awful lot further than shoving people off into the private sector, giving them back their contributions, and basically not an awful lot more, after years of contributing to the pension plan of the Government of Canada and expecting to receive a decent pension plan as one of the conditions or benefits of staying with that particular employer, rather than moving to an available job down the street or in another community which might be more attractive or have a weekly wage that is perhaps a bit more attractive. I am glad that has been achieved. As I said in French, I think in large measure it is due to the efforts of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), our caucus and that of the Liberals. I see the Parliamentary Secretary encouraging me as I say that. I would say to him that I am glad he dealt with the matters seriously and worked hard to try to find a solution.

I suspect that one of the problems within Government was that the Treasury Board, being responsible for the Public Service superannuation plan, was being rather sticky and difficult to deal with. I will not describe the expression on the Parliamentary Secretary's face as I make that comment; it would be indiscreet for me to do so. However, I say generally to the Government that in these matters of privatization, the Macdonald Commission talked about the need for more flexibility in how we run our affairs. For goodness sake, that has to begin with the Government of Canada. We have to show some example.

Because many things are happening in mixed areas of the economy, because activities which were public are becoming private, like airport security activities that were privatized and are now coming back into the public sector, we must be realistic in understanding that we should be trying to accommodate to the best of our capacity the legitimate needs and desires of people in these cases. Treasury Board should not be digging in its heels and suggesting that it is a lovely idea but that it cannot be done because it has never been done before. We have not before had a Government with 211 seats. Many of the things which the Government has done have never been done before. In some cases it is unfortunate that they are being done now. However, I suggest that rules and regulations in terms of what occurred in the Government of Canada in the past should not impede necessary arrangements when it comes to such things as dealing fairly with people who completely, unwittingly and beyond their control are affected by the Government's ideological decision on privatization in this particular case.

While I am happy that a solution has been reached, I am sorry it took so much effort on the part of people who had to negotiate and struggle in order to obtain a solution. If the Parliamentary Secretary and his Minister would like to join forces with people in our caucus in the future in order to overcome the ingrained resistance and conservatism of the Treasury Board and certain other central agencies within the Government of Canada, and if we can achieve some desirable results, we will be happy to do so. On the other hand, if the Parliamentary Secretary and his Minister would like to join forces with people in our Party in turning back this pressure for privatization, this ideological obsession with privatization, we would be happy to do that as well.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member take a few moments to express the concerns of the union on a couple of other points? I refer firstly to the fact that employees were unable to continue in the plan they had, and secondly, to the hiatus which appears in the transfer between jurisdictions and the possibility of grievances during that period.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have been away from Ottawa for the last two days or three days, so I do not know whether any satisfactory resolution has been reached of the question of what happens in terms of the administration of the contract between the time the sale is actually completed and the time of recognition, if granted, under the Quebec Labour Code. Even after that recognition is granted, there is still the period of time when the parties may be working out a new contract. Even if the contract is identical in spirit to the existing contract, it may have to be worded differently because of different requirements under a new labour code. There could be a lengthy period of time, not because of bad faith on either side, but because of the practical difficulties in doing something which has not been done before. This is why I am suggesting that there should have been a direct agreement between the Government of Canada and the Quebec Government over the question of how successor rights would be achieved.

In general, SNC is acting in good faith. It is biting off a fair amount here because the turnover of Canadian Arsenals is not that far short of what was SNC's total turnover just a year or two ago. It is a major acquisition for SNC, but it seems to be going into it with a constructive spirit. The Government of Canada could have had SNC bind itself legally to the Government of Canada in the Agreement of Sale. SNC could not reach a legal agreement with the union, but this would have had no accreditation in legal terms after the sale until recognition was granted. The Government of Canada could have put into the contract that SNC would respect the contract prevailing until such time as the new union was in place, a new contract signed or possibly have a cutoff date of a year or so hence in order to give ample time for the union to gain certification and get a new contract, or for the workers to reject it. Secondly, during that transition period I think that SNC should also have been required by the Government of Canada to agree that in the event of dispute there would then be an agreed upon means by which arbitration could be resorted to where matters could not be resolved otherwise.

I would remind the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes), who is responsible for the Bill, that for some lengthy period of time the union was not able to meet with SNC. I suggested that that be done early when I met with the SNC representatives. They did not see the purchase agreement or the agreement in principle until the matter went to the legislative committee, and that was too late, Mr. Speaker. I am glad it occurred eventually but, as we found in the case of de Havilland, there is no need to guard that information.

I was at a conference of public managers the other day where one of the workshops was on the theme of "consult with the public but don't tell them anything". Governments too often do exactly that. they say they are all for consultation but they are not prepared to share any information. therefore, there is no likelihood of meaningful consultation. I know my friend had another question on pensions,but perhaps what I have said answers the major question in which he was interested.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken in this debate on several occasions and now I shall, if I may, add some further comments on this Bill. My hon. colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), who is out of town today on parliamentary business, has asked me to make a few comments on his behalf regarding Bill C-87 and the privatization of the Crown corporation Canadian Arsenals Ltd. by its sale to SNC.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the Government elected in 1984 wanted to meet its commitment to privatizing of certain companies, and had even suggested privatizing a considerable number of Crown corporations.

I think if we look back, we can see what the privatization policy has achieved, and wonder how it has worked, and in this particular case, the sale of Canadian Arsenals Ltd., whether the exercise has been a successful and a beneficial one for Canadians. And that will be the main thrust of my comments.

Mr. Speaker, we know that since the privatization policy was announced, a secretariat was set up at Treasury Board, headed by Mr. Basil Bénéteau, former Vice-President of the Board of Directors of Northern Telecom. His assistant is Mr. Lawrence J. O'Toole, previously federal co-ordinator of economic development in Ontario. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) selected Salomon Brothers as financial advises to the task force. So we have a privatization secretariat, and I imagine it is busy applying the criteria the Government has established, that is, how to privatize, what to privatize and under what conditions.

To date, Mr. Speaker, the Northern Transportation Company has been privatized, as well as de Havilland. The operation was less successful in the latter case because the de Havilland-Boeing transaction was somewhat confused and difficult. We even had to hold a special debate on it here in the House, and I think that this gave the Government the opportunity to learn something about privatization. There was of course the sales of Fisheries Canada, a sea product processing company in the Gaspé area, for an amount of $5 million, and the most recent case is the one now before us which concerns the divestiture of the Canadian Arsenals Limited Corporation to SNC.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, at the second reading stage, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell repeatedly asked two questions, with our support. One was: Did the Government consult the employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited before acting to privatize the corporation?

The second question we asked was this: If so, what was the result of this consultation and what are the concerns of the employees?

We knew from the unions and the employees themselves that the employees had not been consulted and that they were worried about such matters as their pension fund, and what the future held for them with the company which was to purchase Canadian Arsenals Limited.

Mr. Speaker, we then asked the Government to provide us with a report prepared by Arthur Andersen which the Government itself had requested and which apparently contained details of the transaction, but our request was rejected.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I remember having made speeches in the House on second reading to tell the Government: Listen, without the important information and data which we need concerning the consultations as well as the validity of the privatization and the benefits of this sale for Canadians, and because we are concerned about the working conditions and transfer of the company to the private sector, we want to see the famous Arthur Andersen report and we want to know what the conditions are concerning the employee's pension plans and the transfer of their jobs from the public sector to the private sector.

We spent a long time at second reading, Mr. Speaker, as you know, on this request in order to finally obtain from the Government the commitment that they would make public finally, at the report stage, the famous Arthur Andersen report. Then we moved from second reading stage to the committee stage. Finally, the Government made the Arthur Andersen report public, so that we realized, together with the Government, that improvements were required to the pension fund. Those are the problems which were addressed in committee and settled, I think, for the benefit of the Government, the SNC purchaser, but above all the benefit of employees who were seeking guarantees concerning their pension fund, its transfer to the public sector and many questions still unanswered concerning their benefits, their pensions, the indexation of these pensions, the future of their jobs, and especially their careers with the SNC.

I think that the Government has made an effort and I want to congratulate the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary for listening to the requests of both the employees and the Official Opposition with the assistance of the New Democratic Party.

I think we should realize that Canadian Arsenals Ltd. is a company which five or six years ago managed to overcome serious problems with the help of its workers and has now become a profitable concern. Now, we wanted to get the co-operation of both employees and management, since they are the parties concerned, to come up with a solution that was equitable and fair, considering the employees' very reasonable demands concerning the conditions for transferring their pension fund contributions and also concerning their careers and their future with SNC.

Mr. Speaker, we do not object to privatization as such. The concept is aimed at letting the private sector take over activities that were controlled by the State. This can be done, as we know, either by selling the Government's shares or the corporation, or by the government simply getting out of the activities it was or is involved in.

Mr. Speaker, two words are foremost in my mind, and we hear them very often today: deregulation and privatization. Today, everybody is talking about deregulation and privatization, and the two are closely connected. Deregulation means that the State no longer tells people what to do, so it withdraws from a certain area it has been regulating, and that is a good thing. Privatization means that the State lets others act in its stead. In the case of SNC and Canadian Arsenals Ltd., I think the sale has some advantages for future jobs and there may be a bit of growth as well. However, one thing worries me and I think we should not overlook this possibility. The Government will on occasion be asked to scrutinize export permits for the goods being produced by Canadian Arsenals Ltd., and I am referring to munitions.

I wish to caution those who think that by privatizing Canadian Arsenals we will create many new jobs and foreign markets, that we will be in the export business, and that we will be expanding the sales of Canadian Arsenals. One must remember that export permits from the Canadian Government will still be required. We are just saying that Canadians are asking the Government to ensure that we not aid or abet certain groups or governments which take part in subversive activities or war. Even though the company may want to expand into other export fields, it will still have to apply for export permits which will assure Canadians that the company is not dealing with people, organizations, or governments which may be unfriendly to those in the western world who like to preserve democracy.

I only say that in passing because I was told by someone this morning that they saw great potential for expansion of the arsenals business. I do not think we should expect Canada to begin to export arms or war tools. I could probably make a long speech on that subject, Mr. Speaker, but I will avoid it because I know Members would prefer that I speak on the matter of the privatization and sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited under Bill C-87.

Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, comment briefly on the work done by my hon. colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), who spoke in Committee and in the House, and who wrote to the Minister—this is a fact—and, practically single-handed, obtained the release of the Arthur Andersen Report. At least for us in the Official Opposition, he was someone on which people could count to strengthen the transaction. I think that the point that he was making was that, while we are selling a corporation, we do not necessarily have to sell its employees with it. We had to see to it that this transaction would be clean, open and absolutely fair for everyone.

It is my sincere opinion that the vigilance shown by the Opposition, led by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, protected the Government employees who were asking for and who deserved special attention.

Also, Mr. Jean Bergeron, Vice President of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, played a major role in the negotiations; he said the following:

> This is a victory for the employees. However, in the future, the Government should ensure that eventual purchasers are aware of the implications before entering blindly into privatization negotiations as they did in the case of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

Mr. Jean Bergeron worked closely with the employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited and did a lot to make the technicalities of this transaction better understood.

I would simply like to remind the House that Mr. Bergeron first used the word "amateurism" and it was not to describe the transaction. I think that this was sufficiently well explained at second reading. Indeed, there have been rather strong comments from people involved in the transaction who had no hesitation in saying that, for some months now, and even since the beginning, the Government has acted amateurishly in this transaction. If the Government had listened to its Privatization Secretariat, it would not have had these problems. Perhaps then the Government would have been able to involve the employees much more than it did. In addition, perhaps it would have remembered that, when such a company is sold, its most important asset, its work force, is also sold and that such a transaction has certain human resources implications that have to be taken into account.

Mr. Speaker, since we are speaking about privatization, as you probably know, I could talk about the privatization of Government services. I am deeply concerned, and I would simply like to remind the House that whenever a corporation is sold, the privatization extends also to the services that the Government has been providing.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, I could mention the teaching of our official languages or language training in the Public Service of Canada. There were budget cuts that resulted in nearly 850 employees losing their jobs, for there are rumours of privatizing that service in the coming year. I can quote from page 6823 of Hansard a question I asked in this House, and in which I suggested it was irresponsible to privatize language training and thereby jeopardize the jobs of 788 employees, 62.6 per cent of whom were women. Moreover, 536 of those 788 employees are members of the teaching personnel and 59 per cent are professional women.

Recently, Mr. Speaker, I also referred to the issue of translators in this House. Part of that essential service has been privatized. Nearly 130 persons were laid off, a majority of whom once again are women. It is hard to accept that Government services should be privatized without cost-benefit studies being made public, whether the service to be privatized will be maintained, whether it will be competent, whether it will be possible for the Canadian people to obtain from this Government an on-going quality of service. This is why we ask the question, and I keep coming back to this, because we always have such "darned difficulty" getting information about the Government.

I asked the Minister in this House to provide us with information on the costs and benefits of privatizing Government services. I am not referring to companies, corporations and so on. I am referring to services, and to this date we do not have many documents. We have had promises. The Minister told me he had handed over everything. I wrote to the Minister on a number of occasions, and I could read you the letters, Mr. Speaker, I still have some of them that were written last February, in which I asked specifically that he answer my question. The question dealt with the tabling of cost-benefit studies on privatization, dated February 11, 1986. I am still waiting for the answer from the Minister. I know the Minister will answer one of these days, but I would like him to do so in the forthcoming days, because it is important for us to know whether the Government has made across-the-board cost-benefit studies.

It was the Minister himself, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) who told me in the House that studies were made with respect to the consequences of privatization. I would now like to read to you, as recorded on page 10246 of Hansard dated January 24, this reply from the Minister:

> I will be more than happy to make available to him any studies which we have bearing on the rate of remuneration and on the cost-benefits type of information he is asking that we have at our disposal.

Mr. Speaker, I have yet to receive that information and close to two months have elapsed since it was requested. Now as far as privatization of services is concerned, perhaps the Government could be more forthcoming and helpful in its negotiations if it provided the information we require.

As far as privatizing Canadian Arsenals Limited is concerned, Mr. Speaker, we do not object, as I said earlier, to privatization. We have done our work as Members of this House and we have tried to convince the Government about two things: first, that the deal should guarantee the jobs and the pension fund of the employees. Second, we asked the Government to keep this transaction in mind and not to forget the mistakes they made and to remember that we will be on our toes in the future in case they try to sell out something else.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to conclude my brief remarks by congratulating once again the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell for his contribution to this matter and also thank my colleagues who have taken part in the long debates in the House. I must say that I am glad we have been able to improve this initiative through amendments introduced by the Government and received very positively by the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that when Canadian Arsenals was initially established it was with the idea that it would eventually be privatized. However, under present circumstances, where the company makes money and is involved in arms production, would the Hon. Member, if he were a member of the Government today, be proceeding with this sale?

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: I shall try to answer this hypothetical question, Mr. Speaker, for I do not sit on the Government side and I do not know if one day that will happen. However, just like any other Member of the House, I look forward to the day when I will be in a position to make decisions for the benefit of the Canadian people.

As far as the current sale is concerned, I cannot say definitely whether I or a Government of which I was a Member would have sold Canadian Arsenals Limited.

All I know is that we would first make sure that this company remains Canadian, and we would protect the rights of Canadians, the collective bargaining agreements and the vested interests of employees.

Personally, I have no hesitation in saying that I have nothing against privatization. I feel that when it is Government policy to divest itself of a number of operations, as I was saying earlier, this could be justified. In this case, I do not see why a Government should continue making the quantities of ammunitions on the scale Canadian Arsenals Limited is doing.

On the other hand, as I indicated in my speech, there are serious constraints in the area of exports, because as far as export permits are concerned, the Government will have to look closely to make sure that these ammunitions are not provided to individuals, groups and countries which are not very friendly.

Except for my concern about the employees and their future, I do not think I have much difficulty with the privatization of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the decision to privatize Canadian Arsenals is part of the Government's policy and, I guess, ideology. It really has very little to do with any benefit to Canadians generally, or even the people concerned directly. Consequently, although I could spend a considerable amount of time discussing the pros and cons of this privatization, as has been done by others, I think it more important to suggest that, since this privatization has been so incredibly badly handled, perhaps the Government could have learned something. If the Government intends to proceed with its policy and ideology, maybe it has learned something which would make it possible that future privatization projects will be a little more carefully thought out, planned, and consequently function a little more smoothly. I think it is unfortunate that such a great amount of anguish and concern was raised among the employees of Canadian Arsenals by the Government in this process. Some basic openness and understanding in discussing the problems would have eliminated that situation. I want to explore the possibility of putting in place a better system for doing this.

Before doing that, I want to make a few comments on this particular privatization. First, does anyone really think that the privatization of Canadian Arsenals will benefit our economy? The purchaser, SNC Group, is a good employer. They see this as a good business step and they are an acceptable buyer. They are promising to expand the business and increase exports. That company is, to some extent, already in the business of munitions, although not necessarily dependent upon this takeover for expansion. If Canada wants to be listed among the exporters of munitions, of death, if you will, around the world, then I guess it would be all right to divest ourselves of this operation and encourage a private company to expand its export sales. However, I am not sure that the people of Canada really want to go in that direction. I am not sure that the people of Canada were very unhappy with the idea that at least the production of large calibre munitions was controlled by a company owned and operated by the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. He will be able to continue this afternoon.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

INCOME TAX

DIFFERENCE IN AMOUNT PAID BY CERTAIN PERSONS IN 1983 AND 1984

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the social injustice created by the Progressive Conservative Government since it took office.

I got a letter from an accountant—not a taxpayer—who based his argument on the 1984 tax tables to prove quite clearly that a person with a 1983 taxable income of $2,030 did not have any tax to pay before the Conservative Government took over, whereas that same person ends up with a $188.50 tax bill for 1984 under the Conservative administration.

Mr. Speaker, that is social injustice and further proof that the poor get poorer and the rich get richer.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE COMMEMORATION DAY

NECESSITY TO BE CHAMPIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, we know that on this day, April 24, we commemorate the Armenian genocide.

Since midnight last evening, 100 young Canadians of Armenian origin have been keeping a vigil on Parliament Hill to remind Canadians of the horrible tragedy of the first holocaust of this century. Theirs was a dignified demonstration and I want to commend their leader, Mr. Michael Iskedjian.

We have a good many champions of human rights in this House, but oftentimes they seem to be rather selective. As Canadians, Mr. Speaker, we must defend the rights of our fellow human beings, wherever they happen to be, whatever their importance or power. We must not be selective.

Most of these young people are Quebecers now, and proud Canadians. They know that Quebec's motto is "Je me souviens", and that is what they wanted to show on Parliament Hill by urging all Canadians to join them on this commemorative occasion.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT'S SOCIAL POLICY OBJECTIVES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, social policy has always been a priority for this Government and will continue to be a priority for a long time to come. Our social policies must take into account the need of five groups in particular. Barriers that prevent the full and equal participation of women, cultural minorities, and the disabled of Canadian society must be reduced. Canada's youth must be able to participate in the building of our economy through employment. Senior citizens must be assured a decent standard of living, as well as access to those social and community services necessary to support independence.

Our Government's approach is working, and it is helping business to create the permanent jobs that are the best form of income security. The Government is providing for those in need with carefully designed assistance programs, such as housing strategy and measures to help the disabled, that give people every opportunity to help themselves. Our pension reforms give countless new advantages to people planning for retirement. These policies are working, and all Canadians have a reason for hope.

NECESSITY TO PREVENT RECURRENCE OF SIMILAR ATROCITIES

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, today we commemorate an event that has tarnished forever the conscience of humanity—the horrible slaughter of one and a half million Armenians, murdered during World War I. Survivors were forced to leave their ancestral homeland, later to disperse throughout the world.

In Canada, year after year, Armenians and Canadians of various origins commemorate that event in remembering all the innocent victims and the sufferings of those who met with atrocious and unnecessary deaths.

As Members of Parliament, we have an opportunity to contribute to peace and understanding between nations. But to that privilege is tied the responsibility of preventing such atrocities for all times.

We must do everything we can to ensure that such events will never be repeated.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, recently there has been considerable controversy created by a decision of the Cape Breton Development Corporation to cancel its participation in the apprenticeship training program. Thousands of people throughout industrial Cape Breton signed a petition, which I will have the honour of presenting in the House in the very near future, calling upon this Crown corporation to reverse its cold and short-sighted decision. However, I have been informed by the executive of the United Mine Workers of America that, due to the intense pressure, the President of Devco has indicated that he is willing to re-enter discussions with the objective of reinstating the apprenticeship program. That, indeed, is good news, not only for the men who were terminated by the corporation as a result of the program's cancellation, but also good news for the future of this Crown corporation.

At a time when productivity is the key to a healthy coal industry, ensuring that the workforce remains up to date with the latest technological skills is crucial. Even more critical is an improved relationship between management and labour. I hope this new willingness on the part of the management to discuss rather than dictate is a sign of a genuine willingness to improve a rather dismal labour relations record.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF ARMENIAN MASSACRE

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, today, April 24, is a special day of remembrance for the Armenian community of the tragic events of 1915 during the last days of the Ottoman Empire. Each year in Parliament, Members stand to express their sympathy to victims of those events.

However, I believe that it is now appropriate for Parliament as a whole to institute a formal annual remembrance of these and other events which typify man's inhumanity to man. Therefore I have tabled a motion, which I hope will receive the unanimous consent of the House, to designate this week in April, each year, as a week of commemoration for man's inhumanity to man.

Legitimate remembrance of the past, however, should not extend to violence in Canada. To do so would be to jeopardize the foundations of our society. Yesterday three individuals pleaded guilty to such a violent act. Today, within the best traditions of Canada, we have seen a peaceful demonstration of remembrance in Ottawa.

Let us work together to build a better future for Canada and for the world, where the rights of all are fully protected.

CHANGE IN REGULATIONS—EFFECT ON EX-SERVICEMEN

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I want to read the following statement into the record:

I was released from the Canadian Armed Forces in 1972, at age 40, after 16 years of service, for medical reasons.

He goes on to say that because of high unemployment he lost his part-time employment in October, 1985. He is 54 years old, with a grade 8 education, and is unable to obtain further work. He goes on to state:

However, I was able to meet my financial commitments with my pension, and full UIC benefits.

As of January 5, 1986, when this new legislation came into effect, my UIC benefits have been reduced $58 a week, or $251.33 a month.

As a result, he lost his home and his automobile and, if it continues, he will be forced into personal bankruptcy.

The present Conservative Government has brought this affliction on Mr. Cornelius Funk, who had served in the Canadian Armed Forces for 16 years and was honourably discharged, and has brought it upon tens of thousands of other members of the Armed Forces and Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Do the Minister and Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) need more of these letters—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

BALTIC EVENING

COMMEMORATION OF INDEPENDENCE OF BALTIC STATES

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, today Canadians of Estonian, Latvian, and Lithuanian background are meeting with government officials here in Ottawa. Tonight, on Parliament Hill, they will hold the Fourteenth Baltic Evening to celebrate the cultures of these three countries—cultures that are under severe assault through Russification—as well as to hold high the cause of self-determination for these three countries that are occupied by the Soviet Union.

Too often only lip service is paid to the doctrine of national self-determination. In this struggle for democracy, every signal, no matter how small, and every message, no matter how symbolic, should be sent to Soviet Russia. For this reason I call on the Government of Canada to list the acting Honorary Consuls General of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania in the registry of diplomatic, consular and other representatives in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECTS OF INTEREST RATE REDUCTION

Mr. Barry Moore (Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle): Mr. Speaker, since Tuesday last, Canadian borrowers have begun enjoying the interest rate reduction announced Monday by most American banks, even before the Bank of Canada could set its new discount rate.

That, Mr. Speaker, is ample evidence that leaders of the Canadian financial community have confidence in this Conservative Government.

That significant .25 per cent reduction will benefit all Canadians by allowing for new jobs to be created. Small businessmen can make new investments, and young Canadians can own their own homes. Moreover, that reduction will result in new investors' confidence in the business community and will attract foreign investment to Canada.

Mr. Speaker, that interest rate reduction will have a favourable impact on the economy for all Canadians, and they will certainly appreciate it.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

FUNDING OF CENTRE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in 1982 Canada had 1.21 million work-related injuries. These were injuries affecting over 12 per cent of our workers. There were 555,000 disabling injuries. The benefit payments alone totalled $1.627 billion. Despite these horrendous figures the federal Government has seen fit to cut funding to the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, despite the fact that government officials admitted in committee last night that there is increased demand for the services provided by that centre. In addition to that, although Section 96 of the Canada Labour Code calls for the setting up of an advisory committee on occupational safety and health, the federal Government has decided it cannot afford to do so.

The Canadian Labour Congress has declared this coming Monday a day of mourning for those who lost their lives and limbs in Canadian workshops. The least the Government can do is recognize that day of mourning and provide funding for the centre—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.?

THE ECONOMY

CONTRIBUTION OF PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Everyday, Mr. Speaker, our economy is improving. Our Government has created the proper climate for this economic growth, but we must also share the credit with businessmen within our communities. Business people have understood the dynamism of our message. The private sector and the Government of Canada are now working as a team. Within my riding of Lévis, in the city of Charny, business people will hold an exhibition this coming weekend. Our dynamic business people have organized this Quebec South Shore exhibition without subsidies; moreover, the admission will be free. It is the most significant exhibition of all those held in the South Shore cities of Greater Quebec. Our congratulations and thanks to these business people for their contribution to the economic recovery. Let us all go to this exhibition.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RESCIND DECISION TO CHANGE REGULATION AFFECTING BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, 34,000 people in Canada have been deceived once again by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney): those who have taken an early retirement.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) and the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne). Both these Conservative members are blaming their Government for willfully stealing the money of Canadian taxpayers, of 34,000 Canadians and servicemen who came here to demonstrate on the Hill their disapproval of the Government's decision.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to know that these people have worked hard all their lives. They have contributed to the Unemployment Insurance Fund and their private pension plans. In Trois-Rivières, the Government has robbed Philips' and Wabasso's employees who have been laid-off.

Mr. Speaker, I invite all Conservative members to follow the example of the Hon. Member for Champlain and all the other Members of the House and pressure the Prime Minister into reversing this stupid and idiotic decision.

PRIVATE SECTOR'S CREATION OF CAREER-RELATED JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, yesterday members of the opposition Parties criticized the Challenge '86 Program for stressing the importance of private sector career-related jobs for students. There is obviously not one business person amongst the lot of them. Do they not realize that the vast majority of people work in the private sector? Logic would suggest that students should acquire career experience in the private sector to increase their opportunity for employment.

In Etobicoke North the success of Challenge '86 is evident. Six hundred students have already registered under the program and 70 per cent of the jobs available are in the private sector, jobs such as technicians, accounting assistants, computer programmers, sales and marketing jobs, bookkeeping, and the list goes on and on. I suggest to members of the Opposition that they go back to their ridings and witness the success of this program for themselves.

ANNIVERSARY OF ARMENIAN MASSACRE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on the evening of April 24, 1915, 254 Armenian intellectuals were arrested in Istanbul, never to be seen again. Talaat Pasha, who was Minister of the Interior, said: "I will deal the Armenians such a blow that they will not be able to raise their heads for 50 years". He was the cruel, prophetic architect of the genocide which began 71 years ago today.

Before World War I there were two million Armenians in the Ottoman Empire. After the war there were only 100,000. Canada must help to right this wrong. The facts are clear. A recent United Nations subcommittee's report refers to "The Ottoman Massacre of Armenians". We stand with Mr. Hagopian, Chairman of the Armenian National Committee of Canada, and all Canadians of Armenian heritage, to win this battle of human rights recognition that the genocide did occur.

ANNIVERSARY OF ARMENIAN MASSACRE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, today we commemorate the seventy-first anniversary of the Armenian massacre. Hundreds of people gathered on Parliament Hill today to recognize what has been stated to be the first great act of genocide in this century. It is time for our Government and other Governments to do something about it.

Many of us will gather this evening at the Baltic dinner to recognize the actions of the Soviet Union against the Baltic republics. We do not expect to have very much influence on the Soviet Union. But when we are dealing with allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization we do expect to have some influence. It is time for the Government of Canada to press the Government of Turkey to recognize and acknowledge the atrocity of 1915, and to press that Government to provide redress to the Armenian people.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—LUMBER EXPORTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, when I saw the Tory Members rise to their feet I thought that perhaps President Reagan was in the gallery.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: They would be on their knees if that were the case.

Mr. Axworthy: My question is for the Prime Minister. Last evening we saw that in staving off defeat of the trade proposal President Reagan made several very important promises to members of the U.S. Senate Finance Committee. I would like to ask the Prime Minister about those promises and the significance which they hold for Canada.

With respect to the question of lumber, Senator Packwood said that he has been promised a letter from the President of the United States outlining proposals for separate and quick negotiations to resolve the lumber issue between our two countries. Considering how vital this is to our interests, have we asked to be consulted on that letter? Does the Prime Minister still stand by his statement that there will be no concessions whatsoever even though last evening he said that we have to be prepared to make trade-offs to serve the best interests of the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I said no such thing. That is an absolute and untrammelled falsehood and must be withdrawn. I said no such thing. I want the Hon. Member to rise in his place and withdraw what is an absolute falsehood.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONSULT UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want the Prime Minister to answer the question, not get on this false high horse of his. Is he prepared to reiterate his commitment not to make concessions? Will he consult with the President of the United States about the letter he is sending in regard to lumber negotiations so that we will know what is going on and so that we will not sell out the lumber interests of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That is different, Mr. Speaker. That is just the usual Liberal distortion. We can deal with that.

The President of the United States said that the negotiations will begin without conditions. That is the position of the Government of Canada. That is what transpired, exactly what transpired. I know that it causes the Hon. Member from Winnipeg anguish and heartache because he has been predicting the contrary for weeks. He will just have to live with it.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, if I were playing the Prime Minister's game I would ask for a retraction of an obvious distortion. We have said no such thing and the Prime Minister has still not answered the question.

The President has made a promise to U.S. Senate Finance Committee members to resolve the lumber issue under separate negotiations. Have we agreed to those measures? Will we be consulted on what are the proposals? Is the Prime Minister still prepared to stand by his previous statement that there will be no concessions on lumber?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the comment of the hon. gentleman is prefaced with at least two or three, if not more, falsehoods. I can tell him that there are no preconditions. The President of the United States has said it. The Government of Canada has said it. If that is not good enough for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, it is good enough for Canadians.

REQUEST FOR FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates as well to the proposed free trade negotiations with the United States. In today's editorial, La Presse pointedly emphasizes, and I quote:

> Ottawa's internal preparations have not been as thorough as Washington's: Mr. Mulroney does not have the kind of wide mandate which Mr. Reagan has just secured.

Here is my question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister intend to convene his provincial counterparts as soon as possible to shed light on the Premiers' position in the forthcoming negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Notwithstanding the editorial opinion expressed in La Presse, Mr. Speaker, I think you would agree with me that other editorialists have taken the opposite view. Several major American newspapers recently stated that—

Mr. Malépart: There are others besides Americans.

Mr. Mulroney: We are talking about complexes, so the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie wants to put in his grain of salt.

As early as last November be began the process of inviting the provinces to get in on this. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is actively involved in the process, which is about to be completed. Once that is done I will be pleased to advise my colleague.

NON NEGOTIABLE ITEMS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, extremely important matters are raised in negotiations with the provinces. A number of issues included in the negotiations with the United States fall under provincial jurisdiction. I should like to ask the Prime Minister—my question relates to several of these issues—whether he intends to live up to his commitment not to put on the negotiation table such subjects as agricultural marketing boards, the Auto Pact, social services, and cultural industries?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): On several occasions, Mr. Speaker, including last September 26, I outlined Canada's position and we intend to stand firm.

PHARMACEUTICAL PATENT LAWS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Washington many Senators stressed their opposition to our patent laws on drugs, laws which save Canadian consumers and seniors billions each year on generic drugs. Will the Prime Minister guarantee Canadians that no concessions will be given to the United States in the form of changes to n these patent drug laws during or prior to the free trade negotiations?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have two points. First, when the Hon. Member uses the word "billions", it is simply inaccurate, and he should not use it to embellish his question. Second, the Government has said if there is any legislative change, the Hon. Member, like everyone else, will have to wait for that legislation to be introduced.

Mr. Langdon: In fact our research shows that billions are at risk.

LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Senator Packwood says that President Reagan won his vote when he promised him legal actions to "make sure timber is protected". Does the Prime Minister consider such an attack on our softwood lumber producers to be a good faith beginning to the free trade negotiations with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only assume the researcher who predicted the billions was the same one who predicted the loss of 100,000 jobs under the last Budget and 580,000 new jobs were created.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The statement which was given applies. There are no preconditions. Of course we recognize that in any civilized bargaining event there is give and take. That is what it is all about. This is not a zero-sum game. We believe that both the United States and Canada can negotiate an arrangement which will enhance their possibility of economic growth on both sides.

• (1425)

A successful negotiation does not mean less for one and more for the other. A good negotiation is a good deal for both sides, and it means more jobs in Canada, greater riches in Canada, and greater prosperity in North America. That is what we are looking for.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: In short, Mr. Speaker, our timber producers better watch out.

Mr. Dick: He didn't say that.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister give Members of Parliament the same role and input as U.S. Senators have now won and agree to set up a special all-Party parliamentary committee to watchdog these proceedings and report back regularly to this House?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the question posed by the Hon. Member gives me an opportunity to remind not only the House but the country about the incredible new reforms that we have instituted in this House which give committees of this House self-start ability. They are able to draw up their own agendas, and I hope the Hon. Member will take on a constructive role rather than always carping and being negative, as he always is on this issue.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LIBYA—ADVICE TO CANADIAN CITIZENS TO LEAVE COUNTRY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I will put my question to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is aware that the Secretary of State's warning to Canadians to leave Libya has caused concern. In fact it has been described as having baffled, puzzled, and dismayed the international diplomatic corps, not only Canada's but others. Could the Prime Minister explain to the House why the Secretary of State made that quite extraordinary statement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not think the statement was extraordinary. I thought it was a prudent and thoughtful statement in the circumstances by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, which reflected his view and the view of the Government of Canada.

GOVERNMENT'S VIEW

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State twice said last night on the program The Journal, and I have the transcript here: "The calm might not last". Was the Secretary of State for External Affairs expressing the view of the Government and, if so, what factual basis does the Government have for making that kind of declaration?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Westmount has clearly not spoken with his Leader because his Leader last night agreed with the Secretary of State for External Affairs that it was the right thing to have indicated to the country. Indeed, there is a period of calm and the Secretary of State for External Affairs invited Canadians in Libya, given the delicacy of the situation, to take advantage of that period for the reasons that he set forward, which I thought were very prudent.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—IMPACT STUDIES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It relates to the free trade negotiations. I am sorry the Government is reluctant to commit itself to having a select committee in the process. Can the Prime Minister tell us what the Government intends to do with the wide range of studies about the cost impact and benefits of free trade to different regions and industries in Canada, information which so far has been kept private?

Does the Government intend to share that information with Canadians now that the free trade talks are under way in order to ensure an informed basis for consultation, and when will it start making that information available?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, many studies have been done. We have shared those studies to date with the provinces and, to varying degrees, we will be sharing them with the trade advisory committees that have been set up under rules of confidentiality.

It is not our intention to share these studies with the public at this time because the studies would then become the information of the United States, with whose representatives we are going to sit down and negotiate. It does not make sense to arm, so to speak, the people with whom you are about to enter negotiations. That is very foolish. You do not show your hand to the other party prior to the commencement of negotiations, nor will the other party be showing their studies to us.

FREE TRADE—INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DOES NOT WANT TO DIVULGE CERTAIN STUDIES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am frankly shocked at the statement made by the Minister as, according to him, 25 million Canadians will be excluded from the process.

Since the Conseil du patronat du Québec and the Canadian Manufacturers Association have clearly indicated that they want the assessments of the impact of free trade on their industries to be made public, why is the Government refusing to share this information with the public and the industries concerned?

• (1430)

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, representatives of all sectors of our economy, including the manufacturing, labour, and farming sectors, will be involved in the elaborate advisory system which we have set up. They will be helping us with those studies. They will be interpreting them for us. There will be full participation.

Mr. Cassidy: Not by ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Kelleher: That is what Canadians want, and that is what we have set up the system to achieve.

MONCTON WORKSHOPS—FUTURE OF WORKFORCE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and is with regard to the CN workshops in Moncton. The Minister has a reputation in the House of being an honourable man. What sort of pressures would have to be exerted upon him in order for him to live up to the commitment he made to the Member of Parliament for Moncton when he said he "could not support any massive reduction in the CN workforce in Moncton"? Will the Minister now honour his commitment of June 7, 1985?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Member for Moncton has been very effective in drawing to my attention, and to the attention of our caucus, concerns with respect to the CN workers in Moncton. He has done that in a very fair manner. He has not engaged in the kind of flimflam and rhetoric which stirs up anxiety and fears among the people of Moncton.

As I have indicated in the House before, there is an excess capacity problem with the three main shops in CN's network. That is being examined. CN is looking at it very carefully. When adjustments have to be made I am sure they will be made in a fair and reasonable manner.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, if there has been any anxiety experienced by the people of Moncton, it has been caused by the Minister's indecision and waffling with regard to the CN workshops in Moncton.

REPRESENTATIONS MADE TO MINISTER

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Would the Minister of Transport tell the House whether or not he has received representations from the Government of New Brunswick? If so, when did he receive those representations and what is the nature of them? Would he at least give those answers to the House of Commons?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if we were to take the Hon. Member at his word, the CN shops in Moncton would have been closed a year ago. The fact of the matter is that they are not closed. We are trying to work out the capacity problems and are considering a number of alternatives and solutions. The Hon. Member should co-operate and be a little constructive rather than being destructive—

Mr. Dingwall: Just answer the question. Stop waffling.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and using this as a means to further his own political interests.

Mr. Garneau: You should answer the question.

CHANGE IN REGULATIONS—EFFECT ON FORMER ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Tremendous hardship is being experienced by many former Armed Forces personnel as a result of the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act vis-à-vis the inclusion of pension income as earned income. Does the Prime Minister not agree that waiting for the Forget Commission to report on this issue is a flagrant abdication of his responsibility for the men and women who have served the country so well?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, as well as other Ministers, stated, we are very conscious of these concerns. This issue and a number of others, have been referred to the Forget Commission. Other matters have been brought up before the Forget Commission during the course of the review which it is presently completing. We expect to have the report sometime later this year and are prepared to consider the recommendations in that report and act accordingly.

Mr. Deans: There is no need to wait for it.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. How can he and his Government be so cruel, uncaring, and unfeeling as to deny these people the unemployment insurance benefits to which they are justly entitled?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what more I can add to my previous response. As the Hon. Member well knows, this decision was taken about a year and a half ago. A good deal subsequent to that decision being announced and referred to on many occasions, the Forget Commission was appointed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Is it the Government now?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The matter has been the subject of some discussion with the Forget Commission We expect that the Forget Commission will report on this in due course.

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Employment and Immigration always tells us that the Forget Commission was appointed to correct the UIC inequities which were in fact created by her and the Minister of Finance.

Why did the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration make the decision to deny unemployment insurance benefits, in whole or in part, to retired members of the Canadian Armed Forces, the RCMP, and others? Let us get to the crux of the matter. Why did the Minister make the decision in the first place?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will get right to the crux of the matter. The Government appointed this commission to study a number of inequities and problems which have developed with the unemployment insurance system over the past 15 years. That is the reason the unemployment insurance review is being undertaken right now. We believe it is important not to prejudge the results of its report because I am sure there will be a great deal of interaction among the recommendations of the commission. I think that if the Hon. Member sat down and thought about it he would agree with me.

Mr. Hopkins: I have been thinking of it since November 8, 1984, and I do not agree with it.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister not admit that he brought this measure forward without any debate in Parliament or consultation because he was concerned about his own image, and because he and the Government could not care less about people retired from the Canadian Armed Forces who earn low incomes? These are the very people they said they would support during their campaign.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is absolute garbage. The things which the Government has done to help people with low incomes proves that it is garbage. We have increased the child tax credit. We have accelerated the payment of the child tax credit.

Mr. Hopkins: You increased their taxes by 23 per cent.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member would listen, he might learn something. In the last Budget we introduced a refundable low income tax credit. That tax credit will help people in—

Mr. Malépart: It's a bluff.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie says that's enough. He can't stand the truth.

Mr. Gauthier: No, he said: "It's a bluff".

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He is unable to stand the truth because he knows the truth hurts. He knows that this Government has one of the best records on social justice that any Government has had.

EFFECT ON EX-SERVICEMAN

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is with regard to the cutting of unemployment insurance benefits of retired members of the Armed Forces. The Prime Minister has a letter from Mr. Cornelius Funk who has lost his home and his automobile and is in danger of being driven into bankruptcy because of loss of unemployment insurance benefits.

Would the Prime Minister indicate what action the Government will take to protect those retired members of the Armed Forces who are being bankrupted by this provision? Will he forget the business of the Forget Commission? What action is the Government going to take to protect these retired members of the Armed Forces?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify a couple of the things the Hon. Member stated. The provisions which were introduced do not take away unemployment insurance. They simply provide that pension income is to be treated as income for unemployment insurance purposes.

Mr. Deans: Would you care to explain the difference?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If there are people who are receiving low pensions, they will receive unemployment insurance. It is there according to the rules.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. He has had an opportunity to read the letter. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether the Government has any plans to protect those retired members of the Armed Forces who are losing their homes and possessions because of the Government's action in cutting unemployment insurance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is neglecting to mention the fact that through the economic statement of November 8, 1984, under the leadership of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Government increased the pensions which veterans receive.

CONDITIONS CONCERNING PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. He should have some respect for the 34,000 people who are waiting for his answer.

The 34,000 Canadians whose unemployment insurance benefits have been cut off would like to know why the Prime Minister, when he closed down Iron Ore, bragged about having a good pension plan for the workers of this company. They were entitled to receive unemployment insurance benefits while he is now refusing to pay the same benefits to the employees of Philips, Wabasso and Dominion Textile throughout Canada even though they contributed to the plan.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was then in the private sector, as were the financial critic of the Liberal Party and others. The leader of the Liberal Party himself was in the private sector. What we did at the time should be examined closely by the public, including the Hon. Member.

However, I can say that the package which we put together for the employees of the IOC mining company in Schefferville was described by the metal workers as the most generous retirement program in Canada.

APPLICATION OF REGULATION GOVERNING BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister takes pride in having put together a retirement plan thanks to the Liberal Government. He put this plan together to save his political skin. Today, the Prime Minister does not want to give us answers. Why deny the employees of Philips who were laid off in Trois-Rivières the right to the same unemployment insurance benefits as the Liberals gave to the employees of Iron Ore? Why do you treat these Canadians unfairly?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no injustice, quite the opposite. The reasons which were—

Mr. Malépart: You do not know the facts. Do not get all excited, you simply are not aware of what is going on.

Mr. Mulroney: If we do not know the facts, we shall sit down. However, I must say that the Schefferville voters in the Manicouagan constituency certainly examined whether the situation was fair or not, and they gave me a majority of 18,000 votes in the last election.

PENSIONS

PENSIONS OF CANADIAN ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the hardship which will be felt by present and future retirees from the Canadian Armed Forces if the Government proceeds to deindex their pensions, would the Government assure the House that it will not proceed with that Draconian measure?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I have said on many occasions, we are proceeding with the review of the federal pension arrangements under the PSSA, as well as those for the Armed Forces and the RCMP. I have said time and time again that review is being done with full respect to the commitment we made as a Government and Party to be just and equitable to everyone concerned. We certainly will be just and equitable to everyone concerned.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree that the Government will not live up to the commitment it made as a Party through the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands in January, 1982, when she assured Armed Forces personnel that the Conservative Party would oppose any such measure, when the Liberals tried to do the same thing?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would only like to remind the Hon. Member that we, as a Party, have said that there were some fundamental reforms which had to be introduced to the public sector pension plans. Those reforms are meant to put the pension funds on a sound financial basis with due respect to equity and justice for all concerned. That is exactly the intent of the document now before Cabinet for discussion.

ABORTION

THERAPEUTIC ABORTION COMMITTEE PROCEDURES—DEATH OF OTTAWA WOMAN

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

[English]

The people of Ottawa recently witnessed the tragedy of a young woman dying as a result of an abortion procedure after the therapeutic committee had not met with the patient to discuss her circumstances and alternatives prior to the abortion. Can the Minister indicate if there is any way our Government can ensure that these committees fully exercise the serious responsibility given to them under our Criminal Code?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this is a question of the administration of health and hospital services which is, of course, one of provincial responsibility. The supervision of therapeutic abortion committees in hospitals rests with provincial Governments. I am sure they will have taken note of the coroner's inquest into that matter here in Ottawa and will act accordingly to see that there is proper supervision of these committees, and that they operate in accordance with the law.

PENSIONS

PENSIONS OF CANADIAN ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I have a letter here from that Minister when she was a member of the Opposition, in which she stated she and her Party would fight any attempt by the Government to remove indexation of servicemen's pensions. Can the Prime Minister contradict the statement of the President of the Treasury Board today and reaffirm the faith of the people that Flora MacDonald is in fact a—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Copps: That the Minister of Employment is a Minister who keeps her word?

Mr. Skelly: What about six and five?

Mr. Deans: That was when the Liberals were introducing it.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration keeps her word, and this Government keeps its word.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: You cut the pensions.

Mr. de Cotret: We have promised equity and justice in the review of public pension arrangements. At the same time we promised to put the fund on a sound financial basis, which has never been the case before. We are moving along with these commitments. We have promised to protect the rights acquired by people already in the service, and we will deliver on every one of those commitments.

REPRESENTATIONS TO PRIME MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Prime Minister if he deigns to answer. He answers the President of the United States. I would hope he would answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member have a question, please?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: That is one way to guarantee you will get an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Can we have a question?

Ms. Copps: The Prime Minister refuses to listen to his own Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants.

Mr. Crosbie: Question!

Ms. Copps: He refuses to listen to the Hon. Member for Champlain.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Ms. Copps: Will the Prime Minister listen to the servicemen who were forced for the first time in history to march on the Hill today, or will he at least listen to the Progressive Conservative Women's Association of New Brunswick who came all the way to Ottawa to fight against his Government's unjust changes to unemployment insurance—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Ms. Copps: Will he at least listen to them?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It may be supplementary to an earlier question but it was not supplementary to the Hon. Member's first question.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

Ms. Copps: You shouldn't laugh at it, Brian; it's going to haunt you for a long time to come.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: Remember Madame Denis.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: Remember Madame Denis.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Both sides. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

Ms. Copps: The Prime Minister laughs.

Some Hon. Members: Out!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East and other Hon. Members will come to order, please, and will stay in order. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I will give it a try. Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Energy. We all know now why the gas consumers are not getting the full benefit of the drop in crude oil prices. Jack McLeod, the President of Shell Canada, just announced that his company is holding up to 4 cents a litre of the consumers' money in order to boost the shareholders' profits. Will the Prime Minister now pick up the telephone and telephone Bill Hopper at Petro-Canada and ask him to take the lead and lower the price of gasoline by at least 4 cents a litre so the consumers will enjoy the full savings they deserve?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of points that have to be made here. The federal Government does not set gasoline prices, never has and does not now. Second, the Minister of Energy has wired the companies and asked them to pass the savings on to the consumers. It is obvious that it has been done because gasoline prices in Toronto alone have dropped from 50 cents a litre to 36 cents a litre, a saving of some 13, 14 cents a litre, or 59 cents a gallon. The consumers are benefiting from the lower crude prices.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER ASK PRESIDENT OF SHELL CANADA TO REDUCE PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister, and as a friend of big business maybe he can answer the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Order. Let me make it clear now that questions, as all honourable Members know, are to the Government. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville has a supplementary?

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister of Canada prepared to call his friend, Shell Canada President Jack MacLeod, and suggest to him that he should immediately lower the price of his gasoline by at least 4 cents a litre? Would he do that now?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I find it very interesting that on the one hand the NDP ask for a floor price so that the oil companies can survive, and on the other hand they are asking to lower prices more and more and more. Moneys that come to the companies go into exploration, and if we can keep exploration going in this country from these moneys that they are keeping, then it is all the better for jobs in Canada out west where we need them in the energy industries.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC SERVICE

REGIONAL PAY SCALES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the principle of equal pay for equal work has been violated by this Government in negotiations with the PSAC in that unequal pay for exactly the same work has been forced on the general trades and labour, and Newfoundland and most of the Maritimes are at the bottom of the heap. My question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Does not the President of the Treasury Board feel that the Government is guilty of promoting discrimination and "how can this be justified?"

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the preamble to my honourable colleague's question. Nothing has been forced on anyone. This is a matter, as I am sure my honourable colleague knows, that is subject to negotiation. I will say that about one-fifth of federal Public Servants are paid on some form of regional pay basis where we attempt to compare the pay rates in the federal Public Service with the pay rates available for similar trades in the different regions. That has been a practice that has been longstanding, as he should know from his side of the House, and it is a practice that is equitable and fair and respects the regional pay practices of the different regions of the country.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the charge discrimination and the question "how can this be justified?" is from the Minister of Justice in a letter to the President of the Treasury Board two weeks ago on this same issue.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Baker: I agree with the Minister of Justice. How can the Government justify what the Minister of Justice says is unjust?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in open negotiations with the PSAC I am very happy to say that we were able to reach an agreement to reduce the regional zones from 22 to 16, and that was accepted by the negotiators at the table, and furthermore ratified by the general membership. Subsequent to the ratification the question was raised by labour as to whether or not we would entertain further reductions during the term of the present contract. I have maintained my open door policy and I am willing to discuss it with them. They have been invited to meet with me. I can only tell you that in terms of our record in labour management relations we have no lessons to learn from the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENTS FUNDED BY CIA—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will the Government make public the report of special counsel George Cooper's investigation into whether Canada was involved, or for that matter was aware of CIA funded brainwashing experiments conducted on nine Canadian citizens?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): The report which I commissioned on this issue, which had been ignored by the previous Government, was received about three weeks ago. I am studying the matter with some of my colleagues. We have to consider not only what is in the best interests of the people of Canada and what the Government should do, but what is in the best interests of the plaintiffs in this matter in the States as well. When we are finished with our consideration we will be in touch with the representatives of the plaintiffs to discuss the situation with them and we will announce our decision. This is an open Government unafraid to look at the record and to bring it forth to the people of Canada to see.

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE FURNISHED TO VICTIMS OF EXPERIMENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice whether, in the circumstances, after he has completed his investigation he would make available to the lawyer representing those nine people a copy of that report in order that he can determine what would be in the best interests of those nine clients of his in this very important matter that should be resolved now?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): I certainly accept this as a representation, and I can also assure the Hon. Member that if it is our decision the report should be made public we will certainly see that the person representing the plaintiffs will receive the report before the report is made public.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

SIZE OF POLISH CONSULATE IN ETOBICOKE—LAKESHORE

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of External Relations. In light of current construction doubling the size of the Polish consulate located in Etobicoke-Lakeshore, even though no apparent reason exists to justify this increased activity, could the Minister inform the House whether the Government of Canada has authorized any increase in the number of Polish government representatives accredited to work at this consulate?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, departmental staff requirement assessments are based on two criteria, namely reciprocity and assessment of needs.

As to the consulate mentioned, I can tell the Hon. Member that we have recently recommended that one Toronto consulate position be transferred to the Montreal consulate.

TRADE

INQUIRY WHETHER SEPARATE NEGOTIATIONS WILL BE HELD WITH AMERICANS ON SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who, earlier, failed to answer the question put to him by my hon. colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry. I therefore repeat the question: Will there be separate talks with the Americans on softwood or was Senator Packwood misled by the President of the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the President told Senator Packwood. All I can say to my hon. friend, who was far more specific in the way he phrased his question than his friend from Winnipeg—Fort Garry, is that we have an agreement with the U.S. Government to start the negotiating process, without any preconditions. That is the spirit in which we intend to approach the entire process.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION ON NEGOCIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister being facetious? If he agreed with the President of the United States there would be no preconditions, does that mean that they agreed on a full set of "post" conditions, so that there are conditions just the same? The Prime Minister may have been alluding to this in a press conference, when he referred to trade-offs. He may have said there were no preconditions, but there may be a whole series of conditions agreed on beforehand that will be discussed once the talks have started, and what are those conditions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can inform my hon. friend that there is nothing of the sort. When I said that we had no preconditions, there were no other kinds of conditions involved either.

Yesterday, I mentioned in a discussion that I know from personal experience, and in fact anyone who has any experience in this area knows perfectly well that in negotiations as complex as these, which involve trade worth $150 billion a year between our two countries, there will be an exchange of views and there will compromises. That is the very nature of fruitful negotiations. So from the outset one says: I am not going to touch that or I won't do this, we will see. But we know that there will be an exchange of opinions and views throughout the talks on this subject, and we hope that the ultimate outcome will be very favourable for Canada and the United States.

If that is not the case, Canadians will decide not to accept it, and the Americans will do the same. However, we are convinced that as a result of serious and mature talks, our prosperity will be enhanced and that here in Canada we will create a new dimension of wealth and new jobs for Canadians as a result of these bilateral talks.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, if you are going to make a statement on the matter which I raised with you yesterday, would you reserve any statement in view of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is absent from the House? It is my understanding that you undertook to look at the "blues".

Mr. Speaker: As the Hon. Member knows, the normal practice is that when the Speaker is asked to consider a matter in the "blues", if he thinks there is anything to bring back, he will do so.

ACCEPTABILITY OF SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would request that Your Honour look at the "blues" because we on this side of the House are surprised by Your Honour saying that a second question by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), would not be a supplementary to the first question she asked. Perhaps something was not clear as a result of the noise in the House, but would Your Honour undertake to look at the "blues"? It appears to us, at least, that the question was on the exact same subject and would directly follow the first question.

Mr. Speaker: I will look at it. If I remember correctly, the first question I heard concerned the deindexation of pensions and the second question was about the unemployment benefits issue. That is what I heard, but I will be glad to check the "blues".

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, is the Deputy House Leader in a position to give us the menu for the coming week? If not, will he tell us when a House Leaders meeting to discuss that is likely to be held?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Deputy House Leader—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is my intention to convene with the Hon. Member who is acting in the place of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) as Deputy House Leader of the Official Opposition, with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and the assorted members of their staffs, to have a cup of tea and discuss the business of the House for the next week.

I hope we can have the unanimous consent of the House to come back later this day on a point of order to announce the fruits of our discussions.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services) that Bill C-87, An Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Canadian Arsenals Limited

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, before we recessed for lunch, I was attempting to explain some of our concerns about the procedures in this Bill.

I believe we can show that this divestiture is not necessarily in the best interests of the economy of Canada. It is very definitely not in the best interests of the employees of Canadian Arsenals who were concerned about their pensions and job security. Furthermore, since this divestiture would involve a transfer from one labour code to another, they were concerned about not being covered by a bargaining agent during that transfer and that there would be no protection for their collective agreements.

I am disturbed at the Government's lack of effort to attempt to come to a satisfactory agreement with SNC, or at least advise that company what was involved in its purchase of Canadian Arsenals. It is obvious that the Government intended to use its majority to push the Bill through the House without any consideration for its side effects on the employees.

Canadian Arsenals Limited had good labour relations, and I understand that these good relations still exist with the new company. However, the Government was prepared to make the transfer without ensuring that those good labour relations would continue. If the Member from the Liberal Party and I had not held up the Bill and insisted on negotiations with SNC, it is not unreasonable to believe that the employees of Canadian Arsenals would have been prepared to strike as a result of being dealt with unfairly during this takeover period. That is not the kind of company that SNC thought it was purchasing.

Perhaps Members will recall when the employees of Canadian Arsenals demonstrated on the Hill. The fact that they found it necessary to do this is unbelievable in itself. Those demonstrators wore buttons saying that they were an explosive union. The point they were making is that labour unrest is very dangerous in their kind of work and therefore the Government should have ensured that everything was in place before the transfer was made.

This Bill has now reached third reading stage, which means this is the final opportunity to discuss the Bill. Can we expect the Government to take a much more careful approach to privatization in the future? In this particular case every step of the process was sloppy. There was sloppy planning and an arrogant disregard for the people involved. The employees were left out of the negotiations. The whole process was kept secret to the point where everyone involved with it was uncomfortable. I believe that even Members of the Government felt they did not have enough information.

I want to spend a few minutes on the procedure because I think procedure is critical to the concerns of Government with respect to the divestiture of future corporations. Possibly there will be a less disturbing procedure in the future because the Government has learned something from its unbelievably inept handling of this divestiture.

I would like to put before the House the following procedures which I believe should have been followed. First, when the decision has been made to sell the Government should follow the requirements of Section 99 of the Financial Administration Act and have the Minister table in this House his directive to the corporation. In this particular case the Government did not follow the law of the land and table before this House a directive saying this Company was going to be sold. I know the Minister suggested he did not have to do that, but the law says he does. The Minister failed to fulfil those requirements. Had he done so, we would have had a situation where everyone in the House knew the procedures which were to be followed. I think it is typical of the arrogance of the Government that it was unwilling to fulfil the requirements of the laws of the country.

Second, there should be full and complete disclosure of the tendering process and criteria, possibly in tabling the Financial Administration Act directive. The public, the employees and any possible interested purchasers have the right to receive that kind of information.

At the same time the Government should have put before Parliament a Bill—not after they sold the company but before—that would allow it to sell the company which could be discussed within the structure of Parliament. I believe it is very arrogant of the Government to require Parliament to pass a Bill forming the company and then bring a Bill before Parliament suggesting we rubber stamp it because it has already sold the company. A Bill to sell the company should have been passed before the tenders were called. In that Bill should have been placed the kind of information which would have allowed the bidding company to know it would be taking over a certain kind of agreement with respect to the employees, and that it had some responsibility to have a continuum of employee benefits. That was not in the Bill at all, and it was not done in this divestiture until it was forced upon the Government and the purchaser. The purchaser had already made the deal before it knew it had problems with the employee agreement. This, in my opinion, was very inept on the part of the Government.

The Bill should include a price which the Government thinks the corporation is worth, so that when tenders are submitted Parliament can make some decision and approach the situation with some secure knowledge that the corporation was not passed on as part of a patronage deal by the Government. Before the Government asked for tenders it should have established a price range within which it would be acceptable to sell the corporation. The Government should put itself beyond suspicion. It should say: "This is what the corporation is worth. Let Parliament look at that". It should then call for tenders. If it does not get that amount it could sell the corporation later or suggest to Parliament the reasons why it cannot get that price.

The Bill, and possibly the tender papers, should set down the rules as far as the employees are concerned. The tendering criteria must be included in the conditions of sale so that we do not have the same kind of situation we had in this divestiture where, for a period of several months after the actual sale had been completed, negotiations went on between SNC, the Government of Canada and the employees. That is an incredible way of doing business. If the conditions of sale show the contractual and acquired rights of the employees and include the vesting of their pensions and their rights within the Superannuation Act, it could then be maintained in the sale and the purchaser would know what it was getting into.

Finally, available to Parliament before the sale is confirmed should be all of the information with respect to price and the conditions of sale. If possible, they should be made public at that time so that no one could accuse the Government or the Parliament of Canada of allowing a divestiture to go through with the suspicion of patronage. I believe the agreement between the corporation and the Government of Canada should be in the public domain so that everyone could know that the deal was good, and acceptable.

In summary, I have laid down what I think would be an acceptable procedure. First, the required directive should be tabled in the House. The Bill should be brought before the House and passed. By passing the Bill Parliament gives the Government the athority to sell. It could not set the company up without the authority to do so, why should it be able to sell without that authority? The tendering papers should be made public. The Government should then go into negotiations for sale with the conditions passed by Parliament. When the purchaser has been identified and the price agreed upon, the Government should again refer it to committee as it did, at least partially, with de Havilland.

Finally, the agreement should be considered in the public domain which would, of course, be the case if the above course were followed. Before we go ahead with any further divestitures or privatizations we need to establish a procedure which is acceptable to the employees, to Members of the House of Commons and to the Government.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader whether he is now in a position to tell us what the House will be looking at in the coming week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we will now proceed with consideration of Bill C-45. We will continue with that tomorrow if we do not finish it this afternoon. Following that we will take Bill C-96 at second reading. That will be followed by report stage and third reading of Bill C-75. We will see what progress we make on that and perhaps I can stand up on Monday and tell the House what other business we have to complete in the following part of the week.

Ms. Copps: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is rising on the business of the House question?

Ms. Copps: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Could you let the record show that the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) objected to the showing of the Armenian genocide stickers in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh. oh!

Mr. McDermid: Stuck on the front of the bench here!

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) please do the Chair a favour now and remove—

Mr. Prud'homme: As a favour.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Prud'homme: I will send it to the Member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. I just wondered when we can expect to have an Opposition Day so we can get to the several important questions we would like to raise in the House. Can the Minister inform us when we can expect it? We have 13 to go with a couple of months left, and I would like to know ahead of time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Please!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This has been a preoccupation of mine since we came back after Easter.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You have been lying awake at night, I know.

Mr Hnatyshyn: I have been trying as hard as possible to get a lot of important legislation through. If we get through some of it quickly, then I will give the Opposition all the time it wants on Opposition Days.

Mr. Gauthier: I know that; the last two weeks!

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS ACT

The House resumed from Thursday, April 17, 1986, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment (Ms. Copps) (p. 833).

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part this afternoon in the debate on Bill C-45 to establish a system of labour relations between employer and employees of the Senate and the House of Commons.

This Bill is obviously very important because, for the first time, legislation will recognize a basic right of the workers on Parliament Hill, namely the right to associate and to be represented by the president and officers of their union to defend their interests.

My colleague for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) presented an amendment asking that this Bill not be read now, but in one month from this day. Why do we want this Bill to be read only in one month from now? It is because we want to give an opportunity to the representatives of the employees on Parliament Hill and the employer to agree on provisions which would be acceptable to both parties.

The Bill introduced by the Government does not satisfy the employees of the House of Commons. We have all received a document which clearly states . . . If I can put a hand on it, I have a copy of it which I would like to read very quickly. This document, which was sent to all Members of Parliament and Senators and was signed by Mr. Jacques Audette, says the following:

> You will soon be asked to vote on Bill C-45 respecting Parliamentary employment and staff relations. As those most closely affected, the employees of Parliament Hill ask you to consider the serious concerns raised by this Bill.

This letter refers to a number of points of which our employees do not really approve, namely:

> The questions which were and still are of greatest concern to us are classification, job descriptions, competitions, promotions, transfers and the fear of being laid off or fired. The answer to these questions has always been left to the sole discretion of management and this has resulted in serious cases of abuse. Many of us are incorrectly classified and often have no job description. Many of us have applied in vain for promotions or transfers, because the rules governing the competitions were arbitrarily changed in the middle of the game.

I am still quoting Mr. Audette, Chairman of that local of the Association of Parliamentary employees.

Reading that document, Mr. Speaker, one realizes that Bill C-45 is not unanimously supported. More than that, it has given rise to a number of major objections on the part of employees.

What seems quite important, and I will quote yet another paragraph from that letter:

> Under the Canadian Labour Code, it is possible to resolve problems through collective bargaining. However, Bill C-45 would not allow us to deal efficiently with any of the above matters. By not allowing us to negotiate classification or to refer staffing problems to arbitration, you will be maintaining the status quo.

Mr. Audette concludes, and I quote:

> And the status quo means lower employee morale and sources of problems for all of us.

You know there have been representations made to the courts and that no later than today, the Federal Appeal Court issued its findings in the case of the House of Commons vs the Canadian Labour Relations Board and the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

• (1610)

The judgment was delivered today by Mr. Justice Pratte and I believe it is a major new development that we must now take into account. What is essential in my view is that the motion to delay for one month the reading of this legislation, which was put forward by my colleague for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), becomes that much more relevant.

It is absolutely vital in my view that, if we are to legislate a new status for employees of the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library, we should have a minimum of employee support and satisfaction.

I think one of the basic questions which the Government was concerned about and which prevented it from drafting legislation that would subject those parliamentary employees to the Canada Labour Code, is that under the Canada Labour Code they would have the right to strike. And I do not think I am being unfair to the Conservative Government when I say that the idea, the possibility that parliamentary employees might some day go on strike has sent such a shiver down our Government friends' backs that they have decided to have parliamentary employees subjected to the Public Service Staff Relations Act rather than to the Canada Labour Code.

Do we have a quorum, Mr. Speaker? I am looking all over the place because I wonder whether we do have a quorum.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall count the members.

And the count having been taken:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Indeed, there is no quorum. Ring the bells.

And the bells having rung:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is now a quorum. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has the floor.

Mr. Ouellet: It gives me pleasure to welcome my colleagues from the Government. In my opinion—

Mr. Gauthier: We are here! We want you to listen to him and to listen properly!

Mr. Ouellet: In my opinion, this Bill, which will change the system that governs Parliamentary employees, deserves the special attention and interest of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and I am happy to see him back in the House.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the wish not to provide the right to strike probably brought the Government to introduce a Bill which does not meet in its present form the hopes and expectations of Parliamentary employees.

[English]

I want to read here a note that has been given to me that I believe is one that could be a happy compromise. Bill C-45 does not allow Hill employees the right to strike, a right they would enjoy under the Canada Labour Code, but it is believed that representatives of the employees on the Hill have said that they are willing to forfeit their right to strike if Bill C-45 included strong binding arbitration procedures, which at present it does not.

[Translation]

It is quite clear to me, Mr. Speaker, that the concerns expressed by Mr. Audette, especially about classification, promotion and lay-offs, are points which we cannot take lightly and which deserve our attention. I therefore felt that I had to rise at this time to tell the Government Members that they should, in this first piece of legislation governing Parliamentary employees, show much more trust in these hundred of employees who have been working on the Hill for years faithfully and conscienciously and who have never caused any trouble. No one can say that these employees are trouble makers or that they have provoked many labour conflicts. I think that their past performance is a guarantee for the future and I would like the Government to show them a bit more compassion and understanding. The possibilities for an agreement between the employer and employees of Parliament are obvious. When I was myself Minister of Labour, I invited Parliament to legislate as soon as possible to give to the employees of the House of Commons the union and the legal status that they wished to have, and to do so before the case was referred to the Canada Labour Relations Board. I have to say that both this Government and the previous one took too long to realize that the employees of Parliament had every reason to want to organize and defend themselves better. The previous Government should have introduced a Bill well before this issue was submitted to the Canada Labour Relations Board, and the present Government should have negotiated with the representatives of Parliament employees and introduced a Bill more acceptable than Bill C-45 well before this case had to be heard by the Federal Court and the Appeal Division of the Federal Court.

• (1620)

I especially deplore some aspects of the Bill before us, and I must say that if we could obtain from the Government the assurance that it will introduce the appropriate amendments to give Parliament employees the guaranties they are seeking—I suggest, quite rightfully so—as to classification, job descriptions, promotions, transfers and dismissals, I am sure that on this side of the House, both my colleagues of the Liberal party and the members of the New Democratic Party would be more inclined to proceed quickly with this Bill. But neither the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) nor the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) have given us clear and definite indications that this Bill could be amended along the lines of the Parliament employees representatives' legitimate claims. As members of the Liberal party, we find that this Bill is not going in the direction we would have given it had we still been in the Government. I can tell you certainly that as a former Minister of Labour, if I were still Minister of Labour, I would make pressing representations to the President of the Privy Council and the President of the Treasury Board to amend this Bill as soon as possible in a manner consistent with the views and requests of Parliament employees.

I find somewhat surprising, and even a little absurd, that the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) who certainly has a general responsibility toward all Canadian workers, and especially those he meets daily on Parliament Hill has not come out more strongly on the side of Parliament employees. I ask the Minister of Labour to wake up, read this Bill, read the representations made by representatives of the Public Service Alliance, and especially those of Parliament employees, and then exert pressures on his colleagues to have Bill C-45 properly amended.

But the best thing that we could do at this time, Mr. Speaker, would be to accept the motion moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), that this Bill be not now read a second time but that it be read one month hence, in order to reach an agreement negotiated in good faith between the employer and employees on Parliament Hill. I am sure that if we took advantage of that month to sit down, discuss frankly and reach the necessary compromise, we would not have to debate this Bill in the House. Following an agreement between the employer and employees on the Hill, the Government could introduce a Bill that would receive unanimous approval. We in the Liberal Party would be the first to support the Government if it could reach such an agreement after consultation and frank negotiations with employee representatives.

I am therefore asking the House to postpone this debate for one month to give the President of the Privy Council and the President of the Treasury Board a chance to notify the employer forthwith, ask him to sit down with the representatives of our employees and determine once and for all the details of the legal framework that will govern them in the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member for Papineau, as a former Labour Minister, has some experience in this area, I would like him to explain to the House what the result would be. Since the CLRB granted the employees the right to organize under the Labour Code, and that decision was reversed today by the court, whose decision may be appealed, could a Minister really proceed with a Bill like Bill C-45, considering the quantity of information released today?

Mr. Ouellet: Of course, I don't know what the decision of the Public Service Alliance will be following that decision. Surely that ruling on the appeal by the Federal Court may lead to an appeal to the Supreme Court. However, what I have tried to say in my argument today is that we should not be using courts to settle the matter, this being the first major concession the employer is willing to grant to the staff on Parliament Hill.

For the first time, the employer, through the Government, has tabled a Bill that recognizes not only the right of association but also the right to bargain for new collective agreement, a collective agreement that will provide for essential safeguards and protection.

Now, what I am saying is this: If that is what it is all about, let us do it in good faith on both parts, let us sit down at a table and negotiate an appropriate framework. However, the decision of the Appeal Division of the Federal Court only highlights part of the problem. And in my opinion the legal process at this time is in a way an adversary, not a consultation process. If the parties feel that they have to appeal to courts to have their rights recognized, there has to be a lack of communication and understanding somewhere between the parties.

I believe that instead of carrying on with this process of court settlements, it would be a lot better on the part of the employer to say: "Well, we won our case with the Appeal Division of the Federal Court, but that does not mean that our position is stricly adamant". In my view, the very fact that the employer has won should encourage him to be more magnanimous, more flexible, more generous with Parliament Hill workers, to sit down with them and agree to the appropriate trade-offs in Bill C-45, so that everyone can be happy. Then the employer and all the workers of Parliament Hill as well as Government and Opposition Members could unanimously pass an amended bill that would satisfy parties involved.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, sometimes one wonders if this is an Alice in Wonderland situation when one hears my friends to my right. I was here from 1972 to 1980. I know that our Party kept making representations to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and his Government, asking and demanding that workers on the Hill ought to have the right to collective bargaining.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Where were you yesterday when we needed you?

Mr. Rodriguez: I have to do the job for the Tories. They were good as the Opposition but now that they are the Government, they do not know what to do. They are forgetting their opposition roots. The Government must never forget its roots. It began in opposition. The Conservatives were born in opposition and born to be in opposition. I think they have forgotten that.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member tell the House whether the New Democratic Party has ever been in Government federally?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must consider that not to be a point of order.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House live in hope. If we continue to keep doing the right things it will only be a matter of time, brother. Just stay put.

• (1630)

I want to get to the question I have for the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). When his Party was in Government there were constant rumblings and rumours. The Hon. Lloyd Francis revealed some of those not so long ago. Apparently there were very bad practices going on. The odd Liberal is known to have got into the House in some position before he rose to be a Member of Parliament. It is known that those practices which were very detrimental to the collective rights of workers on this Hill always existed.

We in the New Democratic Party consistently asked the Government to give collective bargaining rights to employees on Parliament Hill. The Liberal Government of the day, in which the Hon. Member for Papineau was a cabinet Minister, consistently refused to do that. At least the Conservative Government put Bill C-45 on the floor of Parliament. I do not agree with everything in the Bill. I hardly think I would agree 100 per cent with anything the Conservatives could do in labour legislation. In fact, I do not think I could agree with 90 per cent or even 75 per cent. But at least the Conservatives put the matter on the table for discussion and debate.

Members of the Liberal Party are now doing a lot of pious breast-beating. They talk about how the Bill does not do some things and should do others. They talk about the great rights of workers. But when the Liberal Party was in government, it was the lousiest in terms of how it treated the workers on the Hill. It was awful. Was it the Hon. Member being struck by lightning on the way across the Chamber from the government benches to the Opposition benches which brought about this conversion?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member in his preliminary remarks mentioned that he was in the House of Commons for a little while until 1980. He has just returned. During the long period between 1980 and 1984 he was indeed absent and perhaps forgot to check the record and does not realize what was done by the previous Government in favour of employees, particularly by the then Minister of Labour who amended the Canada Labour Code on safety and security. This was asked for by the workers and given to them by legislation.

I just want to remind my colleagues that there was legislation presented in this House in favour of employees, including Hill employees. Legislation covering health and safety rights for federal employees, including Hill employees, was presented. The legislation, I believe, was Bill C-24. It allowed the Hill employees to be covered at least in relation to health and safety.

Mr. Rodriguez: Collective bargaining?

Mr. Ouellet: I made my view known publicly in the House of Commons while I was still a Member of the Government. I asked for legislation to deal with the Hill employees. Therefore, I do not have to defend my record. My record speaks for itself.

I want to say to my friends in the New Democratic Party that they are not the sole possessors of the right to defend workers. They sometimes tend to forget that. Although they might have some good friends in the hierarchy of the labour movement, there are other Members of Parliament from all Parties who have been fighting for workers. They have been representing workers and have been sympathetic to unions' demands in the past and currently. I can assure the Hon. Member that I will personally continue to fight for workers and for unions' demands in my career in politics.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in this debate on Bill C-45 which relates to the question of collective bargaining for the staff of the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament.

I note the question before us this afternoon is an amending motion for second reading a month hence—a one month hoist rather than a six-month hoist—but whatever the period of time involved, I want to speak in support of that amending motion because this not a Bill which deserves to become part of the statute law of Canada.

If we are to become concerned about the rights of parliamentary Hill staff and if we want to ensure that they have good working conditions and their lives on the Hill are the kinds of lives our employees should lead, then it seems to me the question becomes quite a fundamental one. This is a question of how we as parliamentarians treat our own, those who work for us here and those who are to be seen around us as we carry on the business of Government and the business of debating the national questions with which we are faced. I think also of those who serve us in our offices and those who provide assistance to us from the Library of Parliament. The question of how we are going to treat these persons who work around us and with us is a question which raises the most fundamental concerns about our own integrity and the honesty with which we handle people's lives.

This Parliament, after all, in years past established in the Statutes the Canada Labour Code provisions governing those workers away from the Hill who are under federal regulation. It was significant that the Canada Labour Code made many advances. It attempted to establish a fine standard for employees across the country in federal undertakings. What could one say, however, about the fact that the Canada Labour Code was not the basis for the relations with employers of members of the Public Service? What could one say when the Government of Canada presumed to impose on workers in federally regulated undertakings a high standard and then accepted a much lower standard in the form of the Public Service Staff Relations Act for the Public Service of the country? Surely there is a kind of hypocrisy involved in such action which could lead the managers of the country, and much more so the workers and their unions, to wonder about the right of a Government through Parliament to impose on these various federal undertakings those standards when the Government of Canada was not ready to maintain the standards for itself.

We find now the question of the representation of workers on the Hill becoming a clear-cut issue when we see the Public Service Alliance pressing the organization of workers and seeking to establish before the Canada Relations Board that the Parliament Hill staff be regarded as a federal undertaking in the sense of bringing to bear the provisions of the Canada Labour Code.

What can we say about the fact that the Government's response to that was a tranposition of the Public Service Staff Relations Act on these employees? In this way their rights to collective bargaining in a number of very important ways is limited. These workers might very well feel that they have their rights provided for when, in fact, in area after vital area they do not have the protection they need. That strikes me as a kind of institutionalizing of hypocrisy of which any Government should be ashamed. I challenge my colleagues across the way to consider this question very seriously. I challenge them to ask themselves whether it is right to demand of employers across the country high standards while in our treatment of those who work for us every day we are prepared to allow all types of abuses to occur.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, during the time allotted for questions and comments reminded the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), and all Members of the House, that abuse of workers on Parliament Hill has been controversial in the last year or more. He pointed out that there has been a certain putting on to the public record suspicions, rumours and allegations which only floated about in the past. Some of the worst abuses refer to suggestions of sexual harassment and charges of favouritism and of nepotism which have become bywords around the House of Commons.

My friend from Nickel Belt was quite justified in pointing out that, after having governed for the better part of two decades, the Liberals brought in the Canada Labour Code but settled for the Public Service Staff Relations Act for the Public Service. They did not really provide any reform or protection for workers on the Hill.

It is worth taking a look at what some of the results of this failure to legislate have been. I note, among a number of cases, that our employees have put forward such instances as the following. In a technical service a senior position became vacant. Several employees inquired when a competition would be held to fill the position. There was no competition. Then the husband of a manager in another department of the same service was brought in to fill the post—on a temporary basis, of course. Several months later a competition was announced. The now-experienced husband was hired permanently and the attempt of employees in the service to appeal this particular piece of institutional nepotism was denied.

The next example I have occurred in a support service where several employees held working supervisor positions on an acting basis. They had been in these acting positions for seven, five, three and two years respectively. They were informed that they would be downgraded four levels. Their salaries dropped from $21,000 per year to $17,000 per year. During the same period of time new working supervisors were hired without any competition having been carried out. When the former acting supervisors attempted to appeal internally, their appeals were denied. This is an abuse of workers, particularly when one contemplates someone left in a working supervisor position on an acting basis for seven years. Surely, that in itself is outrageous.

The next example I have to put forward occurred in the printing branch. Staff on the Hill are well aware that there is a hiring freeze in effect. In fact, some employees in this branch had been transferred out to other government Departments or offered incentives to take early retirement. However, new casual staff were hired in the printing branch and at least in one case there is a close family link to the senior management of the branch. Again, one sees nepotism as a partial justification for the abuse of experienced employees in the branch.

The next case I have deals with employees in a technical service who were required to attend training courses on their days off, on weekends, without any pay. When they protested this abuse of their free time, they were told that the training courses were mandatory and they had no choice but to take them. That type of arbitrary behaviour from those in supervisory positions strikes me as an outrageous example of what can happen when workers do not have the rights which should apply to them as employees.

I would like to point out one last example of the type of abuses which have occurred. There was in place an employee assistance program which was established for employees of the House of Commons as a type of safety-valve. Given the examples I have just presented, I am sure a safety-valve was more than necessary. This was a means of having personal problems dealt with in confidence by a qualified counsellor. Early in 1985 the counsellor in charge of this employee assistance program was fired, the position was abolished and the program responsibility was turned over to the nurses. An appeal to the Speaker asking that the position be re-established was denied. Petitions signed by no fewer than 1,500 employees were ignored by the Speaker's office and by Parliament Hill administration. I note that there was a total of about 3,600 staff members on the Hill, at least in 1984-85, and 1,500 is not very far from one-half of the total number of employees.

Recognizing the types of abuses which have occurred and those which will occur when managers cannot be brought to book and when workers cannot carry through on appeals, I wish to take a look at some provisions of the Bill which is before us. The amendment to the motion suggests that it be dealt with in one month hence, which might even kill the Bill. I note that there are a number of shortcomings which deal with the fact that classification cannot be dealt with under the proposed legislation. I have already noted some of the appointment weaknesses which are found in the Bill. However, Clause 5(3) would prevent any negotiation with respect to problems related to classification. There is no provision for the employees' union to negotiate job descriptions, or for an opportunity to negotiate the assignment of pay levels, or for the possibility of negotiations dealing with the evaluation of duties. This is, of course, a failure of the legislation to deal with one very large complex of grievances, a system which has evolved over the years, as far as job classification is concerned, which has been an enormous source of dissatisfaction for employees. Many employees do not even have job descriptions. Those who do find that they are often out of date and that they can be arbitrarily changed in an environment which we all realize has seen a good deal of change over the last years. The result is obviously a great deal of employee frustration, insecurity and poor morale.

Similarly, when it comes to the question of staffing, we find that Clause 55(2) prohibits the possibility of bringing the issues of job appointments, job appraisals, promotions, demotions, transfers, lay-offs or releases to third-party arbitration. There is no possibility of having these equally contentious matters, at least in their potential, dealt with to a resolution which will be genuinely impartial through third-party arbitration. These are the types of issues which have been central to the drive by parliamentary employees to gain bargaining rights.

Parliament Hill has had a history of staffing decisions coloured by political influence, favouritism, nepotism, and administrative incompetence. The Government has no desire to change that fundamentally. I should like to add to these areas of weakness. The lack of a grievance procedure to deal with a great diversity of problems which can arise between our managers and our employees is surely the most fundamental weakness in the Act. If there is one thing collective bargaining should provide, it should provide a basis for resolving conflicts under the rule of law through a grievance procedure and, if necessary, into third party arbitration.

I have emphasized the importance of applying sound principles of collective bargaining to Hill employees. I have been critical of the present Government and of previous Governments for hypocrisy in legislating well for others but failing to apply the same principles to their own actions. In this kind of context it is quite appropriate for others to say something like: "Put up or shut up. You state these principles, but what will you do about them yourselves?" I say with some pride that the New Democratic Party caucus has been true to the principles which helped create the movement of the CCF and the NDP. We have been faithful to our employees.

Our power as Members of Parliament employing them has been constrained by the conditions which the Government imposes upon us through the Board of Internal Economy in particular. However, New Democratic Party members have in fact gone the route of collective bargaining with our employees. I say with pride that we have done so as far back as 1977. Obviously it was done by my predecessors such as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and others who made the decision at that time to negotiate with a parliamentary association of support staff comprised of our assistants on the Hill, assistants who were in fact, in full legal fact, some of the Hill employees about whom I am talking. In effect we created a bargaining unit of support staff, and our caucus members took on the responsibility of being employers and regarded themselves explicitly as employers. That process has continued.

There have been several rounds of negotiations and elaboration of the collective agreement. As is inevitable in these circumstances, we have found that difficulties can arise at times, that difficult questions must be answered, that collective agreements need to be refined, and so on.

Since becoming a Member of Parliament in 1984 I have had some involvement with those matters. However, in all honesty and honour, I say on behalf of my colleagues and myself that we accepted the principle that collective bargaining should apply to our relations with our staff. We knew that we could not control what they earned. We knew that there were various constraints upon us as employers which put us in a difficult position at times, a position our staff members had to recognize when they dealt with us. However, where we could, we provided for them in every area.

Mr. Rodriguez: The grievance system.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): We particularly provided for grievances. As a new Member of Parliament I discovered that particular matters had been carried through grievance to arbitration and had been resolved for the caucus. We sought by those means to deal within the framework of law, law refined and applied to our relations with our staff. We sought by those means to govern relations and to ensure that all the abuses of favouritism, nepotism, and so on—in other words, all abuses of management power which had been so common on the Hill—would not prevail in our offices.

I feel I have every right to say in all honour that the Government should recognize the same responsibility. We as Members of Parliament should appreciate our obligation to provide properly for the working conditions and the rights of our employees on the Hill. Therefore, I call upon Government Members, as well as my colleagues in the NDP and in the Liberal Party which put forward this motion, to join together in giving this Bill the hoist. I call upon the Government, which is responsible for bargaining matters, to elaborate an Act that will provide for the areas in which the Bill has failed. I call upon it to provide for proper classification and staffing and to ensure that grievances, if necessary, can be carried through to third party arbitration. We need a far higher standard from the Government in these varied ways. I call upon it to recognize that fact and to respond properly to the amending motion before us. I thank the House for the opportunity to join in the debate.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Hon. Member. I followed his remarks attentively, and I think he spoke sincerely. Today's judgment in the Federal Court came as a surprise to many of us. Nevertheless, we will have to await the reaction of the unions to see whether they will go to the Supreme Court of Canada with the matter.

My question concerns the right to strike of Hill employees. The Hon. Member knows that in the Bill before us the right to strike is not given to employees on the Hill. He also knows that employees through their unions have held fast to the right to withdraw services if they feel there is a conflict between the employer and the employees, and they want to make it public. We all know the origin of strikes; it was to inform the population at large that indeed there was a conflict between the employer and the employees. He also knows that our employees have referred to meaningful arbitration. I do not know whether I should expand upon what is meant by meaningful arbitration, but it would include classification standards, promotions, demotions, and all other matters concerning nominations and appointments.

I am referring to the general subject matter of arbitrating conflicts and disagreements, and I know that our employees may be flexible on this matter. My question is not an academic one; I want to know where the Hon. Member stands. What would he do if we gave the right to strike to employees on the Hill? If indeed a picket was set up to protest, object, or inform the public of a conflict, would the Hon. Member cross that picket line?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): No, I would not.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, that is the second such answer I have had from that Party. Other members of that Party have said that given a crisis situation where Parliament had to sit and they had to represent their constituents, they would inform the striking employees and come here to do their duty as they were elected to do. The Hon. Member said that he would not cross a picket line; I accept that as an honest answer. I simply say to him that there is disagreement within his own Party. Perhaps they should have a meeting of the minds in the NDP to find out what they would do in the event that the right to strike was given to our employees. They are always preaching about what we should have done and did not do. However, when they are called upon to make a decision, sometimes they are divided, as they are on this issue. I would like them to put their heads together and come up with a definition of what is a designated employee and a definition of what is an essential service.

The point at hand is whether Parliament is an essential service. If it is, then it must sit and do what it was elected to do, that is, pass laws. If we read today's judgment of the Federal Court, we find that the House of Commons is not an ordinary place. It is the place where constitutionally we must pass laws. If it is our obligation to be in the House to vote, then the Hon. Member had better tell his constituents what he stands for and why he was elected to the House. If the picket line stops him from doing his duty, then the Member will have to tell us why he cannot take his place in the House and do the things he should be doing that he was elected by his constituents to do.

• (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This being the first hour under the new rules for Private Members' Business, may I call to the attention of Members the provisional Standing Order 55(3) which states as follows:

> (3) When the business of Private Members is being considered, no Member shall speak for more than ten (10) minutes.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because as you just said, this is a new rule for Private Members' Business under which we can rise and defend bills or motions that are of concern to us.

Mr. Speaker, I am rising to ask for directions as to the procedure to be followed. As you have noticed today in the Order Paper, there is a list of approximately 20 Private Members' bills, which were drawn by lot, as we say, and which—

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It seems to me that the Member's Bill has been called under Private Members' Business and any point of order taking place in this hour should be pertinent to this hour's debate on the Member's Bill and not on any other subject.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will allow the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to speak on a point of order on the procedure.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am raising a serious point. I know this is during my hour of debate, but I would remind the Parliamentary Secretary it is a matter that has been of concern to Hon. Members, and the time to discuss it is Private Members' Hour.

Standing Orders 31 and 32 provide that an order of precedence will be established at the beginning of a session. This has been done. Standing Order 37 provides for suspension of Private Members' Business until the order of precedence is established. This also has been done. Section 39 provides that Members shall have no less than 24 hours' notice of items to be considered during the hour provided for discussion.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to that, to the matter of those 24 hours especially.

Private Members' items of business have been dated. Each item bears a date. Mine reads, Thursday, April 24, 1986, C-203, and you can read in the Order Paper the dates concerning the various Private Members' items.

There lies the problem. If a Member, Mr. Speaker, cannot be in his place when the legislation is called, if a Member is prevented on serious grounds, whether because of illness or some other ailment, or for personal reasons from being here, what happens to his bill? What happens to that specific motion or bill?

Second, Mr. Speaker, because this is a matter that is somewhat vague in the Standing Orders, precedence given to Private Members' Business already has been established. When a Member is prevented from being here on the day his bill or motion is called, is that bill or motion sent back to the bottom of the list? I would appreciate it if the Chair would inform this House as to what happens to that motion because in the past, the item was unanimously suspended, and was returned to when the Member was back in the House. I understand this will no longer apply as of now, and we might have to innovate and find some other procedure.

My two questions are simple, Mr. Speaker. What happens to a bill or motion that has been dated, and as an example, we have for tomorrow, in the name of Dr. Isabelle, Bill C-208, Private Members' Bill, second reading and reference to a legislative committee of an Act respecting the International Airport at Ottawa.

As Party Whip, Mr. Speaker, I happen to know that the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) will be unable to attend the House tomorrow.

So on his behalf I would like to ask you what can be done. With unanimous consent, can a Member introduce the Bill for him, or is there some other procedure? Perhaps you might enlighten us, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because I know there are Members who want to speak during this hour devoted to private Members' debate. I would not want to abuse the time. The Hon. Member raises an interesting point. It is something that we would want to take under advisement.

We had a House Leaders' meeting at three o'clock and if we had known there was discussion taking place, this could have been a matter for the House Leaders. Since it is a matter of procedure, we would certainly have included this in the agenda.

We would like to consider the matter, and would respectfully request that it be put over until tomorrow.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to seek your advice on this question. I would suggest it is a matter that should be decided by the Chair rather than by the House Leaders, for it really has to do with the time allocated for parliamentary debate on Private Members' Business. This time therefore is not available to the Government, but to all private Members, be they on the Government or the Opposition benches.

Now then, there is something new on the Order Paper for today, April 24, 1986, to the extent that for the first time we assign one day each to these Bills or motions, so that the 20 measures which have been selected at random have now been given dates which appear on today's Order Paper. We have a very specific calendar for the 20 measures, the last one being that which would normally be considered on Thursday, May 29, 1986, the motion of the NDP Member—I am trying to find the name of his riding—for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

Therefore, for the 10 bills or motions, we now have an assigned date. I have had the honour to sit on the committee chaired by our colleague the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) which has recommended that some items be votable. But that committee wondered what would happen if a motion were called without its sponsor being present. Obviously, this timetable seems to be a rather definite order of the House. But we know that we must take into account a variable, namely the possibility that the Government House Leader might designate an opposition day. We know that on allotted days, there is no hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Bills.

Unless we can obtain from the Government the assurance that it will not designate these days provided for consideration of private members' business as allotted days, the schedule could no longer work.

Mr. Speaker, it's a rather important problem which I submit to you and I should like you to enlighten us, because it would mean that an Hon. Member, let us say our colleague the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) whose Bill is supposed to be dealt with on May 2, assuming that the Governement House Leader decided to designate May 2 as an allotted day, it is clear that on that day the Hon. Member for Burnaby could not deal with his Bill. Does that mean that he would lose his turn? Or is it merely postponed until the next time? Or would a notice have to be given to all Hon. Members to have a completely new schedule? That's the problem I wanted to point out to you.

It is clear that the Members of the committee chaired by the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) could not have settled this point, and we should like you to enlighten us concerning the procedure to be followed, because if the sponsor is not present, there are clearly two possibilities: with unanimous consent, another Member could introduce the motion and open the debate on behalf of the sponsor; assuming there is not unanimous consent, does it mean that there would be no private members' hours or is it that the time is automatically turned over to the Government for consideration of Government business?

• (1710)

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on this point of order. I assume the decision will be made by the Speaker as opposed to the House Leaders. We are discussing the sequence of speakers during Private Members' Hour. I understand that speeches will continue to be 10 minutes in length and that there will be no period for questions and comments. Do you have any ideas which you would like to share with us with regard to how that process will take place?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any other Members who would like to make representations at this time on the point of order? The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker, because I do not want to take away from the time allowed for consideration of the Bill in the name of my hon. colleague from Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). After all, we share the same desk, and I want to stay on good terms with him. I simply wanted to add, while we are making representations on the subject, that there are other events that might upset our schedule. For instance, if the Chair has to call an emergency debate on a given day, this would suspend Private Members' Business, which would cause some problems if a Private Member's Bill were scheduled for consideration the same day.

Furthermore, some Members may be absent from the House, through no fault of their own, because they sit on a parliamentary committee that happens to be meeting somewhere else in Canada, and some Members may be travelling abroad as members of an official delegation. It seems to me that this calendar should be more flexible. Personally, I would suggest that when a day has been set aside for consideration of a Private Member's Bill, the Member concerned should be contacted several days in advance by House officials, to ensure that everything is in order and that the House can proceed with consideration of the Bill on the Order Paper for that date. No provision has been made for this eventuality, and I am sure that as far as the new Standing Orders are concerned, the Chair will have to provide some clarification to make the system more viable, because it is obvious that if this is not done, we will have quite a few problems.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I would like to make another brief suggestion to the Chair. Although the Whip has made the point that this is Private Members' Hour, House Leaders invariably get seized with some of these responsibilties. I am reluctant that you should make a final decision at this time. Neither the Whip nor the House Leader of the New Democratic Party is present, having had no notice that this argument would take place. They may wish an opportunity to participate in the discussion. I strongly suggest that this matter be reserved to give them an opportunity to participate.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is the Chair's intention to reserve its ruling on the matter. I want to thank Hon. Members who commented on the new Standing Orders, and I intend to hand down a ruling as soon as possible, in accordance with Standing Order 39(1).

Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr.Prud'homme).

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, December 17, 1984, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gauthier that Bill C-203, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act (supremacy of the Act) and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I am of course very flattered that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), has asked me to speak to Bill C-203. And I feel particularly inspired because, as you see, today I am wearing this little badge commemorating the Armenian genocide, the first great holocaust. I do not intend to draw any parallels with current events, but I would like to try to draw a few lessons from past history and comment briefly on this Bill. I repeat, I am not drawing direct parallels.

In any well-ordered society, I think what seems to be most important is how one protects and respects one's minorities. If, at the time this genocide took place, minorities had been respected, we would not be commemorating today, as did so many Members from all political parties on the Hill, the history of this terrible tragedy.

Now just what does my hon. colleague's Bill involve? It is an Act to amend the Official Languages Act, since the Hon. Member is asking for the supremacy of this Act, and of course, it also amends other Acts in consequence thereof. For a better understanding of the debate that I have been following for many years, I would like to recall, for the benefit of Hon. Members, that our colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, has always had this admirable determination to behave not as the aggressive but as the noble defender of the French fact, especially as it exists outside Quebec. And this gives us Francophone Quebecers a chance to say that the French fact is not limited to the province of Quebec and should be reflected across this country.

[English]

—my country, our country, all of Canada, rather than Quebec only. My very esteemed colleague was highly praised by the Hon. Member who now represents the House Leader and who spoke on this same Bill many years ago. He respects the determination of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

[Translation]

I suggest we look back on all the various steps and the mature progression we have always seen in Canada when it is a matter of resolving difficult and controversial problems.

• (1720)

It is fitting to recall that a Bill introduced in 1969 was passed and became law, the Official Languages Act. It is fitting to recall, Mr. Speaker, that Section 2 of this Act was interpreted in 1976, for we know we want to acknowledge the equality of both official languages. There were several events, but it began in 1969.

It is fitting to recall the tragic incident of 1976, the Air Canada dispute, when the court decision did go against the spirit of the Official Languages Act by maintaining that the Act was declaratory, not executory.

Like us Francophones, Mr. Speaker, you too recall the serious problem that decision created throughout Quebec. It was called l'affaire des gens de l'air. Nineteen seventy-seven was the year of that dispute.

You can see the determination of our colleague—and this has nothing to do with partisanship, for national survival is at stake—our colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who, on May 2, 1980, moved first reading of Bill C-203, An Act to amend the Official Languages Act (supremacy of the Act).

On May 23, 1980, an order of reference created the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Official Languages. I urge Hon. Members to attend the sittings now and then. I have just begun to do so myself, something new for me, and discovered it is one of the most interesting committees.

When Bill C-214 was moved for second reading on July 15, 1980, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier suggested that this Bill be deferred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. An amendment deferred it instead to the new Special Joint Committee on Official Languages which had been created on May 23, 1980.

We should remember that the Constitutional Act, 1982 was proclaimed on April 17, 1982. This provided linguistic guaranties enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Clause 16(1) repeats almost word for word Clause 2 of the Official Languages Act which enshrined in the Constitution an official and equal status for French and English at the level of federal institutions.

On April 28, 1982—it will be four years ago next Monday, the Joint Committee on Official Languages examined the subject matter of Bill C-214. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier explained the origin of the bill, its purpose and significance. The deputy minister and other officials of the Department of Justice also appeared to explain to committee members the implications of the Bill.

On June 22, 1982, the Special Joint Committee of the Senate on Official Languages tabled its fourth report. One of its recommendations reflected the spirit and letter of Bill C-214 introduced by our colleague, amending the Official Languages Act to confirm its supremacy over the other Acts and Regulations.

In April 1983, three years ago now, the Special Joint Committee tabled its fifth report. The number one recommendation is the same as that of the fourth report tabled on June 22, 1982, on the supremacy of the Official Languages Act.

On December 22, 1983, the Government responded to the recommendations in the fifth report, and I quote: The present Government fully supports the objective of the first recommendation, but intends to carry out an in-depth study of the issue.

On November 9, 1984, the first session of the 33rd Parliament was opened under a new Government headed by the Right Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Mulroney). Immediately, that is on November 13, 1984, our colleague, who is not a quitter, introduced Bill C-203 which we have before us today, namely an Act to amend the Official Languages Act (supremacy of the the Act), which is similar to Bill C-214 which he had introduced during the 32nd Parliament, two years earlier.

On December 17, 1984, we had the second reading debate on the Bill to amend the Official Languages Act (Supremacy of the Act) introduced by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

On April 8, 1986, just ten days ago, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier appeared before the Committee on Private Members Business to defend Bill C-203. However, the Committee did not see fit to give priority to this Bill.

I know that each Prime Minister leaves his own mark on this country. The former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Mr. Trudeau, did so by giving us the Official Languages Act and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedom. We are all aware of the good intentions of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as concerns official languages. I know this and I am not ashamed to say so even though we sit on opposite sides of the House. I am certain that he would like to leave his own mark on all that has happened since 1969 and I would therefore find it difficult to understand why, at this time, we would not refer the purpose of this Bill to committee for further study as we have done in the past. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, this is a very complex issue. It cannot really be discussed here. If the Bill could be again referred to the Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Official Languages, as the Committee recommended unanimously that we do, I believe that we could bring this to a satisfactory conclusion and that the Right Hon. Prime Minister and his Government would be very happy with their role in this issue.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-203, to amend the Official Languages Act (supremacy of the Act) and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject-matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Official Languages."

Of course, I appeal to my colleagues to give us this opportunity to refer the bill for further consideration, and that will require quite some time because, as I have said, it is a very complex piece of legislation and this way we could know how to deal with it.

M. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis. The Chair finds it in order. Therefore, the debate is on the motion.

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, it is with very great interest indeed that I rise after my colleague for Saint-Denis. In the light of that amendment, of course, my comments will be quite relevant to the debate.

It will be remembered that the amended legislation is aimed at ensuring that the Official Languages Act (supremacy of the Act) and amending other acts in consequence thereof, if you look at the explanatory notes to the Bill, is concerned primarily with the supremacy of the Official Languages Act over other acts and regulations of Parliament and the Canadian Government, in order to underline its nature as basic Canadian law.

As we were so aptly reminded by my colleague for Saint-Denis, this is not the first time we have dealt with the supremacy of the Official Languages Act over other enactments. As one may remember, that important question was raised in the late 70s, when a body of jurisprudence questioned the supremacy of the Official Languages Act in cases of conflicts with over pieces of legislation or regulations.

I would recall that the Official Languages Commissioner, in his Annual Report for 1978 recommended that Parliament should add to the Official Languages Act a section drafted along the lines of the Canadian Declaration of Human Rights providing that the Official Languages Act take precedence over any federal legislation is incompatible, except where Parliament so decides expressly.

It is the famous notwithstanding section. In 1979 we had Mr. Corbin's Private Members' Bill to that effect, and the first of a series of bills from the hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) which were aimed at improving the Official Languages Act and many of which called for the supremacy of that Act.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier as well as the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) are undoubtedly the parliamentarians who did the most to improve the legal frame work of language rights. And if we had such an institution, they would deserve to be recognized as Defensores fidei linguaeque in Canada. Both of you would deserve that title. If I did not fear to offend your modesty in front of such a crowd today, I would ask every Member in the House to applaud both the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, who fought so intensely for the language rights, for the principle of Canada's official languages. Your determination and perseverance in this regard are well known, and every single Canadian who believes in official languages equality recognizes your sense of devotion in that regard.

With the coming into force of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms four years ago—as you have rightly recalled—the fundamental principes of the Official Languages Act are now obviously part of the Canadian Constitution. The enshrinement of these guarantees in this country's supreme legislation has given preeminence to the Charter's provisions regarding the equality of both official languages in all federal institutions, as well as to the provisions relating to the public service in Canada.

In its answer to the Special Joint Committee which had recommended the inclusion in the Official Languages Act of a clause regarding its primacy, the Government at the time had fully supported that aim, as you just reminded us. But in the light of the guarantees now granted in the Charter, its intention was to make a thorough examination of that important question. I know the determination and concern of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier. As mentioned by my colleague for Saint-Denis, in April 1983 the Committee submitted its fifth report in which it again recommended giving supremacy to the Official Languages Act. However, even Prime Minister Trudeau, who must of course be praised for his support of official languages in Canada, hesitated to accept it. So much so, that he said in a letter: As for your proposal to give supremacy to the Official Languages Act, this is still being examined by the Government.

These words more or less sum up my feelings about the present situation. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it would be premature at this stage to go the supremacy route alone, since in-depth studies undertaken by the Ministers most involved in language reform, at the request of the Prime Minister, should very soon result in a number of proposals that will allow for consideration of all aspects involving the Act and its application.

Naturally, like my colleagues I am very anxious to see these proposals. The Joint Standing Committee of the Senate and the House will soon hear the Commissioner of Official Languages remind us once again that strong measures are needed to promote equality, ensure supremacy of the Act and strengthen its application at all levels of our federal institutions.

In a letter dated October 24, 1985, the Deputy Prime Minister reaffirmed to the Joint Standing Committee on Official Languages policy and programs, the deep commitment of this Government to the promotion and expansion of official bilingualism in Canada. I would like to quote the Prime Minister who said:

Our willingness to advance the cause of the official languages was evident from the very first weeks of our mandate, when the President of Treasury Board, the hon. Robert de Cotret expressed the determination of the government not only to retain whatever gains have already been achieved in this area, but also to improve existing services to better meet the needs of Canadians.

That willingness was also brought to the fore in the Speech from the Throne of November 5, 1984, when the Government committed itself to ensure that the equality of both official languages would be enforced, in law and in fact.

The Government is currently reviewing the provisions of the Official Languages Act in light of the experience acquired since 1969, and also to make sure they do not violate the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I can assure you that the many proposals put forward in the last few years to improve the legislative framework of the policy will be reviewed, in particular those mentioned in its fifth report to Parliament by the former special mixed committee, as well as those presented by the Commissionner of Official Languages.

I do not think that, whatever our political stripe, we could doubt for one moment the determination of this government to go forward and along the same lines as the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). We are all working towards the improvement of the principles which govern this fundamental Canadian legislation and justify its existence and cohesion. If we as Members of Parliament from Quebec are still here today, I feel it is precisely because successive governments insisted that we should be able to live in this country and use our culture and our language, our cultures and our languages.

As the Prime Minister himself indicated to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier on April 15, when the annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages was tabled, and I quote:

Last year, Mr. Speaker, upon receiving the report, I set up a committee of Senior Deputy Ministers to deal with this problem and to outline an action program that would promote the development and expansion of Canada's two official languages and their use on a daily basis. I am pleased to inform the Hon. Member that the committee has submitted a report. We are now at the ministerial level, and I think that in the near future, the Government will be in a position to make some important announcements with respect to this second facet, if you wish, of an action program to promote official languages.

Of course, we now know through recent information obtained in the Joint Committee of the House and Senate, that the new Official Languages Bill will probably be tabled early next fall.

With respect to possible amendments to the Official Languages Act, the Prime Minister on the same day replied as follows, and I quote:

I indicated publicly after the last report that I would designate a committee of senior Deputy Ministers, which I did, to prepare amendments to the Official Languages Act in order to ensure that vital piece of legislation is strengthened and enhanced and adapted to new conditions and requirements. That has been done.

The work is now at a senior ministerial level. It will go to Cabinet and will be introduced in the House at the appropriate time, and it will be of benefit to the country.

The Government's intention to go ahead with that important reform has therefore been clearly stated. However, the need to act cautiously on such a complex matter should be underlined. I understand the restlessness of my colleagues. Recent developments in Montreal have shown that we should never give in on matters pertaining to official languages—

Mr. Prud'homme: In Kapuskasing!

Mr. Hamelin: —never give in either in any other province, as my hon. colleague for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) just pointed out. And following the example of my colleagues of St. Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I urge all Hon. Members of this House to take an active part in the work of the Joint Committee of the House and the Senate. What you are asking us today, is to speed-up this reform . . . maybe. Therefore, I feel compelled as some of my colleagues, notwithstanding the respect and admiration I have for the determination of my colleagues, to ask this House to refrain from passing this Bill. We may be proceeding slowly, but with your determination and mine, the resolve of the Senate and this House, all together we shall achieve something far better than just asserting of the supremacy of the Official Language Act over the other Canadian statutes.

• (1740)

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure to join in the debate on Bill C-203 and the motion that would refer the matter of the supremacy of the Official Languages Act to the Joint Standing Committee on Official Languages for study and recommendation.

I listened with interest and pleasure to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin). I do not believe he noted that he is the new co-Chairman of this committee, and perhaps I can take this opportunity to congratulate him on that particular election. I want to thank him for his observations on the actions which the Government intends to take on the matter of official languages.

As a member of that committee, let me say that there seems to be a certain appropriateness in our addressing the matter of the supremacy of official languages in this, the first Private Members' Hour following the establishment of the new procedures in which private members' committees consider some Bills for a vote in the House.

While this Bill was not one of those to receive that designation, the motion to refer it to the standing committee may in fact give it that kind of possibility since it becomes a report from the committee and therefore can return to the House through that means.

May I say that it is with a touch of trepidation that I speak only in English, but there is an appropriateness to discussing official languages in that language as well. Perhaps I could expand on that by saying that I am a Canadian who is not of British or French origin. I spoke only German until I was almost seven and began attending school in Manitoba. I gradually underwent the inculcation of the schools of Manitoba. Although not unique, those schools were quite successful in turning many of us into a particular kind of Canadian.

In my case, I have learned over the years a great deal about the country. For several years I taught Canadian history to university students in the darkest depths of interior British Columbia as well as across the Prairies and into Ontario, at Lakehead University. In that time I have had the opportunity to teach Canadian history, think about it and come to my own deep understanding, if I may say, of the importance of official languages. It is because of that understanding that I repeat there is an appropriateness to our debating the supremacy of the Official Languages Act in this Private Members' Hour.

The traditions of this country are diverse. As critic for multiculturalism, I am keenly aware of those traditions. However, the traditions of this country have included, in a certain pre-eminent way, the great achievements of people who came from France and built on this continent and achieved great things in the fur trade, in missions and indeed in building an empire through the years of the 18th Century. It was those aspirations to an empire that collided with the desires of the British. It is between 1759 and 1763, with the collision of empires, that the traditions of this country began to move toward bilingualism.

We recognize the diversity of the native people and the aboriginal societies of North America. As far as European, non-North American language is concerned, French was first. It was in the last decade of the 18th Century that Canada became bilingual with the addition of the English-speaking population.

One could spend a great deal of time talking about history, but the important matter is recognizing the events of the last quarter century. I do not suppose there is anyone in the House of Commons who still questions the simple reality that domestic peace and political tranquility call for the establishment of two official languages and the provision of government services in both English and French in far more areas than even now is the case. Canadian citizens must have the opportunity to approach their Government and be served in either language.

Surely we can say that it is necessary for similar practices to prevail in a number of provinces. As a native of Manitoba, schooled to narrow views but learning broader ones through those years of teaching in western Canada, I regret the fact that Manitoba has not yet fully achieved it. It was not for lack of effort on the part of the New Democratic Government there.

I admire the achievement of making the Province of New Brunswick bilingual. I regret that Premier Davis of Ontario never took the step of establishing bilingualism in his province when he surely would have had the support of the Opposition for doing so. If he had the courage at the end of his relatively long term as Premier to fight for separate school funding for Grade 13, why did he not have the courage to do it for official languages in his province? If that had occurred, I believe we would have a stonger case for pressing our friends in the Province of Quebec to establish both official languages in that province.

It is clearly imperative that we take action on these matters in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and possibly even farther west. I will not comment on the provinces farther east than New Brunswick because I am less familiar with those areas.

Much remains to be done. We need to establish and reassert bilingualism in the Provinces of Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. Much needs to be done in those areas to ensure that the supremacy of the official languages in this country is recognized throughout the regions.

There are many citizens of this country who come from other countries and have their own interest in seeing heritage language programs established. They seek Government support in their efforts to have their heritage language programs established within school curricula rather than in continuing education programs.

Those among us who are sensible recognize that support for heritage languages also supports the position of official languages. Many people in these groups who want to see languages in addition to English and French maintained in this country realize that the establishment of official languages was part of a movement toward the multicultural policy of 1971. As a member of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism as well as the Joint Standing Committee on Official Languages, I do not see any conflict or need for arbitrary distinctions. I can instead see the two working together to achieve the kind of Canada we want.

Having made these comments in general terms about the situation, obviously my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who proposed the Bill originally, as well as I, would appreciate the opportunity to consider in committee how we can ensure that on the federal sphere the Official Languages Act will be supreme and that Government will act on it and provide the services which it still seems federal Government employees are recalcitrant to provide. Those are the sorts of things which should be before our committee, so I support heartily the amending motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on the subject of the amendments to the Official Languages Act which are proposed in the Bill before us today and, more specifically, on the amendments put forward by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

The issue of primacy for the Act is one that has come to the attention of this House on a number of occasions, either directly in the debates on this Bill and very similar ones tabled over the years by the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), or indirectly through the recommendations of the Commissioner of Official Languages in his reports to Parliament and through the testimony before, and the recommendations of the Special Joint Committee on Official Langues and its permanent successor. All of these deliberations have led me to reflect on the advisability of adopting at the present time the particular instrument by which the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier proposes to achieve primacy for official languages rights and duties.

Let me state immediately that I am the first to recognize the fundamental nature of our language guarantees. As has been stated many times in these and other debates, Sections 16 to 20 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms protect our basic rights and values as they relate to the status and use of the English and French languages in the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada. By virtue of Section 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982, any law that is inconsistent with those sections is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect. In other words, these official languages provisions prevail in the face of conflict.

The Supreme Court of Canada put it eloquently last June in its opinion on the Manitoba Language Rights Reference. The Court stated:

> The importance of language rights is grounded in the essential role that language plays in human existence, development and dignity. It is through language that we are able to form concepts; to structure and order the world around us. Language bridges the gap between isolation and community, allowing humans to delineate the rights and duties they hold in respect of one another, and thus to live in society.
> The Constitution of a country is a statement of the will of the people to be governed in accordance with certain principles held as fundamental and certain prescriptions restrictive of the powers of the legislature and government. It is, as s. 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982 declares, the "supreme law" of the nation, unalterable by the normal legislative process and unsuffering of laws inconsistent with it.

There is another essential aspect to the constitutional protection accorded to our language guarantees. The official languages provisions of the Charter are not subject to the "override" provisions of Section 33. By that I mean that Parliament cannot derogate from the application of these guarantees by expressly declaring in an Act that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate "notwithstanding" a provision included in Sections 16 to 20 of the Charter.

In so far as the Official Languages Act is, or should be, a reflection of the Charter guarantees, it would appear to me that Parliament cannot simply invoke a "notwithstanding" clause to overcome the official languages obligation on federal institutions that are set out in that Act. However, the Member for Ottawa-Vanier has proposed exactly that formula in Bill C-203. His primacy clause is worded as follows:

> 11.1(1) Every law of Canada, unless it is expressly declared by an Act of Parliament to operate notwithstanding the Official Languages Act, shall be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe the rule set forth in Section 2.

Section 2 is, of course, practically identical in terms to Section 16 of the Charter, which guarantees that:

> English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada.

The primacy clause in Bill C-203 would allow for the overriding of this guarantee. This is because that primacy clause was drafted along the lines of a similar clause in the Canadian Bill of Rights of 1960, and its wording has appeared unchanged in every Bill that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has presented on the primacy issue since 1979.

But what may have been an eminently reasonable means of attempting to ensure primacy in 1960 or in 1979 may not be appropriate in 1986. If primacy may be accorded to the substantive provisions of the Official Languages Act, it may be, I would be inclinded to believe, because the substantive obligations described therein should stand on the same footing as the Charter rights from which those obligations flow.

In any event, the Official Languages Act is soon to be the subject of amendments that will be proposed to ensure its conformity with the Constitution and, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) put it very recently, to strengthn and enhance "that vital piece of legislation". Thus, it would seem to me that we would be putting the cart before the horse in according primacy to the Act of 1969. I say with great respect to the Hon. Member who has proposed this legislation that the Bill before us today does very little to correct the deficiencies that have been noted in the Act as it stands. Instead it proposes to deal with a complex issue on a piecemeal basis, outside a comprehensive framework, using an outmoded and perhaps unconstitutional legislative formula. In view of this fact alone, I belive it would be unwise for us to proceed with this Bill or the amendments. However, Bill C-203 also contains consequential amendments to the Railway Act—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is one thing I would like to find out and it would be useful for every Hon. Member to know, because what we are discussing now is indeed a very important matter. Is it true that if the Hon. Member keeps on talking it will result in his talking out the bill, which means that he is opposed to the status of the French language being improved, and that hypocrisy prevails among Tory members?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! I am sure the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) knows what Standing Order 42(1) says about that.

[English]

Mr. Horner: Bill C-203 also contains consequential amendments to the Railway Act, the Winding Up Act and the Bank Act. The Bill would amend six sections of the Railway Act which govern language use on signs at level crossings and which restrict the mandatory use of English and French in notices, timetables, bills of lading and so on, to the Province of Quebec.

Could I have some order, please, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Malépart: The francophones will remember that. You will not stay there for 16 more years.

Mr. Valcourt: If that happens, it will not be thanks to you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! On both sides of the House, please. Thank you.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

EMPLOYMENT—REDUCTION IN TRADES TRAINING IN NOVA SCOTIA. (B) REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on April 8, 1986, I asked a question of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) with regard to trades training in the Province of Nova Scotia. I regret to report that the answer which was given to me at that time was not a very thorough one. In fact, in my view, it was a complete denial of the facts which I presented to the Minister at that time.

Trades training is an important subject in the Province of Nova Scotia. Consequently, I would have thought that the Deputy Prime Minister, as well as other Ministers of the Crown, would have taken the representations I made much more seriously than they did. In fact, in the Province of Nova Scotia, we have had to sustain a 38 per cent reduction in moneys from the Government of Canada for trades training. This reduction comes at a time when unemployment in my province is well above the national average. I would have hoped that the Government would have been more forthcoming in its response.

Some Hon. Members may wish to doubt or call into question my statement and my facts with regard to the 38 per cent reduction of trades training in the province. A letter dated March 14, 1986, signed by the Deputy Minister, Mr. B. J. Nicholson, of the Department of Human Resources, Development and Training, went out to various institutions in the province which were teaching courses. The letter states in part:

> A substantial reduction in Federal funding is unfortunately resulting in a reduction of a number of training programs and related staff positions. The training program in which you are employed is part of this Federal Government reduction and therefore the program which you have been teaching will not be able to be offered in the coming year, and your position will no longer be funded.

A 38 per cent reduction in a small province such as Nova Scotia is overwhelming. We do not need less money for trades training, we need more.

To add insult to injury we in Nova Scotia—a have-not province—are being discriminated against by the Government. Hon. Members may ask why. I will tell them why. Arrangements have been made with the Province of Ontario which are entirely different. This is not an across-the-board reduction to various provinces. Ontario received a special deal while Nova Scotia did not.

I have in my hand a letter of intent between the Government of Canada and the Minister of Skills Development for Ontario. To substantiate my allegation of discrimination I will read paragraph 7 of the letter which states:

> In addition, Canada will ensure that the sum total in fiscal year 1986/87 of both direct and indirect purchases of institutional training, including the associated administrative costs, and a targeted allocation of $9 million for training purchases by CITCs, will be no less than $166.3 million, representing 100 per cent of the institutional training allocation in Ontario for fiscal year 1985/86.

As Hon. Members can see, there is no reduction for the Province of Ontario while there is one for the Province of Nova Scotia. The issue is not a partisan one. The Tory Minister responsible in Nova Scotia, the Hon. T. Donahoe, said in the Legislature that he expects a $2 million cut in funding for Nova Scotia this year, to be followed next year by a further 15 per cent cut and yet another 20 per cent cut in 1988.

This will have drastic effects upon the economy of Nova Scotia, particularly upon the human resources of that province. As I said in the beginning of my remarks, Nova Scotia needs additional income from the Government of Canada in order to provide the necessary training and basic skills to Canadians living in that province so that they may take advantage of job opportunities which may be presented to them at some point in time.

Therefore, the logic of reducing this funding to my province is both discriminatory and unfair; it certainly does not meet with the favour of my provincial colleagues on the Government side and on the opposition side in Nova Scotia.

A parish priest from Holy Family Parish in Eskasoni, Nova Scotia, wrote to his local MLA seeking the reinstitution of the trades training programs. Also, a Conservative MLA who was written to made a statement to the effect that he would wish to have additional funding. There are individuals who are ready and willing to take advantage of the trades training programs.

I ask the Parliamentary Secretary, as a representative of the Government of Canada, to give us clear and concise answers as to why Canadians in the Province of Nova Scotia are being discriminated against, while Canadians in the Province of Ontario are receiving a distinct advantage. Again I say that it is both unfair and discriminatory. I hope the practice will stop and stop forthwith.

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), I should like to provide the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) with a more detailed reply to his questions of April 8, 1986 which he directed to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) concerning an apparent reduction in federal funding for trades training in Nova Scotia.

To begin, I should like to point out that the federal funding for purchases of training programs will not be reduced this year. In fact, this year the federal Government will provide the same funding as last year—90 per cent will flow directly from the federal Government to the institutions and the remaining 10 per cent is available to flow to the institutions via purchases made by third parties under the programs of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. Furthermore, the Government has agreed to pay the provinces an amount equal to the difference if third party purchases from public institutions are less than 10 pent cent. Funds will also be available to make up differences in 1987-88 and 1988-89, and to accelerate adaptation of provincial institutions and administrative structures to the needs of the labour market.

The direct purchase of institutional training programs responds to the needs of the labour market and is not arbitrarily pursued. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond has referred to recent lay-offs in trades training. I would inform the House that these lay-offs are not the result of any federal reduction in funds. Rather, they are a consequence of the provincial government decision to emphasize construction trades training and de-emphasize industrial trades training because of changes in labour market demand.

The demand for industrial trades apprenticeship training in Cape Breton has fallen off over the last two years. This has resulted in more funding going to another institution in Nova Scotia for training in apprenticeable construction trades than is going to a Cape Breton institution for training in apprenticeable industrial trades. However, this choice is a provincial responsibility. The federal Government cannot be held responsible for lay-offs of teachers at provincial institutions due to a provincial decision on training for indentured apprentices. As I have said, the provincial decision is based upon a response to measured labour market demand.

The Government has been involved in negotiations for new training arrangements with all provinces since last July. Negotiations have been and will continue to be based upon the fundamental principles of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, principles to which all provinces agreed in February, 1985. We are not reducing the amount of federal dollars for training in the coming year, but we have indicated our willingness to guarantee that dollars for both direct and indirect purchases will be 100 per cent of those available last year.

Yes, we are proposing reallocation of some of our training dollars to increase the scope of private sector involvement in training. Reallocation of some funding to the private sector is needed to achieve the best possible blend of on and off-the-job training options with substantial but limited federal dollars.

We recognize the need to introduce change in a planned fashion to ensure stability for public training institutions as they adapt their training to tap a larger pool of training dollars outside Government.

This Government is confident the shift of some of our training purchase decisions to the private sector will result in more business, not less, for provincial institutions as the private sector begins to sponsor and pay for courses at these institutions and elsewhere.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION (A) MATANE PAPER MILL—GOVERNMENT POSITION (B) AGREEMENT PERMITTING ESTABLISHMENT OF MATANE PAPER MILL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker I wonder if I should take part in the late show in view of what has just happened, in view of the parliamentary hypocrisy in the debate on official languages. And it is the same guy who manipulated all that who will answer me.

But I will come back all the same to the question I directed on April 7, 1986, to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). I asked him why he would not sign the agreement after having given his word to the Quebec minister of Natural Resources, Mr. Ciaccia, regarding the Matane paper mill.

Mr. Speaker, as in several matters concerning Quebec, like the Domtar case, the Gulf-Ultramar case and this one, the Matane case, people in Quebec always notice that the ministers as well as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) do not keep their words.

In this case, the request does not come from just anybody. It is from a Minister of the Government of Quebec and I think I have a lot more confidence in him than in the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. These two peoples agreed on one common action. The Minister gave his word that he would sign the joint letter that he had received from Mr. Ciaccia following negotiations with officials. Mr. Ciaccia also sent the letter to the compagny so that it could discuss the proposals, that is the grant proposals as well as other opportunities made available by the government.

The Quebec minister knew, as well as his federal counterpart, that the company was to be involved in a takeover and that the whole deal was to be decided upon today, April 24. That was no reason to keep the Minister from signing the offer inviting the company to build in the Matane area, that it might pursue discussions and avoid undue delays.

But because of the stubbornness of the minister who did not sign the joint offer together with Mr. Ciaccia, although I do hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will come up today with some informations about the situation even if decisions are currently . . . That means that the minister will delay the implementation of that industry since it is only as of tomorrow that he will send the joint offer for grants that both the federal government and the government of Quebec are prepared to make so that the company can build this paper mill in Matane.

Mr. Speaker, we are experiencing in this case exactly the same thing that happened in the Gulf-Ultramar deal where Quebecers have been diddled to the bones if I may say so! We are living the same tragedy as was the case with Domtar in the Eastern Townships where once again Quebecers were conned. They did receive the money but it was their own money which was in the envelope; so they have been taken for a ride one more time.

Mr. Speaker, as I just found out once again, the French-speaking Quebecers have been had because they could not discuss in committee the means to improve the Official Languages Act.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude, and I dare hope that this time, the Parliamentary Secretary, who was prepared earlier to kill this motion which is so important to protect all French-speaking Canadians, will have a very bright answer.

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the question of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie. When during his ramblings the Hon. Member said that I killed Bill C-203—Well, a conservative Member from New Brunswick, a province run by Premier Richard Hatfield, a man who fought for French-speaking people and Acadians, has no lesson to take from the Liberals—

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Hatfield did not do what he should have done.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, I do not appreciate such an answer.

We do not like to be reminded that Liberals have been in power for 16 years and that they did not amend the Official Languages Act since 1969. We are prepared to do it. But, to come back to the Matane papermill. The same thing has to be repeated over and over before some people can understand.

The Matane papermill issue consist of a project of an overcalendered papermill with a capacity of 180,000 metric tons a year, and the total cost is estimated at $327 million, in addition to the $25 million needed for the infrastructure off site.

We know who the sponsors are. Up to now, there have been many meetings between federal and Quebec government employees to explore the possibility of government funding in order for the project to proceed. In fact, a clear declaration of intent has already been issued.

When you listen to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), you would swear that he was with Messrs. Ciaccia and Stevens, the Quebec and federal ministers, when they discussed the Matane paper mill because he says that he gave his word. Now, as far as I know, and the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie may agree with me, a proposed draft agreement is not an agreement. However, to further his own political interests, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie says that Quebecers are being fooled by this Government, but Quebecers know better because they see what happened with the unemployment rate in Quebec since Septembre 1984. At any rate, when the decision on this matter is made, some factors will have to be taken into consideration.

They can listen because they might learn what will be considered. They will consider of course the social and economic impact of that investment in the Lower St. Lawrence region and the Gaspé Peninsula. But, Mr. Speaker, they will have to take into account as well the representations of the pulp and paper industry which do not favour discretionary funding of such projects, because those who know the market know what it means and what possible impact such funding will have, Mr. Speaker, on the trade negotiations which will begin shortly with our neighbours to the South, the United States of America.

A draft presentation to Cabinet regarding the Matane paper mill is under way and should be submitted shortly so that a final decision can be taken in this regard.

COMMMUNICATIONS—BELL CANADA TELEPHONE BILLS—REFUSAL OF CASH PAYMENT

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago I asked the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) a question relating to the payment of Bell Canada telephone bills. I asked this question because, with very little warning, Bell Canada unilaterally changed its payment policy. All of a sudden, only cheques or money orders were acceptable tender at Bell Phonecentres in Mississauga. When I asked the Minister for an explanation of this situation, the hon. gentleman responded by informing the House that such matters were within the jurisdiction of the CRTC and that the CRTC was looking into the situation.

Several weeks have since passed. The CRTC is still looking into the situation. For the following reasons, it is my submission that that is not good enough. First and foremost, since when has cash minted at the Canadian Mint been unacceptable payment for Canadian goods and services? I question the legality of such a resolution. Second, Bell subscribers were not given adequate warning of this policy change. One morning my constituency office was inundated with phone calls from citizens who had made the trip to the Bell office. These citizens were following their normal practice of paying their bills in person with cash. I cannot accept that the powers that be at Bell would be so remiss as to forget to notify their customers of such an important change. Yet there were an awful lot of constituents who were not aware of this new regulation. I would be remiss if I did not suggest that, in this matter, Bell was just not trying very hard.

My third protest against this regulation is that many of my constituents must now pay a charge to their banks for the processing of cheques and money orders required for bill payment. One constituent calculated that this will cost him an extra $24 a year. This is hardly fair when Canadian legal tender can be used without service charge. I have a dollar bill here and it states on it: "This note is legal tender".

Fourth, the Bell Canada office in question in my riding will not accept cash payment for bills, but it will accept cash for the purchase of phones and equipment. I cannot wait for an explanation of Bell Canada's convoluted reasoning on this one! Worst of all is the fact that residents of nearby Toronto can still pay their phone bills in cash. I bear no ill will toward Torontonians, but this is a clear case of discrimination against citizens of the eighth largest and fastest growing city in the country.

My final worry is the relationship between the CRTC and Bell Canada. When this problem first came to my attention, I phoned the CRTC. I was informed that the Commission was looking into the situation. However, I sensed a certain reluctance by the CRTC to become involved. Personnel at the CRTC explained that it was not normal policy to interfere with internal administrative issues at Bell, that rates were the matter of greatest concern. What this means is that the CRTC is taking a long time to look into a situation, but in the final analysis no action will be taken. This is not good enough.

Of course, the role of Bell Canada cannot be overlooked. I have nothing in principle against Bell Canada. Bell does an extremely efficient job in allowing Canadians to communicate across this vast land and around the world. Yet Bell is a monopoly, one that makes a great deal of money. In looking over Bell's financial statements, we find that for the nine months ended September 30, 1985, Bell's net income increased 15 per cent from the corresponding period in the previous year. We find that total revenues rose by 28 per cent. For the year ended December 31, 1984, total revenues were up by 19 per cent. During 1984, Bell's acquisitions included new interests and remaining interests in several large corporations.

At the time of the drafting of this speech, Bell had not responded in the news media to complaints about this action, although I understand that a statement may be forthcoming. I have ascertained that Bell has taken this action in the name of cost-cutting and efficiency, and because Bell believes this action will keep phone rates at a reasonable level. Bell also suggested that this policy was justified because it was no different from that of other large utility companies. I am 100 per cent in favour of efficiency, cost-cutting and reasonable phone rates, but Bell's action promotes none of these goals.

What is efficient about a Phonecentre which accepts cash for equipment, but which will not accept cash for telephone bill payment on the very same premises? How does this policy help to keep phone rates reasonable when consumers must pay a service charge on the cheques required to pay bills? For those who make few long distance calls, service charges mean that the total amount paid for phone bills could even increase.

After phoning both Ottawa Hydro and Mississauga Hydro in my riding, I was informed that it is standard policy to accept cash payment for bills. In the matter of cost-cutting, I would be very interested in seeing Bell's figures on how much this action will save. To my knowledge, Bell staff has not been let go, nor have Bell offices closed as a result of this. What and where are the savings? More important, is this action justified? Even if Bell Canada saves a few dollars, can this decision really be condoned? It is discriminatory. It causes inconvenience and expense to the consumer. It represents a unilateral decision made by a powerful monopoly. It may be illegal.

It has been said that the Progressive Conservative Party is the Party of big business. I have always found this view to be unfounded and uninformed. Especially in this matter, I have no intention of siding with the big guy, nor do the other members of this Progressive Conservative Government who have spoken out against Bell Canada's action.

I urge Bell Canada to waste no time in reversing this ill-advised policy. Barring this, I expect the CRTC to perform its duty in ordering a reversal of this policy. If all else fails, the Government should do everything in its power to have this decision revoked.

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) has raised a very important issue, one that is of concern to his constituents and, indeed, to all Bell Canada subscribers. As I understand it, Last November Bell Canada started to phase out its teller facilities in its Phonecentres and teleboutiques. This means subscribers will no longer be able to pay their telephone bills with cash. While by far the majority of subscribers, 90 per cent, pay their bills by mail or at banks, some customers have been accustomed to visiting a Bell office and paying cash.

Bell Canada has indicated that it has taken this action because the role of the Phonecentres has changed in recent years. Phonecentres were originally set up to display phones that could be leased and, more recently, purchased by consumers. Today the telephone equipment market is highly competitive and Bell has apparently found that it is expensive to maintain teller facilities in its Phonecentres. According to Bell, this means the general body of subscribers are subsidizing the cost of these tellers that are only used by a small number of subscribers.

I can understand Bell's motives in its efforts to be cost efficient in its operations. However, I have greater sympathy for those subscribers who feel they are inconvenienced by what they perceive to be a lower level of service. For many years the terms and conditions relating to the provision of telephone service have been set out in the company's general regulations. In a comprehensive review, begun in 1983, the CRTC has reviewed the regulations. With the benefit of a thorough public consultative process, the Commission has revised the regulations "terms of service". The terms of service will provide customers with adequate safeguards against possible abuses by companies providing services on a monopoly basis.

One of the old regulations, number 28, specified that subscribers must pay their bills at the company's business offices or at authorized agencies. The new rule adopted by the Commission in March of this year deletes the provision relating to locations where customers may pay their accounts. The Commission was of the view that customers should be able to pay their accounts by mail as well as designated company offices.

The CRTC has a solid record of proceedings and decisions which have maintained a high level of service provided to the public. With respect to this issue, I am advised that the Commission has received several complaints regarding Bell's refusal of cash payments. Furthermore, I understand the Commission has been in contact with Bell Canada to obtain more information and a full explanation for this change. The mechanism for this request is a formal interrogatory in connection with the Commission's proceeding to review Bell's rate of return. This proceeding, which is similar to the one which is conducted when Bell Canada applies for a general rate increase, will afford the general public and interested groups the opportunity to comment on Bell's operation.

Given that the Commission has only recently adopted new "terms of service" for Bell and the formal proceeding on Bell's rate of return is under way, I think it is opportune that the Commission fully investigate this issue and subsequently determine the extent to which provisions should be made by the company to accept cash.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PEACE AND DEMOCRACY IN LATIN AMERICA

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Recently, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Members for North Vancouver—Burnaby (Mr. Cook) and Spadina (Mr. Heap) travelled to Guatemala with me to attend a conference of Latin American countries on peace and democracy in that part of the world.

I would like to thank Guatamalan authorities for their warm welcome and extend our best wishes to their newborn democracy.

Eighteen countries were represented. We were the only foreign observers in attendance, and I am convinced that we entertained at least one thought upon our return from this momentous one-week conference held during the Easter break: democratic process and patience alone will resolve the difficulties now facing Latin America, particularly the extremely delicate situation in Nicaragua. Neither aggressiveness nor the Contras will stem violence. Lasting peace in Nicaragua and Latin America can only come through the development of the Contadora process and of those four countries, with the co-operation of nations that support the Contadora.

MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the changes the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek) is making in multicultural policy have aroused strong and appropriate opposition across the country. The Minister wants to bring the ethnic minorities out of the ethnocultural corners he thinks they live in now. He is convinced that the big majority of the ethnocultural community want to become another Stronach, achieving success like that of the chairman of Magna International Inc. The Minister appears to have forgotten how few people will achieve such entrepreneurship in our society.

In the meantime he has raised questions about support for immigrant settlement, language instruction, and other programs which assist ordinary immigrants in obtaining work in Canada. He has done nothing to advance the certification in Canada of professionals trained in other countries. His narrow preoccupation with entrepreneurship and trade expansion was clearly expressed at the Multiculturalism Means Business conference. However, multiculturalism is not for sale. Enhancement of Canada's multiculturalism requires large efforts by a Department of Multiculturalism, not abandonment of initiatives before they have succeeded.

HEALTH

HARMFUL EFFECTS OF SMOKING

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, surely there can be no doubt about the harmful effects of smoking, both on the person smoking and on others due to second-hand smoke. Notwithstanding the commercial concerns of Imperial Tobacco and the giant conglomerate, Imasco, I applaud the recent decision of Air Canada to begin flights which will ban smoking entirely.

Actuarial studies prove that at every age smokers are three times as likely to die as nonsmokers. There is strong medical evidence now emerging of the dangers of second-hand smoke.

I have seen several of my friends die of lung cancer over the years, so I commend any voluntary or legislative action which will not only help nonsmokers but might also deter smokers and thereby lengthen their lives.

COMPETITION TRIBUNAL ACT

CRITICISM OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S OPPOSITION

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks the NDP has been raising questions about corporate concentration in Canada and the dangers this could pose to the Canadian economy. All Members of Parliament are aware of the dangers. That is why the Government has brought forward Bill C-91, the Competition Tribunal

Act. Today, in the absence of this Act, we have no effective competition legislation in Canada. After this Bill is passed we will have, for the first time, competition legislation which has teeth.

Both the Official Opposition and the Government favour speedy passage of this Bill in order to get some control over the situation. However, the NDP seems determined to delay passage of this Bill while still complaining of increased corporate concentration and decreased competition. It is time for the NDP to stop this charade and give Canadians a law which can offer them protection.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR PREMIERS' CONFERENCE ON PARTICIPATION IN FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question I put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) yesterday, he did not want to say whether a federal-provincial conference of First Ministers would be convened to define the Premiers' role in free trade negotiations with the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I would strongly suggest that such a conference has become imperative because several provinces, including Ontario and Quebec, have voiced serious reservations on these free trade negotiations. A survey has revealed that close to 100,000 jobs are on the line in Montreal alone.

I urge the Prime Minister to honour his promise and allow the provinces to participate in the negotiations. That is why a federal-provincial conference should be held before Canadian negotiators are given a specific mandate.

REGULATION CHANGE—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT BACK-BENCHERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) told a group of Armed Forces retirees outside the House of Commons that he and other Progressive Conservative Members oppose his Government's move to deny unemployed pensioners UIC benefits. If this is true, I challenge him and the Progressive Conservative back-benchers to have the Government bring this matter to a vote now. The House of Commons can then determine how many back-benchers are speaking out of both sides of their mouths at the same time.

BALTIC EVENING

COMMEMORATION OF FORMER INDEPENDENCE OF BALTIC STATES

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, last night Canadians of Estonian, Latvian and Lithuanian origin gathered on Parliament Hill to commemorate the independence of the Baltic States which was lost after the occupation of their homelands by the Soviet Union. At this 14th annual Baltic Evening we were reminded of our good fortune as Canadians able to live and practise the tenets of democracy and social justice, and how valuable and fragile these rights are. The Baltic States are subjected to harsh policies of Russification and cultural genocide.

In Canada the cultures of the Balts flourish and there is the constant hope that their artistic and linguistic heritage will not be lost. As proud Canadians, Estonians, Latvians and Lithuanians contribute their strength and perseverance—ever mindful of and ever vigilant—in the cause of freedom.

Canada does not recognize the forcible occupation of the Baltic States by the Soviet Union. Parliamentarians and diplomatic dignitaries joined with them to mark this special occasion. As Canadians from many backgrounds, we join with them in the continued effort to restore justice, freedom, and democracy in eastern Europe.

IMPROVED CROP INSURANCE INITIATIVE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I applaud the recent agreement in principle to provide increased crop insurance coverage for farmers facing successive years of crop losses. Areas of Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia, where widespread losses occurred in 1984 and 1985, will be eligible. Under the new program, additional coverage equal to 10 per cent of average yield, to a total maximum of 80 per cent of average yield, will be tacked on to the 1986 crop insurance purchased by individual farmers. No additional premium will be charged for this enhanced protection. This all-risk benefit will be provided under the Crop Insurance Act, based on crop insurance principles. To be eligible a farmer must apply for insurance by April 30, 1986.

I commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and his three western provincial counterparts on this initiative, and note as well their continuing commitment to bring a long-term comprehensive crop disaster program into place for 1987.

MODIFICATION OF BENEFITS—ALLEGED INJUSTICE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, increasingly, Canadians are wondering what kind of social justice inspired this Government to cut unemployment insurance benefits for 34,000 early retirees who, before January 5, had agreed to early retirement, and lost their jobs and were drawing unemployment insurance benefits. On January 5, the Government decided to cut them off, which meant a loss of $10,000 for these people. Why did the Government decide to penalize people who were getting pension benefits from their employer's pension plan after losing their jobs?

Members of the military, police forces and other groups of citizens who are obliged to take early retirement and who have paid their unemployment insurance premiums are no longer entitled to those benefits. Why? And what kind of social justice made the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) decide that a person drawing $300 from his employer's pension plan will lose $200 in unemployment insurance benefits, while those who are better off and get $300 a week from a private plan, an RRSP, are entitled to their unemployment insurance benefits?

I urge all Conservative Members to insist that the Prime Minister correct this unfair situation.

COMPETITION TRIBUNAL ACT

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S POSITION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) criticized the NDP, and myself, I suppose, for saying that we would not permit quick passage of the competition Bill. He should know that the independent operators in the oil industry appeared before the committee yesterday with amendments to the Bill. They said if they were not included, the Bill should not be passed. He should know that Professor Stanbury, one of the best experts in the field, has said there are important deficiencies in the Bill. Until those are dealt with we are certainly going to fight that Bill as hard as we can.

POSSIBILITY OF $80 MILLION GRANT TO ELIMINATE POLLUTION OF ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, Wednesday the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) announced that Quebec could expect to receive the same assistance for cleaning up the St. Lawrence as Ontario did for cleaning up the Great Lakes.

Under the previous Liberal Government, Quebec was unfairly excluded from the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement signed by Canada and the United States in 1978. This decision was made despite the fact that the waters of the Great Lakes flow into the St. Lawrence River.

Our government, a Conservative Government that is well represented in Quebec, will soon be taking steps to remedy this situation, and, Mr. Speaker, people are talking about a grant of nearly $80 million to clean up the St. Lawrence River. I think that is good news.

MEETING OF GRAIN EXPORTING COUNTRIES URGED

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, this week several Members of the House of Common's Standing Committee on Agriculture were in Washington to meet with the newly-appointed Secretary of Agriculture, the Hon. Richard Lyng, Under-Secretary Amstutz, and several congressional leaders. Unfortunately our talks confirmed some of our worst fears. While there is widespread awareness of the impact of the U. S. Farm Bill on Canada and other exporting nations, the United States is clearly determined to meet the EEC exporting nations head-on in what has become the war of the subsidies.

While the future for Canadian agricultural exports is clearly threatened by this all-out trade war, there is a glimmer of hope, Mr. Speaker.

American officials are aware of and applaud the efforts of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) to convene a meeting of the exporting nations. American officials also agree that it is extremely important that the "talking process" continue at all levels, including the upcoming round of GATT negotiations. In the meantime we, as a nation, will have to do whatever we can to be of financial assistance to Canadian farmers who will be the unfortunate victims of this trade war.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES—QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Conservative Government promised that federal-provincial relations would be harmonious. As far as equalization payments to the provinces are concerned, the Minister of Finance has refused to extend the transitional guarantee formula established in 1982, and on top of that, he seems unwilling to meet a commitment he made last April with respect to Quebec. My question to the Minister the Finance is as follows: When does he intend to correct this injustice and pay Quebec the $66 million to which it is entitled for the 1985-86 financial year?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no commitment to the Province of Quebec, and the Hon. Member knows that. In the legislation that was presented a year ago it was made very clear that these were ex gratia payments.

We used two guidelines to provide us with some direction as to what the amounts should be, but those guidelines were only guidelines. They were never part of any commitment.

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL KEEP PROMISE TO QUEBEC CONCERNING BILL C-39

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, unlike what the Minister of Finance has just said, in April 1985 the Minister and the Minister of State for Finance both promised that Quebec would not receive less than 95 per cent of the equalization payments it had received the previous year—this was a firm commitment—and I therefore want to ask the Minister of Finance when he intends to meet the commitment he and his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance made in the House during consideration of Bill C-39.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there was absolutely no commitment. That is very, very clear. The legislation itself says that there would be a basis for arriving at that, but there is no commitment at all. The 95 per cent is not a 95 per cent commitment. The commitment on the floor level is 85 per cent for the Province of Quebec. That legislation was not touched.

PROMISE MADE TO PROVINCES—QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, on April 18, 1985, the Minister of State for Finance said the following before the House:

> The highest protection, the 95 per cent floor, is given to those provinces which are not as strong fiscally as others and ensures their payments will decline by no more than 5 per cent from one year to the next.

Mr. Speaker, Quebec is losing $66 million in 1985-86, and again I want to ask the Minister of Finance when he intends to meet the commitment made in the House by the Minister of State for Finance, a commitment he himself mentioned in answer to a question from my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie a few days ago.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is trying to stir up differences that are not there. We have made it very clear that the $110 million that we provided to the Province of Quebec was over and above what was required by law. It was a total voluntary payment on the part of this Government to assist the Province of Quebec in a difficult period. That $110 million was totally in excess of what was required by the law.

REQUEST FROM QUEBEC POTATO PRODUCERS' FEDERATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Equalization is not the only area in which Quebec is treated unfairly. Agriculture is another example, now that potato producers are in a very tight financial situation and the federal Government is doing nothing to help them. I therefore want to ask the Minister whether he is prepared to immediately respond to a request from representatives for the Quebec Federation of Potato Producers who are asking him to intervene through the Farm Price Stabilization Board and pay farmers about $1.84 per hundredweight. Otherwise, hundreds of Quebec producers will be in dire financial straits. Could the Minister give the House the assurance he will take immediate action?

• (1120)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know better. If he refers to the record he will recognize that we have dealt fairly and squarely, and equitably, with the Province of Quebec in relation to any other province.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DOES NOT DO MORE FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister dares to tell us he acted fairly. Perhaps he could explain to the House why he got a letter—why all federal Members are getting letters from the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Pagé, who starts by criticizing the lack of action on the part of the federal Government and the discriminatory nature of the measures taken by the Minister.

Why did the Minister pay nearly $10 million to provinces like Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, which in itself is quite laudable, but do nothing for Quebec?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that when they were in office they did not pay their bills with the Province of Quebec. We paid those outstanding expenditures when we came to office. For instance, the bill for crop insurance alone amounted to $25 million or $30 million. Indeed, we paid that bill.

The Hon. Member does not know the difference between stabilization and diversion. We did not pay stabilization in Prince Edward Island or the Province of New Brunswick. Rather, we participated in a federal-provincial program of diversion. There is a difference.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—ROLE OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday in the House, in response to my colleague from Ottawa Centre who asked about releasing or making available to Members of Parliament the impact studies on free trade, the Minister for International Trade said, as reported at page 12608 of Hansard:

> Representatives of all sectors of our economy, including the manufacturing, labour, and farming sectors, will be involved in the elaborate advisory system which we have set up.

Why is that not also afforded to Members of Parliament who represent the country as a whole in a variety of ways? Why will Members of the House of Commons not be invited to take part in a discussion of what is going on as well as participating in the monitoring, making judgments, and giving advice with regard to the free trade talks that are about to be undertaken?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for some time both sides of the House have expressed an interest in having a debate in the House of Commons with regard to the trade negotiations. Certainly the Government would welcome and encourage that kind of debate and, now that there has been an agreement reached by the U.S. Senate to authorize the President to negotiate, we would hope it might be possible for House Leaders to work out the details of that debate.

As far as other discussions are concerned, I think we would be quite prepared to make the maximum information available to Members of Parliament consistent with the necessary position that Canada would have to take at any bargaining table. No one in the House would want information here to prejudice the Canadian case that might be made in the privacy of negotiations.

REQUEST THAT IMPACT STUDIES BE MADE AVAILABLE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I interpret that to mean that the impact studies that have already been done and will be made available—if not in whole, at least in part—to the groups that were mentioned by the Minister for International Trade, will in fact be made available to Members of the House of Commons in advance of a debate taking place in the House so that the debate can focus on the role that both the Parliament of Canada and the Government will play in the determination of the free trade talks?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a very careful look at precisely what the Hon. Member is proposing, but I believe that we can agree to the request that he made.

PROVISION OF INFORMATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, since the House of Commons may well be given the information that is necessary, will the Government, in advance of any negotiations taking place, make sure that at least the same degree of information that has been made available to the provinces so far is made available to Members of the House of Commons? The President of the United States has guaranteed that that kind of information will be made available to Senators in the United States which means that they would, in fact, have far greater knowledge of what is going on in the talks than we would have.

• (1125)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, information which is being exchanged between the federal Government and the provincial Governments is not all one way. They are providing information to us and we are working very closely together in the preparation of a common information base. There might be some reluctance about some details of that information being made available publicly, but my view is that we should make available to Members of Parliament as much information as we can. I will take a very careful look at the details of the Hon. Member's request and we will try to honour it as fully as we can.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

MATANE PAPER MILL PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I would like to ascertain whether another Minister on the other side is looking after the interests of Quebecers. Hon. Members would know that answers are not forthcoming with respect to equalization payments and potatoes.

Concerning the Matane paper mill project, about which the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion made a commitment to his Quebec counterpart, I should like to know if a Minister might have an explanation for the fact that, in a prepared statement he read yesterday, the Parliamentary Secretary said: "Before making any decision about such projects, we would have to take into consideration the possible impact our assistance might have on the current trade negotiations with the Americans." Is there any connection between the delay in granting financial assistance to the Matane paper mill and the free trade negotiations with the Americans, as implied in the statement?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member can see, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is absent from the House today on Government business. I will take the Hon. Member's question as notice and ensure that it is brought to the Minister's attention immediately upon his return for his disposition.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RESPECT ITS PROMISES AND WORD

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In the discussions and agreements between the Governments of Quebec and Canada there was no mention of taking into consideration the fact that the pulp and paper industry might object to the Matane paper mill grant.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister make sure that Quebecers and Conservative Members will live up to their promise to Matane residents and honour their commitment to the Quebec Minister?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly make the representations of the hon. gentleman known to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion immediately upon his return.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this Friday morning conciliation from the Secretary of State for External Affairs is much appreciated.

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Langdon: Given that Simon Reisman has refused to rule out bargaining with respect to the Auto Pact, and given the damage the Government's secret study on it has suggested supposedly could take place—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Mr. Langdon: —will the Minister specifically authorize today the release of that study which has already reached the public, according to the Toronto Star, through leaks to the newspaper?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What paper was that?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, surely the Hon. Member would not expect me to trust the word of the Toronto Star. I believe in reciprocity. I will take a look at the possibility of acceding to the Hon. Member's request, and respond.

Mr. Crosbie: He has stars in his eyes.

Mr. Nystrom: Generous Joe.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): May I ask the Minister if he now recognizes that the lack of trust which a good many Canadians, not just the Toronto Star, have exhibited with respect—

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Mr. Langdon: —to the Government's handling of the free trade issue has come directly out of the secretive closed basis upon which it has proceeded to take these policies forward? Why has the Minister not—

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Langdon: —brought the Canadian people more into this process?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not agree with the suggestion that the people of Canada suffer from the same disease as the editors of the Toronto Star.

CHANGE IN REGULATIONS—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Conservative Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants said what we in opposition have been saying for months, that is, the recent cuts in unemployment insurance are wrong, unfair, unjust, bad, and have to be changed. He said that if there were a vote in the Conservative caucus they would be changed. If the Minister will not listen to veterans and pensioners, will she at least listen to members of her own caucus and the Conservative women of Oromocto, and withdraw this cruel measure while the Forget Commission is sitting?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as you know, this issue has been raised on a number of occasions in the House of Commons. I have made responses at those times. The Government has made a response as well. The question was debated at length this morning in the Standing Committee. As for comments with regard to the caucus, I would say that what goes on in caucus is a matter for members of caucus.

Mr. Orlikow: It's what he said in public, not what he said in caucus.

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member must be somewhat concerned about caucus when he listens to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

CONSERVATIVE CAUCUS INQUIRY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister saying that this large Conservative caucus of 211 Members not only has no impact on bad legislation in the House of Commons but that it has no impact behind the closed doors of caucus? Is that what she is saying about this large caucus?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what I consider—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must rule the question out of order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PRICE OF GASOLINE—SHELL COMPANY'S PROFITS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who has the responsibility of trying to protect the consumers of Canada. The Executive Vice-President of Shell Canada confirmed Wednesday that his company is padding profit margins by 2 cents to 3 cents per litre of gasoline. Yet the Government is asking the oil companies to pass on the savings from reduced crude oil costs. How is this voluntary policy effective when the Shell Canada slogan "Shell helps" really means "Shell helps itself"?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, our Government's energy policy has already paid handsome dividends, and consumers are now benefitting from lower market prices. Hopefully the situation will continue to be favourable to consumers, and I can assure my colleague that we will monitor developments very closely.

PETRO-CANADA—INCREASE IN TORONTO GASOLINE PRICE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, if the Government is monitoring the situation can the Minister explain why the Government owned oil company, Petro-Canada, is now following the Shell pricing policy by raising its price today in Toronto to more than 40 cents per litre when it should be 38 cents per litre? Will the Government direct, or at least urge, Petro-Canada to pass on the full 12 cent per litre saving to the consumer?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised to hear such comments, if only because last year the Hon. Member's Party urged the Government to adopt a hands-off policy and let the marketplace set prices; yet now that prices are falling they want us to set a floor price.

The only thing we have to be concerned about, Mr. Speaker, is that consumers should reap the full benefits of declining oil prices, and that is what the Government is monitoring on a regular basis.

RAILWAYS

POSSIBLE LAY-OFF OF CN WORKERS AT JONQUIÈRE, P.Q.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister of Transport.

Within the next few weeks, 15 CN workers in Jonquière could be laid off following the manpower rationalization announced by the CN. The loss of 15 jobs in remote areas is equivalent to a loss of 200 jobs in Montreal.

Can the Minister give me the assurance that the meeting which I have requested between officials from his Department, the CN authorities and representatives of the 15 employees in Jonquière who could lose their job will be held as soon as possible and that the options proposed by the union will be examined seriously?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his representation. I know it is of concern to him. I can confirm that a meeting is being set up in early May, thanks to the Hon. Member's representations. This meeting will involve members of CN, members of the union, and members of my office, who will examine this situation to see whether, in fact, any alternative proposals might be advanced.

THE ADMINISTRATION

MINISTERIAL REGIONAL OFFICES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Supply and Services my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Will the President of the Treasury Board explain why, on the one hand, the Government is turning its back on the pensioned workers of the country while, on the other hand, it has approved six ministerial offices across the country? According to our information the B.C. office space alone will cost somewhere in the neighbourhood of $87,000. Does he not think this is a little expensive for a regional powder-room?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member opposite well knows, it has been a long-standing practice that Ministers have been entitled to an office outside the national capital region when business warrants. That was a practice of the former Government and it is a practice of this one. In the major centres we have consolidated some of these offices.

COST OF OFFICES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I know that the B.C. plans, for example, include office space for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resouces, as well as offices for two other Ministers. Is the Minister not a little bit embarrassed about the fact that the interest on the Vancouver office alone, which we conservatively estimate will cost $250,000 a year, could permit the rental of a $100-a-night hotel room for 250 nights out of the 365 in the year? Does he really think he needs these regional powder-rooms for Ministers from which they can expand their own political bases and their political propaganda machines, in the same way they did with the B.C. Expo tickets?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to report to the House that through this measure no additional office space will be required. Because of this measure expenditures for the total cost of ministerial offices outside the national capital region will actually decrease. This fits very well with our concern for better management of public funds.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SALE OF AMERICAN WHEAT TO ALGERIA

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. We were all shocked this week to hear that the Americans are planning to use their massive subsidies to undercut a traditional Canadian wheat market in Syria. I find that it has already done the same thing in Algeria. Is the Minister aware that in the last six months the Americans have signed 11 separate agreements for the sale of one million tons of wheat to Algeria? In one case it sold wheat at $103 per ton with a subsidy—if Hon. Members can believe this—of $54.38 per ton. Is the Minister aware of this? What does he plan to do about it?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that, indeed, the Minister of Agriculture is aware of this. I would say that the question should more properly be addressed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Nystrom: He is not here.

Mr. Wise: Absolutely. He is on his way to Toronto to meet with the agriculture committee of the Canadian Bankers' Association concerning the interests of Canadian farmers. I discussed the matter with the Minister earlier this morning. Preliminary information is that that market is primarily interested in receiving Durum wheat from Canada. The program of the U.S. Government is not designated or oriented in that direction. The latest information is that we are maintaining our historic sales levels in that country.

UNITED STATES SUBSIDIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, since these massive subsidies have only started in the last few months does the Minister not agree that, according to the Wheat Board, they will undercut some of our traditional markets and they are a violation of the International Wheat Agreement? If he agrees, does he intend to lodge a complaint with the International Wheat Council in London?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we do not have to speculate on this. The results and the impact are already there. That is recognized. It has been recognized by the Government. In fact it has been recognized in the House in questions posed earlier this week and responded to by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance indicated the very leading role that he took on behalf of our country at the OECD meeting. I am sure the Hon.

Member in the next short while will see leading roles taken in the interests of Canadian agriculture by the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister, and other cabinet Ministers.

AIR SAFETY

ARCTIC AIRPORTS PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board's finding that inadequate facilities are compromising air safety in northern Canada, will the Minister now reinstate the Arctic Airports Program cancelled by the previous Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that my official response to the Canadian Aviation Safety Board is being drafted and it will be submitted before the deadline of May 19.

With respect to the program to which the Hon. Member referred, it is something that is being discussed with my cabinet colleagues, but I should remind him that some $4.5 million has been spent on the Arctic Class "B" airports in the North since September, 1985. We will continue to use resources that are available to us to improve air safety in the North, as well as the infrastructure.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED PROPOSAL TO REQUIRE VISA PERMITS FOR PORTUGUESE VISITORS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns today's media reports suggesting that the Government is considering slapping visa requirements on all visitors from Portugal. I said in the House on April 11 that that action would be unwarranted and unfair and asked the Minister to abandon the proposal. Is the Minister prepared to confirm that officials have recommended such action and, if so, is she prepared to assure the House that she will reject it and thus avoid needlessly penalizing the Canadian Portuguese community and a European friend and ally?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it can be said without fear of contradiction that Canada has a well-known generous humanitarian attitude toward people coming to this country, whether as refugees or as immigrants. We want to ensure that that continues without fraudulent activity or abuse. In order to ensure that we have a proper and humanitarian refugee determination system, certain options are being considered. I can tell the Hon. Member that when these options have been finalized and the decisions are taken, they will be announced.

REFUGEE DETERMINATION POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question. I would like to pose the following question. Does she think it is fair to impose these sanctions on Portugal as a response to the refugee dilemma when she and the Government have failed miserably to bring in a refugee determination process that would address the 21,000 claimant backlog? Is she using Portugal and the Portuguese as a scapegoat for her own shortcomings?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this Government and this Party have no excuses to make. This Government stands second to none in its approach to refugees being accepted into this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: We will continue that approach. As I told the Hon. Member, we are at the present time considering options which will ensure that our refugee determination policy is just, humane and fair. I also want to assure him that the Minister of State for Immigration will be addressing this issue shortly and at the same time addressing the issue of the backlog.

SALE OF SUBSIDIZED AMERICAN WHEAT TO ALGERIA

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question put by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville to the Minister of Agriculture. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville mentioned the export enhancement program the U.S. is using on the sale of 100 million tons of wheat to Algeria, which has been our market, at export subsidies up to $54-American per ton. Can the Minister tell us if the United States complied with the article of the International Wheat Agreement which provides that, when a country engages in concessional export transactions, it shall consult with the exporting members whose commercial sales might be affected by such transactions to the maximum possible extent? Did these consultations take place? Did the U.S. initiate these consultations with us? When were they, and what was the nature of them?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of that question in the absence of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Again, though I was recalling from memory, I said that we were still maintaining our historic grain sale volumes to Algeria. In 1984-85 the Canadian sale of Durum to Algeria was 473,000 metric tons. This year, 1985-86, to date we have sold 430,000 metric tons to Algeria. The answer is clear.

PRICE PAID FOR CANADIAN WHEAT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell us what sort of concessions we had to make in price in order to meet the export subsidy of up to $54-American per ton?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it has been some time since I had the opportunity to report on behalf of the Canadian Wheat Board but I think I am recalling accurately that it is not the policy of the board to disclose price.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

USE OF FRENCH LANGUAGE ACCENTS ON PASSPORT DATA

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. According to an item which appeared in the Toronto Express this week, a departmental official has decided to eliminate all French accents from the names of French-speaking people in the new Canadian passports. My question is this: Is Canada truly a bilingual country or not?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada is truly a bilingual country. I am not yet a member of the French Academy, but I do not think that it is the practice to use accents for capital letters, which are those used in passports. However, I shall consider the representation made by the Hon. Member seriously and examine the whole matter.

REFUGEES

PORTUGUESE CLAIMANTS FOR REFUGEE STATUS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Will the Minister confirm that the number of people awaiting refugee determination is now some 21,000, 1,500 of whom are Portuguese nationals?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm those numbers exactly. I will be glad to get the information from the Minister of State for Immigration and see that it is passed on to the Hon. Member.

SPEED OF APPLICATION PROCESSING

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, if the figures are not exact, they are approximate. In view of that proportion, would the Minister agree that the first priority now has to be shortening the refugee process and that any special measures for Portuguese visa are really a long way down the line?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I totally agree with the Hon. Member that in the review of and revisions to the refugee determination policy, speed of processing must be one of the key criteria. We are looking at a refugee determination policy that will be more effective and more efficient but will retain its fairness and its humanitarian concepts.

LOBBYING

DISCLOSURE OF LOBBYISTS' ACTIVITIES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the—

Mr. Crosbie: Behave yourself today, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: Always do, brother.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is it the intention of the Government that full disclosure with regard to lobbying should be made public and, if so, will he instruct his friend, Mr. Frank Moores, to disclose the information which we have been attempting to obtain from his corporation in committee?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, we tabled a document back in December and we created a committee to have hearings on this matter. It is for the Chairman of the committee to call on the Members or any individual who would like to appear.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, we are unable to get information from the witnesses, the friends of the Conservative Party, in committee. Is the Minister going to allow firms such as the Moores company, the Bill Neville company, and other Tory companies that are in the business of arm twisting, to continue pulling down a veil of secrecy around their operations when they approach the Government and Members of Parliament?

• (1150)

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I think the Government has already shown its intention by tabling a document and dealing with the issue of integrity.

An Hon. Member: You did nothing.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): We have already had much discussion on the subject and we hope the committee will bring forward recommendations to give us good legislation.

Mr. Rodriguez: Horsefeathers.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FRENCH EDUCATIONAL TELEVISION NETWORK IN ONTARIO

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. On December 4, 1984, the federal Minister of Communications, accompanied by the Minister responsible for TV Ontario at the time, announced an agreement to create a French-language educational television network in Ontario. The federal-provincial agreement signed on June 18, 1985 and worth $30 million is a five-year agreement. The province is still waiting for the federal Government's financial contribution. Since June 18, the Minister of Communications has been silent, and it has been impossible to get to him. According to the provincial authorities, the federal Cabinet and the Minister are trying to get out of meeting their commitments. Why is the Government so reluctant? Why has it failed to keep its word?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take this question as notice and discuss the matter with the Minister responsible. I will make sure that my hon. friend gets the correct explanation for the delay, if any, in implementing the agreement.

INQUIRY WHEN FUNDING WILL BE MADE AVAILABLE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, according to the agreement, the federal Government owes $350,000 to the Province of Ontario now, and will owe $2,350,000 next year. Getting a French-language educational television network in Ontario is important. The agreement was signed. Are we going to know when the money is going to be paid or do we have to send a collection agency?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, I am going to take these concerns as notice. I can inform the House that I agree this is an important matter, and I can assure my hon. colleague that he will get a reply, and that he need not go to the expense of hiring a collection agency at this time.

SHIPBUILDING

MORATORIUM REQUESTED ON IMPORTATION OF VESSELS CONSTRUCTED ABROAD

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister is undoubtedly aware that most of the work being done in Canadian shipyards is Government work for the Coast Guard and the Navy and that commercial work is almost ended, leaving yards like the ones in Collingwood and Thunder Bay likely soon to be without work. Will the Minister give us his assurance that the Government will impose a moratorium on any imported vessels that may be required in the next year or two by Canadian shipping interests?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is aware that my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, is currently seized with the issue of the shipbuilding industry and is examining policy options to provide some stability and some security for the shipbuilding industry. I will certainly take the Hon. Member's representation and refer it to the Minister. I think that it would be fair to say a policy will be forthcoming in the very near future.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCE POLICY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has been seized with this question for a long, long time. I have heard that sort of promise time after time, as have people in the industry, and the workers continue to wait. When will the Government state a policy and end the agonizing state for the owners and workers in these yards across the country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Yes, it is a situation that has been with us for quite some time, Mr. Speaker. It is a very serious situation, but instead of the Hon. Member simply pointing the finger at my hon. colleague, who is attempting to resolve the issue, if the Hon. Member could sit down with the Minister and provide some of his advice and wisdom, perhaps we might take that into consideration.

This issue has been going on for years and the Government is taking action.—

Mr. Althouse: What is it?

Mr. Mazankowski: In the meantime, contracts have been awarded recently that are going to serve the long-term interests of the shipbuilding industry. The rationalization process that will take place I am sure will be such that it will provide a long-term future for the shipbuilding industry.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ATTITUDE OF FOREIGN VISA OFFICERS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This Government's strong initiative to open our doors to immigrants to help make this country grow and prosper was warmly welcomed by Canadians of ethnocultural backgrounds. How does the Minister plan to change the sometimes arrogant attitude of foreign visa officers who, for many years, have continued to block people from simply visiting Canada through a negative "screen and restrict mentality"?

Mr. Ouellet: That is a good question.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am a little surprised by that question because Members of this House representing opinion on both sides have come to me in very recent days to express their appreciation of the attitude that has been shown by Canadian officers serving abroad. Nonetheless, if there are particular instances where a Member of Parliament has evidence that the kind of high standard of service that is traditionally associated with the Department of External Affairs is not being delivered, I would like to receive that specific information, and I will follow the matter.

MODIFICATION OF BENEFITS—CONSEQUENCES FOR PENSIONERS AND EARLY RETIREES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Concerning pensioners and early retirees, can the Minister tell us why her Government passed regulations which undermine the vested rights of workers, when we know full well that Canadians want to do everything to improve the economic situation of women, who happen to be a significant contingent among pensioners and early retirees? Why such unfair regulations?

Miss MacDonald: I may say to the House that this announcement was made in November, 1984.

Ms. Copps: Thank you very much.

Miss MacDonald: It was given a year's lead time for implementation before it came into effect on January 1, 1986.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. The Government of Canada has proclaimed the Canada Labour Code changes which provide that "there shall be a council called the Advisory Committee on Occupational Safety and Health". Since the legislation requires the Government to establish this council, can the Minister explain whether the Government is living up to the law when the Minister of Labour says he will not do so?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this particular issue has never come to me before. I am sure the Minister of Labour is complying fully with the law in every way the law requires. I would say he is one of the best Ministers of Labour, certainly since 1979 when we had the present Lieutenant Governor of Ontario as the Minister of Labour—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CHALLENGE '86

EXPENDITURES IN WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment. Is she aware of what is going on with regard to spending under Challenge '86? In Winnipeg North Centre I have information that indicates the Government is spending one half of the amount of money this year, namely, $600,000, as compared to last year when the Government spent $1.2 million. Is the Minister aware of that and, if she is, how can she be satisfied with such a dismal performance?

• (1200)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed aware of what is going on with Challenge '86 and the results which are pouring in from across the country. As I mentioned the other day, some 58,000 applications have resulted from the Challenge '86 program. That means that, in addition to the money allocated to it by the federal Government, there is now an indication that the private sector would be willing to contribute an extra $150 million if all of those projects are approved. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the program is working well in Manitoba as well as elsewhere in the country.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau.

TERRORISM

REPORTED PRESENCE OF TERRORISTS IN CANADA

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and is with regard to the alarming revelation that 14 international terrorists from the Baader Meinhof gang are apparently hiding in Canada. What is the Government doing with regard to these terrorists? Is the Government not ready to apprehend them and bring them to justice, or to kick them out of Canada?

Mr. Crosbie: They're hiding in your caucus.

Mr. Boudria: Erik would know about that.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the reports to which the hon. gentleman refers have yet to be confirmed. In the second place, this would be the last place that I think he would want that sort of matter to be discussed.

Mr. Keeper: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Some interest earnings in excess of the rate used in the most recent actuarial reports on the accounts (6.5 per cent per annum) have not been credited to the accounts, but rather have been used to offset the cost of amortizing actuarial deficiencies that arise mainly as a result of annual salary increases. These amounts are as follows for 1984-85:

Canadian Forces Superannuation Account	—$202 million
Public Service Superannuation Account	—$356 million

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, April 24, 1986, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Ms. Copps (p. 833).

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment moved by my colleague, the Member for Hamilton East (Ms.

Copps), to have this piece of legislation delayed for 30 days in order to give the unions involved a respite in order to try to come to some reasonable agreement with the Government.

The Bill we have before us now is clearly unreasonable. It is not good legislation. It is unfair and discriminatory. It takes from employees of Parliament Hill rights and privileges which they should have which other workers across the country enjoy.

The main argument was set out in a letter of October, 1985, from Jacques Audette, the President of PSAC Local 70390 here on Parliament Hill in which he said the following:

> Over one year ago, the Canada Labour Relations Board ruled that parliamentary employees come under the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code. This legislation provides the tools with which to deal with the problems we face as workers on the Hill. In forming a union, our intention was to join together and elect representatives who, in negotiating with management, could find solutions to these problems.
> The issues of greatest concern were, and continue to be, classification, job descriptions, competitions, promotions, transfers and fear of lay-off or dismissal. These have always been totally up to the discretion of management and there have been serious abuses such as the recent problems with the pension plan, forced overtime hours, and the payment of overtime on a bi-annual basis. Many of us are improperly classified and often do not have any job descriptions. Many of us have applied for promotions and transfers only to have the rules governing competitions changed arbitrarily.
> Technological change is occurring on the Hill as elsewhere and even employees with many years experience fear that they will be laid off.
> Rather than allay these fears, management has fueled them with major reorganizations and cut-backs in several areas.

Bill C-45 is opposed by both the PSAC and NABET. Their concerns centre on the point that Bill C-45 enshrines in law an employee-employer relationship which does not meet with the employees' approval. The employees want to be governed by the Canada Labour Code, as has been ruled by the Canada Labour Relations Board. I understand that the courts have ruled against that, but courts are appealable. Today we are asking for time so that a fair and equitable agreement can be reached with these employees. They are clearly against this legislation and want to be governed by the Canada Labour Code and to negotiate as do all employees elsewhere in Canada. They see Bill C-45 as a step backward.

The main clauses to which they object are Clause 5(3) and Clause 55(2). These two clauses prohibit unions from referring to arbitration the important matters of job classification, appointment, appraisal, promotion, demotion, transfer, and lay-off or release of employees. These are legitimate concerns and areas for discussion, bargaining, and arbitration which should be available to employees of Parliament Hill as they are available to other employees within the Public Service across Canada, to employees of Crown corporations, and to many other workers across the country. That is the main concern of the employees. We on this side of the House support them and that is why this particular amendment has been put forward.

It is not as though there are not adequately documented areas of abuse. There are many and various examples. Some time ago a senior position became vacant in a technical service. Several employees inquired about a competition, but none was held. The husband of a manager in another department of the same service was brought in to fill the position on a temporary basis. Several months later a competition was announced. The then experienced husband was hired permanently. The appeal of employees in the service was denied.

There are other examples of abuse and discrimination which have been adequately documented which need redress. Strong legislation is necessary to prevent them from happening again. For example, there was an older female employee with close to 20 years seniority who injured her back and was off on long-term disability for a couple of months. On returning to work she was assigned duties which include heavy lifting and carrying, although her old position still exists. She was told she should apply for early retirement if she was not pleased. Her internal grievance was denied.

Employees of the Library of Parliament were denied maternity benefits for a full year after such benefits were finally extended to House of Commons' employees. The library administration states that an administrative error was made.

I could go on and on documenting instances of abuse, discrimination and inequity in dealing with employees of Parliament. In the cafeteria service all job classifications have been revoked. All employees have been informed that they can be assigned any duties, although many of them held specialized positions for a number of years. For example, two butchers were assigned to drive food delivery trucks. A pastry chef was assigned to washing and cutting vegetables.

The level of frustration and employee harassment in this service is very high. Those of us who have been here for some time are aware that nowhere do we get the kind of faithful, competent, loyal and efficient service that we get here on the Hill. It is incumbent upon us to stand behind these workers. All they are really asking for, indeed all this amendment asks for, is time to come to an equitable agreement.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has stated previously that he is willing to give parliamentary employees the same rights enjoyed by federal public servants. Clearly, though, Bill C-45 does not do that. I refer again to the clauses which prohibit the referral to arbitration of important matters such as job classification, appointment, appraisal, promotion, demotion, transfer, lay-off and release of employees. How can the Minister say he is willing to give these employees the same rights enjoyed by federal public servants and at the same time bring in a Bill which prohibits them from dealing with these very important issues? It seems to me the Minister is not prepared to go so far as to give them equal rights with other workers. The Government could agree to at least a 30-day delay so that some work can be done to arrive at a reasonable compromise. That is the only way to do it, and it is incumbent upon the Government to do it.

What is involved here is not simply a matter of the rights of employees of Parliament, important as that may be. The issue is what sort of accommodation are we going to come to with labour in this country in the future. Everyone in this country feels threatened at present. There is opportunity ahead. We are presently coming to grips with such things as trade, economic development, restructuring, retooling and refinancing of industry. However, we can only come to a reasonable accommodation if we have some sort of pact with labour from now on. That has to happen. I believe the Government should lead the way in making agreements with its own employees.

In my own Province of Newfoundland we are still going through a very disruptive strike with provincial government employees. Those employees brought the province to a virtual standstill because of inequities in their contract with the provincial Government. Some workers were not making the same rate of pay as others in equal positions. The other issue was the ability of the Government to designate those employees who would not be allowed to strike. The support of the people of that province was, by and large, behind the union. The Government had to make important concessions and negotiations are still going on.

I raise that to illustrate the need for Governments, provincial and federal, to show the way to an accommodation with the working people of this country. If that does not happen, I do not believe we can have a sound economy or build a sound economic base. We can do all we like about financing. We can get our economic house in order. Yet if we are not prepared to come to a reasonable agreement with the workers of this country, then I do not believe Canada can look forward to a healthy economy in the future.

In this present instance there is an opportunity for the Government to show the way by agreeing to this very reasonable amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. In that way, some accommodation can be arrived at. The workers on the Hill have asked us to do this. They do not want this legislation to go forward. They want some time to either appeal the judgment or deal with Treasury Board to try and come up with a fair and equitable working agreement.

This has been a long battle for them. On November 4, 1985, the Canada Labour Relations Board certified four bargaining units of employees of the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament. Since that time an additional bargaining unit has been certified. Over 1,000 House of Commons and Library of Parliament employees are certified and have entered into negotiations with their employer. Indeed, a conciliator was appointed. Now the courts have made a decision and that process is in jeopardy. That is exactly why we need the time. The House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament have fought the recognition of collective bargaining rights every step of the way. They have used every means of delay, including court action. Now we have Bill C-45. It is regressive legislation, and the alternative is simply to allow those workers to bargain in a just and fair manner with Treasury Board to try and come up with some fair and just conclusions. Because of the efforts those workers have put into this, and because of the wider issue concerning coming to accommodation with labour all across this country, I hope this House will accede to the amendment of my colleague from Hamilton East and agree to the 30-day period in which some reasonable and just accommodation can be worked out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey).

• (1220)

The Hon. Member has had a unique experience in the Province of Newfoundland regarding the labour dispute that is going on there at the moment. The court has just come down with a decision on the application of the Canada Labour Code as it relates to the certification of employees on the Hill. Does the Hon. Member think that in the interests of making a decision and undertaking some negotiations in good faith it might not be best simply to delay the whole process approximately 30 days, which would give us a chance to see what the impact of the court judgment is, whether it is going to be appealed or whether the Government is going to modify its position? We have seen what the hardening of positions has done, for example, in Newfoundland in certain circumstances. It seems to me a delay at this time would be effective in potentially diffusing any problems that might result if the legislation we put forth does not take into consideration all of the elements of the court judgment as well as the potential for appeal.

Mr. Rompkey: I think the key phrase is the "hardening of positions"; that is exactly what happened in the province. As a matter of fact the situation in Newfoundland threatened to become very, very ugly, indeed. I think we were on the brink of not only a disruptive strike but a very serious situation in our province. Public opinion was on the side of the workers. The two sides were very strongly entrenched, and the situation only began to be resolved when the head of the Newfoundland Association of Public Employees and the Premier happened, as a matter of chance, to be on a radio open line program, and through their statements on that program they were able to bring the two sides together.

That strike is still not settled, and that threat is still there. At least there is time and they are at the table and talking. What threatened to become a very ugly situation has been diffused, and that is exactly what is being asked for here. We are asking for time so that people can sit down together and attempt to come to a compromise, a framework for working out the rights we all enjoy across this country. All of us enjoy certain rights and privileges. All workers across Canada, those in the Public Service, those in Crown corporations have certain privileges, and what this amendment asks for is simply time to work out a framework whereby those employees can start to enjoy the same kind of benefits that most of us do, and most of us want for the workers all across this country.

I do not think that that is such an unreasonable request. It is not as if we were asking for a monstrous pay increase. It is not as if we were asking for all sorts of outrageous concessions. What we are asking for is time, which does not cost anybody anything; all it costs is some goodwill. If we do not have that goodwill with our own employees how are we ever going to send a message to the workers of Canada that we are going to have it with any of them across this country. That is the important issue. There is a wider issue than simply the rights of the employees on the Hill, as important as they are. There are messages going out every day from Governments to workers across this country, and I think the message that this Parliament should send is that we want to give time so that people can sit down at the table and work out a reasonable arrangement.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member's colleague from Papineau yesterday make a fine speech about the rights of workers on the Hill to have collective bargaining. I heard a fine speech from the Hon. Member today. Both of these Members have been in the previous Government Cabinet. From 1968 they had some 16-odd years to express this great concern which they now express in Opposition about being sensitive to the rights and the needs of our employees on the Hill. Mr. Lloyd Francis revealed that conditions on the Hill, according to him, were replete with nepotism and sexual harassment. The question I want to ask this Hon. Member is what is on his mind, is it because he is now in the Opposition or is it really a conversion on the way to Damascus that suddenly made him realize what he could not do in the Government he is now trying to get from the Opposition benches?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) that I do not think he serves the union well by repeating history. The enemy is over there. The NDP wants to take unto itself the mantle of self-righteousness in which it girds itself historically over the years to show that only they care and those of us who accept responsibility in Government are somehow less righteous, less caring, less sensitive to the needs of workers across this country. That is the historical position of the NDP. The people we are talking about today are going to dismiss that as trite and irrelevant. If the Hon. Member wanted to be helpful to the people that he purports to support he would stop debating history, he would stop fighting the Opposition, and he would start attacking the people who are actually dealing with this legislation. That is my answer to him.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask another question of the Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador. This week there were revelations about one of his colleagues, the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and his allegations against his own Government that it was unfair and unjust and, in fact, discriminatory in its hiring policies with respect to regional wage rates across Canada. He stated this in a letter to a constituent. These regional wage rates do not reflect equality across Canada. We see great difficulties in areas like Newfoundland where wage rates have been negotiated with the existence of collective bargaining. How much worse must it be for people currently working on the Hill in the House of Commons who do not even have the instrument or the tool of collective bargaining with which to redress these types of injustices? If the Government's own Minister of Justice has stated that it is unjust and discriminatory to impose the kind of wage rates that his Government has imposed upon the people of Newfoundland, woe betide those on the Hill who have no rights to collective bargaining and are at the mercy of the Government and the mercy of the Ministers with respect to wage rates. I would like to ask him about that. I would also like to ask him whether he feels the Government's refusal to accept the hoist amendment, which just calls for a 30-day delay, is indicative of their willingness or their desire to press forward with legislation which does not give the employees the protection they should be getting. Does the Hon. Member feel that it indicates a belief on the part of the Government that they want to get the most spineless and least effective legislation through as quickly as possible so they will not be put in a position where they have to give employee rights? This was clearly demonstrated by the fact that the Government of Canada took the Canadian Labour Relations Board to court on their own decision. The CLRB ruled in favour of the workers. The Government could have allowed that decision to stand, but they chose to appeal it and will probably continue to appeal it to the highest courts of the land. It does not seem to me that this is a Government interested in the rights of the workers on the Hill. It seems to me that it is a Government interested in introducing the weakest possible piece of legislation so they can continue to run things in the kind of atmosphere of nepotism and fear which the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) cited in his previous question.

Mr. Rompkey: I am glad my colleague has brought up that issue, as I think it is apropos. The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is a very straightforward man, which sometimes gets one in trouble when one is a politician. However, he says what he thinks and what he believes. He is right when he says that there is discrimination in pay rates. He is only saying what the people who elected him want him to say in the House. People in certain areas of the country make less than people in other areas of the country, which is clearly discrimination in terms of wage rates. That situation must be addressed. The Hon. Member for St. John's West supports that view and I agree with him. He is right to support it because he is pointing to an inequity and saying what should be changed. At least the people he is talking about have the right to negotiate because they are in a union that has some bargaining rights and can raise that particular issue. We are asking that employees on the Hill be given those same rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is over. Resuming debate.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today has a long history. The background to this Bill should persuade Members of the House to reject it and request the Government to consult fully with the employees on the Hill to work out a more satisfactory agreement between the Government and those who serve us on Parliament Hill. After all, it is here in Ottawa, in our relations with the staff who serve us in the House of Commons, that we should have model legislation that reflects a clear-cut, open agreement so that the employees do not feel they have been tricked, treated unfairly or left out of the consultation process.

I believe it is a sad day when the Government introduces a Bill which a majority of the employees of this Parliament have clearly rejected. It indicates that the Government has not fulfilled its commitment to make consultation honest and meaningful to people. I have seen the Government's failure to consult in many areas, since its 211 members came to power. I saw it in the case of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when the effort to consult with business, labour and other groups did not lead to some kind of new initiative or agreement that was a step forward for the Government, but to a sense of betrayal on the part of those who felt that they had entered into the consultation process honestly. Ultimately, they felt they had not been listened to honestly. They found that consultation did not mean having a real input. They did not necessarily want to directly or comprehensively shape policy, but at least have some influence on policy.

The Government, in the middle of its mandate, faces questions about what it will do in the future. Its inability to meet the expectations of Canadians throughout the country with respect to consultation and the real meaning of consultation will be its greatest failure and will cost it dearly. This Bill demonstrates that failure. The employees who serve Members of Parliament and the Senate have jobs in which they serve the country. These jobs are often interesting but very demanding and often force them to work long hours under difficult conditions. The relations between us, as employers and those people who work here should be a model of decent, civilized employer-employee relations.

Workers on the Hill have been engaged in a long-term effort to organize themselves collectively. This led to a majority of Hill employees being able to go before the Canada Labour Relations Board in 1983 with a request to become regular unionized employees under the Canada Labour Code itself. Personally, I believe that the right to collective bargaining is fundamental in this country. As the employers of these Parliament Hill employees, we should have celebrated the fact that these workers sought to exercise that right. We should respond by trying to work out an agreement under the Canada Labour Code.

The Government saw it otherwise. It decided that this represented some kind of threat to established practices. Perhaps it was a threat to a system of internal patronage that had ruled for many years. Perhaps it was a threat to the ongoing work of Parliament during a time when the country needed it to function. Therefore, instead of accepting that request for certification, the Government introduced Bill C-45 which attempts to provide a supposed form of bargaining rights for employees. In practice, however, it creates a situation so restricted and distorted that these workers will not really have the basic rights to which any employee in the country should be entitled.

Let me give some examples of the kinds of rights which any employee should have and which employees under this Bill will not have. First, they should have the right to negotiate with respect to classification of positions and assignment of duties. In Windsor, where I come from, to even think that a contract negotiation could somehow have validity without the workers being able to discuss classification of positions and assignment of duties is laughable. There is not a union member in all of my community who would see this as a valid piece of labour legislation if that basic right is left out. The same is true with respect to negotiation over staffing. If it is not possible for workers to at least negotiate potential arrangements which have to do with job appointments, appraisals, promotions, demotions and transfers, and if they cannot even negotiate about provisions for lay-offs, what kind of legislation is that? It is a lot closer to sham than it is to real bargaining legislation.

Perhaps most crucial, as I look at this Bill, is that there is not even provision for workers to put into their negotiation process the question of grievance procedures. They cannot even negotiate over what the grievance procedures are to be. Of all the basic rights which any worker should expect, regardless of whether they are in the private or public sector, their right to negotiate over grievance procedures is crucial.

No one is arguing that workers themselves should unilaterally have the right to set what those grievance procedures should be, but what this Bill does in effect is give the employer the right to unilaterally set down those grievance procedures. We cannot expect workers to accept that as somehow logical, fair and equitable. We are talking about a new House of Commons, about a context in which it is possible for us as Members of Parliament to change items in Bills in such a way that they are not matters of confidence. I very much hope when this Bill is looked at item by item that that particular obnoxious clause in the Bill will be one all of us on all sides of the House will agree has to be changed.

The kinds of very basic rights which any worker must be able to negotiate are with respect to classification of positions, staffing and, above all, with respect to the grievance procedures which are going to exist. We on all sides of the House must surely come to an agreement to change those clauses in this Bill so that our employees on the Hill will know that this is a serious piece of legislation in which they can have some faith. At this stage it is quite clear they do not have faith in this legislation.

I would like to quote from the President of the PSAC local on Parliament Hill. Jacques Audette stated quite clearly, and I quote:

> The issues of greatest concern were, and continue to be, classification, job descriptions, competitions, promotions, transfers and fear of lay-off or dismissal. These have always been totally up to the discretion of management and there have been serious abuses such as the recent problems with the pension plan, forced overtime hours and the payment of overtime on a bi-annual basis. Many of us are improperly classified and often do not have any job descriptions. Many of us have applied for promotions and transfers only to have the rules governing competitions change arbitrarily.

There has to be a wholesale housecleaning of staff relations here on Parliament Hill. It has to start with agreement between the employers and employees with respect to the legislation which will dominate their lives. To demonstrate I will cite some of the cases before us which cry out for this kind of agreed legislation to exist instead of this imposed legislation represented by Bill C-45.

There is the case of an older female employee with close to 20 years seniority who injured her back. She was off on long-term disability for a couple of months. Upon returning she was assigned duties which include heavy lifting and carrying although her old position still exists. She is told she should apply for early retirement if she is not pleased. Her internal grievance is denied. That is not the way we should treat older workers in our service.

There is the case of employees in a technical service here on the Hill who are required to attend training courses on their days off and on weekends, without pay. When these employees protested they were told it was mandatory and they had no choice. That is something they must be able to bargain about. We have to set up legislation which permits that, which does not rule it out of court.

I will relate the last case of many which I could present. In the cafeteria service an employee cut his hand on the job. He was told to visit the nurse. The nurse told him it was not safe to work and that he should go home. However, the manager informed the employee that he should go back to work or face discipline.

• (1250)

We cannot live in the feudal ages in the Houses of Parliament which are supposed to lead the country. We must have legislation which escapes the Dark Ages. Bill C-45 does not do that. It does not give workers the rights they deserve. For that reason the House must either massively, and in detail, amend the legislation, or we must reject it when it comes to a final vote. At second reading stage, since the choice of amendment is not availabe to us, we say it has to be rejected in order to take us out of the feudal age. This must be done to give fairness to employees in this, the key institution in our country, which should be a model employer instead of one which reeks of the Dark Ages still.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Mr. Murphy: Ask a decent question.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to ask a decent question. I want to tell the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) that I hope I always ask decent questions. This is a decent question. Given that we have been debating the 30-day hoist amendment and the main motion for a couple of days now since the court judgment was handed down, does the Hon. Member not find it passing strange that we have not heard from any Government Members with respect to their position on this issue?

Mrs. Mailly: That is not true.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) says that is not true. She obviously did not listen to my question. I asked why members of the Government have remained strangely silent with respect to my amendment for a 30-day hoist. This amendment simply asks for 30 days in which to look at the results of the court judgment. Since the court judgment was rendered, not one single Conservative in the House has opened his or her mouth. That is true. I find it somewhat strange.

By way of question to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), perhaps we could smoke out some of the silent members of the Government who have sat on the sidelines and who are prepared to allow the Government to take the employees to court as a result of the Canada Labour Relations Board decision. The Government is not prepared to waive the right to go to court. It took the employees to court and now that the decision has been rendered against the employees not one member of the Government has opened his or her mouth.

Mr. Oostrom: And they should not.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member says that they should not. What are we here for if they should not?

Mr. Oostrom: You do not comment on something which is before the courts.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member obviously does not understand the principle of sub judice which applies to criminal and civil proceedings of which this is neither. First, the court judgment has already been rendered. Second, all we are asking for is a 30-day delay so that we can have a chance to consider the court decision as it relates to Government employees. The Hon. Member for Gatineau—in fact, all members of the Government who represent the Ottawa area—have sat on their hands and have said absolutely nothing with respect to this matter. Does the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor feel that that is the normal course of events for Conservative backbenchers to follow?

Mrs. Mailly: This Bill will do more for employees than all your rhetoric.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) for this chance to comment on how passing strange many things are in the House of Commons. I must say it has been a passing strange week in the House of Commons.

Mrs. Mailly: We got some work done for a change! We passed Bill C-62.

Mr. Langdon: The notion that we might actually smoke out some Conservatives to speak on this matter is one which I find delightful.

Mr. Thacker: There's no smoking in this place.

Mr. Langdon: With all due respect to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), the idea of smoking out Conservative Members to speak on an issue as important as this is a serious matter.

Mr. Gauthier: You can flush them out.

Mr. Langdon: If they are not prepared to be smoked out then perhaps, as my colleague suggests, they can be flushed out.

Mr. Gauthier: Just pull the chain!

Mr. Langdon: Flushing them out is likely to lead to commentary which will at least be as interesting as that usually heard from Conservative back-benchers.

To be absolutely serious, we are talking about an important principle. I put it to every Conservative back-bencher who is here that we should not impose on our employees—and they are our employees—a piece of legislation with which they so fundamentally disagree.

Mrs. Mailly: That's not what they tell me.

Mr. Langdon: If we do that then we will create for ourselves, for the House and, therefore, for the country, tremendous problems in the future. We do not have to do that. We can accept the motion with respect to a 30-day hoist. We can send the Bill back for consideration to see what discussions can take place with respect to it, just as they should have taken place, on an equitable basis, between the Government and the employees who have expressed their desire to become unionized. We could see brought back to this House a piece of legislation which represents agreement instead of disagreement. I put it to Conservative back-benchers, many of whom have been involved in business dealings, that the basis upon which one must act with one's employees, certainly the basis I learned in any organizations which I helped run, has to be one of agreement. I agree with the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. Let us try to smoke out Conservative back-benchers. Let us try to get this Bill hoisted and ultimately changed so that it meets the needs of our employees.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the Hon. Member's responsibilities to his constituents and his oath as a Member of Parliament, is he prepared to cross a picket line in order to come to Parliament?

Mr. Gauthier: That's my question.

Mr. Langdon: The question which has been asked is a very serious one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: I will answer it. Let us recognize that the right to strike is not—

Mr. Andre: Who's being flushed out now?

Mr. Langdon: —at the heart of the Opposition which has expressed it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: My answer to the question is quite clear.

Mr. Andre: Who do you think you are, Brian Orser?

Mr. Langdon: As Simon Reisman said the other day: "Who's Brian Orser?"

Ms. Copps: Who's Brian Muldoon?

Mr. Langdon: They still have not discovered who he is.

The question I have been asked is would I be prepared to work if Parliament were faced with a strike. We have faced the question in the past when the translators went on strike. Our caucus answered by agreeing to sit in the Chamber but refusing to work in committees. I expect the same thing would take place with respect to any strike which might occur. But to trivialize this crucial issue of agreement in this way is to make a serious mistake, as the Government so often makes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock today.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, before I turn to the substance of the motion, I wish to reflect on something of which all Members are aware. Yesterday, a very important decision came from the courts on the subject of the legality of the unionization of parliamentary employees. Although, as I understand it, it came from the court of first instance, the decision was that unionization is not lawful under the Canada Labour Code.

We are actually debating a motion for a 30-day hoist of this Bill. I would ask Hon. Members opposite to take account of the decision that was made yesterday. It does change a great many of the considerations that have animated the debate on this motion and have been reflected in the many briefs and petitions we have received, as well as many of the discussions we have had on Parliament Hill about where the public servants who work here stand so far as the Canada Labour Code is concerned.

I would have expected that some Government Members might have risen today to respond to the situation and to give us the Government's position in light of the important decision that was reached yesterday. So far, as I understand it, no Government Members have spoken since the—

Mrs. Mailly: To support Ms. Copps?

Mr. Kaplan: The Hon. Member oppposite says that she does not want to support the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), but I would urge her to put her own personal antipathy to my colleague to one side and to face the issues. There is more at stake here than whether or not the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) gets along with the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. As much as all of us would want the two of them to get along, I think it is more important that we deal with the issues raised by this legislation and by yesterday's decision.

At times, we have moved reasoned amendments at second-reading stage for six-month hoists or three-month hoists. Under the rules of the House, that is one of the ways the Opposition may show its protest about the legislative menu that the Government has put before us. In this case, the motion moved by my colleague is for a simple 30-day hoist. I would have thought that, with yesterday's decision, it would not be unreasonable to delay the Bill for 30 days. Indeed, the Government itself should initiate some type of respite so that we may take a look at the legislation, and so that the parties who work on Parliament Hill and are bargaining for their rights will be able to take account of the change represented by yesterday's decision.

I do not even know if there is to be an appeal of that decision. If it is appealed, I would have no hesitation in expressing my own hope that the appeal succeeds. I would very much welcome a situation in which the staff on Parliament Hill have the same kinds of collective bargaining rights as other public servants, for reasons to which I will turn in a moment.

Having entered this place in 1968, I can recall the early developments in collective bargaining rights for public servants. The British tradition which we inherited has always put the Crown and anything associated with the Crown in a very special position. The Crown could not be prosecuted and employees of the Crown did not have the right to strike, nor did they have many of the rights that employees of ordinary citizens in society had. There has been a movement, which I suppose is at least 70 or 80 years old, toward narrowing the prerogatives of the Crown, trying to address them by legislation, and also trying to remove the privileges of the Crown.

I had some involvement with the development of a responsible Crown as a party in lawsuits. When I was a law student it was a convention that the Crown could not be prosecuted. Then there developed a situation where the Crown could be prosecuted, but the Crown's permission was required to issue a writ in Her Majesty's Court and, in fact, against Her Majesty. The same or similar constraints applied in the rights of public servants who faced the Crown in the way ordinary citizens did, although they were employees of the Crown.

I think we live in a day and age where a lot of arguments should be required to justify giving emanations of the Crown or giving the Crown itself any special privileges at all in the law. The presumption should be the other way. The presumption should be that the Crown, when it is operating a business or running an institution, even an essential institution such as the Parliament of Canada, should be seen in no more privileged position than circumstances require. I am glad to see that the tradition which gives an automatic and special privileged position to the Crown is being eroded. I think even with the very conservative nature of some members of the Government Party opposite, they are seeing the wisdom of that.

One needs only to examine the case of an ordinary citizen crossing the street—this is one of the teaching cases I remember from my days in law school—being hit by a truck owned by the Eaton's company compared to a citizen crossing the street being hit by a truck from the Post Office. You can ask why it should make any difference whether the victim is a victim of a commercial operation or a victim of the Post Office. Just to ask the question in the modern environment illustrates that there should be no difference, and that, as far as the victim is concerned, the victim is just as entitled to compensation if the postal official driving is at fault as he or she is if the individual driving the Eaton's truck is at fault. It is hard to believe, when you are talking to people who are not familiar with the legal history, for how many centuries a special privilege has existed in that area.

The Crown has taken, and in the present Government the Crown still takes the same attitude toward employees who work on Parliament Hill. There is no doubt that the tradition entitles the Crown to view the employees on the Hill as having less rights than employees of the private sector. That is the point of the decision reached in the court case and released yesterday, that for traditional reasons based on historical precedent people who work on the Hill, even if they are doing exactly the same types of jobs as people who work off the Hill in the private sector, are not entitled to the same legal rights as are enjoyed by the private sector.

Let us ask the question I asked in connection with the truck driver and the traffic accident situation. What is the justification for any difference at all? I am not denying that there is some justification for a difference, and I hope I will have time to deal with that, but I want to make the point that in modern times that is the way to approach the question. The right way to do it is to say that a person who works on Parliament Hill, prima facie, or from the outset, should have at least the same rights as people who work elsewhere in society. We should challenge those who want to deprive people on the Hill of equal rights. We should challenge them to give their reasons. What possible public interest is served by a member of the staff of this place, a member of the staff of a Member of Parliament or someone who works in the cafeteria, not having the same bargaining privileges and the same fundamental employment rights as Canadians who work in cafeterias away from here, as Canadians who work in other institutions or work for other executives or individuals than Members of Parliament? Yet when we look at Bill C-45, which has been brought forward by the Government, it tends in an unanalytical way to assert that those who work in this place should not be given the kinds of rights that other Canadians enjoy.

I want to refer to a precedent brought to my attention. One of the most fundamental rights in the private workforce is the right to strike. Even so far as the right to strike is concerned, in the Parliaments of the United Kingdom and Australia employees have the full right to strike the same as the rest of the people in society. You can imagine all kinds of horrible scenarios in which one would want Parliament to be able to function in circumstances when a strike might be wanted by some or even a large number of the employees here. But such hypothetical circumstances have not occurred and have not materialized either in the United Kingdom or in Australia. In those two countries, where I am told the right to strike is available to public servants, there has been no difficulty resulting or impeding the proper functioning of society.

Surely it is possible to devise a set of rules, and there are precedents even within the area of the Public Service itself, for essential jobs on Parliament Hill, the job for example, of calling us together. I see people sitting at the Table who I know would be quite sympathetic if they had no right to strike because of the very essential nature of the work that they do compared, let us say, to employees who work in the cafeteria or employees who work in Members' offices. But no effort has been made to approach the problem from that point of view, to try to find the mininum restriction to put on the free market rights, the free employment rights of the people covered by this legislation. The approach has been totally the other way.

While I think it is possible to draw a list, and the list would be a very short one, of employees within this place who ought not to have the right to strike, which would enable the right to strike to be broadly available to everyone else, and while one hopes that strikes would not result, that arbitration would be resorted to as it is in most cases where there is a breakdown in negotiations within the Public Service, there is no need to provide for compulsory arbitration or to eliminate the right to strike. In fact, reflecting on it, even compulsory arbitration would be better than the system which I understand applies under Bill C-45, where very little effort is made to approach the question in an open way to try to make employment on Parliament Hill as normal as general employment in the Public Service or as general employment in the Canadian market-place.

I can remember the period in the 1960s when it was generally held that public servants should not have the right to strike at all. That was the situation in which the Pearson Government, I believe it was, introduced the first legislation recognizing and permitting a right to strike and a right to collective bargaining within the Public Service. I do not think anyone would want to look back and see that right removed, because there will be hundreds of thousands of people affected by it if one looks at just the machinery of Government. But looking at the larger Canadian national scene, looking at Crown corporations, one adds immediately hundreds of thousands more people who would be excluded completely from having the normal rights enjoyed by Canadians generally in the workplace and which one has a good argument for constraining in their case.

Earlier in the debate the issue was raised of the decision of the court yesterday which held that the Canadian Labour Code did not apply to the public servants covered by this Bill. The argument was made that that case should not be referred to because of the sub judice rule. The sub judice rule is getting a new life in this Parliament. Ministers opposite do not have to answer questions if they do not want. They can give any answer they like, if they choose to give any answer at all, to questions asked. As an excuse for unsatisfactory and incomplete answers they are saying that a matter is sub judice.

The other day the rule of sub judice was invoked in a case before any charges had been laid. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) invoked the rule in a matter in which there was no litigation under way. Members on this side of the House, and hopefully even some on the other side of the House, will take a very strong opposing position on attempts to use that rule too broadly.

Two very important conflicting interests are at issue when the sub judice rule is invoked. On the one hand, we want courts to be able to proceed without undue influence from debate in the Parliament of Canada characterizing witnesses or commenting on the guilt or innocence of the accused, the situation of the victim, or the dastardly nature of the alleged crime. That is a very important consideration. The right to a trial in which the evidence is presented before the presiding authority without pressure and influence from outside is a very important consideration.

On the other hand stands the importance of debate in this place. It is important that the Government be fully accountable to the Canadian people for Government activities and matters for which Ministers are responsible. It is totally unsatisfactory for Ministers to invoke the sub judice rule in order to avoid their responsibilities for answering questions about ongoing police investigations or other areas such as this in which the Government is responsible for bringing forward and defending legislation dealing with the unionization of an important category of public servants.

I do not want to reflect upon the Chair, Mr. Speaker, but I hope that the Chair will take the unprecedented initiative of calling it to the attention of a Minister when the sub judice rule is wrongly invoked. Regardless of how many excuses the Government seeks for not giving forthcoming and complete answers, at least it will not be able to find refuge in abuse of the sub judice rule.

I hope the Government will delay pressing ahead with this legislation until the full implications of yesterday's court decision are known. I hope also that it will allow the amendments which will bring employment in this place into line with employment elsewhere in the Public Service and the entire country.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) for his excellent speech in the House this afternoon. I am sure all Hon. Members on both sides now more clearly understand the application of the sub judice rule and how it has been too frequently invoked and abused by the Tories.

I believe it was the Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) who said earlier that we should not be discussing this issue because of the sub judice rule. He said something to the effect of this precluding members of the Government from speaking on this issue. This begs a very interesting question. Could my hon. colleague, who is learned in the law, inform us whether the sub judice rule applies differently to Government Members than to Opposition Members? I, frankly, would doubt that very much.

If the sub judice rule applies at all, which most of us question very seriously, why on earth are we discussing the Bill at this time? In order to avoid all doubt, why do we not withdraw the item from the Order Paper and wait until the court process is complete before putting it back on the Order Paper. I think that would be very wise in order to allay any fears of breaking the rule of sub judice. Would my learned colleague share with us his thoughts on the suggestion I have just made?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my friend for the kind words he said about me, and also for the interesting question which he asked. I have difficulty thinking of any civil litigation to which the sub judice rule should apply. It may apply under combines legislation where the plaintiff is a private party who represents a Department of the Government, but that is not normal private civil litigation. However, the sub judice rule should certainly not be dragged into every civil case, and that is what we are talking about here. It is a simple civil case which involves no criminal jurisdiction at all.

With regard to whether sub judice applies to Government Members any differently than it does to Opposition Members, as I understand it, the rule applies to all equally and to whatever any Member might otherwise feel free to say in this place. In a sense it is a voluntary constraint because, to my knowledge, the Speaker has never risen to prevent a Member from violating the sub judice rule. If a Member chooses to do so, he takes the responsibility. The result might be that a case will be dismissed.

I recall a very recent situation in Quebec where a criminal case was proceeding and a witness was called for the Crown. Premier Lévesque of Quebec did not think much of that witness and attacked the credibility of the witness from the legislature. The case was dismissed. It will never be satisfactorily determined whether the accused was guilty or innocent. That case demonstrates the importance of the sub judice rule being respected, and also the absence of any recourse against a Member who chooses to violate the rule.

It is a different situation to plead the rule. With regard to this the responsibilities of Members are the same, but a Member who is asked a question or is called upon to comment on a matter and chooses not to do so because of the sub judice rule should think very carefully before invoking it. I invite the Chair, in future cases, to contribute to the deliberations of an individual about whether he should invoke this rule.

While I would not want to tell my friend that any one Member here has a greater responsibility to respect the rule than any other, I would hope that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada, above all, would make his use of the rule a model for all Members of Parliament. It should not be used unless it is precisely justified by the question he is asked and the circumstances he wants to address in giving his answer.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member. Government Members seem to be invoking these rather bizarre and inapplicable rules in order to remain silent. This is particularly true of those Government Members who represent areas in the Ottawa-Hull region. Does he feel those members on the Government side are shirking their responsibility to their constituents? At the moment all we are discussing is simply an amendment which would bring about a 30-day delay while the implications of the court judgment can be reviewed and discussed with respect to what new decisions the Government is prepared to take to possibly change this legislation. We do not know whether this particular decision is going to be appealed. If it is, there will no doubt be a lengthy process before the resolution of the appeal. I wonder if the Hon. Member has any comment as to why Government Members have been strangely silent, have in fact abdicated their responsibility to their constituents on this issue?

Mr. Kaplan: I am as surprised about that as my colleague indicated she is in the way she phrased her question. After all, when one looks at the distribution of public servants in this country, a lot of them are represented here by Conservative Members. They are close to the Government and should be conveying the concerns of their constituents who happen to be public servants. I do not want to suggest that a Member representing a strongly public servant riding should think only of their side. There no doubt are issues on which one has to decide whether to support something the public servants want or look at the other side and the way the country in general feels about it. However, that has nothing to do with the responsibility to be aware of what is happening and be prepared to come forward and express your constituent's point of view.

Each of us is called on to represent a diverse riding. As issues arise which affect one group more particularly than others, that group is definitely entitled to look to their Member of Parliament. Therefore, I am not going to comment on their absence from the House. It is Friday afternoon and that is not something to be commented on. However, it is important to note that they have done nothing at all to give us that extra time. The amendment calls for a month, but it could be just as easily six weeks. Whatever it is, some period of time is needed in which to get the reasons for judgment, review them, decide whether there is going to be an appeal, and permit the groups concerned to reformulate the briefs they have submitted to us in light of this important decision yesterday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment calling for a 30-day hoist of Bill C-45. This Bill is an attempt to place the employees on Parliament Hill under the ageis of collective bargaining. The workers on Parliament Hill serve Members of Parliament. They work in the restaurants and cafeterias. They bring us back and forth in those little green buses. They answer to our beck and call and take messages between offices. We send them to get our laundry, take our suits to be pressed and our shoes to be shined. I want to tell you that the Members of Parliament are a pampered lot. They are served and ministered to around here in a sort of master/slave relationship.

Mr. Kempling: Oh, that's sick.

Mr. Rodriguez: We have touched a very sensitive nerve over on the Government side. I would hope they would be so touched that they would get up and participate in this debate, because I want to hear the Government rationale for this garbage called Bill C-45. It is supposed to protect workers and allow them to bargain collectively on the Hill.

One of the things we hear a lot about in Parliament is its historical privilege. You cannot do anything to infringe on the privileges of a Member of Parliament. Creeping into Bill C-45 is the suggestion that somehow or other the privileges of Parliament must be continued. We must not allow the workers on the Hill to not take our shoes to be shined. We must have the bus go directly from the Confederation Building to the Centre Block without stopping at the West Block if there is an underling on the bus. Do you know that if a Member of Parliament is on the bus coming from the Confederation Building to the Centre Block and there is a lowly messenger on the bus who has to get off at the West Block, that driver is going to bring the Hon. Member of Parliament all the way to Centre Block without stopping at the West Block. That is because he says the Members have privilege! Privilege! The Government wants to ensconce in Bill C-45 a master/slave relationship.

Do the workers on Parliament Hill deserve collective bargaining rights? The answer is an unequivocal yes, they deserve it. They do not deserve it in half measures. They do not deserve it with this built-in protection for what is called, in parliamentary language, privilege. One of the things the Government is concerned about is that these people will go on strike. I know a lot of the Conservatives come from the ivory towers of the corporate world and they have a certain bias against collective bargaining in the first place. They say we cannot have these workers going on strike. If they go on strike, somehow or other that interferes with the so-called sacred privilege which Members of Parliament enjoy when they do the work of the nation. Some out there might argue that if a Parliament did not sit and closed down for a couple of weeks maybe the taxpayers would save a pile of money!

It is funny that this whole question of privilege that Members of Parliament are supposed to have comes from the mother of Parliaments at Westminster. We always go back, as some sort of touchstone, and say, "This is the way it was at Westminster, the mother of Parliaments. That is where our system comes from." At Westminster the employees in the Parliament are unionized; they have full collective bargaining rights with the right to strike. What has the Government done here?

You think I was kidding when I talked about the master-slave relationship. Well, there are such relationships. Mr. Lloyd Francis pointed out in his interviews, which are on tape in the Library of Parliament, some of the things that took place on the Hill. He was the Speaker of this Chamber and he pointed out that there was sexual harassment. Unless a woman was prepared to take her clothes off she could not get a job or she could not get a promotion. He pointed out clearly that nepotism was rampant on the Hill. This place has been like an enclave disconnected from the realities of what is happening in the private sector and the public sector off the Hill. Are the workers on this Hill not entitled to the same sort of collective rights as the workers at Inco or Ford Motor Company, or workers anywhere else in this country? Are they not entitled to bargain collectively to protect their rights on the job? The answer is yes.

We know, for example, there is an abuse on the Hill because there is no protection of a collective agreement. I had workers from the restaurant in the Cafeteria of the Parliament coming to me last summer because they were working overtime and they were not getting paid for the overtime they worked in the subsequent pay, but were getting it six months later. If they had expenses to put out such as child care, travel costs, they had to put all that out to come back here to work overtime. They did not get their overtime pay in the subsequent pay-check and they had to wait six months to get the overtime. If it were a tradesman on the Hill he got his overtime pay in the next check.

I had to write a letter to the head of the administration over in Vatican II across the road, they call it South Block. I had to write to the head honcho and say, "Look, why do these people have to wait six months to get what is theirs, what they have worked for?" Suddenly after a week they got their overtime pay. There is no reason at all for that.

There are other examples. Employees of the Library of Parliament were denied maternity benefits for a full year after such benefits were finally extended to House of Commons employees. The Library administration said it was an administrative error. We had the case of Library employees who worked side by side in the same office, doing the same job, with the same responsibilities, yet classified differently and at significantly different salary levels. Indexers in the Library of Parliament earn an average of $6,000 a year less than people doing the same job for the House of Commons.

In the Cafeteria service an employee cut his hand on the job and was told to visit the nurse. The nurse told him it was not safe to work and he should go home. The manager told the employee he either got his butt back on the job or he would face discipline. There is no system, there is no method. You cannot impose it from the top, the worker has to sit across from the employer and they have to negotiate.

When you look at Bill C-45 you ask yourself where are the shortcomings? Why is the New Democratic Party opposed to Bill C-45? Because, in fact, Bill C-45 is almost the son of the PSSRA, the Public Service Staff Relations Act. We know from experience that the PSSRA caused enough problems with the workers in the Post Office. That is why they fought so hard and so long to be taken out from under the PSSRA and put under the Canada Labour Code. We were all part of that fight, because the Public Service Staff Relations Act limits what things can be negotiated. For example, under the PSSRA you cannot negotiate technological change, and under the Canada Labour Code you can. There is the whole question of staffing, grievances, the right to strike, and the question of classification; there are limitations in the Public Service Staff Relations Act that are not in the best interests of workers.

This Government has chosen to introduce Bill C-45 with all of its shortcomings and it is asking this Parliament to accept them. It is asking this Party, which is a labour party, to accept Bill C-45 as adequate. As a matter of fact the workers themselves do not want Bill C-45. There are far too many limitations in Bill C-45. Any collective bargaining act must have important factors such as classification. They ought to be able to negotiate job descriptions, the assignments of pay levels, and the evaluation of duties. Presently, as I have pointed out, job descriptions are changed arbitrarily by the powers that be over at Vatican II. All that does is result in frustration, poor morale and ultimately second class service to the honchos in the House of Commons.

Bill C-45 excludes classification from negotiations so the employees on the Hill would not be able to negotiate job classification, that area where some of the greatest injustices take place on the Hill at the present time. Under the PSSRA you cannot negotiate job classification. The Bill does not allow the employees to negotiate staffing. Unfair job appointments, promotions, demotions, transfers, etc., cannot be grieved to third party arbitration. There is no conciliation process in Bill C-45 on these matters.

We have a history of nepotism on the Hill. There was a time when, if an M. P. had a third cousin from a sixth uncle, fifth removed, he could get a job on the Hill. There are some people on the Hill who somehow or other ended up working in the Cafeteria of the House of Commons because they knew a friend of a friend who knew an M. P.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, yes, absolutely. It has been known to happen. "You have to have connections" as it said in Death of a Salesman. This Bill does not—

Mr. Boudria: Say that outside the House.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why is the Hon. Member so sensitive? Did I mention a name?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am listening with great interest to the Hon. Member, but with reference to his comments on that restaurant employee who could have become a Member of Parliament, I do not think he has to give his name in order for us to know very well who that person is. I would hope the Hon. Member who is well known for his oratory would stick to the legislation. We are listening carefully, but I do not see why he should attack one of our colleagues. We know very well who is involved and I find that really unfair, as we say in English!

• (1450)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has the floor on debate.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I do not know where all this sensitivity comes from. I pointed out that nepotism on the Hill has been historical. The fact that this Bill does not allow one to negotiate staffing means that we can very well end up continuing the same process. I did not name any names, but if there are insensitivities in this chamber, so be it. I say, if the hat fits, wear it.

Let me deal with grievances. Any collective bargaining must permit the employees to negotiate grievances. Bill C-45 does not allow workplace problems to be addressed by union grievances. For example, health and safety problems in the print shop and cafeteria, or air quality environmental problems in the Wellington building cannot be subject to a union grievance. Technological change cannot be grieved under Bill C-45. All of these remain management rights, but do not just touch the rights of management, they affect the workers. Technology on the Hill has moved ahead rapidly. Yet, Bill C-45 does not allow workers to grieve technological change. Can you imagine that occupational health and safety infractions cannot be grieved.

What is the purpose of Bill C-45 if there is no right to strike? The workers retain the right to remove their services if an impasse comes. I do not believe that the employees on the Hill are any different from others in the workforce. They do not go out on strike every year. Statistics show that 93.7 per cent of all contracts in this country up for negotiation are settled without a strike. We cannot take seriously any suggestion that in 1986 the whole operation of Parliament would grind to a halt and somehow our ancient privileges would be breached if the workers on Parliament Hill go on strike. Bill C-45 would give limited bargaining rights to workers on the Hill, because it does not cover all the employees on the Hill. The workers in the cafeteria, the restaurant, and the Library, and the bus drivers and messengers are covered by Bill C-45. However, the employees who work for MPs, Senators and the Speaker are not covered by Bill C-45. The fact is that we are eliminating about 1,200 employees from any coverage whatsoever.

We in the New Democratic Party entered into an agreement with our employees. We have a parliamentary association of support staff which is called PASS. We negotiate within the limitations of what the House allows and we have put in place a grievance procedure. We have established a technological change clause. We have tried to implement with our employees an agreement about all of those items under our direct control and which we can negotiate. I believe we have given an example of a process that other political parties in this chamber ought to consider with their staffs as an interim measure, but interim measure only.

Any collective bargaining process must have certification. It must allow the employees to have a process to apply for certification. Bill C-45 states that applications for certification must be made to the Public Service Staff Relations Board. If normal Public Service Staff Relations Board procedures were followed, existing cards would be void, due to being untimely. All these cards that the workers have signed in their application to the Canadian Labour Relations Board and subsequently through their appeal board would be wiped out. They would be starting from scratch. It seems to me that this whole process in Bill C-45 is a thinly veiled attempt at union busting. That is what it is.

In conclusion, this Parliament of Canada ought to be an example of how we treat employees. It should be a shining example and a beacon to the private sector throughout the land, that this is how the Members of Parliament deal with their staff, the people who serve them and help them perform their duties to the best of their ability. Anything less is a dereliction of duty.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few moments to make some comments on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I listened to him very attentively because I do have considerable interest in the fate of the employees of the House of Commons. As the House knows, I am the only former employee of this institution to have been fortunate enough to be elected to represent a constituency. During his remarks, the Hon. Member alluded to a certain Member who had been previously on staff. Of course, there is only one, as you know very well. I will come back to that in a moment.

The Member stated that he believed that a number of Canadians would think we would perhaps be better off sometimes if this Parliament was shut down for a period of time. I really take offence to that remark, because I think it is the greatest honour and privilege of all of us, to serve our constituents in the House of Commons. To suggest that the role is worth anything less than that does no service, not only for the employees of this House we are defending, or pretending to defend, when speaking on this Bill, but it does no service for the constituents we represent here in Parliament.

Let me deal with the Hon. Member's remarks concerning past harrassment of employees, nepotism and so on. There are employees in the House who have been working on Parliament Hill for many years. Yes, the practices that were in place perhaps did not have all the redeeming qualities they might have had, and it is quite true that perhaps all the formal structures to ensure that there never was favouritism were not there. However, to claim that throughout the years the employees who have been working here for all these years are somewhat less than qualified does no service to them.

Mr. Rodriguez: Put your question.

Mr. Keeper: Let us hear the question.

Mr. Boudria: My final comment concerns the remark that was made in regard to myself and how I got my job on Parliament Hill. I am not ashamed of my humble beginnings. I started here on October 25, 1966, as a bus boy for the parliamentary restaurant making $44 a week in salary. When I walked to Parliament Hill to ask the manager of the parliamentary restaurant for a job on that day—

[Translation]

Mr. Desrosiers: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), on a point of order.

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I think we are here to discuss Bill C-45. Some sort of trial is being staged in this House. In my view, he does not have to defend himself on account of what the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) said earlier. No one in particular was attacked, no name was mentioned. So he is bringing him up for trial, and I for one am asking to return to the matter of Bill C-45, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Of course, I will continue my comments in this period for questions or comments regarding the Hon. Member's speech. I am almost finished, and I am sure the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) will take all the time he requires.

I want to repeat to the Hon. Member that I am not ashamed of those humble beginnings. It is a feature which I think assists me in representing my constituents in the House of Commons. It is a feature not often found in silk stocking socialists and one perhaps which would be required by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

• (1500)

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to start comparing my humble beginnings with the Hon. Member's humble beginnings. I do not want to get into a spitting match. First, I alluded to people who may have come into the House of Commons. I did not name anyone.

Mr. Boudria: There is only one.

Mr. Rodriguez: I do not know what particular Members of Parliament have paraded through this House of Commons over the last 15, 20 or 25 years. Furthermore, I do not back away from my comment about possibly closing the House. There was a whole lot of bell ringings which closed down the House of Commons for two weeks, three weeks or whatever. Members of Parliament did not concern themselves about the importance of Parliament then. The Liberals in this session have tried to pattern themselves after the Tories when during the last Parliament they closed the place down. I did not hear any great concern about the importance of this place making laws. The Hon. Member knows this is a political arena and I wish he would stop this nonsense.

Mrs. Mailly: Maybe to you it is.

Mr. Rodriguez: Second, the Hon. Member is the last one to cast aspersions on me. Every single day he casts aspersions on government Members in the House. He throws mud all the time across the Chamber. Now some of it gets stuck on him and he does not like it. I am sorry. I have been noted to call a spade a spade and I will repeat that people got their positions working on this Hill because of whom they knew, not because of what they knew. There were no competitions on the Hill. I do not back away from that.

I am saying that the Hon. Member had ample opportunity, if he knew all of those things were wrong, to convince the Liberal administration, of which he was a member, and he could have perhaps forced the Liberal Government to bring in some legislation to give protection to workers on the Hill. At least the Conservative Party had enough courage to bring Bill C-45 forward. At least that is something, as bad as it is. It shows a lot more courage than the Liberals showed when they were the Government for 16 years.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) for a question or comment.

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) refer to the cafeteria service earlier in his remarks. I would like to know whether under Bill C-45 this Government could not have done something else concerning the cafeteria service. We know this is a major problem. Nobody is happy. Given this Bill, would the Hon. Member allow the Government to decide for instance to privatize everything in the way of restaurants, cafeterias, and so on? Would the Hon. Member allow that?

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, first let me say I welcome at least the attempts by the Hon. Member to try to resolve some of the problems. I would suggest that rather than privatizing the cafeterias and the restaurant, we sit down at committee stage to beef up and tighten up Bill C-45. If we can get that commitment, we can give the workers the opportunity to negotiate some of the injustices in the Bill. I would not want to privatize the cafeterias and the restaurant because I know that turning them over to the "whirly whips", or whatever the fast-food outlet is called, would be worse. We have an opportunity to correct the injustices in Bill C-45. I take the Hon. Member's question as a serious commitment to resolving some of the inconsistencies and injustices in the Bill.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what we would recommend to the Hon. Members opposite. We would like the Bill to be referred to committee, as required, where it could be improved upon specifically in the direction suggested by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and in other directions also because there are other aspects of the Bill we would like to have improved. So that is the suggestion. I am going to ask him a question.

[English]

The purpose of this part of the Bill—

[Translation]

We are talking about one aspect of the Bill, in Clause 5.

[English]

The purpose of this Part is to provide to certain persons employed in Parliamentary service collective bargaining and other rights in respect of their employment.

[Translation]

I would like to ask him this: Those people who are covered by this legislation, what are their rights now? Do they have the right to collective bargaining? Are they allowed to join an employee organization? Or will the Bill give them for the first time a chance to join an employee organization?

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member prefaced her question with some remarks, but we are debating principle here. In all honesty, we have been trying to put forward the kinds of principles we stand for as a Party and we are trying to exchange ideas about where the Bill is lacking. I hope to hear from members of the Conservative Party as to whether they agree that some of these things can be improved so that we can, in debate on principle, at least go into committee knowing that there is a meeting of minds. At the present time the cafeteria and restaurant employees, the messengers and bus drivers, are not covered by any collective agreement. In fact this Bill would give them collective bargaining rights but because it is based on the Public Service Staff Relations Act there are shortcomings which have created a great deal of hardship where it applies at the present moment. Bill C-45, because it incorporates that Act, would in fact create the same problems for employees on the Hill. How can we say to workers: "You cannot grieve occupational health and safety complaints"? That is their main—

Mrs. Mailly: It's covered under the Canada Labour Code.

Mr. Rodriguez: When Bill C-45 comes into effect, they are covered—

Mrs. Mailly: Part 4 puts it under the Labour Code.

Mr. Rodriguez: But the grievance procedures are under Bill C-45. What the employees can grieve is outlined in—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. could I ask the Hon. Member to conclude as we have passed his allotted time?

Mr. Rodriguez: I will conclude by saying the same thing about other issues. I invite Hon. Members to participate in debate. I would like to go into committee with a meeting of minds in terms of broad principles.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to speak for a few minutes in the debate on Bill C-45, especially since the amendment we are discussing now was presented by my hon. colleague from Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), an amendment aimed at obtaining a 30-day postponement, which makes perfect sense. In fact, my hon. friend from Hamilton East has a long record of protecting unionized employees, who represent a substantial part of the workers in the steel town she represents so well in Parliament. In fact, she presented this amendment so that there would be time to examine the Court ruling we have just received today.

The Canada Labour Relations Board had decided that employees of the House of Commons had the right to organize for the purpose of setting up a union. It had recognized that right, and in fact, certain steps had been taken.

Strangely enough, the Government appealed this decision before the court. Actually, the Government should be asked to clarify its attitude, because by tabling Bill C-45, it seems to want to allow the employees to organize. So why appeal the decision of the Canada Labour Relations Board, which had granted the employees this right or rather, recognized their right to do so, since I believe the employees have had this right for a long time but never used it.

Mr. Speaker, I think I can say why the Government acted this way. It is because if the employees had availed themselves of the right given them by the Canada Labour Relations Board, they would have organized in their own way and would have tried to negotiate with the Government on the basis of what they believed to be reasonable. But that is not what the Government wanted. The Government preferred to have the employees organize according to the formula defined in Bill C-45, and that is the crux of the problem. Because I think that Bill C-45, and I am not alone in this, will not give House employees sufficient protection nor sufficient means to get their point of view across when they face the employer at the bargaining table.

This is why I would suggest that the amendment of my colleague for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is quite justified. Negotiations were already under way when the Canada Labour Relations Board made its ruling—I respect the judgment of the court, it was made by a court because Canadian legislation is interpreted by the courts. I respect the ruling, but I must emphasize it came after negotiations had begun, and in a way it throws a monkey wrench into the works.

Therefore I think it would be useful if we were to defer debate on this Bill for a few days—my colleague from Hamilton East recommends two months—so as to consider the full impact of the court ruling and analyze its consequences. We would then be in a much better position to hold a meaningful debate on Bill C-45.

Strangely enough, most back-benchers on the Government side appear unwilling to take part in the debate on this measure. Earlier this morning, I am told, the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) resorted to the sub judice argument to explain why very few of his Progressive Conservative Party colleagues would join today's debate on Bill C-45. Ridiculous, the court ruling is out and the issue is no longer before the courts. In fact, any Member who feels that the question of labour relations on Parliament Hill is important ought to seek the floor and speak out. Besides, Bill C-45 has a number of shortcomings and could stand some improvement.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention and that of the House to some of the deficiencies in this Bill. For instance, Clause 5(3), which deals with classification would prevent any negotiation for classification problems, such as those related to job descriptions, the level of pay and job evaluations.

How could we imagine that employees who work for us on Parliament Hill would be satisfied with a collective bargaining system which does not allow for the negotiation of classification matters? This would mean that the classification level of an employee could be changed arbitrarily by management without the employee or his representatives being able to negotiate this matter with the employer. It is unthinkable. This would mean a bargaining system much weaker that those which exist in the private sector. Yet, Mr. Speaker, if there is one place in Canada which should serve as a model for collective bargaining and employee protection systems, it is certainly the House of Commons.

If those who work for the Ministers and the Members of Parliament, and thus for the Canadian public, are not well protected and do not have a satisfactory system or collective agreement, how can this be held up as an example for the private sector, where workers are often prevented from organizing and are given as few benefits as possible?

As concerns the classification system, I would like to quote some of the views expressed by the Public Service Alliance of Canada: "The present classification system has evolved throughout the years in the very special environment of Parliament Hill. People there say: 'This is the source of a lot of employee discontent. Many employees have no job description. Those who have feel that they are outdated, frequently and arbitrarily amended in an environment which recently witnessed major technological changes. This situation—"

I am quoting the Public Service Alliance.

"—is a source of frustration, insecurity and a very low morale among employees."

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that merely by this text which I have just quoted from, it becomes abundantly clear that clause 5(3) of Bill C-45 is not good enough. We want employees who are happy, who have a part to play in the determination of their salary levels and who have a say in the assessment of their performance.

We do not want the arbitrary which has reigned for so many years over employer-employees relations on the Hill to continue. If we have to deal with a bill such as Bill C-45 to set the bargaining rules between employer and employees, we want to start on the right foot. There has never been a global protection scheme for Parliament employees on the Hill.

Therefore, on this side of the House, we are saying that if we are to start on the right foot, we should not accept this Bill which, in the opinion of several House Members and employees—you have heard the objections put forward by House Members, Mr. Speaker, and I support them—is not satisfactory.

I feel, therefore, that it would be reasonable to have the amendment moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) be put and that Hon. Members should support it, especially those on the Governement's side: those who have taken part in this debate so far have been few and far between. That would provide them with the opportunity to think this over for a few days and take part in the debate some 30 days hence, when the period suggested by my colleague the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is expired.

I do not want to speak any longer, Mr. Speaker. I think we should vote immediately on my colleague's amendment, because I feel it is a major one which should logically allow us to study with a clear mind the consequences of the Court's ruling.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. The problems which led employees on the Hill to organize and seek collective bargaining rights had to do with classification, promotion and staffing decisions. However, questions with respect to these areas are not dealt with in the legislation which is before us. How is it that the Government can possibly think that Bill C-45 will resolve the labour-management difficulties on Parliament Hill when the Bill does not deal at all with the root causes of the discontent? The legislation fails to deal with these areas which led to organizing in the first place. Could the Hon. Member please comment on my remarks?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is entirely right. What he has just said is a summary of my speech. When some of the main elements normally found in a collectively-bargained contract are not found in this legislation then I say that it is faulty. The Government should go back to the drawing-board. This is exactly what I have been saying. In fact, there is little more I can say. The items outlined by the Hon. Member should be subject to negotiation. The employees should have a say in how they are classified, paid and so on. It was the purpose of my speech to point that out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-45, and Act respecting employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time one month hence."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the recorded division stands deferred until 6 p.m. on Monday, April 28, 1986.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Harvie Andre (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If it were 10 minutes to four, I would have more luck, but I wonder if the House Leader would consider calling it four o'clock so that we may call the Private Member's Bill, because those who would like to participate—I see that there is no co-operation.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move the second reading of Bill C-96 which amends Part VI of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1977. Let me begin with the purpose of the Bill.

This Bill involves the implementation of a key element of the Government's over-all fiscal plan. It follows a long process of consultation with the provinces over the past year or more which has involved both the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). This process began following the Government's November 1984 Economic Statement which laid out the basic parameters of the strategy for reducing the federal deficit and securing national economic renewal. The May 1985 Budget subsequently confirmed that the financial transfer that the federal Government provides to the provinces would be included in deficit reduction so as to spread expenditure restraint as broadly and as fairly as possible.

Specifically, this Bill determines the future growth of the transfers that the federal Government provides to the provinces for health and post-secondary education under what is known as established programs financing or EPF. In essence, this Bill does two things. First, it moderates the growth of EPF transfers as part of a general effort to restore stability to federal finances. By slowing the annual growth of these transfers by two percentage points, the deficit will be lower in 1990 and 1991 by $2 billion. Second, it provides continued strong support for provincial health and post-secondary education programs.

Under the provisions of this Bill, EPF transfers will be large and they will grow substantially in the years ahead. The average growth over the next five years is expected to be about 5 per cent on the basis of current economic projections. In total, the federal Government expects to provide over $90 billion during this period or about $25 billion more than was provided over the last five years.

The reasons for moderating the growth of EPF transfers together with the growth of the federal program expenditures generally are well known. As the Minister of Finance reported in his recent Budget, the Government is faced with a debt problem of massive proportions. For years, more and more spending has been financed by borrowing more and more money and for years the Government has had to borrow billions of dollars just to pay the interest on past loans. As a country, we have been mortgaging our future year by year and paying the interest by taking out a new loan. That is the reality with which the Government has had to deal, the reality that threatened rising debt, falling confidence, a falling dollar, rising interest rates, slower growth and even higher deficits.

It is inevitable that transfers to the provinces be included in the broad effort to deal with this problem. These transfers now represent a major proportion of total federal budgetary expenditures. Cash transfers alone now amount to about $20 billion or about 20 per cent of federal budgetary expenditures. There is also a further $7 billion in revenue forgone by the federal Government through the provision of tax transfers.

[Translation]

However, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the economic renewal plan of this Government is not simply to reduce the federal deficit. Essentially, its purpose is to allow the Federal Government to continue to finance important public services in coming years.

[English]

It is a matter of basic arithmetic. The more the federal Government has to pay spiralling service charges on a mounting national debt, the less it will have available to fund important programs like health and post-secondary education. In effect, our ability to meet the needs of Canadians in the years ahead will simply be eaten away by our debt problem. That is not an eventuality which any responsible Government wishes to contemplate.

[Translation]

These are the reasons why the Federal Government is acting and acting now to put an end to this vicious circle and to put the federal finances on a solid base.

[English]

I would like to explain now how this Bill fits into the over-all fiscal plan of the Government. I should emphasize first of all that the burden of federal deficit reduction is not being borne by transfers to the provinces. It is being borne by other federal program expenditures. As I indicated earlier, the growth of the cash and tax transfers which together make up the federal EPF contribution is expected to average about 5 per cent over the next five years. Federal program expenditures generally will be growing much more slowly.

As indicated in the February 26 Budget, federal program spending this year will actually decline. For the remainder of the decade, federal program expenditures are expected to grow by an average of about 3.2 per cent. Total federal budgetary expenditures which include public debt charges is expected to grow by about 4 per cent.

Let us look at federal support for health and post-secondary education. In short, provincial health care and post-secondary education programs will be receiving more federal support than almost any other area. This is in keeping with the high priority the Government attaches to health care and post-secondary education. Nor are transfers to the provinces the only support the federal Government is providing for health care and post-secondary education.

[Translation]

As the provinces are mainly responsible for the provision of these services, the major part of the federal assistance is naturally assured under the transfer system. In 1985-86, these transfers amounted to nearly $15 billion.

[English]

However, there is also a substantial direct federal contribution to these areas. In the health area, an additional $1.5 billion is provided in the various health service programs carried out by National Health and Welfare and other Departments including Labour, Indian and Northern Affairs, National Defence, Veterans Affairs and the Department of the Solicitor General.

On the post-secondary education side, there is a further $1,100 million in funding of provincial bilingualism in education programs, support for university research through the granting councils, the Canada Student Loan Program and other support. The tax system also provides support in the form of various tax deductions and exemptions for medical and education expenses and for certain goods used in the health and education fields.

[Translation]

In addition to these contributions, the Federal Government helps lower income provinces through equalization payments which now amount to $5 million more each year and which can be used to support important public services, such as health care and post-secondary education.

• (1530)

Let us look at consultation with the provinces to assure the House that the maximum possible consultation has taken place with those who are most directly affected by EPF.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, EPF's transfers are authorized under federal legislation. This is not subject to any particular time frame and it can be amended by Parliament at any time. Nonetheless, we have consulted extensively with provinces in keeping with our desire to work as closely as possible with them. We have discussed the over-all fiscal plan and the need to restore federal fiscal responsibility. We have also tried, where possible, to accommodate provincial concerns regarding the future growth of EPF transfers.

Ministers of Finance met immediately following the November, 1984 Economic Statement. Provincial Ministers subsequently sought and obtained an assurance that no changes would be made in EPF transfers in 1985-86.

The May 1985 Budget confirmed the Government's intention to provide substantial growth in transfers, while at the same time moderating that growth by some $2 billion annually by the end of the decade. There followed an extensive series of consultations on implementation of the measure beginning in 1986-87.

[Translation]

In the context of this consultation process, the Ministers of Finance met immediately after the May Budget, at the end of September, in early November and in late December.

The matter was also discussed at the First Ministers' meeting in Halifax last November.

[English]

These discussions proved helpful in coming to a specific decision on how the future growth of EPF transfers should be determined.

As Hon. Members are aware, the EPF arrangements replaced cost-sharing in 1977 with the mutual consent of the federal Government and the provinces. Federal support for provincial health care and post-secondary education programs is now based on an equal per-capita federal contribution, whose growth is linked to the growth of the economy as a whole and the population in each province. These contributions take the form of cash and tax transfers under the EPF "block fund", which provinces allocate to specific programs according to their demands and priorities.

The discussions with the provinces suggested that an EPF growth formula linked to Gross National Product and population remains the fairest way of supporting provincial health and post-secondary education programs.

Now we come to the amendments. You can see, therefore, that the main provision of this Bill does not make any changes in the basic way in which the growth of EPF cash and tax transfers is now determined, Mr. Speaker. This will continue to be linked to the growth of the economy generally and to population increase in each province, as it is now. EPF transfers will also continue to be based on the fundamental principle that they represent an equal per capita contribution for every Canadian. The only difference is that from 1986-87, the per capita amount will grow by 0.02 per cent less. This means that each province can expect to receive approximately 105 per cent of the previous year's contribution under current economic projections. The figure is approximate because the precise year-to-year increases will continue, as now, to depend on the actual rate of growth of GNP and population.

A secondary, but nonetheless important, part of the Bill is a provision for possible special adjustment payments. Under current economic projections, the EPF transfer as a whole is expected to grow faster than the rate of growth of inflation. However, in the event it does not, the Minister of Finance will be able to make special payments. Any such payments will take the form of equal per capita payments in any given year to all provinces. With the special payment, the rate of growth of the total transfer to all provinces will be equal to the rate of inflation. Such payments would be limited, in the event of extreme inflation, by what the Government would have provided under EPF had the legislation not been changed. Everybody has that straight!

I should emphasize, however, that this provision is not one which we expect will be needed. It has been included as a further measure of protection for the provinces.

[Translation]

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, this Bill shows the determination of this Governement to act in an enlightened, reasonable and fair manner in spite of our present difficult financial position.

[English]

The Bill is responsible because it will, along with more stringent measures being undertaken to control federal expenditures, make a significant contribution to ensuring a strong and lasting period of economic renewal in Canada. It will also help to safeguard the federal Government's ability to continue providing vital services like health care and post-secondary education to Canadians in the many years ahead. The Bill is reasonable because it provides increases in federal contributions to provincial health and post-secondary education programs which are large, and it is the best we can afford. Over $90 billion in support over the next five years and average annual gross of about 5 per cent are figures of which we can be proud. The Bill is fair because all provinces are treated equally. Total EPF transfers to all provinces will grow in the years ahead. No province will be affected any more or any less than any other province through this Bill.

[Translation]

Throughout the long period of consultation with the provinces, we have done everything possible to give them the opportunity to adjust to the budgetary imperatives of the Federal Government and to take their concerns into consideration.

[English]

I said at the outset of my remarks that this Bill originated with the comprehensive strategy for economic renewal laid out in the agenda which the Government presented in November, 1984 and reinforced in the recent February Budget.

Through this Bill we are implementing an important part of that strategy. We are providing a financial contribution to provinces which is sustainable in current financial terms. It is also an increase which reflects the strong importance the Government attaches to providing health care and post-secondary education services. Together with direct federal funding of these areas, it provides ample evidence of this Government's desire to help provide Canadians with the services they want and need.

However, there is also another part of the over-all strategy. This will take a little more time. In November, 1984, we pointed out that the need to contain costs and reduce deficits is a concern shared by both the federal and provincial Governments. The pressures on scarce financial resources are strong at both levels. We are each constrained in our ability to devote large amounts of new money to programs, even important ones like health care and post-secondary education.

[Translation]

More co-operation is needed between the Federal Government and the provinces. We must determine how to use existing financial resources as efficiently as possible and find new ways to finance these sectors while taking into account our present budgetary position.

[English]

These are important considerations, especially in the vital areas of health and post-secondary education. I am pleased to say that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has begun such discussions with his provincial colleagues. The Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) is also looking forward to discussing co-operation in the post-secondary education area with his counterparts.

• (1540)

In short, Mr. Speaker, there is a need to explore further how the federal and provincial Governments can work more effectively and efficiently together. We want to get on with this once the basic parameters of our financial contribution to provincial programs are in place. I, therefore, hope that all Members of the House will give this Bill their careful consideration and support.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am pleased to be able to take part in the debate on this Bill. Unfortunately, I cannot say that I am pleased to speak on this particular Bill because I think this is one of the most serious actions to be taken against young people in Canada in a long time. We have just gone through the episode of Senator Hébert's fast on behalf of Katimavik. He was on a specialized mission, but the wider issue touched a nerve in Canada, an untapped reservoir of support. The wider issue is the problem of young people in Canada.

Having gone through that experience, the Government now introduces a Bill which will reduce the expected educational funding in the country this year. The provinces expected to receive an increase of 8 per cent in funding from the Government of Canada in cash and tax points. They will now receive an increase of only 6 per cent. The provinces will receive less than they had anticipated. That is the reality. The Parliamentary Secretary pointed out that there will be an over-all percentage increase from last year's funding. The point is that the increase is less than the provinces expected and counted on getting for the financing of health and post-secondary education.

In my own Province of Newfoundland there will be a reduction of $7 million in 1986-87. Newfoundland will get $7 million less than it had expected. It will have to find that money within its own economy. Over a five-year period the province will receive $48 million less than it expected. That is in the province which has the highest unemployment rate in the country and an economy which is very, very vulnerable, and which has already experienced cut-backs in Government programs. It has seen the lay-off of public servants. It has seen the world oil price plummet, which has put in jeopardy the one great hope which the province had; that is, the development of Hibernia. Newfoundland and other provinces like it will be forced to look to their already weakened economies to make up the disparity in funding. In his attempt to come to grips with inflation at the federal level and to lower the federal deficit, the Minister is passing the problem on to the provincial economies. I am not alone in taking this position. It has been echoed by the Premier of Newfoundland.

There has been a break with tradition with regard to consultation with the provinces and the new stability and harmony in federal-provincial relations. Over the years the federal Government and the provincial Governments negotiated new fiscal arrangements. That did not happen on this occasion. There is a new regime to take over at the end of the present five-year period.

My friend has said that there has been consultation with the provinces. I would like to read to him the reaction of some provincial premiers and ministers. Mr. Peterson from Ontario said: "You don't call it a cut. You could call it a breach of faith. You could call it breaking a promise". In the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of December 4, 1985, Mr. Nixon said: "There was uniform opposition to the Ottawa plan. Nobody thought it was a good idea". In the Gazette of December 13, 1985, Mr. Gerard D. Levesque of Quebec said: "It is unfair to the provinces because they have been counting on the amounts agreed to in the accords". In Le Devoir of November 29, 1985, Mr. Hatfield said:

[Translation]

I shall have no other choice but to increase user charges for health services.

[English]

Mr. John Baxter, the Finance Minister for New Brunswick, said: "It is unreasonable for a federal Government to think that provinces which have taken difficult measures to deal with their own financial situation can also be expected to absorb part of the problem at the federal level". Mr. Keer from Nova Scotia said: "Every province in there made it clear that there's probably nothing more important to deliver to Canadians than health and education". That is the reaction from the provinces, and I think we must put it on the record. The fact is that the action was taken unilaterally and the provinces do not like this measure. I do not think we should attempt to tell people that they do.

I do not know where the money went, but the first indication we received was that these cut-backs would come only in 1987. We have now been told that the cut-backs will come in 1986. There has obviously been a reorganization of money and that money has gone elsewhere. We know that it is not being spent on health or post-secondary education. We heard some views from the post-secondary education community on this issue as well. Mr. Roger Hamel of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce urged the federal Government to spend more on universities. He said that the business community is increasingly concerned that the squeeze on post-secondary education funding will make it impossible for universities to meet the demand for research and development.

Mr. Ed Anderson, the President of the Canadian Association of University Teachers, said: "Proposed federal cuts to post-secondary education could place a university education beyond the reach of many students". That brings me back to the first point I made, Mr. Speaker. The crisis is in post-secondary education. In this country we now have a generation which the Senate report recently descibed as in danger of becoming a "a lost generation". That is the issue I want to address more than any other.

In my own province, close to 50 per cent of eligible young people are unemployed and have dim prospects. This Bill is one of the most important to come before the Chamber because it touches upon the essence of what kind of country we will have in the future. Young people in the country are concerned about their future. They have dismal hopes and dim prospects for the future. They want, need, and deserve all the help, encouragement, and support that they can get. The Government is now cutting back on the funds which could help them to get their place in the sun, to play the role that only they can play in Canada. We should be making education the number one priority of the country. I do not think we can talk about a trade strategy or an industrial strategy without considering education. My own opinion is that, rather than cutting back its transfers to education, the Government of Canada should increase them. It should become actively involved with the provinces in devising a national strategy on education. The Johnson report also addressed this issue. He made some recommendations. He said:

> It is recommended that the rates of growth of EPF/PSE fiscal transfers, and of provincial grants to universities and colleges, be harmonized. This would be achieved by:
> The affirmation by the Government of Canada of its willingness to escalate its PSE transfers at the rate of increase in GNP and population (the present "escalator"), and an invitation to the provinces to follow the same course in their grants to universities and colleges.
> The affirmation by the Government of Canada that, within this context, it would nonetheless respect the priorities adopted by individual provinces for PSE, by escalating its PSE transfers to them at the rates they themselves chose for increasing their grants to universities and colleagues—up to the GNP rate.

I do not necessarily agree with that either because I think it simply perpetuates inequality. If you match the provinces dollar for dollar, you will simply be making the rich richer and the poor poorer. There are provinces which cannot keep up with others in the amount they contribute to education. I made the point earlier on that if you pass on the federal deficit to the provinces, then already weak economies have to struggle to make up the difference. I think we have to keep on funding post-secondary education on a per capita basis and I hope to see it at the level it was. I also hope to see some built-in mechanism for ensuring that the money is spent on post-secondary education. There is some fault here on the part of the provincial Governments in how the money is spent. All of the money given to the provinces for post-secondary education and health is not spent on post-secondary education and health. There are no safeguards to ensure that it is. The Government of Canada should build those safeguards in. There should be penalties which would take effect if the money allocated for education and health are not spent in those two areas.

Let me get back to the point I was making that not only should the Government of Canada be spending more money on post-secondary education, it should go farther than that. It should become actively involved in a national strategy for post-secondary education. The health of our economy and society is tied in no small way to the health of post-secondary education. We are going to need liberally-educated men and women who are at the leading edge of their discipline. In an age when one of the few constants is changed, those nations which grow and prosper are the ones that emphasize research and development and have a workforce prepared to meet rapid changes in the market-place.

We have to look at our educational systems across this country in the way the OECD did in 1976. The examiners from that organization came to the following conclusions about the state of Canadian educational policy-making:

> The lack of educational policies for the future is striking.
> The problem of defining goals for education that fit a vision of national interest is desirable.
> There is an array of exceptionally active programs derived from no explicitly-stated overall national conception of the country's interest.
> Decisions now have to be taken concerning the destination of the Canadian school system within an ordered view of the Canadian nation.

That is relevant here because we are talking about the financing of a system which needs to be redefined and reorganized. The OECD examiners also said this:

> Politicians, parties and governments will not be able to avoid much longer taking some political stands, and that means also nation-wide, and not simply province-oriented positions. They need to give Canadian answers to Canadian problems. Without political leadership and responsibility—and after all neither of these is forbidden under the BNA Act—a severe backlash against future educational development in Canada may be unavoidable.

Right now we are getting into a national debate on free trade. We have tried to come to grips with an industrial strategy. We have just come out of a recession and we know the need to compete in a more integrated world. Yet in spite of this, and while education and the educational system is going to be so fundamental to the future of Canada, there is no national debate, emphasis, forum or strategy for education. No other federal state in the world is in that position and no self-respecting state should be. We purport to have a national financial strategy, trade strategy, defence strategy, transportation and immigration strategy, but we do not have a national education strategy. Surely the whole is greater than the sum of its parts. Surely we cannot simply depend on provincial education strategies in this day and age.

The fact is that higher education is financed to the extent of more than 50 per cent from money provided by the Parliament of Canada. Yet the idea still persists that post-secondary education is a purely provincial matter. There is a massive and pervasive federal presence in higher education; in basic funding, research funding, professional and training programs, scholarship bursaries, student assistance programs, northern studies, native studies, multicultural and Canadian studies, as well as international relations and military studies. All of this is education and all of it is being financed through funds voted by the Parliament of Canada.

There are legitimate and unavoidable federal interests in higher education. This covers such things as an adequate supply of highly-qualified personnel, equality of opportunity for young Canadians regardless of where they live, and the development of the knowledge base required for economic growth and national sovereignty. Instead of debating a Bill which will mean cut-backs to the provinces for post-secondary education, we should be talking about how we are going to use that money in a new national strategy. There is a need now as never before. We are on the threshold of a smaller, inter-dependent world involving tough competition. Values and beliefs are constantly being challenged. Therefore, there is a need for greater co-ordination of Canadian education.

A number of organizations in Canada have stressed this point. The Social Science Federation of Canada stressed this in 1982 in its reaction to the conclusions of the parliamentary task force on fiscal arrangements. In 1984, the third volume of the report of the commission on Canadian studies of the AUCC made similar recommendations. It referred to a crazy quilt pattern of post-secondary education policy. It called again for a national strategy for higher education and research, with the universities and colleges and the federal and provincial Governments playing appropriate roles in a co-operative fashion.

• (1600)

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, if you are agreeable could we call it 4 o'clock at this point?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is four o'clock.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now proceed with consideration of Private Member's Business.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Before the Bill is called I would like to put a couple of points on the record as a result of a discussion yesterday. There are two things to which I would like to address myself. One is what might be taken into consideration in the event that a Member is not available to debate his or her Bill when it comes up in the order of precedence. The other is what would happen if that Member were not here. In other words, what happens to the Member's Bill, in the order of precedence, and what happens to the House time. I want to address first the question of the order of precedence.

What the House tried to do was to get away from the practice where the Table Officers arranged the order of precedence in accordance with a lot of unknown, but I am sure very valid, principles. We now have a situation where there is an order of 20 items drawn and everybody has some knowledge as to where they are in the pecking order. There is an attempt in the Votes and Proceedings to spell out the day upon which a Members' Bill might come up for debate. We want to see that that order of precedence, which has been created, is maintained.

We cannot believe that the House would want a practice to begin which would subvert that order of precedence which the draw took care of, regardless of the Party or circumstances. If a Member is unable to be in the House when his or her item is called, we think that Standing Order 23 could be invoked and the item could, at the request of the Government, be stood over without losing its order of precedence. I think that is a remedy which I am sure all Members would want to agree to in order to maintain the order of precedence.

I do have some questions I would like to raise as to the reasons a Member might give, to the Table or to yourself, in the event that he or she cannot be here to proceed with his or her Bill. In the event that a Member is not here to proceed with his or her Bill I might have some personal difficulty in granting the right for somebody else to move the motion for debate for fear that that might be done for the wrong reasons. That is a personal view that I would like to put on the record.

Having raised the question of the order of precedence I would like to go on to what happens if you were to invoke Standing Order 23, and what would happen to the remainder of the time. I think that everybody realizes we now have a standard calendar for the year, we have standard hours for each day and the taxpayers expect us to use the debating time in this House to the best advantage of the country. I suggest that if you invoke Standing Order 23(2) and stand the matter over to the next day, that would be Monday, you might consider, under Section 39(2), reverting back to Government Orders, since it is not now possible to give 24 hours notice of any other item of Private Members' Business.

We would contend that you should look at the provisions of Standing Order 39(2), and we would suggest that if the Chair interprets this Standing Order to mean that only in the event that there is no notice on the Notice Paper for a given day would the provisions of the Standing Order apply, then we would suggest to you that there is never going to be any time when Standing Order 39(2) could be used. It could never be used since the order of precedence provides for that notice which is in the Order Paper.

We think the House must have intended that the Standing Order be used, and we think it is intended for a situation where a private Member cannot proceed with his or her business, and that in order to use the time of the House effectively we should revert back to Government Orders.

We would suggest that if you do not take that approach, we would be in a bit of a conundrum. You have the authority to adjourn the House under Standing Order 9(1) or Standing Order 6(2), and we do not think that either situation applies in this case.

I should just like to go back to the question of Private Members' Business. You will appreciate that the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons gave its reasons for highlighting Private Members' Business, and that the reforms that were brought in give much more importance to Private Members' Business in that up to six Bills can be proceeded with to a vote, and that process has recently been proceeded with through the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling).

In closing, there are two things that we want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker. Number one, you have the decision as to what happens if somebody does not appear. But what do we do to be fair to the Member, and what do we do to be fair to the Members who follow him or her in precedence? The second question is, what happens to the balance of the time between the commencement of Private Members' Business and five o'clock? I would suggest to you that if someone else asked to move a Member's motion privately, there should be something in writing to give proof positive that the Member realized he or she would not be here, intended the debate to go ahead, and gave that permission. Those are two things I would like to see considered in view of the fact that the Member who has moved this Private Members' Bill is not here today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take a few minutes to speak to the point of order raised by my hon. colleague, the Deputy Government House Leader.

I agree that considering the way the order of precedence is determined now, a Bill that cannot be considered at the given time should, to a certain extent, retain its place in the order of precedence, because unlike the previous system, the order of precedence concerns not only the Members of this House but the public as well, since it is established in such a way that everyone may know the order of business in advance.

I may add that when a Member knows he cannot be in the House to debate a motion or a Bill in his name as scheduled, there must be have some kind of procedure for the Member to give official notice—and not at the last minute—in writing. I do not mean this notice should include all the reasons why he cannot be here, because I don't believe in going back to when we had to bring the teacher a note if we had not done our homework the night before. I think Hon. Members should be considered as such, and if a Member knows he cannot be in the House on the agreed date, he can simply give notice, in writing, that he will not be present.

Regarding the other point raised by my hon. friend, I do not agree, and in this particular case when we cannot debate the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) because he is not here, I don't think we could revert to Government Orders as the Hon. Member's interpretation of Standing Order 39(2) seems to indicate, because, Mr. Speaker, here in the House, our system is based on providing sufficient notice for Members to prepare themselves for debate.

Now if I may get back to the Government's suggestion, namely that we continue the debate on the measure which was under consideration, Bill C-196, the fact is that some of my colleagues who left the House a moment ago, just before Private Members' Business, and who wanted to take part in this debate are now on their way to their ridings and would learn on Monday that we continued the debate on this Bill.

It would be unfair, in my opinion, because they did not look at the document before us, and they thought that one hour would be set aside tonight for Private Members' Business. I should imagine they would expect Mr. Speaker to say that, if we cannot proceed with the Bill slated for debate at 4 o'clock today, the House should simply adjourn. Otherwise we would be abusing the goodwill of my colleagues who left a moment ago, because today's Order Paper clearly indicates that we would have one hour for Private Members' Business.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 39(2) clearly states that it can be done only when it is impossible to provide the twenty-four hour notice, and such is not the case since there was a twenty-four hour notice. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, since there is nothing before the House at this time, I would urge you to adjourn the House, quite simply.

• (1610)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) was saying that we should revert to Government Orders rather than adjourn. As I listened to some of his colleagues to my left and on his side of the House, I am sure I heard that there was no agreement with his position.

However, there are some serious problems with the rules as they deal with Private Members' Business. There have been occasions in the past when allocated Opposition Days have resulted in a Member losing his or her day to debate his or her Bill. There are times when days originally planned for Budget debate, Throne Speech debate or Opposition Day debate are changed at the last moment and we revert to Government Orders. I believe that Standing Order 39(2) was meant for those occurrences. It was not meant for the Government to have an extra hour on short notice or any notice at all on some occasions, just because a Member could not be here.

The purpose of that Standing Order is that we should not be surprised if, for some reason, we reverted to regular Government Orders on a day when we were not expecting to have a Private Members' Hour, and a Private Members' Bill could sneak in at the last moment.

I suggest that the Government would be speaking against the whole idea of parliamentary reform if it were to suggest that we should revert to Government Orders. We knew that this was a Private Members' Hour. This is Friday and a number of Members, especially those from the East or West Coast, had to go back to their ridings. If they had believed there would be another hour of debate on Government Orders many of them would have changed their travel plans and stayed here.

There is some need, as the Parliamentary Secretary said, to deal with some of the problems concerning Private Members' Business. That does not mean we should automatically revert to Government Orders.

Mr. Desrosiers: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) on a point of order.

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adjournment of the House.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now proceed to the consideration of Bill C-208, An Act respecting the International Airport at Ottawa.

Yesterday, the House embarked upon its first hour of Private Members' Business since the new provisional Standing Orders came into effect. At that time, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) raised a point of order regarding the practice which should be followed in the event of an Hon. Member being unable to be present to move his motion on the day fixed according to the order of precedence.

I have listened with care to the comments of Hon. Members, both yesterday and today, and I am aware that there will be difficulties such as this to be resolved during the experimental period from now until the end of December.

Pursuant to Standing Order 39(1) the Speaker has arranged for notice of the 20 items of Private Members' Business, as established in the order of precedence, to be published in the Notice Paper. It is noted at the time that Private Members' Hour may be suspended by the application of other Standing Orders. Therefore, as the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) correctly pointed out, when such debates as that on the Speech from the Throne, an emergency debate, allotted days or Budget debates take place, the schedule for Private Members' Business will be adjusted so that no Member loses his place in the order of precedence.

In the case before us, notice has been given of the motion for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-208, An Act respecting the International Airport at Ottawa. The Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), in whose name this motion stands, is unable to be present.

I am grateful for the interventions by Hon. Members and intend to reserve my decision. Meanwhile, since the Table Officers require instructions by which to prepare the Order Paper and Notices, I am prepared in the interim to rule as follows without prejudice to any other ruling that might be made later: First, since the Standing Orders are not clear as to the disposition of private Members' items not taken up, I am ordering that this item of business in the name of the Member for Hull-Aylmer drop to the bottom of the order of precedence.

Second, Standing Order 39(2) provides for continuing with or reverting to the business before the House prior to Private Members' Hour: "In the event of it not being possible to provide the 24 hours' notice . . . ". Since notice had been published, it is the view of the Chair that Standing Order 39(2) does not apply in this case.

Third, as there is no business before the House at this moment, it is the view of the Chair that the House should adjourn.

Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11.00 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 4.18 p.m.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Governement's response to the twelve following petitions: Nos,331-392 to 331-398 inclusive, 331-408, 331-409, 331-417, 331-418 and 331-420.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER PAPER AND NOTICES

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding to Statements, since I gather there is one, I think the House should be advised that there is a glitch. Today the Order Paper and Notices contains two errors. Notices pursuant to Standing Order 39 projecting Private Members' Business were omitted in error, and recorded divisions on Bill C-87, which were disposed of on Thursday, April 24, remain listed on the Notice Paper.

The first error will be corrected in tomorrow's Order Paper. As to the second, since notice was given of the Private Members' Business for today on Thursday and Friday last and the correct motion for today's business is set out in this day's projected Order of Business, the Chair intends to proceed at 5 o'clock p.m. to Private Members' Business and to call the order at the top of the list of the order of precedence standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) and properly listed in the body of the Order Paper.

That is a technical way of saying that the projected Order of Business is correct. There is a printing error in the last section of the Order Paper under the notices section, which can be found at pages XXV and XXVI.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

DECLARATION BY CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS OF DAY OF MOURNING

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak of the shocking toll of accidents and illnesses that continue to occur in Canadian work places. In this regard, I would draw Member's attention to the Canadian Labour Congress' decision to observe this day as a day of mourning.

The personal price of workplace injury ranges from the initial pain of injury through the helplessness of disability to the ultimate price of death from physical injury or industrial disease.

Despite the genuine efforts of Governments and industry and the increasing involvement of organized labour, the human and physcal costs of work related injuries and illnesses have continued to remain high. In 1984, one Canadian in nine suffered a work related injury, 730 were killed and 16.6 million work days were lost at an estimated cost of $12 billion.

It was on this day 70 years ago that the Ontario legislature gave third reading to a Bill that introduced the collective liability system of mutual insurance under The Workmens' Compensation Act. Since that time the provinces and the federal Government have become increasingly involved in attempting to regulate a safe work environment and in reducing the financial burden of being injured at work.

Federal initiatives in the field of occupational safety and health include the amendments to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code which were proclaimed on March 31, and the leadership role Labour Canada and Consumer and Corporate Affairs are taking in giving effect to the workplace hazardous materials system, known as WHMIS, across the nation. Although the amendments to Part IV evolved through consultations with labour and employer groups, the WHMIS concept was successfully developed by representatives from labour, industry and the federal and provincial Governments. I believe that it is through the meaningful participation of labour, industry and Government and the acceptance of the responsibility for participation and the results of that participation that the burden of workplace accidents and illnesses will be broken.

I appreciate the opportunity of bringing this to the attention of Members of the House, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the Minister in decrying the terrible and painful costs that death has, not only in relation to the issue of productivity, which the Minister raises in his statement, but to the issue of its human toll on families, particularly children and spouses.

There is, however, another question for which the Government has to answer. Given the statistics just cited by the Minister, and given the fact that the battle against death in the workplace has not yet been won—it is far from being won—why is it that the Government is reducing the Budget of the Canada centre for occupational health and safety? In the last Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), we saw a 10 per cent reduction, and there is a further 10 per cent reduction projected. At the same time, as a result of these cutbacks, the Government has abolished the quality of working life program, and it has abolished the collection of data with respect to wages and working conditions in all businesses across the country which do not have the benefit of organized labour.

It is important to note that this measure today was not called by the Government but by the Canadian Labour Congress. I laud the Canadian Labour Congress for doing so.

The Government has a responsibility to the workers organized and unorganized. It is now abolishing the quality of working life centre, and the statistics which gave a chance to every Canadian to understand what was happening with salary and working conditions in every establishment in Canada, along with the cutbacks in the Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, reflect this Government's lack of commitment to the working people. Even the Neilsen Task Force points out that at present the centre has not been in a position to do research but only to provide information. Part of the reason is that of budgetary restraints, and the futher budgetary restraints being imposed by the Government to the tune of a potential 20 per cent cutback will mean further deaths and injury in the workplace.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on this matter. I would like to first congratulate the CLC for initiating this day of mourning. I think it is long past the time that Canadians recognize the contributions and sacrifices in life and limb made by workers in helping to develop our country. However, it is not enough to hear words on this matter spoken in the House of Commons. The plight of workers, whether they be in mines, forests, offices or banks, is something about which we should all be concerned. The Government should be concerned, not only through its words but through its actions.

The Hon. Member who just spoke indicated that at a time when we are concerned about chemicals in the workplace, and death and injury to workers, the Government is cutting back funding to the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety. Last week, in front of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, officials from that agency indicated that they had more requests for information this year than last year. They could not meet the requests that were made last year, yet their funding is being cut back.

The Minister, in his remarks, mentioned that we passed changes to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. That was two years ago and the regulations are finally in place. However, the Government has not acted on all the changes we made. One of the very significant omissions was the failure to establish an advisory council on occupational health and safety as required by the legislation. At a time when Canadians are so concerned about health in the workplace, that is one step the Governnment could have taken. It is not a very expensive measure, but it is very important in making sure that management and labour have a chance to give the Government direction towards saving lives.

DEINDEXATION OF CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION BENEFITS—USE OF PENSION INCOME IN CALCULATION OF UI BENEFITS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions, the first of which is from the great Province of Alberta. Whereas any amendment of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act to remove indexation of annuities will adversely affect former members of Canada's Armed Forces, widows and dependents. Whereas the Government has shown its intention to amend the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act without first consulting with annuity recipients and those—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has several petitions. I think she knows our practice is to give a summary and just the prayer, not all the preamble. I am perfectly happy to have the Hon. Member present her petitions, of course.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, these former members of the Armed Forces from the Province of Alberta are angry with the Government because of its decision to move ahead with deindexation of their pensions. The petition of the undersigned residents who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners, ably states their complaints and grievances.

I have another petition from Victoria, British Columbia, signed by several dozen former servicemen who also call upon the Government to refrain from any action with respect to superannuation and unemployment insurance without consulting with those who have paid into the funds.

I have a further petition from Victoria, British Columbia, again from former servicemen and women who ask the Government not to implement changes to the unemployment insurance regulations which pertain to the inclusion of pension income as earnings. There are several hundred signatures on this petition.

I have another petition from Edmonton, Alberta. Again it includes several dozen signatures of former service people and their supporters who call upon the Government to revoke changes to the unemployment insurance regulations and Section 57 and Section 58, which pertain to the inclusion of pension income as earnings. There are several hundred signatores to that petition.

I have several more on that issue, but I will hold them for another day. I do, however, have a series of petitions on another issue which this Government has not dealt with.

REINSTATEMENT OF QUOTAS ON FOOTWEAR IMPORTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): These petitions, Mr. Speaker, deal with the Canadian footwear industry. Unfortunately not all the petitions have been accepted because the grandfathering clause has not yet been approved. If it has been, I hope I will hear about it because I have several thousand more signatures on petitions which have been ruled out of order. The petitioners humbly declare that the Canadian footwear industry is responsible for 20,000 jobs with an estimated production value of $830 million per year. The industry has made serious efforts to improve its efficiency and productivity. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) to reinstate quotas on all footwear imports for the next five years, thereby protecting existing jobs and allowing for the creation of new jobs in the industry. This particular petition is signed by several hundred employees and their supporters in the Canadian footwear industry.

I will refrain from presenting these other petitions until—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that she simply has to indicate that she has them, and then file them. It has exactly the same effect.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions dealing with the lack of concern shown for youth across the country. These petitions are signed by high school students from the City of Prince Albert. They wish the Government to reinstate the Katimavik program as quickly as possible.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the futility of it, young people all across the country continue to protest the cancellation of Katimavik, which is a symbol of the absence of a suitable policy towards young people. I table the petition with 150 signatures from Windsor and British Columbia.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps some Members missed it, but I think on April 22 you ruled that certain petitions would be acceptable if the Hon. Member tabled it with the Clerk of the House. I understand that if they refer back to Hansard of that day they can find out exactly what the conditions were.

Mr. Speaker: There was a request that the Chair do it by unanimous consent. The Chair was in some difficulty and asked that there be a House Order, which I think we have dealt with. Hon. Members may want to refer to Hansard of—

Mr. Gauthier: April 22.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the House Order was last week, though.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by six minutes beginning at one o'clock today.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, April 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson that Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, you began the day by correcting some errors. I have to correct a very serious error I made on Friday. It is on page 12669 of Hansard. I referred to a table and I was quoting the reductions in EPF funding from what the provinces had anticipated. I quoted from that table and I quoted my own province of Newfoundland when I said that in 1986-87 there would be a net reduction from what they had anticipated in Newfoundland of $7 million. Then I quoted over a five-year period an amount of $48 million. That was grossly underestimated because the total amount that Newfoundland will receive less than they had anticipated in EPF will, in fact, be $132 million. Over a five-year period Newfoundland will not get $132 million from the Government of Canada that it had anticipated for health and post-secondary education. The mistake allows me to underline what is not only an inequity, but I think more likely a tragedy.

What we are talking about is, first, a primary resource, and that is young people. We are talking about that resource in a province which is struggling economically to find itself. The great hope that we had was Hibernia. With the plummeting price of oil that project is certainly in jeopardy at the moment, unless the Government of Canada is going to announce a regime which will see some sort of financial support, either through tax measures or otherwise, for that particular project.

If I may just stray a moment, two press conferences in Newfoundland last week highlighted that. The oil companies jointly said that they would lose 4,800 jobs in that province unless some action was taken to shore up the weakened state of the oil industry. Mr. Bill Hopper of Petro-Canada in St. John's on Friday said that the ball was now in the court of the Government of Canada. Petro-Canada would do no more drilling in Newfoundland, and unless some sort of regime was put in place the Hibernia project will not be able to go ahead. I make that point because I think it is relevant here.

There is another point. Even if the Government of Canada comes through with a policy now and Hibernia does go ahead, which I hope is the case, the real pay-off to Newfoundland is going to be in jobs for Newfoundlanders. There is no way that our people are going to get those jobs unless they have the training. I make the point because it is relevant here on this particular issue. The key thing that we need in Newfoundland is training for our young people, where there is a 50 per cent unemployment rate at the present time. The Senate committee talked about a national tragedy in this country for young people. In my province now we have a 50 per cent unemployment rate among eligible young people. What they need is some sort of training and education that will enable them to take the jobs we hope are going to be available. How is that going to happen when we see that over a five-year period there will be $132 million less in the field of post-secondary education in my province alone, not counting the other provinces across this country?

What does that mean? It means if we are going to take up the slack and forge ahead somebody has to step into the breach. Who is it going to be? Is it going to be the Province of Newfoundland? We know how financially strapped they are. We have been depending over the years since we joined Confederation on the Government of Canada making up the inequalities that we find. What we are finding here is that there is now a cut-back, an abrogation of that treaty we signed in 1949 when we became Canadians. We had expected that Confederation would bring this kind of benefit and, indeed, it did. What we are seeing now is a slip back into the past whereby we are going to have to depend more and more on our own meagre and inadequate resources. I think that is the real tragedy of the Bill we are discussing here today.

We are discussing a Bill which says to young people, "You are going to get less than you had expected. You have to wait". There is a 50 per cent unemployment rate. There are opportunities ahead, but education is the key issue if we are going to make progress in my province, and this Bill puts that in jeopardy. I think this is one of the most serious actions that has taken place in a long time. I do not know where the money went. I know we can find money to bail out banks in western Canada, so how is it that we cannot find money to help young people get an adequate education? How is it that we can agree to cut back from an 8 per cent increase to a 6 per cent increase in the funding of post-secondary education and health? How can you justify that as the Government? That is the real tragedy of what is going on here today.

What we should be doing, as I tried to point out on Friday, instead of making education second, third and fourth place we should be making it the number one priority. That is what other federal states are doing. We can talk about free trade, industrial strategy and new tax regimes, but unless we give some priority to education we are not going to be able to compete as a country in a smaller and far more integrated and interdependent world.

Every other country that I know of is giving the kind of prominence that we should be giving to education. In Germany and Switzerland, for example, which are both federal states, the federal Government and the provincial Governments work together. In Germany, for example, the two key planning and advisory bodies, the Bund Landers commission for education, planning and research promotion, and the science council both have equal voting representation from the Bund and from the Landers. We have to start doing that too.

There must be a greater co-ordination of education in this country. There must be a greater emphasis on it. We cannot simply say that education is a provincial responsibility and leave it at that. There must be a national will and determination to do something to improve the state of education in this country. There must be that national will, and behind that national will there must be the dollars. There is no point in talking about that if we are not prepared to put the necessary dollars into it. That is the main point that I want to make.

As a matter of fact, the Canadian Teachers' Federation has said the same sort of thing about a national strategy for education. The Canadian Teachers' Federation advocated in a submission to the Macdonald Royal Commission the following:

> The establishment of a Canadian Office of education jointly supported by the Government of Canada and the Governments of the provinces and territories. It would disseminate information nation-wide as well as promote research in education. It would study fiscal problems and recommend how they can be solved. It would co-ordinate federal education activities and promote common policies on education across Canada. The above Office would be supported by a Canadian Council of Education which would draw upon the advisory resources of a broad range of interests in Canadian society.

In other words, they are saying not only must the Governments work together, but we should be drawing on expert people who can make a contribution in the field of education. We should be drawing on those people in devising a national strategy. The Canadian Teachers' Federation, the Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, all of these organizations, and eminent academics across the country have been saying over the past year in specialized journals, and in the press as well, that this sort of thing must happen if we are going to compete as a country in the world community. That is the point we have to make today.

We are resource rich in Canada, but the greatest resource of all is our young people. Yet the Senate Report on Youth tells us that they are in danger of being a lost generation. Is the 20th century really going to belong to Canada as Sir Wilfrid Laurier said? Are we really one of the top five countries in the world? We are trying to break into that select circle. Can we really become one of the top five countries when we are not giving the same kind of prominence to education as those other countries? Are we coming of age internationally? Are we discovering who we are by throwing off our sense of the past and competing head to head with other countries?

When we compare our education system to that of West Germany, we see that there is a great difference. When we compare our economy to that of Japan and then ask how our education system compares to that of Japan, there is a great difference. Those are the kinds of questions we should be debating rather than talking about cut-backs in post-secondary education and health.

I wanted to use this opportunity to focus on what I think should be a number one priority in this country. We must have a national strategy for education that includes greater co-ordination. The co-ordination of that natiional strategy requires adequate funding. There is no more important area in this country that should receive adequate funding than the field of education. It is the greatest challenge facing us, and if we fail to deal with it we will put the nation at risk.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party, I wish to speak against this Bill. In doing so, I want to point out that this Bill is a repeat performance of what was introduced by the Liberals in the 1981-82 period. At that time, the former Government moved to reduce funding to the provinces for medicare and post-secondary education. That Liberal measure was opposed, not only by the New Democratic Party caucus but by the Conservatiave Opposition as well.

Among those Conservative Members who said this move was a betrayal of Confederation and proof that co-operative federalism was dying, and a unilateral action that should not have been taken, were the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). Those Conservative Members, when in Opposition, attacked the Liberals for doing exactly what the Conservatives are doing today.

I am sure all Members agree that there is nothing more important than ensuring equal access to medical and educational services right across the country. Not only is it a gift to our youth, it is fundamental to our future. We must provide, as much as possible, access to adequate post-secondary educational services so that a person growing up in Halifax or Corner Brook has the same opportunity for a decent education as someone who grows up in Toronto or other affluent parts of this nation. That will not happen with this legislation.

The level of funding for medicare services will be reduced, despite the fact that studies indicate that the cost of medical services will increase by a rate in excess of the growth in Gross National Product. The Government will only increase its contribution to the provinces for medicare and post-secondary education by a rate which is 2 per cent less than the growth of the Gross National Product. Such a built-in failure to our medicare system is a back-door approach to destroying universality in this country.

I have already stated that the actual cost of medicare is increasing at a greater rate than the growth in the Gross National Product. In addition, we know that the age of our population is increasing, which means that the cost of providing medical services in this country will increase. Furthermore, people are healthier and living longer as a result of the development of new technologies. Indeed, this is a further cost.

The Government, which opposed the Liberal move to cut or reduce funding for post-secondary education and medicare, is not only not matching but further reducing the funding from the amount to which it was reduced by the Liberals in 1981-82.

When the Conservatives introduced this legislation late Friday afternoon, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Scott), who introduced the legislation in the absence of the Minister, said, as reported at page 12666 of Hansard:

> It follows a long process of consultation with the provinces over the past year or more which has involved both the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Let us consider what type of consultation really took place. In the May 23 Budget, without any forewarning to the provinces, the Minister of Finance rose in the House and indicated that he wanted to reduce the level of funding for post-secondary education and medicare in established programs financing by $2 billion per year by 1990-91. To be fair, the actual amount of money coming from the federal Government to the provinces will increase. According to the present legislation, the provinces would receive $2 billion more per year by 1990-91 for medicare and post-secondary education than they receive under this Bill. This measure was implemented without any consultation. However, four months later, at the end of a meeting with the provincial ministers of finance in Halifax, the Minister of Finance indicated that those cut-backs will not begin in 1987, when the present legislation expires, but on April 1, 1986. There was no consultation, just an announcement by the Minister of Finance at the end of a meeting between himself and his provincial counterparts. What type of consultation is that? It is not consultation; it is unilateral action which shows that the Government is following in the footsteps of the old Liberal Government. It is not listening to the provinces or those who are concerned about funding for medicare services and post-secondary education in this country.

In addition to not announcing its agenda when it came to power, the Government did not even tell us in its May Budget that it intended to reduce the level of funding for post-secondary education and medicare on April 1, 1986. In the May 23 Budget and in the papers attached thereto it was indicated that there would be no reduced funding for fiscal year 1986-87. In effect, the Minister was telling us at that time through the papers he tabled that he had no intention of cutting the funding on April 1 of this year. Some four months after tabling his Budget he went to Halifax and said: "Oh, by the way, we are going to cut another $400 million which should have been coming to you in a few months' time for post-secondary education and medicare".

There are only two conclusions which can be drawn. The first is that in May of 1985 the Government did not know where it was going. It did not know what its plans were with regard to post-secondary education. The second is that the Government deliberately kept the House and the provincial Governments in ignorance of the plans which it was undertaking. Neither road is a very honourable one to travel.

The first one says that the Government did not know what was going on and all of a sudden in September it decided that it needed more money. Why did it need more money in September? Was it because it bailed out the banks? Was it because it found out that it was giving more money to the oil companies than it had thought it was going to give? Was it because it thought that the group of people who should suffer should be those who need our medical services and those who want to take advantage of our post-secondary education facilities? Is that what happened? If not, then the second alternative is there for us to see. The Government knew in May what it was doing, but it did not want the provinces or the groups concerned with medicare and post-secondary education to have an opportunity to oppose what it was doing.

Following in that vein one would assume that by saying it will be making cuts sometime in the distant future, sometime around 1990-91, people would not be concerned. However, that is not good enough. If the Government knew what it was doing it should have told the people of Canada. It should have consulted with the provinces to ensure that they knew what the Conservative agenda was.

As a result of either course of action the Government stands condemned. First, it stands condemned for not consulting or, alternatively, for not knowing what it was going to do. When it decided it had to save some more money to protect its image of deficit-fighting, it decided to pick on the people who are most in need of our services. Again, it picks on those people who receive medical services and those who need to have a better education system in order to compete in our more complicated society.

In introducing the legislation the Parliamentary Secretary said, as reported at page 12,667 of Hansard:

> Let us look at consultation with the provinces to assure the House that the maximum possible consultation has taken place with those who are most directly affected by EPF.

What consultation? Did the Government meet with the provinces? No. Did it listen to the provinces when they finally forced this issue on to the agenda at the First Ministers' Conference in Halifax at the end of November? No. Did the federal Government meet with university professors? Did it meet and discuss this matter with healthcare professionals? Does the Government have the support of any of these groups in our society? No.

What consultation? What is any different in the way the Conservative Government has approached cut-backs in regard to medicare and post-secondary education than the approach taken by the Liberals in 1981-82? The answer, of course, is that there is no difference.

Let us look at some of the words spoken by Conservatives in 1981-82 when they, as members of the Opposition, attacked the Liberals for reducing funding for medicare and post-secondary education. The present Minister of National Health and Welfare, who at that time was opposition health critic, said as reported at page 15,751 of Hansard: "Today we have unilateral action." The Hon. Member was condemning the fact that the federal Government was going ahead with these cuts. It was doing so despite the fact that the provinces opposed them and despite the fact that the majority of the provinces at that time, as is the case today, said that they needed more money for medicare and post-secondary education. The provinces were saying that what they should be doing was sitting down with the federal Government to negotiate levels of funding in terms of the types of programs which should be financed. In this way both the provinces and the federal Government would know what would happen over the next five years. They could agree as to what programs should be continued and from where the money would come. So the present Minister of National Health and Welfare condemned the federal Liberal Government for taking unilateral action. As reported at the same page of Hansard he went on to say:

> I suggest that equalization, post-secondary funding, medicare and hospitalization are too important to be brought into the arena of confrontation—

In other words, the Hon. Member was saying that these matters should be negotiated. Further on in his speech he went on to talk about the lack of adequate notice which the Liberal Government had given to the provinces at that time. Exactly what did the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) say? He said this:

> People have plans and programs regarding past commitments and they believe there must be some continuity in the programs.

Again, that is exactly the situation we face today. The provinces have made commitments. Not knowing that the federal Government intended to introduce this legislation, the provinces made commitments to their universities, hospitals, doctors, nurses and others involved in the healthcare system. They negotiated contracts and passed their own budgets without knowing what the federal Government was contemplating. This is so because, as I said earlier, this cut-back was not announced in the May 23, 1985 Budget. As I also said earlier the documents the Minister of Finance tabled in the House which, of course, were immediately circulated to the Premiers and the provincial Ministers concenred with these matters, indicated there would not be a cut-back. Since there was no indication that there would be a cut-back, the provincial Governments had every reason to believe that the legislation passed by the House in the spring of 1982 would be honoured. It was thought that it would be honoured because the Conservative Party, while in opposition, had said that the cuts were drastic and should not have taken place. Having said that in opposition how can they now say that the cuts are justified, and make even further cuts now that they are in Government? It is against all reason. Based on the word of Conservatives and on the documents it tabled, the provincial Governments made their promises, plans and commitments because they assumed, with all the justification in the world, that there would be no change until at least April 1, 1987.

In the very words of the present Minister of Health, he is condemned for reliving what the Liberals did in 1981-82. However, he is not alone. There were others on the Conservative benches, some who are now cabinet Ministers, who spoke out against the Liberal cut-backs. The present Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, said on March 24, 1982, that this was no time for unilateral action. He supported the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, the present Minister of Employment and Immigration, who suggested deferring a decision on the established program funding cuts for two years.

Why did the Minister who was then in Opposition say that we should defer a decision for two years? She said it because she felt it was important that the federal Government sit down with the provinces to work out an agreement. After all, as the Minister of Finance has said, that was not a matter for unilateral action but was something important.

The provinces have to pay for post-secondary education. The federal Government has to pay for post-secondary education. Others in society as well have to pay for post-secondary education. We all know it is important for our future to make sure that we have adequate funding for post-secondary education. We want the youth of Canada to have a chance to learn about computers and about humanity and to be able to deal with our ever-changing world.

The same thing can be said about medicare and hospitalization and the different programs we should be developing in this area. Again, it is the federal Government, the provinces and others in society that pay for these services. Yet for some reason the former Liberal Government and now the Conservative Government believe that the federal Government can make a unilateral statement by saying: "We are going to cut back our funding, boys and girls, and we are not going to consult with you. We are going to do it and it is up to you to pick up the pieces". That is so insane. It is politically insensitive. It is reminiscent of an arrogance which many Canadians thought they had gotten rid of on September 4, 1984.

The new Conservative Government is acting arrogantly. It lacks in any concern for the provinces and for adequate funding for medicare and post-secondary education. It is so arrogant that it can turn its back, not only on what Conservative Members said in 1981 and 1982 but on the very election promises they made in the summer of 1984. What is the use of going through the electoral process? What is the use of making promises to certain groups?

Conservative Members made promises to university students and professors indicating that, not only would they not cut back funding to post-secondary education but they would re-establish funding that had been taken away from it by the Liberals. Yet here we are in the House of Commons right now debating a Bill which will take even more funding from post-secondary education and medical services. How can Conservative Members justify that?

Let us see what else the Minister of Finance said when he attacked the Liberals for their unilateral action. Referring to the Liberal Government, he said:

> It now wants to shift the problem over to the provinces, it wants to shift the deficit problem . . . at the federal level down to the provincial level.

He condemned the Liberals then for doing exactly what he is doing today. When he finally told the House of Commons what he was up to, the Minister of Finance said that he was doing this to reduce the deficit. That is the same thing Allan MacEachen said in 1981 and 1982. At that time, the now Minister of Finance denounced that and said that there is absolutely no use in shifting the deficit from the federal Government to the provincial Government; yet he is doing the very thing today through Bill C-96.

Again, as reported in Hansard of March 23, 1982, the Minister of Finance, when he was an Hon. Member of the Opposition, said the following:

> The provinces are now moving into a deficit position, a position which will make it more difficult for them to finance this shift in spending.

At that time, the Minister of Finance was accurate. A number of the provinces did not have deficits, including the previous NDP government of Saskatchewan; a number of the provinces had very low deficits. At that time, the Minister of Finance, when he was in Opposition, said that the provinces were starting to build up deficits and if the Liberal federal Government would cut back on funding it would increase the deficits of the provinces. Indeed, that is what happened. He also said that it would be more difficult for the provinces to provide hospitalization, medicare, and post-secondary education services. Yet here we are, five years later, and provincial deficits have climbed enormously right across the country, regardless of political stripe. Because of the years of recession and high unemployment, because of the fact that money was not coming in from traditional sources and because of the cuts the Liberal Government made in the past, the provinces are now facing very high deficits. What the Minister of Finance said in 1982 while he was a member of the Opposition was true then, but it is even more true now.

Now that the provinces are in a much worse financial situation, with their credit ratings decreasing and interest rates increasing, the federal Government wants to take more money from their pockets. It wants to put a further strain on already strained provincial economies and it wants to make the provinces find the money that is being taken away from post-secondary education and medicare.

I do not want to spend all of my time repeating the words spoken by the Minister of Finance when he was in Opposition. They were fine words and fine sentiments. If he believed them then, he should believe them now. However, there is one other statement that I would like to put before the new Conservative Members who were elected in the 1984 election and do not know what Conservative Members used to say when they were in Opposition. Again, as reported in Hansard of March 23, 1982, the now Minister of Finance said:

> This is no time for confrontation and it is no time for unilateral action. This is a time when we need co-operation to nurse the tender relationship which exists between the two levels of Government.

Those were fine sentiments. It is necessary that the Conservative Government believe in those words now.

Some Government Members would say that it is only the New Democrats and Liberals, now in Opposition, who are opposed to this legislation. Some editorial writers are indicating that the federal Government is only doing what is necessary, and that because it is going to increase the number of dollars that go to the provinces each year it is looking after the needs of those who are involved in post-secondary education and those who are in need of medical services.

I have already dealt with the fact that we know that costs are increasing by more than the amount of money the federal Government will be providing. However, it is not only New Democrats and Liberals who at this particular time have decided that they do not want to see any further cutting of funding to medical services. Provincial Governments right across this country have decided that as have university professors, nurses, and doctors who recognize that Bill C-96 is wrong-headed legislation.

• (1200)

I should like to refer to a Green Paper on health care system expenditures and funding which was released by the Government of Newfoundland in January, 1986. It indicates the problems which that province, as a "have-not" province, will be facing as a result of federal cut-backs. It was made very clear in that Green Paper that the Province of Newfoundland faces difficult decisions as a result of the actions of the federal Conservative Government. As a matter of fact, they were the same actions as those of the previous Liberal Government; they are just further down the road decreasing support for medicare and post-secondary education. As a result, Newfoundland has some very horrific issues, some very unfortunate questions, and some difficult problems with which to deal.

I should like to refer to the choices as the Government of Newfoundland sees them. On page 13 of the Green Paper the following is asked:

> Is Newfoundland and Labrador the only area of the country grappling with health care financial issues?

As one would expect, the Government of Newfoundland answered that question in its own way. It indicated:

> Definitely not. All provinces in the country are experiencing significant difficulties with the financing of their health care programs, especially as they face the reduction in the rate of growth in EPF transfers by the federal Government.

EPF is another way of saying money for medical services and money for post-secondary education. As I said earlier, the blame is laid on the previous Liberal Government and, even more so, on the present Conservative Government.

What choices does that Government have in terms of dealing with the problems? According to the Green Paper, its first option would be:

> Privatization, in whole or in part, of the health care system through either private ownership, management or funding.

In other words, one way out would be to privatize medicine. Over 20 years ago the country decided that it did not want to lose that battle, that it wanted a publicly administered and publicly financed medical health system. It was decided back in the sixties, and there has been no indication that the people of Canada feel any differently now.

The second option it considered would be:

> Changes in health care expenditures beyond those recommended in the Royal Commission on Hospital and Nursing Home Costs.

In other words, another reduction in services. Its third and fourth options were deficit financing and the tax system.

When one delves into the paper, one clearly understands that the people of the Province of Newfoundland are already the highest taxed of any people in the country. Therefore, changes to the tax system to bring in more money to make up for federal cut-backs was not really an option. As far as the deficit financing option was concerned, it was not really an option because the province was already severely in debt and its debt was growing without it making up for the federal shortfall. Newfoundland saw, as its way out of a dilemma, privatization or a reduction in the level of services, the very things against which the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration fought five years ago.

Earlier this month in a rally in Winnipeg Justice Emmett Hall indicated that if we passed Bill C-96 we would ensure that the "have-not" provinces or the less developed provinces of Canada could not provide the services their people need, and that we would have a two-tier educational system and two-tier medical services across the land. That is what has been said by Justice Emmett Hall, the Conservative Government of Newfoundland, and others across the country.

Moving to another province, the Minister of Human Resources for Nova Scotia said that it would simply emasculate the post-secondary educational system, that it would be chaotic, and that regardless of whose numbers were used, the system would simply fall apart. He went on to say that they should keep their "dang hands" off the post-secondary system over which they have no jurisdiction whatsoever. Those were the comments of another Conservative provincial cabinet Minister. He added his support to the Green Paper from his neighbouring province and to the comments we have heard from the Province of Manitoba.

It is not only politicians of one political stripe, or politicians from one province, but politicians at the provincial level who recognize that we face a very serious threat or back-door challenge to universality in our medical system and a challenge to our ability to face the future with regard to the post-secondary educational system.

I see Mr. Speaker signalling that I have only a few minutes remaining. Others have spoken out against this piece of legislation. The Canadian Hospital Association indicated that the cut-backs, compounded over five years, would result in 10.4 per cent less than is expected for hospitalization services.

The Western Regional Conference Faculties Association also urged the federal Government to honour its commitment to full funding of the Established Programs Financing Act, including its annual accelerator, and requested that it propose to the provinces alterations in the structure of the transfers so that the provinces were encouraged to increase their funding as well. This is something the federal Government is unwilling to do.

Also The Canadian Medical Association fought against this piece of legislation. It urged the Government of Canada to reconsider its proposed policy and to consider a federal-provincial cost sharing policy for health care, providing reasonable and comparative services in all parts of Canada based upon the fiscal capacity of the provinces to finance those services. In a letter dated December 10, 1985, the association also warned, as has Justice Emmett Hall, that this would create a two-tier health care system, one for those living in rich provinces and another for those living in provinces with lower fiscal capacity.

If I had the time, I would refer to quotes from the Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Canadian Nurses' Association, and other groups. However, in the time remaining, I should like to give the Conservatives a chance to do what they said the Liberals should have done in 1981-82. I will give them a chance to actually negotiate the matter with the provinces. In that vein, I move:

That Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be not now read a second time but be read a second time this day six months hence.

In conclusion, when the Conservatives were in Opposition, they condemned the fact that it was unilateral action and that there had not been discussions with the provinces. Now that they are in Government, it is their chance to live up to the words which they spoke so eloquently in 1981-82.

• (1210)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I find the amendment of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) to be in order. Resuming debate on the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be useful to give a short overview of Bill C-96 that differs from what we heard Friday and this morning. Bill C-96, which amends Part VI of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1977, is actually a vital part of the economic strategy set forth by the Government in November 1984, and explained by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his economic message in 1984, as well as in the May Budget in 1985 and in the Budget brought down in February 1986.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard Members of the Liberal Opposition and Members of the New Democratic Party who of course criticized the Bill, as they criticize everything that is tabled in the House. I think it is wrong to look at Bill C-96 from that particular point of view alone and state that these are cutbacks. In this Bill we are not making cutbacks in transfers to the provinces. We are only slowing the growth of transfers made by the federal Government to the provinces. And we are doing so for a very good reason. When the previous Government was still in power, all it did was spend, spend and spend again. Now we have a national debt of over $200 billion. Quite frankly, if the Opposition were the least bit realistic, I think it would agree we cannot go on living on credit and borrowing to pay the interest. I am not talking about transfers to the provinces but strictly about paying the interest on what was spent, and let's not say how it was spent, by the previous Government.

Mr. Speaker, our strategy for economic renewal is working very well, at all levels, and Bill C-96 is part of this strategy. We said: All Canadians will have to shoulder their share of cutbacks and reductions. We have no choice. And as far as transfers to the provinces are concerned, we have planned for an increase of $1 billion per year over the next five years. At the end of those five years, we will have provided $90 billion, compared with $65 billion for transfers to the provinces during the five previous years. I think this shows there is a sensible and reasonable increase. It will be about 5 per cent per year. This increase is meant to cover inflation and also considers two vital aspects: the priority we have set on economic renewal and our formal commitment to post-secondary education and health services. I don't think anyone can deny that. What we are doing is moderating the growth of transfers to the provinces in a normal way, as good administrators. We are not just saying: We are cutting this and that, we are stopping everything. There has been a lot of careful planning.

Earlier, I heard the Opposition Member say there had been no consultation. There has been more consultation between the Prime Minister of Canada and the provincial Premiers, and between the Minister of Finance and the provincial Ministers of Finance on this subject, and on matters generally, in the last eighteen months than there was during the last five years.

Mr. Speaker, how can anyone say there was no consultation and there has been only confrontation during the last eighteen months? That is just not true!

My New Democratic Party colleague who spoke earlier quoted what was said by the Liberals and the Conservatives, and so forth. In 1980, if the NDP had supported the Conservative Party's policy instead of supporting the Liberals, maybe we would not be in the fix we are now. We would have had at least four years with less spending and the sound administration which was lacking. Mr. Speaker, I think we should refresh their memory a bit.

Now when we look at all this, and people start accusing us of cutting . . . Mr. Speaker, a cut-back means that of the so many billions of dollars which are given each year, there will be less money to go around next year. In the case under consideration there is no transfer payment cut-back in health and post-secondary education, but the rate of increase will decline.

So what did the provinces tell us? This was announced in November 1984. Since the provinces had planned ahead for 1985, they asked that it be deferred until 1986. Can you work it out so that we will not be affected by the November 1984 economic statement during our fiscal year 1984-85 and early 1986? We said yes, so this measure can be applied as of April 1, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, one has to know how the system works. The federal Government's projected expenditure increase was set at about 3 or 4 per cent. We do not intend to exceed 4 per cent. With respect to transfers payments to the provinces, our ceiling is 5 per cent, and that I would suggest attests to the effort we are making in that field to ensure a brighter future.

• (1220)

Post-secondary education is the current topic, Mr. Speaker, and that spells future. The Conservative Government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) have all agreed that it is an important and necessary requirement, and that is what we are working on. But we must also administer the country in a businesslike manner because it was on the verge of bankruptcy when we took office.

We have now reached the point where 25 per cent of public revenues are earmaked for interest payments alone. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, ours is a serious problem. We did not have anything at all to do with it, it was created by Members opposite who are now urging us to spend, and spend yet more!

The minute we talk about amendments to slow the rate of increase, we are told: Don't do that. When we table a Budget, we are told: You are not cutting enough. I wish the Liberal Party or the New Democratic Party would tell us, for once in two years, and perhaps this morning: You should reduce such or such expenditures. We are waiting for constructive suggestions. All we got from them in two years was criticism, we never heard one single positive proposition.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the role of the Opposition does not end with filibusters on any and all Government measures designed to improve the future, the kind of long-term Government policy for all Canadians in the health and educational fields. We know the health sector is experiencing hard times. Referring only to Quebec and my own riding of Trois-Rivières, problems we do have. True enough, the Government of Quebec may not be able to cope with the strong demand, but the funds are available, there has been no cut-back, and it will continue to receive ever higher payments over the coming years. Mr. speaker, here are some figures which will give you a better picture. Quebec got $3.5 billion in 1983-84, $3.8 billion in 1984-85, and $4 billion in 1985-86. This is certainly not a decrease, Mr. Speaker, and if someone claims that it is, we certainly did not go to the same accounting school.

As for our national expenditures, Mr. Speaker, we have said that they must be reduced. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has done a great job. We have had many Ministers of Finance in the last twenty years. Almost as many as twenty. In twenty years, not a single Liberal Minister of Finance said in a given year: We are going to spend so much and have a deficit of so much. This did not happen once. However, this year, the Minister of Finance has said: We are going to spend $105 billion for the year 1985-86. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, he was wrong and we spent only $104 billion. Mr. Speaker, I think that this shows that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance know what is going on, where they are going and how to govern the country effectively and profitably in the interests of all Canadians.

This might not please the Opposition, but in addition to knowing how to govern, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are keeping their election promises as regards job creation and agreements with the provinces. Mr. Speaker, I have made a small list of the consultations between the Minister of Finance and his provincial counterparts. There was one in May 1985, another in late September 1985, one in November 1985, and another in December 1985. Let no one say that there were no consultations. Let no one say that we have resumed a confrontation policy. Mr. Speaker, within about eight months, the Minister of Finance of Canada sat down four times to discuss the problems of Canada with his provincial counterparts. The former federal Ministers of Finance would find it difficult to match this record.

Generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government is allocating more money to provincial health care and post-secondary education programs than to nearly all its other budgetary items. This clearly shows the involvement and understanding of the Federal Government and the priority it gives to health care and post-secondary education programs.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the amounts being discussed this morning, the Federal Government contributes $1.5 billion for health services administered by the Department of National Health and Welfare. There was no mention of this fact this morning. There are also expenditures made by other departments, such as the Department of Labour, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and I am convinced that this has the support of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St-Julien), the Department of National Defence, and the Department of Veterans' Affairs.

In relation with post-secondary education, the Federal Government allocates $1.1 billion to provincial bilingualism programs. This was not mentioned either, Mr. Speaker. This is for bilingualism in education, university research support, counselling and granting of subsidies under the Canadian student loans program and various other programs. Mr. Speaker, this represents another $2.6 billion allocated to health care of post-secondary education. This is certainly good news, however it must not be mentioned.

I do not want to get into the complexities of the tax system, but as you know, Mr. Speaker, our taxation system also provides assistance in various forms, such as deductions, tax exemptions for medical and educational costs and exemptions for various products used in medecine.

In addition to all this, I have not yet spoken about the equalization system under which six provinces receive $5 billion more a year.

If you look at this from an economic viewpoint or in the context of the direction taken by the Conservative Government since September 4, 1984 and the economic statement of November 1984, which indicated what the Government wanted to achieve and how it would have to work to do so, it becomes obvious that we have a monstrous problem in our annual deficit and national debt.

When I look at the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) I can see that he is not happy to hear me talk about this problem, but it was caused by his Government.

An Hon. Member: His friends!

Mr. Vincent: We now have to live with it and solve this problem, Mr. Speaker. And to solve it, we must see to it that the programs we have, the monies we spend as the national Government are spent as economically and as profitably as they can. What we have done so far was to spend less money on better programs, and that will remain our course of action. And certainly the Provinces, as all other Canadian men and women, as all programs, are experiencing not cuts but a reduction in the expected increase. And again the reduction is not a huge one. The increase which the Provinces will get over the years will be greater than the one we will have as a Federal Government for our various programs.

So the Federal Government has taken into account the priorities of the Provinces. As I said, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance met earlier with provincial representatives. He identified and backed up their priorities. Of course, Mr. Speaker, when you are in Opposition your strategy is to look at the bad side of the coin rather than at the good one. But the good side of the coin is that, so far, things are going well. And so far we have struck a balance in our budget forecast and that is something new. That is the good side of the coin. Everybody—and I think Canadians are willing to accept that, including people in the constituency of Trois-Rivières—is aware that cuts are being made everywhere. They agree because they gave us a clear mandate for sound management of public monies and for reducing our national debt to a decent size, a size we can live with and which we will solve one day, rather than spending left and right as it used to be the rule.

Mr. Speaker, the contributions to be made under Bill C-96 are just and fair. The federal contribution is in line with economic and population growth. In other words, the contribution is based on the population in each Province and our economic growth—in each Province as well.

This is fair, and the Provinces are in agreement with that. The Provinces are conscious of that fact, and as far as Quebec is concerned, I think the budget that will be tabled very shortly in that Province will not be without cuts. In all the Province cuts also have to be made. It is my view that we all must live in step with the conditions that are prevailing in 1986.

This is the great change with Bill C-96, Mr. Speaker. The great change is that starting in 1986-87, growth will be reduced by 2 percentage points to make sure that things go better, that economic conditions improve across Canada. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that it is asking too much. I feel this must definitely be looked at within the context of the economic renewal that was launched in November 1984 by the minister of Finance and which has been working so well ever since, that Opposition Members flare up whenever we mention it to them.

I see your signal that my time is almost up. I would like perhaps to point out, in respect of federal-provincial relations, that there have been more agreements signed, whether it be on regional development, tourism, transportation, or communications, than there have ever been in any 18-month period before. And they say things are turning sour between the Federal Government and the Provinces. No, everything is going well. The Provinces are getting more money than they used to, and, in a sensible, profitable way.

Mr. Speaker, we are conscious of the situation. We are not reducing. We are making sure that all Canadians get a fair share of what they are entitled to under transfer payments to the Provinces, and it is my view that it is essential that the Bill should go through within the best possible time frame.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith).

Mr. Frith: I have a question, Mr. Speaker. At a meeting of the Quebec Conservative caucus held in Sherbrooke on June 26, 1984, the Progressive Conservative Party promised to assume the federal obligation to finance provincial health care under the established program financing scheme and to provide additional funds to the provinces on a cost sharing basis.

• (1230)

[English]

Why did the Conservatives break that election promise made in summer of 1984?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the Government has not broken that promise. I am entitled to 20 minutes, Mr. Speaker. For the past 20 minutes, I have been trying to tell them that the Government has increased . . . There will be an increase of one billion dollar per year over the next five years. This is certainly not a reduction. It's one billion dollar more per year.

Over the past five years, Mr. Speaker, $65 billion have been paid to the provinces. Over the next five years, $90 billion will be paid to them; 90 minus 65 is 25. Therefore, there will be an increase of $25 billion. We have not broken any promise there. In addition to keeping and fulfilling our promises, we have done more over the past 18 months regarding our election promises than the former Government did in four years with the promises it made in 1980. In 1980, they had promised not to increase the price of oil, hardly two months elapsed when the price of oil skyrocketted. When we make promises, Mr. Speaker, we keep them. We could not keep all our promises the very same day for a very valid reason. When we took over power on September 4, we found a mess. It was—I will not say the word because it may not be considered parliamentary—nevertheless, I will say that we had a big clean up to do, even bigger than we had expected. And that, Mr. Speaker, is something even the Liberal Premier of Ontario had to acknowledge.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are going to keep our other promises as well, but we had to do a lot of cleaning and there is more to be done.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just spoke indicated he found that Members of the Opposition always look on the black side of things and their comments are either negative or not quite correct. I found that quite interesting. In my own speech, which preceded the Hon. Member's remarks, I quoted from three Members of the Conservative Party when in opposition, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I hope the Hon. Member will apologize to his Cabinet colleagues for the insult he has reflected upon them.

I am certainly willing to defend the words of the Minister of Finance when he was being honest with the people of Canada in 1981-82. He said there should not be unilateral action or cut-backs at that time. I wonder if the Hon. Member would explain how the Conservatives in 1981-82 could speak against unilateral action, could say that the cut-backs would be hard on the provinces and that it would transfer the deficit from the federal Government to the provinces—the Hon. Member is being informed of what the answer should be—and then the Hon. Member say what he did?

Mr. Frith: Because they are hypocrites.

Mr. Murphy: I will continue to speak for a few moments, Mr. Speaker, to give the Hon. Member a chance to be briefed on his answer.

I wonder why the present Minister of Finance said in 1982 that there should not be unilateral action and that the deficit would be transferred from the federal Government to the provinces? Further to that, does the Hon. Member believe the Conservative campaign promise on page 98 of the PC campaign handbook which states with regard to established program financing for post-secondary education: "We would return to the 1977 funding formula"? That is from the Conservative handbook.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The handbook is now in the Smithsonian Institute.

Mr. Murphy: Why did Conservative Members of the Opposition make that promise when this legislation is going in exactly the opposite direction? Why did the Minister of Finance in 1982 say that we should not transfer the deficit to the provinces when now, even worse than the Liberals, he is transferring more of the deficit to the provinces?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: I thank the Hon. Member for his question, Mr. Speaker, for it will give me the opportunity to repeat for the fourth time what I said this morning.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, to those who have said that there were no consultations and that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has acted unilaterally, let me say that I indicated a while ago the dates on which the federal Minister of Finance and his provincial counterparts met and came to an understanding.

It is a fact that provincial Ministers of Finance want as much as they can get. That is quite normal. However, the provinces are aware of the mess we have inherited from the former Government and they realize that they must work together with us to build a better country, a better Canada.

A province or the federal Government alone cannot by itself improve the situation in our country. Everybody must work together. That is exactly what we have been trying to do since September 4 with a good measure of success. Unfortunately for the Opposition, it is working.

Mr. Speaker, the other question of my hon. colleague concerned a reduction in transfer payments. Again, Mr. Speaker, the transfer payments to the provinces are not decreasing but increasing by as much as 5 per cent, while our own expenses are increasing by as much as 3.5 or 4 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we are proving once again that harmony works and that the economy is working.

Mr. McCurdy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two questions. The Minister is prepared to cut spending in two very important areas. He is prepared to risk major cut-backs in medicare and post-secondary education. Rather than rush into this on a unilateral basis and force spending cuts and service cuts on the province, would the Minister or the Government consider entering into two or three national conferences on health and post-secondary education so they can set out the objectives at the various levels of government in these two important areas before he cuts spending, and before he causes closures of hospitals and post-secondary education? That is the first question. As my second, to see if we cannot put into perspective what the Hon. Member has said, I would simply ask him this. Supposing he had a contract for a 10 per cent salary increase for the next five years each year and the boss turned around and said you are only going to get 5 per cent, would you not regard that as a cut?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: First of all, Mr. Speaker, as far as a national conference is concerned, I suggest that would be the responsability of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard). One only has to watch them operate to realize that these two Ministers are doing a great job.

I will convey to them this suggestion and they will do what they have to do at that level.

Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. McCurdy: Actually it was the Minister of Finance's (Mr. Wilson) suggestion.

Mr. Vincent: It was not the Finance Minister, it was those two Ministers.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if I get a salary with an expected increase of 10 per cent per year over the next five years and if I am advised two years before the end of the five-year period that the increase will be 5 per cent, that's not a cut, that's a reduction in my rate of increase. That's quite different.

Mr. Speaker, we may have a little difficulty understanding . . .

[English]

Mr. McCurdy: It is not a cut; it is a decrease?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order! Order, please. I must regretfully advise the House that the time allocated for questions and comments is over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has the floor.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that I intend to support my hon. colleague's motion to postpone consideration of the Bill for six months, because I agree this legislation requires further analysis before letting it come to a vote in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, the main reason is, unlike what was said by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) in his speech and what was said by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Scott) in his speech on April 25, the main reason is that there has not been what I would call consultation. And I would refer Hon. Members to what was said by most participants at recent federal-provincial conferences. If having consultations means being informed and being told: take it or leave it, Mr. Speaker, I don't think I would call that consultation. However, if I may refer to what was said by most provincial representatives from provinces of every political stripe, whether they were Liberal, Conservative or New Democrats, it is easy to conclude that the statements made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance and by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State do not stand up.

[English]

The Premier of Ontario, after Bill C-96 had been tabled, and also in the context of the federal and provincial conference, David Peterson, said the following:

> This reduction in the funds provided the province will translate into a reduction in services. "There will be fewer hospital beds", warned the Ontario Premier, David Peterson—

Mr. Robert Nixon, the Ontario Treasurer said the following:

> There was uniform opposition to Ottawa's plan.

Mr. Gérard D Lévesque, the Minister of Finance in Quebec said the following:

> It is unfair to the provinces, because they have been counting on the amounts agreed to in the accords.

Mr. Richard Hatfield, Premier of New Brunswick said the following:

> I will have no choice but to increase user fees for health services.

The Minister of Finance for New Brunswick said the following:

It is unreasonable for the federal Government to think that provinces which have taken difficult measures to deal with their own financial situation can also be expected to absorb part of the problem at the federal level.

This was a Conservative Member in the Legislative Assembly in New Brunswick. The Minister of Finance of Nova Scotia said the same thing:

Every province in there made it clear that there's probably nothing more important to deliver to Canadians than health and education.

[Translation]

And I could quote some people from Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker, all this is a clear indication that the problem today is not just the deficit, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would have us believe and as the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) tried to explain. The crux of the probem is the financing of these services. And that is why the motion presented by the Member for the New Democratic Party, a motion I would have presented myself if he had not already done so, this motion would give the federal Government a chance to conduct genuine discussions. These discussions must not be uniltateral and must deal with the issues.

The question we must ask ourselves is: Are Canada's post-secondary education services too big? Are we offering Canadian youth too many opportunities for getting a higher education?

Another question we should ask is: Are our hospitals and health services too big for this country? Do we have too many hospital beds? Do we have too many medical services? Are we, in point of fact, offering Canadians too many services? Should we cut back? That is what we should be talking about. And if the answer to these questions is no, as I believe it is, if we listen to the First Ministers, the Ministers of Finance and the Health Ministers of the various provinces, and even the Minister of National Health and Welfare of Canada (Mr. Epp), we realize that these services are not exaggerated and that on the contrary, most of the provinces, in the difficult economic situation this country has known since 1982 and 1983, and especially in those years, made substantial efforts to try and cut costs.

Even the Quebec Government had special legislation passed to lower salaries paid to hospital and education personnel. Is that not a tremendous effort that is done to cope with certain financial difficulties? And on top of all that, the Federal Government is having part of the deficit transferred to the Provinces. But this is not the angle from which this should be considered in my view. Rather, we must ask whether or not our post-secondary services, university research, hospital care, medical care have grown beyond reason. And if the answer is no in those areas, the problem at hand is how to finance such services. It is not to be done as the Minister of Finance is proposing, by cutting off at his own discretion and without consultation, $2 billion in 1990-91. Much more than that is involved.

If we add up what Bill C-96 will represent at the end of year 1992, that is from the day it applies until the end, an $8 billion cut will be made from provincial budgets for post-secondary education and health care. Yes, $8 billion. What does that mean? For Ontario, $3 billion. For Quebec, $2 billion. For British Columbia, $930 million. For a Province like Newfoundland, $187 million.

Mr. Speaker, is it possible to think that those Provinces will be in a position to provide those services with that kind of cuts? I suggest to the Minister of Finance he should use . . . The Hon. Member says we never make suggestions. I think the Minister of Finance should use the 6-month period that is proposed in the motion to resume those discussions. All the more so since he himself promised in his economic statement of November 1984 not to tamper with the transfer payments to Provinces in the 1986-87 budget. One more broken promise by this Tory Government. That was a commitment. And when we look at his own published figures for transfer payment cuts in 1986-87, the figure reads zero. And now, instead of that zero, the figure that would be shown for cuts would be above $300 million. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he try during that period to come to an agreement with the Provinces on financing established programs. However, the Minister of Finance will tell the Provinces whether the post-secondary educational services are too extensive. He will explain it to the Provinces and to Canadians. He will explain to the people in the waiting rooms of our emergency wards that our hospital services are extravagant. He will explain to the citizens of Ontario that extra-billing for health care should be avoided because that Government has already made that commitment. He will explain that and state at the same time that he is cutting off $2 billion a year when in fact, for the arrangements under consideration, it is $8 billion.

Mr. Speaker, I think that there lies the fundamental problem. I will say to the Minister of Finance that in the education and health areas, there are some basic requirements. And when one compares health costs on the basis of our Gross National Product with those in the United States where health services are not nationalized, our percentage of costs on the basis of the Gross National Product is lower than theirs. This would mean that our system is comparatively efficient. Hospitalization as well as health care and post-secondary education are available to the rich and to the poor. If it is true, as evidenced by figures, that our health costs on the basis of our Gross National Product are lower in Canada than in the United States, our problem now is to know how those essential services are to be financed.

If the Minister of Finance has something to suggest, if he now agrees with user fees, even though he and his Party objected to them previously, if he is now against the act of Parliament which prevents the provinces from imposing user fees to their residents on penalty of having their transfer payments reduced, if he is against this law, let him rise and say so and explain his position at a federal-provincial conference. Let him say to the provincial Ministers: You want too much, and, from now on, you will have to ask university students to pay at least one-third or two-thirds of their tuition fees. Let him explain that to the Canadian people. Let him say exactly what he wants, but for the moment, all he is doing is taking away $8 billion and letting the provinces make up the difference.

When he sat in Opposition, what did the Minister have to say about the fiscal arrangements, and especially about the aboliton of the complex fiscal guarantee formula developed at the time of the tax reform by a Goverment which he was criticizing? This is what he said, and I am quoting from page 15758 of Hansard for March 23, 1982. I shall read the English version.

• (1250)

[English]

The only sign it shows of cutting spending is by shifting the burden of the established programs funding on to the provincial governments. The provinces are now moving into a deficit position, a position which will make it more difficult for them to finance this shift in spending. This is true particularly in Ontario and the eastern provinces which do not have the substantial energy revenues of most of the western provinces. That is not co-operative federalism. That is predatory federalism, and it will not and cannot work in this country.

I agree with that completely. However, one cannot build a country or build a dream for this country with a pair of scissors in one's hand. Is that the type of country the Minister wants to build? Is that the type of services he wants to give to the country?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You will never understand, Raymond.

Mr. Garneau: I will never understand. I understand what they are getting at very well. You want to shift the burden of your deficit on to the provincial government.

Some Hon. Members: Your deficit.

Mr. Garneau: I fought against that when I was Minister of Finance in the Province of Quebec and I will continue to fight against that.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Why not speak to the people in your Party?

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Minister of Finance will take the opportunity to speak later on. The programs being discussed now were established in the late sixties and, especially as concerns post-secondary education, they were brought in gradually. Since these programs come under provincial jurisdiction, after a trial period and after the system was running properly, in 1977, after lengthy consultations between the federal and provincial Governments, we developed a financing formula which effectively confirmed provincial jurisdiction in these areas.

This is why, in addition to fiscal transfers, there was what was called block funding, or unconditional transfers, and the best way that we found to determine the rate of growth of these transfers was to use the growth rate of the Gross National Product. This is what we did in 1977 and the system has worked well. I am not saying that every action taken by the Liberal Government should be defended at all costs, but this system has worked well. Now, it is being put aside by people who are saying: "From now on, the standard will no longer be the Gross National Product, it will be the GNP minus 2 per cent". Big deal!

What is the basis for a formula where transfers to such important sectors as post-secondary education and health care have to be restricted to a rate of growth lower than the Gross National Product? What evidence was there to decide that the growth rate would be the GNP minus 2 per cent?

Quite simply the federal Government has decided to wash its hands off the whole thing, pass its deficit along to the Finance Ministers and they in turn will have to tell their colleagues responsible for health and education: Well, you will have to come up with a sizeable increase in university fees, perhaps impose some in junior colleges, including CEGEPs in Quebec. In the health sector, will they now collect user fees from patients in hospital rooms? Are they going to slash hospital emergency services which are already overburdened? Will the fiat of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) mean that the people will have to get ready for mandatory user fees in legislation?

Mr. Speaker, the way the federal Government is acting—the Minister of Finance was right and again I quote him: This is no longer co-operative federalism, but predatory federalism under which the central Government robs the provinces of their full jurisdiction in such sectors as health and post-secondary education.

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, a province like Prince Edward Island which cannot afford to lose those millions and yet will have to finance health and post-secondary education services with $40 million less between now and 1991-92? And what about a province like New Brunswick which stands to lose $228 million?

Mr. Speaker, the provinces cannot reasonably be told: We are taking those funds from you, but continue to provide the same quality of service.

That is why I urge the House to adopt this motion so that we may honour the commitments contained in the documents published by the Minister of Finance in November 1984 to the effect that there would be no reduction in transfer payments for 1986-87. Thus we will have at least a year, but if that is too much the motion provides for six months and that time will be available to the Minister of Finance to sit down with his provincial counterparts and decide how they will go about reducing health and post-secondary education services to comply with Bill C-96.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about other issues related to this Bill.

We should obviously limit our comments to the motion calling for the review of this Bill six months hence, but when we consider the needs which exist now among Canadians for health care and post-secondary education, when we realize just how necessary research is today, how important university teaching and research are, I just cannot see how the Government can foresee any long term growth for Canada if it does not provide young Canadians with the funding that is required to offer them this kind of education services.

Mr. Speaker, as far as health services are concerned, it's a fact that in all provinces—it's true for Quebec, Ontario and all the other provinces—there is not an excess but rather a shortage of hospital beds. The Ontario Premier has even informed the people in his province that because of the federal Government's decision, they will have to cut 75,000 beds. Mr. Speaker, I say that there is more involved here than the need to reduce the deficit. That is an in-depth analysis of the services which I deem essential, the financing of which we should review at this time on a more permanent basis, together with a more constant federal commitment. Because, when the provinces accepted the change from the previous system to the new one that was incorporated in the 1977 legislation, they had taken for granted that the federal Government would assume its responsibility for a long enough period of time to allow them to plan accordingly. This Bill, like a bull in a china shop, completely disrupts the planning of the provinces and forces them to assume the costs all by themselves or else to reduce in an injustified fashion the quality of the service they are offering to the Canadian people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments until 1.06 p.m. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) has the floor.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides whether the arithmetic he used when he was the president of a bank was the same as the arithmetic he is using here. In the House, the Hon. Member showed that he juggles his figures the same way he did in the Quebec National Assembly when he was Minister of Finance. Of course that is because of the deficits he piled up in Quebec, and now he would like to continue along those lines and follow the example of his predecessors.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides whether he remembers learning addition and subtraction in the second and third grade. Mr. Speaker, when we are talking about an increase of $25 billion between 1986-86 and 1990-91—maybe he doesn't know what a billion is but $25 billion is 2,500 million—is that more or is that less? Is the Canadian Government going to give more or is it going to give less to the provinces? What the Minister of Finance has suggested is a moderated increase. Between 1985 and 1990, is that more or is that less, Mr. Speaker? Thank goodness the Hon. Member is not a member of Cabinet, because we would never get around to reducing the deficit and this country's debt. Things would go on exactly the same way they did under the Hon. Member's predecessors and when he was in Quebec.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I could get into a discussion with the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, but it is obvious that he wears blinders and can only see the deficit. What I can tell him is that the formula prescribed in the 1977 Act and amended by Bill C-96 provided that provincial transfers for post-secondary education and health care programs would increase at the same rate as the Gross National Product. This is what the provincial governments used to plan ahead and develop their five-year plans. There is one thing that we must not forget, and that is that, as far as health care is concerned, and I imagine that it is still the case, when I was at the Quebec Provincial Assembly which I left a number of years ago, there were five-year plans for the development of hospital care, of senior citizens' homes, and everything else in the social field. Today, after certain decisions have been made . . . Let us take for instance, the most recent decisions of the provincial government as concerns emergency services, which are overcrowded in most Quebec hospitals, and it is probably the case elsewhere. The provincial government made its decision in the belief that the Fiscal Arrangements Act would remain unchanged, and at the time, the Act provided for transfers based on the rate of growth of the Gross National Product. Now, the provinces have been told that it will be based on the GNP minus two. If that is not a cutback, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It being 1:06 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 o'clock this day.

At 1:06 p.m. the House took recess.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—NEWSPAPER REPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, a report in The Toronto Star on Friday suggests that Cabinet may soon be announcing a government response to the issue of Japanese-Canadian redress. I have had an opportunity of discussing this proposal with the President of the National Association of Japanese Canadians. It is absurd and surprising to find that the association has no idea of this imminent proposal. Again it is on the outside looking in.

I find it simply absurd, because here is a Government which said it would actually consult and negotiate with this particular association in order to formalize an agreement. To a certain degree, but on a different level, history is again repeating itself in that we have a Government which is basically saying to this community: "Don't worry. We know what is good for you". The Government has to understand that process is almost as important as substance. This community needs to be consulted. It needs to be negotiated with—

DAY OF MOURNING FOR WORKERS KILLED AND INJURED IN WORKPLACE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, today, April 28, is observed by the union movement as a day of mourning in remembrance of the thousands of workers killed and the millions of workers injured on the job. Today marks the seventy-second anniversary of the passage of the first workers' compensation legislation in Canada. This day is being observed as the national convention of the Canadian Labour Congress opens in Toronto. However, the Government has not seen fit to designate it as a national day of mourning.

Progress has been made in the field of health and safety in past years. However, we cannot become complacent—there is still a long way to go to provide protection for Canadian workers. Deaths from industrial injuries are still running around 1,000 a year, and every year there are approximately one million workers injured. This represents an injury every six seconds, and a death every two hours of the working day.

Injuries in the Canadian forestry industry have been extremely high this year. Industrial accidents and mining accidents are occurring too frequently. In British Columbia fishermen are seeking the right to receive compensation from the Workers' Compensation Board.

Injury is not confined to those in the industrial sector. Contrary to popular belief—

UNITED STATES SALES OF SURPLUS WHEAT—EFFECT ON CANADIAN FARMERS

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from a fact-finding trip to Washington where the U.S. Farm Bill, freer trade, et cetera, were discussed. All the people we talked to, who included the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture, the Hon. Richard E. Lyng, politicians, farm groups, bankers, and others agreed on two points. The first is that there is a surplus of agricultural products in the world and the United States is going to get rid of its surplus by selling cheap and by taking land out of production. The second point is that this move will affect Canadian agriculture from coast to coast.

Our Government must meet this challenge to our very important agriculture economy. I ask that an agriculture emergency committee be formed by knowledgeable individuals, including MPs, to deal with interest rates, fuel costs, fertilizer costs, and all input costs as a result of Government policies, as well as land use.

We cannot have freer trade if our farmers cannot—

PORNOGRAPHY

BATTLE AGAINST PORNOGRAPHY—WORK OF PROJECT "P" GROUP

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to advise all Canadians about the vital battle against pornography which is being fought by members of Project "P". Project "P" is a small, four-person joint forces project staffed by Sergeant Wendy Leaver and Constable John Matthews of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force, and Detective Sergeant Ted Bean and Constable Cy Wood of the Ontario Provincial Police. Project "P" was started in 1975 and is the only unit of its kind in Canada to combat violent hard-core pornography.

• (1405)

I held a policy forum in my riding of Don Valley East just last Saturday. Sergeant Wendy Leaver was present to show examples of the shocking hard-core violent pornography which is all too readily available in Canada in the form of magazines and video tapes. We urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to bring in tough legislation to deal effectively with this problem which is eroding the quality of life here in this great country of Canada.

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF STATION IN CARTWRIGHT, LABRADOR

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the promise the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made during the last election was jobs, jobs, jobs. Yet all across the country the Government has cut back on government services, thereby eliminating jobs. This has been particularly disastrous in remote communities.

In the community of Cartwright on the coast of Labrador the Government is closing the Coast Guard station, and this means that eight families will have to move out of that community. Eight are only a few but represent one-eighth of the employment in that particular community where, during the winter, the unemployment rate can be as high as 80 per cent.

The Government cannot have it both ways. It cannot be for jobs and then cut back on government services, particularly in remote areas. I call on the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to delay any move of the Coast Guard out of Cartwright until he can assure the people of that community that there will be no negative impact on the community.

VOLUNTEERS' WEEK

TRIBUTE TO VOLONTARY WORKERS

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, last week was "Volunteers Week".

I should like to pay tribute to all those men and women who give their time for the welfare of the community. In a world which is much too often egotistic, where too many people are thinking of only themselves, this "Volunteers' Week" serves to remind us that there is more on earth than the "self" of each and everyone of us.

We are lucky to live in Canada, for Canadian men and women rank among the greatest voluntary workers in the world.

Let's have a look around us, Mr. Speaker. Volunteers are everywhere involved in medical and humanitarian services, arts and culture, sports, leisure, and many other areas of activities.

Tens of thousands of our fellow Canadians are contributing to the progress and welfare of our society through their volunteer action.

To all these people, we say thank you.

MULTICULTURALISM

GOVERNMENT INITIATIVE—ADVICE FOR MINISTER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek) has launched a new initiative entitled "Multiculturalism Means Business". He is hopeful that drawing on Canada's ethnocultural diversity will enhance Canada's trade efforts.

The Minister clearly does not appreciate the existing importance of ethnocultural business activity. He thinks that the ethnic minorities need to be brought out of their isolation if they are to enrich Canada. These attitudes reflect the Minister's own distance from Canada's ethnocultural diversity. They reflect his failure to appreciate how this diversity is already expressed in businesses of many sorts.

These businesses, most of them small, can certainly use more capital. The Minister should join with his colleague in finding ways to provide the resources they need. The Government could do much more for them other than emphasizing how the talents of our cultural and racial groups can serve big business. The ethnocultural businesses also need strong markets, and the Minister can assist in the growth of their communities. Employment equity, which would increase incomes in these communities, is only one of the areas in which the Government makes a good pitch but fails to deliver the goods.

COMMUNICATIONS

CANCELLATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MESSAGE SERVICE BY BELL CANADA

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer appreciation as well as to express a serious concern. Bell Canada showed responsibility as a good corporate citizen when it blocked access to five 900 numbers which offered taped messages of graphic descriptions of sexual fantasies.

Presently the CRTC is considering whether or not it will permit 900 service on a permanent basis. Although most 900 services are legitimate, the CRTC must block the reintroduction of these sex lines.

I am concerned with the increase in offensive advertising for escort services in the Yellow Pages, particularly in the Toronto area. According to a recent report, the Metro Toronto Police estimate that 98 per cent of the escort services are a front for prostitution. Under the guise of legitimate businesses they even accept major credit cards.

I call upon the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to tighten the Criminal Code, thus preventing such offensive advertising in the Yellow Pages.

• (1410)

Tele-Direct, the company which produces the Toronto directory Yellow Pages, should take a lesson from Bell Canada. Let us not let prostitutes go walking through the Yellow Pages.

GOVERNMENT'S OBJECTIVES

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer the House to the remarks made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at the Canadian Press annual dinner in Toronto, and I quote:

> Our goals are not limited to the Canadian economy. We wish to cure the ills and ease the pains and sufferings which affect so many people in our own country and abroad.
> We want to feed a world that is starving and undertake to eliminate poverty, oppression and racism everywhere on this planet.
> We want to see a united world to start exploring and developing space. We want the arms race to end and a lasting peace to begin.
> We are launching a national offensive to help prepare our country to enter the new world of the 21st century. We are going to take up this challenge, because our children and our country deserve nothing less.

Those are words which deserve to be broadcasted everywhere throughout Canada.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

TREATMENT OF SIKH RECRUITS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, Canadians of the Sikh religion are concerned about reports that the Armed Forces have not observed the terms of the 1979 agreement with the Canadian Human Rights Commission, according to which Sikhs who join the forces will be allowed to maintain their religious practices.

According to our policy of multiculturalism, all Canadians have a right to participate fully in the life of our country, and this includes the right to defend our country as a member of the Armed Forces. We have a charter which prohibits discrimination on the basis of religion. As a society, we are committed to equality of opportunity for all.

In the interests of upholding existing policy and sending a positive signal to ethnocultural communities in Canada, I hope officials of the Department of National Defence will indicate clearly by word and deed their intention to abide by the terms of the 1979 agreement, and make it possible for Sikh recruits to maintain their religious practices in all aspects of military life.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. TARIFF THREAT TO LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, Canada—U.S. trade means jobs. An enhanced trade agreement with our largest trading partner will mean security for Canadian jobs. The decision of the U.S. Senate Finance Committee to pursue fast track negotiations with Canada is a giant leap toward enhanced trade.

The recommendation of the U.S. International Trade Commission for a 35 per cent tariff on Canadian red cedar shakes and shingles is a threat to jobs in British Columbia, in particular to Mission—Port Moody, the heart of Canada's shake and single industry. While trade negotiations will not in the meantime preclude traditional action against Canadian exports, they will lessen the threat. We are speaking of the lifeblood of the British Columbia economy.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CRITICISM OF LIBERAL PARTY POLICIES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) has been quoted as saying that he challenges the whole idea of universal programs. This is not the first time we have seen a flip-flop among Liberal Members. We do not know where the Liberal caucus stands on Cruise testing in Canada. We do not know where the Liberal caucus stands on free trade.

There are many areas in which the question is not where the Liberals are going; it is which way are they turning. The Liberals must answer that question.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—HISTORIC OPPORTUNITY

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, congratulations to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are in order. Freer trade with our neighbours south of the border will be of great benefit to all Canadians, especially those in my home Province of Alberta. Last year alone a full 85 per cent of Alberta's exports went to the United States. In Alberta, as in the rest of Canada, the establishment of freer trade will enhance economic growth, increase employment, make our industries more competitive on the world market, and help secure access to U.S. markets.

Indeed this is an historic opportunity. Future generations of Canadians may look upon our actions today as the point at which the Government took hold of our national destiny. Canada will not accept a deal which is not good for all Canadians.

I applaud the successful efforts of the Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues to secure ongoing negotiations between Canada and the United States without having to concede demands for preconditions.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

WORLD-WIDE TESTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the latest count on nuclear tests held so far shows that India has held one; China, 29; the U.K., 38; France, 129; the Soviet Union, 556; and the United States, 759, for a total of 1,512.

The silence of Canada's Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on the most recent French and American nuclear tests is deafening. Have we lost interest in banning nuclear tests? If not, why are we silent? Is it because of the trade negotiations with the U.S., or would it be that since the 1984 election policy on nuclear testing is no longer made in Ottawa? How can Canada's Secretary of State for External Affairs remain silent in view of the last three underground nuclear tests?

We pride ourselves on being an active member of the global community. Therefore the Government of Canada must speak up on nuclear testing and reflect the sentiments of concerned Canadians.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. PRESIDENT'S LETTER TO U.S. SENATOR

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. There has just been released in Washington a letter from Ronald Reagan to Senator Packwood dated April 24 which reads, in part:

> During Prime Minister Mulroney's recent visit to this country, he and I agreed that we would attempt to initiate comprehensive bilateral trade negotiations between our two nations on a "clean launch" basis. We believe it is in the best interest of all of us to have everything on the table when the negotiations begin, and to start without preconditions on either side.

Is that the Government's position? Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with President Reagan on this? Is Reagan speaking for both himself and the Prime Minister? I would like the Deputy Prime Minister to come clean with Canadians because, if that is the case, and President Reagan said it is, it is quite a change from what they have been saying on some areas like the Auto Pact, agricultural marketing, and a whole number of other areas.?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the views of the Government and its position have been made known repeatedly week after week after week on this matter, by the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister for International Trade. I do not know where the Hon. Member is having his problem, but that question, Sir, has been answered repeatedly.

CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR'S STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): I take it, Mr. Speaker, that it is correct, that Ambassador Reisman was speaking for the Government when, on Thursday, April 23, he told CTV News:

> Both sides would be willing to talk about all those things that the other side wished to talk about. In other words, everything on the table.

It is now a fact that everything is on the table. That must be the case from what the Deputy Prime Minister said and from what Ambassador Reisman said last week.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the House Leader of the Opposition would like to put a question, I would be very pleased to try to deal with it.

REASONS FOR NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, President Reagan in his letter to Senator Packwood said:

> We continue to retain full access to multilaterally sanctioned United States trade remedies.

My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What is the point of having a general trade agreement with the United States if the result of it will be that the United States will still be able to impose countervailing duties on our exports in areas such as lumber, and fish, and even specialty steel? The United States says no preconditions for us, but the Americans have preconditions. How is this equal for Canadians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not for the first time the Liberal Party is misinterpreting the letter of the President. That letter stands on its own. It is understandable by any intelligent Canadian. The Hon. Member is raising a set of fears that are groundless.

COUNTERVAIL DUTIES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. One of the strongest weapons the U. S. has been using to restrict entry of foreign goods onto its market has been countervail duties. The Americans have been using them on Israel, a country that has a free trade agreement with the United States. Will the Government assure us that any free trade agreement entered into with the U. S. will contain clauses explicitly banning the use of countervail duties against Canadian goods?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, countervail is very much at the heart of these negotiations. That is one of the reasons why we are seeking to enter into negotiations with the United States. I thought that was well understood.

[Translation]

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES—CONTERVAILING DUTIES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Government cannot refuse to shed light on its position on the use of countervailing duties by the United States.

Again I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs: Is the position of the Canadian Government such as to let the United states levy countervailing duties in retaliation under a free trade agreement with our country? It is a basic question to which we must have an answer.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, questions related to countervailing action are an essential aspect of the negotiations. It is a negotiable question. It was made clear from the outset and the situation has not changed.

• (1420)

UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, that is the basic point. To let the U.S. continue threats of countervailing duties while the talks are going on is like permitting war to continue while you are discussing a cease-fire.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: Let me put the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Question, please.

Mr. Langdon: They may not like the fact but it is real. Is the Minister aware of the letter President Reagan sent to the Senators whose support he got last week in which he made a commitment to countervailing action? Is the Minister prepared to say to the President what he has just said to the House, that countervailing action is at the heart of negotiations and should not be used while the talks are taking place?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the letter. From what the Hon. Member has said I do not think he could have read it. Regarding the other part of his question, let me paraphrase that well-known American philosopher and tell the Hon. Member that a negotiation "ain't over 'til it's over".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, a war is not over until it's over either.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: That is what you are not discussing. This is not a clean launch; it is a scorched-earth launch the Government has taken us into.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT LODGE PROTEST

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, given that these threats will continue, will the Government protest to President Reagan and attempt to get a clear commitment from him that threats of countervailing action will not be made against our producers during the long period of negotiations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if we could stop the threat of countervailing action before the negotiations, there would be no need for negotiations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I do not know what kind of dream world the Hon. Member and the NDP inhabit. In the real world we are faced with some very serious threats, including countervailing action, from the U.S. We intend to seek trade arrangements which will provide Canadians guarantees against some of those threats. That is what a negotiation is about.

The NDP, for ideological reasons, have been against progress to secure Canadian jobs from the outset. If they want to take that position, that is fine. However, they should not dwell in this cloud-cuckoo-land which has characterized their thinking.

Mr. Langdon: What has happened is that the Government has attempted to obscure this whole question throughout.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is as follows: Will the Government now admit that it is not a flawless beginning, but a beginning fraught with mistakes?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are—and I apologize for the quality of my French from High River—but we are engaged in negotiations without preconditions so as to achieve concrete benefits for Canadians.

[English]

UNITED STATES-ISRAEL AGREEMENT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it not true that the only free trade agreement ever entered into between the U.S. and another sovereign country is the one with the State of Israel? In that agreement the United States refused to give up the right to impose countervail. Why should Canadians expect the U.S. Government to treat Canada any differently?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there has been an agreement established between the United States and Israel. We are seeking the conclusion of a different kind of agreement between Canada and the United States. If what is brought forward at the end of the negotiations is not in the best interests of Canada then, of course, this Government will not accept it. We believe we have a duty, given the threat to Canadian jobs, and Canadian security, to enter into negotiations that can provide a more secure future for Canadians, and that is what we are doing.

COUNTERVAIL DUTIES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree that any trading agreement reached between Canada and the United States that does not exclude countervail will be unacceptable to the Canadian Parliament and to the Canadian people?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have said on several occasions that the question of countervail is at the heart of the negotiations. It is one of the reasons we are interested in dealing with the United States. That has been clear from the beginning of these discussions.

CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Tens of thousands of jobs are at stake in British Columbia if the lumber industry is not allowed to continue at its present level, and yet in the U.S. its trade representative said that this matter will be solved within weeks. Could the Minister give this House his assurance that there will be no lumber talks in advance of the free trade negotiations and Canada will not, in fact, sell out British Columbia and the lumber industry in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not very long ago in this House we were being asked for assurances that the discussions about lumber would not be part of the negotiations with the United States. Now we are being asked that discussions about lumber not be part of anything at all. The NDP has got to come out of cloud-cuckoo-land and deal with the reality of the modern world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. With tens of thousands of jobs at stake, this is no laughing matter. I wish the Minister would get to the point and give this House the assurance that these free trade negotiations with the United States will not be separate from the discussion on the lumber issue? Will he give this House the assurance that the Government does not intend to sell out Canadian lumber in advance of the free trade talks in order to facilitate them?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this Government does not intend to sell out Canadian lumber at any time.

TERRORISM

SPEAKERS AT CONFERENCE—RCMP INVESTIGATIONS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Over the weekend I participated in a conference on terrorism at the military college. That is not the source of this bandage.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Perhaps the House could show some sympathy to the Member and let him put his question.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, some statements were made by speakers at that conference with which the Solicitor General has publicly disagreed, about the level of threat in Canada. This morning the Solicitor General announced publicly that he is sending in the Mounties or CSIS to interrogate the speakers with whom he disagrees. I want to ask him if he does not recognize this as a form of intimidation that can discourage free discussion of security matters.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to welcome the hon. gentleman back safely. As the Hon. Member indicated with his preliminary remarks when he said he spoke at the conference, the quality of participation varied over the course of the weekend. Unfortunately, over the course of that time there were comments made which received a good deal of attention. I think the hon. gentleman would feel that I was negligent if I did not pursue such claims as Expo 86 being targeted by terrorists, large numbers of the Baader Meinhof gang being in Canada, or there being massive amounts of direct action in Canada. Obviously, if the Government did not attempt to confirm or deny such claims to ensure that the sources from which they were made were valid, the hon. gentleman would accuse me of being negligent in discharging my responsibilities.

• (1430)

MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is one thing to check statements that are made at conferences but to announce publicly, as the Minister did, that the Mounties and the security service are going to interrogate the speakers with whom he disagreed, is quite another. Will the Minister agree that that is a wrong approach and that it does not serve public debate in Canada to announce that people will be interrogated for expressing views?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could say that I expected better of the hon. gentleman with regard to the sort of question he just put. Unfortunately, I cannot do so on the basis of experience.

The hon. gentleman should know that I did not say to the press that I would be sending in the police to interrogate people with whom I disagreed. Otherwise, they would have been around to see him by now.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Tobin: Pompous toddler of the Cabinet.

Mr. Gauthier: Throw the bum out for this nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

AGRICULTURE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—ATTITUDE OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In last week's meetings with the United States Department of Agriculture officials to discuss the effects of the Farm Bill, 12 Members of Parliament from Ottawa were present to hear what would be the United States' approach to bilateral trade talks. In view of the fact that senior American agriculture officials told us that Canada is going to get the message "just like we sent the Libyans a message", what is Canada's response to this scorched earth attitude on the part of the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a conversation which he alleges took place with American officials when I was not present. If he is asking about the position of the Government on the U.S. Farm Bill, we have made it clear frequently and intend to continue to make it clear frequently, that we believe that the United States Farm Bill, coupled with the trade war in agriculture developing between the European Community and the United States, poses very grave threats to the interests of Canadian agriculture. We intend to make that case generally and we intend to make that case specifically, particularly in defence of traditional Canadian grain markets.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Americans went on to spell out four specific irritants that they called "logs, hogs, spuds, and suds" which must be dealt with to the satisfaction of the United States before any serious negotiations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Althouse: What position is our Government taking, given this apparently new attitude by the Government of the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it that the persons to whom the Hon. Member was speaking were involved in a conversation that took place before the U.S. Senate had its vote last week. The Hon. Member was talking about conditions before negotiations would begin. He will know that negotiations have begun, and he will know that those negotiations have begun absolutely without preconditions.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TOXIC RAIN—BAN ON DISTRIBUTION OF STORM WARNING PAMPHLET

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to his Parliamentary Secretary. A report was published today saying that a new form of rain called toxic rain is affecting our health by way of contamination of the food chain. This report confirms the finding in an Environment Canada pamphlet called Storm Warning which the Minister banned last December as non-factual. Will the Minister face the facts and lift the ban on the distribution of Storm Warning?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the publication Storm Warning contained a good deal of information, much of which has been understood and dealt with by Environment Canada over a long period of time. The removal of that particular publication was as a result of the Minister of the Environment and the Department of the Environment wanting to ensure that the public information that was brought forward was based on the best and most factual information possible. We will continue to maintain that position.

PUBLICATIONS POLICY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, will the Parliamentary Secretary make representations to his Minister to convince him to lift this policy of muzzling Environment Canada scientists, and allow the Department to publish and distribute its own publications?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if the Member for Davenport, who is the Liberal critic, will look at his guidelines governing the activities of civil servants under his jurisdiction when he was Minister of the Environment, he will understand that this Government and this Minister are acting in precisely the same way and that we are ensuring that public information is made available through our bureaucracy in the most factual and responsible way possible.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

POSSIBILITY OF PERMANENT LAY-OFFS FOR 167 EMPLOYEES OF NORTHERN TELECOM AT AYLMER, P.Q.—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion concerning the permanent lay-off this coming Saturday of 167 employees at the Northern Telecom plant in Aylmer. Is the Government pleased to accept that a large Canadian corporation should lay off people right here in Aylmer while at the same time transferring their jobs to the twin plant in Georgia, U.S.A.? Or is the Government ready to step in to ensure that Canadian workers can continue to manufacture in Canada products that were developed in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can only assure the Hon. Member that I will take his question as notice and this afternoon I will check into the circumstances to which he has referred.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET UNION REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the union representing the workers has tried without success to arrange a meeting with the Minister through the Member for Gatineau and the Minister's office. Will he agree to meet with the representatives of these workers before the lay-offs take place on May 3, particularly when 450 jobs have been lost in the Aylmer plant in the course of the last year—more than the Gulf refinery?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I said in response to the Hon. Member's first question, I will look into this matter this afternoon.

UNITED STATES FARM BILL—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. The Export Enhancement Program under the U.S. Farm Bill has been used to take away sales of Canadian wheat and other products to Syria, Algeria, and potentially other places very soon. The U.S. Farm Bill could be described as a very well orchestrated attempt at intimidating us before the free trade negotiations commence. What representations, if any, has the Minister made to the United States Government in the last week or two to ensure that these kinds of predatory practices are never repeated for the duration of this unfortunate U.S. Farm Bill?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a serious matter. He should know that we have raised this question with the Americans not only in the last couple of weeks but as long ago as last June when the BICEP program was first announced. We sought and received assurances from the Americans at that time that they would not target the BICEP program at Canadian markets.

The Hon. Member talks about Algeria. He should know that over the past 10 years we have sold varying amounts of grain to Algeria; from 335 million tonnes in 1978-79 to as much as 813 million tonnes in 1983-84. The amount we have sold to Algeria has fluctuated, depending on the year and how they were buying, without the BICEP program being in effect.

EFFECT ON CANADA

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): If Canada was not targeted as one of the so-called offenders against which the U.S. Farm Bill would retaliate, will the Minister indicate what caused the Americans to change their minds and retaliate by using these predatory practices against Canada? What is it that changed the minds of the Americans?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure that the Americans have changed their minds. The Hon. Member should know that last year the Canadian Wheat Board sold grain to over 60 countries. This year, for the first time, we are selling some feed wheat to South Korea which has traditionally been an American market.

If the Hon. Member were to balance his concern about our markets, in my opinion the European Community is the main offender. We used to sell almost 3 million tonnes to them. In the last year we sold them a little over one million tonnes. Our main concern is what is going on between the European Community and the Americans, not solely with how the Americans are behaving.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REFUELING CONTRACT FOR AIR CANADA—REDUCTION IN COMPANY'S WAGE BENEFIT PACKAGE

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Recently in Montreal, Consolidated Aviation Fueling and Services had to reduce by 67 per cent its wage benefit package to be able to submit a competitive bid to Air Canada for refueling at Dorval and Mirabel Airports. Is the Minister aware of that and, if so, is he intending to find a solution to that important problem?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the Hon. Member's concern. The practice to which he refers is the practice of tendering carried on by all Departments of Government in order to secure the best cost effective package they can. In some cases retendering of existing contracts have caused those companies to have to bring in a lower bid. It is open to all. There is nothing which is not ongoing about the tendering process. I am aware of it. It is a practice to provide the Canadian taxpayers with a good and economic use of their dollars.

TRADE

SUBSIDIZED UNITED STATES FLOUR SALE TO YEMEN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Last Friday I told the House about the Americans selling wheat to Algeria with a massive subsidy. I now have a list of several more countries which are taking advantage of these American subsidies. Is the Minister aware that in January or February, just a few months ago, the Americans sold flour to Yemen for $168 per ton, with a subsidy of $123 per ton? If he is aware of that, can he tell us how our farmers can possibly compete? Is the Government now ready to come forth with a deficiency payment so farmers in western Canada can stay on the land?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of those kinds of subsidies. The Hon. Member should also know that, because of the kind of reputation Canada has and the good standing of the Canadian Wheat Board, we were able to sign last year the first long-term agreement ever with Egypt. The Hon. Member should also know that as of the middle of last month, mid-March, the European Community was subsidizing barley to the tune of $151 Canadian per ton and subsidizing wheat to the tune of $131 Canadian per ton. So there are massive subsidies as far as the Europeans are concerned.

If the Hon. Member wants to know who is subsidizing the most, to my mind, again it is the Europeans who are the main culprits.

Mr. Nystrom: Well, we have our two bad boys then.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ANNOUNCE DEFICIENCY PAYMENT FOR WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Is the Minister aware that the list I have contains subsidies to countries like Egypt, Turkey, the Philippines, Zaire, Iraq and Morocco, in addition to Algeria and Yemen? If the Minister is aware of that will he now agree that the time has come to provide the farmers of western Canada with a deficiency payment? Will the Minister answer that specific question?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we have the same list. I keep up to date on a daily basis with what is going on. We also keep up to date in terms of letting the Americans know our concerns. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister are also raising those issues. We are doing what we think is appropriate in the circumstances but doing it in such a way that we can continue to have discussions not only with the Americans but with the Europeans. With regard to a deficiency payment, I have said before that we think our record in terms of addressing agricultural concerns is substantial, and within the limits of the fiscal situation, as the Prime Minister said, we would like to do more.

THREAT POSED BY UNITED STATES ACTIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will recall that a year and a half ago the Prime Minister said to Canadians that: "You can bet your bottom dollar that when American protectionist pressures are brought to bear on the world, Canada will not be targeted". Given the Minister's statement a few moments ago that Canada is facing a very serious threat from the United States, would the Minister tell us if the Prime Minister was living in cuckoo land last year when he made that statement? Or has the Minister bungled the negotiations so badly that we have gone from no threat to a very serious threat in the course of 12 months?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quoting the Prime Minister out of context and he knows it.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's fatuous and flippant manner of dealing with a serious question is—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Just a question.

CONTENT OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States has said that everything is on the table in these negotiations in his letter to Senator Packwood. Does that mean that Canadian culture and Canadian regional development programs are on the table in these negotations? You cannot have it both ways. Give us a straight answer.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, the Hon. Member owes it to this House, if he expects to begin to be taken seriously, that when he quotes Ministers or anyone else, to give full quotations. Second, the Government of Canada has made it very clear that matters which are not trade matters, the nature of our culture, our Industrial Development Programs and our Unemployment Insurance Programs, are naturally not at issue in a trade negotiation. Trade matters are.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the Minister report to the House on the present status of the two Canadians who were detained by the Salvadorian Army?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, given just a moment I will do exactly that. It is a serious question and I appreciate it. Two Canadians who were arrested Monday, April 24, when they went into Lempa in the Province of Chalatenango, a zone declared a war zone, without either special permits or prior authorization to enter. Since then the two Canadians were released, on April 24, and they are believed to be continuing their journalism project on war refugees.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TOXIC RAIN—PROVISIONS OF FORTHCOMING LEGISLATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary. It relates again to the study released today by the Canadian Environmental Law Research Foundation with regard to the whole question of toxic rain. Would the Parliamentary Secretary advise the House whether the new proposed Environmental Contaminants Act will deal with this problem and effectively eliminate the health threat posed to Canadians by this toxic rain?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the report which was released today has not yet been fully assessed by our Department nor by the Minister. However, it includes those things which we in fact have been addressing over a period of a year and a half or more in the Department of the Environment in coming up with solutions. The basic point in question is the coverage or management of our toxic chemicals from the very inception, or "cradle", if you like, to their final destruction, or to the grave. This will very much be a part of the new Environmental Contaminants Act and Environmental Protection Act which we are now considering.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. PRESIDENT'S LETTER—COST OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his letter to Senator Packwood, President Reagan said: "We will want to make sure the outcome provides for comparable treatment for American and Canadian investment and intellectual property rights in both countries". Does the President mean by this that he expects the Government of Canada will cave into the heavy lobby from American pharmaceuticals? And does that mean that the policy under which Canadians now save $200 million a year on prescription drugs will change and that Canadians will have to pay higher prices after these talks are over?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I interpret that portion of the President's letter to Senator Packwood, as I think most fair-minded people do, as being the setting out of American objectives. Canadian objectives on some of these questions, including investment questions, are different. Naturally the President of the United States has the right to speak for his objectives, as we do for ours.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. If this means that Canadians will continue to enjoy the same low prices for presciption drugs, and if the talks are now going ahead, will the Minister bring forward a Bill so we can see what is there and assure Canadians that, indeed, their low prices for prescription drugs will be protected?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I think that when the Government arrives at a decision, we will be pleased to come to this House and make a public announcement.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

PROPOSED ADVISORY COUNCIL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. As the Minister is aware, in 1984, the last year for which we have figures, one out of nine Canadian workers suffered a very serious injury at work. In June of that year we passed legislation which said that there will be an advisory council on occupational health and safety. Why has the Government not set up that commission?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in proclaiming the changes to Part IV of the Canadian Labour Code impacting upon occupational health and safety, the decision to establish an advisory council was delayed. I have informed the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Federation of Labour that the first priority is to have the committees established, implement the new code, have it understood and get it into the workplace. In this way it can do the job which the regulations and the legislation want it to do, that is, save lost time and the lives of individual Canadians who are in the workplace.

• (1450)

To have the code implemented is the first priority of the Government. The advisory council will be established at a later date.

REQUEST THAT COUNCIL BE ESTABLISHED IMMEDIATELY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. Is the Minister aware that when his own officials appeared before committee last week they indicated that the reason the Minister had not gone forward with this matter was because the Government wanted to save money? It was not because of priorities in terms of what has to be done first, but because the Government wants to save money. What about the lives of Canadian workers? Why not set up the advisory council now? The legislation was passed two years ago.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, obviously, the Hon. Member had a supplementary question to ask before he heard the answer to his first question.

It is our priority to establish the new code in the workplace so that working men and women can understand and benefit from the changes to it. The second priority is to establish an advisory council. The Hon. Member does not understand that an advisory council advises. The committees which will be established in the workplace will be on-site committees, taking practical steps to save men and women from harm in the workplace. The Hon. Member should understand that. Most people who work in Canada do.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

MONITORING OF EXAMINATION OF TASK FORCE OPTIONS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The work of the Nielsen task force in reviewing almost 1,000 projects and programs to identify waste and inefficiencies was certainly welcomed by all Canadians. Since all the options and recommendations have been referred to the various appropriate standing committees, how will the process be monitored? Is there an over-all deadline in regard to responding to the findings of the task force?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has said, the various reports have been referred to the appropriate committees. They progress through the committees will be monitored by the Ministers themselves.

In addition, the President of the Treasury Board, as well as the chairman of the task force, and myself, will also be monitoring the process to ensure that we obtain the maximum effect out of these excellent reports.

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Last week businessmen in Newfoundland held a news conference to talk about the loss of jobs, investments being destroyed, and companies in default, all relating to the offshore industry. They asked the Government to step in to work with the industry in order to find immediately what they say are absolutely necessary solutions. Is the Government prepared to step in to find these solutions? If so, when?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, absolutely. I would have thought that the hon. gentleman would have known that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is in Atlantic Canada today meeting with his provincial counterparts in Saint John precisely for the purpose of identifying all these problems so that they can be addressed.

Oral Questions

SECURITY OF SUPPLY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, this matter does not relate to fisheries; it relates to offshore oil and Hibernia. The Deputy Prime Minister knows that the offshore development will die unless the Government provides incentives to keep it alive. Is the Government prepared to provide incentives to protect the security of supply for Canada and jobs for Newfoundlanders?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Government is constantly addressing itself to these regional difficulties throughout the country. Even the Hon. Member must admit that in the short space of one year and a half that this Government has been in office it has made tremendous strides and progress toward achieving more regional balance.

MINES AND MINING

GRIFFITH MINE CLOSURE—INVITATION TO MINISTER TO VISIT EAR FALLS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Has the Minister accepted the invitation issued by the Ear Falls Action Committee and delivered by me to him two weeks ago in the House to visit the Ear Falls and Red Lake area to assess firsthand the employment prospects in that area, now that the Griffith Mine is permanently closed?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I have addressed this particular problem. I have commented on the matter on a number of occasions in the House. If there is any further information which he wishes to bring to my attention, then I would be pleased to hear from him.

EMPLOYMENT PROSPECTS IN AREA

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, by having ignored the invitation is the Minister communicating to the House and to the people of Ear Falls that he stands by the inaccurate and misleading information that he gave the House concerning employment prospects in that area?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree at all with the premise of the question presented by the Hon. Member. As I said, if he has any difficulties or any differences with the material I have presented to the House, then I would be happy to hear from him.

CHALLENGE '86

SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS—COMMUNITY PROJECTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Employment and Immigration, whoever that might be. In a few weeks, students from all over the country will be finishing their exams and will be looking for work. With respect to the Challenge '86 program, the summer program for students, why is the Government imposing a low inflexible quota on community projects, projects to help the aged, the handicapped, and poor children when, in many communities, these are the principal and best projects? Why are these quotas in place?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the Hon. Member's question and bring it to the attention of the responsible Minister.

The Hon. Member knows, as do other Members of the House, that the integrity of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and her ability to direct programs to those who can best use the dollars she puts forward so that they can find meaningful employment over the summer, are well recognized. I am sure the Hon. Member will not be disappointed with Challenge '86.

STUDENTS' RESPONSE TO NON-PROFIT PROJECTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, a great many people are already disappointed because good projects have been rejected. Can the Minister of Labour pass this question on to the Minister as well? Why is the Government ignoring the evaluation which the Department of Employment and Immigration made with respect to Challenge '85 which showed that there was a better response among students to non-profit projects than to profit projects? Why does the Government not accept the recommendations of the evaluation report and put in place a more flexible quota for community projects?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that under the summer employment program for Challenge '86 some 1,413 students have been hired. With respect to the summer employment program, 9,471 students have been hired. With respect to the youth employment programs for the 1985-86 summer employment program, some 4,000 students have been hired for temporary employment. Some 3,400 have been hired for youth training.

The Hon. Member must recognize that these statistics are impressive. The Minister is not satisfied, but will do more—I can guarantee that—in this upcoming year than the previous administration did in its last four years.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

RIDEAU LAKES—HOUSEBOATS' LICENSING APPLICATION

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister. The Parliamentary Secretary is aware of the widespread opposition of cottagers, boaters, and farmers on the Rideau Lakes system to the issuance of water lot permits to the Three Buoys houseboats venture. On Saturday, in Perth, over 500 people signed a petition in opposition to the scheme. Can the Parliamentary Secretary assure the House that no such licences will be granted until a full and complete analysis has been made of the serious environmental and navigational issues raised?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we thank the Hon. Member for his ongoing concern about this issue which has created a good deal of interest among local cottagers and the local communities. The Township of North Burgess has been considering this proposal for some time. It has made recommendations to the Department of the Environment which the Minister is now considering.

I can assure the Hon. Member that if there is to be any development, or any water lot permits issued, it will done under the most stringent of guidelines and conditions. Any activity will be assessed in light of a proposition which the Minister now has before him that will go out into the community to ensure that there is a full understanding of all points of view with respect to this particular subject.

POINT OF ORDER

CHALLENGE '86—STUDENT EMPLOYMENT FIGURES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During Question Period the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) quoted from a document. The information seemed very interesting. I wonder if he will table that document. I believe there is a rule that if a Minister quotes from a document in the House of Commons then he should table it.

• (1500)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that the data contained in this document is so tremendous in that it shows what a great job the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is doing, I would be only too pleased to make as many copies as he would like available to him.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ouellet: He said yes. Table it. Come on.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. McKnight: I will make it available to the Hon. Member any time.

Mr. Ouellet: Give it to us. Table it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I ask the Minister whether he was using an official Government document or notes?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I was using notes passed to me by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) and I am assured that they are probably unofficial.

Mr. Speaker: That practice has not changed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke—Centre) that Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Murphy (p. 12683).

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. When the House adjourned, there were six minutes remaining in the question and answer period.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member who spoke on behalf of the Liberal Party. In this and other speeches, he has shown a great deal of concern for the fact that the Province of Quebec is not getting the 95 per cent level of funding it believes it was promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the last election campaign. Would the Hon. Member not also agree that the reason the Province of Quebec is having these problems is that the previous Liberal Government changed the whole EPF structure in 1981 and 1982 and therefore reduced the amount of money that was going to Quebec as well as other provinces?

If I can summarize the question again for the Hon. Member who is now aware that I am asking him—

Mr. Gauthier: He's being distracted by the noise. Order.

Mr. Murphy: Would the Hon. Member not agree that the reason the cut-back is affecting Quebec and other provinces is that the previous Liberal Government cut funding for post-secondary education, medicare and equalization?

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-96 does not affect the equalization formula as such, but if the Hon. Member wants to discuss that, I have no objection whatsoever.

You see, elections were held on September 4, 1984, and if the party that previously was in power has made errors, I suppose the people passed judgment and there is the reason why in my view the actions of those in Government should be scrutinized.

When Bill C-39 concerning equalization payments was enacted last year, the Government had refused to extend the guarantee formula for interim payments provided for in the 1977 fiscal arrangements, as agreed upon in 1981-82.

Raising that issue of equalization payments and the injustice which we thought would result for Quebec, we questioned the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and, in answers that are to be found in the House of Commons Debates for April, 1985, both of them made the commitment that in no case would any Province receive payments that would be lower than 95 per cent of those received for the previous year.

We are asking, and I had asked the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance, to honour their commitment and pay out to Quebec the monies it has lost because of that.

Of course, if we go back to the beginning of the fiscal arrangements between Canada and the Provinces, there have been a number of changes. But the one that was brought about in 1977 and that was based on the growth rate of the Gross National Product seemed to me as it seemed to the Provinces—because there was near-unanimity between the Provinces when that was done—to be the best way to solve a most complex problem of provincial jurisdiction, especially the issues of post-secondary education and, for once, we had a formula that respected that jurisdiction.

This is why I am most surprised to find in Bill C-96, after that formula being used for some time, that it is being changed unilaterally.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). He says, and I think that we all agree with him, that the problem is not asking whether there are enough educational or hospital programs but how they will be financed. Now, he also says that he will support the motion giving the Bill a six-month hoist. Since we know that the problem is finding financing, is it really necessary to wait six months and have further consultations if such is really the problem or would it not be more advisable to consider how those programs should be financed?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard) has grasped the problem quite well.The financing of those programs is at issue and since Bill C-96 will cut off over $8 billion from 1986-87 to 1992, I think that before setting out to study the matter, the situation at least as it now stands should be controlled. All the more so that it was suggested by the Minister of Finance in his financial statement of November, 1984, since the figures that he provided clearly indicated that there would be no cut in 1986-87. Now if the Minister of Finance honoured his undertaking of November, 1984, we would have all the time we need to consider the matter and see if special taxes should be levied or if programs should be cut. I should like this to be done in an enlightened way so that the quality of services will be about the same throughout Canada.

At present, with Bill C-96, what will happen is that the provinces which have a larger tax base will maintain the quality of their health care and their postsecondary education programs while the poorer provinces will have to reduce their services. Besides, several of them have indicated that they will have to do so.

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not with pleasure that I rise to participate in the debate on Bill C-96, a Bill which proposes to change the present federal EPF arrangements in such a fashion as to change the formula from an increase commensurate with the GNP to one which would allow increases which are 2 per cent less than the GNP on a per capita basis, except in those circumstances where inflation exceeds that amount on a percentage basis. In those circumstances, the amount of funds to be provided would be provided according to the old formula up to a maximum of the GNP change. This means, of course that in the event of significant inflation, the universities, colleges and health-care system would be placed in an even more difficult situation.

In response to complaints from this side of the House, we keep hearing that this Bill does not constitute a cut in the federal contributions to health care and universities. It is interesting to note that when I attempted to use an analogy this morning to put what is happening in a proper context, I received a peculiar answer from one of the Government Members. I asked the Hon. Member to suppose that he had been promised by his employer a 10 per cent increase in salary each year for the next five years but that in the middle of those five years the boss changed his mind and told him he would only receive 5 per cent. I asked him if he did not think that that was a cut and he said that that was not a cut, but a decrease. There is this peculiar differentiation between these two kinds of actions, a cut versus a decrease.

• (1510)

In my view a cut is a cut whether it is called a decrease or whatever. This is substantiated by the attitude which Hon. Members opposite adopted during the course of the debates on Bill C-97 and Bill C-12. I am sure those Bills were introduced by the then Government on the basis that they were not really cuts but decreases in the increase, which is jargon intended to obscure the realities. Of course members of the Tory Party at that time saw through it all. If one reads excerpts from their speeches at the time, one finds phraseology which is as applicable and as appropriate now as it was then.

For example, we have one Member saying that at least one thing was clear with the new formula, that the federal Government would be getting a better deal than it was getting before, and that it would be paying out $5 billion less over the next five years than it would be paying under the old formula. In respect of Bill C-97, another Tory Member said that it was essential to underline and clarify the effect of the $5.7 billion cut-back in transfer payments to the provinces. It is notable in those two statements that the amounts are quite comparable to what will happen in terms of cuts over the next five years as a result of this piece of legislation.

Also the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) indicated that we could often escape facts and play games with the truth, but that there was a bottom line, and the bottom line was that once the Bill was passed the Governments charged with the responsibility of providing medical services and post-secondary education would have less money and very little capacity to tax their citizens and more ways to raise more revenue.

As well, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), with typical eloquence, said at that time that it was a deplorable piece of legislation because the principle of it was one of betrayal. He indicated that the Bill betrayed the provinces of Canada, the provincial Governments of Canada, universities and post-secondary institutions, and young people. He also indicated that it illustrated rank hypocrisy in the actions of the Government. Of course the eloquence of those statements, as indicated by the Hon. Member for St. John's West, was exceeded only by their hypocrisy.

During the 1984 election campaign, the Progressive Conservative Party indicated in respect of transfer payments that it was committed to maintaining the current federal financial commitment according to the formula set out in the 1977 agreement. That Party also indicated that it believed that financing of post-secondary education was an important priority for both levels of Government. There is no obscuring the fact that what we have here, no matter what kind of phraseology is used or what are the attempts at obfuscation, is a Bill which proposes to cut in an essentially unilateral fashion the level of transfer payments to the provinces for health and post-secondary education.

We have heard repeatedly that there has been a great deal of consultation. Most provincial Premiers would consider that the consultation was remarkably unilateral. The Government said that it had an offer they could not refuse. Of course they could not. Therefore, we have a charade of consultation which involved no consultation at all. In all the discussion about the extent of consultation, it should be noted that some of the key players in respect of post-secondary education—student organizations, organizations representing the professoriate and university presidents, and scientific societies—were not consulted, as far as we are aware, on the impact of these changes in the transfer payments, just as they were not consulted in respect of such things as the funds allocated to granting agencies. The Government has tried to claim that they were increased when in fact between now and 1990 the granting councils will have a level of funding which is not very different from what they receive at present, when one takes into account the rate of inflation. There was little consultation.

What is really disturbing is that the Government, in presenting the Bill, emphasized that it was part of the program of fiscal restraint which was somehow in support of a strategy for economic renewal. Of course the approach of the Government to economic renewal has consistently been one of cutting the deficit no matter what the cost. The description of the strategy for economic renewal at least drew attention to the tremendous importance of technology and of research and development to the future growth of the country. However, after reading over the strategy for economic renewal several times, it is curious to note that although the Government talked much about training, very little was said about the need for an enhanced university and college community. Very little was said about the necessity of having a highly educated as opposed to highly trained workforce if this strategy for economic renewal was to work.

The fact is that the unversity and college community can best be described as being in dire straits. This is not new. Although the Government has not deliberately engaged in the process of consultation, most Canadians who read newspapers are at least aware that there has been considerable focus, especially in the last three years or four years, on the plight of universities. I would just say parenthetically, as it occurs to me, that one of the Ministers who was poorly consulted on the changes which the Bill will enact in the level of funding for universities was the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard). He was certainly passed over in considering what proper steps should be taken to find ways to improve the financial situation of universities.

We have had the Wright report, the Al Johnson report, and the Bovey report in Ontario. We have also had the Nova Scotia Commission on post-secondary education and the Breau report. Even the Macdonald report addressed the concerns of those of us who are conscious about the importance of post-secondary education. All those reports brought the problems to our attention, and the problems are serious ones.

The university system is in a state of terrible deterioration. The New Democratic Party sponsored a youth task force which travelled across the country. During the course of its hearings we found that quite awful conditions existed in our universities and colleges. Previously I cited the fact that in Simon Fraser University, for example, bulbs were being removed from reading areas. We talked about books which were being burned because there was inadequate space in the libraries. We talked about how one science department at the same university had been in temporary quarters, literally shacks, for more than 15 years. At the University of Toronto we were told that some 120 buildings had been declared fire-traps. At Dalhousie University we were told that assignments were not given in some courses because it was too expensive to provide the necessary printed material. On and on it goes. We heard stories about how the physical plants at universities were deteriorating. There are myriad stories about archaic laboratory equipment, microscopes without lenses, and chemicals which were not available for conducting laboratory experiments and exercises.

Apart from the issue of the deteriorating state of the physical plant and equipment in the universities, in these many reports published recently we have recommendations to meet the financial exigencies of the universities that all too often lead to recommendations that would restrict further accessibility to universities. Several universities, for example, the University of Toronto and the University of Waterloo, have increased the requirements for entry. I am sure I do not have to indicate to you, Sir, that as soon as these kinds of restrictions are imposed on admissibility to universities, both in standards for admission and in increased tuition cost, as has so often been recommended, we will be moving back to an era in which accessibility is limited to the sons and daughters of the wealthy who can afford it.

In the absence of adequate means by which we can support students in their studies, in the absence of adequate grant programs in the face of increased costs for tuition, fees, books and so on, we have a situation where it is not going to be unusual, indeed at present it is not unusual, to find students who at the end of their university or college careers are ending up having to repay a debt that may amount to almost $40,000. That is a serious matter, Mr. Speaker.

There is not only the issue of the social justice of accessibility to ensure that all young people will have adequate opportunity, there is also the issue that the Government should understand, namely, if it intends to pursue the kind of future economic development its economic strategy contemplates then it should be conscious of the need not to cut transfer payments to the provinces. The Government should be doing what should have been done a long time ago. It should be working on an arrangement with the provinces by which colleges and universities would be ensured of adequate levels of funding, making it possible for young people to attend colleges and universities even if their parents are not endowed with particular wealth.

I said earlier that the Government persists in stating that this Bill does not represent a cut over the next five years in financing post-secondary education. I said also that Members opposite were engaged in debate when the previous Government introduced Bill C-97 and Bill C-12 which had similar effects. I cite that to emphasize that it is not just this Government that has failed to meet its responsibilities to meet the needs of post-secondary education, but that there has been a general pattern at the federal level of diminishing levels of financing for post-secondary education.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that up until 1977 the cost of post-secondary education and health was cost shared with the provinces on a 50-50 basis. Since that time, the federal share has dropped from 48 per cent to 41 per cent. With the enactment of this legislation, the level of the federal share on a percentage basis will decrease further so that it is only 36 per cent.

Let me point out that if we look at the annual increases in over-all provincial post-secondary education spending from 1977-78 to 1984-85, we will find that the rate of increase has just barely kept pace with the inflation rate. That at first appearances would seem to suggest that post-secondary education funding has not done too badly, but the costs for post-secondary education have increased at a rate far in excess of the Consumer Price Index, which is the basis for comparison that I cited. That the universities and colleges of this land are in horrible shape is easily explainable on the basis of decreased levels of funding and a lack of commitment on the part of the federal Government, and of the provinces, I must say in some measure, to begin to address the problem in a fashion that would lead to the kind of solution we must have.

We need to produce a strong university system, and not one, as has in recent weeks been so often described, that is becoming third rate. When the very best university in our country is measured, not against all of the universities in the world but only those universities outside of the United States, and it rates seventeenth, then surely we have a serious problem. When the very best university has to close its architectural school, that further dramatizes the horrible state in which we are and the much worse state we will be in if we do not begin to address the problem.

We cannot have a technological future, a future based on manufacturing, something that goes beyond our natural resources as a means for economic growth, if we do not declare some kind of commitment to ensure that universities are enhanced rather than weakened, not only as educational institutions but as research institutions.

In closing, I can do no better than to read the following question: The Minister is prepared to cut spending in two very important areas. He is prepared to risk major cutbacks in medical care and post-secondary education. Rather than rush into this on a unilateral basis, force spending cuts and service cuts on the provinces, would the Minister consider entering into two or three national conferences on health and post-secondary education? We can then set out the national objectives of the various levels of Government in these two important areas before we cut spending, before we cause hospital closures and cutbacks in postsecondary education. That question was posed by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It was a reasonable question. His premise was excellent and it is a premise that I recommend to him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Sudbury.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): If there is unanimous consent, the Hon. Member may ask a question. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, what is the real impact on the universities? What will they be forced to do by this reduction in the amount of money coming in during the next five years?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the solutions have been many, as I indicated during the course of my speech. In some instances the cost of tuition is being generally raised at the provincial level. There have been numerous recommendations that tuition costs be further raised so that students pay a larger share. At every university equipment purchases are being forgone. At the University of Windsor, for example, the budgetary requirement for new equipment for 1986-87 is around $1 million. Under present circumstances, the University can allot only $50,000. We are talking about serious deficiencies, as I mentioned earlier, such as the inability to purchase such equipment as microscopes. While microscopes are lacking lenses, spectrophotometers are being used which are upwards of 20 years old. These are hands on, manual, pieces of equipment at a time when devices are highly computerized. Repairs are not being done. For example, at the University of Toronto it was discovered that some buildings were condemnable as fire hazards. Professorial salaries are not increasing commensurate with increases in other provinces. As a consequence, many university teachers, particularly in the sciences, are now going south of the border to find more adequate salaries and well-funded research. In one university, the University of British Columbia, services to handicapped students were cut. Student assistants are now finding themselves with increasing workloads at very low salaries. Many professors and instructors in the colleges have greatly increased workloads imposed upon them to the detriment of the quality of teaching. In research institutions, of course, professors are burdened with increased teaching duties and, as a result, research suffers.

• (1530)

There are any number of responses which the post-secondary educational community has employed to meet financial exigencies. All of them are bad and all of them constitute a threat to the quality of education and, I say, a serious threat to Canada's economic future. One of the important facts to take note of is that whereas in the U.S. and Japan the participation rate in post-secondary education is around 40 per cent, in Canada it is about 30 per cent. When you add that to the fact that our research effort is less than half of what it is in those two countries against which we must compete, that dramatizes the need, indeed the urgency, for the Government to ensure adequate financing. There has to be consultation with the provinces to ensure that they allocate funds on an assured basis to ensure that universities do not retrench and are capable of providing the kind of education needed and an adequate level of research funding. Those are the things which the Government is quite specifically not doing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, in the early part of the Hon. Member's speech he talked about hypocrisy. He quoted various people, including me. As a new Member of Parliament, he should be a little careful in talking about hypocrisy. There is rhetorical hypocrisy and active hypocrisy. I suggest to him that when members of his Party threw a Government out of office because of a Budget which was described as the fairest to poor people in this country in the 1970s, they moved from rhetorical hypocrisy to active hypocrisy. They went against everything they supposedly stood for.

I would also remind him that when speeches are made, they are made at a particular period in history. This Party, myself included, consistently talked to members of the previous Government as well as members of his Party about the difficulty this country would be in if we continued to borrow money that way. At the time that speech was made the then Minister of Finance had brought down Budgets where parliamentarians were misinformed about the reality of that spending. It turned out to be a great deal worse. More money, billions of dollars more, had to be borrowed than Members were aware of. I was elected to this place almost seven years ago. At that time 17 cents out of the tax dollar went to pay interest on our debt. Today it is 36 cents. At one point we had 83 cents to spend on programs and today we have 64 cents.

If the Hon. Member wants to avoid hypocrisy, I would like him to stand in his place and tell us whether he is one of those in his Party who believes you can just go on borrowing for ever and ever and never have to pay the piper. Or would he agree that this Government is taking sound, fundamental steps when it attempts to reduce our borrowing requirements, while at the same time recognizing the importance of health care and education by increasing the amounts allocated for those areas at the rate of inflation less 2 per cent? Have we not signalled our priorities very, very clearly by doing this at a time when most other programs are being cut? Does he not think the Government is on the right tack by showing fiscal responsibility while at the same time identifying this kind of priority, or is he like other members of his Party who are irresponsible and who would just borrow forever until we get to the day where we have less than 50 cents of a tax dollar to spend on programs? Which is it?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the context in which I quoted the Hon. Member was that he and other members of his Party say they are not making any cuts. I will read it again:

> We can often escape facts, we can play games with the truth, but there is a bottom line and that bottom line is that once this bill is passed, the governments which are charged with the responsibility of providing medical services and post-secondary education will have less money and will have very little capacity to tax their citizens in more ways to raise more revenue.

It is as applicable now as it was then. The EPF payments are being cut, no matter how you describe it.

As to the deficit, there is one sensible way to cut it in the long term, that is, to foster economic growth. That is something the Government said in its description of its economic strategy. What it has failed to recognize is that that strategy will fail if our universities and colleges fail and our people are not educated enough to pursue that strategy. That is a simple premise, one that even the Hon. Member can understand even if his memory is faulty.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make some remarks on Bill C-96. I would like to address an issue which has recently begun to receive a great deal of public attention. Much has been said about federal transfer payments to provinces. Unfortunately, a great deal of misinformation has been spread. I hope to explain to you a little bit about the history of these transfers, where we are today, and the action we as a Government have taken.

The federal Government, through a variety of means, makes significant cash and tax transfers to provincial and territorial Governments. The two most significant are equalization payments and the established programs financing or EPF transfers. The fundamental goal of the equalization program is to ensure that all provinces have the financial capacity to provide their residents with reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation. The principle that all citizens in every province are entitled to an adequate level of services is enshrined in the Constitution. These payments raise to a prescribed level the per capita revenue raising capacity of the lower-income provinces.

Six provincial Governments, Newfoundland, P.E.I., New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec and Manitoba, received these payments on an unconditional basis. They may use the funds either to raise their level of public services or to lower the level of taxation, or some combination of the two. The level of equalization transfers are calculated according to a predetermined formula that was reviewed most recently in 1982. The federal Government has been contributing to the financing of provincial hospital insurance programs since 1958. Federal transfers to provincial Governments in respect of post-secondary education were introduced in 1967. The jointly financed medicare insurance program was established in 1968, and until 1977 federal transfer payments for these programs were made under cost sharing arrangements.

Federal transfers were based on the provincial government expenditures on a medical care and hospital care insurance, and on the operating costs of post-secondary education institutions. The federal share was roughly 50 per cent over-all, although the precise share varied from province to province. In 1977 the arrangements were changed so that the federal contribution was no longer determined by provincial programmed expenditures. Rather, it was determined by federal per capita transfers in a base year, 1975-76, escalated by the rate of growth of per capita Gross National Product and each province's population.

Thus the current arrangements involved a block fund which provinces allocate to their health and post-secondary education programs. In this fiscal year the federal Government transfers $508 per capita, plus a further $43 per capita to help finance extended health care services. In the May, 1985 Budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), indicated that under these two programs the federal Governement will be transferring $14.2 billion in cash, and an additional $6.3 billion in tax transfers. These will be transferred, of course, to the provincial and territorial Governments. That amounts to $20.5 billion in transfers through these two programs alone. Mr. Speaker, I know I do not have to remind you of the significance of that level of over $20 billion. It is approximately 18 to 19 per cent of the total expenditures of this Government. So we are dealing with a very significant portion of our expenditures.

The Minister proposed in his Budget to limit the rate of growth of these transfers to provincial Governments as part of the over-all restraint package of the Government. The intention of this limit on the rate of growth is to effect savings amounting to about $2 billion in 1990-91.

Let me make it clear, Mr. Speaker, this is not a cut-back on federal transfers to the provinces. Even when this limited growth rate has been put in place on April 1, federal transfers will, over the next five years, increase by some $25 billion. In other words, they will grow from the current level of $65 billion to $90 billion.

It should also be noted that these increases are occurring at a time of severe fiscal restraint on the part of the federal Government. This Government has undertaken a vigorous and at times painful deficit reduction program, and has asked all Canadians to participate in this national effort to restore financial sanity to our nation's finances. Our spending program, that is excluding the debt and transfers, has been limited to a 2.9 per cent growth rate this year. These transfers to provinces, however, will continue to increase at a faster rate than the rate of growth of federal program expenditures, the projected rate of inflation, or the growth rate of the economy. In other words, Mr. Speaker, that 2.9 or roughly 3 per cent over-all growth compares to 5 per cent, roughly, for these transfer payments. That level of 5 per cent is some two-thirds or 66 per cent higher than it is in the other areas of Government. I think that gives us some idea of the sincerity and seriousness with which we treat those two major programs.

I do not believe that the restrained rate of interest increase that we are proposing is inappropriate given the fiscal situation we face. There has been no questioning of the value of health care or post-secondary education. The importance of these goes without saying. I believe the continued high rate of growth of federal transfers reflects that importance.

Let me sum up with some remarks today by saying that the fundamental principle of these transfers it is the importance of established programs financing, which lies in the provision of a firm and stable financial foundation on which we have built a system of health care and post-secondary education that is second to none in the world. This is true of its quality and its accessibility to all Canadians in every province. Truly the most important issue to all Canadians is that this firm and stable financial foundation be maintained in order to ensure the high quality of our health care and post-secondary education. The changes that are being made to federal transfers to provinces, and the innumerable measures encompassed in the May Budget, clearly indicate that this Government is strongly committed to maintaining such a stable financial foundation.

If we as a Government do not deal seriously and effectively with our current fiscal problems, if we do not begin to bring government expenditures into line with government revenues, if we do not begin to control the rate of growth of the federal deficit and debt in the near future, we may be faced with even more difficult and more extreme restraint measures.

In my own riding of Don Valley East most often I hear positive comments relating to our most recent Budget brought down by the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) in which the cuts were very substantial. However, many people, knowing the gravity of the situation in this country, wanted more cuts to be made, wanted us to get on a more stable financial track more quickly. I was very pleased when, right on the heels of the Budget, the Nielsen task force results were announced. Some 900 to 1,000 major programs and projects within Government had received a very thorough scrutiny over the period of a year. Now there are literally hundreds of options and recommendations that must be dealt with by the respective committees, and I am confident that the fresh look given by a number of men and women from the private sector is going to give the various committees and ministries a great amount of ammunition to work with in terms of streamlining operations and effecting savings. All that will work towards a more frugal use of the taxpayers' dollars.

When we as a Party were elected to government in September, 1984, time and time again what I certainly heard on the streets of my own riding was that people wanted change, they wanted that irresponsible spending to stop. They realized what level it was reaching. I can highlight a few figures here in a moment. It had just been totally out of control for a ten-year period.

In 1970-71, the first year of a significant deficit, it was $500 million. That sounds like peanuts today. It took the former Government only three years to go over the billion-dollar mark in 1972-73. It took it three more years to go over the $5 billion annual deficit in 1975-76. In two short years it zoomed through the $10 billion level in 1977-78. Six years later, in 1982-83, it broke the ceiling and went through the $20 billion level. In 1982-83, it was at $23 billion. One year later, it roared through the $30 billion level. Notwithstanding the fact that we were going through some rough economic times, clearly spending was absolutely and totally out of the control of that previous Government which now sits as the Official Opposition. Who is left to deal in a frugal way with taxpayers' dollars? Who is left to get things under control gradually so that we do not pass that albatross of increasing debt down to future generations? We are in the situation now where a tremendous amount of our tax revenues goes just to service the cost of that debt. In terms of expenditures, a large chunk of our current tax revenues go just to service the debt. Our expenditures are a little over $100 billion, and 23.5 per cent goes toward that interest payment. Statutory programs account for 44 per cent of our total expenditures and non-statutory expenses account for some 32.5 per cent. Those statutory programs, which account for 44 per cent of our expenditures, will increase by 5 per cent in 1986-87 and drop down to 2 per cent in 1987-88. Non-statutory spending, which accounts for 32.5 per cent, will increase by 0.7 per cent in 1986-87 and will drop to 0.5 per cent the following year.

Since the November 1984 Economic Statement, the Minister of Finance has had ample consultation with the respective provincial Ministers about transfer payments. There have been four meetings since the May 1985 Budget. As a result of those meetings, the Government decided to increase the payment by approximately 5 per cent. When one takes into account the inflation rate of approximately 4 per cent, the increase in this category is 25 per cent more than inflation. The Opposition would have us increase this payment by 7 per cent, which would be 75 per cent over the inflation rate.

The fact is that we must establish financial control in Canada. I took the opportunity to record the track record of the previous Government, beginning in the early 1970s. At that time, our dollar was worth $1.05 compared to the U.S. dollar. I do not think it is any coincidence that there is a definite correlation between the financial instability that set into this country and our falling dollar which has dropped to approximately 72 cents American. It is largely due to the irresponsibility of the Official Opposition when it was in government.

The Opposition continues to carp and criticize. I do not know where it thinks money comes from, but someone must be accountable for the restoration of financial stability in this country. That responsibility has fallen on our Government, and I want to commend the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for having the intestinal fortitude to deal with very difficult problems.

No constituency is left unaffected when there are cut-backs in spending. It is no pleasure to take these steps, but we were left with the financial mess which I have described. We intend to take control of that financial situation in a meaningful and sensitive way.

For example, our spending on statutory programs will be 25 per cent more than the rate of inflation, which is almost double that which is being spent in other areas of government expenditures.

The federal Government is not in any way trying to undermine the federal-provincial transfer system. Rather, we are making what amounts to minor changes in order to ensure the fiscal integrity of the entire Canadian economy. Our health and post-secondary education systems have served Canadians well in the past and will continue to serve them well over the next five years and beyond, if we get our total financial house in order and work toward balancing the Budget. That may take some time because the Budget has been so poorly managed in the past decade.

I have a private Members' motion which is similar to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Bill in the United States which proposes a balanced Budget for the United States by 1990-91. Frankly, I do not believe it speaks well for politicians or the political process that legislation is required to compel a Government to have a balanced Budget, but that is what is taking place. The United States began its deficit some 30 years ago, while ours began some 12 years ago.

Americans are much more aware of their serious deficit situation. According to a poll, which I have not seen, Canadians rank the problem of the deficit as thirty-sixth on their list of major concerns. Their first concern is unemployment. That is quite natural, although our Government has done much to correct that problem. Their second concern is feeding the hungry of the world, and the third is seeking peace. These are laudable and commendable objectives for us all.

Although I believe the awareness of the fiscal situation in this country is increasing, we must increase that awareness even further. We are spending the taxpayers' money and they expect us to use it in a more frugal way so that we can eventually see a surplus in this country. For those who have forgotten, a surplus exists when revenue exceeds expenditures. We have not experienced a surplus in this country for some time, but with the approach that the Government is taking, I think we will have that surplus in the not too distant future. We will achieve that goal with the co-operation of the Canadian people, despite the wall that has been put in place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments and also a question for the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell).

First of all, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that he can't eat his cake and have it. In the first part of his speech, he criticized the Liberals for their poor financial management and their completely irresponsible spending habits. I think it is strange he should be saying this at a time we are considering Bill C-96.

I may remind him that in 1982, when the fiscal arrangements legislation was adopted for five years, 1982-87, the Progressive Conservatives objected to any change in the formula that would result in a reduction in transfer payments. The Hon. Member for Don Valley East cannot turn around and blame everything on poor financial management, when his own party took the opposite stand during the debate on the 1982-87 fiscal arrangements. Even the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in speaking to the legislation at the time, said that this was not co-operative federalism, and I would like to quote him directly:—

[English]

"That is not co-operative federalism. That is predatory federalism and will not and cannot work in this country."

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would say that the legislation being considered in that particular debate had far less impact financially on the provinces than the legislation before the House today. I also fail to understand why the Hon. Member wants to have it both ways.

My question concerns the quality of health services. How can the Hon. Member, whose party voted with the Liberal Government at the time against the introduction of user fees, whose party objected to this and even voted in favour of the Government, irrespective of its political stripe, cutting transfer payments to the provinces that allowed extra billing, as the phrase goes, how can he make the kind of speech he just made today? And I would like to ask him this: Can his province, the Province of Ontario, afford to lose $3 billion without this having an effect on its deficit? Because that is what Bill C-96 means. The Province of Ontario stands to lose $3 billion between now and the end of this decade.

Furthermore, since the Premier of Ontario has indicated that this kind of legislation would make Ontario cut 75,000 hospital beds, does the Hon. Member believe that the Province of Ontario can afford to do so, and if not, who is going to pay the bill for those hospital beds? Ontario taxpayers, because the federal Government has transferred its deficit to Ontario?

[English]

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to some of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). I honestly think he knows better.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Nothing personal. Answer the question.

Mr. Attewell: He has had a very successful term in a position with the Quebec Government. He was a CEO of a large financial institution in Quebec. He more than all people is aware of what has to happen whether one is with an organization or in government, one has to work toward eventually balancing the Budget. This country cannot go on for another ten-year period as we have for the last decade.

We keep hearing the criticism that we argue that it is not a cut-back. The federal Government will be transferring some $90 billion over the next five years to the provinces. That is a $25 billion gain from the present $65 billion level. I call that a magnificent gain. That is an average of some 5 per cent throughout the period.

I will come back to the points I was making a few moments ago in case they were not observed. Canadians expect that in all of our programs we should get our house in order collectively. For instance, I am not aware of the exact way that many universities are run, but the Hon. Member will know that from time to time corporations have to stop and examine their internal efficiency, how the money is spent, whether in travelling expenses, entertainment, or perhaps in too many departments or chief executive officers. Perhaps the pay scales are too high. There are 101 areas one can look at. I would hope the Hon. Member would agree that some universities and post-secondary institutions might be able to find some savings and some inefficiencies might be identified. However, tough decisions are being made day in and day out. None of us were pleased to hear recently that the School of Architecture at the University of Toronto may not have sufficient funding to continue. That school has existed for something like 100 years. But what has brought these tough decisions to the fore is the track record of the Official Opposition for a ten-year period.

Mr. Allmand: Baloney. Nobody believes that.

Mr. Attewell: Had we taken over government with a surplus, we would not even think about the measures we are now discussing in Bill C-96. It is that simple.

Mr. Allmand: Who would believe that.

Mr. Frith: They wouldn't believe you for two minutes.

Mr. Attewell: The Hon. Member asks who would believe it. Thousands of Canadians believe it. The Liberal Government has led us down the garden path. So we have had to make tough decisions. But Canadians expect us to face these problems in a sensitive way, whether it be hospital care or post-secondary education, and not to turn our back on them. We intend to face these problems to the best of our ability.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I should have liked the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) to answer my question which was quite clear. Would the Hon. Member try again and tell me how it was that in 1981-82, his party which at that time was aware of the financial situation, objected so strongly to changes in the formula, especially the guarantee of tax revenues which was a very complicated formula based on a flow of statistics that was practically beyond any control? Why did his party object at that time? Payments should have been extended and, today, they have changed their attitude. Has it seen the light on the road to Damascus but I would rather like to know whether Ontario can be deprived of 75 hospital beds and lose $3 billion while making such services available to its citizens? Does he believe it is possible?

[English]

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Hon. Member, what we had during the term of the former Government was a moving target. We were not able to get accurate financial estimates from that Government.

Mr. Gauthier: Oh, oh!

Mr. Attewell: Budgets were being changed hours before they were presented in the House. Estimates were continually rising. All Hon. Members will remember the period when the Budget started with a low $20 billion and after the fourth estimate we were zeroing in on something like $30 billion. How can we do intelligent financial planning with that sort of moving target?

I must say it is a pleasant change to move into a record we can point to with pride. Our Minister of Finance pointed to a deficit months and months ago and said that he would be targetting at the $34.8 billion level, and we are going to come in at exactly that level. The Minister of Finance has forecast a deficit of under $30 billion next year, and we hope to hit that level as well. That is a far different record from the record of the previous Government, now the Official Opposition. The Hon. Member knows from working in business that one's decisions are only as good as the financial base and data one has. We now, I believe, have sound data and that is why we can make some reasonably sound predictions.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, before commencing my remarks this afternoon, I would like to say that it seems to me, after having sat through three interventions by Conservative back-bench Members of Parliament—and I qualify "back-bench"—that we are in danger of having this debate deteriorate rapidly into a variation of the Marie Antoinette theme of "let them eat cake". Clearly the Conservative Party has a totally different concept of the cornerstone of Confederation.

Before getting into the specifics of the debate, I would like perhaps, for the benefit of us all in the Chamber, to speak about the definition by a former Prime Minister of Great Britain. A century or so ago Prime Minister Disraeli defined Conservatism as "organized hypocrisy".

Mr. Gauthier: Hear, hear! It is still true today.

Mr. Frith: Clearly not much has changed in the intervening years. Perhaps I might add to that comment made a century and a half ago by indicating that Conservatives today represent disorganized hypocrisy. I say that in all sincerity. The Canadian public has come to the conclusion that politicians cannot be trusted in what they say. There now exists in Canada, I believe, unheard of heights of cynicism with respect to politics. Why is it that the level of cynicism toward the political process and politicians has reached such new heights? I put forward for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians can no longer depend upon the Government they elect to follow through on the promises made during the election campaign. I point out that the Conservative Party has been guilty time and time again since September, 1984 of taking the position that it really does not matter what the election campaign was fought on or what promises were made. Once having been elected they say: "Damn the consequences. We will do whatever we feel needs to be done. The legislative program does not have to reflect the promises made during the election campaign of 1984".

There is one other reason for this level of cynicism. I voice this on behalf of all of my colleagues on this side of the House. I cannot recall in the years I have been in this House of Commons a major debate on a law that is going to have major implications on the ability of provincial Governments to deliver post-secondary education and a level of health care which we have come to expect, being led off by a Parliamentary Secretary. We have the largest majority Government in the history of Canada. There are some 211 Members of Parliament representing the Conservative Government. We have the largest Cabinet since Confederation with 39 members. Not one cabinet Minister took the time to lead off this debate on behalf of the Government. It is no wonder that the Canadian public feels such a high level of cynicism about the political process.

I would like to remind Members opposite of some of the promises made in the 1984 election campaign.

[Translation]

Remember the promises made in Sherbrooke on June 26, 1984. Listen carefully Mr. Speaker, the following commitment: To honour the federal obligation to finance provincial health care within the financial structure of the established programs and provide supplementary funds to the Provinces on an equal basis.

[English]

That was one of the major promises made by the Conservative Party in the election campaign of 1984. I will repeat it in English for the benefit of the listening audience. On July 26 it was promised that the Conservatives would respect the federal obligation to finance health care in the provinces through EPF and to provide additional funds to the provinces on a parity basis. They also promised to create or enhance those programs which could be identified as a national need.

I would now like to take Conservative Members of Parliament on a bit of a trip down memory lane. I think it is worthwhile to go over some of the comments made by Conservative Members when they sat on this side of the House prior to 1984 and when we introduced the legislation known as six and five. Several of my colleagues have already quoted the words of those Members delivered at that time. They are worth repeating. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who is now in the House and who is Chairman of the Finance Committee, said the following:

> These particular programs, health care and education, are within the provincial sphere. To wind up saying somehow, somewhere along the line, in order to solve an inflation problem you can go ahead and rip apart an agreement without any justification whatsoever, and then rip apart that agreement a year and a half after you start your alleged six and five program to solve an inflation problem you already declare has been solved, is such balderdash to come from a Minister that the Minister himself should resign for even saying it—
> This is a breach of contract, a breach of agreement. It is even more than that: it is a breach of an understanding of where we are going in the country.

I must admit that that is a true statement even today. It is fundamental to what the established programs financing arrangements are all about. The provinces of the country determine five-year plans based on their faith that the federal Government will not break its end of the contract. Provincial Ministers of Finance must have this agreement to forecast properly fund allocation for post-secondary education and the health care system. They must have the fundamental understanding, in agreement with the federal Government, that nothing will change within the timeframe of the contract upon which they have entered into.

How can we square that need by the provincial Governments with the law which is being proposed here today? Much has been made by Conservative back-benchers about the fact that the Government forecast that there would be changes made to the established programs financing arrangements. That is simply not true. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated in his Economic Statement in November of 1984 that there would be a review of the arrangements made under EPF. That came as no surprise since it is understood by everyone in the House that this agreement has to be renegotiated every five years. It came as a surprise to me, and to many of my colleagues in opposition, that the Government accelerated the review of EPF. In its May 1985 Budget, under projected savings in terms of EPF, there was nothing mentioned about fiscal year 1986-87. Thus every provincial Treasurer must have assumed, as my colleagues and I assumed, that there were no planned changes to that federal-provincial agreement for 1986-87. However, we were all deceived.

I would now like to review some of the comments made by members of the Government who sit on the front benches with respect to the six and five program which was introduced by the Liberal Government. The present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, said:

> I would say that the consequences may not readily be discernible to the federal Government, but to the thousands of young Canadians in post-secondary institutions of this country and to the hundreds of people who staff our community colleges and universities, the consequences are very clear. In fact, they are frightening.

This illustrates the type of cynicism about which I spoke at the beginning of my remarks. It is the type of commentary which fuels the level of cynicism held by the Canadian public toward politicians and the political process.

It has been reported that the Minister of Finance has justified the cuts by saying that the impact of a runaway federal deficit was far greater than the problem of shifting the deficit to the provincial level. Thus he admits that he is proceeding with a shell game. The Government is simply transferring the burden of deficit reduction from the backs of federal taxpayers on to the backs of provincial taxpayers who, in turn, will probably attempt to pass the burden on to the backs of taxpayers at the municipal level. Have Hon. Members given any thought to the consequences of reducing the level of transfer payments to the provinces? Others of my caucus colleagues will speak about the cuts and the effects they will have on post-secondary education. I will focus on a matter with which I have more familiarity, that is, the delivery of health care.

I wish to remind Members opposite that in the years 1977 to 1984—at least until we introduced the six and five program—the federal Government increased transfer payments for health care and education beyond the level of inflation. This was done despite the fact that in those years in which the economy was growing there was still a detrimental effect being felt by persons who delivered health care at the local level. I say that because what happens, even under an ideal situation in which transfer payments are increasing at a greater rate than inflation, is that the provinces choose not to pass those increases on to those who deliver post-secondary education and health care. I remind Hon. Members that the provinces at that time were ruled by Conservative Governments—perhaps that is why the situation was so widely abused. However, I will leave that for others to question me on. It seems to me that all that occurred then was that the consolidated revenues of the provincial Treasuries swelled. The increases in transfers were not pased on to the persons who delivered medicare and to the people who delivered post-secondary education in the provinces.

As a result, one does not have to go any further than to discuss with hospital administrators what the impact of the cut-backs in transfers was on the delivery of health care. I have to admit that the administrators have done a very reasonable job in the last five to six years, given the propensity of the provinces to decrease transfers for the delivery of those programs at the local level. I would venture to say that the difficulty which hospital administrators are faced with today is the following. After six years of cut-backs, almost all of the fat which was in the system in the latter part of the seventies has been removed. I know that many Members of Parliament sitting around me sat on hospital boards before their entrance into federal politics at a time in which these cut-backs were occurring. I think we all recognize the cut-backs that had to occur when administrators and hospital boards were faced with cut-backs in provincial transfers to the local level. Having now reached the stage in 1985-86 at which there is no longer any fat to be removed from the system, what do Conservative Members think will happen to the level of health care services when transfer payments will be cut back over the next five to six years to the tune of $6 billion?

Let me give the House a specific example of what will happen as a result of today's legislation in the Province of Ontario. This is where the hypocrisy and cynicism begins. Under this legislation, the Government has now proposed that in fiscal year 1986-87, there will be a decrease in the transfers to the Province of Ontario of some $114 million in this year alone. Yet in May of 1985 when the Minister of Finance tabled a Budget, he showed clearly that for the year 1986-87, the Government planned to save no money. However, the Government broke its word.

Do you know why the Government broke its word, Mr. Speaker? I submit it broke its word because something happened between the time the Minister gave the Economic Statement of November 1984 and the time he tabled the February 1986 Budget. The major occurrence that made the Government require new sources of revenue was the bail-out of the two western banks. I submit that this was the major reason the Government decided to accelerate the decrease in transfers to the provinces.

Simply put, if Conservative Members were going to live up to their word about how they were going to be such great masters of deficit control, they would have to find new sources of revenue. They simply said: "It does not really matter what we promised in the November Economic Statement or the election campaign of the summer of 1984. It does not matter because the Canadian public will forget about that by the time the 1988 election rolls around". That is why they introduced an accelerated reduction in the federal transfers for post-secondary education and medicare.

I would like to have asked Hon. Members opposite where they think the provinces are going to find the money required to make up for the decrease in transfers to their Treasuries. It does not take a genius to come to the conclusion that a provincial Treasurer will have three options. First, he could increase provincial taxes to cover the shortfall. Second, he could reduce the level of services available under established programs financing. Probably the more realistic choice, the third choice, is a hybrid one. He could increase taxes somewhat and decrease services at the same time. Let us make sure that the Canadian people understand why there will be a decrease in services. Let us not enter this debate blindly. Any Government at a provincial level will have to make one of those three choices.

I would like to read into the public record the words spoken by the Premier of Ontario when he learned of the treacherous manner in which the Government plans to reduce the size of the federal deficit. Mr. David Peterson had this to say, as reported by Le Devoir of November 29, 1985:

"This reduction in the funds provided the provinces will translate into a reduction in services. There will be fewer hospital beds—

The Gazette of November 29, 1985, quoted him as saying the following:

"You don't call it a cut. You could call it a breach of faith. You could call it breaking a promise"... Mulroney shot back: 'It's not a broken promise. It's a responsible attempt to deal with a major Canadian problem' (the deficit)—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): That's right. Your deficit.

Mr. Frith: Where were the Conservatives during the election campaign of the summer of 1984? Do not tell me that they said that the secretive practices of the Liberal Government prevented them from having full knowledge of the full extent of the federal deficit. They could not campaign on that. During the election campaign of the summer of 1984, we campaigned on the idea that the deficit should never be reduced on the backs of the poor, the oppressed, the sick, or the unemployed. That is exactly what this Government has decided to do. Conservative Members at least ought to admit—

Mr. Stewart: Do you want a larger deficit?

Mr. Gauthier: There's one guy talking about larger deficits.

Mr. Frith: They should admit that the deficit reduction program proposed by the federal Government will be riding on the backs of those people to whom I referred. That is why people treat them with such cynicism. They cannot stand it.

I welcome any interventions made by Hon. Members opposite. It is an incredible performance when the Minister of Finance along with his Parliamentary Secretary (Mr. Vincent) tables legislation that we all know will break every one of the fundamental promises that were made during the election campaign, and then suddenly washes his hands of it by saying that it is not his fault, the devil made him do it, along with the former Liberal Government's hiding of the actual size of the deficit. Government Members may not realize it now, but that is not cutting well with the Canadian public. Once we see the impact of these cuts, I am going to see my constituents and I am sure every one of them will be asking why Conservative back-benchers sat quietly while the Government was tearing at the fabric of post-secondary education and medicare.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment to make and then a question to ask. The Hon. Member spoke about statements that I made during the debate on the six and five issue. That debate dealt with inflation and protection against the costs that were rising at that time very much faster than 6 per cent and 5 per cent. The former Government cut back on payments and transfers to an artificial level of six and five knowing that the recipient provinces would not have sufficient money to cover the inflation in the cost of these very programs. However, that is not the case with this Bill.

This Bill deals with a dramatically different economic situation than that which existed during the six and five debate. We now have a Government that is prepared to, and capable of, creating real growth in the economy. We are saying that instead of allowing education and health care transfers to grow with the growth in the economy, the growth should be restrained to some extent in view of the enormous deficit position.

The Bill allows for complete inflation protection. The restraint in the Bill is only directed at increases in real GNP. If there were no increase in GNP, then there would be no restraint. There is a very dramatic difference, as the Hon. Member should know, between this Bill and the six and five Bill.

Does the Hon. Member believe that we should continue to allow transfers to grow based on the growth of the economy, or does he think, in view of the serious fiscal situation of the federal Government, that we ought to allow the transfers to grow but only on the basis of inflation plus some of the growth in the economy but not all?

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite is an expert at manipulating figures. That is very clear. He was able to manipulate the numbers in the six and five program to come up with one policy position when in opposition, and he now wants to use a different set of numbers to justify a complete reversal of that position taken by the Conservatives during the election campaign of the summer of 1984.

Conservative Members did not promise to limit the growth in transfers to provinces required to maintain the delivery of medicare and post-secondary education services. What the Hon. Member is suggesting is a complete untruth. He has to realize that Conservative Members have broken a promise and that in fact transfer payments will only grow at the level of CPI minus 2 per cent. It will not even keep up with the level of economic growth. For example, the provincial Government of Ontario in 1986-87 will have to find an additional $114 million. Why did the Hon. Member opposite not campaign on that in the summer of 1984 and advocate those kinds of cuts?

This is why I say that people no longer trust politicians. They find too often that they break their word. Before the Hon. Member takes another shot at me, I should like to indicate that, to some extent, we have been guilty of practice along the same vein. However, we paid the price in 1984, and I remind Hon. Members opposite that they will pay the price in 1988.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that this is not 2 per cent less inflation. It is a reduction in the growth in GNP. Inflation is completely covered in the Bill. It is only if the GNP does not grow in excess of 2 per cent. It is the growth in the GNP which is the restraint, not the cover for inflation. The Bill particularly covers the transfers for inflation. The provinces are protected for inflation. Indeed, the provinces get more than inflation.

As the Hon. Member knows, last year our GNP grew by 4.5 per cent or 4.9 per cent. Right now we are doing well; if there were to be no further growth for the balance of the year, the GNP would grow by over 2 per cent. The provinces will get real growth this year in the transfer, plus all the inflation growth.

The Bill specifically protects against the damages and ravages of inflation. That is not what the six and five Bill did, and the Hon. Member ought to know it. We perform on our promises. We have performed on every promise we made—

Mr. Frith: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: —and we have more promises to fulfil, but we have our term of office and we will be here for a long time. The Hon. Member ought to understand that.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, let me correct the record. In the heat of the exchange I made a mistake when I talked about the CPI. In effect it relates to the GNP. However, the Hon. Member opposite must surely agree that the net result of the proposed legislation on the floor of the House today is a situation whereby the provinces by 1991-92 will have to come up with the difference.

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh, no, they will not.

Mr. Frith: The Hon. Member can say what he wants, but the Bill will transfer the burden of deficit reduction off the backs of federal taxpayers and on to the backs of provincial taxpayers. That is all it will accomplish. That is the premise at the heart of the Bill, and Hon. Members do not want to discuss it.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raised the topic of cynicism. Canadians would be less cynical if he rose in the Chamber and really talked about the difference between the two Bills. When the Liberals brought in their six and five program, they were deliberately cutting transfers below the rate of inflation, which indeed would mean a loss to the provinces. Just to maintain services, they would have to pick up the differences. This Bill limits increases to inflation plus approximately 2 per cent. It goes beyond inflation, and educational institutions and hospitals can grow on federal dollars alone. If they are matched by the provinces, they can grow even faster. That is the big difference.

I have in my possession an Auditor General's Report. For the last year of the Hon. Member's Government, going into an election, the debt of the country was increased by 17 per cent to try to bribe voters. That is the root cause of cynicism.

Earlier we had an argument about the difference between Finance Ministers. During the last three years of the term of office of their Minister of Finance, they overestimated revenue and underestimated expenditures for every year, and the deficits were 25 per cent higher than they told us in the Chamber. That is also the root of the cynicism.

When they rise to try to tell Canadians that this Bill is worse than their Bill and the opposite is true, when they rise and support Finance Ministers who do not tell any of us the truth about any kind of fiscal planning, then they are responsible as a political Party and as individual Members for the cynicism out there. During the 1984 election campaign we told people that budgets had to be cut and that we could no longer continue to borrow money. That is why we can stand in the Chamber with pride every time we support a budgetary cut. That is the position in which Conservatives find themselves—no cynicism, but reality.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member opposite truly have such a short memory? During the summer election campaign of 1984, did we ever hear budget reduction mentioned once by the Conservative Party?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Frith: Did we ever hear those words used by them? No, we did not. They said that universality was a sacred trust not to be tampered with. They never once mentioned to the Canadian public that they had a hidden agenda. They never once mentioned that during the summer campaign. In the Economic Statement of November 1984, did they mention to the provincial Premiers and Treasurers that the payments in 1986-87 would be cut? No, they did not. In the documents tabled with the May 1985 Budget, they showed no savings in transfers between the provinces, yet they double-crossed everybody by introducing legislation in 1986 which will cut to the total tune of $317 million the transfer of savings to the provinces. It does not take a genius to figure out that the provinces will have to make up the difference.

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak to this Bill and, if I may, I will try to set the record straight after listening to the misleading statements just made by the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith).

Mr. Speaker, the proposed changes to the EPF legislation call for amendments to the 1977 statute on fiscal arrangements between the provinces and the federal Government. Pursuant to this statute, the federal Government is empowered to contribute to provincial post-secondary education and health programs, commonly referred to as EPF or Established Programs Financing.

The main amendment is a simple change to a provision of the existing legislation which sets the rate of increase of EPF transfer payments.

Contrary to what the Hon. Member for Sudbury has just said, this amendment is part and parcel of our strategy aimed at reducing the deficit, as advocated in the May 1985 Budget.

As of April 1, 1986 EPF transfers will continue to increase as is the case now, that is geared to GNP and population figures, the difference being that they will be set at growth less 2 per cent. Therefore it is totally false to pretend that they will be reduced.

In spite of this change, the average rate of growth of cash and tax point federal contributions will be 5 per cent annually during the next five years. A total of over $90 billion will have been allocated to provincial health care and post-secondary education provincial programs by 1990-91, which is some $25 billion more than during the last five years.

The changes made by the Government to the percentage of increase for EPF transfers were announced in the May 1985 budget. That budget forecast a substantial increase in these transfer payments. However, they were to increase more slowly in accordance with our strategy to reduce the federal deficit. The changes come into effect on April 1, 1986, and will have the following results: an average annual rate of growth forecast at 5 per cent, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, and cash and tax transfers of over $90 billion for provincial health care and post-secondary education programs during the next five years, which is about $25 billion more than during the last five years.

• (1640)

As my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated when the consultations with the provincial Finance Ministers came to an end last December—and some people suggest that there were no consultations—the growth of EPF transfers will continue to be linked with the growth in the economy, the per capita GNP and the population in each province, and the increase of the transfer payments will never be lower than the inflation rate.

The changes brought about by this Government will mean a slight slowdown, not a reduction in the growth of provincial transfers, and this is both fair and reasonable.

Mr. Speaker, at this stage I would like to try and answer some questions that were asked by Hon. Members opposite, for instance: Why do you reduce federal support to health and post-secondary education, Mr. Speaker? There is no reduction. We are paying out huge amounts. They have been increased by not insignificant amounts. Especially when compared to expenditures on other federal programs that on average are increasing much more slowly, this reflects the high priority given by this Government to helping the provinces in the areas of health and post-secondary education.

Why should we not wait another six months, Mr. Speaker, as the suggestion is? No, Mr. Speaker. We must implement this measure immediately. Within our deficit reduction strategy, very many decisions were taken on other federal programs. Those transfers are made under federal legislation that is subject to no time constraints and that can be amended at any time. We must act now to control the deficit. Otherwise, because of the increasing debt charges, the Government will be less and less able to support major social services as health and post-secondary education.

They tell us we acted without consultation. That is not true. There has been no surprise. Discussions with the provinces were opened following the Government's economic statement of November, 1984. We told them that no change would be made in 1985-86, but that future years would be reviewed. This respects the Government's commitment on federal-provincial relations. There have been extensive consultations with the provinces on the manner in which the measures would be implemented. There have been four meetings of Ministers of Finance since the beginning of May and also a conference of First Ministers.

What will happen to the low income provinces, asked the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) a while ago? The basic principle for the EPF transfers if that they are paid on a pro rata basis. Because of this characteristic, the federal Government contributes the same amount for each Canadian. The low income provinces receive additional assistance through equalization payments, more specifically a total amount of $5 billion per year paid to the six provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker, what will happen to the provinces which will see a reduction in their transfers? asked the Hon. Member for Sudbury a while ago. Again, this is an outright falsehood, because they will not be reduced. They suggested three reasons, three things, or three options: first of all, increase the taxes; second, reduce the services; or third, a combination of the two.

Mr. Speaker, he has just given us the proof that, for Liberals, the notion of reducing expenditures simply does not exist. That is not part of their vocabulary. For them, there is no way of reducing, say, the Budget by reducing the expenditures. Evidence to that effect was submitted a while ago by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) who has shown that every year over the last three years, their forecasts had been exceeded in tremendous proportions.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if it is impossible to reduce a deficit, what are his colleagues who have just been elected in Ontario, Quebec, and Prince Edward Island going to do who have proposed to reduce their respective deficits by reducing their expenditures without cutting the services? The EPF scheme is by far the main transfer program to the provinces, and it is the one which has increased the most over the past few years. This is a per capita amount, paid to the provinces, which covers approximately 50 per cent of provincial spending on health insurance and hospital insurance as well as 50 per cent of operating costs of institutions for post-secondary education.

In 1985-86, EPF payments are $508 per capita, to which is added an extra $43 per capita to help finance supplementary health services. EPF transfers have increased according to a movable three-year average of GNP growth linked to population growth. According to current projections, EPF payments will increase by more than 70 per cent over the next five years. In order to save $2 billion in 1990-91, their rate of growth only has to be reduced slightly and will still be at a level well above the rate of inflation and the growth rate of the economy. We have decided to make the requisite saving as part of our strategy for reducing the deficit through EPF. The necessary adjustments will be made starting April 1, 1986, to spread the effects of the change over a period of five years.

Mr. Speaker, our commitment to health care and post-secondary education remains as strong as ever. EPF transfers will continue to represent nearly half of provincial spending on health insurance services and on operating costs of institutions for post-secondary education. In the interests of all Canadians, the provinces provide health and educational services, yet must show responsibility in financial matters.

Mr. Speaker, this Government was elected to give Canadians the same kind of or better services for less money. The deficit remains a serious problem which we must resolve with every means at our disposal. This amendment to federal-provincial transfers is part and parcel of our medium-term financial strategy to reduce the deficit by $20 billion in 1990-91, and the projected national debt level by $75 billion between now and the end of the decade. But we must look beyond figures. These amounts represent our mortgaged future, the inheritance of our children and grandchildren. It is up to us to check the growing federal expenditures, otherwise the debt load will considerably reduce our capacity to deliver the same public services in the future. Mr. Speaker, that is exactly why Canadians asked us to take over the administration of this country on September 4, 1984.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I would have been more impressed had the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) not been so sanctimonious and had he refrained from accusing the provinces of having mismanaged health and post-secondary administration funds. He comes from a province where considerable efforts have been made for about ten years, I would even say 15 years, to get a handle on expenditures.

I should like to ask him how he explains the fact, for example, that according to the measure under consideration there are two kinds of payments in this transfer formula, namely tax transfers and cash transfers. But as concerns cash payments, how does he explain the fact that, according to the formula, Quebec would no longer receive any cash payments within a few years, and that, under the formula suggested by the Conservative Government, these cash payments will increase more slowly, and substantially so, that the Gross National Product? The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) could perhaps explain this fact also if he rises to speak. He could perhaps explain why the cash transfer payments will increase at a lower rate than the GNP.

I would like the Hon. Member to explain why it is that, in the provinces whose government has accepted a cost-sharing formula, and this is true for Quebec and other provinces, cash payments will increase more slowly than the GNP, and the rate of increase will even be lower than inflation this year. Could he explain this to me?

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has just given us another illustration of his ability to distort truth and to misinterpret the comments of those who speak before him.

Mr. Speaker, I never accused the provinces of bad administration or of mismanagement. I said that, in the provinces where Liberal Governments have been elected recently, these Governments have said that they would reduce expenditures. The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) said earlier—the Members opposite speak about a reduction in transfer payments or cutbacks, but the fact is that they will simply not increase as quickly—these provinces would have only three options open to them: first, an increase in taxes, second, service cutbacks, and third, a combination of both.

So, I said that it could not come to the minds of Liberal Members, who so shamefully dragged the country into debt, who so shamefully wasted the taxpayers' money, it could not come to their minds that expenditures could be reduced by slashing through expenditures. This is how it is done.

Therefore, to answer the second part of your question, Mr. former Quebec Finance Minister, Mr. former Bank President, Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, you know, Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides that expenditures are proportional to revenues. You must know, this is a fact, that when you were Finance minister in Quebec you did not know that. But I hope that, when you were Bank President, your shareholders reminded you of it. And whenever expenditures were higher than revenues, there was a deficit, we could not go on indefinetely along that road, and cuts had to be made.

Therefore the payments that will be made will not be broken down or divided as you state or as you might like to have it, but they will be in overall amounts, and this, Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, is at the request of the provinces themselves.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean has just shown a stark lack of knowledge. Why were those fiscal arrangements accepted in 1977, why did the provinces accept them at that time? Because it was definitely accepted that the transfer of tax points was there to acknowledge provincial responsibility for those education and health care jurisdictions. And because of the effect of that legislation and because the Government cannot change tax points for they are collected by Quebec in the case of that province, and they have agreements. Since they cannot tamper with tax points, and I would like to return to my question, how does he then explain that if, as it is claimed, this legislation is so good, how is it that the increase in cash payments, because this is what the federal Government is doing and it cannot change tax points, how is it that the increase in cash payments will be smaller than that of both the GNP and the inflation rate? How does he explain that?

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the people in the Lac-Saint-Jean area are not as knowledgeable as the Hon.

Member for Laval-des-Rapides, but in 1976, they sure had enough knowledge to throw them out.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides should know in his great wisdom that when one makes forecasts and establishes programs, a great many things can change nine years down the road. When in 1977 the provinces and the federal Government came to an agreement on a formula, on rates and amounts, they knew quite well that some time down the road, the situation could change and when it did, the parties would sit down and negotiate again. That's what has happened, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this Bill is a return of the Liberal attempt to cut the amount of money available for education and health care across the country. It is quite obvious that the tendency towards cutting which appears in the Nielsen Report is going to be in place for quite some time. Federal transfer payments to the provinces are obviously not going to be allowed to increase in line with increases in the Gross National Product or program requirements. This is simply a re-run of the 1981-82 Liberal operation to cut back on the amount of money going to the provinces. While the cost of operation of health care and education increases, the federal government contribution towards those costs decreases. We should recognize that, when we look at the Nielsen Report and other government policies, what is happening is a tendency to keep on—

HISTORIC EVENTS

SUGGESTED REAFFIRMATION OF MÉTIS RIGHTS

The House resumed from Monday, February 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Penner:

That:

Whereas 1985 is the centenary of the Northwest Resistance, the most important event in the history of the Métis Nation and a milestone in the history of Canada; and

Whereas the leader of the Métis people, Louis David Riel, was executed for his role in that resistance; and

Whereas Louis David Riel negotiated Manitoba's entry into Confederation and was thrice elected to the House of Commons; and

Whereas the Métis people have continued to strive, since the death of Louis David Riel, for the recognition of their rights; and

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 recognized and affirmed the rights of the Métis people;

Be it resolved that this House

1. acknowledge the significant contributions of the Métis people to the development of the West and the creation of Canada;

2. recognize Louis David Riel as the founder of Manitoba and a father of Confederation;

3. celebrate with the Métis their unique culture and heritage;

4. support self-government and a land base for the Métis.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): We are resuming debate today on this motion and I may remind Members that the period allowed for speeches is now ten minutes under the new rules. Resuming debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my home is not many miles from Batoche. I grew up accepting the stature of Louis Riel as a great leader who had attempted democratically to deal with problems of his people. He attempted in the Red River settlement area and later in Batoche to unite the Métis of the area with the other pioneer farmers who felt the same kind of isolation as did the Métis in the area. He tried to unite them into a democratic and political force which would make the Canadian Government deal with the problems of their life and their lifestyle as a developing nation.

Louis Riel's efforts had borne fruit in the Red River settlement. The Government, under the Right Hon. John A. Macdonald, had acquiesced and accepted the basic request of the provisional Government of Manitoba for entrance into Canada as a province. The Government accepted that, but then John A. Macdonald and his Conservative cronies betrayed the people of Manitoba. Instead of acceptance which they had the right to expect, the provisional Government led by Louis Riel was betrayed. Instead of assistance, they got troops. Instead of recognition, Louis Riel was hunted by those troops and several attempts were made to put him under arrest. He was forced to leave the Red River settlement and go into isolation in the States.

Even as Manitoba was recognized as a province and became one because of the Métis action and the leadership of Louis Riel, he found himself exiled. A few years later when he was called back to help the Métis at Batoche and St. Laurent, St. Louis and Duck Lake, he was called back by the same people who had fought alongside of him in the Red River area. The same people who had been betrayed in the Manitoba settlement were the ones who called him back to lead them in the Batoche area. They were people like the Lepine's and the Fiddlers, the McLeans and the McDougalls, the Parenteaus and the Morins, names which are still prominent names in the Batoche, Duck Lake, St. Laurent and St. Louis districts. Those names and those people have survived in that part of Canada around Batoche. They have been the central core of those communities and have contributed a great deal to Canada.

People like the McDougalls, the Fiddlers and the Dumonts have made themselves part of a very vital community. These were the people who settled the area, people who had been betrayed at the Red River, were forced out, trekked across the Prairies to the Saskatchewan River and settled in the communities of Batoche, Duck Lake and St. Laurent.

The Métis had no reason to trust the Government of the day. When the Government showed that it was following the same course as it did at the Red River, even Louis Riel wavered in his determination to strive for peace. For 100 years the Métis have fought to stay culturally and ethnically alive. In 1982 they won a battle that had escaped them at the Red River and at Batoche. They won recognition of their rights as a founding people, a founding people who were of mixed blood of the First Nations and of the so-called founding nations of France and the British Isles.

The names that appear in records of the Red River and the Batoche skirmish appear along with others in records of their fight to make those rights part of the mosaic of Canada. It was with a great deal of pride that two weeks ago I watched Mederic McDougall, accompanied by his wife Maryanne Lepine, receive the Order of Canada for service rendered to his people and to Canada. The winning of the recognition of the Métis rights was a political victory won by people like Mederic and many others.

This resolution, should it receive the support of this House, would help to erase the long and widely established discrimination against the Métis people. I commend the Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) for his persistence in bringing forward the motion on the four points which acknowledged the contribution of the Métis people and their right to defend and develop their culture and heritage as well as to have a basis for self-determination. Those points acknowledge the significant contribution of the Métis people to the development of the West and the creation of Canada. It is a small point, but important for the people who, for 100 years, have fought to have that matter recognized, and to recognize Louis David Riel as the founder of Manitoba and the father of Confederation.

Again, who can deny that his original provisional Government in Manitoba was the original Government that brought Manitoba into Confederation? They have fought for it strongly and well, and have won the first step. This House can do little more than acquiesce in that request. We should support self-government and a land base for the Métis. They have long sought self-determination, and only by such an action can they fulfil that requirement.

Louis Riel was one of the first reformers in western Canada. He was followed by others who formed organizations like the wheat pools, the farmers' union and the CCF. Those movements were allowed to develop and to prosper. After 100 years is it not time to assist the Métis to develop and prosper as well?

• (1710)

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to partake in this debate. I want to congratulate all those Hon. Members who I believe have spoken exceedingly well in this debate.

All of us in the House should applaud and agree with the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), pointed out with pride that he is a Métis descendant himself. I would encourage Hon. Members to read his speech because I believe it is an excellent description of Métis history as given by a Member of Parliament who, like Louis Riel, is a Métis.

The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mr. Scott), the Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins) and the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) gave excellent speeches.

I agree with much of what has been said. In 10 minutes it is difficult to deal with this subject which is of such importance to all of us who were born in Manitoba and brought up in that province——with the memory of Louis Riel present everywhere. As you know, Mr. Speaker, he was buried near Winnipeg in the city of St. Boniface, and I think most Manitobans admire Louis Riel as the founder of our province and, in fact, of Canada.

[Translation]

[English]

It might interest you to know, Mr. Speaker, that I am holding the 1911 edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, which has about half a page dealing with Louis Riel. The first entry indicates that he is "a Canadian agitator". While the passage contains some good comments about him, it goes on to state: "His own rashness and the ineptitude of Canadian politicians and officials brought on the uprising of 1885".

Let us turn to The Canadian Encyclopedia which was published recently. One wonders if one is talking about the same person. George Stanley pays Louis Riel great tribute and calls him a founder of Manitoba. He presents the uprising in 1870 sympathetically and, I suggest, accurately, from an historical point of view.

I believe this passage deals with Louis Riel and his followers in a way that I believe all western Canadians would now find acceptable. I might point out that Thomas Scott who was ultimately killed, attempted to arouse Scottish settlers in Manitoba. As someone of Scottish origin, I am sorry if any of my ancestors were involved in that attempt by Scott.

The final entry on Louis Riel in the Canadian Encyclopedia reads:

> In the West, the immediate result was to depress the lot of the Métis.

That was after 1885. It goes on:

In central Canada, FRENCH CANADIAN NATIONALISM was strengthened and Honoré Mercier came to power in Quebec in 1886.

History does seem to belong to those who win the battles. Fortunately, we in the West are becoming more understanding. Let me refer to a book entitled Strange Empire written by Joseph Kinsey Howard in 1951. This book treats Riel, the Métis and the Prairies with enormous empathy. The preface of the book states:

This is the first book in English that describes the origin of the Métis, that unique people of mixed white and red blood, and there is only one work in French that describes it. It is the first book that traces in any detail the development of the great annual buffalo hunt which was the centre of Métis life or that deals more than perfunctorily with the fascinating lore of the Red River cart.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, in the days that Red River carts were used on the Prairies, they could be heard from a distance of two miles. The preface continues:

And it is the first book that has ever told for American readers the story of the two Métis rebellions that were so dramatic a menace to Canadian union and lighted such a strange hope of American expansion in Canadian territory.

To my knowledge, this book, written in 1951, is the first book that described Louis Riel fairly. Ironically, it was written by an American from Montana.

I suggest that every Canadian should read The Opening of the Canadian West by Douglas Hill. It essentially describes Louis Riel as a hero rather than a criminal. Finally, I would like to refer to a book entitled Manitoba: A History written by William Morton. He is one of the best known historians in Canada in the 20th Century, and is certainly the best known and best loved historian in the Province of Manitoba. I want to quote the following passage from page 138 of Manitoba: A History on Riel.

—he was destroyed by the very force which had raised him to power, the military organization of the Métis. His frantic, often admirable, efforts amid the menace of the Canadian risings, the intrigues of the Americans, the divisions and instability of his own people, to shift the basis of power from the military organization to the civil authority of a provisional government had ended in unmitigated tragedy.

The shooting of Scott was a blunder, so much a blunder that it is difficult to believe a man of Riel's quality could have committed it except under the compulsion of the guards' exasperation and the threat of an Indian rising fomented by Schultz.

I believe Schultz is one of the scoundrels in this story, although my colleague from Brandon—Souris points out that he later became Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba. Morton continues:

It was, unhappily, worse than a blunder—it was unnecessary. The Provisional Government had been accepted and peace was returning to Red River. Schultz was actually in flight and the Indians were quiet.

He goes on to state:

For Riel thereafter there was to be no peace in the Northwest he loved, no peace anywhere but the forlorn peace of exile and the final peace of the gibbet at Regina.

I believe my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark), who is an historian, will agree that all people from Manitoba and the Prairies know that Louis Riel is the first genuine hero of our region.

I want to cite a passage on Louis Riel that appears in Canadian Quotations by Robert Hamilton. Edward Blake, the Leader of the Liberal Party of the day, stated it better than anyone, I believe. I agree with him fully. He stated:

Had there been no neglect there would have been no rebellion. If no rebellion, then no arrest. If no arrest, then no trial. If no trial, then no condemnation. If no condemnation, then no execution. They therefore who are responsible for the first are responsible for every link in that fatal chain.

If all of us knew more about Louis Riel, I think all of us would know about a great man who was all too briefly with us.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) presented his motion, because it gives us an opportunity to recall a particularly important page in the history of Canada. There is no doubt that Louis Riel had an enormous impact on the development of this country, and the motion before the House deals implicitly and explicitly with the role he played in the birth of our Canadian nation.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I imagine all Canadians will agree that the Métis have made a vital contribution towards opening up the West and the creation of our country. If we go back to the origins of this people in Canada, we have to go back to the first French-Canadian and English-Canadian settlements and the Indians who were living on the same land. In fact, the paternal ancestors of the Métis were French sailors who came to Canada in 1534 with Jacques Cartier and, a century later, with Champlain. We also find the two great trading companies upon their arrival in the North-West of what is now known as Canada, and I am referring to the Hudson's Bay Company for the English and the Compagnie du Nord-Ouest for the French. On the maternal side, the Métis trace their ancestry to the Indian women who also lived in these Western territories. I think I should point out that the Métis of French origin and those of English origin soon established a climate of friendship and harmony, perhaps because of the solidarity that is the inevitable result of a hard pioneer life. Interestingly, when Louis Riel became the President of a provisional government that was set up to fill the vacuum left by the withdrawal of the Hudson's Bay Company, until the advent of a Canadian government, he enjoyed the support of Métis of all origins.

The Métis have made a valuable contribution to this country, a contribution that is partly connected with their way of life, in other words, their understanding of the ecology of a vast region, their knowledge of hunting and fishing and their ability to survive and prosper in the most inclement climate.

The Métis settled in carefully selected sites, gradually occupying rich lands along the Red, Assiniboine and Seine Rivers. Given the slowness of communications at the time, it was only natural that the Metis should voice concern about the negative impact which a new political regime and the massive influx of immigrants might have on their way of life and their lands. No wonder a dispute broke out in the North-West and Louis Riel became their leader.

Many things have been said and written about Louis Riel, and I am sure a number of Canadians would get to appreciate the man if only they would go to the trouble of reading a few books on his life, whether authored by sympathizers, foes, or impartial historians.

Here is what a historian said about Louis Riel: As long as Canada exists, Canadians will want to know who Louis Riel was, for the man is the epitome of the particular dynamics of prevailing tensions in Canada—English against French, Indians against white people, east against west, Canadians against Americans.

Hopefully, in contemporary Canada, such tensions have vanished and groups are not pitted one against another. The fact remains that Louis Riel lived and fought at a time when these tensions were strongest, when the Canadian nation was still in its infancy, when the country's frontiers were still unmarked, and when rights and values still had to be established.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to the second point of the motion: recognize Louis Riel as the founder of Manitoba and a Father of Confederation.

I have no hesitation in acknowledging the key role played by Louis Riel in the entry of Manitoba into Confederation. First, it should be pointed out that the provisional government led by Louis Riel had been democratically elected by the population of the West to fill the gap between the time when the Hudson's Bay Company renounced its responsibility over Rupert's Land and the moment when a new system was implemented by Canada, which then comprised four provinces: Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

At that time, there was uncertainty about the future of Rupert's Land: would it become the colony of a colony or part of the new Dominion?

Louis Riel was wholeheartedly in favour of provincial status. He was one of the strongest supporters of this option, and in fact, he and other members of the provisional government executive council printed a list of rights in both French and English which was to be the official document of the delegates sent by the provisional government to the Canadian authorities. This list ultimately became a key instrument in the development of the 1870 Manitoba Act, under which the province joined Confederation.

This list of rights contained in embryo form the rights and freedoms we enjoy today as well as protection of the language and culture of the minority, which have now become a characteristic of our Federation.

Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the great role and importance of Louis Riel. However, I have serious reservations as concerns the part of the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) which asks that Louis Riel be recognized as the founder of Manitoba and a Father of Confederation.

Mr. Speaker, I have these reservations because, in my opinion, it is up to the Manitoba Government alone and not to the Canadian Parliament to make decisions on issues related to its foundation. As for the Fathers of Confederation, I imagine that all Canadians have seen the portrait reproduced in numerous Canadian history books which shows them sitting or standing around a long table. These people were in attendance at the Quebec conference in 1864, and they were the delegates of what was then called Canada, namely Quebec and Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and even Newfoundland which, as we know, only joined Confederation 85 years later. At that time, what is now Western Canada was not a party to the negotiations, which explains why no Western Canadian is shown in that picture. Of course, this in no way belittles the role played by famous westerners such as Louis Riel and his followers, Father Ritchot, John Black and Alfred Scott who negotiated with Canada with a view to obtaining provincial status for Manitoba.

That picture in no way belittles either the role played in British Columbia by Anthony Musgrave and Dr. J. Helchen, who, after violently opposing Confederation, fought to have British Columbia admitted in 1871. Also deserving was F.W.G. Haultain, first minister for the Territories who worked to make room for Alberta and Saskatchewan in Confederation in 1905. Those people may not be as well known as Louis Riel, but nevertheless they played just as genuine and commendable a role.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that my distinguished colleagues now know many westerners deserve a special place for their efforts to have their respective areas join Confederation. Although they did not all attend the famous Quebec City Conference, their forefathers contributed to make Canada what it is today.

Mr. Speaker, the House will understand that if I admire Louis Riel for the part he played in the creation of Manitoba, I have qualms about a motion which would recognize him as a Father of Confederation without granting the same honour to all the other deserving figures in the history of our country. We should then have to rewrite our history. However, the place which should be rightfully Louis David Riel's in the history of Canada may have been neglected; I believe therefore that his contribution as well as that of his supporters in the development of Canada should be recognized for what they were.

[English]

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to add my comments as a Canadian and as a former educator to this motion. The Hon. Member who preceded me in this debate referred to the list of rights drawn up by Louis Riel in a document which became key in determining the provisions of the Manitoba Act of 1870.

Clause 1, for instance, provided that:

The Territories, heretofore known as Rupert's Land and the Northwest, shall not enter into the Confederation of the Dominion of Canada, except as a province.

Clause 5 stated that:

All properties, rights and privileges enjoyed by the people of the province, up to the date of entering into Confederation, be respected and that the arrangement and confirmation of all customs, usages, and privileges be left exclusively to the local legislature.

Clause 16 requested that:

The English and French languages be common in the legislature and in the courts and that all public documents as well as acts of the legislature be published in both languages.

A new Clause 7 appeared in the third draft of the list of rights carried to Ottawa by the official delegates.

That the schools be separated and that the school funds be divided among the various religious denominations, at the pro rata of their respective populations.

• (1730)

So we can see from these clauses just what a strong and enduring influence Riel, as head of the provisional Government, had on the unfolding of Canadian constitutional history. This is a matter which surely cannot be disputed. The proof lies in these documents from over a century ago.

I would now like to turn to the final point raised in the Hon. Member's motion, that is, the matter of self-government and a land base for the Métis people. Historically, Métis communities developed initially along the French fur trade routes to the Great Lakes. With the decline of the fur trade many Métis immigrated to the Red River area in Manitoba. Some went further west to Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. Of course, others remained in Quebec and the maritime provinces. This early Métis settlement pattern continues today in that the Métis population resides predominantly in our western provinces. It is also primarily in the West that Métis aspirations for self-government and a land base have developed.

The federal Government has a strong and continuing interest in the Métis people. This has been manifested in a number of ways. First, the federal Government has an interest in improving the socio-economic situation of the Métis. In fact, this concern which extends to all aboriginal peoples has been a prime motivating factor for current special initiatives from which Métis benefit. These initiatives include the Rural and Native Housing Program, the Native Economic Development Program, as well as special measures under the agricultural and rural development agreements.

Second, the federal Government has demonstrated its concern and support for the Métis as one of Canada's aboriginal peoples. I note that formal recognition of the Métis as one of Canada's aboriginal peoples came about with passage of the Constitution Act, 1982. Subsequently, representatives of Métis people, together with Indian and Inuit leaders, have been invited to participate in First Ministers' Conferences on aboriginal constitutional matters and associated multilateral discussions with the federal, provincial and territorial Governments. The purpose of these discussions is to identify and define aboriginal rights for possible entrenchment in our Constitution.

Since the initial First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal constitutional matters, which was convened in 1983, a wide range of issues has been addressed, issues which are central to aboriginal peoples' concerns and aspirations about their rightful place in Canadian society now and in the years ahead. As Members of the House will know, the matter of self-government for Canada's aboriginal peoples, including the Métis, has been a major agenda item in the ongoing aboriginal constitutional process.

In this regard, I note that the federal Government has played an important role in addressing the Métis and other aboriginal peoples' aspirations for self-government. At the April 1985 First Ministers' Conference, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tabled a proposed political accord which provided for constitutional recognition of a right of aboriginal peoples to self-government, which right would be set out and come into force through agreements between Governments and aboriginal peoples. Furthermore, Governments would be committed to entering into negotiations with aboriginal communities aimed at concluding the appropriate agreements.

Unfortunately, this federal proposal did not achieve a sufficient consensus for the proposed constitutional amendment to proceed. However, self-government will clearly continue to be an important item for discussion during preparations leading up to the next First Ministers' Conference to be held before April, 1987 and the deliberations at the conference. This is why the federal Government agreed to participate in self-government negotiations which are initiated by the provinces and aboriginal associations. In this process the federal Government will continue to work with Métis, other aboriginal leaders and other Governments with a view to developing constitutional provisions for self-government that are acceptable to all Canadians. Similarly, the federal Government will continue to work with the provinces and Métis to improve their socio-economic circumstances and opportunities within Canadian society.

This is the situation in which we find ourselves with regard to the fourth point of the Hon. Member's motion. The Government is very clearly and deeply involved in the constitutional matter.

From what I have said Hon. Members will see that while I am sympathetic to many aspects of the motion, I have some concerns about other aspects, as I indicated earlier.

In concluding my remarks I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) on his motion which displays a great sensitivity to the history and aspirations of the Métis people.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my views to those already expressed by my colleagues in regard to the motion before us in the name of the Hon.

Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). I think all Canadians can look to the Métis heritage with pride, recognizing in it the strength and vision which characterized the mixture of Indian bloodlines with those of our early European settlers and which has continued right through to this day.

The Métis sense of identity is very strong. It contributes in a major way to the more general Canadian identity. The fact that Louis Riel was a firm believer in the merits of joining Confederation, and that he worked prodigiously to bring what became Manitoba into the union, was a source of pride for the Métis a century ago, as I am sure it continues to be right to this day. I think there can be no question of the importance of his support in giving direction and inspiration to the various documents which the delegates of the provisional Government carried to Ottawa to negotiate with Canada. Among those documents was the list of rights which, in many ways, was a forerunner of the Bill of Rights and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms with which we are so familiar today. Therefore, I sympathize with the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior in terms of the resolutions contained in his motion. The first resolution states that the House:

—acknowledge the significant contributions of the Métis people to the development of the West and the creation of Canada;

The third resolution states that the House:

—celebrate with the Métis their unique culture and heritage;

Let us take these two points and recognize the unique role which the Métis played in the history of Canada. In so doing we must also consider the role played by many other people in the history and development of Canada. It is true that prior to Confederation the Métis people around the Red River settlement had a unique colony. However, there were other people with them—French and English people, as well as a group of Scottish people who had come across the north Atlantic, into Hudson Bay, to Churchill and down to the Red River settlement. Thus there were many people who contributed in a very unique way to the building of the West and to the creation of the western provinces.

In that sense we must acknowledge all of these different people. Yes, the Métis had a unique role; but so did the many others who followed them. I am reminded of those who followed once the railway was in place, as well as the many other people from the Ukraine who made a unique contribution to the West. They, too, played a unique role. The riding of Kitchener which I represent has, in fact, an older role in terms of people coming to it. The Métis events about which we are talking were carried on from the 1860s through to 1885. The role about which I speak in my riding goes back to the time of the United Empire Loyalists. Some of the German people of whom I speak worked with the British in the United States. Once the revolutionary war was over, these German people came up into Ontario and into the area known as Kitchener—Waterloo. They were here 100 years prior to the events surrounding Louis Riel. Historically speaking, that is almost 200 years compared with just a little over 100 years for the others.

It is also important to recognize that although the Métis had their unique contribution to make, these German-speaking people brought to Canada many industrious people who built various industries across Canada. They contributed a unique flavour to the Kitchener—Waterloo area. There is no question of their importance to that area. I should also note that they are the third largest cultural or heritage group in Canada following the English and the French. In that sense, we should recognize their unique contribution to Canada. I can sympathize with the Hon. Member who wants us to see the unique contribution these people have made and to celebrate their culture with them. I think we should celebrate the many cultures that make up Canada. They all make up this country and the people of Canada.

I have great difficulty, however, with part two of the resolution which reads as follows:

2. recognize Louis David Riel as the founder of Manitoba and a father of Confederation—

To recognize Louis David Riel as the founder of Manitoba is simply to recognize what happened in history. In fact, he is the founder of Manitoba. He formed a provisional Government with the Métis people in the Red River settlement when there was no official territorial Government from Ottawa. He filled the vacuum with his provisional Government. That provisional Government then instituted order in the territory of Manitoba around the sight of present-day Winnipeg. In that sense, it is correct to recognize the role of Louis David Riel and to say that he was the founder of Manitoba.

In fact, the federal Government recognized in 1869, in the creation of Manitoba itself, the role of Louis Riel. The Province of Manitoba has recognized the unique role played by Louis David Riel with statues of him which are in place on the grounds of the Legislative Assembly. In that sense, there is no question that he was the founder of Manitoba, and that is something for which we must recognize him.

The resolution goes on to say that we should also recognize Louis David Riel as a Father of Confederation. I have some difficulty with that. First we must look at who are the Fathers of Confederation as they appear in our history books. We think of those 34 delegates who met together at three conferences beginning in Charlottetown in 1864, continuing with longer meetings in Quebec City, and finally with meetings in London, England. As a result of those meetings, the BNA Act was brought together and Canada was then formed out of the five colonies that existed prior to that time. Those are the people we traditionally accept as our Fathers of Confederation.

Mr. Hovdebo: What about Smallwood?

Mr. Reimer: An Hon. Member has asked about Smallwood. Some people have said that when Newfoundland was brought into Confederation in 1949, Joey Smallwood became the only living Father of Confederation. In a sense, we can accept him as the only living Father of Confederation, but with regard to Louis Riel, I have some other difficulties.

I taught Canadian history at Forest Heights Collegiate High School in Kitchener. When teaching what Louis Riel did and what we recognize him for, I tried to let my students know first exactly what happened. Once we knew exactly what the facts were, we could then debate those facts and their significance.

There is no question that Louis Riel formed a provisional Government in 1869 and was responsible for the formation of Manitoba. However, he also did some other things. Louis Riel chose to take the law into his own hands and to execute Thomas Scott. Thomas Scott was not a model citizen. There was nothing to commend him in that way. However, there was nothing he did to deserve death. In fact, one of the representatives of Louis Riel's church begged him not to execute Scott because he did not deserve to die. Louis Riel replied that he had to execute Scott to assert his authority, and so he shot him. I have some difficulty supporting someone like that as a Father of Confederation.

There is no question that Louis Riel assisted the Métis and Indians in the 1885 uprising in the territory of Saskatchewan. He had a very positive role in that, but chose to attack the constituted authority of the day, the Northwest Mounted Police. That led to the deaths of settlers, Indians, Métis, and some soldiers. In that sense, I have great difficulty accepting someone as a Father of Confederation who attacked that very Confederation itself.

When the authorities had to deal with that situation and determine whether he was innocent or guilty of a crime, he was judged to be guilty of treason and was therefore executed. I have great difficulty saying that that is a person who should be accepted as a Father of Confederation.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, we often hear Hon. Members start their remarks in this way: "I had not intended to take part in this debate". In fact, I had not intended to do so. But having heard what several Hon. Members had to say, I thought that we would put the matter to a vote. We have heard one NDP Member and four PC Members. It is clear that once again, we shall not come to a vote.

There is one thing that I have seldom been able to understand, Mr. Speaker, and it is the fact that each time we have had to deal with Riel over the past 23 years, an atmosphere of mystery had suddenly set upon the House. Hon. Members are ill at ease. They do not want to speak against him, but they do not want either to recognize what Riel has really been for Canada.

[English]

My hon. colleague from Kitchener, who is a former teacher, said that he has some difficulty recognizing Louis Riel as a Father of Confederation or as a founder of Manitoba. The Hon. Member said that he taught his students to find out exactly what happened and then to debate the significance of it, and that is very fair. The significance is always the same.

If today we were to reject everyone who built a country whose past was not the type my colleague would like to support, many countries would not exist. I will not mention now some countries in the Middle East, but I may at the end of my remarks.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) spoke of the great Liberal Leader of the day who asked: "Why was Louis Riel hanged? He was hanged because he was condemned to hang". He was condemned to be hanged because he was found guilty of an action that was against the welfare of the Métis, and some people did take action against the welfare of the Métis.

Louis Riel started out very well. He started out by saying that his people were ready to build a new province. That was legal and he did it properly. However, why did he end up the way he did? Why does my colleague and many others have so much difficulty accepting Louis Riel? It is because at the very end of his life, he was hanged.

We must look at why Louis Riel was hanged. Do we not see many tragedies occuring around the world today? Everybody is talking about terrorism. How many people rise in the House of Commons or the Congress of the United States to try to go to the roots of any of the problems of today? Why would we not do the same today and try to go to the real root of the Riel question? We should not look at the very end of his life but at the beginning.

There were injustices and the Métis yelled to the good conscience of the Canadian people that they were the subject of injustices. Did enough people listen to their concerns? No. Therefore, they went from that step to another. Do we not see the same thing in the world today? People begin by expressing acceptable views, to which no one listens. Then they start throwing rocks, and no one listens. Then they start using violence, and no one listens. Then the killing starts. Perhaps I am taking a lot of time today to reflect upon what we should really do.

[Translation]

My colleague the Hon. Member for Jonquière says that there are several others. He is right.

• (1750)

[English]

My friend from Jonquière said that there were many others in British Columbia and Saskatchewan. That was also said by Mr. Smallwood. We all agree, but the subject matter we are discussing today is that of Louis Riel.

[Translation]

We should not try to draw a red herring. The subject matter of today's debate is Louis Riel. Over the past 20 years, Metis people have been trying to have Louis Riel's contribution recognized. In the House, it has never been possible to come to a vote on the Louis Riel issue. Hon. Members rise in the House and pay him tribute. There was a time, long ago, when none of them would pay him tribute. But they have gradually come to realize that since it is no longer possible to attack Louis Riel in 1986, they must glorify him. They suggest that he was a great gentleman. Some will say that he was one of the founding fathers of Manitoba. They go as far as saying that he is a Father of Confederation. They will add that we should celebrate with the Metis their unique culture and heritage. They will recognize the important contribution of the Metis people to the development of Western Canada and to the creation of Canada. We all agree on this. But we talk and we talk, and we refuse to let the motion come to a vote.

I think we should ask ourselves—and my comments are directed to the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) and his Quebec colleagues—I think we should ask ourselves the real question: Why do we never get to a vote? Because there is always the same uneasiness. I think it is time we got rid of that feeling. There is no one in this House who is guilty of committing the acts that were committed at the time. Today, we could finally decide to recognize what Riel and what the Métis people mean to Canada.

Last week, a number of Members were on the Hill to commemorate the Armenian hollocaust. Why are the Armenians still coming back 71 years later? What do they want? They want the Turkish Government to recognize that an act was committed and they want this to be historically recognized. They want a remedy.

I could even go so far as to say: What do the Palestinians want today? They want justice for what they and many others consider to be an injustice, since Canada voted in favour of two States in 1947-48. Canada, the Soviet Union, the United States and Czechoslovakia voted in favour of Resolution 181. What do they want? They want the job to be finished properly. What do the Métis want? You can draw so many parallels, and it all boils down to the same thing. Mr. Speaker, we will understand when we realize what makes people act in desperation. We will understand if we go back to the root of the problem.

[English]

When we are faced with difficult problems, we should go back to the root of each problem in an attempt to understand. We are not asking for much. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), who presented the motion is not asking for much. He is not asking anyone to apologize. He is asking Canadians in 1986 to make a great gesture by recognizing the Métis and Louis Riel.

It seems that this matter will not be brought to a vote today. I see the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathona across the way. Perhaps he and I, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), and my colleague who introduced the motion could put our heads together and come back some day with something which is acceptable to everyone and upon which we could vote. That may be the solution. It seems that we always come back with a motion or a petition to recognize what Louis Riel did. It will always be divisive. Let us not fool ourselves; let us not lie to each other. We know why. Some people are very uncomfortable with Louis Riel. Hon. Members will notice that I am not referring to Conservatives, Liberals or members of the New Democratic Party. In fact, they were non-existent at that time. However, some people are uncomfortable with Louis Riel, but I like to tackle things head on, publicly. Perhaps such is the case. Maybe this is the beauty of debate and why 5.55 p.m. is more important than people think. I have listened to my colleagues. I see the Government Whip coming into the House. Perhaps he is coming here to ensure that we vote or we do not vote; I do not know.

In conclusion, I should like to indicate that we should try to come to terms with each other. I say openly that I am ready to sit on a smaller committee of interested Members of Parliament. I am sure the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona would be delighted to do that. I am also sure the historian from Kitchener would like to participate, as would the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Hicks). Perhaps that small committee could consider the motion and would come to the conclusion that a debate on supporting self-government and a land base for the Métis would be too long at this time. Maybe it would be okay the next time.

The Métis are what they are today. There are people who believe in what Louis Riel did. Surely Members of Parliament who believe that the time has come to recognize him can come together in a small committee. I see some Hon. Members indicating that they agree with what I have said. I will pursue it, because I am honestly tired of seeing a debate on Louis Riel every year, where people watch each other and other Members rush to the House to participate in the debate in case a vote is taken. I do not think that is fair to Louis Riel. I do not think that is fair to the Métis. If we could have the kind of debate to which I referred, perhaps it would be better than what we are trying to do today.

[Translation]

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect for my colleague from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), he says he has been listening to comments on the debate for 20 years. He is still talking about it today. Indeed he was in the House for several of those years.

Mr. Prud'homme: Of course, it is because it has always been proposed by Opposition Members. I did not want to raise a political argument, but if the Hon. Member does, then so will I. There were Bills, but invariably they were all talked out. This is what I was trying to tell you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Let us go on with the debate.

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I have only a couple of minutes. First I should like to address the comments of the Hon. Member for Saint Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I agree with him that Private Members' Hour has been mysterious. Over the years I have observed various debates on Bills and resolutions when he was in government and now when we are in government. There is a new system for Private Members' Hour whereby twenty Bills are drawn and six have to come to debate. I am sure my friend would acknowledge that that is a major step ahead. It is also a satisfying role for us as private Members because we can spread information among our fellow colleagues as well as people in general.

For me the life of Louis Riel was the life of an individual struggling against power and the abuse of power by Government. Whether or not it is so in Ireland today, it is an argument against extremism. Surely our role is to temper the extremism with which people in the ordinary population become involved because they have not sat down and looked at the facts. That is true whether it is in Ireland or in South Africa or whether it was in the West during metrication.

Louis Riel is the story of the West and its land, the attachment of people to the land. My friend opposite would be the first to acknowledge what happened when the previous Government, his administration, tried to change to the metric system thousands of miles in the West which had been surveyed, every mile going from east to west and every two miles going from north to south. It was as much an attack on the culture of the West as was Sir John A. Macdonald and the surveyors coming to the West to impose that very system. It was the very insensitivity of the Government that was apparent. Surely our role as individuals is to try to ameliorate that.

I would be happy to sit down to work toward a resolution which would give Louis Riel the acknowledgement he deserves. Clearly he is a western hero who stood up to the power of Government and the abuse of power by Governments.

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, April 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly about this Bill now that it has come back for second reading.

I regret that employees of the House of Commons, far from being treated as a model of what labour relations should be, are being relegated to a kind of back basement and treated with the utmost contempt because of the actions both of the court and of Parliament. According to a judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal last week, which has been appealed, these employees do not have the benefit of certification or of falling under the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code. They are being given second class status under Bill C-45, a Bill which purports to give them the same rights as other employees of the Public Service but which falls far short of that. I want to comment about the torturous reasoning of the Court whose decision I have had the opportunity to read. Frankly, I am appalled by the thinking put forward.

The court has suggested that Parliament must have intended to exclude its employees from coverage under the Canada Labour Code. However, it also points out that Parliament did not include those employees under the provisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the Public Service Employment Act. The consequences are that, according to the reasoning of the Federal Court of Appeal, staff members of the House of Commons have been left in a legislative limbo where they have neither the right to organize under the Canada Labour Code or as other employees of the Government of Canada. The basis of that argument is the position taken by the court as to whether or not Part V of the Code applies. It points out that it applies in respect of employees who are employed upon or in connection with the operations of any federal work, undertaking or business. I would have thought that the House of Commons is a federal undertaking, or a federal work, or a federal business, particularly when you consider the reasoning of the court and its consideration of the judgment of the Supreme Court in the Canada Labour Relations Board versus the City of Yellowknife, and the fact that members of the House of Commons staff prepare meals, help to look after the grounds, drive the small buses and do many other things which are works in the traditional sense of the word.

In addition to that, the definition section of the Canada Labour Code states:

"Federal work undertaking or business" means any work, undertaking or business that is within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, including without restricting the generality of the foregoing—

Then there are a number of references to various things such as transportation, aircraft, radio and banking. The general definition is that any work, business or undertaking that is within the legislative competence of the Parliament of Canada is a federal work, undertaking or business.

The Federal Court of Appeal has basically stood that definition on its head. It has looked at all of the particulars, but has not realized the general fact that the Parliament of Canada has clearly the legislative authority to legislate for its employees and should make the work of its employees federal works, undertakings or businesses, and, therefore, entitle them to certification under the Canada Labour Code.

The situation is that the Court of Appeal's decision has basically removed negotiating or bargaining power from these employees who have been waiting for three years to get those rights, and who have been trying for more than 20 years to get some effective means of redress and some effective means of speaking collectively on their own behalf.

This is a big place; there are 3,000 employees here in the House of Commons. A number of problems and grievances have emerged which drove the employees to form a union and to seek certification in the first place, and now they have had the rug pulled out from under their feet.

It is damn well about time that the courts of this country woke up and moved into the modern age. It is a perverse decision for them to say that because of legalisms going back into the 1870s they judge that Parliament did not intend to give to its employees the right to organize. The citations they make, which reach back many years ago, as I just said, indicate that Parliament was thinking of other things. I doubt very much whether Parliament was thinking whether or not its employees should have the right to organize. It may have been felt at one time that the employees of the House of Commons should not, but, nonetheless, in the 1960s the Parliament of Canada made a very major decision in extending collective bargaining to employees of the Government of Canada. There was no specific exclusion in saying that members of the House of Commons staff should not have the right to organize, although they were not given the same rights as other public employees.

There are many employees of the Government of Canada who are, in fact, certified under the Canada Labour Code. There are certain other staff, including I believe the staff of the Governor General, who are certified under the Canada Labour Code. The employees of other Legislatures in the country are certified under the relevant provincial labour codes. Therefore, it is very hard for me to understand why it is that we at this level have to present such a bad example as a Bill as flawed and inadequate as Bill C-45.

The major argument for Bill C-45 is that the employees will have something if they decide to go ahead and form a union with the limited rights of bargaining which are given to them. Those rights of bargaining are very limited. They are not entitled to appeal to an impartial body over issues such as classification, promotions and issues like that which provoked the employees to form a union in the first place. Therefore, the employees must go through the whole tortuous process of organizing all over again, of signing cards for the third or fourth time in order to get an adequate bargaining right in a regime in which they have no confidence and with a feeling that the deck is stacked against them and in favour of the House of Commons.

I counsel those employees, ever if they again have to sign cards, to form a union and get some consultative mechanisms to try to resolve problems informally, even if they are barred directly from settling them formally. If they are upset about the situation created by Bill C-45, assuming that it does eventually go through, then I have every reason to sympathize with them, because it is a bad Bill. It is an unfair Bill, and it is not right that their lengthy efforts to organize should be greeted in this kind of way.

I want to say to the back-bench Members of the Conservative Party, in particular, that it is time Members of that Party woke up to the fact that for many years now we in Canada have had a Canada Labour Code which affirms, as the provincial labour codes do, the right of collective bargaining, the right of employees to have a union. Those who are members of the Catholic faith may be aware of the May Day message of the Council of the Conference of Bishops which just came out today, which again, in harmony with recent statements from the Vatican, reaffirms as a basic tenet of Catholic teaching the right of employees to have a union, to speak collectively, to bargain collectively and to have that kind of collective voice in determining what their working conditions should be. Surely in a free and democratic society like we have this country we in the House of Commons should do our best to try and respect those basic rights rather than working in the other direction. Unfortunately, I fear that there are too many Members in the Conservative back-benches who do not understand that, who are unsympathetic to the desire and need of employees, particularly in large organizations like the House of Commons—to have a union to represent them and, therefore, who have been putting pressure on the Government, and on you, Mr. Speaker, and on the House of Commons, to resist in every way possible the extension of adequate collective bargaining rights.

The only hope for Bill C-45 is that in good faith the legislative committee which looks at this Bill will consider it very thoughtfully and very seriously. At the very least, and I recognize that some members, even if I disagree with them, may have hesitation about the full range of powers under the Canada Labour Code, I believe the employees of the House of Commons should have bargaining rights equivalent to those enjoyed by other employees of the Public Service of Canada. That is the least we can do to the extent that we improve those bargaining rights for employees of the Public Service of Canada, that framework should be extended to employees of the House of Commons. I would urge and plead with those Members of the legislative committee who are here for the debate right now, including the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister, that they consider amendments in a thoughtful and constructive way in order to try to improve a Bill which is a bad Bill, a Bill that I am afraid we in our Party find to be unacceptable.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-45 and to express on behalf of my colleagues our appreciation of the words of the Member who just spoke. I think we find ourselves, in not a rare instance, but nevertheless too rare, in total agreement with the views that have just been expressed.

Bill C-45 is, in the final analysis, the product of a profound misunderstanding by Members of Parliament of the legitimate aspirations, the legitimate demand for basic rights by the 3,000 people who make this place function. Given the very nature of the institution, the adversarial nature of the chamber, the Commons, I believe the 3,000 employees involved serve us and the country very well. Why then is it that these employees should be denied the same kind of basic rights enjoyed by every other member of the Public Service of Canada? Why is it that as a Government we would seek to rest behind the decision of the court with respect to whether or not employees can be covered by the Canada Labour Code, when in the final analysis the highest court in this land in determining, enshrining and in protecting our citizens' rights—including those 3,000 citizens who service this Hill—is indeed Parliament itself.

In my province of Newfoundland we are experiencing a very destructive and acrimonious labour strike. While one cannot easily assign blame for that strike, because two sides are always involved in a dispute, that action occurred fundamentally because the Government assumed the worst case scenario that might happen with the people who worked for the provincial Government of Newfoundland if the union were given proper collective bargaining rights. In its paranoid consideration of what would be the worst scenario if these employees were given collective bargaining rights, it designated 49 per cent of every bargaining unit as essential and wiped away the fundamental principle inherent in the right to collective bargaining. That is what Bill C-45 does to the employees on Parliament Hill. It singles out 3,000 employees of the Government of Canada who service Members of Parliament.

We have decided as Members of Parliament that we are unique, more important and more sacred than all other Canadians who are served by the Public Service. We have decided to implement special measures which we believe will give us protection. By taking away the rights of the 3,000 employees of this place, we assume the worst possible scenario in the case of those 3,000 employees who service Parliament Hill. We assume that there will be the worst possible abuse, in our judgment, of the rights to which they are entitled. The fact is that we are satisfying our paranoia by denying them their basic rights. That is wrong and cannot be justified.

The unions representing the 3,000 employees on the Hill have said that they would, in effect, go so far as to forfeit the right to strike if Bill C-45 included a strong binding arbitration procedure. Therefore, we are not dealing with a group that wants the right to shut down Parliament Hill. We are dealing with a group that wants the same fundamental rights enjoyed by any other groups of federal civil servants in this country.

Our failure to amend this legislation or ensure that the employees on Parliament Hill fall within the guidelines of the Canada Labour Code and the Canada Labour Relations Board is an act of cowardice on the part of Members of Parliament. Furthermore, it represents an assumption of motives on the part of the employees of Parliament Hill which they frankly do not deserve. When one looks at the long history of service provided by employees on Parliament Hill, there is nothing to suggest that our employees on Parliament Hill deserve anything but our appreciation, our respect, and our determination to ensure that they enjoy the same rights and protections as every other Canadian who is in the employ of the Crown.

I plead with those Members opposite who will sit on the legislative committee on Bill C-45 to do what they know in their own hearts and souls is the right thing. I ask those Members who are in fear of Parliament Hill being held hostage by those employees, whom I believe should be granted full rights, to examine the historical facts to see whether or not that is really the nature of the people who are asking that their rights be granted through a different version of Bill C-45.

We should always be cognizant of the fact that the eyes of the country are always on us and that the way we treat our employees and operate this place sets an example for many other institutions and employers across the country. If we as elected representatives seek to make this an elitist institution, giving ourselves special privileges or guarantees by denying the rights of our employees, I suggest that Canadians will not judge this institution kindly.

Hopefully the legislative committee will sit in a non-partisan and non-adversarial atmosphere. Therefore, I add my voice to those who ask members of that committee to make a considered judgment, and ask themselves whether we have the right to act as an elitist group of commissars and deny the employees of Parliament Hill the full rights and protections to which they are entitled as citizens of this country and employees of the Government of Canada.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in rising to address Bill C-45 today I do so with no great enthusiasm, because this pale apology for the conferral of rights on the employees of Parliament Hill does the Government no credit. If passed, it will do this Parliament no credit.

I would like to quote the words of Stanley Knowles 19 years ago when he was talking to a special committee. He said:

> Therefore, there has been a rule up here on the Hill that the Civil Service Commission stays out except for the odd bit of advice and for statistics to be used for comparative purposes. But it strikes me that by leaving out of this Bill and out of all other Bills any reference to parliamentary staff, we are in effect making no statutory provisions with respect to the rights of employees on Parliament Hill.

We see that situation being repeated today. Far from making statutory provisions for rights, Bill C-45 merely institutionalizes what would be reasonable practice in a traditional master-servant environment. It really has very little to do with collective bargaining rights. I fear that we may be seeing some sort of paradigm for the sort of labour legislation that the Government would like to apply across a whole range of industrial and civil service sectors.

The so-called rights that are provided in Bill C-45 fall far short of free collective bargaining rights within the normal understanding of those terms. They fall far short of the protection that is necessary for workers in any organized situation. They fall far short of the procedures which are necessary if grievances or disagreements are to be addressed frankly and sincerely, and they fall far short of what is necessary if they are to be fairly resolved.

Much has been said about Parliament's status. Parliament is the highest court of the land. After all, privilege is something that is exercised by Parliament and defined by Parliament. However, as Members on this side of the House have said, with those high powers and that high authority goes a higher responsibility. This, the highest court in the land, should be acting not only as the highest authority but also as the highest example. How better to show that high example than in the way in which Parliament and the House of Commons deals with parliamentary and House of Commons employees?

I believe that, far from being the shadow of collective bargaining legislation, a Bill to regulate relations between the employees of Parliament and Parliament itself should be a model, a paradigm, for the sort of industrial labour relations we would like to see throughout this country. What do we have instead? We have a Bill which essentially imposes a mere staff association type of environment on the employees of the House of Commons and of the Library of Parliament. We have the sort of loose, limp set-up whereby certain things will be able to be taken to management, and certain things will be subject to the collective bargaining process. But what is more noteworthy is what is left out, which is what is generally understood to be the rights of workers in collective bargaining situations.

There is a saying that, "In order for the people to trust the Government, the Government must trust the people". That I think applies very well to the situation before us with Bill C-45. The evidence suggests to me that those who drafted Bill C-45 are not seeking to extend collective bargaining rights to Parliament Hill in the true sense, but are seeking rather to give some minimal concessions, to throw some sops before the legitimate demands of the employees in order to diffuse the political pressure which the Government and the administration are feeling. It is an adaptation of earlier versions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, and as such it is very plainly a throw-back to an era we should be glad has gone by. The results will be statutory protection and traditional management prerogatives which cannot be claimed as necessary either to preserve the supremacy of Parliament or the merit principle. The people who have been organizing have provided a long list of the type of abuses which could continue under Bill C-45 and which this legislation does not really address.

Privilege, of course, is something which has to be considered very fairly. Privilege, after all, is an institution and a convention which is framed for specific purposes. I challenge the Government to draw the logical lines of connection between privilege and what rights in fact are being taken away from Parliamentary employees. Sir David Lidderdale defines privilege as:

> —the sum of rights exceeding those rights of common citizens enjoyed by each House of Parliament collectively, by the Supreme Court, and by the individual members of the legislatures or judiciary that are necessary for the performance of their functions. Privilege is a traditional convention, not precisely defined, that like many traditions, changes with the passage of time.

We are not, fortunately, today facing the sort of pressure on Parliament that privilege was originally framed to insulate against. We are not likely to see a monarch accompanied by a file of armed infantry come to Parliament and attempt to disrupt its proceedings or to detain its Members. For any legislation to be framed in that sort of context today is clearly ridiculous.

Beauchesne also has a definition of privilege for the conduct of public business and the procedure of the House generally including the acts of the Speaker himself in the chair. Neither the Government nor any authority has the power to deal with the staff of the House of Commons unless specially authorized to do so by statute or resolution of the House. That, of course, is why the existing legislation governing labour relations in the Public Service cannot apply.

However, this surely does not relieve Parliamentarians of the responsibility for framing legislation which reflects contemporary society in Canada, the legitimate aspirations of organized workers and the essential sense of justice and fairness which most Canadians feel. It is not as if an adventurous step was required, because we know that even in 1981 the Parliaments of the United Kingdom, Australia, Ontario and Quebec all recognized the rights of employees in those Parliaments and all afforded collective bargaining rights on the same basis as the provincial Public Service. It is also noted that in fact in Australia, Parliament was the subject of strike action. That Parliament as an institution did not find itself severely diminished by such action. The dispute was indeed regulated in the normal course of events.

Our opposition to Bill C-45 is based on its failure to provide those collective bargaining rights. I would like to list a couple for the benefit of people who do have collective bargaining agreements which are full, fair and unfettered so they may know what exactly is being denied the staff of the House of Parliament.

Public Service employees can, for example, appeal staffing decisions such as appointments or demotions to an independent third party. This right to appeal will be denied under Bill C-45. Bill C-45 eliminates any recourse to the rights available under the Canada Labour Code without providing any corresponding appeal or rights mechanisms. We should have an attitude of noblesse oblige to the employees of Parliament Hill.

While there has been considerable documentation of abuses, it would appear that they have been ignored in a framing of the legislation.

[Translation]

As is clear from a paper submitted by the PSAC, many employees have no job description, and those who do have found that they are obsolete and are often arbitrarily changed, especially in an environment that has recently been subject to considerable re-organization and technological change.

Mr. Speaker, I may add that the technological change will continue. And I would like to conclude by quoting the former President of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, Mr. Pierre Samson, who said:

> There is no reason why parliamentary employees should be considered as second class citizens—

And the New Democratic Party, supports this position.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my views to those expressed by Hon. Members who have already taken part in the debate on Bill C-45, a Bill that on the face of it would seem to benefit the employees of the House. It is certainly better than nothing because we have employees here at this very moment who are not unionized and who have very little in the way of protection, and I must admit that this legislation is at least a step in the right direction.

However, as soon as we scratch the surface and look at what Bill C-45 really offers, we realize that the legislation is unsatisfactory. However, it does provide a basis, and I would not go so far as to say that the Bill should be rejected out of hand. It still provides a basis for discussion, so there is a possibility of improving the Bill in Committee, provided the improvements are substantial.

Actually, I think this is a Bill that is meant to make the Government and Government Members feel good. Now they can say: We don't intend to leave those poor House employees defenceless; now we have a Bill that will help them organize and unionize and defend their rights.

What I find very strange indeed is that when these employees of the House of Commons had received the permission of the Canada Labour Relations Board to organize with a view to forming a union, the Government decided to appeal the decision and go before the courts to have it reversed.

My own explanation for this behaviour is that if the employees had organized on the basis of the initial decision, they would have organized in a way that would be more in line with their own demands. The Government, however, preferred to cut short any such action by its employees and introduce a Bill to deal with the situation according to its own lights. I think this legislation does more for the Government than for its employees. Any legislation that allows employees to unionize should provide a fair balance. In other words, the employees must have sufficient protection. On the other hand, the employer must be able to manage the entreprise. In this case, however, and I shall give some details later on, the employees are not being given enough power to look after their own interests. I would say this is a Bill that cries out for improvement. I am rather surprised that several back-benchers representing ridings close to Parliament Hill on the Hull side, in Gatineau and in Ottawa seem to be taking so little interest in this Bill. One would expect them to spring to the defence of some of the House of Commons employees who happen to be their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I have been in this House for some time now, 17 years in fact, and I can tell you that discontent among House of Commons employees is proverbial. Not that there is a general outcry, but a Member of the House cannot walk in the corridors or cafeterias for more than a week without coming across an employee who has a grievance. They will even corner Members from distant ridings such as mine in the Montreal region. None of my electors work on Parliament Hill, yet employees come up to me to complain about some of the administration's unilateral decisions. For quite some time I have been hoping that our employees might be covered under an acceptable collective bargaining system which would guarantee fair treatment. More significant still, they would have their say about the way they are treated, as is the case now for their fellow workers in some other Government departments.

Let us look at some of the more frequent grievances drawn to our attention in recent years. Staff reductions in certain sectors is one of them. I did not have time to check into all these allegations, but I have been told that maintenance staff cut-backs have reached 40 per cent in some cases. I have no supporting evidence but if the employees were unionized and could confront the employer these figures might be verified and the employees would be in a better position to defend themselves against cut-backs.

They also talk about reductions of some benefits which had been considered as vested rights. For instance, it is now more difficult for newer employees to get days off, and the latest trend is to hire even more part-time employees. Employees who thought they had permanent jobs are worried that they may eventually be displaced by part-time workers. More and more services are contracted out to and provided by the private sector. We can appreciate that some employees are afraid to learn practically overnight that, as a result of an arbitrary decision, their work will be done by a local firm, yet they did not have a chance to bargain or defend themselves.

Various comments have been heard about questionable hiring and classification practices. I do not want to exaggerate, but I would simply say that some people claim that promotions are not always based on merit alone. Without giving specific examples, I would point out that if we had an acceptable collective bargaining system some of these points which are now the subject of grievances would be discussed directly with the employer and settled amicably rather than continue to feed the rumour mill on Parliament Hill. Employees who feel they have been shortchanged keep chasing Members up and down the corridors to argue their case and, now and then, some of their complaints are picked up by the media. Hence the bad reputation of the House of Commons as an employer, something which should not even exist in 1986.

I would say therefore it is important and essential, in our Party's view, that our employees should join a union and have a collective agreement in which they would participate and under which they would be reasonably protected. Unfortunately, although Bill C-45 looks in that direction, it has flaws that will have to be remedied, if the legislation is to have both the support of the Liberal Party of Canada and probably more important still, the support of those who will be using it, those who are to be protected, namely the employees of the House of Commons.

For instance, I would like to point out that one of the provisions that needs the most to be amended is Clause 5(3) of Bill C-45, because it would prohibit the negotiation of certain problems that are linked primarily to classification, job description, employee remuneration and job evaluation.

So this is one of its major flaws. How is it possible to prevent employees from negotiating the classification system under which they work, which sets up the level at which they will be working, their job descriptions and above all their level of remuneration? There is reference to salary. In fact, there is no one in any collective bargaining process, even in the private sector, who cannot negotiate both the level of employee remuneration and job evaluation.

There is also Clause 55(2) dealing with staffing. In effect, it prevents any possibility of sending to arbitration any matters for instance dealing with appointments, job evaluation, promotion, demotion, transfers, lay-offs or dismissals, all matters that are subject to grievances under any collective agreement. Those two most contentious areas could not be referred to third party arbitration. That flaw in the legislation will have to be corrected.

Mr. Speaker, let me bring to your attention, for instance, the area of classification as viewed by the Public Service Alliance, and I quote from documents they were kind enough to make available to me: "The Public Service Alliance of Canada had the chance to evaluate at close range the classification system as applied in the House of Commons."

And they gave an exemple—I am concluding, Mr. Speaker—concerning messengers who filed a grievance in 1982 for having been reclassified from GS-4 to OP-2, and it is obvious that following that decision they are getting $5,000 less in salary today.

One will understand that in a normal collective agreement system, it would have been very hard to negotiate a $5,000 salary cut.

In this instance, since there was no collective agreement, an arbitrary decision was reached.

Mr. Speaker, I am giving that example only to illustrate the main thrust of my point, which is that the legislation is in dire need of amendment.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, good democratic government operates with the consent of the governed. Bill C-45 is an attempt to deny employees of the Hill, the governed in this case, from the rights which over a half a million workers under federal jurisdiction enjoy under the Canada Labour Code. Therefore, this Bill is an attempt to put one group of employees in a situation much different from the one in which their co-workers in other parts of the Government find themselves. Hill employees have been without protection from either federal or provincial laws and they continue to be so. That was a bad situation because the employees were in a no-man's land in which the employers could do what they pleased, and quite often did.

• (1150)

Bill C-45 does address some of the deficiencies that exist, but it does not establish a framework which would put the employees on the Hill on the same footing as other workers in Canada. The Bill establishes a new framework for the employees on the Hill but does not give them the rights which they should have as employees of the Government. Why should the employees on the Hill be treated differently from other people who work for the Government of Canada? The employees have a right to question these differences. We as their technical employers have a responsibility to make sure that those rights are at least equal to the rights of other employees of the Government of Canada.

In the 10 minutes we are allotted today it is impossible to pinpoint all of the shortcomings of the Bill. I would like to bring to the attention of the House those particular shortcomings in the Bill which will allow to continue the things that have caused the most dissatisfaction in the past.

First, the Bill does not cover MPs' staff, Leaders' staff and Party research staff. These employees work for us in a much more intimate way than do the custodians and the cafeteria staff. They have the same kind of problems as the other Hill employees and, therefore, they should have the right to be included under this Bill which establishes only minimal rights. They are excluded entirely and will be in the same position after the Bill is passed as all employees are at present. They will not have any basic rights.

Second, the Bill does not provide for negotiation of classification issues and things like job descriptions, assignments of pay levels and changes in duties. If this Bill passes as it presently reads, the present system of classification will remain unchanged. If we were to look back at the history of Parliament, we would probably find that this particular problem has been the cause of most occurrences of employee dissatisfaction. Many employees do not have job descriptions at all, and many find their job descriptions out of date or having little bearing on the work they actually perform. There is a particular need to establish job descriptions so that people know what they are doing, what they are being paid for and whether or not they are being paid for it at the right pay level. This Bill does not provide for negotiation of that matter.

Third, there is a clause in the Bill which can only be called a union-busting clause. That clause eliminates the recognition of any attempt made by employees to establish a union. It does not allow the applications for certification that have already been made to be recognized.

I could go on. The Bill removes the right to strike. It does not provide for the arbitration of awards, appraisals, promotions, demotions, transfers, layoffs and releases. Disallowing those things takes away from the rights of the people who should be given the same kind of rights as other workers in Canada. It becomes obvious that the shortcomings in this Bill should be looked at in committee very closely and changes should be made to the Bill so that it more closely resembles the kind of Bill the public servants of Canada have a right to expect.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to rise this morning to make a few comments on Bill C-45 in the 10 minutes provided me. Bill C-45 is an Act to provide employees of the House of Commons and the Senate with a framework of representation. A central issue in this debate is that we in the Opposition are not trying to delay or oppose the Bill simply for the sake of opposing it. Once again, we are trying to bring something to the attention of the Government.

Bill C-45 is a piece of legislation that in theory and in principle tries to improve the lot of workers on Parliament Hill, both in the House of Commons and the other place, and to bring the workers up to a standard that is fair and comparable to the standards of workers outside the House of Commons and the Senate. We are trying to bring to the Government's attention the fact that Bill C-45 is simply not good enough. Bill C-45 will not do what Government Members purport it will do.

In its present form, the legislation is being rejected by both the Public Service Alliance of Canada and the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians. As well, the very people this legislation addresses, the employees on Parliament Hill, have rejected it.

Earlier in debate we moved an amendment to hoist the Bill for an extended period of time so that the Government would have an opportunity to go back to the drawing-board and to begin to take seriously the complaints made against this particular piece of legislation. At that point in second-reading stage, that amendment was not agreed to.

We are saying once again at this point that there are serious frustrations being felt on Parliament Hill with respect to this piece of legislation. The feeling about this legislation is that if we are going to move to enhance the position of and respect for these workers, we should not go halfway or three-quarters of the way, but should go the full distance. Some of these employees feel that if we are not prepared to go the full distance then we should not bother doing anything at all. They feel that the last thing they need is to be used in a parliamentary debate and to be carted out at election time by a government Member who is pretending to be the champion of this particular cause. They are saying that they are not naive or gullible and that they do not wish the Government to proceed on that basis.

If you recall, Mr. Speaker, a very similar argument was presented to us when we were debating Bill C-62, the employment equity Bill. Not only in the House but in committee we were debating a piece of legislation that was attempting to ensure equity in the workplace for four target groups, the visible minorities, the disabled, women and natives. Every target group and every organization within the framework of those four classifications appeared before the committee and at meetings across the country to say that they were not satisfied with the piecemeal, band-aid approach of this piece of legislation. It was a very frustrating process for me, and I was involved from square one until third reading in the House, because we could not address seriously or in a genuine fashion the concerns of those four target groups. We were putting in place a piece of legislation for those four communities in Canada, and those four communities were saying that the Canadian Government was not listening because the piece of legislation was not moving on the issues on which they wanted to move.

Now, in a very similar fashion, we have Bill C-45 before us. Rather than talking about employment equity, we are now talking about equity for workers on Parliament Hill so that they will be on equal ground with outside workers. To simplify the debate to its common demoninator, basically they are saying that cafeteria workers on Parliament Hill and cafeteria workers outside Parliament Hill should somehow within Government framework be on equal footing. Those two groups of workers should be receiving equal treatment from the federal Government. Those workers somewhere else in the federal bureaucracy and those on Parliament Hill should be treated with the same degree of respect. In essence, they are providing the same type of service in their own areas. Therefore, under the umbrella of the federal Government, why are we not prepared in this piece of legislation to allow workers on Parliament Hill the same rights presently enjoyed by workers off Parliament Hill? It is not a question of giving special rights. It is not a question of saying that we will give them the privileges of a, b, or c. If Bill C-45 were strengthened, we would be ensuring parity among workers under the federal Government and the rights of those under the Public Service Alliance of Canada within the federal bureaucracy would certainly prevail here.

There are a number of very contentious issues which and provide the basis of disapproval for Bill C-45. One is the inability of workers under this piece of legislation to deal with serious issues affecting their jobs, that is to say, under Bill C-45 individuals would have the right simply to dither about working conditions, numbers of hours, and salaries. However, this particular piece of legislation would not provide for important matters such as job classification, appointment, appraisal, promotion, demotion, transfer, lay-off, and the release of employees. If we do not allow for movement and opportunity for discussion and representation on these issues, what will this piece of legislation do?

In the few seconds remaining, I should like to refer to the issue of complaints on the job. Rather than employees having the benefit of a union body or organization bringing forward a complaint on their behalf, this piece of legislation would dictate that the individual would have to come forward and identify himself or herself. That is not good enough. It is almost a form of intimidation. Basically it does not say: "If you have a legitimate complaint, we do not wish to have your name or identity known. As long as it is a legitimate concern within the system, we will allow the union to raise it on your behalf so that not only your concern will be corrected, if the problem is of particular importance to other individuals who are experiencing it their lot could be improved". That is not guaranteed in the Bill. It places the onus on the individual to come forward; individuals are intimidated and threatened to come forward under the present system.

I see you motioning, Mr. Speaker, that my time is up. I appreciate having had this opportunity, and I look forward to the Government moving on some very serious concerns and very serious flaws which are presently embodied in the Bill.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill C-45. It is a very important issue because there are some 3,000 employees of the House of Commons. It strikes me as being very embarrassing that in 1986 some 3,000 employees of this House do not have the right to form a trade union or the right collective bargaining. They do not have the rights of other workers in all kinds of other industries. This is 1986. We have the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We have all kinds of rights for all kinds of people who work in the country from coast to coast.

In my own riding there are trade unions and workers with rights. They negotiate their salaries, working conditions, and conditions regarding safety on the job. In some cases they negotiate for their pensions. However, the House of Commons, the supreme law-making body of the land, has workers who do not have those rights. This is very shameful in 1986.

Here we are being sanctimonious as a Parliament on all kinds of issues, yet we have people working for us who do not have basic, fundamental rights. As I said, it is an outright shame. We do not practise what we preach. I see a Member from Cape Breton over here; there are trade unions in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Peterson: Hamilton West.

Mr. Nystrom: In fact, in Hamilton there are even more trade unions. They have rights. The workers of Stelco have rights to collective bargaining, and rights vis-à-vis grievance procedures. They have rights with regard to working conditions, health and safety, and so on. Why do those workers have those rights and employees of the House of Commons do not have them? A tremendous amount of shame is reflected on every Member of the House of Commons. I hope, with all these new Members of the Conservative Party we can somehow break this terrible precedent of the past and give workers on the Hill, be they in the cafeterias, the Library, messenger services, the post office, or whatever, full and total collective bargaining rights and privileges like those enjoyed by employees of the Parliament of Great Britain.

Margaret Thatcher is a very conservative Conservative; she is more Conservative than most Conservatives in our House. However, she does not try to roll back the clock in terms of unionizing the employees of the Parliament of the United Kingdom. Why are my friends in the Conservative Party afraid to bring in full and total collective bargaining rights and unionization rights for the employees of the House of Commons? They tend to hang their hats on that old thing called parliamentary privilege, as if we are supreme gods in the House of Commons and whatever we say goes. They seem to think that if workers have the right to collective bargaining and grievance procedures, suddenly our sacred privileges go out the window. That is a bunch of crap, a bunch of bunk; it is about time we called a spade a spade. It does not even happen in Margaret Thatcher's Britain, yet it happens in the boy from Baie Comeau's Canada. It is an utter national disgrace. I call upon Members of Parliament to ensure that the 3,000 employees of this place are given the right to collective bargaining and the right to have some say over their working conditions, health and safety, and hiring procedures.

I have been in the House for almost 18 years. I have heard story after story about how people sometimes get jobs in this place and how they are pushed around. Mr. Speaker, if you want some evidence of this, go to the Library and listen to some of the tapes which were dictated by Lloyd Francis, a former Speaker of the House, some of which were released to the press about seven months or eight months ago. In them this former distinguished Speaker of the House talked about sexual harassment where some women had to disrobe to qualify for their jobs. He talked about nepotism, about the fact that it is who you know and not what you know which got you a job in this place over the years. He talked about all kinds of other things that go on in the hiring of staff for the House of Commons. This was former Speaker Lloyd Francis. I know that from experience because we have heard these stories year in and year out.

• (1210)

I call upon the Conservative Party to make sure we have full collective bargaining rights for the employees of this place. It is not only the Parliament of Great Britain that has collective bargaining and trade unions in its Parliament. In fact, the employees there have the right to strike. That is Margaret Thatcher's Britain. In some of our provincial legislatures, for example in Saskatchewan, the employees have their own unions and collective bargaining process. Why can't we do it here? Why do we insist on being dinosaurs in the 1980s? That is beyond me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Parry: It is a Tory Government.

Mr. Nystrom: It is a Tory Government. The answer comes from the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry). Even Margaret Thatcher has given these rights to the employees. I see a friend of mine in the Conservative Party agrees with me. Why can't the boy from Baie Comeau do the same thing, Mr. Speaker?

Bill C-45 does not go far enough. It is only a partial loaf. I wish Members of the Conservative Party would rear up on their hind legs and rebel a little bit. They should exercise a little bit of their authority and show the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—maybe we do not have four-legged Tories, I withdraw that—that they are not going to tolerate the kinds of laws that do not allow employees of the House of Commons to unionize in 1986.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have 3,000 employees in the House of Commons. They do not have the right to collective bargaining. They are not entitled to negotiate their salaries. They are not entitled to negotiate a number of items dealing with benefits, pensions and so on and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, this is 1986, not 1886. Now is the time to act, to let employees of the House of Commons have their rights. Mr. Speaker, in England under Margaret Thatcher, employees have the right to strike, they have unions, and we can do exactly the same thing here.

[English]

I call upon Members of the Conservative Party to do a little bit of rebelling, repent their past sins, as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) would say.

Mr. Nickerson: We don't have any sins.

Mr. Nystrom: The Member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Nickerson) says "We don't have any sins". I would like him to defend the system. I am quoting Margaret Thatcher. It must be getting really bad when a socialist has to quote Margaret Thatcher as evidence. I don't even like Margaret Thatcher but that shows how bad it is, having to say that Margaret Thatcher is setting a good example.

An Hon. Member: It shows you are growing.

Mr. Nystrom: Why can't the Conservatives in Canada come at least as far as Margaret Thatcher by allowing basic, fundamental democratic rights to the employees of the House of Commons? I hope some of them will tell us why they do not allow employees of this place to have their fundamental democratic rights. Why in 1986 should our employees not have the right to collective bargaining for their salaries? Why should the employees of the House of Commons not have the right to collective bargaining, vis-à-vis staffing? Why should they not have that kind of right?

We allow those kinds of rights for other workers, thank goodness. Why not right here in the House of Commons? It is an absolute disgrace in 1986 to treat the employees of the House of Commons, as we do in many ways, in a master-slave type of relationship. I hope we can get some Conservative Members of Parliament to explain today why they will not join those of us in the Opposition and change the system that dates back to 1896.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in this debate to say how much I regret that the Goverment did not accept the motion presented by my colleague for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) asking for a one month hoist of this bill to allow the parties involved, that is the employer and employees, to agree on a measure which everyone would find satisfactory.

Unfortunately, this suggestion was not accepted, and we are now at the third reading stage of Bill C-45, which I find abusive and which will not have the support of the Members of the Official Opposition.

We regret the inflexibility of the Government in this case since this is the first opportunity for Parliament to act generously with its employees on Parliament Hill. However, the Government, through the Government House Leader, recently published a communiqué to explain the context of the Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations Bill. This release says: "The issue of the right to collective bargaining for parliamentary employees has been debated at least since 1967. Since then, there had been many reports and studies, but no Government legislation had been proposed before."

In the fall of 1983 began a series of certification applications presented under the Canadian Labour Code by unions wanting to be recognized as the bargaining agents for certain parliamentary employees. The Canada Labour Relations Board said that it was asserted qualified to hear them, but until now, it has published no certification order.

The Canada Labour Code is the act which governs collective bargaining for private sector workers under the jurisdiction of Parliament. Some fear that certification under the Code accompanied with the full right to strike might seriously jeopardize the efficient operation of Parliament. This is why the Government introduced this bill which, in a manner of speaking, takes away the full right to strike from our parliamentary employees.

I find the attitude of the Government somewhat strange in this case. Indeed, would the fact that the messengers of the House of Commons and certain employees of the Parliamentary Library were on strike at a given time seriously compromise the efficient operation of Parliament? I ask this question seriously.

Our colleague for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who spoke before me in this debate pointed out quite rightly that the employees of other parliaments in the world have the right to strike. However, the mother of Parliaments in Great Britain has never been perturbed in its operation because some of its employees had the right to strike.

I have to ask myself whether the Government is not judging hastily and overly severely employees who have been working on Parliament Hill for many years, who have done their jobs as well as they could and who have never done anything to disturb the proper operation of this Parliament.

I find it somewhat strange that, while action is being taken before the Canada Labour Relations Board to have certain unions duly certified, the Government would disturb the normal process of this certification by introducing legislation which goes in the opposite direction and that it would continue to harass its employees by taking legal action. I have already said so and I now say it again: The problem of labour relations with the parliamentary employees will not be solved before the courts. The best proof of this is the fact that the recent decision of the Federal Appeal Court will be challenged by the Public Service Alliance. One of the representatives of the Alliance, Mr. Jean Bergeron, pointed out immediately after this ruling by the Federal Court that he would take the issue to the Supreme Court itself. It is obviously a very bad beginning for this new system of staff relations with the parliamentary employees if the parties involved continue to bicker before the courts. We, of the Liberal Party, would have much preferred that the Government come to a negotiated agreement with the representatives of these employees.

It seems to me that it would have been possible to do so if the Government had been willing to grant clearly and specifically to the representatives of the employees a clarification in the legislation about what Mr. Jacques Audette, president of the Public Service Alliance local and responsible for the parliamentary employees, said in a public letter dated May 7, 1985, the contents of which have been known for a number of months. This letter addressed to all Members of Parliament and Senators said the following:

> The issues which we were—and still are—most concerned about are classifications, job descriptions, competitions, promotions, transfers, as well as the fear to be laid off or dismissed.

However, I feel that the compulsory arbitration provided for under Bill C-45 is not a valid alternative, because employees who do not have the right to strike legally will, very often, strike illegally. The number of strikes which occur in Canada every year show to what extent workers, in order to make a point or get public opinion on their side, have often no other choice but to strike illegally. In my opinion, they have a poor knowledge of labour relations if they think that, through legislation, one can stop employees from going on strike when these employees feel that they have valid grounds to disrupt the normal order of things to convince their employer to show a little more understanding and compassion.

Therefore, I say to Government Members that if they think that by going ahead and imposing Bill C-45 on Parliament employees we will avoid strikes on the Hill, they are mistaken. It is not with strong-arm tactics that one can establish good labour relations.

I am quite disappointed with the uncompromising attitude the Government is showing with this Bill.

• (1220)

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I made a speech on this Bill on Friday of last week in which I pointed out the historical master/slave relationship which has existed on this Hill since Parliament was established. As a matter of fact, when I first arrived here I was absolutely amazed at the subservience of the staff, brought on by what is known as parliamentary privilege. Members of Parliament are served, saluted, bowed before and waited on hand and foot. I gave the example of the little green bus which goes from the Confederation Building to the Centre Block. If a lowly messenger gets on the bus and it is carrying a Member as well, it cannot stop at the West Block even though it has to go right past, even though the Member is not in a hurry. Even though there is no vote being taken in the House, the bus goes directly to the Centre Block.

Mr. Minaker: Not when I'm on it!

Mr. Rodriguez: That is the policy. We also have a parking area which is called the pit. The bus was not allowed to go down there until an employee on the Hill was assaulted in the pit at night. Suddenly our consciences got pricked and we sent the bus down into the pit again. The bus is for MPs. We are treated in a way which isolates us from the realities of this world. On the Hill it is unreal. People got jobs on the Hill in the messenger service, the cafeterias and restaurants, based on who they knew, based on nepotism. That is an established fact. In some instances that practice still exists today.

Now, finally, Parliament is shamed because the workers on the Hill are taking active steps to organize themselves into a collective. They have been embarrassing Parliament and parliamentarians into treating their employees with the kind of respect that collective bargaining ensures. That is why we now have Bill C-45 before this House. I want to and did give credit to the Conservatives for at least bringing it forward. It is something which the Liberals, even though they knew what was going on, never dared to do. We must not forget that. They will now parade around—and it is unfortunate that none of them are in the House at this moment—as the great friends of the workers. I will rephrase that. I cannot see any of the Official Opposition who will make an argument against what I am saying.

Bill C-45 has been brought into the House. I want to ask how Government Members can look those workers in the eye and say this Bill will ensure their right to negotiate grievances, staffing, classification, occupational health and safety, and technological change? How can Conservative Members look in the eyes of those people who serve them so well and say they are doing the best they can?

This Bill is a son of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. My colleague from Kenora—Rainy River says it is illegitimate at that. We know the PSSRA was the cause of most of the problems between the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and the post office management. It does not permit those items I have listed to be negotiated. If the Government really wanted to do something, there is an alternative. It could have covered these workers under the Canada Labour Code. That Code is far more comprehensive legislation than the PSSRA. If on this Hill, for example, there has been a demotion, a firing, or a cut in pay Bill C-45 does not allow the worker to grieve that. It does not permit grieving of that particular practice, which is still happening on this Hill. How can you look the people who work for you in the eye and tell them you are giving them something that will provide protection.

On the question of grievances it does not allow workplace problems to be addressed by union grievances, or grievances filed by a group of workers. For example, health and safety in the print shop and in the cafeterias; air quality and other environmental problems in the Wellington Building cannot be subject to a union grievance. Technological change is overtaking this Hill rapidly; one only has to look at the introduction of the OASIS Program and the Micoms and the word processors, and a whole host of other technological changes. In fact, the House has been cutting the staff on the Hill. There was a 40 per cent cut in maintenance staff on the Hill. Workers under Bill C-45 would not be able to grieve such situations.

How can these Government Members look the staff on the Hill in the eye, those who wait on them hand and foot and serve them with a great deal of deference and respect? How can they the masters tell the workers on the Hill, "We are doing the best we can for you". Air Canada workers, railway workers, a whole host of other public servants across this country are covered under the Canada Labour Code. What skin is it off their nose to permit the workers on the Hill to come under the protection of the Canada Labour Code.

We had the example of somebody working in the cafeteria cutting their hand. He went to the nurse and the nurse said, "You can't go to work, go home". The worker reported to the supervisor and the supervisor said, "You get your buns on the job or else you get off the job". That kind of thing will continue under Bill C-45. It does not allow the right to strike. It is not that workers on the Hill all want to go out on strike tomorrow. But in fact that is the ultimate, that is the last resort. Bill C-45 does not give workers the right to remove their services. As my colleague from Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) asked, what has been the reason for not going with the right to strike? We are told, "Oh, we have got to go with the privilege of Parliament. You cannot interfere with parliamentarians' rights".

The Mother of Parliament, which we have always traditionally looked to for our examples in our parliamentary processes, has have full bargaining rights for their employees, including the right to strike. I have not read where the workers at Westminster have tied up Parliament and prevented parliamentarians from doing their job. Yet we have this condition in Bill C-45. We have no grievance procedures that are of strength, no staffing permitted to be grieved, the whole question of classification is non-negotiable, occupation, health and safety are non-negotiable, non-grievable, and the right to strike is not there.

The Conservatives have not been participating in this debate, and I wonder why the benches on the government side have been so silent. I would like them to enter into debate on the principles of Bill C-45. They owe it to the workers on this Hill who have served them and who continue to serve them so well. You cannot hide behind Bill C-45, it is transparent. It does not do a thing to cover you up. You are showing you do not give a hoot and you do not respect the workers on the Hill when you bring Bill C-45 into this House and ask us to pass it. That is why we are opposed to it. I want to hear some Conservative debate. We are entitled to hear it and I think the workers are entitled to hear where you stand because you are going to ask them for your vote on election day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Question?

[Translation]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to offer you a few comments on Bill C-45, especially because in the course of my carreer here in Ottawa, I have had the honour to serve as President of the Treasury Board. In this capacity, I have had a great many occasions to deal with issues raised and considered in this Bill.

[English]

Over the time, Mr. Speaker, had the honour, and the privilege of that responsibility as President of the Treasury Board, to address in my own mind, along with my colleagues, and in dialogue with the citizens of Canada, the rights of public employees generally in terms of collective bargaining, the right to strike and, of course, in the latter days, the rights of those public servants who serve us so well here on the Hill. The bottom line is that our employees be treated fairly, that their rights be protected, but not in a paternalistic way. That is why it is essential that certain rights be extended to them.

Today in the very few moments allowed to me I want to address one of the rights which is not extended, and what one must do to ensure that right, in the absence of that very important right in labour-management relations to strike, to withdraw services, and that is the right of the employees to meaningful arbitration. There must be a mechanism for the settlement of disputes which is objective and fair. There is no room for paternalism in these relationships. The employees must be protected, but in a way which protects the public interest at the same time.

Without digressing, let me recount for the benefit of the Members of the House two experiences which I had as President of the Treasury Board which influenced me to a considerable degree in arriving at the conclusion that in many circumstances the right to strike is inappropriate, not in the interests of the employees, not in the interests of the employer, the Government of Canada, and certainly not in the interests of the public. Let me explain why, and why I believe that experience is important in excluding that particular right in this piece of legislation.

At one time I was faced simultaneously with strikes of employees who had a direct impact upon the public interest. Postal workers, of course, are a classic example. Now, the bargaining chip in the case of a strike by postal workers is not the Government of Canada; the bargaining chip is the public interest. It is the holding of the public hostage which becomes the principal trading chip in negotiations. That is not what collective bargaining in the public sector should be designed to accomplish. The employer is not hurt, except perhaps politically, but the people of Canada are hurt. The same is true in the case of air controllers, where there is a public outcry, and the Members of the House would immediately have to be called upon to legislate these workers back to work. That is the very denial of any right to strike which has been granted.

On the other hand, I recall a strike of the translators. There was very little disposition on the part of the public to be generous, if I can use that term, with the translators because the public interest was not affected. In that case the right to strike was not serving the interests of the employees, and in the other case it was not serving the interests of the public. When I look at the circumstances of employees on the Hill, clearly the right to strike is inappropriate. It would be curious indeed if the operations of this institution were to be shut down by reason of a strike of employees. Even if the powers of designation which exist under the relevant public service legislation were to be used, so that those employees essential to the safety, health and security of the public were required to work, there would still be picketers and picket lines. Members of the House would be called upon to cross those picket lines in the interest of discharging the very important responsibilities that they have assumed as Members of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, these comments deal only with a few aspects of the legislation now before the House. However, I wish to emphasize just how essential it is for the rights and interests of all these employees to be protected effectively and in a way which is not, as we say in English, paternalistic.

• (1240)

[English]

Therefore, I am pleased that movement is being made in some directions. I believe from the debate that I have heard, the commentary on the Bill and my analysis of it, that this probably can be improved substantially in terms of providing employees the protection they require. At the same time, however, there must be the overriding consideration for the public interest.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-45. I am sure you would like to have an opportunity to express your views; I am sure that you would not support this piece of government legislation.

The employees on the Hill and those in the trade union movement who have studied this Bill realize very well that the Government does not really support collective bargaining. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), pointed out that the mother of Parliament in Westminster has had full union rights for many years. In Canada, these rights exist with the Supreme Court, the Privy Council, the Governor General, Air Canada, CN, CP, CBC, the Mint, Canada Post, Canada Ports, CMHC and almost all of the other agencies associated with the federal Crown. They have appropriate mechanisms for collective bargaining rights.

This Bill flows from the 1984 declaration by the Canada Labour Relations Board that it had jurisdiction over Parliament Hill employees. This would have offered superior rights and tools to the workers on the Hill to those being offered under Bill C-45. On examination of the clauses of Bill C-45 this morning I find it to be a document designed to choke a donkey. It contains some 89 clauses and dozens of subclauses explaining what powers employees do not have and why they should not have them.

This Bill is extremely revealing of the Government, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and I suppose the entire front bench of that administration. They do not want to deal effectively with those workers who are deserving, more than anyone else in the country, of a demonstration of good faith by the Government.

The denial of these rights will affect committee clerks, constables and security, nurses, printing services, the staff of Members of Parliament, French and English indexers, the Senate maintenance and messenger service, the Library of Parliament, maintenance, the committee reporting services, the broadcast service, the messengers and distribution service, and the restaurant and cafeterias.

In the seven years that I have been here I have seen many occasions when workers on Parliament Hill have been very much in need of the protection that is provided by union rights and grievance procedures. As a matter of fact, this morning when I was taking the bus from the Confederation building, a Government Member on board wanted to get off at the front door of the West Block. The driver has been given certain criteria under which to operate the bus. He saw that there were other people on board who were coming here. He did not go to the side door, but stopped at the corner so that the Government Member had to get off and walk some 30 feet. The Government Member became upset and asked why he was not taken to the front door. It is because of situations like that that workers on the Hill require some kind of realistic protection, which is not provided in this Bill.

The Bill contains no solutions to the problems which originally led staff to begin organizing on the Hill. Bill C-45 very carefully prevents any real negotiations for the classification of position and assignment of duties. It very specifically prohibits any kind of negotiation on staffing with respect to job appointments, appraisals, promotions, demotions, transfers or lay-offs. As the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt pointed out, these are crucial rights because of the history of nepotism on the Hill, where a position has often been corralled by someone who happens to be related to a person with influence here. It is an example of another situation in which workers, whether or not they are new on the Hill, require some kind of procedure to protect their rights.

Grievance procedures cannot be truly negotiated because limits are set on what grievances can go to third party arbitration. Specifically, union grievances are not allowed. I can see the shame on your face, Mr. Speaker, that the Government cannot be controlled and brought into the 20th Century. Bill C-45 is a dinosaur egg. We will have to display a dinosaur egg every Easter to symbolize the reactionary tripe being drafted by the Government.

I believe Canadians want to know about some of the experiences of Parliament Hill employees rather than this lengthy Bill which consists of hundreds of pages, in spite of the Nielsen task force recommendation about saving money.

Let us examine the experience of a cafeteria service employee who cut his hand while working on the job. The nurse told him that it was not safe to go back to work because of the nature of his wound. However, his manager told the employee to go back to work or face disciplinary action. What kind of nonsense is that? This employee was working with food to be served to everyone on the Hill. He was told by the nurse to go home because he could not possibly stay on the job, for medical reasons.

The Government is not interested in knowing what is happening on the Hill. It must be stated and restated until the Government's dinosaur mentality fades.

The management, following their instructions, apply all kinds of criteria to the workers on the Hill. In the case I just mentioned, not only are these guidelines rubbish, they endanger the life and well-being, not only of the individual involved but of those who are eating the food. My friend from Sudbury raised the point—

• (1250)

Mr. Rodriguez: Nickel Belt.

Mr. Fulton: Your official residence is in Sudbury. I do not mind letting the people who live in Nickel Belt know that the Hon. Member lives in Sudbury.

Mr. Rodriguez: I don't live in Sudbury.

Mr. Fulton: You don't?

Mr. Rodriguez: No.

Mr. Fulton: In Capreol, then. I am sorry Mr. Speaker, it was a small error. I want to ask why Hon. Members opposite are not speaking in this debate. Why are my friends from Alberta not speaking? The Ministers of the Crown are refusing to rise and explain why security workers on the Hill, those people who put themselves between us and any problems, are not allowed to have any kind of grievance procedure whereby there is some kind of arbitration process, some kind of realistic collective bargaining procedure where their rights and concerns are heard? What if one of the senior management in security is a little off base on some kind of security measure and the younger fellow, the guy who has been more recently trained, says time and time again: "We should really be doing this and this" but the particular person in management says: "No, because I like to play golf at two o'clock or whatever"? I am not saying this is necessarily the case. What I am saying is there needs to be those kinds of mechanisms in place so we can increase the morale of those who do the tough work, whether in relation to Members of Parliament or to the administration of this huge complex. Real changes can then take place and we could see true efficiencies coming forth. We should not just be getting rid of people and shuffling them around.

I must say that the dinosaur egg is being hatched. I think the people of Canada should hear from some of these 211 Conservative Members of Parliament as to why Bill C-45 is the route to go. I certainly intend to transmit any of those speeches to the trade unionists in my constituency.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few comments to the debate on Bill C-45. I do so from the perspective of someone who has been a union member and a member of management, having seen it from both sides.

First, we have to remember that the people about whom we are speaking are not our servants. They are our employees and there is a great difference. I come from the public sector and I know the phrase "public servant" has a certain connotation in the minds of the taxpayers. It also has a certain connotation here on the Hill. We have to keep in mind that these people are employees and not servants. They are human beings and deserve the dignity of having the right to have a union and for that union to have the ability to represent them in the best way possible. In order to represent Hill employees, the union must have the tools which are available to most unions, for example, the right to grievance procedures, the right to strike, and a number of other matters which have been raised so far in this debate.

Let me deal with the right to strike because it is a fundamental right. When we have two sides sitting down to negotiate, whether it is language in a contract, the wording of a job description, the wage and benefit package or the hours of work, the employees only have one thing going for them and that is their ability to withdraw their services. The employer has the power of the dollar and control over their work lives. The workers only have the ultimate power, after negotiations have failed, to withdraw their services.

I find it rather ironic that the House of Commons and everything related to it, as far as the public is concerned, shuts down for two or three weeks at Christmas and two months or more in the summer. Obviously, we can do without Members of Parliament in terms of this Chamber and committees, by and large, for that period of time. Therefore, we cannot argue that we must have security staff, bus drivers, the people who record our words electronically and in-print form and all the other people who work here. If they withdrew their services, the world would not stop, and nor would Canada. Perhaps, if I could be facetious, we might save a few trees because there would be less Hansards printed. But those services are not fundamental.

We cannot argue, as some do, in terms of professions where nurses, doctors, policemen, firemen and so on are essential and should not have the right to strike. There all sorts of opportunities to deal with problems in these very clear instances where workers are considered an essential service. There are other mechanisms in place. In addition to grievance procedures which are built in, there is the arbitration procedure to establish the wage benefits and fringe benefit packages. The workers' loss of the right to strike has in some cases been reluctantly replaced with another mechanism. But here on the Hill what would be the problem if, as a result of an impasse in negotiation between employees and the Government, a particular group decided to withdraw its services as a means of expressing its frustration and desire to reach a settlement which ensures fairness to them? What would be the problem? What if the Clerks of the Table went on strike? Would this place come to a grinding halt? We would rely on you, Mr. Speaker, and your colleagues, to give us direction in terms of clarification. We do that all the time, so you, Mr. Speaker, could perform that role.

There are many other areas. If cafeterias and restaurant workers decided that their working conditions and wage benefits were not appropriate and went on strike we could go across the street. There are other alternatives. So there is no reason why we in the House of Commons should restrict the ability of those employees to withdraw their services if they feel they have no other choice in order to get an agreement which makes sense.

The ability to negotiate job descriptions is also fundamental. Without a job description in which you have some say there is a fuzziness of lines of responsibility, and the management side has an ability to manipulate one's duties without due consideration of whether it is really within "their job description". A job description should not just be laid upon the table and the worker told to do it. There has to be some give and take, some negotiation around the wording and interpretation of the wording. That can be very important. I have sat on the union side in negotiations and worked out job desciptions. As we do in the House of Commons, there was discussion over the words "may" and "shall" which have very specific meanings. If in a job description an employer says a worker "may" do this or "shall" do this, there is a lot of difference in the meaning. The workers and their representatives should have the opportunity to sit down with management and discuss these kinds of things. It should not be arbitrary.

We are getting close to the one o'clock adjournment. I would, therefore, ask permission to sit down and resume again at three o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

SOVIET NUCLEAR REACTOR ACCIDENT IN UKRAINE—CANDU SAFETY FEATURES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the accident at a Russian reactor site near Kiev should not, and cannot, be discussed in such a way so that all reactors in the world will be considered to be the same. The design and safety features of the Russian reactor in question are considerably different from Canada's CANDU reactor. The safety features of the CANDU reactor are proven and outstanding.

We understand that the Russian reactor is a graphite-moderated reactor. We also understand that there is a fire in the reactor. Such a situation could not happen in a CANDU reactor because we use heavy water as a moderator.

The CANDU reactor has barriers of concrete between the reactor vessel and the environment. These barriers would trap any potential radiation leak. We use heavy water as a moderator instead of graphite. Heavy water will not burn. Therefore, there could not be a fire. At the same time, the CANDU has concrete shields for added safety from potential radiation.

At Pickering, Ontario—

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ENUMERATION OF ELECTORS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak out on an issue of critical importance to concerned British Columbians.

With a provincial election looming on the horizon the enumeration of eligible voters is now at an end. Voters lists have now been tallied. The results are farcical—a sham. Bill Bennett's Government has been so niggardly with money for the enumeration that there are now 500,000 fewer names on the voters' list than there were for the last provincial election.

It is also more difficult to get on the voters' list now than it was before. If one cannot get to a registration office oneself, then one will not get on the list. If one moves between now and the election then one probably will not have the right to vote.

It seems that Bill Bennett and his scandal-ridden regime are afraid to face the verdict of all British Columbians. I urge everyone who wants to give the boot to Mr. Bennett and his cronies to get on the list. Democracy is too precious to be left to the scheming, manipulative machinations of Bill Bennett and his Government.

SOVIET NUCLEAR REACTOR ACCIDENT IN UKRAINE—SAFETY STANDARDS INVESTIGATION URGED

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the nuclear disaster in Ukraine yesterday has become an international issue due to the detection of high levels of radiation in countries bordering the Soviet Union. Experts have already indicated to us that the safety standards in place in the Soviet nuclear power station were less than acceptable. There is now fear that radiation fall-out could reach as far as North America.

I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to follow every avenue at his disposal to bring about a full multi-nation investigation into Soviet safety standards in nuclear power. This disaster could cost many lives. It is time that the Soviet Union put the rights of its peoples and the peoples of the world above technological short-cuts.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

POSSIBLE EMPLOYEE LAY-OFFS AT NORTHERN TELECOM IN AYLMER, P.Q.—POSSIBLE FORMATION OF COMMON FRONT

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is making political capital at the expense of workers at Northern Telecom in Aylmer. The facts are not at all like that.

On March 25, I met with union representatives from Northern Telecom in my riding office. I suggested a meeting with the Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) and forming a common front with federal and provincial members and mayors of municipalities. I advised the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) of the problem.

On April 18, I received a letter from the national union saying that it preferred a personal commitment from all these people instead of a common front.

Meanwhile, the union local wanted a common front but did not pursue the idea, probably under pressure from its national union.

Northern Telecom's decision was made on the basis of product demand. Furthermore, unlike what was claimed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, jobs will not be transferred to Atlanta, Georgia, since this U.S. plant has also suffered job cuts. The number of jobs at the plant has dropped by 270.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds are up. The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

COMPREHENSIVE TEST BAN TREATY ADVOCATED

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, is nuclear war inevitable? Is war inherent in the fabric of history? What is to be done about it? Is there a special role for Canada? These were some of the questions asked and answered at an extraordinary conference on peace and security held in Montreal last week.

The writer, Elie Wiesel, stated the evident: the next summit conference between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev must take place. He added that it should take place in Hiroshima.

Our Amabassador to the U.N., Mr. Lewis, stated that Canadians must promote a comprehensive test ban treaty, without the slightest equivocation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should forcefully convey these views to President Reagan and the western leaders in Tokyo next week. He should insist that concrete steps be taken to arrive at a comprehensive test ban treaty in the near future. Canadians will be watching, and Canadians demand no less.

TOURISM

HIGHWAY NETWORK IN THE OUTAOUAIS—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Barry Moore (Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to talk about the importance of tourism in the outer regions. In the riding of Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle, the most beautiful riding in Quebec, tourism is becoming a very important industry.

Unfortunately, our road system has not kept up with these development. However, things are changing. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, a $100-million program was announced for repairing and developing the Outaouais road system.

The federal Government has agreed to give $45 million for this project, under a shared-cost program with the Government of Quebec.

• (1405)

[English]

This project, which is to be completed over the course of the next four years, will allow easier access to the wonders of our region. Golfers, skiers, anglers, hunters, and nature lovers will now be able to come to our towns and villages by way of a modern and safe road system. With increased tourism, the economy of Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle will prosper and our young people will no longer have to leave friends and family to find jobs.

TIMING OF PROGRAM ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Well, folks, do you remember that new Tory youth program promised by the end of the last fiscal year—oops, I mean by the end of spring? We now have the latest updated report from the Minister of State in charge of opening youth employment centres. She says to look for it in the fall, or perhaps even in the winter.

I have a better idea. Start looking for the program close to the next election when the Minister will be pursuing her real job, trying to capture the youth vote. That is when the program will be announced. However, for both youth and the Tories, that will be too late.

FISHERIES

ACQUISITION OF PÊCHERIES CARTIER INC. BY COOPÉRATIVE PURDEL—GOVERNMENT'S PRIVATIZATION POLICY

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, we were overjoyed to hear that a Gaspé co-operative was able to take over Pêcheries Cartier Inc., a Crown corporation with three seafood processing plants and a sales office.

This sale is in line with our renewed economy and our Government's privatization policy. By selling this Crown corporation to a flourishing and well-managed co-operative, we are guaranteeing not only its survival but also its future development.

The new owner, Coopérative Purdel, will continue to operate the plants and will maintain about 500 jobs.

In a region like the Gaspé, it was imperative to improve the productivity of a company that was in danger of closing down. By putting it in the hands of people in the industry, our Government has again shown its confidence in the entrepreneurship of Canadians, the Gaspé and Quebecers.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RESULTS OF POLL CONDUCTED IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the CBC released a poll that was recently conducted in the national capital region analysing residents' views on the Government's restraint measures and on the Public Service. Given that a large majority of these residents are public servants, the results were extremely interesting.

Forty-five per cent of public servants think there are too many public servants and only 8 per cent think there are too few. When asked to judge the value for taxpayers' money, 69 per cent of public servants answered either "fair" or"poor". Thirty per cent of public servants feel more services should be contracted out to the private sector, and 23 per cent feel the over-all effect of the Government's restraint measures are positive.

It is refreshing to know that public servants realize that Government bureaucracy is out of hand. The Liberals and NDP should get their heads out of the sand and recognize what all other Canadians have known for years. We are often too quick to criticize and too slow to praise. Today I, along with millions of other Canadians, praise the public servants on their objective analysis of the Government's performance and direction.

POLITICAL PARTIES

RESULTS OF POLL CONDUCTED IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I too want to speak about yesterday's CBC poll. It said in part that, if an election were to be held tomorrow, the Tories would get 23 per cent of the vote, the Liberals would get 29.1 per cent of the vote, and the NDP would get 12 per cent of the vote. The moral of the story is that the people of the national capital area have had it with the Tory Government and the next time around they will get rid of the Tories and will bring the Liberals back to power.

TRADE

OBJECTIVES OF FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, free trade negotiations between Canada and the United States are aimed at boosting economic growth, creating more jobs, and making our industries more efficient and more competitive on world markets.

Contrary to the views expressed by United Auto Workers President Bob White, we do not want to sell our technology, we do not want to sell our culture, and we certainly do not want to sell out Canada. If Mr. White believes he can help Canadian negotiations by hiding facts from the public, he is badly mistaken.

Instead of holding his union workers to ransom he should be defending their interests. If he wants to get into politics, let him hand in his resignation, get himself elected leader of the New Democratic Party, and take his seat in the House of Commons where he can display his true socialist colours.

MULTICULTURALISM

CHANGE IN FUNDING CRITERIA

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek) has begun to change funding criteria in his sector before the House approves his new multicultural policy. The result is a reduction in funding to hard-pressed community organizations in various regions. Some organizations which were rejected because of the spending freeze last winter are likely to be missed again in the 1986-87 Budget.

The Minister has decided that multiculturalism means business, and some of his limited funds will be directed to support that initiative. The Minister knows the inevitable consequences of that. Some organizations will be cut off, or all of them will receive less than they need.

In the Manitoba region multicultural program officers have only 90 per cent of last year's funding to fund this year's programs. It is more than time for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism to issue a policy paper and to consult with ethnocultural communities about his funding priorities. It is also more than time for the Government to rediscover the vital work of multicultural organizations and to fund their efforts accordingly.

INCREASE IN EXPORTS FROM SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, recently the Saskatchewan economy has encountered the difficult combination of declining world markets for wheat, oil, uranium, and potash. Despite these set-backs in the resource industry, the latest trade indicators show that Saskatchewan is faring well with a Progressive Conservative provincial Government.

By working in partnership with the federal Government, total Saskatchewan exports in 1985 increased 11.6 per cent from 1984. Manufacturing exports grew by over 14 per cent. Already in the first two months of 1986 over-all Saskatchewan exports have increased by an impressive 48 per cent from the same period last year.

This should interest the New Democratic Party particularly. As we know, the NDP is against more trade for Saskatchewan. The NDP favours conflict and harassment in federal provincial relations. This is in stark contrast to the Government of Grant Devine which sees the value of trade and the success of harmonious federal—provincial co-operation.

TRADE

SUPPORT FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, over the past year members of the opposition Parties have tried to mislead Canadians with regard to the upcoming trade negotiations with the United States. Their strategy of spreading doom and gloom scenarios has been quite irresponsible.

Let us look at some facts. Eighty per cent of our exports go to the United States, and approximately 2.5 million jobs are dependent upon trade. If we want to maintain and build upon our past successes, surely we should not bury our heads in the sand like an ostrich. Surely we should welcome the opportunity to sit down with our largest trading partner to discuss our trade issues and theirs. However, it is vitally important that we do our homework and be well organized for these discussions.

I believe we have a superb structure in place, under the leadership of Simon Reisman, with which to enhance our trade opportunities with the United States.

MINISTER OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION—REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I want to ask him if he has obtained the resignation of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, in light of the sleazy spectacle of a Minister in financial difficulty cashing in on ministerial connections to seek a very favourable loan agreement from a company which has benefited from his Department's programs.

• (1415)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not secured, nor have I asked for, the resignation of the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion, and the Hon. Member for York Centre sets new records for indecency with his question.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was asking the Prime Minister for his understanding of the facts. Surely if his new guidelines mean anything, and if the guidelines from 1984 mean anything, especially in light of what the Prime Minister said in the House to me on June 6, 1985:

> We must seek to avoid even the appearance of a conflict of interest.

—surely that standard is violated by the spectacle of a Minister's wife getting benefits—

Mr. Gormley: Where is your question?

Mr. Kaplan: —seeking to obtain benefits for the family business from a company which has—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question, please?

Mr. Kaplan: —benefited from his departmental programs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That is not a question, Mr. Speaker. That is just an attempt to slander somebody who is not here. The Member will have to do a lot better than that because what he has been associated with is character assassination, McCarthyism, and slander, and that is not good enough in Canada.

NEWSPAPER REPORT—FAMILY BUSINESS TRANSACTION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has an opportunity to explain the facts. What explanation can he put on the story made public today involving the Minister, the Minister's wife, a family business, that brings it within his conflict of interest guidelines?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Now the Hon. gentleman finally asks a question, Mr. Speaker. Finally he asks a question.

An Hon. Member: Give us an answer.

Mr. Mulroney: You will get your answer. When the report appeared this morning, I asked the Deputy Prime Minister, because I was chairing a meeting of P and P Committee this morning prior to my departure, to meet immediately with the Deputy Registrar General of Canada who is responsible for conflict of interest guidelines. The Deputy Prime Minister met and reviewed the facts as alleged, and received the assurance from the Deputy Registrar General that the Minister was in full compliance.

ACTIVITIES OF MINISTER'S WIFE IN LOAN NEGOTIATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, under the conflict of interest guidelines the company, constituting a principal asset of the Minister, was in a blind trust, yet the Minister's wife actively negotiated a loan. She first approached a company which at that time was actively discussing with the Minister a tax advantage and a sizable investment in Cape Breton. Does that not constitute, in the Prime Minister's mind, a violation of his conflict of interest guidelines, not only with respect to the blind trust but with respect to an appearance of wrong-doing on the part of the Minister and the Minister's wife?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this series of questions is very similar to the question asked on April 7 by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor based on a very similar newspaper article. The right hon. gentleman is surely clutching at straws when he suggests in the words that he uses in his preamble that wives and spouses of Members of Parliament are not free to seek an independent and separate career—

Mr. Fulton: Not interest-free loans.

Mr. Nielsen: And, as a former Leader of that Party admonished us on one occasion, "wives are not chattels".

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE RELIEVED OF DUTIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are not suggesting that Mrs. Stevens is anything of the kind. We are suggesting that she is a partner with her husband. Instead of a blind trust she actively negotiated a loan for that asset, there being no blind trust, and she approached a company and a gentleman with whom the Minister was having active discussions about an investment in Cape Breton.

My question, and the Deputy Prime Minister may attempt to answer it, is for the Prime Minister and only he can answer it. Will he relieve this Minister of his duties until we have an opportunity to have a full inquiry into how that company got a $2.6 million interest-free loan? How are we going to satisfy that?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Leader of the Opposition clearly believes in the novel principle of pre-trial hanging. We do not, and neither do Canadians. Nor do we believe in acting on unverified speculation in newspapers. The matter is—

Mr. Lapierre: It is your duty.

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, you are right. It is my duty. It is my duty to proceed in accordance with these guidelines. Today, the Deputy Prime Minister met with the senior Government official responsible who advised him that there was no conflict of interest. And now he is talking about ethical guidelines. I fail to see why any action should be taken on the basis of unfounded allegations by journalists, which in themselves do not warrant enforcement of the regulations.

TRADE

IMPOSITION OF U.S. DUTY ON FISH IMPORTED FROM CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We just learned at noon today from Washington that the first victim of the so-called clean launch free trade talks is Canada's East Coast fishery. The International Trade Commission in Washington has decided there will be a 5.8 per cent duty on Canadian whole fish exported from Atlantic Canada. What does the Government of Canada propose to do to look after the interests of our East Coast fishery?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all it is the grossest of distortions to suggest that this decision had anything to do with the discussions on trade arrangements with the United States. Indeed, if those discussions are successful it may be that we will have in place a more effective instrument to protect Canadian interests. That is what we are looking to do.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this decision has everything to do with free trade. What was under consideration in part in the U.S. reaching this decision was Canadian regional development and fishery research programs which they regard as an unfair subsidy. Given that, is the Minister now telling the people of Canada that in order to get free trade with the U.S. we have to abandon all such programs which are essential to the development of this country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course I am not saying that. No reasonable person would.

Mr. Broadbent: That is what the U.S. is saying.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I suppose that if one were playing in the House of Commons the role of delivering paid poitical announcements for the Canadian Labour Congress, one might say that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): But that is not the truth.

Mr. Crosbie: Bob White's Charlie McCarthy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will take my stand with Canadian fishermen any day, wherever he may want to stand.

FISHERY PROGRAMS INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I was talking to representatives of the Canadian fishing industry this morning and I want to ask the Minister—

An Hon. Member: In Toronto.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Yes. Believe it or not, fishermen from Atlantic Canada go to conventions in Toronto. It may surprise him but it does not surprise them.

Mr. Crosbie: They are pulling your chain, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: Is the Minister saying that in order to meet free trade requirements, according to this U.S. ruling, Canadian fishermen have to get rid of fishery research grants and regional development programs? If he is not saying that, what is his position with the U.S? Is he going to tell them their decision is wrong? Is he going to stand up for Canadian fishermen?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the first decisions I had to make as Secretary of State for External Affairs was whether or not we would accede to an American request to delay for one year the application of an international court decision which was in the interests of Canadian fishermen. I said no, we would not delay justice for Canadian fishermen for a year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): In that tradition of standing up for Canadian fishermen we are now examining all the details of this decision today. We are looking particularly at what aspects might be appealable under the GATT. If there are any, then Canada will appeal.

Mr. Crosbie: And we fought it all the way. Next smear.

REPORT OF LOAN NEGOTIATED BY MINISTER'S WIFE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if he knew that his wife had successfully negotiated—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Garneau: —negotiated a $2.6 million loan free of interest for one year from a person closely associated with the company that had had major financial dealings with his Department.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. The last part of the question does make it in order.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): As the Prime Minister has just informed the House, he asked me this morning to look once again, personally, into the same matter that I looked into last April 7 in response to a question by the Member for Essex—Windsor. I met with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General and he assured me that the Minister had fully complied with the very exacting demands of the conflict of interest guidelines. Now, that is a fact. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has taken the trouble to speak with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General himself, but were he to do so he would get that response from him.

[Translation]

INQUIRY CONCERNING DATE $2.6 MILLION INTEREST-FREE LOAN WAS NEGOTIATED

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. It is quite simple: When did you find out that your wife had negotiated a $2.6 million interest-free loan for the period of one year, through a person closely associated with the company with which your department does business? The question is quite straightforward. Just answer yes or no or give a date.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): First, what the hon. gentleman is raising is a matter with respect to conflict of interest, although he does not apparently have the courage to come right out and make an accusation with respect thereto. Second, if he had read the conflict of interest guidelines that were tabled in this House last September 9, 1985, he would know that they do not apply to spouses of Members of Parliament, who, we maintain, are not chattels.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISASTERS

SOVIET NUCLEAR REACTOR ACCIDENT IN UKRAINE—POSSIBLE EFFECTS ON CANADA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to either the Minister of the Environment or the Minister of Health and Welfare, whichever one is speaking for the Government with respect to actions taken by the Canadian Government in relation to the accident in the Ukraine. I wonder if either Minister could bring the House up to date on what special surveillance mechanisms are being put into place by Environment Canada, what has been discovered, and bring the House up to date on the possible effects of this accident on the Canadian atmosphere.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to abuse the time of the House and I will try tobe very succinct. I am sure all of us in the House regret the accident that has taken place in the U.S.S.R. I want to say from a Canadian point of view that, as Minister of National Health and Welfare, I have the lead responsibility under the federal Nuclear Emergency Response Plan, in conjunction with other colleagues in the House, regarding incidents such as this.

As of noon today we have activated the emergency response team. Environment Canada is using 28 airports and they are starting to monitor as of noon today. Weather stations which tested weekly have been asked to do so continuously now on a daily basis. As these stations are on our northern frontiers I would possibly be in a position to be able to make a further statement on Thursday.

I intend to keep the House and the public as informed as I can. I can say I believe from a Canadian point of view the best information we have at the moment is that Canadians are not at risk, but obviously we are checking this literally minute by minute.

Mr. Blaikie: I would hope that the Minister might consider making a statement at an appropriate time, either tomorrow or Thursday, to keep the House up to date.

SAFETY STANDARDS FOR NUCLEAR POWER PLANTS—SWEDISH CALL FOR INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does Canada intend to support the call by Sweden for an international conference on safety standards with respect to nuclear power plants, and will we also be supporting the desire of the Swedish Government that the world have more access to inspection of nuclear power plants within the Soviet Union?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has been a long-standing position of Canadian Governments that we would want to support initiatives of that kind, and certainly Canada would actively support any initiatives that were born out of these tragic circumstances.

I might take the opportunity to indicate that, on the instructions of the Prime Minister, Canada is today communicating to the Soviet Union our willingness to provide any kind of technical help that may be within our competence and may be useful to the Soviet Union in these circumstances.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

IMPOSITION OF U.S. DUTY ON CANADIAN FISH IMPORTS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, regardless of what the Secretary of State for External Affairs says, this action today by the United States Government represents a serious derailment on the fast track to free trade talks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: Does the Minister not believe that this is a clear slap in the face to the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada? Was there not an understanding, if not an agreement, that no new duties would be imposed while these talks were on?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that Members of the House, facing a situation where there is real harm done to Canadian fishermen, would try to put partisan advantage in the House of Commons ahead of the interests of Canadian fishermen.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We are concerned about the interests of the Canadian fishermen who are affected. That is why we have been making the strongest possible representations for one long year in order to achieve a different result than came down from this particular agency. We supplied counsel. We won half the case; we lost half the case.

According to American law, the President of the United States has no power to intervene. We have the power to look under GATT to see if there are means by which we can appeal the decision. We are going to do that.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, Canadian fishermen are saying that if this is what it is like to be on the fast track to the United States, perhaps we would be better off on a slow boat to China.

REASONS FOR U.S. ACTIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, fishermen want to know why the United States imposed a duty on Canadian saltfish last year, for the first time in history, a duty on round ground-fish today, and they say that they are starting their investigation tomorrow to impose a duty on frozen fish. Why has this happened only since the Tory Government came to power?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member was conspicuous by his silence during the years when his Party was in office in the House of Commons. But that does not suggest that history began in September of 1984. History of reform began at that time—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —including a history of reform in the trading arrangements between Canada and the United States so that we might put in place a system that better protects the interests of Canadian fishermen than the system that was left to us by the Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, now that fishermen have fallen as first victims to the fast track, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. A few days ago President Reagan made the statement to Senator Packwood that the United States would:

—continue to retain full access to multilaterally sanctioned U.S. trade remedies.

Is it not the case that precisely the same kind of countervail action and duty is now possible and in fact enforceable in relation to softwood lumber?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the President's statement in his letter, as any literate reading would show, indicates that until there is a new arrangement, brought about by negotiations with Canada or some other means, existing remedies stay in place. That was made very clear yesterday. The United States has those remedies now. If we believe that those remedies do not serve Canada's interests, then it is very much in our interest to try to achieve better relations, which we can only do in the context of the trade negotiations which we are now pursuing.

POWERS OF U.S. SENATE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister pretended to be literate. He said that countervail is at the very heart of these negotiations that are going on in the United States. Since the U.S. Senate retains the power on countervail during this whole process, is this not a bit like a poker game in which, during the next two years of negotiations, the United States builds up countervails on fish, lumber, hogs and everything else, while there is damn little we can do about it except sit around the House of Commons frittering time away?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know that accords with the Canadian Labour Congress script which is being read in the House of Commons by members of the New Democratic Party. It does not accord with any real set of apprehensions. Of course the United States retains a countervail capacity until there is a new agreement. So does Canada. The point is that we are seeking to find some negotiations that will result in a better situation for Canada. The New Democratic Party, guided by the Canadian Labour Congress, does not want to do anything at all except slip further into the past.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Instead of slipping right into the United States.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Tell the Leader of your Party to write a letter.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—POSITION OF MINISTERS' SPOUSES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister wrote to his Ministers, saying that: "I wish it to be understood clearly to all Ministers that they have an individual responsibility to prevent conflicts of interests, including those that might arise out of activities of their spouses, or dependent children, or their dealings in property or investments which are owned or managed in whole or in part by their spouses or dependent children." That was the Prime Minister's letter to his Ministers in regard to conflict of interest. Surely he does not expect Canadians to believe that the spectacle of the wife of a cabinet Minister seeking terms for a loan that are unavailable at normal lending institutions does not constitute, at the very least, according to his own letter, the appearance of a conflict of interest?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member quotes a passage from my letter of September 9, 1985, but neglects to read the sentence prior thereto. It indicates that this code, as was the case with previous guidelines, does not apply to the spouses or dependent children of public office holders. This does not apply, and it was consistent with a letter of April 28, 1980, from Prime Minister Trudeau to his erstwhile colleagues which said: "I would remind you of our decision not to apply the requirements of these guidelines to our spouses and dependent children." This qualification which appears—

Mr. Frith: Minister's assets.

Mr. Mulroney: —in my letter was explored with the—

Mr. Frith: Minister's assets.

Mr. Mulroney: He says the Minister's assets. You can be absolutely certain that Noreen Stevens is one of the greatest assets that any Minister could have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MANAGEMENT OF MINISTER'S ASSETS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister can twist and turn all he wants. He cannot swallow himself whole over this letter that he wrote on September 9. Does he not realize that the questions by Members in opposition refer to the management of assets that are owned by the Minister himself and do not refer to separate business activities that might be legitimately undertaken by the Minister's spouse? We are referring to the management and the borrowing of moneys, interest free, by the Minister's spouse for the Minister's company which was in financial trouble. Does he not realize that?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can only describe that lengthy bundle of assertions as absolute tripe. If the hon. gentleman took the trouble to call the Registrar General, he would be informed as I was, as late as this morning, that the Minister concerned had fully complied with the conflict of interest guidelines. If the Hon. Member does not choose to believe me, why does he not make that phone call and speak with that public official himself?

• (1440)

GRANT APPROVED BY MINISTER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, if that in fact is the case—

Mr. McDermid: Why don't you make the call?

Mr. Langdon: —it just proves the inadequacy of these conflict of interest guidelines. What we have here, frankly, as we look at it, is a clear case of family and friends—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Langdon: —being caught up in—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Question.

Mr. Langdon: Does the Prime Minister consider it consistent with his own conflict of interest guidelines for a Minister to approve $86 million in support of a company—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Langdon: —from which at the same time the Minister was receiving a $2.6 million loan for his company?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Langdon: Is that consistent with the conflict of interest guidelines?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I give the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor the same advice I gave him on April 7, 1986. What is consistent is for me to stand here, as has the Prime Minister, and tell him that the very exacting requirements of the conflict of interest guidelines have been met by the Minister. I have received that assurance personally from the Assistant Deputy Registrar General.

Mr. Gauthier: How long ago was that, Erik?

Mr. Nielsen: Why don't the hon. gentleman, and others who have not taken the trouble to receive that assurance personally, do just that?

Mr. Gauthier: Oh, come on. That's nonsense and you know it.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we have read the letter of the Prime Minister of September 9, 1985. Does the Prime Minister, when he actually goes back and looks at that letter, not believe that these extensive financial transactions contradict that 1985 letter where it was said very clearly: "All Ministers have an individual responsibility to prevent conflict of interests—".

An Hon. Member: Come on.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Langdon: "—including those that might arise out of the activities of their spouses—"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is in order.

Mr. Langdon: You cannot escape that.

Mr. Andre: How many lectures do we get from this guy each day?

Mr. Speaker: How many interjections do we get?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have responded to that question, Sir, but the hon. gentleman gives me the opportunity to remind his Leader and the Leader of the Official Opposition that on the same day, September 9, 1985, a letter was sent seeking their co-operation, and that of the Parties they lead, in the area of conflict of interest. The Prime Minister has yet to receive a response from either gentleman.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SIGNING OF SUB-AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC—EVOLUTION OF SITUATION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Quebec farm producers have been waiting for some time for the Quebec-Ottawa subsidiary agreement on agriculture to be signed.

Could the Minister inform Quebec farmers on the latest developments and on Quebec's participation?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the continuing representations of the Hon. Member on behalf of Quebec farmers. The Hon. Member will know that this Government has been anxious to sign an agricultural sub-agreement between the federal Government and the Province of Quebec, not only with the previous Government of the province but also the present Government. The Hon. Member may take some satisfaction from the fact that late last week I had confirmation from my provincial counterpart that he is prepared to enter into an agricultural agreement between the federal Government and the province in the amount of some $36 million.

LOAN NEGOTIATED BY MINISTER'S WIFE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): My question is directed to the Prime Minister and I would hope he would stop hiding behind the skirts of the Deputy Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —in the same way the Minister is hiding behind his wife's skirts on this particular issue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: What a sexist remark.

An Hon. Member: Sheila the sexist.

An Hon. Member: Next question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is there a question?

Ms. Copps: I am asking my question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Hurray for the rodent group.

Ms. Copps: On December 6, 1984, in response to the press question: "What does a Cabinet Minister have to do to get fired in a Mulroney Government?", the Prime Minister answered: "I think anything that violated—"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The other side is not being helpful either. The Hon. Member was asked for a question a minute ago. Is there a question?

Mr. Crosbie: Name her and get it over with.

Ms. Copps: Does the Prime Minister not believe that this particular loan violated the public trust?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would—

Mr. Mulroney: Oh, for God's sake.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Member obviously has not read and become familiar with the conflict of interest guidelines—because that is the subject she is raising—which were tabled in this House last September, 1985. She is obviously unaware of the mechanisms which are in place that would provide her with information which is of public record, and available to anyone who takes the trouble to call, with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General—

Mr. Gauthier: Come on, Erik! Sit down if you haven't anything else to say.

Mr. Nielsen: —who has the job, as a public official, to enforce—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Short supplementary, please.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister in all sincerity—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —whether he expects the Canadian people to believe the statement of the Minister that in fact he knew nothing about a loan of over $2 million? Does the Prime Minister really believe that the Minister was at arm's length with his own wife with respect to this transaction?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I think the Hon. Member would be the first to support me in the proposition that spouses are not chattels. They have their own lives and their own independent careers to lead.

Ms. Copps: The Government is keeping the heat off him.

Mr. Nielsen: They are not subject to the conflict of interest guidelines. If the Hon. Member would take the trouble to phone the public official to whom I made reference a moment ago, she would be reassured of the compliance of the Minister in every respect.

[Translation]

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Does he remember his letter dated September 9, 1985, in which he advised, and I quote:

—that all Ministers understand it is their personal responsibility to prevent conflicts of interest, including any that may arise from activities of their spouse or dependent children or from real estate transactions or investment operations in which the latter are directly or indirectly involved.

Does the Prime Minister believe there was no violation of this guideline in the transactions involving the department, Magna International Inc. and the company controlled by Mr. & Mrs. Stevens, the Minister and his wife, namely, York Centre Corp.?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Once again, Mr. Speaker, on the instructions of the Prime Minister, who was engaged in a very important and full agenda at Cabinet this morning, I personally spoke with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General and received his assurance that there had been full compliance by the Minister with the very exacting demands of the conflict of interest guidelines. If the Hon. Member is not prepared to accept that assurance of this public official conveyed through me, I invite him and other Hon. Members to do the telephoning personally.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact there is a prima facie case that conflict of interest did in fact take place—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Crosbie: No such thing.

Mr. Cassidy: —will the Government agree—

Mr. Crosbie: Call Bob White. See what Bob says.

Mr. Cassidy: —as a matter of urgency to have this matter referred for consideration to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that all Members of this House may satisfy themselves as to whether or not a conflict of interest has in fact taken place?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House is interested in the Perry Mason opinion of the hon. gentleman, but I have yet to leap to that quantum conclusion—

An Hon. Member: You will tomorrow.

Mr. Nielsen: —which would lead me to believe that I have seen—since I have been reading it—a prima facie case on the front page of The Globe and Mail. If it was there today, it was there on April 7 and a few other dates in the past.

FINANCE

CONCEPT OF INTRODUCING CAPITAL BUDGET

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In a recent message to Congress President Reagan said that consideration should be given to the creation of a capital budget which would be distinct from the budget for operating expenses. Since the Auditor General supports this concept, does the Minister intend to give it serious consideration?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is an issue in which we have been interested as a Government. There is an element of the Budget Papers devoted to a certain aspect of this particular issue. I might just say that while we are considering this issue, and while the Auditor General has expressed interest in it, the amount of capital spending which has been carried out by the Government of Canada is not great. The difference between capital budgeting and the type of budgeting that we are presenting right now would not be that much different.

Oral Questions

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in a September 9, 1985, letter the Prime Minister stated, and I quote:

> We have taken great pains to ensure that the new Code leaves no doubt that the ultimate responsibility for the ethical standards of the federal government rests with the Cabinet and, more particularly, with me.

Will the Prime Minister stand up in the House now and account for this action instead of passing it on to the Deputy Registrar General? Will he take the necessary action and relieve his Minister now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a distinct lack of either an understanding of the guidelines, which would not surprise anybody, or a wilful inclination to malice on the part of the Hon. Member, because in reference—

Mr. Marchi: Put your seat on the line, big shot!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: Put your seat on the line!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You really do your Party proud, fella.

Mr. Mulroney: There is a rising star of the Rat Pack, I tell you. Aren't they a bunch of sweethearts?

The guidelines state very carefully and specifically, as did those of Mr. Trudeau, that they do not apply to the spouses or dependent children of public office-holders. Notwithstanding that, the Deputy Prime Minister met with the appropriate officials this morning and received the assurance that there was full compliance.

Ms. Copps: Take your responsibility seriously!

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE RELIEVED OF DUTIES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about the spouse's assets, I am talking about the Minister's assets.

In view of the fact that in the same document the Prime Minsiter stated:

> But making use of these instruments will not relieve the Government of the responsibility—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a preamble. May I have a question, please?

Mr. Boudria: Will the Prime Minister now exercise his role of accountability to Parliament and immediately relieve that Minister of his functions?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister—

Ms. Copps: We don't want to hear from a self-confessed liar!

Mr. Nielsen: —did, indeed, exercise his responsibility—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An Hon. Member: Did you hear that?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East—

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw, withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe I heard something from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, who will know what it is she said. I think she said something unparliamentary. Would she please do the House the courtesy—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I made a general reference. But if the Speaker demands that a general reference be withdrawn, then I will certainly be happy to comply.

Mr. Mulroney: As usual, no class.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I was explaining, as I have before, that, indeed, the Prime Minister discharged his responsibilities this morning when he instructed his Deputy Prime Minister to assure him. I have done that, that is, I have assured the Prime Minister, on the basis of the assurance of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General to me, that there had been full compliance with the guidelines.

I know the Hon. Member is one of those who did call the Assistant Deputy Registrar General this morning. But he was obviously very unhappy with the answer that he received as to compliance.

Mr. Boudria: I wasn't even here this morning.

Mr. Gauthier: Your buddy system is not working, Erik.

Ms. Copps: You're bugging the wrong office, Erik.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gauthier: Get a new antenna!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: Get a new splice!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

TRADE

TOKYO ECONOMIC SUMMIT—DISCUSSION OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: A modicum of sanity.

Mr. Nystrom: In the last few days in the House we have often spoken of massive United States and European subsidies with regard to the export of grain around the world and their taking some of our traditional markets. In my hand I have a copy of the background material for the Tokyo Economic Summit. Why is agriculture barely even mentioned?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, agriculture is not only mentioned but it is very prominently mentioned in our communications. Our intention is to ensure that it is on the agenda as Canada's choice.

Each country is given an option with respect to the subject matter it wishes to carry forward for specific discussions. Ours is agriculture. I can tell my hon. friend that, pursuant thereto, we have invited the leaders of the Canadian agricultural community to meet with myself, the Minister of Finance, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs in Vancouver prior to our departure.

I can also tell my hon. friend that no later than tomorrow the Government will have a very important statement on behalf of farmers in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MEETING OF GRAIN EXPORTING COUNTRIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of scooping the Prime Minister, will he now confirm that there will be a meeting on June 2 in Vancouver of the five major grain exporting nations? Will he also tell the House what position we will be taking as a country regarding the United States and European subsidies?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, that is something that Canada has been working at for almost a year. Since last June I have had a chance to visit the four other major exporters. The Hon. Member will know that Canada, along with the United States, the European Economic Community, Argentina, and Australia, account for 95 per cent of the wheat which is traded in the world.

We have suggested that it would be appropriate to come together at the ministerial level for a small and rather informal meeting at least to begin some discussion of the areas which concern us. We are very close to being able to announce that we will be holding that meeting on the West Coast on June 2. We have a few details to work out; but we are very close to being able to hold the first ever such meeting.

DISASTERS

SOVIET NUCLEAR REACTOR ACCIDENT IN UKRAINE—SAFETY OF CANADIAN TOURISTS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The nuclear accident at the Chernobyl plant in Ukraine has caused anxiety for many Canadians whose family members are currently visiting that country. Can the Minister advise the House what action is being taken to assist any Canadian tourists who might be in the area?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, our embassy in Moscow has been in touch with the two Canadian tourists and the 16 students we know to be in the Kiev area. They are all reported to be well. We are looking for more information from the Soviet Union as to the nature, extent, and implications of the accident.

I think it would be well for Canadians who might be planning a trip to that region to wait until we have more of that information clearly in hand. I will be sending consular officials from our embassy in Moscow to Kiev to ensure that there is a monitoring capacity on the ground.

YORK CENTRE CORPORATION—SHAREHOLDING INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, despite the efforts of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister to suggest that this is the conduct of a spouse only, and despite the Deputy Prime Minister's efforts to say that he has been in touch with the Deputy Registrar General, this issue goes further than checking the records of the Minister, or the wife's particular action. It relates not to her assets alone but to a principal asset of the Minister. That is what the issue is all about.

My question is directed to the Minister. I think he will want to clear the air before the Oral Question Period is over and before the House turns to other business. Last May, was he the controlling shareholder of York Centre Corp., which had a controlling interest in Cardiff Investments Ltd., and for which his wife approached Magna International Inc. with whom he was having dealings for Cape Breton investment? Was he the controlling shareholder at the relevant time? Was he aware of his wife making that approach to Magna International? Get up and say so.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman knows—

Mr. Deans: Why does he not answer?

Mr. Nielsen: —that this is an area within the jurisdiction of the Prime Minister, namely, conflict of interest.

Mr. Ouellet: Why does he not answer himself, then?

Mr. Nielsen: He has heard the Prime Minister say that he has asked me to speak with the public official who is responsible for compliance. I have done that and I have satisfied myself that there has been full compliance. If the right hon. gentleman has a contribution to make with respect to any improvements that might be made to conflict of interest guidelines, he might respond to the letter of the Prime Minister which was sent to him on September 9, 1985.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is now three o'clock.

POINT OF ORDER

MISTAKEN IDENTIFICATION OF HON. MEMBER

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I inadvertently misled the House during Question Period when I—

Mr. Ouellet: How many times?

Mr. Nielsen: —when I referred to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) as having called the Assistant Deputy Registrar General. That was not correct and I apologize if I have caused the hon. gentleman any embarrassment by saying that—

Mr. Gauthier: How do you know?

Mr. Nielsen: How do I know? Because in fact it was the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), but they look so much alike that I was confused at the time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to the statements made by the Minister. First, I would like to advise him that the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) is not here today.

My question of privilege is an extremely important one. A representative from my office as well as one from the office of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston were on the phone today to the office of the Deputy Registrar General with respect to the obligations of every Member to comply with the conflict of interest guidelines. I would like to know what right the spy from the Deputy Prime Minister's office has to receive reports on what is happening about Members of Parliament regarding a quasi judicial function which is supposed to be carried out by the Deputy Registrar General. Why is he reporting to the Government on actions of opposition Members which have to do with the disposition of their duties as Members of Parliament? I think it is a very important question and I would like the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen)—

Mr. Boudria: Where is he going?

Ms. Copps: I would like an answer from the Speaker because I feel that my privileges as a Member have been—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is quite correct in raising that matter after Question Period if she feels it is a matter that flows from Question Period. I take it she feels her privileges were affected earlier today and I am perfectly prepared to look at the question she has raised.

An Hon. Member: Are our phones being bugged now?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member may wish to submit precedents as to how this will affect her privileges, but I will be happy to look at it.

Ms. Copps: On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, am I to understand that you have reserved judgment on this situation?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Ms. Copps: So I assume you are—

Mr. Speaker: I do not think I have given the floor back to the Hon. Member yet. Order, please.

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, correct me if I am wrong, but I believe I have about three minutes left to complete my remarks on this matter. If you could hear me through the movement, Mr. Speaker, I would—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is absolutely correct. The clock on the Hon. Member's time will not run for a moment. Order, please. Order. The Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) and others who have meetings, please hold them somewhere else. Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), order, please.

Mr. Angus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously they are all talking about the finer points of Bill C-45 and its impact on the employees of the House of Commons.

In the few moments left to me I would like to continue making my argument. I appreciate that you are in the chair, Mr. Speaker. Our concern is for how the employees of this place are treated. What avenues do they have for a collective bargaining process that goes beyond simply setting wages but allows them to work out their duties without any interference from senior management? How may they ensure that their job descriptions are appropriate? Do the cleaning staff, the cafeteria staff or security guards have a grievance procedure as it relates to promotions?

We see from time to time that people are shifted from various places of employment because they are lacking or have certain levels of qualifications. They need to have the right through their union to go through a grievance procedure if they feel that they have not been treated fairly. Union members across the country have that right and I think we have a responsibility to ensure that those people who work for the Parliament and for the Senate have the same opportunities, or are they second-class citizens in the eyes of the Government? Clearly, the way Bill C-45 is written indicates that these employees are perceived to be second-class citizens. I think that is very unfortunate and unfair.

As this Bill goes through committee and we hear representations from these workers, whether through what they hope to be their union or as individuals, I would ask that we listen to them and ensure that the opportunities are made available to them that are made available to many other Canadians. These opportunities include grievance procedures, the right to strike, negotiations for job descriptions and the like. It is extremely important that we treat these employees no differently than we treat the other workers of Canada.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me an opportunity to participate in this debate. I look forward with interest to seeing the final wording of the Bill.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to say some of the last words in this round of debate on Bill C-45. While the aim of the Bill is to provide restricted collective bargaining rights for employees of the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament, it is seriously lacking in a number of areas.

Our major opposition to the Bill in its present wording is based on its failure to provide the rights required to resolve many of the problems which draw staff members to a collective bargaining option. For example, the Bill itself prevents any real negotiation of classification, appointments and assignments of duty. Surely this is a critical component of any collective bargaining process. There must be the ability to renegotiate classifications and the assignment of duties. I do not think there is a progressive institution in the world, if it wishes to keep management-labour peace, that does not offer the option of negotiation on these critical issues.

Second, there is the entire matter of staffing, including job appointments, appraisals, promotions, demotions, transfers and layoffs. I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are well aware of long lists of abuses in hiring practices. Insiders often hire friends. I will give you an example of that, Mr. Speaker.

In a technical service, a senior position became vacant. Several employees inquired about a competition but no competition was held. The husband of a manager from another Department of the same service was brought in to fill the position on a temporary basis. Several months later a competition was announced, the now experienced husband was hired permanently and the appeal of employees in the service was denied. This kind of hiring practice has in many instances become the rule. It is an exception when a fair and open application process is at work.

Imagine what that does to the morale of employees on Parliament Hill. Good morale is required in order to carry out our duties sufficiently and efficiently and for Parliament Hill to operate in the most progressive and positive manner possible. I have lists of instances such as this where favouritism is often used, where sons, daughters and spouses of existing employees often use the back door to obtain positions of employment, and where the normal application process is circumvented. It is all too frequent; it is too often the rule.

I should like to identify our concerns with Bill C-45. In terms of grievance procedures, limits are set on what grievances can go to third party arbitration, and union grievances are simply not allowed. Can anyone show me a collective agreement wherein union grievances are simply denied or are not allowed as part of the process? I do not believe they exist anyplace. We are using a rather creative approach to collective bargaining and are saying that we will deny union grievances as part of the grievance procedure. Quite frankly it is inane to think that this provision ought to remain within Bill C-45.

The Bill goes on to say that the staffs of Members of Parliament are excluded from the right to collective bargaining. I think it is important for us, as New Democrats, to state our experience with employees in our offices. For some years now we have had, as much as circumstances permit, a collective agreement with the people who work in our offices. We are now in the process of looking at extending that collective bargaining process to those people who are working in our constituency offices. I say without any hesitation that the process has worked extremely well. There have been no serious problems, and there have been serious efforts to negotiate a collective agreement which satisfies both Members as well as their staffs. I know I speak for all members of the New Democratic Party caucus when I say that we are pleased with the collective bargaining process we have developed. We are pleased with the way in which it is functioning now and would like to see it made available to the staffs of all Members of Parliament in a true collective bargaining environment. We are restricted under the existing rules, but we have enabled the collective bargaining process to advance as much as laws and regulations permit us to do. We are anxious to see it extended, not only to other employees so that they can take advantage of the progressive and positive management-labour relations which have existed in New Democratic Party offices, but we are anxious to see it expanded into law.

Another problem we have with the particular Bill is that the right to strike is prohibited. When the right to strike is prohibited in a collective agreement, one has to ask whether that provides an imbalance in terms of negotiating strength. As any progressive individual would say, of course it does in that it biases the process heavily in favour of one side of the equation.

I should like to return for a moment to Bill C-45 wherein it excludes employees of Members of Parliament. It seems to me that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms contains a clause which indicates that no discrimination will be permitted in Canada on the basis of association. Basically this means that people are free to get together to negotiate collective agreements. It seems peculiar that Members of Parliament would not permit freedom of association for those men and women who work in our offices. We feel that this point flies right in the face of the work which went into our new Constitution, particularly the section dealing with rights and freedoms as they apply to the staffs of Members of Parliament.

We are also concerned about the certification process, and that procedures will require that all union cards signed on Parliament Hill will now have to be re-signed. It seems to be a deliberate effort on the part of the Government to ensure that collective bargaining does not take place on Parliament Hill. It is unbelievable that in a free and democratic country, a country which prides itself in people being able to associate with whomever they please and in having the right of association in our Constitution, such a blatant step would be taken and men and women working for Members of Parliament would be denied the right to form a free collective bargaining unit.

One could go on and on. There are many shortcomings which various groups and individual groups have brought to our attention to date. We will now have an opportunity to fine tune Bill C-45 in the hope of eliminating some of the concerns which have been registered. We would only be doing our job if we developed a Bill which would enable all employees of Parliament Hill to participate in free collective bargaining and to have the benefits of all rights and privileges accorded to them by the Canada Labour Code and the labour codes of various provinces, so that they are treated in the same way as employees elsewhere in Canada.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear, at least to those of us in the Liberal Party, that although the Bill before us signals movement in the right direction, it requires improvement in a number of ways. I will concentrate on one of them in the limited time available to me.

In essence, the initiative behind the Bill which we welcome is that the last bastion of employer-employee relationships that has existed for so long is now being removed, namely, the group of people working on the Hill can finally organize themselves and enjoy the same rights, privileges and duties enjoyed by workers in the private and public sectors who are organized and do not work on the Hill. At last we on the Hill are adopting the same or similar principles and rules which govern Canadians who work in the public and private sectors off the Hill. It is a welcome development.

The people who toil on the Hill in a variety of activities work hard. They put in long hours, and sometimes working conditions are not the best. The final form of Bill C-45 will hopefully recognize the desirability of setting into motion an organization which will permit people who work on the Hill to put forth their requirements, their legitimate claims and the improvements which they desire at work in the same manner and fashion as workers in places other than Parliament Hill.

Specifically the Bill is weak in the provision relating to arbitration. We on the Liberal side of the House want to stress the necessity and desirability of a stronger arbitration process when required. This was the substance of submissions made by NABET and by PSAC when they made representations, particularly on subsection 5(3) and subsection 55(2). These two sections prohibit unions from referring to the arbitration process certain very important matters, namely, job classification and the questions of appraisal, promotion, demotion, transfer, appointment, lay-off, and release of employees. We realize that these are very key issues. Quite rightly and understandably, any union would want to have these considerations included rather than excluded from the arbitration process when required.

Federal public servants who are governed by the Public Service Staff Relations Act face certain limitations in terms of what can and cannot be taken to arbitration. In the case of these issues and the workers on the Hill, consideration will have to be made in order to produce a piece of legislation in tune with the times and also in tune with contemporary labour practices. We know that there is criticism and opposition to the Bill per se. We know progress has come very, very slowly.

• (1520)

The assumption has been made that workers on the Hill have worked until now under adequate and appropriate health and safety rights. If that is the case, we would like to see this consideration of health and safety rights included in the specifics of the Bill. That would include the importance of indoor air quality and the safety of those who work on buildings and structures winter and summer.

Bill C-45 is due to move on to committee. We hope that examination in detail will be guided by the major consideration and principle that workers on the Hill deserve the same democratic instruments and ability to express themselves as to what they expect at work from their employers as Canadians elsewhere. It seems to me that is a most reasonable and highly desirable criterion that at last will be adopted on the Hill. With reinforcement of the arbitration process to include the items referred to earlier in this intervention, maybe we will be able to produce a reasonably good piece of legislation to the benefit of the women and the men who work on the Hill, and provide such a valuable service to all of us, and by reflection, to the people of Canada.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I did not have an opportunity prior to today to speak on this Bill. It has been a piece of legislation in which I have been vitally interested for some long period of time, as you know. I want to set out what it is about the legislation that I find offensive, and why I think the Government is heading down a path that will only cause difficulty for itself and its employees over the long haul.

What we have is a Government that writes laws that govern collective bargaining at the federal level within federal jurisdiction and sets those laws within the context of either the Public Service Staff Relations Act or under the auspices of the Canada Labour Code, and yet it refuses to give to our employees, those who work for Parliament, the same fundamental rights that we would give to all other people.

There is an inconsistency in this position with which I find it very difficult to grapple. If we believe that people in the workplace have the right to organize, and I think we have all pretty well expressed a belief in that, then why do we not permit the normal channels available to all others to be used by the employees of Parliament Hill? Why do we find it necessary to draw a piece of legislation so restrictive in its nature and scope that it makes a mockery of the collective bargaining process that we have, over many years, developed for all other people who work in our society? In essence, that is what I find most difficult to understand about the position being taken by the Government.

I could appreciate that the Government in its normal right wing way might not want to grant the right to strike, would want to take the right to strike away from everyone, and I realize that, Mr. Speaker. However, the Government has an obligation to at least give some reasons for the decisions it has taken in denying that right to one group in society.

It has long been held that it would be appropriate for a Government under certain circumstances to refuse to extend the same rights of withdrawal of services to certain employees that are afforded to all other employees. Those circumstances have to be quite clearly set out under the normal processes. Generally speaking, it is because someone works in what is deemed to be an essential service that the individual is refused the right to withdraw his or her services during a dispute over a collective agreement.

One could hardly claim, and I say this quite bluntly, that all the employees of Parliament Hill, vital though they are to our daily lives, and vital though they are to the ongoing work of Parliament, could be designated as essential in the true sense of the word. It is handy to be able to go to the restaurant and to the cafeteria, but one could hardly make the claim that the people who work there are indeed essential employees within the meaning of essentiality that is normally used for the purposes of depriving employees of the same rights enjoyed by all other people in society. The same thing could be said of a whole host of people; maintenance people, people in the library of Parliament, the Senate maintenance and messenger services, and you could come to the conclusion that though their services are appreciated by most of us, underpaid I might add, but nevertheless appreciated by most of us, they really do not fall into a category of essentiality. That is one of the areas in the Bill that I find is drawn much too finely.

The Bill does not meet the tests one would normally apply in determining whether or not the rights generally given in a collective bargaining situation are being afforded or given to the employees of the Parliament of Canada. I want to say in addition to that aspect, there are a number of other things denied our employees. To begin with, our own individual employees are denied the right to negotiate at all under the structure. Were it not for the NDP's commitment to the collective bargaining process there would be no collective bargaining process on Parliament Hill at all, at the moment. Because we believe that process works well, and because we believe in guaranteeing employees certain rights that are inviolable in the process, we have that arrangement with our own employees, the only group who has that opportunity at the moment.

What we do have is a whole host of serious restrictions placed in this piece of legislation on what would normally be afforded to employees either of the Government of Canada outside of Parliament Hill, or to other employees working in the private or the public sector provincially and municipally across Canada.

Let me suggest, for example, that there can be no negotiation of any worth within the terms of this Bill for classification of positions or for staffing. There can be no appeal of such things as job appointments, appraisals, promotions, demotions, transfers or lay-offs. There is a very limited grievance procedure. When you start looking at it, those are the very things for which you need a collective agreement, if you are to make any kind of protection affordable and possible. Yet this Bill denies those things to employees of the Parliament of Canada.

It is almost incomprehensible to me that we have a Government which has, on the one hand, laws in force and effect to grant certain rights and, of course, impose certain obligations, on the part of employees in both the public and private sectors under federal jurisdiction, and on the other hand a Government that claims need not and therefore will not give those self-same rights to its own employees on Parliament Hill. I find it difficult to come to grips with the insensitivity shown by this Government towards its employees. The Government displays a lack of confidence in its employees by drafting legislation that is so limited in scope and application. I believe, consistent with what has happened in most sectors of the economy, that the collective bargaining system works and works well. I believe the people who work for the Parliament of Canada are dedicated to work in the best interests of Parliament, Canada and Canadians. I believe those people would exercise their rights in such a way as not to be disruptive. They would work within the normal collective bargaining process which is in place in most other areas. The reason we are so concerned about the Bill is that it displays an attitude of distrust. It does not pay proper attention to the worth of the people who work for us. It denies them rights which we claim ought to be afforded to everyone.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is the following one. Mr. Hnatyshyn, seconded by Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre), moves that Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn) which was agreed to on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Multiculturalism—Establishment of Multicultural Business Centre; the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo)—Western Grain Stabilization Act—Size of payment to farmers. (b) Request for announcement of deficiency payments; and the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)—Transportation of Dangerous Goods—Request that legislation be strengthened.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Tobin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hope that Your Honour will understand. I did not hear the words of the Table Clerk with respect to Bill C-75 in which I am very much interested. I did not hear because of the movement of Members in and out of the House. I wonder if it could be repeated.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Table Clerk could reread the Order.

[Editor's Note: Whereupon a Table Clerk read the Government Order.]

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the House Leader if he could clarify what business he expects the House to debate this afternoon. There was some suggestion that we would deal with Bill C-96 as opposed to Bill C-75.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations with members of the Hon. Member's Party with respect to moving on to the report stage of Bill C-75.

Mr. Ouellet: With whom?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: With both Parties. I understand that there has been an agreement that we would proceed with Bill C-75. It was requested by members of the New Democratic Party that we deal with this Bill first since members of the Transport Committee will be travelling next week. Therefore, it was felt that it would be more appropriate to try to deal with the report stage of this Bill while members of the committee—

Mr. Fulton: Are they going to Expo?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not know. They are planning on travelling. As a result, I have ceded to the request. I received a letter, a copy of which went to my hon. friend.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has an introductory ruling to make with respect to Bill C-75 which the Chair would like to read now. Whatever else happens the Chair is prepared to put the ruling on the record since it has been distributed. I think, in fairness, the Chair should do that. Perhaps the House Leaders may want to have further conversation while I am reading my ruling.

There are 11 report stage motions on today's Order Paper in amendment to Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Canada Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof.

Motions Nos. 1 and 4 in the name of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) seek to limit the ability of the Crown to pass on to the user the cost of the services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard. In particular, Motion No. 4 specifically sets a ceiling on the amount which can be charged. Clearly, this is a relaxation of the conditions and terms of the Royal Recommendation attached to the Bill. As the Hon. Member knows, such a proposal is out of order. It would be my intention to rule this motion out of order. I would refer the Hon. Member to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(7), which states in part:

> An amendment is out of order if it—relaxes the conditions and qualifications as expressed in the Royal Recommendation.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 2 and 3, moved and negatived in committee, would omit certain major classes of ships from the provisions of subsection 1 of Clause 4 of the Bill.

Like motion No. 4, this also has the effect of relaxing the terms of the Royal Recommendation. Therefore, it would be my intention to also rule these motions out of order.

Motions Nos. 5, 6 and 11 will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 7, 8 and 9 which deal with the oil and gas provisions of the Bill will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

[English]

Motion No. 10 was debated and negatived in committee and will not be selected.

To allow Hon. Members time to prepare themselves to present any procedural arguments which they may have on those motions about which I have expressed procedural difficulties, namely, Motions Nos. 1 to 4, the House will proceed to debate the first grouping, that is, Motions Nos. 5, 6 and 11.

My notes here indicate that I intend to hear procedural argument on the next day the order is called, or earlier, if necessary, subject to whatever happens now.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, with your consent, I would like to take a moment right now to comment on the ruling Your Honour has made. I believe with respect to Motions Nos. 2 and 3, in particular, Your Honour's ruling is fundamental to the entire Bill. I am sure that the Speaker, through his officials, has this material checked. Clause 4, which is what these amendments refer to, was the subject of, perhaps, 99 per cent of the testimony heard by the Legislative Committee considering Bill C-75. Clause 4 goes straight to the heart—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am perfectly happy to let the Hon. Member finish, provided he understands that I must require him to restrict himself not to the substantive argument he may wish to make about his amendment, but to the procedural admissibility question.

Mr. Tobin: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. It goes right to the heart of the Bill.

As I understand it, the reality—and there was a ruling on this issue in committee—is that both Motions Nos. 2 and 3 do not in any way restrict the ability of the Crown on the question of raising funds through user fees. These motions would simply limit the Crown with respect to who can be charged. The Government's over-all objective of recovering x amount of dollars, whatever x happens to be—and we do not know yet because the Minister has not told us—would be entirely in the hands of the Government, except that the Government would be merely directed under these amendments not to charge certain categories of ships. Nonetheless, that would not prohibit the Government from recovering cost, as the Government has indicated it wants to do.

We debated this matter in committee. It was discussed fully at that time. Not only did the Clerk of the committee and the Chairman come to the decision that the motions were in order; but, ultimately, there was also some consensus in committee among members, whether or not they supported the amendments. We were very cognizant in drafting these amendments of the fact that clearly the Government's ability to recover costs would not be affected. This would limit the classes of people from whom the Government could recover costs but it would not limit, as some amendments proposed to do by completely wiping out Clause 4, the Government's ability to recover costs.

As you may not be aware, Mr. Speaker, in both cases but particularly with Motion No. 3, there was a very close vote in committee, a committee representing members of all three Parties. In fact, in one case an amendment was defeated by one vote, although it was supported by members of all three Parties.

Given the fundamental importance of this particular clause and the amount of testimony the legislative committee heard on it, I believe we deserve an opportunity to put our amendments before our colleagues to see whether or not the House will accept the rationale of the arguments we make. I do not know—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Now the Hon. Member is commenting on a Speaker's ruling. Let me repeat the citation from Beauchesne's in whole for the Hon. Member who has yet, in my view, to make an argument against the citation from Beauchesne's. This may help the Hon. Member to understand. An amendment is out of order if, first, it imposes a charge upon the public Treasury, and the Hon. Member has argued that this motion does not do that. Let us accept that. Second, it is out of order if it extends the objects and purposes, and let us accept that the motion does not do that. If it relaxes the conditions and qualifications as expressed in the Royal Recommendations, it is also out of order. It seems to me to be very clear that the effect of Motions Nos. 2 and 3 is to relax the Royal Recommendation. If the Hon. Member wishes to make a case against that, I am prepared to hear it.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it may be clear to you, having examined the matter as you have, that it relaxes the Royal Recommendation, but having spent months on this Bill with other members of the legislative committee under a reform measure of the House of Commons, it is not at all clear to me that this relaxes the recommendation. In fact, I would go further and say that if these particular amendments which seek not to wipe out the Government's cost-recovery ability but simply to target it are not acceptable, then I do not know what in heaven's name is the purpose of a legislative committee because this is not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member puts the Chair in a difficult position when he extends his argument into an implied criticism of the ruling of the Chair. I do not think he intended that since I know that the Hon. Member cares about those things. The Hon. Member knows that the Chair is trying to take seriously the substantive argument he is making, but the Chair is charged with resolving a procedural question. Perhaps I could read a citation from the Fourth Edition of Beauchesne's to the Hon. Member. I am prepared to reserve on this matter and to hear another argument, but not today. The Hon. Member may wish to think about that. Let me quote as follows Citation 246(3) of the Fourth Edition which is explicit and at length:

> (3) The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.
> In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

Mr. Tobin: Technically.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member wants to argue that somehow the motion does not relax the conditions of the recommendation which imposes the Act, which is that the charges shall be levied in the manner set out in the Bill, I am prepared to hear him but he has yet to make that argument.

Mr. Tobin: Let us make that specific argument, Mr. Speaker. Clause 4 is a piece of enabling legislation only. Nowhere in Bill C-75 which is now before the House has the Government spelled out how Clause 4 as a piece of enabling legislation is to be implemented. The Speaker will be aware as well from the assistance he has received from the Table that the Minister, as part of his work with the legislative committee, has undertaken that the Government shall not spell out for a period of one year how Clause 4 is to be implemented or whether 1 per cent or 100 per cent cost recovery shall be enacted. The Government has further made clear by presentation of the legislation itself—and I invite the Speaker to review it—that there are no provisions whatsoever as to how Clause 4 will be enacted. It is a piece of enabling legislation giving the Minister power if he chooses—

Mr. Speaker: The Crown.

Mr. Tobin: —the Crown the power if the Crown chooses to exercise the ability to recover costs. There is no schedule of cost recovery attached to this legislation indicating how it will be done, to whom the moneys are charged or what percentages are charged on costs which have been assumed by the Crown. I ask you again, Mr. Speaker, given the central importance of this clause, to appreciate that since the Government has not laid out a schedule, my amendment merely asks that when that exercises occurs, this enabling legislation not apply to certain classes of vessels. It is perfectly in order because it does not take away something which to this point has not been spelled out to the House. It is a piece of enabling legislation that offers the House no idea how on earth it is to be used.

Mr. Speaker: I repeat—

Mr. Gauthier: Good argument.

Mr. Speaker: It is a good argument. However, it does not change the Chair's view.

Mr. Henderson: It changed my view.

Mr. Speaker: I will take the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) at his word that his view on this question has just been changed. It does not change the Chair's difficulty, which is that the Chair—

Mr. Tobin: What is the point—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is raising a question that is not the Chair's concern. The Chair has to resolve the question of whether the Hon. Member's amendment creates indirectly or directly an infringement upon the royal prerogative, because only the Crown can do certain things by our traditions. The Hon. Member knows that that is what the Chair is up against. The Chair is prepared to reserve and consider the arguments made by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Tobin: Point of clarification.

Mr. Speaker: There is no such thing.

Mr. Tobin: I have a short point to make. I will do this for my benefit and not for the Chair's.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Tobin: What the Chair is telling Members of the House is that in a new reformed Parliament—

Mr. Speaker: No, no.

Mr. Tobin: Point of clarification, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No, the Hon. Member is about to comment on a Speaker's ruling.

Mr. Tobin: No, I am not going to comment on the ruling. You have not heard me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no such thing as a point of clarification.

Mr. Tobin: Point of information.

Mr. Speaker: There is no such thing as a point of information.

Mr. Tobin: Question then, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: That you do in writing.

Mr. Tobin: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) has a similar point of order.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, if I may, in your ruling as to the grouping of Motions Nos. 5, 6 and 11, I would like to draw to your attention that Motion No. 5 and Motion No. 6 deal with an appeal mechanism that is tied into a timetable, whereas Motion No. 11 deals very specifically with the time in which the clause shall come into force.

I would argue that grouping Motions Nos. 5 and 6 together for the purpose of debate would be logical if Motion No. 11 were to be left by itself because it deals with a different subject matter. I would ask you to look at that, and the next time the matter is dealt with, hopefully you will be prepared to rule in favour of separating Motion No. 11 so that it will be debated separately.

Mr. Speaker: Our practices have always been that when motions affect one clause, an attempt is made to group them for debate. Motion No. 11 does amend a different clause in terms of its effect but its effect is to apply to Clause 4. It is for that reason that the Chair decided that it should properly be grouped for debate on Clause 4. On that basis, I am prepared to leave that grouping as indicated.

• (1630)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that my hon. friend opposite and indeed other members of the committee spent a great deal of time discussing the Bill. I understand his concern, but my notes in respect of Motion No. 4 contain the same comment on Citation 773(7) of Beauchesne's. We would argue—and we may want to embellish that argument if necessary—that the motion relaxes a condition of the Royal Recommendation and is therefore out of order in accordance with that citation of Beauchesne's.

Mr. Speaker: The effect of what the Chair was saying in respect of Motion No. 4 is that because Motions Nos. 1 and 4 are connected it would take care of Motion No. 1. I take it the Hon. Member is making the argument with regard to Motions Nos. 2 and 3.

Mr. Tobin: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Having sat where the Hon. Member is sitting, the Chair has some understanding of the Hon. Member's problem in this matter. However, it does not change the obligation of the Chair to apply the precedents and our rules.

I take it we will call Motions Nos. 5, 6 and 11 which have been combined.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For future reference, if I understand correctly the ruling in this regard, one could come to the House and move an amendment to increase the Government's ability to recover but not to decrease or delete—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is attempting to make a comment on the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. Tobin: Am I correct in my assumption?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair does not enter into something which can only be called an obiter dictum. The Hon. Member may find that what he should do on any matter is make a procedural argument which he thinks is appropriate at the time, and the Chair will give it all the consideration it can.

Therefore, we will proceed to the consideration of Motions Nos. 5, 6 and 11, which have been combined.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-75, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 19 to 37 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) A copy of each regulation that the Governor in Council proposes to make under subsection (1) shall be laid before either House of Parliament.

(4) Where, within twenty sitting days after a proposed regulation is laid before either House of Parliament under subsection (3), fifteen Senators or twenty Members of the House of Commons, as the case may be, by notice in writing addressed to the Speaker, request that the proposed regulation be referred to a committee, the proposed regulation shall stand referred to the standing committee of the Senate or House of Commons, as the case may be, that deals with transportation matters, or to such other committee as the Senate or House of Commons may order.

(5) A committee to which a proposed regulation is referred under subsection (4) shall forthwith consider the proposed regulation and report thereon to the Senate or House of Commons, as the case may be, within thirty sitting days after the referral is made.

(6) Where a proposed regulation relating to any particular subject-matter is referred to a committee of either or each House of Parliament pursuant to subsection (4), a regulation relating to that subject-matter may be made under subsection (1) within six months after the committee that reports or last reports, as the case may be, has reported under subsection (5).

(7) Where a proposed regulation relating to any particular subject-matter is not referred to a committee of either House of Parliament pursuant to subsection (4), a regulation relating to that subject-matter may be made under subsection (1) on the expiration of the time limit set out in subsection (4) in respect of the House of Parliament before which the proposed regulation referred to in that subsection was last laid."

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-75, be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 19 at page 6 the following:

"(10) Two years after the coming into force of section 3.1 and every two years thereafter, the Minister shall refer section 3.1 to the Standing Committee on Transport for the purpose of reviewing its economic impact on users of services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard and the committee shall report not later than the sixtieth sitting day of the House, following the request for review."

Motion No. 11

That Bill C-75, be amended in Clause 87 by striking out line 32 at page 111 and substituting the following therefor:

"by proclamation, with the exception of section 4 which shall come into force on or after January 1, 1988."

He said: Mr. Speaker, briefly, the purpose of Motion No. 5 is to take Clause 4 one step further in its evolution as developed through the legislative committee. As it stands now, the Bill provides for publishing any regulation under Clause 4 dealing with who should be charged, how much they should be charged, and under what condition they should be charged. What about the requirement for a public review process? Let us keep in mind that ultimately the Minister of Transport on behalf of the Crown makes the determination. Officials may assist him or her in determining the mechanisms and the amount, but ultimately it is the Minister of Transport who signs the document which goes to Cabinet for the appropriate order. Under the current Bill the only public review provision is that it shall be published in The Canada Gazette at least 90 days before the proposed effective date thereof, and a reasonable opportunity within those 90 days shall be afforded to interested persons to make representations to the Minister with respect thereto. In other words, an appeal can be made to the person who approved the regulation.

I am proposing in Motion No. 5 a mechanism which would allow someone who is concerned about a particular regulation to lobby his or her Member of Parliament. For example, such persons could have concerns about the impact of a regulation on the movement of grain west or east, or its impact upon shipping in the St. Lawrence and the ability of that industry to survive. It could be a concern about potash, iron ore, or any other bulk commodity which is moved by marine services. They could be concerned about its effect on the North, in Atlantic Canada, or on the Pacific Coast. They could also be concerned about its effect on fishermen or recreational boaters. In any event, if they are concerned about a regulation, under Motion No. 5 they would be able to lobby their Members of Parliament who in turn, assuming that they agreed with the concern, would collect the signatures of 20 Members of the House. This would open up a review mechanism by a standing committee. For example, it would be logical for the Standing Committee on Transport to consider transportation matters. This would provide for a public forum and provide for some consideration of the impact, whether it is a 1 per cent increase, a 10 per cent increase or whatever. When one is fighting for nickels and dimes, every added cost has a very real and detrimental impact upon one's ability to sell one's product or to move someone else's produce.

Motion No. 6 is an extension of that concept. It would put into place an automatic mechanism so that every two years after the legislation was proclaimed, the Minister would refer Section 4 to the standing committee for the purpose of reviewing its economic impact on users of services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard, and the committee would be given 60 sitting days within which to report.

Similar mechanisms exist. We have seen them applied in the House. Although the report has not been tabled within the last few days, I would anticipate that very shortly a report under the Western Grain Transportation Act will be tabled as a review of the process enacted by Parliament. We want a chance. There are those of us on this side of the House—and I suppose there are others on the other side of the House who feel the same way deep in their hearts—who do not really want Clause 4 because we know what will be its impact upon the marine community. However, the reality is that the Government is not prepared to remove that clause, and we have to try to improve it as part of our job as Members of the House. We want to give the Government the opportunity, two years down the road, to review what has happened and to look at the impact of whatever fee was imposed upon grain producers and upon every other user of the marine service.

Motion No. 11 reads as follows:

"by proclamation, with the exception of section 4 which shall come into force on or after January 1, 1988."

One may ask why that particular date was chosen or why we did not choose 1990 or the year 2000. If I wanted to play games with the House, that is what I would do. However, I wanted to be serious. During the debate in committee and the representations by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), as well as those by his parliamentary assistant, we heard that it was not the intention of the Government to have Clause 4 proclaimed immediately. Even after it was proclaimed, we heard that it would take a year to put into place the regulatory regime to allow it to be implemented. We were also told that it was not the intention of the Government to proclaim it until January 1, 1987, or some nine months from now. Therefore, if we take into account the year in which the regulatory process would be developed, it takes us to January 1, 1988. All I am doing in this particular motion is taking the Government's word in enacting the piece of legislation.

The main problem with Clause 4 is one of process. Aside from any ideological opposition to user pay, cost recovery or whatever, there is a process problem. We argued before the committee that there is another way. The Minister and the Crown want to have the legislation now and then negotiate, discuss, consult, with the users of the St. Lawrence Seaway, the Port of Vancouver, the Port of Prince Rupert, the ports in Atlantic Canada and the ports in the far north. The Minister and the Crown want to have that hammer so they can strike a deal to force the shippers into a corner where they have to take something that is not acceptable to them. Instead, they should be sitting down with representatives of the Dominion Marine Association, the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association, the International Association of Great Lakes Ports, the Canada Ports, the prairie producers of agricultural products, the coal, iron ore and the steel industries.

The Government should sit down and talk with the industries about their realities, not just the realities of the deficit the Government has that it wants to try to eliminate, which it is doing, by nickeling and diming certain industries. We already see our farmers having a 19 per cent reduction in the prices of their products, and we are going to add to the cost of moving those products, whether through the Seaway, Vancouver, Prince Rupert or Churchill. As a result of Clause 4, Mr. Speaker, those costs have nowhere to go but up.

What we would like to see is Clause 4 out of this Bill. We argued with the Government about it. Why not consult and see if a deal can be struck with the users of the marine services and Coast Guard services to pay for part of the operation? Perhaps it is just a matter of timing when these things should be implemented as opposed to the amounts. We heard in testimony before the committee that if this were 10 years ago when things were booming and everything was moving through the Seaway, there would likely be no objections to a Seaway toll, a coast guard fee, because the industry was booming and making money. Today, the industry is laying up ships. We have seen the fleet on the Seaway decline in considerable numbers over the last three or four years. The timing is all wrong, Mr. Speaker.

If we cannot pull this clause out of the Bill, we will have to give the shippers, the producers, the users, an opportunity for a review process at the time when the regulations are tabled so they can go to some other body, that body being this House, to argue that those regulations as they affect them are not appropriate at this time. Second, there should be an opportunity for this House to review its own work every two years to make sure that we have not done something, then forgotten about it, only to find that year after year there are two or three fewer carriers in place.

I would encourage the Government to give consideration to providing this kind of an appeal mechanism. It is consistent with other Acts that have come out of this Parliament and it makes a lot of sense to adopt these proposals today.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to put a few words on the record regarding Bill C-75 which I know you know, and other Members of this House know, is not a terribly well drafted piece of legislation yet, but we are working at it today, particularly in relation to amendments to Clause 4.

This clause, as the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary knows, has raised the ire of those in the vessel ownership community from one end of the country to the other. I know that Clause 4 subsection 3.1, to which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) is directing his Motions Nos. 5 and 6 in particular, has been negatively received by communities in my constituency, especially Prince Rupert. Whether it is the commercial fishing industry or people involved with larger vessels that come in for coal, grain, wood or anything else, they have been quite alarmed at the potential effects of subsection 3.1 and the way in which it might be implemented. I know when I spoke before that I said it was a bit of a trojan horse regulatory clause. It does not provide for the specifics of what most vessel owners would like to see in place.

I know that motions have been passed by the city councils of Prince Rupert, Kitimat and Stewart. I know there has been extensive correspondence to the committee, to the Minister and myself from the Queen Charlotte Islands and from many other areas on the North Coast from Hartley Bay, Kitkatla, Metlakatla, Oona River, Queen Charlotte City, Sandspit, Point Clements, and Masset. They have all gone on record as making sure that the Minister is aware of their concerns, particularly about the size of the cost recovery which the Minister indicated on the record some time ago was what he had in mind, it being 15 per cent of the roughly $826 million which was the calculated cost for Coast Guard services for the coming fiscal year. This meant that the Minister was trying to get something well in excess of $100 million in user-fees from vessel owners.

While this clause has gone through committee stage and has had some further potential cost recovery items added to it, for that reason before going to Motions Nos. 5, 6 and 11, which have been grouped for this afternoon, I would like to deal with the new wording of Clause 4 which would amend subsection 3.1. It says:

> For the purpose of defraying the cost of services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard, the Governor in Council may make regulations respecting charges relating to those services, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, aids to navigation, sounding and dredging, vessel traffic services, ice-breaking services and marine aid.

As I am sure Members of the House know, the words "sounding" and "marine aid" have been added. In an area of the country from where I come which represents many thousands of miles of coastline, including some of the most treacherous waters anywhere on the continent, in particular the Hecate Strait which frequently gets winds up to 100 miles an hour and where very large and very small vessels run into extreme difficulties, many large and many small boats have gone down with a great loss of life. Mariners generally, whether they go out to sail, to fish, or to operate tugboats or large vessels, are always concerned about weather changes and safety.

One of the elements of safety touched on by Clause 4 in subsection 3.1, as it is written, is that it brings in the idea of cost recovery without making it clear what the conditions are wherein cost recovery would be considered. As fishermen have pointed out to me, if you were out in a boat with waves only four feet high with winds blowing about 25 mph out of the southeast and you are trying to make a decision whether to call the Coast Guard because you know that one of your friends three months before had to put a similar call in similar wave and wind daytime conditions only to have had to pay full user-fee costs to be brought back into Prince Rupert, you would have to weigh the situation. You might wait until the waves are five feet high and you are taking on water, a couple of hundred gallons a minute, but then it might be too late.

The Canadian economy shares generally in the benefits that come from the northern B.C. coast, $500 million this past year, from the fishing industry, the export of coal, grain, wood or regular transit of tourist vessels, the B.C. ferry system and everything else that goes on in marine commerce on the West Coast. Or, as my colleague has so ably pointed out, as regards the Seaway, and our northern and eastern coasts. These kinds of things need to be responded to much more clearly by Parliament and the Minister than has been the case to date. That is why my colleague has put before us Motions Nos. 5 and 6. Those affected by the new regulatory mechanisms, everyone who owns a company, large or small, and who has something other than that which is rowed around or sailed around is seriously interested in where these regulations are going to go. Yet we do not have them. As the Speaker said earlier today, there is no schedule in this Bill as to what the regulations are going to be. It is a big unknown. It is still a Trojan horse document. Vessel owners and operators do not know what the cost is going to be. Since it is a prerogative of the Crown to provide a precise regime within which the regulations could come forward, my colleague has put forward a way in which those affected by new regulations can go to their Member of Parliament. He or she can get in touch with 19 other Members of this House and launch a process whereby a regulation can be reviewed by a parliamentary process. There is a precise time frame within which that is to be reported back and dealt with.

Motion No. 6 goes further than that. It provides for an economic review of the impact of these user-fees on various sectors. That is a good idea, particularly when we look at what is happening in the U.S. There is legislation before the U.S. Congress to remove all Seaway fees. Here we have a Republican administration saying it does not think this idea of user-fees and licence fees and all these other things is good for commerce. Our country benefits generally from this kind of commerce so we are going to do away with the fees.

There you have the right wingers to the south of us saying that this is not the way to go. Yet here we have the Minister of Transport and his colleagues saying that they are looking for some other way to raise another $100 million or $200 million or $300 million, so we are going to have regulations. "We will not tell you what they are or how you can change them or when we are going to proclaim them, or exactly how they are going to affect you. Just, here it is, you voted for us and you are going to get it anyway."

I think Government Members should, in good conscience, vote in favour of these two motions because they provide a mechanism to protect their constituents and local economies. They provide for a very important process whereby a badly drafted Bill such as this one can have some of its negative or positive aspects reviewed by the House. I think that makes good sense.

I see you are indicating that I am running out of time. That is too bad because I know my constituents are very much interested in seeing this Bill changed, in particular Clause 4. It tends to go after those who should not be subject to these kinds of costs. I am thinking again of those in the fishing industry running very close to the line. As we learned today, this Government does not intend to do anything about an inappropriate countervailing duty brought against all our fishermen on the East Coast. That duty will mean a couple of million dollars out of their pockets. Many of our coastal industries, the fishing industry and many of our commercial trades, are very close to the point of just breaking even. Many of these user-fees require very close scrutiny by this House. That is why I think these motions should be supported. I trust you will be voting the right way, Mr. Speaker, later today.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, there should be no question here today until such time as Members have had an opportunity to discuss this Bill thoroughly. I know that Members, deep down, are concerned about the impact of Bill C-75. About 99 per cent of the representations the legislative committee heard concerned Clause 4. That is true regardless of where the representations came from, whether it be the Canadian Boating Association in Ontario or British Columbia, or fishermen in Atlantic Canada and British Columbia. What they were most concerned about was that this clause gives the Government the power to impose user-fees on various boat owners. It does not matter whether they run great ships through the Great Lakes or paddle a canoe in an acid-filled lake in Ontario.

The great frustration for all those who came before the legislative committee, and the great frustration for every right thinking Member of the House of Commons about Clause 4, is that even though the Bill gives the Minister the power to impose charges for what was provided as a service by the Government, he has not defined who or how much he is going to charge. Is he going to charge 1 per cent of the cost of providing a service or is he going to charge 100 per cent? I suppose, at least in theory, the Minister could impose a charge equal to 150 per cent of the cost of providing a service. He could make money on the deal. He could make it a commercial operation under Clause 4.

The Government is asking Members of Parliament to pass a Bill which will allow the Minister to impose charges on Canadians without giving us any idea whatsoever how they are to be imposed. A fishermen in a community in P.E.I. is looking at a loaded gun with the trigger pull being passed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). He does not know whether the Minister is going to fire a warning shot, put one across his bow, or blow his head off. He has no idea whether a little bit of buckshot is to be sprinkled on the tail end of the boat, hitting a few lobster pots, or whether it is going to send him to the bottom. The Minister demands and will receive, if the majority responds in the normal way, the authority to impose these charges. We are not to be told how that gun is to be used. That is simply unacceptable. I ask Members to reach down inside themselves and question their conscience, their sense of democracy, their sense of the right of the individual in this country, and reject this archaic legislation, which of course is not deserving of consideration by intelligent men and women of conscience in this Chamber.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

THE OFFICIAL DESIGNATION OF NOVA SCOTIA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, November 30, 1984, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nowlan that Bill C-201, an Act respecting the official designation of "Nova Scotia", be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-201, an Act representing the official designation of Nova Scotia. I want to express the gratitude of the House to the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) for presenting this Bill, which obviously is important to him as a Nova Scotian.

This Bill's thrust is as follows: In every place where the words "Nova Scotia" appear in any Act, regulation, statutory instrument, report, contract, lease, licence or other document the proper designation of this name in both official languages is and shall be "Nova Scotia".

The purpose of this Bill is to retain the Latin title "Nova Scotia" for official purposes, in both English and French documents. This would mean, more specifically, that the designation "Nouvelle-Écosse" would be changed to the Latin, "Nova Scotia".

These issues, especially where proper names are in question, can lead to emotional debate, and in my view these kinds of questions should be considered very seriously before decisions are taken on them.

There are also other very serious points of a constitutional nature which should be made with respect to this Bill. To begin with, as worded this Bill would apply to any report, contract, lease, licence or other document. However, by Section 92(13) of the Constitution Act, 1867, jurisdiction over property and civil rights in the province belongs to the province, and to this extent the legislation would be subject to constitutional challenge. I wonder if it is the intention of the legislation to require, for example, that the Bank of Nova Scotia, which is well known in French as La Banque de Nouvelle-Écosse change its French letterhead in writing to French clients. Indeed, if it could not use the French name in written documents, would it necessarily follow as a business matter if nothing else, that it would also need to change any signs on its building?

According to the Official Languages Act and the Constitution Act, 1982, both versions of Acts of Parliament in the official languages of Canada are equally authentic. It happens that the name "Nova Scotia", and its French version "Nouvelle-Écosse", appear in some 40 federal statutes, including the Supreme Court Act, the Judges Act, and the Interpretation Act. The French version "Nouvelle-Écosse" also appears, of course, in other jurisprudence.

It appears that for at least 270 years "Nouvelle-Écosse" has been the accepted French term to describe Nova Scotia. Encyclopaedias, text books, dictionaries, atlases, journals, periodicals, newspapers, et cetera, throughout the French-speaking world have used and are using that expression as a matter of course, and nowhere is there any indication that there might be some doubt about its propriety.

You may agree, therefore, that we are dealing here with an issue that goes much beyond legal technicalities and that it is surprising to discover that a time-honoured expression such as "Nouvelle-Écosse", which is solidly enshrined in a language as universal as French, should be questioned on grounds, allegedly, that there might not be a proper basis for it. It might be noted that common usage, when it comes to names of countries, places, et cetera, is recognized in Section 30 of the Interpretation Act.

In any event, "Nouvelle-Écosse" was used to describe this area by France and Britain, the two successive sovereign authorities originally there, in the official French version of the Treaty of Utrecht, 1713. It would seem to me that several centuries of use give legitimacy to the words "Nouvelle-Écosse".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have known the Hon. Member from Nova Scotia a long time. In fact, he was a Member when I first came to the House of Commons almost 14 years ago. One of the things that I have always recognized is the dedication and the sincerity of the Hon. Member. Certainly he has been a very stalwart Member of Parliament, as well as a very imaginative one. He has made a tremendous contribution, not only to this House of Commons, but to Canada generally.

There is no doubt in my mind that in proposing this Bill he did it as a dedicated Canadian. He did it as he felt it was something he thought should be done, especially coming as he does from that province. Anything that we have to say is in support of his dedication.

When we look back at the debate which took place on this Bill on March 27, 1981 when it was a Bill called Bill C-217, I must admit that I found interesting the various points of research which the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) presented at that time in support of his motion. That speech was really a mini-history lesson outlining as it did the origins of words like Quebec, Ontario and Canada. My earliest recollection of Canadian history was the native word for Canada which was "Kanata". No doubt that is one of the reasons we have a small community near Ottawa today that is called Kanata.

Without doubt, many Canadian words have their origins in various languages. Native Indian or Inuit words, for instance, are very prevalent in place names. This is logical, taking into account the historical development of our country, and taking into account, first of all, the native population that was here when the early explorers found this part of the world. We had people from many nations that found their way to our country. I think one of the earliest stages of history found the North American continent divided, north and south, between the Portuguese and the Spanish. Then as history progressed, changes took place. Then there became a division on the 49th parallel. There have been many changes made, and each individual who came to this country brought with him a part of his own homeland, a heartland that he really appreciated.

For instance, there is Kananaskis, which is very much on the map now as far as Alberta is concerned, there is Lac la Biche, and then take the other word, "cafe". I have heard people from south of the border call it "cafee", and then, of course, others call it restaurant. There are many interpretations of different words that we have in our language.

Few Canadian place names can boast of a Latin origin, but Nova Scotia is one of them. In English that Latin designation has remained rather than being translated into "New Scotland". In French, "Nouvelle-Écosse" was chosen as the name for Nova Scotia. Apparently, "Nouvelle-Écosse" has been the accepted French terminology for at least 273 years. That is a long time in Canadian history. It is described as "Nouvelle-Écosse" in the official French version of the Treaty of Utrecht of 1713. I do not know how many Members are aware that Utrecht is in Holland. One of my earlier relations came from that part of the world. This is no recent development. We are looking back at the very roots of Nova Scotia—aux vraies racines de la Nouvelle-Écosse.

• (1710)

Place names become dear to our heart. It may be that Francophones, who over the years have known Nouvelle-Écosse as either their province of origin, or as a splendid Canadian province that they would like to visit, cannot easily change their habits and suddenly think of Nova Scotia. I wonder if there is any solid reason for doing so? Nowadays, Nova Scotia is commonly regarded not as a Latin name but as the English version of the Province's name. Surely Francophones would prefer a title which is clearly French and which has been so through the centuries.

I know that the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants has gone to great pains to point out that the motivation for his Bill has nothing to do with the bilingual question but that it has to do with the importance of using proper names for places in this country: "The proper use of proper nouns", as the Hon. Member put it. At the outset I tried to make the point that the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants is very sincere in what he is doing and what he is proposing. I am sure that many Hon. Members feel that "Nouvelle-Écosse", a designation in use for close to three centuries, is indeed the proper use of a proper noun.

The Hon. Member for Annpolis Valley—Hants has stated on occasion that he would like to see the name changed in terms of tourism. Surely, saying: "Venez en Nouvelle-Écosse" can be as great a spur to tourism as: "Venez en Nova Scotia".

Think of all the maps that would need to be redrawn, all the legislation which would need to be redrafted, all the signs which would need to be repainted if the name of the province were changed. Perhaps one of the weaknesses of the Bill is that the Hon. Member has not thought about the problems that it would create.

I am not opposed to change just for the sake of opposing change. I have always believed that I am a person who always looks to the future with optimism. However, we know that there are many reasons for changing place names. Istanbul versus Constantinople reflects a change in political power. Tanzania versus Zanzibar and Tanganyika reflects a change in geographic boundaries. Members of the House will be aware that even the names of our constituencies change from time to time as a result of the change in boundaries.

Pearson International Airport as opposed to Toronto International Airport reflects a means of paying honour to a respected statesman. Many changes are made from time to time for special reasons, but those reasons must be sound and reasonable.

There are all kinds of reasons for changing place names. In order for the change to stand the test of time, there has to be compelling logic behind it, because Canadians are logical people who want to know why changes are made.

In the present case, I can think of no reason so compelling that it would cause me to unseat the present nomenclature of "Nouvelle Écosse" for another name.

I am grateful for this opportunity to speak on a very important matter to the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants. I am pleased that we are able to express our own concerns and feelings in Private Members' Hour.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a short intervention with regard to the Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan). Personally, I have mixed feelings about this Bill. I understand the Hon. Member's desire to assert what he believes very strongly is the name of his home province.

I am reminded of my childhood, growing up in English Canada, and being told of a place along the St. Lawrence River called Three Rivers. Over time, with the change in official documents and the usage of the name, that community reverted to its original French name of Trois Rivières. Similarly, I believe the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants is attempting to provide for the recognition that Nova Scotia, or New Scotland, is a name that reflects its Scottish heritage and should be recognized as such.

Having said that, I am not sure that we in the House of Commons are the ones who should initiate that kind of change. I would be very reluctant to do so unless we had a very definite resolution passed by the Legislature of the Province of Nova Scotia indicating that there is the collective desire for such a change. At that time, perhaps with a petition from Members of Parliament from that province, the House could give further consideration to the Bill brought forward by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants. However, I also have no objection to this Bill going to a committee of the House for further consideration.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I can't help thinking Bill C-201 is rather confusing, if we read the French title of the Bill: "Loi concernant le nom officielle de la "Nouvelle-Écosse"", and then realize that the designation "Nouvelle-Écosse" is being challenged by this Bill.

"Nouvelle-Écosse" is a designation hallowed by a 300-year old tradition, as was already pointed out. It is the name we find in the Treaty of Utrecht, under which France ceded Nova Scotia to Great Britain in 1713. The region belonged to the French from 1667 to 1710. Originally called "Acadie", it was known as "Nouvelle-Écosse" in the early 1700's. Mr. Speaker, personally I would hesitate, and so should all Members of this House, to reverse this historic tradition.

The French designation for this part of the country has been "Nouvelle-Écosse" in all Canada's official documents, including documents of a constitutional nature.

As Hon. Members are well aware, the Constitution is a document that applies both to the provinces and to the federal Government. I do not think the federal Government can unilaterally change the official title of a province without obtaining prior consent from that province.

I don't think we have any reason to believe that there is a vast movement of support in Nova Scotia for this Bill. It seems that Nova Scotia's Francophones are quite satisfied with the name of their province. Substituting Nova Scotia, now considered more as an English than a Latin designation, for Nouvelle-Écosse, would be of no benefit to Nova Scotians of French origin.

I also think that a particularly compelling argument is provided by toponymy or the study of place names. In toponymy, current and past usage is one of the main elements to be considered.

The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) emphasized that he was in favour of the Latin designation, not conformity with English usage.

With all due respect for Latin and its vital contribution to our civilization and even to both our official languages, there is nothing in Canada today that really obliges us, either historically or traditionally, to give precedence to the Latin version. The designation "Nova Scotia" is no longer considered a Latin term. Over time and in common usage, it has acquired an English connotation for the purposes of geographic designation.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should act prudently and without undue haste, since we lack a consensus reflecting all the views of the various groups in our society. I also have some hesitation in agreeing such a measure would be both practical and justified.

• (1720)

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I find very interesting the arguments of the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) for introducing this Bill which would supplant "Nouvelle-Écosse" with "Nova Scotia". According to the Hon. Member, the name "Nova Scotia", because it is Latin, should not be translated because in translation it loses its status as a proper name.

When we travel abroad, we travel to Venice, not to Venezia. We go to Florence, not Fiorenze, and to Rome, not Roma. In our English and French usage, we have not hesitated to change the names used in various countries, adapting them to our own linguistic milieu. Similarly, there is nothing sacrosanct about the Latin words "Nova Scotia". In English we could have changed that to "New Scotland". But that did not happen, and over the years the fact that "Nova Scotia" was Latin became more or less submerged by the fact that "Nova Scotia" was the English designation for a Canadian province, otherwise known as "Nouvelle-Écosse" in the other major language of Canada.

This is an historical fact. There is nothing peculiar about it. There is no law that says English and French must evolve in exactly the same way. Indeed such a premise would be an antithesis to all these persons who view the properties of our two official languages as being unique and unbridled. In short, just because English Canadians did not change "Nova Scotia" to "New Scotland" is no reason for French Canadians not to have changed the name to "Nouvelle-Écosse". To seek linguistic conformity in regard to vocabulary would be an affront to both our official languages.

I wonder if the Hon. Member has considered all the changes which would be necessary if this Bill were passed. My colleague who spoke before me has already referred to changes in maps, legislation and signs which would be required to reflect the new reality. Changes would go far beyond matters of federal jurisdiction. Every town and hamlet in Nova Scotia would be affected. And while there might not be a wholesale rush to change the letterheads of companies, name plates on buildings and tourist maps and other written materials about the province, there would be a certain confusion about the whole situation. One could even envisage factions arising; one faction saying: "Leave the maps and name plates alone" and the other saying: "No, we must reflect what has been legislated."

Every benefit must be weighed against possible disadvantages. If the disadvantages are weightier than the benefit, then it is very much to be questioned if there is, in fact, a benefit.

This is a situation of that type. If indeed it is a benefit to have purity of form in respecting Latin, then let us weigh that against the factors of the effect on the population and the cost.

If this Bill were to lead to great happiness in the province by those persons affected by the change, I would favour moving ahead quickly with this Bill. However, I must admit that I can see no striking advantages.

I would like to add another factor for consideration, that of the image abroad. More persons than ever are travelling to Canada these days because of Expo and what is happening overseas, and we can assume that many of them will want to travel to our beautiful seaside province known in all Francophone tourist literature as "Nouvelle-Écosse". Who is to explain to all these hordes of would-be tourists that, alas, Nouvelle-Écosse is no more? What will Francophone tourists think of a province which has just lost its clearly French appelation? How will they interpret that, I wonder? Would they be disappointed or upset by this change? I think that would be unfortunate, Mr. Speaker.

Nova Scotia, with its Acadian culture and its growing number of Francophone institutions is proudly Francophone, just as it is proudly Anglohone. Both parts of that collectivity deserve the right to express themselevs in the name which they have chosen historically and to which they have cleaved over the centuries, Nova Scotia in English, Nouvelle-Écosse in French.

I also wonder what has happened to the Official Opposition. We do not have one member of the Liberal Party in the House of Commons, not merely to contribute to the debate, but there are none here at all. Thank you and merci, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, my name is Carole Jacques, Member for Montreal—Mercier. Mr. Speaker, a lawyer's memory never fails, they say.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to the Bill entitled An Act respecting the official designation of "Nova Scotia" . I want to approach this matter from a national angle.

One might say that the name "Nova Scotia" is part of the cultural heritage of Nova Scotians and, in fact, of all Canadians. It is a part of our cultural heritage because it is the name which for nearly 300 years has appeared in all our official documents, all our newspapers, all our business or personal correspondence.

How would a Francophone used to saying "Je viens de la Nouvelle-Écosse" feel if, henceforth, he had to say "Je viens de la Nova Scotia"? Probably the same way an Anglophone would feel when saying "I come from Nouvelle-Écosse". One would get the impression the sentence was begun in one language and finished in the other.

The words "Nova Scotia" may very well be derived from Latin, but still they do sound English because they have been used for years to designate one of our maritime provinces. It would be too much to ask Francophones to say "Nova Scotia" instead of "Nouvelle-Écosse", just at it would be to ask Anglophones to substitute the words "Colombie-Britannique" for the words "British Columbia". In either case it would be foreign to the speaker's language.

Is there any logic in the fact that Anglophones did not translate the latin phrase Nova Scotia, as Francophones did? Rather than logic, what is involved is a historical process that led to the constant use of the words Nova Scotia on one side, and Nouvelle-Écosse on the other. I feel it is not proper that we should be logical to the point of imposing uniformity in all areas.

Canada was not built on uniformity. The proof is that we have here today French-speaking Members and English-speaking Members. What gives this country its character is that it was developed under the influence of various stimuli, each evolving in its own right. Let us not now impose rigid uniformity.

Mr. Speaker, when I was a child, I had the chance to visit Nova Scotia, and its people with their extraordinarily warm hospitality that is well reflected in the words Nouvelle-Écosse. It would be infringing upon their rights if we were to substitute the latin name Nova Scotia. The rights of citizens secured over centuries, contrary to toponymic usage, would require amendments to constitutional documents—and besides, this is a provincial matter—and a number of necessary changes dealt with by federal law, and soon and so forth, Mr. Speaker. This would have a negative impact on the French-speaking population, because Nova Scotia is perceived as an English name.

The translation of names goes contrary to good usage with respect to proper names. The name is Latin and not English. The name is to be found in the 1621 Charter issued by King James to William Alexander. We must realize, Mr. Speaker, that Nova Scotia has very dynamic minorities which have vested rights over time that we cannot infringe upon. We have to respect as a Government and as a federal Parliament the rights of the French-language minorities outside Quebec.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Debate. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Lanthier).

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to see our Anglophone Members in the House of Commons vehemently defending a French designation whose existence has been consecrated by history! I am very proud of my Anglophone colleagues today.

• (1730)

[English]

I am proud of my Anglophone colleagues who are defending so vigorously the French appellation "Nouvelle-Écosse". This is an historic moment, not only in the House of Commons, but in the Progressive Conservative Party, which was once renowned as an English-speaking Party. Today, we have direct proof to the contrary.

[Translation]

To get back to the debate, Mr. Speaker, some examples were given earlier of foreign designations of certain cities famous for their culture, such as the French "Venise" and the English "Venice" for the Italian "Venezia", and for centuries no one has objected to the different names in other languages. Even London, which is called "Londres" in French and London of course in English. There is Greece and the magnificent island of Corfu, Kérkyra, and here again there has been no objection to these different designations through the ages.

Mr. Speaker, the name "Nouvelle-Écosse" has been hallowed by history and by the suffering of a people that deserves all our support and admiration, and I am referring to the Acadians.

It is probably the only vestige Acadians have retained of their country of origin, and I am referring to this very direct and very French designation, "Nouvelle-Écosse", which was immediately accepted by all Anglophones in the surrounding area, even in Prince Edward Island.

I wonder what will happen if we have to change the name of a province. What all those lawyers are going to think up—some would say there are too many of them here in the House—what are all those lawyers going to say when the door has been opened by legal precedent? Will they dare change British Columbia to Canadian Columbia? Will they ask to change "Nouveau-Brunswick" to New Brunswick or Nouvelle-Allemagne? Where will that open door lead us?

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit to the House that the designation "Nova Scotia" was adapted and adopted by the English because of its cultural flavour, the ability to speak Latin then being the "in" thing in some European courts. That's the reason why the English had adopted it. It is clear, however, that if they had wanted to call it "New Scotland", they would have done so as they did for New Brunswick. I think that the designation "Nouvelle-Écosse" is a time-honoured one which should be preserved jealously not only for the local people, but also for the people in Western Canada, in Ontario, as well as in Quebec who have always known our Canadian provinces by their own names. And the designation "Nouvelle-Écosse" suits perfectly the fine province of Nova Scotia. I suggest, therefore, that we should keep it.

Second, I feel that this is not the proper forum to discuss such an issue, Mr. Speaker. I suggest it is the fact of a very old Government to say that we are going to send instructions to the provinces. The previous Government, missed by a small minority of Canadians, had the despicable habit of sending edicts to the provinces and to tell them: That is what you are going to do. We, from the province of Quebec, know it, because we were imposed similar things with the last Constitution. This Government, however, will respect the basic rights of the provinces and we sincerely believe that, strictly speaking, it is up to the provinces to discuss at least their name.

I think, therefore, that we should first of all refer the matter to the province of Nova Scotia before coming up with this instruction to be imposed to an individual Canadian province.

Third, Mr. Speaker, we must realize that on all maps throughout the world, the designation "Nouvelle-Écosse" appears. In my career, I have had the opportunity to work for Zaire, a Francophone country in Africa. And I have seen in that and other countries maps of the world showing Canada with its provinces where the names "Nouvelle-Écosse" and "Nouveau-Brunswick" appeared. These people were aware that they had French maps of the world and that French is a universal language.

By the way, if we are to make or propose changes, I dare say that we should suggest in good French the expression "adjoint parlementaire" to replace "secrétaire parlementaire". It would be a very good French designation which is used in Geneva, Paris and Quebec City. I think that the expression "secrétaire parlementaire" is an anglicism which we shall have to rectify one of these days.

But that is not the issue now before us, the debate is rather concerned with a name change for a province that has not yet made an official request—even though it does not have to ask—and has not yet expressed any wish to have its name changed.

Therefore, I would like to suggest to the House that this would imply a number of changes, the updating of all world maps, charts, even radio systems, navigational systems that use the phrase Nouvelle-Écosse in French.

Fourthly, it goes without saying that to our proud French Canadians who are struggling in that beautiful country that was Acadia and has been Nova Scotia for a few centuries now, we must not give the impression that they are being deserted. As representatives of all Canada, we must support the remnants of French culture that may remain in difficult areas of Canada. French Canadians who are a very small minority in those areas of Nova Scotia should not be made to feel they are being shelved for good by that change in the name of their own province.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we should respect the vested, innate rights of our French-Canadians in Nova Scotia, who have always been proud French-Canadians and who come to visit us in Montreal once in a while, to show that the French spirit is still around, even among them.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, to sum up, I would like to bring to the attention of all Canadians today the fact that this Bill is being put forth, perhaps seriously, by people whom I shall not name but, as I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, who are now absent from the House.

Therefore, I humbly move, Mr. Speaker, that the name Nouvelle-Écosse be and remain historically applicable to that province known in English as "the Province of Nova Scotia".

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Surely, Mr. Speaker, you have noticed the irregularity, the fact that I share the view of my colleague the Parliamentary Secretary who represents the constituency of LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier).

Indeed I fully agree with what he has just said: the name "Nouvelle-Écosse" is part of our history.

I should tell the House that I do have some credibility because I married a Nova Scotia woman and I consider that province as our second home.

I am quite surprised that our colleague the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) should have introduced this kind of legislative amendment. It is with some surprise as well that I notice he is not in the House to—

Mr. Lanthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Lanthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, although I do not have as much experience as the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), I believe it is unacceptable to mention a colleague's absence from the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is quite right. Incidentally, I would point out to him that he should say "rappel au Règlement" rather than "point d'ordre". The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston).

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, he is quite right. As I recall, he did the same thing himself five minutes ago.

Therefore—

• (1740)

I do not intend to continue this debate at any great length. I was surprised that an Hon. Member from Nova Scotia would make this proposal to change the French version of the name of that province.

I must say I take issue with one comment made by my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Lanthier), namely, that the preceding Government had been insensitive to the aspirations of the provinces. On the other hand, this Government has to recognize that the very private Private Member's Bill that we have before us is being debated on the initiative of a Conservative Member of long standing. In my time in the House, I do not recall any such proposal coming from the Government of which I was then a member.

I would be interested in reading the interventions of some of the other Hon. Members of the House of Commons who are from Nova Scotia and find themselves on the Government benches if they have already made interventions. I see that the distinguished Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) is here today. I have not had the opportunity of discussing this particular Bill with him. Once again, in my judgment, it is totally inappropriate for a Private Member's Bill to raise an issue which is so important to so many people.

[Translation]

Our friend from LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) mentioned the importance of the Acadian community in Nova Scotia. Imagine the attitude of this community, where I know quite a few members. Many are involved in provincial politics in Nova Scotia. Imagine their reaction to changing the name of the beautiful province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that for us, at least for me because after all this is a Private Member's Bill, what our hon. friend from Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) is suggesting is entirely unacceptable.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada): The Canadian Permanent Committee on Geographic Names, the CPCGN, has for many years held the principle that, aside from entities that come under federal jurisdiction, such as Indian reserves, national parks and military bases, geographical names fall under provincial jurisdiction. The name of a province is of course another problem altogether. According to the Department of Justice, the name of a province is the name appearing in the Act under which the province entered Confederation. In the case of Nova Scotia, this was the British North America Act. Since these are constitutional documents, the federal Government cannot proceed with any changes without having such changes ratified by the provinces. Furthermore, the provinces cannot change their names without requesting the approval of the federal Government. I think we can conclude this is an area of shared jurisdiction, where it would be up to the provincial Parliament to take the initiative.

Mr. Speaker, in toponymy, current and past usage is one of the main elements to be taken into consideration. The name "Nouvelle- Écosse" as used on maps, in treaties, in historical works and in geographic documents goes back to the eighteenth century at least. Its use has been maintained without interruption since that time, and the name remains in common usage, not only among French-speaking Nova Scotians and all French-speaking Canadians but also throughout the French-speaking world. It is the name we find in the Treaty of Utrecht of 1713, under which France formally ceded Nova Scotia to Great Britain.

We must remember that, initially colonized by France under the name "Acadie", Nova Scotia was French from 1667 to 1710. Furthermore, even if the name Nova Scotia is of Latin origin, it has been a very long time since it was perceived as such by the population of that province and Canadians in general, who consider it to be the English name of a province with a strong English-speaking majority.

Perhaps it is nothing more than a formality—important though it may be—but we must not forget either that if we were to change the official name "Nouvelle-Écosse" we would have to change not only all federal statutes but also all official documents, maps and what have you where the provincial name appears.

The name "Nouvelle-Écosse" is part of the cultural heritage of Nova Scotians and of all other Canadians.

On the other hand, such a change now that the attitude of most Canadians concerning bilingualism is one of greater tolerance and wider acceptance might very well stiffen relations between the two linguistic communities and polarize their respective position.

• (1750)

[English]

This Bill would require many changes, modifications, maps, treaties, and federal laws. As we have already said, basically it is within provincial jurisdiction. I become a little nervous about the federal Government trying to pass any kind of law without the full consultation of the province and its people, especially when the law lies within provincial jurisdiction. I am even more concerned about the negative aspect of this Bill on the Francophone population.

Nova Scotia is considered an English name. Nouvelle-Écosse fits in truly with the bilingual character of this great country of ours and of the magnificent Province of Nova Scotia.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to this Bill this afternoon. I noticed that the various speakers were in a seldom seen unanimous mood and shared a common view. I think there is much similarity in the considerations which prompted us to rise.

I have always been very sensitive whenever linguistic questions arise here in Canada, particularly in Quebec where I come from and where this has always been a prominent issue. I live in an ancestral house which has been passed on from fathers to sons since 1665, over 300 years, so I do not really know whether this tradition explains why I always find it difficult to accept changes to things which are so deeply rooted in our heritage, be it in Quebec or elsewhere in Canada. I have very specific views on what constitutes our national heritage, and I think these are things that are very difficult to change. Changing a name or an expression would not really change what we want to change in this country, whatever that may be.

Take my name, for instance. It evolved in three different ways over 300 years. We never moved away, we never moved off our land, we never budged as much as three feet in 300 years, and in spite of all this, the name Blais managed to evolve and change three times. This is just an example. However, we never had to come before Parliament to make that change. Lucky for us!

I was listening to the other speeches earlier, and I was thinking of the wealth of wonderful names we have here in Canada, including the names of our provinces and the names of our towns and villages. I was thinking, in Quebec, how much the Indian languages have given us in the form of names that are practically impossible to translate and that we would never even think of changing. For instance, the names of Quebec City, Péribonka, and Ottawa. These are all Indian names, and I feel I should name some of them to show how wonderful they are. For instance, Bellechasse, the riding I represent. We can't translate names like that. Some of my colleagues have tried to, but not very successfully. Take Sherbrooke. You could hardly translate that. I don't know in what language it would work, but you can't translate it. La Salle and Westmount. I don't know how the Hon. Member who just left us . . . I don't want to bore you, but if we referred to the Hon. Member from "La montagne de l'Ouest", we might get mixed up with Members from other parts of Canada. It cannot be done.

I think we should keep the names we have in Canada. The evolution has to be natural. A moment ago I gave examples concerning my own situation.

The key question which made me think is this: How can we as a federal Government take over a provincial responsibility? In my opinion, the question is quite clear. It is not up to us to take this kind of initiative. The province itself should have expressed interest, but such is not the case. Otherwise we could seriously consider whether it is the common will of most residents of the province and what would be the reaction of other people throughout Canada.

We often hear various comments, and time and time again Governments are blamed for reacting instead of acting, which may be true in some cases. It may be true, but perhaps it is in cases such as this one where we must ask whether it is the proper way for a Government to proceed. If a Government goes too far ahead or wants to proceed too quickly to make certain changes which might antagonize people and lead to negative reactions on their part, I would suggest we have our work cut out for us if we as parliamentary legislators want to push ahead with this kind of legislative measure when we do not have an obvious consensus, either provincial or national.

Speaking sometimes in French and sometimes in English, my colleague the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth (Mr. Scott), stealing my lines, dealt with the cost of the changes. Again, at a time when each cent and each dollar in Canada counts, where we have to borrow one third—nearly 33 cents—out of every dollar we spend, we would have to borrow a lot more to make the necessary changes in legislations, regulations, maps and treaties.

Mr. Speaker, it is never interesting to have to rise to oppose such a proposal, but I think that we ought to do it and do it simply. Mr. Speaker, I feel that we have no other alternative than to oppose this initiative, to maintain the status quo and to keep the name as it is now.

I have the feeling that you want me to conclude. I have a lot more to say, Mr. Speaker, but I will continue another time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The hour allotted for consideration of Private Members' Business has expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) this item is dropped from the Order Paper.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

MULTICULTURALISM—ESTABLISHMENT OF MULTICULTURAL BUSINESS CENTRE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as you know, my constituency of York East is made up of a portion of two of the six cities that compose the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. My constituency is composed of a portion of the borough of East York and another portion of the municipality, the City of North York. My municipality and constituency have a very multicultural population. In my constituency there reside over 60 different ethnic and cultural groups all together.

I had the privilege of serving as the Mayor of my municipality, the borough of East York, for a number of years. While serving in that capacity, we established a multicultural committee in East York. It later became the race relations multicultural committee of East York. A short time later, the City of North York established a similar type of committee. It is known as the Mayor's Race Relations Committee for the City of North York. We have a friendly rivalry in our two municipalities, Mr. Speaker, as to which one of these organizations was actually the first of its kind.

The East York Multicultural Committee was originally created for two purposes. One was to allow all of our residents, no matter from which cultural background they came or for how long they had lived in our community, to get to know and to understand one another better and, at the same time, to encourage the members of our community, whether newcomers or long time residents, to become involved and participate in the wider community activities and life.

The North York committee, on the other hand, was created to deal specifically with race relations matters. It grew out of incidents in Metropolitan Toronto in the late 1970s when race relations, relationships with the police, and relationships in various communities were of great concern. As a result of that, the focus and the main attention of that committee was placed on the race relations aspect.

I do not think it really matters which one of those committees was first. Both are geared toward promotion of good relationships in our community, whether race relations or the whole relationship of getting people to know and understand each other better. On top of those two functions, however, both committees are geared to ensure that all people have the opportunity to participate and become involved in the wider community. That is what multiculturalism is all about, in my view.

The Sunday before last in my municipality, the borough of East York, we had our great multicultural festival which is known as East York Day. On the platform that day we had two people who exemplified what multiculturalism is all about. One was the new Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Ontario, His Honour, Lincoln Alexander. He is the first black Canadian to serve as Lieutenant-Governor of a province. He was born in this country, in the City of Toronto. In order to take his full place in the wider Canadian society, he had to overcome great problems and obstacles. Another man on the platform that day was the Chairman of East York Day, a man by the name of Shamoh Kara. He came here as a refugee from Tanzania many years ago. He has become prominent in his own community and in the wider community.

Those are two great examples of what multiculturalism is all about. Our community is committed to multiculturalism, and so is our Government. It is moving beyond traditional multiculturalism into equality of economic opportunity. It has been doing that in two areas recently. One is the employment equity Bill which has just gone into committee. The other is an initiative which the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek) recently took in Toronto through a conference called Multiculturalism Means Business. At that conference, and also in the debate concerning employment equity, one thing became quite clear: The concern of many of our fellow Canadians is about the question of whether or not there is discrimination, whether it be in employment or in business.

On April 14 I put a question to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and asked him if the new multiculturalism business centre which he proposed at the conference was going to deal with this issue. I asked him that specifically, bearing in mind the concern people have over the enforcement of the rules and regulations set out in the employment equity Bill, and the concerns people have about enforcing equality of opportunity and anti-discriminatory measures in business itself. I hope that tonight the Parliamentary Secretary is going to tell us that not only will this business centre deal with those matters but tell us specifically how, and tell us about the enforcement provisions which are needed to overcome discrimination in these areas.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to reply to the question of my colleague from York East (Mr. Redway). I am pleased to be able to speak to this matter which is important to all of us—equality of opportunity. This is what our Government stands for and the purpose of our multiculturalism policies and programs.

Of course, we are talking about equality in all aspects of Canadian life: equality of cultural opportunity, equality of social opportunity, and equality of political opportunity. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the remarks of our Minister at the Toronto Convention Centre on April 11, 1986. He said, and I quote:

When I speak of equality, I mean all aspects of life in Canadian society:

Cultural equality—to preserve, encourage and promote the cultures, practices and customs which are the very essence of a truly multicultural society;

Social equality—to respect the right of every individual to take part freely in the life of society without coming up against the constraints imposed by racism, intolerance and fanaticism;

Political equality—to give everyone the opportunity to take part in the decisions made in municipal, provincial and federal affairs.

Mr. Speaker, needless to say, those are my own priorities, and I am quoting the Minister, and they are also those of the Government of Canada.

• (1810)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, at the same time, our Government continues to support cultural retention and enhancement, as well as the greater integration of Canadian society, both through individual learning or skills acquisition and through the evolution of institutions to reflect and be open to Canadians of all cultures and races.

Such an open society is attractive to investors and entrepreneurial immigrants from countries around the world. They can feel welcome here and feel that their children will have equal opportunities for advancement. At the same time, such a society is open to a more effective use of all its human talents and resources.

The recent Multiculturalism Means Business conference is an example of initiative that promotes equality of economic opportunity. The conference brought together about 700 people from across the country from many ethnocultural backgrounds, representing all levels of Governments; community organizations; individual businesses of all sizes; business, trade and professional associations. Many doors of opportunity were opened and many contacts were made.

The momentum generated by this conference will be continued and the issues raised there will be addressed. A multiculturalism and business centre is one initiative to increase economic opportunity for all Canadians, both in terms of business and employment opportunity.

The Government's commitment has not waned on social and cultural issues. The Government has already announced its commitment to the second decade to combat racism and racial discrimination. At the same time, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek) released the progress report on Equality Now recommendations.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate this Government's commitment to a society where all Canadians enjoy equality of opportunity in all spheres of life, social, cultural, political and economical. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT—SIZE OF PAYMENT TO FARMERS. (B) REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Government has a responsibility to deal with the crisis in farm income, particularly in the grain producing sector. The extraordinary drops in income, caused partially by the EEC and U.S. action in the market, merits extraordinary response from the Government. Members of this House and many farm organizations have been asking, since the initial grain price announcements, for some indication that the Government intends to live up to its commitment to take some action.

The western grain stabilization payments of $600 are timely and appreciated, but they are also a very good indicator of the magnitude of the income reduction that has been taking place. The western grain stabilization makes up for income shortfalls for 1985-86. It does not deal with the projected shortfall or income reduction in the 1986-87 crop year. That shortfall, with $3 wheat indicated by the initial payment announcement, will be $1 billion. In fact, the Saskatchewan Pool Research Branch has indicated that it feels that, with all areas and grains included, it is likely to be a shortfall closer to $2 billion. The western grain stabilization plan may trigger another pay-out in 1986-87, but by its very nature it eats itself. Each time a pay-out is triggered, it indicates a lower income, which lowers the five-year average. Therefore, the next pay-outs are going to be progressively smaller, particularly if the pay-out is triggered in successive years.

The grain producing community is asking the Government to make a commitment to ensure that the incomes of farmers next year will at least be equal to 1985-86. If that is not done, there will be far fewer farmers to help in 1987. I hope the strategy of the Government is not to reduce the number of farms and eliminate a number of farmers so that the need for assistance will be less, as has been suggested by others, and implied in the Nielsen report.

• (1815)

I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will announce in his press conference tomorrow programs such as are available to United States and European farmers. Such programs would solve the problems for many farmers by assuring at least the cost of production in deficiency payments. As I said earlier, extraordinary drops in farm income demand extraordinary action. We would appreciate an indication of the Government's action now.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) raises a concern that is felt by all of us connected with agriculture in Canada. I should point out that it is not only an issue affecting western Canada—which many people have come to believe is the grain growing area of Canada—it also affects the total Canadian agricultural picture.

When we consider the amount of grain produced in various provinces of the country and rank them in order of the amount of grain produced, the Hon. Member's home Province of Saskatchewan is the largest producer; Alberta is the second largest; Ontario is third, followed by Manitoba. The fact is that Ontario produces a large amount of grain and is very much affected by what the Hon. Member for Prince Alberta referred to as an extraordinary situation.

It is an extraordinary situation, and we face a very difficult market as a result of the Europeans and the Americans essentially engaging in a price war. In my view, it is largely brought on by the actions of the European community as a result of dramatically increasing agricultural production, especially in the grain sector, through some very large subsidies.

Let me point out that it is not in any way the strategy of this Government to eliminate farmers. I hesitate to even dignify that question with an answer. The Hon. Member should know very well that this Government supports agriculture. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said at a press conference some two weeks ago that: "there's more we have to do for western agriculture and we're going to try to do it within the constraints imposed upon us by this economic situation". That is certainly a refreshing attitude on the part of a Prime Minister of this country, not only on behalf of western agriculture but Canadian agriculture as a whole.

I believe that our record in terms of supporting agriculture, especially western agriculture, has been very good. In the calendar year 1985, the federal Government was responsible for close to $1.5 billion of new initiatives or ongoing initiatives in western Canada to support the grain industry. That is a significant amount of money, and it should indicate that the Government is very willing to support agriculture.

The Hon. Member heard the Prime Minister state in Question Period today that Canada intended to raise the agricultural trade issue at the Tokyo meeting. Again, that indicates this Government's support for Canadian agriculture. In anticipation of the Tokyo meeting, the Prime Minister will be meeting a group of farm representatives from across the country on Thursday to hear their concerns and let them know that we in fact are concerned about agriculture.

I believe that our record of support for agriculture is good. We want to maintain that record and do whatever we can to improve it so that Canadian farmers are not the casualties in this very severe price war between the European community and the United States.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS—REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE STRENGTHENED

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, some time ago I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) about the status of legislation concerning the transportation of dangerous goods. He informed the House that broad regulations covering the transportation of dangerous goods were proclaimed on July 1, 1985. The regulations cover all modes of transportation; air, water, rail and road. Interprovincial transport by road was the only important mode of transportation not covered by these regulations because it is a provincial not federal jurisdiction. As of February of 1986, the provinces and the territories adopted similar legislation to cover transportation of dangerous goods by road and which enforced the transportation of dangerous goods regulations. The ultimate aim of the transportation of dangerous goods regulations is to create a set of uniform regulatory requirements which apply to all means of transportation.

The Act and regulations are an attempt to rationalize the transportation of dangerous goods across Canada. Dangerous goods such as toxic chemicals, highly flammable or explosive products, radioactive materials, corrosives and so on constitute a real threat to our communities when they are not transported safely. The Mississauga derailment in 1979, in which a train containing cars of chlorine gas derailed, resulted in a massive evacuation of the city of Mississauga for several days. Fortunately, no lives were lost during this emergency. However, there are certainly no guarantees that we will be so lucky again.

The mode of transportation, the type of container, and the labelling of materials are all important aspects which contribute to the safer transportation of dangerous goods. Another factor which is of great concern to many, including the Corporation of the City of Toronto and a group of concerned citizens called "M-TRAC", the Metro-Toronto Residents' Action Committee for Rail Safety, is the speed at which trains pass through densely populated urban areas.

In March of this year the City of Toronto submitted a brief to the Acting President of the Canadian Transport Commission and to the Chairman of the Railway Transport Committee requesting that train speeds be reduced to 25 miles per hour on the CP North Toronto subdivision line. The brief points out that in 1981, the Railway Transport Committee imposed a maximim speed limit of 35 miles per hour on trains carrying full loads of special dangerous goods. The city is still greatly concerned, however, about trains carrying partial loads or empty cars with residue of dangerous chemicals. Unless some further action is taken, the risks will continue to increase and so will the potential for disaster. The City of Toronto states in its brief, and I quote:

—some risks cannot be avoided in urban areas. The transport by rail of ever increasing loads of toxic and explosive chemicals through high density areas, where evacuation may be difficult if not impossible, imposes an unfair and unjustified risk to many residents of the city of Toronto. The time for action is now for we are just one accident from a disaster.

In its response to the position paper of the Minister of Transport, "Freedom to Move", M-TRAC expresses its concerns that deregulation may lead to laxity in safety. Certainly the proclamation of the transportation of dangerous goods regulations in July of 1985 has alleviated some concerns. However, M-TRAC is more particularly concerned for the people in highly congested urban areas who are especially vulnerable to train derailment and resultant spillage of dangerous cargo.

There are many people who are concerned about this important issue. Harry Behrend, Vice-Chairman of M-TRAC, and my friend, Rose Dyson, are two people who have been greatly concerned about and involved in making the issues of transporting dangerous goods by rail and the speed at which trains pass through heavily urbanized areas, priority concerns. Last summer, my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), my wife Sandy and I went on a fact-finding tour of the CP Rail main line through Toronto to learn more about the situation and the risks involved. CP Rail officials were helpful in answering our inquiries.

One of the ways in which the railways are attempting to make their mode of transportation safer is through the use of a new type of wheel bearing to improve performance and safety standards. I believe CP has converted something like 75 per cent of the bearings to date.

It should be noted, however, that dangerous goods are not transported just by rail, although this is certainly the mode of transport which has attracted the most attention. The use of other modes of transportation, such as by truck or tanker, is also prevalent. It is vital that the appropriate regulations be followed to the letter to ensure that dangerous goods are transported safely, with no threat to the surrounding population. This is an important issue which concerns Canadians, especially those who live in densely populated urban areas, such as my riding of Don Valley East.

● (1825)

On a positive note, a federal task force was set up on March 14, 1986, by the Minister of Transport to study the transportation of dangerous goods by rail in the Metropolitan Toronto area. On the task force are representatives of CN, CP, M-TRAC, and the public at large. While they have two years to conduct their research and compile their recommendations, speed reduction has been identified as an urgent issue. I look forward to an interim report in this regard. I also look forward to their final recommendations on how to improve the safety factors, thereby protecting the public when dangerous goods are being transported through Metropolitan Toronto so that we never have anything close to the disaster which occurred in Mississauga in 1979.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) has dealt to a great extent with rail passenger traffic and the establishment of the task force, I will direct myself more particularly to his concerns regarding trucking.

At the outset, I would remind Hon. Members that regulations respecting the classification of dangerous goods, the documentation and marking of them, the preparation of emergency response plans, the reporting of spills, and, above all, the training of those responsible for the handling of dangerous goods, have already been promulgated. In fact, as the Hon. Member has mentioned, these measures have been in effect across the country since July 1, 1985.

By long-standing agreement with the provinces, they will have the primary role of enforcing the regulations with respect to vehicular traffic, that is, truck traffic, as it respects dangerous goods. Ontario has taken the lead among the provinces in the application of regulations. It has trained all of its highway inspectors and weigh scale operators and it has been working closely with the Ontario Trucking Association and a number of private trucking associations, not the least of which is the Ontario Petroleum Association, to ensure that vehicle operators are fully aware of the nature and hazards of the products they are transporting. The other provinces are conducting the same compliance programs. In fact, all provinces have been enforcing the regulations since February, 1986.

Discussions with a view to amending aspects of the legislation are presently under way which I hope will address, in part, the Hon. Member's concern. However, I must underline for the Hon. Member that this is only enabling legislation. It is the regulations which give teeth to the legislation. It is an awareness program. It is in education that we will achieve safety, not through legislation or regulation alone. Education is equally important.

TOXIC RAIN—EFFECT OF CHEMICALS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Environmental Law Research Foundation report emphasizes that little is known about the effects of toxic rain on our food, water, and health. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) responded by not assuming responsibility for research into this serious problem. Instead, he is reported as saying that: "Having Environment Canada conduct research would be just too easy. Maybe we are just going to have to ask the producers of toxic materials to research the effects of their own chemicals". What a shocking answer. However, this is not the first time the Minister and his Government have abandoned their role. Funding for the Guelph Toxicology Research Centre was cancelled by his predecessor.

This Minister is confirming that things have not really changed under his command. The authors of the report ask for action and Government initiative in dealing with toxic rain. The Guelph Toxicology Centre should be funded, and the budget for toxic—

MEASURES TO ASSIST FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): The Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) announcement today removed a number of irritants for hard-pressed farmers and we thank him for it. Increasing the ceiling for domestic wheat prices to $11; rebating an additional 2 cents per litre on farm fuel; removing sales and excise taxes on farm fuel; and freezing freight rate increases are all necessary for the farm community, and are a welcome fulfilment of election promises made two years ago.

The farm community and our Party applaud the removal of these irritants. We fought hard for recognition by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Prime Minister that there still were taxes to be removed from farm fuels and this announcement shows an admission of the correctness of our position.

We and the farm organizations of Canada have been pointing out that farm incomes need help this year due to the world price response to the U.S. Farm Bill. We regret that no mention of deficiency payments was made today, but we will continue to press the case because we know it is the only course of action open for the survival of Canada's farmers.

EMPLOYMENT

YOUTH AND WOMEN—GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): This morning, Mr. Speaker, I received very interesting statistics concerning job creation, particularly with respect to young people and women.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, our Government has created over 47,000 jobs since September 1984, hence the 2.5 per cent drop in unemployment over that same period of time. In addition the number of unemployed youths declined by 79,000 since we took over, whereas the former Government could only report increasing job losses rather than new jobs.

I also have a very positive statement about women in the labour market. The latest statistics indicate that 293,000 more women have found jobs in the past eighteen months.

That, Mr. Speaker, is further evidence that our Government has kept its promises. Our priorities and the economic upsurge—

DOMESTIC WHEAT PRICE INCREASE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, Canadian grain farmers, through no fault of their own, are faced with low prices. These prices bear no relation to market forces or cost of production.

Today the Government has responded to the concerns of those producers with a number of measures, foremost among which is the raising of the maximum allowable price for domestic wheat to $11 per bushel.

At present the farmer's share of a loaf of bread is hardly enough to make one decent sandwich. Our producers can now look forward to some relief as a result of today's domestic wheat initiative, an initiative which will have a minimal effect on Canadian consumers but represents a tremendous boost to western wheat growers facing a subsidy war between the United States and the European Economic Community.

This domestic wheat initiative is but one of a long line of agricultural measures put forward by the Government. The Government stands fully behind Canadian wheat producers.

Over the course of the last 20 months the Government has done more for Canadian agriculture than any previous Government in Canadian history.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF TAX MEASURES ON LOWER-INCOME FAMILIES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, a recent study released by the National Council of Welfare has confirmed that the Conservative Budget of 1985 and economic statement of 1984 will leave Canada's working poor worse off than they were before. While the wealthy got a $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption, the poor were hit by the partial deindexation of child benefits and personal tax exemptions, a 3 per cent surtax, and higher federal sales and excise taxes.

Over the next five years a family with two children and a single income of $10,000 annually will lose $905 in disposable income. At $21,000, which is the poverty line, the loss is some $2,334. But those with an annual income of $100,000 will actually see a gain of $517 in disposable income.

It is time that the Government recognized that its regressive and short-sighted economic policies are not working on behalf of all of Canada. In fact they are creating and enhancing two different Canadas, where those in greatest need have been forgotten. That is simply a national disgrace.

ABOLITION OF ALL FEDERAL TAXES ON FARM FUELS

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, the agricultural community has been hard-pressed over the past several years and, as a result of the former Liberal Government's indifference, its real income has gone down by 50 per cent in the past decade.

The September 1984 election was our Government's starting point to implement an unprecedented number of measures designed to help agricultural producers whose work and productivity have been feeding Canada and the rest of the world. A new series of agricultural measures were announced this morning by the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). As of tomorrow all federal taxes on farm fuel will be repealed. This will entail annual savings in excess of $80 million at a time when our farmers need them most.

Mr. Speaker, this is the way our Government intends to spur the Canadian economy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, how many more times must Canada continue to be embarrassed by the naivete of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) relationship with the President of the U.S.? He is negotiating a free-trade agreement with an America that not only imposed a countervail on us yesterday but made it clear that it intends to keep the right to impose such duties no matter what. Only the truly gullible could regard this as a hopeful process.

This reminds us of another hopeful process which led to the appointment of the acid rain envoys, and a report by them which recommended no research and no actual reduction, and which, in spite of presidential endorsation, now appears to be an item which the U.S. administration does not even intend to budget for, according to what U.S. Energy Secretary John Herrington said at a Congressional hearing yesterday.

Democrat Henry Waxman, quoted as saying wryly: "We sure fooled those Canadians," would have been kinder to a great many Canadians who were not fooled if he had said: "We sure fooled those Conservatives".

REMOVAL OF TAXES ON FARM FUELS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that the Government is removing all federal taxes on farm fuels for off-highway use effective May 1, 1986. The net savings to Canadian farmers resulting form this tax cut will be $165 million over the next two years. This announcement comes at a good time for farmers who are now seeding their 1986 crops.

This measure is part of the federal Government's initiative package designed to help the agricultural and energy sectors of Canada. Other agricultural measures in the package include the introduction and speedy passage of farm debt review legislation, an increase in the maximum allowable domestic price level of wheat to $11 per bushel, and a maintenance of WGTA producers' freight rates at the 1985-86 crop year levels.

Although these measures are not the total solution to the financial problems facing Canadian farmers, they do represent the ongoing federal commitment to agriculture. The long-term answer lies in an improved bilateral and multilateral trading environment. The old adage "Actions speak louder than words" is certainly true in this case.

ENERGY

TAX RELIEF MEASURES FOR WESTERN INDUSTRY

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced measures to assist in the survival of western Canada's most important energy industry. The Small Producer Credit of the PGRT will be increased from $500,000 to $2 million effective May 1 this year and for the life of the tax. The PGRT will be set to zero for Syncrude and Suncor's synthetic oil sands plants effective May 1. These measures will provide about $100 million of relief primarily to small and medium-sized Canadian producers but also available to all companies operating in Canada.

Western producers have already reported that this will provide significant revenue tax relief which should enable small and medium-sized producers to maintain activities. A healthy energy industry in the western part of Canada contributes to a healthy economy right across the country.

SOVIET NUCLEAR REACTOR ACCIDENT IN UKRAINE—POSSIBLE CONTAMINATION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the whole world is aware that over the weekend a very serious accident occurred at a Soviet nuclear power plant in Ukraine. I am sure all Canadians join with me in expressing deep concern for those individuals and families affected by the accident.

While few details of the incident have been released by the Soviets, we do know that radioactive fallout in substantial quantities can now be found in the Scandinavian countries of Sweden, Finland, Norway, and Denmark. We also learned today that as much as 13 per cent of certain critical Soviet agricultural produce, including meats and dairy products, may have been contaminated by fallout from the accident. If this is the case, there could be a serious food shortage.

I urge the Government of Canada, on behalf of all Canadians, to offer Canadian produce to the Soviet Union to replenish these contaminated food stocks, as well as to offer whatever other technical and medical assistance can be provided.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—APPLICATION TO MINISTER OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the Deputy Prime Minister. I wish again to come to the right of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to continue to sit in the Cabinet.

Last September in a public letter the Prime Minister wrote to each Minister about the conflict of interest guidelines he stated:

> You will find no quasi-independent agencies in this Code that will allow the Government to shirk its responsibility by saying that the problem belongs to someone else. Nor will you find anything which will relieve me and my colleagues of the necessity of exercising judgment.

Yet the Government has tried to pass its responsibility off on to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, Mr. Boyle. I have spoken to Mr. Boyle. He did no investigation—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Kaplan: —beyond speaking to the Minister.

How did the Government satisfy itself that the guidelines had not been violated? Is the Government satisfied that the guidelines have not been violated?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I answered that kind of question fully and repeatedly yesterday when I said to the House, in response to several questions from several different quarters, that on the instructions of the Prime Minister I had personally met with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General in order to establish that there had been full, complete compliance with the code of conduct, which it is more properly called, by the Minister concerned. He assured me that there had been that full compliance. That satisfied me. Accordingly, I reported to the Prime Minister.

MINISTER'S WIFE'S ACTIVITIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government has not challenged the facts of what the Minister's wife did, where she went to raise the money for her husband's company, or how she got it. Yet this morning when the Prime Minister was asked whether or not he believed that the Minister knew nothing of what his wife was doing the Prime Minister did not answer that question. That question has to be answered. Do the Prime Minister and the Government believe that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion had no knowledge of what his wife was doing? Is that the position of the Government?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government is that if the Hon. Member, or any other Hon. Member, believes that Mrs. Stevens has done something dishonourable or criminal, they should so state, and take the appropriate courses open to them, having made such a charge.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the conflict of interest guidelines are for Ministers to obey. I am asking the Deputy Prime Minister whether he and the Government believe the Minister since, as the Prime Minister said, it is his duty and responsibility to see that the guidelines are enforced. Do they believe the Minister when he tells them that he had no knowledge of what his wife was doing?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of the Prime Minister and of the Government to ensure that there has been compliance with the code of conduct by all Ministers of the Government. With respect to this particular Minister, my advice to the Prime Minister, based upon the assurances I received from the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, was that there has been that full compliance.

KOREAN BANK LOAN

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In answer to my question yesterday concerning the one-year interest-free loan of $2.6 million granted by the company 622109 Ontario Ltd. to the family business of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Deputy Prime Minister replied that at the request of the Prime Minister he had looked "once again, personally, into the same matter that I looked into last April 7", which was a loan from a Korean bank associated with Hyundai to the family business of the Minister. In reply to my question yesterday, why did the Minister refer to the loan made by a Korean bank which was a different loan from the one referred to in my question? Why did he make that automatic connection?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the application of the simple rules of logic suggests to me that the Hon. Member was probably absent on April 7 when the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor raised similar questions based on similar newspaper articles. I do believe they were from the same newspaper. On that occasion I took the appropriate steps on the instructions of the Prime Minister, as I did on this occasion.

INQUIRY WHETHER A COMPANY RECEIVED FUNDS OR LOAN GUARANTEES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): It was obviously not the same loan, Mr. Speaker. And now for my supplementary. Could the Deputy Prime Minister give the House the assurance that neither numbered company 622109 Ontario Ltd., nor any of its officers who made a loan of $2.6 million to the family business of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, received funds or loan guarantees worth millions of dollars from the Korean Hanil Bank, the Hyundai Corporation, Magna International Inc. or any officers connected with any of these companies?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the responsibility of the Prime Minister to the House and to the country is to ensure that there has been full compliance with the code of conduct which has been established for the guidance of Ministers of the Crown. That responsibility has been discharged. The Prime Minister, the Government, and I are satisfied that there has been full compliance with the code of conduct by the Minister. If the Hon. Member is going to suggest that something dishonourable or criminal has been done, let him say so and pursue the proper course.

ASSISTANT DEPUTY REGISTRAR GENERAL—INVESTIGATORY POWERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the possible conflict of interest in the transactions involving the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. At the Minister's suggestion, I took the opportunity yesterday to meet for an hour with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General in order to find out what investigation took place of the matters alleged in yesterday's newspapers.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware of the fact that no investigation took place and that the Assistant Deputy Registrar General informed me and my colleague from Windsor that in fact he had no power, or staff, to conduct an investigation into such allegations as those which appeared in The Globe and Mail yesterday? How could he tell the House that there has been full compliance in this particular case, when in fact there has been no investigation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see at least one Member of Parliament is doing his homework and learning the facts of life as they apply to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General. Of course I am aware of those matters, and he should be. If he was not told today, I am sure the Assistant Deputy Registrar General would tell him now, if he phoned him back, that there has in fact been compliance with the code by the Minister.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the Deputy Prime Minister kindly explain how he can give these repeated assurances to the House when in fact there has been and will be no investigation by the official who was responsible for this particular task and assured us that in fact he does not make those decisions but that he commends them to the Prime Minister who makes the decisions? Will the Government now agree to send the matter to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure so that we can have a full investigation of these very serious allegations?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's progress is encouraging. If he energetically pursues that learning curve, he will discover that the code of conduct which is in place for public office holders—

An Hon. Member: Requires a resignation today.

Mr. Nielsen: —does not require any investigation. It requires compliance. That compliance has been had. In respect of his suggestion, he knows, or should know, that there are processes available to him, and indeed to any other Member of Parliament, who wishes to invoke those procedures. He had better continue his studies.

MINISTER'S BEHAVIOUR

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I remind him that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has blatantly ignored the Prime Minister's direct instructions when he referred to "the responsibility to prevent conflict of interest including those that might arise out of the activities of spouses". Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain to this House why he believes this incredible behaviour, in conflict with the Prime Minister's directive, is now acceptable behaviour?

• (1425)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I suppose that is about the finest example of hang before trial that I have ever heard, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: We just want a trial. Let's have an investigation.

Mr. Nielsen: If the Hon. Member wishes to charge the Minister with having done something dishonourable or of a criminal nature, he has that option open to him if he cares to take it on the floor of the House of Commons, and there are also procedures and processes available to him to invoke, should he care to do so.

GUIDELINE PROVISIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Deputy Prime Minister would have guts enough to answer the question. Obviously he doesn't.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain to this House why the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is not in violation of Section 31(2) where it reads in part:

—being placed or the appearance of being placed under an obligation to any person or organization that might profit from special consideration by the office holder.

How has the Minister not contravened those guidelines? Explain that to the House.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I shall explain to the Hon. Member that, should he choose to have the courage to do so, there are procedures and processes available in the House of Commons and in its procedures for him to make that kind of charge and take whatever appropriate procedures are necessary in order to follow through on it.

An Hon. Member: This is the same defence you used last fall.

Oral Questions

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. POWER TO IMPOSE COUNTERVAIL DUTIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Monday in the House he implicitly acknowledged that a free trade agreement with the United States in which the Americans would retain the countervailing power to restrict Canadian exports, whether fish today or softwood tomorrow, could be worse than useless. The Minister said "countervail is very much at the heart of these negotiations".

Given the importance of this restrictive power, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs assure us that this constitutionally entrenched power in the United States is on the negotiating table?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said earlier.

CONTENT OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister said earlier is what led to the question. He didn't tell us it was on the table.

I talked to the office of one of the crucially involved Senators today in Washington who told me that a majority of the 10 Senators who voted in favour of negotiations would strongly oppose removing the countervailing authority. As the Minister has said this authority is crucial to these negotiations, as I do, and since we don't want to lose any more jobs over this incompetent Government's negotiations, is it on the table or isn't it? That is what we want to know.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Of course, Mr. Speaker, that question is in the negotiations with the United States. Just for future clarity, when I receive questions from the Hon. Leader of the NDP I will send my letters direct to Shirley Carr.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: That is dumb, Joe.

Mr. Crosbie: She is your Edgar Bergen.

An. Hon. Member: Send them to Dublin.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I won't comment on an insult to a newly elected leader of the largest labour body in the country.

I want to ask the Minister to be specific. Since I am told that a big majority of the Senators will never give up this power, since that goes to the root of the discussions and is harmful, if retained, for Canadian jobs, will the Secretary of State assure us that no agreement will be signed by his Government in which that countervailing power remains with the U.S. to destroy Canadian jobs?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wasn't insulting Shirley Carr. I was simply commenting on her evident power.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. Crosbie: Ed bows to her.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If the Leader of the New Democratic Party had not been so busy last week taking his instructions at the convention of the Canadian Labour Congress, he would have known that the vote of the United States Senate was explicitly without condition. There are no preconditions to that negotiation. Of course this matter is going to be part of the negotiations. Yes, we very much expect that we will be able to make progress on it.

MINISTER OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is with regard to the loan affair. On December 18, 1983, the Conservative Leader said on the television program Question Period: "There will be conflict of interest guidelines which will be absolutely watertight and there will be a penalty for not observing it". When will the Minister in question be punished? Will this punishment be his dismissal from Cabinet?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): That, too, Mr. Speaker, is a prime example of total disregard for a fundamental principle of justice in this country namely, the presumption of innocence. As I have said to other Hon. Members, if that Member has a charge of dishonourable or criminal conduct by the Minister, he is free, if he has the courage to do so, to make that charge—

Mr. Ouellet: It's your responsibility.

Mr. Nielsen: —and to take advantage of the processes and procedures which are available to him in our system to follow through.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL DEMAND RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, crime has nothing to do with it. The Prime Minister said in the House on September 9, as reported at page 6399 of Hansard: The Government must be able to provide competent management and, above all, to be guided by the highest standards of conduct—

Mr. Speaker: The question, please. No preamble.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister intend to demand forthwith the resignation of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): No.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister as well and deals with the problems of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Just a short while ago the Deputy Prime Minister asked Canadians to believe that there was full compliance with the code, even though there was no investigation at all. Would the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that a full and thorough investigation ought to be held to verify that in fact there is no conflict of interest?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the code of conduct for public officials is in place for the purpose of dealing with conflict of interest questions. All Ministers of the Crown are required to comply with that code of conduct. Through the office of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General I have satisfied myself that there has been compliance. I have so reported to the Prime Minister. I have said repeatedly, yesterday and today, that that compliance exists. If the Member has not done so, I invite him to confirm with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General that there has in fact been compliance with the code of conduct by the Minister concerned.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Is the Deputy Prime Minister saying: "Trust us"? Canadians have heard that before.

MEMBER'S CONVERSATION WITH ASSISTANT DEPUTY REGISTRAR GENERAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister as well. Yesterday we heard from the Assistant Deputy Registrar General's office that it was absolutely not their policy to reveal information about any inquiries from any Members of Parliament. How was the Deputy Prime Minister able to intercept a private telephone conversation from my office, or was he simply passing by an open window?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with that. In my own experience, when I was the Minister of Public Works in 1979, and in each office that I have held in this Government, one of my first instructions to my officials was that when any Member of Parliament calls them I want to know about it because I want to assist those Members of Parliament in doing their jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, how does the Deputy Prime Minister expect Canadians to believe his statement that there was no conflict of interest when, quite clearly by his own conduct not only this week but also in the past, he has shown Canadians that he does not understand the meaning of the word "integrity"?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Andre: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member will withdraw that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Throw her out.

Mr. Ouellet: It's a question.

Ms. Copps: I asked a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order! It is not a question. The first part was a question. The last part was a statement which the Hon. Member will withdraw.

Ms. Copps: No.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): A martyr.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw!

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am looking for guidance. I asked a question.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the Hon. Member simply to withdraw the allegation.

Mr. Nystrom: It's not unparliamentary.

Some Hon. Members: Out, out.

Ms. Copps: A question, Mr. Speaker, should be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Benjamin: It's not unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the Hon. Member, out of her respect for Parliament, simply to withdraw what she just said.

Ms. Copps: The question is withdrawn.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Oh, no.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The Hon. Member believes she asked a question. I believe she made a statement. She told the House that she has withdrawn what she said. That is good enough for the Chair. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

CANADIAN NUCLEAR POWER STATIONS—SAFETY PRECAUTIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Without making any uncritical analogies between Soviet nuclear technology and Canadian nuclear technology, could the Minister tell us whether he takes at face value the assurances of AECL and Ontario Hydro that that sort of thing could not happen here, or does the Government of Canada have contingency plans for evacuation and other emergency measures in the event that something like that did happen here?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, more and more information is coming to our attention from the U.S.S.R. about the tragic accident. It behooves us as Canadians and as citizens of the world to put in whatever precautions we can, keeping in mind that in the Canadian system every attempt has been made humanly possible to build in every safety precaution that technology, that the best advice we have, the best social responsibility people in the field take, suggest should be incorporated in that system. I can assure the Hon. Member, as I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and others close to that industry would want to assure him and all Canadians, that that safety precaution is being taken. I assure him that we will use whatever methods we have to, and any up-date of them that we should consider after the very tragic accident in the U.S.S.R., to make sure that we have everything in place should an emergency occur.

EMERGENCY PLANNING MEASURES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, apart from the safety measures which are being taken to ensure that there is not an accident, could the Minister explain what plans are in place, or are being put in place, in the event that our technology turns out to be as imperfect as any other technology and there is an accident? As well, could he tell us whether the Government is now considering living up to a promise, made by an earlier Conservative Government and his Party on numerous occasions, to have a full public inquiry into the role of nuclear energy in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the second part of the question, I cannot make a Government statement and I think the Member understands why.

With regard to the first part of the question, in view of what has happened in the U.S.S.R. we immediately set up the federal Nuclear Emergency Response Plan. In an effort to be helpful to Canadians we have also set up a hot-line number: 998-3624. Any Canadian can use that number to receive further reassurance. Any long-term plans should be made with consideration of these events and others.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

INQUIRY WHETHER IT IS PROPER FOR MINISTER OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION TO REMAIN IN CHARGE OF CANADAIR PRIVATIZATION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he thinks the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion should still be responsible for the privatization of Canadair, when we know—since the cat is out of the bag—that the Minister is obligated to the President of Magna International Inc., a potential buyer, who saved him from bankruptcy by helping him to obtain an interest-free loan.

Mr. Speaker, the conflict of interest here is as plain as the nose on your face. I would therefore like to know whether the Deputy Prime Minister could inform the House whether he thinks the Minister should still be responsible for this dossier?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The hon. gentleman not only distorts in his preamble but he does not understand the privatization process. It is carried out under a ministerial task force established under the chairmanship of the President of the Treasury Board. It is, in turn, subject to Cabinet review and approval. Canadair is no different from any other company which has gone through that process, including the measure passed just the other day by the House involving Canadian Arsenals Limited.

[Translation]

PUBLIC PERCEPTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Public perception demands more than that.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is: When a competitor like Bombardier wants to acquire Canadair, what kind of present should he give the Minister's wife to be sure of being treated on an equal footing?

Some Hon. Members: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Bissonnette: Go outside the House and charge him, if you have any guts!

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman will refer to the press release of April 3, 1986, the fact is that the CDIC Board has identified the five groups interested in acquiring Canadair. They are Bombardier Limited of Montreal; Canadian Aerospace, Montreal; Fleet Consortium led by Fleet Aerospace of Fort Erie, Ontario; the IMP Group of Halifax; and Magna International of Toronto, all of this under the review of Burns Fry Investment Dealers, which is a firm, among others, retained by the Board of Canadair to conduct that review.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF LIBYAN STUDENTS

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given reports that Canada is considering the admission of some 330 Libyan student mechanics and pilots recently expelled from England, will the Minister assure Canadians that none of these individuals will be allowed to enter Canada until Libya ceases all involvement in world terrorism?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has no intention of weakening in any way at all actions which might have been taken by other friendly Governments regarding the Libyan regime. Our position regarding Libyan students has been clear for some time. There is a policy restricting the total number and the areas in which they can study. They cannot study in areas related to military matters or those which are technically sensitive. We are maintaining close vigilance on Libyan students in Canada, and the Hon. Member and the House should not be alarmed by the report in The Globe and Mail this morning.

HEALTH

DALKON SHIELD CONTRACEPTION DEVICE—DEADLINE FOR FILING COMPENSATION CLAIMS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As he knows, today is the deadline for women to file a claim for damages they may have suffered from use of the Dalkon shield contraception device. A U.S. court has agreed to hear further argument on this matter on May 22. Is the Minister aware of that, and will he advise the House whether he is prepared to join with women's organizations across Canada to make representations to that court to have the deadline extended?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the deadline. As to whether there should be an extension, both the health and legal implications still have to be assessed. I will take his question as a representation and examine it in more detail.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, Canada allowed this device to be used for some 11 years after it was taken off the U.S. market. Therefore, will he not agree that any Canadian woman in the future who discovers that she suffered damages as a result of using that device will be allowed to pick up the cost of those damages from the Government on any claims filed in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member understands that since 1981 the Health Protection Branch of my Department has advised users of the Dalkon shield to stop its use. My answer to his suggestion can only be the same as it was to his first question. I can give no commitments on compensation or any position the Government will take on it.

MINISTER OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION—PRIME MINISTER'S PRESS CONFERENCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He knows that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion did not have a blind trust if his spouse was part of its management. He had de facto the ability to run his own business affairs. If the Prime Minister refused to say, when questioned this morning, that he believed the Minister did not discuss his business affairs with his spouse, why should Canadians believe it?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The hon. gentleman tries to afix me with a position which I reject in its entirety. He knows, or should know, that the code of conduct for Ministers has been complied with by the Minister. He in fact divested himself entirely of his assets which are in a blind trust. If the Hon. Member makes that simple inquiry of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, he will discover that for himself.

With respect to the details of that blind trust, he will not get that information for very obvious and explainable reasons.

Mr. Kaplan: What about appearances?

MANAGEMENT OF BLIND TRUSTS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, how blind can a trust be when your spouse is managing it? How many other members of Cabinet have so-called blind trusts being managed by their spouses?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that assertion is totally false.

Mr. Broadbent: It is a question.

Mr. Tobin: How many others?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Nielsen: The information as to the identity of the trustee of the blind trust is in the public domain. If the Hon. Member wishes to examine the facts carefully, he will find it is Victoria and Grey, I believe, the successor to the National Bank.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OFFSHORE OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF MORATORIUM

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The joint Canada-B.C. report on offshore oil and gas exploration was released last night. The overwhelming body of evidence given to the panel revealed the dangers of offshore oil and gas exploration and the widespread opposition to the drilling. Therefore, will the Minister give his assurances that the 1972 moratorium will remain in place?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will take the time to study more fully than has been possible until now the report to which the Hon. Member refers. I am very predisposed toward some of the concerns he has continually expressed on this subject and I will take them fully into account when I read the report.

OIL TANKER TRAFFIC

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, that answer doesn't mean diddly to people in British Columbia. The Minister has been studying the report for the last two years. He is aware that the lifting of the moratorium will allow oil tankers to ply those internal waters. Therefore, will he assure this House that he will study the implications of both oil tanker traffic and exploration and production before even considering lifting that moratorium?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will take all relevant factors into account and I will be guided primarily by environmental considerations.

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES FUNDING

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister. Recent dispatches from Washington indicate that the U.S. administration has no budget proposals for spending the $5 billion recommended by the acid rain envoys. To make things worse, the administration opposes congressional action on acid rain control legislation. What on earth is happening to the promises that were made in March at the summit meeting in Washington?

• (1450)

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, clearly the Hon. Member is basing his question on one or two newspaper reports that appeared this morning and perhaps last night. I think we should beware the man who reads only one or two news reports and so bases his queries. The fact is that Energy Secretary Herrington said before a high level congressional committee as follows:

By late summer appropriate mechanisms for the full implementation of the—

Canada-U.S.:

—envoys' report will be in place and our continuing research and regulatory programs will have been reviewed for increasing opportunities for innovation and for consistency with the envoys' report objectives.

CONGRESSMAN'S COMMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, what are the Minister's comments, then, about Congressman Henry Waxman, who wryly commented about these developments: "We really fooled those Canadians"?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I defer to the Hon. Member on all matters relating to foolishness. I think the Hon. Member would be well advised to read the transcript of what was actually said in the relevant congressional committee. The Energy Secretary went on to say:

Technology transfer—

In other words, for the purpose of acid rain control:

—can be promoted by resolving present regulatory constraints that may work against innovation. This is under way and the acceptance of the envoys' report—

by the U.S. administration:

—has given new impetus to this process—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McMillan: It is clear in black and white. The Hon. Member only needs to read it.

FORESTRY

BUDWORM INFESTATION

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry. Many of my constituents are concerned about the serious insect infestation by the spruce and jackpine budworm. I know I am speaking for many of my colleagues from across Canada and from all Parties who are concerned with the same devastating problem. Will the Minister indicate to the House what the federal Government is doing to control this infestation and to protect our forests?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, first, the Canadian Forestry Service supplies the advice, support, and research in that particular matter. The decision about what pesticide to use is absolutely in the hands of the provinces. We try to advise them but they make the final decision and issue the permits.

INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF THUNDER BAY WAFER BOARD PLANT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry. He will be aware that Great Lakes Forest Products Limited in Thunder Bay is closing its wafer board plant tomorrow. Will the Minister personally intervene with that company to seek a one year delay that would allow the workers in the community to put together a package that would be designed to save the 150 jobs in question?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, that question should properly be directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. However, I will take it as a representation from the Hon. Member and contact the company.

DEFERRED TAXES INQUIRY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that this company has, in the past, owed as much as $130 million in deferred taxes. Will he join with his colleague in contacting the company and suggest very strongly that the wise use of that taxpayers' money would be to keep the company operating?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member misunderstands the meaning of deferred taxes. They are a bookkeeping entry, not taxes that are owed to the Government of Canada. These companies pay their taxes that are owing to the Government of Canada as they are due. Deferred tax is a bookkeeping treatment to keep the amount of tax payable, in a bookkeeping sense, on a fairly level basis. It does not represent at all taxes that are owing to the Government of Canada.

INITIAL PRICE OF WHEAT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. This morning the Prime Minister announced that he will give back the 2.5 cents per litre that he has imposed on farming since last September. When will the Government reinstate the 1985 initial price for wheat? How does he expect Canadian farmers to survive on $3 a bushel for wheat when American farmers are getting over $6 a bushel?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that someone rose in the House to ask a question about some important economic issues that the Prime Minister addressed this morning in a press conference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member should be getting up to congratulate the Prime Minister for making an announcement concerning agriculture and energy issues that affect the whole country. He should be congratulating him for taking the opportunity to sit down with farm leaders from across the country before going to the summit at Tokyo in order to take their concerns directly to the summit meeting. That is what he should be doing, instead of getting up and bad mouthing—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mayer: —a situation that he realizes is very difficult.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: It is obvious that the Hon. Minister does not want to answer the question.

FREIGHT RATE FREEZE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Prime Minister claimed that he would freeze freight rates. Will the Minister admit now that all that has been done by the Government is to pressure the grain transportation agency to revise its estimates on grain deliveries? The Government is not bringing in any legislation to do this; it is strictly a smoke and mirrors show.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's own Province of Ontario is the third largest grain producer. He should know that what the Prime Minister announced this morning will benefit not only the west, but Ontario farmers and other farmers across the country. The measures announced by the Prime Minister this morning will save Canadian farmers about $200 million. The $40 million that he is talking about, which is a freeze on the freight rates for the WGTA, will save Canadian farmers $40 million in the coming year. That is what is important.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC AND NORANDA COMPANY ON CONSTRUCTION OF ACID MANUFACTURING PLANT

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister is no doubt aware that industrial pollution is a serious problem in my area, and I would like to ask him whether there has been any progress in negotiations with Quebec and Noranda on building an acid manufacturing plant, a $110 million project that would remove 50 per cent of the 500,000 tons of sulphur dioxide emitted yearly in my region by Noranda mines.

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, Quebec produces about one million tonnes of acid rain-causing emissions a year. Half of those emissions originate from one company alone, Noranda. In accordance with a federal-provincial agreement signed in February, 1985, the Quebec Government is now negotiating with Noranda on a control program. For our part the federal Government has committed itself to a fair and equitable contribution to the cost of a control program affecting Noranda, especially in connection with the acid plant to which the Hon. Member made reference. We expect those negotiations to be completed very soon and to be able to sign an agreement with Quebec and the company concerned shortly thereafter.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION CONCERNING STANDARDS REQUIRED OF JAPANESE AND KOREAN CAR MANUFACTURERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Since General Motors has threatened to close down its plant at Sainte-Thérèse and the Americans are not particularly anxious to invest in Quebec because of the preferential treatment granted the Korean car manufacturer Hyundai, does the Government intend to apply to Korean and Japanese manufacturers the same criteria it applies to the Americans with respect to Canadian content and assembly done in Canada?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that as of January 1, 1987, a 6 per cent duty is being put on cars imported from Korea. Furthermore, my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, is presently carrying on discussions with both the Japanese and Korean car manufacturers to see what can be done to alleviate the concerns that he has so ably expressed.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL ANNOUNCE RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN CARS DURING VISIT TO KOREA AND JAPAN

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Since these imports are a threat to thousands of jobs in the automobile industry in Quebec, does the Minister intend to ask the Prime Minister to announce restrictions on imports of foreign cars during his visit to Korea and Japan?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that I am aware of the briefings that the Prime Minister has received with respect to trade issues. As the Hon. Member knows, he is visiting both Japan and Korea. I believe there will be some discussions during that visit.

Mr. Speaker: One question, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount.

Mr. Johnston: Did Your Honour say one short question?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, one short question.

THE ADMINISTRATION

MINISTER OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION—PRIME MINISTER'S PRESS CONFERENCE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I will ask my question, then, of the Deputy Prime Minister. In a press conference this morning the Prime Minister said that he was prepared to give his Minister the benefit of the doubt. If there was no perceived conflict of interest would the Deputy Prime Minister tell us to what doubt the Prime Minister was referring?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. gentleman was watching. However, I carefully watched that press conference throughout. I heard no such words used by the Prime Minister. Since that time I have had the opportunity of going over the transcript very briefly. I have seen no such words attributed to the Prime Minister in the written copy.

PRIVILEGE

SUBMISSIONS BY MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has sent me a letter outlining a desire to raise a question of privilege arising out of yesterday's question of privilege. I cannot allow that. She knows that yesterday I invited her, if she wished, to submit further precedents to me. She may do that, in writing, if she wishes.

I must say that I was ready to rule on the question. Since she has not sent me a further letter I am prepared to wait one more day, if she wishes to submit precedents to me.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question of privilege can be raised only once. It cannot be raised a second day.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was responding to Your Honour's request to provide precedents. She is prepared to provide them orally on the floor of the House of Commons. If Your Honour would prefer to have them submitted—

Mr. Speaker: I will accept that this is a misunderstanding.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member would be placing the Chair in a position of creating a precedent whereby a question of privilege could be raised one day after another. The Chair cannot allow that. The Hon. Member has misunderstood what I was saying yesterday, perhaps it is my fault, and that is fine. What I meant is that if the Hon. Member has anything more to submit to me, then she should do so. I invite her to do so. However, since the Hon. Member is an experienced Member of two Houses she should know that that should be submitted to the Speaker.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

PRESENTATION OF TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the tenth report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2) the committee requests a government response to the recommendation in paragraph 15(b).

This report addresses a number of concerns relating to the Public Service Commission. First, the staffing system in the Public Service is cumbersome. The average time to fill a staff vacancy ranges from 136 days to 160 days. This can be reduced significantly while maintaining employees' rights of appeal.

Second, the monitoring of staffing activities delegated to government departments, such as affirmative action programs, is inadequate.

Third, the Commission's claim that the reverse order of merit is applied when there are lay-offs is of concern, since guidelines do not exist for its application.

Finally, the problems of the division of responsibilities between the Commission and the Treasury Board Secretariat, first reported on in 1982 by the committee, should be resolved without further delay.

It calls upon the Government to renew the previous position which would enable people to keep their entire unemployment insurance benefits without the deduction of pension income.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 539 and 540.

[Text]

CHEESE IMPORT QUOTA SYSTEM

Question No. 539—Mr. McKinnon:

1. In 1985, how many kilograms of cheese were imported under the 1985 allocated cheese import quota system?

2. In 1985, what was the amount in kilograms of the largest single annual quota allocated to any firm or individual?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Statistics Canada reported 20,693,000 kg. of imported cheese in 1985. Permit issuance for imported cheese totalled 20,393,420 kg. for 1985.

2. Information with respect to the allocations each firm or individual has received is deemed, under current government policy, to be confidential and, accordingly, cannot be divulged. That policy, however, is under review at this time.

ESQUIMALT GRAVING DOCK

Question No. 540—Mr. McKinnon:

Does the government briefing document given to possible purchasers of the Graving Dock at Esquimalt, B.C., list among the development opportunities the construction of icebreakers for Soviet bloc countries and, if so (a) is this the same Graving Dock which is barred to Polish fishing vessels because of a possible security risk (b) how many requests for construction of Soviet bloc icebreakers have been sought or received?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Acting Minister of Public Works): The briefing document provided to potential purchasers of the Esquimalt Graving Dock did not list among possible development opportunities the construction of icebreakers for Soviet bloc countries.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 29, consideration of Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motions Nos. 5, 6 and 11 (Mr. Angus, p. 12764).

Mr. Speaker: There seemed to be a little uncertainty about the end of the ruling I gave yesterday. I thought we had heard arguments. I said I would hear arguments today, but other Hon. Members indicated they wanted to put arguments yesterday. I gather there has been some interpretation of the ruling I gave yesterday that I would allow further argument now. Therefore, I am now prepared to allow further procedural argument if there are those who wish to do so.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being allowed to make representation on an amendment presented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud). In suggesting yesterday that the amendment may be out of order, the Chair made reference to two citations; first, Citation 773(7) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition and, second, Citation 246(3) of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition.

The problem we have is that both of these citatations are based upon procedures that are no longer followed by the House. Beauchesne's Fourth Edition was written at a time when all spending Bills were based upon detailed resolutions that were debated and open to amendment in a Committee of the Whole before the actual Bill was given first reading. In December, 1968, the rules of the House were changed and the resolution stage was eliminated. It was replaced by a Message from the Governor General recommending the purposes of the Bill and printed on the Order Paper and Notices and on the Bill itself.

Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(7), was written after the adoption of the new rules but it refers to a Bill that was introduced very shortly after these rules were adopted when it was the practice to make the Royal Recommendation very detailed, almost as detailed, indeed, as the old resoltuion. Under our present practices, however, the Royal Recommendation is not at all detailed. It merely states that Her Excellency recommends to the House a Bill entitled, and so on.

The purpose of the Recommendation procedure is to preserve the financial initiative of the Crown, that is, to give effect to the constitutional provision that the House cannot spend any more money than recommended by the Government. That is the only purpose of the Recommendation.

The amendment of the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent does not create an additional new expenditure. It does not impose a new charge upon the Treasury and therefore does not go beyond the purposes of the Bill as recommended by the Governor General.

The citations mentioned by the Chair have been over-taken by time. If they are to be taken literally, they preclude any amendment to the Bill at all, because the form of the Royal Recommendation is that the Governor General recommends, not just certain provisions of the Bill, but the whole Bill. That is what the Recommendation says. Such an interpretation is not what is intended by the rules. Amendments not creating a new expenditure should not be ruled out of order if they are otherwise relevant to the Bill. This amendment is relevant to the Bill and it does not create a new expenditure.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any further procedural argument? I thank the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) for, if I am allowed to say it, one of the more interesting procedural arguments the Chair has heard.

With respect to the case made by the Hon. Member, I think he knows that whatever the desirability of arriving at a new procedure, notwithstanding his argument that the Beauchesne's Fifth Edition citation arises shortly after the adoption of the new rules, it has been confirmed many times by rulings from the Chair since that time.

Whatever the quality of the argument the Hon. Member is making, and without entering into, I hope, an obiter dicta, may I say to the Hon. Member that the Chair has already admitted as admissible amendments to the Bill, including in this particular case, amendments to Clause 4.

I believe the Hon. Member would expect me to understand the latter part of his submission as argument, let me put it that way. I think I am going to find, having looked at the matter, as he knows, at some length in advance, that Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 have to be ruled out on the basis of our precedents and their relationship to the Royal Recommendation, as I indicated yesterday.

I believe I might want to pursue that matter further with the Hon. Member on a more general basis. Perhaps that is the best way to deal with it. Therefore, resuming debate.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to rise in support of the amendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), with respect to Clause 4. The effect of the three motions put forward by my colleague would essentially be to bring Clause 4 under some sort of public review and parliamentary control; some sort of reporting and review regime which is not provided for in the present structure of the Act.

My concern and the concern of my colleague is, of course, the virtually limitless taxing powers this gives to the Canadian Coast Guard. We know it is essentially that the bureaucrats at the operating level will be making the decisions. What concerns me is that Clause 4 says nothing of the cost accounting structure of the Canadian Coast Guard. It says nothing as to target recovery percentages or target fee levy percentages. It simply places the power in the hands of, supposedly the Minister, but more realistically his officials, to recover costs, however those might be defined, with a view to relieving the public purse and with no consideration provided for of any form of assessment of the impact on users of canals, waterways, seaways and, of course, the Great St. Lawrence Seaway about which my colleague is so rightly and responsibly concerned.

I am sorry we have not had any participation as yet from Hon. Members on the other side of the House concerning the amendments put forward by my colleague. If these amendments are in any way deficient, if they overly circumscribe the powers and responsibilities of the Government, or if they would impose impossible operating burdens on the Ministry, let the Progressive Conservative Members say so. Let them stand up and put on the record their criticisms of these amendments. But just to let the amendments get voted down and the Bill to pass in its current form is not the way those concerned with the exercise of democracy should be conducting themselves in this House. What it essentially represents is a "hear no evil, see no evil, do not evil" type of philosophy where it is the apparent belief of Government that, after all, the Minister, being the Minister, cannot do any wrong with this legislation. That, as we know from prior experience, particularly with the Liberal Government, is far from being the truth.

We know after all that when Ministers are given virtually unlimited freedom to set rates of charges or recovery there is a tendency, or temptation if you like, to rule arbitrarily by legislative fiat. I think the amendments proposed by my hon. colleague are very worthy of attention and incorporation in the final form of this legislation.

Under the Bill as it is now written, the only public review provision is that a regulation is to be published in The Canada Gazette at least 90 days before the proposed date with a reasonable opportunity afforded within those 90 days to make representations to the Minister. That really is a pretty loose, limp and eminently disregardable form of public review and input.

On the other hand, the measures proposed by my colleague are reasonable. They would not overly constraint the Government. I believe any Government should be able to live with them. They do not provide for lengthy hearings, for legal contestatory processes or for expensive review boards. In fact, they do not provide for any patronage appointments; that may be one reason why they are perceived as being deficient.

The amendments do provide that a committee of the House would, on the written request of 20 Members, review the regulation, and that would be the public forum. I think that is an excellent idea. Let us face it; with the necessity of getting the written request of 20 Members it would not be a rubber stamp. It should not be the sort of thing that one Member, however diligently she or he might ply his or her own parish pump, could put through willy-nilly. Presumably, it would depend on a degree of common understanding and acceptance that there was something worth questioning and, of course, it would depend on a degree of commitment on the part of Members of the House who wish to examine the regulation and hold hearings on it.

Motion No. 6 provides for the automatic review of Clause 4 by the Transport Committee every two years. Again, I think this is an excellent idea. It is not an over-imposition on the Government. Presumably, the Government of the day will still have a working majority on the Transport Committee. Presumably an automatic review would be an opportunity to air concerns, to propose alternatives, to discuss the experience and to analyse the degree to which the objectives have been accomplished. It will not be merely a bi-annual bear-pit such as what might come about if there was a sort of tribunal process. Again, that is something a Government that is truly interested in the exercise of democracy could easily incorporate.

Motion No. 11 provides that the clause not come into effect before January 1, 1988. I think this shows how carefully the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan has thought out the amendments. He is not seeking to establish a process that would immediately bring down complaints on the Government. Under this sort of provision, there would have to be a working-out period in which the users, the exporters and the Government itself would have a chance to look at the experience and, indeed, would be forced to do so if they were to come before the parliamentary committee and cogently reason the case for the changes they might propose.

I think it is worth while to review some of the opposition there has been to Bill C-75, and particularly to Clause 4. We know, of course, that boaters everywhere in Canada, as represented by the Council of Boating Organizations of Canada and through their own personal submissions, have stated their concern about the way Clause 4 might be used. The whole principle of Government by laws and not Government by men is to protect the citizen from the arbitrary exercise of power. I am afraid that by setting up Clause 4 in the way it is, the Government is in fact permitting, and may well be encouraging, the exercise of arbitrary power over the boaters of Canada, although, after all, boating may not be a momentous area of human endeavour.

The St. Lawrence Shipowners Association has said the following about the Bill:

—we do not agree that we should give the government a blank cheque, which would allow it to set up a fee system about which we know nothing at the present time.

I recall to Members of Parliament the title of the recent discussion paper issued by the Ministry of External Affairs. One of the key words in that title was "competitiveness". I think that is something that has been generally ignored in the framing of Bill C-75. By allowing the Government an unrestrained taxing power restricted only by the total cost—but as I pointed out, that cost is susceptible to many different ways of determination—the Government has set up the users of maritime transportation routes for a possible beating that could very drastically affect their competitive position.

The Seafarers' International Union has said the following:

We cannot have full cost recovery if our Canadian marine industry is to survive. On certain cargoes, the lake companies will just not be able to compete—Therefore we will not have these cargoes.

Algoma Steel, Stelco and Dofasco have said the following:

—Our big over-all concern is to do with the seaway system itself, upon which we depend, and its lessened competitiveness.

They also mention the chronic over-supply of their commodity, steel, in the present world market.

The International Association of Great Lakes Ports has said:

The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway system is a shared asset of Canada and the U.S. For the first time in the history of the seaway, each country is moving unilaterally on matters involving the seaway—

That is a warning of which the House should take very careful notice.

The Dominion Marine Association has said the following:

—this could amount to an additional $1.65 per tonne for every tonne that moved through the Seaway last year. Given the fact that traffic was down 20 per cent from 1984, this cost could have a dramatic impact on future traffic patterns.

Many other organizations have had something to say about this Bill including the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, the Montreal Board of Trade, Canada Steamships Ltd., the Canadian Shippers' Council, the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada and the Prince Edward Island Potato Marketing Board. From the number of submissions that were heard in committee, it should be very apparent to the Government that it is establishing a measure which could come back to haunt the Government, a measure which could impair Canada's international competitiveness and could influence and, generally, harmfully modify possible decisions taken by shippers.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), has referred to this Bill as a Trojan horse document. He said that vessel owners and operators do not know what the cost is going to be. That, I believe, violates a fundamental principle of fairness and equity. I believe it violates a very normal commercial principle, which is that when a good or service is demanded or ordered, it is done so on certain assumptions and with at least a very approximate knowledge of price. That approximate knowledge will now be gone because users will be subject to whatever levy the Government decides to demand, and there is little provision for the modulation of those levies within the frame of reference of what the market can afford.

I would again call on my colleagues on the opposite side to rise to tell us what is wrong with these amendments that they are not going to accept. I think these are reasonable changes which would enshrine a number of key commercial and, indeed, moral principles in this Bill, principles that are sadly lacking at the present time.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity this afternoon during the debate on Bill C-75, to announce that the Liberal Party, the Official Opposition in the House, deplores the Government's decision to maintain Clause 4 in Bill C-75.

My colleague, the previous speaker, moved an amendment to have this clause struck out of the Bill. Unfortunately, after being voted down in Committee, the amendment was rejected by the Speaker in the House on procedural grounds.

I must say that if we cannot have Clause 4 struck out of Bill C-75, at least we will not object to the amendments presented by our colleague—the amendment before the House today.

But why should we agree to an amendment that is not as good as we would like it to be? It is because a bird in hand is better than no bird at all. What Clause 4 of the Bill gives the Government is the kind of absolute authority which in this day and age is unthinkable and unacceptable.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has taken advantage of a Bill that amends the Canada Shipping Act, and the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act. Here we have a series of non-controversial measures, measures that are acceptable and praiseworthy and which could have been debated very quickly in the House and could have obtained the unanimous approval of all Members on both sides of the House.

But the Government saw in Bill C-75 a unique opportunity to create a new authority which I find quite unacceptable, the authority to impose a Canadian Coast Guard maritime service cost recovery program.

Clause 4 of Bill C-75 is the one we find so unacceptable and so reprehensible. We denounce it and we simply cannot understand why the Government chose to ignore all representations made in that respect.

The previous speaker listed a series of associations and organizations which have found fault with Clause 4 and urged the Government not to proceed with this part of the Bill.

Why do we share the views of all those who appeared before the committee to denounce this part of the Bill? Because the percentage of recovery, the charges imposed, the way they will be collected and, in short, who will pick up the tab are all matters left to the full discretion of the Governor in Council—the Minister of Transport, of course, but also his colleagues the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) who, as we know, are one-track-minded when it comes to finding new sources of revenues to reduce the Government's deficit.

Although some people do have confidence in the Minister of Transport, most of those who gave evidence before the Committee on Transport and the committee which considered Bill C-75, have strong reservations about the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board.

Nevertheless, we cannot agree with leaving the assessment of these costs to the entire discretion of Cabinet. In fact, that is what the Minister of Transport wanted when he presented the Bill and asked the Committee to vote in favour of the principle of service charges and give him and his Cabinet colleagues carte blanche to do as they see fit.

The Coast Guard services referred to in Clause 4 are aids to navigation, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice breaking services, vessel escort services and sounding. Since the Bill fails to define exact perimeters, there may be a host of other services, as yet undefined, which may also be affected and may become a financial burden for people in the shipping industry, who because of the economic situation are having considerable problems at this time.

If we stick to a rigid interpretation of Clause 4, service charges would apply only to navigation services and not necessarily to the entire Marine Transportation Program. Now it is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that total expenditures for the Marine Transportation Program in 1985-86 were set at $824 million. The cost recovery now being requested for the same Coast Guard services represents about 3 per cent of total expenditures or $24.7 million.

When the Minister appeared before the Committee, he wanted to re-assure Members present, saying that his Department was not aiming at more than a 7 per cent cost recovery—in other words, 4 per cent more than the present recovery rate. He added that this would represent an increase in revenue of about $20 million.

Mr. Speaker, what worries me, and that is why I raise this point this afternoon, is that the users of these services, who have a vested interest in what is happening, are the ones who expressed their concern and made the most strenuous objections to this part of Bill C-75. And I must say they are right to be concerned, because this formula is not laid down in the Bill. I am quite prepared to believe what the Minister says, but I wonder why he failed to put it in writing in the Bill. Without wishing to doubt the Minister's word, it is obvious that he has full authority to increase the recovery percentage as and when he sees fit.

I see that the Parliamentary Secretary is doing his job—he gets paid to defend the Minister—and waxing indignant in the House. He may resent what I am saying here, but all I am doing is echoing the hundreds and hundreds of representations made to the committee Members who studied this Bill and who are saying in no uncertain terms that such absolute ministerial discretion is unacceptable. The Parliamentary Secretary's attack is not levelled against me but against all these associations and individuals who aired their grievances before the committee.

To some extent the amendment moved by the New Democratic Party clarifies the executory regulations from which would flow the Minister's absolute power. I am therefore prepared to accept the amendment because, at the very least, it does limit the extent of the power of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and his Cabinet colleagues.

I am glad to see that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has just entered the House, because he should give more consideration to the concerns that have been expressed about Clause 4 of Bill C-75 more specifically by the Montreal Chamber of Commerce and the Montreal Board of Trade. Hopefully the President of the Treasury Board will make personal representations to the Minister of Transport and urge his colleague to respond to the very legitimate requests of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, and convince him to change his mind and not resort to Clause 4, at least not until the situation has been straightened out. Clause 4 should not have been included in Bill C-75 to begin with, but at least I hope the Government will accept the amendment now before the House under which the authority of the Minister would be restricted to some extent.

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I remind the distinguished former Minister of his comments at second reading on October 17, 1985 as reported at page 7743 of Hansard. In responding to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) he said:

> In answer to the Hon. Minister, I want to tell him that in some cases I would agree with some charges, but in other cases I think it is totally irresponsible—

• (1540)

That is the point of the observation which the former Minister has made. Might I ask the Hon. Member broadly and generally whether or not he totally disagrees with the Auditor General and whether or not he totally agrees?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robichaud: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) on a point of order.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to know whether there should have been a question and comment period after the remarks of my colleague. Is that normal procedure?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately not. There is no period for questions and comments after the speech of the Parliamentary Secretary. The Parliamentary Secretary has the floor on debate.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, that may come as some surprise to the distinguished Member, who I might say has made extraordinarily interesting interventions on a number of occasions in committee and has brought forward what can only be considered as some very reasonable suggestions, as indeed did his colleague, the Hon. Member for Humer—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), in the Liberal Party, as did the New Democratic Party.

These amendments were intended to strengthen the Bill and were amendments which reflect clearly the intention of the Government to listen and respond to the comments and observations not only of opposition Parties but of the Canadian Council of Boating Associations, the Seafarers International Union, and I could go on. The list is almost without end. We did listen and we did respond. The Bill is strengthened in all areas, there is no doubt about that.

Of all of the representations from the over 60 witnesses representing some 28 associations, which were heard by the legislative committee, only one brief disagreed with the fundamental principle of recovering some of the costs incurred by the Canadian Coast Guard in providing services to marine and maritime users in Canada. There was only one single disagreement. Everybody else agreed. I fail to understand what the Opposition's concern is, other than obstruction. I hesitate to say that because we are just now moving into report stage.

An Hon. Member: It is provocation.

Mr. Forrestall: I would ask the Hon. Member whether he is prepared to rise in his place and give unanimous consent, say tomorrow, to move to third reading. Of course he is not prepared to do that.

From the Great Lakes Seaway Corporation through to the boat users, from canoeists through to ship owners, the Dominion Marime Association, everybody agrees with the principle. To meet the very legitimate concerns and a legitimate question raised by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), the Minister has agreed not to move with this Bill in the proclamation of Clause 4 which amends Section 3.1 of the Canada Shipping Act until, at the earliest, January, 1987, or to move with the implementation of any charges until, at the latest, January 1, 1988.

I understand the arguments that have been put so far in opposition to us opening up an Act and including matters which have not as yet had the benefit of consultation. Let me respond to that. Historically we seldom open up a major piece of legislation. Here we have opened up a major piece of legislation in Canadian life, namely, the Canada Shipping Act. I think it was incumbent upon us, as we opened it, to deal with the six international conventions and five international codes, primarily dealing with safety at sea, safety of the lives of seamen, construction standards, operational standards and certification of these people in one broad category and in another broad category, the enhancement from present levels of national compensation capacity to international standards of compensation for those affected by oil pollution and spills. The movement toward that, which is 95 per cent of the Bill, is essential, urgent and must be dealt with. To raise the specious argument that nobody agrees with the right to impose certain charges for partial recovery of costs of the provision of services is bewildering, unless you consider it purely in the political context.

I repeat again, every single witness who appeared before the legislative committee, and I might add, with one exception every single witness who appeared on the freedom to move question in the Standing Committee on Transport, agreed that it is right and proper that the taxpayer recover some of the costs—not all, by any stretch of the imagination, but some of the costs of providing Coast Guard services. That is all that is contemplated. If you want to do the definitive arithmetic now and preclude or prejudge the work of the consultative process, that is up to the Opposition, but we are not going to do that.

The Hon. Member for Papineau has said his piece and long since left the Chamber. He hits and misses on questions of transport, and although he is the Official Opposition's critic he rarely stays around to enter into debate or to respond to legitimate concerns and questions. Let me tell him that the Bill should stand. The proposed amendments have the effect of changing substantively the intention of the Bill. They will not serve the best interests of the Maritime community and I would urge Members to get on with the next grouping of amendments. I urge them to be careful and concerned. Every day of delay delays the imposition of international standards for the safety of the life of seamen. Any delay in that area is somewhat intolerable.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to speak to amendments to Bill C-75 to amend the Canada Shipping Act. We have no objection to most of the contents of this Bill. Most of the contents concern modernization and other essential changes which are not subject to partisan debate. However, Clause 4 is an area of very grave concern and we have moved amendments to it which we to have supported.

Through Clause 4 the Minister is given inordinate powers to raise charges for the use of The Seaway. Clause 4.3.1 (1) presently reads:

> For the purpose of defraying the cost of services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard, the Governor in Council may make regulations respecting charges relating to those services, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, aids to navigation, sounding and dredging, vessel traffic services, icebreaking services and marine aid.
> (2) Charges may be imposed pursuant to subsection (1) in relation to any ship, regardless of whether the Canadian Coast Guard actually provides a service to that particular ship, but—

There are then some qualifications.

The principle of user-pay is a very reasonable one. No one is objecting to the principle and that is not the issue. It is, rather, how the charges are set, what kind of appeal procedure there is, and what the effect of the charges will be. We certainly want to have reasonable payment for services which are provided, but it must be fair payment which is genuinely "user-pay". There are certainly arguments that people may be charged for services which they themselves do not use. As well, we must look at the general impact on the economy.

Shipping ultimately affects the producers of the products which are being shipped. Charges imposed on transportation are ultimately charges on the consumer or the producer. Someone must pay them. The notion that we can simply impose new charges without thinking about the impact on producers and consumers is very short-sighted. As the provision exists, it would give dictatorial powers to the Minister to decide what these charges are to be. That is objectionable. The Government has agreed to an amendment to permit publication of proposed charges and to allow for a 90-day period during which representations can be made to the Minister. The same Minister who decided the charges in the first place would decide whether to proceed with them or change them. That is the old situation of the same person acting as prosecutor, judge, and jury in his own case. That is objectionable.

In committee we recommended a regulatory process which would provide for input in the determination of the charges by the public and the industries concerned. That was not accepted. Since that procedure was not accepted my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) has proposed three other amendments. The first motion, Motion No. 5, provides that there be an amendment to Clause 4 substituting the following:

> (3) A copy of each regulation that the Governor in Council proposes to make under subsection (1) shall be laid before either House of Parliament.
> (4) Where, within twenty sitting days after a proposed regulation is laid before either House of Parliament under subsection (3), fifteen Senators or twenty Members of the House of Commons, as the case may be, by notice in writing addressed to the Speaker, request that the proposed regulation be referred to a committee, the proposed regulation shall stand referred to the standing committee of the Senate or House of Commons, as the case may be, that deals with transportation matters, or to such other committee as the Senate or House of Commons may order.
> (5) A committee to which a proposed regulation is referred under subsection (4) shall forthwith consider the proposed regulation and report thereon to the Senate or House of Commons, as the case may be, within thirty sitting days after the referral is made.

One could go into other details of the amendment, but its purpose is clearly to provide for a parliamentary review and, through the committee system, for users and the industries concerned to make representations. There will have to be some public accountability, not just a letter to the Minister—

Mr. Forrestall: Do you not understand the role of the Standing Committee on Transport? It can call such questions at any time it wants.

Mr. Angus: Hold it, Mike. You'll get another shot.

Mr. Forrestall: I'll give her a shot. Obviously she doesn't understand the process.

Ms. McDonald: The provision would make it possible for Members of Parliament to have this referral made. That is not possible under the existing Clause 4. It is important that this provision be in place. The committee is dominated by Government Members who may, by majority, decide not to hear it. They could hear it if they wished to, but if a majority of the Government Members decided they did not want to hear the matter, there would be no hearing. This would give Parliamentarians who do not belong to the Party in power, and who may have concerns about this, an opportunity which they do not have under the existing clause to ensure that there is public accountability on this matter. Motion No. 6 reads as follows:

> (10) Two years after the coming into force of section 3.1 and every two years thereafter, the Minister shall refer section 3.1 to the Standing Committee on Transport for the purpose of reviewing its economic impact on users of services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard and the committee shall report not later than the sixtieth sitting day of the House, following the request for review.

This is a very simple amendment. Its purpose is to ensure that there is a review of the economic impact of the charges. Transportation is enormously important. Charges which are too high could certainly cause enormous harm. This would ensure that there is a review before a deteriorating situation has too long to develop.

Our third motion, No. 11, reads very simply:

by proclamation, with the exception of section 4 which shall come into force on or after January 1, 1988.

This is to permit some period of adjustment before the imposition of these charges. They should not come into effect immediately, which the Minister has said he would not agree with in any event. Its purpose is to clarify within the legislation that there will not be an immediate impact and to specify a time when the impact of these charges would be felt.

Let us consider the amount of money involved. The current estimate for Coast Guard services is $800 million, and costs usually go up. The present legislation would permit full recovery of these charges. The Minister said there would only be recovery of a small portion of that amount, but that could be changed. There is no reason why the Minister could not recover any amount he wished. That is a very substantial amount of money.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out, particularly to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall), that a vast number of witnesses appeared before the committee raising their concerns. They included representatives of the industries, producers, farmers, unions, workers, and recreational users. They saw major problems with Clause 4 and called for review and adjustments. They called for the kinds of changes which we are recommending through these three amendments.

Mr. Forrestall: They supported it in principle, didn't they?

Ms. McDonald: We support it in principle, but we very much want these important changes to allow for public input. We do not want to allow the Minister the dictatorial powers to impose charges which may be harmful to the industry. That is what industry and union representatives have said and that is what we are very much supporting here. Principle is fine but not at any cost. The economic impact has to be a part of that review.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to say a few words on Bill C-75 and on the motion before us today. Right from the beginning, when this legislation was brought to the House by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), I very quickly noticed Clause 4 as it affects my part of the country and certainly my province. I spoke about how important the potato industry is to Prince Edward Island. We ship about 80 per cent of our potatoes to international markets. Most of those shipments are through three ports, Summerside, Charlottetown and Georgetown. This legislation has a very detrimental effect on that industry. I realize that during the committee stage the Minister went some distance in saying that Clause 4 will not be proclaimed until January 1, 1987. It also may be that the actual charges would not be imposed until January 1, 1988. However, that is little consolation to the people I represent.

I looked over some of the briefs presented to the committee. I have one here from the Potato Marketing Board on behalf of the Prince Edward Island potato industry. This may be the brief that the Parliamentary Secretary spoke about. They spelled the situation out in real terms. Their studies indicate that the cost of icebreaking services alone is roughly $1,000 an hour. They indicated in their brief that in the winter ships generally need icebreaking assistance for about 30 hours in each direction in and out of Summerside. That is where most of the potatoes are shipped from. That would mean a total recovery, and we are not expecting that, of $60,000 a vessel if they were to recover all of the operating costs. Even if you go down to only 15 per cent of that figure, we are still talking about $9,000. They point out very explicitly that that is enough to kill the industry, and certainly customer orders in the export market.

I do not believe the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), and other Members of Parliament not from the potato belt, really realize how thin the margin is in that industry. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is here, and he knows full well that his Government put $6 million toward subsidizing the potato industry and as a diversion program in order to get crops off the market. Our competitors have large crops and there was just no market for potatoes. Prince Edward Islanders appreciated that $6 million of aid, but I must say, as far as the diversion aspect is concerned, it was far too little and too late. Had the money been put in when it was needed, it would probably would have taken enough potatoes off the market to enable farmers to get a better price for their product.

When the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans travelled to Atlantic Canada, almost every person who presented briefs was against Bill C-75.

Mr. Skelly: Some 150 groups.

Mr. Henderson: Yes, they were totally opposed. I cannot understand why the Parliamentary Secretary says there was no one against it.

Once this legislation is enacted it will never come back to this House for review during this Government's term. The Government talks about consultation. It is easy to consult when, as my colleague from Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) said yesterday, the Minister has a loaded gun and if you do not go along with it he will pull the trigger.

Let us look at other briefs which were presented to the committee. I talked to the National Farmers' Union in Prince Edward Island. They are a representative group of producers. In their brief they in no way agree to Bill C-75, specifically Clause 4.

Mr. Forrestall: But they do not disagree with the principle of recovery of some charges. Respond to that.

Mr. Henderson: I look at another group, Women in Support of Agriculture. I will put this on the record so the Parliamentary Secretary will know the correspondence his Minister is getting. I am sure his Minister does not tell him what is going on. This is a copy of a letter to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). It says:

Re: BILL C-75 CLAUSE 4

Dear Sir: Women in Support of Agriculture express our gravest concern that you may be charging user fees on dredging, vessel traffic services, icebreaking services and escorting services.

This added cost would be very detrimental to our primary industries here on Prince Edward Island.

During the fall and winter months, many of our seed potatoes are moved by boat to offshore markets. We have worked for years to establish our seed markets and with the competitiveness of the potato industry and the low prices we have been receiving for our product, our farmers cannot afford this added cost.

We therefore urge you to delete Clause 4 from Bill C-75.

Yours truly,
Wanda MacMurdo
Provincial President
Women in Support of Agriculture

Carbon copies of that letter went to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) and the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns). If they had been listening to and expressing the concerns of Prince Edward Islanders the Conservatives would not have fared quite so badly in the provincial election. The Parliamentary Secretary must look at some of this. I do not care how many groups came forward and said they support something in principle. I can tell you that the people hurt by this legislation, the ordinary primary producer, is not supporting it in principle or in any other way.

Mr. Forrestall: Do you want free transportation in Canada? Is that what you are in favour of? No charges at all?

Mr. Henderson: The Parliamentary Secretary and his Minister and Government will find that out. The Parliamentary Secretary will not only have a hard time getting his nomination, as he did the last time in his own riding, he will have a hard time getting elected. When I point the finger at him, he is gone.

Mr. Forrestall: I am what?

Mr. Skelly: That is harsh talk.

Mr. Forrestall: Are you opposed to any cost recovery?

Mr. Henderson: The Parliamentary Secretary wants to go back home now and again, and come over to Prince Edward Island, up through New Brunswick and in the areas hurting—

Mr. Forrestall: I probably spend as much time in Prince Edward Island as you do.

Mr. Henderson: He has been sitting around the corridors of Ottawa for far too long. He is in this sort of greenhouse environment where everything is fine. When he gets out and actually hears what people are saying, then I think he will take a different view. I expect that after this little talk I have been able to give for the benefit of the Parliamentary Secretary, he will get up and support those of us in the Opposition. I know he has a heart behind that sort of—

Mr. Tobin: Cold facade.

Mr. Henderson: Yes, cold facade. He does have a heart. He would not try to do that to the good people of Prince Edward Island. He will talk to the President of the Treasury Board and his other colleagues who have influence in the Government and suggest that this clause should be deleted because it will affect them when they go back to the polls in the next election. He will warn them that not only will he not return, the Government will not be re-elected.

• (1610)

In conclusion, anyone who is involved in the primary industries in Atlantic Canada does not support Clause 4 in Bill C-75. I hope the Government listens to what the Opposition and other people are saying. While we on this side agree with much of Bill C-75, we certainly do not support Clause 4. I hope those Members on the Government side will come to their senses, delete that clause, and allow the rest of the Bill to proceed as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate. At the outset, let me make it perfectly clear that we believe the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) are not proposing these measures of their own free will. Both those individuals are very well versed in the transportation needs of this country, and we believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the top level of the Cabinet are forcing them to bring in this legislation. They are being told that they must grind this money out of Canadians.

We direct our criticism at the Government as a whole, on the basis of principle. We are opposed to the Government's principle on cost recovery. The people who live and work on the coast of British Columbia live in one of the most dangerous and expensive environments in this country.

Other Canadians benefit from the Trans-Canada Highway, for which there are no tolls. Those people who live in Bella Bella, Bella Coola and the northern ends and the west coast of Vancouver Island paid for that highway out of their tax dollars. While they shared that cost with other Canadians, they are being asked to pick up the tab for their version of the Trans-Canada Highway, the safety and search and rescue aspect at sea. They are being asked to foot the bill for marine aids to navigation and for the harbours that are really the highways and receiving ports of their communities. Those costs are being imposed on these people when the cost for other forms of transportation, such as the Trans-Canada Highway, are provided to others for nothing. It is interesting to note that the Trans-Canada Highway does not go to most areas on Vancouver Island or the coast of British Columbia. In fact, there are no highways.

This wrong-headed policy of the Government has taken effect in other areas as well. It is also incorporated in the Aeronautics Act. The Government's unique approach to user fees is punitive on certain areas of the country.

The question we are dealing with is an $800 million bill for Coast Guard services. When the Minister first appeared before the committee he said that the Government would get back 15 per cent. That means $120 million will be loaded on the backs of Canadians who live in those areas of this country where they cannot get any benefit from the major transportation system. Those people must depend on air and marine travel. The economies of their communities depend on that transportation.

I am talking about people in the fishing industry. They will be charged user fees by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in the form of higher licences. They will be charged a finnage tax on their catch. They will be charged for the use of aids in navigation. In the past, many fishermen on the West Coast have had trouble at sea. When that occurs in the future they will have to pay for the search and rescue service.

The time has come to stop this foolishness of imposing these costs in an unco-ordinated fashion. Unfortunately, the Parliamentary Secretary is leaving. I hope he will return to hear the rest of my story about how other Canadians are being affected by this legislation. Tourism is very important to this depressed area of British Columbia that has experienced enormous problems as a result of the recession. Although that area depends on tourism, the Government has done very little in this area.

The British Columbia ferry system is already a high priced ticket for the people who live in those communities. They will experience even higher rates because the Government will impose user fees. That is absolutely wrong. It will impaire the growth of the economy of those communities.

The forest industry in British Columbia is tremendously dependent on the marine transportation system. The imposition of higher costs and user fees for the marine transportation system will make it even more difficult for that industry to survive in the face of tremendous American pressure and the lack of appropriate support from the Government of Canada.

Let us make no mistake that this policy is wrong-headed. It is punitive and discriminatory and should be stopped immediately. Many Canadians live in those small out ports and smaller coastal communities. They pay an enormous price to live and work in those areas. Their food costs are extremely high and the cost for other products which they buy, if they are available, are a third to double the price of what is paid in the major centres. Yet the Government is advocating the imposition of the additional cost of user fees.

That will not severely affect the people in Toronto, Winnipeg or Montreal, but it will certainly have a massive impact in areas such as Port Hardy, Campbell River, Port Alberni, Prince Rupert and other smaller communities up and down the coast of British Columbia. It will have a massive impact on the coast of Labrador and Newfoundland and in the Atlantic Provinces. I am surprised that the Parliamentary Secretary would be so diligent in defending the Government for a policy that would have such a devastating effect in his own province.

This policy is another indication that the Government's left hand does not know what its right hand is doing. My colleague indicates that the Government only has a right hand in terms of its philosophy and approach.

It was clear from questioning in the committee that no one in the Government is keeping track of the enormous burden that these charges are placing on Canadians. The Aeronautics Act imposes charges the marine act imposes charges, and the Fisheries Act imposes charges. The Government cannot get enough of user fees.

I suggest it might be useful for an official in the Department of Transport to study the net impact of all the charges that come under the ports legislation, the Canada Shipping Act, and the charges being contemplated for small craft harbours and finnage taxes, because that has not been taken into consideration. The Government will clean out the wallets of fishermen and the people who depend on the forest industry.

Mr. Forrestall: Nonsense.

Mr. Skelly: The Parliamentary Secretary hollers "nonsense". He can make some sound comments on this, if he wishes.

Let me dispel an argument which he made in the House. The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) stated that some 150 groups appeared before the Fisheries Committee when we travelled throughout the West Coast and East Coast. A major topic of discussion was Bill C-75, to which they were absolutely opposed. They predicted that it would have an extremely negative effect on their personal livelihoods, the livelihoods of their communities and indeed on that whole sector of the industry.

I urge the Parliamentary Secretary to reconsider this Bill and take a stand against the Prime Minister and the narrow minded people in that caucus who are suggesting that we clean out the wallets of Canadians in such an unjustified fashion. This is an extremely serious matter and I thought I saw a certain recognition of the truth by the Parliamentary Secretary. It was my hope he was going to move forward and see this horrendous section of the legislation cut out so that we could all support the good aspects of the Bill. But user-pay is wrong. It is punitive and extremely discriminatory.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-75, as has been pointed out, makes some important contributions and changes for the future. However, that part of the legislation of particular concern to the Official Opposition has to do with Clause 4 which is in great need of amendment. We tried as a Party to see it properly amended in committee. Again today we are trying to persuade the Government to consider our amendments.

The reason Clause 4 is so unacceptable is that it gives sweeping powers to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) without considering what this could mean, not just for now but in the long run.

My constituency is in the centre of Toronto. Many people might wonder, since my constituency is in Toronto, why I am concerned about this Bill. Perhaps it should concern only those people on the East Coast or the West Coast. But the shipping industry around the Great Lakes is a very major part of our economy. The Great Lakes represent not only pleasure boating but a great deal of commercial boating. When one considers the importance of the shipping of wheat and ore and understands the economy of Ontario, one realizes that the port of Toronto is of vital importance to the well being of that industry. Tens of thousands of people in Ontario own boats, either commercially or for pleasure. Therefore, this Bill is of concern to them. It is of concern to the province of Ontario because we face on to Lake Superior, Lake Erie, Lake Huron and Lake Ontario. In fact, we are a province which has an unusual amount of shipping, so we have reason for concern about the arbitrary powers which are being put into the hands of the Minister of Transport. It is in effect, one might say, a kind of loaded gun.

Clause 4 states in part:

—the Governor in Council may make regulations respecting charges relating to those services—

It then goes on to talk about all kinds of services including the dredging of harbours, navigational aids, escorting, lighthouses and all kinds of matters relating to ice breaking, search and rescue, and the like. This is of concern to Ontario and it also of concern to those who are struggling to make a living on the coasts of this country.

Having served on the Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, we are appalled by this kind of legislation, this carte blanche given into the hands of the Governor General in Council and the Minister, these incredibly unlimited powers to lay on the backs of people additional taxes and charges. That is why our Party is concerned. This clause has the potential to give into the hands of the Minister unlimited and arbitrary powers without any description as to how those powers should be limited.

Anyone who sat on the Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments knows how dangerous it is to pass this kind of legislation. Unless it is amended, the Government is making a grave mistake. It is not only for this year and next, or whenever it comes into effect, it is for the years and decades to come. Legislation like this can be misused and produce a misdirected form of taxation.

The Government seems to have no memory of the promises it made to the taxpayers that it would not seek more taxation and that it would try to cut spending. All the Government has done since coming to power has been to lay burden upon burden on the backs of the taxpayer. The middle class is now the favourite target of the Government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised before the election that taxes were not going to be his way of solving economic problems. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised in 1985 that taxation was not one of the areas he would look to in trying to solve the problems of the deficit. Yet in situation after situation we find taxes laid on. There are hidden taxes and seen taxes in terms of surtaxes. The poor as well as the rich have to pay these extra hidden taxes. Now there is a user tax which is going to be given in the form of carte blanche to the Minister to apply to the shipping industry and to those who use shipping as their way of life, as if the fishermen were not already assailed by enough taxes. We have seen federal taxes put on them an additional burden by the Government which promised no more taxes, and by the provinces because the federal Government is cutting back on its transfer payments and they have no recourse but to turn to their own forms of taxation to provide health and education to their people. This Government is copping out on its promises.

Mr. Forrestall: What has that to do with Clause 4?

Mr. de Corneille: The provinces now have to add more taxes in order to provide health care because this Government is taking away in Bill C-96 the money which should be transferred to those provinces.

Mr. Forrestall: Come on.

Mr. de Corneille: The fishermen and people in the eastern regions, for example, and in the far west, have to pay municipal taxes as well. These taxes will have to go up again because moneys which should have transferred to the provinces have been withdrawn by the federal Government. We have federal taxes and income taxes, provincial income taxes, municipal taxes on property and now we have users fees. The Government is withdrawing money from the provinces with the result that they have to tax more, and now we have users fees.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are addressing a motion which would replace a provision in Clause 4. We are not dealing with municipal taxes. We are discussing a motion which is very relevant to Section 3.1 of the Canada Shipping Act. I am afraid my dear friend, the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), has decided that he would import provincial and municipal politics along with municipal taxation. We are not debating any of those things. We are talking about a mechanism which would provide one form of appeal as opposed to the form of appeal set out in the Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) on the same point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is obviously practicing the classic defence when an articulate, powerful and succinct statement is being made, and that is to interrupt. The reality is, as the Hon. Member so properly pointed out, that when the Government of Canada is cutting off the arms and limbs of Canada—

• (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Obviously, the points of order are with respect to the matter of relevance. I believe the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) made an analogy to some other point, which the Chair allows. The Chair reminds the Hon. Member that he has two minutes left in which to conclude his speech.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, the point I would like to explain to my hon. friend is that this is the heart of the matter. What is wrong with this clause is that, for the first time in the history of the country, a Minister is asking for arbitrary and undefined powers.

Mr. Tobin: A loaded gun.

Mr. de Corneille: Yes, as my colleague says, the Minister is asking for a loaded gun. He is asking for undefined powers to be able to add to the burden of taxation of what are already hard-pressed people—the fishermen of Canada. This is the group, in particular, about which I was trying to speak. As I have already pointed out, there are people in my province who will be affected by this measure. We see that the Government has slammed it to the people in the Maritimes in particular. Recently, I visited Newfoundland to speak to young people and to listen to their concerns. I saw what was going on.

Mr. Forrestall: Welcome to eastern Canada!

Mr. de Corneille: I saw what was going on in that province. As a Canadian I am concerned not only about my constituency but about that part of the country which has been adversely damaged by the Government. At the present time in the United States we are trying to work out a free trade package which will, in the meantime, allow Americans to slap additional burdens on our fishing industry. This is just the latest twist.

Why are we adding still more burdens through the arbitrary powers of the Minister of Transport to yet one more level of taxation, yet one more area upon all the others which have already been slapped on fishermen? I have reason to be concerned that the wording of the clause does not take into account these factors. User fees must be defined. There is no schedule put forward in the Bill. If Hon. Members consider the experience we have had in the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments they will see that this will allow for the passage of this measure without any type of schedule or limitation. It is simply a blank cheque to the Minister of Transport to be able to level still new user fees. Added to the other user fees which are levied on other areas of the fishing industry, this means that we might as well tell our fishermen to pack it up. We might as well say that as a Government we do not want them to function any more, that we want to let the Americans and other countries take over the fishing industry on our coasts. This is just one more burden which is being placed on to their backs.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am at pains to understand why the Government will not accept the amendments which have been put forward by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) who, I might say, is very knowledgeable on this subject. He has done a great deal of work in this area in committee.

The first motion we are debating provides for any regulation made under this clause to be referred to a committee of the House or the Senate for review on the written request of 20 Members. I would like to ask Members on the government side in particular to think about the types of concerns that so many of them had when they were in opposition. One of the matters about which they were concerned was the scrutiny of regulations. They were concerned about arbitrary powers being given to the bureaucracy. They were concerned about powers being taken away from Parliament and the fact that Parliament, either in Committee of the Whole House or in its standing commiitees, did not have the type of power that it ought to have once legislation has reached the regulatory stage. They believed that things were then beyond the reach of democracy, so to speak. I have listened to many a Conservative criticize that fact concerning our Government.

Yet what are we suggesting here? We are suggesting that the regulations made under this clause be subject to some type of recall, some type of mechanism for having the matter brought before a committee built right into the Bill.

Mr. Forrestall: Why would you want the committee to have that power?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall) would start acting like a Parliamentary Secretary instead of acting like some sort of second-rate heckler who cannot keep his mouth shut while other people are participating in debate.

Mr. Forrestall: You don't know what you're talking about!

Mr. Tobin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), who has just taken his seat, is in the process of making one of the finest speeches the House has heard on as important a matter as is Clause 4 of this Bill. The deliberate tactic of the Parliamentary Secretary to interrupt this type of persuasive argument when I think Members opposite are changing their minds with regard to this Bill is, indeed, unhelpful, unkind and not very polite. Would Your Honour ask him to control himself?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask all Members to listen carefully to the speech of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Forrestall: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I apologize to the distinguished Maritimer from Winnipeg—Birds Hill. I wish to remind my colleagues that we are dealing with a motion which, in effect, will replace the right of direct appeal through an established process.

Mr. Tobin: That is debate!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. Unfortunately, he is raising a matter for debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill has the floor on debate.

Mr. Blaikie: The Parliamentary Secretary had his opportunity to say why he did not think this was a good amendment. He has made his argument. We did not heckle him while he was making his argument. We would like to make our arguments. I make no apologies for being able to comment on matters of process with respect to the relationship between legislation, regulation and standing committees of the House just because I do not come from the Maritimes. If there is anything more sickeningly parochial than the type of attitude that the Parliamentary Secretary has taken, I cannot imagine it.

Mr. Forrestall: Why comment on my parochialism? You are contradicting yourself.

Mr. Blaikie: Many members of the Conservative Party while in opposition expressed a concern about ministerial power. They expressed a concern about power which was beyond the reach of the House of Commons. Yet in this Bill we have power being given to the Minister. I contend that had this Bill been a Liberal one, members of the Conservative Party would rise and talk about unwarranted ministerial power. Thus I ask members of the governing Party, who are capable of reflection, unlike the Parliamentary Secretary, to reflect on this matter.

The second point is that Motion No. 6, which provides for an automatic review of Clause 4 by the Transport Committee every two years, is analogous to what Conservatives have called for in other areas. It is called a sunset regulation. Once something is established it does not continue forever.

Mr. Forrestall: You don't care for reform?

Mr. Blaikie: There is some opportunity for automatic review. This is something which should at least have been considered by the Government, since it is in keeping with the type of review mechanisms which it advocated while members of the Conservative Party sat in opposition.

With respect to the question of authority and authority which goes beyond the scope of Parliament, I am reminded of the old days when we used to hear Conservatives talk about the dictatorial nature of the Liberals concerning the passage of Orders in Council.

Mr. Tobin: That's right!

Mr. Blaikie: When the Liberals dealt with issues by Order in Council members of the Conservative Party said that this was evidence of a conspiracy of tyranny to deprive Canadians of their democratic rights. Whatever Your Honour may have thought of those arguments, the Conservatives were obviously not taking their own arguments seriously. I recently read that since they have been in Government they have put through just as many Orders in Council. In fact, they have put through even more within a given timeframe, if I remember the article correctly. So before us we see just another example of how insincere were a great many of the criticisms offered by the Conservatives while in opposition.

In the designing of this legislation, by accepting, in this case NDP amendments, they had the opportunity to build in more scrutiny of regulations, to build in more checks on ministerial power and to build in more automatic review of certain laws. They have not done that. They have refused to do that against the wishes of so many people involved in the sector with which this legislation deals.

I have 10 or 12 pages filled with quotes from various groups that have indicated concern about Clause 4. I do not have the time to read them all into the record. The organizations that have indicated concern about Clause 4 include the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association, the St. Lawrence Shipowners Association, Seafarers' International Union, Algoma Steel, Stelco, Dofasco, Canadian Harbour Commission Ports, the Interntional Association of Great Lakes Ports, the Dominion Marine Association, the Port of Indiana, the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, the Montreal Board of Trade, the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, the Canadian Shippers' Council, the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, the Canadian Amateur Rowing Association, the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, the Prince Edward Island Potato Marketing Board, the Great Lakes Commission, the Economic Development Corporation of the St. Lawrence, the National Farmers' Union, and the Minister of Transportation and Highways of the Province of Manitoba. The list goes on and on and even includes the Council of B.C. Yacht Clubs and the Labrador Inuit Association.

I do not normally quote yacht clubs, but my intent is to point out that there is a vast coalition of people of various descriptions who are concerned about the effect of Clause 4. It would seem to me to be in the best interests of the Government to respond to their concerns. The Government can do that by accepting the amendments proposed by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with great interest and attention to the debate on Bill C-75. The members of my Party led by a number of my colleagues have certainly articulated at committee stage and during second reading our concerns about Clause 4.

Clause 4 gives the Minister the ability to impose user fees with respect to the Canadian Coast Guard services. Not only is the very issue repugnant and sets a very dangerous precedent indicating where the Government wishes to go, but the way in which it is being done is equally repugnant. The substance of what Clause 4 imposes is wrong and the process leading up to that determination was equally wrong.

When talking about the process, I am talking about the lack of consultation that has taken place between the Government and the various interest groups affected by Bill C-75. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Government Members have risen repeatedly to talk about a Government for the people by the people. In legislation after legislation, we have seen evidence that that is simply rhetoric. It is simply a public relations façade that is not to be found in the legislation that this national forum discusses day in and day out.

Once again, we are discussing a piece of legislation which purports to help the people affected by the Shipping Act, but what do we see? Group after group has come before us to say: "For God's sake, please do something about Clause 4". We in this Party moved amendments to lift Clause 4 because it is harmful to the communities that this Bill purports to help.

This Bill affects not only the recreational boaters but also the shipping industry which is in very serious trouble. Members of Parliament who represent shipping communities have, during Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21 and Question Period, tried to bring some sense of the importance of enhancing our shipping industry to the attention of the Cabinet. The Government has the audacity to put Clause 4 in the legislation, a clause that would give the Minister the power to charge user fees to these very constituencies.

Shipping concerns in this country calculate their shipping tonnages in cents, not dollars, and this would tend to communicate to us that their cost benefit analyses are so close that they are calculating pennies. Here the Government has an $8-million envelope the costs of which it is thinking of passing on to those shipping firms.

Mr. Tobin: Whether they get the services or not.

Mr. Marchi: Whether they get the services or not, they make their calculations on the basis of pennies. They are coming to their Members of Parliament to say that their industry is in a crisis.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If my distinguished colleague had bothered to read the Bill, he would have known that charges will not be imposed upon those users for whom the services are not normally available. I think he has some responsibility to the Bill to stay somewhat in order and to be aware of that of which he is speaking.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order, it is a matter for debate.

Mr. Marchi: Not only is it not a point of honour—of order, rather, because there is no honour—

Mr. Forrestall: It is a point of honour.

Mr. Marchi: The Hon. Member has been here longer than I have so I am somewhat surprised at him. Second, we have not yet seen a schedule of fees. If the Hon. Member has a schedule of fees, I would ask him to have the courage and conviction to table it and ask us to discuss it. Before he does that, I do not think he should rise, something which he is about to do once again.

Mr. Forrestall: Would you please give him even a cursory briefing as to what this is all about, Brian?

Mr. Marchi: I would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that the Hon. Member has made suggestions before about the responsibilities of Hon. Members from Toronto and from the Province of Ontario to rise to speak on this issue. It behooves the Hon. Member to make those suggestions because in addition to representing the constituents we were elected to represent, it is an obligation for every Member of the House to rise to make contributions.

In this particular instance, we are talking about the definition of Canada. While this Bill will affect those in and around Toronto and the Province of Ontario, and particularly recreational boaters, we are really talking about the perverse Conservative definition of regional development. This Bill more than any other will affect the smaller communities of this country, particularly the East and West Coast communities that rely day in and day out on fishing and other commercial activities for a livelihood.

It is fine to say that this Bill will affect weekend boaters but this Bill will really hurt those individual communities that are already hard pressed to survive under the Conservative Government. Representatives of those very communities expect people like the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary and his colleagues to rise in their places and make representations that will defend their constituents rather than simply defend the indefensible legislation put forward by the Government. That is why we on this side of the House have no embarrassment and make no apology for once again pleading with the Government to hear the cries of our hinterlands.

• (1650)

We plead with Government Members to place this clause in abeyance until they have had a chance to speak to the groups who have been calling us, writing us, and saying that the Government is moving in the wrong direction. If we in the House are prepared to introduce legislation to amend the Canada Shipping Act to improve the lot of various constituencies, they should at least have the courage and respect to listen to the interest groups they are purporting to help.

This Bill is analagous to other pieces of legislation which we have seen, such as Bill C-62. The Government is claiming that it is doing something about employment equity for four target groups—natives, disabled persons, women, and visible minorities. However, each of those target groups has appeared before the committee and has said: "We would rather have nothing at all than have Bill C-62". Why should legislation be introduced which is purported to be advancing the causes of those four target groups when those groups are saying that it is simply a sham? Here again we have the same philosophy.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I draw to your attention the fact that we are debating Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act, not Bill C-62 which in fact has been passed into law. I ask the Hon. Member to make sure that his remarks remain relevant.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on that point of order. If the Hon. Member who just rose had paid attention to the debate and had followed the history of the Bill, he would know that my colleague is speaking on Bill C-75 for the second time. He would also know that my colleague is very much interested in it and has been very well briefed. Bill C-62 is not on our minds in the slightest. The Hon. Member has raised a nefarious and time-wasting point of order in the middle of my colleague's contribution to the debate on this nonsensical, cruel, harsh, and inhumane piece of legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could we please return to debate.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member did not listen to my point of order. I referred to the need for relevancy in this debate. We are dealing with Bill C-75, not with the employment equity Act which has now been passed into law. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that the Hon. Member maintains relevance in this debate and directs his remarks strictly to Bill C-75.

Mr. Nunziata: On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) seeking the floor on the same point of order? If it is just the matter of relevancy, could we please give the floor to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi)?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, on a separate point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am trying to get rid of the point of order dealing with relevance. The Hon. Member is seeking the floor on a separate point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) is not sitting in his seat. It is my understanding that he sits to our right, and he is sitting to our far left now. Could I have some direction from the Chair on whether his permanent place in the House has been moved to the left?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not know if the Hon. Member has moved to the left, but in fact there have been changes in the seating arrangements on the government side. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) is in fact sitting in his correct seat. We will return to debate with the Hon. Member for York West.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Because I believe that the Government is trying to talk out this Bill and is trying to waste the time of the House, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to rule more quickly on nefarious points of order, not allow Hon. Members to carry on and on with nefarious points of order and waste the time of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West on debate, with two minutes remaining.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I hope the non-point of order raised by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) will not be deducted from my time. It is obvious from the tenor of the reaction which we solicit on the Government side that we are lifting a very sensitive nerve. It was correct that I raised Bill C-62 in connection with this Bill. It was perfectly in order because it depicted very clearly the malaise which has beset the Government and will certainly be eradicated in the next election. There is a difference between what it purports to do and what the legislation will actually do. Government Members cannot sit on both sides of the fence. They cannot simply say that they are in favour of helping fishing communities in this case and then live with Bill C-75 and its Clause 4.

Mr. Forrestall: Sit down.

Mr. Marchi: That clause imposes user fees for safety, navigation and ice-breaking.

Mr. Forrestall: You are filibustering.

Mr. Marchi: If the Parliamentary Secretary wishes to add his two cents to this debate, let him have the courage to stand on his feet. Let him have the conviction to rise in his place where careers are made and broken. Let him defend those communities of which he is a part rather than defend the indefensible—his Minister. He should not act in the same way as other Parliamentary Secretaries or lackeys who rise in their places and support something which they know is incorrect and wrong. If he has a genuine interest in the communities which will be directly affected, if he is interested in the representations the organizations are making and will continue to make, he should follow his conscience and his gut feelings by rising in his place and using any suasion he may have with the Minister in an attempt to bring some sensitivity, fairness and justice into the matter.

The clauses in Bill C-75—and we are flagging Clause No. 4—are insensitive and play into the hands of departmental officials rather than admit what the country is about. The country is about more than Ontario and Quebec. It is about regions and communities in our hinterlands. It is about regional development. It is about trying to make everyone an equal partner in the country regardless of where a region is situated. Bill C-75 ignores our regional history, and Atlantic Canada will not forget.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the amendments to Clause 4 of Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other Acts in relation thereto.

I suppose one could ask why we in the New Democratic Party are concerned about Bill C-75. Motions Nos. 5, 6 and 11, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), are an attempt to put some sense and some stability into a particular clause. Much of the Act is worth while; it is a needed Act. However, Clause 4 is anything but needed and the three motions attempt to improve it.

Perhaps one would wonder how an Hon. Member from the Prairies would have an interest in a Bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act. As far as we are concerned, it is an important Act. As the Port of Halifax increases the charges it has to levy against goods going through that port, those levies are transferred sometimes twofold or threefold to farmers, manufacturers, or producers in Saskatchewan and on the Prairies.

I should like to refer to the kinds of concerns which were expressed during the fairly long and drawn out committee stage of this particular Bill. I will refer to the concerns of groups such as the National Farmers Union which indicated very specifically that it was against Clause 4, as it is presently before us, and that it required certain changes. Let me quote:

> In its preoccupation to trim the federal deficit, the Government is in effect telling farmers through this Bill that the national interest can best be served by still further increasing farm costs at a time when farmers are in very serious financial straits.

• (1700)

Somewhat over two weeks ago the initial price for grain was announced in this House. The initial price for grain is established on the basis of the projected world price for the coming year. That price dropped by a considerable amount, which has put the western farmer and the Ontario farmer, who produces wheat or grain, in a very precarious position.

What this Bill suggests in this particular clause is an increase again of still further costs on freight, particularly on the cost of movement through the St. Lawrence Seaway. If the cost of moving freight is increased it means the price the farmer receives for wheat will be further pushed down.

The National Farmers' Union goes on to say:

> We regard the St. Lawrence Seaway as a national asset that should be maintained in the national interest. It does not make good economic sense to raise rates in the face of declining demand.
> There is no question an additional charge in any way placed on transportation at this time will in fact mean disaster to more producers. It will mean producers going broke.

As I have indicated before, by the time a user-pay philosophy is established in the ports or in any part of the freight system, these user pay costs will be transferred to the producer in the resource area. Sometimes costs are added on twofold or threefold to the costs of the local producer in Saskatchewan.

In addition to those who appeared as witnesses before the committee, there were many others who felt it was important that something be done about Clause 4. Letters were written indicating that people did not believe that Clause 4 should be left as it is. For instance, the Minister of Highways and Transportation in the Province of Saskatchewan, a good Conservative Government in Saskatchewan which is looking after the welfare of the farmers said:

> Any increase in costs to users of the Great Lakes/St. Lawrence Seaway system will result in producers looking for transport services which are cheaper. As a result, some traffic may be diverted to the U.S. transportation system causing loss of Canadian jobs.
> I have recently written to the Hon. Don Mazankowski—and advised him that the imposition of charges to defray the costs of the Coast Guard are ill-advised—

The user pay concept in this Bill will have a devastating effect, not necessarily on the area where the charges are actually made but on the economic development and survival of other parts of Canada. It seems that the Government is less concerned than it should be about those areas that are farther away from the market. Instead of increasing the cost of transporting products from outside areas, such as Saskatchewan or the North, to the market, costs of freight should be decreased so that products are more competitive in the world markets. Transportation is key to our country. User pay has the effect of making remote areas more remote. Farmers will produce fewer products to be shipped. When you are getting very close to the line in a cash flow position, a small increase is sometimes the straw that breaks the camel's back.

The Western Regional Advisory Council, Alberta Economic Development, also wrote to the committee saying:

> The introduction of any regulation which will create an additional cost to the port and port users must not militate against the use of Canadian Ports. We are most concerned that Clause 4 of the act which deals with cost recovery will impact negatively on Canada's international competitive position, by forcing business away.

This is the Western Regional Advisory Council from Alberta making a plea to the Government not to put a user pay status on the ports and seaways because if it does it will force people who use the seaways to look for other routes. The Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association made the same kind of plea as follows:

> We do not feel commercial grain traffic should bear the burden of services provided for the public at large, such as defence, search and rescue, and research.
> We warn that excessive Seaway charges may result in cargo diversion in both Canada, and in the United States, placing an even heavier burden on remaining captive users.

That point came up quite often on the Prairies. A great number of farmers in Saskatchewan are beginning to look at the Missouri and Mississippi Seaway as a route to ship their grain. A lot of Duluth, Montana farmers are suggesting that rather than send their grain through the Seaway they should send it down the Mississippi and ship it out through New Orleans because that route will be cheaper. These added costs to the operation of the Seaway may force that kind of an action.

The Manitoba Pulse Growers Association Inc. suggested:

> Since the Government has expressed a desire to increase exports by this nation, it appears contradictory to that desire to increase freight costs for the exporters.
> Increased freight costs on the St. Lawrence will see more U.S. grain being directed down the Mississippi, with the predictable results being lower over-all St. Lawrence freight handle and even higher part-time costs to Canadian producers.

It is important that Canadian seaways, particularly the St. Lawrence Seaway, be used to the maximum. The more people we can get to use it, the lower the costs will be. But we have a situation where the Government is putting in a user-pay philosophy which will increase freight costs and force the users to look for alternative cheaper routes, such as using trucks or sending their goods to the West Coast or down the Mississippi.

I recommend that the Government support at least these minor changes in Clause 4 so that we will have some control over the possibility of increased freight on the Seaway if the Minister uses the powers he is given in this clause.

• (1710)

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make submissions with respect to Bill C-75. Bill C-75 has 111 pages and is a rather extensive piece of legislation. When it was referred to the legislative committee, the preoccupation of the committee was Clause 4. In fact, I am advised that the bulk of the discussion in the legislative committee dealt with that clause and its controversial nature. For the record, Clause 4, subsection 3.1 (1) reads:

> For the purpose of defraying the cost of services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard, the Governor in Council may make regulations respecting charges relating to those services, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, aids to navigation, sounding and dredging, vessel traffic services, icebreaking services and marine aid.

That means that the Government of Canada now intends to impose a user fee system with respect to the services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard. Until today the operational costs involved in providing all the necessary services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard have been borne by the taxpayers of Canada generally. The Government now intends to introduce a system whereby those who own boats in Canada will pay for the cost of the Canadian Coast Guard.

The Liberal Opposition has objected on a number of grounds and I would like to reiterate those objections. However, before doing so, I would like to take a moment to analyse why the Conservative Government is changing the system which is now in place. We need not analyse it too deeply to understand the philosophy behind this particular amendment to the Canada Shipping Act. Given the record of the Conservative Government over the last 20 months, we know that it is paranoid about the federal deficit. It is equally obvious that the Conservative Government is prepared to do anything to reduce that deficit.

During the last 20 months we found that the Government of Canada was prepared to reduce the deficit on the backs of the disadvantaged in society. In one case the Government attempted to deindex the pensions of senior citizens in the name of deficit reduction. There have been numerous other examples of the Government of Canada targeting specific groups in society to participate in deficit reduction. The Government of Canada is now targeting the ship and vessel owners in Canada to help reduce the deficit.

In the last fiscal year the cost of the Canadian Coast Guard was approximately $825 million. The Government now wants the authority to defray the cost of administering the Canadian Coast Guard services. It would like the opportunity to charge ship owners a particular fee. It is, as well, asking for the authority to charge recreational boat owners a user fee. Anyone paddling a canoe down the Humber River or the Don River in Toronto, or on Lake Ontario would be subject to a charge if the Government is given the authority which it seeks through Clause 4. That is quite clear from the legislation.

We ask whether that is appropriate and fair. Do Canadians agree in principle with the concept of user pay? It is my submission that Canadians do not support the principle of user pay in a general sense. If one were to extend that principle, only motorists would pay the costs of road repair.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I address myself to the question of relevancy. It is the tradition, under the new parliamentary rules, to insist on some degree of relevancy at report stage. I do not ask the Hon. Member to apologize for his inability to inform himself with respect to the content of the amendment before us, but I do ask you, who are aware, to insist on some reasonable degree of relevancy.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on that point of order. I would like to apologize for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, Mr. Speaker, because he has risen to interrupt the debate and to interrupt Members of the House. I would ask you to impose some sort of discipline upon the Member, who is not raising a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no need to hear from the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on a point of order. I will recognize the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) on the point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in my submission I was attempting to assess the philosophy behind Clause 4 of Bill C-75. This is extremely important in order to understand the motivation behind the Government's intention to implement a user-pay system for the owners of vessels and ships using the waters in Canada.

Mr. Forrestall: We are talking about the amendment. Address yourself to the amendment.

Mr. Nunziata: The Parliamentary Secretary does not appear to have the common courtesy to listen to other Members of Parliament who are attempting to make submissions. He will be given the opportunity to stand up and try to defend this piece of legislation. I would ask him to extend the courtesy to other Members in the House of listening and sobering up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I invite the Hon. Member to withdraw that remark.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I also ask the Hon. Member to withdraw his last words.

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, I will withdraw the reference I made. It is regrettable that the Member provoked me into making that comment, but I will withdraw it. I ask that the Member withdraw his continual interruptions with points of order which, in effect, are not points of order.

As I was saying, one should question the philosophy behind this particular amendment with regard to user pay. If that philosophy were extended throughout the Government in general, various sectors of society would be asked to pay for the services which are provided for the exclusive use of that sector of society. It is tantamount to asking motorists to pay for all costs associated with the construction and maintenance of roadways. It is tantamount to requiring senior citizens alone to pay for the cost of services for them. It is tantamount to making young people solely responsible for the cost of education. That is not the basis of our society today. We have developed to the point where it is recognized that taxpayers in general should pay for certain important services which affect the national interest. I submit that the Canadian Coast Guard serves the national interest. It is there to provide a certain level of safety to the boating public.

• (1720)

You have indicated that I have a few minutes to go, Mr. Speaker, so I would like to make one or two other points with respect to Clause 4. I would like to ask the Government rhetorically whether it considered the economic impact of Clause 4. It would appear from the committee minutes and the language used in the drafting of the legislation that it has not. I am speaking specifically of communities in Atlantic Canada, British Columbia and elsewhere which rely very heavily on the Canadian Coast Guard. It appears that the Government has not considered the impact on these communities of being forced to bear the cost of the Canadian Coast Guard which is currently some $824 million annually. I ask that the Government reconsider the disservice this clause will do to those communities.

An amendment has been suggested by the NDP. The Liberal Party in general opposes the philosophy and principle of user fees.

Mr. Althouse: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Tell that to Otto Lang.

Mr. Nunziata: The amendment put forward by the NDP would require that the effect of Clause 4 be reviewed every two years. We, of course, would prefer the clause not to exist at all, and the status quo maintained concerning the Canadian Coast Guard. However, if the Government recognizes the wisdom of this amendment, it will reduce the harsh effect of Clause 4 and give parliamentarians the opportunity to assess that harmful effect. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this amendment.

Mr. Forrestall: You can review it regularly in the standing committee right now.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly regarding this amendment to Clause 4. I think it is totally unnecessary. With the implementation of parliamentary reform and the setting up of legislative committees, I thought each Member had the opportunity to express his or her views on a given Bill and its amendments. That is certainly true in this case. Government and opposition Members voiced their concerns about Clause 4. The reason we did so is the uncertainty over what Clause 4 will mean concerning charges applied to ship owners and shipping companies. However, when he appeared before the committee, the Minister agreed that no charges would be imposed for at least a year, and that public notice of any charges to be imposed would be given 90 days prior to their taking effect. In that way, those people opposed to the charges would have an opportunity to voice their concerns.

This motion would have no serious effect on the Department. The Standing Committee on Transport can now review this matter at any time during normal program review or on the special request of some of its members. Therefore, I do not see the point in this amendment at all. I do not believe there is any serious objection to a review by the standing committee two years after the Bill comes into effect. However, a routine review every two years thereafter is completely unnecessary. The committee could review the Coast Guard cost recovery program whenever it deemed it prudent to do so. If this amendment is adopted, it would in fact remove the legislative requirement to re-publish regulations revising charges under this clause of the Bill.

I believe the Hon. Member who introduced this amendment did so in order to have a forum from which to attack the Government on other issues. Most of the debate I have heard today on this issue is not so much on the proposed amendment but on Clause 4 itself. Everyone in the legislative committee had an opportunity to express his or her views on Clause 4. I thought the legislative committee did a very good job in getting various changes agreed to during the clause by clause study. While it is perhaps not perfect, it is a heck of a lot better than what we have had for a good many years. It has been a long, long time coming.

Having been involved in shipping all my life prior to coming to this Chamber in 1984, I am quite aware of what the Canada Shipping Act means. I certainly have sympathy for the people who have to pay for services, but it is my understanding, and I stand to be corrected, that charges will not apply to vessels which do not use the services of icebreakers. If memory serves me correctly, that is already in the Bill as it stands. Like other Members I would certainly like to see the charges set out in the Bill, but if the Minister is not prepared to do that at this time, then I am sure that the ship owners and shipping companies are quite capable, given the 90-day notice they will receive, of preparing something to give some guidance to the Minister and his staff as to what exactly the charges should be.

Mr. Tobin: It is a terrible Bill.

Mr. Johnson: I am sure the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) is saying that in jest. He knows that it is long overdue. He is simply envious of the Progressive Conservative Government because it had the initiative to bring the long needed amendments to the Canada Shipping Act in place.

• (1730)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the series of motions that have been grouped for debate on Bill C-75. Motion Nos. 4, 6 and 11 deal with Clause 4 of the Bill which has been particularly controversial. Many of the witnesses who appeared before the committee asked that that clause be deleted from the Bill.

Members of the committee were ruled out of order when they attempted to delete that clause from the Bill. Consequently, the motion which most of the witnesses preferred cannot be introduced again in the House, having already been tested in the committee.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), is left with no choice but to attempt to amend what is essentially a bad piece of legislation in order to make it as palatable as possible. My colleague's motion attempts to give more parliamentary oversight to the imposition of fees for a variety of shipping services. One of the motions calls for the referral of the matter to a committee upon the written recommendation of 20 Members of the House. The second motion provides for an automatic review before the Transport Committee every two years so that the affected parties who are being charged these rates could presumably appear before the committee to give their opinion on the policy behind the rates.

Motion No. 11 would require that Clause 4 of the Shipping Act not come into effect until January 1, 1988. This is in keeping with the representations made by a wide variety of individuals who appeared before that legislative committee, asking that proper time be given. While their arguments varied, essentially they were saying that they are not certain there has been proper consideration given to the impact of this policy on various ports. For example, some ports would have higher charges due to the requirements of dredging, pilotage services, ice-breaking services and so on. Other ports might be deeper or be situated in warm water areas.

Previous to the 1960s, Canada had a transportation policy which looked upon transportation as one of the vital services required by all Canadians. When we considered the vast expanse of this country, we realized that the great distances involved meant that we must use some seaports and waterways that might not be competitive on a world-wide basis but would provide services for the people who live in those parts of Canada. Consequently, the Port of Churchill remains open. It is an Arctic port that needs much dredging because the shipping that is available today draws more water than ships which sailed there 20 years ago. While it was felt that the port was very competitive—

Mr. Forrestall: What does that have to do with the amendment?

Mr. Althouse: —20 years ago, it is having difficulty remaining competitive now. I remind the Hon. Member from Halifax, who keeps saying that we are not relevant, that these amendments give those ports an opportunity to be heard every two years and allows them two years to prepare their case. It would give future Members in the House of Commons an opportunity to appeal the actions of the Department on behalf of those ports.

The philosophy which regarded transportation as an essential service to all Canadians has been abandoned by the present Government and the previous Liberal Government and replaced by an attempt to invoke user pay. Such a measure will put ports like Churchill at a disadvantage. Consequently, a vast region of the country will find it even more expensive to obtain services and shipping because of the additional charges levied directly on the users of that port, for the dredging and the use of ice-breakers which accompany the shipping into Churchill during its shipping season, as short as it is. Such charges make it very difficult to maintain equal services to Canadians, regardless of where they live.

Sometimes I think the older policy makers in this country had a greater understanding of what makes society and economic activity work well than some of the new intelligencia who are coming out of our schools of management at the present time.

Let me illustrate the kind of problem that arises by telling a true story about a person from my riding. He attended agricultural college and specialized in farm management and efficiency. His older sister, who preceded him in university, had been a plant scientist and in fact was a plant reader for the Department of Agriculture in Ottawa until her retirement approximately a year ago.

During her time on the farm she and her father had established a small orchard. When the younger brother finished his education he immediately began to apply all his management techniques that he learned in college. He got rid of the remaining horses and horse equipment. He mechanized everything with state of the art equipment. He checked his books, his figures and production costs and pared everything to the bone. At the end of the year, when he had finished his harvest, he found that he had produced more grain, at lower cost, than had ever been the case before on that farm.

One wet afternoon, he was taking stock of the rest of the farm. He noted that only 11 of the plum trees in the orchard had borne fruit. One did not have any fruit. He immediately utilized his extensive knowledge from the school of economics and ripped out that one plum tree. Thereafter, he had no more plums because he had pulled out the male tree.

I think the planners in the Department of Transport and some of the policy makers in the previous Liberal Government and this Government are doing the same thing by looking at the bottom line and trying to instigate a user-pay philosophy. They are missing the whole point of why we have a transportation system. That is why we are attempting to have recourse to Parliament where the whole intention and feelings of the people of Canada can be heard, so that 20 parliamentarians can intervene if the rates at Churchill or the rates through the Seaway—which is also a very real possibility—become too high for people to use these waterways. We have a lot of wheat and iron ore going through the Seaway. That traffic has been tapering off because of economic conditions and demands. Now is not the time to impose another 50 cents per tonne in charges against those commodities shipped through the Seaway. Now is the time to realize that transportation is a necessary function for all Canadians, and that is why we think we should receive support for these motions before us.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-75 this afternoon. I am somewhat familiar with this measure because I sat on the legislative committee to which it was referred. As a Member of the committee I was privileged to listen to a number of very interesting briefs presented by groups of people who are going to be affected by this Bill. In a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no doubt that some of the proposed changes are long overdue, and time has come for Canada to overhaul the Canada Shipping Act which ensures navigation safety, safeguards human lives offshore, and protects marine wildlife in Canadian waters and fishing zones.

A number of these changes are urgently needed, such as allowing Canada to deal more readily with cases of marine pollution, to improve shipping safety and to adopt a number of important international maritime conventions. I can agree with this part of the Bill, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot agree with Clause 4, which is aimed at giving the Government, and more specifically the Minister, the authority to impose charges for a number of services. I certainly do not agree with letting the Minister impose charges on navigation aids, sounding, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice breaking services and marine aid.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to listen to several submissions, and the Parliamentary Secretary was saying earlier that most of these submissions agreed with the principle of service charges, of user fees. Now I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to name a single intervenor who agreed with the way the Government intends to impose these charges. I do not think there was a single group, Mr. Speaker, that agreed with the procedure. There were a number of comments regarding the other clauses, and it seems there had even been some consultations with these groups, but none of the groups had been consulted about the changes being proposed in Clause 4, and that is where the groups objected to giving the Minister authority to impose user fees. Mr. Speaker, after listening to all these submissions, some Hon. Members, if we are to believe the articles we saw in the press, agreed and felt that Clause 4 should not be implemented as proposed, and with your permission, I will read a short article:

• (1740)

[English]

"Service charge plan likely to be dropped."

[Translation]

This was from Halifax.

[English]

"'The federal Government probably will change its mind and not start charging people for Coast Guard services such as ice breaking, tows, rescues and dredging', Mike Forrestall, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, said yesterday. The cost recovery plan has evoked steady criticism."

[Translation]

Today, Mr. Speaker, I see the Parliamentary Secretary has changed his mind, since he now supports Clause 4. I realized recently that Government Members could change their minds without being too worried about the consequences, and this clause proves it.

Mr. Speaker, we are talking about Clause 4 and service charges. Neither the Minister nor anyone on the Government side has been able to tell us how much these charges would be and how they would be implemented. The groups appearing before the Committee asked us: How are you going to collect this money and how much will the charges be?

Some representatives, some of the people who made submissions told us that the marine shipping industry was very competitive. They were talking about cents, not dollars per ton, which could make all the difference in whether or not you obtained a shipping contract. The competition is so fierce they were talking about cents per ton.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to present some of the arguments we heard from these groups. These are in fact the reasons why I support the amendments proposed by my colleague from Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus). If these changes were adopted, we would at least be informed of any change in the regulations. We would also have the assurance that Clause 4 would not become effective until January 1988. Even though the Minister has said he will not put it into effect before January 1988, it would be a good thing to have the Bill say so.

Now as I was saying, I want to inform the House of some comments we heard from groups that appeared before our Committee. I can mention the Fédération des pilotes du Saint-Laurent et des Grands Lacs who said in their brief: We submit that before adopting Clause 4, a thorough impact study be made of this user fee cost recovery plan.

The National Farmers' Union also submitted a substantial brief concerning Clause 4 and its possible impact on farmers, and I quote:

[English]

Farmers face in Section 4 a proposal for further indirect taxation of their income. Section 4 will only further impoverish farmers and it should be removed from the Bill in its entirety. It is ill-timed and unjustified if measured against the weak farm income position currently evident in Canada.

• (1750)

The P.E.I. potato industry which is now in a very difficult economic position said in its submission that it is vigorously opposed to the introduction of charges relating to navigational services.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, you are saying I have just one minute left to speak, and I have yet to deal with the impact the implementation of Clause 4 will have on Atlantic fishermen. However, I am sure I will have another opportunity to criticize this Clause, especially as it affects the Atlantic region.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I want to say that Clause 4 will have a devastating effect on the Atlantic region.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to take part again in this debate. I know that my friend, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), is anxious to hear me again.

I have listened to the debate with care this afternoon. I found it most interesting, amusing and ironic.

An Hon. Member: And irrelevant!

Mr. Benjamin: I cannot understand why Government Members do not have the courtesy to blush.

I have sat in the House since 1968. There was no mention made which I can recall from 1968 until 1974 of the concept of user pay. Following the 1974 election, the Liberals returned to power with a majority. The ink was hardly dry on the ballots when the former Minister of Transport, from the riding formerly known as Saskatoon—Humboldt, the Hon. Otto Lang, of late repute, and some repute, made speeches in 1974 and 1975 saying such things as: "It's time for the Crow's Nest Pass rate to be reviewed". I doubt that after its review the Government planned to reduce it. He also said it was time to start implementing the concept of user pay. That became the policy of the Government of the day and it continued right through until this day. User charges imposed by previous Liberal administrations were not cancelled in the short life of the Conservative Government in 1979. However, from 1974 on Conservative Members of Parliament who still sit in the House—

Mr. Forrestall: This is obviously your speech on third reading.

Mr. Benjamin: —including the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), ranted, raved and railed against the terrible Liberals and that terrible Minister of Transport who imposed user pay.

I am glad to see that members of the Liberal Party have come around to some type of deathbed repentance. They now agree that they were wrong. They admit that. They have changed their minds and are now opposed to user pay. However, I have noticed that this feeling is expressed mostly by Liberals who were not here between the years 1974 and 1979. It is younger members of the Party who sit on the back benches who have seen the errors of the ways of their own Party.

I listened to Conservatives condemning Liberals on the subject of user pay. I have now listened to Liberals condemning Conservatives on the subject of user pay. Yet neither side has the courtesy to blush.

I am glad that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is here. I am sure that he is the main culprit in this whole operation because of his desperation for more money. He has a majority in Cabinet which will shoot down the Minister of Transport, who I do not think is particularly happy with user pay. In any case, there is little problem with user pay if it is only a modest cost recovery that is collected. However, when we get into the area of one-half, three-quarters and full cost recovery, user pay is self-defeating. I say this because the Bill allows the Minister to charge up to 100 per cent of cost recovery. The Bill allows him to do this at his discretion. This makes the President of the Treasury Board happy; but it does not make grain farmers, fishermen, shippers of iron ore or the Seaway Authority very happy. It does not make 12 U.S. Senators very happy. It is interesting that members of the Conservative Party are helping kill themselves with respect to the free trade negotiations. How dumb can they get?

Mr. de Cotret: You must know.

Mr. Benjamin: It will be self-defeating when shippers and receivers quit using the St. Lawrence Seaway. It will be cheaper to ship grain through New Orleans.

Mr. Crosby: This is all being recorded, you know.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, I hope so.

Members of the Government accepted some amendments to the Bill in the legislative committee. That was big of them. This means that, for example, the Government has agreed that there will be no cost recovery for ice-breaking on the West Coast. I do not know why Hawaii and Fiji were not included as well. The folks on the St. Lawrence Seaway, those on the East Coast and those up North will have to pay the cost of ice-breaking. Therefore, if one follows the logic of the Government, we will have to charge those on the West Coast for the use of their warm water. I really do not think that move is imaginative or logical. It was big-hearted of the Government to say that it will not charge for ice-breaking on the West Coast. That is fantastic. I wonder how much was paid to a consultant to dream up that idea.

The move is self-defeating. I mentioned this at a conference on risk management and handling of dangerous goods at the University of Waterloo yesterday. There were some people out there who were talking about user pay. In terms of risk management, to be logical and to take this concept to the proper conclusion, when someone calls the police department to stop a bank robbery then the police department should send a bill to the bank for the cost of recovery of the policeman's time, the patrol cars, the stopping of all the traffic and all the other costs involved. Alternatively, if someone's house is on fire and he happens to call the fire department, then the fire department should bill him for the cost of putting out the fire. The fire department can also bill the neighbours surrounding the home which was on fire for a portion of the costs, since putting out fires will prevent them from spreading. Thus those homeowners who get some use out of fire departments should pay for some of the cost recovery.

These concepts are as logical as cost recovery is in terms of a public utility. We do not oppose some modest utility fees. We all pay taxes for our sewer and water systems. We also pay modest utility fees. However, our taxes for the system come to a heck of a lot more even though we all pay modest monthly fees. The St. Lawrence Seaway, the Coast Guard, navigational aids and dredging, all form part of public utilities for which everyone in Canada receives some benefit. Therefore, the nation as a whole shares in the cost of these utilities. To suggest that we be charged for navigational aids, ice-breaking and so on is simply self-defeating. It harms our economy. It harms dozens and dozens of communities. I hope that the Government will look at this matter, reconsider it and be prepared to accept these three excellent amendments by eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

They point out in their petition that this will cause serious problems with safety and will diminish the ability for accurate weather reporting and communications in an area where it is dangerous to travel. They pray that the Government will abandon its efforts to decommission those lighthouses and leave the safety system intact on the coast of British Columbia.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

POINT OF ORDER

POWERS OF COMMITTEE UNDER STANDING ORDER—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a very brief point of order with respect to the Tenth Report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts which was tabled yesterday. You will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that this is the first opportunity I have had to raise this point of order. It is not a long one. I would just seek some direction from the Chair.

The Committee has asked for a Government response to a recommendation on page 3 of its report pursuant to Standing Order 99(2). We have reviewed the Standing Order and it would be our thinking and feeling that the Committee only has the power to ask for a response to the Committee Report in total. The Government side is actually just seeking direction from the Chair as to whether or not it is in order for a committee to ask for a Government response to a portion of a report rather than the entire report.

Perhaps the Table and yourself can take this under advisement and give us some direction at a later date. It is certainly not an urgent point at this time.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments. We are dealing with two distinct legal persons; one is an agent of Parliament, the reference of this Commission, which has been the witness before the commmittee and which has been asked to table reports in writing by September 30; the other is the Government's response to the cut-backs in the Public Service and an update every three months of how we are doing with the cut-backs. Standing Order 99(2) applies to the Government's action, that is, Treasury Board's implementation of the policy of the Government. The other one applies to an agent of Parliament which, through the Secretary of State, answers to us in the House.

I would ask Your Honour to possibly see the difference between a report of a committee reporting on an agent of Parliament, that is, the Public Service Commission, and the same report requesting the Government to tell us what is happening on one of its Department's actions in regard to its program of cut-backs in the Public Service. There is a distinction.

I understand the point which is being made. However, I do think the Committee was right in asking the Government for its response as separate from the other request made of the Commission for it to table in writing with the Committee by September 30, if I remember correctly, some of the update on its appointment methods and how it is going to improve the auditing of those appointments. I think there is a request here that is possibly bona fide and in order.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might make an unusual request, that an opportunity be given at a later time to make submissions on this point of order, given that it could well have far reaching consequences? It appears to take on some technical questions which really require some research before any intelligent intervention could be made. I would seek from you, Sir, that perhaps no ruling be made at the moment and an opportunity be provided later for an intervention, at least by myself, after I have had an opportunity to review the matter in its entirety.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think the comments of my hon. collegue make a good deal of sense. Our point was not as to substance but as to form. Standing Order 99(2) states:

> Within 120 days of the presentation of a report from a standing or special committee, the government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto.

We are simply seeking direction so we know exactly what we are being asked to respond to in the future. As my colleague states, this the first time we have had this particular situation arise and I think we would all like to set a good precedent which could be followed with ease by all Members of the House in the future.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously, I will reserve. Perhaps I might ask Hon. Members who would like to make further submissions would Monday be suitable?

Mr. Deans: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Is Monday at eleven o'clock a good time?

Mr. Deans: That would be excellent.

Mr. Speaker: I am happy to reserve. May I ask those who are going to intervene to consider a matter which the Chair will have to consider, that is, would the effect of what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is saying be that committees would in effect be required to submit reports clause by clause? I would like that point addressed, if that is possible.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 30, consideration of Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motions Nos. 5, 6 and 11 (Mr. Angus, p. 12764).

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we were debating motions put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), motions Nos. 5, 6 and 11. These are proposed amendments to Clause 4 of the Canada Shipping Act.

Hon. Members must realize that Clause 4 of the Bill will provide the Government with the authority to recover the cost of providing Coast Guard services. This is certainly a departure from the prior practice. In the past, these services were not charged for. There was no user fee for Coast Guard services. In Clause 4 the Government proposes to impose such charges. Indeed, under the legislation the Minister will have the authority to set the fee, not only for Coast Guard services, but fees for ice-breaking, navigational aids, dredging services, soundings and search and rescue. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, can you imagine what such a move will do to the East Coast, not only to fishermen but to farmers? Can Your Honour imagine what it will do to the economy of the East Coast of Canada? Do Members opposite from Atlantic Canada not realize the drastic affect this measure will have on the livelihoods of their constituents, since all these charges will have to be passed on down the line to the consumer?

We all know the statistics with respect to Atlantic Canada today. There are enough Tory Members sitting in the back benches, silent Tory Members—

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Some of them.

Mr. Rodriguez: I do not want to tangle with the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay). He is the middleweight champion of the House of Commons, and I do not want to tangle with him. He has a wicked left hook. He is a tough customer, just ask his riding association president. I don't want to fuss with that guy.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) on a point of order.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, certain lapses may be acceptable, but I would suggest that personal remarks concerning an individual are out of order in the House.

Admittedly, Hon. Members do enjoy immunity in the House, but I respectfully submit that ethical standards should prevail.

In my opinion, the comments of my colleague from Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) were clearly related to the private life of a Member. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I would urge him to apologize.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish to submit to the Speaker that there is no point of order whatsoever. The Hon. Member has referred to none of the rules of the House of Commons. He simply pointed out that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) in his usual oratorical flare has indicated some measure of respect for the Parliamentary Secretary. I think that the Parliamentary Secretary is delighted to be called a tough customer, judging by the grin on his face. Can we proceed with the excellent speech of the Hon. Member?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I fully appreciate the representations of the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay)—

[English]

However, the Chair does not believe that there has been a breach of order or unparliamentary language used by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. I would ask the Hon. Member to get to the point of the debate.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I think that I should at least have the right to respond to what was said by the Hon. Member for Lotbinière.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Crosby: Tell us about your defeat in 1980.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I did not cast any reflection on the Hon. Member. All I did was repeat what was in the press and what is on the public record. I paid him a compliment. I said that he was a tough customer. I said that he was the middleweight champion of the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) on a point of order.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I did not rise a moment ago when the Liberal Member of the Official Opposition—

An Hon. Member: The only one in the House.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Again, indeed. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, we heard certain insinuations and innuendos which, to my mind, are a serious breach of ethical conduct in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I have to rise because the comments were made voluntarily and, I suggest, maliciously by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who referred to various press reports to attack the private lives of individuals or Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I think we are entitled to a minimum of decorum, and it is a shame that I should be forced to rise to denounce these attempts to make people laugh at others.

That being said, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could we have some order, please? I would ask the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt to please get back to either one of the Motions Nos. 5, 6 or 11, whichever one he chooses to debate.

Mr. Tobin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would much prefer to hear debate on the amendments; but if the Speaker is going to allow a long speech on a non-point of order which bears no relevance to the Standing Orders of the House then the Speaker should at least rule that it is or is not a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: None of the three points I have heard thus far fall into the category of a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Thank you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt on debate.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would always want to conform with what Your Honour suggests I should do. Just like Tommy Douglas, who was a former featherweight champion when he was in the House, I wish to make sure that I fulfil what Your Honour has requested.

I was saying: Where are the back-bench Conservative Members from Atlantic Canada? Clause 4 will have very drastic effects on fishermen, farmers and consumers in Atlantic Canada. Surely those back-bench Members from Atlantic Canada know that the area suffers from one of the highest unemployment rates in the country. We know that economically the area does not enjoy the same level of activity as does central Canada and some parts of western Canada. I am aggrieved that Conservative back-benchers who talk big when they are in their ridings about how they will fight the Government and how they will be tough on issues are just tabby cats when they come here to the House of Commons. They just sit in their places and say absolutely nothing when measures such as those envisioned in Clause 4 are put on the record.

My colleague from Thunder Bay—Atikokan has proposed three very reasonable amendments. Recognizing that the Government will use force to push through Clause 4, he says, first, that if the Minister is to be given the authority to implement fees for Coast Guard and all sorts of other services on the East Coast then there ought to be a review process. The review process being recommended is that on the written request of 20 Members of Parliament the matter could be referred to the Transport Committee. It seems to me to be important that that kind of safeguard be attached to that clause. In other measures which are before the House, we can have other references on the request of 20 Members. I think it makes eminent sense that we should be able to do that.

• (1130)

In Motion No. 6, the Member has suggested that there be an automatic review of the charges by the Transport Committee every two years. This review would be to look at the economic impact of those charges on the East Coast economy. I would hope that the Government would accept that. I see the Parliamentary Secretary nodding. Is that a yes or is he just bobbing and weaving?

Mr. Forrestall: Bobbing and weaving to the tremendous blows.

Mr. Rodriguez: I know we are landing them. If I can get a nod—

Mr. Forrestall: You got a nod.

Mr. Rodriguez: We got a nod.

Motion No. 11 suggests that this clause not come into effect before January 1, 1988. We understand that it will come into effect on January 1, 1987. We proposed Motion No. 11 because we think there should be a phasing-in period. People have to get ready for this.

Mr. Forrestall: We have already provided for that.

Mr. Rodriguez: I see another nod. Is that more bobbing and weaving or is the Parliamentary Secretary just punchy? I know we are making some very logical arguments and I see that we are convincing the Parliamentary Secretary. We are getting another nod from him.

Mr. Forrestall: What you have to do is get your fist off that piece of paper, stop reading and come out swinging.

Mr. Rodriguez: Now that we have a nod from the Parliamentary Secretary, that amendment could very well be put into effect.

I would now like to turn to the matter of Government Members who come from Atlantic Canada. It seems to me that when this Bill was being drafted, it must have gone at some point to the Atlantic caucus. It is unfortunate that Government Members from Atlantic Canada did not see fit to indicate their concern about the ill effects of Clause 4 of the Bill.

The Transport Committee held extensive hearings on this particular Bill. Opposition to Clause 4 was overwhelming. The opposition came from labour unions, Inuit groups, grain exporters, farmers, fishermen, pleasure boat operators, vessel owners and shipping companies. For example, the St. Lawrence Shipowners Association objected to cost recovery. Representatives of that association are quoted as saying the following in committee:

—we do not agree that we should give the government a blank cheque, which would allow it to set up a fee system about which we know nothing at the present time.

The Dominion Marine Association said the following:

—this could amount to an additional $1.65 per tonne for every tonne that moved through the Seaway last year. Given the fact that traffic was down 20 per cent from 1984, this cost could have a dramatic impact on future traffic patterns.

The Prince Edward Island Potato Marketing Board also objected to the clause. That was one of the reasons given for the fall of the Conservative Government in Prince Edward Island. It is Clause 4, this plot by the federal Conservative Government to implement user fees, that will adversely affect Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Angus: They got the message.

Mr. Rodriguez: The message was delivered to them. The Conservatives only got 11 seats in the whole province.

The Prince Edward Island Potato Marketing Board had this to say about the clause:

All of the moneys expended for upgrading this shipping port (Summerside) over the years will be lost if dredging costs are passed on to the user because there just will not be any shipping.

Finally, the former Minister of Fisheries of the Province of Prince Edward Island, a Tory, said the following:

Fishermen, through the Fisheries Act pay for right of access to the common property resource which they harvest through personal and vessel licence fees. It is my view that it is the responsibility of the licensing authority, namely, the Government of Canada, to provide access to the resources for which fishermen are licensed.

He said that before his defeat and the Conservatives got the message. They were defeated.

I say to Conservative Hon. Members who represent Atlantic Canada that now is the time to repent. Now is the time to do it. If they do not back off on Clause 4, they will all go down the tubes at the next federal election. Let this be a message to them.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to these motions in order to ask for common sense in the deliberation of Bills that are supposed to be in the best interests of all the citizens of Canada, and, in particular, in this case, the citizens who live in the Province of Quebec where the Great St. Lawerence Seaway is found. That Seaway is a very vital link to the lives and the economy of our province. I think it would be irresponsible, to say the least, and even unfair to increase the costs to fishermen in this way.

As we all know, the fishing industry is a depressed industry at this time. Fishermen have asked for a degree of relief. There have been some serious problems in that industry. I would suggest that we are making a very reasonable request. We are asking for a delay. Rather than simply opposing for the sake of opposing, we are recommending a delay so that we can study from an intelligent perspective the potential negative impact of Clause 4 of Bill C-75.

I think that the Minister would be most disconcerted if we were to allow this Bill to go ahead. I think we are saving him a great deal of heartache. The Minister of Employment and Immigration would have been quite thrilled if we had asked for a delay until the report of the Forget Commission came in. If we had, she would not have found herself so embarrassed today with respect to the reaction to unemployment insurance benefits and severance pay.

In a sense, Clause 4 gives the Minister the authority to charge but does not tell people what they are being charged for. It gives the Minister the authority to determine what he is going to do with the lives of people without letting those people know what he is going to do with their lives. How will that impact on the quality of their lives? I would like to recommend that we take cognizance of the growing discomfort of many groups in society and give heed to what they have to say.

The Government prides itself on having developed a very good rapport with our good neighbour to the South and has been negotiating for an open ear and an open mind. If this is to be the case, I would strongly recommend that the Government listen to our American friends and neighbours and that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) take heed of a letter he received on April 14 so that American-Canadian relations may improve all along the way. The Seaway does not belong only to Canada; it is a shared waterway. What we do here has an impact upon the American side of the border.

• (1140)

I should like to refer to a letter signed by a number of American Senators and dated April 14, 1986. It was directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister from the Executive Director of the Great Lakes Commission. It reads:

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

The Great Lakes Commission is deeply concerned about proposed Bill C-75, which would authorize the imposition of cost recovery for Canadian Coast Guard services.

The Commission respects Canada's need to raise additional revenues. The Commission also accepts Canada's choice of user fees as one vehicle to accomplish that end. However, the Commission, as the only co-ordinating and advocacy agency established by the States and approved by Congress to provide a collective voice for the eight Great Lakes states on water resource and related issues, would be remiss if it did not express opposition to the current language of Bill C-75.

The Commission has monitored the progress of C-75 in Parliament and participated in regional discussions about potential impacts of the Coast Guard cost recovery provision, Clause 4. Commission testimony was presented to the legislative committee in Ottawa on February 13, 1986.

It is too bad it was not listened to. The letter continues:

The Commission emphasized four points believed to be necessary before navigation cost recovery legislation can be successfully implemented:

This is one of the reasons we are asking for the delay. It continues:

1. Federal user fees should be uniform in application from seaport to seaport and from coastal range to coastal range. (Uniformity maintains the current competitive relationship among ports.)

2. There must be a clear determination of the purposes for which fees are to be collected and the activities to which they are to be applied. (This is critical to the ultimate acceptability of any system adopted.)

If they do not know what it is for, why apply it? The letter continues:

3. Any fee system, as it may affect the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence system, should be co-ordinated with United States' cost recovery programs and should give due consideration to total elimination of existing St. Lawrence Seaway system tolls.

4. Any user fee proposal should involve thorough public consultations with all user groups which should take place before initial application of fees and before any subsequent changes in levels of fees.

Ambassador Gotlieb's presence at the Commission's semi-annual meeting in Washington, D.C. March 12 was sincerely appreciated. In his remarks about Bill C-75 to the Commission, the Ambassador stated: "There is no doubt that your interests as a vitally affected party will not be ignored in the development of any user fee program." These are positive words, but final language from the legislative committee virtually mandates a segment charge (unequal between ports and port ranges) which could be devastating to Canadian and U.S. Great Lakes maritime and water transport dependent industries, leading to loss of maritime, industrial and agricultural jobs.

The Great Lakes Commission's views with respect to Clause 4 in Bill C-75 are supported by the Great Lakes Congressional delegation and regional maritime interests. A March 25 letter to Transport Minister Mazankowski from several Great Lakes Congressmen and a March 7 letter from Great Lakes Senators to Ambassador Gotlieb are attached for your reference.

The Commission believes that binational co-ordination regarding the future of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence transportation system is imperative now, more than ever before. The Great Lakes Commission along with the Great Lakes Senators and Representatives, is ready and willing to work with Canadian federal, provincial and private sector interests to see that our unique and shared Great Lakes-St. Lawrence River resource is maintained and improved for the benefit of our two countries and the world.

Sincerely,
James Fish
Executive Director

In light of the very serious implications of the Bill, in light of the loss of confidence we have already suffered in the St. Lawrence Seaway system as a result of unfortunate damage resulting in diminished traffic, and in light of the changes which are being suggested, I wonder what the Province of Quebec would have to say. As a last measure to plead for the delay we have proposed, I should like to read a letter which was directed to our Washington Ambassador, and I think our word should be honoured. It reads:

Dear Mr. Ambassador:

We wish to thank you for your recent letter concerning legislative action on Clause 4 of Bill C-75 currently pending before the Canadian Parliament. It was reassuring to us to learn that Bill C-75 was before a special legislative committee of Parliament for detailed analysis and that the Minister of Transport would be establishing a committee to consider the views of all affected parties prior to any decision to implement Coast Guard user fees.

The Executive Director of the Great Lakes Commission, Mr. James Fish, has informed us of his testimony on this issue before the legislative committee on February 13, 1986. We commend the Canadian Government for sponsoring hearings on this important legislation and view such hearings as a most constructive process. However, we, along with Mr. Fish, remain concerned about the potential damage to Canadian and U.S. shipping and related activities stemming from imposition of a Coast Guard user fee in addition to the current seaway tolls.

These tolls have already been increased. It continues:

While the United States Government is currently considering user fee legislation for navigation projects, proposed parallel provisions in this legislation would provide for a rebate of or credit toward seaway tolls paid by shippers to the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation. Such complementary provisions are important in preserving and preferably increasing the use of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway navigation system.

This communication is signed by U.S. Senators Alan J. Dixon; John H. Glenn, Jr.; Carl M. Levin; Rudy Boschwitz; Dan Quayle; William Proxmire; David Durenberger; Richard G. Lugar; Donald W. Riegle, Jr.; Bob Kasten, Jr.; Howard M. Metzenbaum; and Paul Simon. It is crucial that we maintain the confidence and goodwill of these important Senators, respect our word as a government if we are to move into the area of suicidal free trade rather than negotiate for freer trade by sector.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties, and I think Your Honour would find unanimous consent to revert to the introduction of Bills so that we can take care of a piece of housekeeping at this time.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, in fact a discussion took place, but I simply want to say that I hope the Minister will attempt to organize his affairs a little better in the future and not impose upon the House in this way all the time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to revert to the introduction of Bills?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motions Nos. 5, 6 and 11 (Mr. Angus, p.12764).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a moment or two to talk about the whole concept of user fees, particularly as they apply to the Coast Guard. I do so with the benefit of some knowledge of matters such as this. I do a bit of sailing and I have a certain amount of knowledge—I do not pretend to be an expert by any means—of what happens, the way people view the Coast Guard, and the way in which it is used out of necessity by small craft owners.

Let us take a look at the Coast Guard and what it is. Basically it performs two functions. One function is the policing of boundaries, which it does in an exemplary way. The other function is a safety one. It performs a safety function for people who require assistance from time to time when they are on the water. I want to address myself to that aspect for a few moments.

I should like to draw an analogy between persons travelling by automobile down a highway who have problems with their automobiles. They are able to call for the Ontario Provincial Police, the RCMP, or the local constabulary and obtain assistance. There is no charge. The assistance is offered and given; whatever is required to be done is done. That person is able to go on his way and continue to operate as he anticipated he would. The same basic service must be available on the water, and the same principle must prevail. A person, whether or not he can afford to dig into his pocket and pay, must be able to call for and get help from the Coast Guard if that person deems it necessary in the circumstances.

The difficulty in the user fee concept, and this is where we have a problem, is that no one knows at this point whether it is the intention of the Government to establish a user fee for such an event. What you will have happening, I think, having watched boaters for a number of years, is that people will be reluctant to call for the assistance they need when they need it if there is a fee attached to getting that assistance.

Let me give an example. You are in a narrows where the water is a little rough but it is protected reasonably well from wind. You have trouble with the motor of your boat. You can get it going but it won't keep going. At this point what you do is radio ship to shore and seek the assistance of the Coast Guard. The Coast Guard comes out and will do one of a number of things. They will either give you assistance in the form of gasoline if that is your problem, they may arrange to have you towed to a safe harbour or they may arrange to simply watch over you while you do the work to make sure that nothing untoward occurs, either by virtue of you being in a shipping lane and unable to get out of it or perhaps by virtue of the tide itself taking you into danger.

I have seen many boaters who have temporary problems with motors of their boats. I have seen them on many occasions call for assistance, but between the time they make the call and the assistance arrives they are able to correct the problem. They wait to notify the Coast Guard when they arrive, but then the boaters move on under their own power. If the person out on the boat knows there is going to be a charge levied against him for asking for that service, there will be a delay, I predict, in requesting the assistance needed. Boaters will spend more time monkeying around trying to solve the problem before making the call. As a result, rather than a safer system on the water, we will have a less safe system on the water. I suggest that it does not take a genius to see this.

I invite any Member of the House of Commons to spend a few days this coming summer on the St. Lawrence River, which is close by, or even on the Ottawa River, and I don't personally boat there—it doesn't happen on the Ottawa River as it turns out—and see the numbers of times on the St. Lawrence River that the Coast Guard is requested to provide assistance. If people are reluctant to seek that assistance by virtue of the cost attendant upon getting it, potential dangers will result. For the tiny financial benefit to the coffers of the Government of Canada by virtue of the imposition of a user fee in situations such as that, the risks of delays will far outweigh them.

I am pleading, I suppose, for some understanding of human nature. That is all. If your car is coughing and sputtering on the highway, all you need to do is pull over, walk and get assistance. You can if you wish, if you have the means, get assistance from local police forces. On the water, however, it is an entirely different and much more difficult situation. There should be no impediment put in the way of a person on the water being able to call for and get assistance. I suggest small though the user fee may be, it will become an impediment and, therefore, will in itself create a more hazardous situation than previously existed, and I consider that to be folly on the part of Government.

I can well appreciate the Government's concern over finances. I can well understand that the Government wants to find ways to levy the cost out a little more equitably—I am not sure that is the right term in this circumstance—but in this particular instance safety is far more important than the minimal dollar return. Since we are encouraging people to utilize the waters surrounding Canada, and we are encouraging people to vacation and use those facilities in Canada, we should be prepared to provide the necessary policing force required to meet the potential dangers that will exist.

I listened yesterday to one of my colleagues who made a point, perhaps a little facetiously but nevertheless a valid one. The imposition of a user fee for Coast Guard use is a little bit like imposing the user fee for calling the police or the fire department. If you stop to think about it, it is ludicrous. It would be outrageous if we were to start now to impose user fees if you happen to need the assistance of the police. What if you made the call and they came, stood at your door and said: "We will give you a hand but there is a user fee". That would be ridiculous. I do not think anyone would contemplate it.

Mr. Rodriguez: What happens if you say you can't afford it?

Mr. Deans: As my colleague suggests, if you say you can't afford it, they won't give you help. I do not know whether that would be the case or not, but no one would ever contemplate such a stupid thing, not even Conservatives. Yet that is what is being suggested. We are suggesting that the police on the water can charge you for calling for their assistance while the police on the land in similar circumstances do not, and would never consider it.

I suggest that, if for no other reason than the reason I mentioned, this particular part of this Bill should be withdrawn. We should try to get some sanity into the debate and some understanding of the potential consequences. This is not a big item, this is not an item that requires a great deal of deliberation or something the Government requires to keep the coffers full. This will not make substantial difference to the over-all fiscal or financial affairs of the country, but it will make a difference in my judgment, and my judgment is based on experience of what the likely consequences will be with regard to safety on the waters of Canada that are currently under the jurisdiction of the Coast Guard. I ask that the Government withdraw this part of the Bill, show some common sense and recognize the potential hazard it is about to create.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I also welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-75.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that although this is a subject that does not directly concern my riding, I have been listening to the debate in the House for some time, and I think a few comments are in order.

Bill C-75 bears the following title: "An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof."

Mr. Speaker, upon reading this Bill, I think we cannot but agree, and support most if not all of the provisions of this legislation. When it is a matter of improving safety and protecting the environment, and when provision is made to update the Canada Shipping Act, and finally, the reference to implementing a whole series of international conventions within a reasonable timeframe, I think it stands to reason that we should agree with the objectives and goals and in fact with everything provided under Bill C-75.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is Clause 4, and I think this is the basic and main reason why so many Members have reacted to this Bill. Whether or not we are affected by the consequences or impact of this Bill, I feel that after a careful look at the provisions of Clause 4, we have a duty to rise and protest most emphatically against a provision that I see as an insult to democracy, as a totally undemocratic gesture, as a weapon the Minister wants to keep in reserve in order to have absolute control over this very important sector. I think the amendments could have been approved so that this institution, so that we as Members of Parliament, in our democratic system, would be involved in a review or any future changes concerning the fee schedule.

When I decided to speak on this matter, Mr. Speaker, I tried to get hold of some testimony, some briefs that were presented when the Bill was considered in Committee, and in my humble opinion, the one I have here, that was presented by the Association des opérateurs de navires du Saint-Laurent clearly and succinctly identifies the problem and the dramatic and extremely tragic consequences of the provisions of Clause 4. For instance, we can read the following on page 2 of the brief presented by the Association des opérateurs de navires du Saint-Laurent on January 29, 1986: We reached the following conclusion. We agree with most of the provisions of this Bill—and that is exactly what my colleagues have been saying in the House—but there is one major objection concerning Clause 4: it should be the subject of legislation after due consultation with the interested parties, not before as is the case now.

Still at the bottom of page 2, they go on to say this: However, we think that Clause 4 should not have been smuggled in with the Bill, and such a radical change in the operations of the Coast Guard should not have been made without first discussing the matter with the interested parties. What stands out most in this exercise is the antidemocratic approach, so these people went to the trouble of raising a series of questions about Clause 4.

Just to show that my remarks are relevant, Mr. Speaker, with your permission I should like to mention some of the questions raised about Clause 4. For example, they ask: Which services will have to be paid for? Will it be navigational aids? Will it be environmental protection, dredging, de-icing, training schools, search and rescue operations, or all such services as a whole? On what criteria will operations be based? Will it be tonnage, the value of the goods, the size of the ship, the number of times a ship crosses imaginary lines in the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence River, or the Arctic gulf? When he was queried about this, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) said that his department planned to recover 15 per cent of the costs. Does that mean costs across Canada? In other words, will each area have to cover a specified percentage of the expenditures incurred in regionalizing the Canadian Coast Guard?

• (1200)

Mr. Speaker, I could go on like this for a good ten minutes merely listing the issues raised by Clause 4. But in conclusion, I will give you a final instance in which it seems extremely complex and disquieting, even shocking to leave such an important matter to the discretion of the minister, with no way for this House, for us, Members of Parliament, to participate and defend the interests they are representing. The following example is given: Admittedly, a major part of winter expenses of the Canadian Coast Guard on the St. Lawrence River goes to environment protection—opening up the channel for the water to flow faster and without ice jams. Certainly, the movement of large container and other ships also makes a major contribution to de-icing the St. Lawrence River. The daily traffic of large ships contributes to and is in itself a de-icing operation. Will they be refunded that part for which they contributed to that vital work, or will the Canadian Coast Guard benefit from the work that is in effect done by the large carriers?

All those questions remain unanswered, Mr. Speaker. All are concerns for those interested in transportation, all are also matters that are very disquieting for fishermen and a large part of our population, for those men and women living in Northern Canada, Northern Quebec, who depend on water transportation for food supplies. Clearly, if the charge is to be increased to the point where it becomes a major component, this will lead to substantial increases in the price of goods that are transported along the Seaway, and accordingly Canadian men and women in those areas will have to pay the greater part of the costs.

Another matter that seems important to me is that in the area of shipping, as in transportation in general, operators usually run on one-, two-, three-, or five-year contracts. Here is the situation. Once a company has obtained a two-, or three-year contract for shipping goods from one point to another, His Highness the minister suddenly decides from high above that he will increase the rates, after consulting a few officials who know nothing about the problem. Have you thought for a minute of the various consequences? In my view, this might very well disrupt an industry which is already very much affected and which does not need such confusion and complexity.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I submit it is really sad that a significant number of good aspects of Bill C-75 are spoiled by such provisions that are both unreasonable and unacceptable as far as elementary democracy is concerned.

[English]

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively, as I always do, to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). He made some good points but he did not carry his analogies far enough. He said that a person involved in an automobile accident might expect the police to provide certain emergency or safety services without charge. If you were in a car accident, the car was on fire and you were trapped inside, the police might be expected to extinguish the fire and extricate you from the vehicle. They might be expected to provide traffic directions around the scene of the accident. They do all all this at public expense and no expense to the person involved in the accident.

• (1210)

There are certain things that might be undertaken for which you would expect to pay. You would expect to pay, for example, the ambulance charges if you had to go to a hospital. You would not expect the police or some public body to pay for the towing charge of your car to be taken to the garage. You certainly would not expect any repairs on the car to be done at public expense.

We have the same types of concepts involved in what we are debating with respect to Coast Guard services here today. The Government obviously has no intention of levying a charge for those immediate emergency and safety services. What the Government might want to make a charge for is certain commercial types of services rendered by the Coast Guard. This is where the Opposition fails to make that distinction.

Charges for ice-breaking, towing, sounding, in many cases make eminent good sense. I have had occasion in the past to contract with a navigation company to go into areas that were not sounded. They have to sound the channel and they make an extra charge for that. The vessels have to slow down to get into that area and they have to take soundings as they go along. It makes sense that they should charge extra for that service. It would not make sense for me to be able to call up the Coast Guard and say, "Go and sound that channel", and the public is going to pay for it, as it is a commercial undertaking on my part. I am the one that is going to benefit from the shipping that takes place and nobody else. It would make eminent sense in that circumstance if the Coast Guard were to provide that service that I should have to pay for it.

The same can be said for certain ice-breaking services. If you accidently get stuck in an ice-pack, you want to be able to call the Coast Guard to come to break the ice and get you out of there. That is an emergency type of undertaking. If you know that you want to ship out a cargo of goods, or get some merchandise out of a location that is ice-bound and you know of this in advance you can either contract with a privately-owned ice-breaker to go in and escort your cargo-carrying vessel, or maybe you can get the Coast Guard to do it. If the Coast Guard does it, why should it be done at public expense? Of course it should not. It should be paid for by the person who reaps the commercial advantage. That is all that has been said in the provisions that have been presented here by the Government. In circumstances like that where it is a commercial-type service that has been rendered by the Coast Guard then there ought to be a schedule of fees. It ought not to be done at the expense of the taxpayer. The person who receives the commercial advantages ought to pay a user fee for that service.

All the arguments that have been presented today by the Opposition when speaking of commercial-type services does not make sense. I will certainly vote against the proposed amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part in the debate on the motion presented by the Hon. Member to amend Clause 4 of Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, the people in Ottawa—Vanier might wonder what argument their Member of Parliament can make about this Bill and why he is interested in this matter.

[English]

Mr. Angus: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Angus: Just on a point of order, I wonder if the Hon. Member would give permission for my colleague to speak. He has another function he must attend.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) on the same point of order.

Mr. Baker: A Liberal spoke and then a Conservative spoke and I thought it would have gone back to the NDP.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate is correct. It was my mistake. I should have recognized the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I did not, I recognized the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It is up to the Member for Ottawa—Vanier now.

Mr. Gauthier: In a spirit of co-operation with my friend from Winnipeg North, and also recognizing that you will reserve my position to debate later, I will give the Hon. Member from Winnipeg North the floor.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying I listened with consternation and amazement to the comments by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). If there are any area, because of their geographic position and isolation, which get hit in the worst possible way by this concept of user-pay, they are those isolated areas like the Northwest Territories. Whether you look at transportation or anything else, the costs to the people who live there are much higher than everybody else. They would have to pay for the things that they get, which is what user-pay principle means I cannot understand how a Member who represents an area like that could take the very narrow, "business is the only thing that counts", attitude he took. He seems to be living in an era of 50 years ago. If we applied the user-pay principle to the person who got sick and had to see a doctor, or a person who had to go to hospital, or a person who had to depend on his own ability to provide for a pension after she or he retires, those people would be in a terrible situation.

I want to say a few words about this Bill and the concept of user-pay for transportation and shipping in the St. Lawrence Seaway. I want to put on the record that the opposition to that principle is not just opposition by our political Party. Let me put on the record the views expressed by the Minister of Highways and Transportation for the Province of Saskatchewan. I am sure the Hon. Member from Western Arctic knows that they have a Conservative Government. He said the following:

> Any increase in costs to users of the Great Lakes/St. Lawrence Seaway system will result in producers looking for transport services which are cheaper. As a result, some traffic may be diverted to the U.S. transportation system causing loss of Canadian jobs.
> I have recently written to the Hon. Don Mazankowski—and advised him that the imposition of charges to defray the costs of the Coast Guard are ill advised—

We have the Western Regional Advisory Council, Alberta Economic Development, another Conservative province. They say the following:

> The introduction of any regulation which will create an additional cost to the port and port users must not militate against the use of Canadian ports. We are most concerned that Clause 4 of the act which deals with cost recovery will impact negatively on Canada's international competitive position, by forcing business away.

Let me quote from the Minister of Highways and Transportation of my own province, who says the following:

> If this clause in the Bill is allowed to remain, it will lead to efforts towards full cost recovery which is beyond the limited financial capabilities of grain producers and other shippers and consumers.
> The continued pursuit of the "user pay" philosophy without regard for the ability of shippers and consumers to pay will inevitably cripple the flow of the nation's commerce.

The National Farmers' Union said:

> In its preoccupation to trim the federal deficit, the Government is in effect telling farmers through this bill that the national interest can best be served by still further increasing farm costs at a time when farmers are in very serious financial straits.
> We regard the St. Lawrence Seaway as a national asset that should be maintained in the national interest. It does not make good economic sense to raise rates in the face of declining demand.
> There is no question an additional charge in any way placed on transportation at this time will in fact mean disaster to more producers. It will mean producers going broke.

● (1220)

I represent an urban constituency which has a very small number of farmers. However, I do represent many railway workers. There have been major lay-offs at CPR and CNR, the likes of which we have not seen since the 1930s. The prime reason for these lay-offs is that the shipment of grain has decreased dramatically.

Canadian wheat producers are facing very unfair competition from the United States and the European community, both of which are subsidizing their grain farmers to a tremendous extent. These factors make it more difficult for farmers to sell their grain, which means that less grain will be shipped. As a result, the railway workers in my constituency will have a more difficult time holding their jobs with CNR and CPR, where there have already been too many lay-offs.

The policies of the Government as outlined in this Bill will inevitably lead to more lay-offs and that is why I oppose it and support the amendment.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who consented to my intervention at this time. He recognizes that while this matter is of great importance to him, as a Member from Atlantic Canada it is indeed of greater importance to me.

That is why I am rather amazed that Members opposite, particularly Members from Atlantic Canada such as the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), support the thrust of this legislation which will cause additional costs. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) supports the Government in its attempt to add additional costs to fishermen for navigational aids, sounding, dredging, vessel traffic services, ice-breaking services and marine aid. I am very appalled that those Members would want to promote user fees for those types of services used by our primary producers.

It is likely that this legislation will be proclaimed by the Government of Canada and become the law with which people in my Province of Nova Scotia and other provinces will have to comply. It will be a great impediment to those who seek to make their living from the sea and by other means. For instance, this legislation will have a traumatic effect on the Prince Edward Island potato industry. That industry submitted a brief to the legislative committee that was studying Bill C-75 and the various amendments to the Canada Shipping Act. Given the recent events in Prince Edward Island, I would have thought that Members opposite who have a short time left to represent that province in the Parliament of Canada, would take heed of the message given by the people of Prince Edward Island to the provincial Conservative Party that they do not like this sort of action by the Government of Canada. User fees for these very important services will affect them in a very dramatic way.

The Prince Edward Island potato industry states in their brief that they are vigorously opposed to the introduction of charges relating to navigational services until an impact study on the potato industry's export business has been conducted. That industry knows that these user fees will have an extremely negative impact on their industry. Has the Government or have the Conservative Members of Parliament from Prince Edward Island provided that impact study? Have they provided the information that would address that issue? No. They support the Bill as it stands. One could conclude as a result of their lack of action and concern on behalf of the people whom they represent that they want to see that particular industry decline even further than it has. I would hope that the message given to former Premier Lee of Prince Edward Island would be sufficient to make Members opposite cognizant that this legislation is discriminatory and unfair to the primary producers in Canada so much so that they would stand in their places and reject this legislation.

Not only do potato farmers find this legislation destructive to their industry, that sentiment is shared by the primary producers in the fishing industry. I am talking about those individuals who must rise early in the morning, set out to catch the fish and return to have their catch processed. There seems to be a myth that these primary producers are making large sums of money. However, we are not talking about National Sea, we are referring to that small independent fisherman who must go out on his boat on a daily basis to try to make sufficient money to earn a livelihood for his family. The Government is telling those fishermen that they may continue to do that, but they will not only pay personal income taxes, there will now be a charge for dredging services and navigational services. If that is not enough, the Government will charge for ice-breaking services and any marine aid that may be necessary.

The Government has singled out those small individual primary producers in our country and introduced discriminatory legislation that will affect them in a very negative way. That is very unlike what the Government has done for other sectors of the economy. I suggest that Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada visit the wharfs and bays of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick to explain to the people there how the Government can provide $500,000 in capital gains tax provisions, provide millions of dollars in bail-outs to banks in western Canada, or provide special unrestricted income to the oil and gas industry in this country, yet the small independent primary producers in this country must pay more. Where is the fairness? Where is the equality of opportunity?

Unfortunately, the Prince Edward Island election has not come home true to the Cabinet or Members opposite. However, it will come true in the succeeding elections, both provincially and federally. The Conservative Party will be thrown out of the Province of New Brunswick and the Government will learn directly what these measures mean to the people of Atlantic Canada. I cannot believe that Members of Parliament with fishing ports and villages in their constituencies in Atlantic Canada could support such regressive measures. Of course, Hon. Members opposite will say: "We have to have user fees". That is like saying that if one drives on the highway one ought to be paying for the snowplough—

• (1230)

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Dingwall: —and there should be a toll gate. Hon. Members from Ontario would agree with that one. But our Party does not agree with charging fishermen additional expense because what they are paying now is too much.

Mr. Crosbie: What did you do when you were in power? You socked it to them.

Mr. Dingwall: The Minister of Justice is the biggest hypocrite when it comes to support for the inshore fishermen. That has been demonstrated time and time again in his support for the factory freezer trawlers. It has been demonstrated here with his support for Bill C-75 which includes discriminatory charges against the inshore fishermen. The paragon of the little guy, the Minister of Justice, has walked away from them all. He does not want anything to do with them because his career, which was in blossom years ago, is now starting to wind down. It is fading before our eyes.

Mr. Crosbie: No judicial appointment for you.

Mr. Dingwall: As reported in Atlantic Insight, his credibility and importance in the Mulroney Government and Cabinet have never been lower.

Mr. Tobin: It is melting like the snow in spring.

Mr. Dingwall: Shame on the Minister of Justice to suggest for one moment that we on this side are against the inshore fishermen. We stand solidly behind them. We appeal to the fairness and goodness of all Hon. Members to stand in their place and reject these user fees which affect the small primary producers in Atlantic Canada.

Let me say in conclusion that I challenge the Minister of Justice to go into the ports of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick and say to the fishermen: "You have to pay for navigational aids and dredging but at the same time we're going to give a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption to the rich people". He should try to explain that one. Perhaps he can in his own constituency at the Board of Trade, but he will never be able to do it at the ports in Atlantic Canada where the fishermen earn their living.

Mr. Pat Binns (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise and participate in this debate today. I believe this Bill is an important Bill which certainly affects producers in Atlantic Canada. Many of the points raised by Hon. Members of the Opposition might leave the wrong impression with a lot of people, particularly with inshore fishermen and potato producers, the people who depend on Atlantic waters to export their products.

I would like to point out that this Bill affects Canada shipping and services provided by the Coast Guard. That is important because many of the services provided in Atlantic Canada to fishermen are not provided by the Coast Guard. In fact, if one looks at the dredging services in our small craft harbours, one will find that those dredging services are provided by the Small Craft Harbours Branch of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans in fact contracts with the Department of Public Works to have dredging carried out. So the dredging services provided in most ports in Atlantic Canada have no involvement with the Coast Guard. I think it is unfortunate that Hon. Members opposite have left the House with the impression that dredging services are going to be charged to the fishermen through the Coast Guard. In fact, that cannot happen because the Coast Guard does not provide that service to inshore fishermen in 99 per cent of harbours in Atlantic Canada. That is an important fact and I am concerned that the wrong impression might be left.

The suggestion has been made that if an inshore fisherman is out at sea and his boat breaks down, or perhaps he encounters heavy seas, his boat is swamped and he has to call for Coast Guard services for rescue of himself and perhaps his crew members, he will be hit with a major bill from the Coast Guard. We can assure this House that such would not be the case. I know this matter was discussed extensively in committee and assurances have been given that where safety of life and so on is involved, there would not be a charge back to the fisherman. I think I can stand here and assure fishermen in Atlantic Canada that if they are faced with an emergency, with a potential situation which involves lives, they will not be charged back for that service.

Certainly Hon. Members on this side of the House would not tolerate such a thing happening because safety of life is something about which we are all concerned. We would not let the Governor in Council, or whoever it may be, charge for that kind of thing, but the impression has been left that there would be a charge in that circumstance.

The Bill states that certain services "may" be charged for. Of course, there is a big difference between "may" and "will". They are two different words. This matter has been raised not only in the House of Commons committee but, as I understand it, in the Senate committee as well. Assurances have been given that no fishermen should hesitate to call for service. He is not going to be charged for that service which would be provided by the Coast Guard.

It has been suggested that we would be prepared to let our potato industry die because of services provided by the Coast Guard and so on. Again, I think it is absolutely incredible after the measures the Government has taken, even in recent months, that Opposition Members could suggest that we would let the kinds of fees be applied against the potato industry which would jeopardize that industry. In fact, just in the last few weeks potato producers in Prince Edward Island were assisted to the tune of $6 million from the federal Treasury to help them in a difficult period when potato prices were depressed. The Government had to come to the rescue in order to restore some market confidence. It had to take the potatoes out of the market so that market forces would prevail, supply and demand would raise prices, and that is exactly what has happened. Not only was help given in Prince Edward Island but I believe there has been $3 million worth of assistance given to the potato industry in New Brunswick. Therefore, the initiatives which have been taken and which are being taken daily suggests this Government's commitment to the primary producer, to the potato grower, to the fisherman and so on.

I could go on at length. It was only yesterday that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made major announcements in regard to the agricultural industry. It was announced that effective May 1, fuel and excise taxes on farm equipment would be removed. That is a substantial contribution to the agricultural economy, to the potato industry and to our agricultural producers in Atlantic Canada.

The suggestion that we would use the word "may" in the provisions under the Coast Guard to bring in new fees for service which would jeopardize these very important industries just does not add up in the context of what the Government has been doing over the last number of months.

The Minister has already indicated in relation to these provisions, where cost recovery might be considered a consultation processs will be engaged in. It has already been engaged in through the Committee on Transport which travelled extensively to receive input. The Minister is allowing up to two years. That will give the user groups of the services the opportunity to sit down with Government and discuss these services and what kinds of things should apply to those user groups in order to ensure that the services are adequate and available and that there is no cost applied to those services which would jeopardize the primary industries. I think such a consultation process was probably unheard of under the former Government. I am not aware of that Government ever taking the initiative to go out and talk to producers about guaranteeing services to ensure that they are effective for our primary producers. We are a long way from making the final decisions. We will have two years, just in terms of consultation, before that occurs.

There is really not a great deal more I would like to say except that I do not want the primary producers in Atlantic Canada, or anywhere else in the country, to believe the kinds of things that members of the Opposition are saying will happen. They just will not happen. Members on this side of the House would not allow such things to happen. It is certainly not the intent of the Government to allow such things to happen.

With those words I am stating that, as far as I am concerned as a Member from Atlantic Canada, I can pretty well guarantee that my colleagues in the Government would not take such backward steps so as to jepoardize the primary industries. That is why we have engaged in the consultation process. One cannot blame the Coast Guard for all of the things Hon. Members opposite are suggesting.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I shall begin my comments by reminding the House that I am dealing with the amendment proposed to Clause 4. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, we of the Liberal Party would have preferred Clause 4 to be eliminated completely from this Bill and the Government to listen to reason as concerns this issue of user fees.

[English]

I wish to say to the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns) that I am informed that his speech is the same one he made during the election campaign to the P.E.I. potato farmers. I do not think it went over very well at that time. As a matter of fact, with respect to the speech he just made, I am informed by my friends that the Premier of the Province lost his seat on the same buddy-buddy line: "I'll get to the Ottawa guys because I'm one of them". That did not carry very much weight in the minds of the P.E.I. electorate. The Hon. Member should revise his lines and try to come to grips with the issues and, indeed, the impact which Bill C-75 will have on potato farmers in P.E.I. After all, they do use boats and they do need assistance in terms of navigational aids, dredging and other such matters. If the Hon. Member has information which we do not have and knowledge as to why, how and when these user fees will be imposed, which is not set out in the Bill, then perhaps he should get up and share that information with us soon.

Mr. Crosby: If you do not know the difference between the Atlantic Ocean and the Rideau Canal then we can't help you.

Mr. Gauthier: If the Hon. Member who just spoke wants to get up and make a speech on the Rideau Canal, I suppose he would be more than welcome to do so. He can enter into debate after I have finished my remarks.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been invited by my colleague opposite to speak to this matter. I will gladly accept his invitation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He has already yielded the floor once this morning. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: The Hon. Member will have a chance before one o'clock to make a speech on this clause. We will be listening to the Hon. Member attentively, in due course.

I wish again to ask Members of the House to consider how unfair and unjust—

Mr. Tobin: Brutal and callous.

Mr. Gauthier: My colleague says that it is brutal and callous. I have not used those words yet, because I have not gotten to the substance of the clause. However, when I am finished it will probably be my judgment also that it is brutal and callous to infringe upon people's revenues and incomes. It is unfair to add to the financial obligations of fishermen by taxing them. They are already broke. God knows, we have been told that enough times in this House. To impose another fee on them for ice-breaking, for example, or for other services which should be rendered by the community, gives me some fear that, indeed, the Government is unresponsive and is lacking in its entire comprehension of the problem.

I wish to remind Members of the House that we compiled a list of Tory promises made during the last election campaign. I wish to read one in particular because it impacts on the debate today. It states that the Tory Government was to:

Recognize and respond to the special needs of the Atlantic region for better transportation facilities to strengthen the economic base of the entire area and provide jobs both with the transportation sector and in those other sectors which rely on an efficient transportation system to make their products competitive.

How does one square user fees for fishermen and for transporters when the cost of such a fee will be passed on to consumers and render the fishermen and transporters less competitive than they already are? God knows that we have to encourage competitiveness, but we must also be very sensitive to the market at hand and to the difficulties our farmers are experiencing.

I wish to read another promise made by the Tories during the last election campaign. It will be the last one I read because there are some 338 of them and they have not kept a damn one of them. It states:

Upgrade navigational aids and systems to ensure increased marine safety.

There has been no upgrading, at least none of which I am aware. There has been absolutely nothing done to improve navigational aids. Yet the Government wants to charge more for the use of these services. I do not understand the logic of a Government which does not do anything to improve the situation but wants to charge to recover costs on services upon which it has not improved.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we would have liked to eliminate Clause 4. This is what we suggested in committee. Of course, because of its substantial majority, the Government was able to retain Clause 4 at the committee stage. We would have liked to propose the same amendment in the House at the report stage, but, unfortunately for us, the Chair ruled our amendment out of order.
