

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIRST SESSION—THIRTY-SECOND PARLIAMENT

29 Elizabeth II

VOLUME V, 1980

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE FOURTEENTH DAY OF NOVEMBER, 1980
TO THE SEVENTEENTH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1980

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

Published under authority of the Speaker of the House of Commons by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Canadian Government Publishing Centre, Supply and Services Canada, Hull, Québec, Canada K1A 0S9.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 14, 1980

The House met at 11 a.m.

● (1105)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR MORE REALISTIC PROJECTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion. The consumer price index increase now stands year over year at 10.9 per cent. Food is likely to increase by 12 per cent next year, energy costs by nearly 22 per cent, the dollar is now in the 84-cent range—2 per cent less than forecast—and interest rates are at least 1 per cent higher than they were on budget day. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Finance forthwith produce an amended budget background paper setting out projections that are more realistic for the coming years, so that Canadians will realize how badly they are served by this government and by its most inept fiscal management.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSING

INTRODUCTION OF SHELTER ALLOWANCE PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the consumer price index rose 0.9 per cent yesterday reflecting even greater hardship for Canadians on fixed incomes and those in lower income brackets; and whereas the Liberal government has no housing policies designed adequately to assist Canadians requiring shelter, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That this House urge the government to bring in a shelter allowance program designed to provide all Canadians with decent, affordable housing.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

PENSION ACT

CALL FOR INCREASE IN WAR DISABILITY PENSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young), I move:

That this House notes that the cost of living increase in the basic rate of the war disability pension now scheduled for January, 1981, will still leave veterans behind the average take-home pay of the five categories in the public service that were designated in 1972, and this House therefore calls on the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs to introduce an amendment to the Pension Act that will automatically tie the pensions of disabled veterans to the standard promised to them by Parliament eight years ago, a commitment this House must not fail to keep.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

NATIONAL UNITY

POSITION OF CONSERVATIVE PARTY ON QUEBEC SEPARATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of pressing and urgent necessity. Considering that during his visit in Chicoutimi earlier this week the Progressive Conservative leader mixed with the Quebec separatists; considering that the only Quebec Progressive Conservative Party member was conspicuous by his inertia all along the last referendum debate, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne):

S.O. 43

That this House direct the Leader of the Official Opposition to tell us whether his party is separatist or whether it is in favour of the survival and development of Canada.

Madam Speaker: The presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

GARRISON DIVERSION

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES CONCERNING CANADIAN OPPOSITION TO PROJECT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Garrison diversion project in North Dakota, if completed as planned, will cause irreparable harm to the waters of Manitoba and result in serious damage to Manitoba's fishing industry. The project is moving closer to completion each year, and recently additional money has been allocated for further construction of this project. Since Canadians of all political parties are opposed to the construction of those sections of the Garrison project that will harm Canadian waters, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Government of Canada send a delegation of members of this House from all parties to Washington at the appropriate time so that we can let the new administration and Congress know in the strongest terms possible that Canadians are unified in their opposition to the construction of those parts of the Garrison project that will harm Canadian waters.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF MINISTER FROM CHAIRMANSHIP OF WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a motion to the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Standing Committee on Regional Development last week unanimously passed the following recommendation, to be presented to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané):

That DREE be given a mandate to co-ordinate the spending and policy programs of line federal departments as they relate to regional development—

Considering that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has expressed his personal support for this concept, and since the minister also admitted that it is his department's officials who act in a capacity as secretariat for the western committee of cabinet, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly):

● (1110)

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration immediately withdraw from the chairmanship of the new western development fund, to be replaced by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, in the interest of strengthening the federal government's commitment to the honest eradication of regional disparities in Canada without regard to political gain.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

CALL FOR RECOGNITION OF CULTURAL DIVERSITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. As the B and B Commission report and the Pepin-Robarts commission report recognize the active presence and practice of many world cultures in Canada, and furthermore as federal governments past and present of different partisan views have appointed ministers of state responsible for multiculturalism, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That this House officially accept that Canada embraces many practising world cultures and therefore that a general statement to this effect be included in the final address to the Queen on constitutional patriation.

Madam Speaker: For presentation this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

ACTION TO FIGHT INFLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the nation's number one problem today as perceived by people across this country is still inflation. I therefore rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

The budget recently presented projects inflation in the 10 per cent range, while in fact it is now running at the rate of 10.9 per cent. This means that a person earning $15,000 yearly will have to earn at least $26,000 five years from now just to maintain his standard of living; in ten years, not too long a period of time in family planning, his earnings would have to be $40,000 and even then he would not be living in a style compatible with those earning $15,000 today. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Government of Canada put narrow, partisan considerations aside and direct its strength and effort in a fight against inflation, so that all Canadians will be able to live above the poverty line.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

CALL FOR RECOGNITION OF RIGHTS FOR HANDICAPPED IN CHARTER OF RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The handicapped people of Canada have made progress in obtaining provincial legislation recognizing their special needs, but national progress will be impossible unless the special rights of the handicapped are recognized in the proposed constitution. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That this House direct the Minister of Justice to consider inclusion in the proposed charter of rights and freedoms a provision recognizing the special rights of handicapped Canadians.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

SUGGESTED CREATION OF NUNAVUT TERRITORY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the ninth assembly of the government of the Northwest Territories last week passed a motion supporting the division of the Northwest Territories into two new territories, subject to a plebiscite, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar):

That this House recognize the legitimate aspirations of the people of Nunavut by supporting in principle the creation of a Nunavut territory with its own Nunavut government.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

● (1115)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING—INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT FORECAST

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Acting Prime Minister. It deals with the position of the government in the face of new cost of living figures which indicate a rate of inflation for this year of just under 11 per cent. The Minister of Finance forecast in the budget a consumer price increase in 1980 of 9.7 per cent. The Acting Prime Minister will know that this forecast can be met only if there are reductions in the consumer price index in November and December.

Will the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether or not it is the position of the government that there will in fact be a reduction in the cost of living in November and December of 1980, or has the government abandoned the forecast set out in the budget earlier this year?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Madam Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition studied the components of the consumer cost of living increase, he would see that by subtracting the energy cost increase the figure is reduced by 0.5 per cent. The Leader of the Opposition knows full well, as we do in government, that Canadians understand the need to participate in the exploration and development of our natural resources as well as in the conservation of energy, and even though it is no easy matter they agree to pay a bit more for energy. I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that the government is still determined to fight inflation and take the means necessary to stay within the forecast inflation rate increase.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I can understand why the Minister of Transport refuses to accept the responsibility for the economic policies of the government, or any responsibility for constitutional policies in view of his stand on the Pepin-Robarts reform. But I want to put exactly the same question to the Minister of State since he gave no reply to my other questions. I asked whether the government is in a position to say whether or not the rate of inflation will go down in November or December and, if not, whether the government has dropped the forecasts made in the budget. The questions are simple and I would appreciate a simple answer.

Mr. Bussières: Madam Speaker, I know the Leader of the Opposition has a gift for simplification. He carried his simplification to simplism, which explains why he so resoundingly lost his elections. I should like to point out to him that on the government side, whether it be the Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport, a minister of state or any other minister, we are all of one mind with regard to the constitution and the economy. I should also like to remind him that, with any forecast, no matter which, and especially in the field of economy, one must be very prudent. By their very nature, forecasts are fragile. I indicated a while ago that the government is intent upon fighting inflation. I also said last week, in a reply to another hon. member, that the government does not want to do it alone but wants all other agents of the economy to join in its efforts, and in the effort to stay within the figures forecast.

* * *

ENERGY

ASSISTANCE TO LOW-INCOME CANADIANS TO MEET HIGH ENERGY COSTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have noted that following the statement of opposition concerning the constitution, the hon. member for Montmorency failed to applaud, although I have not received a simple reply from the Minister of State for Finance.

[English]

In light of the fact that we have now had an increase in the cost of living which renders inapplicable the projections in the budget regarding the cost of living, and given the fact that those have occurred without feeling the full impact of energy price increases, I wonder if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, either in his capacity as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or in his capacity as the author of the budget, will tell us whether the government is now in a position to accept the need for an energy tax credit which will help those low-income Canadians who are most severely affected by the increases in the cost of energy meet those costs. Can we have an answer from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

● (1120)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am sorry, Madam Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition went into a very long exposé, and I did not know that in the middle of his exposé he switched directions from the Minister of State for Finance to myself. I ask him, please, to repeat the question.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, there is no question that whatever length my question the minister will exceed it in his response.

I would like the minister to tell us whether the government is now prepared to consider some equivalent of an energy tax credit for low-income Canadians, given the fact that the cost of living has already gone up beyond the levels forecast by the budget and before the full impact of the energy price increases which this minister is intending for the people of Canada is felt.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Finance has indicated in the House several times, the impact of the budget as far as energy costs are concerned will be very substantially lower than that which had been planned under the Conservative budget of last December. As a matter of fact, if we take the case of an average family in eastern Canada, for instance, in order to have an equivalent cost to the same family, including the tax credit proposed by the Conservatives, it would require a family with two parents and 16 children. That would reach the same level as will be provided by our budget, in the sense that budget costs in terms of families will be substantially lower than they would have been under the Conservative budget.

With respect to measures affecting low-income groups, the federal government took steps last summer, well ahead of the budget, to provide for a very significant increase of $35 a month, which is the equivalent of about—

Mr. Blenkarn: Ha!

Mr. Lalonde: My hon. friend opposite laughs at the help being provided to senior citizens. I do not think senior citizens laugh at the situation. They have $35 a month under the GIS provided by this government as a first step.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROPOSED SHARED COST PROGRAM TO MEET RISING ENERGY COSTS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I do not think the senior citizens or any citizens of this country are laughing. They are crying over the pitiful performance which is going on here today. I will ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in the absence of the Prime Minister, "Saudy-Trudy", in view of the silence of the Deputy Prime Minister, who will not answer questions.

Last year average family purchasing power fell 4 per cent, according to Statistics Canada, as a result of inflation, and there has just been a monthly increase of 9.2 per cent in the cost of heating oils from September to October and an increase of 24.5 per cent from October of last year to October of this year. In view of these facts and the very regressive actions of this government, is the government going to give a favourable response to the government of Ontario, which has called on the federal government to join it in a shared cost program to provide relief from rising energy costs for people on fixed and low incomes?

Will there be an affirmative response in light of these frightening facts? Never mind the nonsense about what went on in the PC budget. It was not passed. The people of Canada are interested in what is happening now under the Liberal budget and the Liberal government today.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I remind the hon. member that in the preamble to his question he complained about the fall in the average income of families last year. I need not remind him who was in office last year and did nothing about it at that time.

● (1125)

So far as this year is concerned, and referring to the specific question raised by the hon. member, indeed we are quite ready to share in a joint program with the government of Ontario. As a matter of fact, we are quite ready to share with the governments of all the provinces. Not only are we willing to share in this program, there is a program in existence at present in which exactly this is provided for. Its name is the Canada assistance plan, for which the Minister of National Health and Welfare is responsible, and in this plan we are providing 50 per cent of all the costs of social assistance in this country for families in need. That has been provided by this government and this Parliament for many years and we are going to continue to support such programs to help families in need.

In addition, as I indicated, we took steps well before the budget was brought down to help senior citizens in need by adding $35 a month to the incomes of all senior citizens who are benefiting from the guaranteed income supplement.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the minister's contempt for lower-income people in this country is stupendous. We are not just talking about people who are receiving assistance because they are on welfare. We are talking about lower-income people who make under $20,000 a year and who are working, as well as those who are receiving assistance under the Canada assistance plan. Our question to the minister is very direct. Given the fact that heating fuel oil costs, as one example, which strike the poor and lower-income people more than any other aspect of energy costs, have already risen 24 per cent this year and it is forecast in the budget of the Minister of Finance that energy costs will go up 21.95 per cent next year, is the government going to introduce a program, energy tax credit, call it what you will, either in association with the provinces or not—and it should not be because this should be a federal government program to help lower—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You were the people who caused the situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to formulate his question now.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the people to our left scuppered the lower-income people of this country. Will this government now give an affirmative answer to the province of Ontario and introduce relief from rising energy costs for people on fixed and low incomes? Never mind present programs; I am referring to a new program today.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I do not know where exactly the hon. member is getting his figures, but consumer price index figures for the month of October, 1980, indicate that the rise in energy costs in September was 6 per cent.

Mr. Crosbie: It was 9.2 per cent for fuel oil.

Mr. Lalonde: Since October, 1979, it has been 18.2 per cent. I am quoting Statistics Canada figures. I suggest the hon. member check his figures very carefully. Second, we have already indicated that for an average family the savings arising out of our budget as compared with the Conservative budget of last year amounted to as much as $1,000 per family.

Mr. Crosbie: Who cares?

Mr. Lalonde: These have been measures which have been taken in the last budget to help Canadian families. That amount is substantially lower than any benefit that would have been provided by the Conservative government. We have acted to provide for decreases in the price of energy which are fair to the consumers of Canada and to the families of Canada.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR TAX CREDIT TO OFFSET COST OF LIVING INCREASE

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker—

An hon. Member: Now you will hear the truth!

Mr. Rae: —perhaps if the minister had a standard of comparison different from the last Conservative budget, he might find himself being a little less complacent about the finances of Canadians.

I should like to address a question to the Minister of State for Finance. The hard fact remains that with today's increase in the cost of living, which marks the third year in a row that there has been a real decline in the standard of living of the average Canadian, and with the statement in the budget by the Minister of Finance that Canadians will have to learn to accept the real income consequences of higher energy price increases, I should like to ask the minister—quite apart from comparing his budget to the budget which never happened—how he can justify over a three-year period, now a four-year period or indeed a five-year period, the lack of a cost of living tax credit for the average and lower-income Canadians in this country at a time when they see the cost of living going through the roof? How can he justify that in absolute terms, rather than in comparative terms with what may or may not have happened a year ago?

● (1130)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Madam Speaker, in his question the right hon. gentleman failed to mention certain facts. For instance, he failed to mention that by indexing the income tax schedule the government makes it possible for Canadian taxpayers to recuperate millions of dollars in purchasing power, which is in fact recovered from the cost of living increase. He failed also to mention that the government regularly indexes such programs as the family allowance program. Again, in his question, he failed to mention that the government, through the Department of National Health and Welfare, has implemented the child tax credit program to assist families with many children. The indexing of the old age security pension and of the garanteed income supplement are steps the government has taken to assist Canadians to cope with the rising cost of living.

[English]

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, the minister has failed to recognize the simple fact that for three years people have been falling behind the cost of living, and now we can anticipate another three or perhaps five years of exactly the same thing happening, with no compensation from the government.

My supplementary question is directed to the same minister. We are suffering an 11 per cent inflation rate and our economy is working at 80 per cent capacity. I wonder if the minister can explain to the House how a continuation of the same policies of high interest rates and stagnant tax policies will get Canadians out of the bog in which they find themselves, when it is exactly those policies which got them into the bog in the first place, policies which were continued by the Tories when they were in government and are being continued today by the Liberal government?

Mr. Crosbie: They are your party; you put them there.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate that the hon. member has misread the excellent budget tabled by the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. Had he read it properly, he would realize that we are continuing our fight against inflation, establishing a solid base from which to strengthen our economy and especially that we are inviting all Canadians to take up the challenge of energy self-sufficiency and, in that way, to activate our economic development through the injection of billion dollar investments in the field of energy.

[English]

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, I have read the budget. We have all read the budget. The fact is that the government opposite has quite simply cooked the books. They produced figures in October which predicted a rate of inflation of 9.7 per cent, and it is running at 10.9 per cent. They said that energy increases would be 15.6 per cent, and they are running at 18.2 per cent. They said that food would be at 10.1 per cent, and now it is at 12.7 per cent. A budget was produced in October with statements as to what the rate of inflation would be over the next two years, and a month later those figures have been shown to be totally and completely inaccurate. I see the minister shaking his head; they are completely and totally inaccurate. How could the minister expect any reputable person to expect any degree of honesty or credibility from the government, with respect to the economic statistics it is producing, when we see in fact that the figures are completely and totally inaccurate and do not reflect at all what is really going on in the Canadian economy?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate that the hon. member feels that his need for rhetoric and for projecting a solid image as a politician must overshadow his knowledge and intelligence. The hon. member is trying to draw long-term conclusions from a figure which applies to only one month or one quarter of a year. He must consider the figures for a longer period, and he should also know that, with the action it is taking, the government will stay within its projected limits because, contrary to the opposition, we believe that all sectors of the economy, all Canadians, will support the government's action and fight against inflation in order to bring the cost of living index back to more reasonable levels.

[English]

INCREASED COST OF FOOD—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns the cost of food. What cost $100 in 1971 now costs Canadians $217.30. The minister claims that he does not understand macroeconomics, so I will keep it simple. What a dollar bought in 1971 now costs $2.17. Consumers have been hit that much in their shopping baskets in the past nine years. Since the energy prices have not had a chance to work their way through the system yet, I want to ask the minister what steps the government plans to take to offset these inevitable, further shocking increases in the cost of food?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, it is clear that the hon. member like other members before him is trying to be selective in his choice of figures and to stress their incidence on the consumer price index in a devious fashion and with distortion. The hon. member should mention rising wages over the last ten years and he would realize that indeed the average Canadian worker still makes more money at the end of each month in spite of his expenses than he did some ten years ago.

[English]

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I say to the minister, ask the consumers who are checking out at supermarket counters if the prices they are paying are a distortion. The minister can ask them what they think about the increase in the cost of living under this Liberal government. In 1972, when the Liberal government was faced with rapidly rising food prices, it introduced a consumer subsidy on milk and bread. The government responded then. If the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is really sincere in protecting the consumer, how will he help Canadians, especially those on fixed incomes, cope with 1980-style cost of food?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, it is obvious that periodically the Canadian government announces programs designed to help Canadian consumers. I think that the budget of the Minister of Finance exemplifies the desire of the government to protect Canadian consumers. When we think of the disastrous consequences that could have resulted from the budget of the previous government, it is clear that the situation of the Canadian consumer today would be much worse than it is now.

* * *

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

ALLEGED FRAUDULENT COLLECTION OF BENEFITS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask a question concerning a matter which I think is quite serious and has probably received discussion in the full cabinet of the government, although the minister responsible is not here today. It concerns the implications of the testimony given at a trial here in Ottawa involving a man named Hawley Black who was charged with defrauding the UIC. I should like to ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister, the Acting Minister of Employment and Immigration, or whoever wishes to answer.

Mr. Yvon Charlebois, the executive director of the UIC, indicated in the course of that trial among other things that the Auditor General's projected figure of $290 million in overpayments of UIC benefits because of fraud or lack of control was only accurate, "give or take $100 million".

Mr. McGrath: Unbelievable!

Mr. MacKay: He also indicated instances where 109 SIN cards were in the possession of a man in Calgary who had filed 59 claims with the UIC, two people in Montreal had 60 SIN cards and over two months collected $32,000, and there were other incidents. In view of those facts, I want to know what is being done in addition to the minister's statement on April 16.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. MacKay: I will come to the question. I want to ask the government, the Acting Prime Minister or some minister what is being done to ensure that fraudulent practice which is costing so much money is stopped and the money allocated to people who really need it.

[Translation]

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as was pointed out by the hon. member, the case of Mr. Black does demonstrate that departmental security forces and inspectors can monitor such incidents and this is why Mr. Black is now before the courts and why there was a trial.

With respect to the efforts made by the department, last year's report from the Auditor General clearly indicated there was progress made by the Department of Employment and Immigration in monitoring frauds, and the case raised by the hon. member shows that the department can protect its interests.

● (1140)

[English]

INQUIRY WHETHER ALLEGED FRAUDULENT ACTS DELIBERATE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General, but before I put that question may I point out to the hon. member opposite that that is exactly what did not happen. Mr. Black was not caught by benefit control procedures; he was caught by accident as a result of another matter entirely unrelated to this one, as the hon. member will see if he reads the evidence.

Since Mr. Black is a journalist and used to work in the Solicitor General's department, and since there is some evidence that he did this in a deliberate way to expose this particular shortcoming of the UIC, I would like to ask the Solicitor General whether the hon. gentleman or the Minister of Justice is taking into account whether or not a public service was performed by Mr. Black. Will there be any representations made with respect to sentence in terms of an absolute or partial discharge, taking into acccount all the circumstances? I assume the Solicitor General, in view of the magnitude of this case, is familiar with it.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): I am familiar with the case and there will not be any special representation made on his behalf.

* * *

PETRO-CANADA

CONSTRUCTION OF OIL DRILLING RIG

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it is related to Petro-Canada and marine construction. The president of Petro-Canada announced in Halifax the construction of a $100 million offshore oil drilling rig and said it would be built in Atlantic Canada, but the people in Atlantic Canada are concerned about the ability of our east coast shipyards to perform such a project. Will the minister indicate what steps he is taking to ensure that this Canadian energy project will benefit Canadian shipyards and will not result in further exportation of marine construction work to countries like Norway?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, this is a subject which I have had the opportunity of discussing with the president of Petro-Canada on several occasions over the last few months. I indicated to him the very significant importance that the Government of Canada attaches to such equipment being built in Canada, in so far as it can be built in this country. The president of Petro-Canada indicated at the time that he would make sure this would, indeed, be a very high priority with the corporation. I think the announcement that he made in Halifax indicates clearly that Petro-Canada has that very much in mind. Again, it is another clear indication of the major role that Petro-Canada can play in the energy field, and in the oil and gas field in particular. I am glad the hon. member is supporting the role of Petro-Canada, contrary to the past attitude of his party in this respect.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROGRESS OF FRIGATE PROGRAM

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, time will tell whether the minister's assurances are worth while and if the work will be carried out in Canada.

My supplementary question deals with marine construction also and it is for the Minister of National Defence. People in eastern Canada are equally concerned about the progress of the Canadian frigate program. There are rumours that the program may be scrapped. Would the minister give us assurances that the Canadian frigate program is proceeding on schedule and that the course of action which he indicated earlier in this House with respect to a development program, followed by a construction date, will still be adhered to? Can he assure us that the work involved in the frigate program will go to Canadian shipyards?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am sorry. I was distracted and would ask the hon. member to repeat his question.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

An hon. Member: He doesn't even listen to his questions.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, I appreciate that the minister was deep in thought; I hope he was thinking about the Canadian frigate program. My question was: Will he assure the House that the Canadian frigate program is on schedule, and that the work involved will be done in Canadian shipyards by Canadians?

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the frigate program is well under way. There has been no undue delay. Decisions will be taken in the same way as they were taken with respect to the NFA and other matters related to defence.

* * *

HOUSING

ACTION TO STABILIZE MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I hope the members opposite are awake for this question since Canadians are fed up with the high cost of housing.

In the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is for the minister responsible for CMHC. The Economic Council of Canada estimates that housing prices have increased 130 per cent over the last decade, while the over-all cost of living rose by approximately 86 per cent. It is forecast that housing prices will rise between 14 per cent and 19 per cent in this coming year, which is well above the over-all cost of living and is far too high. In British Columbia's lower mainland the cost of houses is going up $10,000 every month.

In the absence of the Minister of Finance, will the minister pressure and convince the cabinet and the Minister of Finance that a general lowering and stabilization of interest rates must be established in order to put downward pressure on mortgage costs, which will allow our construction industry to get back to work and produce affordable housing with lower interest rates for Canadians?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would be happy to pass the representations made by the hon. member to the Minister of Finance. I would like to indicate that, in response to submissions made by hon. members opposite, including herself, the government has already acted in specific measure earlier this year to increase social housing starts by an additional 5,000 and to increase the subsidy in the rehabilitation program. In addition, there was the provision in the budget addressing the question of multiple unit construction with the $15 million MURBs subsidy program.

Mrs. Mitchell: My supplementary question is for the same minister. Since to date only 55 AHOP home owners have taken advantage of the government's graduated mortgage payment plan—this limited assistance is obviously not meeting the needs of Canadians—can the minister tell us how many homes are now owned by CMHC because of defaulted mortgages and the reclaiming of AHOP houses? Will he press the cabinet, which we know really does not care about housing, to take steps to correct this situation by ensuring that lending institutions set aside a certain proportion of their lending portfolios so Canadians can get mortgages at rates they can afford?

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, I will take this opportunity to remind the hon. member that in May, at the recommendation of the Minister of Finance earlier this year, I met with the representatives of major lending institutions, including banks, mortgage companies and private mortgage insurers, to communicate just that thought, that assistance to the home owners facing mortgage renewal should be accommodated. They have responded and a number of companies are extending amortization periods and dropping the term of a mortgage. So we are concerned about housing. We have taken steps to react to the representations that the hon. member has requested.

* * *

ENERGY CONSERVATION

SUGGESTED LOWERING OF HIGHWAY SPEED LIMIT

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the threat of diminished availability of oil supplied by Alberta, and in order to conserve energy while at the same time decreasing substantially injuries and death on our roads, would the minister, in conjunction with his provincial counterparts, consider lowering the speed limit, which although it is 100 kilometres per hour legally is not being respected on our highways?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. It is, indeed, a very valuable and worth-while suggestion. I must inform him, however, that this matter has been raised repeatedly with provincial ministers at federal-provincial conferences, and while the ministers of energy were generally supportive of such a move, it would appear that some other provincial ministers, whether provincial ministers of transport or from other departments, were not as eager to act on this subject as some of the provincial ministers of energy would wish them to be. I can only tell the hon. member that I hope the provincial governments concerned will reconsider the situation and give favourable support to his suggestion.

* * *

● (1150)

HOUSING

SHELTER ALLOWANCE FOR LOW AND AVERAGE INCOME FAMILIES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Public Works responsible for housing. A recent study by the city of Vancouver planning department estimates that 25 per cent of city housing, or 40,000 households, are experiencing some form of serious housing problem. In addition, with the effective vacancy rate at zero, some people are living on the beaches, on the steps of city hall and in buildings that are slated for demolition. Since the MURBs program announced in the federal budget will only offer relief to those people who can afford to pay $1200 per month rent—which is the average advertised price for a two-bedroom townhouse in my riding—will the minister tell the House what relief he plans in the form of shelter allowances for low and average income families?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question, I should like to indicate that it was as a result of the conditions she has described that the Minister of Finance reintroduced the MURB provision, with the hope that it would address the problem directly or that there would be an indirect impact which would assist the people she has identified.

I would also draw to the attention of the hon. member a report that she should be thankful was not adopted by this government. It is a secret report prepared for the former Conservative government called the Matthews report which, in addition to recommending cancellation of the community services program, identified the non-profit and rental housing markets as areas to be totally dissociated from funding by CMHC. We should be thankful that the programs outlined in this document are not in place today because they certainly would not help the people that the hon. member appears to be concerned about today.

An hon. Member: That is shameful.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister. I can advise him that the report he refers to was not adopted. The report with which I am dealing shows that 28,000 of those 40,000 Vancouver households have inadequate income which, of course, is defined as 30 per cent of gross income spent on shelter, and therefore they cannot qualify for mortgages. Since the average price of a home on the lower mainland is $120,000 or roughly twice the national average, and since a buyer requires an income of $36,000 per year in order to qualify for a $75,000 mortgage at 14 per cent, what meaningful assistance does the minister propose to give first time home buyers?

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, there is in place already, of course, a plan which permits first time purchasers of homes to set aside $1,000 per year for a five-year period with tax relief in order to assist them in achieving their first down payment. Secondly, in response to that target group, the 5,000 increase in social units that I announced this year was in addition to an existing 25,000 unit commitment across the country. That program is in place and it will continue over the next few years. From personal experience I know that it is addressing specifically some of the problems that the hon. member has raised today.

* * *

GRAIN

WHEAT—RELUCTANCE TO INCREASE INITIAL PRICE

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport who responds for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In response to a question put to him yesterday by the hon. member for Vegreville, the Minister of Transport indicated that it was not the intention of the Canadian Wheat Board to increase the initial price for Canadian red spring and durum wheat. I am sure the minister is aware that there is approximately a $3 spread between the asking price of the Wheat Board and the initial price. Can the minister assure western grain producers that the Canadian Wheat Board is in fact selling grain at or near the asking price and, if this is so, why is there a reluctance to increase the initial price?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, yesterday I tried to explain that there is a time lapse between the rise in the price of grain internationally—about which we are very pleased indeed—and the actual effect of this increase on the accounts of the Canadian Wheat Board. The Minister of State keeps reviewing these things constantly and it is believed that, with the final payments which are due in January next, there will be ample opportunity to make the necessary adjustment in an orderly way.

INITIAL PRICE—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, that certainly does not help the western grain producer.

Mr. Pepin: It is money in the bank.

Mr. Neil: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. I think he was in the House yesterday and would have heard the exchange of questions on this subject. In view of the fact that the western grain producers have commitments to meet in the way of payments on land, equipment and other operating expenses, and are also faced with very high interest rates, will the minister make representations to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and ask him to reconsider his decision not to raise the initial price?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and I have constant discussions about the problems we face. We will be discussing these matters, and as the Minister of Transport has stated, they will be considered at the proper time.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO RESIDENTS TO MEET INCREASED COSTS

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Before the budget was introduced the Minister of Finance indicated that the government would help those who needed it most. Northern residents are paying four times as much for food as Canadians in the south. For example, a litre of not very fresh milk in Pond Inlet costs $3.60. This is in a part of the country where liquor is the only government subsidized consumer item!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Ittinuar: What specific plans does the government have to help residents of northern Canada cope with the highest cost of living in the country?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member may be aware, we adopted a policy that would further extend the moratorium on the taxation of northern benefits for a period of one year. This was at the request of many people in the north. In addition to that, my colleagues, the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Finance and I indicated that we would use the period while the moratorium is in effect to try to work out other policies to alleviate high costs in the north. That study will go on while the moratorium is in existence, and I hope it will give some considerable relief.

There have been other benefits of a nature that I think the hon. member might be aware of in terms of fuel costs as a result of previous government policies.

* * *

ENERGY

COST OF OIL FOR NORTHERN RESIDENTS

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. There is nothing new in what the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has said. The only tax breaks for people in the north are those given to multinational corporations and not to northern residents.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No.

Mr. Ittinuar: For instance, in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, and in fact in the northern parts of most provinces, oil costs over $2 per gallon. In these areas oil is used to generate electricity. Can the minister explain why oil prices are being cushioned in the Atlantic provinces while residents of northern Canada are left to fend for themselves?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is misinformed about the situation. The cushioning that is taking place in eastern Canada is exactly the same as that which takes place in the north. The basic price for oil across this country is the same, but obviously there are additional costs related to transportation and expenses of that kind. There is no special program for eastern Canada or one that does not apply equally to residents of the north.

I should also like to inform the hon. member that under the national energy program, which I hope he will support, we have provided for special measures to help the people of the north in terms of insulation programs and conservation. I have already announced that there will be special community projects through which will be developed high energy-efficient houses in the north.

• (1200)

I also want to tell the hon. member that the benefits in the north under our program are going to go to Canadian companies, not to multinationals. As a matter of fact, those which will be 75 per cent Canadian-owned will get tremendous benefits compared to the multinationals that are working in the area. I suggest to my hon. friend that he read "The National Energy Program", and once he has read it he will probably not rise to ask such misinformed questions.

* * *

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

INQUIRY RESPECTING AVAILABILITY OF DETAILS TO HOME OWNERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the tremendous interest generated in the country by the national energy program, and especially the policy to provide grants of up the $800 to convert oil furnaces to natural gas, electricity or renewable energy sources, can the minister say when the details of this program will be spelled out so that home owners will be able to take maximum advantage of this imaginative program?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there are discussions taking place with provincial governments at the present time. Some of those discussions have been going on for several weeks. I hope we will arrive at arrangements with all provinces very soon as to how the program will be worked out, especially concerning conversion to electricity.

As far as conversion to gas is concerned, it is quite clear that this program will be available to every house converting from oil to gas or to other forms of energy, such as wood. Commencing October 28 we are asking residents of the various provinces to keep their receipts. However, the details of the program have not been completely worked out with the provinces as yet, but if residents keep their receipts we will make sure that as soon as the application forms are available they will be able to apply and get the information.

IMMEDIATE AND FUTURE USE OF PROGRAM

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources; it is actually supplementary to the question just posed. As well as waiting for the details which the minister is talking about in discussions with the provinces, there are two special parts to that program which people need to understand before they can take any advantage of it at all. First, so that people can start conversions now and take advantage of the program, can he tell us whether or not there will be an opportunity for people to make partial use of that program now and defer some of it to future years? Furnaces converted to gas do not make a lot of sense when we know that a year or two down the road there will be more efficient furnaces available. Maybe burner replacement is appropriate now.

Second, if a person just uses a heater—in other words, he only partially converts his home to electricity and so has an oil furnace as well—will this also qualify under the program?

Finally, I presume the minister of finance of Ontario has read the minister's energy program and the recently released budget papers, but he has asked for special consideration for the people of Ontario who are faced with increasing costs for heating oil this winter. Is the minister considering a special program as well at the present time?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am not in a position immediately to answer all the questions raised by the hon. member. As to the first two questions, I will inquire as to the state of discussions with the various provinces to find out whether the view of the provinces is that we could go for such partial conversion as the hon. member has mentioned, and I will be very happy to give him an answer some time next week.

As far as the latter part of the hon. member's question is concerned, we do not foresee any special program in addition to those we have announced in the budget.

* * *

ENERGY

PROPOSED SHARED COST PROGRAM TO MEET RISING ENERGY COSTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns a contradiction which appears to exist between himself and the Minister of Finance over the question of additional assistance to low-income families hit by rising home heating costs. On November 4 when I asked the Minister of Finance whether or not there would be support for low-income families who would be further burdened by increases in the cost of home heating fuel, he said as reported in Hansard at page 4405:

> We will do our part in co-operation with provincial governments, which have to take the initiative in the first instance. If the hon. member is concerned, she might join with the rest of us in asking various provinces to take a more accommodating attitude toward these particular groups.

"These particular groups" refers to low-income groups. The Minister of Finance has said that if a province would come forward with an initiative, the federal government would be prepared to respond. The Ontario government has done that. Is the minister of energy now about to contradict the position taken by his colleague, or will he announce this morning that he will indeed enter into the shared cost program which the government of Ontario has proposed?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there is absolutely no contradiction between what I said earlier and what the Minister of Finance has indicated. In fact, the minister stated that there were now certain programs to help low-income families. This is particularly true of the Canada Assistance Plan for which the government has a 50 per cent cost sharing agreement. The benefits granted under these programs are determined by the provinces and not by the federal government. The Minister of Finance clearly stated that if the provinces were to take action to improve the benefits under existing assistance programs for which the Canadian government pays 50 per cent of the cost, the Canadian government would of course co-operate fully with the provinces. However, this is obviously up to the provincial governments involved. As I stated earlier, the federal government has in addition taken certain initiatives to help people through the guaranteed income supplement by increasing the benefits last summer by $420 a year per family.

* * *

[English]

BANKRUPTCIES

ASTRA TRUST COMPANY—DEPOSITS IN UNITED STATES CURRENCY

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. It has to do with the Astra Trust bankruptcy. We know that people who have investments of under $20,000 a year are covered by the guarantees of the government. However, will the people who have U.S. currency funds on deposit be covered in like manner? If not, what will be done for those people who are Canadian citizens and have deposits of U.S. currency?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Madam Speaker, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation does not cover foreign currency deposits with institutions covered by Canadian deposit insurance, just as it does not cover the $20,000 supplement for such deposits. For people who have made deposits in foreign currencies or who have deposit supplements of $20,000, the hon. member should know that the Superintendent of Insurance is now disposing of the Astra Trust Company assets and that the revenues accruing from this disposal could eventually be used when the procedures are completed to cover, on the one hand, excess deposits over $20,000 and, on the other hand, the type of deposits mentioned by the hon. member, namely, foreign currency deposits.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE USE OF "BRAS D'OR" AS COMMERCIAL FERRY OPERATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence. It is my understanding that a private commercial hydrofoil enterprise has operated successfully between Toronto and Niagara-on-the-Lake for the last two seasons. It has operated three hydrofoils, providing three flights a day, each having the capacity to carry 200 people. In view of these facts, would the Minister of National Defence give consideration to turning over the Bras d'Or, presently sitting in dry dock, to the CNR or to a commercial enterprise to be used as a commercial hydrofoil operating, say, between Shelburne, Nova Scotia and the New England states, realizing that modifications would have to be made to conform the military configurations to a design more suitable for commercial operations?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of all the details which the hon. member has mentioned, but I assure him that I will look into the matter and try to give him satisfactory answers to all of his queries.

Mr. Crouse: Madam Speaker, would the minister inform the House whether the Toronto operators of the three hydrofoils have contracted his department about the possibility of purchasing the Bras d'Or for their commercial operations? If so, will he instead consider the possibility of making the ship available to Nova Scotia in order that we may assist our tourist industry by operating this ship on a commercial basis between Nova Scotia and the United States?

• (1210)

Mr. Lamontagne: This kind of request really does not come under my ministry, but I am interested in it. I think the question is important. If we can help in the matter the hon. member has brought forward, we will be glad to do so.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAWRENCE—USE OF ALLEGED SECRET REPORT BY MR. COSGROVE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do so at the earliest possible time. It relates to the actions and the words of the Minister of Public Works responsible for housing (Mr. Cosgrove) during the question period today. I say actions in that the minister waved before this House some documentation which he referred to as a secret report prepared for a minister in a previous administration. He then attempted to summarize or make reference to some of the alleged contents of that report.

My question of privilege is twofold. First, under those circumstances the Chair should now order the minister to table the report because he referred to it, referred to its contents, and referred in a brief way at least to a summary of it. My second point in rising at this time is to give you notice so that the rights of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and members of the Privy Council on this side of the House may be protected, and we can rise at a future time, relating to a far deeper principle which is embodied in the traditions of British parliamentary democracy and, in fact, is even in written form as far as convention is concerned.

You, Madam Speaker, and the members of this House should be aware, if you are not, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Right Hon. member for Mount Royal, undertook in writing to the Leader of the Opposition, the right hon. member for Yellowhead, as indeed did the previous holders of the office of Prime Minister of Canada to each successor as an administration changed between different political parties, to set up a system whereby certain reports, cabinet documentation and ministerial documents could only be released, indeed could only be shown to members of a new administration when certain procedures relating to representation by the previous administration could then take place.

This is an extremely serious matter where we have a member of the present administration not only referring to it but actually having that type of report, if it is the type of report I believe it to be, and the only way we can find that out is for the Chair to order the minister to table it, as under the rules of the House he should be required to do in any event. This is a very deep principle. Under these circumstances I want to reserve, on the part of my leader and members on this side of the House, the right to raise this question of privilege at a later date.

Madam Speaker: If I understand correctly, the hon. member is deferring the questions of privilege on the more fundamental matter. He is now asking for the minister to table the report to which he referred in the course of an answer during question period. According to our rules, a minister referring to a document is not obligated to table it unless he quotes from it.

Mr. Lawrence: He summarized it.

Madam Speaker: A summary can be interpreted as a reference to the document. Under our Standing Orders I have no authority to force the minister to table the document. That is up to the minister if he wishes to do so. I do take notice that the hon. member will raise a question of privilege at a later date on the more fundamental question.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, on this question of privilege which was just raised, I only want to say on a point of order without in any way—

Mr. Cosgrove: On a point of order—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rose on a point of order and that is why I recognized him before recognizing the minister who, I presume, wants to reply to the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence). I can entertain a point of order before hearing the minister, and I hope it is a point of order.

Mr. MacKay: I think it is a point of order, Madam Speaker. If I understand what my colleague said, this was referred to as a "secret report". I have some knowledge of this report as I was the minister for whom it was prepared. There was never any intention to keep it secret. Indeed, it was about to be released. I believe it is already public. This in no way undermines the argument of my colleague who pointed out very correctly the conventions and restrictions which have been agreed upon.

The minister in charge of housing was not only exaggerating when he referred to a secret nature, he failed to emphasize it was just a component of a policy we were studying at that point. To that extent, I hope he inadvertently misled the House. To refer to this document as if it were the be all and end all on housing policy is simply not true, and the minister knows that.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): To assist the House, Madam Speaker, I was indeed referring to the document referred to by the hon. member who spoke last. It is a document dated October 26, 1979. It came to my attention two days after assuming responsibility for this portfolio. It was published in the Ottawa Journal and has subsequently been discussed at length in many forms by the chairman who submitted the report, Mr. Matthews. It is commonly known as the Matthews report and is in wide circulation. My reference to it as a secret document was that it was prepared in October and not released by the government, but released by the press. I responded to it in a public way after it was brought to my attention in that fashion.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, will the minister permit a question since it is obvious he is not going to exercise his prerogative and table the report. He did indicate it is a public report, and he did say it was a secret report. My colleague said in that respect the minister misled the House. Will he now tell the House what is the classification, if any, on the document?

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, before this matter is finally settled, either by the Chair or by the minister, I invite those who might look into it to study a similar incident not long ago, in 1957.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: I was only nine years old, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles: And you were smarter then than you are now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: The then prime minister of the day, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, flourished what he called a secret report. I believe it had been prepared by Mitchell Sharp who, in those days, was a bureaucrat. It had to do with the economy. Because it was flourished and because the then prime minister was claiming that he had it, he was required to table it. It could be that he was required and it could be that he volunteered. Certainly I remember that it was tabled. When I went to the Hansard office to look at my remarks, I discovered that the top page, the page on which it had been marked "Secret and Confidential", had been torn off. Just a little bit of blue was under the staple. Both the minister and Your Honour might check the record of 1957 to see what was done then, whether it was done voluntarily by the prime minister, or whether the Chair ruled that the report had to be tabled. Of course, at that point the document was secret and it had not yet been leaked. But the leaking of documents seems to occur quite frequently these days.

● (1220)

While I am referring to leaked documents and reports, I must ask the question: why is it that leaked reports are always in English only?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I will look into the precedent and see whether this was done voluntarily or not, but for the time being it is quite clear from Beauchesne's that a public document referred to but not cited or quoted by a minister need not be tabled. That does not mean that the minister could not table that document at some later date. But if the House is now asking me—not the hon. member who just spoke but the hon. member before him—to force the minister to table the document, I do not have that authority.

Mr. Lawrence: Further to my question of privilege, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: The hon. member cannot speak twice on a question of privilege. I understand that he will raise a more fundamental question of privilege at a later date. Is my understanding of the hon. member's position correct? That is the only question I will ask the hon. member to answer now, but I cannot hear him again on the same question of privilege.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, this may all amount to a molehill instead of a mountain, now that we have had a description of the report, but I would draw to your attention that in actual fact the minister quoted directly from the document in his second intervention. He stood up, lifted the document, turned the page, and said that he was referring to a report dated such and such. That must be a direct quotation.

If the minister referred only to the month or the year, then obviously it was not a quotation, but he referred to the specific date.

Mr. Kempling: He read the date.

Mr. Lawrence: Apart from that, Madam Speaker, this is the type of difficulty which we get into in this House when a minister makes a shoddy, cheap remark such as we have heard today, and waves or attempts to wave some documentation before you and this House, and refers to it generally as "a secret report prepared for the previous government". We now find that the particular document is not a secret report. We now find that it is a report of a task force about which there was a great deal of publicity at the time. It was not a secret report.

As you know, Madam Speaker, I am prevented under the rules of this House from saying to you that the minister lied. I cannot say that, nor am I saying that, but I merely point out that by taking that type of shoddy, cheap action in this House by referring to a document in terms which are absolutely incorrect to the knowledge of the minister, we end up in this type of difficulty.

Mr. Lalonde: You're making a fool of yourself, Allan.

Mr. Lawrence: This situation occurred because there was not proper identification of the document by the minister. It is a serious matter. If the rules of this House do not call for the tabling of a report when reference is made to that report, particularly by a minister in terms such as we heard today, then obviously those rules should be changed and are wrong. I bring this matter to your attention, Madam Speaker, because otherwise no one in this House except the minister would know the particular report to which he was referring. Thank God we had an ex-minister in the House who was able to identify the report.

However, under such circumstances on another occasion there may not be someone to identify the particular document. I merely bring that to the attention of the Chair. I continue to reserve the right, as a member on this side, to bring this matter to your attention at a later date as a question of privilege because it was a report which was obviously prepared by a previous administration for a previous minister, which the minister did not make public. Therefore, I reserve the right to bring this question of privilege to the House at a later date, as it may well be contravention of the undertaking given to the previous administration by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Madam Speaker: The hon. member's point is that because the minister indicated the date the report was written it constitutes a quotation. It seems to me that that is not a quotation. The date, as has been indicated, helps hon. members in the House to determine the report to which the minister was referring. It could be part of the title. The date of the report does not constitute a quotation, and on those grounds I cannot accept the hon. member's argument. But I take notice of his question of privilege which he intends to raise at a later date.

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, in an attempt to assist you and hon. members of the House, I would like to table a copy of the report which has been referred to in the discussion. I do not have the English version with me. That will be filed later this afternoon.

MR. CROSBIE—STATEMENT MADE DURING QUESTION PERIOD BY MR. LALONDE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege deals with a reply to a question which I asked earlier today of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). The minister made a misstatement, probably inadvertently. I have with me the Consumer Price Index from Statistics Canada for October, 1980. I refer to the heading "Fuel Oil and Other Liquid Fuel" on page 12. It indicates there a 9.2 per cent increase in the cost of fuel oil and other liquid fuels for the month of October, and a 24.5 per cent increase from October, 1979, to October, 1980, just as I indicated in my question to the minister.

The minister said at the time that I was mistaken and that the costs had only risen by 6 per cent in the last month. What he was referring to is a 6 per cent increase in energy costs since September, and an 18.2 per cent increase in energy costs over the past 12 months. However, with reference to fuel oil and heating oils which particularly affect lower-income people who spend more of their income on heating fuel than on gasoline or other aspects of energy, the increase in the last month is 9.2 per cent. The increase over the last 12 months is 24.5 per cent.

The future seems extremely grave in view of these recent figures. Of course they point out the need for an energy tax credit or some kind of assistance for lower-income Canadians such as was proposed by our administration, so that they may meet these increasing costs. I would ask the minister to note that his figures were incorrect.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): On the same question of privilege, Madam Speaker, we are both correct because we are talking about two different sets of figures. My hon. friend was talking about the price of fuel oil, and I was talking about the total cost of energy. As a matter of fact, we are quoting from the same document, but we are probably looking at different columns. The record will speak for itself. It will be clear that the figures are correct in both cases. One set of figures refers to the total energy cost and the other set refers to fuel and oil.

With regard to the comment made by the hon. member, I can assure him that the government is very concerned about the impact of these increases on the cost of living and on the cost of energy. This concern was borne in mind when we developed our budget and our energy program, and that is why we have tried to keep the increased costs to the consumer at a lower level than was foreseen in the previous budget introduced by the hon. member. In that sense the Canadian consumer is protected in a very significant way as compared to what he would have paid under the planned budget of the hon. member when he was minister of finance, even with the tax credit.

Mr. Crosbie: Absolute malarkey.

Mr. Lalonde: However, that is more argument than it is privilege.

Madam Speaker: Of course, there is no question of privilege. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) knows that he cannot correct any of the minister's statements in Hansard. That will have to be done by the minister. Through this exchange, the information of both the minister and the hon. member has now been recorded. I remind hon. members that the matter was a point of debate, not a question of privilege.

• (1230)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,060, 1,456, 1,549, 1,606 and 1,625.

[Text]

AMERICAN TOURISTS—CUSTOMS—CAMPING TRAILERS

Question No. 1,060—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Are conflicting answers being given by Canada customs officers to American tourists entering Canada drawing trailers with their vehicles for summer camping purposes and, if so, what are the exact requirements or guidelines that customs officers should follow?

2. Is the government aware that many American tourists have found that they are having problems, particularly if they leave the trailer in Canada for an extended period of time?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): 1 and 2. Under customs law, visitors are entitled to use their vacation trailers in Canada without customs assessment. A number of conditions are stipulated, the most prominent of which requires that the vacation trailer be re-exported at the conclusion of the visit. It has recently been brought to my attention that due to regional differences in interpretation of the term "visit", some American visitors have been allowed to retain their trailers in Canada on a seasonal basis, while others have been advised that the unit must be re-exported each time a return trip is made home. In an effort to achieve uniformity in instances of this nature, instructions are being issued to all offices across Canada outlining the procedure to be followed. Basically, vacationers who will make regular use of their trailers in Canada will be permitted to retain them in this country on a seasonal basis without having to re-export them each time they make a return trip to the United States. Under this procedure, written permission will be given in each instance in the form of a small blue permit which is to be displayed on the trailer while it is in Canada.

RIDEAU CANAL

Question No. 1,456—Mr. Cossitt:

What is a full description of the methods and procedures for the hiring of (a) permanent (b) temporary or seasonal employees on the Rideau Canal?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Rideau Canal conducts its own recruiting for administrative support (clerical) and operational (maintenance) type positions.

(a) Hiring of permanent employees—This includes seasonal employees as under the Public Service Employment

Act and Regulations, there are only two types of employment tenure, term and indeterminate.

Closed or open competition

In the event that attempts to recruit qualified candidates from within the public service are unsuccessful or where it has been determined to be in the best interests of the public service, the responsible staffing officer may, subject to the conditions of delegation, consider recruitment from outside the public service, in accordance with the Public Service Employment Act and Regulations.

(i) Open competitions (open to the public)

People wishing employment at the Rideau Canal must register with the local Canada Employment and Immigration Centre (CEIC), the canal office must go to the local CEIC office for referral of potential candidates. The referred candidates are then interviewed by canal personnel and rated against appropriate selection standards. Qualified candidates are then placed on an eligible list and offered positions as vacancies occur during the time the eligible list is valid, as governed by Public Service Commission Regulations.

NOTE: The Rideau Canal is divided into three administrative districts, e.g., the northern, central and southern regions. The northern region (from Ottawa to Manotick including the cities of Ottawa and Nepean, and the townships of Gloucester, North Gower, Osgoode, Marlborough, South Gower and Oxford) is served by the Canada Employment Centre in Ottawa. The central region (from Burritts Rapids to but not including the Narrows, and including the townships of Marlborough, Oxford, Wolford, Montague, North Elmsley, North Burgess, South Elmsley, South Burgess and Bastard, and the towns of Smiths Falls and Perth) is served by the Canada Employment Centres in Smiths Falls and Perth. The Southern region (from the Narrows to Kingston, the city of Kingston and the townships of north Crosby, south Crosby, rear of Leeds and Lansdowne, Storrington, Pittsburgh and Kingston) is served by the Canada Employment Centre in Kingston.

(ii) Closed competitions (open only to federal employees)

There are two types of closed competitions; local and regional. A local closed competition includes only employees of Rideau Canal. A regional closed competition includes Parks Canada employees, Ontario region, which encompasses the province of Ontario. The area of competition for closed competitions is determined from the "Area of Competition Guidelines" as issued by the Public Service Commission on the basis of three considerations: the organizational unit within which a candidate must be employed in order to be considered; the geographic boundaries of the area of competition; and the occupational group and salary of employees. Closed competitions for employees of Rideau Canal take place when the number of candidates is sufficient to meet the three considerations listed above. Closed competitions are widened to a regional scope when the canal cannot provide sufficient candidates. Closed competitions are extended to other regions and other departments when an insufficient number of candidates is available. The candidates are interviewed by canal personnel and rated against appropriate selection standards. Qualified candidates are placed on an eligible list and offered positions as vacancies occur during the time the eligible list is valid, as governed by the Public Service Commission Regulations.

(b) Hiring of temporary employees (term)

The methods and procedures are the same as in (a) (i) and (a) (ii).

If there is a requirement to staff positions other than those in the administrative support or operational categories described above, it is referred to the regionl office which essentially follows very similar procedures using the Public Service Commission as a central agency instead of the Canada Employment and Immigration Centre.

WORLD WAR II DISABILITY PENSIONERS

Question No. 1,549—Mr. Stevens:

1. For the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1979 (b) 1980, what were the number of World War II disability pensioners by class (1 through 21) for (i) Newfoundland (ii) Nova Scotia (iii) New Brunswick (iv) Prince Edward Island (v) Quebec (vi) Ontario (vii) Manitoba (viii) Saskatchewan (ix) Alberta (x) British Columbia (xi) the city of Calgary (xii) all World War II disability pensioners outside Canada?

2. For the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1979 (b) 1980, what was the total cost of disability pensions for World War II pensioners, by class (1 through 21) for (i) Newfoundland (ii) Nova Scotia (iii) New Brunswick (iv) Prince Edward Island (v) Quebec (vi) Ontario (vii) Manitoba (viii) Saskatchewan (ix) Alberta (x) British Columbia (xi) the city of Calgary (xii) all World War II disability pensioners outside Canada?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): The Canadian Pension Commission does not maintain statistics as to the number of World War II disability pensioners by class (1 through 21) for each province or city. The statistics shown in table I have been compiled using information obtained from Canadian Pension Commission district offices. In some cases district office boundaries do not correspond exactly to provincial borders, e.g., southeastern British Columbia is served by the Calgary office, and the Thunder Bay area of Ontario is served by the Winnipeg office. However, any variation resulting from these overlaps is small. The number of disability pensioners by province, and the total cost of these disability pensions by province for the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1979; and (b) March 31, 1980, are shown in table I. The total number of World War II pensioners by class (1 through 21) for the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1979; and (b) March 31, 1980, are shown in table II.

Table I

Total of World War II pensions by province and total cost by province

Province	March 31, 1979 No.	March 31, 1979 Annual Liability	March 31, 1980 No.	March 31, 1980 Annual Liability
Newfoundland	1,022	$ 3,507,825	1,019	$ 3,821,803
Nova Scotia	6,145	18,522,103	6,154	19,659,223
New Brunswick	4,296	12,174,064	4,267	12,966,530
Prince Edward Island	1,185	3,582,211	1,182	3,843,422
Quebec	10,974	30,738,749	10,783	32,345,237
Ontario	32,018	85,671,139	31,801	91,298,239
Manitoba	7,155	22,078,817	7,021	23,320,330
Saskatchewan	4,057	11,686,833	4,013	12,402,596
Alberta	7,340	19,887,616	7,135	20,770,660
British Columbia	14,866	41,677,635	14,936	45,213,913
Outside Canada	3,814	10,760,327	3,716	11,335,457
Total	92,872	$260,287,319	92,027	$276,977,410

Table II

Total of World War II pensioners by class

Class	Per cent		1979	1980
1	98-100		3,549	3,514
2	93- 97		216	222
3	88- 92		619	632
4	83- 87		421	389
5	78- 82		1,419	1,388
6	73- 77		561	558
7	68- 72		1,187	1,097
8	63- 67		687	661
9	58- 62		2,180	2,137
10	53- 57		1,007	985
11	48- 52		5,487	5,285
12	43- 47		535	572
13	38- 42		3,924	3,817
14	33- 37		2,384	2,377
15	28- 32		5,982	5,814
16	23- 27		5,325	5,240
17	18- 22		11,288	11,041
18	13- 17		9,505	9,415
19	8- 12		20,910	20,354
20	5- 7		14,891	14,689
21	1- 4		795	1,840
		Total	92,872	92,027

JONES FALLS—DISPOSAL OF BUILDINGS

Question No. 1,606—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Parks Canada or any other branch of government recently dispose of two buildings adjacent to Jones Falls in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville and, if so, what are the names and addresses of those who obtained the buildings and, in each case, what was the cost?

2. Were the buildings advertised for sale and, if not (a) for what reason (b) is the government aware that there were a number of persons interested in bidding on the buildings?

3. Did an official of the Rideau Canal give assurances to some persons that the buildings would be sold by public advertisement?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): 1. Two buildings at Jones Falls were disposed of through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

(a) CADC—1-K5801-0-0014 (Frame cottage 6.7 M x 6.7 M)

DPW Sales Order 14521

Purchased by: Bruce Merriman
R.R. 1
Elgin, Ontario

Price: $1,010.00

(b) CADC—1-K5801-0-0015 (Frame cottage 5.5 M x 11.0 M)

DPW Sales Order 14519

Purchased by: Brian Ready
R.R. 1
Portland, Ontario

Price: $1,510.00

2. The buildings were advertised locally. Tenders for the sale of the buildings were placed in the following locations:

(a) Kenney Hotel, Jones Falls

(b) Jones Falls Lockstation

(c) O'Hearns Shell Service Station, Elgin

(d) Southern area office, Rideau Canal, Elgin

All persons who had previously inquired about these buildings were notified by telephone that the tender documents were available at the southern area office in Elgin, Ontario.

3. An official of the Rideau Canal indicated that notices would be placed locally and this was done.

TEST TUBE BABIES—RESEARCH

Question No. 1,625—Mr. Dinsdale:

Did the government provide funds for research on test tube babies and, if so (a) in what amount (b) in what location are the experiments taking place and who is conducting them?

Mr. Douglas Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: No.

In so far as the Medical Research Council is concerned: No.

[English]

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BANKS AND BANKING LAW REVISION ACT, 1980

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKING INSTITUTIONS

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 13, consideration of Bill C-6, to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and motion No. 25 (Mr. Lambert).

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, last night at the adjournment hour we were discussing the amendment which I proposed in motion No. 25. I was engaged at that time in a short historical review as to the origin of the provisions of the Bank Act allowing the banks to engage in mortgage lending on the security of real property. I had indicated that some of the banks had been dragged, kicking and screaming, to the table, because back in 1966 they adhered to the principle that bank liquidity required them to keep out of long-term investments. They were not even going to go into medium-term investments, in other words, anything from four to seven years.

After all, we must remember that in the context of bank financing in North America, or bank history, the American banking crisis in the early thirties had been caused primarily by thousands upon thousands of American banks engaging in that very dangerous practice of borrowing short and lending long. That principle still applies, and there is no question that our banking system will get into deep trouble if there is an over-emphasis on the capabilities of the banks to lend on long-term mortgages while they are borrowing short on the basis of demand deposits and short-term deposit certificates. I say short-term deposit certificates; I refer to those up to five years.

It is ludicrous for a bank to lend the money it gets on five-year term for 25 years beyond certain points. It can do that within certain margins. In order to guarantee that it will repay its deposit certificates of up to five years, it must have a renewable source of funds either by way of a sufficient volume of repayment of the long-term obligations due to it, or an actual inflow of cash by new certificates on terms up to five years. Outside of that the system is into a policy of bankruptcy.

There are safe limits and there are limits beyond which the banking system as such cannot go. It is not like trust companies. Trust companies can lend only those dollars which they have either in their fiduciary capacity or dollars they get through deposit certificates. Those are the only moneys they can lend on a term basis.

On the other hand, the banks have their one-for-eight formula, and they can expand into loans. We recognize that; that is part of commercial banking, but in so far as mortgages on real estate on a long-term basis—and this is what the Canadian Bankers' Association complained about, in part I would say, back in 1966—Parliament in its wisdom imposed a 10 per cent limit of deposits. It did not talk at that time about deposit certificates. They did not have those as a source of funds. Therefore, in the 1967 act it was strictly an amount equal to 10 per cent of the deposit liabilities of the banks payable in Canadian currencies. The Canadian banks were not very deeply into foreign business at that time.

The act said "the banks", but there was a gap in the act, unfortunately, and we saw the growth of bank mortgage companies. Frankly, the banks have now engaged in an end run. Some of the banks do not even have 1 per cent of their deposit liabilities directly invested in mortgages. But one of a bank's subsidiaries, which is a mortgage company, may have up to 15 per cent of the deposit liabilities and, in addition, the liabilities under the deposit certificates as provided for in the proposed section.

The government is blithely letting this carry on. There is no change. The banks will clean themselves out. They will assign to their mortgage company subsidiaries all of the business under realty mortgages, whether they are residential or commercial, far exceeding, though, the guidelines and the principles insisted on by Parliament.

The minister will have to tell me now that the 10 per cent limit on the banking system is no longer valid, and he will have to take the responsibility for that because there is no difference between a bank and its subsidiary. All that happens, of course, is that a bank pumps funds into its subsidiary and lends them on long-term mortgages. Why does the government countenance the breach of the 10 per cent which was laid down in the former act? The purpose of my three amendments is to bring the banks back to that particular point, but I have brought that 10 per cent up to date.

● (1240)

I do not insist in my amendment, which we are now discussing as the first one, that 10 per cent shall apply to the deposit liabilities unless the government adds the deposit certificate liabilities. I go further than that. I give the banks an additional cushion. I have heard our friends from the banks say, "Oh, you're trying to cut us back. You will cut back on the mortgage lending business." My answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is a plain and unadulterated "horsefeathers", and if they want me to add any other language to that, I will add it. They are talking poppycock. I am giving them an additional cushion but I maintain the 10 per cent.

Banking has evolved in the past 12 years. If you look at the formula which I have proposed, which is 10 per cent of the assets as indicated under schedule Q, you will find many other new forms of flexibility which give the banks ample scope, without Parliament accepting the fact, as they do now—and the minister, the parliamentary secretary and members opposite who are part of the committee know this—that the banks can engage in an unfettered end run. They can simply pump their funds into a mortgage subsidiary. What sort of control can the minister have on this activity? The Liberal administration was in office at that time. Was that administration wrong? Was Parliament wrong 12 years ago in insisting on the 10 per cent limit? If so, the minister should stand up in his seat and say so. There is no other way around it, absolutely none. Either it is 10 per cent or it is not.

The language of the section as it now stands is meaningless because the banks can lend half a per cent of their deposit liabilities in their names directly, but the mortgage subsidiaries can lend up to 20 per cent or 25 per cent if they are so minded. We hope that the board of directors of the banks will resist that because there are practical applications to banking, rules of thumb which are as sound as all the rocks in Canada. The rule is that you do not borrow short to lend long, and that has to be a fundamental, basic principle, which I suggest to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker. Let him remember that if you allow all the banks to do this, not only the well-managed ones but some which are not in the best of shape from time to time as far as management is concerned, it will bode ill for the banking industry. It takes only a few transactions to get them into trouble. I will not say that I am going to be the big brother to the banking industry, but we owe it to the Canadian public to ensure that the financial system is as sound as possible.

The minister, in proposing the legislation as it stands now—and I am giving him fair and solemn warning at this point—has opened a hole in the wall through which a coach-and-four can drive many times. There are provisions whereby the minister of finance, through the Inspector General of Banks, may warn a bank that its practices may be unsafe. But what sanction has he? Again, we spoke yesterday of the toothless tiger. We know that many of the powers of the Inspector General of Banks and of the minister are there for cosmetic purposes.

On this score I am deadly serious. On a number of points I have been able to resolve my differences in interpretation of the Bank Act with the minister and the parliamentary secretary. I have given ground and so has the minister—we have come to an accommodation. But on this point I have found the government to be totally unresponsive. I warned the minister at the committee hearings that I would be coming back to this point. I have come back, and I am as insistent as I am on any particular point, in fact, far more than I am on the requirement of defining the business of banking. To me this is far more important.

I do not want the banks to complain. In my proposed amendment to section 25, I have given them a great deal more latitude. I have brought the provision up to date to 1980. The minister knows that I have often said that in the Bank Act we were legislating for the manufacturer of horse collars, that we were behind the times, that we were merely bringing ourselves up to date, that we were not legislating for the future. I will admit that I am legislating for the manufacturer of horse collars right now, that I am only bringing us up to date in my amendment. But the minister is not even doing that. He knows that the banks are taking advantage of a loophole in the act by using their mortgage subsidiaries. The 10 per cent is absolutely and totally meaningless.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, if I sound so vehement about this and so difficult about it, but to me this is one of the sheet anchors. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) can point to his watch all he wants. He does not care about this act.

Mr. Collenette: I am pointing to the table.

Mr. Lambert: Perhaps he is drawing attention to the fact that I have been speaking for 20 minutes. But the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council could not care less about this act. This is a fundamental point and I want to take my time on it. If I steal a minute or two, that is perfectly all right. The Chair will tell me if and when my time has expired. Again I make my plea to the minister. I want him to understand the banking system fully.

• (1250)

I have been exposed to and been involved in the banking system ever since I started out. On leaving school I was involved in the banking system. Subsequently at university I majored in studies in this particular field, and all through my parliamentary career I have been involved with the banking system. At this particular point the act bothers me. Not only are the banks able to get around a particular thing, but it is an invitation by Parliament to ingenious people to find a way around and run all the end runs they want, while we just stand idly by watching them pile up the score.

At this stage I should like to conclude my remarks on motion No. 25. I still have motions Nos. 24 and 26 to come back to later.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we are debating the Bank Act. The figures released by Statistics Canada indicate that the cost of living increased in the last year by 10.9 per cent, that the cost of food increased by 12.7 per cent, that the cost of housing increased by 8.9 per cent, and that the cost of fuel and utilities, which are so important for anyone who owns or rents housing accommodation, increased by 15.3 per cent.

If I understood correctly the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), he is proposing a further restriction on the opportunities of banks to lend money to people who want to buy houses and need mortgages. I am not rising to defend the banks, nor am I defending the government. I will deal with the banks a little later, but I think the policies of the Liberal government and of the short-term Conservative government with respect to housing have been disastrous. The effect of the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West would be simply to dry up the mortgage market even more, and make it more difficult for people to obtain mortgages.

Mr. Lambert: They are not lending out money anyway.

Mr. Orlikow: Yesterday the governor of the Bank of Canada gave the people of Canada another one of his economic sermons.

Mr. Evans: Brilliant sermons.

Mr. Orlikow: I remind the parliamentary secretary that the governor of the Bank of Canada has been giving the same kind of advice for the last six years. It is the same kind of advice which led the Liberal government in 1975 to impose wage and price controls. During the election in 1974 the Liberal party promised never to impose wage and price controls, at a time when there was an emergency and we were facing an increase in the cost of living of 10.5 per cent for the year before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) brought this bombshell to Parliament. The wage and price controls were imposed, they were supposed to solve our problems, and here we are five years later and the cost of living is increasing at just about the same rate as it was when the Prime Minister brought in those controls in 1975.

What did the governor of the Bank of Canada say to Canadians yesterday? I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the The Gazette. It reads in part as follows:

"I confess that I am somewhat disappointed with the results to date" of the past five years' monetary policies, Bouey told the Empire Club in Toronto.

It went on to indicate:

But Bouey forecast the recently restrictive monetary policy, which was aimed at a 5.9 per cent growth ceiling, will have a greater impact on total spending trends in the future than in the past and thus ease the inflationary pace.

He was wrong before, and of course he will be wrong again, because all government policies, such as the energy ones, call for sharply increased prices. Sharply increased prices for energy and food will mean a further increase in the cost of living. As reported in The Globe and Mail, governor Bouey was talking about business when he said:

"If they were to survive, employers simply had to keep their costs—including their labour costs—from rising, and employees could not press too hard for wage increases if they expected their employer to stay in business and their jobs to continue to exist."

The governor of the Bank of Canada is saying to the ordinary people of the country that the cost of living may have gone up 10.5 per cent, and it will probably go up between 11 per cent and 12 per cent next year, but they should not even ask for enough in the way of increases in their wages or salaries to keep pace; they should be prepared to sacrifice. I would not mind the governor of the Bank of Canada giving that advice to ordinary people if he gave it to everyone.

Let us look at the organizations with which we are dealing right now. Let us look at the banks.

Mr. Evans: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: Of course the parliamentary secretary is one of the team of people who will continue to give the kind of orthodox advice we have been receiving from the governor of the Bank of Canada and the senior officials of the Department of Finance. They continue to give that advice to the people even though the prescription has not worked, even though the illness is greater than it was before, even though the cost of living is substantially higher than before. I am asking them to apply that kind of advice in an even-handed manner. While the governor of the Bank of Canada urged workers to be moderate in their demands, he never said a word about the banks. Perhaps the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) does not want me to say these things because he does not want people to know how well the banks have done. I do not know why he would have any other reason.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Quite frankly, I think the hon. member opposite knows why I am sitting here somewhat upset with his commentary. It is primarily because it has absolutely nothing to do with the motion before the House at this time.

May I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The parliamentary secretary may have a valid point. I know the Bank Act is quite wide in scope, but I think members should deal with motion No. 25 which is before the House.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

● (1400)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When debate was interrupted at one o'clock, motion No. 5 pertaining to the Bank Act was under consideration. The hon. member for Winnipeg North had the floor.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in the few moments I had before the noon adjournment I put on record some of the latest comments and views of the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Bouey. I pointed out how, in my view, he had been wrong in the advice he has given to the people of Canada. I pointed out that, again, he was lecturing and preaching to the vast mass of Canadian citizens who have to live on the wages or salaries they earn, that they should be moderate in their demands on the economy because, if they were not, inflation would get out of hand. I was just about at the point of urging the governor of the Bank of Canada to make the same kind of speech to the banks of this country and to urge them to show some restraint.

When we look at the record of the banks, as reported in such journals as the Financial Post and the Financial Times, we see that they have not been as restrained as ordinary people, who would have been lucky in recent years if they could just have kept up with the increased cost of living. The people have been lectured in recent months because some of them have been getting wage increases of about 10 per cent or 11 per cent.

Let us look at the banks, Mr. Speaker, and we will see that Canada's five major chartered banks in the years 1974 to 1978 increased their profits from $404 million in 1974 to $904 million in 1978—a whopping increase of 123 per cent. Those increases have not moderated. Indeed, they have accelerated.

In the November 26 edition of The Globe and Mail last year it showed the change for the banks of this country in terms of their balance of payments, that their assets increased by 24.8 per cent in the period from 1978 to 1979. In another table on October 23 of this year it was shown that their assets had increased by 19.2 per cent from October of last year to October of this year. So we have an increase in the assets of the banks of Canada of 41 per cent in two years. There is not a skilled worker in this country who has the most needed of jobs who would not have been happy to settle for an increase of 41 per cent over the last two years. The governor of the Bank of Canada, or the government has not seen fit to say much about that, Mr. Speaker.

● (1410)

It is not bad enough that the banks made that kind of profit. When we look at the profits for the years 1974 to 1978, we see that for the three-month period ending January 31, 1979, the big five chartered banks reported total operating profits of $338 million but paid taxes of $68 million, or an effective rate of about 20 per cent, compared to the 30 per cent for manufacturing and the 35 per cent for service firms.

If that were not bad enough we now find that the banks are taxed on their operations, because of loopholes in the tax system set up by the Liberal governments of the past and not yet plugged, of an effective rate of something like 10 per cent.

What we need is more regulation of the banks, Mr. Speaker, not less. I speak about the banks because I am concerned about the kind of amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West. He is not concerned about the profits that banks have made and the tremendous influence they have in this country with their over $200 million in assets, nor about the interlocking directorates that bank directors have with the boards of directors of most of the major corporations in this country. We have not heard a word on these matters from the hon. member for Edmonton West.

We are also concerned about the fact that the housing industry is suffering. It is in probably the worst slump that has existed since the end of World War II. Fewer houses will be built this year than in any of the last 20 years, and next year things will be even worse. That is not surprising, of course, with mortgage interest rates running at 14 per cent and more.

I have some personal knowledge of this, Mr. Speaker, because it was my unfortunate necessity to refinance the mortgage on my home at a rate of 14.5 per cent or 14.75 per cent. That means that by the time I finish paying off the mortgage—which is relatively small compared to that required for new housing—I will probably have paid 2.5 or three times the face value of the mortgage. I can afford all this better than most people in the country, I must say.

Why do I speak about banks and their profits in connection with an amendment relating to housing, Mr. Speaker? It is not because this party believes that the banks should do less to provide mortgage money—as the hon. member for Edmonton West suggested, if I understood him correctly—but we believe that the lending institutions should set aside much more money than they do for residential mortgages.

For several years we have advocated that the government require lending institutions to set aside a specific portion of their lending portfolio for residential mortgages which would be pegged at a rate lower than the prime rate and would be retained for the amortization period. The hon. member for Edmonton West would have us believe that the banks cannot afford to do that. I think the few figures I have put on the record today indicate not only that the banks could do it, but that they should do it. Their profits have been increasing.

I should like to spend a few moments now outlining our proposal on housing—which is that money should be allocated for people in low and middle-income brackets who want to buy housing at a rate which they can afford, and that much more money be allocated for social housing.

In a year when we need more money for social housing, what has this co-called, progressive left wing Liberal government proposed? Instead of social housing, it proposed more goodies for those doctors and lawyers who can save money on taxes and put it in the MURBs program. We think that is a disgrace, Mr. Speaker. I cannot understand how any minister responsible for housing who comes from a city where housing prices are out of sight, could come forward with such a proposal. I think the minister would resign his position if he had any concern for ordinary people.

Mr. Deans: He is not even here to listen.

Mr. Orlikow: Let us examine what has happened in the area of housing in the recent years that the Liberals have been in power. In 1967 the Liberals freed the bank rate for mortgages which had been set at 6 per cent. That is a dream world, Mr. Speaker—that mortgages should be available at 6 per cent.

In 1969, on the advice of the then Liberal cabinet minister, Paul Hellyer—my colleague from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Skelly) spoke of the Liberal-Conservative party of Sir John A. Macdonald, but we still have a Liberal-Conservative party which sits on both sides of the House—I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that that particular minister became a leading light in the Conservative party—on his advice, when he was still a Liberal, the 6.5 per cent ceiling on NHA mortgages was released and permitted to be established by market forces.

Let me pause here, Mr. Speaker, to say that since I started to speak before one o'clock I have recalled that Mr. Hellyer's adviser on housing policy—when he was a Liberal—is today the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). So we know how much attention we should pay to his advice.

On the advice of Mr. Hellyer, the 6.5 per cent ceiling on NHA mortgages was released and the rate was permitted to be established by market forces.

In 1969, again on Mr. Hellyer's advice, the five-year roll-over on mortgages was introduced, allowing a renegotiation of the interest rate on a mortgage every five years. Prior to that, the interest rate on a mortgage was fixed for the entire amortization period, for example, 25 years.

In 1973, with Bill C-135, the Residential Mortgages Financing Act was passed by the Liberal government with Conservative support. The guiding principle of that bill was "enhancing the attractiveness of mortgage investment". By generating an increase in mortgage funds at unrestricted interest rates, builders and land speculators were encouraged to concentrate on high priced housing where profit margins were greater, and to destroy the moderate and low-income housing market. They succeeded in that, whether knowingly or unknowingly I cannot say, but they certainly succeeded.

In 1974 the Liberals introduced AHOP, a plan designed to give moderate and low-income people with higher earning potential a chance to get into home ownership by providing moderately priced dwellings at subsidized interest rates.

I do not have time this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, to go into detail about the disasters that have occurred. The newspapers have been full of them. A couple of days ago an article in The Globe and Mail stated that Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is becoming the biggest landlord in Canada, because tens of thousands of people either have or will, within the next two years, give up their homes purchased under AHOP because they simply cannot afford to meet the mortgage payments. That is what has happened to housing in this country, Mr. Speaker.

This morning's Globe and Mail carries an article which quotes the chairman of A.E. LePage Ltd., one of the largest real estate companies in Canada. The article begins as follows:

House prices will outpace inflation next year as the resale market benefits from a slowdown in new residential construction caused by high interest rates—

There is a slowdown, Mr. Speaker, because the brains in the Department of Finance and those associated with the governor of the Bank of Canada have told us that the way to beat inflation is to have higher interest rates. Of course, Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the way more inflation is created.

I want to conclude by suggesting to the government that in the Bank Act and in our housing programs we should not increase mortgage rates, or give more concessions to the fast buck operators who want to get the "gravy" from the MURBs program. What we need to do is to provide money to Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and build social housing for the tens of thousands of families who cannot afford to buy or rent at the commercial rates existing almost everywhere in Canada at the present time. We need to provide manageable mortgage money and interest rates for people in the low or middle-income brackets. These are the people who are now completely at a loss to know what they can do or what they will be able to do in the next few years given the fantastic increase in the price of homes and mortgage interest rates. These rates run anywhere from 14 per cent to 18 per cent depending on which side of the bed the governor of the Bank of Canada got up this week.

● (1420)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I gave the hon. member additional time because I thought he was concluding. However, I am obliged now to interrupt him and advise the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief. I have tried to understand the impact of the proposal made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I listened to him with great care as he attempted to convince the House that his amendment would not in fact reduce the available number of dollars for mortgage purposes. He pointed out in his own comments the banks themselves believe that this amendment would do exactly that, that it would restrict the amount of dollars available for mortgages. He also pointed out, and I think it is fair to say, that it is true the government does not believe his amendment would do other than reduce the number of dollars available for mortgages.

As we look at the amendment, we cannot help but feel that through the amendment, whether implicit in it or simply as a result of it, there will be a reduction in the number of dollars available for mortgages. You can be sure that if the banks say it will happen, it will. There will be fewer dollars. If there are fewer dollars, then the dollars that are available will almost inevitably cost more. Therefore, this amendment, if one is to understand it clearly, and to understand the impact and import of it, you could not but come to the conclusion that if the banks respond in the way which the member for Edmonton West has said they will, then interest rates will be forced up. Fewer dollars will be made available by the banks. I see the hon. member shaking his head. It seems to me that it shows a rather unusual lack of knowledge for a man having spent so much time in this business.

Mr. Lambert: You are the expert?

Mr. Deans: I am not an expert, although I try to understand them. One thing I know for sure is that if the banks say there will be less money available, whether there need be or not, I know there will be less money available. I also know that if less money is made available, that will inevitably lead to higher interest rates. Higher interest rates are something we just cannot afford in this country and that is the problem with an amendment such as this one, well intentioned though it may be. But if the banks believe that that will be the end result, then that will be the end result. The banks will make that the end result in order to prove they were right. That is just one of the difficulties we face in a situation such as this.

We cannot afford to run the risk of driving interest rates even higher. I looked at some of the most recent statistics. For example a $50,000 mortgage in today's market is not a large mortgage, and it is very difficult to get a $50,000 mortgage given the size of the down payment one has to have at today's prices. At today's interest rates you would be paying $7,750 in interest alone.

According to statistics reported in the Financial Post, the average wage in Canada today at this point in time is $316.28 a week. When you calculate that out—and I am sure even the hon. member for Edmonton West could do it—it adds up to $16,446.56 per annum and that is before taxes.

Let us assume for a moment that we are attempting to provide housing for people who make average wages. There is not a single wage earner at the average level in Canada who would qualify for a mortgage at today's interest rates. If what is being said about this amendment happened, mortgage interest rates would continue to rise and that consequence would fall on the head of the hon. member for Edmonton West, and we would not want to see that happen.

Let us take a look at what we are talking about. Even if people who want to buy a home earn $20,000 a year, they do not qualify for a mortgage. They could not get a mortgage at $50,000, even though that would be the average they would be able to find at the lower end of the scale. These people just would not qualify. If a person earned $30,000 a year, that person would have great difficulty qualifying for a $50,000 mortgage as well. Out of their take home pay, they would have to pay in excess of 30 per cent of their income in interest payments alone. Imagine paying in excess of 30 per cent of one's income, and at $30,000 per year it is almost $8,000 annually out of that take home pay. Take home pay for a person earning $30,000 a year would range between $25,000 and $26,000, at the maximum. In the present circumstances that $8,000 would be about 30 per cent of their take home pay in interest payments alone, and that is shameful.

During question period earlier today we raised problems confronting people in this country, and I must say it is with a great deal of frustration that I sit in the House and listen to debates. While we sit and talk about other no doubt important things, there are people in almost every constituency who are making a decision today that they cannot afford to refinance their mortgage because they do not earn enough and they will not be able to meet their payments because interest rates have risen so dramatically in the last five years. People's incomes have not kept pace. That scenario is happening all across this country. Daily people lose their homes, but the government just says, "that is the price for fighting inflation".

There are families who have put all of their life savings into a down payment. They are struggling to meet their commitments, yet these people look to the House of Commons and think that surely to God someone in Ottawa will do something about this outrageous increase in costs we see happening day after day. They see us talking on and on about things which do not appear, at least on the surface, to address their problems in any way.

I suppose the frustration I have is when I speak to these people on the telephone. I hear things such as, "Ian, I do not know what to do. The end of the month is only two weeks away and my mortgage is due. I cannot find another mortgage at a price I can afford. I cannot sell the house because other people who are likely to be in the business of buying and in the market cannot afford to take on the mortgage either. I will have to walk away and leave it and lose my investment. I will have to start all over again some day in the future if, as and when I achieve the level of income, or if, as and when the interest rates and mortgage costs are down to a point where I can cope with them."

Yet, we argue over whether or not, according to the amendment which the hon. member for Edmonton West is proposing, we are going to increase or decrease the amount of mortgage money. By the time we get around to making the determination, these people will have lost their homes. The problem is really here with the House of Commons where the responsibility lies for action in dealing with such things as interest rates. We are not dealing with them at all. We no longer deal with real things. We no longer deal with those things that affect people directly.

● (1430)

I do not know whether other hon. members feel it in their constituencies or whether it is unique to the place I represent, although I suspect it is not, but I think people are sick and tired of struggling day after day to try to achieve what we have said over the years they ought to be able to achieve in this country, a home of their own at a price they can afford. They have been struggling to do that only to find that we are complacent about the ever-increasing interest rate problem which confronts us.

My colleague from Winnipeg North spoke about the governor of the Bank of Canada. My God, only that he would be unemployed. He should have to go out and look for a job. He should have to live on the average weekly wage of the people in Canada, or even 25 per cent or 50 per cent above that. He should have to get a mortgage for his house at the interest rate levels he has allowed as a result of his policy to fight inflation.

This Bank Act does not speak to the real problems. That is what is wrong with it. People say to me that if we are dealing with the Bank Act, we will be dealing with interest rates. I have to tell them quite truthfully that the only place we can deal with that is an amendment offered by the hon. member for Edmonton West. In truth, that amendment will only serve to affect them detrimentally.

The government has decided to opt out of the business of controlling or influencing interest rates. It has decided it is no longer its responsibility and has given the responsibility to the governor of the Bank of Canada who sits across the street. It is time he got out of his ivory tower and into the constituencies of this country and saw the problems the people are facing. It is time he came before this House, not some committee of it, to explain why it is he thinks he has to ruin the ambitions of everyone in this country before a stop is put to these ever-increasing interest rates.

Mr. Evans: Just what would you do?

Mr. Deans: I would put a ceiling on interest rates for mortgages.

Mr. Kaplan: They just took the ceiling off in the United States.

Mr. Deans: That's right. They are going exactly the wrong way about it.

Mr. Evans: You just voted to repeal the Small Loans Act.

Mr. Deans: I did not.

Mr. Evans: Yes you did. You are a laugh.

Mr. Deans: I am not a laugh. Give us your responsibility for one year and we will have lower interest rates in this country. We are determined that there will be lower interest rates because we care what happens to people. We do not sit and smile when people go down the drain. We do not laugh when we cannot come up with an answer. That is their problem. What the hon. member is offering can do nothing but harm.

Whether it is intended or otherwise, there is no way the banks will respond in any other way than the way they said they would respond. They said they would reduce the numbers of dollars available. That will drive up interest rates even further. I quote the hon. member. The end result of all of that means that more and more people will find themselves unable to meet their commitments. The housing industry will deteriorate even further in terms of the number of starts. Many people will lose their entire life savings. In fact, that is now happening.

Instead of sitting muttering and gasping, I wish the parliamentary secretary would come forward with a proposal to bring about a reduction in interest rates which would satisfy the needs of low-income earners in this country so that they can afford to pay other people to work building the houses they are prepared to buy if only they were available at prices they can afford. That is the answer to the problem. That is how it should be dealt with. That is how to turn money over more quickly. If it had not been for actions of the Liberal party in 1966, we would not be in the mess we are in today.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I too wonder about this amendment. When we are in the position of having so little affordable money available for mortgages, it seems very strange that we should talk about cutting back. Indeed, the very party that talked about a strange mortgage interest deductibility plan talks about not enough money being available for mortgages. I wonder how that program and the deficit would have been affected had the Tories still been in power and we had even higher interest rates.

As my colleagues have said, this amendment appears to make less mortgage money available. It would increase competition among Canadians who want mortgage money. It would certainly increase interest rates. This would mean an even greater increase in the cost of housing.

On Monday I believe we will be speaking to an amendment which will take a different approach. It will ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to require a portfolio of bank investment money for mortgages to be offered at reduced rates. That seems to be a more positive approach. I see no advantage to the amendment before us today.

Perhaps we might be able to support this kind of amendment if, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) did a few minutes ago, we look at the former role of what used to be called Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, now Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Instead of privatizing the whole mortgage system, what used to be the key government agency responsible for housing in Canada should return to a direct mortgage lending function. The role of CMHC prior to 1968 was just that. Long-term mortgages were offered so that people had a chance to plan, budget, and develop an equity with a 25 to 30-year mortgage.

We also know there was the preferential interest rate of 6 per cent in those days and that worked very well. At the same time in 1968 there was a deliberate approach to the Liberal government of the day and there was extreme pressure from the banks which today are interested in this Bank Act. What did the Liberals do? They freed all the controls and privatized the whole mortgage system, and we have had trouble ever since.

We now have a situation where CMHC is the bank for bankers. It has no direct investment in housing except in the increasing amount of real estate coming back from AHOP houses and as a result of other programs which have bombed completely. All it does is insure mortgage loans.

CMHC is not a tool for social policy. The Liberal government and Conservative government of last year did not look at housing from a consumer point of view, those Canadians who should have a basic right to decent and affordable housing. This is not the concern of CMHC. Their concern is to give MURBs tax incentives to rich investors, shooting up the cost of rental housing. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation merely offers manipulative programs which put low-income people in very desperate situations. I refer to those people who are able to get into housing under the AHOP program. We believe that CMCH should play a stronger role. If it is not involved in direct lending, it should at least be made a federal financial institution which could control the movement of interest rates to a greater degree.

● (1440)

We do not support this amendment. We do support the idea of more control over mortgage interest rates and the control of moneys held by the banks. We are all aware of the rapidly increasing interest rates. A percentage point increase in the interest rate adds $10,000 to the cost of a mortgage. As I mentioned during question period earlier today, there is an extreme housing crisis in the lower mainland of Vancouver. This crisis will soon be felt in St. John's, Newfoundland, and even now is reaching critical proportions in cities such as Calgary.

The cost of an ordinary three-bedroom family house in my riding is increasing by $10,000 every month. That is a real shocker. The federal government must take some action through the Bank Act, and it must seriously review the current problems affecting housing as they are related to federal government programs. Some of my colleagues have talked about the fallacy of the floating interest rates. We will soon be at the rate of 17 per cent again if we are not careful. The rate for mortgages is very close to that now.

As a result of these increasing mortgage rates people cannot plan even if they are lucky enough to have saved the down payment for a house. This applies even in cases where there are two wage earners in the family. Short-term mortgage agreements and high interest rates cannot continue. Home owners, faced with having to refinance mortgages, are increasingly giving up their homes altogether. The rise in mortgage defaults, which end up in the government's hands under the AHOP program, is very alarming. The finger-in-the-dike, band-aid approach of the minister responsible for CMCH is really not helping these people.

The housing industry and financiers recognize that there is no point in amortizing house payments over a five-year period when costs are increasing over that period. These people will be further in debt at the end of the five-year period than when they took out their mortgage. The government's program of graduated payment mortgages is directly related to this subject. This program is a trap for lower-income people. Participants agree to pay a lower amount of interest and make lower monthly payments during the first five years of the mortgage. But by the sixth year the home owner, who thinks he is a home owner—and I say "he" because there are very few women who get involved in mortgage arrangements—owes more than when he first took out the mortgage. That is how the graduated payment mortgage plan works. This plan makes tenants of home owners for the first 11 years, and during this time their debts increase rather than decrease. We are opposed to this kind of program.

I spoke at some length the other day on the MURBs mystery which provides tax shelters for wealthy people and does nothing to provide affordable housing for low-income people. Certainly the program does nothing to create family housing for low-income people. It is a ridiculous plan and a complete misuse of budgetary funds. The government should be investing far more than the $15 million it has invested in this tax shelter in social housing. Social housing refers to affordable housing and has the effect of not increasing inflation. Such a program would prevent exploitation by developers and in some cases landlords.

Those great donators to and friends of the Liberal party, the real estate industry, even have serious doubts about the MURBs program. They do not think that it will help very much. Fictitious claims through depreciation saved the large corporations $450 million in unpaid taxes in the past year. It is not good enough for the government to allocate the same amount of money for social housing this year as it allocated last year. We worked hard for an increase, but it was not available early enough to be used, and there was no increase at all in the new budget.

Housing should be viewed as a social investment. Certainly the financial arrangements required to make mortgages affordable for people must be part of a well-thought-out social policy. It is far better to invest in non-profit housing on publicly owned leased land, which will be owned by the public for the lifetime of the house, than it is to invest federal funds in large tourist developments. For example, Vancouver has the development called B.C. Place which is now begging for federal funding. We will have a Transpo 86 nightmare similar to the occurrences in Montreal. I hope that the government will invest in housing rather then this kind of development.

This amendment as it regards the cutback of mortgage moneys will do nothing. Nor have the Liberal government policies done anything to control excessive inflation and speculation. The government should introduce programs which would provide some control over speculation, which is causing the price of housing to go sky high. It was once said that higher costs in housing were due to the price of land, but this is not the case in my community where the price of houses is increasing by $10,000 a month.

A local paper has suggested that the provincial government should introduce a sales tax which would take the form of a disincentive and prevent speculators from buying and selling homes. The government should be keeping a close watch on capital gains tax, as it affects housing in a very negative way. A report from the Ministry of Finance indicates that in 1979 over $2.5 billion was lost to the federal government due to non-taxation of capital gains. Then we wonder why we have such a high deficit. That loss would cover a good chunk of the deficit.

• (1450)

We also learned that during that same period—I presume this was a 1978 or 1979 report—only about $300 million went into social housing, and that $115 million was lost through tax write-offs for the registered home ownership program. So really we need to have a reformation of our capital gains tax policy. This would certainly bring much more revenue to the federal budget. It would cut down our deficit, and I would hope it would also cut down much of the speculation which is going on with regard to the building of housing, particularly by developers.

I want to refer to AHOP housing in a little more detail. My colleague referred to The Globe and Mail article of November 11, a great way to celebrate Armistice Day. As we know, the government subsidized builders initially to build AHOP houses, which kept the prices high, not lower, and many of the houses have decreased considerably in value. Many of them were not built well to begin with, and certainly were not built in desirable locations. However, the program, particularly in certain provinces which added piggy-back subsidies, had a devastating effect on low-income earners. This was so particularly in British Columbia and Ontario, and certainly throughout the country as well.

The assumption was that this would be another generous Liberal program which would help university graduates and people earning small amounts of money to start with, but who would have higher earnings later, and they therefore were able to get into AHOP houses for $1,000 or less. I think some were able to do so even at about $100. The interest rates increased after a period of five years or so, and suddenly after the end of five years the mortgages were due at the market rate. What happened with many, many people was that interest rates increased during that period phenomenally, so when it came time to renew those mortgages the cost was far in excess of that which was in the original contracts. Subsidies which were available for some people during the initial year or two were lost. In addition, during that period incomes had not increased. In fact real incomes went down for many people because of the inflated costs of fuel, food, and many other commodities.

According to the article to which I referred, in Peel, Ontario, 9,500 AHOP units were sold. Of these, 2,287 have come back to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. CMHC is now in the landlord business. About 75 more per month will be coming in. CMHC once again has to use dollars which should be going into housing, social housing, land banking and land leasing, to provide affordable housing for people to cover for past mistakes. We see example after example of bad management and misuse of money which should be going into housing.

My colleagues have also spoken about a reduction of mortgage interest rates through mortgage assistance plans. This is something we have advocated repeatedly. We feel that families earning under $30,000 or $25,000 must have mortgage assistance which would bring the rate of mortgage interest down at least to 9 per cent and 8 per cent respectively.

We also feel that it is important that the federal government carry out its shared responsibility for land banking programs and land assembly and also that it get much more involved with the provinces in public land assembly. Municipalities have begged the federal government to resume the program it had in earlier years. Even the president of HUDAC has said that this is absolutely essential to keeping the cost of housing down. I caution, however, that we do not favour public land assembly that is going to purchase and land bank land, and then give it over to developers to use for profit and to shoot up the cost of housing once again. What we want is land banking and preferably land leasing for housing that is non-profit housing, and which will be affordable for ordinary people and people in lower-income brackets.

As I said at the beginning, we also feel that instead of reducing the amount of mortgage money available to the banks we should be increasing it and controlling it. We should be making sure that the banks have money available at reduced interest rates for housing. We will be speaking more about this.

In conclusion, the time is long overdue for a complete review of the function of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation so that we have some kind of federal government agency which will produce housing instead of housing deficits as has been the case in the past.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid we need a respite from this exercise in the wonderland economics of the refugees from the—

An hon. Member: The rump.

Mr. Evans: The refugees from "Let's Make a Deal", but I think the respite would be to get back to what we are dealing with in regard to this piece of legislation. Let us get back to the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Evans: The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) is the housing critic for her party, and she is going to talk about housing irrespective of what is before the House. Alice in Wonderland!

This motion deals with what there should be, and whether there should be a restriction on chartered banks with regard to the proportion of their portfolios which can be held in mortgage loans. That is the question with which we are dealing. It does have some remote relationship to housing in that mortgages are usually what people use to buy housing, but housing is not the main issue. The main issue is mortgages.

The question the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) raises is whether we should not be restricting chartered banks' lending with respect to the proportion they can put into mortgage loans. The hon. member raised several issues in that regard. For example, if banks are raising their money short term, should they be allowed to lend that money long term because of the imbalance that creates in their portfolios and the possible financial adversity which can result for the banks and the general financial system? The fact is that in 1967 for the first time banks were allowed to enter into the mortgage market in other than National Housing Act mortgages, which they had been allowed to be involved with for some years. The restriction was that they should not be allowed to have more than 10 per cent of their portfolios in conventional mortgages as opposed to NHA mortgages, which were separate from that. At that time there was also the possibility that banks could own mortgage loan subsidiaries which could also make mortgage loans, and the 10 per cent restriction applied to the bank portfolio itself and not to the portfolio of the bank with the mortgage loan subsidiary rolled in.

The hon. member for Edmonton West was a member of the committee which studied this whole issue. At the time the 1967 Bank Act was passed—and that is the act under which we operate right now until the new act is put into place—that was a provision. The hon. member for Edmonton West might call that a loophole, but it was certainly something examined by Parliament. Parliament examined this whole issue. As a matter of fact, subsequent to 1967 it turned out that this provision has not been to the detriment of borrowers in the marketplace or to savers. In fact it has been to the benefit of both borrowers and savers in the marketplace.

The hon. member for Vancouver East decried the fact that in 1967 the ceiling was removed from the interest rate banks could charge, which allowed them to get into the mortgage market subsequently, and to stay there. I wonder if the hon. member remembers that at the end of the first part of this session, before we recessed for the summer, her own party not only lobbied but also voted very clearly to remove a 12 per cent ceiling on rates which could be charged by credit unions and caisses populaires. That was not ripping off the public. But to say that the removal of the 6 per cent ceilings on banks—because they are banks, banks are big and banks are bad, that is the NDP slogan—is terrible, is utter nonsense, Mr. Speaker. The fact that the ceiling was removed, the fact that banks were allowed to expand their portfolios into mortgage and consumer loans, has meant that consumers have had more money available to them for consumer loans, more money available for mortgage loans. Over the last ten years, the spread between the cost of funds to an institution such as a bank, a credit union or a trust company, and the rate that is charged by those institutions to the consumer has narrowed consistently. In other words, a smaller margin is being taken by financial institutions today than in 1967, and the reason is that more institutions have entered the market. Therefore consumers are getting a much better deal today as a result of bank participation in the mortgage market and the consumer loan market—and that includes not only first mortgages but also second mortgages. Putting more money into the mortgage market meant that funds which the trust companies were making available for first mortgages was freed to be made available for second mortgages. As a result, consumers today have better deals from the point of view of the cost of borrowing and the lending rate on mortgages than has ever been the case in this country before.

● (1500)

The trust companies have lobbied us rather hard in committee to say that banks must be restricted in their mortgage lending, that we must prevent the banks expanding any further into mortgages because it would be detrimental to their financial health. The same argument was put forward in 1967 before the Bank Act was passed last time, and the same kind of provision was required that banks be held to a strict limit. The fact is that the banks have expanded as a result of the revised Bank Act. But has this hurt trust companies? No, indeed, it has not. If we look at the figures available to us from 1967 to 1979, we find that the chartered banks grew at a compound annual rate of 15.9 per cent; trust and mortgage loan companies grew at 16.8 per cent, and credit unions and caisses populaires grew at 19.2 per cent. So all the competing institutions have grown faster.

Mr. Lambert: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that the figures for the trust companies include bank mortgage operations outside of the banks themselves, and the bank subsidiary figures are included in the trust companies, so the representations are quite misleading.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is correct. The loan company figure includes the bank subsidiaries. I might also add, in response to the hon. member for Edmonton West, that as far as the loan company portfolio is concerned, loan companies are federally chartered companies which have to comply with exactly the same regulations and restrictions as any other loan company. So they are operating as mortgage loan companies just like any other mortgage loan company.

If we are worried about the future of the trust companies, the position we must take, I believe, is not to restrict the flexibility of the chartered banks or of other financial institutions to narrow areas of business. What we have to do is to expand the areas of business of other institutions so they can diversify their portfolios and be less exposed to the risks of the market, which is the case right now for the trust companies because they are restricted to having at least 75 per cent of their portfolio in mortgage loans. If the bottom falls out of the mortgage market, the trust companies are totally exposed, their market is gone. As a result, what we should be doing, and what this government will be doing in bringing forward a new savings, trust and loans companies act, is to allow trust companies to expand their portfolios and diversify into other areas, such as perhaps consumer lending, which will give more competition in the marketplace and which will help trust companies to remain financially viable. Rather than restricting the banks, we should be trying to expand operations of trust companies, credit unions and caisses populaires and have a wider variety of full range financial institutions in this country to stimulate the kind of competition that has led over the last ten years to narrower spreads between borrowing and lending rates and better deals for consumers borrowing in the marketplace. These are the kinds of things we should be doing and the kinds of things this government will be doing.

Members of the NDP have made a very valid point with regard to the effect of putting this amendment forward. It would restrict the banks' ability to either continue or to expand their mortgage lending. That is the intent and the effect of the amendment. That being the case, I think it is noteworthy that chartered banks are represented in over 1,900 communities and cities in this country. If the beneficiaries of this amendment are the trust companies—by placing restrictions on banks, you protect trust companies, thereby affecting the earnings of trust companies, for example—then I think we should look at the number of communities in which trust companies are located. We find that there are trust companies in some 700 to 800 communities in Canada, meaning that there would be somewhere between 1,100 and 1,200 communities, small cities and towns in Canada where banks could no longer expand their mortgage lending and where the population would have to depend perhaps on other institutions, such as finance companies, credit unions or caisses populaires, assuming they were there. Let us presume, however, that there are many small communities where there is only a bank and that the bank comes up against the restriction which the hon. member for Edmonton West would have us place in the act. The banker concerned would have to tell a prospective borrower who wants to buy or build a house in a small community, "I am sorry but I cannot make that loan." It seems to me that this takes us right back to the initial solution which is that the best way to run a financial system is not to restrict your institutions to narrow lines of business, not to specify whom they can lend to and what kind of loans they can make, but rather to expand their ability to operate in the marketplace and to encourage increased competition which will result in better served consumers, lower interest rates and a much more efficient capital market in this country. I think that must be the goal of this legislation and of legislation to come from this government in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to follow the parliamentary flunkey to Allan in wonderland. I certainly have the impression we are following the north end of a horse running south.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I say to the hon. member: withdraw!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In the first instance, that is a question of privilege, I presume. At the moment, experience indicates that that kind of language is within the limits of debate. I would have to check Beauchesne to make sure of it, but I invite the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) to consider the kind of language he has just used since it will lead inevitably to a ruling by the Chair on whether or not the language has to be withdrawn.

Mr. Fulton: I would like to deal at this point with the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), which, in my view, and certainly in the view of the majority of speakers from our party, is a crudely disguised "perk" for the banks which will do nothing but accelerate the present housing crisis. We have to ask some serious questions of members of the House in relation to mortgages and to the amendment which has been proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West. A very relevant question in relation to housing and mortgages would be: What kind of a loan shark in this day and age requires $35,318.20 interest to pay off a $1,521.80 principal amount? I am sure the hon. member for Edmondon West is well aware precisely who those loan sharks are, because the answer to the question is that they are our friendly banks, trust companies and loan offices. If we want to look at it more carefully in today's marketplace, we could take, for example, a below average priced house in the province of Ontario in the $58,000 range. Most buyers would be required to pick up a $50,000 mortgage at a minimum of 14.5 to 14.75 interest rate amortized over 25 years. The monthly payments of principal and interest would amount to approximately $614 per month, and taxes would add approximately $100 per month to that figure. By the time the mortgage came up for renewal in five years, the individual would have paid out $36,840 and he would find that the principal had been reduced by only $1,521.80; the rest of it went to the bank or the trust company as interest. It is on this very point that we must look very seriously at the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West. We must consider its ramifications on the housing market which is in a crisis situation. We must relate that amendment to what is happening to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Some of the statements made of late were very germane to the debate this afternoon.

● (1510)

I should like to refer to the letter of transmittal dated March, 1980, contained in the 1979 annual report of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It reads as follows:

> The activities of the corporation in 1979 were significantly affected by prevailing economic conditions and by changes in housing policies and programs. The combination of a reduced rate of economic growth, continuing inflationary pressures, and rising interest rates, contributed to a decline in new house building activity for the third successive year. At the beginning of the year, inventories of unsold or unoccupied new dwellings in several centres also influenced the decline in housing starts which was entirely in multiple dwellings. Total starts of 197,049, compared to 227,667 units in 1978, were at their lowest level since 1970.

The hon. member for Edmonton West is proposing an amendment to limit the amount of capital which banks would be obliged to put out into the market for mortgages. Anyone who has even the most elementary understanding of marketing economics knows that the moment we start limiting any desired commodity in the marketplace, its essential value and its cost to the consumer go up. It is such a simplistic concept that it really surprises me that we would be asked to support such an amendment when there is such a serious problem in housing.

In a few moments I will deal specifically with my riding and with native people, but it is almost a ludicrous amendment for any member of the House to consider supporting.

I refer again to the March, 1980, letter of transmittal to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove). It states:

> The reduction in housing starts was in those financed under the National Housing Act. These were down from 59,010 units to 33,467 units, representing declines in both new dwelling starts financed with direct first mortgage loans from CMHC, and in starts using other forms of NHA financial assistance.

It continues:

> There was a decline in starts for which NHA financing other than direct first mortgages was provided from 44,250 units in 1978 to 23,444 units in 1979.

In every single area in relation to government programs we see declines in the number coming on to the market.

If the House were to consider the proposal of the hon. member for Edmonton West, we would simply see a further drying up of the available capital in relation to the housing market and further social problems. We must look at it even more carefully if we are to understand the implications of what the hon. member for Edmonton West has said and even the crudely disguised remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans).

We should look carefully at the impact on families. That was touched on by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell). There are serious problems showing up in the Canadian society because of crowding, young families having to move in with other families, and lack of access to various facilities in the home. A number of very good studies have been conducted on the psychological impact of that type of crowding in relation to the ability and capacity of a child in school, the capacity of a man or woman to carry on their employment. It affects the entire economy in very strange and indirect ways.

The impact of what is happening has a spill-over effect into the construction trade because housing is not coming on market. It would be even more severely limited by the proposal of the hon. member for Edmonton West. The spill-over effect goes back even further and results in a cumulative downturn affecting the largest single national income sector in the economy of Canada. This is something which was overlooked in the budget introduced on October 28. Also, I notice, it is something which members to my right and across the floor seem reluctant to talk about. I am referring to the forest industry which in the province of British Columbia represents about 50 per cent of our economy. As I said earlier, it is the largest single income sector of the Canadian economy with some $20 billion in exports expected this year.

The hon. member for Vancouver East made an important point not only in relation to the amendment but to the problems in the housing sector. She indicated that about 300,000 home owners will be forced into mortgage renewals this year and that about 32,000 of them will be put in a position where they will have to pay in excess of 30 per cent of their income for shelter. Members of this House, particularly those on the other side who sit in cabinet meetings and whatever, must keep this in mind. Perhaps members opposite have homes which are almost completely paid for, but they should remember that in the eyes of most Canadians the incomes they receive are very extravagant. As was pointed out by a number of speakers today, the average Canadian income is slightly over $300 per week. We are talking about very serious housing problems, the impact of higher and higher interest rates, the impact of higher and higher mortgages. As the housing crunch increases because of fewer homes, higher mortgages and higher down payments, we see on one side Conservative members proposing more severe limitations on the amount of capital going from banks into the market, and on the other we hear of unending cuts coming from the minister responsible for housing. The cumulative impact of those two proposals is very germane to the debate today, and I think it requires close scrutiny.

I should like to make one comment in relation to native housing in northwestern British Columbia, a subject which is frequently overlooked by a lot of members for a number of reasons. I will quote very briefly from a northwest British Columbia social perspective which was done a few years ago. It points out one of the most seriously overlooked areas in relation not only to mortgage money—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I fear that perhaps I am stepping into my own trap and might be making a serious mistake in calling the hon. member to order. But for more than an hour the House has been considering section 176(2) of the Bank Act and motion No. 27. We have a rule of relevance which has been drawn to the attention of the Chair several times, sometimes sotto voce, sometimes through messages and whatnot. Along with every occupant of the chair I know the difficulty of dealing with the question of relevancy because the human brain is capable of making a relationship between any two thoughts whatsoever. If that is the definition of relevance the House of Commons wants to use then there is no alternative but for the Chair to observe it. As far as I know, the Chair is asked to attach more consideration to relevance and in that regard I think that if the hon. member wants to move toward a discussion of native housing and I understand the possibilities of relating that to the amendment before him, and I understand, in particular, in matters of economics, that relationships can be made, it would be helpful if he could relate that subject to the amendment from time to time. This would make it easier for the Chair. I draw this matter to the attention of every member and I say that if it is applicable to any one member then it is applicable to every member. The Chair has to make the same ruling all the time, regardless of the nature of the debate.

● (1520)

Mr. Rae: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like Your Honour to clarify your ruling. Are we not to be permitted to speak on housing on an amendment that deals directly with the question of the share of the market that is going to be allowed to banks and to other institutions? And with relation to mortgages, are we not to be allowed to talk about mortgage interest rates on an amendment that directly affects what those interest rates will be? And are we not to be allowed to discuss the government's policy with respect to housing and interest rates on an amendment which directly relates to mortgage interest rates? I would like you to clarify your ruling please, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Ordinarily, the Chair ought not to be drawn into debate. That is why I suggested at the beginning of my remarks that I was walking into a trap set by myself.

I will try to cover the subject as quickly and as fairly as possible. First, to my mind it is self-evident that every occupant of this chair will have to consider what the rule of relevance is, and then apply it with an equal and fair hand at all times, to all members. Second, I do not think the rule of relevance can be defined in such a fashion that as long as an hon. member simply makes reference to the motion before the House, that constitutes relevancy. In my mind it does not. I do not think that can be accepted. Finally, I am well aware that particularly in the matter of economics—and I made this point to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton)—that it is quite possible, logically, to relate many subjects to one another in that field. I do not think any occupant of the chair can bring down a particular ruling of relevancy on every occasion on every subject.

I want to point out to the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) that I did not make a ruling. I did appeal to the hon. member to consider the rule of relevance and attempt to contribute to the debate with that in mind. The traditional role of the Chair has been not to rule on each and every point of order or on each and every question of relevance but to try to draw to the hon. member's attention that some effort ought to be made to stay within some semblance of a rule of relevancy. That is what I have done. I do appeal to the hon. member for Skeena in that regard. I understand the difficulties but I do want to make clear that it is possible, logically, to relate any number of subjects, one to the other. I can only hope that hon. members will see fit to try and relate them a little more closely to the subject matter before the House than has been done in the last hour or so.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, before I carry on I would point out that most of my contribution is concerned with native housing. If it is to be your ruling that mortgage interest rates and the impact of the amendment by the hon. member for Edmonton West makes native housing and that type of issue irrelevant to the amendment or to the section of the Bank Act with which we are dealing, I would appreciate your ruling at this point because, quite frankly, that is the subject matter of the remaining speech notes which I have for today. It is the issue I intended to centre on.

I would like to quote briefly from a paper prepared by Mr. Graham Farstad several years ago entitled "Northwest British Columbia—A Social Perspective." It relates directly to reserve housing in my riding and I think it is relevant. It says:

> By far the greatest incidence of housing without basic amenities comes from registered Indians on northwest reserves. There was no running water in 41 per cent of houses, no indoor toilet in 57 per cent of houses and no indoor bath in 61 per cent of houses. The percentage of existing houses in poor condition varied from 17 per cent to 23.9 per cent in the northwest Indian districts. These serious deficiencies also affect educational success, health standards and over-all motivation. Consequently improvement of existing housing must be an essential component of any program to assist Indians.
>
> The relationship of families to housing is examined . . . Throughout the northwest, the number of persons per household is significantly higher than the B.C. average. With more persons per household in the northwest, one would expect more rooms per dwelling to accommodate them. In fact, the opposite is the case. The result is more people living in smaller houses.

In my view this is highly germane to the issue that is before us, because the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West clearly has the intention and, in fact, would limit the amount of capital which would be available for housing. It runs parallel to the proposals and the legislative process that we see coming from the Liberal government at this time, which are limiting the amount of capital going not only to native housing but to low and middle-income housing across the country. It is creating a very serious crisis. It is important that we know precisely why members to our right are making proposals such as that. I have not heard any relevant statements from that side as to why they are so interested in seeing that amendment go ahead. But I find the following somewhat germane to statements made by both of the previous speakers:

> It is instructive to look at bank profits. Since 1973, the year when the Liberals passed the residential mortgage financing bill to "enhance the attractiveness of mortgage investment", bank profits have risen by over 250 per cent.

I do not know of very many working families in Canada who have seen their incomes increase by 250 per cent since 1973. I do not know of very many commodities in this country that since 1970 have not doubled in cost to consumers.

In concluding my remarks and in the interest of maintaining good relationships with the Chair I will stay away from going extensively into the problem of native housing, which in my view is one of the most serious and pressing issues in this country. So I will just say that I see the amendment by the hon. member for Edmonton West as being, really, a crudely disguised "perk" for the banks. I am surprised that the points which were raised by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre did not deal either with the serious problems within housing or the serious problems which would be created by the proposals of the hon. member for Edmonton West. Nor did he deal with the serious problems we will still face when the Bank Act is passed.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to engage briefly in this debate and to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). In pith and substance the amendment relates to the amount of mortgage funds that are available to the mortgage market through the chartered banks. But in the result the amendment is simply another method of calculating the amount that could be made available. I do not think it is intended to control or reverse the policies which relate to the mortgage practices in Canada. It is merely intended to put it on a sounder financial basis.

In effect, the amendment relates the formula to the assets of the bank rather than to the liabilities of the bank. That is in terms simple enough for all to understand. There is no intention to affect the amount of money which is available to natives or any other group in Canada but simply to put the whole matter of the Bank Act, and the provisions of it, on a sounder, sensible basis. I am sure the hon. member for Edmonton West had nothing more in mind than to put forward a change in the proposal to make it more sensible, more amenable to the business practices that should be applied to banking activities.

This points up another aspect, however, which is that the Bank Act and the provisions before us in this bill are not written in stone. They are not things that cannot be changed, that cannot be improved, that members here cannot influence in a way which would change them for the better in the conduct of the business of banking for the benefit, basically, of the people of Canada.

This is just one example and there are many more. We have seen in proposals before us under the Bank Act provisions which would allow banks to get involved in the leasing of automobiles and other equipment. This prospect caused great concern to the automobile industry. Representations were made and we are all pleased that the minister saw fit to bring forward an amendment which would change that situation. This is just one more improvement which has been proposed. It is based on good sense and good judgment, and its intention, I am sure, in fairness to the hon. member for Edmonton West, is to have as the end result a better act providing for better control over our banks and our banking system.

As I have already indicated to the minister and to the House there are provisions that can be changed. The provision which would have allowed the banks to become involved in leasing from which they were formerly precluded, has been changed to allow the automobile industry and other businesses engaged in the leasing of autos and other equipment, to retain control of that field and not be subject to unfair competition from the banks. I am sure the objective of the hon. member for Edmonton West was simply to improve the bill.

● (1530)

The Bank Act is not written in stone, Mr. Speaker; it is not a perfect document. In my view, the main drawback is that the Bank Act is not subject to proper supervision and administration. There is no provision for officials to change some of the restrictions which have been placed on banks such as the percentage of assets or liabilities that can be used in the mortgage market. I believe this should be a function of the supervisor of the Bank Act, the Inspector General of Banks. Until now he has had the limited function of ensuring that banks operate on a sound financial basis. There should be a provision for such greater supervision and control of banks on a day to day basis to ensure that they become more responsive to the needs of the public, and that they can change with changing times.

I have reviewed the provisions of the Bank Act which relate to the Inspector General of Banks who, after all, is the supervisor of banks. This official should be charged with some control over these changing aspects of the Bank Act— bearing in mind, of course, that the provisions of the act only change every decade. I think it is one of the drawbacks of the Bank Act that legislators are forced to make provisions that are binding for long periods of time. We should try to find a way of placing within the Bank Act the means to control factors such as the amount of money available for mortgages across Canada through banks and other lending institutions, as situations change. The only hope of achieving a provision for such change within the act lies with the office of the Inspector General of Banks. There is ample precedent for this in other legislation. As the office of the Inspector General of Banks is presently constituted, he may not be capable of assuming these responsibilities but if we want the Bank Act to be something that can grow and change as circumstances demand, this is the area we should be concentrating on rather than just trying to change the various provisions before us in the bill. We would have to reconsider the whole structure of the act.

We are faced with an imperfect document, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Edmonton West has tried to alter one of the provisions in a manner that we feel would be more favourable to the industry, to people who need the services of banks, to those in the mortgage field and other fields as well. As the act now stands, it does not have the flexibility that would allow for change from time to time. The only way this kind of flexibility could be achieved is through the proper supervision of banks and the banking industry by a properly constituted office under a properly constituted officer such as the Inspector General of Banks. At the moment, however, his powers are so limited that he can do nothing for people whose day to day lives are affected by banking activities. If we want the Bank Act changed so that it can reflect the needs of the Canadian community as conditions change, we should be looking for some technique that would allow those changes to be made.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that the inevitable consequence of his amendment would be an increase in interest rates, a reduction of competition in the mortgage market and a special deal for certain institutions such as trust companies and mortgage and loan companies at the expense of the consumer.

I am not surprised at the position taken by the spokesman for the Conservative party in this debate but I think the consequences of the amendment should be made clear. An hon. member says, "That's what you think." That is true; that is why I am saying it. I know it is not traditional for a Conservative always to say what he thinks but that is how we in this party conduct ourselves.

The hard fact is that if hon. members were to seriously consider the problems that exist in the residential mortgage market, the idea of providing for less competition or of providing a special privileged position for certain institutions such as trust companies, makes little sense. In the first six months of 1978 the total of mortgage loans approved by all lending institutions was $6,590 million. In the first six months of 1979, the figure rose to $6,975 million. In the first six months of 1980, it dropped to an astonishing $4,158 million—a decline over the previous year of nearly $3 billion or almost 50 per cent.

The mortgage market has, in a sense, almost collapsed. In the first six months of 1980 the number of housing starts was at the lowest level since the early sixties as I pointed out yesterday in a question to the minister responsible for CMHC. It is down to 53,800 starts. The minister replied that on an annual basis the figures for October showed 187,000 starts. That is the October figure multiplied by 12. If we contemplate what the figures for 1980 will be, we can only conclude that starts are at the lowest ebb since the early 1960s.

Confronted with this situation and considering the fuel that has been poured on interest rates as a result of government policy and confronted with the tremendous uncertainty existing amongst borrowers and lenders about whether to make loans for five years, three years or one year, the result has been a virtual collapse in the housing market in new construction reflecting a tremendous downturn in the number of mortgage loans approved and the amount of loans approved in the last year. The drop from $7 billion for the first six months of 1978 to $4 billion for the first six months of 1980 is without parallel in history. It is a collapse such as we have not seen before.

Faced with this situation it is not surprising that the government is not prepared to contemplate the steps that are necessary. The measures suggested by the Conservative party would do nothing to provide greater competition, would do nothing to increase the size of the mortgage market and would do nothing to lower the rates. But, as I said before, they will do something to protect the privileges of a certain group of financial institutions—institutions which do nothing for the consumer.

There is a temptation for the government to return to home base and the kind of truths stated by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans). I call them truths, but I mean the sort of incantations of so-called free market economics which lead him to assume that if we return to that free market and let the banks do whatever they want about mortgages, rates would be lowered, the consumer would be protected, lenders would be protected, borrowers would be protected and we would live in the best of all possible worlds. The hon. member has accused us of being like Alice in Wonderland. The situation he is describing is not the situation which exists in the Canadian marketplace today. It is not what is happening in the mortgage field. There is tremendous uncertainty. The uncertainty is so great that I want to quote from an article in the November 6 edition of the Toronto Star headlined "Ottawa told to put legal lid on interest". I quote:

● (1540)

Canada is threatened by a "three-headed monster" of inflation, high interest rates and underutilization of industrial capacity.

Who said this? Was it a revolutionary cabal leader of some socialist organization talking about controlling our financial institutions? No. It was Ronald McKinlay of Toronto, president of the well-known socialist group, the 11,000 member society of Management Accountants of Canada. He went on to say:

Inflation is destroying the ability of people in the middle-income bracket to save for retirement—

He talks about the fact that high interest rates are the main reason for personal bankruptcies and corporate failures. He calls for a re-enactment of a federal interest statute to force the rates down. I quote again:

For more than 100 years, banks in Canada were never allowed to charge more than 7 per cent interest.

If rates were kept down, investors would put their money into capital projects rather than high interest loans. We must encourage investment of Canadian money in Canadian industry and business.

I would include under that heading the need to encourage the investment of Canadian money in the Canadian residential construction business, not only residential construction for middle-income Canadians on the commercial market, but for native Canadians, low-income Canadians, those Canadians who in a sense are outsiders, strangers in their own land. Under our current system they are unable to be full participants in the economic life of the nation.

People talk about the increase in the value of houses, the fact that inflation in housing has gone up 130 per cent in the past ten years as the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) mentioned today. There were many smiles around this chamber when that figure was mentioned. Many members in this chamber own houses. If you own a home, you are sitting pretty. If you do not own a house, you do not sit pretty. You are in a very difficult situation. In a sense, ownership of a home has become the criterion of full participation in Canadian society. There are far too many people excluded on that basis and even more will be excluded if we adopt the policy put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

The solution is along the lines suggested by Mr. McKinlay. I have known Mr. McKinlay for a number of years. He is certainly not a supporter of the New Democratic Party. We must recognize that we are living in an extraordinary situation, a situation where we now have mortgage rates of 15½ per cent, 16½ per cent, 17½ per cent and 18 per cent. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) comes into the House of Commons and tells us he does not know what mortgage interest rates are going to be. In October the government released figures which were supposed to be good for five years. They were not even good for one month. Inflation figures which were supposed to cover the next five years, supposedly predictions of what the rates will be for the next five years, are of no use.

Governor Bouey has told us time and time again that the rate of long-term interest rates is affected by what people's expectations of what inflation is going to be. A month after those figures were published came an indication from Statistics Canada that the current rate of inflation is not the 9.7 per cent predicted a month ago, but 10.9 per cent. All the figures contained in the medium-term economic predictions are meaningless and, in fact, misleading because they fail to indicate what is going on in the economy and how serious the situation is.

If we lived in a world of low interest rates, full employment and an economy going at full capacity, in short, if we were back in a world like the fifties and early sixties before we hit this period of tremendous uncertainty, reduced productivity, higher inflation and higher unemployment, I could understand the optimism of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans). I could understand him saying, "Take it easy. There is no need for us to disturb the eternal verities of marketplace economics. There is no need to get excited. There is no need to try to respond to what is going on. We simply have to let the banks and financial institutions compete. They will come up with the lowest mortgage interest rates possible. They will allow all those Canadians working and earning money to be able to provide for themselves. There is no need for any interference."

Talk about Alice in Wonderland. That is the wonderland of wonderlands because it is not the world in which we live. We live in a world where working people are on a treadmill and are continually falling behind. People are losing their homes because their mortgage costs have gone up 60 per cent in five years. The average Canadian can no longer afford to buy a home because interest rates are so high. The government has abdicated any sense of responsibility for what is going on in the economy.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance told us we cannot say there is a relationship between the budget and unemployment—that to do so was to presume a cause and effect which might not be there. That is a statement I would have expected from those in this House who seriously believe there is not very much governments can do. However, it came from a minister whose career has recognized the fact that we live in an activist world where governments have to play an activist role. For him suddenly to announce to the House there is nothing he can do about the situation creates tremendous uncertainty.

He said that if we have any crystal balls, would we please send them over. Well, the Liberal party has had a monopoly on crystal balls for many years. The fact is, we are not living in the secure, quiet, peaceful terrain occupied by members opposite. We are living in a hurly-burly world. The Toronto-Dominion Bank is paying tax at the rate of 0.7 per cent for the first nine months of 1980. Yet it is seriously argued that we should leave the whole setting of the interest rate pattern to the marketplace, that the government should not be directly involved in any way, and that we should leave entirely to the vagaries of the market what happens to the fate of working people.

It is a return to the world of the bailiff and the court. People are evicted because they cannot pay their interest rates and cannot pay their rent. It is an absurdity in the 1980s that we should be returning to the morality, economics and ethics that were discredited in the 1920s and should not have been allowed to rear their ugly heads again.

There has been a lot of talk about relevance. What could be more relevant when dealing with the Bank Act, and an amendment by the hon. member for Edmonton West which would give a particularly privileged position to our trust institutions, than to talk about what is happening to housing, mortgage rates and working people? That is what we have attempted to do in this debate this afternoon. I do not intend to make any apologies for it.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, in the ten minutes remaining before four o'clock I am pleased to have an opportunity to discuss the amendments before us. It might be significant to pick up the discussion where my colleague left off. Our concern is for relevance. Let us make no mistake, the debate this afternoon is extremely relevant. Not only is our approach to this clause and the proposed amendment relevant, but it extends beyond that. It extends to the philosophy we would like to develop in the legislation and, beyond the legislation, in the government itself. It is no accident that both the Liberal party and the Conservative party have been silent today. The proposal by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has the effect of turning the dials on a very technical clause which he thought was relevant to the Bank Act when really it did not concern people in the way in which he thought they should be concerned. This demonstrates a tremendous lack of sensitivity. The hon. member was not able to look beyond his proposal, at the effect it would have on the act and the underlying statements which exist within it.

● (1550)

The proposal basically suggests that the banks should get out of the mortgage business. But then where would the money come from? Nobody has an answer. We need more money and more housing but at cheaper rates. There are a variety of problems. Both parties were silent on this topic this afternoon. When I asked some hon. members on the government side involved with housing programs what they thought the hon. member for Edmonton West was trying to achieve in his proposal, they said that they did not know. When I asked these same members if they would speak on the subject today, they said that they did not understand it. One hon. member, when I asked him what he thought the government was attempting to achieve with the Bank Act, said he did not know, that the only thing he knew about the Bank Act was that it weighed five pounds.

Such comments by members opposite would seem to confirm a general lack of knowledge on their part. We would like to know how this legislation will affect people. The banks are doing very well, and when we turn knobs or pull levers in this legislation, the important thing is the effect on people. I do not wish to bore the House with more statistics, but housing in Vancouver is in very short supply, as indicated by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell).

There is an interesting article in today's Globe and Mail which describes a young family with children living in a skid row hotel because no other housing is available. They are forced to live there because of the policies of the government. Neither this government nor the previous administration have addressed housing problems squarely, but at least it should be recognized that we are facing a crisis and that if this crisis is left to fester, it will become a catastrophe.

Obscure as this clause may seem to some hon. members, the reason I have taken such an interest in it and why I was hurling the odd intemperate remark across the floor, for which I now apologize, is because there are people in my riding who are sleeping in cars. I am describing what is happening in the community of Powell River, but it is also true of other communities such as Courtenay and Campbell River. Prices on houses are just too expensive for many people in my riding. They simply do not earn enough income to qualify for a mortgage.

Some years ago the mill in Powell River was automated and as a result large numbers of people were laid off. Because this is an isolated community it was very difficult for people who were moving to sell their homes. With the surplus of unsold homes, housing development was at a standstill. Suddenly there was a major plant expansion, but no consideration was given to where new employees would live, and when they arrived in Powell River there was no housing available. Some families were crammed into motels, some employees lodged their families in other communities and others took to sleeping in their cars or their campers. It is a crisis situation.

Unless the government gets moving, we face a virtual catastrophe. Where is this legislation taking us? If I may digress for a few moments, some parts of the proposal by the hon. member for Edmonton West are in fact relevant, particularly that we should curb the government's obvious commitment to high interest rates, a commitment which prohibits young families from obtaining mortgage funds. The government in a desperate attempt to raise money in the private housing sector has reverted to old programs such as MURBs.

Housing is very relevant to this legislation. It has been relevant today, and it will be relevant on Monday when we discuss interest rates and the subject of foreign control in banking. There is also the topic of small business. I would like to know where the Tories stand when we begin discussing the provisions in the act which will be detrimental to small business. During the evening I would like to discuss the effect of foreign control on our industrial strategy.

I am personally interested in the discussion scheduled for Tuesday which will deal with what is happening in the shipyards in Canada. I am progressing down my list. I realize that there are only two minutes left, so with the indulgence of the Chair, I would point out that re-establishing the merchant fleet and developing it for the future would give Canadians a brighter outlook. I am appalled by the fact that CP ships are registered in other countries. In addition, I would like to discuss the relevance of this legislation to Arctic resource development. This is not an opposition day. This topic is clearly related to the legislation before us. If we do not pace Arctic development so that Canadians receive full benefits, we will lose that development to Japan, Pacific Rim countries and countries in Europe. Many hon. members will be interested in these topics and the effect of this legislation upon them.

I have made appeals to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on many occasions regarding the need for improved transportation and housing for the native people. Certainly the Bank Act is relevant in this area. The subjects which I have mentioned are very relevant to this legislation, and what we do here will have an effect on those subjects. I recognize that timing is a factor and that in some cases we must take what is available today and leave other things for tomorrow. I hope that some ot the issues not presently open for discussion can be addressed on a future opposition day.

May I call it four o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on motion No. 25 in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall motion No. 8 in the name of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall motion No. 11 in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall motion No. 12 in the name of the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall motion No. 14 in the name of the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

● (1600)

PENITENTIARIES

PROGRESS ON IMPLEMENTATION OF PARLIAMENTARY SUBCOMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

That a special subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be established to monitor the government's progress on the implementation of the recommendations of the 1977 parliamentary subcommittee on penitentiaries, and to conduct such further inquiries and to travel as may be required.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the motion before the House, which is a very straightforward and simple request and one which is of fundamental significance in looking at the penitentiary system of this country today. The motion is, quite simply, that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of the House of Commons strike a special subcommittee with representations from all parties to ensure that the recommendations of the special subcommittee on penitentiaries which was established in May of 1976 have been implemented or are in the process of being implemented.

I moved a similar motion on November 5 of last year. In fact, the wording was identical. At that time, I am very pleased to note, the representative of the Liberal party who spoke on that motion was the justice critic for the Liberal party which was then in opposition, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), who was also the distinguished chairman of the special subcommittee on penitentiaries.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville rose to support the motion which I put forward that day in words identical to the ones I have put forward today. He indicated that he felt this was a very important motion which deserved the support of the House. Now that the Liberal party is on the other side of the House, in government and no longer in opposition, I am confident its members will still see fit to support this motion just as they supported the motion on November 5 of last year. The motion today is in identical terms calling on the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to establish a subcommittee. Conditions have not changed such as to warrant the government's reversing its position on this important question.

Mr. Knowles: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Robinson: Just as members of the Liberal party supported this motion on November 5 of 1979, I am confident they will support it today because I know that they share the feeling of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that these recommendations must be implemented—not in part, not by picking one and choosing another, but implemented in full. Conditions have not become any better since November 5 of last year, a little over a year ago. Indeed, if one examines the record carefully, it becomes clear that conditions in the Canadian penitentiary system have deteriorated substantially in the past year. One need only look at the series of incidents which have taken place in various regions of the country. In the Pacific region, for example, there was the incident at Kent Institution. I refer to the hostage-taking at Laval and the incident at Dorchester in which a prison guard, Mr. Bill Morrison, was tragically killed. Since the beginning of this year there have been over 13 suicides in the penitentiary system in Quebec alone. The record is a sorry one, and it has become worse since November 5 of 1979.

This being so, surely it is incumbent upon the government not to reverse its position and not to reverse the position the hon. member, who is now a minister in the Liberal cabinet, took at that time. It is even more imperative now that this House call upon the Standing Committee On Justice and Legal Affairs to establish a special subcommittee to review the recommendations of the subcommittee on penitentiaries.

It is important just for a moment or two to look back to what motivated the House of Commons to establish that special subcommittee. In September of 1976 it was decided that the situation in the federal penitentiary system had deteriorated to the point at which there had to be a comprehensive study of the Canadian penitentiary system. There had been a couple of very serious incidents at Kingston and Laval and, of course, a major incident at the B.C. Penitentiary. This all-party committee studied the Canadian penitentiary system, travelled to other countries to examine their penitentiary systems, heard from witnesses throughout this country and finally came up with a report.

Hon. members should note that it was a unanimous report, although the subcommittee was made up of representatives of all three parties. The first recommendation surely goes to the heart of the reason we are here today proposing that there be some form of review. That subcommittee reported that a crisis existed then in the Canadian penitentiary system and that it could only be met by the immediate implementation of large-scale reforms. Recommendation No. 1 finally said, "It is imperative that the Solicitor General act immediately on this report as a matter of the utmost urgency." During the time the committee was holding its hearings and doing its work—and a very thorough and comprehensive job it did—the atmosphere in the Canadian penitentiary system improved markedly because those persons who worked in the system, who were prisoners in the system, who were involved at the judicial level or who were in any way affected knew, or at least hoped, that there was a possibility of real change there was a real crisis in the penitentiary system, and they had confidence that after establishing this special subcommittee the government would take its recommendations seriously.

Well, that was not to be. Unfortunately, the response of the government to the subcommittee report was, essentially, that it would take this recommendation and that recommendation and perhaps look at another and maybe accept it for long-term implementation. Those recommendations formed a package, Mr. Speaker. They formed a very important and coherent package, and it was never the intention of that subcommittee that the government should pick and choose. At least, if the government was determined to pick and choose, there were some essential recommendations of that subcommittee which the subcommittee insisted be implemented. Many of those key recommendations have been totally ignored by this government and, I regret to say, also by the Conservative government during its brief term of office. Those recommendations were ignored by both administrations. What we saw was a document tabled before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs called the report on the implementation of the recommendations of the subcommittee. The Conservative party had been very critical of the reports which had been tabled and I had hoped that when hon. members of the Conservative party formed the government there would perhaps be some changes.

However, it became very clear that it was not the government which was calling the shots in this matter. Indeed, it was very likely the commissioner of corrections who was calling the shots because the report which was tabled by the Conservative party was identical to the report tabled by the Liberal party. Those were the criticisms which were made by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, and those are some of the concerns he has expressed often as to the need for an ongoing review process in the Canadian penitentiary system. If a crisis existed in 1977, it is not an exaggeration to say that a crisis exists in the Canadian penitentiary system today. There are many examples to illustrate that, and I have pointed to some of them already.

I would like to spend a moment or two dealing with some of the recommendations of the subcommittee and then turn to a specific example of a very serious crisis within the Canadian penitentiary system, that is, the recent occurrences at Dorchester penitentiary in New Brunswick. As I have said, the Commissioner of Penitentiaries—and, through him, the government—has been very selective in his approach to the recommendations of the special subcommittee on the penitentiary system. I would like to give a few examples of how he and the government have been not only selective but misleading. They have misled the Canadian public and the Canadian Parliament by suggesting that certain recommendations have been implemented when in fact no such thing has happened. As recently as a year ago the then hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam pointed out that in fact only some 14 of the 65 recommendations of the special subcommittee on penitentiaries had been implemented. I would like to give just three or four examples of the deceit—and I use that word advisedly—that is contained in this progress report on implementation.

● (1610)

What are some of the recommendations which have been allegedly implemented but which in fact have not been implemented at all? I start at the beginning with recommendation No. 1 which is about a crisis existing. There is a statement that it is imperative for the Solicitor General to act immediately on the report as a matter of the utmost urgency. This recommendation is stated to have been implemented. That is simply false. The government did not act immediately upon this report as a matter of the utmost urgency. They picked certain recommendations with which they could live and threw the rest out. So to suggest that that recommendation has been implemented or that a crisis no longer exists in the penitentiary system is misleading the Canadian public.

Recommendation No. 8 is another one which has been allegedly implemented. It calls for a sufficient number of training positions to be established to allow for the full and adequate training and continuing professional education of custodial personnel. We are told that it has been implemented, yet not a single additional position has been filled. So to suggest that that recommendation has been implemented is again misleading the Canadian public and members of Parliament.

Recommendation No. 17 is another one. It recommends that women should be employed on the same basis as men in the penitentiary service. We are told that that recommendation has been implemented. Well, I suggest that any member of the public or any member of the House should go into a penitentiary in this country to see whether in fact that recommendation has been implemented and whether indeed women are employed on the same basis as men in the penitentiary service. That recommendation has not been implemented and once again the people of Canada and the members of this Parliament have been misled.

I could go on and on throughout the report, but I will only give one more example because I think that in many ways what has happened is typical of the shallow response of this government to the importance of these recommendations. Let us consider recommendation No. 25, surely one of the important recommendations in the subcommittee's report. It is a straightforward one and it states that the penitentiary service should be open and accountable to the public. We are told that that recommendation has been implemented. There is a little footnote which explains how it has been implemented, how the secrecy within the penitentiary service has been swept away and how the service has been made open and accountable to the public. They give an example which I will read from the report. It is stated:

Approximately 45,000 visitors toured B.C. Penitentiary during the week of May 4, 1980.

The B.C. Penitentiary contained no prisoners on May 4, 1980, and if that is an example of how the penitentiary service of this country is accountable to the people, then once again we see clearly that members of the public and members of Parliament have been misled.

I suggest that these implementation reports are a serious shortcoming of this government and that the government has a responsibility to come before the subcommittee on penitentiaries of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to explain exactly why they have chosen to reject some of the most important recommendations which the subcommittee made unanimously.

I said I would turn to Dorchester. Recently, as members of this House have become aware, some very serious allegations have been made about incidents at Dorchester. There has been the tragic death of a prison guard, there has been a suicide, there have been allegations of widespread beatings and gasing at the institution, there has been an allegation, confirmed by the Department of the Solicitor General, of an incident in June of this year in which 137 shotgun rounds were fired into a gymnasium full of prisoners, and there have been allegations that the prisoners' personal property and private belongings have been systematically destroyed. I emphasize that these are serious allegations and it is not for me or for the Solicitor General to determine, without hearing both sides fully, whether or not there is truth to these allegations. They must be weighed by an independent judicial inquiry. For example, an allegation has been made that, following the hostage-taking at Dorchester and following the tragic death of Bill Morrison, prisoners on that tier were forced to strip, to lie down on the floors of their cells and put their arms through the cell bars; their hands were handcuffed together and they were repeatedly gassed and beaten. That is a serious allegation, one which has been made by a number of prisoners who were on that tier and substantiated independently by many of the prisoners who have since been segregated. There have been allegations that prisoners were dragged naked by prison guards downstairs, one guard holding one leg, another guard holding the other leg and a third guard kicking the head of the prisoner. These are serious allegations. With the history of problems at Dorchester institution, with the history of escapes, deaths and allegations of violence, with a history of allegations of destruction of personal property, what more does it take to get the government to move, to get the government to say, "Yes, we want to clear the cloud. We want to remove the cloud that now hangs over that institution."

I met with the guards' union, with the acting warden and with the prisoners there. I found that the guards' union is as concerned as anyone else about all of them being under this cloud now. The rule of law does not stop at the prison gate in this country. The rule of law must surely apply throughout this land. If there has been criminal wrongdoing, those persons who are responsible should be brought to task and disciplined or they should be brought before a court of law, while those who are innocent should not be made to suffer as a result of allegations that have been made against all of them. The Solicitor General assured the House on October 14 of this year that the in-house report of the inspector general would be made public when it was completed. We await that report with interest. But there must be more, there must be a full judicial inquiry into all the recent circumstances at the Dorchester institution.

I see that my time is coming to an end and I would just like to reiterate that I hope the support which the Liberal party gave to this motion last year, worded in an identical fashion, will not change today, and I hope that if there is some suggestion it will change, whoever speaks on behalf of the Liberal party will tell the House and the Canadian people how conditions have improved from November of last year to November of this year in such a way as to warrant the rejection of this reasonable motion now. As I said before, a crisis existed in 1977 in the Canadian penitentiary system and a crisis exists today in that system. It is incumbent, therefore, that a full and careful examination of the recommendations by the subcommittee on penitentiaries of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be carried out and, in addition, that there be a full judicial inquiry into the recent tragic events at Dorchester Penitentiary.

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak today on the motion of the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) because I believe that the penitentiary system must respond to two fundamental concerns. The first concern is reform of the behaviour of the individual inmate which has led him to prison. The second concern is the security of the individual, both inside and outside the prison walls. If, following the process of law, society is to deprive a person of his liberty, there must be a solid guarantee that while in prison he will not be subject to the jungle justice of fellow inmates or to arbitrary justice meted out by his keepers.

• (1620)

I consider it astounding that prisons in a modern civilization cannot fully protect their wards from violence. Just as astounding, however, is the fact that prison guards and administrators are subjected to similar forms of violence. It is a tragedy that violence has almost become an accepted norm in any occupation, and it is doubly tragic that the most exposed persons in this regard are those charged with the responsibility of protecting society.

Acceptance of certain aspects of the MacGuigan report will go a long way in bringing stability to Canada's penitentiary system, and in many cases this has been done. The recommendations of the MacGuigan report came as a result of the considerable work done by that committee. It probed the conditions of 24 institutions across Canada and outside of Canada. It interviewed or received the submissions of 2,000 persons interested in prison life. After all this work, 40 of the 65 recommendations are now fully operational in the prison system of Canada and 16 more will be implemented over a longer period of time. Four detailed reports have been issued by solicitors general since that time describing the status of these recommendations up to the present moment.

In many ways the MacGuigan report represents a giant step in the evolution of correctional institutions in Canada. Paragraphs 29 to 81 of the report outline the history of prisons in Canada and the conditions which led to the system of today. I feel it is important to understand this history in order to appreciate the progress we have made to this particular point. Formerly it was felt sufficient to inflict simple punishment on the offender. Guards were there to ensure that prisoners did not enjoy the simplest of freedoms. Both groups were brutalized by the process and it is easy to see that violence was the simplest way to take out the frustration that such a system bred.

The MacGuigan report followed numerous examples of violence in penitentiaries in Canada. It seemed that there was a geometric increase in the number of these incidents in the early 1970s. Something had to be done. Penitentiary reform in a contemporary society is a large and onerous task. It must satisfy conflicting demands. Some seek more stringent control of inmates, seeing them as incorrigible societal misfits. Others would shift the blame for criminal behaviour to society itself, claiming that upbringing, economic status and education are responsible for crime. The reality lies very much in between, and the subcommittee recognized this when it indicated:

> Even with today's advanced knowledge of human behaviour and human need, we still rely on harsh punishment, while knowing it is more dangerous and costly than humane, constructive prisons and alternative sentencing . . . Correctional programs are futile and wasteful if normalcy is not basic to them . . . If the inmate is not trained and experienced in that free world to which he or she must inevitably return, it is naive to expect that person to come out of isolation and live well and productively in that world.

However, the committee also recognized that discipline was the tool in achieving normalcy. In the past, harsh punishment may have been seen as an end in itself, but our knowledge of human nature has progressed rapidly in the twentieth century. Attaining that normalcy requires a program of retraining and socialization that will make the former inmate more suitable to himself and society.

It has become a truism that many recidivists end up in prison again because there is nowhere else to go. Once out, there seems to be very little for the individual to do. Prison almost becomes a second family to the inmate. Like "Big Joe", a character in John Steinbeck's ironic novel "Tortilla Flat", he sees jail as a place where the food is reasonable and regular. It is a place where he can get shelter from rain and the elements, and, most of all, he knows the people there.

To counteract this, occupational and academic training must be provided to the inmate. Recommendation 43 of that report indicates that academic and trades training must be furnished in correctional institutions. On May 11 of this year, two inmates of Matsqui prison received bachelor of arts degrees. Apprenticeship programs exist in co-operation with local industries across Canada, producing worth-while goods ranging from furniture to printing. This is one step in the reform of prisoners. Other steps come from socialization skills learned in prison. One such step is the allowance of common dining in a majority of institutions across Canada. More significantly, the subcommittee suggested that contact visiting with family was an important factor in determining the success or failure of a newly released inmate. From this recommendation comes the result that all institutions, with the exception of Laval, permit contact visiting as of today and it will be instituted at Laval shortly.

Family visiting programs for visits of extended periods of time are planned for one of the major institutions in Canada before the end of 1981. So as to reduce the occurrences of violence, new procedures for dealing with discipline problems have been introduced. Specifically, the use of gas as a measure of restraint will be limited to only the most extreme cases. To arbitrate grievances in a better manner, an independent chairperson is in place in maximum security institutions and is being put in place in medium security institutions.

An hon. Member: How about minimum?

Mr. Weatherhead: Until 1978, there was an element of uncertainty in the entire parole system. This has been improved and regulations allow the inmate access to information on his case when it is before the parole board for review. Steps toward smaller living units and team concept facilities are being introduced in areas across Canada. The example of Kent Institution in British Columbia is a case in point. These are the steps to reform I spoke about earlier. Beginning with the Archambault report in 1938 and ending with the MacGuigan report in 1977, all reports on penitentiary reform came to the same conclusions. In order to reach the goal of reform, the inmate must first acknowledge his responsibility in the crime which brought him to prison in the first place. Further, he must recognize that through his co-operation he can receive the necessary training to make himself more useful to the community.

Reform of the inmate, however, can be best accomplished in an environment which is conducive to such an aim. The inmate must have the assurance that he is not in an institution solely because he is being punished. He is not there to fill time, picking up the latest tips on how to break the law; this will only result in this being returned to prison. A person with such a low regard for his own liberty must be made to feel productive enough to fear the deprivation of liberty. I think the steps taken by the correctional service have gone a long way in this regard. Part of a conducive environment to reform is the assurance to inmates that there will be a standard, simple and straightforward set of rules governing the discipline and running of institutions. Progress toward this aim was begun in April of 1979, and such a code will make clear the responsibility of inmate and correctional officer alike.

Another move toward greater security can be found in the upgrading of educational and relevant outside experience for prospective correctional officers. Candidates for this occupation must now have the equivalent of a secondary school graduate's education. Further, to facilitate the officers' communications skills, they must also have had three years outside employment in a job which involved person-to-person skills.

The probationary period of a new corrections officer is now 24 months, giving the correctional service a better opportunity to assess the suitability of candidates, and five-day refresher courses for correctional officers are now required. In order to deal with problems, it is the policy of the correctional service that all non-officer personnel are trained to play key roles in emergency situations. When such problems arise, and are too great for the institution's personnel to handle, regional teams are in place to give assistance, augmenting the institution's emergency response force. Local police are advised of any situation which may require their assistance.

• (1630)

Perhaps the most important recommendation to be acted on with regard to prison security is the rule in place which provides that no deals will be made with prisoners while hostages are being held. This must remain an essential element of any system of penitentiary discipline. It must be made clear that human beings cannot be made tools in a bargaining process. Compromises can be reached without taking innocent people as prisoners.

The government's action in these reforms will ensure that greater security is brought to penal institutions. The points I made earlier concern the reform of the inmate. I think that these two aspects are firmly linked. Greater security within the prison system will lead to greater possibilities for the reform of prisoners. In a situation where all those involved understand their own responsibilities to themselves and others the co-operation necessary to achieve a future for inmates will prevail. In principle No. 4 the subcommittee states:

> Only the wrongdoer can bring about reform in himself since he is responsible for his own behaviour; but the penitentiary system must be structured to give positive support to his efforts at reform by providing certain essential conditions: discipline, justice, work, academic and vocational training, and socialization.

I think I have demonstrated a few areas where the government's implementation of certain aspects of the report have met the principle enunciated above. The report also makes a distinction between punishment for a positive purpose and vengeance. Imprisonment in an environment which encourages reform from within the prisoner while at the same time imposing just and reasonable sanctions on the offender is punishment in its most positive form. Vengeance, on the other hand, seeks only to strike back at the offender with no view to the long-term consequences. While serving as a deterrent to that person contemplating a crime, simple vengeance would do nothing to reform the already-convicted offender.

In fact, merely incarcerating an offender with no concern for his future harms society itself in the long run. Society may have to face the prospect of retrying and reimprisoning the offender at a cost to the public purse and a heavier cost to society itself, one much harder to measure.

There are those who would argue that the recommendations have not been implemented quickly enough. On the contrary, I would say that significant action on 56 of the subcommittee's recommendations represents a very fast response. Many of the 56 items formed an important part of the subcommittee's report. Further, the action to date indicates the importance the government attaches to penal reform. One of the very positive results of the committee's report was the amount of study done by the government and other organizations.

I see that studies regarding recommendation No. 2 have been going on and that the government is considering alternatives to incarceration at this time. This is especially important to young offenders, first time offenders and those convicted of less serious crimes. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) in speaking to the International Conference on Alternatives to Imprisonment on June 8 last stated the current status of alternatives to incarceration. At their own initiative, and with the encouragement of the federal government, some provinces have initiated programs to establish options different from the traditional model. In Saskatchewan and New Brunswick fines are being considered as first options where appropriate. Ontario and British Columbia have examined and implemented programs which supplant imprisonment by community service orders. Through the federal law fund the federal Department of Justice is conducting research into the field of alternatives to incarceration. The minister pointed out that obstacles to the use of these alternatives may be found in the criminal law. Hopefully, when the Department of Justice completes its research into a criminal amendments omnibus bill these obstacles will be removed.

As the Solicitor General pointed out in his speech last June 8, alternatives must be considered, because in some situations alternative punishment may be more economical to society. No one would suggest that dangerous criminals should be set free to save a few dollars. However, there are types of crime where it would be more appropriate to impose a sentence other than imprisonment. Last year the average cost of keeping a male in maximum security for the year was about $29,000. Surely, there are crimes which do not justify that kind of expense. But alternatives must not be used just to save money. It would be dereliction of duty to use that as a primary reason.

The Solicitor General pointed out in the same speech that alternatives which keep the offender in the community and functioning as a family and community member would be more humane and would hold more promise for the individual and the community. Alternatives other than simple fines exist. As I have mentioned, some provinces have instituted community service programs. These are useful for a number of reasons. First, community service programs provide manpower in areas where it is sometimes not available. Further, it brings home to the offender the impact of his behaviour on the community. This is an excellent way of learning to rid oneself of the behaviour which leads to law-breaking.

I discussed probation earlier in my remarks but I think it is worth discussing it in the context of its value as an alternative to traditional sentencing. Use of probation is widespread use in Canada, though certain technical difficulties in the law hamper the mobility of the offender. These difficulties can be overcome by a federal initiative.

The Solicitor General pointed out some rather unique problems with regard to intermittent sentencing. These are important steps in penal reform. They are just as important as penitentiaries reform. Penitentiaries are not dungeons where law-breakers are sent away to be closeted from the outside world, nor are they rest homes designed for criminals to while away the years. Neither situation is true. If one or the other system were to prevail our criminal problem would be insoluble.

Mr. Speaker, by enunciating 13 principles the MacGuigan report sought to address the crisis in Canadian penitentiaries. The actions of the government have been excellent to this point. The core of the program has been implemented. Justice cannot evolve in a vacuum. The very important work of the MacGuigan committee set the stage for reform of penitentiaries in Canada. Changing circumstances will dictate that some of the 65 recommendations will be altered or replaced entirely. The situation in Canadian prisons must be constantly monitored to take account of current needs. However, just as important will be the work of people studying alternatives to the expensive and sometimes inappropriate system which prevails now.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Will the hon. member answer a brief question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The time would permit if the hon. member agrees.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. member could clarify something for me. A year ago in this House the Liberal party supported a motion which was framed in the identical words of my motion today. Will the hon. member clarify whether, indeed, the Liberal party is still supporting that motion or whether they have reversed their position?

Mr. Weatherhead: I was speaking on my own behalf in this particular debate and I have no instructions from the government regarding same.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for introducing this motion today which reads as follows:

That a special subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be established to monitor the government's progress on the implementation of the recommendations of the 1977 parliamentary subcommittee on penitentiaries, and to conduct such further inquiries and to travel as may be required.

Mr. Speaker, one could speak at length on this subject. My colleague from Bow River (Mr. Taylor) wants to say a few words on the subject before us as his constituency harbours one of the federal prisons. I have listened with interest to the hon. member for Burnaby who gave a very fine exposé of why we should support this resolution. I, too, want to indicate my support for this motion. I am disappointed that the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead), who gave a very good overview of the whole subject of our criminal justice system, really did not, in my opinion, direct his attention to the motion itself. I do not think he made any reference at all to whether or not the special committee should be reactivated. He refused to indicate whether or not he is for or against the motion when he was being questioned by the member for Burnaby.

I support what the member for Burnaby had to say. There was only one disappointment for me in the comments of the member for Burnaby. He began by giving an interesting history of the development of this special subcommittee known as the MacGuigan committee. But, unfortunately, he missed the very first point in the establishment of that committee. Maybe I should excuse him for that, since he was not a member of the House at that time.

● (1640)

This subcommittee developed as a result of the initiative of members of the Progressive Conservative Party who in 1976-77 decided in caucus to have a committee to study the problem. We were aware of the problem although the government of the day apparently was not. We established a committee, chose the personnel, began to plan an itinerary and then the government got wind of things. Apparently it thought it would be better to have a parliamentary committee and so began negotiations with all parties in the House. The result was a committee which involved the four parties in the House at that time, with a total of 13 members. The government had seven members on the committee, five of whom are still members of this House. Two of them are now ministers of the Crown. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) was chairman of the subcommittee and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) was vice-chairman. Two of the government members are now parliamentary secretaries and one just recently retired from the position of parliamentary secretary. That will give you an idea of the impact of the personnel from the government side on that committee.

As the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) pointed out, just a year ago all members were in favour of implementing recommendation No. 65 of the subcommittee report which suggested an ongoing reference of the subject matter to a committee of Parliament. Now, for some reason, these four fairly senior people on the government side seem to be impotent when it comes to doing something about this.

I cannot believe that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), who has taken the responsibility of denying us the opportunity to have the subcommittee reactivated, is personally against it. I have questioned him in committee and I am convinced, having seen how things go there and how things go in Correctional Services Canada, that he has been conned by his officials. I think they have advised him unwisely that in no way should this committee be reactivated. There is a lot of evidence to support that. From the day committee hearings began, we saw the efforts that were made by officials of Correctional Services Canada to block certain moves that the committee thought would be progressive.

On October 14, I raised a couple of questions with the Solicitor General in the House. The second question dealt specifically with the implementation of recommendation No. 65 in the report. I should read that recommendation into the record to show precisely what we mean. It was the last recommendation of the subcommittee and it reads as follows:

The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs should have a permanent reference during the rest of the Thirtieth Parliament and for the Thirty-first Parliament to enable it to review the implementation of this report in the context of the criminal justice system.

That is from the progress report dated May, 1980, issued by the office of the Solicitor General. That recommendation was subscribed to unanimously by the subcommittee. I happened to have some reservations about the propriety of the Thirtieth Parliament trying to commit the next Parliament to something of that nature but nonetheless I was in total agreement with the principle and philosophy of the recommendation. Because of that, on October 14, 1980, as reported at page 3626 of Hansard, I put a question to the Solicitor General as a result of the hostage-taking incident at Dorchester. My question was as follows:

Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is again directed to the Solicitor General. If the minister had read the report he would realize that the matter of accountability and responsibility was dealt with by the committee. Inasmuch as the minister has essentially refused to set up a public inquiry which would look into the affair at Dorchester, and at the same time has refused to implement the subcommittee report in toto, as recommended by that committee, will he now implement the intent of recommendation No. 65 of that report by making a special reference of this subject matter to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs?

The reply was as follows:

As to whether or not I have read the report, Madam Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that I sat on the committee, I helped gather evidence and I worked on the preparation of that report.

I want to interrupt the quotation with a comment, Mr. Speaker. The first page of the report lists the 13 members of the subcommittee, but the name of the Solicitor General does not appear there. On the next page, under "Acknowledgements" which run to roughly two pages, there is a list of 11 members of the House of Commons. His name is included in the list. The paragraph preceding the list reads as follows:

Other members of the House of Commons who served on the subcommittee from time to time but who did not participate in its deliberations and report are as follows:

I am sure it was unintentional, but the Solicitor General misled the House on October 14 when he suggested he had made some input into the report. His reply continued:

—I helped gather evidence and I worked on the preparation of that report.

The report shows that he did not. The reply goes on:

On the question of the reference, there is a tremendous volume of work for the justice committee—

We do not argue that, Mr. Speaker.

—and I would be happy to deal with questions like that when my estimates, which are now before the committee, are considered. Frankly, it would be for the committee to consider how much of their estimates time they would want to spend on that. There is other work for that committee which I think should have a higher priority.

The Solicitor General was mixed up. He stated that he had some sympathy for our concerns. He acknowledged the amount of work facing the justice committee but suggested that for that reason he should not refer this matter to another special committee. Mr. Speaker, that is why he should refer it, if for no other reason. He is acknowledging that there is no opportunity, when the estimates are before the standing committee, to ask a significant number of questions because of the shortage of time and the volume of work. At the same time, however, he refuses to refer this subject to a committee of the House of Commons.

It is incomprehensible to me that the minister should act in this way, Mr. Speaker. He has given good reason why the matter should be referred; the justice committee is overloaded with work and we do not have time to ask questions there yet at the same time the minister denies us the privilege of speaking on this very important issue.

I just want to speak for about two more minutes, Mr. Speaker, and touch on something in the report that I think is crucial. There are two recommendations which I do not think the hon. member for Burnaby mentioned. Recommendation No. 24 deals with setting up a five-man board to decide policy and recommend policy to the Solicitor General. Another recommendation deals with a comparable organization at the institutional level. If there is one thing that our present system needs, Mr. Speaker, it is some real input from the public in Canada and not the kind of phony input we are getting at present.

The prison system in Canada is the only public institution where there is no public input. Hospitals have hospital boards; schools have public boards, universities have boards and even police commissions are public bodies that interverne between the minister and the local police authorities.

I shall take time on another occasion, Mr. Speaker, to explain some of the ludicrous comments that have come from the Solicitor General, comments of which he should be ashamed. I know they are provided to him by Correctional Services Canada. Ludicrous arguments have been advanced as to why those two recommendations should not be implemented. The way they have done it is unbelieveable. In fact, by way of the grapevine, and the passage of time, I have found out why recommendation No. 62, which requested a feasibility study on the advisability of a board at one institution on an experimental basis was not implemented, as the hon. member for Scarborough West has intimated. That was a recommendation that we study the feasibility of it.

● (1650)

If the hon. member for Scarborough West is interested, he should ask the Solicitor General and/or the correctional services officials for the documentation by which they came to the decision not to accept that recommendation in terms of implementing it as an experimental model. One would be appalled, coming from the city of Toronto, as my hon. friend does, and knowing something about how the system of education works in Ontario, at the arguments advanced to dispose of that particular recommendation. It was just unbelievable.

Rather than get "het up" about this any longer, and wanting to save some time for my friend from Bow River who is concerned about this subject, I will conclude by expressing my full support for the hon. member for Burnaby. He deserves credit for again bringing this matter to the attention of the House. I hope that members on the government side, five of whom were in support of recommendation 65, and not one of whom spoke today, will also support this. When I came in at two o'clock this afternoon, the Solicitor General was in his seat. He stayed here until four o'clock. The moment this item was called, he disappeared. The hon. member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) was also in the chamber. He was one of the strongest proponents of this report. He has since disappeared from the chamber as well. Where are the other three members from the government side who felt so strongly about this report? When it comes to doing something about it, they are not here to present their case, whatever it may be. Maybe it has changed. In conclusion, I hope hon. members who are still here will see the wisdom of allowing this motion to pass this afternoon.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, when a government spends several thousands of dollars, and members from all sides spend a lot of time and effort studying a problem, it is not satisfactory to simply put that book of recommendations on the shelf. This is another frustration for people across this country because it is being done far too often. Consequently, I fully support the motion of the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I commend him on his excellent address, as well as the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday).

A number of items concern me because there is a medium penitentiary in the Drumheller area. I will not have enough time to deal with all of the items, but I do want to deal with one or two. The hon. member for Oxford mentioned that if we need anything, we need input. That is certainly so.

At the recent hostage-taking incident in the Drumheller Penitentiary, it is hard to believe that not one of the chaplains was called during that trying time. They had no input, those people who have an intimate working relationship with the prisoners. That is one example of where there is no input in our penitentiaries.

Another item that bothers me greatly is that some of the guards who were involved in that hostage-taking incident still suffer from nervous, physical and mental stress. It seems that once a hostage incident is over, we forget about the effect it has on those who were involved.

Another item which calls for very careful consideration has to do with the conjugal visits recommended by the minister. This is opposed by the Public Service Alliance. They say it would threaten prison security and could result in escapes, violence, hostage takings, inmate unrest and wife beatings, more commonly known as domestic disputes.

I recently met the mayor of the city of Drumheller and the ministerial association of that area. One of the first things we talked about was conjugal visits. Only one of the many ministers supported these, and he supported them only for younger prisoners. They are being confined to maximum security prisoners. It creates a real conflict among the guards and prisoners when we provide this for only maximum security inmates, murderers and so on, but not for those who are there for crimes not nearly as serious. This should be looked into before it causes another wave of activity in the criminal field in this country.

Another item concerns medium security. A medium security prison was built and then "lifers" and others who should be in maximum security were sent to that prison. That is the reason for the hostage-taking incident. There is a mix-up in all of this. The ministers were concerned about this as well. If there were better classification and segregation, there would be greater response to rehabilitation.

I am very anxious for this motion to pass. There is serious need to look into the recommendations that were made. I do not stop talking because there are not many more things to say, but because I am so anxious for this motion to pass today. I hope hon. members in this House will not undermine justice in this country by defeating this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, I hear my Progressive Conservative colleagues shout "shame" because, of course, if we speak against this motion we give the impression that we support the idea of prisons which would be like fortresses. If we are for such a motion, of course, there is the danger that some would say—

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, could the hon. member for Verchères tell us in advance whether he will waste the time of hon. members during the three minutes which are left—

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, this same motion was debated in the House last November, but those who spoke against it were the hon. members for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) and Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin). After these names, I see the initials PC, which mean Progressive Conservative in our country, For his part, Mr. MacGuigan was in favour of this motion.

Now, the question is very simple. Do we really need a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to review each one of these recommendations? From a very practical point of view, I say that we do not—

An hon. Member: We do.

Mr. Loiselle: We do not agree, and this is precisely why there is a House of Commons. I submit that, when it considers the estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General, this committee has every opportunity to ask all its questions on this matter. In practice, this committee will review the Juvenile Delinquents Act in its entirety as early as January.

At the present time, when the House is very busy, when all the committees have much to do, when a special committee is considering the patriation resolution, when we have so many matters to discuss, I wonder how we could justify that a group of members be once again called on to travel throughout the country. I do not believe that we need such a forum or such an organization to go further than the recommendations contained in the MacGuigan report.

I believe that there is a lot to do in this area—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock the House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 17, 1980

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

REPORTED REFUSAL TO COMPLY WITH ANTI-CORROSION CODE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of importance to all buyers of 1981 automobiles. In view of reports that the "big three" car manufacturers are refusing to comply with the anti-corrosion code beyond the 1980 model year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs report to this House as soon as possible on the implications the withdrawal could have on Canada's domestic car industry and on the Canadian consumer as a result of this serious erosion of the anti-rust code.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AIRPORTS

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—CALL FOR LONG-RANGE PLAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, especially for residents of Brampton, Etobicoke and Mississauga. Whereas additional construction activity at Toronto International Airport, such as new hangar buildings and additional taxiways, has citizens of the area concerned; whereas there appears to be a lack of communication between Toronto International Airport and the citizens it directly affects; and whereas there does not exist a long-range plan for Toronto International Airport, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That this House urge Transport Canada to produce within the next three months a long range plan covering the next decade for Toronto International Airport so that the public and municipal councils may know what the future holds, and that once this plan is announced, provisions for public study and participation in discussion are readily available and widely announced.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

PROGRAM TO CUSHION COST OF TRANSPORTING OIL TO NORTHERN RESIDENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that on Friday last the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said that "the basic price for oil across this country is the same, but obviously there are additional costs related to transportation", and in view of the fact that northern consumers are, in actual fact, paying considerably more for oil once these transportation costs are included, and furthermore are unable to benefit from any incentives to convert to use of natural gas, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-PowellRiver (Mr. Skelly):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, consistent with the principle of equalizing oil prices across the country, move immediately to implement a program of cushioning the cost of transporting oil to northern regions of Canada.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL UNITY

SUGGESTED VISIT OF LIBERAL MEMBERS TO CALGARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the present Liberal government has decided that Calgarians need to be educated about Canada, and in view of the fact that they are spending thousands of dollars on a 20-page newspaper supplement to advertise the fact that this is to be

Canada Information Week in Calgary, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre):

That this House adjourn for the week and all members of cabinet and the Liberal caucus travel to Calgary to meet with the people in their communities and coffee shops, so that in return they can learn how to be Canadians, how to work together with the people and provincial governments, and to develop constitutions and budgets that reflect the Canadian way of governing.

Madam Speaker: For presentation this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VISIT OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE TO OLDS, ALTA.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to draw to the attention of this House a matter regarding the recent visit of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to Alberta.

In view of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) cannot afford to ignore western alienation any longer and that, rather than sending "Lean Mean Gene", as the minister refers to himself, to Olds to talk tough, Albertans would rather hear a more conciliatory tone from the federal government, and further, since it was reported that "Lean Gene" looked ridiculous going to the board of trade meeting in Olds to speak dressed in cowboy boots, a western shirt and string tie, and wearing a green cowboy hat, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That if the federal government really believes in meaningful dialogue, next time it send the organ grinder to Olds, not the monkey.

* * *

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

REPORT CONCERNING B.C. CONVENTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I would like to move a motion under Standing Order 43. In view of reports in the press concerning the B.C. Tory convention over the weekend to the effect that the member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon), referred to his fellow MP, the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook), as having "very little forethought coming to the meeting and insulting people", and since this member was also described by another Tory as "consistently stupid", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly):

That this House congratulate the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta for his perception in recognizing these fundamental characteristics, which apply not only to Tory members from British Columbia but are shared in a number of instances by his colleagues from all parts of Canada.

Madam Speaker: I am not sure that this motion is pressing and urgent.

• (1410)

INDUSTRY

ACTION TO EXPAND INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the success of Canadian General Electric in Peterborough is dependent on our national energy package. An executive of the Canadian General Electric plant in Peterborough told me recently that the company's market is based on the expansion of industry and that the more developments in capital investment projects there are, the better it is from the company's point of view. This Liberal government's budget and the energy program is completely counterproductive to this aim in Ontario and thus threatens all of Ontario's industries.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence):

That under pressing and urgent matters the government act immediately to reattract expansion and development industry to Canada for the good of Ontario and recognize that the government's complete lack of initiative in the area is costing us jobs and economic expansion in Ontario.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

CALL FOR ACTION TO INCREASE COVERAGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. I urge hon. members on the government side to listen carefully and hope they will adopt the motion.

With the increasing number of trust and finance companies being licensed by this government to do business in Canada, with the consumer price index now at 10.9 per cent, above that of the previous year, and with inflation continuing to rise to double digits, the $20,000 figure fixed over ten years ago as the limit for deposit insurance under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act is now worth only 47 cents in today's dollars. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Minister of Finance take immediate action to increase the amount of deposit insurance coverage required under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act from $20,000 to at least $50,000 so that depositors and purchasers of alleged guaranteed investment certificates do not have to take their lawyers with them when they walk into trust companies.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In his Christmas householder the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead) appears to have inadvertently misinformed his constituents when he said that gas prices will have gone up by only 13.3 cents a gallon by the end of this year. Given the fact that the cheap gas promised by the Liberal government has not materialized because gas prices at the pump have gone up as much as 40 cents a gallon since last December, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That this House instruct the hon. member for Scarborough West to correct the obvious error in his Christmas greeting so that no further misunderstandings arise.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

TABLING OF PLANS TO FIGHT INFLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas Ministry of Finance officials have admitted that the inflation forecast for 1980 of 9.7 per cent used in the budget was too low, and whereas the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) is on record as stating that the government will take the measures necessary to stay within the forecast inflation rate increase, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That this government immediately table its plans to fight inflation for the balance of 1980, in keeping with its commitment.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POST OFFICE

REPORTED APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTER IN BOW RIVER CONSTITUENCY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the recent disclosure in the media that an unqualified resident of the Bow River constituency was recently hired as a postmaster in that region on the recommendation of her Conservative member of Parliament, a political friend and ally, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That this House demand that the Postmaster General explain why the hon. member for Bow River is now in a position to appoint the relatives of campaign workers as postmasters, and especially that he be asked to comment on reports that these special considerations are being provided to the hon. member for Bow River in order that he might follow in the footsteps of his former colleague, the Hon. Jack Horner.

Madam Speaker: The presentation of this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

● (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL RESOURCES

INDIRECT TAXATION OF RENEWABLE RESOURCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the minister responsible for the constitution, the Minister of Justice, may I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister, in his letter to the Leader of the New Democratic Party on October 20, indicated that the government was prepared "to give the provinces the right to levy indirect taxation on non-renewable resources".

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is whether it is now the position of the Government of Canada that it is prepared to extend this offer to include renewable resources, specifically hydroelectric power, and, if so, has this been officially communicated to the provinces?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of what has been communicated to the provinces on this subject. I understand that the Minister of Justice did make a statement to that effect before the joint committee. The hon. member will know more about the proceedings than I because I am not a member of that committee.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I merely wanted to clear up the matter to remove doubt and so that I could ask the Deputy Prime Minister if his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, was announcing government policy when he said at a press conference last Friday, together with the leader of the Liberal party in Newfoundland, that this right to levy indirect taxation on renewable resources would "enable Newfoundland to recover the money it is losing to Quebec from the Upper Churchill." Is that the position of the government? Does the government hold the position—and I repeat—that this right to levy indirect taxation now gives the province of Newfoundland the right to regain the shortfall in its power sales to Quebec?

Mr. MacEachen: I believe the Minister of National Revenue was merely reiterating what had been stated by the Minister of Justice in the committee, and I am not prepared to draw further legal implications about recovery of any shortfall, and so on, at this point.

Mr. McGrath: I merely want to know if it is now the policy of the Government of Canada that the right to establish indirect taxation on renewable resources gives the provinces the right to levy such a tax on hydroelectric power; and was his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, speaking for the government when he stated quite clearly to the people of Newfoundland that this would give Newfoundland the opportunity to regain some $600 million in revenue which it is losing annually to the province of Quebec by virtue of being tied into a long-term contract?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, may I repeat for the third time now that the Minister of Justice stated the position of the government on this point—

Mr. McGrath: I am talking about the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. MacEachen: —before the joint committee, and that is the position of the government. It is that position which the Minister of National Revenue repeated on the weekend. I do not intend to go beyond that point until I read the words of the Minister of Justice and not have them provided for me through any other source.

[Translation]

INQUIRY RESPECTING INDIRECT TAXATION OF HYDROELECTRICITY SALES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance in view of the absence of the Minister of Justice. I shall wait while he speaks to his assistant. I shall try again, Madam Speaker. His colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, indicated clearly over the weekend that his government will give the provinces the right to levy indirect taxes on hydroelectricity. The minister remained silent while the leader of the Liberal opposition in Newfoundland said that his province could increase its revenues by $600 million each year. Can he—Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice is now in the House. If I may be allowed, I could perhaps direct my question to him; it pertains to the topic his colleague dealt with.

Over the weekend, the Minister of National Revenue made it clear in Newfoundland that his government will give the provinces the right to levy indirect taxes on their resources, on hydroelectricity. The minister remained silent while his colleague, the Liberal leader in Newfoundland, said that his government could thus increase its revenue by $600 million each year. Can the hon. member confirm the remarks of his colleague and, if so, can he also confirm the amount and the fact that Quebeckers will have to bear the financial burden mentioned?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I have stated several times that we intend to include in the constitutional reform a provision allowing indirect taxation of natural resources. That is the proposal that was put forward at the constitutional conference last summer. Everyone is aware of that. What it would represent in government revenue, I am in no position to assess. It would depend on how provincial governments would use the new power the federal government would hand over to them.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I have before me a copy of the statement he made on November 7 when he explained his position. Can he tell us, Madam Speaker, whether his colleague read the proceedings of the Quebec and Newfoundland contract before speaking as he did?

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I do not know exactly what was said by my colleague or by the Liberal leader in Newfoundland. I say that the position is quite clear. We suggested to the provinces last summer that they might levy an indirect tax on natural resources, which they were not allowed to do. Of course, if a province acquires taxing power, it is up to it to determine the amount of taxation it wants to levy. I have no comment nor speculation to make on the possible revenues any province might derive from the decentralization of powers which the federal government is ready to grant to the provinces.

* * *

• (1420)

[English]

MONOPOLIES

NEWSPAPER INDUSTRY—PROGRESS OF INVESTIGATION INTO CLOSURES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It relates to the parallel investigation his department is conducting into the simultaneous closing of The Ottawa Journal and the Winnipeg Tribune. Is the minister prepared to tell us whether his department has in fact completed that investigation and what his intentions are? Will he be referring information from that investigation to the Minister of Justice for possible action?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, the director of investigations is completing his investigation. As soon as it is completed, he will report to me and I will then make a decision on the basis of his recommendations. For the time being, it is too soon and I do not want to prejudice his findings.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I suspected the conclusions might have already been available, but in any event I have a supplementary question. Does the minister have any intention at all of acting on the fact that the Ottawa paper has now given notice that it intends to increase its advertising rates by some 25 per cent, and the Winnipeg paper, with the absolute lack of competition, has now indicated that it will be increasing its advertising rates to the tune of roughly 35 per cent? Now that this particular monopoly exists and the department seems to be fairly slow in completing this investigation, will the minister be taking any action related to these very dramatic hikes with an absolute lack of competition?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I will be pleased to convey immediately to the director of investigations the hon. member's representations.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I have a final question. Our long-term concern is that we are dealing with a whole variety of problems. Is the minister prepared to tell us when he will be bringing forward some legislation to prevent these kinds of things, rather than attempting to do very unsuccessful autopsies on them after the event?

An hon. Member: Start a paper.

Mr. Skelly: When in fact can we expect some legislation on controlling this lack of competition?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, obviously the legislation on competition in Canada will have to be amended to be much more effective, and I share the views of the hon. member in that respect. To be more specific, I hope to introduce a bill to do just that early next year.

● (1425)

[English]

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS EXPORT TAX—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The government's decision of last Friday not to raise the export price of natural gas on February 1, 1981, means that the export tax which will come into effect that day will not be paid by U.S. consumers but by Canadian producers and consumers. In answer to a question from the hon. member for Vancouver Centre on October 29, reported at page 4208 of Hansard, the minister said:

Are hon. members suggesting that we should levy a tax on Canadian consumers and not levy it on American consumers? Is that their policy?

My question to the minister is, very simply, is that his policy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Andre: On the same day, October 29, in justifying his natural gas export tax and domestic tax, the minister said:

We thought no one could take exception to a tax levied on all consumers which affects all consumers, whether in Canada or the United States.

Given that these taxes will be paid only by Canadian consumers and not by American consumers, will the minister now cancel these taxes since his rationale or reasoning, at least as he gave it to the House on October 29, no longer applies?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I disagree with the hon. member's interpretation of the rationale and reason. The tax is still in existence. What the hon. member has failed to note, obviously, is that the price of natural gas to the United States has not been increased at the present time at the request of the western provinces and the producing companies. There will be a further announcement made before mid-December but in the meantime there has been no withdrawal of the tax.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, the rationale I quoted was the minister's rationale. He said the reason he had gone for this export tax plus domestic tax was that he would tax U.S. consumers as well as Canadian consumers. Given this decision to delay this price increase on February 1, which means that Canadian producers and consumers are the only ones paying this tax, will he at least delay the date of implementation until the rationale which he established comes into effect?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the hon. member still does not understand the situation. The tax is still in effect. The producing provinces and the producing companies asked us to defer this particular price increase, and in the meantime they will bear the tax. We agreed to their representations but the tax will continue to prevail as we announced it. We announced this postponement as a result of the representations that were made by the producing provinces. We were attempting to be accommodating in this matter, and I am surprised that the hon. member does not accept it in that spirit rather than trying to score some temporary debating points in a situation that is bound to require accommodation on both sides from time to time.

* * *

NATIONAL RESOURCES

INDIRECT TAXATION OF HYDROELECTRICITY SALES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. On Friday the Minister of National Revenue flew to Newfoundland especially to hold a press conference on constitutional matters with the new leader of the Newfoundland Liberal party. He said the proposed amendment to the constitutional resolution will provide to the provinces the right to levy indirect taxation on hydro resources. He said that this will enable Newfoundland to recover the money it is losing to Quebec from the Upper Churchill. He pointed out that the amendment was proposed some weeks ago by the national New Democratic Party and that the federal government has publicly announced its intention to accept the amendment.

My question for the Minister of Justice is: did the Minister of National Revenue properly inform the people of Newfoundland? Is it the official policy of the Government of Canada to permit indirect taxation of hydro resources so that Newfoundland can tax the Upper Churchill contract, thereby gaining something in the order of $600 million a year from Quebec consumers of hydroelectricity purchased from Newfoundland and Labrador? Is that the position of the Canadian government?

● (1430)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, we said during the summer that, if this policy were accepted by the provinces and inscribed in the constitution, natural resources could be taxed indirectly by provincial governments. This right does not exist for the provinces at this time, but may come into existence if we proceed with the constitutional amendments.

In terms of the usage of that power by the provinces, it will be up to them to decide how it will be used. The financial consequences of this devolution of power by the federal government to the provinces will also be in the hands of the provinces. I have no further comment to make.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the minister may have no further comment to make, but we have further questions because he and his colleague are attempting to fool the people of Newfoundland. The leader of the Liberal party of Newfoundland, who was present with the Minister of National Revenue, said that the proposal would amount to $600 million a year for Newfoundland and went on to say:

That's the exciting part of it. If we get this amendment, we can announce to Quebec, "It was a good deal but it's a good deal no longer. How do you want to renegotiate"?

Does the Government of Canada intend to give to the government of Newfoundland the power to force Quebec to renegotiate the Upper Churchil contract with Hydro-Quebec, which would mean an increased cost to hydroelectric consumers in Quebec of $600 million a year now and untold billions in the future? Is that the position of the Government of Canada as stated by the Minister of National Revenue and the leader of the Liberal party of Newfoundland in a deceptive manner last Friday in St. John's?

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I just stated very clearly the position of the government, that we are willing to give the provinces the power to tax indirectly their resources.

Mr. Crosbie: You're weaseling.

Mr. Chrétien: Of course, once the federal government gives this power to the provinces, it is theirs to use. What the situation will be in a particular province is hypothetical.

Mr. Crosbie: Not as far as your colleague is concerned.

Mr. Chrétien: I am not a member of the administration of any provincial government. I am glad to see that there are people who recognize that this amendment, which I offered to the provinces this summer and for which the NDP is asking at this moment, will be good for the provinces. However, I am waiting to see what the Tory party will do when this amendment is put forward in committee.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

ARTISTIC DIRECTOR OF STRATFORD FESTIVAL—ISSUANCE OF WORK PERMIT

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the problems at Stratford. Since a threatened actors' boycott of the Stratford festival next summer is probable unless a qualified Canadian artistic director is named, and since the hiring of a foreigner, in addition to being a slap in the face to creative Canadians, could mean the loss of as many as 1,000 jobs in that region, can the minister assure the House that he will turn down any work permit application for a foreign director attempting to enter Canada to assume this position, since there are a number of qualified Canadians available to fill this job with distinction?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in a case like this it is a requirement that in determining a fair decision and making a fair choice we attempt to deal with the case on its merits. In this case officials of my office met with the board of directors of Stratford last week to determine what steps the board had taken to secure the services of a Canadian for the position of artistic director. The board indicated that it had spent almost a full year interviewing a number of applicants, that it had offered the job to a number of Canadians, all of whom turned it down, and that it had finally made the choice of Mr. Dexter, a British citizen, on the ground that he would be the best qualified person to do the job. At that meeting we also asked the board for a specific schedule as to how it conducted the search and to what degree it sought out all possible avenues, and we are still assessing that information.

We will certainly follow the basic policy of the department, which is to ensure that Canadians who are qualified for a particular position have first chance at the job. But we will simply not turn down an application based on some form of public pressure. We will review the decision of the board to determine whether it was fair and impartial and whether it carried out its job according to the law.

* * *

CANADA COUNCIL

STRATFORD FESTIVAL—INQUIRY RESPECTING INCREASE IN GRANT

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, would the minister table the information which he received from the artistic directors? I thank the minister for his answer.

I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Secretary of State. I believe there is a last ditch attempt taking place through conciliation at a meeting this afternoon between the opposing parties. In view of his expressed concern for increasing opportunities for talented Canadian artists, does the minister intend to consult with the Canada Council about future grants concerning this matter in Stratford if a foreigner is in fact employed while qualified Canadians are available? If a Canadian is in fact appointed after these last ditch meetings, would the minister encourage Canada Council to increase its grants since inflation has eaten away at the grants which it received over the last three years?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, like my colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I am most interested in seeing that this type of position is filled by a qualified Canadian if at all possible. As to my intervention with the Canada Council, I will ask my officials to get in touch with the people involved to seek their advice on the matter. However, I would be most reluctant to intervene politically and say that the grants should be increased or decreased depending on the name or quality of the artistic director chosen for any group in this country.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

INQUIRY RESPECTING ANTI-CORROSION STANDARD

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It has to do with General Motors, Ford and Chrysler pulling out of the anti-corrosion code as established by the minister's department and the provinces in 1978. Given the fact that these voluntary, anti-rust guidelines seem to have worked pretty well up to the end of the 1980 model year, will the government take the lead and come up with a national standard for all auto manufacturers and for the protection of the consumer?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, obviously I will have to confer with my provincial counterparts following this decision by the automakers. The fact is, that after discussions, we may come to an amicable arrangement with the automakers. The program to which the hon. member referred is indeed voluntary and is only useful as long as the manufacturers are willing to implement it. They seem to have changed their minds, which means that consumers will have a choice to make and if they are unwilling to pay for this anti-corrosion guarantee, they will probably have to buy other makes than those offered by these automakers who will no longer follow this code.

[English]

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, given the answer to me in this House on November 14, 1978, by the then minister of consumer and corporate affairs, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, who said, "We feel that if the voluntary code is a success, we will not have to legislate", and given the fact that the code is now obviously in jeopardy, will the government now make the anti-rust guidelines mandatory?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I must repeat, in reply to the hon. member's supplementary question, that I will have to confer with my provincial counterparts, because, as the hon. member probably knows, this is an area of mixed jurisdiction and it is necessary to secure the provincial legislatures's co-operation to adopt legislation making this code compulsory. I suggest to the hon. member that it might have been possible to act more promptly, had the previous task force not been abolished during the federal-provincial conference of consumer affairs ministers which was held last year in Newfoundland.

[English]

NATIONAL REVENUE

INQUIRY WHETHER TAXES WILL BE REDUCED

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In light of the change in government which we anticipate in the United States as the result of the recent election there and some of the specific promises by the president-elect to reduce taxation, despite the fact that the minister's budget was recently passed by this House, is it his intention to reduce taxes in Canada in order to correspond with intended tax reductions in the United States, so as to offset the magnet-like effect of attracting business in North America to those jurisdictions with the lowest tax rates?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, that would not be the intention. As I pointed out in the budget speech, there is presently imbedded in the Canadian tax system, through indexation, the kind of decreases in taxation which occur as a result of indexation and which occur in the United States because of such announcements. These tax decreases take place automatically in Canada.

Mr. Gamble: Madam Speaker, what I am talking about, of course, are the intended dramatic tax reductions which are to occur in the United States and I recognize that it would be somewhat anticipatory for this government to introduce plans in this regard today. However, in light of the fact that taxes in the United States are to be reduced by 30 per cent over the next three years, would it not at least be wise for the government to give some indication to Canadian businesses and individuals in Canada that it will seriously examine the possibility of tax reductions in Canada to correspond with those in the United States when they do in fact take effect?

● (1440)

Mr. MacEachen: All I would say on that point, Madam Speaker, is that the Canadian tax system compares favourably with that of the United States or any other tax system from the point of view of attracting investment and from the point of view of the burden on the taxpayer. Furthermore, one would want to wait and see what Congress does with presidential suggestions before following suit.

* * *

THE BUDGET

PROJECTED DEFICITS FOR 1980 AND 1981

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. The minister knows that this House and the people of Canada are disappointed with his medium-term projections which have the exchange rate totally out of whack and the inflation rate totally out of whack. It is clear that his projections have been wrong. With regard to the deficit, the minister knows that interest rates have increased 1 per cent since the budget. Is he still of the assurance that his deficit next year will be no more than $13.75 billion and his deficit this year no more than $14.15 billion?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, maybe I should reiterate what I said since it is becoming more and more apparent that people are placing a great deal of reliance on my projections, even projections that are made for 1982 and 1983. We all ought to recognize, and I certainly do, that these projections are only that, and they are very risky. My hon. friends opposite ought to have learned that because they learned how wrong some of the projections they made in December were early in 1980. I do not fault the former government for that. It is a fact that has to be understood with respect to any projections that are made.

If hon. members are now asking me to confirm with absolute certainty what will happen based on projections, that is something I will not do. These are assumptions based upon the best possible reading of developments. When these developments change or do not occur, obviously the assumptions and the projections change. The sooner we understand that, the better debate we will have on economic questions in the country.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am pleased the minister has now indicated to the House that those projections were made using the rosiest coloured glasses. It is obvious at this point that those projections were wrong in every sense. Will the minister table in this House a proper set of projections which reflect an 84-cent dollar and 11 per cent inflation rates, so that business people across this country can see where they are going? Surely projections should be available for 1981. Let us not worry about 1982, 1983, 1984. However, with regard to 1981, where are we going with this budget?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, this gives me an opportunity to tell the hon. member that through this budget we are laying the foundations for a good recovery of the economy and solid economic growth in the future. That is where we are going.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DUMPING OF CHEMICAL WASTE INTO NIAGARA RIVER—CONSULTATIONS WITH NEW UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and has to do with pollutants going into the Niagara River. In view of the fact there is a new administration in the United States, and in view of the fact that SCA Chemical Company has been dumping waste into the Niagara River for some time now, can the minister bring us up to date as to what our government is doing with regard to dealing with this problem through the United States government?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, this is a matter in which my colleague the Minister of the Environment is also interested because his department conducted a study on the effect of chemical pollution and found that chemical pollution of the Great Lakes would not be worsened by the operation of the SCA chemical waste plant there. With regard to the Niagara Falls, New York, sewage treatment plant, there has been a great deal of concern expressed by the Government of Canada. My colleague spoke on it several times. We sent a note on that subject to the United States in April and we are considering a further note at this time.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT—PRODUCTION DIFFICULTIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, my question was for the Minister of National Defence but in his absence I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. F-18 airplanes continue to malfunction and crash. Friday's Ottawa Citizen carried a story to the effect that U.S. defence secretary Harold Brown is mounting a campaign in the U.S. Senate to save the F-18 and has written to John Stennis, the chairman of the defence subcommittee in this matter, indicating, and I quote:

> The costs of stopping and restarting production efforts by the prime contractor, McDonnell Douglas, and all subcontractors would be prohibitive and tantamount to program cancellation.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House what the Government of Canada is planning to do in relation to that last event, what costs would be incurred, and what are the present contingency plans?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will take that question as notice and try to provide the information to the hon. member later.

Mr. Ogle: My supplementary is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. On the weekend the Deputy Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs were in attendance at the North-South round table meeting here in Ottawa and gave some excellent input to that meeting. At that meeting, delegates from around the world indicated very clearly that one of the great problems of underdevelopment is the gap they see now between armament and underdevelopment. Will the Deputy Prime Minister inform the Minister of National Defence that we should buy at least one F-18 before they all crash, so that it can be placed in our national air museum to indicate the end of an era?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I believe the hon. member's question was mainly rhetorical. However, I do not believe I ought to let him escape with the notion that equipping the Canadian Armed Forces so that Canada can participate in the common defence effort as a member of the NATO organization is a dishonourable objective or that it in any way interferes with Canada's determination to co-operate with others in bringing about disarmament throughout the world.

* * *

EXTERNAL AID

CONSIDERATION OF TRIPARTITE AID TO THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the large surplus of petro dollars available to certain developing states, combined with Canada's status as an industrialized nation possessing technology that is badly needed in the Third World, has the minister considered giving priority to tripartite aid arrangements, whereby Canada would provide technological aid in conjunction with, for example, Arab financing of future development projects, and will the Prime Minister be discussing this subject during his current trip to the Middle East?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the issue of the recycling of oil revenues is a matter which concerns the government a great deal. We are certainly exploring co-operation, not only among developed countries but with developing countries such as Saudi Arabia, in dealing with this problem. This is certainly a general area which the Prime Minister is canvassing in his talks with the Saudi government. However, neither our goals nor his talks specifically focus on so-called tripartite arrangements. That is one possibility, but it is only one of a range of possibilities.

● (1450)

Mr. Wenman: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. Recognizing, of course, that the difficulties being encountered in the Middle East as a result of the Iran-Iraq crisis, and the nature of the multilateral aid from that region, makes tripartite aid even more imperative at the moment, will the minister consider initiating discussions between officials of CIDA and officials of the proposed Alternate Energy Corporation, Enertech Canada, to determine the potential applicability of renewable energy, particularly solar energy? I will give a specific example, such as the solar energy pumps used for pumping water in Somalia. Will the minister consider working with his colleague toward the transfer of technology to Third World countries like Somalia, particularly in relation to solar energy?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, I will certainly be prepared to give that proposal very serious consideration. I might remind the hon. member and the House that in the recent budget it was made clear that Petro-Canada would be launching a major international initiative with respect to assisting developing countries in discovering their own resources.

* * *

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS RESERVES—REPORTED STATEMENT OF NRC DIRECTOR

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. It arises from the current massive program of conversion from oil to gas and the funding of municipalities so that this gas may be made available to them should they not have it available. A report in The Globe and Mail last week attributes to a director of the National Research Council the statement that Canada has only about a 20-year supply of natural gas. Is the minister aware of this statement and, if he is, does he feel it likely that we may have to enter into a massive program of reconversion from gas to some alternate energy source in the future when $650 million has already been earmarked for conversion from oil to natural gas? Is the minister aware that a director of the National Research Council is reported as stating that we only have a 20-year supply of natural gas available to Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the comment attributed to the director of the National Research Council. As the hon. member knows, we are presently engaging in a program to encourage Canadians to switch from oil to a cheaper product, natural gas. That is based on the assumption that supplies of natural gas will be available not only at the present time but in increasing quantities from new discoveries, not only offshore but in the Arctic.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, a supplementary question on the same point. So that we do not find ourselves faced with the same problem as Great Britain where there was a massive conversion, almost 100 per cent, to natural gas and then, because of supply and cost, they had to reconvert—this year there was a 60 per cent increase in the price of natural gas in Great Britain—would the minister try to find out who is right? Are we already in a situation where we thought we had endless supplies of oil and now we find we do not? Are we in the same position in regard to natural gas were the National Research Council disagrees with the National Energy Board and the minister has been misled and misinformed, directing Canada into a program that will require massive reconversion from natural gas to some alternate energy source 20 years ahead, for which this government has no program?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I can only repeat what I said to the hon. member. I believe his fears in this respect are groundless and that it is a prudent course of action at the present time for the Government of Canada to encourage Canadians to switch from dependence upon imported oil to dependence upon a Canadian source of energy. That seems to me to make a great deal of sense both at the present time and for quite a distance into the future.

* * *

GRAIN

STATEMENT RESPECTING EMBARGO ON SALES TO U.S.S.R.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns a statement made by a fellow cabinet minister, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board on Friday in Regina, when he told Saskatchewan wheat pool delegates that Canada has removed any fixed ceiling placed on export grain sales by the Canadian Wheat Board to the U.S.S.R. This statement means that Canada has dropped its policy of embargo on grain to the Soviets. Can the minister confirm that this policy change has taken place and that the minister of state speaks with his knowledge and the approval of the entire cabinet?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, no change has taken place in the government's policy that only normal sales will be made to the Soviet Union. What is occurring is an attempt to define what level normal sales should be interpreted to mean for the coming year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: Hon. members opposite may laugh but there is a range. Surely they are not going to suggest that the western farmer should get the short end of the stick.

Mr. Hovdebo: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker, for the same minister. Obviously the minister in charge of the Wheat Board was making a genuine attempt to respect the opinion of western farmers. Similar statements were made by the Minister of Agriculture, so obviously these two ministers were speaking out of turn. Under the circumstances, what is the Canadian Wheat Board to do? Does the government's agreement with the United States allow the Canadian Wheat Board to negotiate with the Russians to replace the contract that is presently running out? May the Canadian Wheat Board sell grain to the U.S.S.R. or not?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, of course the Wheat Board may sell grain to the U.S.S.R.. There has never been a complete embargo, only a partial embargo. The way in which it has been phrased is in terms of normal levels of trade in those products. That is still the rule. We are now into a new crop season and we have to try to establish what that means for this year. The Wheat Board is receiving instructions from the government and I believe it will be entering into negotiations with the Soviet government.

EMPLOYMENT

INQUIRY RESPECTING INCREASE IN FUNDING OF COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the high seasonal unemployment in many areas of Canada and the oversubscription of the community development program this winter, will the minister give consideration to increasing the funding for the community development program this winter?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as we pointed out in the House last week, the Minister of Finance, in his generosity, was able to include additional funds in the budget to provide further work incentives and training opportunities for Canadians. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I hope that we will be able to make some announcements concerning the wide range of programs within a very few weeks.

* * *

FISHERIES

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF GROUNDFISH MANAGEMENT PLAN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In view of the fact that the minister has received a telex from the Nova Scotia Fish Packers Association charging that the reallocation of 10,000 tons of codfish is in violation of the basic principle of the groundfish management plan, what changes, if any, does the minister contemplate to meet these objections?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would assume that if the fishermen represented by the hon. member were involved in an industrial dispute, then once that was settled, at the end of the season the quota which had not been caught should be primarily reserved for the fishermen of the area or the plants where they have traditionally delivered.

● (1500)

In the case of Newfoundland, there was a lengthy strike this summer. A part of the quota which is normally reserved for the inshore fishery was not caught. Plants were short of supply and I authorized that that fish could be made available to the plants which had been very seriously affected by the industrial dispute. That is the simple explanation.

Mr. Crouse: Madam Speaker, since objections have been raised to the minister's plan of allowing additional foreign participation in the catching of this codfish, I would like to ask the minister why he did not reallocate any surplus quotas for 1980-81 to Canadian trawlers rather than foreigners; and will Canadians be allowed in 1981 to catch any part of the 10,000 ton quota not landed by the end of this year?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, the 10,000 quota is from the Canadian allocation. It was not caught by Canadian inshore fishermen because of the strike, as I said earlier. The trade association and the fishermen's union agreed that the way to allocate it was to the Newfoundland plants which were short of supply. They tried to get Canadian boats to catch some of this fish. In fact, because of the continuing strike at National Sea, the union did not agree to this procedure. Some foreign boats were brought in. Not enough of them could be found. The next question, which nobody ever asked, is whether the plants could afford the fish at the price that Canadian boats would have landed it?

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. SIDDON—COMMENT MADE BY MR. ROSE

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I will try to be brief. I would like to raise a question of privilege arising out of a comment made by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) earlier during the question period. I was not able to comprehend what the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody was trying to say when he proposed his motion under Standing Order 43 earlier today, but I do believe I heard him allege that this hon. member is consistently stupid, or that I might have used such a reference in relation to a Conservative colleague of mine from British Columbia.

The hon. member knows that neither of these allegations is true. In fact he knows full well that the only stupidity which is consistent in this House is the consistent inconsistence of the little red rump of the Liberal party which he represents. That was illustrated this past weekend by the open split among his own NDP cohorts in Nova Scotia where the former leader of the NDP apparently resigned in protest because he found the NDP to be full of Trotskyites.

The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody, who has been in this House for many years, should want to maintain normal parliamentary decorum by apologizing for his attempt to insult indirectly and unfairly one of my colleagues from British Columbia who is not here today to defend himself.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, on the same question of privilege, I regret to report that the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon), who is reported to be a professor of acoustics, apparently cannot listen any better than he thinks.

I would like to repeat what I said. I said that he was quoted in the press concerning his colleague as saying he used "very little forethought coming to the meeting and insulting people", and since the member was also described by another Tory in British Columbia as "consistently stupid", I moved the motion congratulating the hon. member.

There certainly was no insult intended. It was actually a congratulatory message. Since the hon. member is talking about consistency, I would like to leave him with a quote from Emerson. One day, when Emerson was not doing anything else, he said that "Foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: This exchange only proves to me that perhaps I should have asked the hon. member, since he started off by saying he was not sure whether the hon. member had said certain things, to consult the "blues" before he raises questions of privilege. However, the exchange was in good spirit, and there is obviously no question of privilege.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 650, 1,023, 1,194, 1,289, 1,513, and 1,575.

Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

STUDIES OF CHILD NEGLECT OR ABUSE

Question No. 650—Mr. Howie:

From January 1, 1977, to date, were studies done for the Department of the Solicitor General by outside consultants regarding child neglect or abuse?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Between the period from January 1, 1977, to date, the Department of the Solicitor General and Health and Welfare Canada jointly contracted with the Tree Foundation of Canada for a research project to produce an inventory of research and demonstration projector dealing with child abuse and neglect in Canada. Copies of the report are available from Health and Welfare Canada.

CFDC—JOB CLASSIFICATION TITLES

Question No. 1,023—Mr. Friesen:

1. What are the job classification titles under which an individual would be employed in the Canadian Film Development Corporation?

2. How many individuals were employed by the CFDC in (a) 1979 (b) 1980 to date and by job classification, how many received incomes per annum (i) of more than $60,000 (ii) between $50,000 and $60,000 (iii) between $40,000 and $50,000 (iv) between $30,000 and $40,000 (v) between $20,000 and $30,000 (vi) between $10,000 and $20,000 (vii) less than $10,000?

3. How many individuals were employed by the CFDC on a contract basis in (a) 1979 (b) 1980 to date and what was the total amount paid for such services?

4. What was the total amount of gross revenues the CFDC received from sources outside the government?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows:

1. Executive Director
   Assistant Director (Montreal)
   Assistant Director (Toronto)
   Assistant Director—Planning and Policies
   Director—Distribution
   Administrative Director
   Assistant—Distribution (Montreal)
   Assistant—Distribution (Toronto)
   Assistant—Legal Counsel (Montreal)
   Assistant—Legal Counsel (Toronto)
   Co-ordinator—English Language Projects(Toronto)
   Co-ordinator—French Language Projects(Montreal)
   Film Consultant
   Accountant
   Financial Analyst/Co-Production Manager Secretaries
   Receptionists.

2. (a) 22
   (i) nil
   (ii) 1 Executive Director
   (iii) 0
   (iv) 2 Administrative Director/Director, Distribution
   (v) 3 2 Film Projects Co-ordinators/1 Financial Analyst-Co-production Manager
   (vi) 16 Administrative Support Employees
   (vii) nil

   (b) 18
   (i) nil
   (ii) 1 Executive Director
   (iii) 0
   (iv) 1 Administrative Director
   (v) 2 2 Film Projects Coordinators
   (vi) 14 Administrative Support Employees
   (viii) nil.

3. (a) Four Amount paid: $74,000

   (b) Four
   Amount paid: $54,000.

4. $1,258,176 in our fiscal year ending March 31, 1980.

CITÉ DE LA SANTÉ—LAVAL

Question No. 1,194—Mr. Roy:

1. Did the government take part in financing the building of the Cité de la santé in the city of Laval and, if so, under what program was this done?

2. At the official opening presided over by the Premier of Quebec, did the federal Minister of Health and Welfare make a speech and, if not, for what reason?

3. Did the Department of National Health and Welfare have a say in establishing the programs offered by the centre and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, under the Health Resources Fund Program.

Committed—$15,956,495.50

Paid to date—$14,101,526.74.

2. The Minister of National Health and Welfare participated at the official opening of the Cité de la santé (Laval).

3. Yes. This is one of the projects submitted by the province within the approved provincial five-year program under the terms of the health resources fund program.

CBC—LIBEL SUIT AGAINST "THE FIFTH ESTATE"

Question No. 1,289—Mr. Corbett:

Did the CBC pay for legal work, including appeals, in connection with the libel suit filed against the program "The Fifth Estate" by the former New Brunswick minister of justice, John B. M. Baxter and, if so, in what amount and to whom?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: The CBC paid the legal costs in connection with the suit specified to Thomas B. Drummie, QC of Clark, Drummie & Co., Saint John, New Brunswick. With regard to the amount involved, it has not been customary for Parliament to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as its business arrangements with outside individuals and companies. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

COMPUTERS—CFB ST. HUBERT AND OTTAWA

Question No. 1,513—Mr. Herbert:

What are the manufacturers names of the computers used by the armed forces at St. Hubert, Quebec and Ottawa, Ontario and is communication maintained from one to the other?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Manufacturers names of computers used at St. Hubert are as follows:

Digital Equipment Corporation
Sperry Univac
International Business Machines
Data General

Manufacturers names of computers used at Ottawa are as follows:

Digital Equipment Corporation
Sperry Univac
International Business Machines
Data General
Hewlett Packard
Bunker Ramo
Perkin Elmer
Data Acquisition
Micro Computer Machine
GESCAN (General Electric)
MITS
VARIAN
ECLIPSE
DYNALOGIC
Honeywell

Computer communication is maintained at these two locations using Data General equipment as part of the SAMSON strategic communication network.

CFB GAGETOWN—TRAINING FACILITY

Question No. 1,575—Mr. Howie:

1. What is the status of the new training facility planned for CFB Gagetown?

2. Has the project received Treasury Board approval and, if so, on what date is it planned to call for tenders?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. It is expected that the design consultant will be appointed by April, 1981; the first construction package made ready for tender by the spring of 1983; and construction to be completed by the spring of 1986.

2. Yes. Spring of 1983.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BANKS AND BANKING LAW REVISION ACT, 1980

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKING INSTITUTIONS

The House resumed, from Friday, November 14, consideration of Bill C-6, to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)) moved:

Motion No. 27

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2

(a) by striking out lines 46 to 48 at page 209 and substituting the following therefor:

"motor vehicle having a gross vehicle"

(b) by striking out line 2 at page 211 and substituting the following therefor:

"are situated;

"motor vehicle" means a motorized vehicle designed to be used primarily on a public highway for the transportation of persons or things but does not include

(a) any fire engine, bus, ambulance or utility truck, or

(b) any other special purpose motorized vehicle

that contains significant special features that make it suitable for a specific purpose and that is manufactured by a person other than the vehicle manufacturer who manufactured the basic chassis;"

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 28

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 14 to 17 at page 221 and substituting the following therefor:

"tomer and the".

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, it is my understanding that we are dealing now with motions Nos. 24 and 26.

Madam Speaker: We are dealing with motion No. 28.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, as a point of information, before beginning my discussion may I ask what the disposition of motions Nos. 24 and 26 was?

Madam Speaker: Motions Nos. 24 and 26 could be grouped for debate. At any rate, they have not been dealt with yet. Exactly what will be done with motions Nos. 24 and 26 has not been announced in the House.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, on Thursday there was a House order which said that motions Nos. 24 and 26 would be grouped for debate and that an affirmative vote on motion No. 24 would necessitate a question being put on motion No. 26. Indeed, all of the amendments right through to motion No. 58 were dealt with by House order.

Madam Speaker: I think I can now enlighten the hon. member. There was an order of the House concerning these motions. Motions Nos. 24 and 26 could be grouped for debate, and a negative vote on motion No. 24 will dispose of motion No. 26. An affirmative vote on motion No. 24 will necessitate a question being put on motion No. 26. However, before dealing with that we must deal today with motion No. 28.

Mr. Blenkarn: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I agree that we should proceed with motion No. 28 right through to motion No. 58 in accordance with the House order of November 13, and follow through with motions Nos. 24, 26, 29, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35 and so forth as that House order directed.

● (1510)

Madam Speaker: That is correct.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt motion No. 28?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion negatived on divison.

Motion No. 28 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

Madam Speaker: We are now on motion No. 30.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 30

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada, to establish the Canadian Payments

Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 32 to 36 at page 221.

Madam Speaker: Those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

Madam Speaker: Those opposed to the said motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

Madam Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion negatived on division. Motion No. 30 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

Madam Speaker: We are now on Motion No. 38.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 38

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 43 at page 223 the following new subsection:

"(4.2) A borrower who tenders or pays to the lender all or any amount of the principal amount outstanding under a loan transaction is not liable to pay any penalty on the amount tendered or paid."

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When these motions are called, I wonder if the Chair would not mind giving the number of the motion each time before it is read so that we know what we are dealing with.

Madam Speaker: The Chair will do that with pleasure. For your information, the one which I have just read is motion No. 38.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): It was my understanding that we would deal with motion No. 25 of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and that this would be consequential on motions Nos. 24 and 26 which would be dealt with next. Unfortunately we were caught a little unaware by what I perceived as a sudden shift in the order of business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The Chair regrets that the hon. member is perhaps misinformed, but motion No. 25 was dealt with alone and was not grouped with motions Nos. 24 and 26.

Mr. Skelly: I understand, Mr. Speaker, and I think it was unfortunate that we did not deal with motions Nos. 24 and 26 since they appear to be within the same realm. Nevertheless we find ourselves today in a situation where we propose the following addition:

A borrower who tenders or pays to the lender all or any amount of the principal amount outstanding under a loan transaction is not liable to pay any penalty on the amount tendered or paid.

We have had considerable discussion on this proposal. As a matter of fact, it forms one of the very important issues which we feel should be incorporated in the legislation. There was a great deal of discussion about this material appearing in the regulations. It was our feeling that the regulations are too flexible, that in fact there are situations where penalties can be applied and that this can change from time to time. The basic principle here is that anyone who owes money, and who is prepared to pay back the loans, should be encouraged by the banks which are financially sound and should not be required to pay a penalty if he is willing to pay back the full amount of that loan. I think it is fair to say that for my party it is very important that this item be enshrined in the legislation rather than in the regulations which can be adapted and shifted. If this were done, we would look differently at this particular piece of legislation. We are very concerned about this motion in particular.

As I stated before, the bill in front of us is not in what I would consider to be a satisfactory form. We are attempting to discuss these items as they come before us, but for a moment we might look at some of the other more serious items which are related to the motion before us regarding the prepayment of a loan and the penalties which are imposed, which we find unacceptable.

The other major concern we have with regard to this group of motions has to do with the condition of prepayment, and it deals with the disclosing of loans made by Canadian banks to foreign corporations. Another area of serious concern to us is the element of competition from other financial institutions. These provisions, along with this motion, have been laid out very clearly, and it is our hope that the government, which has already acknowledged this principle, will accept the proposition that there should be no penalties.

I assume that the government accepts the proposition that a person attempting to discharge his obligation should not be penalized. As a matter of fact, he should be encouraged. We hope that the government will be in a position to respond in the affirmative on this matter, and I will be very interested to hear the remarks of the government on this motion because it is extremely important to our party.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 38 now before us aims at consolidating what is already written in the act, precisely on the suggestion of the member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) and his colleague the member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae).

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that when we discussed in committee this whole matter of penalty for the early repayment of a loan and the calculation of various costs that may seem hidden from the consumer, the committee was greatly impressed by the climate of these discussions and by the various proposals which were put forward. Following these discussions, we came up with clause 202 of the bill now before us which clearly indicates that the minister may make regulations prescribing the manner in which the cost of borrowing and, if applicable, any rebate of interest shall be disclosed to a borrower; prescribing the manner of calculating the cost of borrowing; prescribing the circumstances under which the cost of borrowing is to be expressed also as an amount in dollars and cents; regulations specifying any class of loans or advances that is not to be subject to specified subsections of section 202; prescribing also the manner in which any rights, obligations, charges or penalties are to be disclosed to the customer; regulations prohibiting—and I am reading, Mr. Speaker, the new provisions of this legislation approved by the House—prohibiting the imposition of any charge or penalty referred to in this section or providing that such charge or penalty, if imposed, shall not exceed the amount prescribed in these regulations. The minister may also make regulations prescribing the manner of calculating the amount of repayment of a loan. If we examine motion No. 38 of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, we find the following:

● (1520)

A borrower who tenders or pays to the lender all or any amount of the principal amount outstanding under a loan transaction is not liable to pay any penalty on the amount tendered or paid.

Under paragraph 8 of clause 202 of the proposed legislation, Mr. Speaker, we can see that the government has accepted this proposal, with the exception that instead of being a set provision of the legislation, until the new act is reviewed, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) will achieve the same results by regulations made under the act. And why did we choose to act by regulation or to provide this flexibility rather than imposing the rigidity of a statute? We did so because we negotiate regularly with the provinces concerning this whole aspect of consumer protection, especially as concerns the relations between consumers the financial institutions. Moreover, as it has often been noted during these discussions, this area is even changing. The activities of banking or financial institutions are changing, and so that the purpose of sections or provisions of the act will adapt more easily to such changes, we have decided to proceed by regulations. As for the intent expressed in the motion of the hon. member, it will be met by us through the provisions of paragraph 8 of clause 202 which I have already read.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the minister there. This particular point as well as others relating to the global issue have been considered at considerable length in committee and I must say that all sides agreed to eliminate certain practices that have become unfair, namely, the 1978 regulation and others. The proposal made by the hon. members of the New Democratic Party was one of those the government had accepted. I would like it better if the minister had already prepared the regulation, if we could see it. I gave some advice to the minister because he is a young man. It has become a practice to listen to civil servants. They must give in to the House. It must not be the other way around, that is the House and Parliament agreeing to the policies put forward by the civil servants. If we demand something, they will do it. Having said that, I wish to stress one thing. We did it very successfully in the past. When a minister presented a piece of legislation which was rather complicated, and if there were any regulations resulting from the act, everybody worked hand in hand not only to write the act itself, but also the regulations. So I can certainly assure the minister that we could have saved five to ten days of discussion in committee on the Bank Act, had we had the regulations at the same time as the bill. There is always that same old feeling that prevails among hon. members, that kind of mistrust of officials. Because we never know, as experience taught us, whether the regulations will indeed conform with the letter and the intent of the legislator and whether there will not be an about turn. Perhaps a certain tendency always remains.

That is why I for one would have liked it better, and no doubt the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) would have agreed to withdraw the amendment put forward by his colleague from Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), had the regulations been available to us.

One of my colleagues asked me, what are we going to do here? My answer was, we accept in principle the thrust of the amendment. But in view of the regulations and the authority, we accept, and I accept in good faith on the one condition that we will shortly see the regulations in agreement with the intent of section 202(8).

Mr. Speaker, I would like to caution the minister about our expectations for the future, and I say this to all ministers. Where regulations are to be implemented simultaneously with the legislation or shortly thereafter, these regulations should be made available simultaneously with the legislation. It is as simple as that.

In this respect, I would like my colleagues to accept my comments. In my view, the amendment is not necessary.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment. I remind the minister, who is a very nice man and a man of the people like myself, that there is a parable in the Bible about the moneychangers being driven from the temple, but since then I think they have "snuck in" the back door.

Many years ago I had a personal experience of borrowing money from a lending institution, which was to be repaid in 12 months. I paid it off in five months, and I was still required to pay the full service charges. I was penalized for paying it off early. The financial institution was very unhappy with me. It could not get away with charging me the full interest for 12 months, but its service and administrative charges applied as if I had taken the full 12 months to repay the indebtedness.

It should be included in the law that there be no penalty for early repayment, and there should be a benefit or refund for paying early. It should be statutory. There should be no penalty for making payments in advance of a scheduled date and there should be no penalty for making full payment of an indebtedness ahead of time.

If the minister wants other regulations which spell out the credit or benefit that a borrower should receive by way of refund of interest charges, administrative charges, carrying charges or any other, they would be good regulations; but surely it should be included in the law that there will not be any penalties for early payments or an early repayment of an indebtedness.

● (1530)

The minister can have his officials devise regulations which will spell out what kind of benefit shall be given by lending institutions to those who make payments early or make settlement in full ahead of time. If the minister wishes he can prescribe a schedule whereby someone who pays off a loan in one month instead of 12 receives a refund of 11 months of carrying and administrative charges and any other charges that the lovey-dovey finance company might dream up. I find it incredible that this should not be a matter of law in any case because for many years borrowers who were excellent repayers have been penalized for paying back too soon and too well.

In fact, I would like to see a regulation which would require a benefit even on the interest charges. For example, if someone borrows money at 15 per cent for 12 months and pays it off in six months, maybe he should then have to pay 14.5 per cent. What happens is that the money is returned and is available for lending to someone else all the sooner—someone else who may desperately need it. The minister could spell that out by regulation, if he wishes, or he could simply say that the bank shall refund some appropriate percentage of the interest charges. This might be a quarter of one per cent or one-tenth of one per cent, which would act as an incentive to people who repay their borrowings ahead of time. Surely that would be a great incentive for people to make a better effort to repay their indebtedness. Thus, they would not let their loan payments drag on or they would not be consistently late in making them.

Surely that would be of benefit to the financial institutions as well. It would keep their funds available for lending and rotating all the more frequently. So I do not understand why the minister cannot agree to put in the law simply that there shall be no penalty for early payment or early full repayment of an indebtedness. He should decide that no penalties should be applied or collected. Then, by regulation, he can encourage and even help the financial institutions to provide people with refunds on administration and service charges, which quite often are paid the day a loan is taken out.

I recall a particular loan I took out for a certain amount of money I wanted. Added to it were the service charges, and together this constituted the total loan. When I paid the loan off five months later did I get any refund of those service charges? I did not. The service charges were based on a 12-month repayment period, and I paid the loan off within five months. I argued with the manager of that lending institution that I should not be charged administrative costs for 12 months when I had the loan for only five. I asked him why I should not just pay the administration charges assessed on my loan based on five months instead of 12. He said it was not the policy of the company. It may not be the policy of the company, but I thought it would be the policy of fair play that the company would have.

I was not assessed five-twelfths of the total administration charge but the full 12 months. They nailed me for the full 12 months. Why? If that is not similar to the moneychangers who were driven out of the temple, I do not know what is. For goodness sake why can the minister not say that is what should be the law in Canada? It should be statutory that no penalties can be charged for making early payments or early full repayment, and that by regulation the minister may require a lending institution to provide some kind of credit or refund to the borrower.

If we want to do something for people who borrow and who want to manage their own personal financial affairs even better, surely this is a good way to go about it. I hope the minister will reconsider, even though he has not been paying any attention to what I have been saying. I guess he is not interested in the matter. He has made up his mind, and it is a stone wall. I do not know why he cannot talk to his colleague some other time. I thought the minister would be somewhat more courteous than this. Would he mind asking his colleagues to go away somewhere? I would expect him to reconsider and to put in the statutes purely and simply what this amendment says, which is that no lending institution will be allowed to penalize someone.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would get that idiot who is sitting with him to move somewhere else.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: I withdraw that. I am glad the hon. gentleman left.

[Translation]

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order in respect of the remarks about himself made by the hon. member? The hon. member for Regina-West (Mr. Benjamin) just withdrew his remarks. Is the hon. member now raising a point of privilege?

Mr. Cousineau: If the Chair feels that withdrawing the remarks is enough, that is fine with me. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: If the hon. gentleman wants to discuss this subject with the minister I hope he will get on his feet and do so. I hope he will support the amendment. I hope he will be courteous enough to allow the minister to listen to the members of the House of Commons who are trying to persuade him to accept the sensible, fair and decent amendment to the government's legislation. It would not be the first time that a minister has done that—listen to a private member of the House from another party.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister does not agree that any financial institution should just be regulated by regulation when it comes to early full or partial repayment of indebtedness. It should be statutory that no lending institution may charge a penalty for early repayment. What can and should be regulatory is a requirement on lending institutions to provide some refund or benefit by way of a proportional refund of service or administrative charges, or any other kind of charges they dream up. This should be a requirement by regulation and should be left to the lending institutions, in whatever limited amount of competition there is amongst them, to advertise to their customers and members that if a loan is repaid so much earlier they will provide so much of a benefit, by way of either refund or credit. But you cannot avoid responsibility for not making it statutory that early repayment should not be penalized. After all, that is just ordinary fairness and decency to people who borrow money from time to time, and borrow it frequently, and pay it off on time or ahead of time, most of the time.

• (1540)

Those who pay off their loans ahead of time should be protected. Surely, making such a provision law would be better than to make it a regulation. I hope that the minister will agree with me and accept the amendment. Then he can make whatever additional regulations he wishes.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the proposer of this amendment does not bring to the attention of this House the fact that a great number of loans made by banking institutions are demand loans, for which payment can be demanded almost instantly, or which the borrower can pay off instantly without notice. What we are really talking about is a select loan called a personal loan. Surely the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) would not want large corporate borrowers who know their way around the marketplace, and who can jump in and out of the marketplace, to go to an institution and say, "Interest rates are down half a point today, so I am paying you off", but on the other hand if interest rates were to rise, the bank would not be in a position to demand its money.

We are talking about a particular kind of term loan which is made to individuals. That is the reason why section 202(5) sets out where a bank lends money to an individual it must specify the exact terms of repayment, the exact privileges offered, and the details of the contract must be totally spelled out. That is also the reason why through sections 202(7) and 202(8) the minister can make regulations with respect to the kinds of terms and repayment allowances allowed to a borrower.

But surely, in a matter of commercial and corporate contracts, the New Democratic Party is not saying to this House that any term loan can be paid off without notice or bonus. Requiring some type of bonus on a loan is common practice. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation for example, charges individual borrowers three months' interest by way of bonus if the borrower wishes to pay off the mortgage. That is a common, open privilege, and clearly the lending institution must be able to recover its cost of setting up the loan and finding the funds in the first place.

I would expect the regulations which the minister will produce to be specifically designed to protect borrowers. The minister said in committee that he will get rid of the rule of 78 and that he will make sure that the calculation terms in loans is easily understood so there will be no gouging, or no situation where a person is charged three and four months' interest for paying back a loan, and that the terms of payment and terms of openness in bank loans to individuals are fair and reasonable. I do not know what else the minister could do other than to suggest that the matter be handled by regulation.

We live in a rapidly changing commercial world, and different types of personal loans are invented almost daily. Surely we must leave with the minister, in a bill which will run for another ten years, the right to make regulations concerning repayment. While on the face of it if any borrower is able to pay off any loan at any time he wants without bonus, would sound very good, if the New Democratic Party had any knowledge of how a business operates and how large business loans are made on a term basis, they would deem themselves pretty foolish for putting forth this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on motion No. 38 in the name of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 38 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): We move now to motion No. 39.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 39

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 28 at page 225 the following new section:

"202.1 (1) The minister has the power to order all chartered banks to lend a set percentage of their revenues at a level of interest determined by the Minister for the following purposes:

(a) housing, including native housing;

(b) farm improvement;

(c) development of small business; and

(d) economic development

(2) Notwithstanding any other section or part of this act, the minister shall

(a) monitor any and all interest rates and service charges levied by a bank on any deposit, loan, or transaction, including credit card transactions;

(b) determine the reasonableness of such rates and charges, taking into account:

(i) the interest rates set by the Bank of Canada,

(ii) the spread between charges to borrowers and charges to depositors, and

(iii) actual costs incurred by the bank for the provision of any services for which it levies a charge; and

(c) order any chartered bank to adjust any interest rates or charges if it is found that such interest rates or charges are unreasonable, following a determination as set out in subsection (2)."

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I recommend this particular motion to the House. Here is another area in which the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) may want to give his questionable assessment of who understands business. I would have thought that possibly after the discussion the other night there would be a more open interpretation. The amendment reads in part:

The minister has the power to order all chartered banks to lend a set percentage of their revenues at a level of interest determined by the minister for the following purposes:

(a) housing, including native housing;

(b) farm improvement;

(c) development of small business; and

(d) economic development

(2) Notwithstanding any other section or part of this act, the minister shall

(a) monitor any and all interest rates and service charges levied by a bank on any deposit, loan, or transaction, including credit card transactions;

(b) determine the reasonableness of such rates and charges, taking into account:

(i) the interest rates set by the Bank of Canada,

(ii) the spread between charges to borrowers and charges to depositors, and

(iii) actual costs incurred by the bank for the provision of any services for which it levies a charge; and

(c) order any chartered bank to adjust any interest rates or charges if it is found that such interest rates or charges are unreasonable, following a determination as set out in subsection (2).

I would like to address my remarks to one small section of this amendment, that the minister has the power to order banks to lend at a set percentage of their revenue and at a level of interest determined by the minister. We feel that this particular amendment would help small business. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has introduced the proposition that chartered banks be restricted in the amount of mortgage loans they can make against real property. As a result we became concerned about the government's attitude toward small business. We have expressed our concerns on how this proposal would affect housing.

I would like to speak about the kind of problems we feel the small businessman faces and how this amendment would improve the situation. After discussing this legislation with some small businessmen in my riding, one particular individual's response comes to mind. I would suggest to the hon. member for Mississauga South, who seems to have wandered off—Oh! I see that he is still here. This small businessman said that financing was extremely difficult. He felt, considering his business and its location, that he was really at the mercy of the lending institutions. This small businessman has a very small market and does not rely on volume sales due to the small population. However, that same population expects him to maintain a large inventory. He maintains that inventory by borrowing. When the interest rates drifted up from 12 per cent, 13 per cent, to 14 per cent and on up to 19 per cent, this man had a very large inventory for a very small market. And interest rates today are climbing rapidly back to that level.

In the area in which this small businessman operates, everything which comes in and which goes out must be transported great distances. The transportation costs are tremendous. The government has caused high interest rates, with increased fuel costs and energy costs, all of which have caused the cost of this man's goods to climb higher. He said that the higher the costs go up, the fewer people to whom he is able to sell. He is carrying this large, varied inventory to have the products on hand for his customers, but they are buying less. In addition, in the particular area he conducts business, and it is the entire coast of British Columbia north of Vancouver, the people who purchase goods from his business have also been hit by federal government programs and policies.

● (1550)

In the fishing industry a large number of people who purchase goods from his enterprise have had their season and their opportunity to earn income literally destroyed by federal government policies. Openings and closings have operated in a detrimental way. The market is shrinking more. Therefore the fishing season is extremely bad. The projections for next year are bad. He is still at the mercy of the banks, the high interest rates, and the difficulty of lending.

The lumber industry is the other great employer in this area which provides the market for his goods. With the high interest rate program this government has put in place, the market for lumber and plywood for the housing industry has been cut to the bone. Those people who would normally buy goods have been laid off. Their income has been curtailed. That can be directly laid back to the federal government.

The next item is the cutback in unemployment insurance. Northern Vancouver Island and the coast of British Columbia have a cyclical economy. During the fire season, loggers are laid off. During the winter, with the snow they are also laid off. Fishermen have a poor season. In many Indian communities where the unemployment rate rises 75 per cent to 90 per cent, they normally would work a season in the cannery or for a short period of time in the industry when it was open. They would have unemployment insurance to fall back on in the winter. This unemployment insurance would find its way back into this man's shop. Yet the government, through some very foxy manoeuvres, managed to neglect the needs of the people in this whole area by cutting back on unemployment insurance eligibility. This means there is no income, income that normally would have gone into his business.

Now we have high interest rates, poor fisheries management, unemployment insurance legislation, and dramatic increases in fuel prices which reflect directly on transportation. These are the high costs that are being reflected in this individual's business. In the final analysis, there is a tremendous increase in the cost of goods. When I go shopping here and I look at the same products that are sold in the stores, there is no comparison. The difference is tremendous.

When the interest rates went up to 19 per cent, they could not fix a price. Every day suppliers would receive a price increase in the mail. When the interest rates went back down, the prices did not decline. They have continued to rise. The government policy is bearing very hard on small businessmen. The hon. member for Mississauga South might pay attention. It is very important. His support for this might lend itself to having the government improve the situation.

Small business is being harmed very seriously. This legislation is accelerating that kind of harm. We would like to see a serious move by the government to make this legislation more responsive to the needs of people. It is directly responsive to the needs of banks and the banking industry. We would like to see some kind of improvement for small businessmen.

I would like to summarize the benefits of this man's business. It is only one business of dozens and dozens in this region. Therefore, when we talk about the benefits, we can multiply them by a hundred. This individual buys goods in the community. Any income he earns remains in that community. The business is very small. He hires five people. Five jobs have been created.

A lot of the employment along the coast of British Columbia and along Vancouver Island is in single industry towns. There is one big employer. A number of people in the community work for that industry. I am talking about the paper industry, some sawmilling, fish processing plants and mining enterprises. The mines are eventually mined out and the town shuts down. Processors find it easier to centralize processing industries, whether it is logs or fish in Vancouver or Prince Rupert, moving those enterprises out of the central coast.

In a lot of the other ones, through the process of automation we have lost a tremendous number of jobs. The mills are more productive today, but the actual labour input is reduced. We have a situation where the only other employer is small business. They hire mainly men. Generally women and young people have no opportunities in those communities except their opportunities through small businesses.

The majority of apprentices, whether they are welders, automobile mechanics, pipefitters and so on, are hired by small business, not by the major enterprises which get all the breaks, tax concessions, and grants for improvements. Most of the employment occurs there, as does most of the industrial training. They target a group of people who need help more than any others; the young people, women and those in the native community. There must be put into this legislation something to improve benefits for small business.

I will summarize by pointing out where this individual obtains financing. It is all from the bank. It is a line of credit that can only expand as much as his accounts receivable. At this point in time his accounts receivable seem to be a little slower as people do not have the money they anticipated, those who buy parts and equipment for fishing boats. The income is not there, so the accounts receivable are not met. The bank is now lending that money at a very high rate of interest. They expect it to go as high as it did last year, 19 per cent, which is enormous.

The bank loaned him money in order to buy and expand the business by way of a mortgage on real property, his home, his parent's home and his business. Therefore the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West that the banks should curtail their activity in lending on real property mortgages is absolutely ludicrous. This business could not continue to exist. In fact it would never have come into operation. The five jobs would not be here, along with a very real service.

That is another source of money. When he has to extend his financing or stock, and his line of credit will not handle it, because the accounts receivable are fixed, he has to go back to that mortgage procedure and borrow more money. In the final analysis he can borrow money at a lower rate than the bank generally produces it on the line of credit approach. The banks have a very strong hold through the debenture and mortgage on real property and through the line of credit system.

In the legislation now before us, we do not find a responsibility to small business. The legislation should be more sensitive and have a greater ability to meet the needs of small business which provide a tremendous service in our communities.

There is one other area which concerns me. I know some of my colleagues will want to speak to this particular element. I refer to the question of native housing. In this amendment we state that we would like to see money set aside from the lending portfolio to deal with housing, particularly native housing, and we would like to see interest rates handled that way also.

There are many people here who probably have not had the opportunity to travel to native communities. They have not had the opportunity of seeing the housing problems that exist there. Many of the urban members have not seen the very serious lack of decent housing in those communities.

● (1600)

Because of the structure of the Indian Act, we do not have the opportunity to provide native communities with conventional mortgages. This legislation should recognize the need for chartered banks which are tremendous mobilizers of capital. Whether through special institutions or by other means, native communities should have the right of access to the chartered banks, which are the major mobilizers of capital in our society; they should be able to approach those institutions for funds in order to build housing for instance. They cannot do that under the present circumstances. Instead, they are dependent upon federal government handouts. They are dependent on the charity of the federal government which designates how many new housing units may go into a community in any year. The need will never be met.

The needs of those who do not have steady employment may be met by government allocations, but a method should be developed whereby those people who have employment may approach the chartered banks for loans. This could lead to expansion of the amount of housing that is available within native communities.

At present there are very serious problems in the area of native economic development. My colleague, the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), has dealt with the problem of access to adequate capital. The Bank Act is a reasonable place for provision of this responsibility, Mr. Speaker.

I see the minister shaking his head. I do not believe he accepts the proposition that the banks do not have some obligation to society. It may be difficult to place these provisions in the legislation, but the needs do exist in society. The chartered banks exist by virtue of charters and letters patent issued by this House. There are serious problems, of course, but I believe that a whole range of Canadians should have access to the capital that is mobilized by these institutions. It is unfortunate that the Bank Act does not contain provisions to help native communities establish economic enterprises and build a greater number of housing units to meet the needs of their people.

I shall conclude with those remarks, Mr. Speaker, and leave my colleagues to develop some of the other issues.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on this matter again today. I must say, following on the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) that our friends to the right and those across the floor seem to be mesmerized by the Bank Act. It is as if the overwhelming desire of both the Liberals and the Tories is to make sure that everything in this act is good for the banks. I believe there are other segments of society that should be treated fairly under the provisions of this act, however. My hon. friend made some points with regard to native housing, and this is an area which I feel strongly about as well. The minister should give very serious consideration to this to make sure that capital is mobilized in order to provide decent native housing.

I should like to direct the majority of my remarks today to the problems facing the small business sector. I believe this has been overlooked in the Bank Act. We all appreciate that venture capital is the key to the survival of the small business sector which is facing some very serious problems. This is necessary in order to provide new plants, new techniques, warehousing, distribution facilities, new retail and wholesale outlets.

Inventory is one of the key problems in the small business sector. The cost of carrying any commodity at all can amount to 16 per cent, 18 per cent, or 20 per cent or more per annum. Things are very different in the small business sector today than they were 15 or 20 years ago when, as a business became more successful, it was able to carry more inventory. In turn, this increased the number of customers likely to patronize it because of the variety of goods offered. Such is no longer the case. With increased interest rates and carrying charges, the cost of goods per unit is increased and, as a result, most small businesses have to limit their lines of goods.

In this situation, as capital becomes more difficult to find and as the line of goods offered is more limited, the large multinational companies move in and take over what would ordinarily be a lucrative small or medium-sized business. These companies have greater access to capital than do the small businesses.

I would urge all hon. members to consider carefully the proposal contained in the amendment that banks should make capital available directly to small business. High interest rates are a serious burden and the added restrictions put on available capital are creating problems for the small business sector.

This amendment would make money available through legislation. There is already a proliferation of high interest rates on private mortgages and loans. Any newspaper in almost any area of the country has advertisements in the classified columns which offer money at excessively high rates. A growing number of small businesses are forced to secure their funds in this way in order to survive.

In the first part of this year the monthly rate of small business bankruptcies increased 24.8 per cent over last year. The government has been vague on what it intends to do about this. There has been a short extension of the time that bonds will be available, but that does not really affect the problems facing the small business sector. Despite the fact that members to my right and across the floor claim to be the great, wise purveyors of small business, they rarely speak in this House on the subject.

Businesses with assets of less than $1 million comprise 90 per cent of the businesses in Canada and employ about half the work force. While these small businesses decline, large corporations and multinationals have continued to reap soaring profits. They are able to maintain their spot in the marketplace through the use of internal cash flow which can keep their smaller plants open, even if those small units are in a negative cash flow position. In many cases they have a near monopoly on prices. They can employ the loss leader concept to attract customers, be it a couch or a car, nuts and bolts, nails, or whatever. In face of this competition, some small businesses fail within a short time. The large company also has extensive lines of credit available through the banks.

Motion No. 39 would have the effect of making a specific amount of capital directly available to small businesses. Last year, 75 per cent of bankruptcies were in the small business sector; 48 per cent of big business in Canada is foreign owned, whereas 96 per cent of small business is Canadian owned. That is an important aspect of the branch plant economy in Canada. We need an effective national strategy to deal with the small business sector so that it can move beyond the terminal growth stage of the 49 to 100-employee range, up to the big business sector where it can secure lines of credit as well as developing technologies that will give us international status.

● (1610)

Only 3 per cent of small business loans last year were under the Small Businesses Loans Act. I think that really points out the inadequacy of that act and the real need for an amendment to the Bank Act to provide a much greater level and availability of capital to that sector. That capital is also only eligible for plant expansion, equipment and land assembly, which really even more severely restricts it, particularly at a time when the actual carrying of inventory is one of the greatest problems faced by small business.

Small businessmen require working capital, and this would be legislated by the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) and the hon. member for Comox-Powell River. Small businesses raise money often by mortgaging their real property, so what in effect is occurring is that both the owner and frequently those individuals who are working in a small business take real risks with their own personal property, and in my view, and in the view of my party, the banks have a real social and economic responsibility to make low-cost long-term capital available to small business.

Without the present amendment as proposed, small business will be forced into the private money market, which will increase costs which often cannot be passed on to the consumer. Many small businesses across the country are in a marginal state and are forced to go by the banks and into the private money sector. Adding even a few cents, let alone a few dollars, to the cost of individual commodities forces consumers again to go to larger chains which are capable of having loss leaders and major sales to move much larger bulk units and bulk quantities of goods. That thereby essentially drives the small business sector under again.

Many members of this House tend to forget that half the work force in this country is directly employed in the small business sector. The main reason that this type of unfair competition goes on in this country is that there is no option for small business to go to in order to secure the type of financing it requires either to carry larger inventories, to expand plant facilities, to improve premises or whatever, so again it falls into a situation whereby the medium and large corporations, and particularly the multinationals, have an extremely unfair competitive advantage. This is primarily because of policies which have been passed by this House in the past.

Small business in Canada accounts for 28 per cent of the total business sales, and again that is sort of a deceptive figure. But who would be helped most by this amendment? It would be firms in operation less than two years whose profits during the past year were down 61.5 per cent, and firms which have been in operation five to ten years and which have curtailed expansion during the past year by 19.5 per cent directly related not only to inflation but also to the lack of availability of venture and expansion capital. Therefore, what we are seeing is the increased loss of young enterprises, particularly, which are going through the maximum costs of business development, which are start-up costs, plant development, inventory, advertising, travel, and time spent finding customers and so forth. The medium-term businesses which have had growth curtailed by higher cost have found it extremely hard to find capital in the past five years. Very small businesses tend to be able to weather higher interest rates, and those are the businesses with only one to four employees.

High interest rates last year, however, saw a 56.2 per cent reduction in profits for businesses with 15 to 49 employees, and those small businesses with 50 to 99 employees saw a 59.1 per cent reduction. Medium-sized business appears from these figures to be hurt worst by the problems of capital availability. These problems then allow big business and multinationals to take over in those areas particularly where medium-sized businesses get sluggish for any period of time. They are able to move in and, through a growing number of manoeuvres, take over that market, and essentially push the Canadian businessmen out of that sector.

The sectors which will receive the most support by the proposed amendment are transportation, about 25.1 per cent; agriculture, forestry and fishing, 20.7 per cent; construction, 19.9 per cent; and manufacturing, 19.6 per cent. I think we have to look very carefully at the small business manufacturing sector in this country because it has one of our largest deficits with some $17 billion in trade deficit last year. It is an area of the economy that is seriously sagging, but there is certainly an abundance of entrepreneurs in this country who are capable of making almost any manufactured commodity that we use in our day to day lives.

Without some serious encouragement, which we have not seen in terms of any of the legislation in this present Parliament, we should certainly at least pass this amendment in order to ensure that small business has capital available at a reasonable interest rate so that we can move into that area not only in terms of affecting our balance of trade deficit but also in terms of creating more jobs in that sector for unemployed Canadians.

We have seen a reduction of profits over the past two years in the wholesale sector of 61.2 per cent and in construction of 58.9 per cent. There is a very serious domino effect. As I pointed out last week, the entire forest sector was overlooked in the budget of October 28. I think that is a serious oversight. Coming from British Columbia, I must say that to have the budget overlook what represents 50 per cent of our economy in British Columbia is quite sad. When we start tying together the forestry sector with the construction sector, we are looking at about 40 per cent of the most seriously impacted small businesses in this country, and it is related to an entire slowdown. In the amendment we have indicated a desire to make further funds available for housing, both urban and rural, and particularly for native housing, and in order to get forestry moving again we require funds to be made available so that we can have housing starts and get the construction and building trades moving again. This would have an effect in the forest sector, which is extremely sluggish not only in British Columbia but also across the country.

Those areas which are susceptible to inflation are the hardest hit. I refer to sectors which carry any inventory at all. They are also therefore prone to the impact of energy price increases. With the energy policy coming from the other side of the House, and the lack of any real mobilization to help the small business sector, I think it is important to have an amendment such as this which will force the banks, which make use of the small business capital but in fact move it on to areas where they can make more money, to make capital available to those sectors which are the most economically creative and carry the greatest potential.

Who in the small business sector is increasing output and requires such an amendment most? Between 1970 and 1976 Canadian owned and controlled manufacturing firms increased output by 112 per cent. During the same period U.S. branch plants in this country increased their output by only 85 per cent. I think that says a great deal about the potential and the productivity of the Canadian small business sector, which really has not received anything new from the government opposite. Canadian controlled manufacturing clearly out-produced American branch plants by 32 per cent. This amendment, among other things, would help Canadians to get moving, instead of U.S. controlled branch plants.

I hope hon. members opposite, and particularly the minister, will seriously consider including this amendment in the Bank Act because, as I said in my opening remarks, it seems that too many members of this House, certainly hon. members opposite and to my right, are mesmerized by the name of this act, the Bank Act, and seem to think that this entire six-day exercise is to ensure that the interests of banks rather than those of consumers, native people, people who require housing, farmers and small business people in this country, are protected.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak about this amendment from two points of view. The first is in relation to small businesses, and the second has to do with the economic development sector as it applies to community development in local communities. As my colleagues have already pointed out, unfortunately the past few years have not been good years for the small business sector.

● (1620)

The dominance of large corporations in our economy has made it very difficult for small businesses to compete without access to sophisticated financial, managerial and technical advice. As a result, bankruptcies have increased each year over the past several years. We also know that across Canada in June of 1980, 2,119 individuals and businesses have declared bankruptcy, an increase of 35 per cent over June, 1979. In the first six months of 1980, business bankruptcies have increased by 19 per cent over the last half of 1979, and more than doubled in the years between 1974 and 1979. Bankruptcies have been highest among small businesses in operation for under six years which were in need of capital and advice and did not get much of either. Both were complicated as interest rates increased dramatically in the early part of this year. As my colleagues have pointed out, this has tremendous implications for the Bank Act, for the amendments before us and for the role of banks in our society.

Rather than concentrating today on a more general point of view, I would like to bring to the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, comments from several interviews that I conducted with local business people in my riding of Vancouver East. I think they are typical of the concerns of business people throughout Canada and have an implication for the Bank Act. When I phoned these people I explained to them that I would be speaking in the House on the Bank Act and I wanted their opinion on matters which concerned them.

First of all, a hardware merchant said:

I am not happy at all with high interest rates that are killing small businesses. The banks seem to have no sympathy with business customers.

Especially small business customers.

If an error is made, the customer pays, whether this is the bank's mistake or the customer's.

Then a TV and radio businessman, who wants to expand his business in the interest of young people in the community who, he knows, are looking for work, said:

Interest rates are preventing us from ordering the new stock we must have to keep customers and expand. I would like to start a small manufacturing business to develop a few jobs for young people in the riding. To do this I need R and D funds for a new type of TV tube production. When I inquired I was told federal business loans are not available unless I moved to an area like Kelowna.

Next, a small developer in the construction business, a person who is very concerned with the community and very much a part of the community, said:

Banks should cater to small business instead of pampering big businesses. Small businesses need capital at favourable rates or they cannot survive. Interest rates have pushed up the cost of building lots to $103,000—

—that is for the land—

—for a 33-foot lot to build a family house. Older family homes are now selling for $150,000 and newer ones for $185,000 in Vancouver East.

I would say again that this is in an average, ordinary, working class part of Vancouver, and we are talking about a three bedroom house for $185,000. He went on to say:

It is impossible for a person to build a house these days.

The culprit, of course, is the high interest rates.

Next, an accountant who helps many small businessmen and women, said:

The banks are quick to push programs that they can gain from with no concern that it exploits small business. For example, the Bank of Nova Scotia recently put out a fact sheet on "small business development bonds." These bonds offered at 9 or 10 per cent are tax free to banks, but the person borrowing them must pay high legal fees and other costs. The small businessman cannot include these as tax deductible expenses while the bank gets all the advantages. Who is the winner in this kind of deal? Ask them, who is the winner?

That is a good question. Next, a wholesale businesswoman said the following. It was difficult to find women in business because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, women in business find it very difficult to get credit, just as they find it very difficult to get a mortgage, no matter what their potential credit rating is. This woman said:

Small businesses that I deal with have to go into hock to start up and have debts and mortgages held by a bank. The banks cover all the risk when they give loans by requiring a personal guarantee. They are well covered and can claim a person's home if the business goes broke.

On the other hand, a supplier such as us—

This woman happens to be a supplier of arts and crafts materials to businesses.

—assumes all the risks and often must refuse some orders if the business seems a poor risk for credit. There are no guarantees the supplier will get paid when businesses go bankrupt.

I think the banks should assist small businesses with advice and realistic planning. Their services are mostly for big investors.

Here we hear it again. She went on to say:

Since they make sure they are fully protected and control all the customers' assets, the banks should provide a letter of credit that can be used with suppliers to guarantee they will be paid. As it is now, the supplier, who is also a small business person, takes the brunt of the bankruptcy. Bankers don't give small business any service at all. They take our money but don't give service.

I have heard this repeatedly.

Staff are underpaid and there are not enough hired. Banks should provide advice and help for small businesses along with financial services.

Finally, a small manufacturer and importer, who is trying to help a number of low-income women who are mainly on welfare and trying to raise children on their own to develop a kind of co-operative business, said:

Chartered banks favour huge corporations. They lend to big businesses who have lots of assets and not to small businesses that could employ local people in manufacturing small items. For example—

This is just a small example.

—nail brushes are imported from Roumania. Only a $3,000 loan is needed to manufacture them locally and employ two or three people. Yet this is not available because banks pay no attention to small businesses.

The Federal Business Development Bank also is of little help. There is considerable potential for handicapped persons and persons now on welfare, many of them single mothers, to work at home on marketable items for sale through a co-operative organization. Initial loans for an investment in supplies and equipment are essential along with the hiring of a trainer and business promoter to develop market-oriented saleable items.

These loans are essential not just for crafts for charity which people buy because they feel sorry for handicapped people, but for sophisticated, market-oriented saleable items. But this fellow has tried and there was no way he could get help from the bank for this kind of thing. Finally, he said:

The Bank Act should include a section that requires banks to have a compulsory allocation of funds for low interest loans to small businesses.

Of course, he did not know about this amendment when he told me this. He went on to say:

Small businesses that can become secure and plan ahead become one of the best employers of local people. They can train and hire unemployed workers, but only if they can survive. The present high interest rates make this very difficult.

I do not need to add any more comments on the need for an interest loan program through the banks which would provide a reasonable rate of interest for credible small businesses, which of course would be investigated and would be found to be a good investment.

The second point I wish to raise has to do with paragraph (d) on economic development. This amendment proposes that the minister should have the power to lend reserves at a feasible rate of interest for what is called economic development. I should like to speak on the basis of the many years of experience which I have had in community development, having seen what has happened to a number of people who have been affected by government sponsored programs, such as LIP and Canada Works, and now the community development projects.

● (1630)

Over the past ten years citizen organizations have organized and developed a variety of very interesting and innovative experiments in self-help at the community level. In a limited way, these LIP and Canada Works projects encourage the initiation of new development by community people. This happens especially in poverty areas—in the inner cities, on Indian reserves, and I am sure in smaller communities throughout Canada. In the days when more money was available, this was an appreciable amount of employment. It was not at the rates we would have liked, nor continuous employment.

In my community—and I am sure this is typical of others—starts were made on more flexible child care services so that mothers could go to work and some people could train in child care. Food co-operatives were developed; public housing projects, home making services, home repairs and sheltered workshops were developed to make items for limited sale. As I said, the salaries were very minimal, sometimes less than unemployment insurance. It allowed projects to get started with a very small amount of overhead, often sponsored by parent organizations.

However, few community services could be developed which involved fund raising. This was a "no-no". They could not compete with the marketplace, so even though income might have been brought in during the initial period and put into a fund to maintain the ongoing service, this was really not allowed under the terms of reference. Many non-profit societies which sponsored such community service projects would have liked to continue them. These were necessary services of continuing need which would not be automated out of existence. So, it was a continuing potential for local employment as well.

Also they wanted to continue to hire local members of their community who needed work and could contribute more effectively because they knew the needs of the local community. However, they had no ongoing funds to employ even one or two of the team of workers who were on Canada Works projects after projects were completed. Many of the people who were hired on these projects were young people with little job experience. Also many of them were highly-trained university graduates who could not get work. Many were women previously on welfare, and handicapped people who needed a protected work situation or a change to get started and prove that they were as good as anyone else.

These people gained confidence and skills if the project provided adequate training and administrative direction, but by the time their year was almost up, of course once again they were faced with the spectre of unemployment. Certainly this did not discourage motivation for responsible work habits.

Well, Mr. Speaker might well ask what this has to do with the Bank Act and the amendment. It is directly related to the amendment on economic development which we are proposing. The projects I mentioned demonstrated both a valid and important community need and a great potential for community employment. The organizational and development stage was completed when projects were finished. Usually they were ready to go on to become community enterprises. All they lacked was capital, and of course capital was not available through the government, banks or credit unions. In many cases a small co-operative was formed which could have continued these services if funds were available.

I recommend very strongly the endorsement of this amendment, and furthermore that credit unions and banks be empowered to assist communities, particularly low income communities, to develop what I would call a community development corporation and a revolving fund to encourage non-profit self-help services. Low interest loans could be used by reliable community enterprisers to help establish community services essential to people living in the community, each one helping another. Some of the income would come from social and government agencies now paying for homemaking services, transportation for the elderly, child care and other preventive services for low income communities.

Other services such as food co-ops, home repairs, housecleaning and maintenance would have a regular income from sales or pay for services by the community. Members on the other side of the House do not seem to be aware of the point that this kind of approach would be an investment in people, as well as in jobs and future businesses. It would hire local people who know the community needs and are able to relate sensitively to local services, rather than highly paid professionals and commercially run businesses.

In closing, I very much hope members will approve this amendment. We spoke the other day about housing needs; now we are talking about small businesses. It is important to have this amendment to the Bank Act to allow discretion for banks, and I hope credit unions, to offer low interest loans for reliable non-profit enterprises as well as for small businesses which will employ local citizens and strengthen communities.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of this opportunity to speak on this particular amendment to the Bank Act, because it is an area of concern for a great part of the Canadian economy. If we lower the interest rates in this particular area of concern, we can do a lot toward building up the economy of Canada.

Although I am basically concerned with the prominence of financial institutions and their control of the economy, that control of the economy by the banks and related institutions is almost devastating. We are at a point in our economy where small businesses, farms and such organizations are unable to operate without the effective financing of banks or other lending institutions. It has become particularly devastating. I challenge any member here to try to open a small business, to borrow the required financing to start a small business or farm, and after four or five years of operation, to check on how much money was made compared to how much was paid to financial institutions. Almost every small business which is started up now, and almost every farm which was started up in the last ten years, have found that they are paying an inordinate portion of their profits—if one can call them profits—or of the money they have made, to the financial institutions. Consequently, the financial institutions of the country are the only organizations which make profits on ongoing businesses, particularly small ones and farms.

It is a pretty bad situation when one considers the many hours of work, worry and risk taken in the development of small businesses or farms, and at the end of five or ten years finds that most of the profits or most of the money taken in has gone to financial institutions. What did they put up for it? Very little work, if any, and very little risk.

• (1640)

Over the years the failure rate of lack of payment by farmers particularly has been very small. It is around one per cent. So there is very little risk in loaning money to the development of a farm or a small business. The development requires the capital, and the donor gets 15 per cent to 20 per cent of the investment back and the entrepreneur, the worker, feels he is pretty lucky if he gets 5 per cent to 10 per cent back. With respect to this particular case we should look at this amendment, which suggests that we allow or require a certain amount of the revenues at a level of interest determined by the minister for the purposes which are listed in this amendment. We are living in a particular kind of jungle, as far as finance is concerned. It is the responsibility of this House, and has been the responsibility of banks—at least that is what we thought—to apply the rules under which you can survive in this jungle.

Before I go on to some of the factors here let us take a look at what the responsibilities of a bank are. We charter them. We give them the privilege of conducting the banking exercise in our communities. They are major economic actors in our communities and in our country. But what are their responsibilities and how do those responsibilities relate to this particular amendment? They control the cash flow for corporations and the cash flow and credit for individuals. They have a great scope of financial activities, and if this bill were to go through in the way it was originally proposed we would be extending the scope of those activities.

Banks should have some responsibility for our national goals. What are our national goals? They are closely related to farm improvement, the development of businesses, and the economic development of the country. Those are goals which this country and the people of this country have accepted, and which this government has accepted by being the representative of those people. So Canada needs an industrial strategy. Under this particular jungle operation that we have, as far as finances are concerned, we require some control over the finances which would allow those national goals to be achieved. If we consider that the banks are public institutions privileged to operate as public institutions in this country, then we should expect them to accept some of those responsibilities and be willing to provide a certain amount of money to the development of the country.

Maybe the limitations which the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) suggested in an earlier amendment are a good thing because they may limit the amount of money that is available and consequently many people will not be working for the banks. Many people in this country feel that we have developed well and we have accepted the responsibility of small businesses and farms as being a major part of our economy, and we should therefore make available to them the kind of money which would allow them not only to survive but to make a major contribution to our economy.

Small businesses and farms are having a lot of trouble surviving because of the high interest rates. Therefore we have some responsibility to lower those interest rates so that those types of businesses can survive. In my own part of the country, in the farming area, when farmers go out of business they have been able to sell their land and, because of the price of land, been able to survive to some extent. They do go on to the labour market or attempt to find something else to do. I am not always sure that is a good alternative.

However, let us take a look at the small businesses. As the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) mentioned, 75 per cent of bankruptcies today involve small businesses. The figures are quite interesting. In 1977 there were 3,905 bankruptcies in Canada. In 1978 there were 5,546 bankruptcies. The number is higher in 1979, and I am sure that 1980 will show an increased number of bankruptcies.

I will refer again to some of the statistics which were given by the member for Skeena. In Canada 48 per cent of big business is foreign owned while 96 per cent of the small businesses in Canada are Canadian owned and operated. When we look at the figures, 96 per cent of those people who are bankrupt are no longer contributing to the economy, nor are they hiring other Canadians. This Parliament has a responsibility to ensure that small businesses and farmers are not gouged by high interest rates of 19 per cent and 25 per cent. That is what they are paying.

If you were to try to buy a tractor in Saskatchewan right now you would need more capital than most farmers can afford. As a result, they are forced to go out and attempt to borrow if they wish to buy any kind of machinery. In the process they are asked to secure such loans with property. That property is the productive part of their farming operation. Small businesses are asked to secure their loans but putting their plants on the line. In other cases they are asked to secure loans with their stores and buildings. Then they are asked to pay up to 20 per cent of anything they earn with those plants or with that piece of machinery, to the finance company. That just does not contribute to the national economy.

The reason for interest back in the old days of the usurers was because some risk was involved, particularly with respect to farmers. Many of the loans which are made to farmers these days are secured by the federal government under the farm loans legislation. However, just because a loan is secured, it does not mean that the farmer receives the money at a lower rate of interest. The lending institutions do not have that kind of social conscience. They continue to take the highest level of interest possible.

● (1650)

Let us take a look at a situation where this amendment does not exist and interest rates continue to rise. This creates a situation of tight credit which causes interest rates to rise further. Every time the interest rate goes up, it creates a little more hardship for the small businessman or the farmer, the people who need the money to operate. Most businessmen, in order to keep up an available stock, or a farmer to get over seeding or harvesting, require a line of credit. In the past this was not a great problem, but with upwardly spiralling interest rates it is becoming the reason for many bankruptcies and why people are withdrawing from farming.

We constantly hear that it is important to keep producing the kinds of foods necessary to feed the world. It is also important that we keep farmers on the land, because it is good for our economy. Some say that farmers today produce twice as much as the farmers of 20 years ago. The fact is that there are less than half as many farmers today. While they are perhaps producing a little more food, there are fewer people producing that food. The people who left the farms are now either on the unemployment rolls or they have forced others onto the unemployment rolls.

We should try to give the farmer credit at an acceptable rate of interest in order to keep him on the land. That in part is the purpose of this amendment. If we restrict capital we will force interest rates higher. It is quite likely that the number of farmers or businessmen closed down as a result of bankruptcy will become so high that the family farm and the small business as we know them today will disappear and we will fall entirely under the control of the large corporations.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this amendment. I commend my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), for presenting it. I have noticed this afternoon how quiet the members of the Conservative party and the Liberal party have been on this amendment. This amendment could bring stimulus to the housing industry, which would help every Canadian. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation recently took a survey in my riding, and they found that in almost every community there was a .0 vacancy rate. The highest vacancy rate they could find was .05.

If this kind of proposal were put in the Bank Act, communities or groups would be allowed to get together to bring about land assemblies, and the average worker would be allowed through such a program to build housing which would meet the needs of the people.

Mr. Blenkarn: Get off it.

Mr. Parker: I was involved in such a program, and I have seen what can be done. I saw a small community with backing from the federal government, the provincial government and the municipal government, put forward 25 acres of land and put in the services. The lots were sold at cost. The individuals involved were able to go to the banks and borrow money. Many of them began building their own homes with their own hands. Others hired contractors. The project, which occurred in the early seventies, stimulated housing in a way such a provision in the Bank Act would stimulate the industry.

I would like to speak about the problems of the small businessman. Many times on the campaign trail I heard the Conservative candidate or the Liberal candidate say that they were the champions of the small businessmen. Several small businessmen have come to me with problems. I can think of one group which operates a small tie mill. They were begging for contracts from CP Rail. These businessmen could not get financing because they did not have the contracts. But CP Rail is going across the line into Washington to buy thousands and thousands of railway ties. I am talking about small industries run by three or four people. In this case it was a small mill which hoped to make a business out of small scrub timber by making railway ties for the railways. If the Bank Act were amended to help small businessmen, we would see many such operations begin.

I have been in larger communities where there are the large shopping malls which have their own means of financing, gathering all of their loot together to squeeze out the small businessman who is unable to get a loan from a bank. If this small businessman is able to get a loan, the interest rates are so high he is unable to sell his goods or maintain an inventory, and he soon goes into bankruptcy. Every small businessman knows what I am talking about.

There is also the tourist industry. Businessmen in my riding promote winter skiing in particular. Once again interest rates will be a deciding factor in whether the business will be a viable operation or whether it will go into bankruptcy.

The other day a woman came to me with her problem. She was trying to develop a small business, but because the banks would not provide her with the capital, she was forced to go to the federal development fund. She faces the possibility of losing her business in December. As a result, I tried to determine how many more small businessmen were finding themselves in this kind of trap. I found many such businessmen in my own community.

• (1700)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert)—Public Service—Translators' dispute—State of negotiations; the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Veterans Affairs—Request for increase in war veterans allowance and disability pensions; the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly)—Consumer Affairs—Justification for certain department stores to increase finance charges.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SUGGESTION LEGISLATION NECESSARY TO INCREASE CONTROL AND ACCOUNTABILITY

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to increase control and accountability of Crown corporations such as the provisions of Bill C-27, an act respecting Crown corporations and matters relating or incidental thereto, which was introduced in the First Session of the Thirty-first Parliament.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on April 30 I put down this motion because I felt it was a matter of great necessity in this country that action be taken in the very near future to bring an appropriate regime of accountability and control to the myriad of Crown corporations for which the federal government has responsibility. I am delighted that the president of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is present this afternoon to watch the debate and follow the activities here, because he is the minister who now has the responsibility for the Crown corporations bill and who, perhaps, can give some indication to the House as to what the intention of the government is in this regard.

Earlier in this session I raised questions with the President of the Treasury Board and with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), asking whether they intended to take action similar to that which was proposed by our government a year ago. It would have brought before Parliament legislation to increase accountability on the part of Crown corporations and bring an appropriate regime before Parliament which would allow the flexibility necessary to deal with Crown corporations. It would have addressed a number of concerns raised by the Auditor General, the public accounts committee, the Lambert commission and various other groups who are concerned about the lack of an adequate method of accountability for Crown corporations at the present time.

When I raised the issue in this House previously, I was given the firm indication by the government that it accepted the principles that were involved in the Crown corporations legislation. Indeed, the Prime Minister said that the bill which we introduced in the last Parliament was simply a bill that had been drawn up by the Liberal government and was available to us when we took over. That, of course, was not the case. However, the initiative of trying to bring an appropriate regime with accountability of Crown corporations before Parliament was an initiative which dates back to the previous Liberal government. It was under the Clark administration, the administration led by my leader, that action was finally taken to bring legislation before Parliament which would deal with the myriad problems which had been created by this lack of proper accountability.

Although the President of the Treasury Board and the Prime Minister indicated at that time that they took this matter seriously and action would be forthcoming, and although privately we had indications from some members of the government that action would be taken very early after Parliament resumed in the fall, Parliament has yet to see any indication of seriousness whatsoever on the part of the government with regard to Crown corporations. We have yet to see an indication on the part of the government that it is prepared to take action in bringing legislation before Parliament to address these numerous concerns which were repeated most recently by the former Auditor General of Canada, Mr. J. J. Macdonell. Hon. members will remember that this bill was designed to provide ministers and Parliament with improved means to control and direct the management of Crown corporations and to ensure that their performance was accountable to ministers and Parliament.

The bill, and I stress this, was not part of the former government's privatization initiative. It was quite unique and separate from privatization in that its purpose was to increase the effectiveness of the corporations' various public policy objectives. At the same time, the bill sought to clarify grey areas of jurisdiction that are of concern to Crown corporation managers and to correct the unrestricted proliferation of Crown corporations and their subsidiaries.

Most Canadians do not know the fact, but it is the fact that it is possible for three public servants to go out this afternoon and incorporate a new federal Crown corporation for which the government and taxpayers of Canada would be responsible. It is possible to incorporate Crown corporations through a number of different measures, including even under provincial government legislation. What we were trying to do was to ensure that when a decision was made that a Crown corporation could be created, it was made with the full knowledge of ministers and it was done consistent with the policies of the government and policies approved by Parliament. We do not believe it is in the national interest to have Crown corporations proliferating without any idea as to the numbers involved and as to the reasons why they are even created.

The bill addressed itself only to the control, direction and accountability of corporations that are wholly owned, whether directly or indirectly, by Her Majesty in right of Canada. In total, Bill C-27 applied to 178 corporations. It did not refer to corporations that are not wholly owned by the federal government. In other words, where there was mixed or joint enterprise where the federal government was involved, this was not coming under the ambit of the Crown corporation bill. It was to be dealt with by separate legislation, somewhat further down the line.

I would like to mention, and I think it is of interest to members of the House and the Canadian people, that we always had to revise that number upwards. We got it up to 178 because we kept on discovering Crown corporations which the government did not realize existed, but for which the Canadian people and the Government of Canada were responsible.

One of the provisions in the bill would have required that unless a Crown corporation has been listed in one of the schedules to the bill, it would cease to exist. It would have to be wound up and the people of Canada would not be held responsible for its liabilities. This was a provision designed to enable us to find other Crown corporations which to date had still been able to elude detection by the government. I suspect this figure of 178 Crown corporations wholly owned by the Government of Canada is in fact probably low.

Our government was convinced that the natures of these joint corporations differed so widely that it would be impossible to provide for them in legislation designed for wholly-owned corporations. Nor did Bill C-27 refer to those corporations engaged in functions of an artistic, entertainment or journalistic nature as their primary undertaking. We recognized that the CBC and other cultural organizations had special requirements that historically created a large degree of independence from Parliamentary scrutiny. As such, we made both of these types of corporations the subjects of separate reviews.

I must stress that it was the intention of our government to bring the CBC and the other cultural organizations into some appropriate regime of accountability which would recognize the need for some element of cultural autonomy, but would still respond to the concern that many Canadians have over the lack of accountability of Crown corporations today. I would be very disturbed if, in legislation brought forward by the present government, there were some attempt made to ignore trying to bring in an appropriate regime of accountability for those Crown corporations.

In general, our government was attempting to replace the traditional philosophy behind the Crown corporations' relationship to Parliament. The belief that Crown corporations ought to be incorporated at arm's length from the government of the day and Parliament is outdated and perverse. While the ostensible purpose behind the arm's length philosophy was to insulate Crown corporations from political intervention in their operations, the practical effect was to break the accountability chain between Crown corporations and the government. As a result, on many occasions an environment has been established whereby management has been unresponsive to public policy objectives. To guard against this situation, we proposed that the governor in council should have the power to issue legally binding directives to Crown corporations to pursue objectives that are in the national interest.

I must stress the fact that these directives were to be issued openly, not secretly and not privately as they can be today. They were to be issued in full view so that Canadians would know the reasons and the nature of government involvement in the day to day operation of Crown corporations.

An example of how directive power might have operated was that the provision might allow the government to dictate the location of new facilities in areas of high unemployment, or the buying of goods and services from Canadian companies. This would be an example of where something could be required by the governor in council in the national interest but the Crown corporations would have the right and the power to apply for compensation, if the government's directives resulted in a loss of revenues to them. They could have some compensation to ensure that their profitability did not suffer as a consequence. We could also recognize the direct cost to the taxpayer in terms of directives which were issued in the national interest.

To protect against abuses, however, all powers exercised had to be done publicly and in the form of a written order in council. These directives would then be automatically tabled in Parliament within 15 days of issuance or, if Parliament was not sitting, within 15 days of the beginning of the subsequent session. This type of stipulation would assure that situations could not arise whereby individual ministers could issue directions orally without it being recorded for public scrutiny. Such a stipulation, I might add, is not envisaged in the current government's Canada Post corporation bill. In this bill, responsibility for directive powers can lie in the hands of an individual minister. Those directives can be given orally. This is one of the concerns I have. In the absence of an initiative of the Crown corporation legislation, similar to the one taken by the previous government, at least a number of provisions in the Canada Post Crown corporation bill appear to fly directly in the face of the policy that was established by the previous government, and which the Prime Minister earlier in this session tried to claim as his own.

● (1710)

Some of the other measures we proposed to ensure the general control, direction and accountability objectives of Bill C-27 were, first, a series of provisions that sought to strengthen the boards of directors of Crown corporations when carrying out their responsibilities. These provisions would be nearly identical to those of the Canada Business Corporations Act as they apply to the duties, responsibilities and liabilities of boards of directors. For example, directors would be responsible for the appointment and setting of salaries for vice-presidents. Since this bill put a premium on effective and efficient management, the board is likely to seek out individuals with demonstrated management abilities.

I might also refer here to Bill C-42, the Canada Post Corporation Act, which is very different in that it requires that appointments of vice-presidents of the Canada Post Corporation will have to be ratified by the governor in council and that the governor in council will have the power to set salary schedules of Crown corporation vice presidents. This obviously flies in the face of the concept that the responsibility of the board of directors of a Crown corporation is to manage the day to day activities of the Crown corporation, free from political interference.

A series of provisions was designed to exert control over the financial expenditures and commitments of Crown corporations by requiring their capital budgets to be submitted to the government for approval and continuing scrutiny. At the same time, these provisions allowed for more responsibility and flexibility for members of the boards of directors to develop corporate plans, capital budgets and to manage their own debt financing.

A key provision in Bill C-27 was the clarification of the meaning and implications of the term "agent of Her Majesty" for Crown corporations, especially as it applies to financing. As a result, corporations wishing to arrange long-term borrowing from private sources would have to do so on their own credit rather than that of the Crown. Moreover, the bill called for the accurate reflection in the public accounts of all liabilities incurred by a Crown corporation since, of course, they are liabilities of the Crown until they are fully repaid with regard to principal and interest.

Finally, there was a series of provisions designed to improve the financial management and control of Crown corporations; a range of proposals to provide members of Parliament on both sides with substantially more information about the activities of the Crown corporations; and a provision that would require statutory authority and governor in council approval of any future acquisitions or incorporations by Crown corporations or their subsidiaries. In sum, the provisions of the bill our government introduced set out what we believe to be an effective, workable and comprehensive Crown corporations bill.

The need for the type of legislation proposed in Bill C-27, Mr. Speaker, was well known before our government was in office. For many years, questions have been asked in the House about activities of various Crown corporations of which ministers have little knowledge. The standard response of "I do not know, but I shall try to find out", proved not only frustrating to the opposition, but embarrassing to members of cabinet. The 1975 Estey inquiry into the affairs of Air Canada not only criticized the lack of accountability to the government, but disclosed details of questionable transactions, shortcomings of financial control accounting procedures, and of fiscal management in the corporation. These findings were substantiated by the Auditor General's 1976 report to the House. That report concluded as follows:

> In the majority of the Crown corporations audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control is weak and ineffective. Moreover co-ordination and guidance by central government agencies of financial management and control practices in these Crown corporations is virtually non-existent.

Two subsequent reports from the Standing Committee on Public Accounts in July, 1977, known as the Polysar report, and the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited report in February, 1978, reiterated the Auditor General's findings.

I remind the hon. members on the other side of the House that it was the Privy Council office in 1977 that published the so-called "Blue Book" which dealt with many of the concerns raised in the reports I have just mentioned. The numerous responses to this book from Crown corporations, the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the Auditor General, led to the establishment of an interdepartmental task force in mid-1978.

I know it is not the conventional thing in the deliberations of this House, Mr. Speaker, to refer to public servants, but perhaps I can break with the convention and say that in the time I worked with the public servants who served on the Crown Corporations task force, I was impressed by their dedication to the public interest and their concern in addressing those worries which the Auditor General, the Lambert report and members of Parliament, expressed about the need for proper accountability and control of Crown corporations. I should like publicly to express my appreciation to the members of the Crown corporations task force for the tremendous contribution they made.

The task force, which consisted of officials from the Privy Council office, the Department of Justice, Treasury Board, the office of the Comptroller General, the Department of Finance and a Crown corporation, redefined the policy expressed in the "Blue Book". This happened before the Clark government came to office in May, 1979, but that government saw the importance of this initiative and quickly introduced legislation in Parliament.

It was after these efforts took place that our government decided to act upon the further findings of the Lambert commission. It recommended, among other things, a more direct reporting relationship between Crown corporations, management, and Parliament. Our intent was to act upon the Lambert report and the many others that were filed during the previous government's term of office. Although it would be impossible ever to devise a bill that everyone agreed upon, our government was satisfied that strong opposition would not come from any of the quarters affected by the bill. Moreover, let me re-emphasize that there was no ideological premise to the bill. It was designed to bring control, direction and accountability to Crown corporations of the variety any democratic system ought to be able to insist upon. In brief, Mr. Speaker, there would seem to be no reason why the current government should not want either to support the bill we introduced, or table a new one of similar substance without delay. Yet, Mr. Speaker, the government continued to sit on the legislation.

As 1980 draws to a close, are we to wait for yet another Auditor General's report criticizing the current control and direction of Crown corporations before action is taken by the government? Or is the government prepared to follow the course our government set, and restore public confidence in the abilities of Crown corporations to fulfil the policy goals their mandate dictates? Mr. Speaker, the time to move on legislation is now, while the initiative is still fresh. It would be a tragedy for Parliament and the Canadian people if this bill were allowed to wither, simply because of a lack of will to make hard decisions and bring legislation before the House without delay.

I urge the government to give an indication to the House today that it is prepared to give attention to and address the concerns shared by members of Parliament on all sides of the House, and which were expressed by a number of Crown corporations, by the Auditor General, by the Lambert commission and by members of the public. This matter cannot be delayed. It begs for urgent attention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil): I would like to begin by sharing with members of the House the important past and current role of Crown corporations or public enterprises in the achievement of government objectives. Even before confederation, governments had chosen a public enterprise model to reach a particular goal. In 1841 a Board of Works was created in the United Provinces of Canada to construct a canal system, and a number of harbour boards were also set up as public enterprises before confederation.

In Canada, the development of federal public enterprise is almost completely synonymous with the development of the Crown corporation form of administration.

After confederation in 1867, the federal government continued to use the Crown corporation form for administration of harbour facilities throughout the dominion. All of the individual harbour Crown corporations were eventually subsumed into one—the National Harbours Board.

The year 1919 marked the point at which the federal government made a massive venture into public enterprise and created the company that remains our largest Crown corporation, the Canadian National Railways. The pre-war railway construction boom had ended with only the CPR in sound financial condition and three new transcontinental roads tottering on the edge of bankruptcy. Because of the federal government's large investment in the railways, and to protect the image of Canada's credit in the foreign capital markets, the government took over ownership of the three railways and brought them together under the corporate umbrella of Canadian National.

● (1720)

The CN experiment, as it was called at the time, was embarked upon by the government with serious misgivings and with much public debate. In spite of early doubts, the federal government was to resort with increasing frequency to the Crown corporation form for the provision of essential services. In 1932 the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission, later known as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, was established to regulate and administer a national broadcasting service. In 1937 Trans-Canada Airlines was established by the federal government to provide domestic air services across the country. The government had hoped to establish TCA as a mixed enterprise in partnership with the private sector, but was unable to attract private investors. The corporation was consequently established as a wholly-owned subsidiary of Canadian National.

By 1939, aside from CN, the harbour corporations, TCA and the CBC, Crown corporations had been established to operate sea transportation services, market wheat, administer a central banking system, the Bank of Canada, and extend long-term credit to farmers.

The war years, 1939-45, marked a period of tremendous growth of Crown corporations. In scarcely more than five years, 32 Crown corporations were established to assist in production, procurement, construction and distribution for the war effort. The large majority of these corporations were established by the government under the Canada Companies Act pursuant to an authority vested in the minister of munitions and supplies by an act of Parliament.

Although most of the wartime Crown corporations were wound up with the arrival of peace, the federal government created a number of Crown corporations during the reconstruction period immediately following the war, and by 1950 there were 33 in operation. Now, in 1980, there are 63 Crown corporations in existence, excluding subsidiaries. Added to the pre-war and remaining wartime corporations have been marketing boards, a National Arts Centre, an export insurance and guarantee company, an oil company, and companies in the fields of telecommunications, administration of the St. Lawrence Seaway, coal mining, industrial development, electric power production, heavy water and nuclear reactor production and construction, uranium processing, sale and stockpiling, cultural support, unemployment insurance and science, medical and economic research and advice.

The federal Crown corporation is an adaption of the corporate form familiar to the private sector. Each corporation is created either by an act of Parliament or by a minister or cabinet by letters patent under the Canada Business Corporations Act or its predecessors. The latter is done pursuant to an authority vested in a minister or in cabinet by an act of Parliament.

For each Crown corporation an appropriate minister is designed, either by the legislation incorporating the company or by cabinet. The appropriate minister, in constitutional terms, reports to Parliament on behalf of the Crown corporation. Although there are exceptions, most Crown corporations are headed by boards of directors. In many cases the boards of directors consist, in whole or in part, of public servants. In the cases of those corporations that operate in a competitive market or that are expected to operate on a profit basis, the boards of directors are usually composed entirely—or at least a majority—of individuals from the private sector appointed by cabinet.

In a few cases, such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the legislation incorporating the corporation will state that directors must be appointed from certain regions of the country to obtain a regional balance on a board.

[Translation]

Quite often civil servants are appointed to the board of directors of Crown corporations. Members of Parliament or ministers are never appointed, however. The mechanism of federal Crown corporations is used precisely to make sure that the operations are not constantly the object of partisan interventions, government controls or debates in Parliament. The various governments have therefore always refused to appoint ministers or members of their own legislatures to the board of directors of these corporations lest this principle be violated.

In most cases, executive officers and directors of Crown corporations are appointed for a set term; however, most of their positions can be revoked before the end of their term. In certain cases, as for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the positions of executive officers and directors are more secure and they cannot be removed without just cause. The directors of corporations incorporated by letters patent instead of by an act of Parliament are appointed by the competent minister as trustee shareholders. The directors then elect a chairman of the board and an executive director within the corporation or from outside. Usually they seek advice from the government which in turn suggests the person or persons who could fill the positions. The directors have always gone along with these suggestions. On the other hand, it frequently happens that they have already chosen a candidate which is nearly always accepted by the government. With few exceptions, the government is the sole owner of Crown corporations. When a corporation has shares, the minister in charge holds them in trust in the name of Her Majesty in the right of Canada. The government is not only the owner of the corporations, it is also their banker, although many of them can finance their own operation and pay out of their own revenues part of their capital costs. Most of them, when they need outside financing, can obtain subsidies, loans and advance payments from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. Few are those which obtain financial requirements from private sources, and fewer even are those which do so without the government being called upon to provide security.

[English]

The Financial Administration Act is a landmark statute in the development of the Crown corporation form and in their control, direction and accountability. As stated previously, by 1950 there were in existence some 33 Crown corporations. Probably because of the diverse and often urgent requirements that led to their creation over a total of 30 years by successive governments, there was little in the way of consistency in the federal government's formal ability to control and direct Crown corporations or monitor their performance. The connection between Parliament and Crown corporations was particularly weak.

To rectify this situation, Parliament approved the Financial Administration Act in 1951. The act in its entirety provides a foundation for the financial administration of the Government of Canada. Part VIII applies solely to Crown corporations and provides a foundation for the financial relations between Crown corporations and the government on one hand and the government and Parliament on the other.

● (1730)

The issue of parliamentary scrutiny is addressed by having all Crown corporations' annual reports and annual capital budgets tabled in Parliament regardless of sources or requirements for financing.

The major focus of part VIII of the FAA is to define the ministry's powers with respect to Crown corporations, for the fundamental principle around which part VIII was built was that the ministry would exercise the owner's prerogatives with respect to Crown corporations while Parliament would hold the ministry to account for the exercise of those prerogatives. The information provided to Parliament through capital budgets and annual reports assists members of Parliament in holding the ministry to account. It also assists executives of Crown corporations themselves in accounting for their activities when they appear before parliamentary committees.

Before turning to a description of the powers vested in the government by part VIII, it is important to note that it groups Crown corporations in three classes or schedules attached to the FAA. The first group, schedule B, covers what are known as "departmental corporations" and includes those corporations responsible for "administrative, supervisory or regulatory services of a governmental nature." The second group, schedule C, known as "agency corporations", includes those corporations responsible for the "management of trading or service operations on a quasi-commercial basis" or for the "management of procurement, construction or disposal activities" on behalf of the government. In this group are to be found the remaining corporations established during the Second World War. The final group, schedule D, known as "proprietary corporations", includes those corporations managing "lending or financial institutions or commercial and industrial operations" involving the production of, or dealing in, goods and the supplying of services to the public. This last group now lists the major commercially-oriented Crown corporations, including Canadian National, Eldorado Nuclear Limited, Air Canada and Petro-Canada.

On a continuum of independence, the corporations in schedule B are the least independent. For purposes of financial administration they are treated as departments of government under the more or less continuous direction and control of a minister.

At the other end of the continuum are located the schedule D corporations. Aside from the power to appoint and dismiss directors and the chairmen and chief executive officers of most schedule D corporations, the government's major powers of control and direction are limited by the FAA to the approval of annual capital budgets and appointments of auditors. Prior to tabling in Parliament, capital budgets are submitted by each corporation and approved by cabinet on the recommendation of the appropriate minister, the minister of finance and the president of the Treasury Board.

Located between the schedule B and the schedule D corporations, the schedule C corporations are "agents of Her Majesty". As well as submitting annual capital budgets for approval like the schedule D corporations, schedule C corporations must also submit annual operating budgets for approval by the approprate minister and president of the Treasury Board. The cabinet is responsible for appointing the auditor for each schedule C corporation and can also issue regulations respecting the contractural commitments of any or all schedule C corporations.

In addition, part VIII also provides for prescribing the form of annual budgets, regulating the reserves, banking accounts and treating of surplus moneys and requires the submission of annual and other reports to the minister. Annual reports were to include the audited financial statements of the corporation and the form and content was to be prescribed jointly by the appropriate minister and minister of finance. Finally, the reporting requirements for the auditor of a Crown corporation and the minimum content of the annual financial statements were set out in some detail in part VIII.

I would like to conclude by pointing out that it was the previous Liberal government which initiated a major study of the broad issue of the control, direction and accountability of Crown corporations. As a result, a blue paper was published in 1977 outlining the government's proposals regarding a renewed relationship between the government and Crown corporations. Such an initiative has led to important discussions among all interested parties of the role of Crown corporations and the appropriate degree of government and parliamentary scrutiny, control and direction necessary. I should add that an interdepartmental task force established by the previous Liberal government to advise the government on this important question continues to meet and to refine the options for consideration by this government.

Mr. Louis R. Desmarais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say at the outset to the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) that the control mechanism together with the issue of the accountability of Crown corporations is being examined at present by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts of which I am vice-chairman. Indeed, tomorrow morning three Crown corporations will be appearing before us at eleven o'clock. The committee's purpose is to examine whether or not the provisions of clause 63 of Bill C-27 should be implemented and how it should be done. Specifically, we are studying the advisability of having the auditors of a Crown corporation submit special reports under subclauses 2, 3 and 4 of clause 63. Subclause 2 reads as follows:

If, in the course of making his examination for the annual report under subsection (1), the auditor of a Crown corporation observes anything that he considers to be of significance and of a nature that should be brought to the attention of the board of directors of the corporation, including any case in which he has observed that

(a) money has been expended without due regard to economy or efficiency, or

(b) satisfactory procedures have not been established to measure and report the effectiveness of programs, where such procedures could appropriately and reasonably be implemented, the auditor shall prepare a report, in addition to his annual report, in which he shall call attention to those observations.

Subclause (3) reads:

The auditor of a Crown corporation named in the schedules shall make the examination that in his opinion is necessary to report whether in the period under examination

(a) money has been expended without due regard to economy or efficiency; or

(b) satisfactory procedures have not been established to measure and report the effectiveness of programs, where such procedures could appropriately and reasonably be implemented.

Finally, subclause (4) reads:

A report under subsection (3) shall be made at least once every five years and at such additional times as the governor in council or the board of directors of the Crown corporation require or, in the case of a Crown corporation named in schedule B to the Financial Administration Act or schedule I to this act, as the auditor of the corporation deems necessary.

● (1740)

I have a very keen interest in the subject of this motion, but I would not want to prejudge the examination of this question by the committee which will begin tomorrow morning. Having said that, it might be useful to review briefly what is being done in some of our provincial legislatures on this subject. This follows along the lines that were expounded upon by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Gourd) with respect to federal institutions.

Most of the electric power consumed by Canadians is produced by some form of public enterprise. In many parts of Canada, especially in the prairie provinces, telephone systems are owned and operated by government-owned corporations. All alcohol consumed legally by Canadians is distributed by some form of government enterprise, and, at the municipal level, most of the water consumed is provided through public enterprise, again all under provincial jurisdiction. The first major venture of British Columbia into public enterprise was strikingly similar to the federal government's creation of the railroad.

The Pacific Great Eastern, now known as the British Columbia Railroad Authority, stands as a classic example of public enterprise established to provide essential services. Also British Columbia assumed control over B.C. Electric Company and B.C. Hydro to form yet another major public corporation, the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority. The province has also established the following entities as public corporations: British Columbia Ferry Corporation, the Housing Corporation of British Columbia and the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia. It has enacted legislation concerning the accountability of the four previously mentioned corporations. Other involvement by this province has included the Ocean Falls Corporation, a pulp and paper mill enterprise; Panco Poultry Limited and British Columbia Petroleum Corporation, the sole marketing agent for all natural gas produced in the province.

Prior to the end of the Second World War there were only two Crown corporations in existence in Saskatchewan, one operating the provincial telephone system, the other a small power utility. In the period between 1973 and 1976, ten new Crown corporations were set up. Three of these were major proprietary natural resources corporations—the Saskatchewan Oil and Gas Corporation, the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation and Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan. The remaining seven were generally smaller in scale and most of them had a departmental or agency function. One of the remaining seven Crown corporations is the Saskatchewan Development Fund Corporation which serves as an investment vehicle for Saskatchewan residents, providing minimum risk investment and a source of capital to assist in the retention of the control of the Saskatchewan economy by residents of the province.

Almost from the beginning the government of Saskatchewan maintained a comprehensive system for the accountability and control of Crown corporations. The system consists essentially of four key elements: the practice of cabinet ministers serving as chairmen and directors of the boards of Crown corporations; the government finance office which itself is a holding Crown corporation; a general statute called the Crown Corporations Act and a select standing committee of the legislature on Crown corporations which scrutinizes the activities of corporations.

[Translation]

In Quebec, Mr. Speaker, Crown corporations are limited to those with an industrial, commercial and financial purpose. Before the sixties, the intervention of the Quebec government in the provincial economy had been limited to the creation of the Quebec sugar refinery and Hydro-Québec. These two corporations were created to meet the needs of the day without any expression of a general desire for government intervention in the provincial economy by such corporations. In the early sixties, the government clearly made its intention known to set up industrially, commercially and financially-oriented Crown corporations, the main purpose of which, despite very diversified aims, is to promote economic development and to contribute to the renewal of Quebec's industrial structure.

The establishment of the Société générale de financement, the takeover of private power companies by Hydro-Québec, the establishment of the Société québécoise d'exploitation minière—SOQUEM—and of the Caisse de dépôt et de placement were the first concrete elements of this policy. A few years later, Mr. Speaker, the establishment of Sidbec and of the Société québécoise d'initiatives pétrolières was based on the same problematics.

In the early seventies, always in the same perspective, the Société de récupération, d'exploitation et de développement forestier du Québec—REXFOR—became really a government corporation and the Société des traversiers du Québec, the Société québécoise d'initiatives agro-alimentaires and the Société de développement immobilier were created. More recently, in difficult circumstances, the government established the Régie des installations olympiques which had the mandate to see that the works were completed in time for the Olympic Games; it is presently responsible for the administration and the marketing of the equipment which was used for those games.

Similarly, it must be pointed out that the James Bay Development Corporation, though very similar to the other corporations in many of its functions, does have a broader mandate, in that it is responsible for the development of a huge area of the province.

In Quebec, the control of public enterprises, in its application, resembles that which generally applies to Canadian and British corporations. That is readily understood since the fundamental principle was also adopted according to which the members of the board of directors are the main trustees of the public property whose administration they are responsible for. As a consequence, government interventions can only be justified by reference to elements of general policy: the creation of business and liquidation, determination of its sphere of activity, setting up of its board of directors, the requirement to present an annual operations report to the National Assembly. Those are as many controls which apply to the general administration of Crown corporations and which constitute the basic framework of relations between the government and public corporations in almost every country.

Of course, the financial structure constitutes the very core of that government control, even though it differs necessarily from that which applies in the integrated public service. Loans, usually, tariffs, rates of interest, contributions or fees, sometimes require prior authorization. But, as I have already said, that is the purpose of the study in the public accounts standing committee of the House, which study is scheduled to start tomorrow morning.

[English]

In Ontario, public enterprises exist in such varied areas as housing; energy, including utilities; economic development; transportation; culture and the arts. Recently the Ontario government established the Small Business Development Corporation in order to expand the small business sector and encourage more employment.

In Newfoundland, the Lower Churchill Development Corporation, established with the help of the federal government, identified market opportunities in Quebec, the maritimes and the United States for the proposed 1,600-megawatt Gull Island project in Labrador.

Alberta resorted to the public corporation model in order to provide regional air services by means of Pacific Western Airlines, and Manitoba continues to support industrial development through the Manitoba Development Corporation, the provincial lending agency.

All the previously-mentioned examples well illustrate the diversified use of public enterprises in Canada. They help emphasize the importance of such vehicles in the social, economic and cultural development of this country. Their control and accountability is all the more vital to Canadians and the federal government. Certainly, the federal government should lead the way in developing policies which will clearly indicate how they can best be controlled and how best we can achieve efficiency of operation. To help us get on with the job it would be very useful if the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe would prevail upon his hon. friends to help us clean up the backlog of legislation we face.

● (1750)

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member who gives me the opportunity this afternoon to participate in this debate on the need for greater control over Crown corporations. I was particularly interested in this subject, Mr. Speaker, when we were in the opposition and the government was planning, under its program of privatization of Crown corporations, to sell to the private sector Canadair, a corporation with a brilliant record which is today the pride of all Canadians.

It was proposed to turn this corporation over to the private sector under the privatization program of Crown corporations. Mr. Speaker, I then introduced in the House a private bill, Bill C-237, an act to provide for the accountability to Parliament of Crown agencies, precisely in order to prevent a decision from being taken without all members having been informed, namely of the sale or the sale at a loss of a corporation such as Canadair to the private sector.

I heard the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Desmarais) and the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Gourd) structure somewhat the Crown corporations in the area of their industrial responsibility, at the service and commercial level. I think it is in that context that we must consider the development of our Crown corporations. In my capacity as vice-chairman of a special committee, I would use as an example the Canadian Trade Corporation, which is to inquire into every possibility of developing Canadian trade and manufactured goods on the export markets.

The Liberal government is committed to the development of our export markets, the development of our manufactured goods trade, increasing our share of the global market for manufactured goods. To that end, we are considering every opportunity to find a vehicle for our small and medium-size businesses, our small manufacturers, to take part in that global market open to every nation. And we see how aggressively corporations from every nation are competing for that global market. We have been acting through various bodies, some government, some private and some mixed ones, Crown corporations acting with the private sector. I am thinking, for instance, of what France is doing to develop markets for its mixed corporations, with mixed credit provisions. That country is very aggressive on international markets.

Because the terms of reference we had on June 11 last simply referred to a national trade corporation, we received more than 150 briefs from manufacturers, across Canada and abroad . They told us: Please, do not set up another Crown corporation because you have too much control over them. You do not have enough leeway to take decisions at the right time. It is my feeling that the phrase "Crown corporation" scared the majority of manufacturers who made representations to committee members. When we talk about Crown corporations, as the hon. member for Argenteuil has mentioned, we have the corporations listed in Schedule B, which includes the Agricultural Stabilization Board and the Economic Council of Canada, those which come under schedule C, such as Loto Canada, which was then classified as a Crown corporation in this category, those in schedule D to which the hon. member for Argenteuil referred and which includes Air Canada, the Export Development Corporation, the Federal Business Development Bank and Canadair. These organizations have a private boad of directors made up of directors, industrialists and companies, which can act much more quickly within the activities of these Crown corporations. From the testimonies that we have heard, I believe that the manufacturers are mostly afraid to have more control which would greatly delay the decisions made by the boards of directors of these Crown corporations.

Mr. Speaker, what is important in the terminology or the designation of a Crown corporation—and this is exactly what the two previous speakers have tried to say—is the explanation of the activities and the role of these Crown Corporations. For my part, I would like to recall in this debate that when I introduced Bill C-237, an act to provide for the accountability to Parliament of Crown agencies, my objective was precisely to provide more information to members of Parliament, not only by receiving an annual report from Crown corporations, but also by getting a bit more involved as need be in the planning and implementation programs of the next few years.

There are certain Crown corporations where we might make some improvement in this regard. When the annual report is published, we should as soon as possible refer it to a committee of the Senate or the House, so that the parliamentarians may have more information and play a more direct role in the activities of Crown corporations. I am happy to see that the hon. member for Dollard has stated that the objectives of the present government include a review of the role of these Crown corporations, and I understand that starting tomorrow, the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates will review the role and the evolution of Crown corporations.

I will conclude on this point, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that it is a matter of defining our Crown corporations and of determining their responsibilities. According to my experience, when one mentions a national trading corporation, as I was able to learn last summer, manufacturers, businessmen, industrialists are afraid of this designation, because it is said, maybe due to excess control, maybe because decisions have to be made after consultation with several people. In the trade sector, decisions have to be made in due time, because we are aware of the aggressiveness of our competitors. Far from being opposed to Crown corporations, I suggest—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BANKS AND BANKING LAW REVISION ACT, 1980

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKING INSTITUTIONS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-6, to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and motion No. 39.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the debate was interrupted at five o'clock this afternoon the hon.

member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) had the floor on motion No. 39.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted at five o'clock, I was speaking about foreclosures and the Federal Business Development Bank. Concerned about the fact that the Federal Business Development Bank was affecting the borrowing of many people, I contacted its offices in an attempt to trace down how many loans in my riding it had foreclosed in the last year. I was told that this information was not available to me. It would appear the number is quite serious.

I would like to get back to the amendment introduced by my hon. friend from Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae). It is very important that this amendment be given serious consideration by both sides of the House. I urge all hon. members to take the initiative and support the amendment because it would stimulate the housing industry to such an extent that the small entrepreneur would become involved in housing projects. I can foresee farmers coming forward and making use of the lower interest rates which would result. Small businesses would become more competitive and more involved once again, and there would be more economic development.

Rather than increasing unemployment, taxes and costs in general, the economy would be stimulated and more challenging, particularly in the business sector, the farm sector, the housing sector and the economic development sector. I do not wish to carry on the debate any longer, but I would encourage hon. members to take a serious look at the amendment and then support it.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. The proposed amendment would allow the members of the New Democratic Party to give us a really exhaustive view of the kind of bank act that would meet the requirements of the socialist philosophy. Unfortunately, I must take exception with most members who have spoken for their failure to develop that socialist philosophy, as the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) provided them with a wonderful opportunity to do so.

As concerns our government, it has no intention at all to legislate and to control bank activities. It feels that the Bank Act establishes the framework and limits the operations and the activities of these institutions called banks in the best interests of Canadians. We are not ready to nationalize banks through the back door or in a round about way by saying to the banks: You are going to make mortgage loans to such and such a category of people rather than to another. You are going to make loans at a preferred rate to such and such a type of industry rather than to another. This amendment would nationalize chartered banks in a round about way, which this government is not ready to do.

• (2010)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 39 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House will now proceed to the consideration of Motion No. 40.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 40

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 28 at page 225 the following new section:

"202.2(1) A bank shall inform its customers who may be eligible, of any federal government financial assistance programs offered through the banks.

(2) A bank may not require a borrower to provide collateral in excess of 100 per cent of the value of a loan.

(3) A bank shall provide a borrower who has applied for a loan and been turned down with a clear statement of the reasons why a loan was denied.

(4) Where, on an application to, and in proceedings before, a superior court of a province, a county court or any court of competent jurisdiction in a province, it is determined by the court, that

(a) the credit charge rate in a lending transaction was unwarranted, or

(b) the refusal of a bank to lend to a borrower was unwarranted, the court may reopen the transaction, set aside, either in whole or in part, revise or alter any agreement made or security given in respect of the transaction in the case of the transaction in the case of paragraph (a), require the lender to enter into a loan transaction, in the case of paragraph (b)."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 40 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 41

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 42 at page 225 the following new subsection:

"(1.1) A bank shall cash all cheques issued by the Government of Canada and shall not make a charge regardless if the person holds an account with the bank, provided the person provides proper identification."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 41 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

Motion No. 42

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out line 11 at page 231 and substituting the following therefor:

"banks;

(d) Canadian currency deposits with any bank that was a bank at the coming into force of this act and that, as at the end of the financial year immediately preceding the coming into force of this act, had total assets of three billion dollars or less, if such deposits have an original term of maturity of one year or more and are not encashable, and encashable Canadian currency deposits with such a bank that are not encashable until after one year from the date of issue; and"

and that paragraph (d) be renumbered (e).

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a very short point that I hope will commend itself to members opposite. The minister will recall that when the committee considered clause 208(8) at page 231, it had been agreed that Canadian currency deposits, particularly non-interest bearing demand deposits, should figure in the determination of reserves, but when there had to be some deposit liabilities contained, we had to consider which deposit liabilities of the banks required reserves. The original bill proposed that since deposit certificates with a maturity date of over one year were not really current liabilities, they would not require such deposit liabilities. However, discussion in the committee showed that instead of writing certificates for one year or 365 days, the banks were proposing to write them for 366 days which, of course, immediately took them out of the category of deposit liabilities requiring reserves.

In competition with the trust companies for the very same money which is invested in deposit liabilities, the banks have to maintain reserves. It should be remembered that the bill does not change the requirement for secondary reserves. The banks have been given a fair break on the question of reserves; lower reserves are being required than was the case 12 years ago and what the law calls for today. In so far as these deposit certificates were concerned, it was going to give them an advantage of about three-eighths of 1 per cent over the trust companies in the same field.

In the whole spectrum of financial institutions in Canada, we start out with the chartered banks, then the trust companies, caisses populaires, credit unions and a number of other quasi-banks. The trust companies, whether they are federally or provincially incorporated, constitute an important sector in that whole spectrum. In fact, they are the only ones allowed to carry out fiduciary responsibilities. Because they must invest 75 per cent of their money in mortgages, it is essential that they get the longer-term money, particularly the five-year certificates.

The committee agreed with this proposal which was made both here and in the Senate. However, I am prepared to put forward a moderating amendment, and this is the nature of it. It effects the change we brought about in the committee. It causes some real problems for the newer banks that are just starting up such as the Continental, the Northland and the Bank of British Columbia as well as the Canadian Commercial and Industrial Bank. Not all of these write certificates, but some may. I know that the Continental Bank in particular is rather hard pressed by this requirement upholding reserves. My amendment is very simple. I believe businesses which are starting up should be given a chance. That is what I am doing with this amendment. It states, if at the time of coming into force of this act, a bank and I quote:

—as at the end of the financial year immediately preceding the coming into force of this act, had total assets of $3 billion or less, if such deposits have an original term of maturity of one year or more and are not encashable, and encashable Canadian currency deposits with such a bank that are not encashable until after one year from the date of issue—

This means that the small nascent banks will not be caught by our deposit liability reserves on deposit certificates. The Mercantile Bank would come in at about $5 billion, but it has had a good 12 years in its present form plus some years of prior experience.

I therefore commend this amendment to hon. members. I think the minister has some sympathy for it. It is an enabling amendment to cover new banks which started up in the past four or five years. The Bank of British Columbia is a little older than that, but I understand it has not done much deposit certificate writing. However, this is a field of operations into which it may wish to move. I am not grinding any particular axe, except I wish to alleviate the burden we impose upon the banks with an amendment we made in committee.

• (2020)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Mr. Speaker, in order to justify the position I will take in respect of the amendment before us, motion No. 42 of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I wish to review briefly rather than the change in provision in clause 202(8), to which the hon. member referred and that he wants to "correct" or to soften in a way, but a few provisions of the white paper and of the act as far as reserves are concerned.

First of all, let us consider that aspect, reserves, by comparing them with the situation provided for in section 72 of the present Bank Act. The first kind of reserves that we shall have and which is not provided for under present section 72 of the act is 3 per cent in compulsory reserves on deposits in foreign currencies, but which belong to Canadian citizens. Therefore, this is a new provision, 3 per cent on deposits in foreign currencies belonging to Canadians. This provision did not exist in section 72 of the existing act and it was included in the new legislation. According to section 72(1)(a) of the existing act, 12 per cent of the demand deposit liabilities must be in reserves. The legislation before us, and which will come into force, I hope, within a few hours, reduces the compulsory reserves on demand deposit liabilities from 12 per cent to 10 per cent. It is therefore a 2 per cent reduction of the reserve requirement, a rather considerable amount considering the volume of currency involved.

Notice deposit liabilities amounted to $500 million, and this is extremely important for the kind of institutions which the member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) wants to protect. Section 72 of the existing act specifies 4 per cent, while notice deposit liabilities have now been reduced from 4 per cent to 2 per cent. It is therefore an important relief for those first $500 of notice deposit liabilities which particularly affect those institutions. A 2 per cent reduction is most significant.

Notice deposit liabilities, under section 72 of the act, are for an amount exceeding $500 million. Therefore for the largest institutions section 72 now specifies 4 per cent, but now it will only be 3 per cent. On the first $500 million, a greater reduction from 4 per cent to 2 per cent is granted to the smaller institutions, while over $500 million, the reduction is only from 4 per cent to 3 per cent. As for term deposits of residents in Canadian currency, as provided in clause 208(8), the hon. member indicated that we had brought in an amendment to restore or maintain a certain balance among financial institutions. We know that such reserves stipulated under section 72 of the existing act will no longer exist under the new legislation. We have agreed to reintroduce temporarily this reserve requirement—and I do say temporarily—until the government introduces legislation concerning trust and finance companies as well as savings banks. We will then create a new competitive environment for financial institutions such as trust and finance companies. This new competitive balance, so to speak, with respect to banks will allow us to reinstate the original provision and to remove the reserve requirements we had reintroduced.

However, in view of the reductions in the bank reserves, we have already provided, as I indicated and which are significant, it does not appear that the reinstatement of this provision will endanger the financial outlook of the banks and especially their competitiveness. We are maintaining the status quo in one area while providing many breaks in others where reserves are concerned, and that is why we are opposed to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

[English]

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the amendment before us deals with reserves. Its purpose is to change some of the conditions concerning reserves that we discussed with the minister and his assistant to protect trust institutions by giving them some advantage as the banks are already heavily in the mortgage industry. It came to our attention, however, that some of the smaller banks, particularly the Continental Bank, borrowed a great deal of money on term deposits. As we all know, the Continental Bank has been expanding rapidly and has been dealing with small business in particular. Indeed, in my community of Mississauga, it operates a first-class institution, which gears its entire activity to the small business community.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) would protect banks with less than $3 billion worth of assets. It would give an opportunity for not requiring them to have a secondary reserve.

As the minister has pointed out, when our minds were directed to reserves being required, it was with the idea that if the large banks were given permission to borrow on deposit terms in excess of one year without filing reserves for those deposit terms, they would be able to compete seriously with the trust industry. The minister pointed out that until there was an amendment to the Loan Companies Act giving trust companies certain additional powers in terms of investment, the trust industry would be in serious difficulty concerning its GICs.

This amendment protects the smaller chartered banks in the country. It enables them to be competitive. In effect, the minister is saying that if you are going to be in the business, you have to be in it with the big boys all the way. The amendment protects some very small institutions in relative terms—the Northland Bank, the Continental Bank, the Bank of British Columbia, the Canadian Commercial Bank—and that is all it protects. It is particularly valuable to the Continental Bank, however.

The bank interest rates allowable on one to five-year GICs were published this morning. It appears that in order to raise money, the Continental Bank must pay between .25 per cent and .5 per cent more than the other chartered banks in Canada. In effect, with the reserve requirement, this increases what they must pay for their money by three-eights of 1 per cent. It is a serious penalty to the smaller banks.

One of the purposes of this bill was to improve competition. It may well be that our pressure convinced the government to change this section. We were directing our minds to the large institutions but the small institutions may have been very seriously penalized.

I think it would not do the government any harm to support this amendment since it would encourage the relatively small Canadian-owned banks, at least for the time being. As the minister has stated, this is a short-term problem. In committee, he promised to introduce a new bill in connection with the loan and trust companies. He promised it for this fall, but we have not seen it yet. We are concerned, because we think it should have been introduced long ago. The minister fails to understand the concept of removing the requirement for reserves on these relatively small institutions. A specific provision is required in order to bring this about.

● (2030)

The minister is suggesting that this particular reserve will be removed from all banks under a separate amendment to the Bank Act when the Loan Companies Act is amended. We are waiting for the amendment to the Loan Companies Act, but we suggest that in the meantime the requirement for a second reserve in accordance with the suggestion of my colleague from Edmonton should be reserved in the case of the small banks because these are Canadian-owned banks. What we should do is make sure that they have a little bit of a competitive advantage. I suppose it is very difficult theoretically to say one bank should be treated differently from another, but we do this in many places in this act. We treat the Mercantile Bank, for example, a little differently from other banks. We allow it to have the right to have its shares held a little differently. We are going to treat Citibank, a company which owns a foreign bank in this country as well as a piece of the Mercantile Bank, a little differently. I think we should treat smaller banks a little differently from the way we are prepared to treat the big five, six or seven, as the case may be.

These smaller banks need a bit of an advantage, a bit of assistance to carry on, particularly in the sense that there are three or four trust companies which are larger than these small banks and lending institutions. We should give them the advantage of not having to file this reserve. This would give them an edge on their term deposits of one year to five years which I think is deserved and in the interest of Canada.

I am very disappointed that the minister is not prepared to accept this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Lambert: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 42 (Mr. Lambert) negatived.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 43

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 33 to 37 at page 238 and substituting the following therefor:

"for the financial year;

(f) the policy and guidelines used in credit extension, including

(i) consumer credit standards and legal requirements

(ii) interest rate charges

(iii) loan fees, and

(iv) the title insurance, closing costs, terms and conditions on real estate loans, appraised value of property and collateral;

(g) the policies regarding the purchase of goods and services, including competitive bidding practices;

(h) the policies for selecting sites for branches;

(i) the real estate conflict of interest policy;

(j) policies and procedures for safeguarding confidentially, records, customer information;

(k) advertising practices;

(l) procedure for customer complaints;

(m) contributions to political campaign funds;

(n) names and functions of bank legislative lobbyists;

(o) policies on political contributions and activities involving foreign governments: breaches of those policies;

(p) criteria for selecting recipients of charitable contributions and grants;

(q) charts showing the organization and structure of the bank, its subsidiaries and affiliates, including foreign corporations and the functions and legal relationship between them;

(r) the membership, functions and objectives of board and management committees; and

(s) a statement of types of shares, size of holdings and residences of shareholders."

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, this evening I would like to bring before the House some ideas which I feel are very important before we vote on motion No. 43 because this amendment has a direct relationship to the way banks are now influencing and working within the whole world. It has to do with the whole question of our knowing what banks are doing with respect to the whole world. I feel Canadians should have a very clear understanding and knowledge of what is happening in international banking. I believe, as does my party, that there should be a means by which Canadians can know this.

When we spoke about this bill at another stage, I dealt with the same question—the necessity that Canadians know what Canadian banks are doing with their money in other countries and particularly in countries which we call developing countries. Canadians have a right to know and must know what their savings—their money in the bank—are doing to other people, and this is why I feel that when it comes to disclosure of information we as Canadians have a very clear and distinct right to know what our banks are doing.

In the past few months international finance has undergone dramatic changes. Because of world inflation and the rise in international energy prices many countries in which Canadian funds have been invested have experienced severe crises with regard to financing. International banks fear—and probably rightly so—that many of their investments in foreign countries are becoming fragile and could in the long run prove to be poor investments because the Third World, consisting of the developing countries, is not able at this time and may not even in the future be able to pay the banks on the terms under which investments have been made. Banks are going to be looking for areas operating under what they feel are stable governments. Unfortunately, in many cases stable governments are governments which are the result of military takeovers or whose philosophies are such that the human rights of people who live under them will not be protected. Investments are more or less stable in such circumstances, but the investment of Canadian money by Canadian people is not leading to the true development of people in this situation but, in reality, is oppressing them. I refer particularly to the poor. For this reason I believe Canadian banks should be made to disclose where they have made their investments.

In line with that approach I would like to read into the record of this House the statement the Canadian Task Force on the Churches and Corporate Responsibility made to the government in relation to loans made to such countries as South Africa, Chile and Bolivia where there has been forceful destruction of human rights. In a brief to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs this task force made the following recommendation on January 23, 1979:

In order that the Canadian public be in possession of information which permits it to form valid judgments about the foreign loan policies of Canadian banks and other financial institutions involved in international investment or underwriting and in order that clients and shareholders be given the legitimate choice of raising questions about these policy decisions, the task force submitted the following recommendations for inclusion in the revised Bank Act:

1. that the Bank Act make provision for uniform and equitable public disclosure requirements of loans by Canadian banks, their subsidiaries and affiliates and by other financial institutions made directly or through consortia to foreign government or agencies of foreign governments of amounts totalling more than $1 million;

2. that in the interest of public and shareholder accountability, Canadian banks and other financial institutions be required to disclose the amount and the dates of such loans and publish them as a matter of record;

3. that in order to preserve the principle of client/banker confidentiality and in order to safeguard the principle of competition, financial institutions should not be required to disclose such loans prior to 30 days following signed agreements.

The people who presented this recommendation to the Government of Canada are no mean group. They represent the church people of the main church groups in Canada and speak for a great number of Canadian citizens.

● (2040)

Beyond being responsible for countries which, in many cases, are developing with great difficulty because of lack of funds, I should like to bring to the attention of the House the necessity for these kinds of loans made in international circles becoming public knowledge to Canadians. During the past summer, this government boycotted the Olympic Games in the U.S.S.R. and many young Canadians were deprived of the opportunity to participate in the games. The reason for the boycott was well founded, I suspect, in that it was a spoken testimony against the invasion of Afghanistan by the U.S.S.R. However, at the same time young Canadian athletes were being deprived of their right to compete in the Olympic Games, Canadian banks were making money for the loans they had made in Russia. For instance, the Bank of Montreal made two major loans to the International Investment Bank in Moscow, one for $500 million and one for $600 million. Those loans were in force during the time of the boycott. I do not see why it should be necessary for young Canadian athletes to be deprived of the one and only chance they will probably ever have to compete in international sport at that level and call this our protest against something which is a grave injustice in international order, namely, the invasion of Afghanistan, while at the same time Canadian banks are not deprived of anything and are not called upon to sacrifice anything in the name of a protest against the invasion.

An hon. Member: Utter hypocrisy!

Mr. Ogle: The Royal Bank of Canada also took part in this activity. We were able to discover this because of the Euromoney Syndication Service, not from any disclosure by the bank of what had happened. The participation by the Royal Bank of Canada in loans to the Bank for Foreign Trade of the U.S.S.R. amounted to $400 million U.S. in the first case and $200 million U.S. in the second. These were loans which were in force at the time the Russian Olympic Games were boycotted at the expense of Canadian athletes. When I request that it be made public which Canadian banks are making international loans, I simply ask that justice be done for one and all, that when Canadian athletes are made to suffer, banks should likewise be responsible and, in a sense, be made to suffer. Furthermore, Canadians who have put their investment money into banks will know for sure that their money is not being used internationally to bring about the oppression of the poor wherever they may be.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare Motion No. 43 negatived on division.

Motion No. 43 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House will now consider Motion No. 44.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 44

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 37 at page 238 the following new subsection:

"(3.1) A bank shall include in its annual statement and make available on request

(a) the criteria and procedures for selecting all directors and their other corporate affiliations;

(b) a description of the functions and duties of directors;

(c) the retainers paid to directors;

(d) the total of loans made to directors and any companies to which they are affiliated;

(e) the guidelines covering conflict of interest;

(f) the criteria used to set salary structure, salary grade system and salary ranges;

(g) the special benefits and programs available to employees; and

(h) the number of overseas employees."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed, will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 44 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): We go on now to Motion No. 46.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta) moved:

Motion No. 46

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 45 to 49 at page 265 and lines 1 to 7 at page 266 and substituting the following therefor:

"(4) The Inspector, whenever he has reason to believe that an offence against this act or the Criminal Code of Canada has been or is about to be committed by a bank or by any director, officer or employee of a bank, shall make such examination and inquiry and at the conclusion thereof shall report to the minister and, if an offence is still believed to have been committed, also refer all relevant information and documents to the commercial crime branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for immediate investigation and for the purpose of determining facts the commercial crime branch shall make or cause to be made such examination and inquiry and at the conclusion thereof shall report thereon to the Solicitor General of Canada, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance, with recommendations as to whether charges should be laid."

Mr. Speaker, this is one of the motions that did not have the advantage of being before the committee, but nevertheless I would ask hon. members to consider its contents. It is often said that we must move into the twentieth century and into the 1980s. Indeed, much of the revised Bank Act before us today is designed to modernize the act to bring it into the 1980s. But there is one clause in particular which needs to be strengthened in order to update the act and to deal with the problems which we face in our society today. I think it is safe to say that the Bank Act continues to operate under the same premises as those which existed when it was first introduced, that is that banking institutions are fine, upstanding institutions, pillars of society and all that, that their sense of honour would prevent them from engaging in anything that might be considered fraudulent, and that it is inconceivable that there might be bank managers who would do something wrong.

However, times have changed and the motion before the House tonight attempts to deal with those changes. There is no intention to cast any aspersions on head officers or on the broad banking policies. The object, rather, is to deal with problems of human nature which arise out of changes that have come about as a result of developments in our society. There was a time when the bank manager was a local person who knew everyone in the community and who was known to members of the community. That kind of camaraderie put constraints on the manager to behave in an honourable way with his clients. But with the kind of population growth we have experienced and with the depersonalization of the banking industry, particularly in the large urban centres, it is easy for the head office to be caught in the quandary of having employed people who are not always scrupulous. These people do not necessarily operate within the stated banking policy. The Bank Act does nothing to deal with potentially fraudulent activities being carried on by banking officials in any branch of the bank. I refer, for example, to clause 246 which refers to the Inspector General who will, from time to time, carry out inspections in the bank. The clause reads:

—if the need should arise, for the purposes of satisfying himself that the provisions of this act having reference to the safety of the interests of the depositors, creditors and shareholders of the bank and other provisions of this act are being duly observed and that the bank is in a sound financial condition, and at the conclusion of each examination and inquiry shall report thereon to the minister.

The thrust of that provision and of subsequent ones is to make sure that the banks remain solvent. That is a good motive. I think Canadian banks are probably some of the most solid institutions in the world and we respect them for being so, but that does not stop a clerk or an assistant manager or divisional manager of a bank from carrying on an activity that is fraudulent. For example, a few months ago I brought to the attention of the House the case of a family wishing to expand its business. In order to borrow money from the bank, it needed securities. The family left in deposit some blue chip securities for the bank to hold as collateral for that substantial loan. Time passed and the loan was paid off. After some time, the family went to the bank to collect its securities, but the bank manager asked, "What securities? We do not have any securities." They were nowhere to be found. Then followed a maze or a nightmare for that family trying to locate those securities. I raised the matter in the House by asking the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) about it. It was only after the publicity subsequent to my question that the bank came forward and said, "Oh, yes, we found them. Here they are, you can come and get them any time". I am sure head office was not saying that is what it wanted, but evidently some local officer tried to rip off the family, as he could have done had the matter not come to public attention.

● (2050)

We can no longer assume as we did 100 years ago when banking institutions were formed that all banks by the goodness of their hearts will carry on, in all their departments, division and branches, activities which are completely lawful. Therefore, the citizen who has very few means at his disposal to redress grievances, needs in particular, some kind of help from the government to ensure that a bank will be brought to task if it carries on fraudulent activities.

As I said, I brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance. Later on the member of Parliament in whose constituency these people lived, called me and said, "I think I know that case". He described it for me. Sure enough, he remembered it. I said, "If a private citizen did what this bank did, what would you call it?" He said, "Fraud. It would be fraud". I said, "If it is fraud for the private citizen, why is it not fraud for the bank to do it?" He said, "That is right, but it would be much better to leave it alone, let it go away, because these people will be hurt more if it is pursued than if it is left alone".

That is not good enough, and that is why I submitted the amendment asking that the Inspector General of Banks be empowered to conduct an investigation if, in the course of his examination of a bank, he is led to believe that some fraudulent activity is being carried on by an officer of the bank. He should be empowered to call in the commercial crime section of the RCMP to do an investigation, and if the RCMP finds the evidence, it should recommend that charges be laid against that officer of the bank, thereby protecting the depositor.

Some years ago a number of newspaper articles appeared in the Vancouver press dealing with evidently fraudulent or near fraudulent activities on the part of bank officers. One was called the "Greek connection". In order to redress their grievances, they took part in criminal activities, the destruction of property, to try to "get even" with the bank. The private citizen should not have to reach that point of exasperation. I know members who will say that if a depositor feels he has been fraudulently treated by a bank, he can sue, he can go to court. But, the family I referred to earlier does not have many resources. In fact, a couple of weeks ago a member told me about one of his constituents who laid down a $10,000 bond with the bank. His signature was on it; it had to be redeemed by him. Somebody in the bank allowed another party, albeit a friend, to redeem that bond, so that the actual owner never got hold of it. It was a fraudulent act. Of course the automatic response is—"Take them to court:" But not everyone has the resources to take multinational corporations to court. They do not have the necessary resources to stick with it. Under the present system such cases are usually handled in the civil courts. They are civil actions and, as hon. members know, most civil actions literally take years to be dealt with. The cost may represent a great deal for most private citizens but for a bank perhaps it is not much. Most private citizens cannot afford such litigation, and even if they could, any amount they might recover could be eaten up by legal fees.

I should like to relate my own experience of what happens when a matter is referred to the Minister of Finance. When I brought this particular matter to his attention some months ago, he said he would take note of my representation and get in touch with the inspector general, which he did. Later I heard from the inspector general, and I have a copy of his letter with me. He indicated that if I had evidence, it should be submitted to the RCMP. That is not good enough. It is an endless round of buck passing. One makes a representation to the Minister of Finance; the minister goes to the Inspector General; the Inspector General comes back to the one making the representation who in turn goes back to the Minister of Finance. It is a circular route, and nothing really happens to protect the depositor.

I refer again to the phrase in the act that the job of the inspector general is simply to secure the solvency of banks. It assumes that all activities of bank officers will be upright and honest; sometimes incompetent perhaps, but at least honest. Times have changed, and that assumption cannot be made any more. There are people who will deliberately defraud. In these days of electronic banking, it becomes ever more possible for officers to defraud.

I ask hon. members to consider this amendment closely so that redress can be provided for the private citizen who does not have the wherewithal to engage in lengthy litigation and who can easily be victimized by the large multinationals at the hands of employees who do not necessarily have the greatest scruples in the world. I ask hon. members to consider motion No. 46, so that the inspector general is given the necessary powers to ensure for the citizens of Canada the benefit of proper redress of grievances.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on motion No. 46. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 46 (Mr. Friesen) negatived.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 47

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 27 to 47 at page 266.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on motion No. 47. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 47 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

Motion No. 48

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 48 at page 268 the following new subsection:

"(5) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the inspector shall disclose, on a confidential basis, to any standing or special committee of Parliament charged with examining the business of banking, the Bank Act, or any other statutes of Parliament relating thereto, information

(a) regarding the business or affairs of any bank carrying on business in Canada

(b) received in the course of an international exchange of information such as is referred to in paragraph (2)(b)

(c) furnished to the Inspector pursuant to subsection 303(7)

(d) of a general nature pertaining to the business of banking provided that such information is requested of the Inspector in a formal resolution adopted by such a committee."

and by renumbering the present subsection (5) as subsection (6).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would have thought my proposal would commend itself to all hon. members because it deals with the furnishing of information to standing committees of the House. In the 20 years I have been here, the occasions on which banking matters have gone before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs have been few and far between, even taking into consideration the two revisions to the Bank Act. There was a time many years ago when we would see private bills to incorporate banks. That gave us an opportunity to go into the preliminaries, to find out who was there, what was being done, what was being proposed. But once the bill was passed one had to watch The Canada Gazette very carefully to see the order in council authorizing the issuance of the certificate to commence business. That was the last members heard of it. That was the last they heard about it until they saw the annual reports of such banks. That was the only information they had.

● (2100)

In the past there were one or two banks which, frankly, gave rise to questions as to whether all information had been fully disclosed or not. In fact, in connection with their operations these banks gave pause to the Inspector General of Banks and to the minister of finance of the day. But what I want, particularly, is not to reflect on the Inspector General of Banks. He is bound by his position as a senior bureaucrat. Under this government senior bureaucrats seem to be bound to give as little information as possible, even to their own ministers. Members of this House who are parliamentary secretaries know that they get precious little information either. The administration in many departments is a closed book, and no legislation is coming forward on the basis of freedom of information to open this up. Hon. members know how frustrated they become because they cannot get information, particularly if they are on the government side. It is not that they would profit personally by the information but that such information would make better members of them—it would make them more intelligent in their dealings with legislation and give them greater knowledge in handling other problems. Many times when I have sat on the finance committee I have felt like one who was playing blind man's buff. The information was all on one side and it was not even disclosed to the government members. How can we discharge our obligations to discuss legislation as elected representatives of the people when the government will not trust members of this House with the necessary information? I have had 23 years of almost unbelievable frustration because of this situation. What kind of job was I to do? Was I to be like the proverbial first-time patron at the racetrack, the woman who claims she picks a horse by sticking a pin in the program. That is about the way it is done here.

Miss Bégin: Could a man not have done that?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I will correct myself. But the caricature usually relates to a woman going to the racetrack for the first time. She is outnumbered four times to one. Perhaps men do it, too, but I would not be so touchy. But then, they are usually luckier.

I am sure members on both sides, cabinet ministers of today and yesteryear included, will realize how little one knows about a subject when one is brought to decide upon it. What government members admit, and what cabinet ministers will tell you, is that party discipline is there. They feel that because they are the government the Lord has anointed them for the next four or five years, that they have all knowledge and that they can do no wrong. We know that is not so.

What I am asking of those members who sat through all the committee hearings this summer on the Bank Act and of other members who sat in 1978-79 during the public hearings and who worked on the committee report, those who saw a great number of changes, is that they read my amendment very carefully. Subsection (1) imposes a degree of silence; the Inspector shall not disclose to any other person except the minister, the deputy minister of finance, the governor of the Bank of Canada, a representative of the deputy minister of finance or of the governor of the Bank of Canada, if authorized in writing, or directors of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, any information regarding the business or affairs of a bank or its customers. Similarly, confidentiality is imposed with respect to information:

(b) received in the course of an international exchange of information contemplated by paragraph (2)(b); or

(c) furnished to the Inspector pursuant to subsection 303(7)

These are particular returns which are given to the Inspector General of Banks and I say in my amendment that notwithstanding this the inspector shall disclose on a confidential basis, to any standing or special committee of Parliament. That imposes a responsibility upon the members of any standing or special committee of Parliament charged with the examination of the business of banking—and I use that phrase because I think I know what it means, having tried to put it in the act. This is another reason why hon. members should vote for my amendment later tonight or tomorrow. My amendment says:

—the Bank Act, or any statutes of Parliament relating thereto, information

(a) regarding the business or affairs of any bank carrying on business in Canada

I do not say "of its customers". Notice that.

Over in section 251(1)(a) the information that is to be kept secret is information concerning the business or affairs of a bank I do not think members need to know anything about the affairs of the customers, so it is deliberately left out of my amendment. But a different position is rather if it is regarding the business affairs of any bank or is:

(b) received in the course of an international exchange of information such as is referred to in paragraph (2)(b)

(c) furnished to the Inspector pursuant to subsection 303(7)

(d) of a general nature pertaining to the business of banking

These are position papers within the Department of Finance or which the Inspector General of Banks may have, provided such information is requested of the inspector in a formal resolution adopted by such a committee. This is not merely somebody teeing off and saying, "Oh, I would like to know something about what happened to that particular bank". It is in keeping with the degree of knowledge of which members of a banking committee should be apprised.

● (2110)

Mr. Blenkarn: Absolutely.

Mr. Lambert: I am not being partisan. I am relying upon, shall I say, my experience in this committee. I think it would be a much better committee if in the ten-year period, say three or four years down the road, we could, for instance, seek information regarding the business of leasing automobiles and ask such questions as, "Where was it concentrated? What had been the trend as the result of the amendments we put; what had been the trends with regard to banking operations in data processing?"

Outside the revision to the Bank Act, there is no opportunity to summon the president of the Canadian Bankers' Association. The committees are very limited. One day there may be more congressional power in the committees, and I hope so. I also hope that the committee members will be fewer in numbers so that members may serve on one or two committees and there is not the massive change and platooning to keep up strength because of fear that there might be a vote. Some members join the committee and want to reinvent the wheel, as it were. They want to start from square one again, and that should not be allowed.

Mr. Blenkarn: You are absolutely right.

Mr. Lambert: Once a committee begins work, its membership should remain and when a member comes on, let him pick up the testimony of the past and read. The good Lord gave him the ability to read. To come to committee absolutely green on a subject and, as I say, reinvent the wheel, is not the way in which a committee should be conducted.

In any event, how does one obtain this information when the committee decides, two or three years down the road, that, for instance, it would like some information, about reciprocity? Remember, the Inspector General cannot be summoned on the examination of estimates. How much time can the finance committee spend on the examination of estimates when it is already overloaded? It would be lucky to have 80 minutes with the Inspector General of Banks in any full term, and that is not good enough.

What we require is a careful preparation of the information requested by the committee, and then the committee may debate that information. I hope it is not a case where one side sits there with a hedgehog mentality to protect the government's interests. All members are responsible for the passage and for intelligent consideration of legislation, and I would like to see an improvement in our work. This is what I would call a technical amendment within the act. Such an amendment has nothing to do with the operation of the banking system, but it certainly improves the readiness with which information would be available to members on the banking committee so that more informed decisions could be made.

I suggest that such a proposal should be implemented in many other fields. I hesitate to suggest income tax because we would never get around to studying all the questions, but there are many other fields of legislation, I think, in which this amendment could apply with equal facility. Hopefully, with the freedom of information legislation this will come about in some areas.

I believe I have qualified matters as much as possible in the amendment. The Inspector General is fully protected. The committee will take the responsibility of putting the matter on a confidential basis, and I know what my reaction would be if an hon. member of that committee suddenly became leaky tap. I think the rest of the committee would literally put the boots to that hon. member in their criticism of such bad behaviour. We as members of Parliament have responsibilities, and I do not have to engage in a lecture on that subject, nor would I wish to do so. I honestly and earnestly plead with members of the House to accept what I consider is a very important, non-partisan amendment to the Bank Act which will not affect the technical workings of the act but will affect the limits which affect us in reaching intelligent and informed decisions regarding the banking system of this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the minister rise on a point of order?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to answer briefly. I do not want us to be unable to go through all the amendments before ten o'clock. If I were convinced that the members of the committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, did not have sufficient information when they considered the Bank Act, I wold not hesitate to recommend that such an amendment be accepted. However, I am convinced that all the information needed to evaluate the work we have to do as members of Parliament can be secured in committee, and I relate that to the activity of the committee concerning the Bank Act, and I am convinced that we have all the information which is necessary; consequently I do not see the necessity for that amendment.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on motion No. 48 in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 48 (Mr. Lambert) negatived on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): We pass now to motion No. 49.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 49

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out subsections (2) to (8) of section 302 and sections 303 to 307 inclusive at pages 306 to 318.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion No. 49 will be deferred.

We now move to motion No. 50.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

Motion No. 50

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out line 29 at page 308 and substituting the following therefor:

"ten per cent of the total domestic assets"

● (2120)

He said: For the edification of certain members who felt I was wrong on my last stand and perhaps for the edification of the minister who came in contact with this act only this year, I want to point out that motion No. 50 is designed to restore to the legislation a conclusion which the banking committee reached in March, 1979. It was composed of senior members on the then government side along with others from this side.

The whole question had been very carefully considered with witnesses and public testimony, and had been discussed with the Inspector General of Banks. It was decided that the volume of business to be ultimately allowed for foreign banks within ten years, bearing in mind the degree of inflation that might be around, could go up to 10 per cent of the total domestic assets of Canadian banks. The original white paper had said 8 per cent of the assets contained in schedule Q, quite a different formula. I remember the then member from Montreal, Mr. Jacques Trudel—I see his successor—had been successful in negotiating on the government side and that was for 10 per cent. That was a more appropriate figure. Lo and behold, somebody in the Department of Finance or the Inspector General of Banks put it at 8 per cent. No one has ever told us why. There have been no reasons other than it was a judgment decision.

In putting forward this amendment, I want to question the inability to obtain the information as to why it was done, and to establish that bureaucratic decisions shall not prevail over decisions of House committees. We are charged with determining the policy and the legislation. I find it, frankly, a supine attitude to accept, if we accept it, that the bureaucracy should tell a House committee or this House what policy should be.

I have put down this motion to discuss that point and to emphasize it. I do not like that situation. If hon. members will reflect upon it, I think they will agree with me. This happens all too often, particularly in legisation of this kind. There was public testimony. The committee worked hard and came to a conclusion. As is often the case, there was some negotiation. Then some faceless individual in the background made a change. They told me that the cabinet approved. Even on this side, I can tell you how cabinet approves. The bill slides through and that feature does not get drawn to the attention of the cabinet committee or of the whole cabinet in approving the legislation.

I know what happened at the time the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was minister of finance and a bill was okayed to go through with the figure changed. I do not know who changed it, but it was changed to some figure judged more important by a bureaucrat. That has to stop. If a House committee decides as a matter of policy that there shall be a certain level of activity by foreign banks as compared with Canadian banks, it is not up to any bureaucrat to downgrade that figure.

The minister cannot tell me why it is at 8 per cent. He has not been told. He was not responsible for that, except in the technical sense that he has been charged with bringing the legislation forward in this House and must assume responsibility for it. However, the point I want to make is that he does not know.

When dealing with my previous motion, the minister said he thought we already had sufficient information. The minister should blush a little, because the motion now before us points to a situation in which he knows the committee did not have the information it should have been given. We should have much more information. The previous committee set the figure at ten. The minister in this legislation says it is eight. No reasons have been given for the change.

Long before this minister ever came near the legislation, somebody had written in the figure eight. Why? That is something that we, as legislators, should know. It is a situation over which we have no control. We do not have the control over legislation that we should have in Parliament. That is a regrettable lesson I have learned over many years.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is no longer asking why we do not accept his amendment, but why a suggestion made by a previous committee was not retained by the government. If we consider the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), we see that it would increase the maximum of the collective domestic assets of foreign banks to 10 per cent of the domestic assets of all the banks which are operating in the country. What we are saying is that 8 per cent, which is 2 per cent less, is sufficient for foreign banks.

It is quite obvious that a judgment decision was made on that 2 per cent margin; in this instance it was the government which decided that it would be preferable for Canadians and Canadian financial institutions that the volume of business for foreign banks be limited to 8 per cent of the total domestic assets of Canadian banks.

• (2130)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order please. I said I declared the motion lost, but perhaps I spoke too quickly. I see that several hon. members have risen. I will undo what I have done.

In accordance with Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (for Mr. Stevens) moved:

Motion No. 51

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 48 at page 309 the following:

"(2.1) Where a foreign bank would be deemed to be a corporation associated with another foreign bank under section 303(2) by reason of any class of its shares being owned directly or indirectly by the other foreign bank and

(a) not more than fifty percent of the issued and outstanding shares of such class are owned directly or indirectly by the other foreign bank at the coming into force of this act;

(b) the issued and outstanding shares of any class of the first foreign bank owned directly or indirectly by the other foreign bank were owned by it prior to May 18, 1978; and the other foreign bank shall, for the purposes of this part, be deemed not to own any shares of the first foreign bank."

(c) each of the foreign banks owned one or more subsidiary corporations that carried on business in Canada prior to May 18, 1978;

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see that those hon. members who do not know the first damned thing about this act are the first to call "question". The amendment proposed by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is to protect the operation of Grindley's Bank. It introduces a "grandfather" clause. Grindley's Bank is caught in a bind. It has been operating for close to ten years and it has done some very good business. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there would be any Laser racing boats manufactured in Canada were it not for the financing provided by Grindley's Bank. That is only one item in the chapter, however.

The bank is owned 40-odd per cent by Citibank of New York, or what is known as Citicorp. and 50-odd per cent by Lloyd's Bank of England. That is a bank that is, frankly, caught by the legislation. We were hoping that we could let "grandfather" in.

The minister may have an answer that would satisfy my hon. friend. He had hoped to be here this evening but was detained in Toronto. On the basis of the progress made this afternoon, we anticipated that this legislation would not get through tonight so I put forward this explanation of the amendment. If the minister can give what he understands to be the solution, I shall be very glad. I think it would be Canada's loss if Grindley's Bank were to disappear.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak to the provisions dealing with the authorization for two foreign banks, which are associated, to have one subsidiary each in Canada; we know that under the bill now before us this cannot be done. Still, upon examination of the provisions of section 303, if I remember correctly, under paragraph (4), it is indicated that, notwithstanding paragraph (2) which restricts affiliations very severely, that "where less than 50 per cent of the issued and outstanding voting shares of a corporation that is a foreign bank are owned, directly or indirectly, by a foreign bank, the Minister may"—discretion is clearly indicated here—"by order, deem that corporation and foreign bank, not to be associated for such period ending not later than ten years after the coming into force of this Act as specified in the order and for the purpose only of allowing the corporation and the foreign bank each to have a foreign bank subsidiary and for such other purposes as may be specified in the order."

I have had talks with people who are close to the institutions that could be affected. We discussed the bill in general terms. They are aware that, by demonstrating the will and a plan to change their portfolio in such a way as to meet the requirements of section 303(4) that could be considered as a way out, of the problem created by the act as it now stands. And after discussing and examining this provision, it appeared to me that this type of possible alternative seemed quite acceptable to them.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 51 (Mr. Stevens) negatived.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

Motion No. 53

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 321 the following new paragraph:

"(b) with the approval of the Inspector General of Banks, in relation to a business that, although engaged in financial activities, does not compete with banks incorporated under this act in both lending money and accepting deposit liabilities;"

and by renumbering the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

Mr. Knowles: Question.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Not again.

An hon. Member: Give us a break.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker if the hon. member requires a break, all he has to do is withdraw. It might improve his knowledge of banking!

This amendment would allow the use of the term "merchant banker" upon application to the Inspector General of Banks. There are certain prohibitions about using the word "bank". There are individuals in this country, however, who carry on the business of merchant banking and they would like to be able to advertise themselves as such.

If we are to build a fully mature financial system across the country, we certainly need merchant bankers. London, Frankfurt, New York, Paris—all the financial centres of the world have merchant bankers. I do not know whether it is because we have a boy scout attitude in this country, but for some reason we have excluded merchant bankers—and to the detriment of our economic system. Merchant bankers from other jurisdictions have been encouraged to come to Canada under representative offices. They lend money, and then join the boards of Canadian firms; that is the function of the merchant banker.

I seek the approval of the inspector general for that action, Mr. Speaker. The other conditions do not require the approval of the Inspector General. It seems to me that we could certainly use the title "merchant banker".

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I shall say very briefly that I am certain that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is aware that I am very sympathetic to his amendment. Moreover, he knows why we must restrict the use of the term "bank" in the legislation. He knows that this is at the source of the difficulty that we have in defining the word "bank" and the expression "banking operation". I recognize these difficulties.

If we accepted the amendment, it is very obvious in my opinion that a very great number of financial institutions could fall under the limitation of operations defined by the hon. member for Edmonton West and that the Inspector General of Banks would receive a great number of applications to be designated as a bank. I know that the hon. member for Edmonton West is thinking of a particular case. However, other cases could occur if the amendment were accepted. The hon. member knows quite well that this limitation is related to the very nature of the legislation, as I have said, to the type of definition that we are using and to the control that we want to have over banking institutions. Finally, he also knows that to protect the public it is important that we should restrict use of the term "bank" to the institutions covered by the present legislation.

• (2140)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 53 (Mr. Lambert) negatived.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Skelly) moved:

Motion No. 58

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 62 by adding immediately after line 39 at page 431 the following:

"(1.1) The Minister of Finance shall appoint an individual(s) to be a director of the association."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 58 (Mr. Skelly) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House will now have before it the motions which have been grouped by the order made earlier. Motions Nos. 24 and 26 have been grouped for debate. A negative vote on motion No. 24 will dispose of motion No. 26, and an affirmative vote on motion No. 24 will necessitate the putting of the question on motion No. 26.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

Motion No. 24

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out line 14 at page 177 and substituting the following therefor:

"that are made by the bank, and by any company engaged in mortgage lending in which the bank has an ownership interest, on the security".

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

Motion No. 26

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 29 at page 177 the following new subsections:

"(3) Should more than one bank have ownership interest in any individual company engaged in mortgage lending, the principal amount outstanding of all mortgages of that company shall be apportioned to each bank for the purposes of subsection (2) in direct proportion to each bank's ownership interest in that company.

(4) Should the aggregate principal amount outstanding of mortgage loans made by a bank and any company engaged in mortgage lending in which the bank has an ownership interest exceed the limitations imposed by subsection (2) when this Act comes into force, the bank and any mortgage lending company in which the bank has a controlling interest shall not be allowed to increase the total principal amount outstanding of mortgage loans until the bank is in compliance with the limitations imposed by subsection (2)."

and by renumbering the present subsection (3) as subsection (5).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would just recall to hon. members that we had a full debate on motion No. 25. Actually motions Nos. 24 and 26 are related to motion 25, and there would be no purpose in carrying on the debate. I trust hon. members will not go blithely into a voting stance but will see the reasoning behind motion No. 24.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Lambert: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motions Nos. 24 and 26 (Mr. Lambert) negatived.

Mr. Knowles: That disposes of motion No. 26 too.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As I indicated prior to putting the question, a negative vote on motion No. 24 would dispose of motion No. 26. Accordingly, both motions Nos. 24 and 26 are negatived on division.

Motions Nos. 29, 31 and 32 are grouped for debate, and a vote on motion No. 32 will dispose of motions Nos. 29 and 31.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 29

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out line 28 at page 221 and substituting the following therefor:

"manner prescribed by subsection (6), the".

Bank Act

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 31

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out line 1 at page 222 and substituting the following therefor:

"by subsection (6), the way in which the".

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 32

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 4 to 24 at page 222 and substituting the following therefor:

"(6)(a) A bank shall disclose to depositors the rate of interest and manner of calculation that reflect the annual rate of interest;

(b) for accounts where a depositor may have to give prior notice for the withdrawal of funds, earnings shall be given, on the basis of the rate disclosed, for exactly the number of days an amount has remained on deposit;

(c) where earnings are offered on deposits, a bank shall use a daily balance method of calculating interest earnings, however

(i) the minister may grant temporary exemptions to institutions operating on a manual accounting system where they may face serious problems in adapting to a calculation method based on the daily balance concept, and

(ii) this subsection shall not come into force until the day that is six months after the Banks and Banking Law Revision Act, 1980 is assented to;

(d) a bank shall credit a depositor's account or otherwise pay earnings as follows:

(i) for fixed term deposits, at the end of the term, exceeds one year, the rate disclosed shall reflect annual compounding.

(ii) for variable term deposits crediting shall be made once a year, and

(iii) a depositor shall be credited with earnings whenever an account is closed; and

(e) a bank shall disclose to depositors once each year the terms and conditions under which their deposits are held."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motions will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Accordingly motions Nos. 29, 31 and 32 negatived on division.

Motions Nos. 29, 31 and 32 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Motions Nos. 33, 34 and 35 have been grouped for debate and will be voted on separately. Shall I dispense?

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Lawrence: No, I would like to hear the amendments.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 33

That Bill C-6, an act to review the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 43 at page 222 the following:

"(2.1) Specific charges in connection with a loan or advance that are payable by the borrower shall include where applicable

(a) costs of administration, including any service, transaction or activity charge;

(b) loan fees, finder's fees, brokerage fees and similar charges;

(c) charges for an approval, investigation or credit report;

(d) charges for any guarantee or insurance to protect the bank against the borrower's default or other credit loss;

(e) charges for the insurance of the life or health of the borrower; and

(f) charges for the consolidation and refinancing of the lending transactions."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of some hon. members that I pursue the other amendments referred to in this group and read them?

Some hon. Members: No. Dispense!

Mr. Lawrence: Yes, read them, please. Take your time, too. We are going to be here until at least ten o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that motion No. 34 is more than two columns long. I think common sense would suggest that it could be put into Hansard as if it had been read.

Mr. Lawrence: No. I am sorry. We are not going to vote tonight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is usually unanimous consent to proceed in a certain fashion. That unanimous consent has been denied, and the Chair has no option but to proceed with the reading of the motions.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 34

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 44 to 46 at page 222 and lines 1 to 36 at page 223 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) A bank shall not grant to a person a credit in respect of loans or advances repayable in Canada or make to a person a loan or advance repayable in Canada unless the cost of borrowing as calculated and expressed in accordance with subsection (4), in addition to all other terms of the loan or advance as defined in this act, or otherwise prescribed, has been disclosed by the bank to such person and his or her guarantors in the manner prescribed at or prior to the time when the credit is granted or the loan or advance is made.

(a) Except where a loan or advance is secured by a mortgage on real property, where the total of loans and advance and the cost of borrowing is to be repaid in fixed amounts on fixed dates, the bank shall disclose to the borrower and his or her guarantors:

(i) the net amount of the loan

(ii) the cost of borrowing as an amount in dollars and cents

(iii) the total obligation of the borrower

(iv) the effective annual percentage rate of interest

(v) the dollar amount that the borrower is required to pay periodically on the unpaid balance, and

(vi) the number of frequency of periodic payments.

(b) Where a loan or advance is secured by a mortgage on real property, the bank shall disclose to the borrower;

(i) the net amount of the loan

(ii) the effective annual percentage rate of interest

(iii) the dollar amount that the borrower is required to pay periodically

(iv) the total obligation of the borrower

(v) the term of the mortgage, the number and frequency of periodic payments

(vi) the net amount outstanding at the end of the term of the mortgage.

(c) Where the total of loans and advances and the cost of borrowing is repayable on the demand, the bank shall disclose to the borrower the effective annual percentage rate of interest.

(d) Where an arrangement allows the borrower thereunder to obtain loans or advances of variable amounts periodically, the bank shall disclose to the borrower:

(i) the maximum amount, if any, that may be outstanding under the credit

(ii) the term of each period for which a statement of account is furnished

(iii) the minimum charge, if any, for each period or the minimum annual charge in dollars and cents

(iv) the length of the period, if any, during which the borrower may discharge his obligation without incurring any cost of borrowing

(v) the effective annual percentage rates of interest that apply on the unpaid balance.

(e) Where a lending transaction provides for a variable rate of interest the bank will:

(i) disclose such provision to the borrower in a manner and form prescribed by this act

(ii) insure that the variable rate of interest is directly related to an index that is readily available to the borrower, and

(f) A bank may provide additional information or explanations with any disclosure required by this Act, but none shall be stated, utilized or placed so as to contradict, obscure or detract attention from the information required by this act.

(g) A bank shall disclose to the borrower and his or her guarantors the information required to be disclosed by subsection (3)(b) and (c), (d) and (e).

(i) as part of the proposed contract between the bank and the borrower

(ii) in a statement given to the borrower and his or her guarantors, or

(iii) in a promissory note to be signed by the borrower and his or her guarantor

(h) A bank shall disclose to the borrower and his or her guarantors information required to be disclosed by subsection (3)(a) in a separate statement in the form set out in the regulations.

(i) In order to fulfil the requirements for disclosure of the cost of borrowing in a transaction involving more than one borrower, the bank shall disclose the information required to be disclosed by this act to the borrowers and their guarantors.

(j) Any information required to be disclosed by a bank to a borrower and his or her guarantors pursuant to this act, shall be given in person or sent by mail to the most recent addresses of the borrower and his or her guarantors."

Bank Act

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 35

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 36 at page 223 the following new subsection:

"(3.1)(a) Where a lender:

(i) fails to make full disclosure to a borrower and his or her guarantors regarding the lending transaction between them as and when required by this act, or

(ii) fails to give to a borrower a copy of any agreement evidencing the lending transaction between them, as required under this act;

the effective rate of interest in respect of the lending transaction is the prime rate on the day the transaction is entered into.

(b) Subsection (a) does not apply in respect of a failure to make full disclosure to a borrower and his or her guarantors in respect of a lending transaction where a court finds in proceedings relating to the lending transaction commenced by the lender, that the error, omission or insufficiency in the disclosure to the borrower and his or her guarantors was not of such a nature as to be likely to mislead or deceive."

● (2150)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) corrects me. The order indicates that the motions are to be voted on separately. Accordingly, may the Chair assume that they have now been read and put to hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 33. those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed, will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 33 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on motion No. 34. Those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed, will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 34 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 35. Those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed, will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 35 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Motions Nos. 36 and 37 have been grouped together for debate and the vote on motion 37 will dispose of Motion No. 36.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lawrence: Will you read the motion, Mr. Speaker, please.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 36

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 37 and 38 at page 223 and substituting the following therefor:

"(4)(a) The cost of borrowing shall be calculated on the".

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 37

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 43 at page 223 the following:

"(b) The cost of borrowing shall be calculated on an interest bearing method and on no other basis."

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): With regard to those two motions, Mr. Speaker, rather than speak on them—

[Translation]

I move, supported by the hon. Minister of State for Finance, under the provisions of Standing Order 6(5), that the House sit beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment to consider this bill at the report stage, and perhaps also on third reading.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the motion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) under Standing Order 6(5)(a) that the House sit beyond the normal adjournment hour in order to continue its study of Bill C-6.

Mr. Lawrence: Is that a debatable motion?

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed to the motion please rise.

And more than ten members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): More than ten members having risen, I declare the motion lost.

Motion negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question on motions Nos. 36 and 37?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those in favour of the motions will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed, will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motions negatived on division.

Motions Nos. 36 and 37 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Motions Nos. 45 and 54 have been grouped for debate and a vote on Motion No. 45 will dispose of Motion No. 54.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 45

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 246 the following new subsection:

"(3) A bank shall within 60 days after the end of the calendar year make a return to the minister in the form set out in schedule R with respect to all new loans and with respect to any syndicated or joint loans to foreign governments or their agencies during that calendar year."

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Rae) moved:

Motion No. 54

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 2 by adding immediately after schedule Q the following new schedule R:

Schedule R
(Subsection 223(3))

Return of New Bank Loans made to foreign governments and their agencies for the year ended December 31st, 19 _____

Country A

_____

sub-total _____

Country B

Total new loans made to foreign government and their agencies

_____

sub-total _____

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, supported by the hon. Minister of State responsible for Finance, that we sit beyond the hour of adjournment under the provisions of Standing Order 6(5).

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the motion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to continue to sit beyond the normal hour in accordance with Standing Order 6(5)(a). But that motion has just been put.

Mr. Lawrence: Enough of these games.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Will those opposed to the motion please rise?

And more than ten members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): More than ten members having stood in their place, I declare the motion lost.

Motion negatived.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall I proceed with the motions or shall I see the clock?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, you were about to put the question on motion No. 45. We do not intend to debate it but we intend to ask for a recorded vote. I suggest we be permitted to do that tonight so that members know how many recorded votes there are.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed, will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on proposed motion No. 45. stands deferred.

• (2200)

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The President of the Privy Council on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, in view of the discussions that have been held and in view of the good faith shown by my colleagues opposite, which I presume still exists, I ask for unanimous consent to sit beyond the normal hours tonight in order to complete the report stage of Bill C-6.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: If unanimous consent is required, it is not given.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) referring to Standing Order 6(5) or Standing Order 6(6)?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I have not moved a motion this time, I have simply appealed to the good faith of my colleagues opposite and asked for unanimous consent. I presume that my colleagues agree, except one.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I deny unanimous consent. It is ridiculous for the House to start voting on approximately 12 motions at ten o'clock at night.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I take the comments of the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) as constituting a denial of unanimous consent.

Mr. Lawrence: That is perfectly correct.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—TRANSLATORS' DISPUTE—STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, on November 7 I put a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) which was answered by his parliamentary secretary. It dealt with the alleged refusal of Treasury Board officials to permit the Department of the Secretary of State to predetermine the amounts of the salary deductions which would apply during the slowdown period. Of course I was referring to the strike of the translators. On the preceding Monday, November 3, an agreement was reached on the essential points. As a matter of fact, on the day in question I gave the President of the Treasury Board my understanding of the agreement which the translators were prepared to accept. Essentially it was the agreement which was eventually signed.

However, from that Monday until the following Friday, there was continuing conflict on one point. It was that the translators who had admittedly been on a "go-slow" campaign for some weeks in the summertime were to be penalized. A deduction would be made from their salaries, and they wanted some idea of either the amount to be deducted or the basis upon which the deduction was to be calculated.

The problem we are running into is one we have encountered in many instances in negotiations. It came up again in a release of the Public Service Alliance of Canada dated November 12 protesting the threat of what they term "unwarranted disciplinary action". In this second case it was again the threat of a deduction from salary or non-payment of salary should certain employees who ordinarily provided services in both official languages choose to speak only one language. In the second case, involving the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, the employees are not paid a bilingualism bonus and that is their particular problem. The difficulty, Mr. Speaker, stems from the fact that in both cases there is a classification difficulty and, as we know, classification is not bargainable.

● (2205)

I have brought up the subject many times in the past five years. It was almost five years ago—in fact in February next we will be celebrating the fifth anniversary—that a report was tabled in this House popularly known as the Finkelman committee or, more properly, the Joint House of Commons and Senate Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service. That committee tabled 72 recommendations to improve the bargaining situation and morale in the public service. No action has been taken on any of those 72 recommendations and I suggest we are finding ourselves in difficulty today because no action has been taken. Although we have the excuse of the elections having taken place and changing governments, we cannot get away from the fact that five years later we still have these problems recurring on almost a monthly basis.

I am not going to pronounce on whether classification should be bargainable or not. In fact, that was not one of the recommendations although it was suggested that it be discussed by the parties. In both cases—in the translator's strike and the problem with the second group of the Public Service Alliance of Canada—part of the difficulty stems from separating the normal requests of a bargaining group from this issue of classification which, according to existing legislation, is not bargainable.

Mr. Speaker, the issue still remains. The strike of the translators was settled but I repeat my request to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) and to whichever hon. gentleman is speaking for him tonight: when are we to get some answer from the President of Treasury Board on actions he proposes, either in the way of acceptance or refusal, with regard to the 72 recommendations to improve working conditions and morale in the public service which were tabled in this House in February almost five years ago?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the government commends the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for his initiative this evening in raising this question.

As was announced by the Treasury Board on November 10, 1980, a settlement has been reached with the Canadian Union of Professional and Technical Employees representing the translation group, subject to ratification by the union members. This agreement was reached with the assistance of Mr. Maurice Cantin, Acting Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, following earlier mediation attempts by Mr. Ken Strike.

The agreement incorporated recommendations made by Mr. Strike and, as has been announced, included an understanding concerning actions taken during the strike by the Department of the Secretary of State to dock the pay of employees who were at work but who did not perform their work in accordance with departmental directives or standards. This agreement provides that in certain instances the over-all number of person days for which the department had determined that payment should not be made would be limited to 1,000 and recognizes the principle that pay should be directly related to satisfactory performance of the work. This understanding does not apply to disciplinary actions taken by the department for unlawful actions committed during the strike. In such cases, employees can, of course, resort to the normal grievance procedure. Further consultation on a number of these matters is taking place between the department and the union.

The Treasury Board is nearing the conclusion of a review of employer-employee relations in the public service. The hon. member is very familiar with the various important events which have taken place in the review of employer-employee relations in the public service over the past several years. This review, of course, commenced with Mr. Jacob Finkelman's report which was received in March, 1974. As the hon. member is fully aware, the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service of Canada reported to Parliament in 1976. Earlier, in 1975, as a result of preliminary recommendations of that committee, amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act were enacted, principally providing for a full-time Public Service Staff Relations Board. I should note that while Mr. Finkelman recommended a series of changes in the Public Staff Relations Act, he found that the basic structure of the legislation was sound. In its report, the Special Joint Committee recommended the establishment of a special task force to review the Public Service Employment Act and the role of the Public Service Commission in personnel management and employer-employee relations in the public service.

● (2210)

Together with that recommendation, as the hon. member will recall, the committee recommended that the review include an examination of the role assigned to the Public Service Commission and its relationship with Treasury Board and the Public Service Staff Relations Board. In response to this recommendation, the government in 1977 established the Special Committee on the Review of Personnel Management and the Merit Principle, which produced what is known as the D'Avignon report. The report of his committee was received in September, 1979.

It should also be noted that during this same period, the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability had been established. Its report was published in March, 1979. As the President of the Treasury Board noted in his reply to questions posed by the hon. member before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates on November 3, 1980, Mr. W. A. B. Anderson has the responsibility, under his direction, for co-ordinating the government's response to both the Lambert report and the D'Avignon report.

As the President of the Treasury Board noted at that time, it is his intention to bring forward a complete response to the recommendations of these two reports. As mentioned earlier, the Treasury Board is in the process of completing a review of employer-employee relations in the public service, including the recommendations of the Finkelman report, the report of the special joint committee and certain pertinent recommendations of the D'Avignon report and the Lambert report. It is anticipated that this review will be completed in the not-too-distant future and that it will be followed by the introduction of any necessary amendments to the appropriate legislation.

In conclusion, I note that the President of the Treasury Board, in replying to the hon. member's last question before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, indicated that he "has made some very constructive suggestions in the past" and hoped he would continue to do so in the future.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE AND DISABILITY PENSIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, on November 4, 1980, as reported at page 4400 and 4401 of Hansard, I asked the acting Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lamontagne) the following questions:

The minister must be aware of the fact that recipients of war veterans allowance have been particularly hard hit by the cruel and devastating budget brought down by the Minister of Finance, in contrast to measures proposed by this party which would have protected these veterans. Will the minister recommend to cabinet that the war veterans allowance and disability pensions be increased, in view of the fact that any benefit from the veterans affairs will passed in July has now been wiped out?

My supplementary question was:

I should like to ask the acting minister if the government will incorporate in the Pension Act on a permanent basis a formula to keep the basic rate of disability pension adjusted to increases in the pay scales of the five selected categories of public service workers in order to offset the harmful effects of this harsh budget?

As Conservative spokesman for veterans affairs, I feel it is my duty to get some straight answers out of the government as to how it intends to cushion the devastating effect of this budget on veterans with low and fixed incomes. The Crosbie budget had built in an energy tax credit which would have resulted in a rebate of $200 a year for a family of four, or $80 per individual taxpayer. I have been receiving letters from pensioners and widows. Typical of these letters is the one I received from London, Ontario, dated November 10. It reads:

I read in our paper that the government is going to give $21 million to improve veterans health care. That's nice, but what are they going to do for us poor veterans widows? They gave us a $10 raise recently. It should have been $100 more per month so we could at least be equal to a senior citizen. We are all living far below the government poverty line, so we should at least be brought up to that level. Don't you agree?

I certainly agree. I would also like to point out that OAP recipients who receive the guaranteed income supplement and live at home have now fallen 22 per cent below the poverty line.

Unless there is a substantial increase in the basic rate of disability pensions and a parallel increase in WVA rates, veterans will be falling very far below the poverty line. We were most pleased to see the minister's announcement of the program for aging veterans last week. We have long supported the idea of veterans being able to maintain themselves in their own homes where possible, and we welcome this step. However, this offers assistance to only a very small percentage of veterans. We must work to help the neglected categories. Very few veterans can afford to run a car these days. In some cases, however, a small car provides transportation to and from medical appointments plus limited city driving. With gas up as much as 40 cents a gallon, some of these veterans will have to take their cars off the road. To add insult to injury, some Liberal members are stating in their "Householders" that by the end of this year, gasoline will have gone up 13.3 cents per gallon though we know the figure should be 40 cents a gallon. That is a cruel hoax on every Canadian citizen.

● (2215)

It is estimated that the basic rate of disability pension will fall $500 behind the basic rate for the five selected categories of public servants by 1981. This is just not good enough. The government must act now to tie the basic rate to the five categories. Our veterans should not have to go cap in hand year after year asking for an increase. They should have the same security as the civil servants and the ability to plan ahead for their needs.

In presenting a motion in this House on November 4, my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Taylor) stated the following:

> Whereas more than 10,000 widows of deceased veterans and some 9,000 of their children were promised pension benefits over the next six years under Bill C-40, whereas many of these widows are left below the poverty line and may not survive until 1986 or 1987 and since the care of veterans and their widows and children is a national obligation and not just another piece of social legislation, I move—
>
> That this House request the government to find the money this year to pay these widows and children their proper pension benefits.

I hope the parliamentary secretary will have some good news for us.

Mr. John Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in responding to the hon. member's question, I would state that I have just returned from a visit to France and Belgium where I visited the graves of our fallen comrades. I would like to point out that our benefits in Canada are superior to those in other countries.

I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) for an opportunity to provide the House with information concerning the positive action taken by this government to help Canada's veterans and their families.

In July 1980 a bill which made very significant improvements to veterans legislation received royal assent. Contrary to the implication contained in the hon. member's, question, all war veterans allowance recipients will continue to have their allowances increased quarterly in keeping with any increases in the consumer price index. In addition, the allowances of those under 65 years of age were increased by $10 per month for single recipients and $12 per month for married recipients effective July 1, 1980.

Furthermore, similar increases will be automatically awarded annually until by April 1, 1986, the allowance levels for recipients over and under 65 years of age will be identical. Bill C-40 also provided that all future increases in either OAS or GIS rates will automatically be incorporated in the same amounts in WVA and CWA.

Over the next six and a half years some $150 million will go to veterans because of these measures and because of this government's promise to help those persons who need it most.

Mr. Knowles: If they live.

Mr. Campbell: On January 1, 1981 the basic rate of disability pensions is being increased by 9.7 per cent in accordance with the rise in the consumer price index. This means that the amount payable to an unmarried disability pensioner whose disability is assessed at 100 per cent will be increased to $811 a month or $9,737 a year. Married 100 per cent pensioners with two dependents will receive $1,196 a month or $14,629 per year. All other pensions and allowances will be increased in the same proportion.

The Government of Canada remains committed to helping veterans and their families. We are always looking for ways to improve veterans' legislation to meet changing needs of veterans. To answer my hon. friend's interjection at the moment widows are presently receiving pensions at the 47 per cent to 38 per cent rate, and next April 1 widows of pensioners who were receiving pensions of between 48 per cent and 33 per cent will be eligible for these benefits. Those disabled veterans I was able to see during my visit to those countries are certainly entitled to it. Members of the Legion, two presidents of councils, have agreed that the proposals put forward by the late minister, the Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald, are to their benefit.

● (2220)

Mr. Knowles: Six and a half years is a long time for 75-year-old widows to wait.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned.

May I remind hon. members that the House will sit tomorrow morning between the hours of 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. for the further consideration of Bill C-6?

It being 10.30 p.m. this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning pursuant to special order made on Wednesday, November 5, 1980.

At 10.21 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 18, 1980

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BANKS AND BANKING LAW REVISION ACT, 1980

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKING INSTITUTIONS

The House resumed, from Monday, November 17, consideration of Bill C-6, to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Skelly) moved:

Motion no. 56

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 57 by striking out lines 16 to 21 at page 429 and substituting the following therefor:

"Quebec Savings Banks Act applies;

(d) any other person(s) who is appointed by the Minister of Finance to be a member of the corporation; and

(e) any other person(s) who is entitled under this act to be a member and who, on application to the Association for membership in the Association, establishes that he is entitled to be a member."

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

Madam Speaker: All those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion no. 56 (Mr. Skelly) negatived.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Skelly) moved:

Motion no. 57

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be amended in Clause 57 by striking out line 13 at page 430 and substituting the following therefor:

"referred to in paragraphs (1)(a) to (d), shall".

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

Madam Speaker: All those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion no. 57 (Mr. Skelly) negatived.

Madam Speaker: The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on Bill C-6. Call in the members.

● (1140)

[Translation]

Order. The first question is on motion No. 1 under the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

The House divided on motion No. 1 (Mr. Lambert) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 22)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre	Cardiff	Cossitt
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Crombie
Beatty	Cook	Crosbie (St. John's West)
Blenkarn	Cooper	Crouse
Bosley	Corbett	Dantzer

Messrs.

Darling
Dick
Domm
Epp
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Greenaway
Gurbin
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Korchinski
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald
(Miss)
(Kingston and the Islands)
Malone
Mayer
McCain
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKnight
McMillan
Mitges
Neil
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid
(St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wright
Yurko—69.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Althouse
Appolloni
(Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Bussières
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Corbin
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
Gray
Guilbault
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Irwin
Ittinuar
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Knowles
Kristiansen
Lachance
Lajoie
Lamontagne
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell
(Mrs.)
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Miss)
Nystrom
Ogle
Olivier
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Reid
(Kenora-Rainy River)
Robinson
(Burnaby)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rose
Roy
Schroder
Simmons
Skelly
Stollery
Tardif
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Weatherhead
Whelan
Yanakis—131.

Madam Speaker: I declare motion No. 1 lost.

[English]

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, motion No. 2 could quite as conveniently have been grouped with motion No. 1. They were both on the same subject and therefore it will not be necessary to call a formal vote on motion No. 2. It could go on division.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Motion No. 2 (Mr. Lambert) negatived on division.

The next division is on motion No. 5 standing in the name of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae).

The House divided on motion No. 5 (Mr. Rae) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 23)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Fulton
Hovdebo
Ittinuar
Jewett (Miss)
Knowles
Kristiansen
Miller
Mitchell
(Mrs.)
Murphy
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Robinson
(Burnaby)
Rose
Skelly—21.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Andre
Appolloni
(Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Baker
(Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bosley
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Bussières
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova)
Cardiff
Chénier
Chrétien
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Cossitt
Cousineau
Crombie
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Dantzer
Darling
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dick
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Howie
Hudecki
Irwin
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Korchinski
Lachance
Lajoie
Lambert
Lamontagne
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc

Messrs.

Leduc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lumley
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
Mayer
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Mitges
Munro (Hamilton East)
Neil
Nicholson (Miss)
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Roche
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy
Schellenberger
Schroder
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Stollery
Tardif
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Weatherhead
Wenman
Whelan
Wilson
Wright
Yanakis
Yurko—180.

● (1150)

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, through an oversight, my name was not called. I voted against this motion.

Madam Speaker: It is recorded.

[Translation]

The motion is lost.

The question is now on motion No. 6, under the name of the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

The House divided on motion No. 6 (Mr. Skelly), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 24)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Fulton
Hovdebo
Ittinuar
Jewett (Miss)
Knowles
Kristiansen
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Skelly—21.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bosley
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Bussières
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Cardiff
Chénier
Chrétien
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Cossitt
Cousineau
Crombie
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Dantzer
Darling
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dick
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Howie
Hudecki
Irwin
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Korchinski
Lachance
Lajoie
Lambert
Lamontagne
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lumley
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
Mayer
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Mitges
Munro (Hamilton East)
Neil
Nicholson (Miss)
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Roche
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy
Schellenberger
Schroder
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Stollery
Tardif
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Weatherhead
Wenman
Whelan
Wilson
Wright
Yanakis
Yurko—181.

● (1200)

[English]

Madam Speaker: I therefore declare the motion lost.

The question is on motion No. 10 in the name of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae).

The House divided on motion No. 10 (Mr. Rae) which was negatived on the following division.

Bank Act

(Division No. 25)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Fulton
Hovdebo
Ittinuar
Jewett (Miss)
Knowles
Kristiansen
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Skelly—21.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bosley
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Bussières
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Cardiff
Chénier
Chrétien
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Cossitt
Cousineau
Crombie
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Dantzer
Darling
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dick
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Howie
Hudecki
Irwin
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Korchinski
Lachance
Lajoie
Lambert
Lamontagne
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lumley
MacBain
MacDonaid (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
Mayer
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Mitges
Munro (Hamilton East)
Neil
Nicholson (Miss)
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Roche
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy
Schellenberger
Schroder
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Stollery
Tardif
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Weatherhead
Wenman
Whelan
Wilson
Wright
Yanakis
Yurko—181.

Madam Speaker: I therefore declare the amendment lost.

The question is on motion No. 11 in the name of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae).

The House divided on motion No. 11 (Mr. Rae) which was negatived on the following division.

(Division No. 26)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Fulton
Hovdebo
Ittinuar
Jewett (Miss)
Knowles
Kristiansen
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Skelly—22.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bosley
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Bussières
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Cardiff
Chénier
Chrétien
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Cossitt
Cousineau
Crombie
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Dantzer
Darling
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dick
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Howie
Hudecki
Irwin
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Korchinski
Lachance
Lajoie
Lambert
Lamontagne
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lumley
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
Mayer
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Mitges
Munro (Hamilton East)
Neil
Nicholson (Miss)
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Roche
Rompkey
Rooney

Messrs.

Roy
Schellenberger
Schroder
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Stollery
Tardif
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Weatherhead
Wenman
Whelan
Wilson
Wright
Yanakis
Yurko—181.

● (1210)

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The next question is on motion No. 13, under the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). A vote on this motion will also dispose of motions Nos. 19, 20 and 21, also under the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West.

The House divided on motions Nos. 13, 19, 20 and 21 (Mr. Lambert), which were negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 27)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker
(Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Cardiff
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Cossitt
Crombie
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Dick
Domm
Epp
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Greenaway
Gurbin
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Korchinski
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald
(Miss)
Malone
Mayer
McCain
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKnight
McMillan
Mitges
Neil
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid
(St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wright
Yurko—69.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Althouse
Appolloni
(Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Bussières
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Corbin
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
Gray
Guilbault
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Irwin
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Knowles
Kristiansen
Lachance
Lajoie
Lamontagne
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Manly
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell
(Mrs.)
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Miss)
Nystrom
Ogle
Olivier
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Reid
(Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson
(Burnaby)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Schroder
Simmons
Skelly
Stollery
Tardif
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Weatherhead
Whelan
Yanakis—134.

● (1220)

Madam Speaker: I declare motions Nos. 13, 19, 20 and 21 lost.

The next question is on motion No. 14 in the name of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae).

The House divided on motion No. 14 (Mr. Rae), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 28)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Fulton
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Knowles
Kristiansen
Manly
Miller
Mitchell
(Mrs.)
Murphy
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Robinson
(Burnaby)
Rose
Skelly—21.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Andre
Appolloni
(Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Baker
(Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bosley
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Bussières
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova)
Cardiff
Chénier
Chrétien
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Cossitt
Cousineau
Crombie
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Dantzer
Darling
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais

Messrs.

Dick
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Howie
Hudecki
Irwin
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Korchinski
Lachance
Lajoie
Lambert
Lamontagne
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lumley
MacBain
MacDonald
(Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
Mayer
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Mitges
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Neil
Nicholson
(Miss)
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid
(St. Catharines)
Reid
(Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Roche
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Schellenberger
Schroder
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Stollery
Tardif
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Weatherhead
Wenman
Whelan
Wilson
Wright
Yanakis
Yurko—181.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

The question therefore is on motion No. 25.

The House divided on motion No. 25 (Mr. Lambert) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 29)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker
(Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Cardiff
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Cossitt
Crombie
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Dick
Domm
Epp
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Greenaway
Gurbin
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Korchinski
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald
(Miss)
Malone
Mayer
McCain
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKnight
McMillan
Mitges
Neil
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid
(St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wright
Yurko—69.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Althouse
Appolloni
(Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Bussières
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Corbin
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
Gray
Guilbault
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Irwin
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Knowles
Kristiansen
Lachance
Lajoie
Lamontagne
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Manly
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell
(Mrs.)
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Miss)
Nystrom
Ogle
Olivier
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Reid
(Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson
(Burnaby)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Schroder
Simmons
Skelly
Stollery
Tardif
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Weatherhead
Whelan
Yanakis—133.

● (1230)

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The next question is on motion No. 45 in the name of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae). A vote on this motion also disposes of motion No. 54 in the name of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae).

The House divided on motion No. 45 (Mr. Rae) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 30)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Fulton
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Knowles
Kristiansen
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Skelly—21.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bosley
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Bussières
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Cardiff
Chénier
Chrétien
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Cossitt
Cousineau
Crombie
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Dantzer
Darling
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dick
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Howie
Hudecki
Irwin
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Korchinski
Lachance
Lajoie
Lambert
Lamontagne
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lumley
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
Mayer
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKnight
McLean
McMillan
McRae
Mitges
Munro (Hamilton East)
Neil
Nicholson (Miss)
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Roche
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Schellenberger
Schroder
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Stollery
Tardif
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Weatherhead
Wenman
Whelan
Wilson
Wright
Yanakis
Yurko—182.

Bank Act

• (1240)

Madam Speaker: Therefore I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 54 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

Madam Speaker: The question is now on motion No. 49.

The House divided on motion No. 49 (Mr. Rae) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 31)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Fulton
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Knowles
Kristiansen
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Skelly—21.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bosley
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Bussières
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Cardiff
Chénier
Chrétien
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Cossitt
Cousineau
Crombie
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Dantzer
Darling
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dick
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Howie
Hudecki
Irwin
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Korchinski
Lachance
Lajoie
Lambert
Lamontagne
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lumley
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
Mayer
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKnight
McLean
McMillan
McRae
Mitges
Munro (Hamilton East)
Neil
Nicholson (Miss)
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan

Messrs.

Reid (St. Catharines)
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Roche
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Schellenberger
Schroder
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Stollery
Tardif
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Weatherhead
Wenman
Whelan
Wilson
Wright
Yanakis
Yurko—181.

Madam Speaker: Therefore I declare the motion lost.

The question is now on motion No. 50.

The House divided on motion No. 50 (Mr. Lambert) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 32)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Cardiff
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Cossitt
Crombie
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Dick
Domm
Epp
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Greenaway
Gurbin
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Korchinski
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
Malone
Mayer
McCain
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKnight
McLean
McMillan
Mitges
Neil
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wright
Yurko—70.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Althouse
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Bussières
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Corbin
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd
Gray
Guilbault
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Irwin
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Knowles
Kristiansen
Lachance
Lajoie
Lamontagne
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Manly
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murphy
Nicholson (Miss)
Nystrom
Ogle
Olivier
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Schroder
Simmons
Skelly
Stollery
Tardif
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Weatherhead
Whelan
Yanakis—134.

● (1250)

Madam Speaker: Therefore I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-6, to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs be concurred in.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

[English]

Mr. Lambert: May I call it one o'clock, Madam Speaker?

Madam Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 12.57 p.m. the House took recess.

● (1400)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CLOSURE OF EXPRESS OFFICE IN CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Canadian National intends to close its express office in Charlottetown, leaving Prince Edward Island totally without locally supplied express service and some 37 islanders will be thrown out of work. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko):

That this House condemn the government for allowing CN to take this callous action and, in particular, to juggle its administrative arrangements to justify the closure on the basis of misleading profit and loss statements.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

DIVERSION OF FUNDS TO UPGRADE PROGRAMS AT VETERINARY COLLEGES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the establishment of the fourth veterinary college in Canada, slated to be located in one of the maritime provinces, has now been in limbo for several years because of indecision in the maritimes as to its exact location, and in view of the fact that the veterinary profession as a whole has questioned the necessity of another veterinary college for Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That the funds originally slated by the Department of Agriculture to subsidize such a program be now diverted to the existing veterinary colleges to assist them in their continuing program and in upgrading their programs and facilities.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1405)

SMALL BUSINESS

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the recent budget proposed nothing meaningful to assist the ailing small business sector except to extend the small business development program by 90 days, a program not as yet even introduced, and because this government's actions do in fact contribute to the ever-increasing inflation rate, not to mention high interest rates, causing an unprecedented number of bankruptcies within the small business sector, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the Minister of Finance be instructed to introduce forthwith legislation respecting the small business development bond program, and at the same time provide for the extension of that program to at least the end of 1981 in order to make it meaningful.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION OF ACTIVITIES OF NOVA SCOTIA MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Minister of Finance be instructed to make a statement on motions with respect to financial transactions between Mr. Roland Thornhill, minister of economic development for Nova Scotia, and a number of chartered banks in Nova Scotia and the retirement, resignation and transfer of a number of senior officers of those banks since those transactions occurred, and report to the House whether these transactions involved a breach of the Bank Act, the Criminal Code or financial ethics;

I further move that the Solicitor General consult with the attorney general of Nova Scotia with respect to the RCMP investigation which has been carried out and report to this House following these consultations.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

NATIONAL AERONAUTICAL COLLECTION

CALL FOR RELOCATION TO MODERN PREMISES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Aviation has played an important role in the development of this motion, both in time of war and in peace. Housed in substandard World War II wooden hangars—fire traps, if you will—in a little travelled section of this city instead of being in a highly advertised and well-marked area as a major tourist attraction to our beautiful capital city, at nearby Rockcliffe is the National Aeronautical Collection, a priceless collection of vintage flying craft. It is one of the finest collections of its type in the world. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That the government give immediate consideration to relocating this priceless collection to modern, fireproof premises, more centrally located so that many more thousands of Canadians and foreign visitors might enjoy an important link in their heritage.

Madam Speaker: For presentation this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

INDUSTRY

LOCATION OF PROPOSED DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT PLANT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, in so far as the unemployment rate in Peterborough county and district has risen by an unconscionable 33 per cent between October 1979, and October, 1980, according to the local employment and immigration office, compared to the national average increase of only 1 per cent during the same period, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce consider this as a crucial and deciding factor in his forthcoming announcement of the location of the new de Havilland Dash-8 plant for which Windsor, Downsview, Hamilton and Peterborough are reported to be leading contenders, especially in view of the fact that his decision on this matter has been particularly tardy at a time when job creation should be a top priority.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CALL FOR REBATE TO ONTARIO OF RENTAL CHARGES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The GO transit system in greater Toronto, through the province of Ontario, has taken over the railways' responsibility to supply passenger service to commuters. This assumption of rail responsibility should be looked on with favour by the Government of Canada. Instead, Canadian National Railways is gouging the province of Ontario for supply and service and making windfall profits by taking market rent for the use of its rights of way. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That the government do direct the CNR to rebate to the province of Ontario at least $2 million per annum that the CNR improperly charges GO transit for the use of CNR rights of way used for GO service, so that this valuable commuter service can be expanded.

Madam Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

SYDNEY STEEL COMPANY—CALL FOR REFERENCE OF BUSINESS PLAN TO STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, since the business plan to modernize the Sydney Steel Corporation was submitted to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) almost one month ago, since this business plan recommended an immediate expenditure of $67.5 million in order to get the existing operations of Sysco into a functional state, and since we recognize that members of the House of Commons must have input into this plan before it goes forward and that it must be done fairly quickly, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House refer the matter of the Sysco business plan to the Standing Committee on Regional Development and instruct the committee to report back to the House by December 31, 1980.

That is a few weeks longer than was allowed for the constitutional debate.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SPORTS

1983 WORLD UNIVERSITY GAMES, EDMONTON—CALL FOR FEDERAL SUPPORT AND CONGRATULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Canada has successfully been the host country for the Summer Olympics in Montreal and the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton. Last week the city of Edmonton, jointly with the University of Alberta, at a presentation in Madrid, succeeded in convincing the International University Sports Federation to hold the 1983 World University Games in Edmonton. These games, which will be called "Universiade Edmonton 83", will no doubt have the support of all Canadians as an international expression of competitive good will.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That this House go on record as supporting these games and furthermore offer its congratulations to both the city of Edmonton and the University of Alberta and all those directly responsible for their successful efforts in sponsoring the "Universiade Edmonton 83" games.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: For presentation the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Does the House agree to the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I am happy to say a word in support of this motion. I congratulate the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) on bringing forward such a worth-while motion. It brings to the attention of the House the success of the great city of Edmonton in winning the site for these games. The World University Games has become more and more prominent and over the years has become quite a large event. Today they are second in importance only to the Olympics. The fact that Edmonton will be sponsoring the games is every reason why Canadians should be particularly supportive of this very great athletic event.

May I also say at this time that it is significant that Calgary, in another portion of the province of Alberta, is seeking to host the 1988 Winter Olympic Games. This would also be a very important event for Canada. Therefore, the members of this House not only want to express their support for the hosting of the World University Games in Edmonton in 1983, but will want to express the hope that the bid by Calgary for the 1988 Winter Olympics will be successful.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It being 2.15 p.m. I must interrupt the hon. minister.

• (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX AND INFLATION RATE FORECASTS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In his budget of October 28, just 21 days ago, he forecast an average rate of inflation for Canada this year of 9.7 per cent and next year of 10.2 per cent. The figures brought down last week from Statistics Canada show that the year-over-year inflation rate is 10.9 per cent and that there was a 0.9 per cent increase in the CPI in the month from September to October. This is a very important matter. For the budget forecast to be accurate, the cost of living figures would have to fall six-tenths of 1 per cent in the next two months. Does the minister expect the CPI to fall at least that much in the next two months, and if he does not, what means does he propose to take to stay within the forecast inflation rate increase that he gave in his budget just 21 days ago?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thought I cautioned the hon. gentleman and members of the House yesterday about the dangers of forecasting and expecting every forecast to be verified and supported. Developing events often change these forecasts, and by the end of the year it may be that the forecast for 1980 will prove to be on the optimistic side. However, quite apart from whether it is up or down a bit, the main point I made in the budget was that inflation is the number one problem facing Canada, and whether or not there may be variations along the line does not change that fundamental underlying fact that we in the country all face.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, it is difficult to get the minister to treat his own projections seriously. This was a projection made 21 days ago for this year's inflation rate, and it is obvious that it is going to be out considerably. I remind the minister that his associate, the Minister of State for Finance, said on Friday that the government was determined to fight inflation. That is not shown in the budget, of course.

The Minister of State for Finance also said that the government will take the means necessary to stay within the forecast inflation rate increase. What means was the minister's associate minister referring to that he is going to take to stay within the forecast inflation rate increase? I also remind the minister, just to keep him a teensy bit on the honest side, that his own finance department officials have admitted that their inflation forecasts may be too low. They may be out by half a percentage point, says a senior official. If the minister is not prepared to admit it, his officials are. What means is he going to take to keep the inflation rate down within his forecast range for this year and next year?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the hon. member has talked about the inflation forecast being made three weeks ago. If he does not know, he ought to know that these forecasts are made quite a long time before a budget is presented; it is totally impossible to present a forecast on the date of the budget. If that were to be the case, one would be constantly putting the budget forward by three months in order to get it updated. So the hon. member is not going to get away with that nonsense today or any other day in the House of Commons.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the minister is like Muhammed Ali when he had his legs. Muhammed Ali does not have his legs any longer; nor does the minister. If the minister does not want to admit to 21 days, let us add four weeks, which means they were done six weeks ago. The forecast for this year was done six weeks ago, and the forecast for next year. Forecasters in the private sector are doing this every month with a great deal more accuracy than the minister's officials and the minister.

If the number one battle is going to be against inflation, what additional steps is the minister going to take now? His own budget has been a disastrous flop. It does not fight inflation. The deficit is burgeoning up. The budget is a monumental flop.

Mr. Chénier: What was yours?

Mr. Crosbie: In four years' time we will look back and see what a flop it was. What steps is the minister going to take to keep within his forecast and to reassure the people of this country who are suffering from these increases in prices that he is going to attempt to make a serious effort to stop the rise in inflation?

• (1420)

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, if the hon. member really believed that the budget was such a flop, he would not be showing the high state of frustration and indignation that he has been showing over the past two weeks. I think that if he believed that, he would be much more relaxed than he has been in the last little while. But let me tell the hon. member that it would be of help to me in restraining inflation if he could convince his colleagues in the House of Commons not to be making proposals every day which, if accepted by the House, would considerably add to inflation. Today there were two proposals made under Standing Order 43, which, if they were accepted by the House, would have added to total expenditures and to the deficit and make their own contribution to inflation. So I would ask him, as a beginning, to get his own act together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

ACTION TO HALT FALL IN VALUE OF DOLLAR

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance, and if he feels that it is dangerous to forecast, perhaps he will live with the reality of his nine months in office since February 18, the date of the election. During that period the Canadian dollar has fallen almost 3 cents in relation to the U.S. dollar. As the minister must know, this is partly due to the high inflation levels that are being recorded in Canada. Would he indicate to the House whether he is concerned with the vicious circle which is taking place, where you have high inflation, a falling dollar as a result of that, and the falling dollar, in turn, creating more inflation in the country. If the minister is concerned, what does he intend to do about correcting the deterioration in the value of our dollar?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): The hon. member knows that the value of the Canadian dollar has fluctuated considerably in the past several months. He will have recognized that within the last short period, the pressure on the Canadian dollar has arisen, to some extent, from the differential in interest rates, both short-term prime rates and interest rates, between Canada and the United States. If he has not observed the fact, I would advise him that for a considerable period of time interest rates in Canada have been appreciably lower than they have been in the United States. The hon. member is asking me to jack up interest rates in Canada; otherwise he would be aware of the pressure that that puts upon the Canadian currency.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I think that what we are asking the minister is obvious, that is, to do something about inflation in this country. It is inflation that is triggering the high interest rates. Would the minister tell the House whether he has any concern for those who must carry mortgages on their property, bearing in mind the fact that when he took power the mortgage rate in this country for residential accommodation was 13 per cent and it is now over 15 per cent?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stevens: As you know, Madam Speaker, that 2 per cent increase in interest rates means, for a home owner having a $40,000 mortgage, monthly payments $57 a month higher under this Minister of Finance than they were last February. Is he at least concerned about that and, if so, can he tell the House what he will do about it?

Mr. MacEachen: The first point I would like to make in reply to the hon. member's statement that the principal cause of these interest rates was inflation is that in this particular case the inflation happens to have started in the United States. It has not been the Bank of Canada or the Canadian monetary policy that has sparked increasing interest rates in the United States. It is not the Bank of Canada that has increased the federal discount rate in the United States. These two factors outside of Canada obviously have an effect on Canada because of the international character of capital markets. So if the hon. member wants to live as part of the world community, he should understand that there are certain realities which flow from that membership in the world economy. I draw to his attention that simple fact, which he obviously failed to learn even during his short period in office.

* * *

● (1425)

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROTECTION OF ENVIRONMENT FROM ACID RAIN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Science and Technology and the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday his department released a report which revealed alarming levels of pollution occuring in Canada, much of it coming from cross-border pollutants. For example, some 80 per cent of acid rain comes from the United States, resulting in the following: in Ontario some 4,000 lakes have been destroyed; the salmon industry in Nova Scotia has been destroyed; farmland in western Canada is now being increasingly polluted.

Considering the United States just recently elected a new president who has made it clear that he is indifferent to pollution, what precisely does the Government of Canada have in mind to protect our environment?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the situation described in the report is extremely serious. Perhaps the word "destroyed" which the hon. gentleman used is not appropriate, but certainly lakes have been very markedly affected. We are continuing our efforts in relation to the United States. As I think the hon. gentleman knows, we have signed a memorandum of intent with the United States government. Discussions are already well under way for the establishment of a treaty of accord with the United States. We will continue with those efforts. I do not think it is wise at this time to prejudge the response of the new American administration when it takes office on January 20. We intend to proceed as actively and quickly as we can in reaching an agreement with the United States.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, with specific reference to the 18-month deadline to which the minister referred, considering that the president-elect indicated that he will review their legislation from the point of view of taking away whatever tough controls exist in controlling pollution and that the new Republican chairman of the United States Senate energy committee is widely known in the United States for being completely indifferent to pollution, could the minister give us any reason at all for believing that the 18-month optimism he just expressed has any hope of being realized?

Mr. Roberts: Yes, Madam Speaker. The optimism is based on the facts of the situation. The acid rain problem is an extremely serious one, not only for Canada but for the United States. The United States government's own figures estimate that the cost to the United States, simply in terms of the erosion of buildings, is between $2 billion and $4 billion a year. When the new administration sees the facts of the situation and receives the results of the kind of research published yesterday, I think it will be led to the conclusion that our two countries together should proceed actively to deal with this problem.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, since the report indicated that a further 45,000 lakes are about to be destroyed and that in terms of freshwater fish none between Ontario and Newfoundland will remain in existence, is the minister telling the House that we will just sit back and optimistically hope that a new government, which has been elected in part on indifference to a pollution program, will provide answers for our alarming levels of pollution, or will he give us a commitment that he will come back to the House, at least before Christmas, with an alternative program to deal with this truly calamitous situation?

Mr. Roberts: Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman implies that nothing has been done; that is far from the case. As the House knows, we have very greatly increased the funds which we are placing at the disposal of research into acid rain and other acid precipitation problems. We have signed the memorandum of intent. Those discussions are continuing with the United States. We are expanding our research and impressing upon provincial governments the more rigorous exercise of limitation orders. That has already happened in relation to Inco. We are assessing the Falconbridge situation, and we are looking at Ontario Hydro plants. A considerable amount of activity has been undertaken in relation to our own efforts in Canada which contribute markedly to the acid rain problem.

Mr. Broadbent: Eighty per cent comes from the United States.

Mr. Roberts: The hon. gentleman is incorrect in saying 80 per cent; it is 50 per cent. Also he is incorrect in saying that 45,000 lakes are about to turn dead. I do not want to nit-pick on those errors because the conclusions of the report indeed are very serious, but we are acting within our own jurisdiction to the fullest extent and exploring every possible avenue to press the United States to co-operate with us in this very important venture.

* * *

● (1430)

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CLOSURE OF CERTAIN CN EXPRESS TERMINALS IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the announced intention of CN Express to terminate jobs which are badly needed and to close ten out of its 15 terminals in Atlantic Canada, which leaves Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland without any terminals, New Brunswick with three terminals and Nova Scotia with two, what measures will the minister take to continue this service, which is intended to compensate for rail line abandonment in the maritimes in the 1960s? Surely it is time this government stopped picking on the Atlantic provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, one must understand why this has taken place. CN Express are losing money. They lost $14 million in 1970 and they will lose $57 million this year. The main reason for this is that CN Express cannot compete adequately against firms which are more specialized and more selective in their operations.

What is taking place now is that they are cutting a number of points of delivery. They are also pre-retiring, relocating and retaining their employees, which must be underlined. This is done in co-operation and agreement with the union. What is happening is regrettable but one must say that it is being done in a very humanitarian and a very sophisticated way. Obviously this will affect the maritimes because 250 out of the 1,000 people affected come from there. I emphasize that substantial efforts are being made to accommodate the situation and to help the employees. I understand that up to 90 per cent of them will be relocated, retired or retrained and that they will have first call on all jobs available from all divisions of CN.

Mr. Howie: Madam Speaker, first we lose the trains and now we lose the express. Has the minister been in contact with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs concerning the devastating effect this reduction in competition will have on rates charged for alternate modes of transportation and the extensive harm this will cause consumers as a result?

Further, has the minister had any consultation with his counterparts in the Atlantic provinces or the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion about remedial measures and, if so, what solutions will he adopt? If not, why not?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, many members of the cabinet were involved in the information process. If there is one thing that is not being compromised, it is competition. In the very city of Amherst, Nova Scotia, to name one example, CN Express estimated that they had to compete with 14 other companies which were engaged in the same business. So one thing which will not suffer is competition. As a matter of fact, CN Express was competing with the Post Office Department and also other government interests.

REMOVAL OF FACILITIES FROM NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I also wish to address my question to the Minister of Transport. On Friday, January 25, 1980, Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau, speaking in Halifax, said among other things:

> We will use revenues raised through energy taxation to make big projects happen—namely, railway building, pipeline construction, a western electrical grid and coal liquefaction are only a few of the projects that the energy boom could produce.

This statement was endorsed by all Liberal candidates. Therefore, I wish to ask the Minister of Transport if he could explain further the reasons why this government on November 5 authorized the CNR to remove 11 agency positions in Nova Scotia, seven of which are in my riding at Chester, Malone Bay, Lunenburg, Liverpool, Lockeport, Shelburne and Barrington Passage, plus eight CNR buildings, seven of which are in my riding at Chester, Malone Bay, Lunenburg, Liverpool, Lockeport, Shelburne and Barrington Passage. Would the minister indicate how this government's actions can be construed as railway building since its policies, which are destroying CNR services, are really not in line with the promises made to the people of Nova Scotia by the Prime Minister when he was campaigning for votes?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Finance just said in another context, it is difficult to isolate any body from what is happening, from the changes that are taking place in society. I do not know if the hon. member is referring to CN Express, CN Marine or CN; I have no way of knowing that from the question he raised.

Mr. Crouse: CN Express.

Mr. Pepin: If he is referring to CN Express, then I delivered the answer a moment ago by indicating that CN Express is doing its utmost in this particular instance to retrain, relocate or pre-retire the employees affected by these changes. My information is that between 80 per cent and 90 per cent of the employees of CN Express will be treated in that fashion. This treatment must be considered humanitarian and generous enough because it is getting the full support of the unions. This shows that changes will occur and that CN Express, like everybody else, must adjust to those changes. But they are making these changes in the most reasonable and generous fashion possible.

Mr. Crouse: I wish to clarify my previous question to the hon. minister. It is not only CN Express but also eight CNR stations which will be offered for sale. I ask the hon. gentleman if the $50 million plus deficit in the operations of CN Express, which if I heard him correctly is the reason for the tenth annual loss, has led the CNR to begin a cutback in its operations right across Canada. Is the government contemplating closing down Mirabel Airport which has also been showing a loss since it opened in excess of $50 million annually?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, I do not think one should compare the two.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: There are other comparisons to be drawn but which I will not mention now. The main point is that it is not essentially to save money that CN Express is following this course, although that is important; it is because CN does not see how it can compete with other firms which are specialized and have a much more selective approach to small parcel transportation. If CN thought it could compete favourably it would stay there.

I would also like to underline the fact that when CN Express gets out of some of these operations, small parcels in particular, other transportation firms will be providing jobs as they take over. So it is not as if jobs were being lost; they are being transferred from CN Express, which cannot compete, to other trucking companies which can.

* * *

HEALTH CARE

USE OF PRE-NATAL SCREENING KITS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has to do with the fact that the government appears unable to restrict the sale and, even worse, the promotion of certain pre-natal screening kits which are designed to detect the neurological disease called spinal bifida. In view of the fact that there is great doubt about the accuracy of the test results, to say nothing of whether such tests are appropriate, can the minister tell us what she intends to do about this particular problem?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, with respect to this particular problem, which is a problem of misuse more than anything else, I have written to the provincial ministers of health as well as to the medical profession specifying the conditions of use of these pre-natal screening kits. I brought to their attention the dimensions of the problem—the misuse of these kits.

Mr. Blaikie: It is not simply a question of misuse but rather a question of whether these kits should be available for use at all without adequate testing having taken place before they are put on the market. This is not the first time that something has been more stringently regulated in the United States than in Canada. My question to the minister is: does she plan any changes in Canada's health protection legislation finally to overcome the long-standing situation of trial by guinea pig? In this case, as in so many others, Canadian women and/or their children are placed at risk because of the government's totally inadequate policy in this particular area.

● (1440)

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Madam Speaker, I regret to disagree with the charge laid by the hon. member. We still believe that pre-natal screening kits designed to detect foetal malformations are an important precaution since they can help to detect and prevent some abnormalities. We feel that these kits can do a fine job if they are used properly. Physicians and potential users have been cautioned against the misuse of these kits. If this is not satisfactory, the next step would be to meet with all those concerned as well as provincial health ministers, and we might have to decide to ban the kits from the market.

* * *

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON TALKS CONCERNING OIL IMPORTS FROM SAUDI ARABIA

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Madam Speaker, could the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or his parliamentary secretary tell the House what progress has been made in the discussions on the eventual purchase by PetroCan of 100,000 barrels of oil per day from Saudi Arabia, and whether the minister feels this is a favourable offer or not for our country?

[English]

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I can confirm that Petro-Canada will be entering into negotiations very shortly with the Saudi Arabian state enterprise called Petromin and that the government welcomes the offer on the part of the government of Saudi Arabia to underline our secure sources of petroleum with that country by the possibility of entering into a state to state trading agreement.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—STRENGTHENING OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the questions posed to the Minister of the Environment by the hon. member for Oshawa, and it concerns the Canada-U.S. scientific survey on acid rain. That survey has demonstrated that the acid rain problem in Canada and the United States is both more geographically widespread and more severe than had previously been thought. For example, scientists considered 140 lakes in Ontario biologically dead, but this survey demonstrates that that figure may be as high as 4,000 lakes. Is the Minister of the Environment, therefore, intending to seek changes which might strengthen the Canada-U.S. tentative agreement on acid rain in light of this most alarming survey?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, as I previously stated to the House, and as the hon. member knows, we are continuing as actively as possible the discussions which are under way with the United States. I have also in mind some other possibilities which may be available to us and which will enhance our ability, jointly with the United States, to respond to these problems. Those ideas are not sufficiently far advanced that I would outline them in detail to the hon. member. I believe he has some idea what I may do later this year.

Mr. McMillan: Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Minister of the Environment. Following the presidential election, the Secretary of State for External Affairs held a news conference at which he said that the Government of Canada does not contemplate any problems with regard to the Canada-U.S. acid rain agreement. He said that "the House of Representatives is still dominated by the Democrats and . . . initiatives have to receive congressional approval as well as approval from the President". Does the Minister of the Environment agree with the statement of his colleague, despite the fact that in the United States international agreements require the approval of the President and two thirds of the Senate, not the approval of the House of Representatives, as his colleague implied?

Mr. Roberts: Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows that I very rarely disagree with my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: I repeat to the hon. member what I said earlier, that we are confident that the facts of the situation, which indicate that this is an extremely serious problem for both societies—serious in terms of human health and in terms of economic impact—will lead the next United States administration to follow the path which has been charted by the present administration of moving as quickly as possible to international accord to help us deal with this important, common and equally damaging problem to both societies.

* * *

ENERGY

POSSIBLE OIL IMPORTATIONS FROM SAUDI ARABIA—INQUIRY AS TO CONDITIONS OF SALE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It relates to the answer just given a few moments ago by the hon. member for Etobicoke North and to the question of the sale of 100,000 barrels of oil per day under certain conditions as indicated by Sheik Yamani to the Prime Minister. That sale would take place on a state to state basis. Would the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether or not the government is aware of what those conditions indicated by Sheik Yamani are, and whether or not they include the demand that Canada formally recognize the PLO?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, all that I know comes from the transcript of the remarks which the Prime Minister made at his press conference. As I understand it, the question came up in the course of conversation, in which Sheik Yamani indicated that if Canada were interested in entering into negotiations with the state oil company, then that view ought to be communicated to the government of Saudi Arabia, and the normal follow-up would be negotiations between Petro-Canada and Petromin. The Prime Minister was very clear in pointing out at his press conference that the discussion was very general, involving no consideration of price or any other items. It is obvious to me that no conditions were discussed and certainly not the condition mentioned by the hon. member with respect to a political act like the recognition of any body.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, before any such transaction is agreed to by the government or by any agency of the government, especially if any political conditions are attached to any such sale, would the government undertake that the details of such a transaction will be presented to this House for debate and approval prior to the transaction being consummated?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I can certainly assure the hon. member that no such political conditions would ever be contemplated. We would not accept any such condition with respect to a deal of any kind that is very much up in the air at the moment. I can tell the hon. member that information with respect to any future developments will be made available to the House.

* * *

[Translation]

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROPOSED SALE OF NORDAIR

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minster of Transport. A few months ago, I tried to obtain some information about Nordair's future. Since then, I understand that the minister has had several consultations and that he is aware of the interest shown by several groups from Quebec and elsewhere. Therefore, I imagine that today, after all that time, he is in a position to tell us what progress has been made in this regard?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): No, Madam Speaker, but I can tell you that I am supposed to meet with the Regionair group within two weeks.

Mr. La Salle: I have a supplementary, Madam Speaker. In order to reassure many Quebeckers, would the minister be in a position at least to say whether he has decided in principle that the majority of shares could be held by Quebec interests?

Mr. Pepin: This is, of course, one of the most important aspects of the problem. It must also be kept in mind that when the Regionair group came to see me to talk about the Nordair takeover, they kept insisting that it is not Quebecair which was taking over Nordair, but rather the consortium known as Regionair. So a whole line of argument follows from that statement. If the consortium, the group of five companies, takes over Nordair, then one may wonder why it would be necessary for some partners in that holding to have a majority in relation to the others. I think this reasoning is so logical that the hon. member for Joliette, will be impressed.

* * *

● (1450)

[English]

RAILWAYS

UNDERTAKINGS GIVEN BY CNR AND CPR

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I should like to return to the Minister of Transport to ask some more about this final double-cross. The minister well knows that when CN and CP were applying to abandon railway passenger trains, close railway stations and abandon rail express services, they gave glowing pronouncements and projections on how much more efficient, more frequent and better express service they could provide by truck. The government, the minister's party and the CTC granted them those abandonments on condition that they would live up to the commitments they were to provide as an alternative service. Now, as the minister knows, they want to get rid of that service too.

I should like to know if the minister will require Canadian National, and CP as well, to live up to the undertakings they gave to the government, to the CTC and the public of Canada when they were allowed to abandon the rail express service in preference for a so-called more efficient, frequent and cheaper express service by truck?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I can only continue to repeat that CN and CN Express are not particularly proud of what is happening now. But they have to witness the fact—and I repeat it because I think it is the most important fact—that because they are what they are—that is, a quite big company with a long history, as one of them was saying, of being everything to everybody, of being extremely diversified—they find it very difficult to compete against companies with a very specialized function, with a very pointed objective, which keep grabbing bits and pieces of what CN Express could do. Consequently, CN has had to confess that, when it comes to small parcels, they cannot successfully compete against these companies. The job is simply moving to other truckers in this instance, but they intend to give it all they have to stay in the less than carloads heavier shipments and there try to reach their optimum role.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, Canadian National has operated the same way with their express service as they have with passenger trains. If you run them old enough, slow enough, late enough and dirty enough, nobody will get on them and you can abandon them. The same thing applies to the express service—exorbitant rates and inadequate service designed to lose business. They used to operate that specialized express service better than anybody could, and they still could. I should like to ask the minister whether he would call upon the CTC to enforce, for the first time ever, section 262 of the Railway Act which provides that they shall provide suitable accommodation for all traffic offered.

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, I am aware that CN Express in recent hours has been in touch with the CTC which has some jurisdiction in these matters. Should the operation announced yesterday or today by CN Express be against some of the rules under which the CTC operates, I am quite sure that the chairman will see to it that the CTC is seized of the matter.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING SWEDISH BUSINESSMAN RAOUL WALLENBERG

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. Will the minister confirm that he has received a number of representations on behalf of the Swedish businessman Raoul Wallenberg, a man who heroically saved thousands of refugees in World War II, then mysteriously disappeared and who recently is rumoured to be alive? If so, what does the government intend to do?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I have received such representations. Since there are a number of residents of Canada who have lived recently in the Soviet Union and are known to the RCM Police, I have asked the RCM Police to contact these individuals and find out from them if there is any information about the missing Count Wallenberg. So far, the reports that I have received have all been negative, but there still may be some that I will receive in the near future.

* * *

PENSION ACT

INQUIRY RESPECTING DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY UNDER SECTION 33

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs. In recent months Canadian Pension Commission claims for awards under section 33 of the Pension Act, that is for funeral and burial grants, have had to wait many months for adjudication because of staffing problems. Would the minister consider implementing the proposal of the Woods committee which would delegate authority to the senior pension medical examiner in the district offices to adjudicate matters of a routine nature under section 33 of the Pension Act? This action on the part of the government would go a long way in assisting widows of veterans during a time of great emotional and financial strain.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the question of the hon. member is well put and I will look into the matter with my staff. If they can agree with what he just proposed, I will implement that proposal as soon as possible.

Mr. McKenzie: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. I hope the minister will make himself familiar with that section of the act. At the present time the grant under section 33 of the Pension Act for funeral and burial expenses is not to exceed $550 for the funeral director, plus the cost of the grave, the opening, closing and a marker. For the Department of National Defence this amount is $850. Would the minister increase the amount allowed for a funeral and burial as provided by the veterans' burial regulations and section 33 of the Pension Act to correspond to the amount provided by the Department of National Defence? I am sure this small increase for a decreasing number of widows will not be inflationary.

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is very well aware of the generosity of this government toward our veterans and the relatives of veterans. I will consider his question very carefully and see if it can be implemented.

* * *

FISHERIES

FOOD HERRING FISHERY—INQUIRY WHETHER LICENCE ISSUED TO MV "CALISTRATUS"

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The minister will know that the food herring fishery on the Pacific coast opened yesterday. I have just learned from fishermen in the Prince Rupert area that the Calistratus, the largest Canadian-owned groundfish trawler on the west coast, has been granted a licence to trawl for herring and is presently on the fishing grounds off Prince Rupert competing openly with the established herring fleet.

Has the minister issued a herring licence to the Calistratus and, if so, how does he justify this decision which contradicts a long-standing promise of his department that the Calistratus would only fish for underutilized species of groundfish?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I was given a piece of paper on my way down to the House which informed me of this matter. I have asked to see my officials after question period today and I will give the hon. member a full answer tomorrow.

Mr. Siddon: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. There is a further element to the problem that the minister should be aware of. It is reported that the Calistratus is purchasing herring from other fishing vessels operating on the grounds and is processing herring at sea. I should like to know in the minister's subsequent response whether he condones this practice. Will he allow other factory trawlers to do likewise? How does he propose to explain this new policy, if it is a policy, to the hundreds of shore-based cannery workers who depend on the food herring fishery for their livelihood during the winter months?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, I am afraid that my amount of knowledge has not caught up with the hon. member's rhetoric. I can only satisfy his tomorrow.

* * *

LOTTERIES

DISPOSITION OF FUNDS

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I have a very short and succinct question for the Minister of Labour who is also in charge of sports and lotteries. It has to do with the recent resignation of the director of the National Gallery; I think the Secretary of State should be aware of it as well. Since the lottery fund is now $30 million, of which $15 million was to go to fitness and amateur sport and the other $15 million to culture and art, is the minister prepared to tell the House whether this sum will be incremental to these particular budgets or if it is going into general revenues?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his question. I want to thank him tremendously, because it is a long time since I have had one and it is a great opportunity to stand up!

I want to say through you, Madam Speaker, to the distinguished member that I cannot properly be described as the minister in charge of lotteries because his government gave lotteries away to the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: So I am no longer in charge of them. But if the hon. member is referring to the agreement whereby, in return for giving away a lottery that was gaining $80 million a year, we are supposed to receive $24 million a year from the provinces, to be divided between fitness and amateur sport and culture, it is true that the indexing factor has brought it up beyond the $24 million to around $27 million a year to be divided between the two departments.

● (1500)

To a very large extent this is incremental to the existing budget, but it is a very small amount compared to what had been contemplated for fitness and amateur sport and for culture by the former Liberal government, wherein the $80 million that was being gained annually from Loto Canada would have been available to improve culture in the country and to build up amateur athletics.

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, I knew I should not have asked him the question because he did not answer it. I would like to know whether the minister is now going to forgo financing Hockey Canada and participate in financing the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association. I understand this is what he is going to do. There are 60,000 or 70,000 kids who want to play amateur hockey and Hockey Canada can pretty well look after itself through the National Hockey League.

An hon. Member: What about football?

Mr. Paproski: That will be next.

Mr. Regan: Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for another important question. One would hope that the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association through its member branches might look to the provinces for more generous financing than in the past as a consequence of the fact that they now have those lottery funds. Hon. members will appreciate that this year the provinces between them will realize in the vicinity of $350 million from lotteries in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: I notice the former provincial member clapping. We have federal responsibilities. Part of that responsibility is to see to it that organizations such as Hockey Canada are able to provide Canadian teams to compete internationally at a certain level and that the CAHA do so in relation to other responsibilities.

Finally, although we, of course, continue to fund the CAHA's regular and valuable programs, we are not all that happy with their attitude in the Notre Dame situation in Wilcox, Saskatchewan.

Mr. Paproski: Then don't just sit there, do something about it.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WAR DISABILITY PENSION—REQUEST FOR FURTHER STUDY

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that the rate of the disability pension, including the cost of living increase to be made in January, has been established at a figure which is still below the average take-home pay of the five categories in the public service which were designated in 1972, will the minister give further study to this matter and to the possibility of bringing in legislation which will fix that rate in accordance with the norm that was established in 1972?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, may I first congratulate the hon. member on having been granted honorary life membership in the Canadian Legion last Saturday. It is an honour that he deserves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: I can only presume he was granted this membership because of his long lasting support for the generous legislation introduced on this side of the House over many years on behalf of the veterans. With regard to the hon. member's question, he knows very well that disability pensions are reviewed regularly to ensure the veterans do not lose anything because of a rise in the cost of living. Disability pensions are reviewed once a year and veterans' allowances are indexed four times a year. We will do our utmost to ensure that veterans do not suffer because of inflation.

Mr. Knowles: While the acting minister is reviewing that matter, will he also give serious consideration to at least making a start in getting rid of the six and a half year phasing-in provision with respect to widows' pensions? For example, will he consider making a start by providing those pensions immediately to widows of World War I veterans?

Mr. Lamontagne: The hon. member has asked this question a couple of times since I have been acting minister. I can assure him this is being very seriously considered. Possibly at one point we will bring in some measure which will satisfy him and I am sure we will have his support at that time.

Madam Speaker: I have received notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. FRIESEN—ALLEGED DENIAL OF INFORMATION BY SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because of an answer provided to me by the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) to a question I asked on June 26, as follows:

> In 1980, what percentage of the total budget of the Company Film Accord is being financed by CFDC (b) what amount is involved (c) what are the projected support costs for 1981?

The Secretary of State answered:

> The corporation does not make this type of information available in keeping with established procedures of confidentiality with its clients.

That is nothing short of a cover-up. This gentleman was being paid $50,000 to $60,000 a year as director of CFDC. He left the CFDC and formed his own company, one of the objectives of which was to get further funding through the CFDC for that film company. The Secretary of State had the audacity to tell me it is company policy and accepted business practice not to tell how those funds are going to be allocated to a company which evidently was formed to take advantage of the experience this gentleman had gained. Michael—I do not recall his last name—had gained knowledge by having worked for the government for two years. We are being denied information that we as members of the House are entitled to have in order to do our work as best we can. The Secretary of State is denying us that information.

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I do not have the text of the answer before me. I shall be pleased to look at it, but I do think this is an answer to a question raised by the hon. member such as one given during question period. He may or may not be satisfied with the answer, but I do think, Madam Speaker, that there is no case at all for a question of privilege.

[English]

Madam Speaker: The hon. member gave me written notice of his question of privilege. However, I must remind him that a question of privilege should be raised at the earliest possible opportunity. The hon. member referred to a reply given on June 26. Therefore, it would seem to me that there were many opportunities for the hon. member to raise this matter in the House.

I listened to the hon. member. The fact that he is not satisfied with a reply given by a minister may be a legitimate complaint, but it does not constitute a question of privilege. Therefore, I do not see in the hon. member's intervention a question of privilege.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order for clarification purposes. The gentleman's name was Michael McCabe. While I submitted the question on June 26, the reply did not come to me until the first part of November. Therefore, I have raised the matter at the first opportunity.

● (1510)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 247, 1,509, 1,597, 1,598 and 1,647.

[Text]

MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY—CAPACITY UTILIZATION RATE

Question No. 247—Mr. Herbert:

What was the capacity utilization rate in manufacturing (a) in 1961 (b) in 1971 (c) for the latest known figure and what percentage does the government consider should be the objective of the manufacturing industry?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows:

Statistics Canada reports:

(a) 1961 75.3 per cent

(b) 1971 84.2 per cent

(c) 79.6 per cent is the most recent rate relating to second quarter 1980.

The government considers the objective for capacity utilization in the manufacturing industry to be in the range of full capacity with fluctuations reflective of cycles in economic activity and demand for manufactured goods.

GRAIN—EXPORTATION AND IMPORTATION

Question No. 1,509—Mr. Herbert:

For each month in (a) 1978 (b) 1979 (c) 1980 to date, what quantity of grain was exported to the Soviet Union and, in each year, what quantity was imported into Canada from the United States?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

Canadian monthly exports of grain to the Soviet Union from January 1, 1978 to August 31, 1980, in metric tons, were as follows:

Month	1978	1979	1980
January	48,880	142,655	123,694
February	59,758	—	84,092
March	15,213	54	33,292
April	10,528	—	75,269
May	317,795	52,396	357,386
June	179,451	53,522	868,741
July	386,860	—	712,316
August	683,455	204,921	879,479
September	309,691	336,456	—
October	360,771	746,955	—
November	274,130	469,981	—
December	209,257	96,104	—
Total	2,855,789	2,103,044	3,134,269

Canadian yearly imports of grain from the United States, in metric tons, for 1978 were 538,562, for 1979 were 936,901, and for January to July 1980 were 617,921.

CANADA MANPOWER INDUSTRIAL TRAINING PROGRAM—CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,597—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How many times have the terms and conditions of the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program, Contract for Training, EMP. 2309 E(4-78) MAN 1273, been transgressed since the inception of the program?

2. What are the names and addresses of the individuals or firms found to be in violation of the terms of the program?

3. How many prosecutions or reprimands have been investigated by the government as a result of the transgressions and what penalties have been applied in each case?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. In the course of a year, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission (CEIC) enters into approximately 35,000 contracts with employers under the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program (CMITP). Contracts are monitored by CEIC staff; all claims for cost reimbursement are closely examined to ensure that they comply with all contractual terms and conditions and adjustments to payments are made if they do not; and all contracts are subject to audit. No comprehensive count is made of the number of adjustments required to payment schedules. Reviews of the CMITP since its inception in 1974, conducted by both internal auditors and the Audit Services Bureau, have not indicated any need for legal proceedings resulting from activities of the program.

2. See 1 above.

3. See 1 above.

WORLD WAR I VETERANS

Question No. 1,598—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How many veterans of World War I participated with the Canadian Forces at the 1942 Dieppe raid?

2. How many now live (a) in Canada (b) outside Canada?

3. How many receive War Veterans Allowance (a) in Canada (b) outside Canada?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Records of this type of information are not kept.

2. N/A.

3. N/A.

FORESTRY RESEARCH STATIONS

Question No. 1,647—Mr. Herbert:

How many government forestry research stations are there in Canada and (a) where are they located (b) what is the budgeted personnel strength of each?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): There are eight federal forestry research stations in Canada:

(a) Newfoundland Forest Research Centre, St. John's, Newfoundland; Maritimes Forest Research Centre, Fredericton, New Brunswick; Laurentian Forest Research Centre, Ste. Foy, Québec; Petawawa National Forestry Institute, Chalk River, Ontario; Great Lakes Forest Research Centre, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario; Forest Pest Management Institute, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario; Northern Forest Research Centre, Edmonton, Alberta; Pacific Forest Research Centre, Victoria, British Columbia.

(b) Person-years: 65; 148.5; 119; 124; 151.7; 87; 118; 154.1.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BANKS AND BANKING LAW REVISION ACT, 1980

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKING INSTITUTIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-6, to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, debate on second reading of this bill started quite a while ago. Unless I am mistaken, I believe it was in March or April last. It is true that this bill was preceded by others, not only in 1978 but also in 1979. That is why, as we have explained repeatedly, we offer no excuses; experience has proved that the study of the Bank Act easily takes three years. We usually start with a white paper, after which we get the reaction of the public; then, the government introduces a first bill, the subject of which is examined by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. After all those studies the government drafts a new bill which is again submitted to public representations and the perusal of hon. members. Now we have reached the point where yesterday and this morning we voted on the amendments moved at the second reading stage in the House after study in committee.

All that to say that we now have a bill that is tolerably acceptable, and I underline the word "tolerably". That is what it is to me, since I sponsored several amendments of our group in the opposition; of course, we would have preferred certain other amendments, and I am particularly disappointed once more because we still have no definition of the business of banking. I should think the minister will not be surprised when one of these days one of the courts of the land concludes that not only were parliamentarians absent-minded but they showed some lack of intelligence when they refused to include in the act a definition of the business of banking. I say that also because I want to stress what I said last night.

[English]

I want to change my way of speaking here because I want to measure my words very carefully. I want to draw to the attention of the minister and to hon. members on both sides of this House, particularly those on the government side, that the refusal to include a definition of the business of banking stems primarily from the bureaucracy. As a senior member of this House in years served and in experience with this type of legislation I for one refuse to accept the dictates of the bureaucracy, which is rampant in Canada. This is one of the big problems with government. The House is not in control; nor is cabinet. Far from it, and the departments where the system and the administration are in control are legion, and that happens in this particular case.

Bill C-6 would be eminently better as legislation if there were a definition of the business of banking. After all, it is a bank act, it requires a definition and it is only because there has been this pressure, which has been traditional, not to have the definition that the government has gone along with it. I can assure the House that if the places had been changed, there would have been none of that nonsense.

There are other areas of concern. I am a little concerned about what we have done to the banks with regard to powers to engage in the business of leasing automobiles. I know that led to a very acrimonious—in many ways—detailed and difficult part of our discussions. I think the minister would agree that nothing was quite so difficult as coming down to a consensus on the question of the powers with respect to the direct leasing of motor vehicles. I think we arrived at a consensus, but some of us have a nagging feeling that perhaps we have thrown the baby out with the bath water because we know that a fair proportion of the leasing of vehicles in this country is in the hands of a variety of subsidiaries of known Canadian financial institutions. The only entities which to my mind can give foreign affiliates a run for their money and really contain their operations and expansion are precisely the Canadian banks. It is almost like the sheep farmer who, while the wolves and coyotes are ravaging his animals, locks up his sheep dog, the only one to deal with the problem. I say this by way of simile. I am not suggesting that those foreign competitors or foreign-dominated competitors behave like wolves in any way, but it is akin to it. I want to give fair notice that if there is a dramatic or substantial change in the proportion of business which goes to these foreign-dominated affiliates, I personally will move an amendment to the Bank Act to restore the banks to the business of direct auto leasing. I will do so because it will mean that the automobile dealers have failed to do what they should be doing.

● (1520)

They have a challenge before them; they asked for the business. I can understand that in many towns for thousands of these dealers this represents a substantial part of their business. Particularly with the price of automobiles being what it is, we may see auto leasing taking an increasing portion of the market as a means of financing the purchase of automobiles, doing it through the automobile lessor. Anything beyond a medium-sized car now represents such a substantial initial investment on which there is such a fantastic write down and depreciation in the first couple of years of the ownership of an automobile that a great number of people, particularly those on expense accounts, will convert to auto leasing as a means of having a vehicle at their disposal.

There are many advantages to it. I know that my colleagues, particularly those from some rural constituencies such as the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) and the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff), may have something to say about the exact wording of the amendments to clause 178 dealing with the degree of security which is to be given to producers of livestock under the type of financing formerly contained in section 88. They may be right; there may have been an unfortunate dropping of some words in the coming forward of the government amendment and in the apparent consensus on what had been expressed in the committee. That was another very difficult area for the committee to resolve.

There is also the whole question of foreign banks, and here we have merely laid out some guidelines. Nothing has been said yet about what would be the requirements of reciprocity and how practical it would be. It will be a very interesting exercise to see whether the Japanese, German and French banks, which are already operating here, will wish to incorporate as class B banks. Of course, that will have to be done at a price, and the price will be reciprocity for Canadian banks in the country of origin of such banks.

When it comes down to testing the pudding, it may be a little more difficult for some of these banks to operate. In any event I am hopeful, although not really as certain as I would like to be, that any of these foreign operations which have been in this country for a number of years because they found the loophole in the previous act due to the refusal of the then administration in 1967 to define banking, and which will just carry on in some form or another without incorporating as class B banks for registering as a representative office, are placed under supervision. Let it be said that if there are doors left open, certainly somebody is going to find his way in, and I would much rather have these banks under supervision, not only for the protection of the Canadian public but for their own protection, so they are legally here and doing business legally under the aegis of the Bank Act which is where they should be.

I have been maintaining for many years that there are many quasi-bank operations which seem to take refuge under provincial jurisdiction in a matter where the provinces do not have one inch of jurisdiction but have grabbed a mile of it. This has happened only because the previous administration in 1966-67 was scared of its own shadow with regard to the requirements under the Bank Act. In saying that, I am not lining up with those people who say we need a strong central government in order to establish that control. The legislation is there; it is a question of interpreting it and carrying on in accordance with it. That is the way it should have been.

I am hopeful that we will see healthy competition. I know there has been already a good deal of competition among Canadian and among foreign banks for certain financing requirements in Canada. There is not as much now because economic activity has declined. If the government persists in its blind folly with the energy policy as enunciated here at the end of last month, there will not be that requirement in western Canada for the specialized financing features which are offered by a number of U.S. and European banks which have been coming into Edmonton and Calgary, because there will be a substantial decline in the industry. Already there are dire warnings out and it is only the stupidly blind who refuse to see them. In thinking they were going to do something for the Canadian oil industry, the government almost knocked it senseless through lack of knowledge and blind partisanship. Frankly, a raid on provincial treasuries has been perpetrated which reminds one of the pirates of old, of brigands on the loose laying hands on funds in the name of public need. That is the policy which came out of the budget a few weeks ago. It is the most dastardly thing that has been done to Canada.

In so far as the requirements for the development of foreign banks is concerned, we will have to see what happens because the actions taken by the federal authorities and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in his budget could put a decided crimp in the oil industry from which it may take years to recover, if ever. We will see how it goes.

I am sorry that the minister blindly, I might even say stubbornly, stuck to a figure for total foreign business which was inserted by the bureaucracy, not the ministry. Since speaking last night I have done some more verifying and can now confirm it. If inflation continues at the present rate and business recovers from the checks and blows of two weeks ago, then the ceiling will be more than reached before the ten years are up under the present Bank Act.

● (1530)

As I said two or three years ago and again the other day, in legislating this type of very extensive law there is a tendency to legislate for yesterday rather than prepare the way for the industry into the twenty-first century. We legislate for yesterday, to correct the difficulties we saw yesterday, which we hope will meet the objectives of today. They will not meet the objectives of ten years from now. We come in as limpers. Surely the Minister of Finance, along with the minister responsible for financial institutions, will not maintain either an indifference or a blind refusal—and I say "blind" advisedly—to recognize that before there is another revision of the Bank Act we will require a total review of the needs of the financial institutions of the country. Surely they will not refuse to recognize that we need another Porter commission. Surely we should not have to wait until four years before the expiry date of the Bank Act to name such a commission. It should be named within two or three years so that there is ample time for it to examine the situation, to bring down a worth-while report, to give it mature consideration and to bring forward the legislation. We should not wait as we did from 1954 to 1967, and then regardless of that, from 1967 to 1980. The principle of the Bank Act is that there shall be a renewal every ten years. It has become so easy now to introduce annual amendments for extensions that it is done as a matter of course.

We should be able to move with a little more flexibility in other areas. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is terribly exercised about what I think we will do to a bank which has been doing a good job in the country for nine years. Unfortunately the suggestion made to me last night as a possible solution is not so. There seems to be some misunderstanding. I know representations will be made here today, but I would have thought it would not be necessary to bring in such high-priced help and such heavy pressure on the minister. I would have thought he and his officials would have recognized that.

We told them weeks ago that the easiest way was to introduce a grandfather clause. Only one bank would be affected by it. There is already one bank operating under a grandfather clause, and that is the Mercantile Bank. The Mercantile is good for business. I have seen a lot of its operations in western Canada, and may I say that its operations are progressive and successful. It is not the cause of any worry to the bigger Canadian banks; they are big boys, they know how to take care of themselves.

The more flexibility we exhibit in Canada with regard to some of the foreign banks which have been doing business here in good faith, and which we will allow to continue to do so in good faith, the more our Canadian banks will be able to operate elsewhere in the world. Reciprocity is based upon good faith. One will not excite the admiration and co-operation of a friend and neighbour by kicking him in the shin or stepping on his small toe. In the past few years the strength of our Canadian banks has been in the foreign side of their business. Prior to that they were little local banks on the world scene, but now two or three of them are among the big banks of the world. That makes a fantastic difference for Canadian businesses in their financing, their handling of deals, their extension of credit, and all the way through. It is of terrific assistance to Canadian business abroad, and that is where Canadian business must succeed. It cannot live on the domestic market, and neither can our banks.

I make that plea almost on bended knee, not that I should have to but for the understanding that is required. It seems to me that we could have some flexibility very easily. We have seen no flexibility in the proceedings since we have been back in the House. The only flexibility which existed was when we were in committee and the minister was across the table from us. Perhaps he and his officials felt the pressures then, and I say that literally. I say seriously that there has not been the degree of flexibility we would have liked in the House. One of the unhappy features of Canadian parliamentary life is that once government gets into the chamber it is as rigid as building board. Whether, of course, it is being blind foolish or not makes little difference; but for it to admit that there should be some change, that there might be some change, that the conditions are not what they appear to have been, that the advice they received was not the soundest, gracious me, no. What they are going to do is go on blindly with what they have done. And I would hope that we can.

● (1540)

The last point I want to make is one that I made yesterday, that is, that whenever we have given the minister the power to make regulations, those regulations should have been before us by now. There is nothing that can convince me that over in the Inspector General's branch or in the Department of Finance, whomsoever had the responsibility, and in the Department of Justice they could not have prepared those regulations and had them tabled before we gave this bill third reading. I shall ask the minister, when he replies, a direct question. I shall ask him—

[Translation]

The question is this, and I hope I get an honest and firm answer. When shall we see the regulations which we gave the authority to pass and which will affect several areas of the administration of this bank act? The minister has asked for the committee's confidence and told us that we would see these regulations and that they would reflect the views expressed by the committee. The task, the responsibility, Mr. Speaker, is therefore in the minister's hands.

I know that several of my colleagues would like to express their views on this legislation. This will be the last time I speak on this bill, at least at this stage. I would like to thank all those who took part in the committee work. For a number of these people, this will have been their initiation into a committee considering a piece of legislation of some significance.

This enabled us to get to know each other a little better, and I think that members realized that it is in this way and through co-operation that we can improve upon any piece of legislation. It is true that I have voiced numerous criticisms, and this was new for me. I do not cast reflections on people or their personalities, but I do reserve the right to criticize their opinions, whether they are officials, members of Parliament or ministers. In this House we attack ideas, not personalities, and this is what should guide us. If I inadvertently hurt or insulted anyone, I apologize, because that is certainly not my habit. It is true that I speak harsh words, perhaps not so much harsh as firm, and that I am hasty-tempered. But at least everyone knows where I stand.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank my colleagues on both sides of the House for their co-operation in the study of this bill. As for me, even if it is somewhat defective, I do not intend to vote against it on third reading. However, through you, Mr. Speaker, I shall say quite frankly to the minister that if, unfortunately, the regulations are indefinitely postponed or if they distort the principles set forth in committee, then I think some members, especially on our side and probably in the third party, and even on the government benches, will become less co-operative. Bearing this in mind, I do hope that we can complete the study of this bill today.

[English]

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it has been a rather long road to get to where we are today with respect to the Bank Act legislation, and I want to indicate to the House that our party will be voting against the Bank Act on third reading, just as we voted against it on second reading. We do that for some very fundamental reasons having to do with the attitude of the Liberal-Conservative party toward our banking system. The Liberal-Conservative party in our view has produced a piece of legislation which, by and large, almost exclusively protects the interests of our largest chartered banks, our largest semi-monopoly companies in this huge financing business. The average citizen, the average consumer, the average business person, those people who deal with the banks either as consumers or as customers in some way or another, have not had the protection which, in our view, they so justly deserve.

The second major concern that we have has to do with the relationship between the Government of Canada—perhaps I should say the governments of Canada—and our banks. Historically Canada's chartered banks have played a critical role in developing the kind of economy under which we currently live, and this Parliament has itself, by virtue of the Bank Act and by virtue of these ten-yearly reviews which we conduct, consistently protected those financial institutions at the expense of their competitors, be they from the public or private sector. It is on those two aspects that I wish to concentrate this afternoon.

I wish to look at the field of consumer—customer or borrower—protection. One may look at this question from several different aspects. I think one has only to think of the very real lack of control which we have over our banks with respect to their relationship with their customers and the very real difficulties that we have in knowing, in precise terms, the kinds of services that they are providing. We do not know whether or not banks are calling demand loans without any justification. In fact one hears anecdotal evidence that this is happening.

We do not know whether or not it is true some of our chartered banks are moving in a fairly systematic way to reduce their activity in the small business sector, the consumer loans sector and the customer service sector, and are moving more heavily into other areas. I suspect that there is a fair amount of anecdotal evidence, and there are even indications from the speeches given from time to time by members of the Canadian Bankers' Association or others, to support the theory that indeed these are not the growth areas or the other areas in which the banks intend to move. I do not wish to go into any detail on all the amendments which have been rejected. The rejection merely reflects a very different philosophy between what my party has been putting forward and what the Liberal-Conservative party has been putting forward.

● (1550)

The Liberal-Conservative party has said that if we write too much into the Bank Act and attempt to control the banks too directly, for example by establishing criteria of fairness and limitations, it would affect their ability to cut off customers. Such restrictions would limit the ability of the banks to make exorbitant demands in terms of collateral and so on, on individuals who seek banking loans.

If we attempt to control the ability of the banks to set unilaterally whatever interest rate they wish or to introduce the concept, notion or idea of fairness between banks and borrowers, be it an individual, small business or a large business, we are told that is impractical, impossible, and that it will not work. We are told that such proposals are socialistic, a threat to private enterprise and will cause a greater expense to the banks, and 101 other objections, all of which were raised by the Liberal-Conservative party.

Mr. Kempling: Be honest, you turkey.

Mr. Rae: The hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) has asked me, in his inimitable way, to be honest. I am simply pointing out that the Bank Act introduced by the Liberal party is exactly the same Bank Act introduced by his party when it was in power. Can the hon. member show me how this act differs in any degree from the one presented by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)? To answer the hon. member for Burlington, that is why it is quite appropriate to call this act a product of the Liberal-Conservative party and to call it a Liberal-Conservative Bank Act.

Mr. Nielsen: You're trying to get out of the Liberal bed.

Mr. Rae: I can understand why hon. members to my right are so upset. I thought the hon. member for Burlington was getting up on a point of order, but I see that he is just leaving.

Mrs. Mitchell: Good.

Mr. Rae: If one cannot stand the heat, one must get out of the kitchen, and I see that the hon. member for Burlington is now leaving the kitchen. I am sorry to see that he is leaving, but I wish to make my remark clear. The reason that we are calling this act the Liberal-Conservative Bank Act is because that is precisely what it is, a bank act which reflects exactly the same philosophy, be it the philosophy of a minister of finance who comes from Inverness County or a minister of finance who comes from St. John's West, representing those two parties.

Fundamentally, this bank act represents the interests of the large institutions in Canada which, ironically, when one considers the origins of the two gentlemen to whom I have referred, are centred in central Canada and which, for over 100 years, exploited not only the people of central Canada, but also the regions of Canada. It is because of our concern about this legislation that we spent as much time as we have in this Parliament dealing with the act.

There has been some progress with respect to some aspects of competition as, for example, in the field of car leasing. There has been some advancement with respect to consumer protection, because we in this party shamed the Liberal party by redrafting amendments which were the product of the Borrowers and Depositors Protection Act and asked the government to include them in the Bank Act. They agreed to do so and, as a result, we have made some progress.

It is important that the Liberal party be required to live up to some of the principles in which they say they believe, and it is important for these amendments to be in the Bank Act where they belong. We are sorry that data processing regulations, which deal with one aspect of competition in the act, are still the subject of a great deal of controversy within the banking community. We are concerned that the Toronto Dominion Bank is already advertising a number of services which, in our view, are questionable, with regard to competition with data processing companies.

The minister, who has seen the same correspondence as I, is perfectly aware that his own integrity has been called into question by CADAPSO because it is their feeling, which is very strong as indicated in their discussions with me, that the position of the data processing companies has in a sense been misunderstood and, as a result, has been misrepresented by the minister before the committee. I know that the minister will want to discuss this matter when he gives his speech on third reading. I know that he will want to indicate the intention of the government with respect to data processing.

I believe that the data processing question reveals in a sense where the bias of the government exists and where the problem exists. The problem is that we have left so much to regulation and to the judgment of the Department of Finance and the Inspector General of Banks, whose discretion has been exercised by and large on behalf of the chartered banks more so than on behalf of the competing institutions. We have a real problem with the administration of this act because so much has been left to the regulations.

If the minister would consult with each of the groups which compete with the banks in each of the fields which I have mentioned—car leasing, data processing, credit unions, trust companies and so on—to determine if their interests are protected by the Inspector General of Banks, he will find that there is a general feeling that on any given issue when the chips are down the regulatory bias exercised by the department will be practised in favour of the chartered banks rather than their competitors.

That situation has very serious implications because this act leaves a great deal to the discretion of the department and a great deal to the regulations. It has been at least ten years since the last revision and, God knows, it may be 13 years before this act is reviewed again. In that time a number of areas and regulations under this act will come to light, and the government's good faith will be on the line. I give the minister notice today that we will be looking very, very carefully at the regulations promulgated by the department, and that we intend to raise those regulations in question period and on other occasions in the House of Commons in order to see that the interests of people competing with the banks are protected and guaranteed in just as firm a manner as the Bank Act currently protects the banks.

I raised by way of Standing Order 43 the question of the relationship between a number of chartered banks and a minister of the Crown in Nova Scotia. I did not do so because this matter was news to me. It was something of which I was made aware in the middle of the election campaign in January, 1980 by means of an anonymous letter. The letter was lengthy and detailed, and it indicated that the writer had some inside information which, in my view, had to be corroborated and investigated.

● (1600)

At that time I sent the contents of the letter to the Inspector General of Banks and asked him to carry out an investigation. Since then, there has also been an RCMP investigation. The results of that have not been made public, nor has the result of the investigation of the Inspector General of Banks. Even Mr. Thornhill's own statement in the Legislative Assembly of Nova Scotia shows why we need a Bank Act which is even more vigorous, even more concerned with the concept of fairness, and even more concerned with the ability of each and every citizen to see that he is treated as fairly as any other.

I shall not make any spectacular allegations this afternoon with respect to this case. I think the facts speak very loudly for themselves. As I understand them—and they have not been refuted to my knowledge—a minister of the Crown with substantial debts to a number of chartered banks, arranged, after his appointment, that rather than declare personal bankruptcy he would pay off the loans at a rate of 25 cents on the dollar.

Our concern with these allegations is that an arrangement was made with a minister of the Crown in Nova Scotia that is qualitatively different from the treatment of so many individuals by other banks in cities and towns across the country. Is this because banks respond to those people who they think have power and influence in our society, and they are prepared to respond to them in a way which, on the face of it, may seem very humane and fair?

One might ask why the banks should not try to extract their pound of flesh from someone, no matter what his station in life—why they should not try to come to a satisfactory arrangement. I do not quarrel with that, Mr. Speaker. All I am saying is that there are many other cases where the banks did not exercise their discretion fairly, did not decide to do things fairly, did not decide to treat the individual with some respect, did not give the individual a reason for calling in a demand loan, did not give the individual a chance before they decide to throw that person or business into receivership.

Since I became finance critic, Mr. Speaker, my office must receive up to five letters per week—and I am sure the minister receives far more—from individuals who feel they have been adversely affected by a decision of a bank, wanting to know why a bank has refused them a loan under this or that program, or why they are not given the same treatment as others.

Our economy is changing, Mr. Speaker, and so is our value system. This party wants to see a concept of fairness introduced into the economy so that there are some moral criteria there, that are generally acceptable to society. We want to see the requirements for justification in the field of industrial relations, for example, to extend to explanations by management as to why they decide to close a plant. We want a clear indication from this House, and from the people of Canada, that they do not want to see individuals laid off and treated like slabs of meat or commodities. Just as that is true of industrial relations and as it is true of the importance of the individual's rights at work, it is very important with respect to the relationship that people have with the chartered banks.

For this reason we have put forward amendments which have been rejected by the Liberal and Conservative parties, requiring far greater disclosure to the consumer than now exists, requiring that the banks explain and justify refusals for loans and give the right to an individual to take a bank to court, for example, if the bank decides that individual is not credit worthy, when he thinks that he is.

These are all new ideas, Mr. Speaker. Members on the other side of the House claim that they are not workable, but that is what they say every time we advance an inch toward greater rights for the individual. Every piece of consumer protection legislation has been resisted by people who say, "Don't get into the marketplace; the marketplace is the perfect determinant of everything that takes place out there." We know that is not true, Mr. Speaker. The marketplace does not work. It does not always protect the consumer. The gullible consumer can be fooled by advertising that is untrue.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, we have not just demanded a requirement for fairness and a requirement for justification. We have demanded, and have been refused, that instead of playing a shell game with no real control over interest rates charged by banks or how much the banks will allocate to small business, how much to large business and how much to consumers, that the banks decide whether so and so is creditworthy that they decide whether smaller businesses shall pay a higher rate than larger businesses, that these things must be regulated and controlled. We must move toward a system of greater planning and control in this sector as in all others.

It seems to us to be quite logical that in an industry that has assets—according to figures issued last summer—of $256 billion, where the 1979 assets of the Big Five chartered banks amounted to $206 billion, that there must be a great deal of regulation. When five institutions control $206 billion worth of assets in Canada and outside, there must be more than a few people in the office of the Inspector General of Banks who have a cosy, old boy network relationship with the financial institutions who call up on a regular basis to find out what is going on and so forth. These issues transcend the relaxed, folksy way whereby we now control what is going on.

Chartered banks make loans of hundreds of millions of dollars in individual cases that affect the whole economy of the country. The Massey-Ferguson example shows the relationship between finance capital and industrial capital.

There is no requirement in the Bank Act for disclosure of the amount of such loans or for a greater degree of investment consultation and planning between government and the huge chartered banks. It is all done on a very casual basis with the assumption that the government is not interested in planning what the banks' investments will be.

In this Parliament we have less knowledge, less control—the Inspector General has but he is not required to share his knowledge—than is at present required in the United States. I will give an example which I hope will become the subject of further discussion. In many cases we have to go to the United States to find out which of our banks is involved in a syndicated loan in foreign countries.

We do not know, for example, whether the Bank of Nova Scotia or the Bank of Montreal may be involved in a syndicated loan in Uruguay, a country where political repression is a way of life and where hundreds of thousands of people have become refugees because of the political policies of their government, and where the trade union movement has been crushed. We want to know whether these things are going on or whether the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Bank of Montreal, or any other bank is involved. We cannot find this out. We cannot find out if we are a shareholder or are not a shareholder. The only way to find out is if an American state has laws which are more strict than we have in Canada, and many do. We need to go that route to find out whether there are Canadian banks heavily involved in South Africa, South West Africa, or in global financing.

● (1610)

When 35 per cent of the assets of the $256 billion are foreign currency assets, you have a very sizeable political and economic problem on your hands. We are no longer dealing with the Bytown Market or the local corner store. We are dealing with institutions which, at the stroke of a pen, can make or break governments. We are dealing with decisions on whether to go ahead with six or 12-month loans, or whether to extend credit for another one or two years to many foreign governments. These decisions have dramatic impact on the civil rights of individuals in countries as well as on the economic rights and economic future of those countries.

For the next ten or 12 years we will be living in comparative darkness. We are going to be in a situation where it will continue to be a matter of discreet telephone calls between the minister of finance and the president of a bank to find out whether he is really over-extended in Iran. It will be matter of a cosy conversation at the Chateau Grill between the Inspector General of Banks and one of the bank presidents so that he will know whether there are extensive activities going on in Argentina, Vietnam, Thailand, India or anywhere else, or whether that bank is up to its ears in a project in Canada which may be in trouble.

Lord knows that this year we have seen two of our most impregnable industrial companies faced with tremendous financing problems. We simply do not have the information which we are entitled to have with regard to the level of obligation of the banks and the nature of their activities with respect to Massey-Ferguson and Chrysler.

This is really a kind of horse and buggy Bank Act. It is based on a theory of the economy which, while it may be quaint and has a certain intellectual coherence about it, bears no relationship to what is going on in the real world. We have a Bank Act which continues to put consumers, small businessmen, farmers, and anyone else who has to borrow from or lend money to a bank, in a position of being second-class citizens. We do not have an element of perfectly free information and discussion on what are the banks' decisions regarding the future.

We have a government which, for example, has refused change on a matter of ideology. That is why I call it the Liberal-Conservative Bank Act. It is all of a piece. They refuse, as a matter of principle, even to allow the possibility of one of our provincial governments or of the federal government forming a Crown bank. It said, "No, no, we cannot get into the banking business, that is much too revolutionary an activity, we cannot get involved in that and we cannot interfere with the perfection of the marketplace."

I cannot imagine a more ideological position than the one taken by the Liberal-Conservative party with respect to the Bank Act. It is all of a piece. It makes perfect sense when you consider it from the point of view of institutions whose history goes back in Canada hundreds of years. It is all of a piece when you look at the people who own the shares who control the banks. It is all of a piece when you look at who those people are and what their interlocking network is in the whole economy. It is all of a piece when you consider the fact that the directors of the five largest chartered banks have, in effect, a controlling web of interest across the great concentrated areas of the Canadian economy. Look at the mining sector, the pulp and paper sector, and the manufacturing sector.

You will see it as all of a piece when there is a consistent policy in the Bank Act to protect the interests of those chartered banks, and everybody else comes in at the end as an addendum. The government came in at the last minute and made a concession regarding the car dealerships. The minister shakes his head. It was a last minute thought, for the simple reason that it was not until these amendments were brought in here on second reading and the information was provided in this House, until it was raised in committee, that the minister even considered changing the act.

It was not until the minister had the amendments in black and white which we put forward last spring on consumer protection that he was prepared to look at those things. There was nothing in the Bank Act before that. The Liberal-Conservative party had their first, second, and third look at it. They had four years to look at this. None of this was in the act. It was not in the act until it was raised in this House by our party. It is hard fact, and it is hard for the other parties to accept it.

Mr. Bussières: It is an NDP Bank Act.

Mr. Rae: The minister says it is an NDP Bank Act. The amendments are NDP amendments. The rest of the Bank Act is yours, and you can have it. We will vote for the amendments and you can have the rest of the act.

When you make a decision to pass the kind of act which has been passed, and which we will not be able to review for 15 years, your philosophy, what you believe about the economy, think about the world and think about our financial institutions, suddenly becomes perfectly clear. If anything has become clear, it is with respect to the fundamental principles of how our financial system is going to work, who is going to benefit, who it is going to protect, who it will not benefit and who it will not protect.

Nothing could be more clear than what we have seen in this Bank Act. The two old line parties, the Liberal-Conservative party, the two wings of despair of the old order which is dying, are ready to have this Bank Act take the place of the previous one.

Before the next ten-year review of the Bank Act, we will continue to point out what we feel is wrong with the Bank Act. It does not take into account the needs and real interests of consumers. It ignores the real problems of small business, the problems of increasing competition and breaking the deadlock of the interlocking directorates and the deadlock they have on the whole of the economy. The government has sanctioned for another ten years the continuation of the old boy network in our banking system, the control over the banking system and our way of inspecting and taking hold of that financial system.

I want the minister to know that we are going to be around until the next review. We will not go away. The fact that the Bank Act has now got through does not mean we are suddenly going to stop being vigilant. I am not making this as an ideological statement. Time will tell whether the interests of consumers have been protected and whether the introduction of foreign banks in the way it has been done by the government will, in fact, increase competition in the Canadian banking sector. Time will tell whether this will further the erosion of our control over the economy, or increase it. Only time will tell, but I think it is important for the government to know and recognize that it has simply looked to the past and not to the future and to the future investment needs of the Canadian economy.

● (1620)

What would the alternative be? In our view it would be a very different kind of Bank Act which would recognize the central role of the public sector in the allocation of investment and in directing the future of our economy. It would recognize the fact that regaining control of our economy and our capital markets is one of the most central things we have to do. We cannot have an industrial strategy without having a strategy for investment. On the other hand, consumers, small business people, farmers and others desperately need protection, and they are not getting it. It must be written into the act. These people must have rights which are hard, and which they can take with them to court. We have not provided those rights, and I think we are making a mistake.

Finally, we should have an act which would call for greater information and require the banks to tell us exactly what they are doing. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for the purpose of reconsidering clause 2 with respect to the proposed section 222 at page 246 of the said bill.

If I may just explain it briefly, the purpose of this amendment is with respect to the disclosure of the foreign activities of our banks. The minister should not be surprised by this amendment because I have said to him many times that this is one item which has never been satisfactorily explained by the government. There has never been an indication as to why it should not be possible for the Canadian depositor to know whether his deposits are being used to sanction repression in South Africa, South America and in other parts of the world, whether his interests are being protected, and whether the policies of the banks are those he wants to follow.

That seems to me an entirely reasonable request, an entirely sensible request, and a very necessary one if we are to recognize the reality that with their current size and power the banks are acting in a sense as agents of the west with respect to many items of economic policy, and it seems to us essential that these be matters of public information.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak about the main motion and to indicate my disapproval of the amendment. I will not be speaking for very long, but in giving what will be a fairly philosophical discussion of some of the points before the House today I might begin with what I consider to be a humorous quotation from an unlikely source called "Webster's Unafraid Dictionary" which, in defining a bank, says, and I quote:

An institution that urges you to save as much as possible of what you earn and urges you to borrow as much money as you can spend so you can spend more than you make.

There are so many humorous definitions of banking that I suppose all of us know at least 20 of them. The one I like best is that banks will lend you money if you can prove three times over that you do not need it.

I will be raising some philosophic points. I welcome things which I consider to be correct, and I will welcome corrections from any source, including members of the New Democratic Party even if, as I have said before, in the ranks of the New Democratic Party it is a good business deal for the west to give up what section 109 of the BNA Act guarantees it, namely, control and ownership of its natural resources, in favour of a measure of control subject to "federal paramountcy".

I think it is clear from the amendment that the New Democractic Party just does not like banks. It certainly does not like private business. I think it has been demonstrated around the world that socialists in this country and others basically would like to do away with privately owned banks as they would like to do away with privately owned anything, despite the fact that they do not usually admit it in matters like this because they like to show their warm smiles instead of, as I put it, their fangs, toward private industry.

The first point I would like to raise is the question of members of Parliament and the Canadian Bankers' Association. It was pointed out recently that information with regard to where each and every member of this House banks is supplied to the Canadian Bankers' Association. The provision of this information enables banks to use it in whatever manner. I strongly recommend publicly that the banks cease and desist from this practice. I think it is altogether foreign to a free society and brings banks into general disrepute amongst people who are acquainted with the practice. I understand that the practice has been stopped, but I hope it will be buried away and never see the light of day from now until the end of the New Democratic Party.

The second point I might raise is the question of branch banking versus unit banking. Mr. Speaker, you may not be aware of the fact that in Canada there are, I suppose, 12 or 13 banks, and literally thousands and thousands of branches, whereas in the United States prior to the depression I believe there were 32,000 separately chartered banks. I think the figure now is 16,000 banks. In some states a bank cannot have more than one branch.

The point of the American banking system is that people who live in the community hopefully own the banks in the community. In some cases that is required by law. People who are in the community believe in the community, invest in the community, and lend money in the community. I think it is fairly well known that under our banking system all too often people are moved out of a particular branch after two or three years and sent to the other end of the country. I submit that that aspect of branch banking is harmful.

You may be wondering, Mr. Speaker, whether we should abolish the branch banking system and replace it with another system. I am not, of course, saying that. Many thousands of Canadians work in our banking system. No one, other than someone who is totally ideological, would want to get rid of the jobs of many thousands of Canadians. However, I suggest that it might be wise the next time we are revising the Bank Act to consider providing for more banks and for more locally owned, locally-operated and locally-dependent banks.

The third matter is the question of anti-trust factors. I would probably agree with my friends in the New Democratic Party that banks in Canada far too often act as agents of the crushing of competition or the creation of more mergers in Canada. The recent example of the Bank of Nova Scotia offering to lend money to the Campeau Corporation for taking over Royal Trustco is just one of many.

I think hon. members on this side of the House believe that dispersion of economic power is the best thing for our society, and if we have bigger and bigger units of public or private power, in the long run, I respectfully submit, we would end up with a society with possibly two or three banks, all subject to the control of fewer and fewer individuals. In my view that is one of the great arguments for having a strong competition policy, and I hope the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) will have the courage to bring one in before much longer. We have been waiting too long.

I doubt if many members know that in the 1912 presidential election in the United States one of the candidates for president, Teddy Roosevelt, took the view that bigness cannot be stopped but that it just has to be regulated. His opponent, Mr. Wilson, took the view that the United States was built on free and open competition and that, as far as he was concerned, there should be anti-trust laws and an attempt to keep enterprises small and competitive. I think we all know that Mr. Wilson won that election and since that time the United States has had a more or less strong anti-trust policy and Canada has had none. In other words, we are about 70 years behind the United States in terms of having a viable anti-trust policy. As I indicated, the banks form an integral part of that policy, and it is one which this Bank Act and previous bank acts do not deal with adequately, in my view.

• (1630)

I believe that the Royal Bank now has assets amounting to $60 billion. That is just about what hon. members opposite want to spend next year as the total government budget. It seems to me that in a society like ours it would be better to have ten banks each having $6 billion than to have one bank with such enormous assets.

Another matter which I hesitate to bring out, and again I would be happy to be contradicted by anyone in this House or beyond it, is that until a few years ago the Royal Bank of Canada, I am told, would not accept a legal opinion on a matter of Quebec law from French-speaking lawyers in that province. If that is the case, I find that to be atrocious, and I hope they will change their policy and accept such opinions in the province of Quebec.

On the same subject I should like to raise the question of the Bank of Montreal which, as we all know, was founded in 1817. I am told that at that time the bank had one Francophone member on its management team. Again I would be happy to be contradicted. I understand that as of today, 1980, there are two Francophones on the bank's management committee. To me that is a deplorable situation as regards two banks, the head offices of which are in the province of Quebec.

I am saying that the banking system in Canada—here I think even the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would agree—took great pride during the depression in the fact that not one of the banks had defaulted or gone bankrupt. What they do not tell you is that thousands and thousands of people across the country, and certainly in my part of western Canada, were foreclosed upon by the same banks which took such great pride in the fact that not one of them, unlike their counterparts in the U.S., went bankrupt. I do not know if that is as much a matter of pride for Canadian banks as it might be a matter of considerable shame that they did not make more of an effort to help more farmers in western Canada or more small businessmen in the maritimes during the depression.

Now I should like to deal specifically with clause 178 of Bill C-6 which revises section 88 of the Bank Act. My understanding of that clause is that it gives beef producers in western Canada the right to sell their livestock to a packing plant and it gives them protection up to, but only up to, $100,000. After that point, if there is a default or bankruptcy by the packing plant, these basically small producers can have their entire life savings lost in the bankruptcy courts. As a western person who is involved in a small way in the cattle business, I should like to speak against the wording of clause 178 as it stands now. I do not think it gives sufficient protection to the beef producers in western Canada and elsewhere. The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) will speak with far more expertise on that clause than I can.

Reference was made earlier to the energy policy and to what it would do to various people in western Canada. Let me point out, to any member who has not seen it an ad which appeared in yesterday's Globe and Mail, put in by the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada which describes itself as being "the voice of the Canadian owned petroleum companies". It says about itself:

Two hundred members are oil and gas exploration companies. Two hundred and forty additional members provide essential services to the petroleum industry.

They make the following points about the energy policy which will affect banks, which will probably affect everyone in my riding one way or another, and which will affect many people in western Canada and ultimately in eastern Canada. In this advertisement they are addressing the Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources (Mr. Lalonde) when they say:

It will make Canadians more dependent on expensive, insecure foreign oil. It will cost Canadians more for gasoline and heating oil in the long run.

It will delay essential frontier exploration, oil sands plants and heavy oil development. It will cost thousands of jobs that could be created by the oil industry across Canada. Canada must achieve oil self-sufficiency. We are the companies your program was supposed to help—

I emphasize this.

—the independent Canadian companies. It doesn't help us—it has stopped us in our tracks. We urge you to reconsider this program for the good of all Canadians.

Those are simply some of the points which I mentioned which are somewhat philosophical. Thank you for your consideration, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on just one or two areas, on which the hon. member who preceded me just spoke, with regard to the protection of products of the soil. I understand that the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) will also be speaking on this subject later. I certainly support the addition of two words to this clause to support the marketing of products of the soil.

Now I should like to speak on the leasing provisions in the Bank Act. This seems to be an area that is left open and unclear. I think it would be fair to ask for a clarification of that part of the bill. I believe that the door has been left open in these provisions. However, we do not want to stifle competition, and we want to be fair. Changes have been made to the bill since it left the committee. Perhaps now that the minister is back I could ask him to clarify for me what the provision means. It reads:

a motor vehicle means a motorized vehicle designed to be used primarily on a public highway for the transportation of persons or things but does not include

(a) a fire engine, bus, ambulance or utility truck; or

(b) any other special purpose motor vehicle

that contains significant special features that make it suitable for a specific purpose and that is manufactured by a person other than the vehicle manufacturer who manufactured the basic chassis.

I think we can go to almost any dealer or company involved in leasing and order a cab and chassis of whatever style of body we would wish designed for a specific purpose. It could be a chassis and cab which would have a grain body on it with grain gates in the back, designed for that specific purpose. It could be a livestock vehicle with the same type of body but designed for hauling livestock, or it could be a small single axle, single wheel truck which could have a utility body accompanying that chassis and cab for an electrician, or for Bell Canada. I am thinking of Bell Canada trucks. I would appreciate clarification as to the specific vehicle we are talking about. It seems to me we could take almost any type of chassis and cab, do whatever we wish with that truck, and it would be capable of being leased through the banking association.

● (1640)

I said I would not be very long. I would appreciate it very much if the minister would answer those questions.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this debate on third reading because of a keen interest in specific parts of Bill C-6 which I should like to discuss briefly. I begin by saying that this is my first occasion to participate in the formal debate on the revision of the Bank Act, other than attendance and participation in the work of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs during its session last spring.

Agricultural concerns have not been pursued seriously during all previous attempts to amend the Bank Act over the last three to four years. Over that period those of us who are keenly interested in the agricultural sector were disappointed that agricultural concerns were perhaps not as well advanced as they might have been. In fact, no progress was made concerning any agriculture-oriented amendments over those three or four years. However, at third reading stage it is appropriate to acknowledge the fine understanding and co-operation of all members of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which I experienced when I joined the committee for a few very special meetings.

Since the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) included a government amendment to deal with what has become known as the "cattlemen's amendment", I wish to make a few comments about it. Last spring when the standing committee began its deliberations on Bill C-6, it was obvious that the concerns and interests of cattlemen had to be more actively pursued in committee by a member who was personally involved and dedicated to the total Canadian beef cattle industry. During my eight years in Parliament that particular assignment has been my principal responsibility. In this pursuit I was genuinely welcomed and made "at home" by various long-standing committee members from all parties. I appreciate that very much.

Indeed I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge the understanding and patience of the chairman of that committee, the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen). I first became acquainted with the hon. gentleman during the sittings of the committee which was considering special trends in food costs a number of years ago when he was its first and only chairman. I participated in that committee later on in its deliberations because it obviously did not have enough members representing agricultural producers. In addition, I appreciate the willingness of all members of that committee to listen to my arguments about the cattle industry as they relate to the Bank Act.

In particular, I mention the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) and the wisdom and understanding of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey). I must say I enjoyed his comments throughout the many meetings of that committee. Also I might mention the patience of the Minister of State for Finance in listening to the cattlemen's comments at those meetings. I would also mention the contributions of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I should like to acknowledge the solid support of my fellow agricultural members on that committee—the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) and the hon. member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield). These gentlemen have a very clear appreciation of the position of agricultural producers, especially those in the cattle industry.

During my attendance in committee I was involved in only two aspects of Bill C-6. The first was the automotive leasing sections as they related to chartered banks. I do not propose to comment further on that subject at this stage, since that portion of the bill has been covered in great depth and detail by many hon. members. I do not intend to add anything, though, of course, I made a comment or two during the committee consideration.

The second aspect is the "cattlemen's amendment" which to my mind was the most important subject. It is covered by two references in the bill, the first being under the marginal heading on pages seven and eight of the bill entitled: "Products of agriculture". This is a long overdue change in the definitions. Finally this clause includes the term "livestock" as a product of agriculture. I think it is incredible that livestock was not officially designated by definition as a product of agriculture up until now. Clause 2.(1)(b) reads as follows:

> honey, livestock (whether alive or dead), dairy products, eggs and all other indirect products of the soil.

This clarification under "Definitions" is long overdue and very, very welcome. No further comment is necessary at this time.

The second reference to the "cattlemen's amendment" can be found on page 188 opposite the marginal notation "Priority of wages and money owing for perishable agricultural products". I particularly refer to clause 178(6)(b), subsections (i) and (ii) which deal with third party claims such as those by meatpackers and processors who have been able to use farm products which were procured, but not purchased, as security for their operating loans. The new act will allow a priority exemption indexed to the cost of production index from year to year, so that the upper limit of priority will grow with the change in circumstances. I want to emphasize that this is a big improvement over the old upper limit, which was $7500; using this indexing formula it now works out to about $100,000. That is indeed a significant improvement. Initially the cattlemen felt strongly that there should be an open-ended approach to this priority rating. They felt there should be no limitation whatsoever. While we reluctantly agreed to this approach I think it is fair to say that there was some unhappiness in the cattle industry as a result of settling for this.

● (1650)

I wish to refer now to section 6(b), the "Priority of wages and money owing for perishable agricultural products" section. It has already been referred to in debate and it says:

> (b) claims of a grower or producer of products of agriculture for money owing by a manufacturer to the grower or producer for such products that were grown or produced by him on land owned or leased by him and that were delivered to the manufacturer during the period of six months next preceding the making of such order or assignment—

The point I wish to make and which I feel very strongly about is that while this is indeed an improvement over the old act, which has been very beneficial to the whole industry, there was a technical omission of just three words in the section I have just read. The three words which should be inserted, in my view, following the words "claims of a grower or producer" are "or his agent". Those words should be added. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance to give serious consideration adding those words to this amendment which presumably will be agreed to. This was put forward by the government during the various discussions in the committee stage. I think there is no question that if those words are not included there there will be some hesitation on the part of country auction and commission firms who deal by word of mouth over the telephone and who make deals involving millions of dollars on behalf of cattle producers in particular. I think the phrase "or his agent" should be included as a technical amendment to the government amendment to which I have referred.

The cattle industry has been very understanding over the years despite serious losses suffered by cattle producers. The ones I remember best are bankruptcies of food processors, the bankruptcy of a packing plant in Ontario and another in western Canada, cases in which the producers' product—cattle—was held as security by the banks. This was used by packing companies or processors as security for operating loans before the cattle were ever settled for. I repeat, if that addition could be made to this section of Bill C-6 it would be a vast improvement.

That is all I wish to add at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise this afternoon and take part in this debate on Bill C-6, which is to amend the Bank Act.

Like the previous speaker, my hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), I have been involved for a good part of my life in the livestock business in western Canada. It is with this in mind that I take this opportunity to call attention to what I believe to be some problems with the act and which I think are relative to what the hon. member for Medicine Hat has just been saying.

I must say this is the first time I have had the opportunity to speak formally in the House since we returned this fall. There are two or three things that need to be said about the bill before us. The first is that I am glad to see that the definition has been changed so that livestock products are included and treated in the same as direct products of the soil and dairy products. I think the case can be made that livestock products should have been treated differently previously. For a great many producers livestock products are marketed over a very short period of time during the year. For instance, in the cattle business you will find that there are a lot of producers who only have an opportunity to market their product once a year. I imagine this is because of the physiological nature of the cow. It is very important that when sales take place the process the producers goes through to market that animal is fiscally and financially sound.

Under the previous definition livestock products were treated differently from direct products of the soil or dairy products. I feel the point needs to be made that direct products of the soil can be stored for longer periods of time than livestock products. Dairy products are marketed on a day to day basis, as are many of the direct products of the soil. If a financial problem arises it would be hard to conceive of a producer suffering a loss that would involve his full year's work, whereas in the livestock industry a man who raises calves and markets his animals once a year could find himself in the position of marketing a full year's work. If it turned out that he was unfortunate enough to do it at a time when the institution he was dealing with was having financial problems he could find himself out of pocket for the full year's work. I do not think that is a situation dairy producers and producers of products of the soil would find themselves in.

I would like to elaborate on the reason we think the insertion of the three words "or his agent" into this act is so necessary. To appreciate the importance of this one must understand the nature of the marketing process that livestock people follow to market their cattle. Most people are involved in one way or another with professionals in the marketing of their animals. There are bonded commission agents who operate out of the public stockyards. There are people who market cattle directly to packing houses on a commission basis. These people perform that service to a high degree of efficiency. It is their business. They are knowledgeable as to what the market is doing and producers over the years have come to rely on their advice. When this happens, the people who are in a position to offer advice are sometimes in a position also to take control of the cattle from the producer's feed lot, or pasture, or farm, look after the marketing, and send the producer his cheque. In that case the agent technically becomes an agent of the producer.

I think that if those three words are not inserted a loophole could be left and the correction we are trying to make in this bill would not be achieved. If a producer does choose to make use of an agent to market his cattle and that agent, through some technicality in the act, is judged not to be the producer, the producer could again be the loser. In order to understand the significance of this point I think it important that people understand the process that cattle go through—and this applies to pork as well.

• (1700)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer)—Canadian Wheat Board—Compensation for farmers due to embargo on shipments to U.S.S.R.; the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm)—Grievances of Cornwall employees—Government consideration thereof; the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton)—Environmental Affairs—Toxic chemicals spill on west coast.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall order No. 6 in the name of the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Stand by unanimous consent. Shall order No. 12 in the name of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Stand by unanimous consent.

* * *

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE LOOPHOLES AND REPEAL SECTION ALLOWING THERAPEUTIC ABORTION COMMITTEES

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster) moved that Bill C-216, to amend the Criminal Code (Abortion), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) for seconding my motion. I welcome the opportunity to stand in the House this afternoon on my private member's bill. I feel that the ability of a member to present a bill for discussion in this House is in the true form of democratic Parliament. Such a bill represents the feelings of individuals rather than those of political parties whether they be in opposition or in government.

Bill C-216 is simple and straightforward. Its intention is to erase the loophole which literally permits abortion on demand and to ensure that the unborn child receives the full protection of the law and to repeal the section of the Criminal Code which allows therapeutic abortion committees to be formed.

Although the issue of abortion is emotional, it is one upon which we cannot be silent. Since the abortion law was put in place 11 years ago, over 450,000 innocent children, human beings, have been killed. We cannot be shrill or strident; we must be rational and have certain expectations of the people of Canada. In each and every one of us there is the emotion to recognize humanity. Humanity has many definitions. The definition which I in my own mind and conscience accept is that of a human being, whether it be a human being outside the womb or a human being in the womb.

I was first elected to this Parliament in 1979, the year of the child. That year was so designated by the United Nations to commemorate the signing of the UN declaration on the rights of children some 20 years earlier. In 1959 the United Nations adopted the declaration of the rights of the child based on the following preamble:

> Whereas a child, by reason of his physical and mental immaturity needs special safeguards and care, including appropriate legal protection before, as well as after, birth—

At the time the Government of Canada was a signatory to the declaration to the rights of the child. Just 11 years ago, Canada passed legislation to deny the existence of rights for unborn children. In 1969 the Criminal Code was amended and passed. Section 251 permitted an accredited hospital therapeutic abortion committee to allow an abortion when the continuation of the woman's pregnancy would "be likely to endanger her life or health".

Anyone reading the debates of Parliament at the time would clearly understand that the new law was meant to be applied only in cases of medical need. The then minister of justice, the Hon. John Turner, who introduced the legislation, said during third reading:

> This bill has rejected the eugenic, sociological or criminal offence reasons for abortion. The bill limits the possibility of therapeutic abortions to these circumstances. It is to be performed by a medical practitioner who is supported by a therapeutic abortion committee of medical practitioners in a certified or approved hospital, and the abortion is to be performed only when the health or the life of the mother is in danger.

That quotation can be found in the Hansard of May 6 of that year at page 8397. At the time of that vote, the government of the day, much, I am sure, to the resistance and sorrow of many of its members, forced hon. members to vote—and I know some of them—against their conscience in order to pass the bill. In other words, in 1969 Parliament amended the legislation on the understanding that abortion was to be performed only when the health and the life of the mother was endangered. At that time the government of the day and this Parliament, though it was asked, in fact, did not take the time—perhaps it did not feel the matter was important enough—to define the word "health" in all its meanings.

Since the bill was passed, its meaning has changed greatly. Many people thought they were protecting the life of the mother, but that is not the case. In 1970, one year after the law was passed, there were 11,152 recorded abortions in Canada. In 1978, the latest year for which figures were available, there were 62,290 recorded abortions in Canada. It strains the credibility of anyone in this House or in Canada to assume that the state of health and danger to life of pregnant women was six times worse in 1978 than in 1970, yet there were six times as many abortions. Right now, for every six children born, one is killed by abortion. In other words, there is a loophole in the abortion law which gives Canadian unborn children no legal rights.

I contend that the insertion of the word "health" in section 251 of the Criminal Code provided such a loophole that the primary intent of the legislation has been so distorted that it should not be taken as fact. The interpretation of the word "health" is so vast and diverse that it makes a mockery of the law passed by Parliament. The definition of health used in this country comes from the World Health Organization, which states:

> Health is a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity.

I do not believe that health, as it is regarded in the present abortion law, should be interpreted so loosely. The present law protects women in cases of dangerous medical risk from pregnancy, but the vast majority of the abortions being performed are an attempt to cope with social problems. Abortion has become a necessary, cold-blooded medical service available on demand. There is a serious social problem and it warrants the attention and the response of all hon. members and all Canadians.

Surely we must agree that abortion should not be used as a method to solve this problem. To use abortion in this way only brutalizes and dehumanizes our society. Whether one views life as a gift of God or as an entity to be cherished with wonder in our universe, Canada's abortion laws are removing this right to life, and it is nothing but a condemnation of each and every one of us.

The purpose of my bill is to insert an amendment in the Criminal Code which would remove these loopholes which permit wholesale murder based on social expediency. My bill would allow a qualified medical doctor in an accredited hospital to abort or procure the miscarriage of any woman in order to prevent her death, not for any socioeconomic reason or for purposes of expediency. On November 11 we were reminded of the holocausts of World War I and World War II, when life in some minds became very cheap. This is not what we would expect from a civilized country. This is something we must change. If we do not advance in this way we cannot be truly civilized.

• (1710)

The other portion of the amendment contained in my bill is the repeal of the provisions in the Criminal Code which permit the establishment of therapeutic abortion committees. The 1969 provision did not, and does not, require the setting up of the therapeutic abortion committees in accredited hospitals, it merely sets down the procedure in the instance that this option is undertaken. Abortion provisions are contained in the Criminal Code and thus are a matter of federal jurisdiction. However, hospitals come under provincial jurisdiction and that is where the administration and control lies.

I would simply say that these committees have not worked, Mr. Speaker. The issue of abortion is a moral one, not a political one. When people run for election to hospital boards, whether they be classed as anti-abortion or pro-abortion, then the matter becomes political. But abortion is a question of civil rights. The unborn child has a right to life; a civil right to life. It is up to the state, to the federal government, to this House of Commons to protect and honour the right of the unborn child.

We have been discussing the constitutional resolution in this House, Mr. Speaker. Will the right to life in that resolution deem that section 251 of the Criminal Code is ultra vires? Will it honour the intent of this bill and, if so, will it specifically honour the pregnant woman's right to life if her life has been deemed in medical danger?

As a member of Parliament, I believe I am elected to serve my constituents. This past summer I surveyed my constituents asking their views and seeking their input on the abortion laws in Canada. The majority of the response indicated that abortion should be permitted only to prevent the death of a mother.

Pro-life groups in Canada have often been referred to as the silent majority, Mr. Speaker. I would submit to you that there is no such thing as a silent majority; only governments that are deaf and refuse to hear the cry of the populace. I hope that regardless of political affiliation, hon. members will send this bill to committee for further study. I shall not take all the time allotted to me, Mr. Speaker, so that we may hear from my hon. friends and colleagues in the other parties. I know that the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle), the hon. member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield) and others would like to express their views and concerns on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise, as a I did one year ago on November 30, to speak on this very important question of abortion and changes to the Criminal Code. I believe the changes suggested to the act would be regressive and discriminatory toward women by preventing them from having the right to choose what is right for them and their families in their particular circumstances.

I should like to make one point very clear at the beginning. The New Democratic Party does not sanction abortion as a method of birth control. Along with the hon. member, we deplore the increasing need for women to seek abortions. In most cases this is caused by the stresses of today's society, increasing poverty, the lack of stable family relations and, often, of stable marital relations; the extreme youth of many mothers—and I shall come to that in a moment—the health problems that are often involved, and economic insecurity.

The New Democratic Party believes that it is much better to prevent an unwanted pregnancy than for a woman to be forced to bear an unwanted child which she cannot care for or which may be neglected or even abused in later years. It is far better to prevent an unwanted pregnancy than to decide to have an abortion. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, abortion is rarely a consideration if a woman and her partners have a stable relationship and the means to care for their child.

I believe it is also far better to prevent an unwanted pregnancy than it is for unwanted children to be born and then given up for continuing changes of foster homes. This is happening frequently today and there is considerable evidence that children may be damaged by constant changes and feelings of abandonment, no matter how caring many foster homes may be.

Prevention, of course, starts with a loving relationship and adequate sex information in the home. Parents who provide relaxed, honest answers about procreation, human relations and sexual development, are preparing their child for mature relationships later in life. Preparation, as we all know, starts with pre-schoolers, the information increasing as the child reaches puberty.

It is also important that schools take a positive attitude toward teaching human growth and development, including positive family life education for both girls and boys. Early training must demonstrate the importance of love and caring, respect for others and for one's self.

Unwanted pregnancies will not be prevented if we do not deal realistically with what is happening with youth today. Despite family standards, the mores and desires of parents who care very much for their children, it is a fact of life that in today's society things have changed completely from the way they were in our youth. Sexual experimentation often starts between children, and intercourse is common in early teenage years. Indeed, we know there is increasing evidence of teenage prostitution involving both boys and girls and very young teenagers on the streets today. Increasing numbers of young people view this as a means of getting money, something which is only possible, Mr. Speaker, because of the demands of adults who seek this service.

There is an alarming increase in the number of children under age 15 who are becoming parents. I would like to quote from the Vancouver Sun of October 14 which ran an article on this subject. It begins as follows:

A report on teenage pregnancy and parenthood in B.C. reveals an alarming increase in pregnancies among girls age 14 and younger—

—it urges the development of more school and community programs to prevent unwanted pregnancies—

'—a 33 per cent increase in the rate of pregnancies for girls 14 years old and younger has occurred in British Columbia over the past seven years '—

The increase in pregnancies among young teenagers coincides with a marked decrease in the number of children given up for adoption. The report found more than half of the teenagers giving birth in B.C. are unmarried, and 75 to 80 per cent of teenage mothers now decide to keep their babies—

Deaths from complications of pregnancy are 60 per cent higher for girls under 15 than for women in their 20s—

The death rate for infants in B.C . . . for the babies of 15-year olds was 26.1 . . . babies of mothers 16 and younger are more likely to be mentally retarded or have brain and nervous disorders.

A recent study of 79 teenage mothers in Vancouver revealed that 80 per cent had not finished high school and nearly 23 per cent had Grade 8 or less—

The death rate of preschoolers of teenage mothers was 41 per cent above average—

This shows how difficult it is for young mothers to care for babies. The article decries the attitude that giving services to these girls is seen as a reward for their misdemeanor:

'As a result, they're condemned to a life of isolation and poverty'.

● (1720)

Dr. Tonkin was quoted as saying he found 87 per cent of teenage pregnancies are unplanned and unwanted. He further said:

B.C.'s high teenage abortion rate of 106 abortions for every 100 teenagers who go through with the pregnancy is further evidence that most pregnancies are unwanted.

Birth control counselling to prevent unwanted pregnancy is not available to many teenagers.

I am sure we all agree that prevention is a top priority, particularly for young people faced with this kind of situation. No one disagrees that a child mother finds it hard to care for herself and mature into an adult while looking after a young child, meeting its needs and caring for it. Therefore, prevention is our first priority.

Our party strongly supports the recommendations of the Bagley report which my colleague from Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has mentioned several times in this House. That report stresses prevention, family planning clinics, availability of contraceptives and accessibility to medical services for those who apply for abortions. We feel it particularly important to give more attention to community clinics. I understand these are increasing in the province of Quebec with excellent results. It is important that such community clinics be established so that there is accessibility to information, counselling and family support services for those women who decide to keep their babies.

If a woman becomes pregnant against her will, she should be able to discuss this with an objective, understanding counsellor and perhaps a religious adviser. She should come to her own decision as to what is best for her and her unborn child. She should have access to a doctor's advice if, as one alternative, she is considering an abortion. We should be looking at the clinics in Quebec as an alternative to placing a heavy burden on hospitals and the very costly services which are required.

Family planning is a social responsibility just as the increasing cost of caring for unwanted children is an increasing social cost. Last year I spoke about the need for a more democratic and realistic approach to the whole question of abortion. I respect the fact that members in this House, including some of my colleagues, have different opinions on this matter. I respect their personal opinions. However, the private member's bill before us today is not just a personal thing. It seeks to impose and restrict access to abortion. The women of this country must make their own decision in this matter.

I wish to direct some questions to the member presenting this bill. First, if the bill were to go through, would it stop the increasing number of teenage pregnancies which I just cited? Would it prevent pregnant women with money, or their sexual partners who have money, from going across the border to the United States to seek an abortion? Would it decrease the number of backroom butchers who are now performing abortions in areas where there is no access to proper medical treatment in a hospital with an approved abortion committee? Would it decrease in the cities the increasing numbers of unwanted pregnancies, particularly among younger women? Of course it would not prevent these things. The hon. member who just spoke would probably agree. It is a further restriction on access to abortion.

Mr. McKnight: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like clarification. The hon. member said she would like to ask some questions of the hon. member sponsoring this bill. Would she like me to reply to those questions?

Mrs. Mitchell: No, Mr. Speaker, not at this point. I was just about to answer them. The hon. member had his time. This is a very important question and I would like full advantage of my time.

The answer to these questions is that changing and restricting access to abortion would not stop unwanted pregnancies. Hospitals do not cause pregnancies. Men cause pregnancies. This is a fact that men in this House continually seem to ignore. This is not a legal question. It is a human physical question which affects the lives of women far more than men. An amendment to the Criminal Code to further restrict abortions in hospitals will not deal with the concerns of those who oppose abortions on moral grounds. It will force young girls and poor women to go to the back street butchers in surroundings where they risk their health. That is why I want to talk about this bill in relation to democracy.

Our party respects the right of every man or woman to take a religious view on the question of abortion. I do not intend to talk about what is or is not life. Obviously there is a great difference of opinion on this very emotional subject. We respect personal and religious views that are a matter of conscience. However, we are opposed to measures that impose certain moral views on other people, and particularly on women in this case.

The member proposing this bill has a right to a personal opinion on abortion. However, neither he nor this House has the right to impose views on a woman who is pregnant, who cannot care for her child, and who, after careful consideration, decides to have an abortion. It is her decision in consultation with her doctor. It is not the role of a member of Parliament to say to that woman, "You cannot have an abortion. I am your judge." Not only will this not work, since the woman obviously will find another way of having the abortion if it is important to her, but it is not the role of Parliament to tell a woman what she can or cannot do with her body and her life.

Many women and enlightened men today feel we should be broadening the concept of health to accept the UN definition to include mental, social and physical factors as well. This should be the criterion used by hospital boards when a doctor recommends an abortion. We should not be restricting it as this bill proposes. Better still, we should not be taking up the time of the hospital, with its expensive services, in dealing with abortions. It should be decriminalized and treated as a medical service at community clinics.

In many countries today abortion is not a moral issue. It is a human practical issue that involves population planning. It is part of practical medical services. A pregnant woman is free to choose what is best for herself, her partner and her family. Children are born wanted in a family that can nourish and care for them.

Recently I had a long chat with Grace MacInnis, the former member for Vancouver-Kingsway who, as many of us know, worked for many years in this House and across Canada for women's rights, the strengthening of families and the right of all children to be wanted, to grow and develop into mature, healthy human beings. She reminded me that we live in a pluralistic society. We know that individuals have very different points of view on abortion. She also reminded me that we must not give up the fight for a woman's individual right to choice in the matter of abortion. She said it took 80 years for the House of Commons to legalize birth control. Now it is time to work for the repeal of abortion from the Criminal Code.

I agree with this. It is the policy of my party. Therefore, the NDP opposes this private member's bill as an undemocratic, regressive and sexist act. It would prevent a woman from having access to hospital services if she and her doctor request an abortion as a matter of health.

• (1730)

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (London-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking today in support of the private member's bill presented by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) said that male chauvinistic views were being expounded. I would like her to know that there is one member on our side who is female and who does not really agree with that attitude, and she would like that view to be on the record.

We are dealing with a very controversial and emotional subject which goes right to the root of our very being. There are several questions to which we should address ourselves. What rights does the unborn child have? Are those rights subject to any qualifications? Is the unborn entitled to full human rights? If so, does he or she receive those rights at conception or at some subsequent point in his or her pre-natal development? Does the mother have the right, for whatever reason, to end the life that is within her?

The question of abortion is one of the most widely disputed topics in recent years. The supporters of strict abortion laws express deep concern over the abolition of the intrinsic and absolute right of life which has always been recognized as fundamental in Canadian society. Pro-life people see abortion as the destruction of innocent children. Those who are pro-abortion tend to blur the issue by citing abstract philosophical arguments about personal freedom and privacy or talk in terms or generalizations such as "social good" or "the quality of life".

The courts of our land can make a wrong legal, but they cannot make a wrong right. Pro-abortionists like to refer to the unborn as a fetus instead of a child, and I am convinced that they are using certain words to depersonalize the unborn baby. If we accept that there is no difference between having an abortion and the removal of a gallbladder or an appendix operation, it will affect our attitude toward the rights of those seeking abortions.

However, if we believe that this is a human rights issue, that we are more than two-legged animals and that man was made in the image of God, formed from His hand, then for those reasons human life is very precious and not to be dealt with lightly.

I wish to quote from the declaration of the rights of a child made by the General Assembly of the United Nations on November 20, 1959, as follows:

> The child, by reason of his physical and mental immaturity, needs special safeguards and care including appropriate legal protection, before as well as after birth.

In our society there is no person more weak, defenceless or vulnerable than the unborn. It is the function of the law to protect innocent human life. When the mother, who should be the natural protector of her unborn child, becomes its adversary, then it is the function, the duty and the responsibility of the government to intervene to protect that innocent human life.

Governments pass such laws as seatbelt laws to preserve life, yet we stand idly by while the pro-abortionists brainwash our society into believing there is nothing wrong with artificially ending the lives of thousands and thousands of children.

First, if we believe that life begins at conception, we must accept that there is a new being entirely separate from its father and mother because it has a different chromosomal makeup. Second, at conception the unborn is alive because it has the capacity to replace its own dying cells. Third, at conception, the unborn is alive, needing only food and time to grow into an adult human. Fourth, the unborn is just as much alive and human before birth as it is after birth. It is not a different life. Fifth, the body of the unborn child belongs to the child, just as the body of the mother belongs to the mother. The mother is not aborting a part of her anatomy, as suggested by the NDP member for Vancouver East; she is aborting the result of the union of two people placed within her. Sixth, since we have not given the right to a mother to terminate her child's life after birth, why should she have the right to terminate the child's life before birth?

We know that the entire genetic package which determines one's personality and physical characteristics is totally present at conception. It is just like a tape recorder, our total being programmed at that instant.

The tiny humans we once were have developed into the adults we now are; but we were there totally at conception. All we needed to become the adults we are now was nutrition, oxygen and time. A being who has never before existed in the history of time, a being not at the end of the line but at the dawn, a being completely intact and containing within himself or herself the totality of everything that being will ever be, a being moving forward in an orderly process of growth, a being destined to live within the mother for about nine months and for as many as 90 or more years without: this living being is dependent upon his or her mother for shelter and food but in all other respects is a totally new, different, unique and independent creation.

Some people say that by granting an abortion, in many cases we are preventing the creation of candidates for our relief roles, our prison population and our growing list of unwanted and battered children. I am sure we would all agree that every child should be wanted. A world with wanted children only would be a very ideal place in which to live. On the other hand, it would also be a wonderful world if there were no wives unwanted by husbands, no aging parents unwanted by their children and no unwanted Jews, black people, white people, protestants or Catholics. The truth of the matter is that we must remember that people have feet of clay and the unwanted will always be with us.

To use being wanted by someone as a measure of whether a human life is allowed to live suggests the frightening concept that the unwanted can be eliminated. Abortion is not just another method of birth control. Contraception prevents the creation of new life; abortion destroys life after it has begun. The question of contraception is a personal decision for a couple to make. Abortion, on the other hand, involves society's responsibility to safeguard the life of another person. A woman has both the right and the ability to determine whether she will or will not conceive. Once she has become pregnant, however, it is no longer a question of her body alone. The life of another human individual is present, one who is distinct and separate from the mother. If we accept that the unborn child is human, it is obvious that the issue is not the right of the mother to control her body but whether she has the right to end the life of another human being who shares her body.

I am sure I could go on citing figures and statistics to support my presentation with regard to the almost 6,000 per cent increase in abortions during the last ten years. I believe the crux of the matter is whether we as parliamentarians wish to do something about the problem or whether we should turn our heads, ignore the situation and hope it goes away.

It will not go away, and it will haunt our society in the years to come. No country can allow such flagrant disregard for human life and not pay a heavy price.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my position to the debate this afternoon. I will indicate first that what I am about to give is my own personal position because my position is not the same as that which was adopted in convention by the New Democratic Party, which I would now like to read into the record. The following was the position of the New Democratic Party recorded at the federal convention in 1967:

> Be it resolved that the New Democratic Party favours the legalization of abortion so that abortions could be permitted, under the closest medical and social supervision, depending on the condition of the pregnancy involved, these conditions should include:
>
> (1) genuine risk of death or physical or mental injury to the mother, or to any existing children of her family;
>
> (2) substantial risk the child will be handicapped by severe physical or mental abnormalities;
>
> (3) following rape or incest.

When I was asked to run for the New Democratic Party, the basic philosophy of which I accept as socially a good way to handle our country, I made it very clear before I let my name stand that I was against that particular position.

● (1740)

In my nomination speech I indicated where I stood on the question of human rights. This position was approved by my local constituency and I announced it as one of the main platforms upon which I ran for the House of Commons. My personal position is this: I believe in rights across the board. I believe that human rights were an essential issue in that campaign as they are every day of my life, and rightly so, just as they are in many parts of today's troubled world. In my nomination speech on September 17, 1977, I said:

I will defend human life from its conception until its natural end.

This means I am opposed to, first, abortion; second, euthanasia; third, capital punishment; and—although I do not have it included in the document from which I read at that time—I am also against death from starvation, from war or from any other act in which the human right to live is violently taken away from some other person.

The human rights which I support are, first, the right to be born; second, the right to adequate food, housing, medical care and education; third, the right to live in, at least, frugal comfort within one's cultural tradition; fourth, freedom of conscience, worship, expression, political participation and peaceful dissent; fifth, equal treatment in public, job markets and courts, regardless of sex, age, ethnic origin, marital status, religious or political beliefs, social and economic status; sixth, the right to social assistance when age or other circumstances make self-support inadequate; and seventh, the right to die with dignity.

I believe that human rights are all of a piece—ignore one right and you jeopardize all the others. That is why a single issue approach to rights will not work. If we are really pro-life, we have to protect human life from conception through to death. This requires an active, lifelong concern for a just social system.

In that document I repeated that my stand on abortion is at odds with the present New Democratic Party policy, but dissent has an honourable tradition within the NDP. As other speakers have already pointed out, there is no doubt at all that the issue about which we are speaking is highly emotional, and because of that, it is very difficult for people to really hear what the other side is saying. I am fully aware of this. When an emotional argument is taking place, it is terribly difficult to hear the other side. Over the years I have tried to hear all the positions, but the part which I was never able to hear, at least within myself, was the basic assumption that abortion itself was a moral act. Abortion, as I understand it, is a direct attack carried out against a living unborn child. I cannot see it from any other point of view than that of morality and I consider it to be an evil act. It is an evil act, in my view. It touches on a basic moral principle which I am sure can be sustained by everybody in the House. It is a basic moral principle of ethics that you cannot do an evil act for a good end.

So we face a serious problem because of how one should act in the face of problems which have been discussed today, the existence of which I do not deny, the social problems about which the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) spoke. I recognize that there are answers to social problems, but I cannot, in my conscience, understand how it is possible to carry out an evil act, or an act which I perceive as being evil, for a good or an apparent good.

I could bring religious arguments into the debate but I will not. However, I think I can bring to this debate some of my own reflections in past years. I have had to come to terms with my own life every day and with the life of everyone else whom I have met. Every single person whom I meet is a mystery which cannot be explained except for the fact that we are all present here in this universe at this time, and that we are in the process of going from conception to death. The process cannot be stopped. So when someone says that they can overcome that basic mystery and that somehow or other they have greater understanding and knowledge of the point at which life starts and stops, after seven days, after seven months, after seven years or after 70 years, I cannot accept that, because no one I know has that power.

I spoke of the mystery of human life, and it is because human life is a mystery with individual reason, will, personality and conscience that I speak about human rights. I believe that the individual is unique on the face of this earth and therefore has rights. Individuals have those rights not because the House of Commons gives them to him or her but because there is basically something different and special about human existence. That is why dogs, horses, salmon or geraniums do not have rights. All plants and animals have life but they do not share the kind of life I have—they do not have human life.

I do not want anyone to think that I am attacking anybody for what they have done, or anything of that sort. All I am saying is that I have never heard anyone answer the questions I am posing in a way I would consider reasonable. I have to live by my own conscience. In my belief, conscience is a unique power that a human being has and that no other thing on this planet has. A human conscience, so far as I understand it, is the judgment of right reason. It is a judgment which I must make about a particular act, about a particular way of acting, about a particular series of acts, and the only thing I have to go on is my right reason. I must use my faculties to look upon a particular action and say whether it is evil or good. I must follow my conscience in making that decision. I am sure no one in the House would deny that. Perhaps we see it differently because we have a difficult time hearing each other.

● (1750)

I should like to share some of my own experience. As we go through the period from conception to death we acquire experience. I refer to the question of health and what human health basically means. If it is a question of health—the health of the unborn child is not taken into consideration. It is destroyed! That is the act to which we must relate our consciences.

Yesterday I had an opportunity to speak with an archaeologist whose wife had experienced an accidental miscarriage. She was an archaeologist as well; I do not know whether they had any religious faith. He related the drastic effect of this spontaneous miscarriage on his family. His wife was able to explain it by indicating that her body was the result of five or ten million years of preparation before it could reach the high level of existence necessary to produce a human life. When the miscarriage occurred she reacted to it in such a way that the emotional impact was present years later. My experience counselling many people involved with abortions leads me to believe it is not really the answer. I cannot explain what is left within a person who experiences an abortion; it just does not go away.

I am glad to have had the opportunity to present my personal and private position this afternoon. In general I support the tone of the bill of the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). Although my party is criticized as being the abortion party, I think we must look at the entire question and realize that when hon. members to my right were in power they did not change the law which was originally brought in by hon. members opposite.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of emotion I rise to speak on Bill C-216 to which I agree in principle. I do not necessarily agree with the exact details of it, but I should like to indicate that for two sessions in a row I have had a private member's bill of this nature on the order paper, Bill C-496.

When I decided to leave provincial politics and get into federal politics, nothing concerned me more than this issue. I knew it was an emotional issue, full of fundamental thoughts by different people on the matter. I had sufficient data at my fingertips which indicated that a prairie fire had occurred in the area of abortion and that the abortion law was being abused and used as a means of contraception. Hospital authorities informed me about that and I learned that the hospital committees of many big hospitals were overloaded and simply gave blanket approval to abortions irrespective of need.

This is not a partisan issue. It is moral issue of profound importance. It is an issue upon which each individual must reflect and make up his own mind. I have always lived by the philosophy that it is my duty to protect, enhance, improve, cherish and embrace human life in all its dimensions. I have always asked myself the fundamental question: what is human life?

As one who has experience in the area of nuclear science and nuclear technology of various kinds, let me say that in my estimation human life is a unique form of intelligence. At conception this intelligence is programmed and it evolves with the simple provision of an environment and a means of feeding. It is totally programmed, it is human life right after the moment of conception. So this is a moral issue. It is not a sociological, economic or environmental issue, although it has those implications. It is a fundamental issue of life, and the Parliament of Canada must look upon it as such. When this House passes legislation, it must be prepared to review it periodically to ensure that it serves the intent for which it was brought before us.

I have come to the conclusion that the legislation providing abortions, not only when the mother's life was in danger but because of social and economic conditions, is now being badly abused. Hospital committees are overloaded and simply give blanket approval to abortions.

This is not a choice which a woman makes alone. It is one which involves various people, in fact society as a whole in almost all cases. Today our hospitals are very complex institutions. Abortions involve the services of doctors, nurses and technicians who conduct various tests. It involves taxpayers, it involves society as a whole. Thus it is an issue with which we must all be concerned. Therefore, I am in favour of a re-examination of the law in this regard.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BANKS AND BANKING LAW REVISION ACT, 1980

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKING INSTITUTIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-6, to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass, and of the amendment thereto (Mr. Rae).

Mr. Cardiff: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before I recognize the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff) on his point of order, I would indicate that when the debate was interrupted at five o'clock the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) had the floor.

The hon. member for Huron-Bruce on a point of order.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would answer the questions I raised in my speech earlier this afternoon, with the consent of the House. He has had time to deliberate over the dinner hour if it would be proper at this time to answer those questions.

● (2010)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Such a request would require the unanimous consent of the House in view of the fact that an exchange of questions and answers is not normally appropriate during debate. I am concerned that the hon. member for Portage-Marquette may have some feelings on the matter.

Mr. Mayer: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent that for a brief period some questions and answers be exchanged?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make it very clear that the fact of replying to the questions of the hon. member will not prevent me from taking part in the debate. All hon. members should realize that the fact that I am replying to these questions will not deprive me of my right to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That is without question. The hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) will still have the right to speak later in the debate. This is an exception which was accepted by the hon. members.

[English]

In no way will this affect the minister's right to speak later.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, thank you, for this clarification. The hon. member was speaking on motion No. 27 designed to correct an amendment accepted in committee to restrict the leasing activities of banks. The hon. member was concerned that motion No. 27 might allow banks to carry on leasing operations and that this would emasculate, if I may use this expression, the amendment passed in committee. Is that what the hon. member asked me?

I should like to remind the House of the origin of this amendment. I was invited by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking to discuss the bill, and particularly to inform the members of this committee of the reasons for the amendments accepted in committee by the government. At that time, the evidence given by some senators and the questions they raised brought home to me the representations I had received from businessmen who operate in various spheres of this activity and who were concerned about the fact that banks would not be allowed to provide leasing for the purchase of certain types of equipment.

As I recall, I gave certain examples of this at the report stage. I gave the example of fire engines. I also gave the example of trucks with very specialized equipment that might be used, for instance, by a provincial hydro service, fitted with a basket to repair wires atop poles, or the same type of trucks fitted with a drill to dig holes for the poles, fire trucks used by some municipalities. I also talked about certain types of trucks mounted on both wheels and caterpillars which are used in the forest industry, but which in some provinces have to be licensed. The restriction which existed in the act with regard to licensing is well known.

I could give many other examples to the hon. member, but I want to assure him that the intention expressed in committee to make it impossible for the banks to lease in the field traditionally reserved to car and truck dealers has been followed up and is that of the government. Still, we did not want to deprive an entrepreneur, a municipality or a service business of the possibility of obtaining leasing through the banks since that source was limited, in that, for instance, a fire engine, must be bought "stripped". Another firm that specializes in fire engines will make a fire truck out of it and then sell it. That firm is not interested in leasing. To give more expansion to its market and facilitate business with the municipality, it was quite favourable to the idea of the bank going into leasing in that specific field.

The same goes for forestry equipment and some big trucks used for transporting oil, milk, etc., in bulk quantities. I wonder if the hon. member understands in what spirit the amendment was made. We want to preserve the spirit that prevailed in committee and give businessmen the opportunity of going to a financial service that is accessible and favourable to them.

[English]

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock I was referring to some of the concerns which I and members on both sides of the House feel about the revisions to this act and how they affect the livestock business. The livestock industry is very important to a large part of Canada particularly to western Canada where the beef cow herd is largely located. If my memory serves me correctly, roughly 80 per cent of the beef cows in Canada are located in the prairie provinces, thus it is a very important part of the economy of western Canada. Section 178 of the act is very important to those involved in the livestock business and to farmers in general.

● (2020)

If we refer back a couple of years, the figures show that roughly 45 per cent of the grain grown in western Canada was fed to livestock there, another 45 per cent was exported and the remaining 10 per cent was used for seed and industrial purposes. Livestock is important to the people involved in its production and sale but it is also important to producers of grain crops. About one third of the production on the prairies is fed to livestock within 30 miles of where it is grown. That gives an idea how important livestock industry is to western Canada.

We are all concerned about stability in agriculture, Mr. Speaker. The problems with roller-coaster prices of recent years are well known. There have been times when it has been difficult to find world markets for our products. When you consider that almost as much of our grain is fed to livestock as is exported, it is easy to realize how important livestock is to a stable base for the western economy. Without a livestock industry, in times of high production and low prices, it would be more difficult to find a market for the grain crops.

A large part of the packing industry in western Canada has been lost in the last ten or 12 years because of variations in livestock numbers. At the present time there are only three points in western Canada where hogs are slaughtered. There are several points in Edmonton where hogs are still slaughtered. In Saskatchewan, where I was born, raised and educated, there is only one point and only one plant that is still in the business of slaughtering hogs, and that is Intercontinental Packers in Saskatoon. Winnipeg is the only point in Manitoba where hogs are still slaughtered. The declining packing industry in western Canada makes it important to be careful about the kind of security offered to the livestock industry in section 178 which is to replace the old section 88 of the Bank Act.

I should like to refer to a couple of things said in recent times by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, how attitudes and how statements can change as circumstances change. Prior to the Quebec referendum, the Minister of Agriculture addressed the Quebec Farmers' Association at Sawyerville, Quebec, on May 7. In part he said as follows:

> The 'Crowsnest Rate' and the Feed Freight Assistance Program have reduced the cost of grain shipped into Quebec and thus lowered the cost of producing hogs and poultry here. These subsidies have resulted in benefits for western grain growers, but they have also decreased the natural comparative advantage for livestock production on the prairies and given assistance to livestock producers in the east.
>
> Also, the 'Crowsnest Rate' has favoured the growth in Quebec of processing plants for meat, flour and vegetable oils since products processed in the west are not eligible for the preferential statutory rate, while the raw products are.

That is an interesting statement by a minister trying to get a point of view across just before the Quebec referendum, Mr. Speaker. After the referendum, in a speech to the Canadian Feed Industry Association in Quebec City, the minister had this to say:

> On this subject of feed freight assistance, you know it is sometimes said that the program has encouraged eastern pork production to the disadvantage of the west. So I was interested in a study that Dr. Perreault has done which shows that the assistance only amounted to about 50 cents a hog in Quebec on the majority of pork produced here. So the assistance is not much of a factor, especially when you consider how extensive the Quebec feed industry was in the first place.

I find this a rather inconsistent position for a minister of agriculture who should be speaking on behalf of all the livestock producers in the country. In some ways it is unfortunate that a minister who has as his constituency the total agricultural community should find it convenient to make conflicting statements at different times and in different places about the things that concern some of us in regard to this bill.

I think we all agree that changes to section 88 of the Bank Act are needed. Perhaps it is necessary to have some understanding of the way in which livestock is marketed in this country to see the necessity for such change. Livestock is still marketed largely on trust in this country. I think it is fair to say that those of us engaged in this business can do a lot of our selling by telephone when dealing with packer buyers and order buyers who have had past experience with producers. This only works if everyone involved has complete confidence in the system, of course. The old section 88 really did not accomplish as much as it could have in the way of giving producers confidence in the marketing system as it limited their ability to claim against a packing house to roughly $7500. Anyone familiar with the cattle business knows the expenses that face producers. Fertilizer costs, machinery costs, repair costs, land costs and taxes have all increased substantially since the present Bank Act has been in place. It is a very expensive proposition to raise livestock for sale. A lot of producers sell their stock at a particular time of the year, so it is important that the buyer has the means to pay, otherwise the whole year's work is in jeopardy. Things are different in the case of other farm products. For instance, the dairy industry, because of its very nature, markets on a daily basis. The grain industry can store the product until the market is right and so a whole year's work need not necessarily be marketed at one time. In contrast, a farmer who raises calves may sell them all in one day. We therefore have good reason to be concerned about the old section 88 of the Bank Act. I am aware of several cases of packing houses experiencing financial problems in the last ten or 12 years which resulted in producers being unable to collect what was due to them.

I am familiar with the arguments advanced by the banks and the packing companies to the effect that if the banks are not allowed to take security on livestock, as was the case under the provisions of the old section 88, the packing industry would suffer. These arguments usually refer to the small packing plants. It seems to me the case is exactly the reverse. As we well know, in this country the packing industry is dominated by the "Big Three"—Canada Packers, Burns and Swift, who account for over 50 per cent of the kill. I think those institutions are financially secure, although such an assumption does not necessarily follow when one remembers what has happened in the past year to such large manufacturing institutions as Chrysler and Massey-Ferguson. However, the three large packing houses are public companies and I think it would be quite difficult for them to have financial problems without a great many people being aware of the fact.

Some of the small packing plants are independently operated, family-owned businesses, and are well run. But it is a competitive field and it is not uncommon for companies to get into financial difficulty. If there is any suspicion that one of the smaller packing houses is having financial problems, I think the producers would be hesitant to deal with it. We must do all we can to assure that, irrespective of the size of the packing company or processor, the producer is protected by this act. This would go a long way to assuring that the smaller packer had as much chance to compete with the larger packer as possible. Our concern is that the bill before us does not go far enough in terms of assuring the producer there will be no financial problems and that his product will have prior claim in any bankruptcy settlement until it is paid for. If there is any hint of that not being the case, and I argue strongly that the smaller packer will be disadvantaged as opposed to the major three packers in this country, Swift, Canada Packers and Burns, that simply does not wash as an argument for the banks to use.

● (2030)

It is precisely the opposite. If they were interested in seeing a competitive packing industry, they would ensure as much financial security in the hands of the producer when dealing with processors as possible. This would go a long way toward seeing that some of our smaller packers have as good a chance to bid on livestock as the larger packers.

If we look at the experience across the line, we see that the Americans have also had some problems. Some of us are aware of the larger problems they had. In 1976 they passed a packers and stockyards act. I will quote part of that act I referred to in the speech I made on second reading of this bill on May 6, as reported at page 772 of Hansard. It is a concern I am dealing with tonight. I quote from the act:

—in effect, that all livestock purchased by a packer, and all inventories of or receivables or proceeds from meat sales, shall be held by a packer in trust for the benefit of all unpaid cash sellers until full payment has been received.

Since that act was put in place in 1976, I understand there has not been one case where a producer has not been fully paid for his product after a financial problem had arisen with the processor or packer. Therefore, to say that nothing can be done is not accurate. We need only look to our neighbours to the south. They put in place legislation which protects producers from some of the problems we are pointing out this evening.

The banks like to have as much security as possible. They like to say that putting in this kind of provision which would guarantee producers full payment, would put an extra burden on the banking industry and cause them added costs in the form of bonding and extra security and, therefore, make them less competitive and less able to do the job. That is nothing but rubbish. It is not borne out in the example we saw across the line in 1976 when the Americans put in their packers and stockyards act. In fact, we have seen the exact opposite. We have seen the packing plants there survive, grow and flourish. Their return to the producer, based on a percentage of the consumer's dollar coming back to the farmers, is greater than the percentage of consumer dollars going back to the producers in this country. So that is another argument that just does not wash. We were concerned about this when we were in government and the Bank Act was in front of us prior to the last election. There was concern on both sides of the House. When we were in government, I was part of the finance committee which looked at this. One thing that came out during the election campaign was a statement by the Liberal national campaign headquarters. It was part of their election policy.

An hon. Member: Their propaganda.

Mr. Mayer: That is probably more accurate, based on what we see in front of us in the bill and what was promised during the campaign. I will read a section of the Liberal party agricultural platform which was released on January 30, 1980. I quote:

A change in the revision to the Bank Act (section 88) will be made in order to permit better financial security for the farmer, on agricultural produce in transit storage or processing, by providing protection to producers of all agricultural products (not just crop and dairy products) and that protection will be extended to a maximum of $250,000.

That was said during the election. It is interesting to note that the chairman of that campaign committee is our present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). One would think that if anyone had been aware of what the policy was and how it was developed, it would be our finance minister. As the finance minister in the new government, one would think he would have seen fit to honour a commitment made to the farmers of this country during the last election.

What happened is that we have a formula. It is based on the most recent annual average index number of farm prices for agricultural products for Canada, published by Statistics Canada, at the time the receiving order or claim is made. That figure is to be multiplied by $400. My understanding is that will roughly raise the limit from $7,500 to $100,000. I certainly agree that is a step in the right direction. However, the principle of this is not attacked. It should not be lawful in this country to let any processor or packer take as security a product from a farmer, or anybody for that matter, and give it to a bank as security without the producer being fully compensated. In the case of financial problems, the processor or packer can give that product to the bank as security, without the farmer fully being paid for it.

Something is not yours until it is fully settled and fully paid for. It goes a little beyond that when you understand the marketing system in this country. As I stated before, it is largely based on trust. Producers deal with agents, order buyers and packing buyers with packing houses on a year to year basis. They do not get a chance to deal with them regularly and keep up to date with some of the problems that may be encountered in the processing plant. Dealing is based largely on trust. A lot of producers could find themselves in the position of not being aware of problems they are getting into, particularly when they feel that their cattle are theirs until they are fully paid for. According to this act, the procedure that is sold to a packing plant can be taken by a bank. The bank would then have prior claim on it over the $100,000 limit. The producer could be out any amount over $100,000. That sounds like a lot of money, $100,000. In fact, it is a lot of money. But if you look at what is involved in raising livestock and getting it to market, a lot of expense is incurred along the way in terms of producing costs. In many cases the farmer is not dealing with his own money. He is dealing with borrowed money, lines of credit, credit accounts with fertilizer dealers, fuel dealers, machinery dealers and repairs. In a lot of cases, he could be out an additional cost over and above his cost of production. Therefore, if we cannot deal with processors and packers with complete trust and confidence, no matter what happens after our livestock leaves our premises, we are calling into question some of the premises upon which our marketing system has been based throughout the years.

• (2040)

The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), a long-time and well-respected spokesman for the cattle industry in this country in various fora has pointed out very aptly and accurately that on page 188 of the bill subsection (6)(b), "claims of a grower or producer of products of agriculture for money owing by a manufacturer to the grower or producer for such products"—I will not refer to the full paragraph—is incomplete and that there is probably a technical omission there in the sense that after "claims of a grower or producer" we should insert three words "or his agent" so that the section would read, "claims of a grower or producer or his agent of products of agriculture for money". I think hon. members would agree that that is a technical omission. It would simply mean that a person involved in the marketing of livestock could then use an agent, and the agent would be an extension of the producer himself. In that sense the producer would be covered under the subsection of this act to which I just referred.

Unless we insert those three words within the subsection, it seems to me there is a fairly substantial loophole, if we understand the way cattle are marketed in this country, because many people market cattle through an agent; they do not market them directly. They market them through an agent, and the agent then becomes an extension of the producer himself. If we leave out those three words in the case of a financial problem with the processor, it seems to me we leave open the possibility that the producer would not be protected at all under this act. As I said, when we understand the way the marketing system in this country works, I think it becomes clear that a good portion of cattle and livestock which is marketed in this country is marketed either through or by an agent acting on behalf of a producer. While it may be a technical error, and a minor one, in terms of its significance and its relevance and the act's ability to do the job it was intended to do, I think it would be very useful to have those three words inserted so that the act would read: "claims of a grower or producer or his agent of products of agriculture for money owing" and so forth.

I think that is something we should look at very closely with an eye to putting those words in if at all possible because without them, as I said, I think there is a possible large loophole in terms of what the effectiveness of this act could be.

From my recollection of the finance committee in the previous Thirty-first Parliament, there was much agreement in the committee that the principle which I have tried to outline here should be in the act so that not only the producer but also the people acting on behalf of the producer—in this case the agent of the producer—should be considered an extension of the producer himself. I do not really think there would be many problems about getting an agreement to insert those three words into the act. As I said, this would certainly tighten up the act and make it serve the purpose better than the present act without the addition of those three words.

That about covers the points I wanted to make in relation to this act. I will summarize them briefly. First, this act really does not go far enough. I think the $100,000 is an improvement. I would much sooner have seen the $250,000 which was promised during the election campaign, but I think the best option we could have would be to adopt in principle a statement saying there should be no limitation whatsoever on livestock producers so that when they do sell their cattle, no matter what the amount is, they are entitled to full payment of that amount before their produce becomes part of a bankruptcy settlement.

I welcome the change in the definition whereby direct products of the soil and dairy products are now classified in the same way as livestock, which was previously not the case. I pointed out that precisely the opposite should have been the case, since people who market on a regular basis are less susceptible to severe financial hardship. If there is a problem with marketing what they produce on a daily or weekly basis, people in the livestock business market on an annual basis, and we would certainly like to see this act tightened up so that there are no loopholes in terms of agents acting on behalf of producers in the marketing process as we now know it.

Mr. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not take a little time this evening to make a few comments with respect to the bill which everyone is so anxious to pass here tonight. We have only been at it for five years. The act expired in 1977, and we began the debate relating to changes in the Bank Act two years prior to that. As we all know, the act was extended until now, and we are finally getting around to putting it straight and doing what we should have done in 1977 to make the changes which have been discussed.

There is a lot of mystery about the Bank Act. The average Canadian really does not understand how the banks in this country function. Frankly, I do not understand very much about it either.

Mr. Skelly: You have come to your concluding remarks, I hope.

Mr. Oberle: My friends in the New Democratic Party understand all about banks. I always say that if it had not been for banks, I probably would not be in politics.

Mr. Knowles: Explain!

Mr. Skelly: That is one of the criticisms we left out.

Mr. Oberle: There is a lively peanut gallery among the members of the New Democratic Party. I will give them a little lesson in banking. They are usually the great defenders of personal freedom and liberty. One of the freedoms I espouse most is economic freedom, and I have always thought I could be freest if I managed all my own affairs. In my case, that meant to start my own business and be the master in my own house. I did not want to punch a clock. I always wanted to be the master of my own affairs. I thought that this country to which I had come was a place where a man was entitled to the rewards of his labour as long as he was prepared to pay for his mistakes.

Mr. Skelly: Order!

Mr. Oberle: A member of the New Democratic Party wants to call me to order, but I have not said anything yet. They know exactly what is coming.

Mr. Rae: I have no idea what is coming, and neither do you.

Mr. Oberle: They are waiting with great anticipation. When I said bankers got me into politics, I said so because I started quite a number of small businesses. All of them, incidentally, were successful. None of them went bankrupt.

An hon. Member: Yet.

Mr. Oberle: No, they are still going. Because I wanted to have a clean shirt when I came to Parliament, I divested myself of most of my business interests. However, I developed a skill in talking to bankers and convincing them of the viability of small businesses which employed usually two, three, five, ten or 120 people. It requires quite a bit of skill today—and did 20 years ago or 25 years ago when I started my first business—to convince a banker that you have something going for you, that you have a better mousetrap, that you deserve a place in the marketplace and that you need some credit to get started.

Our banks do not give venture capital to small businesses. I am not making any excuse for this absolute statement. There is just no way that our banks are in any way interested in helping young people to get started in business. Whether that business is farming or in the manufacturing sector does not matter. I do not care if you are a member of the New Democratic Party or any other party; if you cannot walk into your bank manager's office and prove to him beyond all doubt that you really do not need money, you simply will not get any credit.

I always say that in our country there is no single entity, whether it is government or anything else, which has more influence in the marketplace than the banks but which at the same time has less understanding of what goes on in the marketplace, particularly with respect to the small business sector.

The reason I wanted to say a few words about that tonight is that over the last 25 years of frustration and starting businesses—which probably could have been four, five, six or ten times their size if bankers had co-operated—I always said there would be a day when I would get even with some of the bankers with whom I have had to deal.

● (2050)

We do not want to be too unkind tonight, but certainly they do not deserve any credit whatever. The 13 chartered banks in this country do not deserve any credit at all for helping small business. In fact, I would say they deserve the lion's share of the blame for the economic situation in which we find ourselves today because they ignore completely the incredible role which the small business sector plays in our society. It is the small businessman who creates the permanent jobs quickly with the right incentives and in the right business climate. It is the small businessman who always comes up with new ideas. To me, sir, there is not much difference between the bureaucrats who sit around in offices in the nation's capital, public or corporate bureaucrats, and the bureaucrats employed by large corporations. They are nine to five people, they go home on weekends, they take a month's holiday annually and they cannot care less. It is the small businessman who is out there competing in the manner in which Adam Smith intended, in the free enterprise manner. It is the small businessman who invents the mousetrap and who thinks for 24 hours a day so as to stay ahead of the next guy.

I say that the banks have no comprehension of what is going on in the marketplace and of the role which the small businessman plays. And why should they? Imagine an official of the Chrysler Corporation coming to a bank manager and telling him he needs $100 million. Imagine how much time the bank manager would have to spend talking to small businesses to lend them $100 million! With Chrysler he can do it in a two-hour session and a working luncheon. But here is $100 million and, my God, the branch can lend that sum of money because it is great business. It is not necessary to ask the client for security and tangible assets in the case of a large corporation such as Chrysler because the government is the security. If something happens, the bank can go to the government because the impact on the economy would be so great that the government would have no choice but to bail out the corporation. We have seen recent examples of that.

But let us consider the person who works for that large corporation—and I will get in my dig at the NDP at this juncture. Members of that party come to the House every day and every time one of them is up during the question period he talks about economic nationalism and about all these horrendous things that the multinational corporations do to our country. Yet when one of these multinational corporations comes to us for help, as has been the case of Chrysler—they stand in their place and they scream, holler, assert themselves and demand from the minister that he act right away to save jobs. The reason they do this is the invisible handshake—we have heard of the invisible hand of Adam Smith—between large corporations and multinational unions. They all get together in the board room behind closed doors. They say "there is one multinational corporation which we will have to protect but every other corporation that is not unionized or does not contribute to the NDP coffers can go down the drain." The small businessman is left in the dark and so is the employee of small businesses. I dare say that a person who works for Massey-Ferguson or Chrysler and then finds himself out of a job is no better off or worse off than a person who works at the corner grocery store, the baker, the shoemaker, the plumber or an employee of another small business. He is just as hard up as the other fellow, but the government never comes to the aid of the small business which goes broke. The bank moves in, calls its note and saves its skin. Usually there are enough assets to ensure that the bank does not suffer. I do not know of any bank with which I have dealt, particularly in the north and in the small communities in Canada, which has ever made a bad loan to a small businessman, the reason being that they hardly make any loans to them and when they do, they are protected well enough.

What we have been trying to do in these five years of talking about the Bank Act is, because of our belief in free enterprise and competition, to build in a little more competition. We have made comparisons with our system here, which is still a mystery. It became a mystery when we first brought in the fractured reserve system according to which the bank lends you a certain amount of money and then is allowed to lend a certain amount of "blue sky", in other words they lend you more money than they have in deposit. However, I do not want to go into the technicalities because that would be too difficult for some of the members of the NDP to understand. What we wanted to do was to build in some competition to match what was going on in the marketplace throughout the country. We have 13 chartered banks in this country. In the United States there are 1,300 chartered banks, all of them competing with each other. If there is a personality conflict between you and your banker, if he does not like your type of proposal or if you cannot convince him of the potential success of the prototype or of the plant where your particular mousetrap would be manufactured, you just go to another bank and sell your idea to them. Eventually you convince someone of the possible success of your idea and you get the money. Indeed, there were several occasions in my business career, one which I remember in particular, which have made me say to this day that the banks become involved in politics. There was a time when the 13 chartered banks in this country simply did not make any loans to small lumber companies because they did not like the government in power. So if you were in British Columbia at that time and you wanted to expand your business, as we did then, you had to go to the United States and get your money there. Lo and behold, there was all kinds of money available because we had all kinds of assets. As for our banks, it did not matter how much you had in assets, how much you had in inventory, how much protection there was under section 88. They said that lumber and wood converting industries did not have a very bright future under that particular government, so they would not make any loans to them. I do not know whether this had anything to do with the fact that there are certain people in the larger companies integrated with the multinational companies, who sit on the boards of directors of the banks, but certainly there is room for all kinds of suspicion. If you really want to get started in a small new business, you have to go to a foreign country to promote your idea. That is a very sorry state of affairs.

The government is well aware that our banks are not interested in small business, not interested in venture capital. From time to time we have found it necessary to intervene as a government, knowing how important small business is as a sector of the economy, to put in place some measures, to create some institutions which will help the small business sector. An example of that is the Farm Credit Corporation. Why should we need a Farm Credit Corporation in this country? If banks did the business which they were set up to do, that is to make loans to businessmen—and, after all, a farmer is a businessman—what reason would there be for the government to be in the business of lending money to farmers? The reason, as I have stated, is that banks are in no way interested in helping out anyone who wants to start a business, regardless of the security they offer. We must remember the farmer who has worked many years clearing his land and developing a farming enterprise. He has worked for many years and has never made any money. His only reward would be if he sold the enterprise, the farm and the land to his son. Then he could retire and live his declining years in comfort and security. The Farm Credit Corporation started out with good intentions, but it is in no way more equipped to respond to those particular needs. Officials of the corporation will say, "If you want to buy the farm from your father, he should underwrite the loan or perhaps make you a loan". A lot of Canadians are fed up with living in the breeding grounds of human misery in the concrete jungles of our large cities. They want to go out to the country to start farming enterprises. It would probably take at least $250,000 to build a viable farming operation today. At least it would take $250,000 to buy the land and clear it or to buy an established farm. We all know they would not get very much for less than $250,000.

• (2100)

But there are still some people out there who are—should I say—almost crazy enough to think that farm life is worth fighting for. So, they start working in sawmills or on construction. They take their earnings and put them in their farms; they clear a little more land. When they reach the point at which their farms are almost viable, they go to the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow a little money to get them over the hump, to buy that first piece of machinery. They realize it is no use going to the banks. I have established that fact. But, the Farm Credit Corporation says, "If you have not made the major part of your income on the farm, you are not entitled to a loan". Incidentally, they are not entitled to loans if they are in any way involved in provincial or federal politics. They cannot obtain loans from the federal government because there would be a conflict of interest.

The Farm Credit Corporation was established over the years to keep banks honest. Another example is the Federal Business Development Bank, a perfect example of how the government, from time to time, intervenes and hopes to help small businessmen or people in regions where banks are not as well represented as they are in larger centres. As we all know, the Federal Business Development Bank likes to be known as the bank of last resort. Indeed it is, because its interest rates are usually 2 per cent or 3 per cent higher. The government wants to be very careful not to enter into competition with the chartered banks. After all, the chartered banks have a monopoly and they do not want anybody to meddle with that, including the federal and provincial governments. So, the person interested in obtaining a loan must bring to the manager of the Federal Business Development Bank a letter indicating that the chartered bank will not lend him any money. Without that letter he cannot obtain a loan from the Federal Business Development Bank. The bank manager is not required to say why he will not lend him the money, but of course we know why. Then the FBDB will take a look at the person. It will charge an interest rate which is 2.5 per cent to 3 per cent higher. It will take a chance on him and will be lenient if he gets behind in his payments.

The FBDB takes other factors into account, but it is twice as onerous to be tied up with that bank than to a bank of foreign origin. Not only does the Federal Business Development Bank want a personal guarantee, it requires the personal guarantees, of one's wife, one's mother and one's mother-in-law, if it is able to get them. If one has a house and a boat, it wants the title to those. It will make sure, beyond all doubt, that when a person has his head half way out of the water, he has absolutely no security left in order to run to another bank to cash in on some of those assets. Anyone who deals with the Federal Business Development Bank will have no other assets with which to negotiate other loans.

From time to time the government goes to the chartered banks and indicates that it has a particular problem and wants to stimulate the small business sector. It asks the banks to make loans to the small business sector and, of course, there is the infamous Small Businesses Loans Act. They go to the chartered banks and say, "If you make a loan to a small businessman, we will guarantee it. In return we want you to give him a concession on interest of 1 per cent, 1.5 per cent or 2 per cent."

On many occasions I have received telephone calls from small businessmen. For example, one will phone and say, "There is a real demand for the product I am producing. I am in the tourist industry and a new road has been opened. I should be building a coffee shop, a service station, a service centre. I need some money. Where do I go?" Of course I will say, "The banks are set up to give you a small businessman's loan. There is a little concession on interest in return for a federal guarantee". Usually the businessman will call back and say, "I have gone to see my bank manager, but he has never heard of it". I am always very amused by that and then my amusement turns to anger. I will phone the vice-president of the bank and say, for example, "You have a bank manager in Watson Lake who has not heard of the Small Businesses Loans Act. Once you have told him about that act, will you tell him to call me so that I can discuss a certain client with him?" Promptly I receive a call from the manager of that small branch who will say, "I have talked with this client. His credit is good enough that we can make him a conventional loan. He is not entitled to a small businessman's loan". He is entitled to a conventional loan at an interest rate which, of course, is 1 per cent or 2 per cent higher than the government guaranteed loan. So, the poor businessman is tied to the rafters and the bank sticks it to him every time.

Perhaps I should bring my remarks to a conclusion because getting back to what I said at the outset, if I get wound up about banks I become very incensed and carried away. Of course not all bankers are alike. I have dealt with a lot of managers in small branches over the last 25 years who felt the same way as I do. When one requests a $20,000 or a $100,000 revolving loan, the bank manager is required to phone his regional vice-president or manager. For example, the areas in which I started my businesses were usually 700 or 800 miles away from Vancouver. Then the regional manager is required to pick up the phone and call Toronto for an okay. I have experienced that on several occasions. By the time he gets around to saying, "We will be willing to help you", the opportunity has passed. Usually one has generated enough income in the business by waiting, working 24 hours a day and keeping one's suppliers on the string, that by the time the bank gets around to helping, one does not need the help any longer and can tell the bank to find someone like Chrysler or Massey-Ferguson to give the money to. The banks always say, "We will be willing to help you", and I always say, "Who do you think is helping whom here? I am paying interest and I am creating a job for you". In fact the other day I told a banker that I paid him $7,000 in interest last year. Who is helping whom? I do not want their help. I do not need handouts.

• (2110)

I should say something positive about the act because we on this side are supporting some aspects of it. We tried to build into it some competitive features. We tried to give the credit unions a little more room to manoeuvre and to compete on a more equitable basis with the banks. The credit unions and caisses populaires should be entitled to participate under the Bank Act. That was not achieved. In my opinion the act will do little to encourage new charters which would start more banks. I would like to see more banks in western Canada, banks which are sensitive and interested in making loans in mid-Canada and the northern parts of our country. In so doing they would be sharing the potential and development of the north and of mid-Canada. What we have done is a small step in this direction. It is in no way sufficient to suit my particular need. I do hope that after this act is passed we will not wait another seven or eight years before we discuss further changes, which in my opinion are required to the Bank Act. I would prefer to see the committee continue its work. I would like us to continue talking to Canadians so that all of us here in the House of Commons will know just how the banks have been failing our economy and how they have been failing Canadians. This would enable us to see how little they have contributed to the welfare of all our citizens because of their monopoly position.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, we are on the third reading of the Bank Act and as I understand it the third reading is to discuss the broad general principles of the bill. There is no possibility of changing anything in it on third reading.

I suppose that is the best we could expect from a government which is contradictory in many of its policies. I read today that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) was elated because he was able to get 100,000 barrels of oil from Saudi Arabia at $30 a barrel. I cannot understand that elation when he is not prepared to pay Canadians $20 a barrel, which would keep the money in Canada. It is so contradictory the man in the street is becoming very frustrated.

With regard to the money which is required to operate the industries in the energy field, we are making it almost impossible for those people to get credit. The government professes to be a free enterprise government yet it is holding nationalization over the heads of those in the industry. To a great extent the smaller industries are dependent upon the multinationals which can get capital. Yet today we see the smaller industries leaving the country. Consequently, this postpones the day when we will have self-sufficiency in energy. At the same time the Prime Minister is chasing around the world trying to get oil elsewhere at double the price at which he can get it right here in Canada. I wonder why he does not enable the smaller companies to continue to receive credit and to operate within Canada by entering into an agreement at a proper price with the producing provinces instead of going half way around the world at public expense and being elated when he can arrange oil at $30 a barrel, probably $38 to $40 by the time the contract is completed. People upon whom we must depend to attain self-sufficiency are finding it very difficult to get credit. There are difficult times ahead. The longer the government waits to pay a proper price for the oil in Canada the longer we will be paying through the nose for foreign oil. It is affecting the credit of this country, which the banks will reflect in their thinking and in their loaning of moneys. As a result there will be hundreds of Ontario, Quebec and maritime boys, now earning good wages in Alberta and Saskatchewan, who will be left jobless in the next few months if this thing is not changed.

We talk about the Bank Act as though it were something that did not affect the lives of everyday people. The Bank Act is an instrument by which we can have good times or we can have poor times. I believe that banks have been responsible for much of the inflation in this country. They say inflation is caused by having too many dollars chasing too few goods. Every time the banks attack this problem they do so by raising the interest rates. They will reduce the number of dollars. And what does that mean? It simply means that no one can borrow the money.

The small businessman the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) detailed here so excellently a few moments ago is left high and dry. He is not able to expand his business. As a result there is less production and people are unemployed. If anyone is able to borrow it is only the wealthy, and the wealthy do not borrow when the interest rates are high. They wait until the interest rates are low before they borrow. That is one reason why they are wealthy. This leaves us with less production. Once again there are more dollars chasing fewer goods and so the interest rates go up again. I wonder how many years it will take the banking system of this country and the Bank of Canada to realize that this is not reducing inflation in Canada. It is just not working. Why do they not work from the other end by increasing production? If you have a pile of money this high and a pile of goods this high you will surely have inflation. The money will continue to rise. But if you have the goods coming up it is a far better way to fight inflation than raising interest rates, which defeats the very purpose. The small businessman cannot produce as much. Sometimes he goes out of business. I know a businessman in this country who is sweating his heart out because the interest rate is eating him up. He is wondering what will happen to his wife and children. The interest rate keeps rising and it is killing him.

Changing the Bank Act as we have been changing it will not affect that type of situation at all. The Bank Act has a tremendous influence over the daily lives of our people. In times of prosperity the banks let the credit out and when the banks begin to draw in that credit they can produce a depression in no time flat. As the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River said a few moments ago, the small businessman is being forgotten. This is exemplified in every case he gave, and we can produce hundreds more of them across this country. The small businessman is being forgotten. Today there is fear in the hearts of the small businessmen because they cannot produce more. Interest rates and unemployment are going higher and higher and production is getting lower and lower. This trend will continue until we begin to increase production.

● (2120)

I will be very interested to see the kind of competition the foreign banks have to offer in Canada. There is not much competition among the banks in Canada today. The situation is similar to the competition between CN and CP. These companies have identical rates in most cases simply because they are controlled by a government regulatory body, yet they are considered to be in competition with each other. In reality their prices are increasing simply because they are running two lines of track when they should be operating on one line if there was real competition between these companies, such as, in the trucking industry, there would be better railway facilities.

If foreign banks are required to operate under the same common policy as the chartered banks I doubt that there will be very much competition. In spite of the fact that many hon. members have a view to the contrary, one way to increase competition in the banking field would be to allow provincial governments to become involved. But it is felt that they might provide too much competition, so the provinces must compete in a backhanded way through such institutions as treasury branches and so on. If it were not for the credit unions, caisses populaires, trust companies and similar institutions, this country would be in a sorry plight.

Too many of the policies of the banks are contradictory. For example, what one pays today on exchange for $100 of American money will be different from what one pays tomorrow. The profits of banks are too high. I recently attempted to exchange some money in Edmonton, and I was horrified at the rate of exchange. The whole situation is a one-way street for the banks. They must pull up their socks and increase their services to the consumers.

I agree with the comments of the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River on the Prairie Farm Credit Corporation. These government organizations are usually formed as institutions of last resort. As a result people are forced to be dishonest in order to get a loan. In fact they encourage you to be dishonest. They tell people to go to their bank manager for a letter saying that the bank will not lend the money. I would not tell a young farmer that he must lie in order to get money from the Prairie Farm Credit Corporation, although many people are being told to go to the bank manager for such a letter. These corporations lend money at such prohibitive rates that no young farmer can survive. With the high interest rates and the price of land today, the young farmer is sunk before he begins.

These programs are established at public expense as banks of last resort. It would be far better if a bank loaned money on the basis of credit. As the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) said a few moments ago, this act establishes a maximum amount which livestock dealers may borrow from the banks. Why is there a borrowing ceiling for livestock dealers? There is no ceiling for oil companies, wholesale companies, packing houses or other industries. They may borrow up to any amount. The livestock dealer is just as responsible as any other businessman in the country. I cannot follow this kind of logic, nor can the livestock dealer.

Perhaps the amount of $100,000 will be satisfactory for many farmers, but that is not the point with which I am dealing. There is a borrowing limit for livestock dealers, but no limit for any other group, and this has not been explained satisfactorily to me. We are now on third reading and that clause remains in the bill and will become law within hours. Banks are quite able to deal with loan applications from livestock dealers. They will provide loans commensurate with the collateral, and that is the principle upon which the system should work.

Even with the Prairie Farm Credit Corporation a farmer has two strikes against him. For example, if a farmer buys a combine for $100,000 and the interest is deferred until, say, July, the Prairie Farm Credit Corporation will not loan that farmer the money, simply because he has taken out a temporary interest-free loan. I have received a number of letters of complaint on this very subject. There is a great difference in Alberta between banks, farm corporations and the treasury branches. At one time these institutions were in the same position. But this ridiculous rule came to the attention of the Hon. Marvin Moore, a former minister of agriculture in Alberta. When he learned that farmers were being denied credit because a farm implement dealer gave them a few months of interest-free payments, he changed the regulations. Today, the agricultural corporation in Alberta no longer withholds a loan for this reason. The Federal Farm Credit Corporation has come up with umpteen dozen reasons in this regard, all of which, in my view, are ridiculous.

Such policies do nothing but drive up the cost of food. What they are saying to the implement company is, "Do not give out these temporary interest-free loans and we will give out the money". This has the effect of driving up the cost of production. If these policies continue, it will not be long before the public outcry will become so loud that this clause will be changed and the provinces will be allowed to form banks to compete with the chartered banks.

Such a policy would have the same effect as when the government of Alberta created an insurance company to compete with the private insurance companies. The insurance rates of the government company were lower and in order to compete the other insurance companies had to lower their rates. It is an indication that these insurance companies were charging what the market would bear with no relation to risk, costs or profit. The banks are following this policy today.

• (2130)

There is one other point I would like to deal with, Mr. Speaker, and that is the expansion of credit. Governments have given the banks this tremendous instrument for making money. They have given the banks the sole right to expand credit. Unless people go into this matter very deeply they may not realize what it means. Today the banks extend credit by simply lending, say, $100,000 and then when it is paid back, they mark it off. Then there is the interest on that created money during that period based on how much money a chartered bank has deposited with the Bank of Canada.

As I have said in this House before, and will repeat as long as I remain, some of that expansion of credit belongs to the people. It would be a good thing if the banks would even go part way and offer half of the net profit on expanded credit, to build schools and hospitals, for instance. But the banks do not do that; they still make huge profits from the expansion of credit, a privilege given them by the government of the day.

I am not against banks, Mr. Speaker, and I do not mind that they make a profit, but that profit should be reasonable and the banks serve the people. In my view the expansion of credit has gone too far. The people of this country should derive some benefit from it. That is not possible as the act stands but I suppose it is the best we can expect from a government that is so full of contradictions in the energy field. It is pleased to pay $30 or $38 per barrel for foreign oil yet refuses to pay more than $16 or $17 for oil produced in this country. How long will the people accept that kind of thing, Mr. Speaker? Maybe after all the rigs have left the west and the hundreds of Ontario and Quebec workers return without jobs, the Prime Minister will begin to realize what has happened to the country. The government then may realize why people in the west feel alienated, distressed and frustrated. Much of that frustration could be alleviated if the government were to pay a reasonable price for western oil. If it made the same offer as that made by the Clark government, more rigs would come back into the country, more jobs would be created and the whole economy would benefit.

I suppose this bill is the best we can expect at this time, Mr. Speaker. I hope it will be used as an instrument to create more buoyancy in the country.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to some comments made in this House this evening. The amendments offered by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) and already voted upon were dealt with very quietly yesterday by both the Conservatives and Liberals. This evening the hon. member from Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) has spoken about the problems of the small businessman, of the housing industry, of the farmers and of the economy as a whole, yet not one member of the Conservative or Liberal party spoke in support of our amendments.

Just the other day the minister said that the government did not want to interfere with the banks in a social way, Mr. Speaker. What are we trying to do here? Are we trying to make room for the foreign banks to become competitors in this market? Are we considering the credit unions which, due to the curtailments imposed upon them, cannot compete in the same market as the banks? This bill provides all kinds of privileges for the banks but does not give any relief to the credit unions to allow them to become actively involved in this market.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) brought us the philosophy of the Social Credit party. Mr. Speaker, I have seen some of the philosophy of Social Credit governments in British Columbia. They decided to flood thousands of acres of heritage land, not to provide electricity for Canadians but in order to provide a backup resource of water for the United States. Future generations of Canadians will be denied the pleasure of that bottom land, Mr. Speaker. We have had other projects of that nature under Social Credit governments so I know something of the philosophy expounded by the hon. member for Bow River.

I should like now to deal with the structure of the boards of directors of banks and some of the decisions they make. We run into serious problems when we allow these boards of directors to control the flow of money and direct how it should be invested. The ramifications of this could be very serious indeed.

The Conservative and Liberal members who spoke did not mention the large donations made by banks to their parties. The banks make large donations to both parties, so let us align them, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Oberle: Where did you hear that?

Mr. Parker: I not only heard it, it is a matter of fact, because it is disclosed in accordance with the law. These are some of the things we should be very concerned about, Mr. Speaker.

Just yesterday the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) asked where I was when the committee was sitting. As he well knows, Mr. Speaker, we are only allowed a certain number of members on that committee and the amendments which we voted on today were the result of their efforts to get changes made to the Bank Act. I am proud of them, Mr. Speaker.

If the other two parties in this House had allowed the amendments to pass, a lot of small businessmen would have benefited, there would be more housing starts in the future and the economy of the country would improve. It is unfortunate that they did not agree with our view, because there was a tremendous opportunity here, after waiting five or six years, to improve the Bank Act. To be honest, the people of Canada have missed an excellent opportunity to have an instrument to serve our needs. I am hearing this throughout my constituency and from other areas of the country. Every day I hear of concerns about interest rates, housing starts and with regard to various other areas. We know through Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation that the need is there because they have conducted studies. In some areas there is a zero per cent vacancy rate, yet we hear about MURB housing, housing for doctors and real estate agents. They can put their money into deferments, apartment blocks and fancy housing which does not meet the everyday needs of the people of Canada.

• (2140)

When considering the Bank Act, we should look at meeting the needs in order to build a future of which we can be proud. We should develop an industrial strategy, conscious that if we invest in one area, we might hurt another section of the country or another business. We must include controls in the Bank Act to ensure that we are protected.

One member stated that even provincial governments are affected by decisions regarding the Bank Act. If they like a government, they feel the banks should not be involved in investments because they might make a government look a little better. Isn't that something, especially coming from a member of the Conservative party. Those are the kinds of concerns we have been expressing year after year. They are very real concerns which affect everyone. Maybe that is what the Liberals and Conservatives want. Maybe they want that kind of society. We in the New Democratic Party have a new vision. If the banks are making that kind of profit, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) should be able to direct them to put their profits into such areas as interest rates so that housing, farming and small business can be assisted and that part of our economy can start moving again.

I also heard the comment that we in the NDP would fight to ensure that Chrysler is a viable business so that the employees would be protected. Naturally we will fight for that. We are not necessarily saying we should give that company money or issue a grant. We say that if money is made available or guaranteed by the government, we should have some equity. If the company later becomes profitable, the government should be reimbursed. If it does not become profitable, we should help make the decisions about what takes place in the company and the people who work for it.

I had the opportunity of visiting Windsor during very trying times. I say that if those kinds of decisions are not made, the government will feel the effects. It will not be Chrysler, but the people of Windsor, the governments involved and the country as a whole will be affected. If that company does not carry on its programs and does not follow through, the social aspects that will take place and the ramifications in the community will affect the whole country.

These are serious matters and we take them very seriously. I resent it when other members suggest that we in this party favour handouts. That is not our philosophy. Our philosophy is to join together in hard times and make an agreement with the companies involved. This proved very satisfactory in British Columbia. One of the Liberals mentioned yesterday many of the programs in which we were involved during our time in government. He referred to Ocean Falls and various companies in which we were involved. Many of them are now going down under another government. They are being sold off and are disintegrating. We will be back and we will again bring in those kinds of programs. These are concerns of the New Democratic Party. They are the issues we would like to see debated. We offered a tremendous number of amendments to this legislation. They were rejected by the other parties. Therefore, we have no alternative but to decline to support this Bank Act. It is unfortunate that some of the amendments could not have been accepted, but that is something the Liberals and Conservatives will have to live with.

[Translation]

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, pursuant to Standing Order 6(5), that the House be allowed to sit beyond the normal time of adjournment in order to complete the third reading of Bill C-6.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the motion pur forward by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette). If there are members who object, will they please rise.

And more than ten members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There being more than ten members who have risen, the motion fails.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on third reading on the general and broad principles of this very important bill. The banking system in Canada is a stable and acceptable system, althouth not overly responsive in certain areas. It is the primary motive force in our society. It is the real essence of industrial and commercial catalyzation and the growth of our industrial society.

The banking system in Canada has enormous power. It controls to a large degree the recirculation of wealth, the creation of credit, in many instances the very growth of the social structure and social organization in which we live and, to a large degree, the growth and health of the industrial structure of our nation. In connection with the growth of any regional area, the chartered banks play an enormous role. That really diminishes with distance. The influence of a chartered bank in an area reduces in concentric circles around its point of location. As a result, in this nation we have had to grow sub-banking systems such as trust companies, credit unions, treasury branches, the Alberta Home Mortgage Corporation and various types of government institutions.

● (2150)

These have been necessary because of the location of the chartered banks in this nation. Where are the head offices of the chartered banks located in this nation? Let me just say that according to regions the west has three banking institutions with a capitalization of $100 million. The first is in British Columbia and has a capitalization of $25 million. There is one in Alberta, in Edmonton, which has a capitalization of $40 million. There is one in Manitoba, in Winnipeg, with a capitalization of $35 million. There are three in Ontario, in Toronto, with a capitalization of $275 million. There are four in the province of Quebec, in Montreal, with a capitalization of $425 million. There is one in the maritimes or the Atlantic provinces, in Halifax, with a capitalization of $50 million.

The distribution is such that in the western part of this nation there are three institutions with a capitalization of $100 million. In central Canada there are seven institutions with a capitalization of $700 million, and in Atlantic Canada there is one institution with a capitalization of $50 million.

We all know that the investment effect goes far beyond the extent of capitalization. This nation is a large nation growing in a certain pattern. In western Canada we will be needing more like $200 billion for energy investment in the next ten years plus. To a large degree this capitalization was intended to be generated by the profits of the industry itself. What the federal government has done with its energy policy has been to reduce this self-capitalization and place the industry, again to a large degree, at the mercy of the centralized national banking institutions.

My first point is that if this nation is to grow in accordance with its capability, the government and the national banking institutions must look seriously at their locations in the nation. There is no need to have seven chartered banking institutions headquartered and centralized in Toronto and Montreal. I want to repeat that. There is no need in the future for centralizing seven of the largest banking institutions with a capitalization of $700 million in Toronto and in Montreal.

The government should recognize that there is a need to examine the possibility of relocating the head offices of some of these financial institutions. I can ask a very specific question: Why should not a financial institution—not the largest but a medium-sized one—be located in St. John's, Newfoundland in view of the capacity of the oil industry in that area?

Mr. Rompkey: Why not Grand Falls?

Mr. Yurko: Why should there not be serious consideration by these large banking institutions in terms of examining the head office location in Calgary, where much of the energy industry or the energy capitalization in western Canada is needed? Indeed, why not one in Quebec City? Why should not Quebec City have as its apex centre a banking institution to fan out its influence in concentric circles around that centre? That is what happens with banking institutions. As you go farther and farther from the apex centre of banking, there is less and less knowledge at the banking centre and therefore less and less response. The branch banks do not work very well in that regard, and several people have indicated that we have needed trust companies, treasury branches and credit unions to provide risk and venture capital because risk and venture capital is not provided as you get farther and farther from the centres of these banking institutions. They become too conservative. They lack knowledge of the outlying points of this nation, which is such a big nation.

It is extremely important that the banking institutions themselves and the government examine seriously the location of some of the chartered banking institutions in this nation. There is a need for change in order to bring balance to this nation from one end to the other. Indeed, western concerns, which are paramount today, could be diminished if there was more control over the formation, recirculation and direction of capital within and from western Canada. One of the reasons for the energy battle which is going on in this nation this very moment is that western Canada is trying very hard to create a capital pool so that that capital can recirculate from its own apexes or points of influence rather than constantly from central Canada.

The second point I wish to make deals again with the power of influence and the power of decision-making with regard to the growth of the national industrial equation which is associated with the chartered banks being located in central Canada. I plead with the financial institutions and chartered banks to look very liberally at a policy of appointing to their boards of directors an appropriate representation from the entire nation rather than just from the centre of the nation.

If these institutions will not move their head offices out, it is very important that they bring into the centre, to the point of decision-making and policy formulation, Canadians who understand fully the aspirations, the desires and the potential of various parts of this nation. It is only then that this nation will experience its full growth potential. It is only then that we will be shifting our population in accordance with capability and ability for development of our vast resources and our vast potential. It is vital that chartered banks and the government be very interested in where the banks get the people to man their boards of directors and that there be a representation from this entire nation on the boards of directors of these chartered banks. There should be a very liberal representation, and I do not mean in a partisan political sense.

I have just one other point to make, and it has to do with financing exports and imports and particularly Canada's vast potential for exporting not only goods but also technological competence. This nation has educated its population. It has inherent in it a technological competence per capita which is second to none in the world. Indeed, it is even greater than that in the United States.

This technological competence is desired and needed in many places in the world, but technological competence can be exported hand in hand with available capital. I would like to see the chartered banks put together a structure for integrating the use of capital in association with the export of technological competence from Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we can call it ten o'clock, and I beg to adjourn the debate.

• (2200)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—COMPENSATION FOR FARMERS DUE TO EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO U.S.S.R.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): I rise in the adjournment debate with respect to a question I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in his capacity as spokesman in this House for the Canadian Wheat Board. It referred to what was and still is a concern of mine, and a great many producers in western Canada, with respect to compensation to them in light of the American grain embargo, which the Canadian government decided to support. After the invasion of Afghanistan almost a year ago one of the things which was decided upon by the Americans was to impose a grain embargo on the Soviet Union as a method of showing their displeasure with what they were doing in Afghanistan. This country decided to go along with the embargo based on certain concerns. One of the concerns related to how the Americans would conduct themselves in terms of international grain sales. Another, which affects us directly in this country, was the fact that it was agreed by the Clark government at the time that producers of grain should not carry the full expense of Canada's international policies. In this case it was foreign policy. It was decided by the previous government that if it could be demonstrated that there were losses of income to western grain producers they should be compensated by the Government of Canada for those losses. The drop in the price of grain from January to the spring of this calendar year was something in the order of 75 cents a bushel. I think this is documented and can be verified by looking at the grain markets and the grain prices.

The answer I received from the minister back in June was:

> This decision was made by the previous government and it is supported by the present government; there is no doubt about that. Obviously, the previous government knew that the decision made last January would have certain effects on volumes and on prices. That is why they put forward the idea of compensation.

It is interesting to note that the Minister of Transport, who speaks in this House for the Canadian Wheat Board, agreed in principle that compensation should be paid. He also said in June in answer to another question in this House that there would be a cabinet paper in a few weeks, at the end of the grain season. Those of us who know something about the grain season understand that the crop year ends on July 31, which has long since passed. The crop year runs from August 1 to July 31. So when the minister referred to the end of the grain season he was referring to July 31. We are now passed the middle of November and are far beyond the end of the crop year with no indication from this government as to what the level will be or, indeed, whether there will be compensation paid to western producers. During that period we have heard many conflicting statements from different cabinet ministers involved in this matter. We have heard statements by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), by the Minister of Transport and by the minister in the other place who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Last week the Minister of Agriculture said he hoped to have a cabinet decision at the end of November on how much producers will be paid. His colleague, the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board disagrees with the agriculture minister and says he does not think a decision will be made until late December, possibly not until January. One cannot help but wonder who is speaking for the government in this connection and exactly what their policy is.

● (2205)

It is unfortunate that we cannot have a clear indication from the government as to what their policy is to be. Just yesterday, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), in reply to a question by a member of the NDP from Saskatchewan, said:

> There has never been a complete embargo, only a partial embargo. The way in which it has been phrased is in terms of normal levels of trade in those products. That is still the rule. We are now into a new crop season and we have to try to establish what that means for this year.

So, according to the Secretary of State for External Affairs we do have an embargo. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board says that even though the boycott has been ended, Canada will not increase its exports to the U.S.S.R. to make up for the American shortfall. He said we do not have an embargo but the Secretary of State for External Affairs says we do.

The point is that western producers have lost grain. Our government agreed on the level of exports to the Soviet Union of 3.8 million tonnes, and evidence has been available from independent groups, from universities—the University of Saskatchewan just recently completed a study which said that there had been $67 million in lost sales; there have been other private studies and I have press reports—which say the losses have been in the neighbourhood of $200 million. I think it is very important, before we get too far away from the grain sales we are talking about, that some level of compensation be agreed upon so that the producers in western Canada know whether they can expect compensation from this government. I strongly urge that this government make good on its promise to western producers. I urge the government to make a statement tonight stating that compensation will be available and indicating the level at which compensation will be provided.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the U.S.S.R. grain trade restraints and the government's commitment to compensation. I should emphasize that we are talking about restraints on grain trade and not an embargo.

First of all, with respect to our participation at international meetings, a subject which the hon. member question last June, we have been full and active participants. Granted, the Wheat Board did not go to the Brussels meeting in May, but Canada was represented by the grains' group which consulted fully with the Wheat Board before going. The Wheat Board was represented at the meeting in Adelaide.

There have been several questions recently about the government's position on the restraints. Let me repeat what the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) said yesterday. He said that there has been no change in policy. Likewise, the government remains committed to compensation and we expect a determination very soon on the level of compensation.

What often gets lost in this discussion, Mr. Speaker, is that our over-all export performance has been very good. Grain exports were up 20 per cent last year, and the Wheat Board has advised us that they will be able to sell all the grain available for export this year. So the western producer will not suffer.

As far as the price is concerned, things have been looking up since earlier this year when the price was temporarily depressed. Initial payment levels announced in July were up substantially from the preliminary levels announced last March. The continuing trend of strong international prices should also encourage the western farmer and this is something we are monitoring closely to see if any further change is warranted.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, the situation for the western farmer is looking quite positive this year.

PARKS CANADA—GRIEVANCES OF CORNWALL EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION THEREOF

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I was gratified to see in Hansard of June 19, 1980, at page 1877, that the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) aspires to "ensuring that the province of Ontario is well served and its interests are looked after." I was gratified that the Deputy Prime Minister should aspire thus, but also I was surprised in view of his budget which is a blueprint for disaster for central Canada. If the Deputy Prime Minister and his colleagues more directly responsible in this area which I am questioning truly acted in the best interests of Ontario, her people and the services that Parks Canada regional office provides, they would have accepted the findings of July 3, 1979, put forward by the ADM for Parks Canada, Mr. A. T. Davidson, and I quote his words:

> —we should move as soon as possible; that any major regional centre near Toronto would be suitable; but that Peterborough is now the most suitable.

They would have accepted the November, 1979, update from Parks Canada which found, for example, that:

> The capital program forecast for the region for the next five years provides for more than 70 per cent of expenditures to take place in locations which would be closer to Peterborough than Cornwall.

They would have acted also upon the conclusion that:

> An annual saving of $291,700 is estimated to result from the relocation of the regional office from Cornwall to Peterborough.

• (2210)

Instead they acted upon the needs of a member of the Liberal cabinet rather than the needs of all the people of Ontario. Nonetheless, I am willing to take his word that his is an honest aspiration, sincerely felt if not acted upon. Are his colleagues as sincere? Do they aspire equally to the well-being of Ontario, to the efficiency of government, to the course of action which serves best the majority of Ontario or her citizens and public employees who work on their behalf?

Certainly one could not come to such a conclusion on reviewing the lamentable and drawn-out Parks Canada affair. I am sure members opposite will recall their shameful and quite cynical decision to rescind the thorough and exhaustive eight-year effort to move the Ontario regional Parks Canada office from Cornwall to Peterborough, an effort which was ratified and encouraged by both sides of the House while in government.

The words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on June 9, then, have a sad and ironic ring, coming only a month after the announcement by his colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), that the regional office of Parks Canada should remain in Cornwall.

Or, do I understate the case? Am I being too deferential to the Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of the Environment and their colleagues opposite? Should I not state unequivocally, without a shadow of a doubt, that their decision was an irrefutable demonstration of the worst kind of pork-barrelling, that it demonstrated utterly their political opportunism, that it condemned them forever in the hearts of Ontario citizens and employees of Parks Canada, that it was crass, cynical and manipulative power-mongering of the most disgusting kind? This sits a trifle uneasy with the honourable aspirations of the Acting Prime Minister to ensure the prosperity of Ontario.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Simmons) urged that I borrow a leaf from his book on the matter of parliamentary decorum and recommended that I score "honourable, legitimate political points", as reported in Hansard of May 12. His honourable, legitimate political point was that the Conservative government deferred the move of Parks Canada to Peterborough for ten whole months. I am sure the hon. member will wish to acknowledge that as the Conservative government was in power for only eight months, we could hardly have deferred the decision on that matter for ten.

But the hon. member's claim to honour and legitimacy may be more vulnerable on a further issue. Knowing his concern for right and justice, I feel compelled to give him an opportunity to redeem himself. The hon. member went on to remind me that "the announcement to defer" this decision "made on August 3, 1979, was made by none other than the hon. member for Peterborough himself . . . the man who announced the deferral last August". This is an unmitigated falsehood, an untruth, a lie. It is furthermore couched in terms which damn the hon. member to his own condemnation—they are "cheap, cowardly and political".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair is somewhat confused. Is the hon. member quoting from a document or making these allegations directly?

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I am quoting the words of the hon. member when he said I used "cheap, cowardly and political" tricks. They are quotes from Hansard which I am trying to bring to the attention of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I do not think the Chair ought to take the view that the rules on parliamentary language change as between normal debate and the adjournment debate. There is much dispute about whether the kind of language the hon. member is now using is in fact parliamentary or unparliamentary language. But it caught my attention without a complete feeling of confidence on my part that I followed how the words came into usage. I think under the circumstances that I and the other officers of the Chair have a duty to take under reservation and consideration the language which is being used. But if I understood correctly, the hon. member should know, provided my interpretation is correct, that such a choice of words leads to difficulties in the House. Aside from the fact that it is likely to encourage such language by other members as well, it also leads in some cases to the appropriate demand that the Chair rule on whether the remarks should be withdrawn. In any event, the evening wears on. I will take that matter under consideration and I would ask the hon. member to exercise some caution in such a selection of words. If I understood the earlier part of the hon. member's speech correctly, he is probably somewhat irritated, but we do have our obligations in the choice of language.

• (2215)

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I respect the wishes of the Chair. I used these words because they were expressed in question period. As a result, I raised a question of privilege, but Madam Speaker ruled that I did not have a question of privilege and informed me that there were other means by which a member of Parliament could refute the statements made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment, one means being during the adjournment debate.

For this reason I raised this matter and those exact words which were used by the parliamentary secretary again tonight. I had hoped that the adjournment debate would afford me the opportunity to obtain the retraction which I have not been able to obtain from the parliamentary secretary through a question of privilege. I respect the wishes of the Chair.

Some may ask why I waited six months to refute the charges made against me by the parliamentary secretary. The reason is that it has taken six months for the matter to come up on the adjournment debate. I do not wish to prolong this debate any longer, but recognizing the fact that the Chair did take some of my time, I would ask the indulgence of the Chair and that it add a minute or so to my time so that I may proceed with my prepared text.

On May 15, 1980, only three days after the exchange to which I just referred, I sent my first courteous letter to the parliamentary secretary asking that his offer of making available to me the source of information be forwarded immediately to my office. On May 13 in this House, the hon. member stated that his source was "senior departmental officials". I have yet to receive a reply. On May 28 I wrote again repeating my request, but I received no reply. On the same date my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and former minister of the environment wrote to the member refuting absolutely his statements made in the House on May 12 and repeating, on my behalf, my request that he fulfil the undertaking he made in the House on May 13. To date I have received no reply.

On August 12, 1980, three months after the exchange and the promise, the hon. member for Vancouver South wrote again to remind the parliamentary secretary of his previous letter and to urge him to reply. On August 14 we received a reply. The hon. member stated in his missive—and I would ask members on both sides of the House to judge the honour and legitimacy of the reply—"in view of Madam Speaker's ruling, I saw no need to pursue the matter any further". He saw no need. As the hon. member for Vancouver South succinctly stated in his response to this pathetic and cowardly cop-out, "Madam Speaker disposed of the question of privilege. That ruling did not dispose of your word given in the House of Commons, nor could it".

In the interest of restoring the honour and integrity of the hon. member for Burin-St. George's in the eyes of his colleagues and the people of Canada and in the erasing of the soiled record of this dishonourable falsehood, I urge him to either retract his statement of March 12 or to fulfil his undertaking made in this House on March 12 to supply information to me and to the former minister of the environment, the hon. member for Vancouver South, on his source of "senior departmental officials"whose information he used in the House, which is not according to the facts.

● (2220)

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if the rules of the House for this particular exercise allowed, I would have risen on a point of order. The right of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) to refute statements is not at question, but he does not have the right to use unparliamentary language. Beauchesne is very clear about the use of the word "lie", Mr. Speaker; it is clearly and unequivocably unparliamentary and should not be permitted in this chamber.

I recognize that the hon. member and I have a difference of opinion on a matter which I shall come to in a moment. However strong, however vociferous that difference may be, however, I appeal to him, in the interests of maintaining the integrity of this House, not to stoop to using unparliamentary language to convey his ideas. I am sure he has within his fund of vocabulary the parliamentary means to convey the strength of what he feels on this particular subject. I appeal to the hon. member to withdraw. I would be prepared to yield the floor to him in order that he may withdraw the unparliamentary language he has chosen to use tonight. It does nothing for his standing in this House, it does nothing for the integrity of this House or the way in which we try to conduct debate from time to time.

Mr. Domm: A point of order.

Mr. Knowles: No.

Mr. Domm: He said he would yield the floor.

Mr. Knowles: There is no point of order.

Mr. Simmons: I indicated to the hon. member that I would yield the floor to him so that he could withdraw his unparliamentary expression, of course. I see that Mr. Speaker says I am not able to do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry to take up the time of hon. members again, but unfortunately the rules prohibit the parliamentary secretary from ceding the floor for someone who seeks to raise a point of order. It is not permitted.

Mr. Simmons: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the hon. member will take the first opportunity that the rules permit to withdraw his unparliamentary language.

I come now to the substance of the issue, Mr. Speaker. The decision made by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) last May is not to be reconsidered. It is a final, irrevocable decision and the sooner the hon. member for Peterborough recognizes that, the better for all concerned and the less pain there will be for the people he purports to help. The decision is irrevocable; it is final; it is not reversible; it is done.

In view of that, I do not know why the hon. member insists on fighting yesterday's battle. What good can he hope to achieve by this constant repetition, this constant tirade of events that cannot be undone? At the very least—and I say this kindly—he is unwittingly doing further damage to the people whose careers have been in limbo for some time. We recognize that and it is the reason we moved to make a quick decision on the subject.

I am sure the hon. member knows the facts of the case so I shall not take the time to respond on the facts but I will respond on the matter he has raised tonight.

In this House I undertook to expedite a matter for the House—not for the hon. member for Peterborough. He understands the case full well; he lived with it; he made an announcement last August and I undertook to expedite the matter for Madam Speaker. When she indicated that the matter was taken care of I, rightly or wrongly—and I believe rightly—assumed it had been disposed of.

The one point I make to the hon. member in concluding is that if he will refer to his announcement of August 3, he will realize that his government had been in power for two months and that his announcement further delayed the move for another year. That was the point of what I said to him in May and I repeat that point tonight. I dare him—I invite him—to contradict the truth of that particular statement.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—TOXIC CHEMICALS SPILL ON WEST COAST—LEGISLATION TO PREVENT REPETITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to a response I received to a question I put to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). His answer is recorded at page 931 of Hansard for May 12, 1980, and reads in part as follows:

I will examine it and report back as soon as possible.

To date there has been no response or report from the minister. To refresh the memory of the House, it related to the dumping in November of last year of a truck load of dangerous toxic chemicals just south of the Queen Charlotte Islands from a barge en route from Alaska to Washington state. These containers began to appear in the vicinity of Prince Rupert in May. They were and are dangerous to the public. At that time I directed my question to the Minister of the Environment. I wish to read a few brief quotations in an attempt to elicit from the parliamentary secretary some response and perhaps a tabling of the report which is due from the Minister of the Environment. I quote from a May 9 report:

● (2225)

U.S. Coast Guard spokesman Lieutenant Walters in Anchorage said this morning that he was "89 per cent certain" that a notice to mariners had been issued by the Coast Guard office in Juneau at the time the spill occurred.

Karen Gehing, spokesman for the Aids to Navigation Office in Juneau said, however, that a check of the November records showed that no such notice had ever been issued.

The chemical, which is highly toxic and volatile, is bacteriacide used in oil fields. More than 1.1 parts per million of the chemical over a period of 96 hours is lethal to fish and wildlife. It is also highly corrosive, has a flash point of 83 degrees Farenheit, and is absorbed through the skin.

I wish to quote from a report of May 12, 1980:

The loss, and damage to the ship, was reported to the U.S. Coast Guard in Seattle, but according to Marine Inspection Spokesman Lieutenant Larson, the Coast Guard was not informed of the nature of the cargo . . . U.S. Coast Guard officials in Juneau say they have not yet ascertained whether the drum was a part of the November shipment or debris from some other spill. They say safety precautions prevent the Canadian Coast Guard from getting close enough to the recovered cannister to read identifying marks which might determine its origin.

I trust the parliamentary secretary or the minister will respond to this point since my question relates to whether they are considering or have any intention of bringing in legislation which will allow or require labelling to be properly in place so that these types of incidents will not occur. I quote from the same document:

John Hopps of Marine Inspection in Vancouver said today that while there are recommendations for the carriage of dangerous goods as part of an international shipping agreement, and some regulations are enshrined in federal legislation, they are quite vague in many instances. Even though recommendations do exist for many types of chemicals, it is left to the shipper to enforce these recommendations—

Chris Hatfield, former west coast Emergency Co-ordinator for Environment Canada, said from Vancouver today that regulations for chemical transport are "non-specific and need a lot more work."

"Questions of what to transport, where to transport, and how to transport haven't been looked at yet," Hatfield said . . . "It's really a vague area; there are so many agencies, so many chemicals, and no regulations."

My concern, and I trust the parliamentary secretary will address this, is in relation to what comprehensive legislation is concerned. The minister is on record as saying that about 85 per cent of the toxic and hazardous waste in Canada is dumped improperly at the present time. One could hardly go to the public at this point and say that either the corporate sector or the government are adequately handling this situation.

There must be feasibility and financial studies, legislation relating to transportation, storage and handling, regulations and legislation related to trans-boundary movement, classification, technology, treatment facilities, the citing of criteria and public safety and environmental impact. None of those issues has been addressed. It took six months before the Canadian government even knew of this spill. Another six months has gone by without any response from the Minister of the Environment. The concern of the public is very much in limbo at this point.

It is a relevant question to ask how many "Love Canals" are being created at the present moment with hundreds of thousands of tons of carcinogenic and mutagenic material being dumped and, in many instances, the creation of totally new and unknown chemical substances in our environment. Tens of thousands of chemicals are now in use and they are being madly dumped in our environment.

● (2230)

In conclusion, I hope the parliamentary secretary will address both the issue of toxic chemical spills, since I have not yet received a report or a response, and as well, the legislative question which I put to the Minister of the Environment on the same day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Unfortunately, the parliamentary secretary will not be able to reply under our normal rules because we have reached the end of the debate on the adjournment. Because another matter has also come up, I will take a few seconds myself. As some hon. members will have noticed, I have had some discussion with one of the Table officers. I simply want to assure the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), who has absented himself, and the parliamentary secretary, that while no points of order or questions of privilege are permitted during the debate on adjournment, that does not in any way imply the loss of the right to rise such an issue at the next sitting of the House or even, indeed, at another time. I think it is my obligation to review Hansard tomorrow morning and determine whether the matter ought to be carried further.

I think perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) will suggest that with the unanimous consent of all three members present we might allow the parliamentary secretary to reply. I am in full favour of that, but just in case that were not possible, I wanted to assure those hon. members present that if indeed there is an issue relating to the exchange tonight between two hon. members, it will be handled in a manner which will not reduce anyone's rights in order that it can be dealt with tomorrow.

I understand that there may in fact be unanimous consent for the parliamentary secretary to proceed to answer the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Knowles: That was my suggestion.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), for interceding on my behalf so that I can be heard.

Mr. Knowles: I hope it is worth it.

Mr. Simmons: On the general issue of jurisdictional concerns within our 200-mile exclusive economic zones and our 12-mile territorial seas, the situation is a bit more complicated than the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), indicates. He wrote us on July 28 of this year suggesting that the government should seriously consider implementing or supporting the introduction of east and west coast 200-mile zone legislation parallel to the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act.

The exclusive economic zone concept is a relatively new development in international affairs and is among the items being considered at the ongoing Law of the Sea Conferences.

In January, 1977, Canada proclaimed its 200-mile fishing zones on the east and west coasts. The international community has tacitly agreed to Canada's management of marine life resources in these zones, largely because of the diplomatic negotiations which preceded the proclamation and also because of the assurance we gave that historic fishing rights would be honoured. However, tacit agreement on the management of marine life cannot be considered as a precedent to act unilaterally to encompass the regulation of shipping in the 200-mile zone. Bilateral or multilateral negotiations should precede any proposed action on our part.

I believe Canada must work within the international framework of the United Nations Law of the Sea and the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization, IMCO, to obtain ratification of the various IMCO conventions and their protocols to establish global standards for tanker safety, pollution prevention and the carriage of hazardous and noxious substances. We will not get international support if we act unilaterally, and we probably would suffer setbacks in our trading activity as well. We will achieve our goals much more rapidly if we continue our strong support for the international initiatives.

Ratification of the various IMCO conventions will require changes in Canadian legislation. I assure the hon. member that when such changes are introduced, we will be promoting those which protect or enhance the environment. Meanwhile, this government has been working closely with the United States in harmonizing marine navigation systems and in establishing joint contingency plans.

I want to reiterate my concern and, I am sure, the concern all of us share, about the environmental protection of our valuable marine resources. I can assure the hon. member for Skeena and hon. members generally that Canadian federal officials are working in the closest consultation with their colleagues in the United States to ensure the protection of those resources.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.35 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 19, 1980

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETRO-CANADA

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF SUNCOR INC.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas in a New York address the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) indicated that Suncor Incorporated is targeted for takeover by the Canadian government through Petro-Canada, and whereas this explains why the same minister is offering Suncor Incorporated $16.75 a barrel as against $38 a barrel which is being offered to other companies in the same area for the same quality of crude oil, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling):

That this House, in deploring this violation of security laws and this tricky, underhanded, under-the-table, unscrupulous method of devaluating the shares of Suncor in preparation for the kill, urges the Prime Minister to prepare a scroll in honour of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as being, next to he himself, the trickiest and most outstanding under-the-table and unscrupulous manipulator in the Liberal cabinet.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

GARRISON DIVERSION

ON-SITE MONITORING OF PROJECT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the secretary of the interior of the United States has apportioned an additional $3 million for the Garrison diversion unit in North Dakota, that moneys are still being allocated for further construction of this project and that it is well known that the completion of the Garrison diversion will cause irreparable damage to Canadian waters, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie).

That this government have on-site monitoring as the construction proceeds and that our consular staff in Washington monitor the appropriate committees of the U.S. Congress and report findings to this House on a regular basis so that we may be kept up to date on the status of this project.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CONDITIONS OF INDIAN COMMUNITIES IN NORTHERN MANITOBA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of a report prepared for the federal government which indicates that Indian reserves in northern Manitoba have inadequate garbage and sewage disposal, which is contaminating drinking water supplies and causing a high rate of hepatitis and dysentery among northern Indians, and in view of the knowledge of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development of this problem for years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House instructs the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to table the report prepared for Environment Canada and turned over to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Department of National Health and Welfare, to provide a statement on motions concerning the reasons why the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has failed to act on the deplorable health hazards cited in this report and to outline the steps he proposes to adopt to eliminate this inexcusable and intolerable health threat faced by northern Manitoban Indian communities.

Madam Speaker: The presentation of this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

● (1410)

DUMPING OF CONTAMINATED WATER IN NIAGARA RIVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Highly explosive TNT has been discovered buried near the site of the SCA Waste Services Company of New York, which has been granted a U.S. permit to discharge millions of gallons of contaminated water into the Niagara river, from which a number of Canadian municipalities draw their drinking water. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That this House condemn the Canadian government for not honouring its election commitment to oppose vigorously the SCA permit, and that this House call upon the Canadian government to launch, in concert with the U.S. government, a full inquiry into the matter, taking into account in particular that the TNT explosives near the SCA site are only a quarter mile from a concrete silo full of radioactive wastes from the making of two atomic bombs dropped on Japan in 1945.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSING

CALL FOR SHELTER ALLOWANCE PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Inflation, unemployment, high mortgage interest rates and, in some cases, a total lack of accommodation are severely limiting the ability of Canadians to obtain adequate housing, especially those on low or fixed incomes. Since the Liberal government has abandoned these Canadians in every area of housing policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko):

That this House direct the government to rectify its inaction and lack of policy in the housing field and implement a shelter allowance program for Canadian families.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

USE OF STOL AIRCRAFT FOR NORTHERN AND COASTAL SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the mayor-elect of the city of Toronto has announced that he supports the establishment of a STOL air service for the Montreal-Toronto transportation corridor, and in view of the fact that STOL aircraft are more appropriate for northern and coastal service, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That the federal government not authorize the use of STOL aircraft at the Toronto Island airport but instead use STOL aircraft for northern and coastal service.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

BNA ACT—PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—PROVISION OF SUFFICIENT COPIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of extreme national urgency under Standing Order 43. In view of the rapidly growing nationwide interest and concern about the constitutional resolution, and in view of the very scarce supply of copies of this resolution and the complete lack of copies of the BNA Act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the federal government's Department of Supply and Services immediately print and distribute sufficient copies of these two important documents to supply all educational facilities throughout Canada.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUPPORT FOR USE OF COAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the next head of the U.S. Senate's energy committee is regarded in some quarters as the strongest anti-environmentalist in the Senate, which must be regarded with great concern here in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That this House express its unanimous support for the principle, as has been stated when referring to Canada's increasing use of domestic coal in an environmentally sound manner, that the political will to do this in Canada is strong and we must demonstrate this to the United States.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GARRISON DIVERSION

REPORTED APPROVAL OF PROJECT BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It was reported today that United States interior secretary Cecil Andrus had approved construction of the Garrison diversion project. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether it is his understanding that the whole $630 million project now has the go ahead, or if in fact only the West Oakes test area is involved in this announcement, West Oakes being in the James Bay basin, with no possible effect on Canadian waters?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am not able to give the hon. member the precise information he requested, but I will attempt to provide up-to-date information to him. The hon. member knows the long-standing position of the Canadian government, which has been expressed so often to the United States government, with respect to the Garrison diversion project.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, can the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House what steps the government has taken to improve the monitoring done by our officials south of the border, and will he be calling for weekly progress reports on Garrison, as these reports from our own people would go a long way toward allaying the growing concern in this country about ongoing Garrison construction?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, there has been ongoing concern with respect to the impact of particular aspects of the Garrison diversion project on Canada and on the Canadian environment. The hon. member has made representations with respect to ongoing monitoring; I will consider those representations with the appropriate minister.

INQUIRY WHETHER STEPS TAKEN TO DETER ACTION IN U.S. CONGRESS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I should like to point out to the Deputy Prime Minister that senator-elect Mark Andrews and the governor of North Dakota are calling for the full completion of the Garrison diversion project, especially senator Andrews who is one of the strong supporters of the project.

During this lame duck session of Congress there exists an increasing risk that appropriations for Garrison could be forced through. Has the Liberal government taken any steps to contact the U.S. government with a view to deterring this disastrous course of action in the United States Congress?

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will be happy to learn that, yesterday, the U.S. Department of Interior announced that the appropriation for the parts of the project that would affect Canadian interests will be withheld and spent only after consultation with Canadian authorities.

[English]

UNACCEPTABILITY OF PROJECT TO CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of the Environment, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister in relation to the Garrison project. It relates to what our relations as a government will be with the new administration in the United States Congress. What action is the government planning to let the new administration and the new president know that in fact this is not an acceptable project to Canada because it will, if completed, cause irreparable damage to Canadian waters?

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we shall adopt towards the new administration exactly the same attitude we had with that of President Carter, that is, we shall insist with the Reagan administration that basic Canadian interests be respected. Be that as it may, we are awaiting a reply to the note we sent to the American authorities on October 1 asking them specifically to start consultations in that regard as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. It is well known that parties on all sides of the House are opposed to the Garrison project. In fact, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris first travelled to Washington in 1975 to make that point known. Would the government consider sending a delegation representing all parties of the House to Washington at the appropriate time to let the new administration in Congress know, in the strongest possible terms, that we in Canada are unified in our opposition to this project?

• (1420)

I might add that that precedent was set in the spring, I think, when a delegation of members of all parties of this House travelled to Washington to discuss with United States congressmen some fisheries problems that we had.

[Translation]

Mr. Duclos: Madam Speaker, we are now in November and the new administration will be in power in a couple of months, around the middle of January, and we will see then what reaction we get to our representations. The suggestion of the hon. member can certainly be the subject of serious consideration on our part.

* * *

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—INQUIRY WHETHER REPORTING DEADLINE WILL BE EXTENDED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the government House leader. Last week I asked the minister if the government was prepared to extend the time allocated to the joint committee considering the constitutional proposal. Given the quality of the groups appearing before the committee and the number of others who want to appear before it, it has become clear that an extension of the deadline set is absolutely essential.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Therefore, I would like to ask the minister if he is prepared to assure the House today in an unqualified way that the deadline will be extended in order that sufficient time will be allocated to do justice to this important work.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the request made by the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party last week regarding the extension of the timetable was not addressed to me but to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. To me he put a question regarding the televising of the meetings of the committee and I gave him an answer. With regard to the extension of the timetable the Prime Minister told him that he was very receptive to his suggestion and he explained to him clearly, referring to me, that I was prepared to be flexible and would discuss the matter with the House leaders of the opposition parties. I wish to confirm to the Leader of the NDP that I am still prepared to show the same flexibility, that I fully endorse the answer given to him by the Prime Minister and that I intend to meet with the opposition House leaders as soon as possible, whenever it is convenient for them.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I would like to be a little more specific in my next question for the hon. minister. Considering the important and positive criticisms which have been made in the last few days about improvements to the charter of rights, for example, I would like to ask the minister the following. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to accept some of these positive suggestions, and will he assure the House that the committee will have time not only to listen to the witnesses who want to appear before it but that, following the witnesses' evidence, the committee will have time to give the most thorough of consideration to the amending process?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: From the evidence given up to now by the various witnesses, it is obvious that all of them are in favour of enshrining a charter of rights in the constitution. However, some would want us to go further. That is why, in view of the representations made, I say again to the Leader of the NDP that I am quite ready to discuss this with the House leaders. I think that is the proper procedure under the circumstances, namely a possible extension of the deadline. Last week, the hon. member asked for a two-week extension. I say to him again today that we are prepared to discuss the matter. However, the Leader of the New Democratic Party must realize that I made this offer in early October, after the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition complained in his speech about the December 9 deadline, and also after the Tory House leader wrote me a letter in which he took exception to the fact that at the third stage we would be discussing a committee report rather than the resolution itself. At that time, that is in the first week or ten days of October, I made it clear to my fellow House leaders that I was prepared to discuss the committee deadline and also the possibility that we consider the resolution itself rather than a motion for concurrence in the committee report. However, I required a reasonable indication as to the total length of the debate and also as to the procedure to be followed for the consideration of amendments at the third stage.

The Leader of the NDP no doubt realizes that without a set procedure for moving amendments at this third stage, it could become a real hodge podge. After three weeks of debate, we might find ourselves still on a subamendment to clause 3 of the resolution which contains 57 altogether. Therefore, all I ask is that the opposition parties be reasonable, and especially that they agree to negotiate. Again, last week, I repeated this offer. I must recognize that some of the parliamentary leaders were very receptive to this idea, and I certainly hope that in the days ahead all of them will agree to plan sensibly the remainder of the debate, both at the committee stage and on third reading.

● (1425)

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, it is important that this point is very clear. Nobody is proposing a filibuster on this particular measure. What is being suggested, I believe reasonably, by members on this side of the House and by some members on the other side of the House is that there be adequate time, both in committee and after the committee reports, to discuss important amendments to our constitution. What I would like clear from the government House leader is that he is not considering a trade-off. Is the government House leader suggesting to the House that there will be a time extension for the committee to do its important work, but that the government is considering reducing the amount of time the House would reasonably require for it to do justice to the matter?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, on the one hand the Leader of the New Democratic Party says that he is not proposing a filibuster, and I sincerely believe him.

Mr. Beatty: Write him another letter, Ed.

Mr. Pinard: On the other hand, he is saying that there is no room for give and take or trade-off in this matter. What I would like to determine in the discussions which I will be having with the House leaders is how serious they, or at least the other party, are when they say there will be no filibuster.

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF JOINT ADDRESS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we are all interested in watching the New Democratic Party shift its ground again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: At least we have some ground.

Mr. Rae: Tell us where you stand, Joe.

Mr. Clark: The NDP is asking where I stand. I stand where I stood when the matter was proposed, which is something the New Democratic Party has not done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Would the government House leader tell those of us who are in opposition to his proposal, and his bedmates, what is the date of the government's final deadline for the joint address to Great Britain?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have no deadline in mind. My only wish is that a debate here be as thorough, reasonable and fair as possible. I did not have any such evidence during the first stage of the debate, and I say that it is premature at this time to speak of imposing closure at the third stage. If the Leader of the Opposition wants to be provocative, but I do not think that such is his intention, I will not play that game. I repeat that, on the contrary, we are ready to extend the deadline reasonably, which is precisely what the House leaders should be normally discussing during the meeting suggested by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

In conclusion, with respect to the request made by the New Democratic Party, which is apparently endorsed by the Progressive Conservative Party, indeed we are ready, as I indicated to his House leader in early October, at the outset of the debate, to reconsider extending the deadline, provided, at the same time, that we have some evidence of good faith, especially that the Progressive Conservative Party does not try to delay the proceedings unduly in a dilatory manner and to start in this House a procedural debate on a constitutional issue, the subject matter of which deserves more consideration from his party. That is all I can say to the Leader of the Official Opposition. I do not intend to impose closure at any stage whatever. I merely want to make sure that as an institution and as a government we assume our responsibilities as fairly as possible, while being respectful of the rights of the Canadian people.

• (1430)

[English]

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, as I hear that long explanation from the minister, I cannot help but recall that he is the minister who promised there would be no trickery in the introduction of this measure the first time, an undertaking that has been broken.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, there is a great deal of shouting among members of the Liberal party who are so disunited on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I just want to be sure that we understand exactly what the government House leader has said. He is now telling us that the government has no deadline for the submission of a joint address to Great Britain.

An hon. Member: He didn't say that.

Mr. Clark: Is that correct?

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, does the government House leader mean to say that the government has no deadline for the submission of a joint address to Great Britain?

[English]

Mr. Pinard: To answer the first part of the question, Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition mentioned that I said I was not willing to agree to impose closure at this stage. I think he is right, if that is what he said. In any case, may I remind him that from the very beginning we have offered many times an extension of hours to discuss the matter at the first stage. We are still willing to discuss and agree to extending hours in the committee stage and in the third stage—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Pinard: —when the report is made, to allow more members to participate.

An hon. Member: Is there a deadline?

Mr. Pinard: I would hope that members of the opposition would agree to such extended hours. To deal specifically with the last question, which was whether we have any deadline in mind, I will reiterate to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that in fact I have no specific deadline. All I want is a full, complete, reasonable debate. I expect that at some stage the Conservative party will show more seriousness than it has so far.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, perhaps our difficulty is that I am addressing the question to the wrong minister. The government House leader is talking in terms of deadlines for House business. My question has to do with whether the government believes it has a deadline by which it must make a joint address to Great Britain. Could the Deputy Prime Minister tell us if, in the view of the government, there is a deadline by which a joint address must be delivered to Great Britain and, if so, what is that date?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we plan our proceedings and try to carry out our duties with the utmost celerity and fairness. I am sure that the British in London do not intend to interfere in our affairs. We have received from the British government absolutely no instruction as to when we should report. It was courteous enough not to give us any instruction, and I am satisfied that the answers given up to now by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the matter are quite adequate, and that we will get satisfaction as soon as we are ready to submit our joint address to the British Parliament.

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. That was an interesting answer but it did not answer the question put by the Leader of the Opposition, which was not what is in the mind of the British parliament but was is in the mind of the Canadian government with respect to the deadline by which they want to make a joint address to Her Majesty the Queen. That is a specific question. Is there a deadline and, if so, what is it?

An hon. Member: Let us see some of your sincerity now.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I can complete my reply by saying that if the British have told us specifically that they have no intention of interfering in our internal affairs, we do not intend to interfere in theirs either, so that it is quite impossible to reply to the hon. member's question. We will submit our joint address as soon as we are ready, and we have every reason to believe that the British will not turn it down.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF CULTURE OF GREECE

Madam Speaker: I should like to draw to your attention the presence in my gallery of a distinguished visitor, the honourable Andreas Andrianopoulos, Minister of Culture of Greece.

[English]

ENERGY

NEGOTIATION OF POSSIBLE OIL IMPORTS FROM SAUDI ARABIA—RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH ALBERTA

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the past few days Canadians have been treated to the rather ludicrous spectacle of the Prime Minister perched on top of a camel in Saudi Arabia negotiating the purchase of 100,000 barrels of oil a day from Saudi Arabia. At the same time, in Canada we have had the cancellation of one of the major energy development projects that this country has ever faced. The reason for this is clearly the intransigence of the government in reaching an agreement with the producing provinces in the whole area of energy policy. Madam Speaker, the world is laughing at us today; we are willing to pay high and escalating world prices to Saudi Arabia, yet we cannot reach agreement with our own provinces in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I should like to ask why the Prime Minister in Saudi Arabia is quite willing to negotiate for 100,000 barrels of oil a day, when he should be in Canada negotiating with the producing provinces to settle the energy policy that this country will follow over the next ten years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, to deal with the first part of the question, the Prime Minister has indicated that he was not in Saudi Arabia to negotiate anything having to do with oil supply. He has said quite clearly in a statement he made over there that an offer was made in conversation with Sheik Yamani and that this offer would obviously be taken under consideration. That is what the Prime Minister has said quite clearly.

On the second point, may I remind the hon. member that the government of Alberta has indicated it is not interested at the present time in having ministerial or prime ministerial discussions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Lougheed has indicated quite clearly—and this is on the record for anybody to read, if hon. members on the other side bother to read—that he prefers to have discussions starting at the officials level first. I have been in touch with the government of Alberta and indicated that my officials are ready to start discussions immediately. The answer I received was that the officials in Alberta needed a few more days to do some more work. I would hope that in the next few weeks there will be meetings taking place at the officials level.

I think I have answered both points raised by the hon. member, Madam Speaker.

As far as his preamble is concerned, I would only remind the hon. member that it takes two to make an agreement. Obviously, in this particular case we have made very generous or what are considered very fair offers to the government of Alberta, but it has not found them satisfactory. The Prime Minister has indicated that we are willing to discuss these matters again with the government of Alberta, and that is where the matter stands at the present time.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. On this side we do realize that it takes two to tango. We achieved agreement in December; surely this government is able to do the same thing.

These oil sands projects are very important to the future of this country in terms of security of supply, economic development, balance of payments benefits—about $2 billion for each of these projects—and also to bring this country together. Surely the government understands the urgency of this matter. When is the minister going to sit down with his counterpart in Alberta in an effort to achieve a realistic agreement that both sides of this country can be happy with?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I have indicated to my colleague in Alberta that I am quite willing to meet him at any time that would be convenient. The answer I have received is that the government of Alberta feels that the discussions should start at the officials level first. This is where the matter stands.

As to the preamble of the question, again I have to indicate to the hon. member that even the lonely, independent member who was kicked out of the Alberta Conservative party has been trying to get copies of any document showing that there had been an agreement between the government of Alberta and the Conservative government in Ottawa last December, and the poor member has not been able to get anything. I challenge the hon. member to show us that there was any agreement. As a matter of fact, the record is quite clear that there was not an agreement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1440)

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, there was a third point in the question.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody.

OIL SANDS DEVELOPMENT BY IMPERIAL OIL LIMITED—DEVELOPMENT BY PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question for the same minister will probably have a little different area of emphasis from the questions presented by the spokespersons for the multinationals on my right.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: Given the latest strong-arm tactics by Imperial Oil Limited to shelve its Cold Lake oil sands project unless Alberta and Ottawa hand over a ransom of some $40 million in development costs, and since Imperial Oil can hardly plead poverty having taken since 1975 $2.4 billion in profit out of the hides of Canadians, would the minister tell us when he intends to make good his pledge of increased public ownership in the oil industry and have Petro-Canada take over this oil sands development—something Petro-Canada says it can do and is willing to do—or at least tell the House how much longer he intends to submit to blackmail by these oil giants?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have to disagree with the conclusion of the hon. member. In this particular instance, Imperial Oil has spent $120 million to get the project going, which the government of Alberta unfortunately has not yet found appropriate to approve. We regret this. The Government of Canada is very concerned about the importance of ensuring security of supply. Concerning those projects, the Government of Canada has always delivered in plenty of time in the past whatever was required of it.

In this particular case the government of Alberta has again decided to delay its approval. As far as we are concerned, the project will be suspended and might risk being cancelled if we do not get agreement with Alberta in the near future. I met yesterday with the president of Imperial Oil. I have reviewed this matter with my officials and I have consulted my colleagues. We have reached the conclusion that it is essential this project proceed. We do not want to lose the team of over 550 people who have been assembled for this purpose. Therefore, we have decided that we will make available our share of the proposal put forward by Imperial, namely that $40 million be made available over the next six months to ensure that this project will hold together. This payment is made on a repayable basis if the project proceeds. In this connection I have instructed Petro-Canada to undertake discussions immediately with Imperial Oil. I have indicated, in addition—

Mr. Andre: What about Canadian-Hunter?

Mr. Lalonde: —that if the government of Alberta for any reason prefers not to come in on this proposal, we will stand ready to ensure that Petro-Canada provides the whole $40 million—

Mr. Clark: You have instructed Petro-Canada?

Mr. Lalonde: —so that this project will go ahead.

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, yesterday in New York the minister stated that at best the government might triple Petro-Canada's share of the petroleum industry's production revenue. This means that Petro-Canada would move only from seventh to perhaps fifth place in the industry in Canada. In view of this, how can the minister claim that this so-called Canadianization of the oil industry is anything but tokenism, especially when he admitted in New York yesterday that his plans were "cautious to a fault". Does the minister tell Canadians one thing and American oil giants something else?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I will be very pleased to forward immediately a copy of my speech to my hon. friend, which he has obviously not read. There have been three very serious misquotes in his question, so I shall send him a copy of my speech and he can learn it by heart, if possible.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

LOCATION OF EXPLOSIVES ON CHEMICAL WASTE SITE

Mr. Al MacBain (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment. It has come to light that large quantities of explosive wastes are to be found on the SCA waste site in Porter, New York, on the U.S.-Canada border, in the midst of a silo full of radioactive wastes from the making of the two atomic bombs dropped in 1945 and 88 million gallons of toxic chemical wastes. Will the Government of Canada ask the government of the United States to take the necessary steps to reopen the recently completed SCA hearings, in light of the new evidence concerning quantities of TNT recently located on the SCA chemical waste site, which is just across the Niagara River from Niagara Falls, Canada, and in this way support the strong position assumed by Mrs. Margherita Howe and "operation clean" on the new TNT evidence?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the information concerning the disclosure of TNT at the waste site which the hon. member has just mentioned has only come to our attention today through press reports, which our staff is following up. We do not think a discharge from SCA should be allowed by U.S. authorities until the malfunctioning Niagara Falls, New York, sewage plant has been repaired.

We have made these views known to the United States. We will continue to press the matter, especially in view of the information which has just come to light and to which the member has referred.

* * *

ENERGY

PRICE OF OIL IMPORTS FROM SAUDI ARABIA

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed also to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and in this connection I refer him to the Prime Minister's trip to Saudi Arabia. The Prime Minister has indicated there is a possibility of 100,000 barrels of oil a day being shipped to Canada. He stated: "I don't want to minimize what seemed to be an offer and our gratitude if something does take place". Would the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicate what the government expects this oil to cost Canadians? Does he intend to have Petro-Canada offer what he calls the same fair offer that he offered to Alberta? In short, may we anticipate that the oil will cost roughly $40 per barrel, or does the government intend to negotiate the price at roughly the $16.75 conventional wellhead price?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, obviously the hon. member knows that when we buy oil on the international market, we must pay the international price.

With respect to the present situation, if for some reason the government of Alberta should decide to deprive Canadians of some 180,000 barrels of oil, it is quite obvious that the Canadian government would have to try to make up in some way for the action taken by the government of Alberta against Canadians.

As far as the domestic price is concerned, the hon. member also knows that Canada has been following for years a policy that is in line with that followed by many oil producing countries, namely to set a domestic price that is different from the international price.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I am still looking for some clarification as to why the Prime Minister felt we should be grateful. Would the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicate whether the 100,000 barrels a day is extra to the 200,000 barrels we are now importing? If it is, would the minister indicate what effect he feels that will have on our trade deficit with Saudi Arabia, which in the first nine months of this year has already reached $1.7 billion?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, in the interview he gave following his talk with Sheik Yamani, the Right Hon. Prime Minister indicated clearly that that aspect of the matter had not been clarified, that of course it was something to be discussed between Petro-Canada and Petromin when negotiations take place.

All that happened is an offer made in general terms by the representatives of Saudi Arabia at a meeting with the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Since the latter had indicated that he was not in Saudi Arabia to negotiate specific arrangements on oil matters but for other purposes, namely to talk about relations between developing countries and more privileged countries and contributions of the OPEC countries in this regard, the Right Hon. Prime Minister did not want to enter into specific negotiations on that matter.

● (1450)

[English]

COLD LAKE OIL SANDS PROJECT—RESULT OF DELAY ON JOB CREATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. According to my information 20,000 jobs, including 6,000 in Ontario, stand to be lost if the Cold Lake project is delayed any longer than 30 days. My question is, why is the Desert Fox in Saudi Arabia negotiating for their oil and not here in Canada where both he and the minister should be making an attempt to salvage our own economy and create jobs in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have already indicated that the reason there are no ministerial or prime ministerial meetings taking place in Alberta at this time relates to the decision of Alberta to start discussions at the officials level. I have indicated to my colleague that we are ready to meet with him at any time that is convenient to him.

As far as the question raised by the hon. member is concerned, I think I amply covered that in answer to the previous question asked. I indicated that the Government of Canada attaches so much importance to those projects in the tar sands and heavy oils that we stand ready even to pay the full costs of the proposal of Imperial Oil if the government of Alberta for any particular reason does not wish to pay its share of the cost.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, these negotiations have been going on for so long that it is imperative that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources take a front row position in debating them, rather than taking rare birds from Canada to Saudi Arabia. Can the minister persuade the Prime Minister to return to Canada and explain to Canadians why jobs in Saudi Arabia are more important than jobs in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the hon. member does not seem to understand A or B having to do with domestic and international trade. Not only do we want to create a lot of jobs in Canada arising out of projects in Canada, such as the Cold Lake one that we are going to support, but we also want to create thousands of jobs arising out of our export trade with countries like Saudi Arabia. The Prime Minister is out there helping Canadian businessmen sell more to Saudi Arabia and OPEC countries, and that is for the good of Canada all around.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA REPORT ON UNEMPLOYMENT—EFFORTS TO ASSIST NEWFOUNDLANDERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Since the Economic Council of Canada released a report which states, among other things, that half the unemployed Newfoundlanders are looking for work outside their province while only one-quarter of the unemployed in Ontario have to do so, since the same report indicates that the real rate of unemployment in Newfoundland is probably closer to 23.9 per cent as opposed to the official rate of 16.4 per cent, and since that same report indicates that Newfoundlanders are looking for work, what is the minister willing to do to ensure that these people find work in their own province?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to read the report of the Economic Council of Canada. I am glad the hon. member has given us a few salient points. I know that a report has been prepared by the council at the request of the government of Newfoundland and as a result of a joint reference to the council a few years ago by the present Prime Minister and Premier Moores. I hope the report will provide some leads which will assist in overcoming the unemployment and productivity problem, which was the focus of the report requested by former Premier Moores.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I realize the minister may not have had an opportunity to read the report yet, let alone act on it. There is one area which relates to the report on which he has had a chance to act, and that is the fact that there is going to be oil exploration off the coast. No training is going on in Newfoundland at the present time to make sure the people there benefit from those jobs. What action is the government going to take to ensure that the people who live there can get jobs on the oil rigs and so on, and also to cancel the need for the legislation brought in by the provincial government limiting the employment of people from offshore?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the hon. member will recall that I placed special emphasis in the budget on the question of manpower training and supplying especially skilled tradesmen and scarce skilled personnel for trades at the present time. He will also have noticed there was a special allocation of $350 million to be spent on retraining and industrial restructuring. I hope it will have some impact on the problem he has quite properly focused on in his question.

* * *

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT OF IMPERIAL OIL COLD LAKE PROJECT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I wish to comment that finally, after all these months, the minister has recognized the importance of the oil sands. Maybe we are making some progress.

Will the minister advise whether the announced support of the Cold Lake project is just a wolf in sheep's clothing? What does he intend to exact from Imperial Oil for this support? Is it unconditional?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is indeed very suspicious. I can assure him he has no cause to be that way. I remind him that over the years the Government of Canada has been pressing ahead with support for all developments having to do with the tar sands and heavy oils. If he checks the record, he will find that over the past three years under our former government, the government of his own party last year and under this government this year, we have always been very forthcoming with regard to taking all steps to ensure the realization of those projects.

For their own reasons, the government of Alberta has decided over the last three years to delay some decisions. I am not passing judgment on the reasons they had to delay these projects; I just mention the fact. The decision I announced today is a further indication that this government stands committed to energy security and the realization of those projects in the tar sands and heavy oil area.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I asked whether this was a wolf in sheep's clothing. What are the conditions? The minister did not answer my question.

I will ask another question. Why is the government willing to pay world prices to other countries for imported oil but will not pay the same prices to Canadian producers, which would keep the money in Canada, create jobs and develop technology in Canada, and help Canada become energy self-sufficient? I have two questions. First, why will the government not pay the world price for heavy oil production? Second, what are the conditions they are going to have to meet for the $40 million?

Mr. Lalonde: In answer to the first part of the question, Madam Speaker, I assure the hon. member it does not have anything to do with sheep; it is all lamb! There is no condition put forward. I have indicated that we will negotiate with Imperial Oil as to exactly how this should work, and discussions should take place very quickly.

With regard to the second point, the hon. member knows that in the past we have paid the world price for heavy oil plants. We have again offered to start paying at the current world price level, escalated with the cost of living. We feel this is a very generous price for those products. Further representations have been made by Alsands and Imperial Oil regarding these projects to the effect that their costs have further escalated. We are looking at this and are in discussion with them. We are not only concerned that these projects go ahead, but that during this process the Canadian consumer should not be given the axe.

[Translation]

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE WITH EMPLOYEES OF ROYAL BANK IN SAGUENAY-LAC-SAINT-JEAN—REQUEST FOR DECISION BY CANADA LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Labour.

The minister is certainly aware of the strike by Royal Bank employees in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area which lasted more than a year. As a result of the intervention of the CLRB which held discussions with the employees and the management, an agreement was signed about three weeks ago, following which the cases of eight employees who had been suspended by the bank are still pending before the Canada Labour Relations Board.

Can the minister tell us when he expects the Canada Labour Relations Board to make a ruling on the cases of these eight employees?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. He will be aware that the strike which ended some time ago between six branches of the Royal Bank of Canada and the union in the Lac-Saint-Jean district was a long and difficult one and that the matter of the eight employees who were not re-employed by the bank is unresolved. The Canada Labour Relations Board is vested with this problem, and it has made a finding that there has been a violation by the bank in dismissing the eight employees. The board held further public hearings concerning what remedies should be taken in that regard.

Mr. Nielsen: You read very well, Gerry.

Mr. Regan: The decision concerning the remedies will be released very shortly by the Canada Labour Relations Board.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKNIGHT—NOTICE OF INTENTION TO RAISE QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, the hon. member with respect to whom I wish to raise a question of privilege is not in the House at this time. I would like to bring my question of privilege to the attention of the House when both he and I are in the chamber together.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—STATEMENT MADE BY MR. LALONDE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to a statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), who was in the House a moment ago but who may inadvertently have misled the House in an answer he gave earlier.

Mr. Lalonde: I am here with your friend.

Mr. Clark: I see that he has been over with the NDP, but he is coming back to his place.

Mr. Cousineau: That is not true. What is the matter with you?

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I believe said today that he had instructed the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, to take certain actions. I wonder if in fact he did say that and whether he intended to say that.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am sorry to advise the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) that the Conservative energy critic, if I understand him well, has now joined the New Democratic Party. I hope he will be assured before long that he is still safe with his energy critic for a while, because he was the gentleman I was talking to, and not members of any other party.

With respect to the question raised by the Leader of the Opposition, I have indeed instructed the president of Petro-Canada to undertake discussions with Imperial Oil as to this particular project. I have indicated that whatever comes out of those discussions will be taken into account in the approval of the capital budget of Petro-Canada.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROSE—STATEMENT MADE BY MR. LALONDE

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It concerns the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). Before I do, I might observe that it is incredible that this government, in addition to all the other tax breaks, is now going to give some $40 million to Imperial Oil.

My question of privilege has to do with the minister's response to me that he was misquoted. He gave me a speech to back up his argument. The only quotation I made was his saying that his plans were "cautious to a fault". With regard to the ranking of Petro-Canada I would like to read from the minister's own speech as follows:

> For perspective, consider that Petro-Canada accounts for about 5 per cent of our petroleum industry's production revenue. Now suppose that Petro-Canada doubles or even trebles its share as a result of the energy program. We are still looking at a company with a small minority of the market.

That was the point I was trying to make, and I did not quote at all from the minister's speech when I was talking about the rankings.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the quote mentioned by the hon. member speaks for itself. I indeed said, "Suppose that Petro-Canada doubles or even triples; it will still be a small part of the total industry". That industry will still remain overwhelmingly private. If it is quadrupled or multiplied by five or six, obviously the percentage increases. "Suppose".

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) has raised this matter as a question of privilege. Since he has raised it as a question of privilege, I feel obligated to rule that, of course, there is no question of privilege in the fact that something has been quoted, misquoted or whatever. Rectifications were asked for by the hon. member of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). This is debate, and the exchange has taken place. There is not much I can do about it, but it is not a question of privilege.

MR. NIELSEN—PROCEDURE GOVERNING PARTICIPATION IN HOUSE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a brief question of privilege or point of order to raise with respect to the practices of this House and its committees. I was not at the committee meeting or other meetings involved personally where this has been taking place, but there is a growing practice of refusing members of Parliament, who are not specifically named on the lists of members forming standing committees, participation in the deliberations of the committees. That happened to the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) yesterday in the Standing Committee on Transport, I believe. He was accomodated by the chief government whip, who simply deleted his own name and substituted the name of the hon. member for Peterborough therefor. However, the committee chairman and the clerk seemed to be of the view that members who are not specifically named on the roster of members forming that standing committee were not entitled to participate in the deliberations of that standing committee.

It has long been the practice here, for many, many years, that notwithstanding the fact that the name of a member of Parliament may not be included on the roster of members forming a specific standing committee, he has the inherent right, as indeed is the right of all members, to participate in that committee's deliberations. Normally the practice has been that those members whose names are on the roster of a standing committee are called upon by the chairman first, either to ask questions or to state their views, but subsequent to that any other member who may not be on the roster, if he expresses a desire to do so, is then invited to participate in those deliberations.

I merely raise this at this time so that perhaps the knowledge might be disseminated to the various chairmen of the standing committees that they should not be depriving the rights which are enjoyed by all members of Parliament to participate in committee deliberations, notwithstanding the fact that they are not specifically named on the rosters of standing committees.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have two things to say. First of all, it is true that members of the House, even if their names are not on the roster of a standing committee, may attend the meetings of that committee, but it is up to the chairman to recognize those who take part in the proceedings, and each committee is master of its own procedure. I know that those whose names do not appear on the roster of a committee do not have the right to vote. According to our practice, they are generally entitled to take part in the proceedings if the committee and the chairman agree. However, the hon. member has raised a specific question concerning the Standing Committee on Transport. In the absence of a report from this committee I believe, Madam Speaker, that it would be very difficult for Your Honour to rule on what may have happened. This committee is master of its own procedure, and I believe that it would be improper for you to make a ruling without having a report from that committee.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am very happy with the first part of the response of the government House leader because in those remarks he confirmed my view of the past practice of the House that members who are not named on the rosters of particular standing committees have the right to participate if called upon by chairmen to do so.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, in support of the position taken by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), may I point out to him that he does not have to rely on what he says is past practice. The matter is covered in the rules. There was a time years ago when it was a matter of practice, but a few years ago the rules were amended.

● (1510)

Standing Order 65(9) says quite clearly:

> Any member of the House who is not a member of a standing or special committee, may, unless the House or the committee concerned otherwise orders, take part in the public proceedings of the committee, but he may not vote or move any motion, nor shall he be part of any quorum.

I suggest, Madam Speaker, that the wording of that Standing Order 65(9) does not leave it to the discretion of the Chair. Unless the committee passes an order saying that non-members of the committee may not speak, the right of such non-members to speak is clearly provided in Standing Order 65(9).

Madam Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for having read to members of the House the Standing Order to which this point of order refers. Although members usually know the Standing Orders very well, it is not a bad idea to read them from time to time. I think the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will agree that this Standing Order says exactly what has to be said about the committees. His point of order might be considered by the committee itself. The Standing Orders are quite clear that the committees are responsible for their own procedure and that any member who wishes to participate in the proceedings may do so.

* * *

[Translation]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following bills, to which the concurrence of this House is desired:

Bill S-12, an Act respecting the Canadian Merchant Service Guild;

Bill S-13, an Act to revive Montilac Ltd. and Socam Ltd.;

Bill S-14, an Act to revive Tremus Industries Limited.

* * *

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. SIMMONS—LANGUAGE USED BY MR. DOMM DURING ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, last evening during the course of the late show an exchange involving me and the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) took place. The hon. member for Peterborough used some unparliamentary language to which I draw your attention for a moment, Madam Speaker. Because of the rules of debate during that particular exercise, there was no opportunity for me to raise the issue. The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker) assured me last night that there would be an opportunity to do so today. He also undertook to have a look at the transcript of Hansard to see if further action were required.

In the absence of any action from the Chair on this matter up to this point, I wish to raise the matter. I refer to page 4841 of Hansard, in the left column, three lines from the bottom, where it is reported that the hon. member for Peterborough used the word "lie".

The term "lie" is clearly unparliamentary. I realize that the hon. member for Peterborough and I have a difference of opinion on an issue, but this is not the appropriate time to debate the substance of that issue. The fact is that whatever he might feel about my views or stance on the subject, he should use parliamentary language. I submit that, according to the parliamentary authorities, the term "lie" is clearly unparliamentary and the hon. member should be asked to withdraw it, as I invited him to do last night. If he does not do so voluntarily, I suggest the Chair has a clear duty to instruct him to withdraw the unparliamentary term.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I rise in response to the point brought up by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Simmons) with regard to the debate last night in which I referred to a statement and used the words of the parliamentary secretary, with the addition of one word in error. I used words in my remarks such as "an untruth", and other parliamentary words which are perhaps considered acceptable, but I also used the word "cowardly" because I was quoting the parliamentary secretary when he referred to me as having used cowardly means in giving partial truths to my constituents.

At the time when I raised my question of privilege following the May 12 episode, you ruled, Madam Speaker—I respected your ruling and fully supported it—that there were ways in which I could address the subject of the statement by the parliamentary secretary in which he stated that I was using cowardly tricks. One of the ways in which you suggested I might handle it would be in a late night debate. So last night in the late night debate I brought forward certain subjects dealing with the "cheap, cowardly and political" points, to use the words of the parliamentary secretary.

To be exact, he said I had used "cheap, cowardly, political means" to point out that the parliamentary secretary was misrepresenting the facts, that I was, in turn, misrepresenting the facts and I was cowardly. However, last night I inserted a word which seems to have aroused the ire of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment, and that was the word "lie".

When he rose on a point or order last night, he said he would yield the floor to the hon. member for Peterborough in order that I might clear up the matter and withdraw the word. I rose to my feet in order to respond to the request of the parliamentary secretary to tell him I would be prepared to leave in part of the statement, in which I said he was using cheap, cowardly, political points to score a political gain in his presentation, and that perhaps I would consider—and I do so now— substituting for the word "lie", in order to make the sentence grammatically and structurally sound, the phrase "mired in the mud of mendacity".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Well, I am sure we are all in favour of good grammar and good phrase structure—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And against mendacity.

Madam Speaker: I am sure that anything the hon. member can do to help in that situation is important to this House.

Point of Order—Mr. Simmons

I was not present when these events took place. I gather from the intervention of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) that he wishes to stress that he was describing a situation, not addressing words to the parliamentary secretary which were unparliamentary. If that satisfies both hon. members, I can rule on the matter immediately and hope that everyone in the House is satisfied. However, I should like to make the reservation that I have not read Hansard and I was not present when the incident occurred. Despite that fact, if hon. members are satisfied with the comments which have been made on both sides of the House today, I guess we should leave it at that.

Mr. Simmons: No, Madam Speaker, I am not satisfied—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Who is wasting the time of the House now?

Mr. Simmons: —and I doubt that any member in the House, partisan issues aside, can be satisfied with that kind of response to an invitation to withdraw a term which is clearly unparliamentary. We cannot allow this word to stand on the record. On page 4841 of Hansard the word "lie" appears quite clearly, three lines from the bottom of the left hand column. Erskine May will tell you quite clearly that that is one of the terms which is unparliamentary, no ifs, ands or buts.

I submit, with respect, that this is not a matter of grammar or a matter of rewriting a phrase, or saying it differently. The hon. member, without equivocation, without entering into a debate and without explaining why he did it, should withdraw the term. There is no excuse for using it. It is unparliamentary and he is not allowed to use that term, I submit to the House. He should be asked, without equivocation or asides, to withdraw the unparliamentary term unequivocally and categorically. I am not allowed to use it in the House nor is any other member allowed to do so, so why should he be allowed to use it? It cannot stand on the record, and I appeal to the Chair to ask the hon. member to withdraw the unparliamentary word "lie" without any equivocation.

Some hon. Members: He did withdraw it.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, I do not think the parliamentary secretary is paying attention—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Domm: Clearly I withdrew the word "lie". I should like to point that out.

Some hon. Members: Order!

• (1520)

Mr. Domm: After the dissertation of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment, I think I should at least be entitled to respond.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Point of Order—Mr. Simmons

Mr. Domm: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment made a statement in the House which prompted me to follow the procedure as set out by the Speaker of the House, which was to address his statement that I in turn, through my announcement, cancelled the Parks Canada move from Cornwall to Peterborough. That is a blatant untruth.

An hon. Member: It is a lie.

Mr. Evans: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Domm: At that time I asked for the opportunity on a question of privilege. Madam Speaker advised me to take up the matter during the adjournment debate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, could I just finish one sentence, please?

Madam Speaker: I had understood that the hon. member had, in essence withdrawn an unparliamentary expression, but the hon. parliamentary secretary does not feel that the expression has been formally withdrawn. In that case, if members do not agree, I will have to look at Hansard, look at the "blues", to determine whether there has been a situation which calls for the withdrawal of any words.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have just a brief word on this point of order. When Madam Speaker is checking the "blues", if that is your intention, I would urge you also to check the "blues" with respect to the intervention of the hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) in the debate on the constitution when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was not present; he will find a good many things to withdraw.

Madam Speaker: Order, order! I will be ruling on only one situation.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There goes the Bank Act.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I understood that my second intervention—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: My second intervention was based on the contention that the hon. member had not withdrawn. I submit that in his second intervention he withdrew unequivocally. I accept that as an unequivocal withdrawal, and I do not think the matter needs to be pursued any further.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I ask the hon. member to co-operate. Since the hon. parliamentary secretary feels that the matter should not be pursued—and he was the aggrieved member—I think we will leave it at that.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, I did not withdraw—

Madam Speaker: Presenting reports from standing and special committees.

Mr. Taylor: A point of order, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, I rise on a very definite point of order. I did not withdraw without conditions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Domm: I substituted.

Some hon. Members: You cannot do that.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 234, 810, 860 and 1,543.

[Text]

HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION COSTS

Question No. 234—Mr. Herbert:

1. Were (a) payments (b) commitments made in the past three fiscal years towards hospital construction costs and, if so, by province, what amount was paid or committed in each year?

2. Were any commitments or payments made since April, 1979?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Health and Welfare, National Defence and Veterans Affairs as follows: 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare does not have hospital construction programs. Federal assistance toward hospital construction costs has been provided under the Health Resources Fund Program to assist with construction, renovations, acquisition and equipping of health training facilities, including teaching hospitals, as follows:

(a) Payments:

	Payments 1979-80	1978-79	1977-78
Newfoundland	—	2,951,975.60	71,057.45
Prince Edward Island	—	133,844.90	—
Nova Scotia	—	—	561,178.75
New Brunswick	—	4,516,613.82	13,111.87
Quebec	1,296,016.79	1,497,347.69	7,404,597.19
Ontario	765,861.25	5,540,711.76	7,585,011.10
Manitoba	799,408.13	6,755,006.15	—
Saskatchewan	678,799.41	735,538.25	2,439,189.77
Alberta	—	2,670,784.00	—
British Columbia	—	10,530,388.59	2,044,736.34
Northwest Territories	—	—	—
Yukon	—	—	—
Canada Total	$3,540,085.58	$35,332,210.76	$20,118,882.47

(b) Commitments:

	Commitments 1979-80	1978-79	1977-78
Newfoundland	—	—	—
Prince Edward Island	—	1,676,971.12	—
Nova Scotia	—	—	—
New Brunswick	—	925,583.38	(12,825.45)*
Quebec	—	(478,028.17)*	10,393,989.12
Ontario	—	(17,889.29)*	5,792,498.90
Manitoba	—	4,167,873.00	—
Saskatchewan	—	—	584,676.50
Alberta	—	2,967,537.81	—
British Columbia	—	(2,989.00)*	14,205,138.00
Northwest Territories	—	—	—
Yukon	—	—	—
Canada Total	—	9,239,058.85	30,963,477.07

*Funds not claimed by provinces

2. For year 1979-80, see parts 1(a) and (b) above.

In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned:

1. (a) and (b) Payments for the past three years were as follows:

Fiscal Year	Province	Payment ($thousands)
1977-78	British Columbia	$ 501.5
	Alberta	309.1
	Ontario	101.1
	Quebec	654.8
	Nova Scotia	261.9
1978-79	British Columbia	21.3
	Alberta	67.1
	Ontario	44.3
	Nova Scotia	458.7
1979-80	Alberta	7.0
	Nova Scotia	121.0
	Quebec	42.0

Commitments for 1979-80 were as follows:

Province	Commitments ($thousands)
Alberta	$ 2,229.0
Quebec	51.0

2. Commitments and payments for year 1979-80, see parts 1(a) and (b) above.

In so far as the Department of Veterans Affairs is concerned:

1.

	(a)	(b)
1977-78 — Nova Scotia	26,100	279,918
— Quebec	841,275	46,387
— Ontario	4,483	—
— Manitoba	304,055	—
— Alberta	1,153,234	—
1978-79 — Nova Scotia	273,900	6,018
— Quebec	103,108	51,860
— Manitoba	88,009	57,627
— Alberta	69,174	394,734
1979-80 — Quebec	335,468	600,000
— Manitoba	129,879	6,494
— Alberta	469,174	42,671

2. Please refer to above reply.

NOTE: These expenditures represent progress payments to the provinces in accordance with the terms of hospital transfer agreements.

METRIC COMMISSION

Question No. 810—Mr. Towers:

1. (a) On what date was the Metric Commission established (b) under what legal instrument does it exist (c) what are its terms of reference or its mandate?

2. (a) What is the term of office for a member of the commission (b) are honoraria paid to the members and, if so, in what amount?

3. (a) What are the names of the members of the commission (b) what are the names and addresses of previous members of the commission?

4. Do any members of the commission, past or present, have an interest in any firm which manufactures, distributes or sells any form of weights or measures calibrating devices?

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses)): In so far as Metric Commission Canada is concerned:

1. (a) Metric Commission Canada was established by order in council 1971-1146, 1971-06-10.

   (b) It exists under section 18 of the Government Organization Act, 1969.

   (c) Attached is order in council 1971-1146.

2. (a) Term of office for a member of the commission is three years, except for the chairman who is appointed during pleasure.

   (b) An honorarium is paid to the members for the periods they are engaged in Metric Commission business. The amount is on a per diem basis set from time to time by order in council.

3. (a) List of members:

D. R. B. McArthur	Member and chairman
M. Archer	Commissioner
L. H. Chater	"
P. Demers	"
G. L. Draeseke	"
S. M. Gossage	"
A. J. Groleau	"
W. M. Hall	"
C. J. Laurin	"
D. D. Morris	"
R. Parent	"
Mrs. B. Robinson	"
A. S. Somerville	"
Mrs. Y. Thode	"
A. S. Tirrell	"
J. O. Wright	"

(b) G. G. E. Steele, 165 Sparks Street, Ottawa

A. D. Cohen, 1370 Sony Place, Winnipeg

J. E. Thomas, Brockville, Ontario (deceased).

4. No.

SOR/71-276

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1969

Metric Commission Order

PC 1971-1146

10 June, 1971

His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, pursuant to section 18 of the Government Organization Act, 1969, is pleased hereby to make the annexed Order to Establish a Preparatory Commission for Conversion to the Metric System.

AN ORDER TO ESTABLISH A PREPARATORY COMMISSION FOR CONVERSION TO THE METRIC SYSTEM

Short Title

1. This Order may be cited as the Metric Commission Order.

Interpretation

2. In this Order,

(a) "Commission" means the Preparatory Commission for Metric Conversion established pursuant to section 3; and (b) "Minister" means the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Establishment of Commission

3. A committee is hereby established to be known as the Preparatory Commission for Metric Conversion, consisting of (a) a full-time member who shall be the chairman of the commission, and

(b) not more than fifteen part-time members, to be appointed by the governor in council.

4. The commission may make such rules as may be necessary for the conduct of its meetings and the performance of its duties.

5. (1) The governor in council may, upon the request of the commission, provide the commission with the services of such officers and employees employed by or in any department of the Government of Canada as are necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the commission, and the commission may obtain the advice and assistance of any department or agency of the Government of Canada.

(2) The commission may engage such organizations or persons having a technical or specialized knowledge on any matter relating to the work of the commission to advise and assist the commission in the performance of its duties.

Purposes and Powers

6. The commission is established for the purpose of advising the minister on plans for conversion to the metric system, and for such purpose, the commission may

(a) initiate, co-ordinate and undertake investigations, surveys and studies relating to the implications of conversion to the metric system in different sectors of the Canadian economy;

(b) prepare, in consultation and cooperation with any department or agency of the Government of Canada, any department or agency of the government or any province, the Standards Council of Canada, or other interested parties an overall program for conversion to the metric system which will ensure, as far as possible, that any programs for such conversion in the different sectors of the Canadian economy are phased and co-ordinated in order that

(i) the benefits of conversion to the metric system are achieved at minimal cost, and

(ii) conversion to the metric system as a whole is effected to the best advantage to Canada; and

(c) furnish, publish and disseminate information concerning conversion to the metric system.

7. The commission shall advise the minister on the need for legislation or any other action that may be required to facilitate conversion to the metric system.

8. The commission shall make such reports on its activities from time to time as the minister may require.

Oath

9. Each member of the commission shall, before taking up his duties, take and subscribe an oath or affirmation in the following form:

"I, solemnly and sincerely swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully and honestly fulfil the duties that devolve upon me by reason of my appointment as a member of the Preparatory Commission for Metric Conversion and that I will not, without due authority in that behalf, disclose or make known any matter that comes to my knowledge by reason of such appointment.

(In the case where an oath is taken add, 'So help me God')".

FISHERIES AND OCEANS—WHITE PAPER ON POLICY REVIEW

Question No. 860—Mr. Gass:

1. What amount was spent by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in the preparation of the white paper on policy review?

2. Will the white paper be tabled in the House of Commons and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. Policy review is now, and has long been, a continuing activity of my department. Part of the review process under the previous administration was identified as a white paper exercise, and expenditures that can be identified as belonging to it totalled $123,516. As of February 17, 1980.

2. The review process is continuing, with a view, among other things, to preparing a discussion paper for consideration by groups with fisheries interests.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION—ARTICLE IN "GLOBE AND MAIL"—MINISTER'S POLICY ON IMMIGRATION

Question No. 1,543—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a letter dated July 7, 1980 and signed by Mr. J.C. Best, executive director, immigration and demographic policy, Department of Employment and Immigration, circulated to all members of the immigration and demographic policy staff?

2. Did the letter refer to an article in The Globe and Mail of May 24, 1980 on the subject of immigration to Canada and did the letter state in part, that the minister "has requested that this article be circulated to all immigration staff as he feels that it accurately reflects his own thoughts on immigration policy"?

3. Is it government policy to formulate policies in the field of immigration by consulting articles on the subject in The Globe and Mail during the formulating process?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. No, the article was the result of a personal interview by the writer with the Minister of Employment and Immigration and accurately reflected the views of the minister on immigration policy.

* * *

[English]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if question No. 1,542 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,542—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In each of the past three years, what percentage figure of the total contracts awarded by the Department of Supply and Services went to recipients operating in each of the ten provinces and what were the over-all percentage of total contracts for each province during the three years combined?

2. In each case, what was the percentage population figure of each province of the total Canadian population and did it compare with the percentage figure of contracts awarded?

3. Will the government take steps to call tenders for its requirements to a greater degree in the western and maritime provinces and (a) if so, what are all the details and the individual provincial percentage targets (b) if not, for what reason?

4. What was the total money value of all contracts awarded by the Department of Supply and Services (a) in each of the past three years and, in each case, what percentage of all figures went to recipients in each province (b) in the past three years combined?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Evans: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of the hon. parliamentary secretary my notice of motion for the production of papers No. 24, dated July 11, 1980, which reads as follows:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the contract entered into between the government and the Canadian Media Corporation to perform its duties as agency of record for the government.

It was four months ago that I put my notice of motion for the production of papers on the order paper. The government has awarded an untendered contract to a company which did not exist before the contract was awarded. The contract was signed in September, and I think surely in the course of four months the government should be prepared to say to the House whether it agrees to accept this notice of motion for the production of papers. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary could indicate to the House when he will be prepared to give the government's answer.

Mr. Evans: Madam Speaker, I will take notice of that question and will refer it to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BANKS AND BANKING LAW REVISION ACT, 1980

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKING INSTITUTIONS

The House resumed from Tuesday, November 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-6, to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Rae (p. 4816).

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise as I did last night to continue debate on Bill C-6 and to make an additional point to the three points I made last night.

Just to review very quickly my three points of last night, first of all they dealt with the location of chartered banks within the nation, or the location of the head offices of chartered banks within the nation. I pointed out that three of them, with a capitalization of $100 million, were located in western Canada; that seven of them, with a capitalization of $700 million, were located in central Canada, that is, four in Montreal and three in Toronto; that only one was located in the Atlantic provinces, in Halifax, with a capitalization of $50 million.

I made the point that serious consideration or an examination should be given by the banking system itself in terms of relocating its head offices in this nation, as big as it is and as dependent upon the banking system as it is. I suggested that it would be appropriate if one located in Calgary, if one considered St. John's, Newfoundland, and if the other one would perhaps consider Quebec City.

I went on to indicate that, because of the geographical size of the nation and the spread of the population across the nation, it was necessary for the banks to give the utmost consideration to placing on their boards of directors Canadians from all over the land, so that there would be regional representation on their boards of directors.

My third point was in connection with the use of Canada's technological might in terms of working on an export basis. Canada has great capability today in technology and in its amassment of engineering talent to work throughout the world in this area, but it must associate itself with the liberalization of the capitalization of some of these projects. I indicated that the chartered banks should look seriously at setting up a comprehensive system in regard to the use of Canadian technology and technological might overseas.

My fourth point deals with the evolution of a quasi-form of government bank. The shortcomings of the banking system for western Canada have caused much apprehension and concern over the years. For example, for the first time in Alberta there was an ability to amass sufficient capital together to deal with capital needs in the west and permit a growth formula, controlled and directed by the west itself instead of by central Canada. In this regard it was advisable, on the basis of extracting money from resources, to set up vehicles like the Alberta Energy Company and the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund.

• (1530)

I want to speak about the use of these instruments to Canadianize Canada's oil and gas industry. There are two ways of doing this. One way is to use a blunt instrument to nationalize the oil and gas industry and literally take over segments from government funding and from some form of quasi national banking institution. The present government has embarked upon a system not of Canadianizing the oil and gas industry but of nationalizing it. There are some pluses and minuses with respect to this type of procedure or over-all policy.

As a member of the government in Alberta I was associated rather closely with the oil and gas industry. We decided at one point it was necessary to Canadianize some of the oil and gas industry. We arranged a remarkable tool for accomplishing that without disturbing the existing industry in all its dimensions. We set up the Alberta Energy Company, which is 50 per cent owned by the province of Alberta. The other 50 per cent was sold to the citizens of Alberta, who are Canadians in the truest sense of the word. In every possible way Albertans are Canadians, and they intend to remain as such. With the type of tool we arranged it was possible for Albertans, in conjunction with the Alberta government, to move on an equity share basis on new projects in the province of Alberta and therefore specifically and directly to Canadianize some of the growth of this industry. This was done to assist the industry, and it was done in co-operation with it. It created a terrific impetus to the growth and catalyzation of this industry, not only in Alberta but in western Canada.

Last summer when I was a member of the Progressive Conservative caucus committee on energy I wrote a memorandum in which I specifically proposed a national energy bank. That was a memo I wrote a year ago last August. I also indicated in it that in connection with the national energy bank in an effort to Canadianize some of the oil and gas industry in this nation—indeed, much of the energy industry in this nation—and in conjunction with money from the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund this would effect, on a gradual and co-operative basis, a degree of Canadianization of the energy industry. That is an acceptable way of moving forward, by using the financial resources of this nation to Canadianize in a gradual and acceptable way by using shareholders and government capital, if you wish, to increase the Canadian ownership of two vital industries in this nation.

I would like to put forward a comparison of that system, which is partially working so well in Alberta, and the federal government system of providing a quasi form of banking through their Petroleum Compensation Fund in order to buy additional multinational corporations. They wish to buy them in totality, not to buy 20 per cent or 30 per cent of some of these companies, which would effect some reasonable amount of control, and nationalize them. They want to buy them in totality and add them to the corporate public giant called Petro-Canada, thereby increasing the inefficiency of this corporation. We all know that its inefficiency is increasing dramatically compared to the efficiency of some of the well-managed multinationals.

Mr. Speaker, nobody is against Canadianization of the oil and gas industry, or a movement toward the Canadianization of it through banking institutions or quasi banking institutions, through government funds or shareholders. Nobody is against Canadianization of the oil and gas industry in that way. Some of us have difficulty, though, with the proposal of Canadianization through the process of nationalization, which is a blunt weapon. This is an unacceptable weapon, which can be used in such a way that it could dictate policies, reducing the asset value of companies which have done business in Canada for many years. So they are prime targets for takeover at a low share value. Suncor is an excellent example of this. It was a company that pioneered the oil sands. This was a subject discussed rather hotly and heavily in the question period today. It is known that in the oil sands there are approximately 900 billion barrels of oil. About 74 billion barrels are available through surface mining, and 900 billion are available through in situ mining.

Mr. Evans: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would be most interested if the hon. member could possibly relate his comments to the Bank Act, which is the subject before us now, and not to oil policy or the national energy program. Could the hon. member be asked to restrict his comments to the topic?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Edmonton East.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, when I spoke yesterday about the Bank Act and about banking institutions in Canada I specifically stated that this system, which is vital to the nation, had enormous power in the circulation of wealth, finances, and the creation of credit. Indeed, I said that it had a great effect on the growth of the social structure and the organization of the nation in totality. I also spoke about the banking system and its effects on the growth and health of the industrial sector of this nation. That is a very vital and substantive part of this banking act. It extends from one end of the nation to the other, putting forward the fundamental nature of commerce.

Today the energy industry needs some $200 billion of investment to create growth during the next decade. Can the parliamentary secretary honestly suggest that the energy industry and the banking industry are not totally intertwined? Of course they are.

Mr. Evans: What has that to do with nationalization?

Mr. Yurko: Of course it does because you can raise money in several ways. Mr. Speaker, I do not have too much time left and one could spend a great deal of time on this topic.

I simply want to reiterate that Canadianization of a vital industry like the oil and gas industry could have been done in such a way that the industry's growth and performance in terms of self-sufficiency would not have been affected to the extent that it was. This is a fundamental point.

The vital project at Cold Lake is the first of its kind dealing with some 900 billion barrels of oil which are in the ground. It was vital this process and this plant go ahead. That is one of the reasons why I wrote to both the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Premier of Alberta last August. I wanted to do whatever was necessary to see that this plan and this process went ahead, because it was a new form of technological development. By the way, that oil in the ground is better than dollars in any bank, but I wanted to see that this resource was developed and commercialized, since this in situ plant was the first such plant.

• (1540)

The point I am trying to make is that the financial institutions of this nation could have been used rather effectively to Canadianize a substantive portion of the oil and gas industry, as is being done in Alberta through the Alberta Energy Company and through investments of the Heritage Savings and Trust Fund in oil sands plants and in other areas. These institutions could have been used in such a way that they would not affect the industry to any great extent. I am honestly saddened, because I have spent so many years dealing with this industry as a minister in the Alberta government, that we have had to use such blunt instruments in relationship to Canadianizing the oil and gas industry, by nationalizing rather then by Canadian investment in the industry.

Those are my remarks, but I hope to have the opportunity again to speak on the use of Canadian capital, whether it be by the government directly or, indeed, by the people through investors and shareholders, or by corporations themselves, in regard to excess capital and Canadianization of the energy industry in Canada, particularly the oil and gas industry.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, one of the problems which arises when this government introduces legislation is that it is considered to have descended from heaven and to be virtually the holy grail of legislation and not subject to criticism, unless one wishes to be mocked by government members, or to amendment, as was illustrated beyond any question of doubt as vote after vote rejected amendment after amendment during report stage in the House.

The government controlled the committee and accepted only some very minimal amendments. The act as it exists today is virtually identical to the act which was introduced three or four years ago. I sat on the banking committee four years ago and listened to the objections of hon. members from the province of Quebec in particular, and there was consideration given to caisses populaires and credit unions. Many of the proposals were accepted, instituted and put into the act by that committee four years ago. That particular committee was considered—

Mr. Evans: Talk to Bert Hargrave.

Mr. McCain: At least I would be talking to somebody who understands what he is talking about, and that would be significant because the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) sat on the committee during its deliberations on agriculture and made a major contribution to one of the minor amendments which was of major consequence to farmers in this country, namely, that livestock dealers be protected for their deliveries up to the figure which is presently in the bill. The hon. member criticized the act, and it was only after great pressure by myself, by the hon. member for Medicine Hat and others, that the amendment was adopted. All of this occurred in the initial presentation and consideration of the act by the committee, like all the other changes.

The amendments which were offered in the House the other day were rejected out of hand. I believe that the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) voted against every single amendment, regardless of whether an amendment came from my extreme left or whether it came from the official opposition. The hon. member was as guilty as the government itself in rejecting amendment after amendment by virtue of his vote.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I do not know whether or not the hon. member realizes that he is misleading the House. In referring to the contribution of the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), it was certainly a great one, but there was no animosity in that committee with regard to the agricultural amendments.

Mr. Nielsen: That is debate, not a point of order.

Mr. Evans: If the hon. member will review the speech of the hon. member for Medicine Hat in this House yesterday, he will find that in fact—

Mr. Nielsen: Don't abuse the rules.

Mr. Evans: —the hon. member made the same comment.

Mr. Cullen: You never do that, Erik?

Mr. Nielsen: Never.

Mr. McCain: I have acknowledged the contribution of the hon. member for Medicine Hat, myself and others toward that end. I repeat, every amendment which was submitted to the House was rejected by vote, and the hon. member for Ottawa Centre contributed to that vote. I am referring to the voting in this House during the report stage of the Bank Act. Let us separate the apples and the oranges and get down to what I said initially. Every amendment submitted at the report stage was rejected in one vote after another by the government.

Mr. Cullen: And by the opposition.

Mr. Evans: It is just not true.

Mr. McCain: The hon. member can read Hansard.

Mr. Evans: There were 59 amendments.

Mr. McCain: Would the hon. member for Ottawa Centre reflect on what I said. Like the hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons), he is digging himself a deeper hole as he emphasizes his point. The amendments which were moved in this House at the report stage were rejected by the government.

Mr. Evans: There were governments amendments which we accepted.

Mr. McCain: But those are government amendments, and that is a different structure.

Mr. Evans: They are amendments.

Mr. McCain: They pleased the government, but what pleases the public is of a different consequence to this particular government.

I, like the hon. member for Medicine Hat, the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), appreciate the amendments which affected agriculture because they did so in an important way. I repeat, though, that the proposals were brought in on behalf of the caisses populaires and credit unions and were primarily supported by Quebec members of the government and opposition members when the act was initially submitted. There were some changes on behalf of those members which were very important, and which will make a better financial structure for Canada.

The act was primarily introduced—as I can see when I compare the 1967 act, which was finally passed in 1971, with the performance of the banks—to give the authority to the banks to perform functions which they were able to perform by virtue of the fact that they were not asked to observe the letter of the Bank Act of 1967 by consecutive ministers of finance over that period of time. The act has opened up the fields into which the banks more or less infringe, with the acquiescence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and his officers who are responsible for the administration and supervision of the regulations.

As a result the banks have been expanded to a degree which gives me great concern. I am concerned that we have established for Canada an oligopoly which will control the financial structures of this nation to the point where the Minister of Finance may not be able to control the money supply or inflation, since he may lose control of the M2 and M3 factors which must be considered in the fiscal and monetary policy of this nation. We are creating a structure which is now involved in virtually all fields of finance. The banking institutions can now go into equity, and under certain circumstances can deal with securities. The banks are into the mortgage business, leasing, and all sorts of fields.

I submit that we have created an oligopoly and abandoned the principle that banks were intended to receive deposits and loan money to creditors primarily for individuals and the businessmen of the country. Now we find that banks have the option of putting such money as they may have at hand into fields which may be more lucrative than what small businessmen, farmers and others may wish to pay. Banks also have the opportunity to put their moneys, raised through deposit or through the issuance of equities of their own, where they wish to finance, by mortgages, the building of structures, for example, in Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto, Montreal and so on. And if such a move creates a tight money situation for farmers, small businessmen or others, this act offers no means by which the banks can be directed in the spending of their money.

• (1550)

Mr. Rae: You voted against our amendment yesterday.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, that is a funny thing. I have sat in this House and listened as these people on my left pleaded with the government to help Chrysler Corporation, a multinational—

Mr. Rae: You voted against it.

Mr. McCain: —and applauded the government. Let the hon. member take one step at a time, Mr. Speaker. I will take another one when I am through. They applauded the government when it supported a Canadian multinational, Massey-Ferguson.

Mr. Rae: Not true.

Mr. McCain: They applauded the government because jobs were at stake. They claim to be the friends of the job seekers and the employed, and now they interject in this debate. They want to pick and choose what they will support. They say that the oil industry should be dropped into perdition but they do not want jobs to be affected in Peterborough, Brantford, Windsor, or some of the other constituencies in which they wish they had stronger support.

Mr. Nielsen: The Liberal bed is getting uncomfortable.

Mr. McCain: If they are going to pick and choose, to make flesh of one and fowl of the other, it would be better if they made their choices early and then were quiet.

Mr. Rae: You have made yours, brother!

Mr. McCain: I do not happen to be one of those $100,000 a year lawyers, an apologetic millionaire associated with the NDP.

Mr. Rae: Who are you talking about?

Mr. McCain: One of the boys who was appointed to a directorship. He is probably making more money than he ever saw, and certainly more than I have ever made or expect to make.

Mr. Rae: Who are you talking about?

Mr. Nielsen: Husky Oil, maybe?

Mr. Rae: Name him.

Mr. McCain: It is all very well to exploit the dissatisfied people in the country and mislead them by supporting their complaints—by proposing the impossible as though it were practical, and then watch people be put out of work and go on the unemployment insurance rolls because the Government of Canada has adopted too many NDP policies. Hon. members to my left should get out of the Liberal bed and stand on their own feet for a change.

Mr. Rae: You are going to vote for the Bank Act.

Mr. McCain: They should get out of the Liberal bed and speak for themselves for a change, and not talk out of both sides of their mouths at once.

Mr. Rae: There is no room left. We will see who stands up for the government in half an hour.

An hon. Member: The bionic mouth.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, they call themselves economists and socialists but we have seen, as they supported the socialist tendencies of the Liberal government, that unemployment has gone up, deficits have gone up, taxes have gone up—at what point in the tax structure will they be satisfied?

Having allowed the banks into all these forms of business and having created an oligopoly, ten or 15 years from now we may have some reservations about the success of this act. Have we created a structure so large that it could interfere with the fiscal and monetary policy of Canada? Will it be possible to reverse what has been done?

I have heard the excuses put forward for allowing the banks to get into the leasing business, such as the one that an American bank owns a leasing company in Canada. All of those things could have been adjusted by amendments to the Bank Act, or by restrictions on the operations of foreign corporations in this country. We should not have compounded the problem by extending the privilege, which is precisely what we have done.

I admire the hon. member for Bow River, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), and the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) for identifying a problem which exists in every rural constituency in Canada. It is impossible for the branch banking system that exists in this nation to offer the expertise in the village or small town branches that is necessary to oversee the breadth of business that they handle. The bank staff is usually trained in the small rural branches, at the expense of small business, farmers and fishermen, and the expanded field of business which would come about as a result of this act would be new to them.

I regret that hon. members in this House who come from urban areas do not understand the difficulties that will be faced by small businessmen and farmers. A member of the NDP mentioned that branches had been withdrawn from isolated communities in British Columbia. I am very sorry for those communities as I understand the problems some of them will face. Although the mileage involved is not as great in the province in which I live, the same thing has happened, to the detriment of small communities in New Brunswick, and it is a matter of very deep concern.

The act does not place any obligation on the banks, however, to recognize the needs of farmers and small businessmen.

I am concerned about the expansion of opportunities available to banks, Mr. Speaker, because one by one the provinces have been forced into a structure in which they are financing small business and farmers. I think I am correct in presuming that one of the reasons for this is that, after the 1967 structure was created, there were other places for the banks to put their money. At a time when absolutely no control was exercised over the mortgage rate, small businesses and farmers could not exist because of the rates they were charged. Now there are government guarantees. The banks encourage people to go to the government to get a guarantee. If someone is refused a loan by a bank today, he can approach a government structure such as the Farm Credit Corporation, Small Business Development Bank and so on. Federal officials are encouraging this action. This is not the way the banks should operate, Mr. Speaker. The banks and the government should see to it that all businessmen, farmers, fishermen and others who require funds, are looked after by the banking structure of Canada. That is not the case, however.

We have created an oligopoly. I hope that Canada has a healthy fiscal future and I hope that my fears are not realized. I hope the Minister of Finance and his officials will exert the necessary influence to bring banks back to reality.

I should give an example of why I complain about the operation of the rural banks Mr. Speaker. A business friend of mine approached the bank in his community for a loan. As security, he offered assets valued at more than twice the value of the loan. The bank manager looked at his statement, which had been favourable and progressive, and suggested that he add his house as collateral. He owned the house outright, Mr. Speaker. This man had been engaged in a profitable business for ten or 15 years. There was no way he was going to put his house on the line, as this was not considered necessary according to standard banking practice in other areas of Canada. I checked with other members of this House to find out whether it would have been necessary, had he lived in a city, to do the same thing. The answer was no.

● (1600)

In the branch system in a city where there is a multiplicity of perhaps eight to 15 different bank branches, there is competition. In the village and small town structure of this nation there is no competition and there is nothing in this act which will create competition. That is my complaint. Lack of competition denies opportunity to small businessmen in Canada, and there is no mechanism by which the minister can exert any pressure.

An hon. Member: Open a credit union.

Mr. McCain: I attended the opening of one the other day. It is a good idea and I am not quarelling with credit unions, nor have I attacked them. I have applauded the amendments which gave them a better opportunity, but that is not good enough. That is the government for you. The government is your enemy, not us.

An hon. Member: Do not get into bed with them, though.

Mr. McCain: I have a second example that I would like to put on the record. I asked the president of one of the major Canadian banks whether his branch had ever granted a household mortgage to anyone in a small community in my constituency. I told him that I did not believe the bank had done this, although I knew the bank had taken mortgages on some very large structures in the west, and I could name them. However, I told the president that if I was wrong he was to let me know. I told him that I would be blunt and that I knew he had not taken a single mortgage on a new house in a certain community in New Brunswick. I was not asking how many but I told him that if I was wrong that he did not accept a single mortgage in that rural community, he was to let me know.

I must assume the bank did not issue a single mortgage for the building of a new house in that community because I have never heard from him since. As a person from rural Canada I am alarmed that this act will go through as it is without any consideration for the lack of competition, or any obligation on the part of banks to supply the needs of the villages and small towns of rural Canada. As hon. members have pointed out repeatedly, it is in those areas where there is employment.

If control can be kept of the money supply and if inflation can be controlled with this Bank Act, I will retract my words five years hence if I am still here. But these are my concerns at the moment and they are real. If I were president of the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Bank of Montreal or the Royal Bank of Canada, and I had a choice on behalf of my stockholders of taking a mortgage on a new building for company X in Toronto or lending it to a fisherman in Campobello, I would choose the highest return with the least risk, which would probably be the mortgage in the city of Toronto. Having done that, I must ask whether I would then have any money left for the fishermen in Campobello. That is my worry. There is no obligation on the part of the banks to look after people in areas where there is no competition. These people are unable to compete with large corporations in other parts of Canada for mortgages which are attended to personally by bank presidents and city competition. There is just nothing in this act for a small town in rural Canada and its residents.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about Bill C-6 this afternoon before it is passed. It is a bill to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, and to establish the Canadian Payments Association. We have had four extensions to the Bank Act since 1977. Hopefully this time we will be able to complete and put in place a new act to which all financial institutions in Canada will be able to adhere.

Since banks were established in Canada, dynamic growth has occurred. Assets are now at $250 billion, and 35 per cent of net revenues comes from foreign operations. I mention foreign operations because there is no question but that the business the banks do in foreign countries aids Canada in trade generally. Rather than discouraging trade, we should be encouraging it, and we can do this by allowing other banks into Canada, which in turn will create competition in the banking system. The banking system is controlled by five major banks. I believe most of us see a need for competition. However, I find it very strange that on the one hand we would encourage expansion of the banking system partly by allowing foreign banks to come here, while on the other we are telling the oil companies to leave.

An hon. Member: Who told them that?

Mr. Wright: I find it even more strange that this government would support Chrysler Corporation by guaranteeing loans to an American corporation and on the other hand tell the oil companies they are not wanted.

I remember in Winnipeg in the early 1960s we attempted to obtain money for the producing provinces. We tried to raise money in the east. In fact we phoned all over Canada in an attempt to raise money for the small oil companies starting out. But what happened? We ended up going to the United States. We put small packages together and asked U.S. individuals to help us. That was the method by which a lot of the smaller oil companies got going. I realize the majors were here, but they were not doing all of the exploration. In fact it was the small oil companies to a great extent that brought in the competition for the major companies. It was not through the efforts of Canadians. But it was more than that. During the period of the 1960s and 1970s—and I must admit this is my opinion—the Canadian government actually discouraged the investment of funds.

Over the years those of us who have moved into the oil business could see that the Government of Canada was not encouraging people to enter the oil business. Yet, I find it very strange just two months ago I stood here and said that $600 million of Canadian money, sitting in Canadian banks, was going to leave the country for the United States. Little did I know then that that figure would double within a month and a half. Now over $1 billion of Canadian funds is leaving Canadian banks for the United States. It is also my opinion that the real purpose of the Canadian government is total nationalization of the oil companies. That is not based on lack of information or a lack of knowledge of this industry.

I am not sure whether present Canadian banks will be affected, but I have a feeling that there will be some effect on new Canadian banks. These new enterprises will look at the government and ask "has there been a major shift in policy from being supportive of industry to being a socialist government wanting to take over any industry that is vibrant?" The banking industry must now address itself to this problem. If the government should take over the oil industry, what is to stop it from taking over the banking industry? That is a real problem. If it takes over the oil industry and the banking industry, what is next?

• (1610)

As the representative of Calgary North, I cannot live with that. Quite frankly, that is not my Canada. However, I see a nationalization of industries coming far greater than we have seen before. When I have to deal with the separation problem in my constituency, it scares me. We are not going to hide behind, we are going to deal with it directly.

I sat here many months ago listening to members opposite from Quebec speak about their problem of separation. I must say that their problem was nothing compared to ours. You cannot turn ours around by standing here in the House of Commons and saying why the west should stay in Canada. There are studies out now by qualified individuals from the University of Calgary which suggest that it would be better for western Canada to separate.

I do not believe that. I have been across Canada and probably know it better than most people. I cannot put my head in the sand and presume the problem will go away, or that it is in any way similar to what we saw here some months ago. It is far worse. In my opinion we cannot turn it around. We cannot treat it like the Quebec problem.

Nationalization of the oil companies is a very real threat in western Canada. I would be very surprised if the board of directors of any bank in Canada did not have on its agenda in the last two weeks the nationalization of the banks. They must address the problem.

I wish to mention some of the good things which happened on that finance committee. We were very fortunate in having a minister who was receptive to many ideas. We got through a number of amendments. We were encouraged by the support of government members with regard to leasing, and now are very happy that automobile companies in Canada are being protected. All of us will be watching to make sure they do not abuse the privileges and protection they will receive under the new Bank Act.

The protection provided to cattlemen is a step in the right direction. Many of us feel it does not go far enough, but we are quite prepared to go along with the government on this point. To give cattlemen $100,000 protection when they sell their cattle to the livestock yards is not very much. That amount can represent as few as ten cattle. However, we recognize that we could not possibly provide everything the cattlemen wanted. We will be watching this new act to see that it fulfils the intent of what we wanted.

I now wish to make a few comments regarding the committee. We were fortunate in having on the committee members who wanted to see the act passed. Parts of it they wanted changed in order to improve it. However, speaking as a new member of this House, I was appalled at the NDP filibuster. I thought that they, like the rest of us, were here to do their best for the people of Canada. Little did I, as a new member, realize that they are not dedicated to the same purposes that I am.

An hon. Member: That's true.

Mr. Wright: They tried to push through amendment after amendment, even though they were getting nowhere. I suppose when I become more accustomed to this place and realize the kind of people they are, I will accept that. However, quite frankly, the travelling road show which the NDP brought to that finance committee in July, bringing in members to alternate and speak to amendments, was ridiculous. How anyone in their right mind can vote for them in an election is beyond me. Fortunately, many Canadians who did vote for them are coming to realize that.

I want to make another comment which those on the government side may not like. As a new member perhaps I am not aware of all that can happen in committee. One evening we were presenting an amendment which had the sympathy of some of the government members. I was very surprised when two government members stood up, left the room and broke the quorum. Older members may say that is quite acceptable, but as a new member I found it ridiculous. I am here to represent those in my constituency. When members walk out of a room like that, whom are they representing? Perhaps all of us should stand in this House more often and say that we do not agree with this type of partisan politics.

I do not mean to be critical of the government, certainly not of the chairman of that committee or the minister, because I believe I learned a lot from associating with them. However, it is too bad when we have that type of politics in committee meetings. I know it goes on in this chamber, but surely it is not needed in committee meetings.

I hope we can conclude third reading of the Bank Act this afternoon and put in place an act which will allow more competition in the banking community. It is certainly needed. It should not be delayed any longer.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my friend to the left said that he thought I had already spoken on the bill now before us. Clearly, from some of the comments made by both the government members yesterday and the socialist members calling themselves the New Democratic Party, my mere presence in the House last night seemed to be enough to stop the bill in its tracks, which rather surprised me. The fact is that I have not spoken on this bill, certainly at report stage or third reading. It was over six months ago that I even commented on the Bank Act which was then before us for second reading.

● (1620)

I wish first to comment on some of the strange happenings that occured yesterday, particularly during the speech of my hon. friend from Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae). As we know, he proposed an amendment, and because perhaps they are forgetting, I would like to remind hon. members that what is now before us is the amendment which was proposed by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That Bill C-6, an act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for the purpose of reconsidering clause 2 with respect to the proposed section 222 at page 246 of the said bill.

The reason I read that into the record once again is so that there should be absolutely no doubt, when the name calling begins and when it is suggested that our party is somehow or other blocking the passage of this legislation through the House of Commons, that the very person from whom that is said to be an accurate quote is the person who, only a few hours before, stood up in the House and said he did not want the bill to proceed at all and that it should be referred back to the standing committee for further consideration.

Was the hon. member just frivolous in moving that amendment? Was he simply saying that for good measure he should throw the amendment in and "see what the House does with it" and that he can have a little sport with it? Was he saying that if somehow or other he could get things turned up, that would be good fun? Or did he mean it? If he meant it, surely it was his party which was trying to block the passage of this legislation last night and certainly not ours, because how can one more effectively block the passage of this bill than to suggest that we not now read it a third time but refer it back to the appropriate standing committee?

This is the cynical approach some of the socialists take to this House of Commons. They seem to feel that the House is a plaything and that they can come in and move amendments to delay almost permanently—certainly for the next few weeks—the passage of this bill, and then be able to walk out into the lights of the television cameras, the radio microphones and what not, and say that somehow or other it is somebody else who is blocking the passage of the bill.

If there is any doubt on this subject, let me recall for hon. members what I said when I spoke at second reading on May 6, as reported at page 784 of Hansard. I concluded my remarks by saying the following:

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you this. If we, as a new Parliament, can pass this bill—

That was Bill C-6.

—that will go a long way toward creating a new sense of confidence in the economic community in Canada. This is needed, and I only hope that members will accept the challenge and say, "Let us debate it, get it into committee and passed." Thank you very much.

Those were my sentiments on May 6, those have been my sentiments ever since, and they are my sentiments today, and I challenge anybody in this House to show where I have ever blocked the passage of this bill in committee or at any stage in this House of Commons.

Mr. Evans: Sinc, you are too much.

Mr. Stevens: I recall for those who sat in the finance committee that it was my motion, accepted by government members, which put a limitation on the amount of time during which the committee would sit for the further consideration of the bill. Hon. members will recall that it was then suggested and agreed upon that we would come back during the recess to consider the bill so that it could be in a form suitable for passage in the House as soon as the emperor chose to call back the House of Commons.

Mr. Evans: You moved closure, Sinc.

Mr. Stevens: I have said that because I believe that it is important that, contrary perhaps to what some government members may feel or certainly what some of the socialist members may feel, the record be at least accurate as to what has happened with respect to the bill which is now before us.

Mr. Rae: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: In the committee to which I was referring, hon. members will recall that many witnesses were heard, and I suggest that there are various things which were considered. Some changes were suggested by members of my party.

In general, I think we have a better bill before us today than that which went into committee. Let me recall for hon. members some of the sections which were considered and amended largely as a result of action taken by members of the official opposition. Hon. members will recall section 12 of the bill which is now before us. That was with respect to covering institutions applying for bank charters and any public objections which might be raised thereto. We proposed that the Inspector General of Banks should be able to call full public inquiries with respect to such applications, and I am pleased to report that that was accepted. I think we have a better process to be followed under section 12 than that which the government was initially suggesting.

Section 28 originally stipulated that foreign bank licences should be renewed every three years. I want to come back to this question of foreign banks, but largely at our suggestion that was changed to one year in order to give the government a little better control over what foreign banks may be doing in future years with respect to banking in the country. Surely it does not behoove members of the government or the NDP to suggest that these changes were unnecessary or somehow delayed the passage of the bill which is now before us.

If they feel that, I would like them to go out and tell the cattlemen of this country that the changes for which we were largely responsible under section 178(6) would likely not have been made if we had not pressed the minister to accommodate the request of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. These are things which I think should be put on the record and understood.

Mr. Evans: How can you say that with a straight face?

Mr. Stevens: They should be understood not only by members in this House but also by the public at large.

Mr. Rae: You should be blushing.

Mr. Stevens: Section 208 deals with the question of the banks holding reserves with respect to moneys which they may take for one to five-year terms. Hon. members will recall that in its eagerness to accommodate the banks the government in effect told them to forget the reserves, there should be no reserves, "We want to give you that big break, you are not doing well enough and we would like to give you that added break". We suggested, largely on the representations of trust companies and loan companies, that that was perhaps an undue concession to be giving to the chartered banks.

The trust and loan companies indicated that they felt that it would result in severe added competition for them, and certainly prior to its passage, or even of an indication of what was in store for them in their own trust and loan legislation yet to be introduced in the House, they asked that the banks not be given that added advantage. We agreed with them and pressed the government, and I am pleased that the government did accept that it perhaps should not give that added concession to the banks. As a result section 208 now requires a reserve as opposed to the original government suggestion that there be no reserve for such encashable deposits.

Section 193 was the subject of much debate and comment. As originally drafted by the government, it would have given the banks tremendous leverage in going into the leasing field in Canada and particularly the leasing of ordinary automobiles and trucks. We opposed that. We impressed upon the government that this was a concession it was giving to the banks which we felt was unnecessary and unneeded. There were witnesses. There were representations made by various associations in the automobile leasing field.

However, our general feeling was that the government had to be pressed to concede that the advantage it wanted to give to the banks by allowing them to get into that leasing field was too rich and too lavish. I think largely due to the efforts of members of the official opposition the government finally backed up and agreed to give the banks only a limited right in the leasing field compared with the very generous rights it originally proposed.

● (1630)

Again there is the data processing industry. Representations were heard. Clause 174(2) deals with this. It was the government's original suggestion—they love the banks—that the banks should be given increased powers to go into data processing in this country. At least we managed to get them to change the onus in that connection so that, in effect, the banks would have to show that data processing is of a banking nature as opposed to the reversed onus which the government was proposing that anything was fair game for the banks so long as they could decide whether or not they wanted to go into data processing. I just touch on those points, because in the debate which will ensue, the facts perhaps will become clouded and we will forget to what extent the bill which is now before us is an improved bill. It is improved largely as a result of the efforts and activities of members in the official opposition.

Earlier, when I referred to foreign banks, I indicated that I wanted to touch on this question of the foreign banks' penetration in this country. You will recall that clause 157 in the bill states, and I would ask hon. members to listen carefully to the words:

Every person who, in any language, uses the word "bank", "banker" or "banking", either alone or in combination with other words, or any word or words of import equivalent thereto, to indicate or describe his business in Canada or any part of his business in Canada without being authorized so to do by this or any other act, is guilty of an offence against this act.

Then it goes on to say:

Every person who uses the name of a bank in a prospectus or advertisement for the sale of securities other than those issued by or guaranteed as to principal and interest by Canada or a province, a municipal or school corporation in Canada or a bank, is guilty of an offence against this act; but this subsection does not apply where such use is required by law and is confined to a statement contained in a prospectus that a corporation is the holder of shares of the capital stock or evidences of indebtedness of a bank.

In short, to any lay person who reads section 157 in our existing Bank Act it would appear that one cannot carry on the business of banking in this country unless one is authorized to carry out the banking business under the Bank Act. That was the law of the land for over 100 years, and it is not to be questioned. What I find most strange is that this government, which pretends to wish to Canadianize industry in this country, and in particular the petroleum industry, is, at the same time "foreignizing" the banking industry in our country in direct defiance of the existing Bank Act. Imagine what they have done in spite of the clear law of the land as I read it. They have permitted an estimated 80 to 90 foreign banks to set up operations in the country, with assets totalling something like $8 billion at present, notwithstanding section 157 of the existing Bank Act.

Is it not understandable then why people are so cynical about this government and about the coalition of the government opposite and its NDP allies?

An hon. Member: How are you going to vote on the Bank Act, Sinc?

Mr. Stevens: We hear glorious statements such as, for example, the one which appeared in the national energy program for 1980, made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), a statement which, presumably, can be attributed to him. It reads as follows:

The significant fact today remains that the foreign companies control most of Canada's oil and gas industry, and of its revenues. Foreign-controlled firms control the future through the control of the land in which exploration takes place.

Throughout this document, all kinds of similar comments are to be found. The whole thrust of the document is that, in view of foreign ownership, the only way to put it right, to Canadianize the situation, is through some type of nationalization, ownership by the state as opposed to ownership by the private sector of petroleum companies which are declared to be foreign.

The point I want to make is that, whether or not you believe there is undue foreign ownership in the petroleum industry, surely it is strange to have a government which says, on the one hand, it wants to Canadianize the petroleum industry through state ownership, and at the same time says about the banking industry, which has been one of the truly Canadian owned industries in the country, "We want to open it up so that foreigners can now participate". Not only is the government eager to do it by having Parliament pass the bill which is now before us but, as hon. members will recall and as I have stated, it turns a blind eye to some 80 foreign banks setting up shop here and being active to the tune of $8 billion. In spite of that, the government asks us to believe that somehow or other it is the great Canadian champion.

I sometimes wonder where that illustrious Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) was when all this was going on, that minister who likes to say how much he hopes he will be able to Canadianize industry in this country and ensure it is owned by Canadians to a greater extent. The truth is that the government opposite is hypocritical. We have a government in power which is vacillating, pragmatic, deceitful. Ministers know how to win elections by deceit but, unfortunately, they fail to recognize that you cannot run a country by deceit only.

I suggest that hon. members look through the list of foreign banking corporations which the government has permitted to enter the country. It is truly astounding, notwithstanding the provisions to which I have referred in the existing Bank Act. For example, the Bank of America, which has an office in the Royal Bank Plaza in Toronto, shows assets in Canada amounting to $301 million. The total assets of that bank, which is one of the largest of the world, are $108 billion. They have been allowed to enter this country, notwithstanding the Bank Act. I could take hon. members through the list. ABN Canada Ltd. is a subsidiary of A. Oortman Gerlings and has assets in Canada amounting to $53 million. Barclays Canada Limited, a subsidiary of Barclays International Limited, has assets in Canada amounting to $625 million. BCI Finance Ltd., a subsidiary of Banca Commerciale Italiana Group, has assets in Canada amounting to $13 million. The B.T. Capital Services Ltd., a subsidiary of Bankers Trust Company, has assets in Canada amounting to $158 million, and it has an office in the Royal Bank Plaza in Toronto.

● (1640)

We have the Canadian Financial Company, which is a subsidiary of the Bank of Virginia, with assets of over $78 million. We have the Chemical New York Canada Ltd. and the Chemco Leasing concern, University Avenue, Toronto, which is a subsidiary of the Chemical Bank of New York, with $783 million in Canadian assets. Then we have the "biggie", we have Citicorp, 100 King Street West, Toronto, which is a subsidiary of the First National City Corporation in New York, with assets in Canada of over $1,600 million. I could go on and refer to Chase Manhattan Canada Limited, which is a subsidiary of the Chase Manhattan Bank in New York, with Canadian assets of over $175 million. We have the Continental Illinois in the Commerce Court North, Toronto, which is a subsidiary of Continental Illinois in Chicago, with Canadian assets of over $324 million. We have the Credit Lyonnais, which is a subsidiary of the bank with the same name in France, with Canadian assets of over $320 milllion.

In one sense the government is saying that it wants to Canadianize certain parts of our industrial structure. That self-same government over the last few years, particularly since the early 1970s, has allowed bank after bank of a foreign nature to set up shop in Canada and carry on business.

The net result is that presumably 50 to maybe 60 banks will be licensed and permitted to enter into banking operations in Canada under the act which is now before us. I only ask that the government, as it accepts these new banks, also accept the challenge or obligation of policing them with respect to their operations in a more effective manner than they have been policed under the existing Bank Act which includes a complete prohibition against foreign banks coming into the country.

But an odd thing happens. I could take us through the various Japanese, German, Dutch, British, French and American banks, but there is only one foreign bank about which, for some reason, the government is determined to put an impediment in its way with respect to its eligibility to be an operating foreign bank in Canada. I see the minister is getting ready to speak. When he speaks, I hope he will try to clear the air as to why he singles out one foreign bank for a prohibition when he seems to be so generous in accepting 50 to 60 or possibly 80 other foreign banks into Canada. The bank to which I refer is a bank called Grindlays.

Mr. Rae: Now the truth comes out. Here is the lobby. It is not for businesses, it is not for the car dealers. It is for Grindlays. Let the record show that the hon. member is for Grindlays. Is he not for Citicorp? Let's hear it for Citicorp, let's hear it for Lloyds. We can pray for Lloyds, we can shed a tear for Citicorp. You are a credit to your party, Sinc.

Mr. Stevens: I wish the socialist side of this coalition would just hear me out.

Mr. Rae: I bet you wish we would go away.

Mr. Stevens: If they would just hear me out they might not be so quick to join in the general condemnation. They should listen to some of the things I want to put on the record. Of all the banks which might come into Canada, the one which has the most presence, if you like, in countries such as India, Bangladesh, Pakistan—

An hon. Member: And it really helped the people there!

Mr. Stevens: In fact, if we review the various branch operations of this bank—

An hon. Member: You can say this with a straight face?

Mr. Stevens: —we will find that of the 200 branches that bank has around the world, 60 alone are in India. The majority of its operations is in the countries to which I have referred, those Asian and African countries.

An hon. Member: What about South Africa?

Mr. Stevens: For example, I could refer to the fact that there are branches in Zambia, Malaysia, Ghana, Zimbabwe, Hong Kong, Uganda, Kenya and Zaire. I want to know what the government and its NDP cohorts—

An hon. Member: They are bed partners.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: What do they have against those countries?

Mr. Rae: How will you vote, tiger?

Mr. Stevens: Why, of all the foreign banks they are willing to accept into this country, do they want so dramatically to say no to the bank which is active in India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and those African countries?

Mr. Evans: Because it is owned by Citicorp.

Mr. Stevens: If we take a look at the world bank atlas, we will see that the majority of the countries to which I have referred have average per capita incomes below $200. They are among the poorest countries in the world. It really fascinates me why this socialistic little alliance indicates that that is the one place they do not want any banking connections. The fact that that bank has already arranged $150 million in lines of credit for Canadians to do export business over in those countries means nothing to them. They somehow or other say that they would like to see them disqualified, notwithstanding.

I am sorry I did not recognize from what seat on the government benches came the comment that Citibank is a shareholder.

An hon. Member: It was the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans).

Mr. Stevens: If the minister is recognized later this afternoon, I would like him to stand up and tell us that he knows exactly the shareholdings behind all the other foreign banks which presumably he is willing to accept. The fact is that he does not. But they zero in on this one bank on the pretext that they understand it is 49 per cent owned by Citibank.

I do not care if it is owned by Citibank, or who exactly are the shareholders of that bank. I am very curious as to why they seem to be dead set on preventing that one foreign bank from coming into Canada. It is a bank represented in areas of the world where literally no other bank is represented. If we are to accept foreign banks, why are they dead set against that one bank? I think there is a story to be told that is not being told.

Mr. Rae: You are telling it.

Mr. Stevens: I should like the minister to elaborate on what are his reasons. If he can assure the House, with whatever technical problem there may be in clause 303(4), that he feels in all likelihood he can work out an accommodation for this bank, then I will be very much relaxed and satisfied that at least we are accepting all banks, as far as the initial criteria are concerned, without singling out one which seems to have a very interesting side to it that no other bank in the world has. That is an entree for us into not only Commonwealth countries but into some of the poorest nations of the world. What I would like to find out, Mr. Speaker, is what is that sort of little alliance, that socialistic alliance up to—

● (1650)

Mr. Rae: How are you going to vote on the Bank Act?

Mr. Stevens: They want to zero in, in what appears to be such an unfair way, with respect to a bank that I think could lead some of our exporters into those markets where we see so little activity at the present time.

When we had the opportunity to visit the Prime Minister of India, in new Delhi, in company with my leader, I can still remember how impressive it was to hear the prime minister state that we should restore the economic operation which could, and at one time did, exist within the Commonwealth of Nations. Frankly, I think we should. I think we should seize every opportunity to increase trade with such countries as India, Pakistan and African nations. If they are members of the Commonwealth I think we have a bond which we can capitalize on, not only for our advantage but for their advantage also. When this act is passed it is something I hope the minister will weigh, and hopefully he will see fit to accomodate it, and extend our trade activities into those areas. A national trading corporation is being proposed by the government. Unless they want to appear totally inconsistent they should not allow a trading corporation to be considered and, presumably, accepted, at the same time killing off obvious avenues to develop trade for Canadians in areas of the world which are relatively inactive at the present time.

Mr. Rae: Maybe Grindlay's will set up a bank in New Brunswick for Fred McCain, and put their head office in Alberta.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, it would be such a blessing if the NDP would join the Liberal caucus. Presumably they could settle that matter with it, and we would not have to listen to it in the House of Commons.

Mr. Skelly: Don't bend over like that!

Mr. Rae: There is a Liberal behind us. Don't bend over like that.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, when you stand in this House with socialists behind you, and near-socialists in front of you, you can understand what a Tory must do in order to keep his guard up.

As I said last May, if we can get on with it, and presumably we will pass the bill this month, I believe we will be able to get into a new banking environment in Canada. In many ways I think it can be constructive. I urgently press on the government that we are entering into a decade that will be the most revolutionary we have had since confederation, as far as banking in Canada is concerned. I hope that with the entry of these foreign banks there will be a continuing discipline applied by the federal government to ensure that the banking activity, and in particular the foreign banking activity in the country, will be for the benefit of all Canadians and not just for the benefit of a few. I say that because I think that the system will be very fragile for a few years.

If we have the opportunity to review the bank act a decade down the road, we might find that things will have occurred in those ten years that most of us in the House today would never have felt could happen. I believe if we do not have a vigilant minister and a vigilant inspector of banks that the banking system we have known, which is one of the best in the world—hopefully it will continue to be one of the best in the world—could be unrecognizable if we do not watch what we will be doing in the coming decade.

I do not want to continue. It may be that the NDP will get on with their blocking tactics now and we will find their true spots will show. I can only say that if they are having somewhat of a war with their friends on the government benches, I wish they would settle it privately and not take up the House's time any longer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have seldom been as puzzled in this chamber as I have been this afternoon. We heard the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) say that the NDP members have been blocking passage of this bill. Mr. Speaker, I was told on Monday by our House leader that there was an agreement between the House leaders of the three parties that—

Mr. Nielsen: Just two—you and the Grits.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the reason they are interjecting so much is that they are ashamed of the fact that they broke their commitment.

I was told there was an agreement that the report stage amendments would be voted on Monday evening. That did not happen because the Conservatives kept the debate going. I was told we would finish third reading last night. Who held it up? It was the Conservatives. Now we are told we are filibustering. We have listened to Conservative members talking about—

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the record should show what the truth is. This so-called agreement which the hon. member is referring to never existed. Clearly the NDP are confused. They are so confused now they think that when they have an agreement with their cousins on the government benches that it is a House agreement. We were never party to an agreement and the record should show there was never any agreement with respect to the passage of the bill last night.

Mr. Evans: That is false.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Winnipeg North—

Mr. Collenette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. parliamentary secretary on a point of order.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the point of order raised by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). It is all very well for him to say that. I would like the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) to come before the House and say exactly what his colleague has just said.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the same point of order, and as deputy opposition House leader, I back up 100 per cent what my colleague has just said. While there was an agreement—and the minutes of the House leaders' meeting will show—it was confined to the Liberal party and the New Democratic party and there was no such agreement coming from the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on the same point of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, several members are talking about things that happened when they were not there. The fact is there was an understanding among the three of us that this stage of the debate, the report stage and the third reading, would not take more than six days. Those six days ended last night. That was an agreement among the three of us, and those who are trying to deny it are responsible for a good deal.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on that same point of order, that is simply not true. The member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) did provide the understanding which the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) speaks about. He did provide that understanding, but there was no agreement. Indeed, the House leader, who is now in his seat, said, "Will you agree, then, to . . ." I do not like disclosing matters which go on in House leaders' meetings. That should not be done, but the matter was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and is now exposed.

● (1700)

Mr. Rae: You are completely exposed.

Mr. Nielsen: If the bionic mouth would control himself for a moment, he will hear the truth.

Mr. Rae: We all know how much we can trust you guys.

Mr. Nielsen: I believe the government House leader will confirm that at that particular meeting the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, when asked by the government House leader whether there could be agreement as to time, said that he could not give such an agreement. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton said that he had been informed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who has the conduct of the debate on this side, that there would be six speakers.

The agreement cited by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was an understanding only and did not take the form of an agreement. Indeed, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton went out of his way to say that he could not give an undertaking as to the limitation of debate as requested by the House leader.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, it is true that there is no order of the House. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and myself attended that meeting as parliamentarians and no other individual, except we three parliamentarians is in a better position to know what happened at the meeting. I have absolutely no hesitation to support fully the comments which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just made.

[English]

I confirm that there was no House order, but there was a gentlemen's understanding.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: That understanding was respected by the House leader for the New Democratic Party, his party and by ourselves.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to prolong this matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has a problem. As the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will realize, he has already been up twice on this matter. Perhaps I could invite the hon. member to think up a new point of order on which he may rise, because he has already risen twice on the same point of order. Unless there is some desire on the part of hon. members to pursue this discussion further, it seems to me that it has been vented and that we should return the floor to the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

The hon. member for Yukon seems to be insisting, so I will recognize him on a fresh point of order. However, it may have the effect of producing another round of discussion.

Mr. Nielsen: With respect, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair had not been so premature it would have learned, as the hon. members present would have learned, that I was rising to say that because the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton is not present perhaps I could reserve in his name the possibility that he may wish to contribute to this discussion tomorrow afternoon.

An hon. Member: Here he is now.

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton is here now. He was absent when this matter arose.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I saw some of it on TV.

Mr. Nielsen: The government House leader has confirmed in every respect, and qualified by his definition, that what went on in the House leader's meeting as being a gentlemen's understanding.

Mr. Knowles: That's right.

Mr. Nielsen: Both the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and members opposite have said that there was an agreement with respect to the termination of this debate. My understanding, in discussing the matter with the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, is that that was not the case at all. In fact the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton went out of his way, when requested by the government House leader to give a commitment, to say that he could give no such commitment. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton is here and is familiar with that meeting, and familiar, now, with what went on in the past few moments.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if I may have the floor for just a moment, I watched the "public" House leaders' meeting on television, and it was quite interesting. But since the matter has been raised publicly and since my name was used publicly, perhaps I should read from the minutes of the House leaders' meeting.

Mr. Pinard: Who took the minutes?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The minutes were taken by my executive assistant.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They are dated November 13, 1980, and were circulated on the same day.

Mr. Knowles: To whom?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They were circulated to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), Senator Flynn, Mr. Fairnie, and Miss Huntington and other officials in the office of the Leader of the Opposition, the PC research office and within my own office, so there would be no doubt, if questions were asked of these people, they could be answered if possible. The minutes with respect to the Bank Act read as follows:

> Marcel Lambert has offered to end the report stage of the Bank Act on Monday evening, and third reading on Tuesday evening (according to Pinard).

There was an offer, and some discussion may have gone on. The minutes continue:

> I said we had no reason to carry the debate on but I couldn't guarantee the schedule, although it seemed reasonable.

The "I" refers to me, and I said quite clearly that I could not guarantee the schedule. The request did not seem unreasonable, but I could not guarantee the schedule. After listening to this debate on television, the point, in my view, is whether or not there had been an agreement which had been binding between the parties and binding on the House in the absence of a House order. There was no such agreement, and I would not make such an agreement with my friend unless I could. There had been a discussion which carried over two House leaders' meetings and a number of days on the estimate of time that would be taken from our point of view, even with extended hours.

Mr. Pinard: Six days.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, six days. But if the issue here in the House is that there was some binding agreement between me as the House leader, the government House leader, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) which would apply even in the absence of a House order, that is not the case. The minutes which were prepared by someone else at the time, and signed by me as being correct, and which I have now read into the record of the House of Commons, indicate that there never was such an agreement.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, we have already spent too much time on this matter.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You raised it.

Mr. Orlikow: Indeed, I raised the subject. I have worked with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for many years and I am prepared, on the basis of my experience, to accept his version of what happened. If others do not wish to accept that version, that is their business.

We heard a great deal from the hon. member for York-Peel about the so-called coalition between the members of the Liberal party and the members of the New Democratic Party. We will see in a very few minutes where the real coalition lies, because members of our party have said on every occasion in the House, and in committee, that they disagree fundamentally with many of the important clauses in the Bank Act and will vote against the act. The hon. members for York-Peel, Calgary North (Mr. Wright), and Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), this afternoon criticized important sections of the act and pointed out what was wrong with them, but when the debate is over in less than one hour, those three supporters of free enterprise, who are so opposed to the so-called socialists on the Liberal side, will vote with those so-called socialists for the exact bill which we will vote against.

I ask the hon. member for York-Peel: who is coalescing with whom? The hon. member for York-Peel says that by moving the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), we are filibustering the bill. We moved that amendment because we are concerned about the tremendous amount of money involved in the foreign loans which the banks have made. We are particularly concerned about the loans which have been made to countries such as South Africa and Chile. These countries have received loans from such Canadian banks as the Bank of Montreal, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the Royal Bank, and the Orion Bank in England. Our concerns are shared by such organizations as the United Church. That was a very legitimate concern, and we put it in an amendment.

● (1710)

I assume that the hon. member for York-Peel and other Conservatives who are so critical of banks will vote against our amendment, even though they should not.

The hon. member for York-Peel criticized the government for permitting and encouraging foreign banks to come to Canada. This party does not believe they should be coming, and that is part of the reason we will vote against the bill. After listening to the long speech of the hon. member, I assume he will vote for the bill. So much for his opposition to foreign banks.

We are opposed to foreign banks. This government failed significantly to expand the powers of the near banks and so the foreign banks will carry the ball for the government's argument for increased competition. We believe it would have been healthy and more consistent with a policy of gaining control of the Canadian economy, to strengthen Canadian financial institutions rather than encouraging more subsidiaries of foreign banks. We think that foreign banks will concentrate on wholesale or large scale commercial business. Statistics from the Bank of Canada support this view. Assets of the 35 to 40 foreign banks operating in Canada through their representatives' offices have grown by 169 per cent over the last four years—from $1.7 billion in 1975 to $4.8 billion this year, while the assets of the Canadian chartered banks have increased by just 94 per cent.

That is the case with the foreign banks, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for York-Peel made quite a critique of them and then, with his Conservative colleagues, proposes to vote for this Bank Act which will permit them to expand.

We heard the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte complain that the banks do not look after the interests of small business. In the committee, our members proposed amendments that would require the banks to allocate more of the capital they have available for loans to small business, but the Conservatives voted against that suggestion. We argued that banks should direct their funds to more useful purposes. We proposed that they should be required to make more of their investment portfolios available for housing at a reasonable rate of interest, especially housing for low and moderate income people. Of course this was not supported by the Conservative party. They are not prepared to put their votes where their mouths are.

The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte argued that the banks do not make money available for loans to farmers or fishermen in the small towns and rural areas. When we proposed amendments which would require them to do just that, the Conservatives voted with the government against them.

We heard the hon. member for Calgary North complain about the amendments that our members of the finance committee proposed to this bill. Of course they proposed an amendment which we felt would strengthen the Bank Act and which would have directed the banks to make part of their portfolios available to people in isolated and rural areas. Some Conservative members had been calling for it, but when it came to the vote they were conspicuous by their absence. They certainly did not propose such an amendment themselves.

The hon. member seemed worried about the possible nationalization of the banks but, Mr. Speaker, no member of this House argued for that. There is nothing in this bill which would indicate movement in that direction. I suppose what he was talking about was the fear that the government is going to take over the oil industry. Mr. Speaker, there are many people who, like president-elect of the United States, Ronald Reagan, are opposed to public ownership. We could discuss the merits of American public ownership and of private ownership. I am puzzled and confused when I hear members of the Conservative party argue against public ownership.

There are publicly-owned telephone companies in western Canada, Mr. Speaker. In 1908 a Conservative government in Manitoba established a publicly-owned telephone company, and no one since then has suggested they should get rid of it. Alberta also has a publicly-owned telephone system. That province has had a Conservative government for a number of years and before that it had a Conservative government which called itself a Social Credit government. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) could tell us about it. It never moved to get rid of the publicly-owned telephone system. Almost every province has a publicly-owned power company and many of these were started by Conservative governments and expanded by Conservative governments. No one has suggested we should get rid of that public ownership.

The Conservative government of Alberta has taken over Pacific Western Airlines which is now a wholly-owned public corporation. I do not know how they can square that with their belief in free enterprise. Then there is the Alberta Energy Company, Nova Corporation, the Alberta Gas Trunk Line Company. All of these have a substantial public investment, and they were established by the Conservative government of Alberta.

I have to assume that the Conservatives oppose public ownership except when it is proposed by Conservative governments. That is a very interesting way of looking at things.

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the companies the hon. member has just mentioned are in competition. They do not have a monopoly; they are in competition with others, and the shares are owned by the public.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, it was not my understanding that the Alberta telephone system is in competition with any other, but it may be. Petro-Canada is certainly in competition with the privately-owned energy corporations. Even this party has not suggested that all energy corporations should be taken over and run by the state.

I would remind the hon. member for Bow River that in almost every other country in the world, whether Norway, Sweden or any western European country, governments own a very substantial percentage of most of the new oil and gas development in recent years. Since World War I, BP has been 50 per cent publicly owned. That great exponent of socialism, Winston Churchill, took over 50 per cent of it.

I should like to take a few moments to indicate some of our reservations about this bill, Mr. Speaker, and why we propose to vote against it. We not only speak against the bill, we vote against it. That illustrates the difference between this party and the Conservative party which speaks against the bill and then will vote for it, as I believe it will.

We are against this bill because, in our opinion, it fails to meet the needs of the Canadian people. We believe that for too long the Canadian banking system has been allowed a central position in the economy of this country without playing a key role for the benefit of Canadian citizens. That is not to suggest that the banks have necessarily abused their position. What I am saying is that the opportunity to use the banking system as an instrument of public policy to benefit Canadians, and to strengthen our economy, has been missed and it will continue to be missed if we pass this bill as it has been drafted.

● (1720)

The disparities and the weaknesses of the Canadian economy are well known and well documented. What is especially worrying to us is that these disparities and weaknesses result from underlying trends in the national economy which continue to go untreated. The problem of regional disparity is getting worse, and is accompanied by very high unemployment. In fact we have the highest rate of unemployment in the industrialized world. We also have low rates of job creation. The manufacturing sector in this country is deteriorating. The share of that sector in the national work force is dropping. It has dropped from 26 per cent in 1973 to 19 per cent in 1979. Research and development are inadequately funded. In the past five years, $13.8 billion in dividends and interest payments has left the country. A further $8.5 billion left in management fees, patent fees, licence fees, copyright fees and the like.

We say the banks are, to a large extent, responsible for that situation because the banks have not been directed by governments of this country, Liberal or Conservative, to play a socially useful function in this economy of ours. We say the banks should be one of the best instruments for helping to put this country back to work by developing resources for the benefit of Canadians. Instead, the banks have been given tremendous economic power. They have used it largely to benefit their directors and shareholders.

I do not want to repeat today some of the things I have said on other occasions, and which other members of our party have said. However, the system of interlocking directorships we have in Canada in which bank directors are also directors of other corporations, has helped to build a resource not just at the banks, which have grown at a tremendous rate, but has helped to give an even greater stranglehold each year to the large corporations in Canada.

We have a situation where directors of each of the major banks are in turn directors of the major industrial and business corporations in Canada. The Royal Bank of Canada, the Bank of Montreal, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, in fact all of them are involved in this kind of operation. Directors of the large corporations, such as the president of the CPR, the president of Seagram's, the president of Brascan, and other corporations are in turn directors of banks. Each of them is interested in seeing their corporations grow. They grow obviously at the expense of the small businessman, the local entrepreneur, for whom our friends in the Conservative party have so often expressed sympathy, and on whose behalf they are very loath to do anything of any real significance to help.

We do not apologize for our opposition to this bill, nor do we apologize that our members did what the hon. member for Calgary North said they did, and that was bring in a large number of amendments. They did it knowingly and with the support of all members of our party. They did it because we have fundamental disagreements with the government and with Conservative members of Parliament who, despite all of their protestations, are going to vote for this bill. They will vote for this bill despite being so critical of so many of the provisions in it, because they wrote the bill. The former minister of finance helped draft this bill, as did the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). And to whom did these people go for help? They went to the very people this bill is supposed to regulate and monitor, the people in the banking community. They got the kind of bill, despite the protestations of some of their backbenchers, which the bankers wanted.

The same bill which was introduced by the former minister of finance, with very few amendments or changes, comes back today in this session brought forward by a Liberal government. It proves again what we have said so often, that there is virtually no difference between the Liberal and Conservative parties.

I conclude by saying that we are going to vote against this bill despite the claims of the hon. member for York-Peel that there is a coalition between the Liberals and the NDP. I am certain that members of the Conservative party are going to vote for the bill. These votes we will have will demonstrate very clearly to Canadians that if there is a coalition of parties in this Parliament, it is between the two old line parties, the Liberals and the Conservatives. We, as always, oppose this bill and bills like it which are brought forward either by Conservative or Liberal governments.

Mr. Knowles: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Rae) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 33)

YEAS

Messrs.

Benjamin	Lewycky	Orlikow
Blackburn	Manly	Parker
de Jong	Miller	Rae
Fulton	Mitchell (Mrs.)	Robinson (Burnaby)
Hovdebo	Murphy	Rose
Jewett (Miss)	Nystrom	Skelly
Keeper	Ogle	Young—22.
Knowles

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand	Evans	Maltais
Andre	Ferguson	Marceau
Bachand	Fisher	Massé
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Fleming	Mayer
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Foster	McCauley
Beatty	Fox	McCuish
Bégin (Miss)	Fraser	McDermid
Berger	Fretz	McGrath
Blenkarn	Friesen	McKenzie
Bloomfield	Frith	McMillan
Bockstael	Gamble	McRae
Bossy	Garant	Mitges
Breau	Gauthier	Munro (Hamilton East)
Bujold	Gendron	Neil
Bussières	Gimaïel	Nickerson
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)	Gingras	Nielsen
Campbell (LaSalle)	Gourd	Oberle
Cardiff	Gray	Olivier
Chénier	Greenaway	Ostiguy
Chrétien	Guilbault	Ouellet
Clark (Yellowhead)	Gurbin	Paproski
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Halliday	Parent
Coates	Hargrave	Patterson
Collenette	Henderson	Penner
Comtois	Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)	Pepin
Cook	Howie	Peterson
Corbett	Hudecki	Pinard
Corbin	Huntington	Portelance
Corriveau	Irwin	Prud'homme
Cousineau	Jarvis	Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Crombie	Johnston	Roberts
Crosby (Halifax West)	Joyal	Roche
Crouse	Kelly	Rompkey
Cullen	Kempling	Rooney
Cyr	Kilgour	Rossi
Darling	Killens (Mrs.)	Savard
Dawson	Korchinski	Schroder
de Corneille	Kushner	Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Demers	Lachance	Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Deniger	Lalonde	Shields
Desmarais	Lambert	Simmons
Dinsdale	Lamontagne	Smith
Dion	Landers	Speyer
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)	Lang	Stevens
Dubois	Lapierre	Stollery
Duclos	Lapointe (Charlevoix)	Tardif
Dupont	La Salle	Taylor
Dupras	LeBlanc	Tessier
Duquet	Leduc	Tobin
Elzinga	Lefebvre	Towers
Epp	Lewis	Turner
Ethier	Lonsdale	Vankoughnet
	MacBain	Wise
	MacDonald (Miss)	Wright
	MacEachen	Yanakis
	Mackasey	Yurko—167.
	MacLaren
	MacLellan
	Malépart

● (1750)

Madam Speaker: I therefore declare the amendment lost.

The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

Madam Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Shall we dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. MacEachen) which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 34)

YEAS

Messrs.

Allmand	Cullen	Hargrave
Andre	Cyr	Henderson
Bachand	Darling	Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Dawson	Howie
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	de Corneille	Hudecki
Beatty	Demers	Huntington
Bégin (Miss)	Deniger	Irwin
Berger	Desmarais	Jarvis
Blaker	Dinsdale	Johnston
Blenkarn	Dion	Joyal
Bloomfield	Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)	Kelly
Bockstael	Dubois	Kempling
Bossy	Duclos	Kilgour
Breau	Dupont	Killens (Mrs.)
Bujold	Dupras	Korchinski
Bussières	Duquet	Kushner
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)	Elzinga	Lachance
Campbell (LaSalle)	Epp	Lalonde
Cardiff	Ethier	Lambert
Chénier	Evans	Lamontagne
Chrétien	Ferguson	Landers
Clark (Yellowhead)	Fisher	Lang
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Fleming	Lapierre
Coates	Foster	Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Collenette	Fox	La Salle
Comtois	Fraser	LeBlanc
Cook	Fretz	Leduc
Corbett	Friesen	Lefebvre
Corbin	Frith	Lewis
Corriveau	Garant	Lonsdale
Cousineau	Gauthier	MacBain
Crombie	Gendron	MacDonald (Miss)
Crosby (Halifax West)	Gimaïel	MacEachen
Crouse	Gingras	Mackasey
	Gourd	MacLaren
	Gray	MacLellan
	Greenaway	Malépart
	Guilbault	Maltais
	Gurbin	Marceau
	Halliday

Messrs.

Massé
Masters
Mayer
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKenzie
McMillan
McRae
Mitges
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Neil
Nickerson
Nielsen
Oberle
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Reid
(Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Roche
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Savard
Schroder
Scott
(Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Simmons
Smith
Speyer
Stevens
Stollery
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Tobin
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Wise
Wright
Yanakis
Yurko—168.

NAYS

Messrs.

Benjamin
Blackburn
de Jong
Fulton
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Knowles
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell
(Mrs.)
Murphy
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Robinson
(Burnaby)
Rose
Skelly
Young—22.

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Madam Speaker: It being after six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6.08 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 20, 1980

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CALL FOR EXTENSION OF REPORTING DEADLINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a matter of urgent and pressing necessity dealing with the deadline for the report of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution which is now sitting. In order to avoid any misunderstanding with respect to it, I have given notice of this motion both to the House leadership of the government and of the NDP. The motion, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), reads:

That the terms of reference of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution be hereby amended so that the deadline for the committee's report shall be February 10, 1981, instead of December 9, 1980, and that a message be sent to the Senate asking it to concur in this motion.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I rise today under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of somewhat urgent and pressing concern. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) is at present preoccupied in his role as "Pierre of Arabia", the all-Canadian oil buyer, while oil exploration and development is grinding to a halt in his own country, and in view of the fact that he has been reported to have been seen in exotic regalia while he sits sifting sand, I would like to invite him, because obviously he enjoys wearing clothes of other lands, to come to British Columbia where we are anxious to present him with a costume of feathers held in place with tar.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Greenaway: Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the Prime Minister come to British Columbia at his earliest convenience to receive this well deserved gift.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I also rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to move a motion along lines similar to that of the previous speaker. With over a million Canadians unemployed, with double-digit inflation, negative economic growth, an energy crisis and constitutional problems in the major provinces while vitally important constitutional discussions are taking place, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That the picture of the Prime Minister of Canada dancing sheik-to-sheik, as it were, be attached to today's Hansard as living proof of the level of concern that this Prime Minister has for the pressing problems within this nation today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE MINISTRY

COMMENDATION OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice Bossy (Kent): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity. In view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is widely known and respected by all Canadians—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bossy: —and in view of an article in the news media about his recent trip to western Canada and the continuing efforts of this distinguished Canadian to bring about better understanding among our citizens, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson):

That this House commend the minister for his untiring efforts to communicate with his fellow citizens and nominate him as the best dressed man of the year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CALL FOR RENEGOTIATION OF NEW AUTO PACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Canadian deficit within the U.S.-Canada auto pact has reached a staggering $15 billion since 1965 and that 25,000 Canadians have lost their jobs within the industry and hundreds of thousands more in associated industries, creating widespread bankruptcies within this vital sector of our economy, and because the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), after having been so ineffective while the auto industry crumbled in front of his eyes, has seen fit to send a few officials to Washington merely to modify the auto pact, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That this House instruct the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to scrap the obsolete and inadequate auto pact so harmful to this country and attempt to replace it with a new package which would ensure that Canada receive its fair share of the assembly and production of fuel-efficient cars as well as parts and components manufactured in Canada for the so-called world car concept, and that during this transition period import quotas on offshore vehicles be imposed and an annual report of the over-all aspects of the auto industry in Canada be produced and tabled by the minister, as recommended in the Reisman report.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I trust the House will say "Yemen" to this motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is negotiating with Arabians rather than with Canadians on oil prices, and instead of letting Imperial Oil "dip" into public funds and "stick" it to the taxpayer, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the Prime Minister stop his "whole lot of sheikin goin' on" over there and return to Canada at once, since the only Allah he should be dealing with is "Allah-berta".

Madam Speaker: I wonder if there are many more of these urgent and pressing motions which require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CALL FOR ELECTRONIC VOTING SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given that the present method of voting in the House is time-consuming—the vote on the Bank Act took some two hours—and often results in votes going "on division" rather than having a formal vote, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre):

That the Chair and/or the government consider the possibility of installing an electronic voting system similar to the one employed at the United Nations.

Madam Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENERGY

OIL PRICING AGREEMENT WITH ALBERTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas in Arabia the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is having an extravaganza dancing with the sheik "sheik-to-sheik", and buying Arabian oil at world prices; whereas in Canada businesses are slowing up, oil rigs are leaving, scores of Canadians are losing their jobs, and hunger and frustration are haunting Canadian fathers, mothers and children, all because our Prime Minister refuses to buy Canadian oil even at 75 per cent of world prices, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble):

That the Prime Minister return immediately to Canada and offer Canadian producing provinces a full agreement—not a piece-by-piece agreement as heretofore—in order to keep the money, the jobs and our businesses in Canada.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE MINISTRY

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The defence industry productivity program is designed to support selected research and development projects and to provide increased employment opportunities. This program now has a backlog of some 200 applications. The government encourages businesses to apply for reimbursement of 50 per cent of the cost of purchasing new equipment, only to find the program has no funds to meet the federal commitment. Given the fact that the failure of the federal government to meet its financial commitments will result in a large number of lay-offs in the defence industry, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That because of the obvious lack of influence in cabinet of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which resulted in his inability to get the necessary funds for his program which is now in the red by some $66 million, this House calls on the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to do the honourable thing and resign his office in protest.

Madam Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

ROBERTS BANK COAL TERMINAL—JOBS FOR CANADIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43, in view of the discussion which started today at the closed Pacific Rim conference in Vancouver. Given the fact that dredging contracts for the proposed expansion of the Roberts Bank coal terminal to serve the Pacific Rim will be open to foreign contractors, which will mean an even greater loss of jobs to Canadian dredging companies and workers, and in view of the increased sell-out of our raw resources such as British Columbia coal, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) require that all jobs related to the Roberts Bank development go to Canadian workers and that the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce, instead of selling off Canada's raw materials, establish a western industrial strategy to develop a steel mill in B.C. with secondary manufacturing, and that he also introduce legislation which will require Canadian exports to be shipped on ships built in Canada and manned by Canadians.

● (1415)

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—VOTE NOT TO EXTEND REPORTING DEADLINE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that already more than 100 Canadian organizations or individuals have applied to appear before the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution. I wonder if he will tell the House why the Liberal members of that committee voted unanimously today against extending the reporting date of that committee?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think that is an extraordinary question. The members of the committee are entitled to discharge their own responsibilities. That is what they have done. I believe this is a question which casts a reflection on the action of the committee and it is quite unacceptable on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Deputy Prime Minister has indicated that he feels no regret that countless Canadians, who want to have their views heard on the constitution, have been denied by a Liberal party vote the right to have their views heard. I wonder if the hon. gentleman will tell the House, as a matter of government policy, notwithstanding the unanimous party vote by the Liberals today designed to limit the capacity of the constitution committee to hear Canadians on the Canadian Constitution, whether the Government of Canada would still be prepared to consider an agreement among House leaders to extend the reporting date of that committee to February 10.

Mr. MacEachen: If the right hon. gentleman is entitled to comment upon the conduct of the Liberal members on the committee, I might be permitted to comment on the conduct of opposition members who, in my view, are putting forward mischievous amendments at a time—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —when the Leader of the Government in the House has already indicated his willingness to negotiate with members of the opposition in a flexible way with respect to the deadline to which the hon. gentleman has referred. That is the situation and it was stated in the House yesterday. Instead of waiting for these negotiations, the members of the opposition took a couple of hours this morning putting forward mischievous motions which could be dealt with in a better way, in accordance with the request made yesterday by the leader of the New Democratic Party who asked for negotiations on this subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We know the preference of the Deputy Prime Minister is to deal privately with questions which should be decided upon publicly. But we do not share his view at all that it is mischievous for the people of Canada to be given the right to be heard on their own constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The hon. gentleman may know there has been an umbrella group formed under the signature of the Mayor of Ottawa, Marion Dewar, which represents women's organizations, native groups, various churches and poverty groups in the country, among others, which is asking that the unrealistic deadline of November 25 for submission either for written briefs or requests to be heard by the committee be changed to December 31. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether, as a matter of policy, the Government of Canada will accept that reasonable request by that umbrella group to extend the deadline for receipt of requests to be heard or written submissions to be made by Canadians who want to participate in decisions about our constitution to December 31?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, we are as eager as hon. members opposite to give Canadian citizens an opportunity to present their views before the constitution committee. Yesterday the President of the Privy Council indicated that on this question he was prepared to be flexible, that he wanted to enter into arrangements with members of the opposition and that he was prepared to undertake negotiations with representatives of other parties in order to reach an agreement on this matter. So the government is flexible and is prepared to discuss the matter.

● (1420)

I do not accept the view of the Leader of the Opposition that it is up to the leader of the House, to him or to any one member to dictate the proceedings of that committee. Hon. members have been nominated by this House to sit on the committee. They are adults, they know their own minds and they are prepared to do their own work.

Mr. Beatty: The Liberals refused.

THE COMMONWEALTH

REPORTED THREAT BY CANADA TO LEAVE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary and is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since Liberal members on the committee have refused to extend the deadline for witnesses to appear before the committee beyond December 9, 1980, I would like to pursue the question as to the lengths to which the government is prepared to go in forcing through its constitutional package unilaterally.

My question is with regard to Canada's membership in the Commonwealth. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be aware, the latest edition of Maclean's states:

> British officials report that extreme pressure has been put on Thatcher by Canada, including even the threat of pulling out of the Commonwealth.

Would the minister tell the House who made that threat and under what circumstances?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I can unequivocally deny that the Canadian government has made any such threat or even any such suggestion to members of the British government or to anyone else.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, the minister is only too well aware that reports such as this are given added credibility by the tactics used by the government of closure and arm twisting, all of which have been going on throughout the course of this matter. If the minister says that the threat of cutting our links with the Commonwealth would not apply, what were the extreme pressures which were brought to bear on the British government referred to in that article?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, no pressures were brought to bear on the British government and no threats were issued because none was necessary. In fact, the British government recognized, from the time of the first meeting on this subject between the two Prime Ministers, that there is a tradition as to how to handle requests coming from our Parliament by way of joint resolution. This tradition was acknowledged from the beginning, and there has never been any occasion for argument on either side about that tradition.

* * *

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT OF IMPERIAL OIL COLD LAKE PROJECT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns his announcement yesterday that the government will bankroll Imperial Oil, the richest oil company in Canada and a subsidiary of Exxon Corporation of the United States, the biggest oil company in the world, to the tune of $40 million for the Cold Lake project. In view of the fact that Imperial Oil had profits of $2.4 billion from the years 1975 to 1980, profits of something like $493 million last year and an increase in profits in the first nine months of 1980 of 56 per cent over last year, in view of all the money made by this rich company, why is it necessary for the Government of Canada to give the company an extra $40 million? Why could the company not raise its own money to continue the work at Cold Lake?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there is a very simple reason. I agree that Imperial Oil is a wealthy and powerful company, but it has already spent $120 million on this particular project. For reasons which are well known, the government of Alberta has delayed over the last three years the approval of this project which, in our view, is a very important project if we are to achieve our goal of national autonomy or independence of oil supply.

● (1425)

Rather than see the team of 550 engineers and experts disbanded and this project shelved and abandoned indefinitely, it was felt it would be much better at this time, to ensure that the team would be kept together, to advance the money necessary over the next six months, shoved between the two governments preferably. Since I do not know whether Alberta is going to come up with its share, we said we would provide the full advance if they do not. If the project does proceed, the loan will be repaid with interest by Imperial Oil.

Mr. Waddell: And if the project does not proceed, the government will throw away $40 million, I gather. I do not think the minister and hon. members opposite understand this. I note that the whole basis of the national energy policy is to Canadianize the industry. What is the first act of Canadianization, Madam Speaker? To give $40 million to Imperial Oil. Imperial Oil has stated that it considers the $38 per barrel oil price offered by the federal government too low to allow the project to proceed. Would the minister not admit that he has boxed himself into a corner? If he wants the $40 million back, he will have to agree with Imperial Oil on the Cold Lake Project as to what the final price will be.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, as far as the first part of the question is concerned, I should like to tell the hon. member that I have already had discussions with Imperial Oil about a very substantial expansion of Canadian participation in the Cold Lake project. Obviously it would appear that this project that is at the present time overwhelmingly foreign owned will end up having a very much larger Canadian participation. I think this has been a very encouraging development in the last few weeks, since the budget has come out.

On the second point raised by my hon. colleague, the debate is not so much about the $38 per barrel as about the rate of escalation, as he well knows. We are reviewing this matter and there will be discussions with the government of Alberta.

I should like to conclude by saying that the alternative he offers as the only alternative is not necessarily so; there are other alternatives, and I would want to keep those in reserve.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I do not know if the hon. minister saw the movie "The Sting" where somebody got taken as a mark for a million dollars. I suggest that he is the "$40 million Marc".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: The minister suggests that there are some alternatives to fuller Canadian participation. Let me suggest an alternative and ask him if he is prepared to go ahead with it. On November 27, 1979, at the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, the leader of my party, the hon. member for Oshawa, asked Mr. Hopper, the president of Petro-Canada, if Petro-Canada could develop the tar sands and avoid the 15 per cent to 20 per cent profit that the multinationals would take out of it. He replied that there was no question that Petro-Canada could do it.

Instead of giving $40 million to Imperial Oil, why does the minister not let Petro-Canada develop the tar sands for Canadians?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I will not go into great detail in answering the hon. member. I just remind him that we are talking about a heavy oil project here, not a tar sands project.

* * *

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

FUTURE ENERGY DEVELOPMENT AND POLICY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It becomes more clear every day that the national energy program is having a very adverse effect on future energy development in this country. Companies have suffered a major loss of confidence and trust in the ability of the government to get on with the job and in their real intentions here. The industry does not want bail-outs; they do not want loans; they want an agreement and they want to get on with the job. If we had that agreement we would not need to have any loans to companies of the magnitude of Imperial Oil.

Does the minister not agree that a positive environment developed by an energy policy will do far more for future energy development than bail-outs or loans to major companies in this industry?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I agree, Madam Speaker, and I believe this is what we have produced with the national energy program for the 1980s.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, it is certainly not apparent from anything that anyone reads or hears spoken about that particular energy program in Canada today, including observers outside this country. Many of the companies that are affected by this energy policy, particularly the small and medium-sized Canadian-owned companies, are reacting negatively in terms of laying off staff, cutting back exploration budgets and reducing purchasing in other parts of the country. Would the minister embark on a detailed survey of the attitudes of the individual companies involved to get a proper assessment before the damage done by this energy program continues further?

● (1430)

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I might tell the hon. member that I have already had several meetings with representatives of the industry, official associations and individual companies. My officials have also sat down with representatives of individual companies to compare figures, projections and examine the implications of certain aspects of the program of concern to them.

Mr. Nielsen: Like Imperial Oil?

Mr. Lalonde: These are being examined side by side with the companies concerned. When areas of particular difficulty appear, an examination will be made as to what can be done, if necessary, to adjust the situation. This process is going on. It is quite normal and I am quite confident this will work out to the satisfaction of everyone.

* * *

IMPERIAL OIL LIMITED

INCREASED CANADIAN OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I would also like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and thereby give him an opportunity to expand on some of the answers he has given to us which would indicate, perhaps, that we are on the eve of a changed budget.

The minister has stated, in effect, that there have been discussions, presumably with Imperial Oil or with the Rockefeller corporation itself—Exxon Corporation—with respect to getting more Canadian ownership of Imperial Oil. Would the minister indicate precisely what he is referring to ? May we anticipate that Exxon will sell off sufficient of its Imperial Oil shares that its ownership in Imperial Oil will be reduced from the present 69 per cent or so to something which will put the majority of control into private Canadian hands?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the objective of the government has been made public, and it is very clear. First, to achieve at least 50 per cent Canadian ownership of the industry within this decade; second, to achieve Canadian control of a large number of big companies; and third, to have the Canadian people increase, through the Government of Canada, their share of Canadian ownership. Discussions are now in progress with various companies and will continue in coming weeks and months in this connection. My hon. colleague surely knows that it would be improper for me to reveal any specific element of those discussions while they are under way.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: My supplementary question is for the same minister, Madam Speaker. Let me be more specific. Yesterday the minister said, as reported in Hansard at page 4851, the following:

> I met yesterday with the president of Imperial Oil.

The minister said there have been general discussions. To be specific, has the minister discussed with the Exxon Corporation, or representatives of it, the possibility of their selling shares, which they now own in Imperial Oil, to Canadians for private Canadian investment?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I indicated that I had met the chairman of Imperial Oil, Mr. Jack Armstrong, and had discussions with him. The general policy of the government is well known to Imperial Oil as well as, obviously, to Exxon.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, my question is again for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who appears to be most unwilling to be communicative. Can he tell us more about the loan that he is making to this very rich company, a subsidiary, incidentally, of the wealthiest company in the world? Would the minister indicate what interest rate he is offering in this cozy deal, bearing in mind that Imperial Oil at the present time is able to borrow funds on the open market at approximately the same cost as the Government of Canada itself? In turn, would the minister tell us why he used the words yesterday that he has instructed Petro-Canada to enter into this deal? Where does he get the authority to instruct Petro-Canada?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is not in the act.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, as far as the first part of the question is concerned, I would like to remind the hon. member—if I am not mistaken—that yesterday the energy critic for his party indicated to the press that I had taken the right decision in supporting this particular project.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: What interest rate?

Mr. Clark: Come on, Marc, answer the question.

Mr. Nielsen: What about the interest rate?

Mr. Lalonde: Secondly, as far as the specific negotiations are concerned—

An hon. Member: They do not like your answer.

Mr. Lalonde: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, but the wounds in the back of the Leader of the Opposition seem to be hurting him just now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The wounds are in my country, and you are driving them in.

Mr. Crombie: What is the interest rate?

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the negotiations are concerned, I have asked Petro-Canada to undertake those discussions with Imperial Oil—

An hon. Member: Look at the separatists laugh.

Mr. Lalonde: —and to advise as to all of the details of this particular arrangement. In my discussions with the president of Imperial Oil it was indicated that obviously this money would have to be repaid with interest.

An hon. Member: At what interest rate?

Mr. Lalonde: The exact amount will have to be negotiated as will the arrangements. This is what Petro-Canada is going to do. When such negotiations are concluded, we will be very happy to reveal to the hon. member all of the details.

As to the last question, I would remind the hon. member that the Government of Canada is the shareholder of Petro-Canada and I, as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, have the voting share for Petro-Canada, which gives me the power to give instructions to that corporation.

Mr. Andre: No, you have not read the act.

* * *

FISHERIES

PROPOSED DAMMING OF RIVERS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I am sure he is very fond of his new policy for western Canada, somewhat interestingly called "western vision blueprint". I note he has not yet released it to the public, although I am sure he will in the near future. However, I would like to quote briefly from this document because my question arises from it. The document reads in part:

> B.C. Hydro is looking for ways in which to meet peak power demands—many of these projects could have very attractive benefit cost ratios—there is an opportunity through joint development for both parties to meet their goals. We know B.C. Hydro is interested; we also know there are perhaps 20 or more salmon streams that would lend themselves to this approach.

Would the minister tell this House, when he refers to "both parties" whether he is referring to the Liberal party and the provincial Social Credit party or to B.C. Hydro and federal fisheries? In addition, will he table for the information of all members of this House the list of the 20 rivers which he and his department are proposing to dam in British Columbia?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member were more interested in the development and protection of the fishing resource than in making headlines, he would have listened very carefully when he phoned officials of my department who fully briefed him about the problems being discussed in this supposed secret memo.

I have stood in this place a number of times and I have said that I did not think the fish could claim the absolute and exclusive use of water. Water is a resource which has to be used for a number of other requirements.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. LeBlanc: We know, in case the hon. member does not know, that the flow of water—the hon. member from Broadview might learn something if he listened.

An hon. Member: He thinks he is so smart, but he does not know anything like that.

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, I indicated that water can be used very intelligently to produce electricity at certain peak hours and then be used during certain periods of the year to give sufficient water supply for spawning or for the smolts which are in the freshwater system. This is an approach where we think we can work intelligently if our engineers and biologists talk to one another. But obviously the hon. member's position is that the two are enemies who must never get together. That is not my view.

● (1440)

Mr. Fulton: First, Madam Speaker, I hope the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans will again rise in his place; he would not want to mislead the House. I did not phone any officials from his department. They in fact called and were crying over the phone to me, asking me to stay away from raising any questions on this particular issue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: I wonder if the minister would rise in his place and change the statement that he put on the record today. Also, he beat around the bush. Will he table in this House for members from western Canada which 20 rivers he is proposing to dam in British Columbia? Will he also table in this House the correspondence which has gone between him and B.C. Hydro as to what sort of secret deals are going on between fisheries and B.C. Hydro?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, I will correct my statement. I will say an official has spoken to the hon. member.

Mr. Fulton: He phoned me.

Mr. LeBlanc: Yes, I said I would correct that. I said I would correct the impression I may have left. An official spoke to him to try to explain what the simple suggestion is. Instead of seeing water as the subject of a fight between different users, we try to use water resources intelligently so that all users can benefit. If the hon. member does not like that approach, he can continue to take the obscurantist view. I suggest to him that in many cases he will lose important fish runs.

POSSIBLE BAN BY BRITAIN OF IMPORTS OF CANADIAN LOBSTER

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): My question is also to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The important lobster season is about to begin. Is the minister aware of a story in today's The Globe and Mail concerning the wish of Scottish fishermen to have Britain ban imports of Canadian lobster because they say they carry a contagious disease? If so, is he aware of any disease which Canadian lobster carry, or is this a trick to keep the price of lobster down now that the season is about to begin in the southern end of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, it is a fact that if lobster is eaten alive, which is not an easy job—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. LeBlanc: —in some cases there may be a problem. I understand that in Scotland lobsters are eaten cooked, in which case they are perfectly safe. The hon. member has suggested that this may be an effort to keep Canadian lobster off the market. I would not assign that kind of motive to the Scottish fishermen, whose lobster is more expensive than ours. Neither would I assign to the best known industry of Scotland the fact that sometimes it is deleterious to one's health.

* * *

ENERGY

INQUIRY RESPECTING SIGNING OF OIL PRICING AGREEMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Fahramet Limited, a Canadian company located in Orillia, Ontario, has laid off 125 workers since May because of a slowdown in demand in the petrochemical material supply business such as valves, pumps and castings. I talked to an official of this company today and it will be a relief to know he did not ask for a $40 million loan, but he did say that the lack of an energy pricing policy or agreement was severely hurting Canadian manufacturing and costing Canadians jobs. What we have is Canada's energy opportunity becoming a crisis. I would ask the minister this. Canadian businesses, and I do not mean the oil rig business but manufacturers in Ontario and across Canada, the little guy, want an opportunity to participate in building and selling. When will this agreement with the oil producing provinces be reached and when will it be signed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): As soon as there is an agreement, Madam Speaker. We hope to have an agreement as soon as possible. We have indicated our willingness to sit down at the officials or ministerial level, or at the prime ministerial level, at the convenience of the government of Alberta. The government of Alberta has indicated they prefer to have discussions starting first at the officials level, and ministerial meetings will take place at a later time. We are available and ready to discuss.

PETROCHEMICAL DEVELOPMENT—OPPORTUNITY FOR CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When Celanese Canada built its latest plant at Edmonton, a $5.2 million contract for reformer tubes went to the United States, although there were competitive bids from Canadian companies and sufficient capacity to produce the product in Canada. Has the minister discussed with his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, provision in the agreement they are going to reach with the producing provinces to provide a means whereby Canadian manufacturers will be given a clear opportunity to participate in the development of the petrochemical industry?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, providing increased opportunities for Canadian manufacturers to participate in the kinds of activities the hon. member has mentioned, and in the benefits from our energy development generally, is very much a part of our national energy program. I spoke about it at some length at the conclusion of the budget debate the other week. I hope from what the hon. member just said that he will be supporting our efforts to have this national energy program in place, helping Canadian companies and workers as soon as possible.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER MEASURES TO CREATE JOBS CONTEMPLATED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, in the same vein, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A quite recent survey conducted among 11,000 Canadian businessmen showed clearly that most of them were experiencing tremendous problems because of the interest rate, that 50 per cent of them suffered a decline in profits and that, in Quebec alone, nearly 13 per cent of these businesses had abandoned their development plans in the past six months, which means a loss of new jobs. Under the circumstances, I will not direct my question to the Minister of Finance, because I already know his answer, but I wonder if the Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce would consider introducing special measures to help these businesses and indeed create new jobs.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I think that the budget introduced by my hon. colleague, the Minister of Finance, laid the foundations for a substantial expansion of all Canadian businesses across the country, but I also hope that the bills designed to implement the budget will soon be introduced in the House, which will indeed bring about the results that my hon. friend is seeking today.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I directed my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on a very specific problem, namely interest rates. The minister asked me to trust the budget. Of course, I am not as optimistic as he may be, but considering the situation in the building and in various industries, and it has been demonstrated that they have enormous problems—and I say again to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that in Quebec in particular as far as I can understand, 13 per cent of the industries have abandoned their development plans, and consequently job-creation opportunities, because of interest costs, would the minister be prepared to recommend to his colleague a special measure to help those industries and consequently create jobs in an indirect fashion?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, I think there is already such a provision in the budget for small business development bonds, and I hope it will be possible in the very near future to have the measures before us, with the consent of my hon. friend, and to implement them as soon as possible. This provision was originally introduced by his government, and I hope that we shall have the consent and continued support of the House for that necessary measure.

* * *

[English]

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

SCIENCE COUNCIL OF CANADA REPORT—PROGRAM TO INCREASE SKILLED LABOUR FORCE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the Science Council of Canada's recently released report on the devastating state of the auto industry in North America, could the minister tell this House, first, whether or not he agrees with the conclusions made in this report and, if he does agree, would he consider implementing a program devised to improve and increase the skilled labour force within the industry, as the report recommends, as well as provide for opportunities in technological research and development in Canada, which would prepare Canada for its fair share of the industry?

● (1450)

If the minister does not agree with the report, will he implement temporary quotas on offshore imports during which time the obsolete and inadequate auto pact, which he is very well aware of, would be completely revamped and not just modified, as his assistant deputy minister is attempting to do in Washington today?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the Science Council of Canada report, which I have not yet had the opportunity to review in detail, details a number of concerns and problems which have already been indicated in various ways and which we have already taken aboard in the development and application of programs to deal with the concerns of the very important auto industry and auto parts industry.

For example, work is under way, in co-operation with my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, to have further programs in place to develop necessary skills and upgrade skills; and as part of our discussions with the auto companies—including the head offices, something recommended by the report, and as part of our discussions with the American authorities—we certainly are striving to have in place more activity in the research and development and technological area.

With respect to my hon. friend's suggestion that there be a complete renegotiation of the auto pact, that is not something recommended by the auto industry itself, either the manufacturers, the parts industry or the workers. My hon. friend is completely out of step, therefore, in urging that action upon this House and upon this country.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, the minister says that the auto industry is not in support of revamping the auto pact. He is talking about the American auto industry which is not in favour, and that is very clear because the auto pact has cost Canada a deficit of $15 billion since 1965, $4 billion in the last year alone.

I therefore want the minister to explain to us why, first, it has taken him even this long to send his officials to Washington to begin to renegotiate or modify the auto pact, which he knows is not enough. Second, what are those proposals which are under discussion in Washington today? Third, what positive and direct steps is the minister planning which he has not outlined at all over the period of the last nine months? What positive steps is he taking so that Canada will get its fair share of the manufacturing and assembling of fuel-efficient autos as well as the production of parts and components for the so-called world car concept?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, the fact of the matter is that we are working to bring about improvements in the auto pact with respect to areas of concern to Canada. We did not begin that in our meeting of officials yesterday. Instead, the meeting yesterday was only the latest in a series of meetings under the auspices of the consultation to which we agreed with the United States and which was begun at the ministerial level between myself and special trade representative Askew on June 27.

What the hon. member is talking about did not simply begin yesterday. I am sorry he has missed all this. There was a lot of attention given to it in this House and across the country. We are carrying out discussions with the United States as provided for by the auto pact, which calls for consultations with a view to bringing about substantial improvements in the way it operates from the Canadian point of view; and our objective is to have in place a fair share of automotive industry activity for Canadian companies and Canadian workers.

If my hon. friend is asking what steps we have been taking in addition to what has already been outlined in this House, I remind him of my efforts to create a substantial degree of Canadian content in Japanese imports into this country. My hon. friend may have overlooked the announcement I made a few days ago that Toyo Kogyo, the manufacturer of the Mazda automobile and the third largest Japanese automobile manufacturer, as a result of my discussions in Japan and those of my officials, will send a buying mission to Canada early in December. This is something which I think will have very important results for Canadian companies and workers.

* * *

FISHERIES

FOOD HERRING FISHERY—LICENCE ISSUED TO M.V. "CALISTRATUS"

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Is the minister aware that the factory trawler Calistratus has recently been given a food herring licence despite his department's assurances of two years ago that this vessel would not be included in the traditional fishing industry to process fish such as salmon, herring and halibut, and that on Monday of this week that vessel was indeed fishing for herring and processing it at sea, jeopardizing the incomes of fishermen and shore workers in British Columbia?

Could the minister explain to this House how, despite the assurances given to the B.C. fishing industry, that vessel was able to obtain a licence for food herring, and will he give some assurances to that fishing industry that this will not continue?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I do not remember the exact amount of herring involved, but it certainly does not constitute a threat to the B.C. industry. That is the first point.

The second point is that the licence was issued, I suspect in good faith, by someone looking at the regulation that registered fisheries vessels are entitled to food or bait herring licences. We immediately contested that, and we recognize that there may have been a mistake or a loophole which was exploited. We have asked the vessel to retreat from that fishery and it has. We are looking for other fishing opportunities for it. We will be plugging the loophole when we have identified exactly what the legal problem is, but the vessel is not fishing any more.

Mr. Miller: Madam Speaker, the fear of the fishermen in British Columbia when this vessel first appeared was exactly what has happened, that it would eventually get into those traditional fisheries in one way or another.

In light of the mistake—if it was a mistake that this vessel was licensed—I would like to ask the minister if he is now prepared to consider a public inquiry into the whole licensing issue in British Columbia before he implements the recommendations of the Sinclair report and the more recent Doucet-Pearce report, which recommend a public inquiry into the British Columbia salmon industry not only with regard to licensing but also many other aspects of that industry, a public inquiry which much of the industry is also demanding.

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, on the second point, this question is very much under consideration and there may be grounds for a good discussion of the issues affecting fisheries on the west coast. I think public opinion would benefit from a discussion, with public hearings, of the issues involved.

On the first question, I must say to the hon. member that the trawl licence issued to the Calistratus had very strict limitations. The problem is that the trawl licence and the herring licence were issued quite separately, and we could not in law, I was told by my legal officers, apply the restrictions on one to the other. That is why we asked the Calistratus to leave that fishery. If there was, as I suspect, a loophole, it will be plugged in a matter of days.

* * *

ENERGY

COLD LAKE OIL SANDS PROJECT—ROLE OF PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and it is supplementary to the question of the hon. member for York-Peel. With regard to instructing Petro-Canada, could the minister please clarify for us just how this so-called instruction to Petro-Canada took place?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Madam Speaker. After the receipt of the letter from Imperial Oil, consultations took place inside the government and it was decided that we would agree to the proposal of Imperial Oil, that Imperial Oil should be advised as soon as possible and that Petro-Canada should therefore be instructed. We contacted the president of Petro-Canada orally and instructed him to get in touch with Imperial Oil but, obviously, that no steps should be taken until he received from the governor in council instructions in writing according to section 6(2) of the Petro-Canada Act. Therefore, these instructions will be forwarded in writing without delay.

RECEIPT OF LETTER FROM IMPERIAL OIL LIMITED

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the minister has referred to a letter he received from Imperial Oil. Can he tell us whether that letter was received before his visit and meeting in New York, or after, and before his speech?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the letter was delivered to me at ten o'clock on Tuesday morning in New York by Mr. Armstrong himself.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, in the matter of the discussions to which the minister referred earlier in the question period, when he indicated that with respect to the oil industry and representations and discussions that were going on the government was prepared to be flexible, would the minister now indicate generally in what way the government is prepared to be flexible and, specifically, whether that flexibility relates to the budget proposals as they apply to the oil industry?

● (1500)

Mr. Lalonde: The Prime Minister has indicated on behalf of the government that we were willing to undertake further negotiations with the government of Alberta. That statement speaks for itself, and that is as far as I am ready to go.

* * *

SMALL BUSINESS

INQUIRY RESPECTING FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and it deals with the serious matter of plant closings which are resulting in the lay-off of thousands of workers throughout Canada. In addition to adding to the unemployment rolls, scores of communities all over the country are losing the spin-off resulting from the absence of light industries, as well as the purchasing power of employees' wages. I am prompted to question the minister because of the recent closing of an industry in my riding which has resulted in the loss of 300 jobs in one fell swoop. I should like to ask the minister if the federal government has any plans to offer financial assistance to light industries and businesses which have encountered difficulties in the same way as it assists major industries in trouble.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we have these programs in place already through the Federal Business Development Bank and the enterprise development program operated by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. That program makes available loan guarantees as well as in some cases direct loans, and also in some cases grants, for purposes of technology and innovation, particularly to assist smaller and medium-sized companies to restructure and take advantage of opportunities in order to operate in the rapidly changing conditions in today's economy. In fact, if I am not mistaken with respect to the company which prompted my hon. friend's question, we did have people of the enterprise development program meet with the company in question and with people in the community and we indicated our willingness to provide assistance if a new buyer was found to operate the company. I regret this has not proven possible as yet, but we want to continue our efforts to assist the community and the workers in it.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if the federal government is not applying a double standard with regard to assisting financially ailing industries in that the larger industries are important and the smaller businesses and industries are not important. May I point out, Madam Speaker, that 60 per cent of all jobs in Canada are provided by the small business sector.

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, we are giving primary and priority attention to smaller and medium-sized businesses. For example, in the fiscal year 1979-80, over $1 billion was authorized for some 29,000 separate projects for small business-oriented programs, such as the Federal Business Development Bank, the small business loan program, the program for export market development and the enterprise development program. We intend to operate these programs effectively, and now that the budget is in place we are in a position to take decisions on their possible expansion. I hope to have my hon. friend's support for these efforts.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the government House leader the usual Thursday question on the business of the House. I think this program is usually well set, but could the government House leader confirm the order for the record in Hansard so that hon. members can look to it for guidance?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we hope to be able to complete second reading of three bills today, namely, Bill C-42, the Canada Post Corporation Act, Bill C-43, the Access to Information Act, and Bill C-34, the Judges Act. If possible, we would like those three bills referred to committee today. Tomorrow, we start the debate on one of the proclamations tabled by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). I believe a three-day debate is planned for this first proclamation.

With regard to the second proclamation, House leaders will be meeting later on today to discuss the length of the debate. At any rate, I remind the House that it was agreed, as a precaution, to set aside the last six sitting days in November to debate those proclamations; however, a final agreement has yet to be reached on the length of the debates, and were we to save a day or two, it is understood that we would then proceed with the study of the bills I have just mentioned—all that before December 2.

In addition, I intend to designate December 2 as an opposition day, and the days following up to December 10, the House will sit in committee of the whole according to the agreement and the order of the House made last spring. The House will remember, Madam Speaker, that three of those days will be very long days on which the House will sit without any interruption until midnight; we have had preliminary discussions in this regard, and I wish to confirm to my colleagues that, in actual fact, from December 3, the House will sit without any interruption in committee of the whole, and December 2 will be an allotted day.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, unless I missed something in the translation, I think the order of business which the minister announced for today is not in keeping with my understanding. I understood that the first item today would be the Post Office bill and the second item would be the freedom of information bill. As it came through the translation, the judges' salaries bill was to be the second item. It is not; it is the third, fourth, or the fifth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I rise on the same point of order, Madam Speaker. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce used the phrase in his remarks "now that the budget is in place". Earlier the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had indicated that he was engaged in discussions with, I gathered he said, several Canadian companies, and I think he included in that group some of the Canadian companies which his policies are forcing to leave Canada. He indicated that, as a result of some of those discussions with energy companies, some flexibility might be shown by the government. My question to the government House leader relates to the House business, and it is whether any changes are intended in the budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Not to my knowledge, Madam Speaker. There is no change. To return to the question and comments of my hon. friend from the New Democratic Party, I must remind him that the Judges Act is not a measure that we would want to be consigned to oblivion. If possible, we would like to deal with it today, if not, as soon as possible after the debate on the proclamations.

[English]

Mr. Friesen: My question is for the government House leader. One of the pieces of legislation tabled in the previous Parliament, and I believe also in this one, was in the name of the Minister of Transport and had to do with the ports act. My view is that that is a long overdue piece of legislation. Withholding it is working a hardship on municipalities which have commissioned ports, because they obtain no revenue. I wonder if the House leader can give us any indication as to when that legislation will be debated in the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Within a reasonable period of time, I hope, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, the last two Thursdays, on this point of order, I have asked the government House leader with regard to Bill C-42 whether he was prepared to accede to the request on behalf of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments that the regulation making powers contained in Bill C-42 be sent to the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments and that the substance of the bill be sent to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, as is currently contemplated by the government. Last week the government House leader undertook to look further into this and give us an answer. Second reading begins immediately, so could he give us an indication as to what his policy is?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I apologize for having kept the hon. member waiting. I hope that he will extend the same courtesy to the ladies whom he kept waiting this morning at the committee on the constitution. I can tell him two things. In the first place, if we agreed to refer to his committee for consideration the relevant clause of the bill to set up a Post Office corporation, the clause dealing with the regulation making powers, we would somewhat anticipate on his committee report which has now been tabled in the House but has not been dealt with nor voted on. The report has not been discussed nor approved by the House. It seems to me then that it would be premature. On the other hand, I have indeed spoken to the minister and he is ready, merely as an act of courtesy, to appear before the committee of which the hon. member is chairman or vice-chairman. He is ready to appear and provide explanations on the nature of the regulation-making powers liable to be involved in the legislation setting up a Post Office corporation.

Of course, we would like to have the bill referred to the committee as soon as possible this afternoon. Anyway, I confirm that the Postmaster General, as an act of courtesy and unofficially, without any formal reference to the relevant clause of the bill, is ready to appear before the committee chaired by the hon. member to provide some explanations.

● (1510)

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, I should like to get some clarification. The committee report was unanimous from members on all sides of this House and on both sides of the Senate. The committee asked that the regulation-making powers of this bill and of other bills, including broad regulation-making powers, be sent to the committee for study, for recommendation back to the House, and for amendment, if necessary, at second reading.

If I understand the government House leader correctly, is he saying that our committee would not have the authority to make amendments to the regulation-making authority granted in that bill, that that would remain exclusively with the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, what I have explained is that we could not prejudge the committee report which was tabled in the House. Surely the hon. member is aware that a special House committee or task force is investigating this matter. We expect it will submit its findings shortly, and I think that December 19 is the date agreed upon. Moreover, there is also the Economic Council of Canada which is looking into this and which is expected to report at some early date in 1981.

I have already suggested to the House leader of his party that it would be wise to wait until these reports are tabled before looking into the two reports from the committee chaired by the hon. member which are now on the order paper.

That being said, I am only being logical when I say no to the request the hon. member has made as to the opportunity to examine at this stage the clause of the bill establishing the Canada Post corporation which deals with the regulation making power. As I indicated before, as a compromise and a matter of courtesy, the minister is ready to appear on a non official basis before his committee and to provide him with all relevant explanations.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I rise again on the same point of order. The Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance have come into the House since the government House leader indicated that, to his knowledge, there would not be any changes in the budget flowing from the flexibility the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated might emerge from the discussions he would be having with energy companies his policies will be driving out of the country, and other energy companies. I wonder if the Minister of Finance is able to tell the House whether he is contemplating any changes in the budget which he has not yet had a chance to draw to the attention of his colleague, the government House leader?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Madam Speaker, I can assure the House that that is not my intention. I have reached no decisions with respect to any changes at all.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is still under consideration.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NYSTROM—STATEMENTS MADE BY MR. MacEACHEN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order arising out of the comments of the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) when he was reflecting upon the deliberations of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada earlier this afternoon, wherein he accused opposition members of engaging in mischief.

In raising that question, I should like to refer to the fifth edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. On page 103, citation 316, sentence (e) indicates that a member while speaking must not:

impute bad motives or motives different from those acknowledged to a member;

Also sentence (f) goes on to indicate that a member while speaking must not:

make a personal charge against a member;

I do not think the Deputy Prime Minister was making any specific personal charges, even though two of us moved motions at that committee this morning, myself and the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). But I suggest on a point of order that while he was speaking perhaps he did "impute bad motives or motives different from those acknowledged to a member".

As evidence of that I want to say that we moved those motions this morning for what I think are two very legitimate reasons. First, we believe that we need more time for the people and Canada to be heard on their constitution, and second, we need more time as members of that constitutional committee to study what in effect is a very controversial and detailed resolution before the committee. For those reasons we moved an amendment to recommend to Parliament, the House of Commons and the Senate, that consideration be given to extending the deadline to February 10. I think we had the right as a committee to make that recommendation, and we were not engaging in mischief of any sort or kind.

I want to say that we are doing and have done it because we have learned one thing, if nothing else, from the witnesses who have already appeared before us, that they need more time, that Canadians need more time. For example, this morning the Canadian Federation of Municipalities indicated that it needed more time to prepare, and asked for an extension of the deadline. Two days ago the Canadian Civil Liberties Association appeared before us. It indicated that it did not have a brief because it did not have time to prepare one and that we were dealing in this resolution with a very complicated and important charter of rights for the future of the country.

Also I have before me a letter which was addressed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Joyal) and the Honourable Harry Hays, the co-chairmen of the Special Joint Committee on the constitution. It was signed by Marion Dewar who wrote to the co-chairmen on behalf of a number of organizations, and in part it reads as follows:

—respectfully requests that the Special Joint Committee on the constitution extend the final date for written submissions or requests to appear before the committee from Tuesday, November 25 to Wednesday, December 31, 1980.

Our discussions with Canadians in every part of Canada and from many sectors of Canadian life convince us that more Canadians want to be heard than the current timetable of your committee allows.

She is asking for an extension of the time on behalf of the many important organizations which signed their names to this letter. I want to know whether the Deputy Prime Minister thinks we are being mischievous when we speak on behalf of the Anglican Church of Canada. Are we being mischievous when we say that we need more time because the Anglican Church is saying that we need more time? The Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops is indicating that we need more time. Are we being mischievous when we move a motion on their behalf saying that we need more time? The Canada West Foundation is saying that we need more time, the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped is saying that we need more time. Is that being mischievous, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Nystrom: The National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the National Indian Brotherhood, the Presbyterian Church of Canada and the National Anti-Poverty Organization are saying that we need more time. As a result we have moved a motion in the committee asking for an extension of the deadline to February 10.

The other reason we have done it is that we believe members of the committee need more time to study the resolution section by section. We need more time to study its impact on Canadians. We need more time to consider a number of amendments, which no doubt will be coming from all parties in the House, to the various sections contained in the resolution.

I ask you, Madam Speaker, to consider whether there has been an infringement of the rules by the Deputy Prime Minister, or whether indeed he was imputing motives to members of the opposition on that committee.

In closing, I want to say that I hope members opposite will consider revising the artificial deadline of December 9 because it means rushing through a very complicated constitutional package, one that might not stand the test of time, one that may be more divisive than helpful in the country, while we should be seeking a consensus, bringing Canadians together, and healing this country from coast to coast. If we can spend months studying the Bank Act in committee, and years in Parliament, then surely to goodness we can spend at least three months in a committee on the Constitution of Canada.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the point of order raised by the hon. member gives me an opportunity to make a comment on a recurring feature of the House proceedings which has been a cause of concern to me for some time, namely, the recurring practice of dealing in the House of Commons with matters which are before committees.

● (1520)

It is true that in my response to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) I did make reference to proceedings in the committee, which were introduced into the questioning by the Leader of the Opposition. Madam Speaker, both of us were out of order on that occasion. I propose at some future time to raise a point of order on this very point of order, to receive a ruling from the Chair as to whether it is appropriate for the House of Commons to deal with matters on a daily basis, which have been referred to a standing or special committee by the House of Commons. There is a clear rule and a clear practice that no references, no debates and no discussion can take place on committee proceedings until a committee has reported to the House. That is a good, reasonable, and sensible rule. I believe—and I stated this quite clearly in my response to the Leader of the Opposition—I did breach that practice, to some extent.

I would like to reply to the member who raised the point of order, which objected to the word "mischievous". I must say that is a rather mild parliamentary attack. I could not find a milder word to describe what happened in the committee this morning. I regard the activities that were taking place quite worthy of the mild description of mischievous, in light of the fact there was a readiness stated by the government House leader to undertake negotiations with a view to dealing with the question of the deadline. He has already expressed his willingness to be flexible on this point. I believe it would have been useful for all members to await the result of these negotiations before launching into a procedure that took up a good deal of the committee's time. I hope in the future I will not breach the rules by discussing the proceedings of a committee of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Such effrontery!

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, on the same point of order, I wish to say that on behalf of my colleagues I moved that motion this morning. It was a very straightforward motion asking that the length of time available to the committee be extended to February 6. It was then amended to February 10. Additionally, it was to extend the period of time for Canadians to submit written briefs or ask to be heard before the committee from November 25, which was the second arbitrary date imposed by the Liberal majority, to December 31.

With reference to what happened in the committee today, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) says that it was a mischievous action on the part of myself, I presume, because I was the person who moved that motion. An interesting point is that the Deputy Prime Minister has just said again that the House cannot interfere with the work of a committee and that a committee is to be master of its own proceedings. The hon. gentleman has used that argument, as has the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government House leader. But in refuting the arguments that were made by us in the committee, the Liberal members on that committee used the same tactic. The Deputy Prime Minister wants to use a double standard. The argument which the Liberal members used was that it was not for the committee to decide, that it was to go back to the House. They cannot have it both ways.

When it is in the House they say the committee should decide, and when it is in the committee they say the House should decide. The point is that they do not want anyone to make any changes to their arbitrary date. That is the point. They do not want to change either the November 25 date or the December 9 date.

The Leader of the Government in the House says repeatedly that he will be flexible. There has been no indication of any flexibility on their part without strong pressure from this party to bring about changes. We saw that in connection with television. It was only after extreme pressure that they changed their position on that. They have not changed their minds even on the quorum—they do not want members of the official opposition to sit on the committee when the committee sits. In fact that committee can constitute itself without any member of the opposition there—with only government members there. Only government members need be there to hear evidence or to make decisions.

Consider the matter of the polls. They were not released. That committee is studying the constitutional amendments at this point in time. We know the government has polls paid for by the public which directly affect that discussion. But are they released? No. The Canadian people are not entitled to know. Yet today in the traditional Thursday question the government House leader said that the government wants to move forward on freedom of information legislation. But ministers will not release the polls.

Madam Speaker, I have here a list of the witnesses who now want to appear before the committee. It is an extensive list. What happens in the committee, day after day, is that we get a list of witnesses who are to appear before the committee. The point that must be made is that the committee has not approved the list. Then, when we get a backlog it is we who are called mischievous. Not so. The list is in no way practical to the work of the committee. What I have asked for is not an indeterminate extension of the length of time. I asked for a two-month extension on behalf of Canadians—a two-month extension. I think that is very reasonable. It will enable not only the committee to do its work but, more important, it will enable Canadians who are asking to be heard, time to appear.

Is Mr. Borovoy of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association mischievous when he says to the committee that he needs more time? Is the Canadian Chamber of Commerce mischievous when its members say to us that they "could not prepare a brief prior to appearing here so what we are presenting to you is a policy position not directly related to the resolution?" Is the Federation of Canadian Municipalities mischievous when it asks for time to hold a board meeting in order that they might bring—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I remind the hon. member that he should keep to the arguments which will indicate to me that he might have a question of privilege. I am afraid he is entering into debate, and that is not allowed when raising a question of privilege.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, it is back to the imputation of motives. It was my motion. I was not in any way trying to be mischievous. I was trying to get the committee into a working schedule that would allow both witnesses and the committee to do the job we have been asked to do. Under present arrangements, we cannot do that job.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, obviously the hon. member's attitude this morning in committee was perhaps honest, but it is not the most honest we have ever seen. By far it is not the most honest attitude we might have expected.

The following facts should be recalled briefly. First, the hon. member knew from the answers I gave yesterday in the House to the NDP leader and the Progressive Conservative leader that I intended to meet with the House leaders. Second, even though he knew of this ensuing discussion between House leaders on the length of the committee proceedings, he decided, purely for reasons of political expediency, to introduce a motion in committee asking for an extension of the deadline, knowing full well that the House of Commons, the Senate, the institution of Parliament gave a specific mandate to the committee to consider the matter and report back by December 9. So, when the hon. member refers to the principle that the committee is master of its own procedure only when it is convenient for us, I must respectfully tell him that he is totally wrong. Of course, the committee is master of its own procedure, but within the terms of reference it has been given by the House and, in this case, by the Senate. These terms of reference make it very clear that there is a time limit, namely, December 9. Therefore, the committee knows that its time is limited and that if the House wants to grant an extension, this decision must be made by the representatives of all parties, and it also knows that the House leaders will meet to discuss the matter and that we have already indicated our wish to be flexible, as the Prime Minister said himself last week, and as I said yesterday and again today. In spite of all this, the committee wasted two hours of its time this morning and a group of ladies were kept waiting in a shameful and unacceptable manner, and they are still waiting because the members of the committee are now in the House wasting time by raising procedural questions on this subject. In spite of all this, we heard today a motion under Standing Order 43, a procedure which is much abused, which motion was moved by my colleague, the Progressive Conservative House leader, even though he is well aware that we shall be meeting at five o'clock this afternoon to discuss this matter in good faith, and I intend to show him the type of flexibility we have been talking about. Once again, I do not bear him any grudge for this, but I would still like to note that he should know that we are going to discuss this matter this afternoon. And yet he thought it proper to use Standing Order 43 to repeat before the House the same type of question which was asked in the committee.

I wonder whether the Progressive Conservative Party really wants to take advantage of the flexibility that we are willing to show. I give them the benefit of the doubt, and the meeting at five o'clock will still be held and it may be followed by other meetings. It will depend on the pace of the negotiations and the discussions. However, I must say that the position taken by the Progressive Conservative Party to date seems rather ambiguous to me.

Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) is also wrong when he tells us that we gave no indication of flexibility as to the date for the report of the committee. I want to state publicly that, as a matter of fact, and I say it again because I have already said it publicly, I told them in early October that this matter could be discussed. Yesterday, my colleague was going around with the minutes of the meetings we had, and I hope he will refer to them. I call upon my learned colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to bear witness to that. However, I am convinced that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is candid enough not to deny obvious facts. I also told them that the form of the debate in the third stage could be discussed, and I invited them to do this systematically. In fact, they have always refused to discuss it until now.

As recently as last week I reminded my learned colleague from Nepean-Carleton that we were prepared to reconsider the date and form of the committee report, as well as the length of the debate at the third stage. He took my request under advisement and will hold consultations, and I hope that this afternoon we shall finally be able, a month and a half after my request, to discuss the deadline openly, honestly, without any of the tactics such as the one we witnessed this morning in committee and this afternoon during proceedings under Standing Order 43.

Madam Speaker, may I refer you to paragraph 659 of Beauchesne's, at page 205, which bears out the Deputy Prime Minister regarding the procedure and says very clearly that it is irregular to comment on what is going on in the proceedings of a committee when there is no report before the House. Here is what clause (1) says:

(1) Until the report and the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence have been laid upon the Table, it is irregular to refer to them in debate, or to put questions in reference to the proceedings of the committee.

(2) When the report and the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence are before the House, they may be debated at length but members are not permitted to discuss the conduct or language of members of the committee, except so far as it appears on the tabled report.

(3) If alleged irregular proceedings take place in committee but are not referred to in the report that the committee presented to the House, then it is not competent for the House to go beyond that report to debate this matter.

Madam Speaker, nothing can be clearer and more precise. It is entirely irregular to ask questions and have a discussion about what happened in committee until we receive a report from that committee. And in the future, I shall respectfully point out that we on this side of the House shall insist, out of respect for this institution, on having the rules enforced.

• (1530)

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am very interested in the insistence now of the government House leader on this matter. Perhaps some intimidation of the Chair is intended, but I would hope not. As a matter of fact, if the government House leader will recall, there was a lengthy debate in the House on the question of television and the procedure in the committee. The matter was argued, and a ruling was ultimately made by Madam Speaker. Surely that is evidence of the situation.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do not know what the hon. member's remarks are leading to, but I do want to make a precise point, on some of the comments made by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). When I made the ruling about what was to take place in committees and what was to take place in the House of Commons, I was speaking solely about broadcasting. Beyond that our Standing Orders apply. If there is some kind of reaction or some situation which would require a ruling, I would be disposed to make a ruling. However, in that ruling I was referring to the broadcasting of committee proceedings, and I hope that hon. members will not stretch that into other meanings.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I said what I said so that you would know that the debate and the discussion which took place was with respect to the order of reference of this House and how the matter would be conducted. Of course it dealt with the subject matter of television, but it was within the context of the order of reference which established this committee. I want to make sure that the Chair understands the context in which I am placing my remarks.

With respect to a number of matters which were raised by the government House leader, aside from the fact that I am becoming somewhat alarmed about the ability to carry on negotiations, if we are to have another public discussion today of what happens in House leaders' meetings, the government House leader ought to consider, from his point of view, this practice, which has developed.

Mr. Clark: And his parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, and his parliamentary secretary as well. When we hold our meeting today, I want the government House leader to know that I intend to raise this issue. We either have House leaders' meetings which are a bridge of sanity for the debate which takes place in this House, or they are something else. If they are something else, then they begin to take on a different character.

Perhaps if the government House leader needs a mentor with respect to how these matters should be conducted, he ought to have a chat with the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, who was as experienced as he is and more so with respect to how matters should be conducted and what should happen as a result of what has gone on if it is to mean anything at all.

Mr. Pinard: There was no discussion, Walter.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my friend is saying there was no discussion yesterday.

Mr. Pinard: You refused to discuss it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There was a discussion in the House yesterday—

Mr. Pinard: Not in the meeting.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —with respect to the matter as indicated at page 4873 of Hansard. The government House leader, followed by the House leader of the New Democratic Party, did deal with the matter and confirmed that there was a gentleman's understanding with respect to the time allotment on the Bank Act. Whatever it was that occurred, it occurred at a House leaders' meeting and the debate referred to matters at that meeting.

In the left hand column on the same page the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) made an interjection by stating something that occurred at a House leaders' meeting, and even made a statement to the press with respect to the matter. Because the government House leader and I have some responsibility with respect to the operation of the House, this situation cannot continue.

● (1540)

Let us talk about the matter, since it is going to be raised at a House leader's meeting this afternoon. Of course we are prepared to discuss the extension of time at that meeting, not for partisan advantage but for the very matters that were raised by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) because members of the Canadian public are now saying to this Parliament that the artificial deadline established a month or so ago is wrong—is wrong in terms of the basic concept of what we are dealing with, the Constitution of Canada.

I want my friend to know that if he is talking about a limitation of time as the price for answering the request of the organizations of the people of Canada then, having had to submit to closure a little while ago, I am not disposed to submit to closure of another kind as the price for something else.

I would be a stupid man if I agreed to give this government, in advance, a blank cheque with respect to what a committee may report at some future time and with respect to what the government may do with that report at a future time. If that is what they want, they are not going to get it. It is that simple. If my friend is prepared—

Mr. Pinard: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): This is a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I indicated I would be ready to discuss this with my colleague in the course of a meeting of House leaders. I would not like to take the time of the House and hold that meeting here. I never indicated I would require a specific date. I said I was ready to discuss this, to get an idea of the time-frame, and I also wanted to indicate I was ready to talk about the form of the debate at the third stage. So what my colleague is doing is setting conditions to the meeting we are going to have later. I think this is not the place for it. He referred to my having a mentor. I suggest he also see one.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I recognized the hon. member on a point of order. That is what he asked me for, but he is entering into debate and I now have interrupted him. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, we can discuss the interruption a little later on. I want to make it clear that the request for the extension of time is not to convenience Parliament, it is to convenience the general public. Thus far there is no precision as to what the government intends even after the committee reports. Since these matters have been raised publicly by the government House leader, I want him to know that it is fundamental to our position that for once he tells us what he intends us to do. He has not done that except in terms of bargaining for time. In terms of the issue, Madam Speaker, that is not flexibility, and he should understand that.

Mr. Pinard: We have a meeting at five o'clock.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, in rising to deal with the question raised by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), I am disturbed at the impact of the ability of this House to co-operate and function on actions taken by the government House leader, and by his parliamentary secretary in deliberately making press releases that he knew not to reflect the situation—

Mr. Collenette: That is not true.

Mr. Clark: —and indeed, by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen)—making statements, not a press release—and by the Deputy Prime Minister today in first of all labelling as mischievous the activity of members of Parliament designed to ensure that the people of Canada are heard on the Constitution of Canada and, secondly, in his very presumptuous behaviour in lecturing you on how you should do your job, and to lecture me as to how I should do mine.

I say to the government House leader that if he continues in this pattern it is going to be very, very difficult for them to remain in this House—

Mr. Pinard: Blackmail.

Mr. Clark: He talks about blackmail.

Mr. Nielsen: From an expert.

Mr. Clark: Earlier he talked about trickery. He said he did not intend trickery; then he practised it. I suppose he intends to say that he does not intend blackmail. There is not very much evidence to that effect in the manner in which he has conducted himself so far. I do not want to be distracted by the government House leader's interventions however.

The point I want to make is that in this House of Commons public business can get done only when certain standards of trust are accepted and established, and the behaviour of the government on this matter very seriously jeopardizes that atmosphere of trust that is essential to this House making progress on any matter at all.

Let me deal with one or two of the matters that have been raised, Madam Speaker. First of all, I think it highly inappropriate of the Deputy Prime Minister, who has now abandoned the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Clark: —the Deputy Prime Minister whose comments caused this question of privilege, who intervened and then left the House—I think it highly improper that he should suggest to you, Madam Speaker, what matters and questions you should find in order, after you have clearly found those matters and questions to be in order. It is no part of his duty to tell you how to do your job.

Second, the House will recall that the government House leader in the other place quite explicitly indicated in answers to questions in that other place that it would be within the capacity of the joint committee to make the request to both Houses to change the reporting date of the committee. That was an undertaking, a statement of the policy of the Government of Canada, made in response to a question, by a minister of the Government of Canada, the House leader of the government in the other place. That was the answer by the government spokesman in the Senate on which the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville were acting today when they sought to follow the suggestion made by a representative of the Government of Canada to seek to have the committee itself act to extend its time.

Now let me deal, if I might, with a point that was made by the Acting Prime Minister before he left the House. He suggested that the questions that were raised by myself and allowed by the Chair were out of order. My questions were designed to ask the policy of the Government of Canada on this question, and I would find it quite strange if it were improper, if it were ruled by the Chair that the fact that a particular draft resolution on the Constitution of Canada is before a joint committee of this House and the other place, that that fact alone would prevent this Parliament or, indeed, the Senate of Canada, from asking questions as to the policy of the Government of Canada with regard to the Constitution of Canada. That is the position that has been put forward by the government. It is a wholly untenable and an unacceptable position.

The reason we are asking, for the policy of the government is that it has become so clear that the Liberal members on that committee are operating clearly as agents of the government rather than simply as members of this Parliament and of the Senate of Canada. They are operating on instructions to the point that some members are even reading briefs that are prepared by consultants associated with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien)—with the minister whose name is on the bottom of the draft resolution. We have here a situation where the policy of the government must be known because the policy of the government is dictating the behaviour of the Liberal members on that committee.

What we have here—the government House leader, who has been sat down by you, Madam Speaker, for his interventions earlier, is shouting across the floor. He may have an opportunity later to speak. The very clear point with which we are dealing here is that for a series of days the Government of Canada has been seeking some soft way to impose a new kind of closure upon the debate by the Parliament of Canada—by the House of Commons and the Senate—to impose a soft kind of closure upon discussion by representatives of the people of Canada of the Constitution of Canada. He knows he was wrong in imposing closure, the formal rule of closure, on this House in a circumstance where more government members had spoken than members of the official opposition. He knows that was wrong. What he is going to do now is to seek other means—seek closure by some other name. The goal is the same—the goal of the government—and that goal is to limit debate by Canadians of their constitution. To limit that debate, wherever it occurs, whether in the committee or here, or in the public at large—that is their goal. That is why they resisted television; that is why they resisted radio. That is what their secret document said. That is why they imposed closure on this House.

● (1550)

Their goal is to try to keep the people of Canada in ignorance about the contents of the constitutional proposal. They are worried that when groups such as the Canadian Association for Adult Education, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Anglican Church of Canada, and Le regroupement pour les droits politiques du Québec—they are concerned that when these groups come to testify before the joint committee, Canadians will learn just how full of fault and danger this particular measure is. So they are trying to find some excuse to cut off debate. They did it with closure once in this House, and now, knowing that closure is politically unpopular, they are trying to find a softer way to limit debate.

Today, the Deputy Prime Minister referred to groups such as the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Canada West Foundation, the National Indian Brotherhood, the Presbyterian Church of Canada and a number of others, as mischievous. I suggest that rather than insulting those groups of Canadians who want to have their views heard on the Constitution of Canada, the Government of Canada should be hearing those Canadians and should be allowing the people of Canada to hear the views expressed by their various organizations and by interested individuals in the Canadian populous rather than resorting to various techniques designed to limit debate in committee and designed to impose a quiet form of closure upon the ability of the people of Canada to have their views heard on their constitution.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, out of courtesy I did not wish to interrupt the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) while he was making his comments. However, I shall give you notice now that I will raise a question of privilege based upon statements just made by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I wish to take only a moment or two. I do so because of one other statement made this afternoon by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). I suppose I should not say it was mischievous, except that he thought that was a proper word to apply.

First, may I say to the government House leader it is perfectly correct that for several weeks he has been offering to negotiate the length of time allowed to the committee, provided that there would be some discussion of the length of time to be spent on the resolution when it comes back to the House. I assume we will be discussing that this afternoon when we meet at five o'clock, and I hope we can have a pleasant meeting. Perhaps the government House leader, with his sometime courtesy, will have some coffee and tea available and we can have a friendly discussion.

I was disturbed when I heard the Deputy Prime Minister say this afternoon that my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), yesterday asked for such negotiations, which is the very opposite of the case. My leader yesterday was asking for an extension of time for the committee on its own. I read one sentence to emphasize the point, which is found at page 4848 of yesterday's Hansard. The hon. member for Oshawa said:

> What I would like clear from the government House leader is that he is not considering a trade-off.

It may well be that he is, but the hon. member for Oshawa was very clear yesterday that he was asking for an extension of time because of the importance of the issue. I think it was quite unfair, and possibly mischievous, for the Deputy Prime Minister this afternoon to say that the member for Oshawa had asked for negotiations.

Mr. Nielsen: Whichever it was, it was deliberate.

Mr. Knowles: We will have those discussions this afternoon, and we will see how they unfold.

Madam Speaker: This point of order was raised on a matter protesting the fact that the hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) was imputing bad motives by using the word "mischievous" to qualify some of the motions which have been made by some members of Parliament. That was the beginning of it. He strayed very far from the first indication of what that point of order was all about, but I will come to that later.

I have to say that I did not feel the Deputy Prime Minister was imputing bad motives in using that expression, nor was he making the kind of charge which it is customary to prohibit in this House. It is true the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) did quote from Beauchesne, but as a matter of fact I think the interpretation of these conditions has to be much more generous on both sides.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has explained the kind of "mischief", if I may use that word because I do not dare use another word, to describe what he was up to in the committee. I suppose the House is better for having been more informed about what took place. I gave the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville quite a lot of latitude to expose his point of order. I suppose that disposes of this grievance, because that is what it is; it is not a question of privilege.

My main concern though is a number of references which have been made to committee proceedings. This whole thing was prompted by a question from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). He has explained that he was inquiring about a matter of policy, and he was not referring directly to the actual proceedings of the committee. I must say that I nearly jumped to my feet when I heard him formulate his question, and then decided against doing that, probably because I was sure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would never want to do anything against the rules of this House; and I do not think that he has. But then in the response made by the Deputy Prime Minister there was a reference made to committee proceedings. The Deputy Prime Minister himself agreed that he had perhaps breached the rules by making that kind of reference.

I think the rule has been breached quite a number of times subsequently during the course of the debate this afternoon. I will have all of these interventions examined so as to determine the number of times when I feel members have come very close to debating proceedings of committees.

The hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) quoted the rule, which is quite clear, so I will not repeat it. But it is right here in Erskine May where it is very clear that this House should not be referring to proceedings of committees.

I have just one more point. I want to remind hon. members that they should not refer to committees, even obliquely, in the House. I will read all of the speeches that have been made this afternoon in order to make it somewhat easier for me to spot circumstances when members are really referring to proceedings of committees. The Chair has some difficulty, because one has to listen to the end of one sentence and then to a second sentence to know whether it is really a breach of the rule. That is why sometimes I have to be a bit lenient about that.

I just want to remind the hon. Leader of the Opposition that when members raise points of order or try to help me to interpret the rules of this House, I am grateful for that kind of contribution, and I do not consider that I am being lectured when members do that, no matter on which side of the House a member sits. It is helpful to the Chair when members try to concentrate on the point of procedure being raised. It is helpful if they bring forward arguments to enlighten the Chair and so help the Chair to make a ruling. Therefore I do not consider that I am being lectured to when that happens. As a matter of fact, I welcome it. I think it would be wise to put an end to this debate this afternoon. The exchange that has taken place will,

I understand, continue at a subsequent meeting which is of no concern to the Chair.

* * *

● (1600)

PRIVILEGE

MR. COLLENETTE—STATEMENTS MADE BY MR. CLARK

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to refer to comments I made a few moments ago. I had intended to develop a case of privilege at this time. I understand that representatives from the postal unions are in the gallery and there is a disposition on all sides to let the postal Crown corporation bill go through today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Collenette: I will therefore not impede the debate.

Mr. Stevens: Who said that?

Mr. Collenette: I understand that is the general disposition. However, that may not be. It may be an understanding, it may be an agreement. I don't know.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Stop that right now.

Mr. Collenette: We have to clarify these terms. What I wish to raise, if I may have the floor, is the fact that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) did make the statement, and attributed it to me, "made statements to the press he knew not to be true". I wish to check the blues—

Mr. Nielsen: That's slimy.

Mr. Collenette: In the interests of time this afternoon, I will not bring this up. However, I will reserve the right to do so tomorrow. It is obviously contrary to citation 320 in Beauchesne's.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I am in some doubt as to exactly what the parliamentary secretary has been saying. I understand what his tone has done. His tone, as usual, has made it even more difficult for this House to proceed in any way in which agreements can be made or words can be respected. He has a gift for snideness which is unfortunately corrosive of the atmosphere necessary for co-operation in this House. That is to the side. The government will have to live with that. The rest of us will try to live with it, if we can.

The point I want to make is that I am not clear whether the parliamentary secretary is declining to raise what he claims to be a question of privilege because he has not had the opportunity to read the "blues", in which case he would be seeking the opportunity to raise that tomorrow, or if he is declining to raise it because he wants to get on with other business, in which case he would forfeit his right to raise the question of privilege. I am quite prepared to deal with the question of privilege, but I want to know on what ground the parliamentary secretary is backing away from raising it at this point.

Madam Speaker: It is of interest to the Chair that the parliamentary secretary has decided not to raise a question at this time. That's sufficient for me.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I want it to be abundantly clear, and I hope it is clear, that, certainly to my knowledge, there is no agreement that the postal bill will necessarily be passed today. I have been sitting in this House waiting for an opportunity to speak. If I am denied that opportunity of speaking, I would like to know now when was the agreement made which the parliamentary secretary has indicated, because that was not an agreement as far as I have been given to understand.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. If it is not already clear to the parliamentary secretary, it had better be clear that if agreements are made in this House, agreements which are intended to be honoured as agreements, they are made between House leaders.

An hon. Member: They are made between men.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There has been no agreement between House leaders that that will go through today. I said something a few moments ago about the importance of the relationship that has to exist among House leaders. In view of the kind of behaviour which the parliamentary secretary exhibited today—

An hon. Member: Stupid.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —the House leader would be doing himself a great service if he got the services of another member of his party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I say that directly to him as a friend because this kind of thing is not helpful. It is important to the order of this House.

There was a press report, giving a statement to the press which was attributed to the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader.

Mr. Clark: Speaking in his capacity.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is correct, speaking in his capacity. In it he said there had been an agreement between us with respect to the passage of the Bank Act. That was not so, and the record was made clear yesterday. Now again he does the same thing. It is in poor taste, to put it at its kindest, and malicious, to put it at its worst, and unproductive in respect to the relationships that ought to exist. I think he owes all of us an apology. He particularly owes me an apology.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I regret to rise again on what really is a fresh matter arising out of my comments. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is correct about some statements which appeared in the press. I discussed it briefly with him privately. He brought this up last night. I understand this matter will be aired fully in the calmness of the House leaders' meeting later on, and I say that sincerely.

I have great respect for him as House leader. He is an excellent parliamentarian. I would not want my behaviour in this House, construed as officially speaking for the government, to reflect in any way on his character as an individual. There obviously has been a misunderstanding about the terms used regarding House business. I certainly did not intend to slight the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton a few moments ago.

Hopefully we will come to grips with the terms "understanding" and "agreement", because there was a disagreement yesterday on the floor of the House as to what these terms actually mean. I will come before you, Madam Speaker, and members of this House and sincerely apologize if I misled this House in any way. I do not intend to operate in that way. It is not in the best interests of the better workings of this House if the relationship between those responsible for conducting House business deteriorates as it perhaps appears to be deteriorating at this point.

I hope we can settle this matter privately, but I would reiterate what I just said publicly, that I in no way wish to slight my friend from Nepean-Carleton about statements yesterday. If he wants to pursue this discussion at a later date after our private discussions, I would certainly be prepared to do so, if Your Honour permits. I thought I should rise at this moment and clarify that, in my comments a few moments ago, I was talking about what I understand to be a general disposition among members.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Collenette: If I used the word agreement, I am quite prepared to stand here and correct myself. I am not that immodest that I would not admit error. I understand it is the general disposition to try to get the post office Crown corporation bill through second reading and into committee. I will not raise the question at this time for the other reason, and also the reason that I have not had an opportunity to check the "blues". I cannot make a definitive statement unless I have seen the "blues", in fairness to the Leader of the Opposition, because I wrote the statement down very quickly.

I hope that satisfies my friend from Nepean-Carleton. Quite frankly, I do not think this should go any further. I am prepared to go more than half way in trying to rectify the relationship which appears to have been damaged over the last couple of days. I will leave it at that.

Privilege—Mr. M. A. Dionne

MR. DIONNE (NORTHUMBERLAND-MIRAMICHI)—STATEMENTS MADE BY MR. NIELSEN

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of remarks made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) in raising a question of privilege yesterday dealing with the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. While I will not deal with the proceedings, I want to deal with some of the remarks he made. In his question of privilege he stated, as reported at page 4855 of Hansard:

—there is a growing practice of refusing members of Parliament, who are not specifically named on the lists of members forming standing committees, participation in the deliberations of the committees.

● (1610)

He went on to say that that had happened to the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) on Tuesday last, and that he was accommodated by the chief government whip who put him on the committee in his place. He indicated that—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry that I missed the beginning of my hon. friend's statement, and I apologize to him for interrupting him. I really do. However, I have been specifically asked by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) if the hon. member might hold this in abeyance until the hon. member for Peterborough can be here. He cannot be here today because of other public business he is involved in, and if the hon. member would be agreeable I think it might be better that we deal with this all at once. I apologize to my friend for interrupting him.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I have no objection to delaying the question of privilege, but my question of privilege really has nothing to do with the hon. member for Peterborough but only with the remarks made by the hon. member for Yukon, so I am quite prepared to make my intervention today and leave the ruling with you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I hope that is agreeable to the House leader of the official opposition and to the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am just trying to expedite things. I have no problem with that. However, the reply might be required to be deferred if something comes up which affects the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): He stated further, and I quote:

—the committee chairman and clerk seemed to be of the view that members who are not specifically named on the roster of members forming that standing committee were not entitled to participate in the deliberations of that standing committee.

Those statements are false. I had considered the word "mischievous," but since it caused so much trouble today, I will omit that word. I will simply say that those statements are false.

Both the clerk and I are well aware of Standing Order 65(9). We have a well-informed clerk who should not be maligned by any member, and especially by one who was not at the committee and therefore does not know what he is talking about.

Further, the hon. member for Peterborough was substituted for the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—not for the chief government whip—following my suggestion that his chances of being heard would be better if his name were on the roster of committee members, and he was heard.

Our committee has very good attendance, and naturally members of the committee have precedence over non-members in being recognized by the Chair. That is the procedure agreed to by the committee itself, and it is precisely the procedure the hon. member for Yukon suggested in his last remarks on page 4855. That is exactly the procedure we followed.

Our committee is working very well, and I resent the hon. member's intervention, as I am sure all members of the committee will. In short, I would have to say that the hon. member's comments contained more hot air than cold logic.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to defer a reply to such a picayune intervention by the hon. member. My point has been emphasized by him, and I am quite happy with the exposure it has received.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

YEAR OF THE CHILD

REFERENCE OF INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION REPORT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I understand that there has been an agreement to refer a report from the International Commission for the Year of the Child to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and if I have the unanimous consent of the House I will propose a motion to that effect.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, with respect to that matter, I wish to confirm that there has been agreement.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Madam Speaker, there has been both an understanding and an agreement.

Madam Speaker: Then has the parliamentary secretary the unanimous consent of the House to propose his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Collenette moved:

That the report of the Canadian Commission for the International Year of the Child, entitled "For Canada's Children", tabled Friday, May 30, 1980 (Sessional Paper No. 321-4/12), be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 908, 940, 1,519 and 1,540.

[Text]

NATIVE COUNCIL OF CANADA

Question No. 908—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Which department funds the Native Council of Canada?

2. What was the total amount supplied to the council in (a) 1975 (b) 1976 (c) 1977 (d) 1978 (e) 1979, and what is the proposed funding for 1980?

3. Does the council purport to represent status Indians or Indians with whom the government has any treaty arrangement and, if not, for what reason does the government fund the council?

4. What are the government's criteria as to the membership and the right to membership in the council?

5. What are the government's criteria as to what organization and what person or persons form the executive of the council?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Secretary of State as follows: 1. The Secretary of State, through the Core Funding Program, funds the Native Council of Canada.

2. Secretary of State core funding:

1975-76	$ 450,247
1976-77	450,247
1977-78	477,262
1978-79	508,709
1979-80	519,889
1980-81	544,942
	$2,951,296

3. The native council does not represent status and/or treaty Indians. Its representation is based solely on Métis and non-status Indians. Funds are provided to native organizations at the national and provincial levels so as to create strong ongoing organizational structures which would help Canada's native people in defining and achieving their place within Canadian society.

4. One major objective of the Core Funding Program which is reflected in the contribution agreements is to "provide the opportunity for native people at the community level to participate democratically in the association".

5. The constitution of the Native Council of Canada provides the basis of eligibility for membership, the structure and procedures for election of the executive of the council.

I am informed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows:

1. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development does not have statutory authority or responsibilities for Métis and non-status Indians, and therefore does not fund the Native Council of Canada on a regular basis. However, funding was provided by the department to the council over a three-year period for the purpose of land claims research. This funding terminated in April, 1980.

2. Total amount supplied by DIAND to the council was:

Fiscal Year	Amount
1975-76	0
1976-77	0
1977-78	$177,753
1978-79	$212,207
1979-80	$214,350
1980-81	no funding anticipated

3. The department was responsible for the administration of funds referred to under 2 for the purpose of claims research by Métis and non-status groups.

4 and 5. See Secretary of State's reply.

STATISTICS CANADA—IMPORT SYSTEMS

Question No. 940—Mr. MacKay:

Does Statistics Canada plan to redesign its import statistics data capture and verification systems in such a way that the corrections would be done prior to the release of the preliminary statistics and, if so, when will the implementation of an interactive computer system similar to the one presently in use for the capture of export statistics be complete?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada Reports: The external trade division of Statistics Canada is now redesigning the import system. This new system will permit the corrections of most of the errors prior to the release of the preliminary statistics. This interactive computer system will be operationally phased-in starting January, 1981. By July, 1981, the implementation phase will be completed.

CANADIAN ARCTIC RESOURCES COMMITTEE

Question No. 1,519—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Were government grants or loans made to the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee, 46 Elgin Street, Room 11, Ottawa, Ontario and, if so, by which departments?

2. What was the amount of grants or loans made during (a) 1977 (b) 1978 (c) 1979 (d) 1980?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): In so far as the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned, the answer is:

1. Yes, the following grants were made by Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

2. (a) 1977-78: None
(b) 1978-79: $50,000.00
(c) 1979-80: $50,000.00
(d) 1980-81: $50,000.00

Total: $150,000.00

SUNNYBROOK HOSPITAL—TORONTO

Question No. 1,540—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How many veterans are in domiciliary or chronic care at the Sunnybrook Hospital, Toronto?

2. How many are on the waiting list for domiciliary or chronic care?

3. How many beds are set aside for domiciliary or chronic care?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs):

1. 122 domiciliary care.
388 chronic care.

2. NIL domiciliary.
33 chronic.*

3. 125 domiciliary care beds.
401 chronic care beds.

---

*The figures in this category reflect the number of veterans awaiting a bed for the appropriate service of the hospital, (medical, surgical, domiciliary care, etc.)

* * *

[English]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 1,025 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Question No. 1,025—Mr. Friesen:

1. How many individuals are employed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in the (a) English (i) television (ii) radio (b) French (i) television (ii) radio networks?

2. For each network, what are the job classification titles under which an individual would be employed?

3. For each network, how many individuals were employed in (a) 1979 (b) 1980 to date and by job classification, how many received incomes per annum (i) of more than $60,000 (ii) between $50,000 and $60,000 (iii) between $40,000 and $50,000 (iv) between $30,000 and $40,000 (v) between $20,000 and $30,000 (vi) between $10,000 and $20,000 (vii) less than $10,000?

4. How many individuals were employed by the CBC on a contract basis in (a) 1979 (b) 1980 to date in the (i) English television (ii) French television (iii) English radio (iv) French radio networks and, what was the total amount paid for such services?

5. What was the total amount of gross revenues the CBC received from sources outside the government in the (a) English (i) television (ii) radio (b) French (i) television (ii) radio networks?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA POST CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CROWN CORPORATION

The House resumed, from Tuesday, October 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for the Prime Minister) that Bill C-42, to establish the Canada Post Corporation, to repeal the Post Office Act and other related acts and to make related amendments to other acts, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, in the context of the preceding hour and a quarter I think I have to deal with some of that as part of my remaining 16 minutes. However, I was interested that the parliamentary secretary mentioned that there were members of the postal union in our gallery today. I too welcome them on behalf of the members of this party.

I would like to point out to the members of the union who sit in the gallery that I have been waiting anxiously for over three weeks to finish the speech I started. I would like to point out to members of this House that it is the government which controls the order of business. It is the government which has decided not to debate the postal bill for the last three weeks. It was in fact the government which decided not to bring this bill forward in May, and it is the government which will probably leave this chamber, talk to the news media and accuse us of breaking agreements and talking out bills. That was my experience when I began this speech three weeks ago.

The tone of the press articles related to my attempt to deal with the postal bill had two misinterpretations of what I was attempting to do in this chamber. The first was that I was using the time of the House to deal with the issue of closure, and I was not. I made no deliberate attempt to talk out the bill. I, like any member of this chamber, am entitled to speak about the legislation which the government places before us. I, and other members of this chamber, have an obligation to study that legislation and to think it through, and if we feel we have a contribution to make to the development of that legislation, we have an obligation to attempt to speak in this chamber.

I did use analogies to the constitutional debate. In the three weeks which have intervened, the positive side of that constitutional debate is the fact that members of the Conservative party of Canada in this House, because of the public exposure of this House, have been able to marshall public opinion to the point where the Canadian public now has an opportunity to view on television and to listen by way of radio to how a committee of Parliament functions.

● (1620)

It should be clear to the Canadian public, after the last few days of broadcasting of that committee, that it is in fact the members of the Liberal party, the government party, who control the debate in committees. It should be much more clear to the Canadian public that the rules of this House provide for standing committees to be dominated in their voting strength by members on the government side. It should be clear to members of the House and to Canadians generally that in such a situation it is possible for prime ministers and cabinet ministers to put considerable pressure on members of standing committees to use up the time in asking non-incisive questions and voting as instructed.

Once this House completes second reading of the postal bill, the bill moves to committee where there will be no television, no broadcasting, and no opportunity for members of the opposition to bring to the attention of the Canadian public what may be wrong with the bill. In the House we have a simple tool, that is, television in the House and the potential for radio broadcasting, which gives us as the representatives of the people the opportunity to make Canadians aware of what we perceive to be the positive as well as the negative features of legislation. It is in that context that I wish to continue my remarks for the ten minutes that I have left. We do not seek to delay, we take our responsibility seriously and we seek to improve legislation so as to create a better world for Canadians within the context of pieces of legislation.

Since I began working on this speech three weeks ago I have learned a lot. I am a relatively new member of this House and I have the opportunity of watching how this government functions. Today we have had closure imposed on the constitutional committee; we were denied the opportunity to call witnesses and to continue discussions in committee beyond December 9, in spite of the fact that all the witnesses who have appeared before that committee indicated extreme dissatisfaction with the bill. When the postal bill moves to committee, will we face the same kind of closure? If the government is consistent, which I believe it is, then we will face that kind of closure. Ministers will use their majority to decide what amendments to accept, what amendments to reject and what witnesses to hear, and we will end up, as a consequence of a process of that kind, with legislation which is not as good as it could be and should be.

I said to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) the other evening that a government which deals with a free people, when it seeks to govern without the support, without the help of those who are to be governed, invites revolution and imperils the will of the people affected to work together and, in the case of the constitution, perhaps even the will to survive as a nation. The protection that free people have is a free forum, a Parliament to which people elect their representatives and where the procedures are such that those who are elected are entitled to speak out on behalf of those whom they represent.

It is in that context that the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) began his remarks on this bill. I want to remind everyone that he began those remarks by telling us that some ten years ago a Liberal government brought changes to the Post Office without adequate discussion and consultation. The consequence of that action was a postal service which Canadians have judged not to have been satisfactory in this decade.

As we look at the constitutional bill and as we look at the budget we see the mistakes of ten years ago being repeated, namely, lack of consultation, lack of common sense, lack of respect for the process of discussion and dialogue. Not only does this imperil the postal delivery service but, in my view, it imperils a nation in political terms and in economic terms. The government may seek to blame the opposition for delaying this bill and they will succeed in the short term, but those who work in the Post Office and those who represent them here today in our galleries might be wise to listen to the debate and to decide for themselves whether the points which we raise in the process of the debate should be listened to. I would feel somewhat better had the Postmaster General been present to hear any part of my remarks. I hope a person on his staff will at least read them to him.

In the postal bill before us, at page 4 in clause 5(2), we have a provision which looks innocuous. This reminds me of the charter of rights. When Canadians first saw it, it looked good, it looked innocuous. As we hear testimony in the constitutional committee, we find it to be dangerous, badly worded, and likely to change the very nature of this country in some unpleasant ways. That is what we find when we examine it word by word.

If we look at just the four simple objectives of this new Crown corporation, what do we find? Clause 5(2)(a) reads:

the desirability of improving and extending its products and services in the light of developments in the field of communications;

That sounds as if we wanted a better Post Office, and who could object to that? But that objective for the Crown corporation, coupled with what we find in later clauses—the regulatory powers which I am sure the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) will address more articulately than I can—will result in the creation of a new Crown corporation to run our Post Office, a Crown corporation with the power of massive intrusion into the private sector in this country. I ask the Postmaster General: is he handing the board of directors and the president the tools to throw every courier service in this country out of business? The minister may say he does not intend to do that, but I ask him whether or not these words will allow him to do that, because, if they do, they must be changed.

Canadians do not want the Post Office running more of our economy. They want a Post Office running an efficient mail service, a Post Office which is humane to its employees, a Post Office which brings work satisfaction and which helps the economy of this nation by providing an efficient service. Why does the minister seek, in the objectives of this corporation, greater intrusion into our lives, an intrusion which is not sanctioned by Parliament on a piece by piece basis but which will be sanctioned by a president and a small board of directors?

● (1630)

What does clause 5(2)(b) indicate to us? It indicates:

—the need to conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis while providing a standard of service that will meet the needs of the people of Canada;

We would like a post office which provides a good and efficient service and pays for itself. We must be very careful of words drafted by the government opposite, because it also hands that small group of people, that small board of directors appointed by the government, the power to tax Canadians. If it is to be self-sustaining, they get to levy the charge; no one is allowed to intrude on their area of jurisdiction and Parliament has no control over it.

On October 28 we sat in the House of Commons and listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) take another Crown corporation called Petro-Canada and give its board of directors the power to tax Canadians without representation. That is what he did with that Crown corporation, that is what he wants to do with the postal bill. That gradual, creeping tendency to hand over taxation powers to appointed people runs counter to our principle that people should be elected and accountable to the voters of this country when they have the right to tax those voters.

The third objective contained in clause 5(2) reads as follows:

(c) the desirability of utilizing the human resources of the corporation in a manner that will both attain the objects of the corporation and ensure the commitment and dedication of its employees to the attainment of those objects—

Surely that is a motherhood clause which we hope any business enterprise would hold dear. But do they couple it anywhere in this legislation with the requirement for a comprehensive audit which will make it clear to government and to Canadians that in fact that is occurring? I suggest that they do not. They state it as a goal, but the machinery to protect the employees of the Post Office is lacking.

Now I come to the last objective which is a strange one in the context of the preceding three. It reads:

(d) the need to maintain a corporate identity program approved by the governor in council that reflects the role of the corporation as an institution of the Government of Canada.

In light of the PetroCan experience, I cannot help wondering whether that corporate identity will be invented in New York City rather than in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. In order for him to continue he requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to wind up my comments rather quickly. I cannot help wondering whether that logo will be invented in New York City rather than in Canada. I cannot help wondering how much it will look like the Liberal campaign symbol, because historically that has been the experience with the government.

I should like to conclude with one last comment. The reasons for alienation of employees in an organization, or people in a country, are usually found in the little things. The fact that today in the province of Alberta there is a shortage of 150 letter carriers does not do the cause of national unity any good in the present climate. I urge the minister to start correcting some of the little aggravations, and we will help him design a good Crown corporation to do the job. It will take time, but in the meantime the minister should not let his department go; he should do something about improving the mail service in Canada today.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, every Thursday for the past three weeks I have risen in my place, at the beginning of orders of the day, to make a request of the government House leader regarding House business. In each instance I have referred him to the report of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. The fourth report of the committee was tabled by me in the House of Commons last July. It is before the House at the present time for study by hon. members and by the Canadian people.

The request I made of the government House leader related to Bill C-42 to create a Crown corporation for the Canada Post Office. I asked him whether he would accede to the request made unanimously by the members of the standing joint committee, of which I am one of the joint chairmen, that the government send the regulation-making powers contained in Bill C-42 to our committee for study after second reading. At the present time the government's intention is to send the whole bill to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for study.

My request to the minister was that those portions dealing with regulation-making authority, which would give the government incredibly broad power to make regulations in the dark of night, without consultation with Parliament, should be sent to our committee for scrutiny, for amendment if necessary, and for recommendations to the House of Commons as to whether or not they should be restricted in some way.

An hour ago the government House leader refused that request. He said that he was not prepared to accede to the request of the standing joint committee. Instead he offered that the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) would appear as a matter of courtesy before the committee, but that the whole of the substance of the bill would go to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. That statement is unacceptable to me, and I believe it would be unacceptable to the members of the standing committee who have asked me to make this request of the government.

Earlier this afternoon the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) indicated that he felt there was an agreement or a disposition on the part of members of Parliament to put this legislation through today. I should like to indicate, as forcefully as I can, that, as the parliamentary secretary later recognized, there is no undertaking on the part of my party that this bill should be put through this afternoon. If the government is not prepared to come to its senses and to allow expert scrutiny of those regulation-making powers, then there are very dangerous powers in the bill which must be debated on the floor of the House of Commons.

I want to make an offer right now—and I will put it as directly as I can to the Postmaster General and the government House leader—if they want this bill through today, they will get it through today if they accede to the request I made earlier this afternoon on behalf of the standing joint committee. If they agree to send those regulation-making powers to our committee, then the members of the official opposition are prepared to accept the bill and allow it through today. But we would ask that all regulation-making authority, including the ability to set postal rates by the Post Office, be sent to the standing joint committee and that that committee have the power refused it earlier today by the government House leader to make amendments to those provisions, if necessary.

Why is it necessary? Why are the members of the standing joint committee concerned about this? Why do they feel that it is a matter of some urgency? I should like to refer the House to paragraph 67 of the committee report which deals with some of the threats that are created when the government asks for a broad regulation-making power which gives it the authority to make regulations in the dark of night without having to come back to Parliament. The paragraph reads as follows:

> Far too many statutes contain little or no indication of legislative policy and are neutral documents the object of which is merely to confer powers on the executive to act in certain vaguely defined fields. Moreover, these powers are granted in very broad terms so that little or no detail is given as to the content or type of delegated legislation that can be made. It is too easy to dismiss this type of statute as "skeletal"; the problem is more serious than that. Even a skeletal statute can be fairly specific about the powers it grants and what can be done under them. To many Canadian statutes are not specific in that way.

● (1640)

Further, in paragraph 69, the committee goes on to say:

> Your committee is convinced that the so-called principles used by the Department of Justice to justify the inordinate breadth with which powers are invested after passage are simply rationalizations for practices of great convenience to administrators but subversive of parliamentary supremacy over the law. The true practice and principle is simply this: the intentions of Parliament in delegating powers and the scope of the delegation should be beyond all doubt and clearly limited.

Paragraph 70 reads as follows:

Insufficient attention is paid to enabling clauses in bills before Parliament. They should be the subject of searching scrutiny during the committee stage. The Regulatory Review Committee—

That is the change in name we are asking be given to our committee.

—is well placed to undertake such scrutiny as it sees week by week the consequences of the powers so readily granted by Parliament in the past. Your committee, therefore, further recommends that the Regulatory Review Committee be charged with the duty and responsibility of examining and reporting upon all powers in bills to make subordinate law or to issue, make or establish other instruments. Its reports should be made to the appropriate standing committees of the Houses having the committee stages of the bills.

What could be a more reasonable request on behalf of the standing committee? That is the request that the members on this side of the House are making to the government today. We would expect some indication from the government as to whether it is willing to accede to that request.

Mr. Speaker, what is there in the bill itself that would give Canadians concern about the regulation-making authority? Members on this side of the House have indicated on numerous occasions in the past that we support the concept of a Crown corporation. We want to see measures taken which will improve the efficiency of the Post Office and make it so that Canadians have a guarantee that when they put a letter in the mail it will be delivered promptly and efficiently. We are convinced the organizational structure of a Crown corporation is one that could go some way toward making improvements, but there are serious flaws in this bill which give inordinate power to the government to operate by regulation.

What am I referring to, Mr. Speaker? I would bring to the attention of the House the regulation-making powers in the bill which make it clear that the Post Office will have the right and the responsibility to make regulations, including about 14 or 15 different regulation-making powers mentioned in here. It includes giving it the power to define, for the purposes of the act, what constitutes a letter. Why is that significant? If you look under the definition section on page two of the bill the government defines the phrase "mail conveyance" as follows:

"mail conveyance" means any physical, electronic, optical or other means used to transmit mail;

And the bill defines "transmit" as follows:

"transmit" means to send from one place to another by any physical, electronic, optical or other means;

The government then is giving the Post Office, by regulation, the right to define what constitutes a letter, including electronic mail, messages sent electronically or optically, not just in the way in which we have conventionally seen mail in the past—something that is physical which you can hold in your hand. When you couple that power to make regulations to sweep in the telecommunications industry of Canada under the ambit of the Post Office, and you couple that with the power of the Post Office, which is included in this bill, to declare a monopoly over the delivery of all mail in Canada, you can see that the government, by regulation, could be giving the Post Office the right to put the telecommunications industry in Canada out of business. This will happen unless it is prepared to go along with conditions set by the Post Office, as one of the interested players. That would be bad enough if it were simply in the private sector, if it were in areas currently regulated by federal statute. But when you take a look at provisions in this bill you discover that this bill extends the power of the government beyond what it has ever been in the past.

Section 3 of the bill, under Application, reads:

This act is binding on Her Majesty in Right of Canada or a province and on any agent thereof.

What does this mean? It means that telephone companies owned by provincial governments are suddenly to be swept under the regulation-making power of the Post Office and of the ability of the Post Office, by regulation, to define their right to have a monopoly in this area. It may seem absurd for us to think that the Post Office would seriously want, in the dark of the night, to exercise this authority. It may be that members of the House would feel that it is simply an oversight on the part of the government that this was included in here.

I would refer members to the Clyne commission report, which was produced last year. It is entitled "Communications in Canada" and it looked at the predecessor bill, C-27. It reads as follows:

The federal government should consider the introduction of amendments to Bill C-27 (for the creation of a Post Office corporation) with a view to clarifying the role of the corporation in the telecommunications structure as a whole, which must continue to include the private telecommunications carriers.

It points out precisely the concerns which I have raised this afternoon. These were concerns which existed in the predecessor bill. It was not just a case of sloppiness, that the drafters of the bill were not aware of the scope of the regulation-making power being given to the government in this bill. The Clyne commission pointed this out a year ago and asked that those provisions be redrafted in a very specific way to ensure that monopoly power could not be extended over telecommunications. Yet Bill C-42, before the House today, has not been changed to correspond with what the Clyne commission report recommended.

Members of the government may say it is silly to suggest they would even want to sweep these people in under their monopoly. And maybe they do not want that. We do not know; there has been no discussion in the House so far.

It is worth while to look at a document put out by the Post Office. We ask ourselves what is the effect of competition on the Post Office. Is the Post Office interested in getting into the electronic mail field? I should make it clear that we on this side of the House do not have objections to the Post Office getting into the field of electronic mail, as a competitor, but we object to them sweeping their monopoly powers over the whole of the industry to put their competitors out of business. Is that something which we should be concerned about?

Mr. Speaker, if we look at a document entitled "Considerations which affect the choice or organization structure for the Canada Post Office", which was produced by the previous Postmaster General in August, 1978, we find appendix C of the report entitled "Impact of Alternative Communications Methods and Systems". It deals with potential competition to the Post Office under the titles of telephone, data transmission, couriers, facsimile, word processing, and funds transfer. In the summary it points out:

> The information funds transfer market—excluding mail and telephone—could be handling the following millions of letter equivalents by 1995:

It breaks it down to a grand total of 7,980 million letter equivalents. What this means is that the Post Office is projecting itself that by 1995 the telecommunications industry of Canada will be moving the equivalent of almost eight billion one-page letters. Those pressures will indeed be there upon the Post Office to extend its monopoly powers, and I think that Canadians have a right to be concerned. We should ask ourselves: would this also include companies like Bell Telephone? Could they be put out of business by what the Post Office is doing? On a cursory reading of the legislation before the House today, the answer is that probably they could. The Post Office, through its regulation-making authority, its power to define what constitutes a letter, could even define telephone conversations as letters. That power is totally unrestricted in the bill. If the minister wants to say that is not what they intend to do, then my response to him is: let us straighten up the language in this bill to make sure that it cannot be done.

The minister should be aware of the fact that the telephone system in Canada is digitizing and packetizing—if you will pardon the jargon—telephone conversations. What this means is that bits of information are turned into digital forms of communication similar to what is used for computers. They are moved into the packet-switching networks which cross this country, and they are moved along with electronic mail with computer communications in exactly the same way as electronic mail and other forms of electronic telecommunication exchanges. Oral communications over the telephone and electronic mail conveyed through packet-switching networks are virtually indistinguishable. There is no doubt in my mind that this bill would give the authority to the Post Office to sweep even provincially-owned telephone companies under the powers of its monopoly.

The issue is that if what the government is saying is that this is not its intention, and ministers have never said what their intention is in the field of electronic mail, to get involved in electronic mail except as a competitor, then let us word the bill so that they do not have the power, by regulation, without coming back to Parliament, to extend the monopoly powers of the Post Office in the telecommunications field.

● (1650)

If the government is saying that it wants to extend the powers of telecommunications so that there is a monopoly in the field, then it has the responsibility to come to Parliament and ask for that particular authority up front, as opposed to doing it by dark of night, by regulation. We are talking about a multibillion dollar industry upon which thousands of jobs in Canada rely, and about communications between individual Canadians and between businesses in this country. Surely Canadians and surely this Parliament have a right to expect that legislation put before Parliament should be worded in such a way that the intentions of the Post Office are made clear and that the Post Office is not asking for a blank cheque to extend its monopoly to whatever area it chooses.

This issue is vital to Canadians. I cannot think of a single bill before Parliament at this time in which the government is asking for broader more unfettered regulation-making authority than in the case of this bill.

It is essential that the government agree with the proposition which I proposed in the course of my remarks. If it is prepared to reverse what the government House leader said earlier, and send those regulation-making powers, including the power to set rates—which would be done by regulation with only the right of appeal to the Canadian Transport Commission—to the standing joint committee, then the members on this side would be prepared to let the bill go through tonight. But if the government continues to ask for carte blanche authority and refuses the unanimous request of the standing joint committee that this sort of action should be taken, then we would have the obligation to continue to raise these matters on the floor of the House.

I have some other concerns with regard to this bill which I would like to touch upon very briefly in the time that is still available to me. One thought which members of Parliament should have when looking at this whole issue of a Crown corporation is what is the government doing in terms of the powers it is giving to the Postmaster General and the governor in council.

Hon. members should also think about how the government's plans correspond with the stated policy of the government with regard to Crown corporations. Hon. members will remember that in the last Parliament our government tabled a Crown corporation bill which dealt with a number of these areas. That bill would have given the government the power to issue directives in the national interest to Crown corporations, but those directives would be public and would be tabled in the House of Commons within 15 days of their being issued.

This bill, however, gives that power to an individual minister or to the governor in council to be used either openly or secretly. This bill gives the Postmaster General the power to give directives secretly to the Post Office. In our Crown corporations legislation we said that it was essential that the boards of Crown corporations operating on a commercial basis be given the authority to do their jobs. If there are good boards, then let them run their corporations.

Unlike the Crown corporation legislation which may be brought forward in the course of the next two weeks by this government, and the Prime Minister has claimed parentage of that bill—I am glad to give him that parentage as long as I am at least called an uncle when the legislation comes back before the House—we believe it is essential that the board of directors of Crown corporations be given the authority to appoint vice-presidents. This legislation says that any appointments of vice-presidents must be confirmed by the governor in council. One can think of the opportunities of patronage which are available in such a bill.

Such appointments would also allow the government to monkey around with the day to day affairs of a corporation just as secret directive powers would give it the same authority. This bill also says that the governor in council, not the board of the new Crown corporation, will have the authority to set the salary scales for vice-presidents of the Crown corporation. Here again is another instance of where there is a collision between these two principles and where the government wants to have political hands on the functioning of the Post Office. I believe that should be changed.

There is another matter which should be of concern to Canadians. I do not know whether the Postmaster General has had an opportunity to see the article which appeared in Monday's edition of the "Trudeau Star", an authoritative source for the Liberal party. The lead editorial on Monday evening dealt with the issue of Bill C-42. It expressed alarm that if this bill goes through with its present wording, there could be a threat to privacy. The headline of the editorial is "A Threat to Mail Privacy", and it reads in part:

> The new act would make the prosecution of those who illegally open private letters more difficult, and it would lessen the penalties that may apply to those found guilty of the offence.

Members of Parliament should be aware of this provision, study it closely, and ensure that the sanctity of the mail remains intact and that the privacy of Canadians is not threatened by the proposals in this legislation.

In summing up, Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate to the minister that we are glad that he is coming before the standing joint committee. However, we hope that it is not a matter of courtesy to the committee, but a matter that the government has accepted the principle that the committee was correct when it asked that the regulation-making authority contained in the bill be sent to it for expert scrutiny and that this committee should have the right to make amendments to the regulations if necessary.

I would point out to the minister the concerns which I have about the relationship between this legislation, the Crown corporation bill which we tabled last year, and the bill which may come down later this session. I would also express on behalf of hon. members of my side concern about the question of the privacy of mail in Canada. That privacy must remain inviolable and the government should not be trying to sneak in through the back door reductions to the privacy of mail for Canadians under the guise of creating a Post Office Crown corporation.

If the government can meet these objections, I think it would be possible for Parliament to move on this legislation and to create a structure for Crown corporations which will allow employees of the Post Office to continue with the pride which has existed historically in the Post Office and which will allow Canadians the assurance that the mail will go through efficiently and on time.

Mr. Ouellet: Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Beatty: Gladly.

Mr. Ouellet: Why is the hon. member discriminating against the Post Office Act? His request would be more natural if it were related to the Crown corporation omnibus bill to which he has referred and which he thinks will be before the House in the near future. Then his committee would be dealing with all the Crown corporations, not just the Post Office Crown corporation. Secondly, why is the hon. member making his request at this time when the report of the committee to which he has referred has not yet been approved by Parliament and when there is no precedent for what he is asking?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to respond to the minister's questions. We are not discriminating against the Post Office bill.

Mr. Ouellet: You are.

Mr. Beatty: What we are asking for in the report, if the minister would read it—and I would be glad to send him my copy—is that the regulation-making authority in all new bills coming before Parliament after second reading be sent to our committee. The single most dangerous regulation-making authority which sits before the House today on second reading is Bill C-42. This is the broadest grant of authority by regulations being asked for by the government in any bill before Parliament today.

Earlier today when I asked the government House leader whether or not he was prepared to agree with this principle, he said "No", that he would take no action on the matter because he was waiting at least until he had a chance to decide whether or not he wanted to agree with the other task force report to be completed some months from now. I have received instructions unanimously from my committee, the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, to come before the House and request that this bill be sent to that committee.

Also if the government will accede to the request, we would be delighted to receive the Crown corporation legislation and, as we have requested, the regulation-making authority in any other bills which come before Parliament after second reading. That is my offer to the minister and we are asking in good faith. We are saying to the minister that he can get the bill through tonight if that is what he wants. We do not want any more press releases on the part of members opposite, or any claims of broken deals. The offer is being made openly. It is up to the minister.

Canadian Merchant Service Guild

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby)—Northern pipelines—Extension of natural gas pipeline to maritimes; the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Finance—Canada Savings Bonds—Inquiry whether interest rate will be increased; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong)—Environmental affairs—Chemical testing—Availability of studies.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

[Translation]

CANADIAN MERCHANT SERVICE GUILD

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)) moved: That Bill S-12 respecting the Canadian Merchant Service Guild be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellanous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

● (1700)

[English]

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I introduce Bill S-12, respecting the Canadian Merchant Service Guild which has been petitioned by Mr. Cook and Mr. Sjoquist, President and Secretary Treasurer of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild. This bill has two purposes. First, it is to ensure the Canadian Merchant Service Guild exists legally. Second, it is to tailor the act to the current needs of the 1980s. I have discussed this bill with members opposite and I sense a willingness to proceed with the bill without debate. Therefore, I commend this bill for favourable consideration on second reading so that it may be referred to the appropriate committee for detailed study and analysis.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the official opposition. We have had discussions with the parliamentary secretary. We, too, would like to see Bill S-12 concerning the Canadian Merchant Service Guild move into committee.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, that is our position, too.

[Translation]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

* * *

MONTILAC LTD. AND SOCAM LTD.

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State, Trade), moved that Bill S-13, to revive Montilac Ltd. and Socam Ltd., be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with Bill S-13, an act to revive a company dissolved some time ago under section 133(1) of the Canada Corporations Act. I have had the pleasure of discussing this bill with representatives of the parties here in this House, and I feel the House is willing to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders for discussion. I thank the House for its kind co-operation.

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, it is true that we have no general observations to make at this time with respect to this bill. However, I did indicate to the parliamentary secretary that there were certain matters we hoped he would comment on, namely, have these companies been able to file with the Quebec authorities? What is the position of the creditors that may be involved with respect to these companies? Finally, what is their standing with respect to Revenue Canada? Have these companies maintained income tax filings, presumably paying whatever taxes that may have been owing?

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I gave the hon. member my word that I would get the information he has requested, and when the petitioner, Mr. Gagnon, and his counsel appear before the committee we will have the opportunity to discuss these matters until he is satisfied with the information he is seeking.

[English]

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we believe the place to discuss this bill is in committee.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

* * *

TREMUS INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State, Trade) moved that Bill S-14, to revive Tremus Industries Limited, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as in the previous case, this bill seeks to revive a corporation which was dissolved under section 133 (1) of the Canada Corporations Act. As I indicated to the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), I intend to ask the petitioner and his counsel for the information he is requesting so that we may in committee deal with all matters relevant to this bill. Once again I thank the House and all hon. members for their courtesy in agreeing to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the statement just made by the parliamentary secretary, we have no objection to second reading being given to this bill.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Native Rights

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT, 1867

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce) moved that Bill C-212, to amend the British North America Act, 1867, (native status, treaties and aboriginal rights) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to entrench in the Canadian Constitution those rights belonging to our aboriginal peoples, the Indian, status and non-status; the Inuit and the Metis. Among those rights are their rights to land, their aboriginal rights, their rights to resources, their rights to govern themselves as they see fit, their treaty rights, and so on. I will describe these in greater detail later.

The purpose for wanting to entrench these rights is that they have been continually eroded over the last 100 years by the legislative assemblies of the provinces and by the federal government. By entrenching these rights in the constitution, we would hope to put them beyond the ordinary legislative processes of the federal and provincial governments so that they could not be touched in any other way except by constitutional amendment. I say that their rights have been abrogated, rescinded and reduced over the years. This is true with respect to Indian reserve lands, their fishing rights, their hunting rights, and with respect to their rights to govern themselves as they did before the Europeans came.

The ideas in this bill are not completely my own. These are ideas I have heard over the years from attending Indian conferences and Inuit conferences. They are ideas formulated by examining resolutions adopted at those conferences and by sitting and listening to aboriginal peoples all over Canada. What I have tried to do is put in a form of a bill what I perceive their wishes to be, and with which I agreed.

I must say that I drafted this bill last spring. When I drafted it and presented it to the House of Commons for inclusion in the list of bills, I realized it was not the best possible bill, that it was subject to some defects and could be much better. Over the months which passed since last spring, better ideas on the subject have been presented. In the speech the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) made on the constitution a few weeks ago, he presented some ideas with respect to these matters which are an improvement on my own. He brought these forward from the ITC and other Inuit organizations.

● (1710)

As well, the National Indian Brotherhood has been working on this matter in recent months. They recently came up with what I believe to be a much better draft for these rights than my bill. That having been said, the principles in my bill are fairly close to the principles in both the Inuit and NIB proposals which have been distributed to members of Parliament in recent weeks.

In discussing the constitutional proposals presently before Parliament and now being discussed in committee in Room 200 of these Parliament Buildings, the government said they want to protect native rights in Canada. Consequently, they have put in the proposed resolution for a joint address to Her Majesty regarding the Constitution of Canada, article 24, which they say will protect and guarantee those rights for the time being.

I completely disagree with that suggestion. I want to explain that in this House. I attempted to do it in the very short period of time given to me the other day in committee when I discussed this matter with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). I hope I made a few points with him, but one is limited to five or seven minutes in that committee. I did not have much time to develop an argument. Article 24 presently reads:

> The guarantee in this charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that exist in Canada, including any rights or freedoms that pertain to the native peoples of Canada.

Any person who can read and reads this section slowly will conclude that little is protected when it says "the guarantee in this charter shall not be construed as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that pertain to the native peoples of Canada." In other words, it is only what is in this charter which will not deny any rights to native people. The article does not say that the rights of native people cannot be revised, abrogated or rescinded by other laws of federal or provincial governments, which is the real basis of my disagreement.

Even if you pass article 24 as it is, the Parliament of Canada could introduce a bill next week expropriating Indian land. The legislative assembly of a province could introduce a bill taking away hunting and fishing rights belonging to Indians. This could go on all over the country. All this article says is that there is nothing in the charter that will reduce Indian or native rights. It does not say that native rights cannot be reduced by any other bill or legislative measure. It is extremely defective in protecting native rights. That is not much better than nothing at all.

What could be done, and I hope the government will consider this seriously, is to amend the constitutional proposals to adopt some of the suggestions in my bill. Better still, it could use the proposals published by the National Indian Brotherhood which will be discussed before the standing committee, hopefully within a couple a weeks. Either they should completely revise article 24 with a series of other articles which will really protect Indian and native rights, or take some measures to make article 24 effective. That could be done very easily.

Some people ask why must these rights be entrenched in the constitution. I will deal with the different ones and go through them, starting with the easiest ones first. First, there is the matter of treaty rights. The Crown on behalf of Canada and the British Crown concluded treaties with many of the Indian groups in Canada when they came in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries because they were taking lands which belonged to these people, as well as their resources. They were overrunning territories these people had occupied for thousands of years when they were sovereign nations. They formed treaties with these people saying that in exchange for certain recognition, they would guarantee their rights.

Over the years the legislative bodies of this country, the Parliament of Canada and the legislative assemblies of the provinces, passed laws which took away those rights which were granted to the Indians in these treaties. I say it is wrong, and over the years the Indian people have said it is wrong. The government of the United States recognizes the treaties which they signed with native people prevail over ordinary legislation. They look on these treaties as international treaties. They have a special status. What the Indian people are asking, and what I am asking in my bill, is that treaty rights be entrenched in the constitution so they cannot be rescinded by ordinary legislation of the provinces or federal government. That is number one.

Second are the rights which were set out for the native people in this country, and that applies to the Indians, the Inuit and the Métis, in the royal proclamation of 1763. In that royal proclamation there are several sections guaranteeing the rights of Her Majesty's Indian, Inuit and so on. That document, which is supposed to be a constitutional document and in a sense should be entrenched, was never entrenched.

The legislative assemblies of the provinces and the Parliament of Canada have taken away some of those rights. They have not respected the rights set out in the royal proclamation of 1763. The courts have not respected them. They looked on that royal proclamation as something less than an entrenched constitutional document. The second thing I ask in my bill and the native people ask in their document is that all the rights in the royal proclamation of 1763 be entrenched in the constitution so they will be protected from the ordinary legislative processes.

The third, aboriginal rights, is more difficult. Some members of Parliament ask what they are. They say because we do not know what they are, we cannot entrench them. In a nutshell, aboriginal rights are all those rights which the Indian nations and Inuit nations possessed in this country before the coming of the Europeans. I must say that I am incensed every time I hear my colleagues talk about the two founding peoples of this country as being the English and the French. They speak as though they were the first to come here, as though no civilization existed here before that. They say that as though the people who were here before were not people at all. However, they were people. They had civilization, societies, laws, languages, cultures and economies. Consequently they had rights, and these are their aboriginal rights.

When the Europeans came here, the French, English and Spanish, in most cases they did not get contracts with the aboriginal peoples. They did not make contracts by which these people gave up their rights legally in accordance with the European legal system. In most cases they took them by force of numbers, arms and, in some cases, advanced technology. They just overran these people.

● (1720)

Consequently, in accordance with our own principles of justice, if you have a right and you have never given it up, you still have it. That is what we mean by aboriginal rights. These people had rights then. They have never given them up. They never agreed to the BNA Act of 1867. They were not even asked for their agreement. They never gave up many of their lands. Some of them gave up some of their lands in treaties, but treaties only cover a small part of this country where native people have lived. Aboriginal rights existed, and they still exist.

A few years ago the Government of Canada agreed to negotiate the exact terms of those aboriginal rights with the original people of this country—the Indians, the Inuit and the Metis—and it is in the process of negotiating those rights. In its policies the government agreed that they exist, but now it is just a question of defining them in particular, and I am saying that that policy the government has adopted that there are aboriginal rights, even though we do not know what they are in detail, should be put in the constitution so that those aboriginal rights will not continually be eroded by the Parliament of Canada and by the legislatures of the provinces.

That is taking place, even while the negotiations are going on. Lands which are claimed by different bands across the country and lands which are being claimed by Inuit communities are being sold to non-native peoples. Mineral rights are being granted in perpetuity to large multinational corporations. By the time agreements are reached, we will be in a situation in which it will be very difficult to return those lands to the peoples who really have rights to them.

When we have put questions to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Justice, and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) with respect to the negotiation of these matters and their entrenchment in the present constitutional document which is before Parliament, they have answered time and again that they are interested in the subject but that they will do it after patriation and that it will be a matter of high priority once the constitution is brought to the country. I have said before, and I will say again, that that is not acceptable, because once the constitution is patriated we will have to go through that very difficult amending formula which is in the constitutional proposal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: If the government has seen fit to proceed unilaterally on the rights of Anglophone minorities, Francophone minorities, mobility rights, the rights of women and the rights of the aged, which I approve, surely it should protect the rights of the original people of this country who number no more than perhaps 1,050,000 people. The government should certainly entrench those rights as well. It could easily be done. Different formula are already available. My bill is available. The NIB proposals are available. The Inuit Tapirisat proposals are available. It could be done even within the short deadline set by the government.

I maintain that justice demands that we do this in this country. Until this matter is settled it will continue to be a black mark against the majority peoples of this country, and if we think that the protests up to date have been sometimes stormy, as they were in about 1975 when Indians from all over the country marched on Parliament Hill and camped on Parliament Hill, they are going to be stormier still. The native people of this country will not rest until these things are entrenched. Sure they are going to Britain and to the United Nations, and they will go to other international bodies because they are not being listened to in this country.

It is a sad thing that they have to go abroad to get public attention with regard to their rights. In principle we do not like that, but when you have been denied so many times, you will use whatever means at your disposal, and that is what they are doing. I say that justice demands that we correct this. I see two eminent parliamentary secretaries here, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chénier), and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Irwin). I hope they will not give me the same answer they gave me on the adjournment debate a few weeks ago. I hope they will be able to tell this House that the government recognizes that article 24 of the constitutional proposal is really not adequate and that the government intends to amend that section to protect treaty rights, the rights in the Royal Proclamation of 1763, and aboriginal rights, and that they will be protected in a positive way in the proposal. As I said, they can borrow from my bill or from any other documents. I hope they will say that this will be done now and not after patriation.

Furthermore, I would be extremely pleased if they would do with my bill as has been done with other bills from time to time, that is, agree to refer the subject matter to the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution so that the joint committee can consider the proposals in my bill. In that way they will not be talked out or killed tonight as private members' proposals usually are.

I conclude by saying that I personally am committed to this cause. I think it is just. For me, not to do it is one of the most glaring injustices in this country, and I will continue to do everything in my power to work for the entrenchment of those rights. I ask the representatives of the government who are here this evening to agree to protect those rights in the way they should be protected.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this bill gives me to speak on the subject of the constitution, and I am particularly pleased to speak about this specific area which greatly concerns me.

I must congratulate the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) on the timing of his bill, which appears before the House at a time when the very treaties and special rights of our aboriginal people are threatened. I do not think I have ever heard this subject spoken about more succinctly and strongly. What the hon. member just said to us is right to the point. I agree with him 100 per cent.

Obviously, the hon. member must have strongly suspected, or even knew, that the issue of native rights would be left out of the constitutional resolution, and it grieves me that a previous minister and former minister of Indian affairs was not listened to by his caucus and by the Liberal government.

Native people are threatened today by a government which is determined to alter the structure of Canada according to an artificial timetable. The bill which my colleague has presented to the House goes a long way toward reducing that threat.

The importance of this bill cannot be overestimated. It is of vital importance to the native people of our land, and it is of vital importance to all Canadians who wish to see simple justice prevail. If we believe in justice, for heaven's sake we must believe in what this bill is trying to tell the people of Canada.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has said that he would study and consider any written proposals on the constitution presented to him. This bill gives the minister an opportunity not only to study and consider this written proposal, but he can also demonstrate his good faith by supporting this bill. In addition to that, the minister would be recognizing the basic justice contained in this bill. The minister must recognize the basic justice in Bill C-212 because his party acknowledged the legitimacy of the native argument in a recently leaked document. This document is just another in a long line from the government. This time it is from the federal-provincial relations office, and it is entitled "Briefing material on Canada's native peoples and the constitution". What the document does is lay out the game plan of the government vis-à-vis how to handle the problem which will arise with respect to native people. It appears to have been written in the last two or three weeks.

I would like to quote from this brief which has emanated from this increasingly leaky ship of state. On page one it states, and I quote:

> Native leaders would like to achieve goals in the patriation process which are remarkably similar to those of the federal government vis-à-vis the Canadian people as a whole.

If native goals are remarkably similar to the goals of the federal government on the constitutional resolution, one would assume that the federal government's sense of urgency with respect to native aspirations would be remarkably similar to that which it is expressing concerning the Canadian people as a whole. If the government denies the urgency or the legitimacy of the goals of the native people, then obviously it must be denying the legitimacy of its own goals concerning the constitution. The government can recognize both the legitimacy and urgency of the aboriginal goals by urging its supporters to vote in favour of Bill C-212. The two issues are not separate, but are remarkably similar.

● (1730)

Bill C-212 recognizes this relationship, and is designed to attack the injustice of trying to treat the native issue separately. The treaties and rights of the aboriginal people of Canada are a type of constitution for our first citizens. When the patriation and amendment of our constitution is considered, we cannot separate this process from the constitution of the native people. Change in one automatically causes change in the other. Bill C-212 merely acts as the change in the native constitution to compensate for the change in the Canadian constitution.

The sad thing is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) recognizes this relationship, but refuses to acknowledge it. This can be seen most vividly by a comparison of two documents written a matter of days apart. The first document is the one to which I have been referring—the briefing material on Canada's native peoples and the constitution. The second is a letter sent to the native leaders by the Prime Minister, dated October 30, 1980.

In the five-page letter to the native leaders, the Prime Minister said, and I quote:

> In short, I believe that constitutional change after patriation will become easier, rather than harder—

In the brief, on the other hand, we are informed that:

> —entrenching their rights will be enormously difficult after patriation, especially since a majority of the provinces would have to agree to changes which might benefit native peoples at the expense of provincial power.

Obviously, there is some difference between these two statements. The difference seems to be between public government policy and actual government policy. As usual, the native people are being subjected to double talk, half truths, and false promises.

The Prime Minister has told the leaders of the aboriginal people that they have nothing to worry about; that entrenchment will be easier after patriation. However, when he told the leadership this, he knew that, in truth, entrenchment would be more difficult after patriation. How can the aboriginal people be expected to trust the government to protect their rights after patriation of the constitution, when he misleads them on that very issue before patriation?

There is another area of conflict between these two documents, the public voice of the government and the private voice of the government. The private voice of the government says:

> The status of Indian treaties and of existing and future native land claims is not clarified by the proposals of section 24.

The public voice of the government, The Prime Minister, says:

> Let me respond to your worries by saying that I am personally convinced that your people will lose nothing in this act of patriation.

I say, balderdash! The native people will lose something for certain; they will lose the opportunity to entrench their rights and treaties. Clause 24 works against the entrenchment of rights and treaties. By failing to entrench clause 24, the government leaves the question of native rights at the mercy of the provinces, which it acknowledges, will not likely agree on this issue. Bill C-212 removes any doubt on this matter. Bill C-212 would guarantee the rights and treaties of the aboriginal peoples. The government has before it today an opportunity to rectify this glaring deficiency.

Bill C-212 has another characteristic which should appeal to the government. It would be quick. Speed appears to be an overriding consideration in this brief on native people and the constitution. Let me quote once more from this informative document. It reads:

Given the need to act, therefore, and the government's timetable, entrenchment of native rights before patriation is not possible.

Later, on that same page, the brief goes on to say:

The native leaders argue that the possibility of federal unilateral action on the constitution under present conditions includes an opportunity for the federal government to unilaterally entrench native rights. This opportunity would be lost after patriation. The answer here again is that the government has decided to move quickly.

The government does not deny the truth in the native leaders' argument. It argues that the artificial timetable imposed on Parliament is the only real time constraint. If the government is determined to ram through patriation within such an unrealistic time-frame, the very least it could do would be to ensure that the rights and treaties of the aboriginal people are protected. Bill C-212 performs this function.

The government has stated that it does not feel the native people have anything to fear from the patriation of the constitution—that it will act to protect those aboriginal rights and treaties to the maximum. A fine illustration of this commitment was recently given by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Simmons). Last month the acid-tongued member for Burin-St. George's stated in a speech to the Canadian Institute of Forestry in Ottawa:

The federal government itself owns or controls about 18 per cent of Canada's forest land. While it is true that most of this land is in the north, there are over one million hectares of forest land in Indian reservations within provincial boundaries.

This unilateral patriation of Indian land should come as a surprise to all the native people of Canada. Until the speech was made, they were under the impression that forest land on their reservations was in fact their own property. I am sure the parliamentary secretary was looking to the future when the constitution has been patriated and he can more easily accomplish this land grab. I would be very pleased if we could surprise the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment today by robbing him of that opportunity. We could do this by simply passing Bill C-212. The bill before us would protect the aboriginal people from this sort of high-handed approach to their treaties, rights and heritage.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) for giving me this opportunity to support his bill. It is an expression of his real concern for the aboriginal people of Canada that this vital piece of legislation is before us today. I can only hope that his colleagues will take up the challenge which he has presented to them and vote in favour of this amendment to the British North America Act.

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I want to applaud the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) and to congratulate the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) for putting forward a bill which recognizes the aboriginal people of Canada. I am delighted and charmed that members of the other two parties would feel so strongly about concerns for which my people and the Indians have been fighting for many years.

This bill contains two parts, one on Indians and one on Inuit. It is with reference to the Inuit that I should like to speak, albeit briefly. The underlying point is, I think, to advocate official recognition of the aboriginal rights of Inuit in the Canadian constitution as well as establishing mechanisms for acquiring some economic and political control over the structures which rule us in the north.

The government would have us believe that Clause 24, of the charter of rights—in my view, the latest insult to the natives of Canada—is adequate as it protects existing rights and freedoms. These so-called existing rights are contained in the Indian Act which is nothing but an administrative statute which can be overridden by Parliament at any time.

The BNA Act when drafted did not even mention Inuit. It merely gave the federal government power over "Indians and land reserved for Indians." Although the 1924 amendment to the Indian Act placed Eskimos under the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, it did not mention property or any application of the Indian Act to Eskimos. In fact, former prime minister Arthur Meighen said:

The best policy we can adopt toward Eskimos is to leave them alone.

• (1740)

Such is not the case today. Their lands and their rights are being encroached upon in many ways which are detrimental to their livelihood. The section on Eskimo affairs was repealed in 1930. As far as Inuit are concerned, the Indian Act still does not apply to us; and we certainly do not mean any reflection upon the Indian people of this country. So much for protecting Inuit rights.

In the past the protection of our rights as Inuit was not as pressing as it is today. The past three decades have seen many changes take place in the north. Government activities prior to 1950 were minimal. Economic livelihood was largely land and sea based, and the fur trade provided the main source of contact between Inuit and southern society. Increased government presence in the north created a situation whereby Inuit were compelled to learn about southern-styled or world-styled politics, largely out of necessity rather than genuine or spontaneous interest. I am here in Ottawa out of spontaneous interest rather than genuine interest, and I say this in all truth. I do not have any heart to be here, but I must be here because of the encroachment on my people about which I spoke.

This holds true today. The Government of Canada has proposed the patriation of the Constitution of Canada. The constitutional resolution of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not recognize the collective aboriginal rights of Inuit. This may not have been important to us 30 years ago, but the implications today are somewhat frightening.

Especially after the sell-out to the United States every year, the north is now viewed as Canada's and North America's resource warehouse to be developed as needed. The 1980 national energy program indicated that the need for Arctic gas in Canadian markets may not arise for many years, yet we should press ahead with exploration so that Canadians may have a secure source of oil and gas available as a safety net for the future. In the face of large-scale resource development, the traditional economy and lifestyles of Inuit, not to mention rights, are subject to constant strain.

We are talking here about very major social and economic changes. Some have occurred already, but more are on the horizon. The constitutional guarantees which Inuit seek will be proposed to the Joint House of Commons and Senate Committee on the Constitution when the Inuit committee on national issues appear before it. Constitutional recognition of the aboriginal rights and freedoms of Inuit will not solve all our present or future problems, but it will provide us with a base from which we can work toward solutions.

I am sure this was the intention of Bill C-212 and I heartily support it. While I agree with the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce that the wording of the bill is not as exact as we would like it, we heartily support the principle and spirit of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ray Chénier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly an honour to take part in the debate this afternoon with members such as the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) and the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar). And I am very happy to see that the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), almost in opposition to the rest of his party, seems ready to propose some amendments to the constitution.

The subject matter of Bill C-212 concerns matters of fundamental importance to native people in this country—their treaty and aboriginal rights, their lands and their jurisdictional powers to control matters which affect their communities. These are matters which the federal government also views as matters of prime importance.

Mr. Kilgour: When?

Mr. Chénier: However, the government differs with respect to the process the bill sets out for entrenching and protecting such rights as may be determined to exist in these areas.

Mr. Kilgour: Big deal.

Mr. Chénier: The government is committed to a joint rather than unilateral approach toward constitutional change as it relates to native rights in Canada.

Mr. Kilgour: How soon?

Mr. Chénier: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) clearly set out the government's position in this regard in his letter of October 30, 1980, to the three presidents of the major native organizations. He made the following points: he is personally committed to ensuring that the voices of native peoples are heard in the process of framing a new constitution and that the government remains committed to working with them toward this end; that patriation of the constitution will not reduce or derogate from native rights in Canada; that the government remains committed to discussing with native peoples such matters as aboriginal and treaty rights, internal native self-government, native representation in political institutions such as Parliament, and the responsibilities of the federal and provincial governments for the provision of services to native peoples. He indicated that other items as well could be introduced in the course of the discussions. Finally, the Prime Minister said that he would seek to place the subject of native rights on the agenda of the next meeting of the first ministers on the constitution.

Mr. Kilgour: In 1987?

Mr. Ittinuar: Do you really believe that?

Mr. Chénier: The member on the other side seems to have a lot to say now, but when his party was in government it certainly did not do anything.

An hon. Member: In only eight months?

Mr. Chénier: In particular, at this time I would seek to allay two specific concerns raised by Indian people about the process of patriation of the constitution. First, patriation will not affect in any way the legal status of Indian treaties in the country, nor reduce the commitment of the federal government to honour them in their spirit and in their terms.

Mr. Kilgour: When?

Mr. Chénier: Moreover, as I have already mentioned, the Prime Minister may make a commitment that in future constitutional discussions with Indian people the federal government is prepared to look at treaty rights and examine, with the Indian people, the possibility of constitutional entrenchment of some or all of these rights as may be appropriate. Needless to say, on a number of issues surrounding native rights the process of discussion will both allow and require the participation of the provinces.

Second, I should like to allay a fear which has been expressed by some status Indian people concerning the federal government's use of the term "native" in section 24 of the patriation resolution. The term "native" has been used advisedly by the federal government. It is clear that it includes status Indians and Inuit. However, it also allows for future discussions of what rights may pertain to non-status Indians and Metis.

I should like to reiterate that the federal government is committed to a process of working jointly and co-operatively with native people toward constitutional change.

Mr. Kilgour: Why don't you do something about it?

Mr. Chénier: Section 24 of the patriation resolution is meant to safeguard special rights of native peoples by not prejudging or predetermining them.

Mr. Kilgour: Oh, come on!

Mr. Chénier: It leaves open the possibility of future entrenchment of such rights in the constitution, but only after a process in which native people have been able to contribute to their identification and clarification.

Mr. Ittinuar: You cannot believe that.

Mr. Chénier: Mr. Speaker, I could not be more honest because it is the truth. The steps being taken will not reduce the current status of native peoples in Canada. Section 91(4) of the BNA Act, which gives responsibility over Indians to the federal government, will be unchanged. The status of treaties will be unchanged. The Indian Act continues to be in force. The resource transfer agreements embodied in the British North America Act will continue to limit the application of provincial game laws in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba with respect to the right of Indians to hunt, trap and fish for food. In addition, the government remains committed to the process of dealing with the claims of native groups.

• (1750)

Section 24 of the constitution continues the existing protection of the native people's way of life by assuring that any rights or freedoms that pertain to the native peoples of Canada shall not be abrogated by the introduction of a guarantee in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of certain rights and freedoms for all Canadians. This section is purposefully open-ended. There is, as I have said before, the possibility of future entrenchment of additional rights in the constitution such as those demanded by native peoples.

[Translation]

In short, I can only congratulate my colleague the hon. Warren Allmand for his interest in the rights and interests of the native peoples, Bill C-212 being an obvious proof of that. However, while I agree on the objectives, I must indicate that I do not share his view on the means to protect their rights and to entrench them in the constitution. The government's position, as stated in the resolution on the constitution and in the various speeches made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) dealing with the participation of the native peoples in the constitutional review process, is based on consultation and co-operation with them and, when necessary, with the provinces.

[English]

We believe that a matter as important as the identification and entrenchment of native rights must take this approach if it is to succeed in the long run.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, with respect to what the hon. member has just said I would profoundly disagree with virtually all of it. I do not think it is unparliamentary to say it represents nothing but hypocricy from the first word he said to the last. As the Civil Liberties Association pointed out in the committee hearings, what the so-called rights in this charter of rights represent is a diminution in the rights of Canadians. For instance, the first section says:

> —subject only to such reasonable limits as are generally accepted in a free and democratic society with a parliamentary system of government.

As you will be aware, Mr. Speaker, the Civil Liberties Association and a number of other groups have indicated, these words give the government the right to use the War Measures Act and provide other ways in it they can encroach on the freedom of Canadians and say there is a constitutional right to use such measures. Looking through these so-called rights and freedoms I suggest we will hear from all of the thoughtful people appearing before the committee that they represent a reduction rather than an entrenchment of any rights for Canadians. The section with respect to native rights is, perhaps, as hypocritical as any other in the charter. I will read it:

> The guarantee in this charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that exist in Canada, including any rights or freedoms that pertain to the native peoples of Canada.

I suggest that "native peoples of Canada" is an afterthought. I ask the hon. member on the government side who just spoke: what single native person, native group or association has spoken in favour of section 24? I submit there is not a single native person in Canada who agrees with what I call the nonsense we have just heard from the parliamentary secretary. That ought to be a pretty good test of whether the native people in Canada have any conviction that the government is trying to protect their rights. One could give a litany of what members opposite have done over many years to try to reduce the rights of native people, rights under their treaties and under the Indian Act. Incidentally, I would agree with everything that has been said by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). I think he expressed sentiments, as did the hon. member from the eastern Arctic, which the vast majority of members in my party agree with.

The point government members do not understand is that many natives in this country believe they have a special relationship with the monarch, that is, the monarch of Great Britain. This was better said by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce than I have said it. The native people feel that this relationship is severed by this charter of rights and that they would be losing something. This has been made clear to every member in this House. The special relationship they value has been referred to many times; they talk about the honour of the Queen and say it should not be jeopardized by violating their treaty rights and other of their accumulated rights.

The subject of aboriginal title has been mentioned as well. I do not think the parliamentary secretary appreciates that the concept of aboriginal title has been recognized in civilized countries, including the United States, where aboriginal title has been bought out or terminated at a cost in compensation of some $4 billion. Members opposite do not even recognize aboriginal title despite their charter on the subject. I think it is time that members like the member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce spoke individually to members of the Liberal caucus about this.

In conclusion, I add my support to the other members in this House who have spoken in favour of the principle of the bill. Since it is just before six o'clock I move:

That the question now be put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. There is a motion before us that the question now be put. But such a motion is also debatable.

The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I have come to appreciate the deep concern felt by the native people of Canada, a concern which the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) has expressed. Time after time he has prodded the conscience of the government—

Mr. Kilgour: What conscience?

Mr. Irwin: We do have a conscience.

Mr. Kilgour: Show it to us.

Mr. Irwin: I suppose the hon. member opposite would work a lot harder for the Indians if they owned multinational oil companies.

Mr. Ittinuar: Is that why you work so hard for them?

Mr. Irwin: The proposed Bill C-212 was first read on May 2, 1980. It is a very broad bill and perhaps in its broadness, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, stands its very weakness. For instance, section 133(c) of the proposed bill deals with a staggering number of rights such as aboriginal rights from time immemorial, rights by royal proclamation of 1763, treaty rights and aboriginal rights. Section 133(e) sets out the right to levy taxes. Sections 133(j) and 133(k) are almost as broad. Section 133(d) sets out that there shall be no expropriation without the express consent of the Indian people. This has been the recent policy of the government, a policy applauded by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). But I think much more dialogue is needed before this right relating to expropriation is enshrined in the constitution.

Sections 133(h) and 133(p) of the proposed bill state that the Indian people and the Inuit people shall have all the rights of Canadian citizens. It is my feeling that if they do not have these rights—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour set aside for consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA POST CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CROWN CORPORATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for the Prime Minister) that Bill C-42, an act to establish the Canada Post Corporation, to repeal the Post Office Act and other related acts and to make related amendments to other acts, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellenaous Estimates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When debate was interrupted at five o'clock this afternoon, the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) had the floor. One would think that he has concluded his remarks in view of his absence at the moment. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Just a brief point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that we are continuing discussion of the Post Office bill, I appeal to my friends in the Conservative party to consider permitting a very quick end to this debate so that we might get on with the freedom of information bill which, I understand, is next on the list. I wonder whether my Conservative colleagues would consider that proposal in the next few minutes, in which case perhaps we could proceed to a very important piece of legislation which is long overdue.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the official opposition, perhaps I could respond to the comments of the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who has perhaps overlooked the fact that we are not the government today. Unfortunately it is the Liberal party which forms the government and it is their decision as to what order of business will be called at any particular time. I can assure the hon. member, however, that the freedom of information legislation is legislation of which my party has been a proponent for some time, and far be it from us to delay deliberations in this House if there is any possibility that we could be making progress with respect to that bill.

The fact is, the coalition has decided that the first bill they would like to have us consider today is Bill C-42, the Post Office bill. I have never understood why they cannot get their act together because here we have a backbencher of the NDP who does not seem to realize the coalition has agreed that Bill C-42 will be considered today. And that is what we are considering. Accordingly, we in the official opposition are speaking on the Post Office bill.

As my hon. friend indicated earlier today, we believe there are certain provisions in this bill which deserve very acute consideration before second reading is given. We have indicated, though, that if the government would take out the clauses which touch on the regulatory aspects contemplated for the new Crown corporation, we are willing to pass the bill tonight.

We do not feel, however, that we should be called upon to give approval in principle to Bill C-42, so long as those offensive provisions are to be left intact especially when the measure is to be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates as opposed to the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. I have had words with certain officials on the government side, and I hope that in the coming minutes, if not in the coming hours, consideration will be given to implementing our suggestion so that the bill can proceed tonight on the understanding that the questions on the economics, the form and the general character of this bill should go to the miscellaneous estimates committee and the sections which touch on regulatory matters to the standing joint committee.

Having said that, it is important that members give consideration to the question of what we are dealing with tonight because in many ways the deficit of the Post Office developed during the reign of the present emperor who is now over in Saudi Arabia or some place. I do not know where he is doing his dance tonight, but presumably he is doing it in one of those Arabian countries.

● (2010)

Mr. Knowles: It is tomorrow morning over there.

Mr. Stevens: My colleague from Winnipeg North Centre knows about the night life.

Mr. Knowles: I know the time of day, which is more than some of my Tory friends know.

Mr. Stevens: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is drawing my attention to the fact that there is a time difference between Canada and where the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is now being entertained.

Bill C-42 has been a necessity because of the mess which has been made of our postal system by successive Liberal administrations. Slow mail delivery has become a common joke as most of us know. The postal service is used as a synonym for government inefficiency. In many ways I would suggest we see in the post office a small example, or a microcosm of how this government over the years under the present Prime Minister has mismanaged the economy in Canada generally. The inefficiency and inadequacy of the government is reflected first in the Post Office, the subject that we are considering tonight and, second, on a much larger scale, throughout our entire economic fibre.

We have before us tonight the subject of the Post Office and the question whether it should be turned into a Crown corporation. If so, what powers should the Crown corporation possess? It is very strange that we should have this matter before us at a time when the post office is running a deficit of $400 million to $500 million. The "blue book" forecast the deficit for 1980-1981 at $425 million. Yet a member to our left, from the NDP caucus—some say the far left, but these lefties all look the same to me—has the audacity to stand up in this House and say, "cut off the debate, I have other matters I want to get to". Mr. Speaker, here is something which is draining the public purse to the tune of over $400 million and our socialist friends, in their eagerness to support this Liberal government, are saying, "let us not discuss it too long. Let us get on to other matters".

Mr. Knowles: Your anger does not become you.

An hon. Member: What is the matter with that?

Mr. Stevens: I hear another socialist asking, "What is the matter with that?" The saying used to be, "What's a million?" Now they are saying, "What's $400 million?" That, in part, is what I want to deal with tonight.

Let us not forget that when the emperor took power in this country total revenues and expenditures with respect to the post office were approximately $300 million. Now we find that expenditures have gone up to $1,762 million. Revenues, as I have just indicated, are far, far behind that figure.

The significant thing, and I want to put this on the record very early, is the extent to which this government has mismanaged the Post Office. In the fiscal year 1967 to 1968—I hope hon. members will make a note of these figures—the total mail volume by number of pieces was 4.9 billion. In the 1979-1980 fiscal year the total number of handled items in the Post Office was 6.4 billion. In short, there was a 30 per cent increase. Normally, with the tremendous degree of automation we have paid for in the Post Office one would expect there would be a saving on costs, meaning less revenue would be needed, and that the deficit, if anything, would contract, not expand. One would expect that the number of workers in the Post Office today would be fewer rather than more. If there has been a 30 per cent increase in the number of items handled, then presumably, with today's automation—the sorting machines and all of the advanced technology—fewer people would be needed to handle what the Post Office is doing.

Let me put some more figures on the record. As I have said, the number of pieces handled by the Post Office has gone up 30 per cent. The total number of people working for the Post Office, based on the estimates for the years 1967-1968 compared to the estimates for the year 1979-1980 has gone up 64 per cent. In short, in that period while the emperor has been in power, notwithstanding that activity in the Post Office has gone up only 30 per cent, the number of employees has risen by 64 per cent. That figure has risen from 36,875 workers in the fiscal year 1968 to the current 60,317 workers in 1979-1980.

In spite of what our socialist friends may want to say, surely the nation would want us to ask why has the number of employees in the Post Office increased at a rate more than double the rise in the actual number of items being handled by the Post Office?

That is only part of the story, Mr. Speaker. If you like, maybe I can put that into more meaningful language and point out that in 1968 every worker in the Post Office from the top down handled 132,000 items. Today each worker handles 106,000 items. What has gone wrong? With the massive amount of money we have spent building new terminals, new facilities and new mail-handling equipment? Why are fewer items being handled per worker today compared to about ten years ago? Surely the emperor has to accept some responsibility for what has happened in this Crown corporation under his jurisdiction.

Again, that is only part of the story. As I have indicated, the amount of mail volume went up 30 per cent in those years I have referred to. I am pleased you are seated, Mr. Speaker, because when I give you the next group of figures, I know you will find it hard to stand. During that period, costs in the Post Office have gone up at a rate tenfold compared to the mail volume increase. Costs have gone up from $404 million to $1,762 million, or 336 per cent with the result the deficit we are left with has also gone up 316 per cent from $67 million to $279 million.

Surely with such a shameful record, bearing in mind that letter rates in the same period have climbed from five cents in 1968 to 17 cents at the present time, we should be able to turn to the government and ask what it plans to do now. In the coming years how does the government plan to correct this huge deficit it has allowed to run up?

As we know, in the budget which was delivered in this House on October 28, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) stated:

> —I have, therefore, assumed that postal revenues will rise until they equal postal expenditures.

He said this after he mentioned that the new Crown corporation will be expected to cover its costs, the new Crown corporation being the Post Office Crown corporation which we are now considering. Here is the most serious thing to reveal to the Canadian public. How does he intend to make the post office break even? The fact is he intends to disguise the true picture in the post office by simply increasing revenues in the post office to offset the rising expenditures. He is proposing, through postal rate increases that will not pass through future budgets, to net out the high cost of running the Post Office against those revenues in order to take the deficit off the books. It will still be the Canadian public which has to pay the shot for this government's inadequacies.

● (2020)

They can fudge the books, but they cannot fudge the fact that Canadian postal rates will go up substantially if this government has its way. As opposed to running the Post Office efficiently, effectively and adequately, they are proposing to pass those added costs on to the Canadian public through postal rate increases. In short, it is not beyond the realm of possibility that postal rates, which have climbed from five cents in 1968 to 17 cents at the present time, will double before this government is through its mandate.

This brings me back to the question of what has happened. I know it is hoped—and we on this side believe there is a good chance this will happen—that by giving Crown corporation status to the Post Office, somehow there will be less friction in future as opposed to past years with respect to labour negotiations in the Post Office. Here again it is wise to remind the members of this House that this friction in the post office is not traditional. For example, in the first 100 years there were only three strikes in the entire history of the Post Office in Canada. There was one in 1918, one in 1924 and one in 1965—that was a one-week strike in July over wages and it was by inside workers and letter carriers. Those were all the labour disruptions we had in our Post Office up until the time the emperor took power in this country.

An hon. Member: The sheik.

Mr. Stevens: The emperor or the sheik, whichever is senior. Here is the record of strikes since 1968. In July and August there was a three-week postal strike over wages. In February-March, 1970, there was a dispute in Montreal involving truck drivers represented by the CNTU over contracting of mail transport and job security. In May to September of that year there was a series of rotating strikes over wages and job security.

In October-November, 1971, there were several wildcat strikes in southwestern Ontario and the maritimes over the use of casual labour. In January, 1973, there were wildcat strikes after breakdowns in negotiations over wages and job classification. In April, 1974, there were sporadic local labour disruptions by inside postal workers culminating in a three-day nationwide strike. In February-March, 1975, there were five weeks of nationwide rotating strikes by maintenance workers. Truck drivers refused to cross picket lines. The dispute was characterized by lay-offs, walkouts and so-called "sick-outs".

From October to December of that year there was a seven-week strike by CUPW over contract demands. In October, 1976, there were four days of rotating strikes by CUPW over technological change. In September, 1978, there was a three-day strike by letter carriers over contract demands. In October, 1978, there was a strike by inside workers. Workers were ordered back to work by Parliament on that occasion.

The most recent position with respect to the postal workers is known to all of us. The fact that there were disruptions during the clerk's strike is well known. In short, I am trying to put on record that while in the first 101 years after confederation there was relative tranquility within the Post Office, under this government there has been a steady disruptive force at work as far as negotiations between the Post Office and the unions are concerned.

We must bear in mind what actually transpired during the period. In 1980 the average clerk working for the government earned $12,800 compared to an average postal salary of about $18,000. If we add the overtime the postal workers pick up on average, their salary is closer to $20,000. Currently, and certainly before the last settlement with the clerks, the clerks were getting about $12,800 compared to $18,000, possibly $20,000, for the postal workers.

In 1970, the average clerk earned $5,964 compared to a maximum Post Office salary of $6,450. In 1965 the clerk earned an average $4,600 a year compared to a 1966 maximum Post Office salary of $4,905. Therefore, there is no question that the gap has been widening. To put this widening gap in further perspective, 1965 was the year of the first postal strike since the twenties, while collective bargaining was introduced into the public service in 1967.

I put this on record because it might be suggested by some when I read the list of strikes and disturbances that perhaps, somehow, government has been keeping a tight fist and running things in a very cautious, severe manner. I suggest that when you review those figures, comparing them as I have with clerical salaries, it becomes clear that the postal workers have not done badly. There is now a substantial gap between their wage level and that of the clerks.

This is particularly important when you bear in mind what happened with the most recent settlement with the CUPW union. The present Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) virtually set aside the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), and awarded one of the most lavish, rich settlements we have seen in government settlements, if not in history, certainly in recent times. This in turn triggers more aggressive demands from others, not only in government circles, but in the private sector. We then find the government turning around and saying, as the Department of Finance said only last week, that unless workers are willing to begin accepting less in real wages, they are not going to get a handle on inflation.

• (2030)

Let me make two points about that. First, surely it is the government which has to be the pacesetter as far as the wage settlement pattern is concerned. Second, the government has to accept the responsibility for inflation in this country. Through its big spending, big deficits, printing of excess money and extensive borrowing the government is ensuring that inflation continues at the levels we are now experiencing. In short, the government puts us into a "Catch-22" position, in effect it triggers the inflation we experience and then blames others and asks them to accept sacrifice in order to get control of the very inflation it caused.

I know most of us have very little time to speak about this bill, but let me touch on a few other questions. Clause 17 of this bill is the clause which, hon. members will recall, deals with the tremendous regulatory powers of the Post Office. Granted, the present act gives it similar powers, but I think we must bear in mind that what we are now considering is the establishment of a Crown corporation which to some extent will be an entity unto itself. It will certainly be removed from this Parliament and, in turn, if we give the Post Office the same powers to make regulations and to make decisions as are now contained in the Post Office legislation and as are set out in clause 17 of the bill before us, I think we do this country a great disservice. I say this because when we start weighing the implications of where these regulations can lead the Post Office it becomes evident that it is a very dangerous monster we are letting loose if we do not put more restrictions in its way than are presently contemplated.

There is the whole question of competition. I know most of us have heard of various courier services which are indicating that they may be impeded in their activities if the Post Office is allowed to get almost unfettered control over who can carry various objects such as small parcels and so on, but most of us are perhaps not aware of how actively the Post Office has been trying to kill competition in those fields.

Let me simply refer to two examples. One is the United Parcel Service Canada Limited case, and the other is the Federal Express Corporation case. The first case involved an application to the Ontario Highway Transport Board for an extra-provincial operating licence and expanded service rights by United Parcel Service Canada Limited, commonly known as UPS.

Mr. Knowles: Canada?

Mr. Stevens: The Postmaster General of Canada was one of the many who intervened in this case opposing the issuance of a certificate. Application had been made for a certificate to be issued by the Ontario Highway Transport Board, and I will be referring to Ontario Highway Transport Board Decision No. 28655 of October 17, 1980.

Is it not interesting that when we start pointing out some of the repercussions of what the socialists are wanting to put in place they immediately become hysterical, we hear catcalls and there is disruption of the whole parliamentary procedure?

Mr. Knowles: We would just like you to tell us that United Parcel is not Canadian.

Mr. Stevens: The fact is that those who take the time—and I invite my colleagues to my left to check this—will find that after that tribunal reviewed the facts, it said "no" to the Postmaster General. The board made interesting observations. For example, it said:

> The Post Office tendered evidence that in essence addressed the many-faceted national responsibilities with which it is seized. That the Post Office has played and continues to play a significant role in the national 'smalls'—

Apparently that is jargon in the trade meaning, I take it, small packages.

> —transportation field is not in question here, and it is evident from the evidence tendered on its behalf that, for many, the service offered is satisfactory. It is also apparent from the growth of the alternative services in the 'smalls' field that the demands of the marketplace have changed and the Post Office service is not satisfactory to a growing section of the marketplace.

I emphasize that this was an independent tribunal which was asked to consider an application for a courier-type service. This tribunal heard out the Post Office and said "no" to its objection with respect to the granting of that licence. The board went on to say:

> However, notwithstanding the growth of the latter market, the evidence indicates an over-all increase in the number of pieces being handled by Canada Post, attesting to the use of the mail by a large section of the public. The challenge to the Post Office with respect to retaining their share of this market relates not only to delivery times but to a pick-up service, improved proof of delivery, insurance, and claims settlement. Reference is also made to an earlier statement with respect to a pick-up service being generally available. The evidence presented fails to establish that this service had been made available with anything close to the alacrity promised. Granted, changes on the positive side, as noted, the board is of the opinion that given the continued growth evidenced by the Post Office figures, the Post Office should be able to retain a significant share of the market without detriment to the varied services supplied to the public.

My time is running out, but I could go on and give hon. members the verdict with respect to the Federal Express Corporation case. This, interestingly enough, was a case considered on August 18, 1977, by the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission.

The committee rendered its judgment granting an application by Federal Express Corporation to operate a commercial air service to transport goods between Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and certain designated American cities. In short, the committee's judgment, which was subsequently asked to be appealed by the minister, was again that the Post Office should not be granted its objection. The Post Office should, in effect, be asked to compete with this type of service as opposed to relying on regulation to snuff out competition. I think this is one of the reasons we have to be very careful about the wording of Bill C-42. If we allow the Crown corporation to go ahead and get powers to regulate to the extent of actually snuffing out competition where it sees fit, it will be the Canadian consumer who will pay the penalty and be the big loser.

In light of the general information available about Crown corporations and in light of the Post Office's own record of performance—and I have referred only to two cases—it is disturbing to note that Bill C-42 could give the Post Office a virtual monopoly over the delivery of mail and parcel service.

As indicated earlier, we are generally concerned about the regulatory powers we would be giving to the Post Office in this bill. Besides limiting our freedoms, the Post Office could also pose a serious threat to our right to privacy. Clause 17(f) would give the Post Office the authority to make regulations allowing the opening of mail in order to determine whether it is undeliverable. At the same time the Post Office would be given the authority to define what is undeliverable. Clause 17 (1)(a) is to that effect. The total effect of clause 17, if put into law, would be to give the Post Office carte blanche, for example, to open mail.

Let me elaborate a little further on this point. It is not being argued that there is no need for government intervention in the economy. Rather, it is being said that government intervention should be kept to a minimum. That is our point. The present government is becoming increasingly interventionist, and I suggest that this bill will not only give the government the power to be interventionist but also that a Crown corporation responding to the government will also have such interventionist powers.

Milton Friedman, one of the most eminent economists of today, has stated, and I quote:

Economic freedom is an essential requisite for political freedom. By enabling people to co-operate with one another without coercion or central direction, it reduces the area over which political power is exercised. In addition, by dispersing power, the free market provides an offset to whatever concentration of political power may arise. The combination of economic and political power in the same hands is a sure recipe for tyranny—

● (2040)

I mention that because I believe that when we see a chance for such powers to be put not only into the hands of the government but also into the hands of a Crown corporation responding to that government, it is time that we in this House stood up and asked that a halt be put to such a proposal.

Let the position of the official opposition be clear. We believe that the Crown corporation proposal should proceed. We should like to see it put in place as quickly as possible. But we have requested most sincerely that those provisions in the act which touch on the regulatory side should be referred to the appropriate joint committee of this House and the other place to enable that committee to deal specifically with the regulations and bring its supervision and suggestions to bear on the bill before it is passed by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

If the government would accept the suggestion that the subject matter of clauses 2, 3 and 17 of Bill C-42, the measure now before us, be referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments and that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours of our proposal, we would pass this bill before the evening runs out.

Mr. Pinard: Why clauses 2 and 3?

Mr. Stevens: The draftsmen tell us that, for reasons of clarity, clauses 2 and 3 should be included in the reference to the committee as opposed to referring just clause 17. But if the hon. member will read it, I do not think he will find those clauses to be offensive.

That is our position in short. In no way do we feel that the bill should be delayed simply for the sake of delaying the bill or of delaying the government in its legislative program. We believe we are dealing with something unique here. The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments has a report before the House at present in which it asks that any legislation being considered which may in future have regulatory relevance be referred to the committee for consideration before being passed. We are simply saying: here is our first bill, let us do it tonight, let us make sure that the committee has a say, that it can review it, that it can see the subject matter. If this could be agreed upon, I think we could get on with passing this bill as has been indicated.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to respond to the comments of the hon. member by indicating that I would be quite willing to appear before the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments to discuss the subject matter of clauses 2, 3 and 17 of Bill C-42. I understand that the committee basically wishes to look at the regulatory powers which are contained in the long clause 17 on regulations.

Indeed, the remarks and suggestions of that joint committee would be helpful. The idea behind referring the other two clauses, as I understand it, is that they have to do with the definitions and will possibly mean a reduction in the regulations. Therefore, more precise definitions will have to be incorporated in the bill and perhaps more power given directly to the corporation.

With this understanding, I would have no objection to the proposal put forward as it is quite clear that the bill will be going to the appropriate committee in its entirety to be dealt with there and, if necessary, amended in various clauses.

I wish to say that I am responding in a spirit of co-operation on the understanding that second reading will be given to the bill before us at the end of the debate tonight at ten o'clock. If that is the case, I can speak on behalf of the government and say that at the appropriate time, after the bill is passed on second reading, we will support the motion or the order of the House as proposed.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It is with some pleasure that I respond to the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet). The understanding is that the government will do what is necessary to ensure that the subject matter of clauses 2, 3 and 17 is referred to the appropriate committee, and we in turn are prepared to undertake that before ten o'clock tonight our last speaker will close off the debate in time to allow this bill to go to committee tonight.

Mr. Stevens: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am certainly pleased that the minister has indicated his willingness to accommodate the motion I suggested. He has the draft motion which I showed to him earlier. On the assumption that that motion is acceptable, I understand it should be moved only after we have given second reading to Bill C-42. I certainly agree with my colleague that we are making progress and I am very pleased that the government has decided to take this attitude.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, may I indicate that what has just been discussed seems acceptable. I was a little concerned when I heard that the hon. member was going to try to achieve his purpose by moving an amendment at second reading, which struck me as not being in order. But as I see it, the resolution that has been made is in order. In other words, Bill C-42 will be given second reading tonight in its entirety and will go to the committee to which it is assigned, but we understand that the government, some time in the next little while, will bring before the House a special order referring these three clauses to the committee. My friend, the government House leader is shaking his head—

Mr. Pinard: The subject matter of the clauses.

Mr. Knowles: He is right. The government will bring before the House a special order referring the subject matter of clauses 2, 3 and 17 to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. To me that is a reasonable and happy resolution of the situation.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, that is right. What will happen effectively is that as soon as second reading is given by the House, we will move tonight the motion suggested by the hon. member. I understand that there will be no debate and clauses 2, 3 and 17 will be referred to the joint committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I do not think it is necessary for the Chair to add anything except that it would be helpful if the wording of the proposed motion or order were to be brought to the Chair in due course.

Mr. Knowles: It would not only be helpful, it is required.

• (2050)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Otherwise it is understood that there will be an agreement to the effect described later this evening.

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate this evening. I have been connected with the labour movement for some time. I should like to refer to the post office which is located in my constituency. What has happend to the post office we knew at one time? Not long ago, approximately six or seven years ago, one could mail a letter in Calgary destined for Edmonton. If it was mailed early in the morning, it would be received in the afternoon of the same day. Today the Post Office cannot deliver. Perhaps it will take a week, two weeks or even a month. Yesterday I received a telephone call from one of my constituents who had received a parcel in Calgary. It was mailed in Ontario, and it took 1.5 years for it to be delivered. I cannot believe the service has deteriorated from bad to worse. It is not only a concern of the average citizen who sends mail to a friend or relative. The service has absolutely failed the business community because of a lack of leadership in government. I readily understand why. It is because the head of the government is a philosopher who does not give any practical leadership.

Not only has morale in the Post Office deteriorated; employees of the Department of Employment and Immigration, to give one example, are frustrated, disappointed and disenchanted. It is very difficult to believe the type of situation which exists in the government. As a member of Parliament who has been here for only a short while I am beginning to understand the type of democracy which exists here. It is more of a dictatorial system than a democratic one. I did not experience such a system when I was a member of the legislative assembly of Alberta, and it disappointed me when I became a federal member of Parliament.

I remember that at one point the problem in Calgary was blamed on the lack of a new facility. After the new facility was built, approximately one or two years later, it was indicated that the equipment was very sophisticated and it would take the employees some time to learn how to operate it. Since that point the situation has worsened. Approximately a year ago there were 32 to 34 semi-trucks loaded with mail. They were backed up because they could not handle the situation. I can understand this problem to some degree because the Calgary sorting station sorts mail for the entire province of Alberta and part of the province of British Columbia.

Management is indicating that it is faced with obstruction from the bureaucracy in the government, and it blames the unions for its problems. I have met with labour and union people, and they blame management. Also it should be said that there are labour problems within the Post Office unions. I hope it is possible to correct them.

I am not too sure that the establishment of a Crown corporation will be the answer. Hopefully it will improve the situation, and I am prepared to go in that direction. But we must remember that the record of Crown corporations is not very good. As a matter of fact, the efficiency of Crown corporations under the Liberal government is very, very bad. I think that is a matter of record.

I should like to deal with the question of hiring people, an area in which I have had some experience. A few people have aproached me asking how to apply for jobs in the Post Office. I have outlined the procedure, they have made applications, and some of them never even came close. On one occasion I had opportunity to review the procedure to which a person is subjected in order to qualify for a job, and I was told by a top person in the Post Office that he questioned whether even he would qualify. Certainly the test that is given is not a practical one. One might think it was designed not to attract people who would be interested in the job or people who would have pride and respect in the job. Some to whom I spoke were concerned and interested, and I asked them why they would work for the Post Office, especially when I knew many employees who were ashamed to admit that they worked for the Post Office because of its record of lousy service. One person likened it to wanting to be a policeman or fireman; he wanted to work for the Post Office. That particular person had a good education, his attitude was good, but he did not even come close to passing the test he was given in order to qualify. There is something radically wrong.

I wish I could be fully convinced that the establishment of a Crown corporation was the answer, that it would eliminate some of the bureaucracy. But as some parts of the bureaucracy are eliminated, others are created. I know the situation is worsening and possibly the establishment of a Crown corporation is the answer. Perhaps it will result in management and labour trying to work together for the first time.

I cannot blame the trade union movement or even the workers. I blame management. Management has done a lousy job in the Post Office. Certainly we cannot compliment it. I think some surgical operation is necessary in the management area to correct the problem, and I am not fully convinced that it is the establishment of a Crown corporation.

It seems to me the service presently provided is directed more toward the delivery of junk mail. If people feel they have important mail, they send it by courier or find some other means of delivery. The private sector has reached the conclusion that it must find other ways and means of sending mail. In fact, technology has been developed in the area of electronics and telecommunications for sending mail. This will eliminate to some degree the Post Office service. If the Crown corporation comes into being, if we are really rubber-stamping it, I should like an assurance from the minister at this time that it will expand into some other mechanical area such as data processing or whatever. I would like some assurance from the minister that it will remain as it is today under the same act. It will probably sharpen up the management. I would like to have those assurances from the minister but I see he is not in his place. As a matter of fact, I only see one minister sitting in the House right now listening to the discussion of this very important issue. That is most disappointing and discouraging.

● (2100)

What is the forum by which this Parliament processes its orders and legislation? I wonder if the minister will at one time or another give us an assurance that a Crown corporation will offer some improvement over the service we receive at the present time. I wonder if he will give us his assurance that there will be some co-operation between labour and management, at least much better than it is today when we have seen it at its worst. I hope that before we vote on this issue the ministers' will respond to some of these questions. I see only that the philosophy will not change under this government.

It is clear that few of the ministers—and I don't want to criticize them unduly—have experience in the areas for which they are responsible. I could pick out the Minister of Labour (Mr. Regan) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), neither of whom have had too much experience in the fields in which they are asked to perform. I realize that they do not have to know a great deal as long as they can be properly informed by their officials. I know that there are more capable people in the caucus of the Liberal party, although somehow it appears there is a kind of clique. Speaking of that clique, I know that as far as the constitution is concerned the whole Liberal caucus does not support the method the government is using to rush the constitution through. More time has been given to the Bank Act and to other issues of relatively minor importance than to the constitution, which is being railroaded.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope the minister will answer some of my questions.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to repeal the Post Office Act and to create the Canada Post Corporation.

The Post Office is probably the most visible government service we have. Every day on most of our streets some person representing the Government of Canada goes from door to door. So, to a large extent, the federal government's reputation with ordinary people is determined by the effectiveness of the Post Office. That effectiveness has not been demonstrated and to a large extent the people of Canada mistrust the federal government because of the inept management of the Post Office.

The story going around my riding, where the Gateway is located, is that it costs 17 cents for the stamp—10 cents for storage and 7 cents for delivery. It is the biggest storage warehouse in the country.

I would like to go through some of the clauses of the bill. One of the most disappointing is clause 5(2) which reads:

(2) While maintaining basic customary postal service, the corporation, in carrying out its objects, shall have regard to—

The clause continues in paragraph (d) "the need to maintain a corporate identity . . ." among other things. My hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Kushner) spoke of a parcel that took a year and a half to be delivered. I received a parcel myself in Mississauga South from the riding of the hon. member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren) sent by the Dictaphone Company in Etobicoke. It was mailed on January 17, 1971, and it arrived at my law office on August 29, 1980.

It would be unfair of me, with respect to a bill such as this, if I did not read into the record just two pieces of correspondence which I received as a member of Parliament. The first is from Mumby and Associates, a small business. It reads in part as follows:

Many of my business associates cannot understand why I do not use couriers, at least for my salesmen across Canada. The fact remains that I cannot afford this. Even if I considered using couriers, the most that this would accomplish would be to improve the orders written by my salesmen. It would not improve the orders sent directly by my customers. I am losing customers at an astounding rate, simply due to the existing postal service.

The other letter is from Gladys Hudspeth, a pensioner from England. She wrote:

My husband and I are awaiting his veterans cheque from England. It is two weeks overdue,—now this happened also in July, at which time we cabled Britain and also made a long distance call. Reply was, cheque mailed as usual, hold-up must be your end. Well, when we emigrated to Canada in 1954, we could be sure of airmail letters arriving either point, in the space of three or four days. However, computers and the postal code came along, to speed up delivery. Local mail also takes ten days—

Mr. Speaker, it is not just "the customary service" that we have been receiving. It is a disgrace that this bill should refer to "customary service" because the customary service we have been receiving is just awful—inexcusable. More important, sir, is clause (2)(c) which says:

(c) the desirability of utilizing the human resources of the corporation in a manner that will both attain the objects of the corporation and ensure the commitment and dedication of its employees to the attainment of those objects;

The Gateway Post Office is in my city. If the minister were here I would remind him of a question I asked when I was in this House is 1973. At that time I asked him about a special delivery letter from Regina to Mississauga. There is air service between those two cities and the minister said:

Mr. Speaker, we are building one of the most modern mail handling centres in the hon. member's constituency; as soon as this is done, I am sure the service will be excellent in that region.

This is the same minister who said that to me on December 6, 1973, in this House. Well, what has happened? How do we use the human resources?

Let me read into the record another letter, from James Dickson, 2395 Homelands Drive, in the City of Mississauga. He writes:

As you know, every year, the Post Office calls Manpower to send them some Christmas help. I responded and began work Nov. 22, 1979, at a rate of $4.10 per hour on a 7½-hour day. When I signed up, a paper I signed at that time indicated that I would be receiving a pay cheque on Dec. 21, a little late but in time for Christmas. A week before this time, I was talking with Tom Mansfield, a clerk where I worked at the Annex at 1400 Lakeshore Road East, Mississauga, and he said that we probably wouldn't be getting our money in time as they had been mailed from Ottawa and couldn't be found.

● (2110)

Later, I called the pay department at Gateway and was told that I should not expect anything until mid-January.

I will not read the whole letter but let me go through the figures.

My cheque was for $429.21. This was for a pay period in which I had worked 165 hours which would gross at $676.50, a difference of $247.29. As no statement of deductions was included, this can only be for taxes. At this pay scale, they took $100 too much.

The man received his cheque in January. That is the kind of promise which is made to people working at the Post Office, the kind of performance taking place and the way in which many people are handled.

On Saturday, I had a long chat with a Barry Dann, 1015 Roosevelt Avenue in Mississauga. He has been with the Post Office for four years, but not as a permanent employee because there are ways of getting around union organization problems and that is to hire people on consecutive six-month terms. No wonder there are problems. This man has had eight consecutive six-month terms but because he opened his mouth and began to talk to people like members of Parliament, he will not have another six-month term.

Let us put on the record of this House what really happened. This man has been working as a cleaner. His job is to work under a machine which is called the bulk mail handling machine at Gateway. The bulk mail at Gateway is handled by a supervisor who is 26 years old, who has no university education or real academic training whatsoever. It is believed by the union people that he was put there merely because he knew someone. In any event, the major problem in this enterprise is that there is a machine which is supposed to handle bulk mail.

Earlier in this session I spoke of a machine called an elephant which is located at Gateway. Apparently this machine, which is used for sorting, destroys almost as many packages as it sorts on some days. This man's job is to sweep under the elephant. Most of the material from the elephant goes to a place called the UMO, the undeliverable mail office. In many cases the mail is so smashed up and so undeliverable that when people ask the Post Office what happened to their parcel rather than declare how badly it was smashed up by the machinery, they say that it must have been stolen and that they will pay for it.

I am told that there is nothing like the theft which is supposed to take place in the Post Office. In fact, a great deal of the material which is destroyed or lost is destroyed by the machinery and by the system, and that is part of the problem. There is in Mississauga an annex down at 1400 Blakeshore Road, as I have already mentioned. That little annex used to be Canadian Arsenals, but now it is used to sort bulk mail. There are 200 people at the Canadian Arsenal annex who sort 50 per cent of the mail, that is sorted by 2,000 employees at the bulk mail centre at Gateway.

Those are just some of the management situations and problems in the Post Office. When we hear about honest, working people going on strike, walking off the job or filing grievances, the truth of the matter is that these people are not rebels or rabble rousers. They are hard-working people who want to do a day's work for a day's pay, but who want to be treated as people. They do not want to be pushed around or put on ten consecutive day shifts. I cannot imagine working ten days straight and then having four days off. It could just as easily be a five-day shift with two days off but that is impossible for this organization.

This organization makes its own rules. They merely forget the contract and make their own rules to the point at which even junior management people are filing grievances. The situation is unbelievable. Surely if we are to have a Crown corporation bill we had better do something to improve the customary services, particularly in the area of human resources.

It has been suggested that making the Post Office a Crown corporation will simplify matters. At the present time the Department of Supply and Services must supply the materials for the Post Office, the Department of Public Works must look after the buildings and the Treasury Board looks after wages and terms of employment. It does not need to be that way. There is no reason in the world why the Post Office Act could not be changed to operate the Post Office as a department of government with the specific right to do its own contacting, pay its own people and buy its own supplies.

There is nothing magic about having to refer all the buildings to the Public Works, all the supplies to Supply and Services and all the pay scales to Treasury Board. There is no need for this diversity, but it has to be the condition and the excuse for turning the Post Office into a Crown corporation. Perhaps it is nothing but an excuse to get the Post Office out of the limelight of public opinion and away from the scrutiny of the House of Commons. Perhaps it is just an excuse to get the terrible situation which exists in the Post Office one step removed from the political process.

If there is no possibility of public scrutiny, people will be deprived of any easy method to make complaints through their members of Parliament. I am glad the minister is present now because I would like to go over the record since this government took office. Its first Postmaster General was the Hon. Eric Kierans who ran the deficit from $68 million to $100 million. The next Postmaster General, the Hon. Pierre Coté, was much better because he only had $77 million deficit. Then the minister here pushed it up to $177.2 million. The hon. Bryce Mackasey was really good because he banged it up to $546 million. However, he was not the expert. It is the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) who achieved the top record of $578.8 million.

Mr. Parker: You did not mention John Fraser.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am about to mention the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). During his year it was only $279 million.

Mr. Breau: You mean six months.

Mr. Blenkarn: I mean for the whole fiscal year from March, when he was not responsible, right through to March 31 this year.

The present Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) is projecting a deficit of over $400 million, and we will give him credit for March through to March. One begins to wonder why, all of a sudden, one minister is able to keep the deficit down to $279 million while ministers of the Liberal party get it into the real big figures.

Mr. Skelly: Are you saying the Liberals screwed up the Post Office?

Mr. Blenkarn: The hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) has said that the Liberals have screwed up the Post Office, and the Canadian public knows that. The real question is, "will this Crown corporation improve things?" Perhaps if there is no postmaster general things will improve.

This bill will go to committee and I am pleased the minister has agreed to refer clauses 2, 3 and 17 to the standing joint committee; we will certainly give him time before ten o'clock to make the necessary motions. I would like to explain to the minister the reason clause 2 must be referred to that committee. It is because it is the section which defines such terms as "mail" as being "mailable matter" from the time it is deposited at a post office to the time it is delivered. However, it goes on to say, "mail conveyance means any physical, electronic, optical or other means used to transmit mail". The definition of transmit is, "transmit" means to send from one place to another place by any physical, electronic, optical or other means."

• (2120)

When you define that the post office has the right to declare what a letter is by clause 17, and declare what constitutes mail, then you find that the post office, with this regulatory power, has the right to determine that every transmission, whether oral or written or transmitted, may well be a letter and therefore mailable matter and within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Post Office. That is why all those clauses should be referred. We are going to demand some good explanations for the regulatory powers which the bill appropriates to this corporation.

I always wonder why any organization should have a monopoly. One of the advantages of a system is to have competing services. In a sense, competition for the post office at the present time is the courier service. Indeed, as you know, Mr. Speaker, even ministers of the Crown have used courier service and I would not be surprised if the Postmaster General uses a courier. What about the telegraph and telephone system? It is unfair that we should have one organization with a monopoly. As long as we have competition, we have something by which to judge a service. It is important, in my view, that clause 14 dealing with a monopoly situation should be very seriously curtailed. Surely private individuals should be able to set up a service. Unless the postal service is so disgraceful, any private organization cannot conceivably make a profit. But if they can make a profit, it demonstrates how disgraceful the service is. Competition would give us something by which we can judge services and something by which we can determine whether or not we have a proper post office.

Another of my hon. friend's wishes to speak tonight for a few moments, but I have one more clause I want to refer to the minister. It concerns the penal sections in clauses 40 to 53. I particularly want to refer the minister to clause 43. Under clause 43, if a person delivers a letter bomb, it is just an offence under the Post Office Act. It is not an offence under the Criminal Code. I submit that an offence under clause 43 should at least be made a Criminal Code offence so that anyone who commits it by mailing any explosive, dangerous or destructive substance, or anything likely to injure or damage property or persons should be guilty of an indictable offence under the Criminal Code, not just under the regulatory effects of the Post Office.

I wonder why under those criminal sections it is illegal for you or me to sell somebody postage stamps, Mr. Speaker. Surely we are entitled to sell one another postage stamps, but that is an offence under this act. It strikes me there are a number of similar provisions under the act where it is really difficult to determine why certain actions should be made offences and subject to penalty.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by considering the major thrust of Bill C-42, which would create a Crown corporation to be called the Canada Post Corporation.

In my other emanations, prior to my election to Parliament, I was for several years counsel to government. While I held that role, many people would come to me from the public service and suggest that their governmental activity, be it a department, a commission or a board, ought to be continued and carried on as a Crown corporation. Apparently there the myth had developed that government activities, if carried on by a Crown corporation, would automatically become effective, efficient and more mindful of the costs and expenses involved in the administration. That is a myth which might well be perpetuated in this bill. The postal service in Canada is not going to change for the better by merely enacting a piece of legislation which characterizes the postal services as a Crown corporation rather than a department of the Government of Canada. It is only the people who are concerned and involved in the provision of that service who can change its nature and develop a more efficient and effective postal service for Canada.

We do not want to be fooled by the myth of a Crown corporation. We must keep in mind the people who will be operating the postal service, whether they act through the medium of a Crown corporation, a commission or any other form of government organization. Let us think about those people for a moment. There are 66,000 people, as I understand it, who are now involved in the postal service in Canada. This is a force not much smaller than the Canadian Armed Forces, which number approximately 75,000 to 80,000 people. So we have a vast number of people involved in this transfer. It is on their shoulders that we have to rest the responsibility for the improvement in the postal service which we hope will be brought about by the bill before us.

We have all heard in this debate about the problems which have arisen as a result of the poor labour relations which have existed in the Post Office. I am not one who would deny to any working Canadian the right to a living wage. Indeed, the postal workers for many years were in exactly that position. They did not receive, through their employment, a living wage. I would like to think, and I believe it is the case, that that problem has to a great extent been overcome. Postal employees now receive what by Canadian standards ought to be and can be regarded as a living wage. That is not to say they ought not to be protected from inflation and other cost factors which affect their ability to provide a living for themselves and their families. But we must put labour relations within the post office—be it a Crown corporation or a government department—on a sound basis. In other words, it must be put on a basis which is sensible and in accord with Canadian traditions applicable to labour-management relations.

What does this new bill do to establish that kind of relationship between the employees of the Post Office and the management of the post office? I have to answer that question by saying it does nothing. It contains only minor technical, mechanical provisions providing for the transfer of employment rights and benefits. What it may give, and what we all hope it will give, is new life to the postal service. In other words, a chance to start again, to get on a new road which will lead to a more effective labour-management relationship and one which will avoid the strikes which have partly wrecked our economy in some areas in the past. So what we look for in a new bill is a new life for the post office.

Let me deal briefly with some other aspects of this transfer to a Crown corporation. I do not want anyone in Canada to be fooled by this device. We think of the business of government as being similar to the business of industry. But it is not, Mr. Speaker. The two are entirely different. The obligation of the Government of Canada is to provide the services which are required to enable this nation to reach its goals and carry on to benefit all Canadians. Under this bill we are asking the new corporation to take over an organization which in 1978-1979 had a deficit of a half a billion dollars. Its revenues of $1.1 billion were that much less than its expenses of $1.5 billion. You have to ask yourself, how can a new business start out with that kind of deficit. The answer comes back immediately. It must seek new revenues or increase its current revenues. There is only one way the Post Office can overcome the deficit with which it is now faced. That is to raise the rates of ordinary mail. By that I mean the letter rate.

• (2130)

My hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) is somewhat of an authority on this. He tells me that in the ten-year period between 1968 and 1979, the letter rate tripled from six cents to 17 cents. It is his belief it will increase dramatically over the next few months. When we look at these facts and figures, we find very quickly that we must agree with him. Canadians ought to be warned that they look forward to a letter rate very substantially higher than the present 17-cent ordinary letter rate. Canadians ought to be warned by this if they want a corporation whose goal and aim is to improve the postal service. If it is indeed the wish of Canadians and parliamentarians to put the postal service on a more sound financial basis, we have to pay the price. That price will be an increased letter rate.

Many people across this country who operate small businesses are very much dependent on the postal service. I often find myself in that position. During periods of postal strikes, cutbacks and delays in service, it is very difficult to operate a small business which depends on service to customers and utilization of the postal service. In that connection, we are very mindful of the monopoly that will be continued by the Canada Post Corporation under this new legislation. That monopoly prevents Canadians who have to depend upon the postal service from having any real alternative.

Notwithstanding this, there has grown up in most parts of Canada courier services and similar types of arrangements whereby mail material can be delivered through means other than the post office. Anyone who has operated a small business in this country during a period in which postal services have been withdrawn appreciates the existence of this courier service. I hope this new legislation and the monopoly which has been given to the postal service will not result in the persecution and prosecution of the courier services which have grown up around the country and which have been so effective in emergency situations when postal services were withdrawn.

I am sure all hon. members are aware that we need a proper balance between private sector courier services and the postal service of the Government of Canada. We cannot expect our public postal service to bear all the costs of postal service from which no profit can be received and allow private industry access to the profitable services. We always face the problem of balancing rates between government and the private sector. I hope the minister and those charged with the administration of this bill will keep this in mind.

I wish to speak briefly about what I consider the real pith and substance of the issue before us which is the service to the customers, to all who must use the postal service. During the course of this debate, other members have mentioned some of the horror stories relating to the postal service in the past. I could do so as well. However, I will cite just one instance in my constituency in the area known as the Kearney Lake Road. Within the space of a few hundred feet on one public highway, there are three levels of postal service. A few of the residents have access to regular city service. One hundred feet down the road the residents are serviced by the rural system which allows the rural mail carrier to deliver mail to their boxes. Across the road, the residents must receive their mail through the box system.

One would think a matter like that could be easily cleared up. I have drawn it to the attention of the officials. However, that has not been the case. The situation has continued over the two or three years I have been making inquiries. I hope that with the new life this bill will breathe into the postal service by establishing the Canada Post Corporation, situations and difficulties of this kind will be remedied and that managers of our postal service will not feel they are bound by arrangements which have their base in historic facts no longer relevant to the current situation.

I mentioned the rural mail service. I want to speak briefly about the plight of our rural mail carriers. I said earlier, I respect the right of labour to organize and bargain collectively. I am mindful that there are 25,000 members represented by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and 20,000 letter carriers represented by the Letter Carriers Union of Canada. I realize friction can develop between those groups and the rural mail carriers who do not have that kind of labour organization, although I understand they do have an association. However, they have in common the fact that they are all human beings, citizens of Canada who must earn their way.

The rural mail carriers, as most of us know, were placed in a very onerous position. When their contract expired and they wanted to renew it, they had to bid for the contract in common with everyone else who sought to supply the same service. This applied to contracts over $10,000—in this day and age, considering they have to supply a vehicle in all cases, that is not very much money. The result was that many rural mail carriers had to underbid in order to keep the service they were providing and which was their method of earning a livelihood. In many cases they suffered extreme financial losses.

This is a situation which should not have gone uncorrected for as long as it did. I understand that under the new legislation, it will not exist. I hope the step the government is proposing will result in more reasonable and rational treatment for our rural mail carriers.

In many rural parts of this country—I am sure my colleague for Parry Sound-Muskoka will verify this—residents are almost totally dependent on the mail service as their method of communication with friends and associates across this country and in other parts of the world. Because of the continuation, I hope, of six-day-a-week service, they are able to receive their daily newspapers and other periodicals. It is very important to their ability to communicate with their fellow Canadians and others across the world. We who serve rural constituencies are very much aware of the importance of this service. We hope it will be improved under this new bill. We certainly hope that some of the problems which existed in the past will be resolved.

There are one or two matters I would like to mention, but I am mindful of the clock, Mr. Speaker. I understand the minister will close the debate in a few minutes. I will just carry on until the clock reaches the point at which the minister ought to have that opportunity. In the meantime I would like to mention a matter which is of serious and grave interest to many members, and of particular interest to myself. That is the provision in the bill—I believe it is clause 17—for the making of regulations. I sat for some days over the past months with a special committee on regulatory reform. Time and again business interests and labour interests—virtually the whole private sector—came before it to complain that the Government of Canada and in some cases provincial governments were abusing the power to make regulations. Statutes of the Parliament of Canada and of some of the provincial legislatures gave broad general powers to make regulations, so organizations and people in the private sector who were faced with the burden of those regulations simply did not know what the course and result of a particular statute would be.

● (2140)

We are disappointed to see that that kind of legislation has continued in Bill C-42 which, in clause 17, gives a very broad and extensive power to make regulations. I understand the minister has addressed himself to that point and will later on in this debate or at some appropriate time indicate the kinds of regulations which are likely to be enacted under that general authority. However, this should serve as a reminder to all of us who are concerned with regulatory reform and have an interest in removing or minimizing the burden on the private sector resulting from government regulation which in the end acts to the detriment of all Canadians and particularly consumers. Those of us who have an interest in that area would like to see a more general policy applied by the government in all legislation so that we could eliminate this abuse of the regulatory process. I am anxious to hear what the minister has to offer us in that connection so that the private sector can be assured that it will not suffer harm through the exercise of the regulatory authority granted by this bill.

By way of conclusion, let me say that the real purpose and hopefully the goal of this legislation is to improve postal service to customers, those who use the service—and in the circumstances this really amounts to all the people of Canada. If the postal service is not improved and if the charges applied to the services provided by the Post Office are not kept within reasonable limits, this whole exercise will have failed. The Crown corporation concept will have offered nothing in the way of improvement to postal service.

Let us remember—and I hope the minister is mindful of this—that all the utilization of the concept of a Crown corporation does, is give the postal service a new start. That new start has to involve better labour-management relations and the implementation and provision of a more effective postal service so that all Canadians will receive the benefits.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the hon. Postmaster General seeking to close the debate?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have an indication that the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) rises to speak.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to see the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) close the debate, and I will take only a moment or two.

This debate closes after—I was going to say many months, but many years—many years of a concerted effort by many people to try to work toward a solution to the Post Office problems. This is perhaps a significant moment in that long process.

It was my hope while I had the privilege of serving as postmaster general to bring in legislation similar to this. I think I can say—and I know my friend, the present Postmaster General, will accept this in the gentle way it is intended—that the former government intended to have this brought into the House many months ago and passed. Events made that impossible, but I want to assure the Postmaster General and the people who make up the Post Office family that the principle involved in this bill is extremely important to my party. We are very happy to see this debate close at this time, and we are happy to see the bill put into committee where some of its complexities will be discussed.

The Post Office is a great Canadian institution. Sixty thousand people work in the Post Office, and they are doing their very best to provide service to their fellow Canadians. If, as a result of our deliberations, we as parliamentarians can make that task easier for them, it will do two things. It will increase the level of morale and the spirit of the people in the Post Office, who are our fellow citizens, and it will increase the efficiency of the Post Office, the consequences of which will redound to the benefit of the taxpayers of Canada.

I want also to say to the Postmaster General that the accommodation he has graciously, but very sensibly, given to us this night has made it possible to end debate at second reading and move the bill into committee. Of course, it will not just be considered in the miscellaneous estimates committee; as well, the subject of certain clauses which are very important to the democratic function will be discussed in another committee, a joint House of Commons and Senate committee which has been established to consider those very matters.

On behalf of my party I want to say that this is indeed a significant event tonight. I want to repeat to my friends in the Post Office that I am happy to be able to say that progress is being made. Perhaps it is not being made as rapidly as we all would wish, but progress is being made. Again, I want to thank the Postmaster General for the accommodations he gave to my party this evening.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to bring the debate to a close.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet), but I am advised that it is a courtesy to the House to warn the House that the Postmaster General will now close the debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and put an end to the debate on second reading of this bill. I think that many members of the large Post Office family will go to bed happy tonight realizing that an important stage in the life of the Post Office Department is under way or will end in a certain way.

This bill which will change the department into a Crown corporation is eagerly awaited, need I say it again, not only by the officials of the Post Office Department but also by the representatives of the postal unions and their leaders. I firmly believe that the bill will considerably improve not only the postal administration but also the service and labour relations at the Post Office.

I thank hon. members on both sides of the House who took part in the debate and most of all were willing to co-operate so that the bill will be given second reading tonight.

I listened carefully when my predecessor, the former Postmaster General, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), stated that as Postmaster General he would have liked to pilot this bill and have it passed by Parliament.

This is only the beginning. Today is November 20. I am aware that the postal unions would like this bill to be passed before the end of the year. I hope I can expect the same support from hon. members from both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, so that we can work together within the committee and arrive at the necessary amendments quickly. I say here and now that some of these amendments have been suggested by hon. members from the Progressive Conservative Party as well as the New Democratic Party, and it is with this attitude of openmindedness and co-operation that I will get down to work with the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, chaired by the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), which will have to scrutinize every section of the bill and, should the need arise, approve the necessary amendments.

The committee, I know, is to get to work as early as next week. I hope it can report back before the middle of December, let us say, one month from now, so that this bill may come for third reading before Parliament. I do not want to exert any pressure on my hon. colleagues, make it an obligation for them or anything, but I should like this bill to be studied, reported on and passed on third reading before Christmas.

In closing, I echo the comments made tonight by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) on the advisability of submitting some of the provisions of this bill to a joint committee of the House and the Senate with a view to their looking into certains aspects of the bill, especially the regulations. Naturally, after the bill is passed, I shall be pleased to put to the House the appropriate motion to refer parts of the bill to another parliamentary committee. That committee shall not, of course, be authorized to amend the act. The only committee that can do so is the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates but I feel that the discussions, recommendations and suggestions of the joint committee of the House and the Senate, the Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, can certainly be useful. In that spirit of co-operation, I thank all hon. members, not only on my own behalf, but also on behalf of all the Post Office employees who, I trust, are about to make up one of the nice corporations of Canada.

• (2150)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I just draw it to the attention of those hon. members for whom this is appropriate that the Chair will now put the question with respect to the second reading, but is not yet equipped with the motion which will deal with the reference to the committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move the following order of the House:

That the subject matter of clauses 2, 3 and 17 of Bill C-42, an act to establish the Canada Post Corporation to repeal the Post Office Act and other related acts and to make related amendments to other acts, be referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, and that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours thereof.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): With the consent of the House, I shall call it ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been made.

NORTHERN PIPELINES—EXTENSION OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO MARITIMES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, on October 29, 1980, I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in the House whether he can ensure that the government will be taking the necessary steps to provide for the extension of the natural gas pipeline eastward to Nova Scotia.

The minister, in response to my question, assured members of the House that the government would indeed take the necessary steps to ensure the construction of a pipeline to the east coast and to Nova Scotia. I had reason to question the minister and the Government of Canada on this matter because in January of 1980 the man who is now the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) appeared in Nova Scotia, in fact in my constituency, and stated in very clear terms that if he were elected, his Liberal government would take immediate action to ensure the full co-operation of all parties in the construction of a natural gas pipeline to Quebec City and the maritimes. That was not the Prime Minister's final word on the subject. In the Speech from the Throne the promise was repeated, and again in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on October 28 we heard the same promise.

We in Nova Scotia were well aware that the National Energy Board of Canada had denied the applicant permission to construct a gas pipeline to the east coast. The applicant in that case was Q & M Pipeline Limited which was later joined by TransCanada Pipelines Limited in the joint venture for the construction of the pipeline. The province of Nova Scotia appealed the decision of the National Energy Board to deny Q & M permission to construct the pipeline, and on the very day the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) had confirmed the government's intention to construct the pipeline, the National Energy Board dismissed the appeal.

So I ask the minister how he can guarantee to residents of the east coast that the National Energy Board will now, following the statement of government intention, approve the construction of a gas pipeline to the east coast.

Let me review briefly what is involved in obtaining the permission of the National Energy Board to construct a gas pipeline in Canada. An applicant must apply to the board for a certificate of public convenience. The procedure by which an applicant seeks such a certificate is very time consuming. Indeed, in many cases in the past it has taken not a matter of months, but years. I am told that an application of the kind required for the construction of a pipeline extension to the east coast could not even be under way until January, 1981, and even then it could take several months more before the National Energy Board could render its decision.

• (2200)

This does not appear to be consistent with another of the pronouncements of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources which was that a gas pipeline would be in place by 1983. It is difficult for some of us to understand how the minister could make such an undertaking when he could not even assure this House, or anyone else in any other forum, that an application would be under way before 1981 and speedily dealt with so as to allow construction to start in 1981. Most people familiar with pipeline construction could not imagine the construction work could be completed in less than two or three years. So we in the east are very suspicious that the minister is not telling us the entire facts and truth when he undertakes to have the pipeline in place by 1983.

This link from the east coast to the western gas supplies is vital to the future of Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces which are now totally dependent upon foreign oil for much of their electrical generation and for the heating of their homes, not to mention transportation fuels which are absolutely essential to their economy. Not only is the pipeline linked to our energy supply, but it is an important factor in the development of a liquid natural gas terminal which we hope will be located in Nova Scotia on the Strait of Canso. In fact, proponents of that scheme, which include Petro-Canada, indicated that unless the pipeline is assured to the east coast, the liquid natural gas terminal, which would be part of the Arctic pilot project, would be located on the St. Lawrence River at Gros Cacouna. So, we see competition arising for the construction and location of the liquid natural gas terminal, and if the Strait of Canso is not in the running for that mammoth facility it will be because the National Energy Board failed to give permission to construct the gas pipeline extension.

On bringing these matters to the attention of the House and by raising the question with the minister, I received his firm undertaking that the government would indeed proceed with the construction of the natural gas pipeline extension. In fact, the minister indicated that if the National Energy Board did not provide speedy permission and grant a certificate as required under the legislation, he would present the House of Commons with a bill to implement construction.

I have before me the famous bill of 1956 which was an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipeline Crown Corporation which, as all members know, caused a tremendous controversy. I hope the minister will not create a similar situation so that we will again be dependent upon the action of the government in bringing a bill before the House to implement the construction of the pipeline extension. I hope the minister will urge the National Energy Board to take speedy action and grant a certificate so that the pipeline can be completed on schedule in 1983.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question raised by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) on October 29 concerning the extension of the gas pipeline to the maritimes, I am pleased to remind the House of the assurance given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) that this project is one of national priority. It is a matter to which the government attaches the highest importance.

• (2205)

In the Speech from the Throne in April of this year it was clearly stated that the federal government favours the earliest possible construction of a natural gas pipeline to Quebec City and the Maritimes. The National Energy Board approved the extension to Quebec City. Although the board denied the application for the extension of the pipeline to the maritimes pending clarification of environmental specifications and east coast offshore gas development scheduling, the minister assured the House that the board would deal expeditiously with a new application. He gave a further undertaking that as a matter of national policy, the pipeline would be extended without delay, to be completed by 1983.

The National Energy Program, tabled on October 28, gives additional assurances. In the program, the federal government clearly stated that it supports construction of a gas pipeline to the maritimes. To ensure its financial feasibility, the government has initiated the following measures:

1. The city-gate price of natural gas in maritime communities will be the same as Toronto.

2. A contingency fund of up to $500 million will be available to assist in financing the pipeline if it is necessary.

3. Grants of up to $800 will be available to consumers converting from oil heating to gas heating.

4. Grants will be available to distribution companies to assist them to develop gas markets.

The National Energy Board has stated its willingness to deal expeditiously with a new application from the Trans Quebec and Maritime Pipeline sponsors. In turn, the company has indicated to the board that it is prepared to renew its application. A decision during the spring of 1981 would mean the pipeline could be delivering gas to Halifax by late 1983 and to Cape Breton by 1984.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear from the statement made in the Speech from the Throne last April regarding the extension of the natural gas pipeline to the maritimes, from the specific provisions relative to this project in the National Energy Program, and from the assurance given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in the House on October 29, that natural gas services will be extended to the maritimes by 1983.

FINANCE—CANADA SAVINGS BONDS—INQUIRY WHETHER INTEREST RATE WILL BE INCREASED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on November 3 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) if he was considering an increase in the Canada Savings Bonds rate. At that time the Canada Savings Bonds program contemplated a rate of 10½ per cent. I suggested 11½ per cent. Later that day—though the minister did not give me a commitment in this House that he would do it—he increased the rate on Canada Savings Bonds for this year to 11½ per cent.

This is not the first time that a government faced with massive redemptions and unsaleable Canada Savings Bonds in a sales program because of rapid changing interest factors has been forced to change the interest rate for one or two years or for the duration of a bond issue. The Hon. John Turner had to do it. My hon. friend from St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) had to do it. This minister has had to do it. It has happened many times before.

Canada Savings Bonds represent a very large demand on the debt structure of the country, although certainly not the demand they once did.

I remind the House that there were outstanding as of November 12, 1980, $15,681 billion of Canada Savings Bonds. At that time the program for the sale of these bonds was still under way for the current sale period.

I also remind the House that the redemption rate has been enormous. In times when interest rates rise very rapidly there is a tendency by people holding Canada Savings Bonds to cash their bonds and put their money into some better investment, some higher paying investment. So in a sense the government is blackmailed into a position where it must increase the interest payable on all its bond in order to slow down redemptions.

On a number of occasions in committee we have asked the government about the cost of the Canada Savings Bonds program. This program costs the Government of Canada about 1.25 per cent to sell the bonds.

I might point out these bonds are cashable on demand at any time. They are probably, in one sense of the word, one of the safest cash investments which a person could ever hope to acquire. However, with the problem of continual redemption, the cost of placing the bonds presents an enormous burden to the treasury. Guaranteed investment certificates are sold with a commission rate of one-fifth of 1 per cent, so that a trust company when borrowing on a five-year certificate, closed for five years, can borrow its money with a 1 per cent commission.

• (2210)

Yet, the government cost on commissions alone is 1 per cent, and with the other costs it comes to about 1.25 per cent. So the government is in a situation where the cost of borrowing money through Canada Saving Bonds is really not cheap. What it must do, therefore, is come up with another method of selling its Canada Savings Bonds.

I would like to offer a couple of suggestions. First, it might contemplate selling a 2 per cent bond plus inflation. Throughout the last century the British government financed itself on what were called British consuls. People received only 2 per cent on the bonds because there was no inflation. People were happy with that rate of interest, which over time has been the safe rate of return which investors want on their money. The reason investors want 12 per cent, 13 per cent, or 14 per cent today is because of our rate of inflation. Investors want 2 per cent plus the rate of inflation.

Perhaps the government would find it much more attractive to sell an inflation-proof bond. By financing in this way, it would save itself a great deal of money on redemptions.

The second thing which the government might consider is a bond which has a flat rate of interest, say, 8 per cent, plus an adjusting rate of interest which floats up or down based on the average half-yearly rate on 90-day treasury bills.

I say this seriously to the government because unless it comes up with another program I shall be raising these points in the House during question period, perhaps next week, because, as we learned earlier, the 90-day rate on treasury bills at the option this afternoon was 13.06 per cent. The rate on the 180-day bills was another 30 basis points higher. Interest rates have risen virtually one full per cent since I raised this question with the minister on November 3. What will happen is the same thing as has happened before and it happens again and again. We will see a run on Canada Savings Bonds. People will cash their bonds and buy a better, higher-paying investment because they want a better return for their money.

If interest rates continue to rise, the minister will have to pay that extra point and make the return on the bond 12 per cent or 12.5 per cent. This is a continuous problem, and if the minister does not raise the return, then there will be redemptions and if there are redemptions, the minister will have to pay to the big boys—the banks and people dealing in treasury bills and bonds—the 13 per cent, 13.5 per cent or 14 per cent that will be required by the marketplace.

The ministry must come up with another system because people in Canada, strangely enough, want to lend money to the government. But they still want a fair return on their savings. Canadians do not want to wind up in the situation where they are receiving perceptively less than market rates for their money. The government must come up with a proposition which gives people a rate of return on their savings bonds that is related to the treasury bill rate or, if you like, to the Bank of Canada rate. Even if it is .5 per cent less than the Bank of Canada rate, then that would be fair, something which would be acceptable and which would save the government a great deal of money.

● (2215)

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the question asked of the Minister of Finance on November 3 by the hon. member in which he suggested the CSB rate be reviewed at an early date. In fact, the minister announced at the same time that the rate of interest on the 1980-81 series for the year beginning November 1, 1980, would be raised to 11.5 per cent from 10.5 per cent. Further, the rate for the 1980-1981 year on all outstanding issues was increased by a full one percentage point to 11.5 per cent. This enhancement to the yield on CSBs largely offsets the increases in the rates which have taken place on short-term savings instruments since the terms of the new series were announced on September 12. The rates of return now payable on all outstanding issues of CSBs and the new series are attractive relative to competing savings instruments, given the other attractive features of the Canada Savings Bonds.

The 11.5 per cent first year CSB rate and 10.5 per cent rate payable in the remaining six years are somewhat lower than the current interest rates on other forms of government debt. For example, treasury bills for 91 and 182-day terms as at November 13 were yielding 12.42 per cent and 12.79 per cent respectively. Short, mid and long-term Canada bonds are presently yielding about 13 per cent. However, it is not unusual for CSBs to have a slightly lower rate of return than other forms of government debt. CSBs compete in a different market than this form of debt. The CSB rate is guaranteed for a full seven-year term on the new issue whereas treasury bill rates, while attractive at this moment, may well move down sharply when these short-term instruments mature. Government of Canada marketable bonds pay a higher rate of interest relative to CSBs due to the market risks associated with such instruments. If interest rates move to higher levels, investors will suffer a capital loss when selling Canada marketable bonds, whereas CSBs can always be redeemed at full face value. Another reason CSBs have a lower yield is that they are a more expensive form of financing relative to treasury bills and marketable bonds due to the issuing fees and commission structure. It is generally more expensive for the government to issue its debt in small denominations to a widely dispersed market, and these cost considerations are given careful consideration when determining the CSB rate. Consequently, the rate is set with a view to being as generous as possible for investors while at the same time minimizing as far as possible the public debt charges.

It has been suggested that the CSB rate should be equal to, or better than, the rate of inflation. The new 11.5 per cent first year CSB rate is higher than the inflation rate projection mentioned in the budget. I cannot say that the CSB rate will always be higher than the inflation rate at any point in time. In the past, it has not been unusual to experience periods when the rate of interest on most types of savings instruments has been below the rate of inflation. Such a phenomenon reflects investor expectations of lower inflation rates in the future. In the case of CSBs, investors over the past several years have generally enjoyed rates of return higher than the inflation rate. More important, the CSB rates, which have been increased periodically, have been quite attractive relative to rates of interest on short-term competing savings instruments.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—CHEMICAL TESTING—AVAILABILITY OF STUDIES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself to the question I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) on November 4 concerning tests of chemicals by a laboratory called IBT in the United States that were shown to be invalid. I was most surprised at the minister's response because the minister has a reputation of being one of the most progressive members of Cabinet and a person who is relatively sensitive to human and ecological issues. Her response seemed to indicate to me that we were touching on a very raw nerve.

I asked questions concerning chemicals, the IBT affair and the number of pesticides which are loose on the market today. Hundreds of millions of gallons of these products are used over a very large area yet we have found there exist no valid studies which tell us that the extended use of these products will not be harmful to human health, will not cause cancer or damage the reproductive process.

● (2220)

There are hundreds of new chemicals entering the human environment every year. The human chemical environment or world chemical environment has been greatly changed in the last decade or so, but unfortunately we find that the government has an attitude more appropriate to two decades ago. It certainly does not have the tools to deal adequately with this new phenomenon, this radical change in the environment. What we have found in the IBT case is that 99 per cent of the long-term studies were flawed. They were not accurate.

There is a fungicide called Captan. Thirteen of the 14 tests on that are invalid. We understand there are no other studies in existence to show that the fungicide Captan is not dangerous to human health. This product is used in very large quantities in the agricultural sector of this country, yet there are no studies which allow us to believe it is not harmful to human health.

In the past we have experienced some major crises. We all remember the case of thalidomide and the very unfortunate effects of that. There is no assurance that Captan is not like thalidomide, only stretched over a larger space of time. There are no valid studies. Captan is not the only one. IBT has done hundreds of studies. The American Environmental Protection Agency is now telling us that most of those studies were flawed. This is the type of information we have been trying to get from the government. I am not the only one. When the minister tells the House she has been most open with the public and her colleagues in the provinces, the record shows that this is not so. I wish to quote from the August 28, 1980, Leader-Post. It quotes the environment minister Ted Bowerman. I quote:

"Continued use of the chemicals in question with no public statement as to the particular flaws in the testing is an unsatisfactory position," Bowerman said.

"I am anxious to learn of plans for improving the federal registration procedure and the development of a Canadian capability for conducting tests."

Mr. Bowerman has been asking questions of the department as to how many and what chemicals are involved. He has been asking for details of the chemicals with regard to which studies have been flawed, and for descriptions of the chemicals which were subject to valid studies. The government has consistently refused to let this information be made public. We have to go to the United States to get the answer. I challenge the government to change its attitude where it relates to chemicals and the testing of chemicals, and to be open with the public.

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to some of the allegations made by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). In a few moments I will provide him with a very technical answer. However, I wish to reply to some of the remarks he made with regard to the minister's involvement and the answers she gave in this House.

Over a period of time the hon. member for Regina East has been making these allegations in the House. The minister, to the best of her ability, has been giving the responses she is capable of giving at the present time. We in the department have made several attempts and have had individual meetings with the member involved to explain this to him.

● (2225)

I understand that the head of our health protection branch had a three-hour meeting with the hon. member to explain to him some of the data which is available to the department and the difficulties which arise from some of the data which have come from IBT, but to suggest that the health protection branch is not at least aware of the problem and doing the best it can with respect to the protection of health and the environment in Canada is a stretch of the imagination.

Approximately three years ago it was discovered that there were irregularities in certain animal studies conducted by IBT, a U.S. firm which conducts safety evaluations on behalf of pesticide manufacturers for submissin to U.S. and Canadian regulatory agencies. I think it is a fact well known to the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) that once such data was made available with that kind of irregularity a moratorium was placed on any product on which studies were done by IBT. Since that time we no longer accept the results of studies submitted by IBT to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency as well as to our health protection branch. We no longer accept those results from that particular laboratory. This has forced the manufacturers in those cases where it was found that the tests were invalid to go back, at their own cost, to re-do the studies. I think it is well known that such a process takes considerable time.

Officers of the health protection branch working co-operatively with their counterparts in the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency have determined that the status of approximately 100 pesticides depends on the validity of critical studies required to ensure that any potential human health risk is minimal. Additional IBT studies which were not pivotal to the original regulatory decision are also being reassessed, as time permits, in order to detect any undisclosed adverse effects. This reassessment may identify other chemicals of concern to those responsible for the safety of spray operators, wildlife, the environment, forest spraying, etc. The current list issued by the Environmental Protection Agency contains approximately twice as many pesticides as the Canadian list. The difference in the two lists is due to two facts. First, the Environmental Protection Agency identified all studies for audit and validation while Canada identified only the critical studies for audit at this time. In other words, Canada identified key pivotal studies upon which a decision to register or not to register a pesticide rested. Second, some pesticides registered in the U.S. for uses such as on cotton are not required in Canada.

I want to finish this because the hon. member asked for these figures on a previous occasion. As of October 1 of this year, 920 IBT studies have been identified in submissions from pesticide manufacturers. Of these, 247 are valid, 296 are adjudged invalid and 377 have not been audited to date.

Adjournment Debate

In response to the second point the hon. member raised, Mr. Speaker, upon legal confirmation from our department, we will be—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but unfortunately there is an understanding that during the adjournment debate the time allowances are very strictly adhered to.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 21, 1980

The House met at 11 a.m.

● (1105)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

NATIONAL UNITY

CALL FOR CENSURE OF HON. MEMBER FOR VAUDREUIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The Liberal member of Parliament for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has widely circulated a copy of his letter to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) dated November 17 in which he stated:

It is reported that you are prepared to concede even more power to Prince Edward Island. This island has a population about equal to that in my constituency yet it has four MPs and a complete provincial government with powers that exceed those of the government of the state of California.

There has to be a limit. Prince Edward Island is too small a tail wagging too big a dog.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That this House censures the member of Parliament for Vaudreuil for promoting national disunity by his vicious attack on Prince Edward Island, the cradle of confederation, and for his most hateful campaign to deny the province of Prince Edward Island a genuine role in future constitutional decisions.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—REMARKS OF CO-CHAIRMAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a very important motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 which I hope will receive the unanimous support of the House. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That this House expresses its very deep regret over the insulting and denigrating remarks that were made to all the women of Canada last evening by the Senate co-chairman of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, and this House therefore calls on the government to arrange for the immediate dismissal of Senator Hays as co-chairman and his replacement by someone who understands and appreciates the rightful place of women in all aspects of Canadian society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

GREY CUP GAME, 1980

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion of real urgency under the provisions of Standing Order 43. A strong and mighty force from the very heart of my constituency in Edmonton has journeyed east to create mayhem, to do battle and to conquer. The conquest is to be effected in a little known place called Toronto, and pits those fierce Eskimo warriors from Edmonton against a litter of snarly Tiger Cats from Hamilton in a contest of punch, kick, scratch, hold, bump, knock, stomp, choke, crunch and kill!

An hon. Member: It sounds like the House of Commons!

Mr. Yurko: In the interests of preserving peace in the nation and national unity, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert):

That this House undertake immediately to prevent further the exodus of capital westward by cautioning easterners to moderate their liberal wagering habits during this event, and furthermore, to offer its condolences in advance to the litter of kittens from Hamilton.

Madam Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

AGRICULTURE

CANFARM—CALL FOR RECONSIDERATION OF CANCELLATION OF SUPPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced that the government was breaking its commitment to the employees and clients of Canfarm and was withdrawing federal assistance to Canfarm. In view of the fact that this action could cost the loss of 136 jobs of employees and could deny Canfarm services to some 5,000 farm clients, I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That this House calls upon the government to reconsider its decision to cancel its support to Canfarm, in view of the serious threat posed to Canfarm employees and to Canadian farmers by the government's action.

Madam Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1110)

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) is on record as saying that acid rain is costing the Canadian taxpayer and the Canadian environment hundreds of millions of dollars per year in damage, in view of the same minister's statement that at least $400 million must be spent to deal with the problem of acid rain and that that money has not been allocated, and in view of the fact that the Liberal government is not acting in the best interests of Canadians by reducing the amount of acid rain through budgetary measures and policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That this House unanimously call for producer-pay legislation so that the producers of acid rain, in both Canada and the United States, may be presented with bills on a quarterly basis for the damage and destruction they now cause to all Canadians.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ACID RAIN—CALL FOR DISCUSSION WITH NEW UNITED STATES ADMINISTRATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the pressing need for Canada and the United States to deal co-operatively with the immediate and serious threat to our lakes from acid rain, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Lonsdale):

That this House acknowledge the urgency of a cabinet level meeting between the Canadian and the U.S. governments, after president-elect Reagan takes office, on the subject of the environmental damage caused by acid rain.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NORTHERN PIPELINES

CALL FOR MEETING OF STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I note that since Parliament has reconvened the government has failed to call a single meeting of the Standing Committee on Northern Pipelines. With the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) cavorting with the camels in the sands of Arabia and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) galling investors in New York, this failure leads Canadians to believe that the Liberal government has abandoned any major energy initiative in Canada and still continues to follow its policy of dependence on high-cost, insecure, imported oil. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That a meeting of the Standing Committee on Northern Pipelines be called forthwith.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH KOREA—DEATH SENTENCE ON KIM DAE-JUNG—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, members will be aware of the continued harassment of Kim Dae-Jung, the leader of the non-Communist opposition and former presidential candidate in South Korea, which has culminated in the military court handing down a death sentence.

This has been confirmed by the appeal court in that country. The situation is urgent because of the limited possibilities of appeal and the possibility of an early execution. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House expresses its serious concern over the action of the military court in South Korea in sentencing to death Kim Dae-Jung and that this House implore President Chun to use his ultimate executive power to secure the release of Mr. Kim.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the following message be delivered to the Prime Minister:

"Canadians made the PM's blood boil
So he fled to Arabia to buy their oil
Where he was wined and dined by Sheik Yamani
In exchange for piles of Canadian money.
Afraid of being up the well-known creek
He'd pay twice the price to the oil-rich Sheik
So here we are with Mr. Trudeau to thank
While the Arabs laugh all the way to the bank.
To you, Pierre, who became the third hump
Appropriately riding on your camel's rump,
Oh, when will you cease this mania to roam"—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

• (1115)

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SUBSIDIZATION OF INDUSTRIES IN SOUTHERN ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that in many areas of Ontario, including my riding of Grey-Simcoe, unemployment has now reached a level much higher than the national average of 7.8 per cent, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion meet with the government of Ontario to renegotiate their agreement so as to subsidize industries that wish to establish themselves in municipalities in southern Ontario which are now suffering from a very high unemployment rate.

Madam Speaker: Presentation of this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in an interview with the Montreal Gazette and as published this morning in the Montreal Gazette—I am sure that the minister or at least his staff would have noticed the article—the Minister of Finance indicated that Canadians would have to get used to a lower standard of living in order to combat energy prices. These comments are consistent with comments made by officials of the minister's department last week, that as far as they were concerned Canadians will also have to endure lower real wages in order to combat inflation.

Would the minister tell the House whether or not that is the policy of this government and, if so, how long will Canadians have to endure a lower standard of living in order to put up with the government's failure to come forward with an energy policy which would assist Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is referring to an interview I had yesterday on a very complex subject. I am not in any way disowning any of the comments I made in that interview, which were a series of economic observations including the fact that all industrialized countries, including Canada, are facing lower growth rates and that it is unlikely that in the immediate future any industrialized country will achieve the growth rate which was part of our public consciousness in the past decade. That is what I said and I believe that is the case.

I also believe it is essential to understand at the present time what is required in the way of economic behaviour if we wish to make any impact on the very troublesome question of inflation.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, in the same article it is reported as follows: "MacEachen mused, noting the tendency is to blame inflation always on someone else". The minister then went on to explain that inflation should be placed at the door of individuals, of enterprise of union economic decisions and a host of other areas, and not once, according to the Gazette portion of the report, does he mention the government might have something to do with the high rate of inflation.

Mr. Stevens: They are the real culprits.

Mr. Crombie: Given the minister's own budget, particularly what is stated within at page 33, and the effect of that budget on low and moderate income people, at a time when the minister himself is saying that we will have to get used to lower standards of income, will the minister please review those aspects of his budget which will fall most heavily on lower and moderate income people in this country, particularly in light of the forecasts with respect to lower economic activity, lower wages and lower standards of living?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the hon. member has drawn attention to the fact that no mention is made of the government's role in combating inflation.

Mr. Crombie: Causing it.

Mr. MacEachen: I agree with him that the government does have an important role to play, and I have in the course of the budget and the policies flowing therefrom undertaken to follow certain policies which I hope will have a direct impact on the inflationary situation, not only in the field of fiscal and monetary policy, but also in the very important area of having taken steps to improve the productivity of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, I am sure the minister will understand when I say most Canadians believe that, as soon as the minister and his government are willing to accept responsibility for inflation, the first step will have been taken to solve part of the problem.

● (1120)

Let me ask a final question which relates to the minister's budget and the effect of his statement yesterday. In his budget the minister indicated he was interested in achieving significant savings in the social policy field. Indeed, his budget indicates that social policy spending will receive less and less of the government's expenditures over the next three years. I ask the minister to give this House an undertaking that in the government's dealings with the provinces the minister will resist any suggestion that the federal government diminish its contribution and support for the Canada Assistance Plan, which carries most of our social services in this country, and for medicare. Will the minister resist the federal government's diminishing its contribution to those two programs?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I have indicated in the budget and subsequently that we intended to negotiate the question of fiscal transfers to the provinces as agreements expire, and that it would be an objective of those negotiations to attempt to secure savings in that area, as in other areas of government expenditure. We have not prejudged the question, but it will be the objective to secure savings in the general field of transfers.

The hon. member has referred specifically to the Canada Assistance Plan and to the medicare act. I assure him, as the minister in a former responsibility who piloted both these measures through the House of Commons, that I will be very respectful in any negotiation of the important role these programs play in the social security system of Canada.

EFFECTS OF INFLATION ON WORKERS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour who does not appear to be in the House. Perhaps his parliamentary secretary can answer the question.

Does the Department of Labour agree with this new policy of the Minister of Finance that Canadian workers should be required to bear the brunt of the anti-inflation fight by requiring them to accept lower real wages? If so, could the Minister of Labour explain to this House why that draconian measure should be borne by the workers of this country and almost exclusively, in the minister's view, by them?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I have been requested by the Minister of Labour to answer questions on his behalf. If I could anticipate the answer of the Minister of Labour, first, he would indicate that he is in support of the policies of the Minister of Finance. Second, he is as concerned as the Minister of Finance and the rest of the government with respect to inflation and how the first people it hurts are the workers of Canada. It is in their vested interests, and it should be in the hon. member's for the entire Parliament to ensure that inflation is kept under control so that those who suffer the most, namely, the workers of Canada, no longer suffer.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, I am sure the minister knows from his current and previous experiences that real wages for workers in this country have fallen since 1977, with one exception—the nine-month period when another government was in power, during which time real wages rose.

My supplementary question is this: Can the minister explain to this House why the government is returning to the policy of requiring workers to accept lower wages in order to pay for the failure of Liberal economic policy? Does that express what the Prime Minister said on the night of February 18, namely, "Welcome to the 1980s"?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, the only way workers can share adequately in the wealth of this country is by keeping inflation under control. History shows unmistakably that when inflation is out of control it is the labour movement and the membership of the labour movement which suffer the most.

I would hate to tell the hon. member what some of the heads of the labour movement in the country at large have told me about what they thought of some of the fiscal measures of the previous government. It is not very laudatory, I can assure the hon. member.

* * *

● (1125)

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

OWNERSHIP OF TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPED BY IMPERIAL OIL LIMITED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the minister aware that in recent years a letter was sent by the Exxon Corporation to Imperial Oil of Canada pointing out that, whatever patentable research material was developed in Canada by Imperial Oil, whether in the tar sands or any other area of research, and regardless whether the Canadian taxpayer financed it or not, the final ownership of that patentable material would not reside with Imperial Oil of Canada but with the Exxon Corporation in the United States?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of that particular letter. If the Leader of the New Democratic Party has it, I would appreciate receiving a copy, which I will examine.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, my information is that the government has been made aware of this. In fact, the Prime Minister was made aware of it some time ago. Since it is the case that millions of dollars came from Canadian taxpayers under the old IRDIA program and went directly to Imperial Oil for work in Canada to develop new technology, and since this technology does not belong to Imperial Oil of Canada but to Exxon Corporation in the United States, an incredible situation, will the minister advise what is now the government's response to that situation? What does the government intend to do to ensure the most elementary justice to the Canadian taxpayer in this important matter?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the hon. member has not indicated that he has a copy of such a letter. I said that I am not aware of such a policy or letter, but that I would inquire. It is unfair for the hon. member to ask me to comment on a hypothetical situation when he does not appear to be in the position to provide proof of the existence of the letter at this time. I repeat, I will inquire. I will certainly examine this matter and be happy to comment further once we have the facts.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, in a matter of minutes I will be able to provide the minister with a copy of precisely that letter. With that in mind, and assuming that the letter is exactly as I have described it, will the minister assure the House that the Government of Canada will take immediate steps to have this relationship changed? It means that millions of dollars were put up by ordinary citizens from coast to coast for Imperial Oil to produce significant technology here in Canada which does not even belong to the people of Canada but to the Exxon Corporation in the United States. Can the minister assure the House that the government will take immediate steps to put an end to this totally unacceptable situation?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I will certainly read with great interest the letter to which the hon. member has referred and examine the situation. When the government has an announcement to make, I will let the hon. member know.

* * *

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND HYDROELECTRICITY EXPORTS—CORRIDOR THROUGH QUEBEC—ALLEGED DOUBLE STANDARD

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Today in the Newfoundland legislature the government of Newfoundland announced it was taking away the water rights of the Churchill Falls Power Corporation. They did that out of a sense of complete exasperation and frustration over their inability to reach an agreement with Quebec. The minister knows the consequences of that.

I therefore ask this question. A few days ago the Economic Council of Canada released the results of a special study it conducted on the Newfoundland economy. One of their findings was that the Newfoundland economy was losing annually $600 million a year to Quebec in shortfall as a result of that iniquitous power contract. In light of the findings of the Economic Council of Canada and the importance it places on the development of hydro, and in view of the move in St. John's today by the Newfoundland government, I ask the minister quite earnestly if he will now exercise the constitutional authority he has under section 92(10) and grant the request of the government of Newfoundland to provide a corridor through Quebec so that Newfoundland can develop its power and sell it on the open market?

● (1130)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member refers to a study which has been published. He knows that this study has already been challenged in various quarters as to a certain number of its assumptions. I am in no position to pass honest judgment on that particular study, and I will let the matter stand where it is now.

As to the legislation introduced today in the Newfoundland legislature, I understand that the premier has indicated that he wants this legislation passed and referred to the courts to have the matter investigated by the courts in order to determine whether the Newfoundland legislature has authority to pass this legislation.

As to the specific point raised by the hon. member about a corridor, the Prime Minister indicated at the last federal-provincial conference of first ministers that in his view the federal government had such a right, that the federal government was prepared to exercise the rights necessary but that obviously the best solution was still a negotiated settlement.

Moreover, I remind the hon. member that any such decision by itself would have no impact on the existing contract with Churchill Falls, which obviously is a different situation where there is a contract between Hydro-Québec and the Churchill Falls Corporation. Even if we were to agree completely with the question raised by the hon. member, it would not change the other contract, which is the point at issue at the present time. However, at the last premiers' conference the Prime Minister indicated quite clearly the point of view of the federal government in this respect.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, the minister knows that there is a direct linkage, particularly in light of the action announced today by the Newfoundland government. I believe the minister will find that there is a much greater disposition now on the part of the government of Quebec to sit down and discuss this matter rationally with the Government of Canada.

About two months ago the Premier of Newfoundland wrote to the Prime Minister of Canada telling the Prime Minister that he had a letter of intent from the power authority of the state of New York to buy power from the undeveloped Lower Churchill. That seems to fulfil the requirement which the Prime Minister laid down. To the best of my knowledge that letter has not been answered.

Will the minister now tell the House and the country that he is prepared to exercise the constitutional authority he has under the BNA Act, section 92(10), give Newfoundland what is its just requirement under the constitution and announce that a corridor through Quebec will be provided? The least he could tell us today is that he is prepared to take this matter up on an urgent basis with the government of Quebec.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I refer the hon. member to the very clear statement made by the Prime Minister during the constitutional conference on this very subject. The statement by the Prime Minister was unequivocal and quite clear.

As to the question of dealing with the government of Quebec and the government of Newfoundland, I can tell the hon. member that I have had discussions with the minister of energy of Newfoundland and indicated that we would stand ready to sit down with the government of Newfoundland and the government of Quebec to try to iron out these particular issues which are outstanding. Until now I have not been able to get a positive answer from the government of Newfoundland that it is willing to participate in such discussions. I indicated that if the government of Quebec and the government of Newfoundland were willing to have the federal government sit down with them and try to work out in an amicable way a resolution of these very difficult questions, we would stand ready to help and try to work things out. I must say that I have not been able to get a positive response as yet from the government of Newfoundland to this particular offer. I have made the same offer to the government of Quebec, that we are standing ready to help if the government of Quebec felt we could contribute anything in terms of resolving this difficult situation in an amicable way.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, this is a very important matter, and I am sure you appreciate that. Can the minister tell the House and the people of Newfoundland why he is applying a double standard in enforcing the constitution? He imposes no such conditions on the building of pipelines to carry gas from western Canada to Quebec as those he is imposing on the building of a corridor through Quebec for the transmission and sale of Newfoundland hydro power. Why the double standard? That is what the people of Newfoundland and members of this House would like to know.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I suggest the type of false rhetoric such as that used by the hon. member does not help resolve this kind of issue. We have never indicated that we were applying a double standard or that we were refusing to exercise our constitutional jurisdiction. We have indicated that we are going to apply the same standard and exactly the same regime, but the fact is that in this particular instance it would be much better and easier for all concerned, including the government of Newfoundland, if this question could be resolved in a negotiated way rather than by using rhetoric and the kind of abusive language the hon. member is using.

I submit to the hon. member that there are better ways of doing things. In the case of electricity, for instance, there might be the economic necessity and it might be much more advisable to wheel power through the Quebec hydro system. In the case of pipelines we do not have to go through provincial pipelines to carry oil or gas. In the case of electricity it becomes economically much more advisable and feasible to use the existing systems.

However, we have indicated that we stand ready to exercise our constitutional power, and I want to make it quite clear that there are no double standards for this government. There are not two constitutions in this country; there is one constitution, and we will apply it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

NATIONAL UNITY

WESTERN SEPARATISM—CALL FOR REVIEW OF CONSTITUTION AND ENERGY POLICIES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last night in Edmonton more than 2,500 people filled the Jubilee Auditorium, which is in my constituency, for a western separatist rally. The audience was protesting federal government policies on the constitution and on energy, which are alienating Alberta.

Will the government now demonstrate its sensitivity to this serious question of separatism by conducting a special review of its constitution and energy policies, so that those Albertans who want very much to remain part of Canada will be assured that the government will respond to the legitimate concerns of Albertans?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in reply to that question let me tell the hon. member that prior to the presentation of the budget I certainly made a serious effort to respond to what I determined to be a deep sensitivity about the intention of the government to impose exclusively an export tax on natural gas.

Mr. Siddon: Here we go again with the same old excuse.

Mr. MacEachen: It may not be widely understood or even known in Alberta that that particular intention was abandoned in order to respond to the concerns which had been expressed, not only by the Premier of Alberta but also by other spokesmen in the province. So there has been some attempt to respond.

Second, may I say to the hon. member that in response to the statement made subsequent to the budget by the Premier of Alberta regarding his readiness to undertake further talks with the Government of Canada, we indicated our readiness to engage in those talks in an effort to reconcile our differences and to reach some agreement with the province of Alberta. It seems to me that if we could make progress on that front, it would be the most positive step that could be taken in response to the hon. member's real concerns.

Mr. Roche: Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows well that conclusion of a comprehensive energy package is necessary to respond to the concerns of Albertans. May I ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will reconsider his position and put more effort into the reconciling of the two positions, so that this flame of separatism can be stamped out quickly before it becomes a prairie fire. I ask him if he will accept the testimony of anger which I am conveying to him today with the deepest sincerity. Will the government assume its fundamental responsibility to promote true national unity by taking, as the first step, the decision to extend the constitutional committee's deadline, so that the voice of the west can be fully communicated to the government?

● (1140)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, on that particular point, namely the deadline of the committee which was discussed yesterday, I understand that negotiations commenced yesterday between the House leader of the government and the representatives of the other parties with a view to reaching some conclusion. As I stated yesterday and as the government House leader has stated, we are prepared to take a flexible approach in an effort to give a reasonable opportunity for all groups in the country, including those from the west, to express their views on this important matter. I hope that as a result of these negotiations a common and satisfactory conclusion can be reached.

* * *

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

WINNIPEG—PERMIT TO CONSTRUCT OVERPASS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It has been reported in Winnipeg that the permit for the construction of the Sherbrook-McGregor overpass will be issued within a week. This overpass, if built, will cut to ribbons the inner city of Winnipeg. Not surprisingly, the decision by the federal government to finance the construction of the overpass is now being challenged in the federal courts. It is being challenged on the basis that the CTC approved the grants six days before the city applied for the money and failed to give the application adequate consideration. Will the minister at least assure this House that the permit for construction will not be issued until the federal court has rendered its decision?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am trying to find out now what is the effect of the appeal to the federal court on the decision of the CTC. I hope to get an answer on that this afternoon.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same minister. I welcome the fact that he is looking at the impact of that court challenge of that decision, but I would also like to make a further appeal to him to respond to the long-standing call from citizens in Winnipeg for public hearings on this matter, or at least to respond to the latest call for written questions if he is not willing to grant public hearings, so that the decision can be dealt with adequately and legally.

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, I said that I would look into the legal effects of the appeal, but the discussion of the overpass in Winnipeg has been extensive and the proper authorities have made the decision to do what they will do now. The fact that somebody opposes it, however important it may be, should not be a reason not to go ahead with the decision which has been made by the proper authorities.

* * *

[Translation]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER WILL MEET QUEBEC COUNTERPART

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. When the minister states in the House that his department has obtained alarming reports on acid rain in Canada he confirms that aquatic life has disappeared from 140 lakes in Ontario and that salmon rivers have been destroyed in the maritimes. However, the Minister does not mention conditions in Quebec. In the October number of the magazine Actualité, we learn that the Montreal area gets more acid rain than all of eastern Canada, which is also responsible for a reduction of salmon spawning in the rivers of the Gaspé Peninsula. That being said, I ask the the minister whether he expects to meet soon with his Quebec counterpart in order to make him fully aware of that serious problem and to see to it that Canada will show the political will to face the worst environmental disaster of the century.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I cannot confirm that conditions are worse in Montreal than in many other places in North America. It is surely a serious problem, but we are trying to obtain more data on its impact in Montreal. I have already met with my Quebec counterpart, Mr. Léger, and we have discussed among other things the problem of acid rain. We have already set up a structure of co-operation among the provinces under the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers, including Quebec which is fully taking part in this undertaking. Indeed, the Quebec government is chairing one of the study groups in that structure set up by the council.

* * *

[English]

HOUSING

INQUIRY WHETHER SHELTER ALLOWANCE CONSIDERED

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of housing. The Canadian Council on Social Development has forecast that the energy price increase announced in the budget, higher inflation and the forecast of higher unemployment will all have a major effect on the cost of living of Canadians. Mortgage interest rates are expected to rise as a result of the increase in the bank rate. I should like to ask the minister whether the government has given any consideration to granting a shelter allowance to assist Canadian families, so that they will not have to pay more than one-third of their income for shelter?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the budget itself contains a measure which reflects the concern of the government for people on lower and moderate incomes who are looking for shelter, particularly in the rental area. That is why, for example, the MURB provision was introduced to help loosen up that particular market.

As regards a shelter allowance, this is a proposal which has been promoted, for example, by Mr. Matthews in his advice in a report to which I referred last week produced for the previous government. It is a proposal that the corporation has considered and one that I am considering in depth. It is one of the proposals to which I referred when I said that, in considering the government's priorities, we thought that that might have a higher priority than the community services program which we declined to continue.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, perhaps we are on the right track. Would the minister not agree that a shelter allowance which is geared to income would cost the government less money than the current welter of housing programs, such as public housing, non-profit housing, co-ops, AHOP disasters and MURBs. MURBs really do not do anything to put people in homes. It is nothing more than a tax shelter. Would the minister not agree?

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, I do disagree with the last comment of the hon. member. In fact, the program is designed to put approximately 10,000 families into housing accommodation which they would not otherwise have, had this government not taken that action in the present budget. So it is designed to put families specifically into accommodation. It is designed, through the filter process, to assist other families to take up accommodation which would be made free.

In response to the first part of the question, let me say that you cannot simply proceed to grant a shelter allowance and do away with all the other programs, the specific targeted programs. I think that almost universally people in the social service area, the experts, will say that it has to be a program which complements existing programs.

* * *

NUCLEAR ENERGY

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING REACTOR SALE TO ROUMANIA—CREDIBILITY OF AECL

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): My question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Madam Speaker. The country knows well the difficulties that the nuclear reactor industry is having because of poor sales, and it is our understanding that the government is now negotiating with Roumania for the purchase of a second nuclear reactor. Can the minister tell the House, first, what stage these negotiations have reached; second, whether it is true that the negotiations are going forward on the basis of the Roumanians being able to build and develop 14 more reactors, which would mean very short-term benefit for Canada if we just sold them one more; and finally, what measures the government is taking, now that the president of AECL is charged with conspiracy, to help maintain the credibility of AECL and its international reputation.

● (1150)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as far as the contacts with Roumania are concerned, these contacts have been carried on extensively during the past few months. My parliamentary secretary was in Roumania with a delegation of senior officials to advance those negotiations. The total program in Roumania is indeed a large one. It involves several reactors, but obviously these reactors will be built over a period of years. At present we are advancing our negotiations concerning the second reactor, and I hope in the next few months we will be able to reach an agreement with Roumania which will be satisfactory to both countries.

As far as the last question raised by the hon. member, I must say that I heard some comment from a Tory member on the other side—not from the hon. member, I should say—which I hope will not be recorded in Hansard. There is an elementary rule of criminal law in this country, and that is that a man is innocent until he is proven guilty.

Second, as far as the particular charge is concerned, as hon. members know, it has nothing to do with the administration of AECL. It concerns the administration of a particular firm with which the current president of AECL was associated in the past. I have discussed this issue with the president of AECL and the board has considered this matter. It has been decided that we would apply the fundamental rules of justice, and I would hope that members of the Conservative party will have as much respect as the hon. member has had for this subject.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: It was a member of the NDP.

Mr. Clark: Name him, name him.

EFFECT OF REACTOR SALE ON CANADIAN INDUSTRIAL ACTIVITY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for his response. I appreciate that the matter is before the courts and I do not wish to judge the president of AECL. My concern is for the reputation of AECL which may suffer even in the absence of any charges.

My supplementary question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It relates to the same Roumanian reactor negotiations. I wonder if the minister is aware that, because of a lack of foreign exchange in Roumania, some of the negotiations are going forward with contra-trade agreements or negotiations and these agreements might significantly affect our own industrial activity in areas such as textiles, agricultural machinery and even wine, where the industries are already in trouble and where we may be imposing an additional burden upon them by agreements with Roumania.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, there is no provision in our legal framework for state-to-state deals in these areas. Any trade between our two countries would have to take place within our present legal framework with respect to customs and similar aspects. In any event, we are certainly following this with a great deal of attention so that hopefully arrangements can be worked out to facilitate exports of Canadian nuclear technology to Roumania and commercial exchanges generally between our countries which will be in the interests of both countries, including respecting the needs and interests of Canadian industries and workers and taking those interests very much into account.

* * *

AUDITOR GENERAL

PROGRESS OF AUDIT OF INDIAN BANDS TRUST FUND ACCOUNT

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On November 13, 1979, if I remember correctly, the House passed a unanimous motion that the Auditor General be instructed to audit the Indian bands trust fund account. Could the minister tell us at what point that audit is right now?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I will take notice of the question because I am not aware at the moment just what the situation is. I will inform myself and let the hon. member and the House know.

* * *

NORTHERN PIPELINES

EXPROPRIATION OF LAND IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in his role as spokesman in the House for the Northern Pipeline Agency. How can his government justify using the Railway Act introduced in 1919 to expropriate land in southeastern British Columbia for the construction of the Foothills natural gas pipeline? How can his government justify sending riot police into the area, simply because the owners are demanding the right to negotiate fair market value for their land? Finally, how can his government justify using nineteenth century police state legislation without even attempting to negotiate in a fair manner with the land owners involved?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I do not think I have to attempt to justify what the hon. member has indicated, because what is being done is not related to some of the more outrageous comments the hon. member has made in his statement. What is being done is in accordance with the law passed by Parliament and which is in application in this country. I understand that there are a few individuals who are not satisfied with the offer made by the particular company which is building the pipeline. These matters are being discussed under the rules provided in the law. Also I am advised that National Energy Board officials have been sent there to see whether they could help in arriving at a satisfactory settlement between the parties concerned. The government is not a party to these discussions as such, as the hon. member knows.

As far as we are concerned, we have succeeded in obtaining a commitment from the builders that they will settle on the basis of the rules put forward in a bill in the Senate by Senator Olson which represented a significant improvement on the old legislation. Unfortunately this bill has not yet been passed by the House, but the applicants are ready to consider themselves bound by it.

Mr. Parker: Madam Speaker, it seems that no one in Ottawa is willing to listen to the concerns of the people in this area. My supplementary question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the government's supposed commitment to human rights, will the minister agree to withdraw these petitions from the courts so that fair negotiations can take place between the land owners and Foothills? Furthermore, will he agree, to bring in immediate changes to the Northern Pipeline Act along the lines first suggested by Senator Bud Olson in 1979 to ensure that the expropriation provisions are brought into the twentieth century and that these problems will not recur as pipeline constuction proceeds through the rest of British Columbia and into Alberta?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the government is very much aware of the necessity of improving this legislation. The fact is that Senator Olson introduced in the Senate the bill to which the hon. member referred. I tried to see whether it could be put on the legislative timetable since the new session opened. It was not possible to find time, but nonetheless we have succeeded in reaching a situation whereby the private companies building the pipeline agree to be bound by the particular bill introduced by Senator Olson in the Senate. So in effect, the people concerned can benefit from the provisions of the bill which unfortunately has not yet been passed by the House.

* * *

AIRPORTS

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—INQUIRY RESPECTING LONG-RANGE PLAN

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. As the minister knows, for a considerable amount of time I have called for some long-range planning at Toronto International Airport. Is the minister prepared to let the people of Brampton, Etobicoke and Mississauga know if in fact he does have some long-range planning in mind at Toronto International Airport and, if so, when it might be announced?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if I remember well, since the 1975 decision not to go along with the Pickering project, Malton airport has been analysed and studied extensively. There have been a number of studies in a wider context like, the southern Ontario multimodal passenger study. There have been more specific ones, for examples, on the third terminal or on access by foreign carriers.

● (1200)

To answer the question more specifically, there is a master plan which is in the process of completion now and which will be revealed next January. It will be exposed to full consultation, as these matters usually are, with the local people interested in the development of the airport.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I appreciate that information and I say thank goodness, it is about time. Will the minister assure the people of the area, the local municipalities and citizens, that they will have a fair opportunity to study the plan and make proper recommendations to the minister and to the members of the ministry, and will he widely advertise the fact that they will have this opportunity to do so?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, the invitation is well taken. Presumably the member, as he has done previously, will want to participate in these exercises too. I understand there are a number of committees presently constituted of officials and representative members. These will be used. On every occasion I have seen in other cities where such a master plan existed, the department, particularly in recent days, has been known to extend itself to the fullest to hold consultations. For example, this happened very recently in Ottawa.

* * *

NUCLEAR ENERGY

REPORTED RADIATION LEAK AT MALVERN, ONT.

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in his capacity as minister responsible for the Atomic Energy Control Board. It deals with an important matter reported yesterday in The Globe and Mail which arose in the riding of York-Scarborough in the residential area of Malvern, where high degrees of radiation were discovered. I wonder if the minister would assure the residents of Malvern and the members of this House that his officials are working quickly and carefully to analyse this situation so as to put their minds at ease on a matter which concerns them very deeply.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am advised that the officials of the Atomic Energy Control Board have already been on the site. They are examining the situation carefully and the Atomic Energy Control Board will make public any conclusion that is reached from the surveys that are being conducted now. I understand officials of the AECB were there as early as yesterday.

Mr. Gilchrist: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have that reassurance. I wonder if the minister will table details of the cause and the cure to be made in this regard. The problem goes back a long way, to a farm which has now been approved for residential construction. The effect on adults is bad enough but the radiation at ground level for children is eight times the normal level. I ask the minister for an early report on this matter.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the Atomic Energy Control Board will release publicly any conclusion it reaches as soon as possible. I will be very happy to forward a formal copy of the board's report as soon as it is available.

* * *

HEALTH CARE

PRE-NATAL SCREENING KITS—ABORTION OF FEMALE FOETUSES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I think she is aware that more frequently the test of amniocentesis is being used to determine pre-natal birth defects in, and the sex of, the unborn child. In Canada, according to the law, abortion is permitted only for therapeutic reasons, yet statistics indicate that following the use of this test more females are being aborted than males, thus drawing the ugly inference that mothers carrying female children are needing more therapy than those carrying male children. I wonder if the minister would use her good offices and speak to her colleague, the Minister of Justice, about amending the provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with abortion, so that we can stop this attack on women and use abortion only where the physical health of the mother is at stake.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, regarding the misuse of the several brands of pre-natal screening kits, I informed the House earlier this week that I have written to my provincial counterparts, enclosing information from my department. Instead of discussing the Criminal Code I asked the provincial ministers who are responsible for health services in each of the provinces to establish specific, detailed minimum requirements in the handling of and the procedures by which these kits could be used. These kits can never be used alone; other diagnostic procedures should also be used by the doctor in every single case. Other rules are being spelled out and they have been sent to the provincial ministers. I hope this route will be sufficient to control the misuse of these screening kits and to control the diagnostic mistakes which arise.

Mr. Friesen: I would first ask the minister if she would table that correspondence in the House. Second, I think she is aware that the test is apparently not accurate and that many times, even though the test has proved to be positive, if an abortion was not performed the children have turned out to be normal.

I ask the minister to address herself to the substantive part of my question, which is that it is being used as an attack on women by aborting more female children than male where there has been no indication of defect. Would the hon. lady address herself to that part of the question?

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Madam Speaker, I think I am quite familiar with this line of reasoning, for the hon. member has used it before on several occasions in the House when dealing with other issues. There is no evidence or even any shadow of evidence to indicate that actions are wilfully being taken against women. Thanks to these relatively new diagnostic procedures, it is now possible to identify in the unborn serious deficiencies which may result in the children being affected with birth defects of the brain or spine and having to live with serious handicaps for the rest of their lives. If, within the limits of the Criminal Code and through the hospitals' therapeutic committees, physicians are called upon to make decisions, there is no indication that the use of these screening kits can be attributed to an abuse of or discrimination against women.

I suggest that this approach is all wrong. The purpose is to ensure the welfare of the mothers and their future children, and to make sure that the diagnosis is accurate and timely. That is my position. As to the suggestion that I should table in the House the letter I have sent to my provincial counterparts, I will check to see if that is the usual practice. However, there is nothing to prevent me from advising my colleagues in the House of its content.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I rise with respect to the consideration of the Petroleum Administration Act later today and next week. There has been consultation with respect to the length of the speeches as well as the taking of the recorded divisions, if any, and there seems to be agreement to the following order:

That during the consideration of the motions relating to the proclamation of sections 35 and 52 of the Petroleum Administration Act all members except the first speaker for each party and the leader of each party shall not speak for more than 30 minutes; and that if a recorded division is required on the first of the said motions on or before Tuesday, November 25, 1980, it shall be taken at 5.45 p.m. on Wednesday, November 26, 1980; and that if a recorded division is required on the second of the said motions it shall be taken at 9.45 p.m. on Monday, December 1, 1980.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, that is acceptable to this side. But while speaking to the point of order raised by the parliamentary secretary I want to give the Chair notice of a point of order, or a question of privilege, which arises out of the manner in which the two notices have been treated.

• (1210)

I raised related questions before in the House with respect to changes being made by the Journals branch which alter significantly the written record of the House. In the case of the notice filed under the auspices and perhaps even prepared, I believe, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, there have been some substantial changes made by the Journals branch to that notice. I do not intend to develop my point today, but merely give the Chair notice that I shall be raising the matter. I shall do so when I am not taking up important time in debate.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, with respect to the motion proposed by the government House leader, we are in agreement with it.

Madam Speaker: I must assume that the hon. President of the Privy Council has the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion. Hon. members have heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHRÉTIEN—HAMILTON TAGGED AS UNDERDOG IN GREY CUP FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I have received requests from some hon. members of the House to explain why I am wearing this button. There are three good reasons. The first reason is because of the pressure faced by my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). The second reason is because approximately 25 years ago two great Canadians, Mayor Vic Copps and Mayor Gaston Hardy, twinned the cities of Hamilton and Shawinigan. The third reason is that because I am the Minister of State for Social Development I have to be concerned for the underdog, so I am concerned about the poor, the widowed, orphans, Liberals in Alberta, and the Hamilton Tiger Cats!

MR. NIELSEN—STATEMENT MADE BY MR. LALONDE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege with respect to the very uncalled for and, if I may say so, snide remarks of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) with respect to a vague accusation that some members in the Conservative party interjected during one of his answers in the question period. The minister expressed the hope that it would not find its way into Hansard. I sit much closer than the minister to members on this side, and I heard no such interjection coming from a Conservative member.

I believe it does nothing for the spirit of this place when the minister makes comments such as he did which reflect on every individual member of the Conservative party, and which reflect on the very principle which he so loosely espoused while he was replying to the question, that one is presumed innocent until proven guilty. Unless the minister can point to a member of the Conservative party and attribute that interjection to that hon. member, then I think as a gentleman and a member of this House he should withdraw any reference he made to members of this party.

Madam Speaker: This certainly is not a question of privilege. However, the point has been made.

An hon. Member: Allow the minister to speak.

Madam Speaker: The people who record the proceedings of this House write down everything they hear. I am sure that they are not influenced by whatever directives or instructions they may receive from both sides.

Mr. Clark: That is not the point.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not the point. The remarks which the minister made today are on the record. I think he is rising right now to withdraw those remarks, and I would urge the Chair to allow him to do so.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member says that what I heard, and what I suspect he heard, did not come from a member of the Conservative party. I am ready to take his word that perhaps it did not come from a member of the Conservative party. However, I think he will recognize that there was certainly a very uncalled for comment which came from somebody in the opposition benches.

Mr. Dinsdale: Smear everybody.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, there is no point in making the matter worse. In the first instance the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) attributed a remark to some Conservative member. Now he says that it was someone on the opposition side, which would include my party. I heard no remark. I have asked my colleagues, and they tell me that none of them made any spurious remark. I believe that the minister should either withdraw the remark or tell us what was said and who made the comment.

Madam Speaker: I think we will all be better off when we read Hansard tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, what we have here is a statement made by a minister of the Crown which cast direct aspersions upon every member of the opposition. The minister has narrowed his statement to say that it was not a member of the Progressive Conservative Party, although he did so in a most grudging fashion. He has allowed his accusation to stand as it relates to members of the New Democratic Party.

There is now a clear breach of the privileges of every member of the New Democratic Party, but prior to that of every member of the opposition. I believe that we should not wait for Hansard but, rather, have the matter resolved now by having the minister stand and clearly withdraw the accusation which he has made against other members of this House.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, on the same question of privilege, I was sitting beside the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I can certainly affirm with absolute determination that such a comment was made.

Mr. Clark: What was the comment?

Mr. Roberts: The comment was in reference to the president of the Atomic Energy Board.

Mr. Clark: What was it, and who said it?

Mr. Roberts: I cannot ascertain from which member it came.

Mr. Clark: What was said?

Mr. Roberts: The comment was to the effect that "he is a Liberal, so he is all right." That was the comment. I suggest that it is an improper comment of prejudice against the president of Atomic Energy of Canada. I cannot ascertain which member said it. Perhaps the hon. member who uttered the comment would be big enough to get up in the House and say so.

Mr. Clark: No one said it. No wonder this House falls apart.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, now that we have been told what the remark is, I have checked again with my colleagues, and they tell me that no one made such a remark. It is most unfortunate that it has been said. I had the feeling that at first you thought, Madam Speaker, that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) was complaining because there was intimidation of Hansard not to include the remark. That is not the point, because the remark is not there. I submit that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and now the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), should withdraw the charge unreservedly.

Mr. Clark: Name the member or withdraw.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I heard what was stated by the Minister of the Environment very clearly. I heard every word of what was said and it came from the opposition benches. I have checked further with several members on this side, all of whom have confirmed that this was the case. I hope the hon. member who made the comment will have the courage to stand up and say so.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the two ministers are now making this problem far worse than it was at the beginning. The Minister of Energy could have solved the problem by doing the gentlemanly thing and withdrawing his accusation, but now he and his colleague are saying that they heard a remark. I have checked with the members of my party, and there was no such remark from these benches. I heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre say that he has checked with all his members and that no such remark came from the NDP benches.

Why does the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources not respect the tradition of this House and withdraw, as most gentleman who sit in this place should, because the charge made by the minister is tied to the loose use of the expression "one is presumed innocent until proven guilty", leaving the inference that we do not respect that basic, fundamental tenet of the law.

If the minister would like this matter to carry on, then he will have his way, but if he wishes to do the right thing and act like a gentleman, as hon. members usually do in this House, he should withdraw his remarks without any reservation whatsoever. Such an act on the part of the minister might do something to restore some sense of co-operation and an atmosphere wherein the government's business may move along in a little more tenable way.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is asking me to lie to this House. I will not lie to this House. What I heard has been confirmed by several members on this side, and whatever the hon. member may say I would remind him that several members have left the House since question period ended.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, this is not acceptable.

• (1220)

Madam Speaker: We are into a situation where members are commenting on a remark which I did not hear. From where I sit I am not surprised though that I could not hear it. Some say that something was said, and others say that it was not.

An hon. Member: It is a figment of his imagination.

Mr. Clark: It was not said.

Madam Speaker: If I gather what the discussion is about, not having heard the first remark, members are objecting to the minister's remarks. Perhaps I could look at the minister's remarks in Hansard to determine whether the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is founded.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I simply want to clarify what my understanding is of what you were suggesting.

Mr. Pinard: It is clear. Why do you interfere with the business of the House?

Mr. Clark: The government House leader is speaking from his seat supporting the actions of his two ministers whose statements have served, once again, to make it difficult for this House to co-operate and make progress. The clarification I sought, since you are holding the question open, was that there would be an opportunity, I presume on Monday, for other representations to be made. These concern the damage which we believe has been done to the practices of Parliament by the stubborn refusal of the two ministers to accept the word of members on this side of the House, and to withdraw comments which amount to a blanket slander of members sitting in the opposition in Parliament.

Madam Speaker: I cannot ascertain at this point that I will entertain further discussion on the matter. I might. I said that I would look at the remarks of the hon. minister and determine whether there is a question of privilege as raised by the hon. member for Yukon.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McKENZIE—ANSWER GIVEN BY MR. PEPIN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my point of order arises out of an answer given by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) today. It concerns the Canadian Transport Commission issuing a permit to the city of Winnipeg to build the Sherbrook-McGregor overpass. I was informed this week that a permit would be issued, that it had been cleared through the Department of Justice. As I understood the minister's answer today, he said that he was going to check to see whether it was all right for the CTC to issue the permit to the city of Winnipeg.

I do not believe the minister has the authority to overrule the Canadian Transport Commission on a decision to issue a permit. I believe that this matter should be cleared up in the House. Did the minister mean that he was going to take this matter up with the cabinet and have the cabinet overrule the Canadian Transport Commission? Is the minister going to interfere directly with the Canadian Transport Commission to have this permit stopped? The minister does not have the authority, and I believe he should clear up this point.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have a great number of things to worry about, and that is one of many. I have an indication here that the situation is as I described it, namely, that I have to assess the effect of the court action on the decision of the CTC to allow for the construction of the overpass. If my hon. friend is ahead of me on that particular matter, I will gladly have a conversation with him immediately, but that is the information I have. I was going to spend some time this afternoon checking to see to what extent one event influences the other. I will do my best to do that because I know how urgent is the implementation of the decision.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer. If the minister and the cabinet are going to decide that they will stop the issuance of the permit, will the minister give a commitment to the House that the city of Winnipeg will be reimbursed for $2.5 million, because you are directly responsible for the delaying—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is going beyond his point of order in this second intervention. I am sorry, but I must interrupt him.

* * *

THE LATE P. B. RYNARD

TRIBUTES TO FORMER MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, it is with deep regret that I rise to advise this House that Dr. P. B. Rynard, member of Parliament for Simcoe North for 22 years, passed away last evening. Doctor Rynard was a great humanitarian. He was a kind and thoughtful physician. He was a well-loved representative of his constituents and a respected member of this House. He set an example for every Canadian to follow, especially those from rural and semi-rural constituencies.

We are all saddened by his death, but we acknowledge with thanks that he left Canada and Canadians better as a result of his contribution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I want to express my own sorrow at the knowledge which the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) has conveyed to us about the death of a former colleague in the House of Commons.

Like many other members, I knew Dr. Rynard personally. I had extremely good personal relations with him. I benefited from his administrations from time to time, and I had the highest regard for him. He was a strong advocate of his own positions in the House of Commons. He participated actively in the question period, and at the same time he maintained a courteous attitude toward all members of the House, which I think all of us could emulate from time to time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, as another member who knew and worked with Dr. Rynard for many years, I join with the rest of the members of the House in paying my warmest respects to his memory.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, as one who served in the House with Dr. Rynard, I want to mention my own regret at his passing. He was, as has been indicated, not only a lively advocate of strong views in the medical field, but he was a medical adviser to many of us from time to time. Like other members, I benefited from his presence in the House and, like others, I will miss him very much.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Spaker, I have the privilege to lead the party which Dr. Rynard served so effectively and consistently, not only on the floor of the House of Commons but across the country. He brought the skills and the care of an excellent general practitioner to the general practice of politics, and his contribution to the House and to the country will be honoured. He will be missed by all who knew him.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I would like to add my words of sorrow at the passing of Dr. Rynard. As hon. members know, I had an opportunity for some time to represent the riding of York-Simcoe, which included the southern part of Simcoe county, and Dr. Rynard, of course, represented the northern part of Simcoe county. I want to tell all members of the House that during that period Dr. Rynard was a great help to me. He was, if you like, my mentor in the House, being the representative from the adjoining riding. We are deeply sorry to hear of his death last evening.

* * *

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. YURKO—STATEMENT MADE BY MR. CHRÉTIEN

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I distinctly heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) say that he perhaps represented the city of Edmonton, or some part of it. I want to straighten the record and suggest that the Minister of Justice does not represent the city of Edmonton in any way.

However, I want to indicate that when I put my motion earlier this morning, I did not hear any negative replies. Nevertheless, I can understand the sentiments under which the motion was not accepted unanimously. I would also like to suggest that since putting the motion I noted that a number of hon. members were wearing wreaths of sympathy or mourning for the "kittens" from Hamilton. Therefore, I recognize that even though the motion was not passed, indeed the sentiments were there.

MR. STEVENS—INSTRUCTION GIVEN TO PETRO-CANADA—TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my point of order arises from an answer given yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) with respect to a certain instruction given to Petro-Canada under Section 7(2) of the Petro-Canada Act of Canada. The minister indicated that such an instruction was given and it was confirmed by order in council, either before or after the actual instruction. Will the minister indicate whether he will be tabling the order in council and, if so, when, so that we can see the exact nature of this instruction to Petro-Canada?

● (1230)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Madam Speaker, I will be happy to table the order in council as soon as I can get a copy of it. If I can get it later today, I will ask the permission of the House to table it. If not, I will table it on Monday.

Order Paper Questions

MR. HUDECKI—PREDICTION OF HAMILTON VICTORY IN GREY CUP FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to respond to the motion made by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko). I want to assure him that the ornaments we are wearing are not to indicate sorrow or sympathy, but in anticipation of the victory that will take place when we have the non-governmental confrontation between the east and west on Sunday afternoon. I wish to indicate to him that Hamilton, the champions of the eastern conference of the Canadian Football League, will uphold the fine tradition of eastern and central Canada and play with dedication, fairness, and true sportsmanship typical of that area, but with the ferocity of a tiger they will win.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Second report of Standing Committee on Public Accounts—Mr. Clarke.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

TAXATION

REVIEW OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table copies, in both official languages, of a review of the taxation of capital gains in Canada.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 473 (amended), 476 (amended), 662, 861, 862 and 1,353.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

ADULT TRAINING PROGRAMS—BRITISH COLUMBIA—NATIVE PEOPLE

Question No. 473 amended—Mr. Orlikow:

For the years (a) 1976-77 (b) 1977-78 (c) 1978-79, what amount was spent in adult training programs for (i) native people (ii) the rest of the population in the province of British Columbia?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Comprehensive statistics, which would provide information on the amounts spent on adult training programs for all native people, including status Indians, non-status Indians, Métis and Inuit were not compiled before April 1, 1979; however, information on the amounts spent for training courses purchased for status Indians on reserves is available. As British Columbia and Yukon data are not available separately, the combined estimated amount spent, for each year specified, is as follows:

			(i) Status Indians on Reserves	(ii) Rest of Population
(a) 1976/77	Institutional	(CMTP)	$1,854,071	$44,717,277
	Industrial	(CMTP)	255,000	8,660,402
(b) 1977/78	Institutional	(CMTP)	1,895,043	46,163,700
	Industrial	(CMTP)	300,000	10,428,949
(c) 1978/79	Institutional	(CMTP)*	1,414,293	41,262,772
	Industrial	(CMTP)	67,819	11,425,097

*The payment of UI benefits, rather than training allowances, to eligible trainees began in the 1978/79 fiscal year. Because of this, and the fact that UI payments to native trainees cannot be specifically identified, comparison with previous years is not accurate.

NOTE: See 476 (amended)

ADULT TRAINING PROGRAMS—YUKON TERRITORY—NATIVE PEOPLE

Question No. 476 amended—Mr. Orlikow:

For the years (a) 1976-77 (b) 1977-78 (c) 1978-79, what amount was spent on adult training programs for (i) native people (ii) the rest of the population in the Yukon Territory?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Comprehensive statistics, which would provide information on the amounts spent on adult training programs for all native people, including status Indians, non-status Indians, Métis and Inuit were not compiled before April 1, 1979; however, information on the amounts spent for training courses purchased for status Indians on reserves is available. As British Columbia and Yukon data are not available separately, the combined estimated amount spent, for each year specified, is as follows:

			(i) status Indians on Reserves	(ii) Rest of Population
(a) 1976/77	Institutional	(CMTP)	$1,854,071	$44,717,277
	Industrial	(CMPT)	255,000	8,660,402
(b) 1977/78	Institutional	(CMTP)	1,895,043	46,163,700
	Industrial	(CMTP)	300,000	10,428,949
(c) 1978/79	Institutional	(CMTP)*	1,414,293	41,262,772
	Industrial	(CMTP)	67,819	11,425,097

*The payment of UI benefits, rather than training allowances, to eligible trainees began in the 1978/79 fiscal year. Because of this, and the fact that UI payments to native trainees cannot be specifically identified, comparison with previous years is not accurate.

NOTE: See 473 (amended)

U.I.C.—CONSTITUENCY OF YORK-SUNBURY

Question No. 662—Mr. Howie:

As of April 1, 1980, how many persons in the constituency of York-Sunbury were receiving unemployment insurance?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The number of persons in the constituency of York-Sunbury collecting regular and fishing unemployment insurance benefits only as of April 1, 1980, was 2,741; this does not include claimants receiving special benefits such as maternity, sickness, retirement and training under the Adult Occupational Training Act. To obtain statistics covering all such claimants would require the rewriting of computer programs at considerable time and expense.

CANADIAN SALTFISH CORPORATION

Question No. 861—Mr. Gass:

Did the Canadian Saltfish Corporation enter into an agreement with Canadian fish processors for the marketing of frozen groundfish and/or frozen pellagic fish and frozen squid and, if so, with which companies and under what authority?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): At the request of the governments of Newfoundland and Labrador and Quebec, the Canadian Saltfish Corporation has, over the years, marketed frozen salmon, frozen char, cured herring and cured mackerel. This was done as a temporary measure to improve the returns to fishermen, until permanent arrangements were established to market these products. Recently, at the request of three processors, the Canadian Saltfish Corporation entered into agreements to market their frozen groundfish, frozen pelagic and frozen squid products. The companies involved are: Bay Bulls Sea Products Ltd., Bay Bulls, Newfoundland, Woodman's Fisheries Ltd., New Harbour, Newfoundland, and Tors Cove Fisheries Ltd., Tors Cove, Newfoundland. These are interim measures, which will be discontinued when these companies are able to market their own products or have made other long-term marketing arrangements.

SALMON FISHERMEN—ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 862—Mr. Gass:

1. Will compensation be paid to salmon fishermen in the Atlantic provinces during the current fiscal year and, if so (a) what are the names of the fishermen (b) what will be the amounts, in each case?

2. Will compensation payments be made beyond the current fiscal year?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. Yes.

(a) and (b) This information is considered to be confidential and its release would be contrary to the individual's right of privacy. The breakdown by province is:

New Brunswick	—	$1,000,203.10
Newfoundland	—	272,480.00
Quebec	—	231,492.00

2. There are no plans to pay compensation beyond the current fiscal year. However, a limited compensation program may be considered for individuals suffering continued economic hardship in areas where it is not possible to open the commercial fishery.

CANADA EMPLOYMENT CENTRES—APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM

Question No. 1,353—Mr. Halliday:

Since the introduction of the apprenticeship program sponsored by the Canada Employment Centres, how many employers have signed up with the program, only to let the employees go within 6 to 12 months of taking them on as employees?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Under the Adult Occupational Training Act, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission/Department may reimburse provinces for certain training costs (classroom instruction only) and, in some instances, provide income support to apprentices. However, apprenticeship programs come under provincial jurisdiction; for this reason, tripartite contracts are signed by provincial directors of apprenticeship, employers and apprentices. As the responsibility for regulating all aspects of apprenticeship programs and for monitoring apprentices' employment records lies with individual provinces, this information is not available from commission's files.

[English]

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

PETITION TO REVOKE PROCLAMATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

That the proclamation laid before the House on Wednesday, November 12, 1980, pursuant to subsection 35(2) of the Petroleum Administration Act, as proclaimed in PC 1980-2915, be revoked.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The notice that was just read is not the notice that was filed. It has been altered, I understand, in the Journals branch. That is going to be the subject of a point of order I wish to develop further when I am not taking up the time of the debate. I maintain that the motion as just read by the Chair is not properly before the House because it has been altered by Journals. I do not know whether it was done with the knowledge of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Probably not. It has happened in the past where Journals have changed the written record of the House. In this case they have changed the wording of a notice that had been filed. This is not the notice that was filed.

Mr. Knowles: On the point of order raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), Madam Speaker, may I point out that the motion as it now appears on the order paper is the only motion permitted by the statute under which this debate is taking place. I do not have the statute in front of me at the present time, but I have checked it on several occasions. The statute provides that when a certain type of proclamation is made, ten members may pray that the order be revoked. That is all that can be put down. The hon. member made an allusion to something being done with my knowledge. He is wrong.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not say that. I said perhaps.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member does not have to worry about what he said. The fact is the Table officers did discuss the matter with me and pointed out what it says in the statute. I agreed. I had made it clear to my colleagues in caucus that the only motion we could put down was that the order be revoked. I submit, therefore, that the motion before the House is the proper one provided by the statute under which this debate is taking place.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not intend to pursue this, Madam Speaker, because I do not want to intrude into the debate. However, that is not the point. The point is that the notice filed by the New Democratic Party member is not the same as the notice that was read by the Chair. I do not quarrel with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre saying that the form in which it is now is the only way it can be done. I agree with that, but that is not the way the notice was filed. The wording has been altered. That is the point I take issue with.

Madam Speaker: I take it from the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that if there has been an alteration in the motion, it was so that it would conform with the provisions of the act. This is the kind of advice which is normally given to members when they want to bring in a motion. The Table is here to assist members to do what they want in the manner in which it should be done. In my view, and I say this with reservation, that is normal practice. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is giving me notice that he will raise a question of privilege at another time. I presume he wants the debate to proceed as previously announced. I will recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, today we begin a very unique debate. On budget night, October 28, the Liberal government announced it intended to invoke Division II of the Petroleum Administration Act of 1978. It proclaimed two regulations, one covering oil prices and the other covering gas prices.

This Division II of the Petroleum Administration Act is a drastic piece of law because it gives the federal government the power to set oil and gas prices unilaterally without the consent of the producing provinces. Once the government triggers this part of the Petroleum Administration Act and takes this power, it must within 15 days table its proclamation in the House of Commons. This was done on November 12. At that point, any ten members may pray that the proclamation be revoked. This is what I and nine other NDP members have done. I happen to have faster running shoes, so my motion is being debated first.

The unusual procedure may indicate that it was hoped by Parliament when it passed the Petroleum Administration Act that Division II might never be invoked, because there are very few parliamentary procedures like this one. As I said, it is a fairly unique procedure. Another rare example is the legislation that covered wage and price controls.

Make no mistake about it. The invoking of this Petroleum Administration Act provision is equivalent to invoking the War Measures Act in the escalating dispute with oil and gas producing provinces, especially with the province of Alberta.

● (1240)

Never before, short of a wartime emergency, has such a drastic power been used. In the past we settled oil and gas pricing disputes by agreement—and I stress by agreement—between Ottawa and the producing provinces. Indeed the constitutionality of the Petroleum Administration Act, if it is indeed constitutional, has never been tested. It appears to be grounded in the federal power over interprovincial trade supplemented, perhaps, by the emergency powers available to the federal government in section 91 of the British North America Act.

Let me make clear at the outset the position of the New Democratic Party. In principle we are not against the existence of such emergency powers, but we say that they should only be invoked when all else has failed, and that is not the case now. There is still room for negotiation, compromise, and agreement. There is not yet a state of war between the federal government and the producing provinces, so we think it is unwise, unnecessary and dangerous to invoke the act now. I challenge the minister who is sitting across from me to explain why it was necessary for him to act so unilaterally in this matter.

I look across the floor at this Liberal government, and I despair. It is out of touch with provincial aspirations, especially those aspirations—and I use my words carefully—of Canadians who live in western Canada. This is best illustrated by the actions of the leader of hon. members opposite in his flight from responsibility to Arabia.

I do not agree with the Alberta position and that of Premier Lougheed, but I can sympathize with the frustrations of people in the west when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not talk to his fellow Canadians in Edmonton but dances "sheik to sheik", as an hon. member said yesterday, in Saudi Arabia, as he once did in New York. The timing for that trip, in my submission, is disastrous. The symbolism is wrong. The disdain for the producing provinces of Canada is evident, outrageous, and offensive.

For his part, Premier Lougheed has invoked his own Bill 50 to cut back the supply of oil or to turn down the tap. In my view this too is an irresponsible escalation of the conflict. In Alberta they are playing with matches these days, and both the Alberta economy and the Canadian people could get burned.

I was also shocked at the support given to Premier Lougheed's action of turning down the tap by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the Conservative financial critic, and the Conservative party to my right on the night Premier Lougheed gave his statement. I refer to the statements made by the hon. member for St. John's West at the press conference shortly thereafter.

I will go further and say that the Leader of the Conservative party (Mr. Clark), who should know better, is aiding and abetting the new forces of separatism in western Canada.

Mr. Siddon: That is rubbish.

Mr. Waddell: I heard the hon. member say "rubbish". The party to my right is aiding and abetting separatism in western Canada.

Mr. Siddon: That is rubbish.

Mr. Waddell: The hon. member to my right is objecting. Why does he not stand up in the House and object? Why does he not go out to western Canada and say that? Why does his leader not stand up and say that he is totally against this?

Mr. Siddon: He has.

Mr. Waddell: If he takes this position, I ask hon. members to my right who are aiding and abetting separatism why their leader has not stood up and repudiated certain reported remarks.

Mr. Siddon: He has.

Mr. Waddell: If the hon. member will give me a chance, let me ask why the former prime minister, who is the leader of the Conservative party, has not stood up and repudiated the remarks—or denied them—which are reported in the Vancouver Sun of Saturday, October 25. The hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) was reported to have said, and I quote:

I think (Western Canada) should separate if there's no other way of resolving the situation. If we are going to keep Canada together, the four western provinces . . . should speak as one.

Then the hon. member advocated a western parliament. What is a western parliament?

This is the Parliament of Canada. Such remarks aid and abet the forces of separatism in western Canada, and that has never been denied. I invite the former Prime Minister to rise on a question of privilege tomorrow and deny this statement.

Mr. Kempling: He will do it tomorrow.

Mr. Waddell: Let him do it tomorrow.

Mr. Lalonde: Tomorrow is Saturday.

Mr. Waddell: Let him do it on Monday.

Lest I be accused of letting hon. members opposite off lightly, let me say that we saw earlier this year a government willing to negotiate and undertake the co-operation and restraint necessary to keep our country together. I speak about its efforts in Quebec. If the Liberals would spend half the amount of effort in negotiations with the producing provinces they spent in trying to woo Quebec, I think the situation would be different. Instead, it seems to me—I say this earnestly, and I hope I am wrong—they are pushing for a fight. There is what Richard Gwyn described in his book as the Prime Minister's white anger and his determination to put his opponent down at all costs and never give up. The Arab junket has just topped this off. The people of the west now fundamentally distrust the Prime Minister, and I call upon the Prime Minister either to resign for the good of the country soon or to come to western Canada and be prepared to speak to and with, and not lecture or hector, Canadians who are living in the west.

Instead of a falcon for Sheik Yamani what we need is a dove from the Prime Minister to the Canadians in western Canada. The alternative is a prolongation of this family fight, and no one wins a family fight.

This is not the way we used to do things in Canada. We Canadians have prided ourselves on our ability to compromise, to reason, and to look at the greater interests of our country. Compromise and co-operation have been the Canadian tradition. What we have been seeing in the last year is not the Canadian tradition. I feel that in invoking the Petroleum Administration Act this present government is departing not only from the Canadian tradition but also from its own traditions and policies.

The late Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson developed a policy called co-operative federalism. I would like to take a moment today to talk about co-operative federalism, and to emphasize how relevant it is these days, as it was relevant to the problems of the sixties. The spirit of compromise on which it was based was very much a reflection of Mr. Pearson's own style. As a good diplomat he recognized that issues were not just black or white and that his party did not have a monopoly on wisdom. Somebody should tell the present Prime Minister that humility and tolerance of people's weaknesses can be a source of inner strength.

In this spirit, in the throne speech debate of February, 1964, then Prime Minister Pearson stressed that only through constant co-operation and consultation could the new rising demands of Quebec be resolved. I want to quote, especially for hon. members opposite, what Mr. Pearson said at that time. As reported in Hansard for February 20, 1964, at page 64 he said this:

The solution, on the essential foundation which I have mentioned, to our problems must be found in what we call co-operative federalism. That means to me that the federal government must of course always seek the approval of provincial governments, when that is necessary under our constitution, before decisions are made. That is obvious. But there must also be consultation on matters which, while within the jurisdiction of the federal government, are shared constitutionally with provincial governments, or are of such great and immediate importance to provincial governments that, for good results, provincial support and co-operation must be obtained.

Later in that speech he said, and I quote from page 65:

The issue is not, and must not, become "provincial rights" versus "Canada first". These slogans and any others which represent competing approaches to national unity are dangerous and could be destroying; and they misrepresent the actual position.

Of all the critical issues that were resolved through the spirit of co-operative federalism none was more important than the pension plan dispute of 1964. With strong opposition from Quebec and the crisis of confederation reaching a peak in those days, Pearson attempted to begin the healing process with a major speech on April 14 during the budget debate. In that speech he attempted to convince both English and French Canadians that only through compromise could conflicting goals be harmonized and the unity of the country preserved.

● (1250)

I should like to quote from that speech as reported in Hansard of April 14, 1964, at page 2142. It reads in part:

I refer to a problem which is very much in our minds and indeed in our hearts: the problem of Canadian unity; the problem of unity in a federation; the problem of federalism, which is basic to our growth, basic to our strength; basic to our very survival.

Politically that problem, as in every federal state, is the necessity for having a central government strong enough in jurisdiction, in resources and in resolve to discharge its responsibilities to all the people, but a central government which will not encroach on the jurisdiction of the provinces or which acts so as to prejudice their ability to do their job within their jurisdiction. The reconciliation of these two things is not easy.

Then, at page 2145 of Hansard, he went on to say this:

—there must be co-operation for progress in order to avoid a conflict that would destroy us.—

—without this co-operation and understanding, in the face of new pressures, tensions and problems arising out of growth and change and the quiet revolutions, the nation that our forefathers founded and built, might disintegrate and disappear. We must do nothing, either by provocation or by weakness or by stubborn unawareness of the basic nature of our federalism or by words or actions based on prejudice or fear, to bring about that weakening or disappearance.

Compare these words with the Prime Minister showing up in Winnipeg—

An hon. Member: Regina.

Mr. Waddell: —showing up in Regina and telling Canadians living in western Canada that they were hysterical.

An hon. Member: Nobody is hysterical in Winnipeg.

Mr. Waddell: Finally, Mr. Pearson concluded with the following words:

It is the task of parliament, without regard to party; it is the challenge of statesmanship rising above faction, to find the solutions to our problems which are now more serious and more difficult than any we have faced in peacetime since 1867. We must find these solutions by agreement, not force them by compulsion. We cannot hope to find such agreement in our country if we cannot find a basis for it in our Parliament.

We have a lot to learn from these words. We now have a not so quiet revolution in western Canada. The west is booming economically and, strangely, while becoming wealthier, the west is becoming angry.

Pearson also once said:

We must bring about a co-operative federalism, that is to say, a federalism free from any spirit of unacceptable centralization.

Unacceptable centralization, power for the sake of power, that is what scares the west right now. A good example of this is in the budget and in the energy policy, and that is the proposed western development fund, a $4 billion fund taken from western resources to be managed by Ottawa's bureaucrats, for western Canadians. That is not co-operative federalism at all.

Members opposite should realize that the new west is proud. I have already mentioned the Prime Minister's speech in Regina. That is not co-operative federalism. Members opposite should realize that the west is not monolithic. There is not only Premier Lougheed in Alberta, there is also Grant Notley. He has been saying some things in a reasonable way. I say this to my friend, there are voices in western Canada other than the voices over here to my right of members who are apologists for the multinational oil companies.

Not all westerners are as negative as Premier Bill Bennett of British Columbia. David Barrett, the next premier of British Columbia, I hope, has advocated public ownership of the oil companies, and he carries on in what I think is the older B.C. tradition that the younger Bennett's father knew but the younger Bennett has forgotten. When Dave Barrett speaks he speaks about Canadians who live in British Columbia, but the emphasis is on Canadians first.

I did a survey in my riding, as many hon. members have done, which I sent out in my householder. I received a number of replies. It is interesting to see—and I have checked this with some of the members from Ontario—that a lot of things are very similar. The constitution is not a big issue. The bread and butter issues, such as the budget, the energy policy and so on, are the more popular issues. Here is one letter which says:

I resent being called westerners. Who are Canadians then, only Ontario? I do not mind paying more to help. I resent it all being spent in the east.

There is a feeling of partnership, a feeling of concern amongst the ordinary people, not the fascist oil company types who are heading and funding the separatist movement in Alberta right now, but among the real, ordinary people. There is a concern there that they be Canadians first. I want to stand up as a member from British Columbia, with members from the west around me, and say strongly that we are totally against any talk or movement for separatism in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: However, I want to say also that this will not stop us from standing up at every opportunity—as hon. members will learn after lunch—and defending the interests of our provinces, our regions, and of Canadians living in the west.

The invocation of the Petroleum Administration Act and the slide into a real fight with Alberta, it seems to me, is also inconsistent with the Prime Minister's own writings. The Prime Minister wrote in his better days, in 1964, the following words. He wrote this in a tract called "Federalism, Nationalism, Reason", 1964, in "Future of Canadian Federalism":

Federalism is by its very essence a compromise and a pact. It is a compromise in a sense that when national consensus on all things is not desirable or cannot readily obtain, the area of consensus is reduced in order that consensus on some things be reached. It is a pact or quasi-treaty, in the sense of the terms of that compromise cannot be changed unilaterally. That is not to say that the terms are fixed forever; but only that in changing them, every effort must be made not to destroy the consensus on which the federated nation rests.

Those words were echoed in the "Canadian Forum" in 1964 by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). Therefore, the principles are there. We must return, in my view, to the spirit of co-operative federalism in this country, and that means three things. First, it means that officials from Ottawa and Alberta must meet. Not only must they meet, Mr. Speaker—and I say this to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde)—but they must meet, in professor Donald Smiley's words of Queen's University—

Mr. Clark: York University.

Mr. Waddell: —when he talks about co-operative federalism being a high degree of pragmatism, knowing that there cannot be any assumptions by federal officials that decisions by the central government are somehow inherently better or more legitimate than those of the provinces. I feel that the officials in the minister's department and officials in Alberta should, for the good of Canada, be more objective and work in the way described by professor Smiley.

Second, the Prime Minister must turn his JetStar around and park it on the tarmac of Edmonton airport, Regina airport or Vancouver airport, preferably on all three, and he must stay there until he has an understanding with the western governments. He must come back from Arabia.

Third, the Leader of the Opposition must rise above expedience and stop fanning the fires of separatism. He must make a strong statement in the House against it.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue my speech on the revocation of the Petroleum Administration Act proclamation. I have talked about Canadian co-operative federalism, and now I want to turn to a matter which happened the other day in the House. I asked the Prime Minister a question on the day after the announcement by Premier Lougheed of his intention to cut back oil supplies. As some members might have noticed, sometimes when a question is too difficult for the Prime Minister, or when he does not want to answer, he responds with another question in kind. He responded by asking me a question on my party's stand on revenue-sharing. In other words, how would we split the pie, what would we do? I should like to take some time now to answer that question and, in so doing, deal with the government energy policy. I have described the minister as being like a boxer—kind of a fake to the left and still a few jabs from the right.

The Liberal policy is to raise oil prices and basically to give the industry the windfall profits. Canadianization is simply a clever ruse. Like many people, I think I have figured out, after going through the extensive document called "The National Energy Program," exactly how it works. The events of the last couple of days have confirmed my suspicions.

Large companies such as Imperial or Shell will issue more shares to Canadian investors so that they become "a Canadian company", thus eligible for those lovely and ample government handouts sprinkled throughout "The National Energy Program". Some of the Canadian companies that are now threatening to go on strike should read the program very carefully; they will find lots of handouts. Those large companies which will now have Canadian shareholders will still be controlled by foreign multinational oil companies. The government will be able to come to the House and say, "We have reached our goal—50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990". The Toronto Star will be so happy, it will be ecstatic, but the situation will not really have changed.

In other companies we will replace an American business elite with a Canadian one.

Mr. Wilson: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: I hear my friends to the right applauding that. Is it really what they want? Apparently so, apparently the minister wants it as well. We will simply replace the Rockefellers with the Conrad Blacks or the Bob Blairs.

Mr. Lalonde: With the T. C. Douglases.

Mr. Waddell: Who will benefit? Who will pay? Let me talk about that for a moment. The average Canadian family will pay through increased costs for heating oil and increased transit costs. As a matter of fact, their costs for heating and transit will double in the next three years. The average family will be paying something like $350. To be more precise, to use the government's own estimates, they estimate that the cost of home heating oil will double in three years. On page 106 of "The National Energy Program" figures there show that the costs will go from $640 to $1,280 per year.

• (1410)

In my constituency the average family on an average street will find that they have to pay more to heat their homes with natural gas. They can expect a 30-cent per thousand cubic feet tax on their December bill. By 1984 the price of gasoline for the average family will double to $1,248 per year. That will mean a $100 per month increase for the average family. By 1989 it will cost $50 to fill their tanks with gas. The drive from here to Quebec City and back will cost $100.

I think ordinary Canadians feel that oil prices must go up. They know that. But this government has put up the oil prices without any cushion at all for the average family, and without any help at all for them.

I turn to the Prime Minister's specific question: how would we in the NDP share this revenue? "The National Energy Program" says that an overwhelming share of Canada's current oil and gas production was found prior to the rapid rise in world prices, which started in 1973. Therefore, we would further reduce windfall profits from these projects to the industry. There was talk about the split in the revenues being 45, 45, 10, which was the old split. The provincial government's share would be 45 per cent, 45 per cent would go to the oil companies, and 10 per cent to the federal government. What we would do is change the split totally. It would be more like 45 per cent to the federal government, 45 per cent to the province, and 10 per cent to the companies. If the government had any real guts, any real desire to get money back to the average person and away from the big companies, this is what they would do, too.

We would get even more money by developing the tar sands under public ownership. The large multinational companies want a 15 per cent to 20 per cent profit out of the tar sands, and the minister is prepared to allow them to receive that. Looking at the take from those tar sands I say to average Canadians and to the minister that it is not that difficult. Here are the figures. If you raise it to $60, or $90 a barrel, as I believe it will rise to eventually, in 1990, multiply that by 140,000 barrels a day times 360 days over a period of 25 years and you will see the vast amounts of money that will be generated.

The minister is prepared to let the multinational oil companies develop those tar sands, and he confirms that in his energy policy. I am well aware of the difference between heavy oil and the tar sands. I remind the minister that people up there talk about the tar sands as being heavy oil as well. So there are vast amounts of money involved. That is our future up there in oil supplies and it looks now as if the government is prepared—$40 million Marc over there is prepared—to let the foreign multinationals develop that while at the same time giving the illusion that somehow this Canadianization will really help the average person.

I suggest we could give the money back to the people in a number of ways. One way to do this is obvious. It is by way of a cost of living allowance to families in order to get some cash right back to them so that they can keep up with the increased prices I have mentioned. Another method is to have a federal-provincial fund for energy development, not just a federal boondoggle, not a western development fund run by Ottawa bureaucrats for westerners but a genuine fund that will have federal and provincial co-operation.

I was in Vancouver last weekend where I was working in the municipal elections. I think Vancouver is very fortunate to have Mr. Michael Harcourt as the new mayor of Vancouver.

An hon. Member: Is he a Conservative?

Mr. Waddell: No, he is not a Conservative, I can tell you that. He is a proponent, and he was throughout the election—and this may have got him elected—of using some federal-provincial funds for rapid transit. In my city there is no rapid transit and we must get some funds there. There must be money for alternate energy. The people are ready for that.

Last night on my way home I was thinking about the minister giving $40 million to Imperial Oil, and he has put $20 million into the Enertech Corporation for alternate energy. He is willing to loan twice as much to Imperial Oil as he is prepared to put into alternate energy. Finally, money could be given to local citizens to set up neighbourhood energy programs where real conservation could take place at the local level, which is ultimately where these things must work.

Another point I wish to make in answer to the Prime Minister's question is that—

Mr. Lalonde: Tell us what the price would be.

Mr. Waddell: —we would take over the three largest foreign multinational oil companies under public ownership. We would set out a concrete commitment, not just this vague promise by the Liberals that something may happen in the future, but a concrete commitment with a timetable, and that could be paid out of future increases.

The minister asked me about oil prices. Yes, the price of oil would go up.

Mr. Lalonde: How much?

Mr. Waddell: The price of oil would go up.

Mr. Lalonde: What is the reference?

Mr. Waddell: I told the minister it would be 45, 45, 10.

Mr. Lalonde: Of what?

Mr. Waddell: Ten per cent would go to the oil companies, not the other way around, the way the minister talks about.

Mr. Speaker, instead of giving $9 out of $10 in public money to the private companies for drilling grants, as the program proposes, we would add an extra dollar to that and give all the money to Petro-Canada to do the drilling. Then the oil and gas that are discovered would be owned by the people.

Let me explain a little more. What this policy says is that if you are a fairly well-off taxpayer you can give $100 into a drilling fund, you will receive back $80 as a grant and you receive another $12 in tax write-offs. So $92 out of $100 is really paid for by the government. If the government will forgo that revenue why does the government not get something out of it? Why does it not get the ownership out of it? That, to my mind, would make sense as a policy.

As I said, we have been watching the government's words closely as compared with their actions. One of the actions taken was the Arctic pilot project. That is a new notion of government policy where gas will be taken by Petro-Canada and other companies from Melville Island in the western Arctic through the Northwest Passage down to a port in Quebec or Nova Scotia. That depends on which minister wins the battle for the port. The point is that the gas will then be exported to the United States. The boats that bring the product down will be foreign-built and manned by foreigners. Is that an industrial strategy as part of a national energy policy? It seems to me we have not changed anything if we continue with projects like that. That is one of the problems with this energy policy as it is set out.

Finally, there is no better example of the problem of resource sell-out than the pre-build of the pipeline. There it all is: short-term jobs and export of natural resources. And who benefits? The American multinational companies. What I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, is that if this Petroleum Administration Act is to be invoked—what I have called the War Measures Act of the oil war, if you like—then Canadians will want to see something in return. Canadians want to see a sparkling energy policy which would make the country self-sufficient and ensure that the ordinary Canadian benefits.

• (1420)

Mr. Malone: The "Baby Duck" of oil.

Mr. Waddell: In conclusion, there will be other speakers who will not speak in ignorance like my friend here next to me, but with some substance about energy in agriculture, energy in Atlantic Canada, about an industrial strategy tied to an energy policy, about gas exploration and gas exports. The Petroleum Administration Act is against our better traditions. Those traditions are based on co-operative federalism and on compromise. There are alternatives, but the Liberal government has refused to consider them. I have suggested some alternatives with regard to negotiation and dealing differently with the western provinces through a joint provincial-federal development fund.

This is the energy policy of our generation and it will be the crisis of the next five or ten years. To me this energy policy is like a Christmas present which, when it is unwrapped, turns out to be a gift to those who have always benefited. I refer to the business establishment in Canada. Although this time it is the Canadian business establishment, nonetheless, it is a policy that does not benefit the ordinary Canadian.

Mr. Lalonde: Would the hon. member permit one short question?

Mr. Waddell: Yes.

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. member referred to higher prices under his own scheme. Would he tell the House what he has in mind? Is it an international price, a percentage of the international price, or a price determined on Canadian costs?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister knows, I and my party have never agreed with the concept of moving to international prices. That is the OPEC price and it is an artificial price. Moving to the world price, which is the reason why my friends to the right lost the last election, would cause dramatic problems in Ontario and the other provinces in terms of layoffs and soon. Nevertheless, the price must move up.

We would like to see a made-in-Canada price, and I would remind the minister that it was my party which coined that term. This price would be a composite of the costs of production, reasonable profit for the companies and, of course, we would take extensive steps toward public ownership. This is the direction the government intends to take, but there would not be the extra cost and, therefore, prices could be held down somewhat lower than the minister suggests. The producing provinces would receive their fair share, which I think they are approaching now.

However, there would be more of a share for the federal government which, as I said in my speech, would be recycled quite dramatically and quite directly back to low and middle-income families who need the money because of increased costs.

Mr. Kaplan: Would the hon. member permit another short question?

Mr. Waddell: Yes.

Mr. Kaplan: In the hon. member's suggestion that Imperial Oil should be taken over, is he recommending that it be taken over by being purchased at its fair market value, or does the hon. member have some other formula in mind for acquiring that valuable company's assets?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is suggesting some sort of expropriation without reimbursing Imperial Oil any money, that is absurd.

Mr. Kaplan: How much?

Mr. Waddell: It is not my party which has forced Imperial Oil's shares down and made them more available on the market; it is government policy. The government will have to make a move if it really wants to take control through some sort of legislation which will require, for example, the selling of more treasury shares. These shares will not be sold to Canadian citizens at large, but the government would have to acquire enough shares to control the company.

I suggested in my speech that what the government is trying to do is to force this company to sell shares to Canadians, but it will still be controlled by Exxon in the United States. That is the government's policy. My policy would be to force Imperial Oil to give control to the Canadian government.

Mr. Malone: Give it to the government. Never trust people.

Mr. Miller: You should have done it 15 years ago.

Mr. Waddell: If the government had made this move 15 years ago, as my friend suggests, it could have saved this country a lot of money.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, before I commence my remarks on the debate on the Petroleum Administration Act, I feel I have to respond to the very ill-founded comments made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). He made some comments in relation to the activities of my leader in connection with the whole problem of western separation. Far from, to use the hon. member's words, "aiding and abetting western separation", the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has been working very hard at redirecting the efforts and activities of the people in the west who are leaning toward separation toward building this country and not ripping it apart.

I think it is incredible that this misstatement of fact would come from a member of a party which refused to play an active role in the No committee during the Quebec referendum. Just to remind my hon. friend, during that referendum the Leader of the Opposition played a very active role in the province of Quebec, and, I believe, made a very positive contribution to the success of the referendum of May 20. To slander my leader in the House when he is not here to answer is completely unforgivable.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was here this morning. He was in the lobby, he heard my remarks when they were made, and he could have taken his seat. Since he did not, I will ask the hon. member simply to stand up and repudiate the comments as reported in the Vancouver Sun of October 25, 1980. The hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) advocated that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I still challenge the hon. member to withdraw his comments with regard to the Leader of the Opposition. I will not comment on any speculative press story. I was referring to the statement the hon. member made with regard to my leader.

Mr. Waddell: It was not a speculative story.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I absolutely repudiate what the hon. member is stating here, that the Conservative party—

Mr. Malone: You resemble that statement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair is prepared to recognize the hon. member if he seeks the floor on a point of order, but what he is doing at the moment is entering into debate. I have a responsibility to distinguish between the two. If the hon. member wishes to raise a point of order which is with reference to the Standing Orders, I will recognize the hon. member, but I cannot allow him simply to enter into the debate at his own will.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the facts stand alone. The destructive role played by the Conservative party in western Canada is the responsibility of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The hon. member for Etobicoke.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Etobicoke Centre.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, do not forget the Centre because I have a lot of opposition to the north and to the south of me in Etobicoke, but I would like to concentrate on the Centre, and we will take the other two areas the next time around.

An hon. Member: We will squeeze you out of there.

Mr. Wilson: I would like to turn to the debate at hand which is on the Petroleum Administration Act, with regard to the unilateral imposition of prices on oil and natural gas.

This particular portion of the debate is on the question of oil. Both clauses 36 and 52 of the Petroleum Administration Act provide for the unilateral imposition of a price if no agreement can be reached. We in the House must consider the impact of this imposition of establishing maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil as it relates to the conditions which prevail in the international market as well as to the probable effect it will have on the producers and consumers in Canada.

• (1430)

Both my friends from the New Democratic Party and representatives from our party have sought revocation of this price action. Before discussing the impact on the consumer and the producer, I think we should pause for a moment and consider why we are here. We should ask why we are having this debate. We should ask why this government was unable to reach agreement with the producing provinces prior to setting this unilateral price.

In December, 1979, our government was able to reach an agreement with the province of Alberta, after tough and protracted difficult negotiations, but we were able to reach agreement. The minister of energy for the province of Alberta has referred to this on many occasions, and the minister is very well aware of that. It has been the base from which they have negotiated in the province of Alberta. Let me remind the House that that agreement was reached after a series of difficult negotiations. Then the election happened. Since then we have had a display of attempts to reach some agreement between the two levels of government.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have been involved, but we have had no real documentation of the efforts of these two gentlemen in achieving agreement. On the other hand we have had a very full documentation from the minister of energy for the province of Alberta. He has outlined meetings he had with the minister on May 13, June 18 and 19, and later with the Prime Minister in July. Finally there were a couple of meetings in October. Mr. Leitch outlines in full detail the contents of the discussions and the negotiations which took place during the course of that time.

I am not here to claim that Mr. Leitch's recounting of these negotiations is the correct one, but it is the only one on the record. Today I set out a challenge to the minister to place on the record his version of the negotiations. Without that, we have only the one version. As long as that happens, the people of Canada and this House are going to be missing an important part of the negotiations which bear very directly on what we are talking about here today.

It is in the essence of any federation to deal and to compromise, to negotiate and to co-operate to reach agreement between the different partners. The essence of this legislation is that the federal and provincial governments must reach some agreement. In not reaching some agreement, they must display to the people of Canada an honest effort to reach agreement. Otherwise, the Petroleum Administration Act or this federation itself becomes a charade whereby the senior level of government, the federal government, can override the junior partners in confederation.

In place of the Petroleum Administration Act we have complete control by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and in place of a true confederation we have a centralist government here if this activity is allowed to continue further. If we have unilateral action on the price of oil, without any attempt at negotiations, I ask myself and I ask the House where do we go next? What is our next step? Where will we next see unilateral imposition of the will of one level of government? Confederation is a partnership. We must take action based on compromise and conciliation. We must work hard at that in a country as diverse as Canada. Those agreements are not going to come easily. But attempts must be made in a serious and honest manner. Any unilateral action will seriously damage the fabric of confederation. We have seen today what is happening in the whole area of energy policy.

Over the past two or three months we have seen the same sort of action taking place in the constitutional debate. We cannot let this go on any further. This is the principal reason why we are here today debating this motion. In my opinion, the government is taking advantage of the Petroleum Administration Act to force its will on the people of Canada without making a proper effort at negotiation.

In order to support that statement I refer to a document, the infamous August 30 leaked cabinet document, outlining the negotiations leading up to the first ministers' conference on the constitution. At page 43 the statement was made:

> The political climate in Canada is likely to be poisoned by a major energy conflict throughout the fall of this year and at least the early months of next year.

Clearly there was no expectation, and undoubtedly no efforts at achieving a satisfactory result in the energy negotiations. This act should only be used in the most unique and emergency circumstances when all efforts have failed, after serious efforts have been made, to seek agreement. Only when that has happened should this portion of the Petroleum Administration Act be invoked.

Let us now look to the impact of the act. That is what we were requested to do under the terms of the act in this debate. Consumers are being asked to pay $1 more for a gallon of gasoline in the next three to four years. But what is the consumer getting for this $1 more? We know what the short-term effects of that will be. The consumer will be paying vastly more, and most of it will be going into the coffers of the federal government. As I said before in this House, we see here a massive tax grab. When we compare what is attempted here under this energy policy with the policy which was set out by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), we see a tax grab which is fully three times as great as that in the December budget. That is a huge tax increase.

On this point let me just destroy a myth which has been allowed to grow over the last two or three weeks. The minister and the Prime Minister on many occasions have referred to the federal share rising from about 10 per cent or 11 per cent to 24 per cent. That statement is wrong. It is misleading. It is deceitful and it is dishonest. The percentage figure is far larger than that. Today there is no doubt the federal government gets about 10 per cent to 12 per cent of the revenues. Premier Lougheed has accepted the fact the federal government must gain a greater degree of revenue from energy in this country. But in the December budget the figure was going to move to 24 per cent.

For the first little while after this budget came out I was scratching my head because I could not understand, with this far higher tax grab by this government, that we have seen the figure go up to only 24 per cent. Then I put the figures down on paper. It s not 24 per cent, the figure is about 48 per cent. The percentage figure is somewhere between 45 per cent and 50 per cent depending on the different assumptions you want to make. This has happened because the minister has conveniently left out the petroleum compensation charge and the Canadian equity ownership account charge, which will surely be drawn upon in the coming year. There are also some very unrealistic assumptions concerning the sale of natural gas to the United States, both in terms of price and volume. This has the effect of overstating the position which the industry and the federal government will be taking, as well as understanding the position of the provinces.

Let us hear no more of the 24 per cent figure. The figure is clearly of the order of 45 per cent to 50 per cent, which is fully double that in the statement. The people of Canada, when they heard this figure, said it was a reasonable policy. It is clear that we have a dispute today because the figure is far more than the 24 per cent that is set out in the program.

● (1440)

One other reason for the dispute today is that at the Prime Minister's press conference of July 25 he was asked what is a reasonable figure for the province of Alberta. He said, "We say that it would be fairer if Alberta reduced its take, say in the order of 40 per cent". The figure for the province of Alberta, again depending on assumptions, is somewhere between 30 per cent and 35 per cent. We have two sets of facts here. I say it is one set of facts and one set of fiction.

Let us look again to the impact on Canadian consumers and producers. The objectives of this program, some of which are set out specifically in the program, and some of which are implicit, are as follows. First, security of supply; second, Canadianization; third, economic development. Those are all mentioned quite specifically. Fourth, that any energy policy should work to bind this country together and not pull it apart. That should be a fundamental objective for all of the other three objectives as well.

How is this energy policy contributing to security of supply? We read of Mr. Lyons, the president of Ocelot Industries, saying, and I quote:

> —Canadian exploration will be reduced and funds allocated to other projects.

Sulpetro, a good Canadian company, says "The program will reduce the company's cash flow, assets and availability to general explorations funds." Simmons Drilling rigs will probably be moved to the United States.

Just prior to question period this morning, I had a discussion with representatives of the Canadian Association of Oil Drilling Companies. They told me that 66 rigs will be moving to the United States over the next few months, 79 rigs have been idled through the cancellation of long-term contracts, and 50 additional contracts have been cancelled for winter drilling this month.

What is more far-reaching than this, because drilling contracts are a clear leading indicator of activity in the energy business, is that no commitments have been made for next summer. Around this time of the year the drilling companies normally expect to have about 75 per cent of their rigs spoken for. That is the state of confidence in the oil and gas industry today. It is reflected directly in the outlook for business for the drilling companies in this country.

I have spoken to a number of other companies, some of which have not been quoted in the papers. There is a clear indication that we will be seeing less exploration funds, in some cases up to 50 per cent less, being spent in this country next year.

I ask the minister why he appears to have written off the conventional sources of oil in this country. About two years ago in west Pembina in western Canada, there was a very significant oil strike. It was in an area which had been drilled quite extensively and had been a very successful producing field. Rather than stay at the 5,000 foot level where the previous field had been found, the companies drilled down to about 10,000 feet and found the new west Pembina field. Therefore we should not be writing off conventional sources of oil in this country. Rather, we should be encouraging conventional exploration and development, and that is far from what is happening with this energy program.

I recall the 1973-74 period when we had the last major conflict between the federal government and the producing provinces. During that period we lost some very valuable time, about one full year, of exploration activity. A lot of rigs went south and spent their time finding oil in the United States. What is different between now and then is that our oil export versus our oil import balance is considerably different. We were in balance. At that time we were exporting about the same as we were importing. In fact at that time we had a surplus in our oil business of about $1 billion. Today we have a deficit of $4 billion. To lose this valuable time at a period when international oil prices are rising, exposes us to greater imports and greater uncertainty of supply. It is sheer folly, and will have a major impact on consumers in the years ahead.

To top it off, as the House well knows, this week we had the announced cancellation of the Cold Lake oil sands project, which has been resurrected on a short-term basis by a loan from the federal government. This is one of the most serious elements of the fallout from this very negative energy policy. The oil sands will be producing about 50 per cent of the oil requirements of the country in ten years' time. Those are the figures set out in the national energy program. They may well be producing to a greater percentage, depending on what happens with conventional oil discoveries, which are not very favourable at this time.

These projects take about six to seven years to bring on stream. With any delays, we risk losing all the good, talented Canadian people who will be drawn to similar projects in other countries. We stand to lose a tremendous amount of money through escalating costs of these programs if delays take place. It is only through agreement on the total conventional oil and oil sands package that we will get the oil industry doing the job it should be doing, which is finding oil to improve security of supply in this country. Therefore, it is essential that we reach total agreement as quickly as we can.

Discussion of oil sands projects leads me to the next point, the question of jobs or economic development. One of the most serious effects of the delay of the oil sands projects is on economic development. We have seen, through figures which have been pulled together by major participants in both the Alsands and Cold Lake projects, an analysis of the total economic impact of the oil sands projects. Let me read this into the record.

The province of Alberta, depending on the calculation you use, will receive about 38 per cent to 42 per cent of the economic impact of these projects, the province of Ontario anywhere from 25 per cent to 28 per cent, the province of Quebec about 10 per cent, and other provinces somewhat less. The point is, and it is made clear by those figures, that the economic impact in Alberta is about equivalent to the economic impact that is felt and enjoyed by other provinces in this country, particularly Ontario and Quebec.

The Canadian Petroleum Association estimates that the impact of one Alsands development or one Cold Lake development will be close to $25 billion. About one quarter of that will go to the province of Ontario and another quarter to other provinces outside the province of Alberta. We in Ontario benefit through the purchase of iron and steel, metal fabrication and machinery. Also, high technology instrumentation and services are provided from this part of the country.

• (1450)

A number of other areas receive great benefit from activity not just in oil sands projects but also in other parts of the oil business in western Canada. Fahramet of Orillia received some major benefits through the sale of heat corrosion abrasive resistant castings used in the petrochemical industry. Simmons Drilling buys a vast number of its vehicles from eastern Canada, and if it is going to move its drill rigs south of the border, instead of going to Canadian manufacturers in Ontario and Quebec, that business will end up going to the United States.

A number of companies have reduced hiring projections for next year by as much as 50 per cent to 60 per cent. Grey-Mak Well Supplies, now the largest independent oil well casing manufacturer in Canada, has opened up a plant in the United States because it is concerned about the outlook for business in this country. There is no doubt that uncertainty, as well as the less attractive economics of the industry, have caused and will cause a great deal of economic unease and a turndown in business not just in western Canada but throughout this country, and it is to this that we must address ourselves when considering the impact on consumers, because many consumers will lose their jobs. Many will find that they will not work overtime hours.

Let me refer back to comments I was making about oil drilling companies. These companies move around many of the small towns in Alberta, and they produce business not just in the oil drilling field but also in various aspects of the communities of western Canada. That is causing a great deal of uncertainty and, I might say, a great deal of anger with respect to what has happened to the business these people have enjoyed over the past few years. I am not referring to big, major companies, but to small corner stores, Harvey's hamburger type stores, and drycleaning stores. Those are the businesses which are being affected in western Canada by this energy policy.

I remind hon. members that 12 per cent of the total output of the Canadian steel industry is involved in supplying the requirements of the exploration and development industry in this country.

Another aspect, on the economic side of the national energy program we have before us today, is that most experts in the industry and on the periphery of the industry are projecting that we will be importing a larger amount of oil in the months and years ahead under this program. What does this mean in numbers we can all understand? It means that we will be spending Canadian dollars to buy oil from Saudi Arabia. We have seen what has been happening this week in Saudi Arabia. We will also be spending Canadian dollars to buy oil from Mexico and Venezuela. We import 425,000 barrels of oil a day. That translates into a figure of about $6.2 billion annually. However, looking at it from the standpoint of the individual, that works out to about $270 per person, or about $1,000 per family being spent outside this country to create jobs in Saudi Arabia, Mexico and Venezuela, but not here when we can be doing it right here in Canada.

The Bank of Montreal projected that in about five years that $6.2 billion figure will increase to about $11 billion to $16 billion. On a per person basis every man, woman and child will be spending $475 to $700 or, in terms of a family, $1,600 to about $2,500, to create jobs in other countries when we could be doing it here in Canada. That is opportunity lost. It means that jobs which are solely needed here, particularly when we are facing unemployment in the order of one million people this winter, are being exported to other countries.

What we have here in the national energy program is the worst of all worlds. As consumers we are paying high prices. We are paying one dollar more for a gallon of gasoline, but we are not getting economic growth or security of supply to offset that major cost. We are not seeing economic growth to offset the negative impact which will be felt. We are having deadweight high prices. They are not dynamic high prices which would create jobs in this part of the world.

I see that you are signalling to me, Mr. Speaker. I assumed that the time consumed by the frivolous points of order of members of the New Democratic Party would not be taken from my time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): We do not have a Standing Order which covers that. Perhaps we could resolve the matter by suggesting that the hon. member take another couple of minutes, and then I will recognize another hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Let me comment very briefly on two other aspects of this policy. The first is Canadian ownership. We on this side of the House are very much in favour of increasing Canadian ownership of the oil and gas industry, and we were moving in that direction back in December.

Mr. Lalonde: When? How?

Mr. Wilson: This was back in December, 1979. It is very clear. The minister knows that. He should check with his officials. If he did, he would find out what we were doing. Canadian independents are very much weakened by this energy program. Multinationals can survive, but Canadian independents are being forced to go south of the border. The high taxes involved hit them harder than multinationals. In order that the government receives its 45 per cent to 50 per cent of the total industry revenue take, the government has hit independent companies much harder than it has hit the multinationals. That does not make sense to me. There has to be a better way. We just cannot afford to have these companies drawn away by much higher payouts. The netbacks on oil exploration are $9.50 in Canada versus $25. Those figures were quite clear before the budget, and the budget will widen the disparities between this country and the United States in the years ahead.

The overriding and chief objective any energy policy should have is Canadian unity. We must use energy policy to bring the east and the west together and not to drive them apart. The huge economic opportunity which is available through development of our energy reserves can bind this country together and lead to a tremendous burst of economic activity which would have a very positive effect and direct people away from any separatist tendencies and toward building this country to be a much stronger and viable one than it is today. However, the result of this policy will be that we will drive parts of the country away from each other.

The government is playing on divisions between the east and the west. Oil sands projects have been deferred, and that will lead to reduced economic opportunity here in eastern Canada. The energy policy can be a means of reducing western alienation. Let us not encourage it by taking actions which appear to attack different parts of the country without giving them a clear opportunity to have their voices heard in Ottawa through a proper series of negotiations, not the type of negotiations which appear to have taken place under the auspices of the minister.

In conclusion, let me say that there are five areas in which this energy policy is wanting: security of supply, job creation, Canadianization, a stronger Canada and—the part I was unable to cover—the very serious international situation. I urge that this House revoke the unilateral imposition of prices and force the government to return to the negotiating table with the province of Alberta and develop a policy which will be acceptable, because only through developing a policy which is acceptable to all parts of this country will we create the appropriate environment for the full development of our energy resources. Only then can Canada achieve its full potential as a strong country economically, secure in its oil supply and united in its purpose.

● (1500)

Mr. Skelly: Would the previous speaker entertain a short question, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The difficulty is that the hon. member's time has now expired. I can permit a question and an answer only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about the preliminary remarks of the previous speaker and I wonder if he might not agree that responsibility should be borne for such remarks as "I think western Canada should separate" when they are made by a member of that party. I think the leader of the party has that responsibility. In the context of the hon. member's speech, it is very important for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) to take the responsibility of denouncing such remarks and bringing his member into line. I respect a decision made by the previous leader of the hon. member's party when he took the former hon. member for Moncton to task, and eventually caused him to sit as an independent member, because of some disparaging remarks he had made.

I would not ask him if the former prime minister, now Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, were not in fact completely responsible for this inflammatory and unjustified movement on behalf of the Conservative party which is going on in western Canada. I would be very interested in hearing the hon. member's views about his leader's responsibility for this program and these statements.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that there is anything more to say. I said clearly that my leader has taken a strong position against separation. He is trying to deflect the efforts of the people who are heading that way; he is trying to build this country, not rip it apart. Anyone who has read any of the speeches he has made should have absolutely no doubt about that. What puzzles me is how the members of the party to my left can suddenly become "holier than thou" when they took no part whatsoever in the work of the No committee in the Quebec referendum.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wilson: As soon as they show their colours, I will accept their comments.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) asked the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) a question on his "holier than thou" attitude—

An hon. Member: Will the hon. member for sanctimony please sit down?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is evident that I have to hear the hon. member who seeks the floor on a question of privilege. However, I just want to make it clear that this is going to prolong the debate, unless there is a reference to the Standing Orders or a serious question of privilege. I would ask hon. members to consider whether they want to pursue this type of debate, the obligation being upon the Chair to try to avoid it. I will recognize the hon. member but I want to warn him that he should try to stay on the question of privilege.

Mr. Waddell: The privilege is—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps the hon. member would let me continue. He will get his chance. My question of privilege is this. The hon. member is misrepresenting our position on the Quebec matter. My leader, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), made statements in Quebec and they are on the record. What the hon. member was asked and what he will not deny, and perhaps later the Leader of the Opposition might comment on it, concerns the remarks made by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) who had advocated the separatist option for western Canada. Would the hon. member deny that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I took the trouble to indicate to the hon. member that he should address himself to the question of privilege. The hon. member is entering into a debate. It is not a matter of personal preference on the part of the Chair. There is an obligation on the Chair to apply the Standing Orders. What the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is doing is entering into a debate, and my responsibility to the Chair obliges me to prevent him from doing so. I see the hon. member rising again. I will recognize him once more, but after that I will have to put an end to even recognizing him, whether it be on a question of privilege or a point of order.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I want to say something to end these comments. I accept your ruling and I hope the Leader of the Opposition will rise in his place on Monday morning and deal with the matter I have raised today.

An hon. Member: Tell Nystrom.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be participating in this debate today. Obviously I would have preferred it had the motions not been put forward, but since the two opposition parties have decided to put these motions forward, I am pleased that members on this side of the House will have a number of opportunities to speak again on this very important question of energy and to explain to the Canadian public the policy which is contained in the national energy program for the 1980s.

I am convinced that this debate will allow the government to obtain even more support for this program than it has had since the budget, and I must say I am very encouraged by the large degree of public support which has come from all areas of this country from ordinary people. I am not speaking here in particular about individuals who happen to occupy important positions, but rather about ordinary citizens on the street, families, farmers, fishermen, workers who drive to work, and people who provide for their family's needs. It is indeed encouraging that there should be a recognition in all areas of the country that what the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the government have announced in the budget and the national energy program appears to correspond to what the overwhelming majority of people in this country recognize as being a fair deal for all parts of Canada, a fair deal for the producing and consuming provinces and a fair deal for the consumers, even though the price of oil will rise.

Canadians are honest and mature enough to recognize that prices will have to rise, but they also recognize that the national government in the energy program has taken steps to try to cushion as much as possible the impact of those higher prices. Also, people recognize that this is a fair deal for the national government. What is recognized very clearly is the fact that never before has any Canadian government come forward with a declared intention to ensure that Canadians will have majority ownership and control of that strategic industry. The government has indicated its clear indication in this respect, and it is encouraging to see, not only a broad public support for this but recognition, even by industry, that it will have to adjust to this new reality in the years to come.

I want to indicate once more that the government will deal with this issue in a fair way but also in a determined way and we are convinced that this energy program is in the interest of Canadians all across this country.

Before embarking upon a discussion of the proclamations themselves, I should like to make one or two comments in relation to the speeches made by the previous two speakers. If the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) will allow me, I should like to raise with him a point about something he said regarding the Prime Minister of this country (Mr. Trudeau). I listened with great interest to his speech and I found in it many good points which should be borne in mind, particularly his reference to Mr. Pearson's speech in 1964. But I think the hon. member's statement was unworthy of him when he referred to the present Prime Minister and his travels abroad.

● (1510)

Mr. Waddell: What is he doing abroad?

Mr. Lalonde: I think it is time that members of the House and Canadians in general grew up with respect to the role of Canada in international affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Every other country in the world would give their right arms to have a prime minister like the Prime Minister of Canada, to have a prime minister who honours his country in international fields as much as our present Prime Minister.

Mr. Waddell: He should be here.

Mr. Lalonde: As hon. members know, this country is dependent upon international trade. Indeed, we are dependent more than most other countries on international trade. Our country is a medium country; it is not a small country, but it is certainly not what one would call a super power. Under the leadership of people like Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Pearson and the present Prime Minister, our country has acquired great stature internationally and has grown on the basis of its expanding international trade. The activities of the Prime Minister, ministers and members of Parliament abroad are very important and significant in this respect.

I remind the hon. member that a number of Canadian businessmen are currently in Saudi Arabia negotiating a further enlargement of trade and business between Saudi Arabia and Canada. This means jobs and money for Canadians. It is important the government commitment is very clear in that respect. The country depends just as much for its jobs on what it sells abroad as it does on what it sells at home. Rather than making those comments, I think the hon. member should have applauded the initiative taken by the Prime Minister in visiting that country at the present time to help Canada expand its trade.

In addition, the hon. member knows Canada will be host next year to an economic summit of major economic powers of the western world. One of the items to be discussed at that time will be North-South relations, relations between the more affluent countries and the poorer ones. One of the most important problems in this very difficult issue is the role OPEC countries play in that respect. OPEC countries have become an immense centre of wealth, wealth which is being syphoned away from industrialized, underdeveloped and developing countries. The developing countries are suffering the most. If we want to make some progress on this issue which is very vital to not only the future of this country but the future of the world, it is essential we have the co-operation, support and willing participation of OPEC countries. At the present time this is recognized by people all over the world, except apparently on opposition benches. I say that with regret. I hope I am misreading the situation and that all parties of the House will support, with great enthusiasm and strength, the efforts the government will make and is making at the present time to try to achieve progress on an issue which is as critical for the future of the world as any we have known in the last several decades.

Therefore, I urge the hon. member and the people of Canada to look at the situation, not in a parochial manner, but to grow up and see what role Canada is called upon to play in the world nowadays. In that sense, when the Prime Minister of Canada is travelling abroad, he is speaking for the whole country. We should be proud of it, like any other country in the world, when their heads of state or prime ministers are travelling abroad. I hope we will get this kind of support in the future.

I heard the hon. member indicate that the Prime Minister should be here, but I remind him that the government is going on, the country is going on, Parliament is going on.

Mr. Waddell: He should be in Edmonton.

Mr. Lalonde: I hear the member saying he should be in Edmonton. As I said in the House earlier, Premier Lougheed indicated that he did not want meetings at the first ministers' level at the present time; maybe later on, but he feels they should be taking place at the level of officials. We have agreed to that, and those meetings will take place. I hope they will be successful. Perhaps there will be meetings at the ministerial level and most likely at the first ministers' level eventually. We have indicated that we are willing to have those meetings at any time, but there is no point in tying the Prime Minister to Ottawa and saying, "Just wait in case you are called to go to Edmonton". There has been a clear indication by the Premier of Alberta that he does not want this type of meeting at this time, and it is as simple as that.

I do not want to spend too much time on this particular point, but I thought it was important to stress it in light of the opening remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. Also I listened with great interest to the comments of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and those of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) respecting the necessity of co-operation and working on the basis of an agreement. We subscribe to those principles. We subscribe to the principles enunciated by Mr. Pearson as Prime Minister in 1964. As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway indicated, the Prime Minister as a private citizen wrote something to the same effect—that it is essential, if this country is to survive, that there be co-operation between the levels of government. But obviously that co-operation must be a two-way street; there is no doubt about it. We have indicated in the past that we were ready to go to great lengths to make accommodation and to arrive at an agreement. In this particular instance we indicated that we wanted an agreement, that we preferred an agreement. Over the last six months we participated in many discussions.

Mr. Malone: You have not. That is false.

Mr. Lalonde: We negotiated in good faith. At the end of this whole series of negotiations there was one offer made by the government of Alberta. It was made around August 1 by Premier Lougheed when he was in Ottawa. Even then we persisted and made other offers; we changed our plans as indicated in the budget; when it was obvious that we could not reach an agreement, we used the powers under the Petroleum Administration Act; and we indicated that as soon as an agreement could be reached, we would be willing and ready to rescind those proclamations in order to work on the basis of an agreement. Preferably this country must work on the basis of an agreement, but there is also a responsibility upon the national government to speak for the whole country and to assume its responsibilities at particular times. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, among others, was saying that we should have had an agreement and that we should not have used this proclamation. But what does he propose? He proposes that instead we have a division of revenues between the levels of government of 45 per cent, 45 per cent and 10 per cent to the industry. He proposes that we have a made-in-Canada price that is not related to international prices. He also says there should be a federal-provincial fund, if I correctly remember, in which the revenues would be put together and divided. These are interesting proposals. But I tell the hon. member right now that there is no way the government of Alberta would agree to it. No way. It is also quite clear that the government of British Columbia would not agree. He should know that very well.

• (1520)

So what would he do? Would he use the Petroleum Administration Act and impose his will on those provinces because he cannot get an agreement? I tell him now he will never get an agreement from the governments of Alberta or British Columbia on the basis of the proposal he has put forward. One must be realistic in this respect and look at reality.

The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre said "Oh yes, that's great, we had an agreement last year in December." What about the poor independent member in the opposition in Edmonton who was thrown out of the Conservative party because he dared to say there might be something good in the federal constitutional proposals? That is a heresy of the worst sort in Edmonton these days. He was promptly kicked out of the caucus and his party because he breached the faith. Now he sits as an independent and ever since he has been in opposition he has tried unsuccessfully to get copies of any agreement, any memo, or any phone call recording any particular agreement with the Conservative government last year. He has not been able to get even one little sheet of paper.

I recommend to the member for Etobicoke Centre, since he has a short memory, that he take up for bedside reading a book published recently entitled "Discipline of Power" by Jeffrey Simpson. I suggest to him that he skip the pages in which reference is made to the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) calling the Premier of Alberta his friend. I do not think that should go into the record. I recommend he read chapter seven, which is entitled "Limits of Loyalty". It goes into all kinds of detail about copies of memos sent and everything that transpired in those negotiations. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can tell me whether that chapter is wrong. The conclusion of the chapter is clear—that right up to the day of the budget on December 11 there were still phone calls between the prime minister and the Premier of Alberta, that a committee of officials proposed a new formula for the energy self-sufficiency tax and that Mr. Lougheed had inserted four other points to be clarified. We read that maybe an agreement could be signed, and maybe not. That is the last we heard because, as we all know, the government was subsequently defeated. When the minister of finance came with his budget he had no agreement and as far as we know we could not find any record of any agreement anywhere except that there are some people who would like to rewrite history. Obviously, it would be great if they could rewrite it with the benefit of hindsight. Also, we can understand the reasons why they would like to rewrite it.

What is the situation at the present time? Action has been taken by the government to ensure that the price of oil and gas in this country will be firm over the next while, at least until there is an agreement reached with the government of Alberta and the other producing provinces. It spells out quite clearly what those prices will be, as was indicated at the time of the budget. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway says that is unprecedented. He says it is a drastic piece of legislation, a drastic action which should be used only in times of emergency and that we should have reached an agreement. I agree that we should have had an agreement. But it takes two to make an agreement, as he well knows. In order to make an agreement there must be willingness to compromise on both sides, otherwise you will be in a situation where one of the parties says, "You sign here, or else." We said we were trying, we did attempt to reach an agreement and it was not possible to do so. We have indicated we are still willing to talk. Let us keep this kind of measure in perspective.

Mr. Speaker, is this so unprecedented? We are setting the price monthly for the natural gas sold internationally. Every month the national government has an opportunity to modify the price at which we sell gas abroad. We set the prices at which we sell electricity abroad on the same basis. We set telephone rates across this country consistently. We set transportation rates for freight and innumerable items having to do with transportation, air transportation and rail transportation. We are also setting the price of wheat. We use the two-price wheat system as the hon. member knows very well. We also set the price for copper in this country. Around 1973 we had two prices for copper also. So what we have done at this time is to exercise what is clearly and fundamentally a power, a responsibility, that lies with the federal government. It lies with other federations in the world, not only with Canada. In Australia, the states own the resources in the same way as the provinces own the resources of this country. The national government in Australia sets prices for oil and gas constantly and systematically. They do not even do it on the basis of negotiation.

Mr. Yurko: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister, in explaining the price-setting characteristics of his program, would permit a question at this time so that I might clear up something in my mind?

Mr. Lalonde: I would rather have the questions at the end of my exposé. I do not like to use all the time at my disposal for questions and not be able to make a few more points I wish to make. If the hon. member wishes to ask me afterwards I will be very happy to answer him.

What is being done here results from the fact that we could not get an agreement. Under the Petroleum Administration Act the power is quite clearly provided. As I indicated, it is done regularly and without question in a federal state like Australia. It is done in the same way by the national government in the United States. Therefore, I do not think we should consider that this is such an unprecedented step.

What does the opposition want? The opposition said we should rescind those proclamations. And then what? The price for this product would be decided by the government of Alberta for the whole of the country. We would have the government of one province in this country deciding on the price of a commodity traded interprovincially and internationally. I see a Conservative member opposite nodding his head. I say to him he does not know what the constitution of this country is. He does not know what this country is. We would end up in a situation where provinces determined, by government regulations, the price of commodities in interprovincial and international trade.

• (1530)

I challenge the provinces to name one other federal country in this world where the provincial governments or state governments have such powers. It does not exist, for the very good reason that if there is one country, there must be one common market and one national government which, if there is no agreement, must in the end make a decision and say that this will be the price. That is what has happened. The price has been set because we could not get agreement after six months of negotiations. However, in spite of that we are ready and willing to sit down again and talk with the government of Alberta. I am happy that Premier Lougheed has indicated that he is willing to see the discussions resumed.

The government was in effect forced to act in this particular instance. I remind the hon. member that in August the government of Alberta unilaterally raised the price of oil by $2. We looked in the other direction, if I may use that expression, at the time because the increase proposed by the Alberta government corresponded with an offer we had made in August. In order to gain some time in discussion and in order to allow for better relations, we decided to ignore that particular action, which could have been challenged, and let the price rise.

One week before the government introduced its budget, the government of Alberta proclaimed the Alberta Natural Gas Price Administration Act. The net result was that the Alberta government would control through regulations the price of natural gas coming out of the province. Since we were bringing down the budget, it was essential that the government assume and exercise its responsibility. I make no apologies for that. Indeed, we would have been remiss in our responsibility to the Canadian people had we done otherwise.

Therefore, we have proclaimed those actions under the Petroleum Administration Act. I hope negotiations will resume in the next short while and that we will arrive at an agreement.

[Translation]

I would like to point out that it seemed to us extremely important in this whole matter that our decisions should take into account the interests of the various regions of the country and those of the consumers.

The proclamations now under consideration simply aim at implementing a pricing system for oil and gas sold interprovincially and internationally in this country. The price of gasoline sold in Alberta and gas produced and consumed in British Columbia will not be regulated by these proclamations. Only oil and gas shipped across provincial and international borders will be covered.

We wanted a pricing system which would be fair for the country as a whole. As hon. members are aware, this will result in significant net benefits for the producing provinces, and especially for Alberta. Under this program, the government of Alberta would receive within the next four years approximately $31 billion while British Columbia and Saskatchewan would, of course, receive much less since Saskatchewan would receive approximately $3.2 billion and British Columbia about $3.6 billion. Even so, these figures will seem fabulous to all the other regions.

As far as the consumer is concerned, we have endeavoured to take steps, so that even if prices were to increase in the coming years, he would be reasonably well protected or at least he could anticipate impending increases and then adjust his standard of living accordingly.

My hon. colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway has quoted figures from page 106 of "The National Energy Program" which I invite Canadians to get at their local post office. I am told that copies are available. Well, the hon. member will note that for the citizen of Winnipeg to whom he referred or for the citizen of St. John's, Newfoundland, for example, who spent about $680 for heating in 1980, should he convert his heating system to natural gas or take advantage of all benefits under the energy conservation schemes available under the national energy program, the heating bill of that citizen in Winnipeg will be reduced from $680 to a potential cost of $535 in 1984, while for the citizen of St. John's, Newfoundland, it could be reduced from $810 to $760 through the necessary conservation measures.

I mentioned Winnipeg and St. John's, Newfoundland, but I could also mention every other Canadian city. This means that Canadian consumers are invited to play a real part in this endeavour to attain energy self-sufficiency during the next decade. In addition, the program clearly indicated that even if prices rise, Canadian consumers will be in a position to protect themselves thanks to the programs which we have made available to them.

[English]

I notice that I have only a few minutes left. I would have loved to have spent more time putting forward other aspects but I understand we will have an opportunity to have a second debate in the next few days on the second proclamation. I may want to use that opportunity to come back to the points which have been raised already in this debate and to cover several more points.

It is important to note that the government has made genuine, serious efforts to resolve this particular issue over the last few months. We have discussed a pricing formula and we have offered to abandon, if necessary, the existing mechanism for pricing and offered a new equalization formula whereby the provinces would have a more equal share amongst themselves. But those proposals were turned down. We tried to separate the issues of the tar sands and heavy oil from the issues of conventional oils, but that was turned down also. We proposed that there be a tax on the export of gas and electricity, but that was turned down. The budget was changed at the last minute and that plan was abandoned in order to accommodate the views of the producing provinces, particularly the government of Alberta.

Unfortunately, up until now, our proposals have not been fruitful. These proclamations have been introduced as a stopgap measure and as a substitute for the lack of an agreement. We indicated that we are undertaking further discussions without preconditions. I stress that this government has set no conditions for these further discussions. I ask the opposition parties to observe who is setting conditions and asking for certain requirements ahead of time.

It is important that we achieve a resolution which will ensure to the federal government a fair share of the resource revenue while ensuring for the producing provinces an increase in wealth to the extent they would never have dreamt of ten years ago or even as recently as five years ago, while still leaving enough profit for the industry. As a national government, we must think of the national interest. The national interest of this country is obviously larger than the interest of a particular region or province. We are determined to do everything we can to reach agreement. Again, I say to members on both sides of the House, because I know that many of them are as concerned as we are, and rightfully so, about the deep disagreement existing at this time, that I hope the debate in the country and particularly in Alberta will be kept at a level of reason with reasonable arguments. There are so many arguments being used which have no foundation at the present time. I invite the Tory member on the other side who is so vocal at the present time to keep his cool and listen a little bit because he might learn a thing or two. It might be helpful, instead of telling his constituents what he has been over the past little while—

• (1540)

Mr. Malone: Name one.

Mr. Lalonde: —to use his head and advance a resolution to this problem rather than fan divisions in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member from Edmonton East on a point of order pursuant to the remarks made earlier that there is a single question to be asked and answered.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I wish to pose a question to the minister. It concerns the proclamation of section 36 in the Petroleum Administration Act. I believe the government had two possibilities. First, to invoke and set the price of oil for one year and then hope that negotiations with the producing provinces would continue to affect the price subsequently.

The second alternative of the federal government was to invoke this section of the Petroleum Administration Act to set a schedule of pricing over a period of years from five to ten years, or four to ten years, in other words, set a pricing structure which then acts as a major club on the producing provinces in terms of the possibility of reaching agreement or no agreement at all.

Could the minister clarify very carefully if possible whether the invocation of this section of the act is for a period of one year only so that if an agreement is reached with the producing provinces within this year, then we will not have this act in place? If the government needs to come forward with this act again a year from now, it will come before Parliament again to invoke it. It is important that I know the answer to that question.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point raised by the hon. member. He knows that we did come forward with a ten-year program called the national energy program. He knows, too, that the budget itself announced the projection of prices over that long period. I am sure the hon. member knows also that the industry and the people of Canada generally have been clamouring for some certainty. There have been consistent protests over the last few years because it was very difficult, if not impossible, to plan, especially for megaprojects on the basis of what the price is this year when we do not know what it will be two years from now or four years from now. In other words, some certainly was needed as to the future.

It was to ensure a certain degree of certainty and clarification as to the government's policy that it was decided to put forward this long-term plan. We have indicated that this is a ten-year program. It would be naive or irresponsible to say that in a ten-year program not one iota can be changed, or that this is cast in stone, just like the Bible. So that is not our perception. However, we have put forward the proclamation in question in order to avoid as far as possible—and I hope we will reach an agreement eventually—this kind of annual mutual harassment and this annual dramatic time which industry and governments have to go through when month after month they have to come back to renegotiate a pricing regime. We have put forward a pricing regime which we think will be fair for the industry over the next ten years and for the various regions of the country.

The government of Alberta has indicated that it is willing to sit down again and look at this issue, and so have we. It is there for everybody to see. I would think from my conversations with the government of Alberta and the government of Saskatchewan that they themselves would prefer, if possible, to have a resolution which would be for more than one year so that government and industry can get down to the business of finding more oil and gas and making more money and jobs for everybody.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, in rising today to speak on this important subject—

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order? Please excuse me but I thought the hon. member was rising on a point of order and I hesitated to disturb him. The minister said he would answer short questions. Might I put one to him? It concerns the invocation of the act and it is fairly short. Might I do that before the hon. member begins to speak?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): This seems to be still within the time limit accorded to the minister, so one question and answer will be permitted.

Mr. Waddell: I thank the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), Mr. Speaker.

I do not think the minister would get disagreement from this corner of the House that in the end, in an emergency, the national government must make a decision and take action. But I would remind the minister that under our constitution the provinces have power over resources. I would think that he, as a Quebecker, would be very much aware of that. My question is this: there did not seem to be a dispute, in the eyes of the average Canadian at least, with Alberta in terms of prices. The minister mentioned that the province of Alberta had raised the price by $2 a barrel and the federal government had not opposed that. However, there was no indication that it would be raised any further. That being the case, could the minister not have said to the province of Alberta: "Here is our scheme and our maximum limits; if you go above that, then we will bring in the act, but as long as there is no dispute now, there is no reason to invoke this act." Would the minister explain to me why he did not go along with the present situation without invoking the act?

Mr. Lalonde: At the time I had discussions with my colleague in Alberta there was agreement that there would be no price increase after August 1 above $2 until October. But the government of Alberta was retaining its right to act after that. As I indicated one week before the budget, the government of Alberta decided to proclaim the Alberta Gas Marketing Act, the Alberta Natural Gas Price Administration Act.

The hon. member must realize that the Minister of Finance needed to bring in a budget. In every country in modern times energy is a fundamental element in determining budget policy. For instance, it must be determined how much money a government will need in terms of support for energy programs—whatever they are in each country. Therefore, it was impossible to ask the Minister of Finance to walk into this House and say, "Here is a budget, but assuming that nothing else happens over the next little while, this is approximately what it will be". I think the hon. member's party would have been the first one to rise in protest and outrage. It would be argued that by failing to disclose his plan of action the Minister of Finance was not assuming his responsibility; it would be argued he should ask Parliament to vote on something definite, not on something hypothetical and dependent on the goodwill of other levels of government which are not answerable to this House but to another constituency. Essentially and fundamentally it was a matter of Parliament being asked to consider a budget; Parliament had to make a decision on the fiscal position of the government over the next year. This morning I indicated that if the orders in council giving instructions to Petro-Canada to negotiate with Esso Resources was available today, I would table them. I now have them in French and English. If the House agrees, I will table those orders in council.

• (1550)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the suggestion of the minister to table certain orders in council. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is so ordered.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise today very bitter and very deeply angered as a member of Parliament from western Canada who sees an issue that is before the Canadian people which creates a division that is unnecessary. It begins with premises that are true and reaches conclusions that are false.

We do not have an energy crisis in this country. We have enough coal to supply petrochemical needs for 300 years. We have in the oil reserves of western Canada enough supply for several hundred years. What we lack in this country is a systems policy, not energy. The energy is there. There is a struggle between the federal government and the provinces. With the tactics they are using against the will of those who want to put systems in place, they are destroying the fabric of this nation, the will of those at the grassroots to make a commitment to energy security. Even with our abundance of coal, which is the envy of the world, we have a struggle of politics going on which is not only denying Canadians energy, but causing an excessive loss of jobs and capital as well.

I use the example of one tar sands plant. If one plant were to close and to stay closed for the projected life of the project, it would involve a loss of some $290 billion to Canada. That is what is involved in the ripple effect through the Canadian system. Of that amount, 40 per cent would go into the province of Ontario. There would be an enormous loss of jobs, not in the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia but in consequence of the raping of central and eastern Canada against its security of supply, the assurance that there will be oil and petroleum products for the driving of cars, heating of homes and the industrial sector.

I wish to place on record what it would mean if Alsands were to receive its full documentation and endorsement from the federal government. It would put some $800 million into the province of Ontario in the area of iron and steel production, $370 million for the fabrication of machinery in the manufacturing basin of central Canada, $325 million into Ontario for other forms of manufacturing and processing, $740 million into Ontario and Quebec in relation to financing through banks, trust companies and the like for capitalization of these megaprojects. It would involve another $370 million in trades and services and an additional $7 million in spill-over effects with regard to employment.

I become very annoyed when I hear the tone of the debate which tries to create the impression that there was a disagreement and an inability to work out with the province of Alberta an energy package, leaving Canadians in a desperate position. The truth is there was never a serious attempt by the present federal government to deal with the province of Alberta. The Alberta energy minister said the first two occasions there was a visit from representatives of the federal government it was a milk and cookies occasion, a get acquainted party. There was never a document on the table, never a discussion, never a piece of paper in front of them.

When the minister comes before Parliament and recounts the number of times he went from Ottawa to Edmonton or someone came from Edmonton to Ottawa, he wants Canadians to believe those were negotiations and that, because there was no resolution, Alberta failed. The truth is that since being re-elected last February, the federal government has not placed one proposal before the province of Alberta. With their sinister attitude, they try to create the illusion that they are being denied an agreement after all the efforts they made. The truth is otherwise. Their first two missions were simply to get acquainted with the staff of the two energy departments.

This proclamation is before us because the minister said an agreement could not be reached. He further said it was not the federal government which was placing conditions on the negotiations. That is a rather sinister view when you think of the conditions Alberta is placing on this. The province of Alberta is saying that if you are going to deal, you will deal with us on the question of petrochemical energy. We have seen the tactics of this government.

During the last first ministers' conference, a document was leaked indicating that the province of Alberta should be divided from the other three western provinces, that it should be isolated. They wanted to create an enemy at which the other provinces could point. With regard to the Atlantic provinces, they wanted to isolate Newfoundland from the other maritime provinces so it could be pointed at as the enemy.

What are they doing in their energy negotiations? They are trying to separate tar sands oil. Why? When that is removed from the negotiations, they can of their own free will do what they want with the energy package. Obviously in their negotiations Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia have every right to say to the federal government that if it wants to talk energy, come and do that, but if it wants to divide up the pie, go home. They have every right to tell them to go home if they are not bargaining fairly. The minister comes here lily white and clean, stating that it is the provinces which are making the conditions. I agree, they are putting on a condition. The condition is, if you cannot bargain fairly, don't bargain at all.

Then what do we find? We find the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) spending 40 days and 40 nights in the dessert of Arabia. For what purpose? For $40-a barrel oil.

● (1600)

The truth is that since he was elected he has spent more time in the Middle East than he has spent in the province of Alberta. Hon. members opposite try to put forward the view that we will not negotiate. What an unfair and sinister position for a government which will not take the time within the provinces of its own country that it takes in dealing with energy matters on some foreign soil.

I see that the time is up, Mr. Speaker. May I call it four o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Motions Nos. 6, 17, 18, 19, 22, 23, 25, 26 and 27 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

* * *

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved that Bill C-228, to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House today represents two aspects of the Income Tax Act which should be familiar to members of the House because since 1970 I have been opposed to the second feature of the bill and have repeatedly filed private members' bills in order to get rid of that aspect of the Income Tax Act.

The first feature is one which I, as well as a good number of my colleagues on this side of the House, have attacked in one way or another since about 1977 when it was added to the Income Tax Act.

The first clause deals with the requirement of the Income Tax Act that a person cashing bearer coupons on Canada Savings Bonds shall furnish on the application for deposit a social insurance number. If that person should fail to do so, the bank, trust company or encashing agent must retain 25 per cent of the interest coupons and remit them to the Minister of National Revenue. There that interest collected shall be deemed to have been levied and paid or shall be available for the person involved to apply in a subsequent taxation year for reimbursement. However, there is a "Catch 22" aspect to this in that it is a requirement of another section of the Income Tax Act passed in 1966 that every income tax return shall contain a social insurance number and that the income tax authorities are empowered to reject such a return unless completed in a form satisfactory to the taxation authorities.

This meant that an elderly person who did not have a social insurance number or a child of 12, for example, who owned some Canada Savings Bonds by way of gift or any other means was not able to cash interest coupons and recover their value because that person did not satisfy a bureaucratic requirement with regard to social insurance numbers. There are a few members in this House who were present in 1964 when the late Prime Minister Pearson solemnly stated in this House under questioning that social insurance numbers would not be used for any purpose other than for social security reasons. In fact, he answered questions of the former leader of the opposition, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, particularly on the subject of income tax, and he denied it would be used for income tax purposes.

The first thing that happened was that in 1966 there slipped through—not surreptitiously or anything; I suppose in the press of events—a requirement that for identification purposes the social insurance number would be required on every tax return of a private individual. That should have been an alert, but unfortunately too many people somehow or other took it to be a reasonable request. However, that was only the opening of a door.

Since that time there have been requests for social insurance numbers by department stores when applications for charge cards were made, by oil companies for credit cards, by the Department of External Affairs for passports and by any number of other organizations, including midget hockey teams. Recently I learned that in the province of Alberta a government department was requesting social security numbers for children in a musical group, all about the age of 12, who were going to travel outside the province on a government grant. Fortunately, after one telephone call the minister in charge of that department decided that this was a lot of bureaucratic nonsense and reversed that decision right on the spot. There has been abuse. Is this country going to accept the principle that everyone must have an Orwellian identification number? The armed services got away from their district service numbers allowing one to identify what kind of serviceman a particular individual was, whether he belonged to an eastern district or whether he was in the army, the navy or the air force, by substituting social security numbers. I object, and so do my colleagues. I know that the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), formerly the minister of state for the Treasury Board, had indicated he was going to introduce legislation restricting the use of social security numbers.

However, that did not come to pass. In November, 1979—and my colleague from Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) will elaborate on this—the previous administration indicated there was to be a study on their use. That was affirmed and extended by the present administration. The report should have been in by November 1. It has not been tabled. It may have been made to the government, but it has not been tabled.

In any event, I have, through clause 1, moved to delete those two subsections. They are amplifications of the original section 234 dealing with ownership certificates, but in addition to the ownership certificates there was the question of the social insurance number. It was a stupid thing because the minister of the day tacitly admitted that if the person concerned wanted to give any sort of social security number, whether his, hers or someone else's, it did not matter. So long as there was a number, the banks and cashing agents did not have to withhold anything. When and if a cross audit would catch up with it, God only knows. Since that time several of the banks have indicated that they will not abide by those regulations, and they are not doing so. If the section is being disregarded, it is in disrepute, and the only thing to do is to strike it from the record. I am sure the present administration will decide to strike it from the record in the Income Tax Act. So I hope that hon. members can support that aspect of it.

● (1610)

Now with regard to section 237, it has to do with a failure to show a social security number on an income tax return which need not be then accepted by the income tax authorities. So far as I am concerned, if I have a social security number and I voluntarily put it on my tax return, that is my business. It is my number for my private use. Since when has income tax been part of social security?

Therefore, when I move to strike 237(1) and 237(2), I do away with the obligation and necessity. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has not indicated anywhere in her legislation that an individual has to apply for a social security number. But section 237 of the Income Tax Act says one has to do so. The provision has become distorted. It has become a case of the tail that wags the whole dog. The initiative is now with the Department of National Revenue to decide who shall apply for a social security number, and I move to strike that out. However, my colleagues wish to discuss this matter further.

I want to turn now to something that as a lawyer I find dastardly and absolutely wrong. I gather that a similar feeling is felt by the council on uniform legislation, or a like body, in that, under section 239, the Crown may move either by way of indictment or by way of summary conviction if there is to be prosecution of an offence under the Income Tax Act. The decision as to whether it will be by indictment or by summary conviction is made by the Attorney General of Canada, not by the minister of national revenue, which, in effect, means it is the director of public prosecutions who makes the recommendation to the deputy attorney general, and that is the authority. Unfortunately, offences under section 239 against the Income Tax Act include a false return or an evasion of a return and destruction of records, the disposal of books, acquiescence or collaboration in the making of false returns, all the offences one can think of under the Income Tax Act including one which is so general that there is no way of escaping it, namely, "wilfully or in any manner evading or attempting to evade compliance with this act or payment of taxes imposed by this act." That is, in fact, a difference of opinion with the taxing authorities. If I have a difference of opinion with the taxing authorities and I say that I will not pay those taxes, that is my interpretation and I am "wilfully or in any manner" attempting to evade payment of taxes imposed by this act. The taxing authority says that the act imposes these taxes, and I say, no, I am evading that by my interpretation. That is a wilful act and I am then guilty of an offence. In addition to any penalty provided, I am liable on summary conviction to a fine of not less than 25 per cent or to a fine and imprisonment. But subsection (2) says:

> Every person who is charged with an offence described by subsection (1) may, at the election of the Attorney General of Canada be prosecuted upon indictment and, if convicted, is in addition to any penalty provided, liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years and not less than two months.

That means the judge has no option. In practice it means that if the director of prosecutions decides that the Crown attorney will move by way of an indictment and there is a finding of guilty, or even an admission of guilt because often the facts are there, a mandatory jail sentence is imposed regardless of how severe or otherwise the judge considers the offence to be. That is wrong. We throw too many people into jail as it is. It is the court which should decide whether or not a person goes to jail, not a functionary of the Department of Justice. My amendment gives scope to the judge on the penalty and it is the judge who will decide. There is none of this business of going by way of indictment. Gracious me, there is a section in the Bank Act which provides for prosecution by way of indictment. I wanted to strike it out but was told that a recommendation would come forward for the government to do away with proceedings by way of indictment under these acts. This is not the Criminal Code. It is a civilian act along with the Bank Act. It is civil statutory law. We have to take a much more civilized and just stand. This business of moving by indictment is subject to abuse. Political motivation may determine that a certain individual will go to jail. We have seen occasions where the choice of whether the government moved by way of indictment or by way of summary conviction seemed to be based upon political capriciousness. If somebody desires to get even with a certain prominent citizen, to make an example of him, or just to get at him, he can move by way of indictment. His crime may be no worse than that of the neighbour down the street who lives at a much lower profile. One will be subjected to proceedings by way of summary conviction and the other by way of indictment. They are no more than offences against statutory law, and that section should be repealed.

• (1620)

Many hon. members have not been exposed to this particular facet of our statute law, so I commend it to them. Often within the confines of private members' hour anomalies or injustices in various statutes are pointed out to fair-thinking people, and parliamentarians, as fair-thinking people, say we must do away with them. It is in this spirit that I offer this legislation to my colleagues in the House of Commons, so that they will accept it in the spirit of fair-mindedness toward their fellow men, and do away with these anomalies, injustices and in so far as the social insurance is concerned, some rather silly results.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in rising to address the bill presented by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I should like to begin by paying tribute to his motives in bringing to the attention of the House what he considers to be anomalies in existing legislation. His motives deserve the recognition of the House, but as I think he will see in a moment, in several respects there are real differences between his approach and his understanding of the income tax amendments and mine.

Bill C-228 proposes three amendments to the Income Tax Act. One of them does not require any extensive discussion, that is, the first clause of the bill to repeal subsections 234(5) and (6) of the act. Those are the sections which relate to persons cashing bearer coupons, warrants for interest and dividend payments without listing their social insurance number on the ownership certificate. Where this number is not given, the person paying the interest or dividend must deduct 25 per cent of the amount as a withholding tax. This deduction is credited against the recipient's personal income tax owing for the year.

Repeal of the subsections to which the hon. member referred was in fact proposed in the notice of ways and means motion tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on April 21. It is simply unnecessary to pass Bill C-228 in order to abolish that provision.

However, the other two proposals in this bill require closer examination. Both suggest a willingness to weaken the integrity of the tax system and leave it open to abuse and fraud. We all realize that throughout history the tax collector has never been a popular figure. It has always been easy to score political points by offering to weaken the tax system, but I suggest this can be a dangerous and self-defeating game. We must recognize that income tax is more than just a means of raising federal revenues. It is an important aspect of the whole effort of government to promote social justice through redistribution of income, support for the needy, and the development of the less prosperous areas of Canada. This is what is at stake when we consider the need to protect the integrity of the tax system.

Mr. Lambert: Would the hon. parliamentary secretary accept a question?

Mr. MacLaren: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert: I know the parliamentary secretary is giving a philosophical justification for income tax, but perhaps he would go back to its origin and say that it was a special war tax. Until 1948 it was known as the income war tax act, merely to raise funds to pay for the expenses of war. How does he reconcile that tax with the support of our social system?

Mr. MacLaren: Of course the hon. member is correct in drawing to the attention of the House the fact that when income tax was first introduced in the United Kingdom, prior to and during the First World War, it was regarded by some as a temporary measure. I thank the hon. member for inviting my comment in this regard. Since then, the liberal philosophy, of caring for each other through collective measures which require revenue, whether raised in the form of income tax, corporate income tax or capital gains tax, has become well established in the practices of all democratic nations. Of course Canada is no exception in that regard.

Income tax is more than just a means of raising federal revenues. At least we on this side of the House see it as the principal method of achieving the balance of social justice and equity to which we subscribe. Fundamentally that is what is at stake when we consider the need to protect the integrity of the tax system.

When we consider that clause 3 of the bill would eliminate the present legal option of proceeding against serious tax evaders by way of indictment, we see some problems arise immediately. The hon. member for Edmonton West objects to empowering the Attorney General of Canada to decide on an indictment proceeding instead of proceeding by way of summary conviction. He objects to the minimum sentence of two months in jail which the law provides for those persons convicted. The hon. member discussed this same issue at some length during the 1971 debate on the tax reform bill and again in 1973 when he presented a private member's bill on this subject. I suggest that he is no more likely now than he was then to win majority support in the House for his approach.

We are talking about measures to deal with serious income tax fraud, not just any minor attempt to evade tax payment. The kind of offences we are considering are set out in Revenue Canada's information circular on tax evasion and tax avoidance. It describes some of the factors which are considered as grounds for deciding to proceed by way of indictment. It is clear that we are talking about serious attempts at tax evasion by people who are second offenders, people who sell their assets or move them out of the country to escape the collection of taxes owing, people who intimidate others to help in tax evasion schemes, people who counsel others on tax evasion practices, people who have evaded substantial amounts of tax owing. These are some of the factors that must be considered.

• (1630)

If any member seeks proof that we are discussing exceptional cases, I would point to the Revenue Canada statistics which show that over the six years prior to last March 31 only 12 taxpayers have been imprisoned through indictment proceedings. So the decision by the Attorney General to proceed by way of indictment is clearly not one taken lightly or routinely.

It is not a rare or remarkable situation for the Crown to be empowered with the option of proceeding by way of either summary conviction or indictment. The Criminal Code has many such instances. Agreed, it is not customary for this provision to be coupled with a mandatory jail sentence for convictions on indictment. But I submit that it is justified in cases such as this.

The sponsor of the bill has argued in the past that the law really means that the Attorney General of Canada has power to send someone to jail by proceeding by way of indictment. This argument conveniently overlooks the fact that it is still the court which decides whether an offence has been committed and whether conviction is warranted.

Serious tax fraud is one of the so-called white collar crimes. It represents an effort by more prosperous persons with substantial tax liabilities to evade payment of their taxes. There is a view held by some that white collar law-breakers should receive lenient treatment in the law. That cynical view would be confirmed if Parliament decided to drop this provision in our laws. The possibility of a mandatory jail term—even one of only two months—must serve as a powerful deterrent for those who might seek to defraud the treasury in this way. Too often a fine is regarded merely as a cost of doing business.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss briefly the third proposal in the bill now before us. It would end the requirement for taxpayers to report their social insurance number with their tax return. It is difficult to see what such a step would accomplish, apart from weakening Revenue Canada's ability to collect income taxes that are owing and to ensure the fair and efficient administration of the Canada Pension Plan and the unemployment insurance system.

The advent of electronic data processing has opened up a whole new world of concern to many people. Large quantities of information about individuals can be stored in various computer data banks. One of the chief concerns about the social insurance number is that it might be a handy key which would allow the pooling of information about an individual from a number of these data banks without his knowledge or consent. However, the problem here is not really the social insurance number. Computer technology allows the linkage of information without using the SIN—for example, by using name, address or birth date. The SIN is a handy target for criticism, but the real issue is the problem of data linkage itself. Our concern should really be with that, and not with the secondary issue of the social insurance number.

Under part IV of the Human Rights Act proclaimed on March 1, 1978, Parliament established a method for controlling the unauthorized exchange of personal data in federal information banks. Perhaps these provisions can be strengthened. Certainly more should be done about the data banks on individuals which exist in the private sector and how this information can be used.

There is legitimate concern about the proliferating use of the social insurance number in a wide variety of applications that do not relate to the administration of social security programs and the tax system. But none of these problems is met by the proposal to exclude use of the SIN from income tax returns, and much would be lost by this proposal, which would weaken Revenue Canada's ability to carry out its responsibility to protect the integrity of the tax system. We must remember, too, that information from individual tax returns is used to establish the individual's rights under the Canada Pension Plan and to determine insurable earnings for purposes of the unemployment insurance program. Mr. Speaker, both of these programs depend on the social insurance number. If the SIN cannot be used on income tax returns it will simply compound the number of information returns that Canadians will have to make to the federal government. The administrative cost and the nuisance would be multiplied.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) on his pursuit of his private member's Bill C-228. I would like to read the explanatory note which sets out why there is cause for concern. It states:

> The purpose of this bill is to repeal certain provisions of the Income Tax Act relating to social insurance numbers, and the consequences of failing to obtain such a number for entry on tax returns. At present, there are thousands of Canadians who do not possess social insurance numbers.

The parliamentary secretary did not address himself to that part of the bill. As the hon. member for Edmonton West pointed out, it was a bureaucratic decision that implemented this in the first place and this afternoon we heard a bureaucratic answer. It was not something that was compiled by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacLaren) at all. This bill calls attention to the serious consequences that a taxpayer faces with the abuse of the SIN number. When the SIN was introduced in 1964 it was not meant for this purpose. There is legitimate concern about government abuse of the SIN.

The Conservative government, in a release dated November 26, 1979, took positive action in this area. That release stated:

> Finance Minister John Crosbie and Revenue Minister Walter Baker announced today that the government intends to drop the requirement that persons cashing bond coupons must provide a social insurance number or pay a 25 per cent withholding tax.

The minister of justice in the Clark government, in a release dated February 1, 1980, announced that he had ordered a special study by Canada's Privacy Commissioner on the use of social insurance numbers. This study was continued under the present government. On May 23, 1980, they announced that the scope of the special social insurance numbers study by Canada's Privacy Commissioner would be expanded to include those federal government institutions to which part IV of the Human Rights Act applies. We were to have received this report on November 1. I hope it will be tabled very shortly.

Obviously the government of the day was concerned about what was happening about the abuse of social insurance numbers or they would not have continued the study and extended it for another three months. Concern has certainly been expressed by Canadian citizens over the past number of years about the abuse of the SIN by government departments and invasion of privacy. As the hon. member for Edmonton West pointed out, children are now required to submit a social insurance number when they register to play football and hockey. That is a lot of darned nonsense. I hope the report will make recommendations to put a stop to that.

To show how difficult it is to send a letter to a serviceman, a recent article stated, "It may take SIN to get that card to a serviceman". Apparently, if his social insurance number is not on there he might not receive his Christmas card. Mr. Speaker, what kind of nonsense is that? I hope the government study which should have been completed by November 1 will be available to all members in the very near future. I hope it will eliminate nonsense of this kind, about the need to put a social insurance number on a Christmas card.

• (1640)

A former prime minister, the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, spotted the problems with the SIN back in 1964. He asked questions of the House leader at that time. He wanted an assurance for the Canadian people that any information provided in the social insurance number application form would be maintained on a completely confidential basis and would not be used for any other purposes or passed over to any other department. The Liberal House leader at the time replied that the information would be maintained in Ottawa for government purposes including the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the proposed Canada Pension Plan.

The right hon. gentleman repeated his question adding that the system bears a strange relationship to dictatorship. Certainly, the system has expanded from its original purpose back in 1964. Also, at that time we found out that the RCMP had told a commission in Ottawa that the little white plastic card bearing each taxpayer's social insurance number has evolved into an identification card and is vital to the RCMP. The RCMP was given direct access to social insurance data held by the Unemployment Insurance Commission in 1969.

Just five years earlier, the government managed to get the social insurance number established in law by promising never to let it be used for any purpose other than the necessary clerical work associated with the social insurance system. I hope the government report which was to be completed by November 1, 1980, covers these aspects and outlines plans to stop abuses of the SIN as pointed out by the former Conservative prime minister, and the hon. member for Edmonton West. Perhaps the last government speaker will indicate to the House today whether this report was, in fact, completed on November 1, and, if so, when hon. members of the House will be able to obtain a copy.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the bill introduced today by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has commendable aspects, but the government has certain concerns, and I would like to address my remarks to those concerns.

This bill proposes three distinct amendments to the Income Tax Act and although they differ in subject matter, all three have a common thread. They all relate to methods of protecting the integrity of the tax system, methods of ensuring that each of us pays his proper tax. One deals with a withholding tax on interest and dividend payments, another with legal recourse against serious cases of tax evasion, and the third with the use of the social insurance number in administering the tax system.

I should like to address most of my remarks to the latter point, which proposes to abolish the requirement for taxpayers to list their social insurance number on their income tax returns. But before that, I should discuss briefly the other two proposals in the bill.

I do not expect there will be much disagreement with the first clause of the bill. It would do away with the requirement that 25 per cent of interest and dividend payments being paid by means of bearer coupons or warrants must be withheld whenever the recipient does not list his or her social insurance number on the ownership certificate at the time of payment. A similar change has been proposed in ways and means motions both by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and by his predecessor. Obviously, the original purpose of this withholding tax was to ensure that income tax liabilities on bearer bond coupons and similar transactions were met. If finance ministers of two different governments agree that it is not necessary, then I suspect it will not be greatly missed.

Clause 3 of the bill, however, has a good deal less to recommend it. By this clause, the sponsor of the bill seeks to remove from the Income Tax Act a legal sanction which is now available for dealing with serious cases of tax fraud and evasion. Under this sanction, the Attorney General of Canada has the option of proceeding in the courts by way of indictment against accused tax offenders, rather than proceeding by way of summary conviction. For persons convicted on such an indictment, the law provides a mandatory prison term of between a minimum two months and a maximum five years.

As I understand it, there are precedents in the Criminal Code for the Crown to proceed by way of indictment, rather than the more customary summary conviction route, in serious cases of lawbreaking. If the Crown were to have frequent recourse to this provision, using it not only for major tax frauds but in some of the more routine cases, there would be grounds for the kind of concern shown by the hon. member for Edmonton West. But when we consider that only 12 taxpayers have been sent to jail under this indictment procedure over a six-year period, I think it is very apparent that a good deal of discretion is used before embarking on that sort of prosecution.

It is regrettable, but true, that the fines which are levied by courts against offenders are often viewed simply as a licence fee for lawbreaking—just another cost of doing business—especially if the offender thinks the odds of not getting caught are in his favour. In these circumstances I suggest that the threat of a mandatory jail term, even as short as two months, can be a very strong deterrent, especially for the so-called white collar criminal.

There has been widespread public concern, which I share, about the frequency with which offenders under our system of justice are sent to jail or penitentiary. But concern about the proportion of prison terms does not mean that there should be no prison terms. When it appears that fines for tax frauds are not an adequate deterrent, but are instead seen by the offenders as merely a cost of doing business, then I think we have to ensure respect for our laws by a method that will command respect.

I would like to devote some of my remaining remarks to the other proposal in this bill dealing with the present legal requirement for citizens filing an income tax return to identify themselves on the returns by their social insurance numbers. The bill would delete this requirement from the Income Tax Act.

In reading this bill, I found it difficult to imagine what might be the motivation behind such a change. Could it represent some sort of latter-day Luddite movement or some sort of emotional revulsion or reaction against one of the tools of a threatening new post-industrial revolution? The social insurance number is, after all, just a tool which, in itself, has no innate evil. In fact it is a tremendously useful tool which, when used reasonably, can provide great social benefits. The requirement is to use it reasonably and responsibly, not to reject it totally.

I think we have to recognize that, in our complex urban society, there exists an emotional reaction among a good many people against what they regard as being depersonalized or reduced to a number in a computer-run society. They feel the system deprives them of some of their humanity. That feeling exists and cannot be ignored. But I suggest we do not resolve the problem by denying to the computers of the Department of National Revenue the use of the SIN.

Unless we drop the use of computers entirely, the Department of National Revenue would simply have to develop letters which would not likely be as good as the highly efficient SIN system. The alternative would be a clumsy, costly, slow system in which the ordinary individuals would find their files confused with the tax returns of others of the same name. I suspect this would be even more frustrating to citizens than being identified by a number.

The usefulness and value of the social insurance number is not always appreciated. We should recognize that income tax returns provide an efficient, low-cost source of essential data for administering the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act. It is the social insurance number which is the key link in ensuring that the taxpayer's contributory earnings for Canada Pension Plan purposes are passed on to his or her CPP file. The SIN allows information on insurable earnings to be used for unemployment insurance purposes. If we remove the SIN from income tax returns, I suggest it would simply mean switching to a more cumbersome and costly information system, with separate information returns having to be filed for Canada Pension Plan and unemployment insurance purposes.

There are other examples of how the SIN on a person's income tax return is useful and valuable, not just to the tax collector but to the taxpayer. Consider, for example, the income-averaging provisions in the Income Tax Act which are designed to compensate for a sudden and irregular upswing in a taxpayer's income in a year. Under the present system, the taxpayer does not have to work out the complicated averaging formula himself on his tax return; he has the assurance that the Department of National Revenue's computer will do that job for him if he qualifies for the income-averaging benefit. But the computer could not do this without the link through the social insurance number which allows the individual's tax return to be correlated with his incomes in preceding years.

● (1650)

When we introduced the child tax credit system only recently, it was clear that the fairest way of measuring a family's financial need was to base it on the aggregate of incomes received by the two parents. Yet this approach would have been extremely difficult without having computer access to the reported incomes of both parents, and the social insurance number made this access possible.

Another example of the number's usefulness is that it makes it possible for National Revenue to cross-check information on incomes and earnings so as to ensure the validity of claims and to detect fraud. We have given National Revenue the responsibility of protecting the integrity of the tax system, and the social insurance number is no more than a reasonable tool which makes this possible.

Our income tax system, after all, is based on self-assessment. I suggest that the average Canadian does not resent paying his fair share of taxes as long as he feels confident that his fellow citizens are doing the same. Does anyone really think such a feeling of confidence would exist if National Revenue did not have the means of cross-checking information on tax returns?

In a democratic society that values individual freedom, we clearly have to strike a balance between the state's need to collect tax revenue and the need for personal privacy. I do not think one can really claim that this balance is seriously upset by requiring us to list our social insurance numbers on our income tax returns.

The use of the social insurance number for income tax administration is only one part of a very much wider issue which has developed quite suddenly in recent years with the advent of the computer era. The basis of the problem was very well described in the report of the Task Force on Privacy and Computers as follows:

> One hundred years ago, almost everyone was virtually unknown except in his own village or neighbourhood; today, comprehensive and personal details about everyone are stored in an ever-growing number of files, from education to credit, from welfare to insurance, from taxation to criminal history. By almost every act, from acquiring a passport to buying a car, each citizen leaves a trail of data behind him; the data increases in volume from birth to death and grows ever more comprehensive.

I think that is a fair description of the situation, but it does not deal with one of the chief worries of those who are concerned with civil liberties, which is the possibility that these separate bits of information about an individual will somehow be pulled together and pooled without the individual's knowledge or consent. The social insurance number is widely viewed as the villain of the piece—the tool which enables this linkage of personal data from a number of computer-based data banks.

It is true that the social insurance number has been put into use far more widely than was envisaged back in 1964 and I accept some of the concerns of the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) who drew attention to that in his remarks.

It now is used as a personal identifier not only in a large number of federal data banks; it is also required by several provincial government acts and programs including the Quebec pension plan and health insurance plan, birth registration in Prince Edward Island, and school registration in Ontario, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The use of social insurance numbers has also spread outside government and, for example, the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association uses it to keep track of all young hockey players in CAHA leagues across Canada, and the Ottawa Public Library uses it to identify its customers.

I suggest, however, that the real problem is not the existence of the social insurance number. The problem is one of unauthorized data linkage—the pooling of information from different computer data banks. Abolition of the social insurance number would not resolve this problem, because computer technology is such that there are other ways of linking up data. For example, an individual's name, address and birth data could be used to identify his file. That route may be more cumbersome and more costly but it is workable.

I am sure public concern about this issue would be greatly diminished if the public were more widely aware of their present rights on this score, and if they used the defences now available to them in respect of data banks within the federal government.

Part IV of the Human Rights Act, proclaimed on March 1, 1978, attempts to tackle the problem in five ways. I will not read these ways because I know other members want to participate in the debate.

In conclusion, it has been argued that these provisions in the Human Rights Act should be strengthened. However, I think they show clearly the direction in which we must move to solve the problem of loss of privacy in the computer age, not only in federal government files but at other government levels and in the private sector as well. I appreciate the concerns of the hon. member for Edmonton West who has brought this topic forward today, but we think an attempt to solve the issue by attacking the social insurance number will be only wasted effort. We would deny ourselves the use of a highly efficient and valuable tool while ignoring the real problem completely.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, when I say I rise on a question of personal privilege, what I am going to say is not a reflection on the parliamentary secretary, on his personality or anything like that. But it seems to me that there has developed a distressing habit in this House, particularly during the private members' hour when various government speakers are furnished with memoranda written in the departments of the nature read to us this afternoon by the parliamentary secretary which smack of "bureaucratese".

I learned how to speak in this House without notes from a very early date because it was a debating forum. It was not to be an exchange of predetermined memoranda from either source. What I am saying applies as much to hon. members on this side of the House as to the other side. It was not so long ago when the Chair used to intervene when speeches were read. I think reading speeches is a bad habit. Hon. members would not be tolerated on the hustings if they dared appear before their voters with a text in their hands. It is the same thing here. There is a certain tolerance given to hon. members who are starting out, but afterwards one should expect a mastery of the subject and if any hon. member cannot remember enough of the volume put before him, then the speeches will be shorter. I personally do object to having a plethora of read speeches or memoranda in this House whether it is at any stage of legislation or during private members' hour, and as I said, this applies to both sides of the House.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I accept the comments made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in good faith. What he has said has a lot to commend it. As he knows, I do not usually speak in this House from complete texts or reports. I have been here a number of years and I usually speak on an impromptu basis. As the hon. member knows, my role with the Privy Council is one which is specialized, and I am not overly knowledgeable about the Income Tax Act.

My colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) tried to be here this afternoon but he had another engagement. He prepared some notes for my help. If I read them at length, I regret that it appeared it was just a pro forma response from bureaucrats to the hon. member. However, let me say to him quite sincerely that the content of his bill was examined by my colleague from Ottawa Centre, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Good points have been raised on this bill and we wish to respond. I take the hon. member's admonition and as one who is concerned with the rules and practices of the House I suggest the comments he has raised could perhaps be more appropriately brought up at another time when we discuss parliamentary reform and we talk about the length of speeches and parliamentary practices. Nevertheless, I welcome his question of privilege although I am not sure it is a question of privilege, but in all honesty I have tried to clarify the situation in response to him.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I feel I have some privileges here, but the privilege I had of speaking this afternoon without notes has now been lost because we have run out of time. I would have dearly loved to say a few things about this particular topic.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is now after five o'clock. I do not want to prohibit the hon. member from making a contribution, if he sincerely wishes to do so. Perhaps he can limit himself to a very brief intervention.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I want to make the same point. I am not sitting here with a pile of notes handed to me by any departmental bureaucrat. There are some points I wanted to make. I am unable to do so because of the question of privilege that has been raised.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, if we are going after five o'clock I just want to say that I have no notes whatsoever and I would fully support this bill.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I wish everyone a good weekend?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I do not think the Chair is expected to comment further on the matter of personal privilege that was raised. I might add that my recollection of Beauchesne is that members ought to use notes rather than read speeches. Some of us have difficulty doing that. However, in keeping with the good wishes expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that we have a good weekend, I would state that the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock Monday afternoon.

At 5.02 p.m. the House adjourned without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 24, 1980

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

[Translation]

THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE JULES LÉGER

TRIBUTES TO FORMER GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said yesterday, with the death of Jules Léger, Canada is losing one of its most prominent sons and servants.

[English]

All Canadians were filled with admiration for the strength of his spirit, the wisdom and dignity with which he performed the duties of the high office of Governor General in spite of the stroke which he suffered early during his mandate.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, we often admire in others and especially in great men, the qualities that we would like to have ourselves. That is why every one of us will admire such and such aspect of the character and life of the former Governor General. As far as I am concerned, it is the quality, the extent and catholicity of his patriotism which were paramount in Jules Léger, as well as the extreme generosity with which he served the public good. He also had a sense of history and a concern for lucid expression, which might explain why he was at first attracted by journalism. I also appreciated his kindness and the obvious relish with which he underlined the humorous aspects of life.

[English]

He has given us many standards to emulate. One of them was the harmony of his married life. His wife, Gabrielle, shared in his duties, burdens and accomplishments. In this she served all Canadians. Today all Canadians share in her sorrow.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition I want to associate ourselves with the words of tribute and deep regret expressed on behalf of the government by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on the death of His Excellency, former Governor General Léger.

Governor General Léger was an outstanding Canadian who served his country as newspaper editor, as a public servant, as a diplomat of distinction and finally as Governor General. As a member of a distinguished family of Quebec, Jules Léger never lost sight of his rural roots in that province, he never lost the strength of his faith and he never avoided what he knew to be the responsibilities of his citizenship. Throughout all these years of service Jules Léger had the undaunting support and encouragement of his wife Gabrielle. We shall all remember Mrs. Léger in our prayers today.

[Translation]

Mr. Léger rendered immense services to this country and he deserved the admiration of every Canadian. During his entire career in the public service, he showed great competence and much wisdom. After he was appointed Governor General of Canada, millions of Canadians discovered a man with unequalled courage and determination. Mr. Léger was a great Canadian.

[English]

Jules Léger shall always be remembered for his steady, quiet pursuit of excellence. Every task he performed—and he performed several under the most difficult of circumstances—was approached with determination and a clear understanding of what it was he wished to achieve. His vision of Canada as a home for both French and English, where both languages and all cultures could flourish, was a consistent theme in all of his endeavours, whether as ambassador to France in difficult times, or as under-secretary of state during a period of growing cultural and political awareness in his home province of Quebec.

• (1410)

As Governor General, Jules Léger sought to make his office a positive instrument of Canadian identity and to establish Canadian traditions befitting a sovereign nation. We were all saddened by his illness which, so early in his term of office, might have caused a less determined person to stand down. Not Jules Léger. He demonstrated to all Canadians that illness should not deter us from responsibility. We shall always remember his eloquent words in his 1975 New Year's messages when he stated:

> These long months have brought me close to those who suffer . . . They should not despair.

Madam Speaker, we mourn the loss today of Jules Léger, but we do not despair. For the life of Jules Léger is a shining example of public service, of quiet excellence and of the best of the Canadian spirit.

[Translation]

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, Canadians were very sad to hear about the death of Mr. Jules Léger. He deserved the admiration of everyone by remaining in office after a serious illness. He performed his duties with dignity. Mr. Léger believed firmly in the duality of Canada and he devoted his life to our country.

[English]

He will be missed for the simplicity and the serenity he brought to a life which was committed to the public service and which culminated in the high office of Governor General.

When speaking of Jules Léger, it is impossible not to pay tribute to his truly immense courage. Scant months into the sensitive and demanding job of Governor General, a serious stroke forced him to slow down, but only momentarily. Within months he was again giving all that he had for his country, the country he loved and served so well all his life.

[Translation]

To Mrs. Léger and all the family, I extend my most sincere sympathy on my own behalf and on behalf of my party.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

EXTERNAL AID

ITALIAN EARTHQUAKE—ASSISTANCE BY CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the devastating earthquake which has struck the Naples-Salerno area of southern Italy, in view of the death toll of over 400 people and the extensive damage to property, and given that Canada has always acted with generosity and swiftness in meeting such natural disasters, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House urges the Secretary of State for External Affairs to consult urgently with the Italian government as to the special and immediate needs of the victims of the earthquake of the Naples-Salerno area of southern Italy and that the minister report to the House at the earliest opportunity and advise the House on the ways in which the Canadian government is willing and able to render assistance. Further, that the government consult with the many Canadians who wish personally to assist the victims of this earthquake and provide special programs which will allow for the people of Canada with special ties to Italy to respond in an urgent and generous manner through airlifts, emergency relief and reconstruction.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prud'homme: I will second that motion.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CALL FOR CONSISTENT POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter which is both pressing and urgent. Given the fact that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) more or less told Canadians to buy foreign-made cars if they were unhappy with the rust warranties offered by domestic auto manufacturers, and, further, given that his colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) has just sunk $200 million into saving Chrysler, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott):

● (1415)

That this House urge the two ministers to have a meeting in the official language of their choice so that a consistent policy with reference to the Canadian auto industry can be hammered out.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL UNITY

REMARKS OF HON. MEMBER FOR CAPILANO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the previous leader of the Conservative party was a man of great courage and personal integrity and showed no fear in censuring a candidate of his party from Moncton whose statements were blatantly un-Canadian and a slur on our land and people, and whereas the present member from Capilano, a former member of the cabinet, has made statements recently supporting western separatism and indicating a desire to destroy this great country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That the present leader of the Conservative party attempt to summon courage as shown by its past leader and censure the member from Capilano for his separatist remarks.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CONTINUATION OF SERVICES OF WEST COAST WEATHERSHIPS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion which is of urgent importance and pressing necessity. Given that the federal government has unwisely decided to terminate the services of the two Pacific coast weatherships, in spite of the fact that these vessels have provided an essential early warning weather service and scientific data base for several decades, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon):

That the government be required to continue the services of the west coast weatherships in accordance with the advice of eminent Canadian scientists, the World Meteorological Association, the United Nations Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission, and the International Council of Scientific Unions, all of whom agree that sea-based reference stations are an essential element of any weather reporting network because they provide necessary data which cannot be measured by an orbiting satellite.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL UNITY

MAILING OF MATERIAL BY LIBERAL PARTY OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In material distributed by the Liberal Party of Canada, contributors were asked to respond favourably to the following statement: "Yes, I'm concerned and I'd like to add my personal support to the efforts the Liberal party is making to create my kind of Canada". In view of the recent statements of the Minister of Finance, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the next mailing of this material soliciting funds also contain the following caution: "Provided your kind of Canada is one in which you will have a lowered standard of living, lower wages, higher inflation, higher taxes, higher unemployment, and higher interest rates"; because that is the kind of Canada we are getting under this Liberal government.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

TRANSPORT

AID TO URBAN TRANSPORTATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of the federal government's obviously discriminatory policies on aid to urban transportation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That the federal Liberals make good on election promises made in 1974 to inject hundreds of millions of dollars of aid into urban transportation; that the federal Liberals make good on an agreement made five years ago to foot one half the cost of improvements to Union station in Toronto and the railway yards west of the station and that this government honour a commitment made by the Clark administration to give Ontario an additional $10 million per year in transit aid for three years.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1420)

NATURAL RESOURCES

TUNGSTEN—SECURITY OF SUPPLY TO CUSTOMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. Whereas Canada is the major supplier of high-grade tungsten concentrates to the western world, and whereas the strike at our sole large producer, Canada Tungsten Mining Corporation, is jeopardizing Canada's reputation as a secure source of this strategic commodity, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Labour take the necessary action to ensure that our customers and allies can depend on secure supplies of tungsten from Canada, that our international reputation is not threatened and that our offshore markets are preserved.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIVE RIGHTS

CALL FOR RECOGNITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, this government has a woefully inadequate record in the furtherance and advancement of the rights of Canada's original peoples. It has refused to recognize the special and distinct place in the Canadian community of the Indian, Metis and Inuit peoples. This is being demonstrated even at this very moment by the convergence on Ottawa of thousands of aboriginal people aboard a special "Constitution train". These Indian, Metis and Inuit object strongly to the all-encompassing term "native" which is being used in the proposed constitutional charter to protect only vaguely defined rights.

Therefore, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That this government act immediately through all forums, means and assemblies to recognize the fundamental rights and freedoms of Canada's original peoples: the Indian, the Metis and the Inuit.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

PARLIAMENT HILL

CONGRATULATIONS ON ESTABLISHMENT OF DAY CARE CENTRE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a non-partisan matter, which I am sure will receive unanimous consent. As a result of a question I raised last year on the International Day of the Child, which was supported by the then Conservative minister of national health and welfare and members of all parties, a group of women workers have been quietly and persistently working to organize the first day care centre on Parliament Hill. Recently we learned that you, Madam Speaker, have approved use of space in the East Block for a day care centre which will give House of Commons employees adequate care for their children.

In view of the unprecedented action to provide day care in the work place, which is a model that all federal departments should follow, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) and the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this House congratulate Madam Speaker and the House of Commons day care committee for their tireless efforts to establish day care on the Hill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have been resisting congratulatory messages under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and I would hesitate to accept one which is addressed to me, but I am sure the House has taken good note of the excellent sentiments.

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR TABLING OF NEW BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The federal budget has done and will do nothing to curb inflation. Social programs which are bound by fixed yearly budgets from funding agencies will have to compensate for as much as a 10 per cent to 12 per cent increase in the cost of their operations due to inflation, increases which curtail and limit the effectiveness and service these programs and institutions can provide. Whereas these programs are aimed particularly at native people, low income families, senior citizens, the handicapped and the needy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright):

That this government abandon its misguided budget immediately and table not later than January 15, 1981, a budget which realistically addresses Canada's primary economic enemy, namely inflation.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1425)

POST OFFICE

CALL FOR RESTORATION OF PUBLIC CONFIDENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I wish to move a motion on a matter of great urgency. Now that second reading has been given to Bill C-42, an act to transform the Post Office into a Crown corporation, and in view of the sagging reputation of the Post Office for efficient service because of the government's continuing freeze on letter carrier service to Canada's expanding suburbs, among other things, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That the Postmaster General begin immediately the restoration of public confidence in the post office by ending forthwith the letter carrier freeze, thereby providing job opportunities for some of Canada's 800,000 unemployed workers rather than forcing them to go on unemployment insurance.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY RESPECTING URBAN TRANSIT ASSISTANCE TO ONTARIO

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister indicate what urban transit assistance will be extended to Ontario this year or next, especially with regard to the metropolitan Toronto area where there is such an increasing transit problem which cannot be solved without federal attention?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, under the UTAP program, the Urban Transit Assistance Program, each province is entitled to an allocation, relative to the size of its population, of $10 per head. Ontario receives the same treatment as every other province. If my memory serves me well, it amounts to some $86 million a year. Ontario is making full use of that, mostly for grade separation rather than urban transportation in the strict sense of the word.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport must know that the $86 million he is referring to is simply for the type of activity he has mentioned, grade separations on overpasses. Does the minister's answer mean that they intend to renege on commitments made by the federal government to the government of Ontario, namely the Clark government commitment to give up to $10 million per year to assist in transit matters in Ontario; second, the promise made in the 1974 campaign by the Liberal government to give up to $290 million to various provinces; and, finally, the commitment that was made to assist with regard to the realignment of trackage west of the Union station and to redesign the Union station itself. Is the government going to renege on all those commitments?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, the provinces have extraordinary freedom under the UTAP program. They can use the money for grade separations, or anything related to urban transportation. Some provinces use the money to purchase buses. In certain circumstances, others have even used it to build sidewalks. Therefore, the freedom of the provinces is great. The province of Ontario has decided to use this federal money which has been allocated to them for grade separations only. That is their decision to make.

The hon. member made reference to a commitment of a previous administration to provide $30 million for the Bathurst Union station project. Obviously I have looked at the file. The file answers a request from Mr. Snow for $30 million of UTAP money for that purpose. My distinguished predecessor answered yes to that. A communique issued on the eve of the election leaves it open as to what was offered, but my interpretation is that it was UTAP money that was offered. If there was a commitment to give $30 million extra UTAP money to Ontario for this subject, it must have been the result of a shaking of hands between my predecessor and Mr. Snow, because there is no reference to it in the file. That is the truth of the matter.

● (1430)

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I happened to be a party to the negotiations between the Government of Canada and the government of the province of Ontario to which the minister has just referred, and I can assure the minister that it was a commitment to extend $10 million of assistance per year for three years to the government of Ontario. Based on that, would the minister kindly stop trying to rationalize his reneging of that promise and tell us whether he will honour the commitment of the federal government to the government of Ontario to help the commuters of Toronto with a problem which has become not only chronic but also urgent?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, if it was a commitment, it was a political and moral commitment. However, there is no reference to a Treasury Board submission or approval of it.

Mr. Stevens: But it was.

Mr. Pepin: There is no reference to it in my file. I would like to see it. There is certainly no reference in my file to a cabinet decision on that subject. So what Mr. Snow asked of my predecessor was $30 million of UTAP money, and that is what he is getting.

Mr. Stevens: Nothing to do with it.

INQUIRY WHETHER COMMITMENT TO ONTARIO WILL BE HONOURED

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I would like to pursue that matter with the Minister of Transport. Before we get too far off the track on this, I might remind the minister that when the government gave Ontario its freedom to spend money on urban transit out of the grade separation program, at the same time it reduced Ontario's grade separation money, thereby putting Ontario in the position where it had to choose between spending less money to save children or helping transit.

Would the minister please advise this House very clearly—because he has not yet done so—whether he proposes to honour the commitment to give Ontario an additional $30 million to help it do something about transit for the first time, or whether in fact he proposes to continue not only the reduction in grade separation programs but also to cancel the $30 million to Ontario, thereby making sure it never gets a penny out of this government for urban transit?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will repeat what I have already said. The program is one which allows the provinces to decide in which way they are going to spend their UTAP money. They can spend it on railway grade separation, overpasses and so forth. They can spend it on buying buses or for other worthwhile urban transportation objectives.

This is one of the difficulties of the federal system, if I may say so in a reflective mood. If a province decides to use a federal program in a certain way, all the other provinces are bound to ask for similar use of the same program even if they are given the full freedom to use the money in a different fashion. This is a way of adjusting regionalism in this country. It is not always easy, as illustrated by the present series of questions.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, since we have received a reflective answer, I will ask a question which might draw another. Because this matter is critical. I should point out that this is the first time in the history of any government that a promise on urban transit has been broken twice.

Will the minister explain to me, to Toronto and to Canadians why it is justified to reduce the amount of money for grade separation, to produce no money for urban transit support and to produce a budget which will reduce social spending, all of which means that municipalities must bear an ever greater burden using the less progressive tax system which they have to use? Can the minister justify this in the context of a budget which goes to $80 billion in spending which spends $50 million on more advertising to tell us how good we should feel and which spends less on matters which will help solve the problems we already face?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, as I said in the interview which is referred to at this time, there is no doubt that way back in 1977, or even earlier than that, there was a certain overenthusiasm on the part of the government of the time about the belief that it could spend great amounts of money on urban transportation.

There is no doubt that there is a great need. At the moment, for example, the trend is toward relocation of railway lines. There was a time in the ninetheenth century when it was a status symbol to have a railway line right in the centre of town. The mood of the people has changed; they would like to see it way out of town now. All this is to say that the amount of money which can be allocated to urban transportation is really not unlimited. I will do my very best to increase this amount, knowing full well that it will not go a third of the way to what might be useful.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, it is difficult to increase what you have never spent on urban transit. The point is that in 1977 the government took Ontario's share of grade separation funds down from $18 million a year to $16.5 million, and the government said Ontario could spend some of that on urban transit. The effect of this government action is either no funds for urban transit or fewer dollars to help at railway crossings where children are killed.

Can I now have an assurance that, contrary to what some of us believe, the grade separation fund will not be further reduced but will in fact be increased and will be used for its primary and proper purpose, that of saving lives?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, that is exactly what I am trying to say. There are different views as to what is needed under the label of urban transportation. Some people say that this is essentially railway separation or overpasses. Ontario believes that. There is less of a need for that in Prince Edward Island, for example. There are fewer railway crossings there, so Prince Edward Island is using the money for other purposes such as buying buses and building some types of sidewalks occasionally. The program was aimed at allowing maximum flexibility to the provinces for what they considered to be important in urban transportation. Previous to that I am the first to admit that Ontario was getting more for railway crossings; but what Ontario considered then to be fair, that is, having 58 per cent of the money under this program, was considered by other provinces not to be fair, so the federal government at the time decided to give for each province an equal amount depending on its population. Some people will consider that fair, others will not.

* * *

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

OWNERSHIP OF TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPED IN CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On Friday I made public copies of certain correspondence between the Exxon Corporation in the United States and its subsidiary here, Imperial Oil. I understand that the minister himself has copies of that correspondence. In it it is made clear that technology and other patentable information that is developed in Canada by Imperial Oil will reside in its final ownership form with Exxon in the United States. Considering that over the weekend, an official from Imperial Oil confirmed the existence of this arrangement, I would like to ask the minister what steps the government plans to take to reverse this totally unacceptable situation in which Canadian taxpayers are financing a project which ultimately ends up in the United States.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I contacted the president of Imperial Oil this morning to discuss with him the point the hon. member raised last Friday in order to obtain whatever information is available at this time. I am advised that Imperial Oil modified the policy somewhat in 1979 and that the patents are now issued in Ottawa in the name of Imperial Oil of Canada. However, the arrangement for the pooling of the research remains integrated under Exxon and, obviously, this is a source of concern for Canada not only in the oil and gas industry but also with regard to research and development generally for all firms in this country.

In a review of industrial policy the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is examining very carefully this whole question of research and development and the assurance that Canadians will first benefit from research and development undertaken in Canada. I have this preliminary information. We, as a government, have stated that we believe there is not enough research and development undertaken by the oil and gas industry inside Canada. We have stated that quite clearly in our energy program and I have done so in several speeches I have made. That is one of the reasons for our program of increasing Canadian ownership to over 50 per cent and ensuring that a significant number of the large oil and gas firms will be Canadian controlled. These are steps which are in the direction of ensuring that we will have large firms in Canada which will conduct research and development in this country.

● (1440)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I will have something to say about the minister's latter point later today when the debate on that important topic resumes. I noticed the minister said that Imperial Oil somewhat modified its policy as of 1979. Since my information is that the Prime Minister was made aware of the policy of Imperial Oil in May, 1976, could he tell us what the government has done in the four-year interval to reverse this totally unacceptable policy? Could he tell us if it is just Imperial Oil which practises this kind of arrangement with its subsidiary, or are Shell, Gulf, Texaco and all other multinationals carrying on the same kind of process?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, as far as the first question is concerned, obviously I am not in a position to answer whether or not the Prime Minister received a particular representation. The only thing I have seen is an unsigned letter, and I am not in a position to know whether it was ever received by the Prime Minister.

As to the second point, it appears that it was an anonymous letter which was sent. I checked at a meeting last week with Suncor as to what was happening with the technology which had been developed. For instance, if one takes the case of Suncor, I was assured that the technology and the patents belong to Suncor of Canada and they are here in this country. But one must realize that if a company is 100 per cent foreign owned, even if the patents are held by the Canadian subsidiary in Canada, the patent will belong to the foreign multinational which controls it 100 per cent. This is why our policy of Canadianization of the oil and gas industry becomes so very important, and I hope we will get the support of hon. members opposite for this policy in the next few months and years to come.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, my party has been calling for that policy for more than 20 years, so we do not need to take any lessons from the Liberals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Since the Shell corporation, to the surprise of no one, announced on the weekend that it was following the noble example of Imperial Oil by cutting back on its northern project commitment for 1981, saying that it was not going to proceed with some $200 million of intended spending until they too had a meeting with the minister like the one held between the minister and a representative of the Imperial Oil company, I should like to ask the minister for two assurances this afternoon: first, that not one additional penny will be granted to Shell; and second, since we have Petro-Canada and the minister is so proud of Petro-Canada, will he finally tell Imperial Oil and Shell that we do not need them in the north, that Petro-Canada can do that development for us?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I am advised that the Shell group, the Alsands group, does not require any financial loans or arrangements; they are not asking for this. They have an agreement which expires at the end of December. They are concerned that they should know by then what the rules of the game will be, if they have to carry on any further or whether the agreement expiring at that date will become null and void. They have asked to meet with me again. I met with them a few weeks ago. Certainly I will be available to talk with them further and advise the hon. member as to the results of those talks.

* * *

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

OPPORTUNITIES FOR CANADIAN ENTREPRENEURS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. No doubt at this point he is aware that very many small Canadian oil exploration companies are leaving our country, for the United States particularly but for other parts of the world as well with more hospitable political climates. Many of these companies have already left and have taken with them Canadian expertise, technology and equipment. Since the minister appears to have discovered a mysterious fountain of wealth from which he is drawing $40 million to secure Imperial Oil's confidence in Canada's energy future, what measures does he have in mind to convince Canadian entrepreneurs that, instead of their assets being confiscated, they will be allowed to operate in their own country under fair and equitable rules in comparison to those by which the game is played in other parts of the world?

Mr. Waddell: Try Norway or Mexico.

Mr. Clark: You try it, Ian.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question was rather long and convoluted. I should like to remind him that indeed such a policy was put forward in the national energy program. It is totally oriented toward giving advantages to Canadian-owned and controlled companies.

Mr. Clark: That is why they are all leaving.

Mr. Lalonde: Once those companies have examined the program and the implications of the budget, they will realize—and more and more of them are realizing it at the present time— that indeed the program will be extremely beneficial to them. I can tell the hon. member that we have had discussions with a large number of Canadian-owned companies that consider the program put forward very much to their advantage.

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Lalonde: There is no question about confiscating anything. It is a matter of helping Canadian firms grow and enlarging the Canadian control of that particular industry over the next few years.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, despite what the minister said and his assertion that all is well, the fact remains that there is a mass exodus from western Canada not of multinationals but of Canadian companies to other parts of the world, the effects of which are not only disastrous to our energy future but to the economy in general, particularly in the producing areas of our country where small companies and businesses which service the oil patch are going bankrupt at unprecedented rates. Has the government given any thought to helping these areas most directly affected by the recent budget to overcome this incredibly stupid experiment in energy politics?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, by his own rhetoric my hon. friend is weakening his argument very much indeed. We believe the program is a fair one and compares very favourably with the treatment given to the oil and gas industry almost anywhere else in the world.

As I have said, as far as the program itself is concerned, it is built in a way to give advantages to Canadian firms. We are convinced that those Canadian firms will profit from those arrangements put forward in the national energy program.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Shorten up your answers, Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: As to the last point raised by my hon. friend, I ask him to compare the take of the national government of this country with the takes of national governments in any other country in the world. He will find that the national government in Canada is getting less.

An hon. Member: Fifty per cent.

Mr. Lalonde: It is getting a lot less, as much as half that of any other national government in the world. I suggest the hon. member should look around, because he will find that the national government of Canada is providing a very fair deal to the industry.

* * *

NATIONAL PARKS

NOTICE TO LEASEHOLDERS PUBLISHED IN PRESS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment, I should like to direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. On November 8 of this year the minister caused to be filed in The Globe and Mail of Toronto a notice directed to leaseholders in national parks. The leases were on property in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Why was the notice put in the paper rather than sending a letter? Secondly, why was it in The Globe and Mail? Perhaps in his answer the minister could confirm that there are newspaper companies in Western Canada. Why would this notice have been placed in view of the fact that the matter is before the courts in the province of Manitoba?

● (1450)

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the advertisements to which the hon. member refers were placed to ensure that any person affected who had not received a direct letter—and to our knowledge a direct personal letter went to all persons who were affected—might be reached through the public media. That is the purpose of the advertisement to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, the parliamentary secretary has not answered the question. Why was it in the Toronto Globe and Mail? Why was it put in that paper in light of the fact that the matter is before the courts? Would he please answer those questions?

Mr. Simmons: As the hon. member has indicated, the individuals involved have the right of appeal and some of them have been exercising that right. But that aside, the policy is in effect and there is nothing wrong with publicizing the policy while individual appeals may be ongoing. What the member has against Canada's national newspaper, I do not know. For his information I will undertake to see what other papers the ads were placed in.

* * *

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

APPLICATION OF "DEEMED APPROVED" STATUS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a question which I would like to address to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce about the Foreign Investment Review Agency. Generally speaking, in order to obtain approval from the Foreign Investment Review Agency, any person or company wanting to locate or to purchase in Canada must prove that there will be a significant benefit to Canada from the sale or location of the business. How could that be applied in the cases which are simply "deemed approved", given that all that is required is that the agency has not dealt with the application for 60 days in order to achieve "deemed approved" status?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the concept of deeming is simply an alternative to formal order in council approval. When cases are deemed, there is still the assessment by the agency and the negotiation of undertakings, along with consultation with other government departments and provincial governments. So deeming does not mean that there is not the seeking and obtaining of significant benefit to Canada. It is obtained there, just as it is in the case of order in council approval.

Mr. Deans: In the proposal put forward by Midland Pipe (Canada) Corporation of Calgary in which they were given approval deemed to have been dealt with by the agency to locate a warehouse to import, to gather and to distribute steel oilfield tubing and casing, can the minister explain to the House how the decision was arrived at that they should be allowed to locate this particular operation in Canada, given that there are already at the moment in Canada a large number of companies manufacturing those exact products in western and eastern Canada which are not operating to full capacity? They could use the work and create employment in Canada and they are obviously going to suffer as a result of action by the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, the existing confidentiality requirements of the law, which I hope to have changed over time, prevents me from giving—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: —the kind of detailed answer the hon. member is seeking. I simply want to repeat that even when deeming takes place the process involving the Foreign Investment Review Agency is carried out all the same.

* * *

FISHERIES

QUALITY OF FISH EXPORTS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. A few days ago the minister of fisheries announced the implementation of an export licensing system whereby the federal Department of Fisheries would use its definition of product quality as a basis for approving or denying any request to export a quantity of fish to a foreign purchaser. Does the minister have any evidence at all to suggest that Canadian fishing companies are exporting substandard fish products to foreign markets? If so, will the minister name those companies so that all members of the Fisheries Council of Canada may know who these unscrupulous operators are?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, there is a problem of consistency of quality and it is in trying to deal with this problem that we are looking at the possibility of grading products before they are exported so importers would know if they are dealing with an A or B quality product. That is not unusual in this type of industry. In fact, the industry itself has been requesting that we put more stringent measures on the end product and that we put forward a grading system.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, my information, obtained from the members of the Fisheries Council, does not concur with the minister's answer. Perhaps he ought to add the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation to his list of shyster companies, in view of their recent multi-million dollar sale of wormy Lake Winnipeg whitefish to Poland in exchange for granting Polish trawlers a quota of Atlantic squid, which Canadian fishermen were not allowed to catch. Be that as it may, why is the minister imposing another bureaucratic burden upon Canadian fishing companies? Will he indicate if export licensing is only the first stage of an orderly marketing philosophy of his which will ultimately lead to a federal monopoly in the marketing of saltwater fish, patterned along the communistic lines of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, some of the hon. member's assertions boggle the mind. I am not sure if they boggle his mind, but they certainly boggle mine. He starts his question with a gratuitous insult to a Crown corporation which is seen by the fishermen of the freshwater area as having served them well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. LeBlanc: In fact, it is a corporation which is seen by the provincial premiers and provincial governments as beneficial. It was asked for by them a few years ago, during my predecessor's term of office, and they have not asked that it be abolished or changed radically even when I offered them the opportunity to do so. We are trying to make Canadian fish the highest quality fish exported in the world. I hope hon. members in this House will join with me in this crusade.

* * *

EXTERNAL AID

ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS OF ITALIAN EARTHQUAKE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, in view of the resolution presented earlier by the hon. members for Brampton-Georgetown, Nepean-Carleton and Saint-Denis with the approval of all political parties in the House concerning the devastating earthquake which has struck the Naples-Salerno area in southern Italy, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs care to outline to the House what action the Canadian government is prepared to take to assist the earthquake victims?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Italian government has not yet asked for any international assistance with respect to these victims but the Canadian government has set aside $100,000 as an initial contribution in the event that such assistance is requested.

Given this opportunity, I would like to say to Canadians in general that we would join with the Red Cross in encouraging Canadians to respond with contributions of cash rather than kind. This would enable the local Italian relief workers to purchase quickly the appropriate supplies needed urgently to meet local needs and not impose our priorities on them.

* * *

TOURISM

PROMOTION OF TOURISM—SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in the absence of the Minister of State for Small Business, who is responsible for tourism. Given that tourism generates income in the range of $11 billion a year in Canada and provides jobs for more than a million Canadians—it is Canada's sixth largest earner of foreign exchange—and given that there is a subcommittee comprised of representatives from customs, immigration CGOT and transport who are looking into ways in which government officials can help welcome tourists, which subcommittee was to report a year ago to Parliament, may I ask the minister when we can expect this report?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State, Small Businesses): Madam Speaker, I feel that if the hon. member recognized the minister who is responsible for tourism at first glance, he could join me in promoting even further the interests of that very important industry. As the hon. member is probably aware, at the end of August I had occasion, jointly with my colleague the Minister of National Revenue, to announce the setting up of a new program, at ports of entry, with regard to a brochure that port officials are asked to hand out to our American visitors welcoming them to Canada and advising them of the various programs and addresses which can be of interest and use to them. That is a result of the interdepartmental committee that was set up. I shall enquire about exactly when that committee will report to the House, as requested by the hon. member.

● (1500)

[English]

Mr. Fretz: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the information given by the minister. In view of the circumstances outlined in my first question, will the minister now give this report the priority it deserves?

Mr. Nielsen: Where is it?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Madam Speaker, I have just advised the hon. member that I shall enquire about exactly when that report will be ready and let him know as soon as I have had a reply.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROGRESS OF FRIGATE PROGRAM

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Last week it was reported that the U.S.S.R. has launched a new submarine with a weight of 30,000 tons and capable of travelling 40 knots 4,000 feet below sea level. Is the minister able to assure the House that Canada's contribution to anti-submarine warfare, the frigate program, will now move promptly to cabinet and through cabinet?

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I believe that I can reassure the hon. member for Victoria by saying that the frigate program is now under way. Our government has approved the program in principle and I can assure the hon. member that it will go forward as soon as possible. We are now assessing or analysing the evaluations made by our department and the Department of Supply and Services so that we may make our choice as soon as possible and move forward with this program.

[English]

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. This submarine of the U.S.S.R. represents a quantum leap forward in technology, particularly in the use of titanium and the depths to which it can submerge. Would the minister assure the House that none of these innovations is due to the sale of Canadian underwater vehicles to the U.S.S.R. over the past few years? Also, has the minister approved any export permits since he took office some eight months ago?

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member for Victoria that the fact that the U.S.S.R. have a submarine of this size is certainly not due to any technological assistance from Canada. I can assure the former minister that this is impossible.

As for the frigates, I would like to remind him that he was probably ready to make a decision when his party was in power, but that the decision was not made at that time. For our part, we shall make this decision in the very near future.

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CLOSURE OF EXPRESS OFFICES—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH PRESIDENT

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the recent public statement by CN Express with regard to cutbacks, lay-offs and, indeed, the close-out of certain express offices, particularly in the Atlantic region, and in view of the adverse effects these announcements and cutbacks will eventually have on the economy, unemployment and regional development, particularly in northern New Brunswick but also in other areas of the Altantic region, would the Minister of Transport give us the undertaking that he will request the president of CN, Dr. Bandeen, and other CN Express officials to come to Ottawa and meet with hon. members so as to ascertain the precise reasons CN is taking these moves and, indeed, better to inform us of the heavy-handed attitude of CN in recent times in terms of cutbacks, lay-offs and the closing down of certain vital services in the country?

Mr. McDermid: He will be in the estimates committee this week.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I was about to say that Mr. Bandeen will appear before the comittee on transportation this week where hon. members will have an opportunity to ask him to justify why CN Express must retrench in this particular manner, and perhaps the opportunity to question him further on CN's program on relocation, retraining and the general fate of employees. A tremendous effort will be made to reduce the inconveniences and setbacks to permanent employees.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF WATER BY FISH PLANT WASTE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I wanted to ask a question of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with regard to a study by Environment Canada which indicates that 28 of the reserves in northern Manitoba have contaminated water because of the inadequate disposal of human and other wastes. In his absence, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

According to the chief of the St. Theresa Point reserve situated on Island Lake, a large part of the contamination of drinking water of that reserve comes from a fish plant which operates on the lake and which processes one million pounds of fish each year and disposes of the waste in the lake. Would the minister indicate whether or not he will see that the fish plant finds alternate sources for disposing of the fish waste which is now polluting the drinking water of that reserve?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I will look into the matter. I am not familiar with the problem, but I will try to give the hon. member some information within the next 24 hours.

* * *

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, in view of the absence of the Prime Minister, who is still somewhere or other, and the Deputy Prime Minister, I will ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister. A report by the Economic Council of Canada on the province of Newfoundland reveals a very serious situation. One-twelfth of all personal income is from unemployment insurance compared to one fortieth in Canada and the average earned income in Newfoundland was only 53.6 per cent of the national average in 1978.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: We hear from those on the left who have been in power and have done so much during their years in power.

Mr. Waddell: You were in power in Newfoundland.

Mr. Crosbie: The Economic Council of Canada has recommended that the government be prepared to change a wide range of government policies to overcome problems in the economy of Newfoundland. Would the Acting Prime Minister tell me whether or not his government is prepared to change a wide range of government policies, and will it consider changing its policy with reference to the offshore mineral resources of Newfoundland and Labrador and perhaps confirm the province's ownership and control of those resources in an attempt to overcome these deplorable and depressing figures?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Madam Speaker, the report which has been published and to which the hon. member has referred is extremely important and the government is examining it very carefully.

The hon. member asked whether the government is willing to change some of its policies. The flexibility of this government is well known, and so is its willingness to adjust and adapt its policies to the problems of the Canadian society, and this same flexibility will be shown in the particular case of Newfoundland.

As for the constitutional problem mentioned in the second part of the question asked by the hon. member, he is well aware of the great flexibility shown by this government in its wish to renew the Canadian constitution, and specific action has already been taken by this government and steps have been initiated to patriate the constitution and entrench the charter of rights. Such endeavours have been made in a spirit of flexibility and adaptability, as the hon. member and the House know full well.

[English]

ENERGY

HYDROELECTRICITY—DEVELOPMENT OF LOWER CHURCHILL PROJECT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, not to the thirty-sixth acting Prime Minister. Enough of this nonsense and gobbledygook when the province of Newfoundland has only 53 per cent of the average earned income of Canadians as a whole. The Newfoundland government has just tabled in connection with their new legislation a report that shows that Hydro-Québec has benefited by $2 billion since 1972 under the Upper Churchill power contract while the government and people of Newfoundland have benefited by an amount slightly in excess of $100 million net.

In view of the figures I used in my original question, will the minister give the people of Newfoundland a guarantee that he will take steps immediately, first, to use his powers to ensure that Newfoundland can develop the Lower Churchill project and transmit electricity across the province of Quebec, particularly the powers under section 92(10) of the BNA Act; and second, will the minister use his powers to assist the province of Newfoundland in righting this imbalance of income of $2 billion as compared to $100 million, from the Upper Churchill project, a contract which was instituted by a fellow Liberal, Mr. Smallwood, in his heyday in Newfoundland?

● (1510)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, on the first part of the question I am very happy to tell my friend that not only do I stand ready to correct this situation, or to give the assurance with regard to the transportation of electricity, but the Prime Minister himself is on record as saying, in a letter he wrote to Premier Peckford in October:

> In my letter of July 29, 1980, to you I indicated that the federal government stood ready to act if it could clearly be demonstrated that the exportation of electricity from Newfoundland was in fact being prevented by Quebec. This, as you will recall, was also the essence of my comments to you when we discussed the matter at the recent Conference of First Ministers on the Constitution.

So we are on the record in that respect, Madam Speaker.

As far as the second point of the question is concerned, I want to stress to the hon. member that what we are facing is a contract between Québec-Hydro and, I believe, Rio Tinto, a private British corporation at the time. If the hon. member can tell me what constitutional means there is in the hands of the federal government to cancel a private contract entered into in that way, I will certainly be very happy to examine this.

In addition, I said last week that I had indicated to the government of Newfoundland that if it felt that the federal government could be of any help with respect to this contract—we would be very happy to sit down with them and the government of Quebec and see whether any modification or improvement could be made. We still stand ready to help if the two parties concerned are willing to have us sit at the table with them.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

ATTACHMENT OF IMPORTED TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT TO CANADIAN LINES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications who will be aware that on August 5 the CRTC announced a policy which would allow customers of Bell Canada to purchase their own equipment to be attached to Bell's lines although that decision did not require that the equipment used should originate in countries which allowed Canadian equipment to be attached to their lines. In view of the fact that some 6,000 to 7,000 jobs are involved in this vital sector of the Canadian manufacturing economy, will the minister respond favourably to the request made to the federal government by Bell Canada and by the government of Ontario that only equipment from those countries which allow Canadian equipment to be attached to their lines should be allowed to be attached to Canadian lines?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question, which clearly is very important to the communications industry. As he indicated, the CRTC issued a decision on August 5. Since then a number of applications have been received from provincial governments—the hon. member referred to the Ontario government—and the private sector, on the one hand, to put the CRTC's decision aside, and in other cases to uphold that decision. A number of companies now manufacture in Canada telephones that meet the standards of the FCC in the United States among others and they support the decision. I would also like to point out that, since the initial decision by the CRTC, there has been a significant reduction to the consumer in the price of telephones. But, in any case, we are now reviewing all the questions arising from the petitions before us. My officials have had important discussions with those in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to look at the possible implications, and I hope to be in a position to come up with a proposal for a possible solution to those appeals before my cabinet colleagues within a week or two.

[English]

ACTION TO SAFEGUARD CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the vast majority of the cheapest telephones being attached to Canadian phone lines come from Japan, a country with a state-owned national telephone system which does not allow Canadian telephone equipment to be attached to its lines, what action does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce propose to take to ensure that the jobs of 6,000 to 7,000 Canadians involved in this sector of our manufacturing industry are not threatened by the government's decision?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, when I was in Japan in August one of the issues I raised with the Japanese authorities was greater access to the Japanese telecommunications company of Canadian products, and we are certainly pursuing this. I want to add as well that the issue my hon. friend raised is certainly of concern to us. It is something I am reviewing not only with the Minister of Communications but with the Minister of National Revenue to ensure that our laws with respect to imports are respected.

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

LACK OF COVERAGE OF EUROPEAN CONFERENCE

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications. I have just returned from the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, held in Madrid, involving 33 European countries, the United States and Canada. Since this conference is stressing human rights, economic co-operation, détente in Europe and disarmament, would the hon. minister please indicate to this House why the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, a Crown corporation, did not have at least one reporter attending this conference; and will he assure Canadians that the remainder of the conference, which will continue to sit until March 31, will get better coverage by CBC than it has during the first two weeks of its deliberations?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is quite right in stressing the importance of the conference that is going on in Madrid. As the hon. member had the courtesy to give me notice of this question just before entering the House this afternoon, I have had the opportunity of checking back with the CBC. The CBC informs me that there has indeed been a good deal of coverage of the conference on the CBC in Canada. However, they decided in pursuing the coverage of this conference to enter into agreement with Visnews, which as I understand it is a European news-gathering agency. I have brought the concerns of the hon. member to the attention of the CBC, and I will pursue the matter with them.

Introduction of Bills

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ADJOURNMENT DURING FUNERAL OF FORMER GOVERNOR GENERAL LÉGER

Mr. Pinard: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker, concerning the funeral on next Thursday of our former Governor General. There have been discussions, and we have agreed not to sit on Thursday afternoon, so I think there is unanimous consent to the following order:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, on Thursday, November 27, 1980, the House shall sit only from 8 to 10 p.m.;

That the only item of business to be considered at that time shall be a motion pursuant to section 52 of the Petroleum Administration Act; and

That the said day shall be included as one of the three days designated by the said section of the said act.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Does the minister have the consent of the House to present the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed and so ordered.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) did in fact refer to a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—and he quoted from it. In anticipation of that part of the order paper dealing with tabling of documents, would the hon. gentleman prepare himself to table that letter?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to table the letter in question. My hon. colleague will understand that the letter is in English only. I do not have the French translation so I will table it as it is. I could table it immediately if the House agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PEST CONTROL PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-45, to amend the Pest Control Products Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

● (1520)

MEAT IMPORT ACT

MEASURE TO REGULATE IMPORTATION OF MEAT

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-46, to regulate the importation into Canada of fresh, chilled and frozen meat and to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,134, 1,556, 1,658, 1,733 and 1,737.

Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

MISS HAZEL EAGLESOME—PETITION

Question No. 1,346—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the government aware that Miss Hazel Eaglesome has been collecting signatures on a petition against sculptures erected in Rockcliffe Park by the Canada Council?

2. Did Mr. Larry Sobovitch of the Canada Council refer to Miss Eaglesome as "She's obviously no one of importance" and, if so, did the government take any action in regard to the statement and, if so, to what extent?

3. Is it government policy to permit public servants to make such remarks about a citizen exercising their right to petition the government?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): In so far as Secretary of State of Canada and the Canada Council are concerned: 1. The government is aware that signatures for a petition against the sculptures in question were collected by Miss Eaglesome.

2. No. Mr. Sobovitch was quoted incorrectly and out of context. He was asked in informal conversation whether Miss Eaglesome was "anyone important in the field of contemporary art" and replied that, as far as he knew, she was not.

3. Employees of the Canada Council are not members of the public service and are therefore subject only to the internal policies of the Canada Council. Further, the response of the council to question two indicates that Mr. Sobovitch was quoted incorrectly and out of context.

CIDA—AID TO SOMALIA

Question No. 1,556—Mr. Wenman:

Has the government made any plans to reassess CIDA's bilateral and priority aid list with the view of making Somalia a target country for aid and, if so (a) does the government have any immediate plans for dispatching emergency food supplies to Somalia above the initial 6,300 ton wheat commitment (b) has the government considered any specific policies for encouraging and assisting Canadian non-governmental organizations in establishing humanitarian relief and development projects in Somalia (c) has Canada any intention of taking initiatives at the United Nations to focus international attention on the suffering in Somalia?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Canada regularly reviews countries' eligibility for Canadian bilateral assistance. Eligibility is determined by a number of factors, among them the major are—developmental need, political and commercial implications, etc. To date, Somalia has not been deemed eligible for Canadian bilateral assistance, although Mission Administered Funds ($25,000 annually) and Canadian Bilateral Food Aid ($3.0 million—1980/81, $5.0 million in 1974/75 and 1976/77) have been provided. During next year's review of aid eligibility, the Somalian case will be reconsidered.

(a) No, not at present, although Canada is constantly investigating the situation to determine if further involvement is warranted and can be accommodated within budgetary constraints.

(b) Canadian NGO's are involved in relief work without assistance from CIDA. CIDA does assist, however, in NGO's rehabilitation efforts (including all second line operations, e.g. logistics support, health care, water, etc.)—in support of humanitarian relief activities. The Canadian Government responds to requests for funds from NGO's and has no specific policy which encourages the NGO's to request funds for country-specific needs. In September-October 1980, however, a group of Canadian NGO representatives participated in a one and a half week mission to Somalia to gain a better understanding of the current situation and how they might best assist in Somalia. Involved in this mission were the CCIC (Canadian Council for International Co-operation), the Overseas Book Centre, the YMCA, and L'AMI (L'assistance médicale internationale). CIDA supported this mission by providing matching funds and by providing briefing assistance to the mission members. CIDA anticipates that NGO projects will be developed in Somalia as a result and that CIDA will be approached for financial assistance to these projects.

(c) Canada has supported the resolutions of the UN General Assembly concerning the refugee problem in general. It is well recognized by all, including Canada, that the Somalia case is one of the most serious today.

CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION—CLAIMS FOR FUNERAL AND BURIAL GRANTS FOR VETERANS

Question No. 1,658—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Are claims outstanding, under section 33 of the Pension Act, with respect to funeral and burial grants for veterans and, if so, how many?

2. How many such claims were received by the Canadian Pension Commission in (a) 1977 (b) 1978 (c) 1979 (d) 1980 and, what was the average (i) length of time required to settle the claims (ii) amount paid with respect to each claim?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister for Veterans Affairs): 1. Yes. 44—as at November 12, 1980.

2. (a) 1,478;

(b) 1,267;

(c) 957;

(d) 1,223—as at September 30, 1980.

(i) 5 weeks;

(ii) $575.

GAMES—"EXPLORATIONS" AND "CANADA II"

Question No. 1,733—Mr. Wenman:

1. (a) What was the total combined cost to produce the "Explorations" and "Canada II" games (b) are there any plans for making more of them (c) where were they made (d) what company was in charge of producing them (e) was there any bidding on the contract to produce them?

2. Are there any plans for producing other types of such games?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Commissioner of Official Languages reports directly to parliament and not through a minister. Questions can be made directly to him.

"OH! CANADA 2"

Question No. 1,737—Mr. Neil:

What was the cost for the 300,000 copies of "Oh! Canada 2" and what was the name of the company who manufactured the game?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Commissioner of Official Languages reports directly to Parliament and not through a minister. Questions can be made directly to him.

[English]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Petroleum Administration Act

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

PETITION TO REVOKE PROCLAMATION

The House resumed, from Friday, November 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Waddell:

That the proclamation laid before the House on Wednesday, November 12, 1980, pursuant to subsection 35(2) of the Petroleum Administration Act, as proclaimed in PC 1980-2915, be revoked.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I am rising today to speak on the Petroleum Administration Act. Following the short comments I was able to make on Friday last, I wish to underscore again at the beginning that this is a piece of legislation which strikes at the sensitivities of confederation. It will be viewed in western Canada as yet one more attack upon the authority which is granted to us through the British North America Act over the resources of that region.

What we are witnessing at this very moment of our history is a very serious grassroots movement. It has come to the state of vocalization that it has largely on the basis of the constitutional proposals of the federal government, on its energy package, and now because of the decision to establish unilaterally the price of petroleum products. Not only that, but this particular legislation has been brought to the House marinated in the myth that somehow there will be a lack of co-operation among provincial legislatures. What we find is a tremendous lack of will on behalf of the federal government to meet with the producing provinces in a negotiating forum.

Meetings have taken place, but anyone who is following precisely what has been happening knows full well that documentation, one piece after another, from ministers and from the federal government is not in each of those instances a negotiating forum. It is fair to say that by and large, in those meetings that took place during the late summer and fall of this year, the federal government did not negotiate. Yet today we are into this milieu of the federal government pointing to a province, and claiming that in provinces west of Ontario there is ill will in the Canadian family. There is a view that somehow there are partnerships in the family of confederation that are not behaving in the way the federal government wants, and the federal government now wishes to bludgeon them with its own will.

It is imperative upon us all to recognize that we should take a view of what would happen to Canada if the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia could be given their free opportunity to be able to play their fair and constructive role in confederation. So often it has been portrayed, particularly by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), that somehow the motives of the western provinces are those of greed. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that in any careful study of what would happen with greater production in western Canada, there would be an immense benefit to families in central Canada and throughout all of Canada, along with more jobs.

I ask hon. members to take a look at just one rather remote situation, that of Dome Petroleum, which is presently exploring the north slope of the Arctic. In Dome's estimated spending of $40 billion between 1980 and 1990 to develop five oil fields on our north slope, at least 60 per cent of those dollars, putting together the multiplier effect of some $120 billion, would be spent in central Canada for barge-mounted production facilities, ice breakers and tankers. On this project alone, annual direct and indirect employment would exceed 150,000 man years. It is estimated that the majority of those jobs would be in central Canada.

I say that when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tends to perpetuate in his statement, which I view as being false, that somehow there is a position of greed in some part of this region, or that there is a lack of will in some provinces to play the role of good Canadians, he is really exacerbating the situation for his own political gain. I want to underscore that in the developing and producing provinces people are attempting to bring forward proposals by which we would have enhanced development of our petroleum products in Canada. By doing this we would be adding tremendously to the economic and social benefits throughout the whole of Canada.

I want to speak again in direct terms of what happens as we develop each of the tar sands or heavy oil plants. It should be noted that through the 25-year lifetime of a tar sands plant there would be an expenditure of between $60 billion and $65 billion to sustain the investments. There would be another $20 billion for the operation of a particular plant throughout the 25-year period. That gives us a figure of some $85 billion. If we take the Canadian Petroleum Association multiplier effect of 3.4 we find that $290 billion will be pumped into the Canadian system in the next 25 years, over 40 per cent of which would be spent in the province of Ontario. Those numbers should not be jocularly set aside.

Almost half of this $290 billion would be spent, in interesting ways in the province of Ontario. For example, some $800 million would go into iron and steel production. Another $370 million would go into metal fabrication and machinery. Another $325 million would go into transportation equipment. Another $740 million would go into manufacturing and processing. Another $370 million would be for financing from banking institutions, and for trade and services another $750 million. The list goes on.

I find it very perplexing, as one who comes from a part of the country which desires very much to be a member of the Canadian family, to find pressure leaning very heavily upon us to fall into some whip line of doing that which the federal government thinks is right but in fact is counterproductive. In all of this view of Canadianization, and "let the federal government do it," what is the end result?

I phoned the Sweetgrass, Montana, border crossing to ask about the number of Canadian rigs leaving the country. I was told they simply could not keep up with the daily processing of rigs. One man told me they were leaving in droves. Another said that never in his life had he seen so many Canadian oil rigs leaving this country as he has seen since the last federal budget. On one hand we have the minister, in his sinister way, telling Canadians that he is attempting to Canadianize the oil industry. On the other hand he chases that very industry out of the country.

● (1530)

The situation is even worse than in 1974 when we had 22 taxation policy changes in one fiscal year. At that time they chased 30 per cent of the Canadian-owned oil drilling rigs out of Canada and into other countries.

Let us look at what is happening under this disguise to convince Canadians that the federal government has their interests at heart. The people of central Canada are losing jobs. Manufacturing has to slow down its production. People in all parts of the country have to bear the burden of increased federal debt because the money is not circulating here. We have, instead, a mentality which says that by the middle of this decade $8.5 billion will be taken out of Canada for the purchase of oil from some foreign country for use east of the Ottawa Valley line. By taking these billions of dollars out of Canada and giving them to some foreign country, not a single job will be created in this land. All that you do is make some other nation rich, whether it be Mexico, Venezuela, or the Middle East. While some of those nations may need extended wealth, it is not necessarily the obligation of Canada to provide it. We have the wherewithal, but we need a sense of co-operation from the federal government to put together a petroleum package which will sustain itself and work to the advantage of all Canadians.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is now spending his 40 days and 40 nights in the desert getting $40 a barrel oil. I submit that one tar sands plant would produce more daily oil than he contracted for in Saudi Arabia. Somehow he is over there talking about security of supply. What a nonsensical statement from the leader of this country. With one tar sands plant we would have greater security of supply than by travelling to some foreign land looking for security there. What absolute rubbish, to try to make Canadians think somehow we can have greater security from the Arab nations than from our own provinces. If one would analyse the situation, one would not believe that there is such a shortage in our nation today that we could not have security of supply from within our own borders.

I know that these points I am mentioning are very distressing to western Canadians. The word separation is certainly being used all too often in my part of Canada. When I heard the word being repeated last summer with ever-increasing frequency, I became very much alarmed. I thought there might be a will within my constituency that they could somehow go it alone. If you talked to someone for five minutes, that might be his view. However, if you talked to any of them for an hour, you soon find that it is not Lake of the Woods, Summerside, Shawinigan, old Quebec City or other parts of the country about which they are disgruntled. It is the Prime Minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and this federal government from which they want to separate.

The government is trying to create the myth that there are bad Canadians, and enemies that we have to set other Canadians against. The will of the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia has always been to play their role. We live in a milieu of distortion. Because it is in power, the federal government, with its own poisonous thoughts, thinks it can do everything better than the regions.

Let us look at the notion that oil companies will become 50 per cent Canadian owned. Canadians should know that they are not talking about Canadian ownership. There will not be a single Canadian owning one share in a Canadian oil industry if this government has its way. They are talking about government ownership.

We in western Canada have reason to be suspicious when the federal government, not the citizens of Canada, wants a share of an industry which affects only one or two provinces. Is that not reason to suspect it is not in the interests of Canadians but in the interests of protecting the power of the federal government? Should it not raise the eyebrows of people west of the Ontario-Manitoba border when they hear that the oil industry, which is a multinational, ought to be 50 per cent Canadian owned? The federal government did not choose all multinationals, it singled out some of them.

This year Chrysler Corporation is to receive $240 million in guaranteed loans, and a study is being made into Massey-Ferguson to see whether the federal government can help that multinational corporation. Why is the myth being created that multinationals are good in one region of the country but bad in another region? Surely the criteria must be extended beyond that. There should be a criterion for all multinational corporations in Canada, so that Canadians have the right to buy the shares.

The government must not take the view of singling out multinationals for government control simply to pick on a particular region. Canadians ought to rise up and say that is unfair and unjust. They must take a stand against a government which takes the position that, as the arbitrator operating out of the population basin of the country, it will make and impose decisions upon the regions regardless of their desire to play a part in the fulfilment of Canada's wishes and needs.

In my part of the country, the province of Alberta, there is a strong desire to play a greater part in the building of a better Canada. We can do that by developing upon the strength that is ours. Rather than send billions of dollars out of the country to purchase offshore oil, we should develop our oil here which will create spinoff jobs and great employment opportunities in virtually every region of this land. If we can capitalize on our strengths and build on them, what a great country we would have.

We must be the laughing stock of virtually every nation in the world. In Japan the only resources are fish and tin, yet they have one of the strongest economies in the world. Here we have virtually every resource a country could want. We have ambitious and educated people. We are lacking only because we have a Liberal government which goes to other countries to purchase, and therefore creates employment there.

● (1540)

This government has failed to commit the people of Canada to the development of what we have here because, for the purpose of re-election, this government would rather create enemies in the family, gather a few of the partners together and point fingers. Once the government has finished pointing fingers it creates a group which says, "In this atmosphere of fear we will rise up and resist those who are branded as enemies". If this attitude continues, the grassroots movement operating today in western Canada without a leader may well find a leader.

This government may seem to be destroying this country with its desire to stay in power, but there is a will in every part of this country to serve this country. Those who display a different attitude and try to persuade Canadians that there is not that will, are simply not speaking the truth. Starting now, I submit that every Canadian should travel more extensively in this country to find out how very much it is the government which is wrong. There are great opportunities for employment in all the regions of Canada. How can we possibly justify a government which destroys those opportunities for work?

Let us discuss just a few of the companies whose positions would be enhanced if we had policies which allowed them to go forward. Canadian Fahramet has four plants in Orillia, Ontario. The company manufactures heat corrosive and abrasive resistent castings used in the petrochemical industry, and equipment for oil rigs. Last month it laid off 33 of its workers. There was a total of 500.

As a direct result of the last budget a Stratford manufacturing firm withdrew a half million dollar contract and rescheduled orders amounting to several million dollars. The company is indifferent as to completion dates.

A drilling company, Simmons Drilling Company of Calgary, purchased $180,000 worth of new cars and trucks last year. Because of the budget ten of its 17 oil rigs have now moved to the United States. The president of Simmons estimates that there is probably a need for three times that number of vehicles this year. Unfortunately, those vehicles will now be purchased in the United States. Let us remember that last year the company purchased $180,000 worth of vehicles in Canada. It now needs three times that number, and because of the budget of this government those vehicles will be purchased in another country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I must inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I want to extend my appreciation to hon. members for their courtesy, even though it is my choice not to extend my remarks but only to conclude.

I say in all sincerity that there is a will amongst the partners in confederation. We believe that resources belong to the provinces. It has worked that way for 113 years for Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. It has worked that way throughout confederation. The tables have turned and another region now has resources, in this case petrochemical resources. That region is saying to Canadians that they can have that resource at 75 per cent of the Chicago composite price, in spite of the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources talks about selfish people talking about the world price. I say to the minister that that is utter nonsense. That has never been the position of western Canada. There is a 25 per cent advantage over the United States price guaranteed ad infinitum. That is the package from the provinces, yet government members continue to say that there is greed.

Throughout history the west has bought virtually everything at above world prices. Not only do we pay world prices but we also pay discriminatory freight rates. Automobiles, farm machinery and anything manufactured, have been purchased at prices higher than world prices. Today the province of Alberta sells its oil at below the world price. Its contribution to confederation is now in excess of some $20 billion, yet there is the feeling among government members that this should be dismissed and that prices should be cheaper yet.

If hon. members opposite say that the west is making too much money on light and medium weight crude, perhaps there could be some argument. However, the availability of light and medium weight crude will be zero in eight years. At that time we will have a supply of secondary recovery, offshore, north slope, heavy oils and tar sands. The method used to extract each of those is enormously more expensive. We are now receiving $16.75 for oil when it costs us $22 to produce tar sands oil. If there is to be a guarantee of supply, we need an enormous commitment to get plants in place.

Just this year we have lost a $7 billion plant which was ready for construction. The company involved said it could not operate with this government. Just last week another $8 billion plant closed down. The company said that with this government in power it cannot operate. This government is guaranteeing Canadians cheaper oil, when it is very uncertain whether there will be any oil at all. This government is destroying the industry. It is removing incentive and the potential for discovering new methods. I could go on about this for quite some time.

We have no energy crisis because we have very ample supplies of petroleum and coal. Each could last hundreds and hundreds of years. We do not have an energy crisis today, but we have a systems crisis brought on not by the greed of westerners for money but very much by the hunger of a Liberal government for power. This is not a question of supply or of dollars. It is a question of power. The federal government is trying to wrench power from the provinces, to the detriment of the fabric of Canada. Canadians should realize that, and if they do they will understand the views of westerners who say that throughout the course of confederation one set of rules has applied, and now there is a new wealth in their region. Because of this the federal government wants to change the rules of the game, even though in the spirit of co-operation the western provinces have said that they will take only 75 per cent of the Chicago composite price.

I will conclude by saying that we ought not to underestimate the grassroots movement of western Canada. We can have a better Canada if we change disruptive policies. However, if we continue with this Liberal government, I very much fear that we could end up with no Canada.

● (1550)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to make a couple of comments about some of the remarks of the hon. member who spoke before me. I am sure he does not want to leave the impression that it was because of eastern Canada and its industrial base that he said Canadians paid more for farm machinery. Farm machinery has been subjected to no tariff since the 1930s. One can bring in farm machinery from the western United States that was made in the United States. The bulk of it is moved from central Canada to the United States, to the huge assembly plants and fabrication plants in that part of the world. There has been no duty on farm machinery coming into Canada since 1944 or something like that. I do not have the correct date, but there has been no duty for many, many years.

Mr. Knowles: Since 1944.

Mr. Whelan: Yet we continue to hear that they have paid more. Let us be factual, because they have not paid more for farm machinery. They have paid the same as their American counterparts across the border. They can go over and get it, drive it home or put in on a truck. They can do anything they want. There has been free trade coming into Canada, but there has not been free trade in farm machinery parts, for instance, going into the United States. Farm machinery parts come into Canada free, but going into the United States it was as high as 10 per cent at one time. Even the recent Geneva trade negotiations did not lower the cost of farm machinery parts going into the United States; they did not remove the duty.

The hon. member talked about getting to know the people of Canada, getting out into the country and meeting them. I do not think anyone does it any more than I. One of the member's colleagues criticized me the other day for doing just that. I do not find Albertans that much different, that is, the real, ordinary Albertans, the vast majority of Albertans. When they talk about Canada and sharing their resources with the rest of Canada, they are willing to do it. They are willing to do it when it is explained to them properly and honestly. They understand that the resources the federal government takes are the least of any federal system in the world.

Let us make comparisons. The former arrangement for industry was 45 per cent for the provincial government and a magnanimous sum of 10 per cent for the federal government.

Was that a tremendous sum? Let us move down to the area south of the border. The hon. member knows as well as I that a lot of the rigs go there because the weather is better for them. It is not just the economic weather about which he talks, but the general trend is the movement of rigs back and forth, a seasonal movement.

Under the new national energy program we are proposing 43 per cent for the provincial government, which is a lessening of the amount by 2 per cent. Certainly that will not greatly lower the billions of dollars or the tremendous amount in the provinces of Alberta or Saskatchewan. We are suggesting the tremendous amount of 24 per cent for the federal government! We are suggesting 33 per cent for the industry.

Now let us move to the state of Texas where they do things really big in their great free enterprise system. In the state of Texas 48 per cent goes to the producers, that is, if one just happens to live above it, 48 per cent goes to the producing company, and 17 per cent goes to the great state of Texas. It is not 43 per cent nor 45 per cent, it is 17 per cent going to the state of Texas, and 35 per cent goes to their federal government. It is not 24 per cent, but 35 per cent that goes to the United States government.

We could move into the other states south of the border and we will see that they never transferred the resources to the states where those rigs go. They practically all belong to the federal government in that area.

Then we could move to a fellow Commonwealth country like Australia. We have talked about the Commonwealth and how we must work together. We have talked about how we have so much in common. Let us talk about the common wealth of these two nations and how they share the common wealth of their own nations. In Australia 37 per cent goes to the producers, 15 per cent to the state government or the equivalent of a provincial government, and 48 per cent to their federal government. That is in the Commonwealth country of Australia. They have something in common with us because we belong to the Commonwealth, but we do not have much in common when it comes to sharing the wealth.

I say to members from western Canada that they should say it like the mayor of Saskatoon did when we were in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, last Saturday evening. He was talking about sharing when he stood on the platform in front of 750 people at a banquet and said, "No one will rip my country apart. Our country was built by sharing these things in an equitable fashion". That is what the mayor of Saskatoon said when talking about those matters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: On Friday I was in Lethbridge talking to a group of farmers, a group of potato growers in the potato commission. When I talked about Canada, they said, "Don't you worry, Mr. Minister, about us. We are Canadians, and we understand because we are people from the rural parts. We understand how this nation was built and we are going to continue to see it done in that fashion".

Hon. members opposite talk about things being done in a unilateral fashion. Let them remember how we transferred the resources to the western provinces—that terrible federal Liberal government did it unilaterally without discussing it with the rest of the provinces! They just handed over the resources.

When we talk about doing some of these things now, like bringing the constitution back, we are bad fellows. But we were good fellows when we transferred the resources unilaterally without discussing it with the other provinces. One province may have objected to it at that time, but the federal government did it in that instance.

I find it difficult to accept some of the remarks of the hon. gentleman when he talked about what is going on. He referred to that "federal group in Ottawa". One would think we did not represent the people of Canada, and one would think that we are holding the money inside the Parliament buildings in some kind of heritage fund and not spreading it around. The federal government's responsibility is to see that there is some economic equity and a distribution of it in the nation For instance, 34 per cent of the federal budget is for social services in Canada. Some members have been suggesting that some parts of Canada will be so much better off because there are no taxes on certain things. They call themselves Canadians within an economic democracy and say that they will have the same economic rights and privileges. They will not have that. Even with the little bit we are suggesting should be shared in a better fashion, one would think we are the destroyers of the free enterprise system.

An hon. Member: You said it.

Mr. Whelan: When one checks the multinationals, one will see that they are not sharing as fairly as they will under the policy we are proposing at the present time. So, I do not understand how they can say that it will be the same and that we do not represent the people of Canada.

Let us look at the voting pattern in the province of Alberta. Less than 50 per cent of the people of that province voted in the last election, and less than 50 per cent of them voted for the administration. So, one-quarter of the people with the right to vote voted for the present government of Alberta.

Mr. Waddell: You will be the next minister of finance.

Mr. Whelan: That is approximtely the same vote as my party has in western Canada. Out of those who voted 27 per cent voted for us, and we must remember that 32 per cent is the most that we have ever had voting for us in western Canada.

They talk about democracy and that type of thing. They talk about socialistic ownership. How can someone who is a member of the House of Commons from the province of Alberta talk about socialistic ownership in the tone of some of them?

The most socialistic province of all is the province of Alberta. They own more of the land, more of the resources—the airlines and trust companies. Saskatchewan looks like a "little bitty" chicken alongside Alberta when it comes to socialistic ownership. They come on with the strong stand that we should not travel Air Canada because it is a Crown corporation. What in the hell is Western Pacific Airlines, on which I flew last night from Saskatoon to Winnipeg? It is owned by the province of Alberta, that great bulwark of a free enterprise system! They just bought it up and gobbled it up like some kind of an economic monster. Nobody could compete with them, because who in the hell could compete with those resources? They could make up their minds to buy anything, as far as that goes.

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Whelan: I am sorry. Who in heaven's name could compete with them? Some people may be better off in heaven, and in the other place, as far as that goes.

● (1600)

When talking about sharing the energy and the resources of this land I am told that no matter which part of Canada you go to the people recognize the way that this nation was built. It was by sharing. Some people can point out the unfairness, etc., some people can point out how poverty was suffered—my God, everybody, during the dirty thirties no matter where you lived, in what part of Canada, if you can remember those days, suffered. But as the Mayor of Saskatoon said the other day, "We are not have-not provinces any more. Some of the provinces have more but we are all provinces that have some".

Even when we compare the poorest people in Canada with people in any other part of the world we see that we are very rich, as far as those things go. When we talk about the sharing in resources we use these old stories, and I come back to farm machinery and cars and everything. Sometimes I wonder if we have ever studied any of the facts. I run into that every now and again.

I remember about a year or so ago when I was up in the Peace River district and someone said that his combine cost him about $1,500 more than it should have and I asked him why. He said it was because it came from the east. But his combine came from down in Wyoming some place, I believe it was, and there was no duty whatsoever. There is exchange on the money. That has been the best thing for agriculture Canada has ever seen.

This year our agricultural exports will be $2 billion more than they were last year and they will say, "Yes, but you imported a lot", but not nearly as much as before. Last year it was $4.7 billion and this year it will be about $5.3 billion, which is an amazing thing and a wonderful trend for us. The hon. member opposite is shaking his head. He knows full well it is because of some of the things we just did, like on saving energy, so that trucks would not go to the United States and bring in apples. We made an arrangement in our government—

Mr. McDermid: I wrote you a letter and thanked you for it.

Mr. Whelan: —and we acted in a responsible fashion. That is how they worked it out by making a little representation about it. We went to work with the Ontario people, the Quebec people, and the maritime people. They agreed to work with that. All we did was participate with about $500,000 to offset transportation costs. But every bit of cider and apple champagne will be Canadian because they are not importing thousands of tons of apples. That was worked out in the true spirit of confederation, which we are supposedly working in to sort out these problems, in a moderate, considerate, co-operative way.

I never got a thank-you note from you, either—

Mr. McDermid: You should read your mail.

Mr. Whelan: I appreciate those gestures of kindness. I believe I acted on your behalf at least twice in the last month—

Mr. McDermid: No, the last year.

Mr. Whelan: I do not think you made any requests before the one last month. Mr. Speaker, on the two that he asked of me, I acted almost right away.

So when we talk about the energy, the sharing and how we will develop the country and the total energy policy, I return to agriculture where we talk about priorities for energy. It is a difficult thing if you have to have gasoline, diesel fuel or heating fuel for energy in agriculture. These are most important types of fuels and could be the ones that there could be a shortage of in the future.

The total food and beverage industries are classified in one class at the present time. The beverage industry that makes the soft drinks, soda pop, bicarbonated sodas, the wines, the beers and the candy shops—do we give them that high priority classification that we all feel is so necessary for food production on the farm, the primary producer, the food processor and the person who is going to transport the food that you and I need? I think there has to be a different kind of classification in those categories. You cannot lump them all in as one.

Those people who will use natural gas, under this program never have to worry about being in that category that will be restricted in the first place. We have an abundance of natural gas and propane, and this program encourages them to switch over to that. So those people who are producing flowers and other things which may not be classified as essential will be in a preferred area. Many of them are using that type of energy at the present time so they do not have to worry about what is going to happen to their production. In case a shortage of a product existed, as I said before, in the top priority fuels like diesel fuels, heating oil and gasoline, those would be the ones about which you would be concerned.

To date, we have heard about energy in its crudest form, and I say that with no pun intended. I would for a moment like you to consider energy in a more refined state—the energy that fuels the body, food. The raw material that provides the food is also a natural resource. It is also a renewable resource.

Canadian farmers have been totally unselfish in their attitude and in the mustering of their energies in order to supply that most important source of energy—food—to their fellow Canadians, for many decades, at reasonable cost. They have performed their tasks efficiently and proficiently to a point at which their achievements are now the envy of the world—and I mean the world, regardless of whether it is communist, socialist, free enterprise, or whatever.

There is no country that works as closely in harmony as we do in providing that source of energy, food, throughout the total food industry. That is probably closer to the true concept of confederation than anything else. It is interesting, when you look at the recommendations about changing the constitution, that not one provincial premier, or the federal government, has recommended any changes when it comes to authority concerning agriculture. It stands for itself that the Fathers of Confederation were far-seeing people who recognized that in order to make a success of it they had to work together.

Since the early 1950s the output for each agricultural worker in Canada has quadrupled, while his or her counterpart in the rest of the commercial sector has only managed to double their output. For example, between 1975 and 1978 the annual rate of growth in labour productivity for farming was a fantastic 4 per cent, while the non-farming sector increased by about 2½ per cent. This has continued. Now the average person who produces food energy for you and me has gone from the point 20 years ago where he only produced enough food to feed approximately 30 people to the point today where he is producing enough food for himself, his family, and 60 other people. If we look at what will happen by the year 2000 we will see that one Canadian farmer will be feeding as many as 150 to 200 people, mainly because of the use of energy.

When we talk about the conservation of energy in the food and beverage industry we see that they have proven to be some of the most conservation-minded people. In the last two years they have cut their energy consumption by 15 per cent, and in the next three to four years they will cut it by another 8 per cent. When we look at how and what we use our energy for, the people in agriculture probably use it more efficiently than any other part of our society. This is argumentative, but I do not mind arguing.

We harvest up to 6 per cent of the world's wheat and barley, 12 per cent of the world's oats, and we produce 2 per cent of the world's meat and milk products. We do not have that much of the world's land. We only have 3 per cent of the world's farmland compared to the world's land resources, yet each of our farmers is more proficient as far as production goes compared with nearly any other country in the world. When you compare our climatic conditions to any other part of the world you will see that we are the most efficient.

If you travel from coast to coast in Canada you will find that the average farmer produces nearly $3,000 worth more of food per farmer than the American farmer. That is going right from Cape Breton Island through to Vancouver Island and Port Hardy.

Not only have our farmers been performing amazing feats in the fields, the work has been accomplished with great energy efficiency as well. Only 3 per cent of the total energy consumed in Canada is used by the agricultural producers, while the car gobbles up more than 25 per cent. It takes equal amounts of energy to produce one pound of wheat as it does one pound of steel. That is taken in the context of planting the seed, tilling the soil, harvesting the crop, processing the product, and getting the product to market. Canadian farmers do not have to apologize to anyone for their use of energy because, compared to their small consumption rate, their contributions to Canada and Canadians are great.

More than 100 years ago eastern farmers laid the groundwork for a national economy. A short time later, western farmers sowed the seed to one of the world's great granaries. The results of their dedication to the Canadian land are now a matter of record, and this tradition, I am sure, has been a source of inspiration to other Canadians from coast to coast.

I believe another one of the major strengths of the Canadian farmer has been the ability to seek security through self-reliance and self-sufficiency, while at the same time working in a spirit of co-operation and unity. These characteristics of self-reliance, self-sufficiency, co-operation, and unity perhaps place the Canadian farmer in a unique position. The amendments to the Petroleum Administration Act have been placed before this House to exact this kind of self-reliance and self-sufficiency for the whole Canadian economy.

• (1610)

Let us take a look at some of the facts. The pricing formula which is being presented now is in no measure as substantial as the increases which were contained in the December, 1979, budget, a move that was supported by the government of that day. In addition, the current amendments to the Petroleum Administration Act contain considerable incentives regarding conservation and alternative energy research.

The Canadian farmers' record for conservation achievement, as I have said, is a record to which one can pay tribute. The Canadian growing season, as hon. members are aware, is short, the climate harsh and the environment at times can play havoc with the orderly growing of our produce. Yet, faced with these odds, the Canadian farmer can still supply Canadian and world markets with food at competitive prices. For example, a tomato grown in a field feeding from the light and heat of nature requires less direct energy than one grown in a greenhouse with artificial light and heat. It takes about $40,000 worth of fuel to maintain one acre of greenhouse and, despite these costs, the Canadian product is still competitive in the market.

Another example is in the area of poultry, such as chickens or turkeys. In warmer environments producers do not need heated buildings or artificial drying procedures for the feed, which is the biggest cost to producers. Although it probably takes one bushel of wheat to prepare a turkey for market, considering the fuel-related additional costs, the Canadian producer is still competitive.

Many people do not realize that our cattle must be housed longer before they are ready for market. Practically all successful dairymen house their cattle 12 months of the year, leaving them outside only for exercise. The rest of the world is learning our methods in the fields of dairying and poultry. Our methods in poultry are some of the most efficient in the world and can compete on any terms. In spite of our higher costs for wages and energy, we can compete because of our efficiency and marketing ability.

If we are ever to reach self-reliance and self-sufficiency, the key words of the eighties must be conservation and energy alternatives. This perhaps is one area where Canadian farmers are in the most unique position of all, that of being able to produce energy on the farm from low grade wheat, or any product which does not meet the standards of human consumption. Some products, such as manure, can be recycled and, combined with proper conservation, these prospects could, in the very near future, enable the Canadian farmer to snip the umbilical oil cord to foreign supply.

There are many programs sponsored by the government to help people implement their ingenious ideas on energy conservation. Many such projects have been approved by the government as demonstration projects set up by farmers, businessmen, and people in general, who have ideas which they would like to put to good use for Canada. Nobody knows how many of these programs will be successful, but if these people are not given the opportunity to try their ideas we will never know how many of these ideas will be working for us next year or five years from now. Even if one tenth of the hundreds of projects which have been accepted are successful, it would be a tremendous contribution in the field of energy conservation.

Could it be that some day we will be growing energy alternatives as the ultimate resource, because it is a renewable resource? For example, there is wheat. Can we supply the technology to harvest enough energy from one acre, to farm that acre for ten more years while at the same time using the wheat in its traditional form as food? We would simply derive the food from the protein and the energy from the starch. There is also oil from oil seeds and alcohol production from cull crops. In short, it is the ultimate resource that not only fuels the body but would also fuel the technology of the eighties and the nineties. That is the ultimate self-sufficiency and self-reliance. This ultimate goal must be fed by research in order to provide, at a reasonable cost, energy alternatives.

It is in this area of self-sufficiency and conservation I know the Canadian farmer will show leadership to the direct advantage of other Canadians because, on a global scale, rising energy costs will bring about changes and will alter the competitiveness of different farm production and processing enterprises. It only stands to reason that imported foods which have high energy costs in production and transportation will not compete successfully against domestic products. That is another reason why these amendments are important as well as reasonable. They will help our producers use energy efficiently and keep down per unit costs.

Our farmers will be rewarded by a greater share of the domestic and world markets which will produce greater economic advantages. A healthy, growing farm economy means a healthy, growing Canadian economy providing thousands of jobs. At present, one of every four Canadians now works in a food-related job. In addition, every dollar taken in by farming is multiplied by three as it weaves its way through the economy. This year alone the gross farm income will surpass $15 billion. As all hon. members can realize, the impact of the Canadian farmer today is great, and the presence of agriculture in the economy will be felt in the future even more significantly.

I have drawn a number of parallels, Mr. Speaker, with Canadian agriculture, which include self-reliance, self-sufficiency, the economy, and, indeed, the very essence of development and prosperity, just to name a few. I have tried to offer a Canadian view without the flavouring to suit regional and parochial tastes and to speak on behalf of the Canadian agricultural community which is one element of our great society which spans from coast to coast. As I said earlier, these people perhaps understand and appreciate Canada a little more than many other people in the country.

Neither wheat fields nor livestock herds are restrained by provincial boundaries. All of us in agriculture are proud of our achievements, considering the conditions of adversity such as a northern climate and our battle with the elements which, once again, are a factor that affects all farmers from sea to sea, or for 4,000 miles from coast to coast. The Canadian farming community reaches the very extremities of our land and touches the lives of every Canadian to the benefit of the country. The final parallel, of course, is that the amendments to the Petroleum Administration Act will also reach into the very heartland of our nation touching the lives of every Canadian and benefiting all Canadians.

Canada is one of the greatest countries in the world. We are blessed with our resources, our people, and our tremendous opportunities and energies. The chairman of the American Gas Association who was recently interviewed in a television program in British Columbia, said that Canada has the richest resources of any country in the world. Some hon. members heard me mention my brother the other day. I believe he still belongs to another party. I do not know why he belongs to that party, particularly after the way in which he was treated by the Premier of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Knowles: He is the intelligent one of the family.

Mr. Whelan: He was fired.

He tells me not to worry too much about the resources of the provinces because the Northwest Territories and the Yukon have the richest motherload in the world and Canada will remain the richest land and the envy of the entire world. There are tremendous opportunities in Canada. Now is the time for us to extend the spirit of understanding, co-operation, good will and, above all, our unwillingness to surrender our search for a renewed vision of this great country.

I recently saw a televised speech by the Premier of Alberta. I read the breakdown of what he said in that speech to determine the real facts. I do not intend to go into those facts today because I do not have the time, but I would suggest to anyone who really wishes to understand what the Premier of Alberta was saying, that they obtain a transcript of what was said and compare it with the facts, because they are not exactly as the premier put them. Every person, especially in Alberta, should be aware of exactly what the premier said and exactly what the facts are. It would be a good thing if all Canadians had the same opportunity to learn what he said.

• (1620)

Mr. Speaker, we owe this to the traditions that have been established by our forefathers and, indeed, by the Fathers of Confederation, who moulded this nation. To do less would be a discredit to all who have worked so hard to create a home in Canada. We have all come from some other part of the world to create homes here, and to build a way of life which, as I have said, is the envy of the world. If there is a Utopia somewhere else in this world, I want to know where it is. I want to go there if it is better than Canada. In my world travels, as a member of Parliament and as a minister, I have seen nothing that compares to Canada. Wherever I go, average Canadians, whether they be from Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, or from the maritimes say to me, "We don't understand what the premiers are talking about. We don't understand what some of you are talking about, but we like Canada. We are proud of Canada and we want to continue to build it."

To continue to build, Mr. Speaker, we have to share things in a true Christian fashion, in the true Canadian fashion, which has proven to the rest of the world what we can build in this huge country with its small population.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am happy and perhaps a little sad to participate in this debate, in view of its nature. In view of the fact that I follow the ebullient and interesting Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), I should say that I am glad he finally spoke about agriculture and the farmer. I am glad that he mentioned gas and oil too. In view of his opening remarks, and long before he got around to dealing with the farm community and the farm industry, which he does know rather well, his title could have been changed to—and no personal reflection is intended—the "minister of fog" or the "minister of gas". His written remarks were a little more reasonable, rational, and better prepared.

In terms of what the minister said, long before he talked about agriculture, he was trying to answer the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) and others. In this whole debate, Mr. Speaker, there has been, not misrepresentation with intent, but misrepresentation through ignorance or mischief. I do not say the minister tries to mislead the House or anyone outside the House with intent, but the minister speaks in this House about gas and oil, and then fogs the issue by talking about the shares of Texas and Australia! This is a debate on the Petroleum Administration Act. That is what we are trying to talk about in this House. We are trying to register our disapproval of another unilateral move taken by this government which has a central myopia.

This is the first time this has happened in 113 years—in part because this is rather a new bill, I admit. The issue must not be fogged by the use of red herrings and smokescreens, or by the use of false figures. When the minister spoke of the shares he did not mention that in Texas, as in the Commonwealth of Australia, gas revenue is based on federal revenue. It is offshore. When he talked about the shares, the inference was that Alberta was being unduly greedy. I am not here to defend the details of the division of revenue between Alberta and the federal government or the companies, but I find all this most misleading. He pointed out to Alberta that in effect the state of Texas got 17 per cent, compared to Alberta's some 40 per cent, but he did not point out that in Texas, as in Australia, the federal government takes the lion's share because the federal government owns the resource. Until now in this country the resource was owned by the province, and that is where the rub is.

As far as I know, there is no complaint with the figures in Texas or Australia. Maybe they will debate that issue themselves. Under our constitution, however, the resources in the provinces belong to the provinces. That is why, until now, any division of that revenue has been done by agreement, and not by unilaterally invoking the provisions of the Petroleum Administration Act.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Agriculture wandered even further away from the world of gas and oil when he tried to pervert the history of this land by saying that the four western provinces had made a big land grab, a revenue grab, a resource grab, in effect, in 1930. It was not a Liberal government that was in office at that time, however. I have not quite got it straight whether it occurred before Mr. Bennett came into power or not. I think it was when Mr. Bennett came to power in 1930. The resources were transferred to the four western provinces by an act passed in 1930.

It was not a great gift to those western provinces. They had been fighting for 20 years, ever since they came into confederation in 1905, to obtain the same treatment as every other province. That is the reality, Mr. Speaker, not these red herrings and camouflages and smokescreens and misleading facts that have been dragged into the debate.

In 1930, after 20 years of fighting in the four western provinces, they were put in the same position as all the other provinces in Canada, which was that the resources belonged to the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: That is all that was done in 1930. It was not a nefarious plot by those greedy premiers out in the west, way back in 1930. It was not even done by a Liberal government, it was done by the then Conservative government.

The Minister of Agriculture has left the chamber, I see. I will pay him some respect for his interest in agriculture. I really do not know how much clout he has within cabinet, but if he really believes, as he said the other day, in the place of agriculture in the whole scheme of things within the world of his government, then why is there not, under the aegis of the Emergency Supplies Allocation Board, some decision on where the industry of agriculture fits if there is going to be an emergency in supplies of energy after they are allocated.

On November 12 the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) whether, in view of something published in The Canada Gazette, the industry of agriculture had yet received an allocation from the Energy Supplies Allocation Board. In the answer, reported at page 4591 of Hansard, the minister admitted that agriculture, which the Minister of Agriculture quite properly says is so important in the scheme of things, has not yet received a number or a letter—A, B, or C—to indicate its priority if an application to the Energy Supplies Allocation Board is necessary. Garbage collection is rated B in The Canada Gazette yet agriculture, which as far as I am concerned should be rated A and have first claim on energy, has no claim. This, I think, in a tender way refutes the rhetoric of the Minister of Agriculture, who certainly speaks long and loud about the importance of agriculture. I am much in favour of some of what he said. I wish he would sometimes throw his cabinet weight, if he has any, behind the rhetoric so that agriculture could be assured of finding its proper place when allocations are made.

That is all I really want to say about the Minister of Agriculture, because I have no disagreement with his remarks about the farmer and the industry and their contributions to the economy of the country. This debate is about the invocation of the Petroleum Administration Act whereby the federal government, for the first time in history, may unilaterally and arbitrarily set the price of oil and gas. This is a brand new situation and it is what the debate is about. It is interesting that it should occur at this time in our national history when we are debating something called the resolution to amend the constitution. I think it can be said objectively that this has created much debate, and certainly division and discord across the country. It is not necessary for the federal government to invoke the Petroleum Administration Act unilaterally in order to set prices now.

I am glad to have the opportunity to speak in this debate, which was prompted by the motions set down by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) and, I gather, by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Both parties in the opposition are concerned by this unilateral act. This debate is to try to get the government to reconsider. But rather than taking another stick to the west, where the oil and gas are produced, the government should take the extra step and try to reconcile differences.

• (1630)

Following the last meeting in July of this year between the Premier of Alberta and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the proposals and counterproposals set up then should be used as the base to resolve this problem by agreement rather than having a government act unilaterally. Obviously the numbers game is not in favour of the opposition. The power of numbers is with the government, to move straight ahead. The government may move straight ahead legally and technically, but that still does not say the action it takes tonight is right, or tomorrow, or any other day, because scar tissue is forming across this land.

As my good friend, the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) has said, it is basically wrong. That is why we are debating this issue today. I must say that a picture speaks a thousand words. I do not know how we can summarize the present state of Canada today in a serious way other than by reminding members of the famous picture which appeared on the front pages of most newspapers last week. I am speaking of our Prime Minister who was off in Saudi Arabia doing the Trudeau tango while this country is in the midst of problems. Never has Canada been more exposed to problems of division and discord with fault on all sides. Another colleague of mine says, "Better away". But, he is the Prime Minister. Picking this time to be offshore when there is a constitutional debate raging across this country, some might say is too pejorative. But now we add to that the debate on the unilateral imposition of prices.

This is the same thing as under a price control bill where the federal government can move and set prices unilaterally within a provincial domain, or set the wages of a worker. It is that type of petty principle that we are talking about when we have the central government moving unilaterally to set the price of gas and oil.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in his reply on Friday said, "You have to move some time". Unfortunately, we cannot complain in the sense that legally under our constitution there is the power to do this, but it has never been done before. With that picture offshore of Rome burning while Nero fiddled, which is analagous to the Prime Minister tangoing while Canada is in the midst of debate, of discord and division, which I do not think has ever occurred before, certainly not in my history as a member of Parliament, I say it is something for which the Prime Minister must take a great deal of responsibility.

I am afraid there is a blinker mentality in this House. I am afraid there is a blinker mentality within the cabinet on this whole issue, whether it is on the constitution or the price setting of oil and gas. It is misleading to say Canada is on the one side and Alberta on the other.

Before I became a member of Parliament I practised law for eight years in British Columbia. I have friends and classmates in all the western provinces. I went out west for about ten days this past summer. I spent the least time in Alberta. But there is a blinker mentality here. The Prime Minister, when he was in Regina, insulted not only the people in Regina who heard him speak, but all those people west of the Lakehead who read it the next day. It was as insulting as the statement the Prime Minister made during one campaign when he threw wheat at a little kid and asked, "Who is to sell your wheat?" To equate the concern west of the Lakehead with what is going on in central Canada, either on the constitution or about oil and gas, with hysteria or paranoia, when the same type of concern in Quebec can be called patriotism or nationalism and not get a pejorative from the Prime Minister, will only serve to inflame issues.

I read the debate which occurred on Friday. I was not here because I had the flu. I was concerned with some of the suggestions, not only from the member for Vancouver-Kingsway, but also from across the way, of casting stones on federal members and their feeling for this country, and who is really responsible for adding fuel to the fire, if I might say it that way. Yet that type of statement made west of the Lakehead irritated and insulted Canadians, especially those west of the Lakehead, but I think also all across the country because there is a deep concern in this land.

I am not talking about separation. But no one helps the west by calling its concern hysteria when Quebec, for its legitimate reasons, in the 1950s and 1960s wanted to show that Quebec had grown. Quebec at that time wanted to have more growth culturally, and emancipation culturally. Quebec wanted to be treated with the respect and relevance it deserved. Just imagine the government moving unilaterally on oil and gas without agreement. Talk about the blinker mentality, or a double standard.

While you and I have been in this House, Mr. Speaker—although I will not go through the whole chronology of the different legislative acts in Quebec on language—we have experienced Bill 101. The federal government has the power to do something with a provincial statute if it wants, just as the federal government, under the constitution, can invoke the Petroleum Administration Act. The government has the power to move. As Kennedy said, "Its grace under power is the sign of leadership". You may have the power within a constitution, but it might be for the better of all circumstances that one does not invoke that power. The Prime Minister and the government of the day, for their reasons, and they may be judged legitimate reasons in terms of Quebec—I am not judging the issue—on something which was as fundamental to Quebec as language, did not invoke the power. Some people did say that the Prime Minister could invoke power under the constitution by calling for disallowance of an act which discriminated against Canadians who live in the province of Quebec in terms of language. For government reasons of the day there was no indication of the power it had under the constitution because it was felt this would not help the situation and could well exacerbate it.

We had questions from the opposition and from citizens. People asked if the government was not going to disallow an act, would it become a party to the stated case in the Supreme Court and a party to that action in challenging that act and lending the weight and office of the Government of Canada to the challenge. We had the answer of the Prime Minister here. I remember it well. He said, "Look, we are not going to get involved with that. If the citizens of Quebec want to challenge one of its acts, let them challenge within the courts of Quebec and let the courts decide on the constitutionality of Bill 101."

• (1640)

In one action the citizens did challenge the constitutionality of that act. It went to the Supreme Court where certain offensive sections were declared unconstitutional. That is on one side. On the other side you have a federal government with the power to invoke the Petroleum Administration Act provisions and unilaterally set prices. It moves ahead like a steamroller, even though there is a constitutional debate going on which is stirring up the passions, emotions and feelings of Canadians from coast to coast.

My point is that it is not just centred. Any member who thinks that the negative feeling in the west about the federal government is only centred in the province of Alberta, the tycoons, and now Lord Fauntleroy, the member for—

Mr. Knowles: Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

Mr. Nowlan: Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). He was reported in the press today as saying that the reason things are happening in the west in terms of movement is that they have been bankrolled by the high rollers in the boardrooms of this nation. I was not talking to any high rollers from the boardrooms of this nation in that ten-day period, primarily in British Columbia.

Whether in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or British Columbia, I have never before run into the negative feeling about the capital of this land and the state of this country that I did this summer. People are deluding themselves if they think this is fabricated because there are certain funds in Alberta. It is much deeper, wider, and more fundamental than that. What is being done today under the invocation of the Petroleum Administration Act does not help that situation which is really straining the fabric of this land. I will leave it at that. At a time when leadership demands a national act of reconciliation, why is there this extra stick to beat the favourite whipping boy, Alberta, in effect suggesting that the whole west is a little off centre, but everything is right and correct in the central part of the land where the sun normally shines? How did we get to this state where we have verbal division and discord that we have not seen across this country for a long time?

As I said, I do not speak with a vested interest, coming from an area which has economic might. However, I can sympathize because my area of Atlantic Canada has always had grievances. The difference between us and western Canada is that we had the grievances in the past which they now have. Now they have an economic emancipation and emergence that we are on the threshold of reaching if we discover gas and oil off our shores. Really, I can speak almost as an honest broker here.

I cannot understand the Prime Minister and some of his ministers who have been extra sensitive to the quiet revolution in Quebec, and its desire for cultural emancipation to show that it is not like the other provinces and that it may need a few powers which the other nine provinces do not need. How can the federal government be extra sensitive to that demand from a very important part of this country, and be so blind toward another section of the country which is not having a cultural emancipation but an economic emancipation and, in effect, is asking for its fair due?

I have tried to figure out how we have come to this sorry state, be it on the constitution or here today. I really have to put it down to the federal government which has now been in power for 12 years less eight months. We have a flawed federalism which is blinding the present government to "damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead" action.

The flawed federalism is based on four points. First, it is based on a federal-provincial balance which is out of kilter. Second, it is based on a House of Commons that has never been more unbalanced with regard to representation. Third, it is based on a cabinet of that House of Commons which has never had a more narrow perspective. Fourth, and this ties in with the other three, this has happened at a time in our history when we are moving to "one paper towns". The vacuum created by those one paper towns has been taken up by polls and propaganda, and the manipulation of both.

As far as the first point is concerned, I am not going to cast stones against any one or all the premiers. They together have to accept the blame. The Prime Minister, being Prime Minister of this federal union, obviously has to accept the majority of the blame. Prior to the last several federal-provincial conferences, historically at those conferences there had always been a balance and counterbalance. If the federal government was moving too fast, too far, or too strongly in one direction, historically there was always Quebec and/or Ontario which gave a counterbalance to the strong federal presence that has always been there.

We have heard debates in this House of Commons that this country is too centralized or has never been more decentralized. The fact is that any student of history knows that, depending on the emergency and/or a few wars, regardless of what the Fathers of Confederation felt, certainly with interpretations of the judicial committee of the Privy Council thwarting the original intent of the Fathers of Confederation, the Government of Canada, under any political colouration, has some very strong powers. However, there has always been a counterbalance to the over-use of those powers by the historical counterbalance of the province of Quebec or Ontario, or of both.

Since 1976 and the election of the Parti Québécois government in Quebec, we no longer have the counterbalance from that province. They, for their reasons, perhaps do not really care what happens to this federal union.

An hon. Member: That's not true.

Mr. Nowlan: Someone says that is not true. I am talking about the Parti Québécois government of the province of Quebec. I agree I only speak as an outsider, but the government of Quebec does not have its traditional concern to be a counterbalance in a federal union. That government would like to see it changed. There was a referendum in May which was treading on that road.

What I find more difficult to understand, for whatever the reasons, is that the government of Ontario recently has not exercised its historical counterbalance to the federal government moving too far, too fast down a one way street. The two senior partners of confederation, Quebec and Ontario, for their own reasons have not exercised a counterbalance to a strong federal move. Combine that with a new ingredient in the equation of balance, the fact that now in the west there is the emergence of a very real part of this country with an economic clout that demands to be heard, and this has aggravated the situation.

● (1650)

There is the second ingredient of a House of Commons which has never been more unbalanced in representation. The Conservative party has only one member from Quebec. That is obviously not good for the Conservative party or for the country. The government party has only two members west of the Lakehead. That is equally as unbalanced and equally as bad for the country. In addition to that, other than the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), we do not have a cabinet minister with a strong regional voice to be heard in cabinet circles. This causes an imbalance which allows the Prime Minister to begin on a one-way course.

There is really no one with enough weight or political clout in the cabinet or the House of Commons—there are only two within his ranks—to say, "Whoa, Mr. Prime Minister, are you really helping the nation by invoking the power you may have under the constitution, or are you going to hurt the nation in the long run?" You do not remedy that deficiency in cabinet by appointing some recycled ministers who have no political base in the provinces from which they come, even though they come from the west. That does not help the situation.

The situation is compounded when the only ministers western Canada sees—the active, verbal ministers who deserve a lot of credit—are the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). These three ministers are fine Canadians, but their perspective of the country comes from a narrow base.

Mr. Stewart: One province.

Mr. Nowlan: I say that in an objective way, because all three of those ministers are personal friends of mine. There was a meeting at the weekend in Saskatoon or Regina at which the Minister of Justice spoke about the flag debate. The constitutional debate cannot be compared with the flag debate. I will not go off on that red herring, but if the minister has to invoke the flag debate to justify moving unilaterally on the constitution or the Petroleum Administration Act, then he and the government are in a really sick, sad state.

Unfortunately, I suppose that my time is almost up. I will conclude. When we have these ingredients in a federal-provincial system, which I think is out of balance historically, and when we have a House of Commons which is out of balance in representation and a cabinet which comes from too narrow a base, and we put those together—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I would like to inform the hon. member who is just taking his place that there are three Liberal members west of the Lakehead.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it was last Wednesday or Thursday when we had about 20 votes on the bank bill, and I was looking at the amendments as we were voting on them.

An hon. Member: There were only 11.

Mr. McRae: Were there only 11? It felt like 20.

Mr. Knowles: Typical Liberal inflation.

Mr. McRae: It seemed that we were here a long time, but it also seemed that we followed a pattern in this House which we have followed for a long time. One party, the New Democratic Party, was saying that we should do more, and the other party, the Tory party, was saying we should do less. Then when I looked at these two motions, one from the NDP and one from the Tory party, I thought that the debate would follow along that pattern. The NDP is saying we are not doing enough, that this bill should go further and that it is opposing it for this reason. The Tories are saying that the bill goes too far.

I have been on the energy committee since early 1973, nearly eight years, and I recall debates on this act, the administration bill and on the allocation bill. There were two allocation bills. I recall the debates on the Petro-Canada bill and on the monitoring bill. With regard to all those debates the parties opposite went along in the same fashion. The NDP thought we should take more control and do more, and the Tory party opposed us violently for doing what we were doing. Most of those debates were long-drawn-out.

However, I was amazed when I heard the first spokesman for the NDP in this debate. He did not take the position I thought he would. He took an opposite position by saying that a section of this act goes too far and that it should be abolished. In looking back on the debate of 1975 I was interested in what the then energy critic of the NDP had to say. He said, and I quote from page 5351 of Hansard for April 30, 1975:

> I think, therefore, the government requires the power in the event there is no agreement with the producing provinces to set both the price of oil and natural gas. We express the hope, however, that in setting the price the government will keep in mind that the position this party has taken for a long time, and which we emphasize now, is that there is no justification for increasing the price of crude oil on the basis of operating costs or the financial position of the oil industry.

Then he said:

> Therefore we are prepared to support the bill and see that it receives speedy passage.

I find myself looking at something new about the NDP, a party with which I have had affiliations in the past. I was a member of it for many years, and I see it changing in a way which surprises me a great deal in just one respect. When he spoke, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) severely criticized the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for going to Saudi Arabia at this particular time or, for that matter, at any time. I found that very strange because the basic problems of the Middle East are the problems of the whole world. I am sure former energy critics as well as present members of the NDP must have squirmed a little bit when they heard him say that, because the NDP has always been a party which has been concerned about world events.

The NDP should be the party which is supporting the North-South talks. This was one of the very strong reasons why the Prime Minister went to Saudi Arabia. I am surprised when he is criticized for doing this by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), who made the same point. He must know that the reason we need this extra 100,000 barrels of oil a day, a secure supply from the most secure country in the Arab world, is that we need to supply the east coast, the hon. member's region. He should be very happy that we have this commitment from the Saudi Arabian government. I think all of us should be aware that the Saudi Arabian government and other governments in the Middle East are embarking on very large expansions of their own economies and that Canada is one of the nations which will be supplying goods, services, jobs, and a whole raft of things to these countries. This kind of trade is what we want to encourage. The Liberal party is concerned about jobs. The jobs which will be created by this trip alone will be very significant.

I was also concerned when the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) went to the Atlantic provinces, to Newfoundland, and said we should turn over the rights—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Canadian Pacific Railway—Winnipeg—Inquiry whether permit to build overpass will be authorized; the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon)—Energy—Reported establishment of western energy development fund; the hon.

member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy)—Public Service—Status of women—Equal pay for work of equal value.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

• (1700)

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTIONS

[English]

VOLUNTARY AGENCIES

SUGGESTED ADDITIONAL GOVERNMENTAL AID

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of providing volunteer agencies with financial aid to support their communication and fund-raising activities, so that a greater portion of available funds could be freed for their intended charitable uses.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this motion I want to define its terms. I recognize the reality of the present day where, in the face of the budget, inflation and rising costs, it is unrealistic to urge and press the government to add additional dollars to existing grants to voluntary agencies through a variety of government channels.

This afternoon I am proposing that financial aid be given in equivalents of goods and services. It will not cost the federal government more dollars and it will make use of facilities already in place by using them during non-peak periods.

Recently the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) proposed that the $100-deduction be eliminated so that individuals would be encouraged to give more to voluntary agencies. I agree with that proposal and would like to see it go further, to the point where voluntary agencies would enjoy the same tax benefits as political parties. Today, however, I am advocating that the government should pursue the direction recommended by its own Advisory Council on Voluntary Action. In these difficult days the government should provide tangible assistance to offset a number of the fixed costs which voluntary agencies must bear.

It is important to note that such a proposal would seem timely. During times of high unemployment and inflation, there is an increase in the number of people who are in need of care and support. Government resources are already stretched to the limit and there is a question concerning their allotment. Taxpayers have less disposable income, and there is more competition for available voluntary donations.

Another factor which makes it timely is rampant inflation. Many people who formerly could give many hours of voluntary work are now seeking places in the work force, thereby putting increased pressure on available volunteer leadership. The recent budget, with its lack of any offsets for those least able to pay, will dramatically increase the overhead costs of voluntary agencies, due to large increases in UIC payments for core staff and across-the-board energy increases which will affect the heating of their offices and staff travel.

I speak with concern for this sector of our society arising out of my own experience for a number of years with CUSO in its formative years, as a field officer in West Africa and as a co-ordinator of the Canadian and Manitoba centennials. Also, I directed a small voluntary international agency. I continue to sit as a board member of several agencies and councils. I remember the early days of CUSO when goods and services were made available to send volunteers to developing countries. Canadian Air Force aircraft were made available, as were telex and health services.

The direction I am proposing the federal government should take is not in any way new. There has long been a feeling in the country of the importance of the balance among the private, public and voluntary sectors and of the need for recognition of the contribution voluntary agencies make to the life of the nation.

As early as 1951 the Royal Commission on Arts, Letters and Sciences, which published the Massey report, looked at the importance of voluntary societies. In part the report indicated:

The voluntary society has played an important part in modern history, from the religious sects and the salons of the seventeenth century, through the political clubs of the revolutionary era, down to the nineteenth century with its innumerable organizations to aid, prevent, propagate or promote every conceivable end.

We have the fine tradition of the voluntary society which performs work of national importance beyond what the government can or will do.

The Massey report indicated that a special problem of the local society is the scantiness of the Canadian population. It continued:

We were, therefore, interested to see in several different cities a special kind of voluntary association. This is the "Council" representing a variety of organizations, each leading its separate existence, but combining for some common purpose.

The Massey report called for more co-operation between voluntary agencies and government in a "more generous and flexible way". This is the direction I wish to impress upon the government this afternoon.

Following on from the affirmation displayed in the Massey report, the Trudeau government set up a National Advisory Council on Volunteerism. Its report will be familiar to the members of the House. It was entitled "People in Action", and was published in 1977. In part it indicated that there was:

—a need for greater awareness of, and increased commitment to, voluntary activity by both government and the general public.

I should like to quote some excerpts from the report which was tabled in the House but not acted upon. It read:

Voluntary action is "active" citizenship. It is people accepting a real responsibility for shaping their communities and their country and acting in some way on that responsibility.

It continued:

The most obvious form of non-financial assistance is aid-in-kind. This includes access to government facilities, premises, resources, efforts to improve the responsiveness of government personnel to voluntary action and various types of non-financial support services.

However, aid-in-kind could be effectively provided at relatively little cost if clear guidelines existed for supplying this assistance.

It went on:

In particular, the government should focus on ways in which it could help voluntary associations overcome the vast distances and geographical barriers separating so many Canadian communities—

It is very costly to communicate or travel between different communities separated by such distances.

In another section the report recommended that:

The Department of the Secretary of State, in collaboration with a committee of voluntary associations, study the best way to implement special measures to help voluntary associations overcome physical barriers to communication.

More specifically, the government should consider how to render such government communications facilities as WATS telephone lines and telex accessible to voluntary associations at no or limited cost. In the area of transportation, the department and the committee should examine how best to ensure that the economies of charter and excursion flights can be made available to members of voluntary associations attending their annual conventions and meetings—

Most voluntary associations depend extensively on the circulation of printed materials to their memberships because, unlike government and business, voluntary associations do not have access to such facilities as WATS lines or telex. Most voluntary associations also cannot afford such facilities, and long distance telephone calls over normal lines can be prohibitively expensive in any quantity—

The council believes that the solution lies in a special reduction in postal rates for the informational materials and publications of voluntary associations. The government already keeps track of many voluntary associations through their registration as "charities" by Revenue Canada. Accordingly, the council recommends that:

The federal government grant a special postal rate for mailing of publications and informational materials by all voluntary associations registered with Revenue Canada.

It continued:

All of Canada's human resources are needed in a time when the realization is dawning that resources are not inexhaustible and that hard times may be ahead. In an environment of concern and support by government, voluntary action could ensure that the diversity of Canadian society is an enriching rather than a fragmenting force. Thus, government should strengthen rather than diminish its support for voluntary action. The problems of this country cannot be solved if people cannot utilize their own tools and resources, cannot participate in decisions from time to time through their own voluntary associations . . . Government should not create counter-associations to serve its own interests. Rather, it should let the people confront important issues with their own initiatives and resources and through their own voluntary associations.

● (1710)

Indeed, the people involved in voluntary action constitute a vital, multipurpose human resource.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking that this House request the government to provide to the voluntary sector, which is hard-pressed during these days of rising costs and cutbacks, practical assistance in terms of rail travel in the regions of our country and air travel on a standby or special designation basis between the vastly separated parts of our country. I ask for assistance in terms of computer time, which can help agencies keep in touch with their volunteers, and collect their resources. Translation services, the increased use of the CBC facilities and other cable network facilities, the vastly expanded use of government meeting rooms and facilities, use of telephone service on a restricted basis in off-peak periods, are ways to assist the voluntary sector. They could use assistance in terms of printing facilities which are located in regions across the country. They need postal assistance, as outlined in the report of the National Advisory Council on Voluntary Action.

Voluntary agencies from my riding have given me a number of helpful suggestions.They have emphasized to me the importance of maintaining their networks in the communities and across the country. They have emphasized to me the difficulty of obtaining and maintaining equipment. For example, the Kitchener-Waterloo Global Centre wrote a letter to me as follows:

Could we make arrangements to use duplicating equipment which most government offices have available? Even if we had to supply our own paper, our costs would be greatly reduced with the free use of such equipment. What about other equipment—slide/tape, video, etc.?

We would also appreciate access to meeting rooms and office space. The latter would be especially useful when we have specific time-limited projects under way. What does the government do with used furniture and office equipment?

The Waterloo Region Chapter of the Canadian Mental Health Association in a letter asked:

Could some tax incentive be worked out for people who volunteer time as well as for people who donate money?

Mr. Speaker, in these comments and in citing this historical background I am urging the government to look favourably upon a concept set forth in the Massey report advocated by its own Advisory Council on Voluntary Action. The questions which will be immediately raised by those who are concerned about bureaucratic structures and the functioning of this type of proposal are how decisions will be made, who will decide what can be done, by whom and when.

I suggest to you there are a number of co-ordinating councils across our nation. In the international development area I have in mind the Canadian Council for International Co-operation, in the area of international education the Canadian Bureau for International Education, the Canadian Council on Social Development, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops and the Canadian Council of Churches in terms of our Christian community and the Canadian Jewish Council in terms of their community. There are many other councils of a multicultural nature and others which draw our communities together. I am suggesting that a mechanism be set up to consult with them about ways and means of using the existing resources. These are resources which are already in place and which are already being paid for by the Canadian taxpayers.

In these days of big government and of increased inflation and financial hardship, there are a great many people across our land who are in danger of finding themselves without the caring structures that are needed. These smaller and more personalized individual agencies provide an inspiration, motivation, and a caring focus to our community. I suggest that action of this order would not only be economically appropriate to the times in which we live but it would also be one which takes seriously the social fabric of our nation.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity of presenting this motion for the consideration of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in discussing this motion I am sure there will be no disagreement on one point, that is, the importance of voluntary agencies within our Canadian society. I do not think there can be any doubt about that importance. Through these voluntary groups citizens can focus their efforts on problems that really concern them. The ability of these groups to act promptly and effectively could well be emulated by government bureaucracies. Throughout the years, voluntary agencies have been the spearhead for many important social changes in our society. If we did not have a voluntary sector, Mr. Speaker, I am quite confident that we would have to think of what the quality of life in our society might be like.

This is the second time in this Parliament that we have been asked to consider the financial health of the charitable and voluntary organizations in our society. On June 9 the House debated the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) relating to tax deductions for charitable donations. The proposal at that time involved a rather substantial increase in tax revenues forgone so as to provide greater incentive to charitable giving. Because of the large cost involved there was no agreement at that time on the preferable policy which would be followed.

With today's motion by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) we have another proposal that would involve a new charge on the treasury. Given what the hon. member has said in elaboration on the nature of his proposal, I suggest that that charge on the treasury could be substantial indeed. Moreover, the prospective financial burden is a very indefinite one. Certainly by reading the motion that the hon. member has submitted I was originally of the opinion that the government would be asked to provide certain rather limited services for communication and fund-raising activities, to use the terms of the motion. Yet when I hear now what the hon. member has in mind I find that it is a much broader scope of activities and services.

The motion does not stipulate how much financial aid might be required of the federal government. It does not make clear how widely this program of federal grants would be applied. In other words, what kind of voluntary agencies would qualify? How many might be involved and what kind of guidelines would apply to these federal outlays?

I suggest that even with the best will in the world, and with the greatest of sympathy and understanding for the voluntary sector and its importance to our society, we still have a responsibility to examine some of these issues, if not all. In considering a proposal like this we might well look to the Speech from the Throne for one guiding principle which I suggest is relevant here. This guiding principle is:

> That Canadians recognize the need to live within their national means, and they understand that in doing so the state cannot meet every demand or satisfy every group. Therefore, in employing the limited resources available, my ministers will help first those who need help most.

• (1720)

Obviously there is no shortage of good causes which appeal to our sympathy and to the federal treasury. But there is also a shortage of funds available to assist them. We must have a very lively concern for the size of the federal deficit. We should be aware of what federal aid is already being provided in this area. And we should be very careful about assessing the financial implications of making bold and generous declarations of principle in favour of helping this or that worthy cause.

The extent of federal support for voluntary, charitable organizations and causes is already substantial. In income tax alone the amount of revenue forgone annually by federal and provincial governments as a result of deductions for charitable givings is estimated at $600 million. The public accounts are sprinkled with references to grants to a wide variety of voluntary agencies. An excellent example is the New Horizons program under which some $11 million is made available for projects by voluntary groups of older citizens aimed at helping themselves and their community. There are many other examples of federal support for worth-while voluntary endeavours.

I suggest that, for all practical purposes, the government is already doing a great deal of what is proposed in this motion. Admittedly, federal grants are not earmarked in support of communication and fund-raising activities of these voluntary agencies, as the motion proposes. But I think it is obvious that, for the organization involved, the contribution is the important thing and not how it might be earmarked.

For that reason I find it rather difficult to understand why the hon. member for Waterloo has specified in his motion that the federal assistance be directed toward communication and fund-raising activities, so as to free up the funds of the voluntary group for its charitable goals. Surely the distinction is a meaningless one in terms of the way voluntary agencies operate. In fact, if any distinction is to be made, I suggest that a better case could be made for earmarking the federal grant for a particular social purpose, thereby making use of the energy, expertise and flexibility of voluntary agencies to achieve a goal that both the agency and the government desire. As I have indicated, that sort of approach is already being followed in a good many federal grants.

I would like to turn to another issue that is raised by the terms of this motion. That is the problem of defining which voluntary agencies are to qualify for the proposed federal assistance. The motion is not clear as to whether the government should have discretion in deciding which agencies receive these proposed grants, or whether some blanket assistance program is to be made available to all agencies that meet a given set of criteria. If it is the latter, then I suggest we could be opening up a very wide door into the federal treasury.

This problem of defining what is a voluntary agency can be a most difficult and vexing one. Let me illustrate by reference to the government's past experience with the deductibility allowed under the Income Tax Act for donations to registered charities. As hon. members can imagine, it is a matter of great importance for a charity whether or not it can qualify as a registered charity and thus be able to issue tax-deductible receipts to its financial supporters.

There is no legal definition of a "charity" for tax purposes. In deciding whether a charity is to be registered, Revenue Canada now uses the common law classification of charitable purposes. Three of these purposes are fairly specific: the relief of poverty, the advancement of education, and the advancement of religion. The fourth category is a general one: other activities beneficial to the community. In fact, however, this category of charitable purposes has been subjected in the courts to a fairly restricted common law interpretation which has limited the range of organizations able to qualify as charities. Another general requirement which all organizations must meet is that their activities must be concerned with the benefit of the public or of a large section of the public. The result of all of this is that some 40,000 charities are registered and qualify as the recipients of tax-deductible donations.

Suggestions have been made that a legal definition of charity should be drawn up so as to give a wider meaning to the term, and in this way to reflect better the wide variety of activities carried out by voluntary groups in our modern society. It is argued that we need more clearcut criteria for deciding what is to qualify as a charity. In fact, however, the task of redefining just what constitutes a charity would be a good deal more complex than it might seem. And when we remind ourselves that already more than half a billion dollars in tax revenues are forgone through tax deductions for charitable purposes, we should be very cautious about the possibility of opening even wider the door to this particular kind of tax deduction.

Apart from the legal issue, there are some quite pragmatic justifications for the inclusion of some charities among Revenue Canada's registered charities, and the exclusion of others. For example, national sports organizations are included, but not provincial and local sports bodies. In our federal system I think that makes sense. It is reasonable that, for sports at this level, provincial and local governments be expected to provide the kind of financial support that their electorate feels is justified.

I realize that the motion, as worded, does not limit its scope to those registered charities recognized by Revenue Canada. It refers, instead, to voluntary agencies. But the very same kind of definitional problems would arise in any program of government grants. The questions are not easy. First, what kind of activities would qualify? Second, would the voluntary agency be required to devote a certain minimum of its revenues to charitable purposes, and if so how much? Third, would there be any criteria as to the minimum number of persons benefiting from the charity? And finally, what standards of public accountability would be required?

Some may think that this suggests a lot of undesirable government interference in the activities of voluntary groups. Obviously, that is a danger. There are some philosophical questions which might be asked; such as, how far can a voluntary agency go in seeking government help before it loses its essentially voluntary character and becomes just another agency of government? But that is a question the agencies must ask themselves. As members of Parliament, we must concern ourselves with questions about priorities in government spending, and about proper controls on the way federal funds are spent.

Although I share the concern of the hon. member for Waterloo about the importance of a strong and vigorous voluntary sector, I am forced to the conclusion that his motion leaves too many of these essential questions without adequate answers. After listening to the hon. member I became even more concerned in this regard because he indicated that this motion, contrary to my interpretation of the wording, would involve assistance from the government. I am not sure here if we are talking only about the federal government or if we are talking about the federal government and the provincial governments and the municipalities.

The hon. member referred to such services as reproduction services which may or may not include provision for the reproducing paper. The program may involve free mailing service through Canada Post. If the government is to become involved in this kind of program, it must ask some fairly basic questions. When an agency of the government is established, it is through a parliamentary process or some action of Parliament. Presumably that agency is established for a specific purpose related to public policy. A question would arise with regard to particular voluntary agencies which spring up of their own accord. These agencies do not necessarily spring up as a result of some specific policy purpose which has been widely recognized by the population.

• (1730)

As a result, irrespective of how we define voluntary groups or how we define the services that the government or governments are expected to provide to these voluntary groups, the taxpayers of Canada are expected to contribute to their financing through a program such as this. Under this program, all voluntary groups would presumably have equal and free access to a wide range of service from the government, from the public purse. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if those agencies or groups are established as a result of debate and the clear definition of a public policy purpose, that is one thing. Then the taxpayers, it seems to me, can be asked to support, in a very broad way, the activities of these groups. Certainly that question does arise in connection with the tax deductibility of groups and we have defined certain of the groups for tax purposes in my speech to this point.

The question that arises is whether we now intend to allow unlimited access to the public treasury by a large, large number of associations which can be instituted and established on their own volition. If that is the case, it seems to me a great deal of control over the public purse would be lost. More important, Mr. Speaker, we would be asking all the taxpayers of Canada to support, in a very direct way, a wide range of voluntary organizations which they themselves might not otherwise wish to support. I agree they are now being asked to do this as a result of the tax deductibility clause in the tax system. If I give to a voluntary organization which qualifies as a charity I can write that donation off against my taxes. As a result, all taxpayers are effectively paying the additional tax load to make up for the amount I am not paying as a result of the tax deduction I have received.

I think the motion would take this much further, Mr. Speaker, and would loosen the controls which now exist with regard to voluntary organizations. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, when we realize just how broad the services to be provided under this particular motion would be, that the whole question has to be debated carefully and at great length because under this motion we would be imposing a substantial financial burden on the taxpayers of the country—one which is not well defined in the motion; it is not well defined with regard to the organizations which would qualify to receive this assistance, that is voluntary organizations, as opposed to charitable organizations. To me a voluntary organization means any organization that conducts its business through the efforts of voluntary workers. That is a voluntary organization. I am not being paid for doing a job, I am volunteering my services, therefore I am part of a voluntary organization. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, that definition is so broad as to make this motion unacceptable from a public policy point of view and certainly unacceptable from a tax point of view.

The second issue is the breadth of the services which would be available to these groups under the motion. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I was of the very strong opinion that the services to which these groups would have access were relatively limited. The motion reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of providing volunteer agencies with financial aid to support their communication and fund-raising activities, so that a greater portion of available funds could be freed for their intended charitable uses.

However, when the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) put forward his list of what he considers to be "for the purposes of communications and fund-raising support", it turned out to be much more comprehensive than I ever anticipated it would be.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there appears to be some confusion in the motion itself. The first part refers to volunteer agencies and then at the end it refers to the intended charitable uses.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday).

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) for bringing this motion forward for debate today. As mentioned previously, this is the second time it has been up for consideration this session, which indicates the concern members feel with respect to the social policies now being put forward by this government.

We in the official opposition have been rather pleased by the addition of the hon. member for Waterloo to our party and to his membership in the House of Commons because he brings to this House the type of social conscience which has been missing from the government side for too many years. We are sometimes asked, particularly at election time, what the difference is between the Conservative party and the Liberal party. Some people find themselves hard pressed to find an answer, but I think one could say, Mr. Speaker, that a difference is apparent here today. The difference is that we, on this side, recognize that these social problems exist and want to see them solved by the organizations and the people themselves.

There has been strong tendency on the part of the Liberal government to adopt the principle that if there is a social problem, the government should take over and fix it. That is what we are trying to get away from. I think the people of Canada want to see themselves involved in solving these social problems.

The motion which the hon. member for Waterloo has put forward reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of providing volunteer agencies with financial aid to support their communication and fund-raising activities, so that a greater portion of available funds could be freed for their intended charitable uses.

The hon. member for Waterloo has indicated that he is looking at this in a perspective which acknowledges that there are financial constraints on governments in times such as these and we are not asking for more money, per se. We want more assistance, which is equivalent to financial assistance. The hon. member for Waterloo has directed attention to a number of the types of services which could be rendered. I grant the fact that there is a small pecuniary involvement in some of the services which might be provided, but in terms of large grants, the hon. member for Waterloo was not asking for large sums of money.

I listened with interest to the parliamentary secretary, Mr. Speaker. He spoke well and he touched on some of the problems that the government faces in trying to provide more funding. I was a little disappointed and a little surprised—although upon reflection I should not have been—that he did not refer once to the very significant document to which the hon. member for Waterloo referred. "People in Action" is a document on voluntary organizations commissioned by the government a few years ago. A report was made to the Secretary of State in September, 1977, and I am sure that if the government felt it had implemented any of the 81 recommendations in that report, the parliamentary secretary would have told us about it this afternoon. That is what the government usually does—it talks about all the recommendations it has implemented.

Mr. Speaker, I assume that they have not implemented any. Not one in the past three years! I think we should look at those recommendations to see what the government has failed to do by way of implementing a report which it commissioned and asked for. We have raised the question of the lack of funds and the report acknowledges this problem. It contains a chapter on the nature of government's responsibility. At page 138 the following sentence appears.

It will be important for government, not necessarily to spend more money, but to spend existing funds in different ways.

● (1740)

The parliamentary secretary was speaking a few minutes ago about priorities of government spending. That is exactly what is suggested here, that we have to consider priorities in government spending. I want to say a few words about a possible shift in those priorities, to support a suggestion made in this report, that not necessarily is it important to spend more money. Recommendation No. 34 reads:

The federal government affirm in principle and through policy its responsibility to safeguard the basic freedoms of action and association through creating conditions within which Canadian citizens are enabled, encouraged and assisted to act voluntarily about those matters which concern them.

Recommendation 35 is even more significant. It recommends that—

Government ensure that voluntary associations have equal access to grants and other means of support—

That is exactly what the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) is suggesting, that voluntary associations should have other means of support in addition to financial means. Recommendation No. 35 continues——equal opportunity to make their voices heard and the means to emerge and develop in accordance with their own needs, concerns and priorities.

Further along in this report, at page 253, a whole chapter is devoted to what is headed "Non-Financial Support". We are suggesting the government should have taken a look at this, but it has failed to do so. I will read from the first paragraph in reference to the non-financial relationships which could exist if we had a government that really cared.

These involve general support, the bestowal of recognition and the release of information. A fourth type—consultative relationships—will be discussed in chapter 13.

As this concept of general support is dealt with, the council talks about some of the problems which exist now and the help voluntary organizations might receive to further their goals. They talk about the need for public access to the information which the government has. At page 268 another recommendation is found. I will read it because it is most apropos. It is recommendation No. 74, which reads as follows:

Access-to-information legislation be enacted by the Parliament of Canada creating a statutory right of persons to obtain access to information held by the government or its agencies, subject only to a list of narrowly defined exceptions, with any refusal to provide such information and any unreasonable delay or costs subject to review and enforcement by the courts on the merits, with burden of proof on the government.

They are asking for what I hope we will see from this government eventually, that is, an opportunity for Canadians to receive the information they need—in the case of voluntary organizations, that they receive the information they need to pursue their activities. This report contained another recommendation in 1977-1978 that the government inaugurate a voluntary action resource centre. So far nothing at all has been done about that. In recommendation No. 75, it is suggested that annual reports be provided by various departments so that voluntary associations would be able to know what was available in the public sector for their use.

Before I close, I want to touch on the matter the parliamentary secretary raised regarding the priorities the government has to follow in these days of limited funds for spending. We have become quite used to the concept of universality in all our social programs in Canada. I was pleased a year or so ago when the present government, then in opposition, talked about the need to help those who need help most. During the election campaign we heard the Prime Minister and others speaking on that same topic stress the importance of helping those Canadians who most need help. This runs quite counter to the concept of universality in all social programs.

A number of us in the House have recently had the opportunity of serving on a special committee known as the Special Committee for the Disabled and the Handicapped. We have had occasion to listen to dozens of briefs from dozens of voluntary organizations of the type to which the member from Waterloo has been referring. We are well aware of the problems these people have. It has been brought to our attention very acutely that large sectors of the Canadian population are not adequately being taken care of. In fact, they are not being given the very basics to which most of us in this House think Canadians are entitled. I am suggesting, without anticipating the recommendation in the committee's report which has yet to come, that we as representatives of the Canadian people must consider doing something for Canadians who are underprivileged in some special way, such as those who are handicapped and disabled. As things are, we are not even giving them the very basics. For instance, we are not making any effort as Canadians to see that persons whose mobility is limited are given an equal opportunity to move around. I could go on to talk about those who have vision impairments, hearing impairments, and so on. Voluntary organizations looking for help from this Parliament, and this government in particular, are not necessarily demanding more money. But they are demanding that the government take a second look at its priorities, as I hope the parliamentary secretary was suggesting a little while ago. Possibly the time has come when some of us who receive funds from the government regularly or who have things done by the government on our behalf although we are quite able to pay for them, should now be saying that those who are more handicapped or who enjoy fewer privileges in one way or another should be getting top priority for a little while. As I say, we should be taking a look at the priorities of government and reassessing some of the needs.

I think the hon. member for Waterloo in bringing forth this very commendable motion today is telling us that the government does have the funds, but one way or the other the funds are not being directed where they should be. The government has at its disposal facilities and services which could be utilized by voluntary organizations. Moreover, funds are being spent on people who do not need help just because the service is universal. This money could better be used by and on behalf of people who need it more. While the government might take exception to some of the wording in this motion, I hope it will recognize the importance of the concept which lies behind it. I hope the motion will be allowed to pass so that it may be debated in committee.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with my friend, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), in commending the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) for bringing this motion before the House this afternoon.

It must be obvious to him that there is sufficient preparation on the opposite side of the House that the chances of his motion being passed before six o'clock are not very good.

Mr. Jarvis: They are nil.

Mr. Knowles: But at least we are having a discussion of the subject, and I hope the discussion will play its part in persuading the government to review more seriously its attitude toward voluntary organizations.

There can be no doubt as to the important part voluntary organizations have played in our society for decades, indeed for centuries, and there is still an important part for them to play. I believe the people of Canada want to see voluntary organizations given every break that can possibly be given to them. At the same time, I should like to say that every time this discussion comes up I get a little uneasy about the efforts which some people make to try to play the voluntary sector and the public off against one another. As I see it, the main contribution of the voluntary organizations is that they have been pioneers. They have persuaded society that something should be done to help less fortunate members of our society. But as time has gone on, it has become necessary for the public, for the state—the government—to take over these services. The fact is that today I have heard figures as high as 95 per cent. Certainly it is 90 per cent or more of the services which are provided by the government to those who need them. One thinks of such things as housing, health and education. Where would we be today in these areas if this had been left to the voluntary organizations? The government has had to move in.

• (1750)

Then there is the whole question of the maintenance of family income with various kinds of supports. There is the situation which faces our senior citizens, not only in terms of pensions on which to live, but recreation, accommodation, home care and all the rest. As a matter of fact, today voluntary organizations are pioneering in fields such as greater home care, child care and so on. If I had time—and I do not want to be the one to talk this out—I could list things that were done by the voluntary or private organizations when I came here, which was a number of years ago, and which have been taken over.

I do not believe we should play one against the other. In my view, the important thing for some of us to push for is greater public involvement in such matters as security and all the rest which are needed for our senior citizens to improve the lot of those who should be maintained in their own homes, in day care for children and all the rest. Let us not pit one against the other. Both are vitally important.

In the context of this afternoon's motion, it is good for us to realize that even though the public service may be taking care of 90 per cent or 95 per cent of the problems the other 5 per cent or 10 per cent need to be looked at as well. In addition, there is still a pioneering job to be done. It is on that basis I express the hope that the government will give serious consideration to the thrust of the proposal made in the motion before us this afternoon.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the honour to speak in this debate because the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) and I had the opportunity to serve together on a voluntary organization, the Canadian Council for International Co-operation, some years ago. At that time I learned to admire his genuine concern for those in our society, both at home and in other countries, who are deprived or underprivileged. The concern of which he gave such evidence on those occasions is certainly reflected in the bill before us this afternoon.

Other members from both sides of this House have paid tribute to the hon. member's motives in bringing forward this matter today. I want to share in the expression of concern which is reflected in the bill. It is a concern that voluntary organizations, which can play such a substantial part in our society, should have access to the resources, whether they come from the private sector or in part from the public, to enable them to carry out their important functions, both at home and abroad.

In his motion concerning aid for voluntary organizations, the hon. member for Waterloo addresses a function that is important, perhaps in some sense vital, to a free society: the dynamic and ever-changing human activity whereby individuals, or groups of individuals, contribute of their own volition to the betterment of themselves, their communities and their country.

Voluntary organizations are not necessarily similar in their aims and philosophies. Some lend support to traditional values in our society; others are in the vanguard of change. Yet their very diversity is indicative of the vigour of our society and of the great desire of many of us to work for the general well-being of others.

The government is well aware of the valuable services provided by the voluntary sector to which it continues to give a variety of aid and encouragement. The Department of the Secretary of State, for example, administers a number of programs which provide aid to voluntary groups operating in certain fields of interest. These include the changing role of women in society, the progress of native citizens in today's world, human rights, and ethnocultural groups which honour their past while adapting to life in Canada.

The importance given in the motion to communications is well considered. The National Advisory Council on Voluntary Action to the Government of Canada paid special attention to the difficulties faced by a national voluntary organization in maintaining communications.

The hon. member and I recall that most voluntary associations depend extensively on the circulation of printed materials to their membership because, unlike government and business, they do not have every access to such facilities as wide area long distance telephone service or telex. Most voluntary associations could not afford such facilities, and long distance telephone calls over normal lines can be prohibitively expensive in any quantity. Thus, in order to maintain adequate and efficient communications with their members, voluntary associations are forced to restrict themselves to mail service. There is no alternative for them and the effects of continually rising postal rates can be very serious, not only in strictly financial terms, but also because they force some associations to rely on bulk mailings which have a low priority in the post office.

The Advisory Council proposed a plan that would help qualified associations to make good use of the mails. Noting that voluntary associations may be registered as charitable organizations by Revenue Canada, it was suggested that the federal government grant a special postal rate for mailing of publications and informational materials by all voluntary associations so registered.

Other measures of support and encouragement are provided by the government, but before continuing I should like to express a concern which I have with regard to this motion. I do not feel we shall best serve the voluntary sector by supporting specific areas of activity such as, in this instance, communications and fund raising. Some of these independent organizations, serving different needs in different regions and circumstances, may identify other needs that they find more urgent. It is my conclusion, and that of the voluntary organizations themselves, that the most appropriate, the most useful, role of government is to create an environment which would encourage members of the public to make donations in support of the voluntary actions of which they approve. One interesting proposal currently before the government is to change the present tax regulations, which provide little incentive for charitable gifts except among richer citizens, so that all could have similar tax savings by virtue of charitable gifts.

Before speaking further on this tax proposal, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to a special quality of voluntary groups which it would be well to consider. Generally speaking, "voluntarism" is the independent action of an individual or a group to bring about what are seen as desirable changes in society. It therefore seems important to the viability and, indeed, the validity, of a voluntary association that it not rely too heavily on direct government aid lest it lose its independent spirit—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour set aside for consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

PETITION TO REVOKE PROCLAMATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Waddell:

That the proclamation laid before the House on Wednesday, November 12, 1980, pursuant to subsection 35(2) of the Petroleum Administration Act, as proclaimed in PC 1980-2915, be revoked.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the debate was interrupted at five o'clock the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) had the floor.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, to recapitulate for a moment, I was discussing what I have observed over many years, particularly when we were dealing with a series of energy bills over the last years and particularly in the national resources committee of which I have been a member during those years. We on this side have tended to be in the middle with the New Democratic Party pushing for more and the Conservative party saying we had done too much.

This pattern has developed over the years. The New Democrats have taken a very strong stand with regard to the Petroleum Administration Act, and I read a quotation from the remarks of Tommy Douglas, their energy critic, supporting the bill strongly and saying that prices should not go higher. There was no vote on that bill at any of its readings, but it always passed on division with the New Democrats supporting it.

I am surprised that the New Democratic Party should now take an opposite stand to that which it has taken all along. I think there is a real contradiction in this area. I also suggest that there are one or two other contradictions.

I mentioned the genuine concern my party has traditionally had for underdeveloped countries; the Prime Minister is out of the country for a series of reasons but one very strong reason has to do with the North-South dialogue.

I will not spend too much time on this, but before we adjourned the debate at five o'clock I did mention something which disturbs me very much because I think it marks a real departure from traditional NDP policy. The Leader of the New Democratic Party went to Newfoundland and once again laid out the idea that offshore resources should be owned and controlled by the province. That is a recent policy of his party, and I think it is a very strange move. To my mind it has always been traditional among progressives whether in Canada, the United States, Britain or wherever that the smaller the jurisdiction the easier it is for multinational corporations to control that jurisdiction. If control over offshore resources were in the hands of the province of Newfoundland it would be much easier for it to shift into the hands of very large multinational corporations. I think it has always been the tradition of the New Democratic Party that a strong central government is necessary in this country. Evidently there is a diversion from that tradition.

This evening I would like to try to put myself—I have been trying to do this over the last six months or a year—into the shoes of an Albertan who was born and grew up in Alberta. In some ways I can understand the way many Albertans must feel. I grew up in Toronto and moved later in my life to Thunder Bay where I spent a good portion of my adult life. Thunder Bay is in many ways as distant from Toronto and the southern Ontario horseshoe as is Alberta, and I do not mean geographically. I am talking in terms of differences in outlook. At least part of my riding is in Thunder Bay, and at this time it is fairly affluent, perhaps even more affluent than some areas of southern Ontario. I cannot believe the people of Thunder Bay or the people of Alberta are feeling the way they are feeling out of greed, I just cannot accept that. I was interested in what the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) had to say because I think he was saying basically the same thing. There are always people who will do things out of greed in any society, but generally speaking I do not think that is the situation here.

● (2010)

If I had lived in Alberta in the 1920s or 1930s, I could understand the tough years when Alberta was a kind of hinterland to the east or to central Canada where there was a lot of wealth, development and growth. I could understand the tariff approaches and so on. This would be in my mind as an Albertan. I would feel strongly that over the years Albertans had been "had" by the centre of the country, particularly Ontario. However, as an Albertan, I would also have to recognize that from the early 1950s things started to change. I would have to realize that 15, 20 or 30 years have gone by and that Albertans are perhaps the most affluent people, as a total group, in Canada. I would think my concern as an Albertan would be very much to continue this affluence and seek security. It is the insecurity that would bother me and the fact, as Mr. Hyndman would say, that oil and gas are depleting resources and as someone said over the weekend at one of the meetings in Alberta, when they are gone Albertans would become beggars. If that was on my mind, I could understand exactly why I would demand a good deal more than I was getting. I think the problem is that Mr. Hyndman tells only part of the truth. There is nothing wrong with what he is saying, but he is leaving out a very significant part.

It has been known for some time in the rest of the country and in Alberta that conventional crude oil reserves will probably be delivered by the end of the decade at about a third of the rate they are now being delivered. There is no question that the conventional crude oil resources are being depleted at a very rapid rate. There is no question that in the longer term—perhaps in the middle or the end of the next decade—the same might happen to natural gas. I find this proposition a little harder to handle, though, because so many people in the industry are saying we have so much gas we should keep exporting it. I know the argument to the effect that the more you export, the more you discover, however, it creates a problem. But nothing is being said to the people of Alberta by their leaders—I do not think it is dishonesty; it is perhaps that it is not thought out well enough—about the long-term resources such as the tar sands, the in situ heavy oils, the coal and so on. If I were an Albertan looking at the matter as objectively as I could, I think I would conclude that Albertans will be affluent for a very, very long time; it is not something which will come and go within a decade.

I tried to develop this theme in the House during the throne speech debate in the spring, and perhaps I am trying to say the same thing again tonight in a slightly different way. We hope the tar sands will come on. I differ strongly with the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) when he totally blames the tar sands holdup on this government. After all, we have offered $38 per barrel for tar sands oil and we have offered to add the inflation factor to that. We know that a year or so ago that oil could be produced at something in the order of $20 per barrel. We think that is a pretty reasonable offer for a long-term project. I have not heard anyone from the industry dispute that seriously, I have not heard the industry say there is anything wrong with it. Last week we lent Imperial Oil another $40 million just to keep the thing on ice, just to keep it ready to go. It seems to me that somewhere along the line the blame for this must be shared in the sense that the province of Alberta is not accepting this basically because it wants more for its other resources. So, I have difficulty in agreeing with the hon. member in this area.

If Albertans were aware of the way the deal is working out, I think they would find it quite acceptable. I tried to look through history, I tried to look at some contemporary situations in other nations, but I do not think there is any single jurisdiction in the industrial world where so much has been lavished on one group. For example, the resources in the North Sea are shared by all of Great Britain, not just the people in Aberdeen or the people in Scotland. Those most locally involved will get advantages because the activity is there, but I do not know of any place where the amount of money going to a jurisdiction is as much as is going to Alberta in this particular period. I am sure the people of Alberta are not aware of this.

The estimate—and I have not heard it questioned by anyone—is that the revenue of the Alberta government, not for production or anything like that, but just in terms of royalties and so on for oil, gas and coal, will be something in the order of $100 billion in this decade. By 1983 that will amount to $4,300 for every man, woman and child in Alberta. That will go into the Heritage Fund or whatever else is done with the royalties. If I were in the shoes of an Albertan in 1983, I would say, "It is time you distributed a little bit to us". I know that some of the Indians on the Blood Reserve have said they do not want that money just to go into the band fund; they want it to be distributed among the people of the band. If I were in their shoes, I think I would want to do the same thing. It is a significant amount and, of course, it increases.

Today there was an argument concerning other jurisdictions in terms of their percentages. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants was totally incorrect when he said that the government of Australia owns the resources. It does not.

An hon. Member: It does.

Mr. McRae: The Australian states only get something in the order of 20 per cent or less. It is the same in the United States of America. I do not think any other jurisdiction has ever had such an amount of money coming to it. Take a look at the other provinces in this country. This is something which is totally unique, totally new; it cannot be compared with tariffs or anything else that has ever happened to one region. I think it will last for a long time. Putting those two factors together, it seems to me that if Albertans were well aware of what was going on they would feel much more secure. I think insecurity is creating a great deal of the problem for them.

Let us look at the natural resource revenue of other provinces in 1979, the latest year for which I have figures. Newfoundland received $27 for every man, woman and child; Prince Edward Island, $3; Nova Scotia, $8; New Brunswick, $13; Quebec, $18; Ontario, $14; Manitoba, $23. Then it goes up a bit: Saskatchewan, $502; British Columbia, $221; Alberta, $1,874. We are talking about very, very large figures compared with anything else that has ever been known. We must take that uniqueness into account. I hope Albertans hear this and think about it. The things I will mention repeatedly are the amount of money, the fact that it is relatively secure and the fact that these other projects like tar sands plants which are coming along will last for a very long time.

• (2020)

I would like to talk about the way in which the government's policy affects the national scene and how consumers must be concerned about this. I would like to dwell on this for a minute or two since I come from Thunder Bay where distances are very great and where the weather is very cold. We are large users of oil, gas and whatever petroleum fuels come into our area. We have a great deal of concern about whether we can continue to function as a community in northern Ontario because of this very special problem that we face along with most Canadians to one degree or another. I do not think anyone in my area is saying we should give less to Albertans. What we are saying is that there is a national interest which must be served. We do not think it is good enough for the province of Alberta to say that they want this money so much and that they will lend it back to the CNR and the CPR. We do not think that is good enough. We think the nation must do that; national transportation priorities are something we have to deal with federally, something we cannot let a province deal with alone. There are other provinces and regions which have quite different problems.

To give an illustration, there has been a lot of red-necking about the Québécois fact and so on. I did a very rough calculation of the cost of the bilingual program in the country. In one area, it is the cost to government; in the other it is the cost of printing the other language on cornflakes boxes and so on. I calculated that the outside limit of that expenditure would be about one billion dollars a year in an economy that is in the range of $250 billion to $275 billion. That is on behalf of seven or eight million Canadians. If we take the entire amount of money that is going to Albertans per year over the decade—and it is about $10 billion—we find that is about ten times as much going to about one-quarter as many people. The factor there is about 40. I am very happy to see that we are spending the amount I mentioned on the second language. I am also pleased to see that Albertans are getting a fair share for their resources, but I must demonstrate here that we can go too far. No single jurisdiction can expect much more than is being given at this time.

I will conclude now as my time is just about up. I will return to my initial idea and say that my party, which has formed the government for most of this century, basically because we have been a middle-of-the-road party and have not gone to extremes one way or the other—

Mr. Waddell: Look at the west!

Mr. McRae: I left your party to come over here for one reason, which is simply that I did not think this country could be put together by extremes. One of the reasons the Progressive Conservative Party is not in power right now is because they got off that mainstream. What this party has done over the years is stay in that mainstream.

Mr. Waddell: The muddled middle.

Mr. McRae: I believe the policy we are adopting at this moment with respect to the amount of money in that package is fair and reasonable and in the long term it will be recognized as such in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Waddell: If he still has time, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I think I have a minute left.

Mr. Waddell: The hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) seemed to indicate he did not trust the provinces with respect to his point about offshore resources. Specifically, he did not trust the province of Newfoundland to protect those resources from multinational companies. Looking at the record of the other provinces like British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Quebec, would he not agree that they have a better record of taking control of resources than the Government of Canada which has allowed our energy resources, our oil and gas, to be 82 per cent foreign-controlled? Where does he obtain the evidence for his argument that compared to the Government of Canada the provinces are weak-kneed when it comes to dealing with multinationals?

Mr. McRae: I believe what I said is true. Certain jurisdictions which are very progressive, have probably done a better job, in particular the province of Quebec, in relation to the asbestos company. I remember attending mass in the church at Dorval and listening to the Archbishop speaking about the strike at the asbestos plant. It was a very thrilling moment for me. In the province of Quebec these resources were controlled by multinational corporations for a long time. In my view, the multinationals think a smaller jurisdiction is easier to handle. I do not say that the present government in the province of Newfoundland is going to give its resources away suddenly, but the tendency for it to happen is far greater; it is much easier for a large corporation to manoeuvre a small jurisdiction. There are some exceptions, but I think that for each of those exceptions the hon. member will find cases where what I have said is true.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, it would be inappropriate for me to rise in my place without giving credit to some of my constituents—they happen to be called the Edmonton Eskimos—in regard to their magnificent victory yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yurko: I must say there was a great deal of sportsmanship shown on both sides yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, we are considering today the proclamation of sections of the Petroleum Administration Act. The essence of this proclamation is to permit the federal government to set the price of oil and gas in Canada unilaterally on the pretext that it was not possible to establish a price regime through co-operative negotiations with the provinces. More particularly, we are considering the proclamation of sections 35 and 36 which relate to the maximum price to be set for oil.

This House is being asked some questions and, hopefully, we will receive some answers. The questions are these: In regard to negotiations, why have they failed with respect to the national energy program? What is the real intent and extent of the government's national energy program? What is the impact of the program? What are the possible short-term impacts and results of the federal government's national energy program? What are the possible long-term consequences?

In regard to the first question, why had negotiations failed, I think the answer is simple enough. It is based upon the record which was set forward by the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, that is, that the negotiations were not conducted in good faith, each side having established pre-conditions which the other side could simply not accept in totality. Alberta's pre-condition was that it should receive the same benefits as it was to receive under the near-agreement with the Clark government. Second, it would not under any circumstances accept an export tax on natural gas. The federal government's intention was not to reach agreement at all and then to impose a national energy policy with very specific objectives. That was its main pre-condition.

• (2030)

All the available evidence substantiates the objectives and intent of the federal government. The minister of energy of Alberta very carefully documented the extent and nature of negotiations that went on in a speech he gave to the Alberta legislature on November 3, 1980. There is one statement which he repeats on several occasions, and that statement is as follows: "It was the Ottawa government's will, formed shortly after their election, to impose their will upon the province of Alberta and not to enter into an agreement". I have known and worked with the minister of energy of Alberta for many years. He is a tough and exacting negotiator, but he is an honest and honourable man and I believe him when he makes such a statement.

There was nothing in the speech of the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in this House last Friday which refutes that statement or would convince me otherwise. Right from the onset of this Parliament, it was the intention of the federal government to use the Petroleum Administration Act to set the pricing regime unilaterally for oil and natural gas. If it was not so, then the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would have called a first ministers' conference on energy pricing during the summer so that a pricing regime could have been thrashed out with all the provinces present, both the producing and the consuming provinces.

Why was this not done? Why did the negotiations have to rest on agreement or lack of agreement between the Prime Minister and one premier? Surely at such a meeting of the Prime Minister and one premier agreement was impossible, as it would have created a winner and a loser because of the pre-conditions established on both sides. It is obvious to me that apart from desiring substantive revenues from the oil and gas industry, virtually the only major growth industry in Canada today, the intent of the federal government was to wrestle from Alberta a much greater influence and control over the supply side of the industry in Canada.

The government of Alberta has directly and indirectly accumulated enormous influence and control over the oil and gas supply industry through directly owning about 85 per cent of these resources in Alberta. Therefore, through lease sales and allocation, drilling incentives, royalty impositions and rebates, equity and debt investment, through the Alberta Energy Company, the Alberta Opportunity Company and the Heritage Savings and Trust Fund, it exercised this influence.

Simply put, the national energy program has one objective and that is the reduction of the Alberta government's dominant and increasing role in Canada's hydrocarbon supply and petro-chemical industries. Such an objective may be temporarily popular in central Canada, but it does have the capacity to evoke grave repercussions in Alberta. We keep asking how far the federal government is prepared to go in centralizing power in Ottawa?

This leads me into seeking answers to my second question; what is the intent and extent of the federal government's national energy program. The national energy program has three main goals, as I see it. The first is an oil and gas pricing regime of ten years' duration which will provide increasing revenues to the federal government basically from provincially owned resources. The second goal is substantive Canadianization and nationalization of the oil and gas industry by effecting a major shift in the ownership and control structure with the following stated goals: (a) at least 50 per cent Canadian ownership of oil and gas production by 1990, (b) Canadian control over several of the larger oil and gas companies and (c) an early increase in the share of the oil and gas sector owned by the federal government—in effect, the nationalization of some of the industry.

The third over-all objective is oil and gas security of supply within the decade basically through conservation, substitution, new conventional and synthetic supplies and assured import and contractual arrangements and renewable energy development. These goals, if co-operatively evolved between the provinces, the federal government and the industry, are desirable to a majority of Canadians, but the proposed methods of implementation and the time-frame for implementation are devastating in their possible effect.

The Prime Minister in a recent news release referred to the goals as energy security, opportunity and fairness. I ask; fairness and opportunity for whom? For the oil and gas industry, for the producing provinces, for the consuming provinces, for the nation in total, and, if so, by what measuring stick? I ask, what analyses were made and whether they were made in regard to equity and fairness or, for that matter, energy security, because those are the goals of the Prime Minister. Would the government table these studies or documents so that we can all view them? The government should allow us to see these documents so we may all share the same analyses and knowledge.

How could one possibly set out a policy of such magnitude without doing analyses of this nature? Yet it seems to me that what is being advocated and attempted here is a national energy policy imposed without prior consultation, without adequate analysis of the impact, without meaningful negotiation and without the most elementary agreement of the partners involved. It did not have to be so. It is a program designed for a period well beyond the mandate of the present government and beyond the mandate of every provincial government in Canada.

Even if agreement were not possible it was essential that such a far-reaching program should have been exposed and discussed thoroughly with all the provinces and the many segments of the industry before being announced and brought forth as an integral part of the budget. I recommend to the Prime Minister and his government in the most humble way that they impose the first year price increases and keep the budget intact, then take the remaining package to all the provinces and the industry for consultation.

I suggest that the government call a first ministers' conference for February with regard to the national energy program during the period, say, 1982 to 1990. The government should immediately reopen discussion with Alberta in preparation for such a conference on the package on the understanding that after the budgetary year all aspects of the program are open for discussion, review, adjustment and negotiation. A national energy program, if discussed and at least partially agreed to at a first ministers' conference by at least a majority of provinces, both producing and consuming, might endure and, indeed, set a meaningful direction for the nation in energy security.

• (2040)

This nation has one of the largest hydrocarbon reserves in the world. It should be a net exporter rather than a major importer of oil; that is, at today's prices. Our import position is shameful in the eyes of the world community. Ours are problems of inadequate politics, faulty management, intemperate greed and sheer stupidity rather than those of reserves or opportunity. It is incumbent on the federal government to renew negotiations with the provinces. So often the success of a difficult direction or a complex policy is a function of the manner and procedures used in the processes of implementation. With power, there must always be present, humility. In weakness there is desperation. Let the federal government act from a position of power and signal its desire to negotiate by carrying an olive branch, rather than a sword. Meaningful negotiations with the province of Alberta and all the producing provinces must be resumed so that the future energy self-sufficiency of this nation can be assured.

The Prime Minister in his news release on October 31, 1980, made the following statement referring to the use of the Petroleum Administration Act.

> We took these steps in the hope and expectation that they would be only a short bridge to the time when new pricing agreements could be signed with the producing provinces, at which point the pricing regulations can be rescinded. We are anxious to reach agreement on this point as the ministers of energy and finance have indicated in the House of Commons.

I am encouraged by the Prime Minister's statement, Mr. Speaker, as I consider that by the term "short bridge" he meant one year would be needed in order to make a national budget possible. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in his speech last Friday, November 21, at Hansard page 4964 also stated, and I quote:

> —we changed our plans as indicated in the budget; when it was obvious that we could not reach an agreement, we used the powers under the Petroleum Administration Act; and we indicated that as soon as an agreement could be reached, we would be willing and ready to rescind those proclamations in order to work on the basis of an agreement. Preferably this country must work on the basis of an agreement—

This statement supports the Prime Minister's position, but the minister appears to have changed his mind minutes later last Friday; and Hansard, at page 4967, reports his answer to a direct question I put to him on the matter. I will not go into his answer now but it is there for all to see, indicating rather strongly that the ten-year pricing regime was here to stay and negotiations were not possible any longer. As I said, his answer to my question does not suggest a climate for negotiation; it confirms a policy of imposition and to heck what anyone else says.

This House must demand that the Prime Minister make a very definitive statement on this matter, an assurance that the ten-year pricing regime for conventional oil and gas is not fixed, and is subject to renegotiation with the producing provinces and that meaningful negotiations will be undertaken immediately. Is meaningful negotiation possible or has Alberta only one option, that of conserving its resources by cutting supply?

Mr. Speaker, oil in the ground is far more valuable today than money in the bank, and as a result of the federal government's pricing regime, one which imposes a low price increase early and a much more rapid one years ahead, Alberta is simply being forced to do what it is doing.

This brings me to my final question. What is the immediate impact of the national energy program? Many members of this House will be discussing this matter. I will refer in part to the excellent summary by Hugh Anderson in last Saturday's edition of The Globe And Mail. The national energy program policy prescriptions have produced the following: First, apoplectic rage among executives of foreign-controlled oil and gas companies whose organizations will be relegated to being second-class corporate citizens under the new rules, and considerable dismay among officials in Canadian-controlled companies resulting in both a curtailment in exploration and a partial exodus of exploration capability to the United States.

Second, a carefully planned and explicitly stated position by the premier of Alberta of the province's intent to start turning down the flow of Alberta oil beginning in March, 1981, if a negotiated agreement cannot be found. In other words, a rescheduling of Alberta's conventional oil production regime to conserve and delay the use of a rapidly declining resource. This is no less than any owner of a resource would be forced to do under a suppressed short-term pricing regime followed by a more generous long-term pricing schedule. Nevertheless, such cutbacks, if effected, would create enormous precedent complications.

Third, serious effects on mid-term and longer-term energy security by further delays in the construction of multibillion dollar oil sands plants in Alberta and a decline in spending on exploration in the Arctic and off the east coast. This really concerns me because the consequences go far beyond the wisdom of present day governments. If such delays persist, historians will look back upon the action of today's leaders as almost treasonable and as against the interests of our children.

Fourth, increased, and in some cases almost feverish discussion of western Canada's unity options within confederation. It is in this area that I want to make some remarks a little later.

Fifth, expressed apprehension and suggestions of protest from our neighbour, the United States of America, where a pro-business administration will soon be entrenched and movement towards world oil pricing is rapid.

My list of reactions to the national energy program continues. We are witnessing, sixth, a very substantive drop in the stock market evaluation of Canadian oil and gas companies, both Canadian and foreign controlled, and an anger on the part of individual Canadian stockholders who have witnessed major re-evaluation of their assets. Seventh, accusations by an increasing number of economists and energy analysts that necessary long term economic policy is being subverted by the political preoccupations of the federal government, and, eighth, a situation in which western firms are undertaking a boycott of materials from eastern companies.

Mr. Speaker, in the time I have left I wish to speak on the mood in western Canada, particularly in Alberta. There is today in Alberta a general anger, a frustration and a disillusionment. It is an anger not directed at Canada, not at the Canadian people, but at the Canadian government.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yurko: There is frustration, not at the lack of opportunity, not at the lack of challenge, but with a federal government energy policy that penalizes success, that stifles the initiative and constricts the vision of men and women whose dream is to mould and to build and to embrace a mighty nation in which the individual, the family, the community and enterprise can flourish and reach heights of performance and excellence unequalled anywhere in the world.

An hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Yurko: It is a pioneering spirit that we have out west. We truly have a dream. On this remarkable formula for success and accomplishment, the federal government is imposing its formula, for essentially a form of de facto socialism. There is in Alberta and the west, a disillusionment with the trustworthiness and honesty of governments. For governments say one thing but mean another; governments create expectations then throttle them.

This Albertan and western anger results from a bruised ego and many are lashing out and kicking in the only way they can—against the perceived menace in Ottawa. Some are flirting with the concept of separatism as an outlet for their anger and frustration and as a method of striking back at the hand which seems to have them by the throat. Sprinkled among the many who are angry and frustrated and disillusioned and looking for retaliation, are the few at the forefront of the separatist fringe. These genuine wreckers of confederation are finding a ready audience in Alberta.

● (2050)

I sympathize with the many but condemn the cause of their anger. I also condemn the hysterical few capitalizing from the fever of separatism. I reject categorically their view and their purpose and their concept. I reject those who are fostering the fungus of division and separatism as being unCanadian, as having selfish motives and inflamed egos. Such a movement would only produce hurt and harm in Alberta, for as it grows, and if it grows, it will pit Albertan against Albertan and neighbour against neighbour. Every action will produce an equally forceful reaction. Our ancestors—and I count seven generations of Albertans in my family—did not sweat and die in poverty so that our generation might fight amongst ourselves with greed over the legacy of the riches they left us. We need a new formula for sharing our riches in Alberta with the rest of Canada and a new formula for representation and influence in Ottawa. But that will come peacefully and politically and with time. The first great step is to patriate our constitution so we can deal in Canada as Canadians with some of the problems that are facing and have faced this nation for many years.

It comes as somewhat of a surprise to me that western premiers, and leaders of opposition, and members of the legislative assemblies and members of Parliament from western Canada have not categorically rejected the embryonic western separatism movement. I trust that in time they all will and I hope they all will. "I am a Canadian", Mr. Diefenbaker was so fond of saying. That is what we are. The final chapter or the inevitable conclusion of such a movement is north-south integration rather than east-west sharing and co-operation. I reject such a movement totally. But it is also necessary to remove some of the fears in western Canada. What are these fears? There is a primary fear, that it is the intent of the Government of Canada to nationalize the resources of this nation, indeed, to go contrary to the fundamental basis of Canada itself as laid down by the Fathers of Confederation. That accusation will intensify—Ottawa and central Canada are determined to nationalize resource ownership and rob the west, particularly Alberta, of its potential and destiny.

We need to show unequivocally in the coming months that Parliament acted in good faith during the patriation process to remove any possibility or intent to nationalize provincial resources. How can this best be done? I submit it can be done by at least two amendments to the proposed resolution for a joint address to Her Majesty the Queen respecting the Constitution of Canada.

The first amendment would be to section 42 so that a referendum would require a majority of the votes cast in each province before acceptance by Parliament as a constitutional amendment.

The second change would be one maintaining the unanimous agreement formula only with respect to changes to provincial assets or property, in particular ownership of lands, resources and provincial boundaries. My own preference would be for the insertion of a whole new section in the proposed resolution overriding all formulae. It would say something like this:

Notwithstanding sections 37, 38, 39, 40, 41 and 42 contained herein, and any sections contained within the BNA Act of 1867 and all subsequent amendments which may have bearing on this section, no existing land and/or resource ownership rights shall be taken from or diminished in any province, nor shall any present provincial boundaries be altered without the expressed consent of the affected province.

What I am saying is that after two years the unanimity formula would be maintained only in one area of concern, namely, in this area of concern. With such a change we could diminish the anger, the frustration and the disillusionment and the fear in western Canada. There is indeed a fear that the federal government, central Canada, is out to nationalize the resources of the rest of the nation. If this government got its constitutional proposal through Parliament and then came before the people with a referendum two or three years from now and put before Canada two formulae, first, the Victoria charter formula and second, some other formula, that would be terribly divisive for this nation. The fears and the intensity would be unlimited because it would come at a time of elections in western Canada and just before an election on a national scale. Therefore, I say to this government that it should take the utmost precaution; it should take the necessary action to guarantee the fundamental rights given to Canadian provinces by the Fathers of Confederation, namely, control and ownership of their lands, resources and boundaries. None of these rights should be taken away or diminished in any way unless by agreement of the province in question.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I hope I will be allowed first of all to join the previous speaker in congratulating the Edmonton Eskimos, but I venture to express the wish that the Alberta government will not rely on the difference in points yesterday to try to obtain fair oil prices from the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate this evening, not only because The National Energy Program tabled on October 28 last was up to the challenge of the eighties, but also because the present government had decided to act, well aware that the time had come to do so.

In the past few weeks and months, I was in a position to note in the various parliamentary committees and in the House and, more especially, in my constituency of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine, to what extent the energy problem has developed. Therefore, on October 29 last, a first step was taken with the tabling of The National Energy Program. The principles of that policy have been explained at length, but I would like to take this opportunity to recall its main themes; first, security of supply, and ultimately, energy self-sufficiency in Canada; second, the possibility for Canadians to play an increasing role in energy industries, especially oil and natural gas industries; and third, fair prices and revenue sharing among governments and industry.

The last budget also stated the basic energy policy under which the federal government would be induced to set the prices of gas and oil. The government was hoping no doubt to get the agreement of all provinces in that respect. However, as our colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) pointed out so well last Friday, after many negotiations during which even the former government was unable to get the consent of all provinces, such consent was not given.

● (2100)

My distinguished colleague opposite claims they did reach an agreement, but we never saw it. It was never tabled in the House and they never spoke of it. So, Mr. Speaker, as so aptly pointed out last Friday, this government made every effort and keeps trying to negotiate with the provinces with a view to reaching an agreement. If my kind colleague opposite would also give us the possibility of saying what we think about the energy policy, he would have the opportunity—which I believe he has already had—to express his own ideas on the matter. So, as I was saying, Mr. Speaker, we are still in favour of getting the agreement of the provinces; we hope and trust we will get it. Although we may be discussing at this time in the House the proclamation we tabled, if we manage, as we hope, to reach an agreement with the provinces, we will gladly withdraw the proclamation.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people have realized to what extent friction between the federal government and the producing provinces might have set back deadlines that were already overextended. Also, the present government can always be criticized for its decisions but at least they were a step forward as opposed to the determination with which some provinces defend regional interests.

I think that Alberta has clearly demonstrated to us, by defending so eagerly the regional points of view, that joint efforts aimed at achieving objectives that would satisfy all Canadians were the least of their concerns. In the face of ultimatums such as Alberta's threat to oil supply, no federal government can apply a coherent energy policy. The provinces have shown us, Mr. Speaker, that the political climate in Canada is no better and no worse than in other countries, but that joint action remains an essential step in achieving agreements in these times where the economy is the main concern of all Canadians in all parts of the country. Such joint action is still possible, I think, as long as energy-producing provinces as well as the consuming provinces remember that the national interest is paramount. Finally, the federal government must keep in mind that now more than ever each and every Canadian is affected by this national policy.

Mr. Speaker, the energy challenge of the eighties will at least have the advantage of calling on the intelligence of man, just as many thousands of years ago when man had to find ingenious ways of dominating the forces of nature. In our present day society, energy supplies and their accessibility with regard to price are one of the chief concerns of all industrialized nations. Since the 1973 energy crisis, OPEC has managed to gain control of the situation on three main levels: price control, the control of production levels as well as the control of oil distribution systems. In turn, oil companies did not hesitate to pass on the energy bill to the consumer. Countries with adanced technology were great sources of income to the extent that their deficits increased in no time.

Whereas the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries showed current account surpluses of some $60 billion in 1969, all the other OECD countries experienced huge deficits which varied according to whether they had enough natural resources to meet their needs, provided those resources were endless. In the middle of the seventies, industrialized countries felt the need to join together in order to fight the measures which increasingly threatened their economic security. The International Energy Agency, which was created in 1974 following the embargo on Arab oil, made rather gloomy forecasts regarding world oil supply and demand. At that time, they figured out that in 1979 there was a surplus of 1.2 million barrels between the world oil demand and supply.

For 1985, the projected figures showed a deficit of 2.1 million barrels that would reach 5 or 7 million barrels by 1990. In view of these rather disquieting figures, the seven industrialized nations meeting in Venice in June of this year came up with the following resolution and I quote:

"We must turn to energy resources other than oil to meet energy needs made necessary by future economic growth. This will require immediate, steadfast and long-ranging actions."

One can see that several of the measures suggested then have found their way into the new energy policy. In addition to that, the seven industrialized nations expressed their concern for the impact of the increases in the price of oil on oil importing developing countries. The oil expenditures of these countries were then assessed at around $50 billion. If this tendency is maintained, these countries will be forced to go deeper into debt thereby jeopardizing their future growth and social progress. This incidentally is one of the concerns of the participating nations in the North-South dialogue. Next August, there will be a new meeting of the seven industrialized nations here in Ottawa and their representatives will again deal with this thorny issue.

As for Canada's oil costs, the situation is not so disastrous. However, the proposed policies are most welcome. Indeed, the Montreal Business Review indicates that the $15.5 billion cost and the nine billion grants over the next five years are enough to make the most optimistic economists shudder. Of course, the solution proposed by the federal government will not eliminate overnight the need to import 425,000 barrels of oil a day or 25 per cent of the Canadian consumption. But our energy policy will allow us to reduce our projected dependency which would have climbed to 600,000 barrels a day by the mid-eighties. We should remember that Canada is endowed with enormous resources, human as well as natural, and the challenge presented by the greater use of renewable energies will lead to numerous opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, this government has stated its intention to continue to work toward energy self-sufficiency which is dependent upon the use of alternative oil-replacement forms of energy. For this purpose, a special committee of the House was established some time ago, with terms of reference which include seeking the opinion of the Canadian people on these matters. It seems to me that the committee, which considers alternative energy sources to replace oil is doing a tremendous job, as it calls on human intelligence and the spirit of co-operation which I mentioned earlier.

We already know that the national energy program will include additional incentives for the commercial use of various alternatives through both the comprehensive conversion program and special, new or extended programs. It will also provide more financial help for research and development and demonstration projects.

While the Canadian government was involved in developing energy alternatives long before 1980, it should be kept in mind that the concerns resulting from the energy crisis, the sustained efforts of researchers and ecological considerations have certainly contributed to make the people aware of the scarcity of energy resources. As a matter of fact, this phenomenon was heightened, as I mentioned earlier, by the brutal realization of the impact of world oil price increases on the development of western economies, including even those of developing countries. As for the federal renewable energy programs, it was in July, 1978, that the government of the time announced the implementation of a series of renewable energy programs between 1979 and 1985. These programs will cost $380 million.

I should remind the House that this initiative was to be the major component of the program related to research and innovation, the creation of a Canadian solar heating industry, a federal-provincial program of technological demonstrations and a greater use of biomass energy. At the time, the government was convinced that there were very valid reasons to promote the development of renewable energy. Today, through its national energy policy, the government is showing the consistency of its decisions. In this regard, when the budget was brought down and the national policy was outlined, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the government were happy to announce the creation of a Canadian corporation, Enertech Canada, which would restrict its activity to the field of renewable energy and conversion from oil. A starting capital of $20 million has already been provided for this Crown corporation. Its activities will be centred on support for commercial production, renewable energy and conservation methods.

● (2110)

Mr. Speaker, time is not available to explain the complete breakdown of the $380 million I referred to. Let us keep in mind, however, that of that amount, $104 million was earmarked for helping financially the projects approved under the renewable energy program and the forest industry until 1985. Moreover, projects that have been approved for a number of regions should allow to identify renewable energy and fossil fuel resources equivalent to three million barrels of oil a year.

The private sector also contributes, which means that $105 million will be invested in that area, and some sources indicate this is only a beginning. Other programs continue as well, such as the federal-provincial demonstration program aimed at illustrating newly developed technologies in the areas of renewable energy and energy conservation, biomass incentive programs and solar energy programs. In addition to demonstrations announced under the federal-provincial program, the National Research Council also maintains an important program of wind energy research and development. Mr. Speaker, Canadians can be proud of the National Research Council, an institution that has been far too long ignored by the public. Although it is bound by financial restrictions like any other department, it nevertheless kept on fulfilling its research and development mandate.

In fact, the council's role suffered two drawbacks. First, the public were more or less interested in and aware of its achievements, or people simply preferred to ignore the work done by hundreds of scientists across Canada, when they did not simply view them as dreamers. Without exaggeration, I can say that only people in the scientific world and in industry were aware of the achievement of the National Research Council of Canada. Yet, unbeknown to us, the technological quality of our means of production was made possible by the many achievements in the field of applied research. Those achievements will have allowed our companies to benefit from the results obtained in various and vital fields of scientific and industrial research and information.

It must be noted, however, that with the oil crisis, the intelligence and the creativity of all Canadians are utilized. The rational use of energy, the conservation of our resources, the protection of the environment depend essentially on the consumer's concern with preserving his own life and that of future generations. More specifically, with regard to renewable energies, the National Research Council assesses the Canadian situation in these terms, and I quote:

> Over 10 per cent of energy supplies in Canada today come from renewable sources of energy, the main ones being hydroelectricity and forest waste products.

The council finds, and rightly so, that the high cost of investments in conversion equipment slows down a greater use of renewable energies. Still, the rate of international events which jeopardize traditional supplies of energy may well result in changing the situation drastically. As they gain in maturity, renewable energies will gradually break down the barriers, psychological and economic, and open up vistas never envisioned previously. For the consumer, the ultimate objective boils down to restoring the balance between his demand and his capacity to pay.

Of all renewable energies, which as we know constitute a mere 10 per cent of energy supplies in Canada, wind energy is the one on which I should like to dwell for a few moments as one offering promising possibilities. According to the National Research Council of Canada, the contribution of renewable sources of energy will double in the next 20 years. To that end, Canadians will concentrate their efforts on the development of technology, techniques and equipment which will be economically advantageous and make it possible to reach these goals. As for wind energy the federal government pours $1.5 million each year into research and development. The research deals primarily with the development of generators operated by vertical axle windmills producing several megawatts of electricity and linked to existing transmission networks. Similarly experiments are being conducted with hydro companies in order to collect data on the energetic output of more complex equipment. These experiments are conducted in remote areas of Canada and in foreign countries. The question that arises as far as the energy of the wind is concerned could be put this way: could wind be profitably used as an additional source of energy in remote areas with little exposure?

It was precisely to answer that question that the experimental windpower station in my riding of Bonaventure-Iles-de-la-Madeleine was built in July, 1978. We learned a lot from the experiment, and after an accident had caused the project to stall, work was resumed with renewed enthusiasm. Today wind energy is working and we have already reached the stage where results are being compiled.

The building cost of this windpower station is estimated at a quarter-million dollars. Although still at the experimental stage such a station could produce between 130 and 250 kilowatts and supply 115 households, with an average family consumption of two kilowatts.

In addition, prospects are encouraging if one considers that the Magdalen Islands are an ideal spot as winds are extremely strong there almost all year round.

We know also that other similar projects are considered. A site has not been selected as yet for the building of another windmill. However, the location on the Islands has a disadvantage with regard to the transportation of materials, for instance. Everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, that it costs about 25 per cent more to build any structure on the Magdalen Islands. So the same thing will happen with the construction of a windmill. Outside Canada, experimental projects permit us to foresee the future of wind energy with confidence. For instance, the results achieved with the large windmill built in North Carolina have shown that with two megawatts of power between 300 and 400 homes could be supplied with electricity. That windmill is located 1280 metres high up in the Appalachian Mountains.

Besides, the U.S. department of energy has selected a windy location in the Columbia Valley where as early as 1980, this year, three giant windmills will be erected with a potential of two and a half megawatts each, capable of providing power for about 3,000 homes.

So the contribution of the universities is essential to some projects such as those carried out in Massachusetts and in Thailand where a construction project was carried out with locally available materials. Finally, further information leads us to believe that windmills generating 50 kilowatts of the same type as the one built on the Magdalen Islands will be connected to the Newfoundland and Saskatchewan power grid. The problem experienced in the Magdalen Islands as well as everywhere else is essentially due to wind irregularity which requires the storage of energy, which is a very expensive proposition.

The production costs have been assessed in the Islands. The data available suggest that the fuel savings make the use of wind energy probably the most economical solution, since it is less expensive to produce one kilowatt hour by this method than to produce the same amount of electricity with oil. The data have hardly been collected and they are already thinking about increasing the output through larger facilities. It is planned, for example, to set up in Quebec in 1983 an $18 million machine capable of supplying electricity to 600 or 700 households. We all know that the sky is the limit in this area. It is to be hoped that governments, through budgetary incentives for instance, will give high priority to ongoing projects and to the building of new facilities so as to promote the tapping of wind-generated energy.

Mr. Speaker, when speaking a moment ago about the producing provinces, I touched upon the matter of federal-provincial relations within the context of the national energy policy. I already said as well that consultation was an essential condition to the implementation of this program. But what is true for Alberta is also true for Quebec.

As concerns the province of Quebec in particular, priorities in energy matters for the next ten years have been clearly defined in the premier's inaugural speech. Essentially, Quebec is planning to invest about $55 billion in the Quebec Hydro development program, especially in the harnessing of secondary rivers. Then, the province will launch an operation to replace oil as an energy source through the development of natural gas. In that last instance, the federal contribution and that of the producing provinces will have to be planned so as to allow true consultation. That is why our government has already approved the extension of a natural gas pipeline from Montreal to Quebec City. In addition, it is hoped that the gas pipeline will be extended to the maritimes, so as to cover the eastern part of Quebec. Also, discussions are proceeding on the route of the natural gas pipeline.

Then, Quebec should place itself above political bickering for the well-being of all its citizens. Until now, the minister of energy for Quebec has expressed some reservation about the program to convert from oil to other energy sources. However, he opened the door to a greater co-ordination of programs particularly the one aimed at promoting the use of natural gas. However, as it goes with any major project, it must be well understood that time will be the determining factor in order for public funds to be used for the well-being, the security and the availability of natural resources for the benefit of each Canadian consumer. And as was observed recently by our colleague and Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, it is a tremendous and difficult challenge.

Mr. Speaker, the big difference between the world of scientists and the world of consumers is assuredly their concept of the future. As far as they are concerned, governments should get involved in both these areas. And especially since World War II, the role of the government has greatly expanded to such an extent that there has been a renewal of the schools of thought in favour of economic liberalism.

Today, people have clearly expressed their desire to see governments let go of their hold on the individual. However, it will be noted that the wind did not blow as hard as expected by the previous government who tried to initiate a so-called energy policy. Its policy was based, indeed, on an overbearing will which paid little attention to the taxpayers: the dismantling of Petro-Canada, accelerated increases in oil prices, etc.

Mr. Speaker, from this statement it appears that the government's intentions cannot escape from the international realities. As in many other industrialized countries, Canadians have had to learn to live with inflation. This means, among other things, that we accept, whether we like it or not, doing business using a currency which fluctuates according to the circumstances. This also means that we will have to put up with the inconvenience of skyrocketing prices. In other words, we pay more to get less. Concepts like the scarcity of goods and the net loss of buying power will have resulted in the weakening of what was called the American way of life. But at some time or other Canadians experienced periods when it was difficult to obtain the bare necessities.

The rationing system implemented during World War II is one of the factors which restricted our freedom to consume. But seldom will Canadians be as concerned with regard to their future as have been industrialized countries as a whole. Mass consumption is about to yield to a new way of life or, even better, to a modus vivendi which will require a greater choice and a better selection to meet our aspirations and our needs. It has almost become unsafe to speak of economic recovery as a direct result of successive events at the international level.

Recently, OECD reports suggested careful optimism for the years to come. Unemployment rates will reach unprecedented levels affecting about 20 million people of all ages and all walks of life. More recently, the United Nations warned us about the food supplies of some countries: The outlook for world supplies and the security of food in 1981 is so bad that there is an over-all emergency situation. It points to the situation in Africa, for example, as being quite alarming in view of the fact that grain imports in 1979-1980 increased by 21 million tons or 19 per cent over the preceding season. On top of this there was a deterioration of the political climate in several areas of the world.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot possibly think that some miraculous system could remedy all these problems. For several years we praised the merits of so-called planned economies but even those have felt the ill-effects of the oil crisis. Leaders of communist countries, for example, quickly realized that their production of goods and services fell behind the levels anticipated or planned for the short or long term. That is why, as the Economic Council of Canada noted in its fourth annual report, objectives will have to be balanced if we want to achieve sustained economic growth. The key to success, therefore, lies in the choices to be made and must be aimed at the well-being of all Canadians. Future efforts toward a greater use of renewable energy present a major challenge which will be beneficial to this and future generations. Mr. Speaker, now is the time to act. The government, with this national energy policy, calls upon all Canadians to participate asking them to act sensibly and with good spirit in the use of our country's energy potential.

• (2120)

[English]

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the November 22 edition of the Financial Post. It reads as follows:

> The New York investment banker who floats multibillion-dollar issues for a gaggle of Canadian governments (and for that reason, who chooses anonymity) is puzzled.
>
> "I can't get this straight," he says over the phone. "Your government says it wants self-sufficiency in oil. It wants to encourage Canadian companies. So it brings in a policy that results in Canadian companies coming down here to help the U.S., while the U.S. subsidiaries left up there cut back their Canadian exploration budgets. Does this make sense to you?"

No, Mr. Speaker. Sections 35 and 36 of the Petroleum Administration Act allow the government to unilaterally impose prices if no agreement is reached with the producing provinces. It begs the question: why was the government unable to reach an agreement with Alberta?

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) would have us believe that he walked miles and miles to reach an agreement. That is a total sham, it was a show staged for the media and for the public. He made lots of mileage out of it, but he did not even come close to an agreement, nor would it appear that he had any intention of doing so.

The minister of energy for Alberta outlined the meetings he had with the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. May 13 was a "get-together" meeting; they had coffee, they discussed the weather. On June 18 one proposal was discussed, the one which is essentially in the energy package today. When it was not accepted by the Alberta government on June 18, the minister asked the provincial energy minister to remain until June 19. He said he would take it back to his colleagues. The indications were that he came back on June 19, at which time he offered an absolutely ridiculous proposal which was worse than the first, knowing full well that it would not be approved. It would appear he wanted to keep up the appearance of negotiations, so that people would think they were still negotiating.

After meeting with Mr. Lougheed in July, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated that Alberta had made a very generous offer to the rest of Canada, but he announced that there was no agreement. I suggest that the government never intended to reach an agreement with Alberta, that it had set the goal of nationalization of the oil industry, that it was prepared to go full steam ahead, and damn the consequences. The government is prepared to challenge any provincial government for jurisdiction unilaterally if that province appears to be breaking its economic dependence on the central government. It is the aim of the present government to remain in power at all cost, and, of course, that is "by Goldfarb". If this were not the case, we would not be debating the imposition of sections 35 and 36 of the Petroleum Administration Act. Such an act should only be used when all else fails. Every possible avenue must be explored before these sections are imposed. They should never be used to club a provincial government into submission. What will the imposition of these sections of the act do? First, it will provide cannon shells to an increasingly militant group in western Canada, particularly in Alberta. If I mention this only briefly, it is not because it is unimportant. Responsible men and women are saying, "Let's get out of this mess." Nothing is more dangerous to our country today than the attitude which is starting to fester in western Canada.

The minister would have us believe that the imposition of this act may be rescinded at any time, if an agreement is reached with the provinces. I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the debates of November 21 and I would like to quote from page 4964 of Hansard for that date in which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is reported as saying:

> —we indicated that as soon as an agreement could be reached, we would be willing and ready to rescind those proclamations in order to work on the basis of an agreement.

● (2130)

I also refer you to page 4967 of the same date on which the minister said:

> It was to ensure a certain degree of certainty and clarification as to the government's policy that it was decided to put forward this long-term plan. We have indicated that this is a ten-year program.

Further down the page he says:

> We have put forward a pricing regime which we think will be fair for the industry over the next ten years and for the various regions of the country.

I suggest that if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is ready to enter into negotiations with the province of Alberta those statements are contradictory. In no way has he created a climate for proper negotiations. I do not suspect for one moment that the government is willing or ready to change its position on the energy policy budget brought down on black Tuesday. I suggest it will continue in exactly the way it is going—no negotiation whatsoever that will bear fruit. What has happened? No agreement and no oil sands plants.

Let me focus on the oil sands and tar sands. I know there has been a lot of fall-out because of the energy program, the budget and no agreement. Let me focus on those factors. There is Cold Lake, which is the Imperial Oil project worth $8 billion. There is private capital waiting to be invested in northeastern Alberta for the benefit of all Canada. There is Alsands in Fort McMurray, another $8 billion of private capital ready to be invested in northeastern Alberta for the benefit of all Canada.

What is the benefit of one plant? Let us deal with them one at a time, looking at Alsands first. Alsands will produce 137,000 to 140,000 barrels per day. It can start up production in 1988. It was to be 1987 but it has now been delayed one year. It will operate like a factory for a term of 25 years producing 140,000 barrels per day every day. The total capital investment will be $8 billion to $9 billion, creating 8,000 jobs during construction. Over 80 per cent of the material and equipment will be purchased in Canada. This will reduce oil imports and will improve the balance of payments by $40 billion over the life of the project. That figure is in 1980 dollars. The economic benefits to Canada as a whole have been estimated at $100 billion. That, too, is in 1980 dollars. The benefit to Alberta will amount to $66 billion. Ontario, as a centre of Canadian manufacturing, will benefit from secure oil supply and increased demand for equipment and materials, both during construction and operation. Of course, it will reduce unemployment.

What are some of the requirements? They are: major equipment; columns and vessels, $109 million; tanks, $31 million; exchangers, $73 million; fired heaters, $70 million; pumps and drivers, $44 million; compressors and drivers, $41 million; extraction equipment, $109 million; mining and material handling equipment, $496 million; boilers and steam turbines, $31 million; instruments, $67 million; piping, $233 million; structural steel, $52 million; insulation, $29 million; electrical, $173 million. The list goes on and on.

Who will benefit from the purchase of this equipment? Central Canada. It is the lifeblood of the manufacturing industry. It creates jobs.

Look at the Esso project at Cold Lake which commenced in 1963, 17 years ago, at a total construction cost of $9 billion. We hear consistently from our NDP friends: Let Petro-Canada do it. Questioned in the Standing Committee on Natural Resources, Petro-Canada indicated it would be ten years before they would be ready to proceed even with the first stages of a heavy oil or tar sands plant. The Esso project is the first of its kind anywhere in the world. It is a joint research project. The private venture capital of $8 billion, Mr. Speaker, is waiting to be invested to prove technology. On completion the plant will produce 140,000 barrels per day. It will contribute $2 billion plus a year to our balance of payments. Again, this project has a life of 25 years. The total crude to be produced is expected to be 1.3 billion barrels. In its peak construction period it will employ 10,000 people. The plant will employ 2,000 to 3,000 people when it is built. Indirectly, it will produce jobs for 6,500 people. It does not stop there. The Esso Cold Lake plant will cost $9 billion to construct. Related facilities will cost another $1 billion. The infrastructure will cost another $1 billion. The investment on a continuing basis will be $20 billion. Operating expenses over 25 years will be $60 billion. That represents a total expenditure of $90 billion with a normal multiplier of $250 billion to $300 billion in the economy of Canada.

• (2140)

The stupidity and vindictiveness of this government never ceases to amaze me. Our entire energy future is being jeopardized by confrontation politics, all because the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), with a preconceived idea, will not sit down and negotiate in good faith with the province of Alberta. Ted Byfield said in the Alberta report of November 7, 1980, that this was a calamitous year. The article took me back to last November and the time when the final touches were being put on an oil agreement between the then Conservative government of Canada and the government of the province of Alberta.

Had that agreement been allowed to stand, he said, consider what the situation would have been today. The Cold Lake and Alsands plants would have gone forward at full throttle, exploration would have been proceeding on the whole northern and eastern rim of this continent, the pipeline construction would have been under way as would the exploration of the further reaches of the deep basin which holds such promise. Mr. Byfield felt that oil rig operators would have been desperate for men. Investment capital reaching across the whole west would have been opening new jobs and new opportunities. Billions of dollars in equipment orders would have been streaming forth to central Canadian plants and our provinces would have been working hand in hand with the federal government toward a goal which everyone would have clearly understood, oil self-sufficiency by 1990. All that could have been.

I submit that the most important factor to be considered in Canada today is an insecure energy supply and, therefore, the necessity of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to meet with his counterpart in Alberta to hammer out an agreement. The government is jeopardizing the future of all Canada by failing to sit down and work out that agreement.

I would like to present a few points for the government to consider. Canada is a net importer of costly, insecure oil—about 350,000 barrels a day. These imports contribute to an adverse balance of payments. Conventional reserves are declining rapidly. Canada has reserves of hydrocarbons in the tar sands and heavy oil deposits to last for centuries. It is a known and reliable resource and the technology is available to develop it. There is some risk involved but the technology is there.

Current costs for a major tar sands project of 140,000 barrels a day would amount to about $8 billion or $9 billion. What is the problem? Why is the government not developing this vast resource? There is an absence of a dependable ongoing policy on pricing, royalties and taxation to give industry the confidence required to proceed with the development of the resource; I need only refer hon. members to the Suncor problem.

What does the future offer? The balance of payments position will worsen as imports are increased. Imports in 1978 cost Canada $1.8 billion. On the basis of a price estimate at $240 a barrel by the year 2000, we could still be importing 500,000 barrels of oil per day at a cost of $44 billion per year. That is staggering. The security of our supply situation is not likely to improve. We must develop an acceptable policy on pricing, royalties and taxation and a realistic, well-planned program for optimum utilization of all Canada's energy resources. Such a program would provide an opportunity to turn the economy around by reducing imports and even to begin exporting in the future.

In order to provide materials and services for these huge megaprojects, the government should develop programs to gear up all of Canada. It must recreate an atmosphere of co-operation rather than confrontation. The technology and equipment of the tar sands and heavy oil industry could be exported to other parts of the world. Oil companies do not want to get involved in politics, but rather, want all levels of government to provide a good business climate in which to operate.

To Canadianize the industry would require a long-term, realistic plan to cope with the ownership problem. It would require a reasonable rate of return higher than the accepted utility rate of return because the risk is greater. There are many advantages to such a program. There would be self-sufficiency and security of supply so we could all sleep at night. It would reduce our adverse balance of payments position and strengthen the Canadian dollar; it would improve the over-all economic situation of Canada. We could possibly find ourselves in a position to export oil if such steps were taken. These proposals would create many employment opportunities for our children and their grandchildren. No longer would they be leaving university, trade schools and colleges not knowing whether they will have a job or not; our economy will be healthy and able to absorb these graduates.

Mr. Speaker, we are on the verge of creating a technological expertise which, one day, will be needed all over the world. The technology we have gained in the heavy oil and tar sands industry is saleable to other countries. We could help to create a more unified Canada and believe me, Mr. Speaker, that is the main objective. Thank you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate tonight, in the few minutes that are left, to speak of the proclamation under the Petroleum Administration Act, which opposition members ask to be revoked because in their view the federal government should not unilaterally have set prices. I can understand that members of the Progressive Conservative Party should take that position but I have difficulty understanding why the New Democrats say that we should not have acted unilaterally when, after six months of fruitless discussions the two parties have been unable to reach an agreement. I find that strange coming from a party which has always said that the federal government should have greater control over the economy since, according to the basic philosophy of the CCF, that was the way to achieve socialism in Canada.

If it is opposed to the federal government's unilateral move in setting prices, the NDP should at least not try to make believe that it does so out of respect for Alberta's and B.C.'s position. It wants to play both sides at once and still be loyal and faithful to the position it took in the past and in recent years, since it would probably have imposed a much more rigid price than the one set by the present government.

Mr. Speaker, when we hear people say that the federal government has been too harsh on Alberta, we should consider a few facts. First, for about five years the federal government's share of oil revenues was about 10 per cent, whereas the producing provinces' share was a little more than 45 per cent and the industry's a little less than 45 per cent. In his budget of October 28, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) proposed some changes. Instead of being shared 45, 45, 10, revenues would be split 43 per cent for producing provinces, 33 per cent for industry and about 24 per cent for the federal government. In other words, the budget reduced by only 2 per cent the producing provinces' share, while increasing the federal government's share by 14 per cent to 24 per cent. It is therefore not Alberta, British Columbia or Saskatchewan which lose a great deal, but industry. The industry's share goes from 45 per cent down to 33 per cent. It is quite strange to see the NDP oppose such a change. On the other hand it is easy to understand that the Tories should be against it, as they have always claimed that it was bad for government, whether federal or provincial, to get too involved in the nation's business.

Let us consider whether the federal government's position is really ungenerous. During the coming four years, Alberta would receive $31 billion from the oil industry, Saskatchewan $3.2 billion and British Columbia $3.6 billion. Mr. Speaker, the situation is quite simple. We have to ask ourselves now whether our central government will be looking after the interests of all Canadians. Such is the question that has to be asked, because we know that energy is the most important asset for the future development of our society.

We will have to invest in Canada over $250 billion for energy purposes during the next ten years. This means that from now on our economy will be energy oriented. If we want a government that looks after the interests of all Canadians, how will such a government wield the necessary power if it has no money? How will a government which is supposed to look after the interests of all Canadians be able to do so, that is, conduct future energy development, protect the poor after steep price increases, give areas of the country deprived of natural gas and oil other forms of energy and bring together the productive regions of the country and those which do not have any.

But how can it be done unless the federal treasury has money in its coffers? I would like people and the Progressive Conservative Party to explain to me how they would have the federal government take care of Canadian interests without money. To hear them, they would like Alberta and the producing provinces to continue receiving an important share, as well as the others. For our part, we want to leave them 43 per cent. What is it they do not like? Is it the fact that the share of the industry will be reduced from 45 per cent to 33 per cent? Are they willing to allow the companies to develop and operate freely, as they see fit, simply by reaching agreements with the producing provinces?

Mr. Speaker, I doubt that it can be done. Later on in my speech which I shall bring to an end tomorrow, I shall explain why it is important, even outside the energy question, to protect the federal treasury. I had an analysis made of the difference between the expenditures of the federal government in the last five years and those incurred by the provincial governments. I also had one made of the percentage of the federal budget that is used to finance the debt compared to those of the provinces. And I shall demonstrate, later on in my speech, how close we are getting to having a federal government which, compared with its provincial counterparts, will be unable to look after the interests of all Canadians. Who will then take care of those interests? The ten provincial governments in a common effort? A community of communities? How amusing to remember how the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, who was prime minister for nine months, started in that office saying that we are a community of communities. But just before the last election, he had to admit in a speech given in Alberta that he understood why it is important to maintain a strong central government, which means that in the fields of energy and taxes, the federal government should have a greater share of the revenues.

So, that was sheer hypocrisy on the part of the Conservatives to change their minds today, now that they are in the opposition and want to make political hay out of the fact that some people out west are not happy with the government's energy policy and to say that the government is hogging it. Their leader realized, Mr. Speaker, when he was prime minister, even if it was for only nine months, that it is important to have a federal government with full coffers and not just debts. I see it is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I shall continue tomorrow.

• (2200)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ENERGY—REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF WESTERN ENERGY DEVELOPMENT FUND

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, on October 16 as recorded at page 3720 of Hansard I addressed specific questions to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) relating to speculation that the government's budget would contain reference to something called the western development fund and a natural gas export tax.

In fact, it was the leader of the government in the Senate who announced in mid-September that such a development fund would indeed be part of the budget, only to have that announcement denied by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a few days later. I felt at the time that my questions were pertinent. The second question which dealt with the natural gas export tax has also proven to be most pertinent. In fact, over 32,000 residents in British Columbia in the four-week period between the middle of September and the middle of October signed petitions opposing the implementation of any form of federal tax on the natural gas resources of British Columbia which would be exported from that province.

The reason I asked the two questions of these ministers was to determine the extent to which the Liberal party was prepared to honour its commitment made clearly and unequivocally to the people of British Columbia during the last election campaign. During that campaign they stated there would not be any form of natural gas tax levied on the export of natural gas; there was a suggestion, at least, that the federal government did not have its eyes on provincial resources for the purpose of raising federal revenues, a suggestion which has proven to be completely untrue. We have seen with the passage of the October 28 budget that both the natural gas export tax and the western development fund have come to pass. I suppose we ought to be grateful for the token western development fund which was thrown into the budget—I might say it was a $2 million slap in the face to British Columbians, because in the period during which that western development fund would return $2 billion in resource revenues to the western provinces, this same federal government will expropriate over $14 billion worth of revenue which it will raise by levying various forms of taxation against the production of those natural resources which, to this date, belong to the western provinces. If the western provinces have their way, these natural resources will belong to those provinces for a long time to come.

The budget includes a petroleum compensation charge, a natural gas tax and an 8 per cent federal tax on net revenues from the production of gas and oil as well as a Canadian ownership tax. This myriad of taxes so craftily and sneakily incorporated into the budget add up to a tax levy on the people of western Canada amounting to at least $14 billion between now and the end of 1984, in other words, over the next three fiscal years.

The thrust of my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was to determine whether he had any conscience about promising that the government would give back a pitiful $2 billion while craftily extracting $14 billion out of the pockets of western Canadian producers, provincial treasuries and indeed the consumers of western Canada, Ontario, and Quebec, all of whom will be hit hard by these unconscionable taxes which the federal government is imposing. The natural gas tax will have a significant impact on British Columbia where revenues totalled $320 million to the provincial treasury in the last fiscal year through the medium of the British Columbia Petroleum Corporation.

The federal government, under the proposals of the present budget, will expropriate or take $200 million of this revenue each year when we reach the schedule of 60 cents per thousand cubic feet levied, as well as the 8 per cent federal tax on natural gas. This amounts to $200 million per year taken out of British Columbia to contribute to this so-called concept of sharing, which I will come to in a moment. That $200 million will be distributed between all consumers of natural gas in British Columbia, not only industry but home owners who heat their homes with natural gas. Another $100 million will be taken from the producers, but ultimately from the treasury of British Columbia, in lieu of exports of natural gas from B.C. which will be subject to this tax. The consequence to the consumer is a $40 increase in the home heating bill this winter and a doubling of the surcharge next year. That will place an unfair and undue discriminatory burden upon the people of my province and those in western Canada generally.

• (2205)

I want to say a word about the concept of sharing. We in the western part of this country are sick and tired of the Liberal myth which suggests that somehow we are selfish. That is absolutely untrue. It is a political myth which the party opposite perpetuates most dishonestly. The western concept of sharing is that we want to share our resources, and sharing is an outward gesture which involves generosity and mutual consent. That is quite contrary to the Trudeau concept of sharing, which amounts to unilateral confiscation of western resources, the resources of the people of the provinces as granted to them under the British North America Act.

The federal government will not account for the net costs to some of the provinces of the confiscation of those resources. It is atrocious that government members can sit in their places and show no sense of conscience about this issue or the right of resource ownership to which all provinces have been entitled since the time they joined confederation.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's comments, I could spend a moment or two on the question of the application of various taxes he has cited. He seemed to think they had a regional impact of a grossly disproportionate character. If he wanted, for example, to take the case he cited of the natural gas tax, he would find that the major burden of that tax would fall on the people of Ontario. About 44 per cent of the revenue from the application of that tax will be raised in Ontario.

However, in the few moments I have available, I think it would be better to address ourselves to some more positive elements and to note that, along with a variety of other new energy expenditures and initiatives, the national energy program announced the establishment of the western development fund. This special ten-year, $4 billion fund has been set up to finance a series of economic development initiatives to be chosen jointly by both the federal government and the individual governments of the four western provinces.

The federal government will not make any unilateral decisions relative to the disposition of these funds. The western provinces will be genuine partners in any decision to be made on where and how allotted funds will be spent.

While I do not propose to make judgments on where this money will be spent, I would anticipate that much of this funding will be used for infrastructure improvements in the west, especially in transport, for industrial development and diversification, for agricultural programs and for water resource development which will be required for the tar sands and hydro projects.

The Government of Canada will also examine, as a matter of priority, how its trade policies could be strengthened or modified to encourage diversified growth of western Canada's economy.

The federal government is most interested in assisting western Canada in diversifying its economic base which has been traditionally dependent on non-renewable resources. The national energy program has outlined the government's desire not to see more oil-based petrochemical capacity in eastern Canada. This means that the concentration of future growth within this industry will take place in western Canada, notably in Alberta. The federal government promises to support fully this trend of western diversification.

● (2210)

The benefits to be derived from the western development fund are additional to the many other benefits which will result from other initiatives of the national energy program. The pricing regime, particularly as it is designed to encourage the development of the oil sands and the heavy oil areas, will lead to major opening up of these resources and, as a spin-off, the growth of many new supply and service industries. The new initiatives system for oil and gas exploration will lead to broadening the resource base and the industries that are allied to resource development activity. Such programs as financial support for a gas pipeline to Vancouver Island, the construction of a heavy oil upgrader in Saskatchewan and a number of conservation and renewable energy programs in Manitoba will all assist in the resource development and industrial diversification process.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I perhaps should not take up the time of hon. members, but it has been brought to my attention several times that the time limits for members are rigid in the extreme in the adjournment debate, so perhaps I will say now, because I see some hon. gentlemen here whom I see regularly, that the Chair is going to be forced to call time on hon. members when the time arrives, and there cannot be any relaxation of that because it detracts from other members as well.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—WINNIPEG—INQUIRY WHETHER PERMIT TO BUILD OVERPASS WILL BE AUTHORIZED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I am rising tonight to speak about the issuing of the CTC permit for the building of the Sherbrook-McGregor overpass, and I hope this is the last time I will have to bring this issue up in the House of Commons because there has been an undue delay over the last couple of years with regard to the issuing of this permit.

I received an assurance last week from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission that the permit will be issued to the city of Winnipeg to go ahead, finally, with the building of the Sherbrook-McGregor overpass, which should have been built in the first place. I will go into that in a little more detail in a moment.

I see the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael) here tonight. He is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, and I hope he will confirm that the permit will be issued this week.

Mr. Knowles: I hope he will not.

Mr. McKenzie: My main reason for raising this issue tonight is the cost overrun which the city of Winnipeg has had to suffer because of the ridiculous nonsense we have had to put up with over the last almost two years with regard to the issuing of this permit.

The original delay and stoppage of the permit was caused by the present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, who used his authority as a Liberal to have the permit withheld. He talked a former minister of transport, Mr. Otto Lang, into stopping the issuing of the permit to build the overpass, stating that there should be rail relocation. Nobody is opposed to rail relocation, but the first thing he should have done was check federal Liberal policy to find out whether there were funds available for rail relocation and whether there was a firm policy for going ahead with rail relocation. If he had checked that first, he would have found that the government had dropped its policy of funding rail relocation. He might then have stopped his pilgrimage to pursue this rail relocation issue in Winnipeg.

Instead of checking first, the Minister of Employment and Immigration had the permit stopped. This has caused the city of Winnipeg no end of problems, and there is a cost overrun of some $2.5 million.

I am on my feet tonight hoping that the hon. member for St. Boniface will let us know what he is going to do about getting this $2.5 million for the city of Winnipeg. As a former councillor the hon. member is well aware of the Sherbrook-McGregor overpass and all of the implications. He has an obligation to the city of Winnipeg to see that the city is reimbursed that $2.5 million, the cost of the overrun, because of the interference of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

February 20, 1979, was the date on which the Minister of Employment and Immigration called for a delay in the construction of the overpass, and this interruption has cost the city of Winnipeg about $2.5 million. That figure is based upon a cost of $7,000 per day for delays in the construction of the overpass.

• (2215)

I should like to go into some of the history in connection with this sham and the confusion caused by the unnecessary interference of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In June, 1980, the Minister of Transport authorized the construction of the Sherbrook-McGregor overpass which ended a 14-month delay and forced the cost to rise by $2 million to $20 million. Of course, as of today it is $2.5 million. Mayor Bill Norrie stated that he would begin the battle to get Ottawa to cover the increased costs, and I am continuing the battle here tonight. We will keep after the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport to do something about this issue. There is no use going after the Minister of Employment and Immigration; it would be an absolute waste of time.

The project was delayed by the federal government pending a study on the cost of rail relocation. On that basis Mayor Norrie said that he felt the city had a good case for increased federal aid. The city and the province of Manitoba did not ask for this rail study. If there were a firm commitment from the federal government in respect of rail relocation—they had about $1 billion in funds set aside because other cities would also want rail relocation—then the city and the province would have been required to come up with money for rail relocation and there would have been justification for it. Everybody except the Minister of Employment and Immigration knew that the federal government did not have the money or had no intention of putting up the money. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) made it perfectly clear that there were no funds for rail relocation. So the cost overruns are the direct responsibility of the present Liberal government.

I want a statement from the parliamentary secretary tonight confirming that the permit is being issued, and also, as a member of Parliament from Manitoba he should let us know what he will do about recovering this $2.5 million for the city of Winnipeg. This nonsense has gone on long enough. The parliamentary secretary made some statements in the past indicating that the minister will not provide the funding and that he will not do anything about it. That is not good enough for me or for the citizens of Winnipeg. The parliamentary secretary has an obligation to speak up and indicate what he intends to do about getting the $2.5 million for the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's original question on June 2 was sparked by the announcement that there would be a core area initiative for the city of Winnipeg. The initiative consisted of a five-year program under which federal funds would be provided to enable the city to respond to various social and economic problems in the downtown area.

At the time of the announcement, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) indicated that it was up to the city and the province to decide the course of action they wish to follow with respect to the Sherbrook-McGregor grade separation. He said that if the consensus was to build an overpass, he was prepared to approve funding for construction immediately under the Urban Transportation Assistance Program. Previously the province indicated that it was prepared to dedicate $7.6 million of its UTAP allotment for this purpose. The city and the province confirmed their desire for an overpass, and on June 16 the minister approved the $7.6 million UTAP contribution. I mention the date to emphasize how fast the federal response was once the final position of the city and the province had been received.

• (2220)

Normally, the Canadian Transport Commission would have issued a construction order shortly thereafter to allow construction to begin. However, Rossbrook House, a community organization which opposed the overpass, took various steps to attempt to block its construction. It applied to the CTC asking that the construction not be permitted on the basis that a safety hazard would exist. Rossbrook House also appealed to the Federal Court asking that the federal contribution be quashed on a technicality. The application to the CTC has just recently been denied. Though the court appeal has not yet been settled the CTC feels it cannot hold back the project because of this and intends to issue a construction order in a matter of days. I understand the city plans to start the actual work in the spring.

The delay in getting this needed project under way is regrettable but I am sure the hon. member will understand the reason I have just outlined. The overpass, along with the funds provided under the broader core area initiative, will go a long way toward improving conditions in downtown Winnipeg. As such, the federal initiative has been welcomed by both the city and the province.

I would like to add—

Adjournment Debate

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Churchill.

PUBLIC SERVICE—STATUS OF WOMEN—EQUAL PAY FOR WORK OF EQUAL VALUE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions in the last six months I have raised issues in this House questioning the Liberal government's commitment to achieving equality in the workplace. I am talking about equality for groups which have been disenfranchised or which have been receiving unequal treatment in the past—women's groups, native groups, the physically handicapped and others.

I have a number of reasons for believing that the government has no real commitment in this area. We have questioned them in the past on paid maternity leave. We have questioned them in the past on affirmative action programs. We have questioned them on whether or not they are really committed to equal pay for work of equal or comparable value. This is a problem which is not faced in the government sector alone; it is faced in all sectors of the Canadian economy. In all cases the Liberal government has been afraid to act. I think the reason for this fear is their own slow progress when it comes to affirmative action programs.

In 1972 there was a cabinet directive encouraging managers to hire women. Yet eight years later we find the women in the public service overlooked and underpaid. In a document prepared by the National Advisory Committee on the Status of Women it is pointed out that it will take 66 years at the present pace to achieve any equality. In other words, it will take until the year 2046 A.D. before we have equality in the public service, at the rate the government is proceeding at this time. In that document they pointed out that 60 per cent of women are still working as clerks and secretaries. They point out that in only three of 100 government departments and agencies are there any affirmative action programs at all. Most senior executive positions are still occupied by men and there has not been much change at the level of the younger executives. In the senior executive group, of 200 under 40 years of age only 16 are women. When we turn to the senior executives under the age of 35 we find only three out of 34 are women.

In all these areas we find that the pace has been very slow. The government has not acted. Instead, the government has reacted. It has not been initiating programs, instead it has been reacting to human rights cases brought against it. It has taken a long time to act even in those cases. First of all, the union applies to the Human Rights Commission. The Human Rights Commission invariably responds by saying that the government has acted wrongly. Then there is a slow follow-up by Treasury Board before it acts in this area. So people who have been suffering from unequal treatment by government for years and years find that it takes years and years more to get action by the government after that.

What our party has been saying is that instead of taking this passive approach the government should take a positive approach. This was suggested by my leader in a letter he wrote to the minister in June. He asked for an approach by which the government is committed into looking into each and every one of its departments and agencies to make sure action is taken affirmatively.

Last week I called for a comparative wage study, a co-operative wage study in which both union and management would sit down and draw up job descriptions to ensure that people in the public service are being paid for what they are doing, not on the basis of whether they are male or female. I am sure that whichever parliamentary secretary has been deemed the expert for tonight will talk about the great progress, the new initiatives and the recent actions of the government. I suspect that some parliamentary secretary said exactly the same thing, back in 1972, "We have written a directive encouraging management to act", and so on. But nothing has happened. I hope that the parliamentary secretary will not give the usual blasé answer tonight but will say instead that the government is committed to doing something on the matter. I will give him a chance now.

● (2225)

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I hope I do not disappoint the hon. member. The question he has raised this evening has attracted the close interest of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) as he is most concerned with the expeditious implementation of the Canadian Human Rights Act.

As hon. members may be aware, Mr. Speaker, section 11 of the act introduced a new concept, adopted by very few jurisdictions around the world, one without any appreciable jurisprudence elsewhere. Under the equal pay for work of equal value concept, in contrast to the normal provision of equal pay for the same or like work, jobs of quite different nature may be compared, using job evaluation techniques to determine whether they have the same intrinsic value. This is a new and untried approach to the elimination of pay discrimination.

Prior to the 1978 proclamation of the Canadian Human Rights Act, the Treasury Board submitted a brief on the equal pay concept to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. Subsequently, ongoing meetings have been held with officials of the commission in attempts to clarify the application of the new concept to the complex area of collective bargaining and compensation administration.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that over a year ago, in anticipation of the need, a universal job evaluation plan, the Aiken Plan, was adapted from the private sector for use in resolution of equal pay complaints. This plan has been accepted by the commission as being free of sex bias and is being used in current pay discrimination complaints.

To date, the Canadian Human Rights Commission has notified the employer of six complaints accepted for investigation. The first three were related to nurses in penitentiaries and have been settled on terms agreeable to the employer, the commission and the original complainants. The fourth case involved a director of nursing versus other directors in a hospital. This complaint was settled on November 17 of this year and is in the process of implementation.

With respect to the case from Churchill raised by the hon. member, that of the general services group, the secretary of the Treasury Board informed the Canadian Human Rights Commission on May 20 of the employer's agreement that a case of sex discrimination affecting pay, within the terms of the legislation, exists. The commission, Treasury Board Canada and the Public Service Alliance of Canada have held discussions on possible settlement alternatives, and a settlement proposal is in preparation. Officials of Treasury Board have been instructed to tackle the problems of applying the principle of equal pay for work of equal value to this group of employees as expeditiously as possible.

In addition to the foregoing and in order to allow the employer to take the initiative rather than merely responding to complaints, a study in depth has been authorized to commence in the new year with the object of identifying and removing pay discrimination in the public service.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 25, 1980

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ENERGY

COAL EXPORTS FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I move an urgent and pressing motion under Standing Order 43 with regard to a deal entered into between the Government of Canada and the Soviet Union to provide a low interest loan of $180 million so as to facilitate the production and expedition of Siberian coal to world markets. Having regard to the real difficulties experienced by coal producers and provincial governments in western Canada in putting in place the necessary infrastructure to enable coal from northeast British Columbia to compete with the coal from Siberia in world markets, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the government, through the Minister of Transport, immediately reopen negotiations with British Columbia offering no less than the same terms of financing negotiated with the Soviet Union to put in place the rail and port facilities which would facilitate the shipment of northeast coal to world markets.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

USE OF LOW-SULPHUR CANADIAN COAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. Whereas U.S. coals used in acid rain areas in Ontario contain 5 per cent or more sulphur content, and whereas Lethbridge coal and East Coulee coal contain only .05 per cent or less sulphur content, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House urge the Minister of the Environment to promote the use of low-sulphur Canadian coals in Ontario, which will reduce the acid rain problem and provide employment for Canadians.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

APPLICATION OF PROGRAM IN WINDSOR, ONT.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 concerning the application of the unemployment insurance program in the Windsor area. Considering that unemployment is currently running at 13.7 per cent of the work force, as recorded by Statistics Canada, yet the Department of Manpower and Immigration continues to use an unemployment figure of 11.3 per cent which results in a greater hardship on workers applying for unemployment insurance benefits, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House instruct the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Agriculture, all of whom represent the hard working people of Windsor, to take time from their other grandiose activities and remember their responsibilities to the people of the Windsor area, and to meet with their colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, to straighten out the administration of the unemployment insurance benefits in the Windsor area.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FINANCE

MEASURES TO STABILIZE INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move as follows. Whereas the economic slump occasioned by the ill-conceived Liberal budget of October 28 has driven the Canadian dollar below 84 cents U.S., accompanied yesterday by tailspin losses on stock markets across Canada in the wake of the prospects of yet even higher interest rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott):

That credible measures be taken to stabilize Canadian interest rates at a level consistent with sustained economic growth, rather than blindly following the Liberal policy of high and accelerating interest rates necessitated by the government's utter failure to combat inflation.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MEASURES TO IMPROVE PRODUCTIVITY AND INVESTMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43. Since October 28, 1980, the Canadian dollar has continued to slide, slide and slide, despite the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spent 12 days in his Middle East tour courting wealth and oil and whatever else in the Arab world. Yesterday the dollar closed at below 84 cents, the lowest level for a considerable time. The projections concerning inflation were based on the dollar being 86 cents during 1980, 87.5 cents during 1981 and 88 cents during 1982. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the government introduce new measures forthwith to improve productivity and the investment climate in Canada so as to restore confidence in our currency.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

HEALTH RESOURCES FUND

FUNDING OF MEDICAL AND VETERINARY COLLEGES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing necessity affecting the promotion and funding of educational institutions of national importance and significance. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That this House request the government to allocate additional revenues to the health resources fund so that federal contributions toward the funding of a school of optometry in Alberta and a college of veterinary medicine in the Atlantic region will be made in the near future.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENERGY

CALL FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF POLICY OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. This morning the Canadian Institute for Economic Policy—not exactly an NDP think tank—released a study called the "Energy Squeeze", which foresees an energy shortfall within the next 20 years. In Bruce Wilson's opening statement, he slams the national energy policy and says, first, that the program does not refute the myth that energy self-sufficiency can be achieved simply by raising prices; second, that as a consequence of such arbitrary price increases the level of foreign ownership in the Canadian economy will grow substantially—not go down; and third, that the program is highly inflationary, offering substantial price increases for domestic oil and gas production, thereby creating huge and unnecessary financial windfalls relative to today's known reserves, such windfalls to be paid by and for the Canadian consumer.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson):

That this government immediately implement the New Democratic Party energy policy by taking under public ownership Imperial Oil, Shell and Texaco; and secondly, that the federal government begin an industrial strategy or an industrial restructuring in this country that this report indicates is badly needed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

GRAIN

CALL FOR INCREASE IN INITIAL PAYMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Wheat Board is currently offering number one red spring wheat for sale at prices in excess of $7 and durum for $9 per bushel, and the initial payment to farmers is only $4.25 and $5 respectively. So far in the current crop year the Wheat Board has sold almost three-quarters of a million tonnes more than it has accepted in deliveries from farmers. The resulting reduction in inventory means that the Canadian Wheat Board is unfairly holding considerable moneys that belong to farmers. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone):

That the government immediately instruct the Canadian Wheat Board to increase the initial payments for spring wheat by $1.50 per bushel and for durum wheat by $2 per bushel.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

SUGGESTED MEANS TO RAISE FUNDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of great urgency to the New Democratic Party. In view of the fact that the provincial treasurer for the British Columbia NDP has complained that 19 of 28 federal NDP constituencies have not paid their bills for the last two elections to the party, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That the NDP member for Mission-Port Moody strike a committee to approach their Liberal bedmates with the view of obtaining some watered down corporate funds, or make a direct appeal to Tommy Douglas and the board of the multinational Husky Oil Company.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

LIBERAL PARTY OF CANADA

USE OF MAPLE LEAF LAPEL PINS IN FUNDING CAMPAIGN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): The Liberal Party of Canada is offering a "maple leaf pin" as, and I quote, "Our gift to you", to those who make a contribution of more than $30 to the Liberal bagmen, when in fact maple leaf pins are available to every Canadian free of charge through the Canadian unity office or the Secretary of State. I move, seconded by the member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That the government instruct its party headquarters to remove the reference to the maple leaf lapel pin forthwith from their funding campaign and thus prevent any stigma from being attached to patriotic Canadians who display this ancient emblem of Canada on their lapels and do not wish to be considered as donors to Liberal party coffers.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AID

ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS OF ITALIAN EARTHQUAKE

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday this House unanimously urged the minister to consult with the Italian government in order to consider ways in which we might provide special and immediate help to the victims of the devastating earthquake in the Naples-Salerno area of southern Italy. Can the minister tell us whether he has consulted with the Italian government and whether in fact there is some plan to bring forward an aid program greater than the one described yesterday to the hon. member for Saint-Denis.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is unavoidably absent for the time being, but he should be in the House in a few moments. I am sure that if the hon. member waits until he comes before putting his question, he will obtain an answer.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Who is the acting minister?

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has now arrived. Perhaps I could now ask my question directly of him; he is a little better than the parliamentary secretary on these matters, I am sure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Not much.

Mr. Bosley: Perhaps I could repeat the question for the minister, Madam Speaker. Yesterday, as the minister well knows, this House passed unanimously a motion requesting the government to consider special and pressing assistance for the victims of the Naples-Salerno earthquake. Can the minister tell this House whether he has had a conversation with representatives of the Italian government? If so, is he prepared to tell us what aid he is planning over and above the commitment he made yesterday to the hon. member for Saint-Denis?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I spoke twice this morning with the Italian ambassador. In between times he communicated with his government in Rome. I have also communicated with the Italian-Canadian committee, which is about to raise funds to assist the earthquake victims in Italy. I believe the sum of $100,000, which I announced yesterday, has already been transmitted by the Canadian Red Cross to the Italian Red Cross. I gave the Italian-Canadian committee the assurance that we would also be making a further contribution to that committee when the full extent of the need was known.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, the minister will know full well that the motion yesterday outlined a number of other matters that might be regarded by him as appropriate. I appreciate that the question period is a difficult time to explain all these things in detail. However, could we have a commitment from the minister that he will make a statement on motions outlining the total plan of relief which is proposed, preferably today but, if not, tomorrow, specifically with regard to the other matters raised in the motion?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, I will certainly give a commitment to the House that in one form or another I will make the plan public. However, I suspect that tomorrow will be too soon. Unfortunately, the Italians are still discovering new dimensions to this great catastrophe and the dreadful death toll is still mounting. It will be some days before the full extent of the tragedy is known and the kind of assistance that we might give can appropriately be decided.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, I wish to refer specifically to one matter raised in the motion. I think we all know that as the tragedy unfolds the numbers coming in climb higher and higher each day. I appreciate the minister's dilemma on that. However, last year as the government we gave consideration to and introduced a program of airlifts to the earthquake victims in the Azores. A community in Canada was trying to help them and regarded the airlift program as particularly useful in making sure that the necessary aid got there. Yesterday the minister said that he would prefer not to use such a program. Can we have from him a statement today that he will reconsider his commitment yesterday to help only with cash? As well, can he give some undertaking that the airlift program which was used last year will also be used in this program?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, it may be that there will be the need for an airlift program if certain medical supplies or eventually building supplies have to be sent to Italy from Canada.

● (1420)

I might reiterate the point I made yesterday—and I might say that the Italian government feels this very strongly as well—that it will not be very useful, especially in the early days, if people in Canada start collecting goods to send to Italy. What they need is money. That is the view of the Italian government as well as of this government.

CONSULTATIONS WITH ITALIAN-CANADIAN GROUPS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister will know of large gatherings of Italian-Canadians in Toronto and Hamilton last night and the very real emotion expressed in those cities which will be reflected in Italian-Canadian communities across the country. The minister said he had been in touch with the Italian-Canadian committee. Is the government planning to be in touch with other organizations such as the Italian congress? Did the government have a representative at either of the meetings in Hamilton or Toronto last night? In any event, since the motion stipulates that the government consult with the many Canadians who are able and willing to render assistance, how will the minister consult with the many concerned people in this country in the days ahead?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is always a difficult question to know how to consult a body of citizens in our country which has a number of different representative organizations. The broadest organization that we are aware of at the moment is the one that Dr. Leone has been speaking for in Toronto and Senator Rizzuto is connected with. Initially, at least, our contacts have been with that group. I will be consulting my colleague, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, with whom I have the closest of relations, as to what other groups would be appropriate to consult with.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): The minister will know there have been concerns in some cases in the past where money has not reached the people in the proper way. What assurances can the Secretary of State for External Affairs give those Canadians who wish to respond in an urgent and generous manner that their donations will get to where they are intended and where we all would wish.

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, we will certainly do our best to see that that will happen. I am told that although suspicions were raised with respect to the previous catastrophe in Italy, the considered judgment now is that all the money was well dispensed. Certainly we will do our best to keep a close eye on that.

* * *

NORTH-SOUTH RELATIONS

REMARKS OF PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING RESTRUCTURING OF ECONOMIC INSTITUTIONS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): My question is for the Prime Minister. Welcome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: In light of the Prime Minister's sudden interest in addressing North-South issues and in light of his remarks in Paris yesterday that he would like to see a change in emphasis from traditional development assistance to a restructuring of international economic and other institutions, will he tell the House whether his government is now planning to give detailed attention to tariffs, industrial conversion, International Monetary Fund rules and other national and international economic restructuring measures?

An hon. Member: Dance around that one, Pierre.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am afraid I do not have an answer to that one, Pierre. I have been discussing this subject for a few years now, notwithstanding what the hon. lady says. I refer to a speech I made at Mansion House when I became a freeman of the city of London some three or four years ago.

● (1425)

This is not a new idea and I am not the originator of it. I think it is a matter for all of us to understand that the debate between the North and South is more a question of power sharing than the solving of any particular problem, either by way of aid or changes in tariff structures such as the hon. lady refers to. Tariffs and quotas are something, of course, that have been discussed at the summits which I have attended. They have been the object of decisions by this government and other governments and are constantly under review with the intention of keeping in balance the need to adjust our economies and prevent too great rises of unemployment at a given time, at the same time respecting the Third World countries' desire to gain increasing markets in the developed world.

These are not matters I can discuss in an answer during question period but I would be happy to participate in any debate that the opposition parties would want to have on perhaps one of the opposition days.

Miss Jewett: The Prime Minister says this is not a matter for the question period, yet it was a matter for a press conference in Paris where he explicitly stated that he would like to see a de-emphasis on development assistance and a greater emphasis on restructuring economic institutions. Therefore, I would like to know what the government is definitely planning to do, since that was a clear question at the press conference. In that connection, could I ask the Prime Minister whether or not he is aware the Secretary of State for External Affairs said publicly last week that he had told cabinet that "unless we increase official development aid we will be under increased pressure to move on other points" to redress the North-South situation?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member said that it was the subject of a press conference. It was a question which was asked of me and which I attempted to answer in good faith, as I am attempting to answer her questions. I did not plan then and do not plan today to review in detail the many measures that this government is preparing for. We hope to make a presentation at the summit in Ottawa next July. My aim at this stage is not to convince the hon. lady that we are doing well; it is to try to ensure that the seven participants of that summit in July will be able to make some progress, particularly in this year of economic difficulties for all countries. I am attempting to study a range of measures with the participants so that we can reach agreement on some of them.

In so far as the quote of the Secretary of State for External Affairs is concerned, I see nothing objectionable to that. We have stated through his mouth and through the voice of the Minister of Finance that we want to have increased developmental assistance. That does not mean that in other areas we cannot make progress, but it does mean that we must act on both fronts at the same time.

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING INCREASED DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, perhaps I could ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he did in fact tell a group last week, as I am informed he did, that he had recommended to cabinet explicitly that if they did not in fact increase development assistance, ODA, they would be obliged to move on many of these other fronts, economic and institutional restructuring, to address the North-South issue.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I made no public statements at all on that subject. What the hon. member is suggesting seems to resemble a comment in private which is taken out of context.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

INQUIRY RESPECTING MEASURES TO STIMULATE ACTIVITY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for Sheik Yamani's dancing partner, the "Astaire of Arabia", the Prime Minister. While the Prime Minister was away dealing with world problems, the cost of living figures in Canada rose 10.9 per cent year over year. Interest rates have increased in the Bank of Canada and the prime rates of the banks increased to 13¾ per cent. The Canadian dollar is down to its lowest point since February, 1979. In Ontario they had to bring in a mini-budget to compensate for the lack of economic stimulus in the federal budget. Imperial Oil cancelled their $8 billion Cold Lake heavy oil project.

My question to the Prime Minister is this. When he came back from the Bonn summit, he introduced a new program of government expenditure reduction to deal with these similar economic problems. Now that he is back from the Saudi summit, what does he propose to do about these extremely severe economic and financial problems that we are suffering from in this country, and when will he make an announcement about these?

• (1430)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Madam Speaker, the government was aware of the figures provided by the hon. member with respect to the unemployment rate as well as other economic indicators when it prepared the budget. The Minister of Finance has laid down in his budget a scenario for the economic recovery of Canada. He has taken responsible tax measures that avoid the pitfall of trying to come out too hastily from a recession and, at the same time, avoid fleecing the most deprived in our society in an attempt to control inflation. The budget is laying down the scenario for an economic recovery and we will see its results in the very near future.

[English]

LIVING STANDARDS OF CANADIANS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Prime Minister, if he can get his head out of the sand. While he has been away, 36 acting prime ministers have been answering. Now that the Prime Minister is back the Canadian people expect some answers from him. They would sooner have him waltzing with Premier Lougheed than doing the moozmaad with Sheik Yamani.

While the Prime Minister was away, the Minister of Finance said that Canadians will have to accept a lower standard of living to adjust to higher energy prices. As a matter of fact, personal disposable income has dropped severely this year in real terms. Does the Prime Minister support the view of the Minister of Finance that Canadians now have to accept a lower standard of living and adjust to these higher energy prices, or does he disagree? If he agrees with the Minister of Finance, what action is he going to take so that Canadians do not have to accept a lower standard of living? When is he going to worry about the standard of living of Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member. It takes a moment to adjust to his vulgarity after having been associated with—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I have not seen the statement attributed to the Minister of Finance. It is certain that with the very rapid rise in prices of imported petroleum there has been a transfer of real wealth from the industrialized societies to the OPEC countries. This has resulted in Canada and every other oil-importing nation having a slower growth of real income. There are some years in which certain sectors of society have even seen a standstill and a slight recession, but by and large the hon. member knows that real wealth is still growing in Canada in average terms for Canadians, and it will continue, except that I think Canadians must accept that it cannot continue to grow as rapidly as it did before the OPEC nations caused this very large and rapid increase in oil prices.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, it may be vulgar to ask the Prime Minister questions about these annoying economic problems in Canada, but the Canadian people do not think it is vulgar. They want some answers.

I bring to the attention of the Prime Minister that in the battle to overcome regional disparity there has just been a report from the Economic Council of Canada that in Newfoundland, after all these years of attempts by the Prime Minister and others to overcome regional disparity, unemployment insurance is one-twelfth of the total personal income of the people of Newfoundland compared with one-fortieth in Canada. We have 53.6 per cent of the Canadian average earned income. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether there will be new initiatives to overcome these disparate figures relating to regional disadvantages in this country and renewed efforts or some new program to try to overcome domestic problems?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am not in a position today to announce any new programs. The hon. member knows that the programs we put in place beginning in the late sixties with the creation of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion have been successful in reversing the outflow of citizens from the Atlantic region to the rest of Canada. That trend has been arrested and reversed, and we are all grateful for that. That does not mean that there are still not wide disparities in the income of Canadians, depending on the part of Canada where they happen to live and based essentially on the wealth of the resources of the particular provinces.

The hon. member is witness to the efforts of this government to redistribute this wealth through our equalization payments, which are very substantial in the case of Newfoundland and, as the hon. member also knows, to ensure that the high cost of the cartel prices imposed by OPEC do not hit Newfoundland and other provinces with the same harshness as his own budget would have seen them hit.

REPORTED LOSS OF BUYING POWER OF CANADIANS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister as well. He has just replied to my colleague that the real wealth in the country is continuing to increase. The Prime Minister may not be aware that, while he was in Saudi Arabia being lavishly entertained, Wood Gundy brought out a report on the Canadian economy pointing out that the average worker has lost 4.9 per cent in real earnings in the last three years. In total that is a loss of about $10 per week in buying power. Is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that the average worker in this country is now $10 per week in buying power behind where he was three years ago and, if he is so aware, would he indicate what he intends to do to live up to the promises he made in the last campaign to provide jobs, spur growth and fight inflation in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman has asked me if I am aware of this particular document. I am not. Of course, in my answer I was careful to talk about the average growth in Canada. I pointed out that there were certain sectors of society which did grow faster than others but, as a counterpoint, the hon. member himself will recall that in the first two-thirds of the last decade the return to working Canadians was in excess of the return to other classes such as farmers and, I believe, corporate profits; so there was over the decade a changing of positions by the various groups.

I realize that in the last two or three years there has been a falling behind of the wages and salaries category, but I repeat that they had taken a substantial advance in the earlier part of the decade. It is the policy of this government to continue to fight inflation, as it was the policy of the hon. member's own government, by trying to keep all sectors of the economy within the bounds of reasonable demands upon the wealth of Canada.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has acknowledged to the House that there has been a real falling behind as far as average real income for the workers of Canada is concerned over the last three years. Is the Prime Minister content now to see this falling behind continue, as apparently his Minister of Finance is content, for the next year or so, or may we expect some action to live up to the Prime Minister's promise that he would spur the economy and somehow relieve Canadians from this dreadful situation of having their total net income become less and less year by year under the emperor's rule?

Mr. Nielsen: He is going to wrestle inflation to the ground.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am not quite sure what the emperor's rule has to do with this. It is the rule of economics which applies in this particular case. I remind the hon. member that the economic situation and current statistics are better than those predicted by his seatmate in his own budget. Therefore, our Minister of Finance is carrying out at least a part of his promise and performing better than the prediction of the hon. member's own seatmate.

* * *

FISHERIES

EFFECT OF TANKER TRAFFIC ON WEST COAST FISHERY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. A recent publication put out by Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company called "Energy for the Future" states that its proposal for an oil port on the Pacific coast has attracted the support of Environment Canada and Fisheries Canada. The publication of the company explains the department's lack of action to protect the west coast fishery from the threat which tanker traffic poses. In light of past claims by the minister that increased tanker traffic will adversely affect the fishery, can the minister explain to the House how it is possible for his department to support Trans Mountain at the expense of the west coast fishery?

• (1440)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, not having seen the article to which the hon. member referred, I can tell him that it has not attracted my support in relation to the quote he has given.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, the quotation on page 9 indicates that Trans Mountain's proposal has attracted support from agencies such as Environment Canada, Fisheries Canada and the United States environmental protection agency.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Manly: Is the minister willing to demand a retraction of that statement? Will he prepare a comprehensive submission to the National Energy Board hearings in Victoria on the threat which tanker traffic poses to west coast fisheries?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, the position of my department in relation to tanker traffic was very clearly made known when we in fact brought into being the Thompson inquiry which terminated when the Kitimat application was withdrawn. The hon. member knows very well that we were opposed to the Kitimat pipeline and that in fact it became a decision of the government in which the Hon. Len Marchand served as minister of the environment.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ELECTRONIC VOTING SYSTEM—CALL FOR DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council who is the government House leader. Last week under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I moved a motion which seemed to win at least majority support in the House, if not unanimous consent. It asked that some thought be given to changing the voting procedure in the House so that we might use some electronic device as is used in other chambers, particularly in the United Nations. Would the House leader consider discussing this matter with the Speaker of the House and with the leaders of the other parties to determine whether that procedure might be adopted, if not in all votes certainly in some of them?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I always look favourably upon any suggestion to modernize this institution. However, since this entails a fairly substantial expenditure, I think it would be wise to discuss the matter. As for me, I would suggest that, together with the Internal Economy Commission, you ask for a study in order to determine the cost of such a system, and if it appears reasonable, I think that such a procedure would indeed modernize this institution and improve its efficiency. However, I am sure that beforehand we would like to talk it over with our colleagues opposite.

[English]

REFERENCE OF PROCEDURAL CHANGES TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question which is directed to the government House leader. Could he assure the House, with respect to any changes in the procedures of the House, that there will not be action only by the Commissioners of Internal Economy who represent the government, but that any matter will be put before the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization which is representative of all parties in the House of Commons? After all, it is more than the government that has a stake in the operation of this House.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, while my colleague was shouting "supplementary", I was stating my intention of consulting my colleagues opposite. Perhaps he did not hear my last sentence. For the purpose of this consultation, we might use the forum provided by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. That is indeed a positive suggestion which I will consider seriously.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

IMPORTATION OF OIL FROM SAUDI ARABIA—PRICE, QUALITY AND VOLUME

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. While the Prime Minister was in Saudi Arabia, he had some preliminary negotiations on the possibility of an oil contract for 100,000 barrels per day. Since the Mexican oil deal commenced we have been exposed to a number of problems, one of which is that we have no control over the quality of oil which is delivered. It is heavy oil, it is high in sulphur content, and it is very costly to refine. Also, as I understand it, we have no control over the price, volume or timing of deliveries; these are not tied down in the contract. Will these matters be tied down very tightly in any contract negotiated with the Saudis so that we are not exposed to the problems of pricing, quality and volumes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I want to inform the hon. member that there were no negotiations on that subject in Saudi Arabia while I was there. It was a very simple matter of the minister responsible for petroleum in Saudi Arabia offering to sell to Canada some given quantity or variable quantity of oil on terms which would be negotiated if we were interested. I merely told him that it was a very kind offer, that I would report to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and particularly to the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, and that they would establish contact on the kinds of conditions about which the hon. member has asked. At that stage it was an informal offer by a minister. The government itself made no approach to us, nor have we made an approach.

Discussions are now going on within the department of energy to see if we can usefully make a contract on this offer of petroleum. If so, we will make a formal request and the negotiations would begin through the good offices of Petro-Canada.

IMPORTATION OF OIL FROM MEXICO—INQUIRY WHETHER CANADIAN OIL DISPLACED

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I wonder whether he could comment on the general thrust of my question. Will these factors be tied down and, more specifically, would he assure the House that with the Mexican contract we are not purchasing oil for delivery in Montreal which is displacing the oil produced in western Canada and sold in the United States market? Is the western Canadian oil which has been produced being displaced by the Mexican oil? If so, is it being sold in the U.S. market, or is it being left in the ground?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am advised that western heavy oil has not been displaced by the importation of Mexican oil.

INQUIRY RESPECTING TOTAL IMPORTATION OF OIL FROM SAUDI ARABIA

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It relates also to the discussion with, or the offer of, the Saudis to supply 100,000 barrels per day of their crude oil. My question is prompted by confusing press reports. Was the offer of 100,000 barrels per day in addition to the existing purchases of roughly 200,000 barrels per day from that country?

Would the Prime Minister also take the opportunity to confirm, if the offer was for an additional supply, that it will increase our reliance upon that country from the present 50 per cent of all foreign purchases to roughly 60 per cent? In other words, we would be dependent upon the Saudis for roughly 60 per cent of our offshore purchases.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must ask the indulgence of the House to place this matter in context. I did not go to Saudi Arabia with the intention of negotiating, or even with the authorization to negotiate, a heavy oil deal. I believe what happened is that the Saudi government, wanting to make a gesture of friendship toward Canada, simply made the suggestion through its petroleum minister at one point toward the end of my visit. He said, "If you people are interested in state to state deals, we would be prepared to consider up to 100,000 barrels a day".

Mr. Jarvis: In addition?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot say if it is in addition. I asked the minister whether this would necessarily displace imports coming from other sources, namely, the multinationals, or whether this would be in addition. He indicated a very relaxed attitude on this, and I had the impression that if we wanted to have the oil in addition, we could. But I am not absolutely certain that the minister of energy would want to proceed in this way. That is why I merely took note of the offer, thanked the minister and said that we would be in touch if, indeed, we wanted to embark upon a state to state deal with Saudi Arabia.

• (1450)

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Speaker, I understand it in that context and I understand the Prime Minister's expression of gratitude to Saudi Arabia, and I think he went on to say particularly because our country regards Saudi Arabia as a secure source of supply. Setting aside the chronic danger of that region of the Middle East, given its history of being politically unstable, and setting aside the fact that one act of terrorism or sabotage in the straits leading to the Persian Gulf could result in a severe interruption of oil supply, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if, in fact, it is his and his government's view that Saudi Arabia is a secure source of supply? I hope I have not misquoted the Prime Minister, but I particularly ask him that in light of the fact that a change in the current regime, or even a realignment within the Royal Family, as he knows, could result in substantial changes in oil policy, and also given the fact that an eruption of tensions between Iraq and Saudi Arabia, which hopefully will not occur, could result in extremely serious supply interruption from Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Doomsday scenario spelt out by the hon. member would apply whether they sell us 100,000 barrels of oil—

Mr. Jarvis: It is not a Doomsday scenario for the maritimes and Quebec.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, would the hon. member let me answer his question?

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The scenario spelt out by the hon. member—

Mr. Jarvis: It is not Doomsday—

Mr. Trudeau: Would you let me answer, please?

Mr. Jarvis: It is very unfair of you to say that; it was a fair question.

Mr. Trudeau: The scenario spelt out by the hon. member having to do with possible supply interruptions and disruptions, and so on, is irrespective of whether or not we buy an extra 100,000 barrels a day. We are, as the hon. member pointed out in his first question, highly dependent on Saudi oil now, and if that supply is going to be interrupted we will, indeed, be short of oil. Whether we are short that extra 100,000 barrels or not seems to me to be a very secondary question. If there is an interruption of supply from Saudi Arabia we will, indeed, be in a difficult situation in Canada. But I cannot see how the hon. member could argue that therefore we should not, if it is advantageous to Canada, seek to obtain more.

Mr. Waddell: When are you going to go to Edmonton?

Mr. Trudeau: It is something that may or may not take place—

Mr. Waddell: Secure our real supply.

Mr. Trudeau: I hear the NDP wanting to get into the act, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Waddell: When are you going to go to Edmonton?

Mr. Trudeau: I apologize to hon. members but I must absent myself from the House for reasons which are known to their House leader. I apologize that I cannot take any supplementary questions at this time, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Jarvis: One final supplementary, Madam Speaker.

* * *

MULTICULTURALISM

REDUCTION IN FUNDING OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. In 1974 this government spent $10 million on its multiculturalism program while the 1980-81 estimates call for $9.4 million. In view of the minister's complaint that there has never been sufficient political commitment to building a multicultural society, and considering the minister's promise to get the whole government working toward a multicultural society, how does the minister reconcile this low level of funding with his statements?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State, Multiculturalism): Madam Speaker, I am sorry, I cannot confirm the figures for 1974. I do know that for the last fiscal year under the previous government the amount was somewhere in the range of $9.4 million and that the cabinet has approved a $1.7 million increase, despite serious restraints, recognizing the need to priorize more money to assist visible minorities in racial tension situations, to assist the settlement of boat people and to assist in several other critical areas. Indeed, an 18 per cent increase during times of restraint suggests to me some considerable recognition by the national government.

Mr. Lewycky: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. In 1971 the Prime Minister announced for Canada a policy of multiculturalism within a bilingual framework and called for a vigorous policy of multiculturalism. Since 1981 will be the tenth anniversary of the inception of the government's multiculturalism program, will the government be announcing any special initiatives or programs in pursuit of this "vigorous" policy?

Mr. Fleming: Madam Speaker, I am not prepared at this time to answer the question. I do not think the question period is—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Fleming: I am getting vigorous interjections from the NDP; I cannot really respond over them.

Mr. Waddell: Just answer the question.

An hon. Member: It's a wild goose chase.

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member from Vancouver, the loud member, is their critic on energy. I do not mean this in any pious way, but I keep hearing from people that members of this House do not seem to act in a very respectful way toward each other in their exchanges. I am trying to answer a question, but how can I do that if I keep getting interjections? I think the question was: Do we have plans for the tenth anniversary? Yes, we do, and they will be announced in due course.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CALL FOR REPLACEMENT OF CO-CHAIRMAN

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and also in the absence of the minister responsible for the status of women, I would like to direct my question to the government House leader. The House leader will know that Canadian women were revolted and insulted by the grossly chauvinistic remarks made by the co-chairman of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution several days ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McLean: Madam Speaker, in the wake of this horribly insensitive display on the part of Senator Hays during testimony given by the National Action Committee, demands have been made from across Canada that the co-chairman be replaced. Will the House leader act at once to see that the co-chairman is replaced?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, we indicated very clearly last week that we intended to abide by the rules of this House. There is one which is quite clear, namely, that in no way may we interfere with the committee's proceedings or comment on them.

In his preamble, the hon. member refers to discussions or statements made during sittings of the joint committee on the constitution, and it would be unparliamentary for me at this stage to comment in any way. As I just said, it is not my intention to disregard the rules.

Now, as far as Senator Hays' qualifications are concerned, I think that they are well known and that he deserves the support of all members of this House and of the Canadian people.

[English]

Mr. McLean: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the House leader. In light of his comments, will the House leader draw the transcript of the offensive remarks to the attention of the Prime Minister, since these—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think this question would be handled more appropriately in the committee. The hon. member should know that reference to proceedings in committee should not be made in the House. Therefore, I cannot allow that question.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATION OF QUEBEC AT CONFERENCE IN DAKAR

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to ask him whether he can give the House a progress report on the negotiations with the Quebec government on the Francophone countries summit to be held in Dakar. Can the minister tell us today whether or not he has found a satisfactory formula to include representations of the Quebec government in the federal delegation?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we have indicated to the Quebec government a formula for including Quebec government officials in the Canadian delegation. It is not exactly a matter of negotiation, but rather an offer which I feel is very generous.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. I am not convinced of his generosity. I should still like to ask him, seeing a compromise had already been found that seemed to be very acceptable in the case of the agency for cultural and technical co-operation in Francophone countries, whether he would consider that same formula for the coming summit in Dakar, since it did seem at the time to be acceptable to both the federal government and the government of Quebec which province, according to the Pepin-Robarts report, is the home of the French Canadian nation.

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, no comparison can be drawn between the two because the agency is strictly cultural and technical, while in this case we are dealing with the conference of external affairs ministers who will be planning a meeting of the prime ministers of independent states. The agenda of the conference will deal with the external or foreign affairs of the countries involved. So there is no reason for the Quebec minister to attend. I might also add that the Government of Canada is best qualified to represent the interests of the French Canadians.

* * *

● (1500)

[English]

INDUSTRY

DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT—INQUIRY RESPECTING SITE OF NEW MANUFACTURING FACILITY

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister advise the House as to the status of the discussions with de Havilland Aircraft regarding the site of the new manufacturing facility for the Dash-8 airplane, where Hamilton fits into the scheme and when the decision will be announced?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the company is considering a number of sites. I do not think that a decision will be too far-off, but it is certainly several weeks away.

* * *

AIRPORTS

MOUNT HOPE, HAMILTON—STATUS OF PROPOSED EXPANSION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport. Since any new manufacturing facility for the Dash-8 will, of necessity, have to be at an airport, could the minister advise the House as to the status of the expansion project at Hamilton airport? Are the plans flexible enough to accommodate the new Dash-8 facility should the decision be to locate it in Hamilton?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my particular interest in the airport at Hamilton is well known, both by hon. members and others. I inquire almost every week as to the progress of the Hamilton airport, and I am told that it is going forward at a good pace. I will be glad to provide a report on its status to my hon. friend in the next hours.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS AND STANDING ORDERS

SECOND, THIRD AND FOURTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Second, third and fourth reports of Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders—Mr. Gauthier.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,224, 1,523, 1,605, 1,617, 1,626 and 1,627.

[Text]

CBC—MOVIE PRODUCED IN HUNGARY

Question No. 1,224—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did CBC produce a movie in Hungary, as a joint effort, with the state-controlled Hungarian television and, if so, what amount of Canadian taxpayers' funds were invested by CBC?

2. Is the government aware that a well-known Canadian journalist who saw the film has stated that the film "had been used by the Hungarian government as propaganda against the west" and, if so (a) for what reason did CBC participate (b) what is the name and job designation of the highest official that authorized CBC's participation and for what reason?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Department of the Secretary of State: 1. To be answered elsewhere.

2. Yes the government is aware of Barbara Amiel's comments on the Canadian-Hungarian co-production of the film "His Mother".

(a) As a part of its program strategy the CBC participates in co-productions with other broadcast firms in Canada and abroad.

(b) See second part of reply to No. 1 below.

Order Paper Questions

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation:

1. Yes. CBC and Magyar televizio jointly produced "His Mother" in 1975.

The costs of program projects are among those areas of internal management and administration which the CBC has not, as a matter of custom, been required to provide. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

2. To be answered elsewhere.

MISS GEORGETTE DURAND

Question No. 1,523—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is or was Miss Georgette Durand employed by the Department of National Defence and, if so, in what capacity and at what rank and salary?

2. (a) Did Miss Durand take a trip to Brussels, Belgium and, if so, was the cost $2,362.01 for two weeks and, if not, what was the cost (b) what did Miss Durand do in Brussels and did she represent Canada in any capacity at NATO meetings and, if so, what qualifications does she possess for such a job?

3. Was Miss Durand accompanied to Brussels by Lt. Col. F.M.J. Bourassa, Mr. Roger Brazeau of the Department of National Defence and Mr. Marcel Dufournaud and, if so (a) with which department and in what capacity is Mr. Dufournaud employed (b) what did these gentlemen do in Brussels, for how long were they there and what was the total cost involved?

4. Is Miss Durand familiar with military terminology and, if not, in what way was she able to perform any functions in Brussels?

5. Is there a "blacklist" maintained by the Department of National Defence for any employees complaining about this matter or any other similar matter?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Miss Durand is employed by the Department of National Defence in the directorate of translation and terminology co-ordination as a CR4 $12,933-14,141.

2. (a) Yes. $2,166.27.

(b) Miss Durand did not represent Canada at NATO; however, she provided specialized clerical assistance to the Canadian delegation. She had assisted two officers in the preparation of the material for the English, French and combined NATO annual terminology conferences and when both officers were unable to attend the conference it became essential for Miss Durand to accompany the delegation.

3. Yes.

(a) Mr. Dufournaud of the Secretary of State translation bureau is employed at DND in the military and technical terminology section.

(b) They were the Canadian delegation at the NATO terminology conference. The duration of the trip including travel took 18 days. The total cost was $6,399.79.

4. Yes.

5. No.

PARKS CANADA—RENOVATION OF THE JONES RESIDENCE—JONES FALLS

Question No. 1,605—Mr. Cossitt:

Is Parks Canada renovating the original Jones residence, after whom Jones Falls was named, in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville and, if so (a) at what cost (b) who is doing the renovations (c) were public tenders called and (i) if so, what is a list of all those who tendered including the amount in each case (ii) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): 1. No; (a) Not applicable; (b) Not applicable; (c) Not applicable; (i) Not applicable; (ii) Not applicable.

PRINCESS PATRICIA'S LIGHT INFANTRY—SILVERWARE ON LOAN TO ADMIRAL FALLS

Question No. 1,617—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,368 which stated in part, that silverware belonging to the Princess Patricia's Light Infantry is on loan for the use of Admiral Falls at his Brussel's residence, what is a full description of the silverware and what is the current estimated market value?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): The silverware is the private property of the regiment, was acquired with non-public funds, and its loan is a private arrangement between the regiment and Admiral Falls.

ADMIRAL FALLS—PURCHASES IN THE UNITED STATES

Question No. 1,626—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,205 which states in part, that a washer/dryer, refrigerator and electric range were purchased in the United States with taxpayers money for the residence of Admiral Robert Falls in Brussels, Belgium, what are all the reasons that the items were not purchased in Canada in accordance with the government's declared "Buy Canadian" policy?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The washing machine, clothes dryer and refrigerator were purchased in the United States for the residence of Admiral Falls in Brussels, Belgium, for the following reasons:

(i) Since the electrical service characteristics in Brussels differ from that in Canada (i.e. 220 volt 50 hertz), Canadian produced appliances do not operate properly in Europe without extensive and costly electrical modifications.

(ii) In view of the low demand for 220 volt 50 hertz appliances, Canadian manufacturers are not interested in producing small quantities of appliances for this type of electrical service. Therefore, External Affairs must buy such items from United States manufacturers. In so far as the electric range is concerned, the reply to question 1,205 indicating that this range was purchased in the United States is in error. In fact, the electric range supplied was purchased from Enterprise Foundry Limited in Sackville, New Brunswick, at a cost of $370 Canadian.

ADMIRAL FALLS—DISHWASHER BOUGHT IN GERMANY

Question No. 1,627—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,205 which states in part, that the government purchased from public funds a dishwasher in Germany at the value of $1600 for the home of Admiral Robert Falls in Brussels, Belgium, for what reason was the item not bought in Canada in accordance with the government's declared "Buy Canadian" policy?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The dishwasher provided to the residence of Admiral Robert Falls in Brussels, Belgium, was purchased in Germany at a cost of $1,600 Canadian due to the fact that no 220 volt 50 hertz dishwashers are produced in Canada or the United States. The dishwasher purchased was the most economical one available in consideration of the requirement of the function to be performed.

* * *

[English]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 857 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

COASTAL FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT—FISHERIES ACT—PROSECUTIONS

Question No. 857—Mr. Crouse:

1. For each year 1975 to 1980, by province, what prosecutions were initiated under the (a) Coastal Fisheries Protection Act and its regulations (b) Fisheries Act of Canada and its regulations and, in each case, what was the essence of the charge?

2. In each case after prosecution was initiated, was (a) a conviction entered and, if so, how many (i) fines were imposed of $0 to $1,000, $1,001 to $2,000, $2,001 to $5,000 and $8,000 to $25,000 (ii) vessels were forfeited and what was the value (iii) catches were forfeited and what was the value (iv) fishing gear were forfeited and what was the value (v) vessels had their licences suspended, for what period and what was the estimated value of lost catches during the period of licence suspension (b) an acquittal entered (c) the charge withdrawn?

3. For the same years, by province, what was the total value of fines imposed?

4. Were funds realized on payment of fines paid into the consolidated revenue fund by the government and, if not, to what purpose were such monies applied?

Return tabled.

[English]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 857 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary question No. 1,449 dated July 16 which stands on the order paper in my name. It asks the government about the hiring of Canadian Media Corporation to act as agency of record on behalf of the Government of Canada. Although my other questions in this area are more complex and would perhaps require more time to answer, the question about the Canadian Media Corporation is very straightforward and would require very little research. It deals with the untendered contract given to this company which was formed to receive the contract, and which had done no business before receiving this contract from the government.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I shall undertake to look into this particular question. I should also inform hon. members that over the past few weeks the number of answers coming forth has slowed down somewhat. I am concerned about this, and I am redoubling my efforts to get more answers.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

PETITION TO REVOKE PROCLAMATION

The House resumed from Monday, November 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Waddell:

That the proclamation laid before the House on Wednesday, November 12, 1980, pursuant to subsection 35(2) of the Petroleum Administration Act, as proclaimed in PC 1980-2915, be revoked.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Madam Speaker, when the House adjourned last night, I was saying that the basic issue regulating oil pricing and distributing revenues among the producer provinces, the federal government and the industry was whether there would be in the future a federal government with the means to protect the interests of all Canadians.

I also said that I had had an analysis made of the financial situation of the federal government in relation to that of the provincial governments. The large increase in the federal deficit during the last five years, in spite of serious efforts to limit expenditures, has reduced the freedom of action of the federal government to stimulate the economy and implement new programs. The situation of the provinces is so complex that the revenue structure varies for each of them and that some have a deficit while others have a surplus. Mr. Speaker, it is very obvious that if we compare both situations, the deficit of the federal government and the percentage of the budget that the government must use to pay debt charges are much larger than those of the provinces.

For instance, in 1974, federal revenues were $29,600 million. In 1979, they were $42,554 million. The expenditures in 1974 amounted to $27,895 million. In 1979, they amounted to $51,320 million. In 1974, the federal government had a surplus of $1.1 billion, but in 1979, it had a deficit of $9.1 billion. On the other hand, debt charges in 1974 amounted to $2.9 billion, or 10.6 per cent of total expenditures, but in 1979, they made up 15.8 per cent of federal expenditures, or $8 billion.

Mr. Speaker, when we compare this situation with that of all the provincial governments combined—because this is what we have to do when we are talking about the relationship between the financial position of the provinces and that of the federal government—this is what we find. Let us look at the combined revenues of the provincial governments for 1974. They amounted to $25,315 million. In 1979, they totalled $49,522 million. In 1974, their expenditures amounted to $23,372 million, and in 1979, to $47,234 million.

● (1510)

In 1974, the provinces as a whole had a surplus of $652 million. In 1979, they still had a surplus of $553 million. The debt service charge for all the provinces in 1974 was $1,545 million, and in 1979, $3,399 million, or almost $3.4 billion. Their surplus, and not a deficit, as in the case of the federal government, amounted to 2.8 per cent of their expenditures in 1974 and remained at 1.2 per cent in 1979.

If we compare, Mr. Speaker, the financial position of the federal government, either surplus or deficit, with that of the provincial governments, we note the difference. In 1979, the federal deficit amounted to 17.9 per cent of federal spending, the debt service charge made up 15.8 per cent of federal spending, while for all the provinces, with a 1.2 per cent surplus over their expenditures, the debt service charge represented only 7.2 per cent of their spending. And this, Mr. Speaker, even when we consider that the provincial governments did not have to stimulate the Canadian economy as the federal government had to do, especially since 1974.

Another table that was drawn up for me shows that the federal government has provided a great number of incentives since 1974: minimum income tax reduction upped from $150 to $200 in November, 1974; and increased again in June, 1975, for a cost to the federal treasury of $610 million; deduction on retirement income, extension of the $1,000 deduction on interest revenue in the budget of November, 1974, cost to the federal treasury: $135 million; federal sales tax on building materials brought down to 5 per cent in November, 1974, for a cost of $600 million; exemption from the federal sales tax of transportation materials, $150 million; investment tax credit provided in the federal budgets of June, 1975, and March, 1977, another $430 million to stimulate the economy; child tax credit in March, 1977, $275 million; increase in the employment expense deduction in March, 1977, $120 million; tax break for business stocks, $350 million; increase in the basic personal income tax deduction for 1978 in the October, 1977, budget, $700 million; federal compensation for cutbacks in provincial sales tax in April, 1978, $760 million.

We can see therefore, Mr. Speaker, that since 1974 it is the federal government which has had to increase its expenditures or to stabilize them in certain sectors in order to reduce taxes or increase expenditures on a selective basis as an incentive for job creation. The figures I have given are the result of these measures. The federal government finds itself in a position where the deficit is at the 17.9 per cent level and 15.8 per cent of our spending is used to service the federal debt.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as I said last night, those who claim that the budget is not generous toward the producing provinces must be made to show how we are not being generous. I said last night that as a result of this budget Alberta would be getting over $31 billion within four years. Yet members opposite claim that is not enough. Obviously I would have preferred that an agreement be reached instead of having to proclaim provisions under the Petroleum Administration Act, which the government had no choice but to proclaim on November 12. I wish this could be settled amicably, I wish we could have a written agreement. But failing this, Mr. Speaker, I feel there is a clear duty, the responsibility imparted by this Parliament in the legislation enacted six years ago, to ensure that we have in Canada a system of oil and natural gas prices established in the interest of all Canadians. As I said, energy is the most important factor in the future development of our economy. Indeed, it will shape our future society. We will have to adjust to these new realities. How can we as members of this Parliament that must represent all of Canada, say that we want that direction to be followed in the interest of all Canadians, if the federal treasury does not have a major share of the oil and gas revenues to guarantee this?

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit that all hon. members should decide once and for all whether we are going to have a government that will be able to deal with all those issues, or a federal government that will be at the mercy of some provinces. I explained earlier the financial situation of the provinces as a whole, but I could give the financial status of the oil producing provinces, because this shows in a better light still the fact that the Canadian government is not in a position to govern. Alberta's revenues were $2.7 billion in 1974, but they topped $6 billion in 1978. In 1974, that province had a surplus amounting to 34.2 per cent of its expenditures; in 1978, the percentage rose to 40 per cent. Debt service charges fell from 5.1 per cent in 1974 to 3.7 per cent only in 1978. Alberta's surplus in relation to the gross provincial expenditures went from 4.2 per cent in 1974 to 5.9 per cent in 1978. The same goes for Saskatchewan, increases across the board, as well as for British Columbia. Coming eastward, Manitoba is almost in a deficit situation, so are Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland. Who is going to see that the interests of Canadians in all those other provinces are protected? I suggest the situation is much more serious than it has been indicated in the debates, and I am tremendously concerned that nobody looks at those figures. The important point is the percentage of the federal budget that goes to debt service charges.

Because it will keep increasing year after year, the federal government has a responsibility to stimulate the economy in a period of economic slowdown, the provincial governments cannot do it by themselves, only the federal government can. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious the government had the duty to intervene. It is its responsibility. Producing provinces should indeed receive a fair share, as I stated last night. Alberta after all will get $31 billion over a four year period under the proposed formula, Saskatchewan will get $3.2 billion, British Columbia $3.6 billion. So all those hon. members should stop saying that the federal government is unfair and does not take into account the aspirations of the west and should tell me clearly how much more money they would like to be transferred because they are saying that $31 billion is not enough, $3.2 billion to Saskatchewan is not enough, $3.6 billion to B.C. is not enough. They should stop making long speeches and tell me clearly how much more money they would transfer to these provinces and tell me also what is going to happen to the financial situation of the federal government in the coming years if such a solution were retained.

Then they should answer not only to their fellow citizens but also here in the House of Commons and in the rest of Canada, and they should decide whether they want the rest of the people of Canada to have a say in the development of the economy of this country, or else only two, perhaps three provinces, and perhaps from four to five million Canadians out of a population of 23 million, will have a say in the development of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the kind of Canada where I learned to live, nor the kind of Canada where I am prepared to work. There will come a time when people will have to decide whether the government will look not only after the Canadian electorate but also after the other provinces I have mentioned, which are heading more and more toward deficit positions and where the percentage of expenditures to cover the service of the debt is growing while it is decreasing as far as oil producing provinces and the federal government are concerned. This is a matter we must face clearly, Mr. Speaker, and I think it is time to do so.

I should like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by quoting some figures to show the difference in the consumer price of a gallon of gas from what was proposed in the Progressive Conservative budget of December, 1979. According to the budget brought forward by the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on October 28, 1980, gas will cost $1.36 a gallon in 1981. Under the Progressive Conservative budget of December 1979, it would have cost $1.56 a gallon or 20 cents more, and those are the people who were attacking us last week and the week before saying we were being too rough with the consumers. Those same people would have increased the price of gas for all Canadian workers and all Canadian producers in 1981 by 20 cents more than we did in the October 28 budget. In 1982, the price will be $1.53 under the Liberal budget and it would have been $1.75 under the Progressive Conservative budget, or 22 cents more a gallon. And it keeps rising. But let us look at the difference for 1983; the price will be $1.71 a gallon under the Liberal budget, but it would have been $2.63 under the Progressive Conservative budget. I see that the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) is paying close attention to those figures. I know he is concerned about the consumers in the province of New Brunswick. So when his party says that the budget of the Liberal finance minister, the October 28 budget, is not fair to the province of New Brunswick, what can he say to what his government would have done, because in 1984, the difference would be 68 cents more a gallon, or about 50 per cent of what we pay today, if the Progressive Conservatives had remained in power.

Mr. Speaker, I think everyone realizes that we did a great service to Canadians in December by voting against the government, against that budget to make sure the interests of all Canadian consumers would be well protected.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to have the opportunity to make some remarks concerning the implementation of an energy policy for Canada. I can see that the ground has been heavily plowed and many of the issues have been covered. I would like to cover four brief aspects that I feel have been left out.

I would like to direct my comments concerning the energy policy to its effect on low and middle-income Canadians. I would also like to comment on the effects, as I see them, on a Canadian industrial strategy, and on aboriginal people in Canada. Finally, I will have a question at the end: does this energy policy establish a greater sense of community within Canada?

If I could just briefly address these four points, I will proceed first with the question of how the energy policy affects Canadian consumers. I say this without malice. I think the geography of our country militates against certain kinds of distribution occurring. I feel that this energy policy, because of the geography of our country, tends to favour central Canada over some of the regions. Basically, it favours urban Canada over rural Canada and some of the remote outposts. I will come to some of these matters in a few moments.

One of the most objectionable features of this energy policy is that it contains very strong privileges for foreign-owned oil companies in Canada. These privileges are given at the expense of low and middle-income Canadians. A few figures might help. In 1979 the oil industry should have paid $5.1 billion in tax at the official rate of 36 per cent for corporate tax. It only paid $1.4 billion. Since 1974 the industry has paid tax at the effective rate of only 10 per cent. This is due to the generous tax concessions given to these oil companies in return for something we expected.

When the question was put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) as to why we were charging the consumers in Canada, placing the whole burden of this program on the backs of the consumers, he made a statement which is very interesting. When asked why consumers and not the companies, the minister stated, "We felt it was not appropriate to go higher than we have in the budget on the industry. We still want to leave that industry with large incentives to go ahead and make money." Frankly, that answer is not acceptable. They have basically placed the burden of this elaborate program on consumers within Canada, especially on those who can afford it the least. That is unacceptable. Time will tell as this takes its course that it will be unacceptable to the Canadian people.

As we explore this matter further as to the effect on consumers on budget night, October 28, it is interesting to note that a speech by the minister basically recognized in the budgetary projections that this energy policy would increase the consumer price index. It will further erode the income of Canadians. He stated, "Be aware of it and be prepared to live with it." Very shortly thereafter, it was proven that some of those projections were wrong. I suggest the one on the consumer price index was very wrong. Because of the combined effect of the energy policy and the taxation program put in place by the budget, especially on the cost of energy, those projections on the consumer price index were in error and will be much higher.

Before we examine what this consumer price index or erosion of real income will be, we have to look at the total formula being faced by Canadians. Some of this energy policy will result in an erosion of wealth in some areas of this country. Municipalities will have to increase taxes. That is happening already. Provincial governments will increase taxes and cut services. That is happening. It will not mean a direct tax imposition such as income tax where it is theoretically graduated and progressive, with those receiving the greatest benefits paying the most. We are not aiming at that kind of tax. The kind of budget and energy policy we have in place is the most direct regressive tax. Those are the taxes that are emphasized. I suggest that those are the taxes that will hit low and middle-income Canadians, making them foot the bill.

Basically that combined formula of very direct regressive taxation, dramatically high energy costs and the government's policy of interest rates, as has been stated many times in this House, is an eighteenth century monetarist policy. Interest rates on mortgages are around 15 per cent or 15½ per cent. We are looking at small business loans crawling back up to the all time high of 19 per cent. These are passed directly through to consumers, to low and middle-income Canadians. We therefore have that combined formula that we have to examine. The energy policy, rather than in any way alleviating the dramatic rising costs to low and middle-income Canadians, is accelerating them. Frankly, my party believes that is unacceptable. So did the government strangely enough, but something has gone haywire.

● (1530)

In the Speech from the Throne the government committed itself to protect Canadians who are least able to pay. We saw that commitment in writing. It recognized that there must be a fight against inflation. It recognized that energy prices were going to go up and there would have to be some dramatic new developments in the energy sector. It stated that low and middle-income Canadians should not have to bear the burden squarely on their backs. But, lo and behold, there is nothing in the budget, there is nothing here. The government clearly failed the consumers of Canada. Its answer to this failure was a $35 increase in the old age security, and some indexing of pensions in Canada. I would submit that these are clearly inadequate and, in fact, will do nothing to mitigate the very serious situation in which these people find themselves.

What the government is doing, Mr. Speaker, is asking low and middle-income Canadians, the consumers, to pay the costs of buying out the oil companies. It is asking the consumers to pay the cost of building pipelines, to pay the cost of tertiary recovery programs and refinery upgrading. It is asking low and middle-income Canadians to pay a tremendous cost to build new oil sands recovery plants, to pay the costs of offshore and frontier exploration, and to provide the funds for the new technology.

An hon. Member: They are going to give them the control.

Mr. Skelly: This should not fall on low and middle-income Canadians. It should clearly be undertaken by private enterprise, where costs will be held in line, where in fact the returns will come directly back to Canadians.

An hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Skelly: It should be undertaken by public enterprise—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: —where costs are low—

Mr. Evans: Freudian slip.

Mr. Skelly: It is no Freudian slip, Mr. Speaker. Secondly, on this particular item, it should be paid for by a progressive tax system. I would have the other members in this House rail at that provision, that the progressive tax system in this country does not exist, where people who receive the most should pay the most in funding these very expensive programs. I suggest that the banks and oil companies might lead the way.

Foreign oil companies account for about 77 per cent of petroleum production in this country, and they receive about 82 per cent of all the revenue. These are not Canadian-owned oil companies or public sector companies. Some 82 per cent of the revenue which accrued from our resource wound up in the hands of foreign-owned corporations. That is unacceptable. We are asking the consumers of Canada to pay for this, and at the same time we are giving a bonus like that to foreign-owned oil companies.

In 1979 the oil industry profits after taxes increased by 53.6 per cent, to $4.6 billion. That would go a long way toward funding and driving those important projects in the hands of Canadians. In the first nine months of this year the five major oil companies increased their profits by an average of 65 per cent over the same period in 1979, so it is not a problem. That sector is doing very well at the expense of Canadians, and particularly at the expense of low and middle-income Canadians who are being asked to foot the bill. Clearly, the oil companies should finance the Canadianization of the industry.

We want to see a minimum of three oil firms under public control, and I suggest that the ones to take over are Imperial, Texaco, and Shell. Let us start with the blackmailers and work from there. However, they should be funding that takeover. They are the ones who have been gleaning tremendous revenues from this country, and following their own objectives rather than those of Canadians. In the final analysis, as prices and costs rise, there must be an indexed tax credit. If we are going to see this energy program develop, there should be a tax credit to protect low and middle-income Canadians. This was promised. Protection was promised, and it should be delivered. That is the only fair way to ensure that it is delivered to the people who need it most.

The second thing about this new industrial strategy, this budget, this over-all look, is that it lacks one thing. It is out of phase. First, it is very timid. In the second place it will probably not work. However, finally we must have an industrial strategy with it. We in this country have no concept of where this government is taking us.

We should base an industrial strategy on three points. We could use resource income from resource development to ensure that all Canadians derive the benefits of the resource. The new technology must be developed in Canada by Canadians, and owned by them. Unless that item is under our control we are in very serious difficulty. The second thing in this industrial strategy is that Canada must train a work force of skilled people capable of developing and implementing this new technology in Canada. The final thing is that the development of the resource must be paced. I feel that this is one of the flaws in this energy policy.

We are going into a massive rush to develop our energy resources on all fronts, but if we fail to pace that, Canadian industry across the board will not obtain the full advantage. We need time to implement that program. By using our resources to develop the modern technology with which to build that industry we would wind up with Canadian industries which are relevant to the twenty-first century. We have a Canadian auto industry which is clearly out of date. Our shipbuilding industry is clearly out of date. I and others in my party feel that if we were to pace the development of this particular resource, we would be able to put in place an industrial strategy which would see Canadians with that technology, our work force trained to build and operate the kinds of industries we need and, finally, strong technologically advanced industries which are owned and controlled by Canadians.

Ensuring that we have heavy public involvement, publicly owned enterprise and joint ventures, in my estimation is the only way there will be a responsibility to Canada and a response to the needs of Canadians. This country has a small population spread over a tremendous area. In the past especially in the resource sector we have been prime picking for foreign corporations. I think that Canada's accountability and responsibility could be enhanced if we placed our industrial strategy firmly on the side of publicly-owned enterprises and on joint ventures. We need that presence. If we develop our own resources by these criteria, then this country and its people will never again be subject to the corporate blackmail we have seen in the past, and see today.

I would like to outline for the record the types of corporate blackmail we have seen in the last little while. The government proposes a 50 per cent ownership objective. That is not enough, and it is meaningless. With the techniques of circumventing Canadian control we will not achieve the goal of placing ownership and control in Canadian hands.

Dome Petroleum has made statements that it will pull up its stakes if it cannot get sufficient tax incentives. Dome has pulled in about $411 million in profits in the past three years. It is now aiming for higher profits by charging the highest possible prices. It proposes to sell Canadian gas to Japan, and I do see a statement by the government that it intends to protect Canadian resources for future generations. We are still playing with the export of Canadian energy resources. At any rate, increased ownership in non-energy companies is an example of where the profits which are being earned are being used to broaden the base of these corporations and not to fulfil the task which they were originally developed to serve.

• (1540)

There is a major $100 million exploration program in the United States. If we are giving those kinds of incentives to Dome Petroleum and other Canadian companies, why are they exploring in the United States with our money? Quite frankly, that is completely unacceptable, and it amounts to corporate blackmail. If we were to develop a solid energy policy, and an industrial strategy which is effective, those companies, funded by Canadian tax dollars, would be operating to meet Canadian goals and not away drilling in the United States and threatening, through blackmail, a corporate withdrawal from this country.

On Tuesday, November 18, Imperial announced that it had abandoned the Alberta tar sands because it could not get its way. The Liberals forked over $40 million in taxpayers' money in order to meet Imperial's profit priorities.

An hon. Member: The $40 million mark.

Mr. Skelly: Imperial's profits in 1978—this Exxon-owned corporation—were roughly $314 million. In 1979 they were $493 million. In 1980 they will probably pull in $750 million in profit, and now it is pulling out of the oil sands. That again is an example of corporate blackmail.

On Thursday, November 20, Shell Oil threatened to pull $205 million of investment out of its tar sands project unless it got another $40 million from the mark. We should tell them flatly just to get out, that Petro-Canada will build those tar sands plants, and that if they get out of there they will be getting out of other sectors.

The energy policy which was put forward by the government was supposed to be a change in direction, but in fact it was not. It was a very timid policy, and the actions since it was dropped into this House on October 28 show that the government will continue to provide rich incentives and yield to corporate blackmail. Frankly, this also is not acceptable. They should be told to get out.

On the whole question of an industrial strategy and of how this energy program could develop all of Canadian industry so that Canadians could maximize their benefits from resource development, let me refer to the example of shipbuilding. Pacing the way we develop a resource is important. If this resource is hurled ahead at too fast a pace, the ships required to service and develop the offshore oil and gas industry will have to come from offshore. Foreign countries will build those vessels. We hear talk on the east coast that the liquefied natural gas carriers will be built in Finland. We hear on the west coast that that technology will be developed and put in place in Japan. We hear about sharing and many other things but, nevertheless, those should be built in Canada.

Mr. Howie: Right on!

Mr. Skelly: We should have and would have had that capability if we had a government committed to this years ago, but it is not just that our supply ships and our liquefied natural gas carriers and the whole offshore marine program will be produced in other areas; if we look at those in this country who are licensed to crew our vessels, we find that the average age of those licensed personnel is 55 years. We need a tremendous influx of trained seamen, and they are not available because this country was not committed to an industrial strategy which took cognizance of that. If we rush the pace of development so quickly that foreign crews will sail foreign-built vessels to move our oil resource, Canadians not only in this generation but also in the next one will fail to receive the maximum benefit.

There is shipbuilding on the west coast, but it is interesting that all the steel comes from Japan. In many other areas the steel comes from Japan. If we are going to expand that industry and all the other component, related or allied industries, we will have to see that steel and other basic commodities come from North America. A Canadian steel plant could provide steel to Canadian shipyards and to the Canadian oil, gas and refining industries based on the west coast, and could provide all of northwest America with a secure supply of steel at reasonable costs. That is absolutely important.

Mr. Benjamin: We have the steel in Regina.

Mr. Skelly: There is an absolute absence of an industrial strategy in this country, and it is imperative that one be developed with an energy strategy in order to maximize benefits for Canadians. If that does not happen, we will maximize benefits for those same foreign countries whose economies we have fueled with our resources all during the existence of this country.

The clock is moving along. I mentioned a third item of concern. I want to talk for a moment about the development of energy resources and aboriginal people. The energy program outlined in that entertaining reading brought in on October 28 did take cognizance of native people and their needs. It recognized that many communities in remote areas in which Indian and Inuit people live need an economic boost but, frankly, it mentioned that the bulk of the incentives and the real drives for expansion would be on Canada lands, lands owned and controlled by the Government of Canada.

I think the author of that particular document may have been a little hasty. In fact, a great number of those lands described as Canada lands were in fact Indian and Inuit lands, and still are. As a matter of fact, it is my understanding that this government has a commitment to the rule of law and that basically we do recognize certain claims by aboriginal people to lands and rights within this country. Frankly, I am certain this was an oversight in the document, but we all clearly recognize that when we take something which does not belong to us, that is simply theft.

The last remark which probably should be made is that claims must be acknowledged and dealt with effectively so that native people can share in the abundant resources which exist on the lands claimed by them.

On the positive side—and I might read a little more into the legislation than might be there—in the planning agreements whereby companies go into those lands there will be a requirement to provide training and employment for native people. I commend the authors for that particular aspect. We must create not only a share but also an opportunity to participate. That is a positive aspect.

Does the energy policy—and by its actions this government over the last few months—contribute to establishing a sense of community in the country? Frankly, I really have some serious questions about the energy policy. In my opinion it does not set goals with which Canadians can be identified and work for together, thereby strengthening the sense of community in this country. That does not exist in this energy policy.

Before I move further into that area I would like to go back in Canadian history a little and look at some of the precedents which have brought us to the point at which we are today. In 1979 there was an election, after which a very tired government was retired. The leader of that government crossed this country several times making some very provocative statements. He talked about nuclear energy. He said, "You are going to get it whether you want it or not", in answer to the concerns of many Canadians. He said that farmers were chronic bitchers. He said that if the unemployed wanted work, they should get off their butts. This is not an example of an individual setting and defining goals Canadians can share and work together for, and build a sense of community? But that record goes back to the 1974 election in which, I assume, we all participated. At that time he said, "I promise my government will not impose wage and price controls". In one year he did, and in almost three years it tore the country apart with wage and labour disputes which were artificially created.

• (1550)

Mr. Regan: What does this have to do with the legislation before us?

Mr. Skelly: I will deal with that in just a moment. In 1970, with the stroke of a pen, he eliminated the civil rights of Canadians. I suggest to hon. members opposite, and to others, that this energy policy does not set the goals. It does not establish a sense of community in the country. Basically it opens a wound in some areas.

The hon. member who preceded me stated basically that it was a fair and universally accepted program. But, it is not. Basically it places the hand of the federal government in the pocket of Alberta. It says that certain funds are being removed, but it does not give back the things that are required in return. What will those funds be spent on? Will we get an industrial strategy which will improve the industrial benefits in the west? He says, "No, you will get a $4 billion pork-barrel."

I think there is a tendency to create an enemy in Alberta. I say that with some misgivings, but we must remember that Alberta did not create regional disparity, an inequitable tax system and a $15-billion federal deficit for which Albertans to a large degree will pay. This opens a wound in the country, not just for Albertans but for many people who said that the government has failed to live up to the expectations of Canadians. The point now is that the leader of the government has been responsible for it over a decade.

In conclusion, I think Canadians can come together on some of the goals which have been defined. We can re-establish a sense of community, but one of the primary catalysts which will allow this to occur is the resignation of the present leader of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am happy for the opportunity to participate in this debate and hope to bring us back to some sense of reality, especially considering the last few moments and the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly). The hon. member made some of the most remarkable statements I have heard in a while.

An hon. Member: Like asking for an industrial strategy; that is remarkable.

Mr. Regan: Before the member recedes too rapidly, I should like to point out quickly the inconsistency of his saying that the action of the government in relation to the energy package has opened a wound in Alberta, and in the same breath saying that we should nationalize all the oil companies out there. Can one imagine the sort of wound that might open?

An hon. Member: Decapitation.

Mr. Regan: That is about what it would amount to. As I listened to the member's remarks on this subject, as well as the remarks of some other members opposite, and as I read the remarks of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) and of the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) in this debate, I began to feel quite comfortable about this energy package. The reason is that I believe we on this side of the House have every reason to feel confident that we are on the right track when we find the Tories and the NDP attacking us from opposite directions, one saying that we have gone too far and the other saying that we have not gone far enough.

An hon. Member: It means you have gone nowhere.

Mr. Regan: It suggests to me that the moderates in the Conservative party and New Democratic Party are really admiring our package while they are trying, as political parties do in elected legislatures, to find some way to disagree with what the administration is doing. Indeed it would be a most unusual debate if members opposite were to come in here and say, "Yes, that is great. We like it all. There is nothing wrong with it."

If this energy package had been presented to the hon. members of the NDP before its introduction, they would have said that it was great and marvellous. If we look at some of the statements they have made over the past year, then to be consistent they should have come here and said, "Yes, this is a tremendous move, for Petro-Canada to be looking to buy out one of the major multinationals". They should have come in here and praised the 25 per cent land provision as well as the other provisions. But, no, sometimes they are not as intellectually honest as one might wish. They find that they cannot come in here and frankly say, "Yes, that was a tremendous achievement and a great thing for Canada."

Mr. Fulton: Name one member who has been intellectually dishonest.

Mr. Regan: Before turning to the main body of my comments, and aroused by the words of the hon. member for Comox-Powell—

Mr. Fulton: At least name his constituency.

Mr. Regan: I am sorry, the hon. member for Comox-Powell River. In any event, he has a most persuasive and pleasant manner of talking, but he says the most unusual things. He condemned Dome and other private companies. He said that Petro-Canada should take over everything in the country. I want to express my continued basic belief in the mixed economy which is working well for Canada.

Mr. Waddell: It is working well for Dome.

Mr. Regan: If Petro-Canada had control over the whole oil industry, it would not be nearly as good a company as it is now.

Mr. Blenkarn: They would be like the Post Office.

Mr. Regan: When we seek to Canadianize the oil industry, I think it is extremely important to see to it that every encouragement is provided not only for great companies like Bob Blair's company, or Dome, but also for all smaller Canadian companies which exist out there and have built up our economy by their incisive approach to business. It is not only important to provide a lot of encouragement to those companies, but also important to provide encouragement and the wherewithal to Petro-Canada.

I believe there are things which must be done in relation to the rapid expansion of the Canadianization of the oil industry. They must be done by the public sector through Petro-Canada or other federal Crown corporations. But also there is a very important and vital role for the companies that have helped very substantially over the past few years in increasing the amount of Canadian ownership in the country. Petro-Canada has not done it all. The efforts and good leadership of private Canadian oil and gas companies in the west have also made very noteworthy contributions in that regard.

An hon. Member: Name two.

Mr. Regan: I did. Energy represents the geatest challenge to the maintenance of the civilization we have known in our lifetime. We are faced with some very basic facts. The supplies of fossil-based fuels are limited. Throughout the world today there is no subject which involves more time and concern of governments than the question of energy supply, its present price, its future price, and its future supply. Not only are national governments involved in a most intricate manner in this subject throughout the world, but they must be because, if governments are to have the responsibility of managing an economy, then this is the very essence of that responsibility.

It is with that realization, and against that background, that it is necessary to implement the provisions of the Petroleum Administration Act in this country. That step is a very timid one compared to how far governments have gone in relation to this aspect of the economy in other nations of the world.

● (1600)

We have a national responsibility. We have great provincial responsibilities in each of our provinces. We must husband our resources, explore and develop those which are undiscovered, evolve new types of renewable energy making it more feasible and competitive. Of course, we must conserve our resources. While we must prepare for the needs of tomorrow's consumers we must also, at all times, limit the burden to be carried by today's consumers. Therefore the imposition of prices of oil and gas at the national level, to have some consistency from one part of the country to the other, is the essence of national responsibility. I believe that is beyond argument.

In making arguments on this particular motion the opposition will speak about a variety of matters. These are matters which I may say something about. I doubt if any of them are prepared to say seriously that there is not a responsibility of the national government to deal with the question of supply of energy and, at some point, to become affected by the pricing of that energy. After all, it is the setting of price by national governments which has created the entire problem. It is the setting of price by the OPEC cartel that has contributed so substantially to the economic crisis, shall I say, or problems, or malaise, which have characterized the last years of the 1970s. Unfortunately, in doing so in a national government in Canada, responding to what other national governments are doing, there is obviously the question of interference perceived in what had traditionally been an area of price-setting that was not affected directly by the national government. That would be fine, of course, as long as it was not necessary. The unfortunate fact that so much of our oil and gas is concentrated in one area, in one province, tends to make a difficult adversarial conflict between the federal government and the province of Alberta.

I want to express here, as I expressed in Calgary last week to the Calgary Chamber of Commerce, my affection and admiration for the province of Alberta, as a Canadian, and my particular admiration of the incisive approach of their hard-working people and the great contribution they make to Canada. As a maritimer with an inheritance of 100 years of grievances against central Canada, I can, to a considerable degree, sympathize with some of their points of view. I think I have some insight into the reasons those points of view have arisen. Ottawa is the focus of what is referred to as western alienation. But the centralization of industry, of banks and decisions in central Canada is probably more the problem than the question of anything that government does.

If one were to scan my old speeches over the years—and I cannot think of a more tiresome process—you would find they are pretty well filled with illustrations of how centralized we built our economy in this country as compared to other countries. Again and again I have used the example of how American Express can have their corporate headquarters in Phoenix, Arizona, and they find they can serve that country efficiently, whereas in this country, in the business sector, there is too much of a feeling that if you go as far as Oshawa you are in the frontier region.

I think that in combatting this feeling of alienation in the west not only does government have the responsibility to overcome those feelings, whether they are based on fact or emotion, but in the private sector there needs to be a great deal done in relation to decentralization.

In relation to this debate and the Petroleum Administration Act and its proclamation, I want to say that if I were to summarize quickly what the objectives of a government are in this era in relation to energy, I would have to say that they are as follows: a pricing scheme which lessens the impact on Canadian consumers during the period when there must be escalation in the cost of our energy sources. I think that every member in the chamber will agree that the price of energy will continue to go up, if only because of the fact that new sources of fossil-based fuels tend to be more expensive, in terms of recovery by virtue of their situ, and also because of their diminishing supply. But that does not allow us to forget for a moment that in meeting the other challenges and objectives, which I will talk about later, we cannot forget for a moment that our first obligation is to the Canadian consumer.

Our obligation is to see to it that people can support their families without having such abrupt increases in the cost of something which takes as much of their disposable income as energy, something which rises at a rate that they are simply unable to deal with.

In Canada it is more difficult to adjust to increasing costs of energy abruptly than it is in many other countries. First of all, we live in a northern clime. As a consequence, this means people must heat their homes. There is no way to avoid that. Secondly, we have built our society in such a way, wisely or unwisely, that it is extremely difficult to provide mass transport for very many of our people outside our large cities.

Cars must be used to go to work, to school, to church, and to the stores. In a lot of cases it is ribbon development, but in a lot of other cases it is the free choice that was allowed to be made by Canadian citizens to live in rural settings rather than have all the homes concentrated in an exact village, as has been more the custom in Europe. If you fly over England, France or Germany and you look down you will see a very different pattern than you will see in flying over most of Canada. You see their houses are all very close together and there are very long distances until you come to the next village, where the houses are again concentrated together. One thing about that society is that they do not have to use motorized vehicles as often as we do. In Canada when you look down from a plane you see houses scattered throughout Canada. That is done by choice. Perhaps in relation to transportation it provides an extra problem and penalty for our people today.

I want to make the point that the greatest and most important objective must be not to have an overnight change in price that will deal such a heavy blow to our consumers. Another objective is to achieve a greater share of revenue to meet federal costs. I think in that regard, if you look at what is done in other countries, you will find the share that Canada is taking of the petroleum dollar is smaller than any other country. I will give some figures on that a little later on. Basically, at 10 per cent it was ludicrous; at 24 per cent, which the new arrangement makes—

Mr. Wilson: No, 48 per cent.

Mr. Regan: —it is substantially below the 37 per cent of the United States and the 48 per cent of Australia, or other countries. Hon. members opposite try to add in other costs to push the percentage upward. That is not accurate at all. It is like saying you should add in the tax that the province charges at the gas pump. That is not right at all. The fact that a government takes part of the energy dollar does not mean that it will not carry out other programs to which it is entitled. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre did not at all address the question of whether he agrees in principle that the national government of this country, like any other country, has a right to take some portion of that dollar.

• (1610)

Mr. Wilson: I agree.

